WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS s allowed by upwards of 500 Medical Men to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer, Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London. Price of a single Truss, 16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., 31s. 6d, Postage Free. Double Truss, 31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage free. An Umbilical Tsusr, 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage free. P.O.O. to be made payable to JOHN WHITE, Post-office, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c. for Varicose Veins, and all cases of Weakness and Swelling of the Legs, Sprains, &c. They are porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price from 4s. 6d, 7s, 6d., 10s, to 16s. each. Postage free.

CHEST EXPANDING BRACES, for both sexes. For gentlemen they are a substitute for the ordinary braces. For children they are invaluable; they prevent stooping and preserve the symmetry of the chest. Prices for children, 5s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. Adults, 10s. 6d., 15s. 6d., and 21s. each. Postage free.—JOHN WHITE, Manufacturer, 228 Piccadilly, London.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The Accountant

Will be published for the present on the 1st of every month. The subscription will be 10s. 6d. per annum, entitling the subscriber to one copy per month (post free). Single copies will be sold at 1s. each. Subscriptions to be forwarded to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 59, Basinghall-street, E.C. (post office orders payable at the Lothbury office), to whom also applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the Paper, should be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the editor of The Accountant, at the same address.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In presenting the first number of The Accountant to the subscribers, the Editor feels it necessary to explain that, owing to the difficulty of making numerous arrangements in a comparatively short space of time, the reports of liquidation and bankruptcy cases, which it is intended should form a special feature of the Paper, are neither so numerous nor so complete as it is hoped they will be in future issues. At the same time, it should be understood that the Editor will be compelled to rely to some extent upon accountants for information respecting liquidation meetings and other matters of importance to the profession occurring in their respective districts, and it is hoped that all members will thus contribute towards the attainment of the object with which the Paper was started, viz., the advancement of the interests of the accountants of the United Kingdom.

The Editor will be glad to receive early information of any proceedings of unusual importance which may be about to take place; and in case a special report is required, the services of a shorthand writer may be obtained upon certain specified terms, which can be ascertained on application. In all cases where it is practicable the MS. should be forwarded to the Editor by the middle of the month.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by this Paper as an advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, The Accountant may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant will thus secure to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and it will be particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c.

The charge for single insertions of ordinary advertisements will be 1s. per line; a liberal reduction will be made for a series, and special terms allowed for standing trade announcements.

Advertisement "copy" should be forwarded, if possible, by the middle of the month, but late announcements can be received up to the morning of the day previous to publication.

The Accountant.

October, 1874.

THE "ACCOUNTANT."

In days when the world is flooded with the offspring of the pen and the printing press, when anyone attempting to read a tithe of the periodical literature having some sort of claim on his attention would find himself harder worked than the busiest professional man, any addition to the mass of newspapers and magazines should perhaps be ushered in with something in the nature of an apology. Our raison d'être is that we do not enter the general literary race in the hope of gathering together a constituency of readers, but rather of supplying the wants of one already in existence. It would probably cause some surprise to many outside the professional ranks to learn that such an important body as the accountants of the United Kingdom, a body dealing with valuable interests of the utmost magnitude, and directly affecting the whole mercantile community of the country, has not, up to the present, been represented by any organ of the press to chronicle its doings, to discuss points of law and practice in liquidations in chancery, and in bankruptcy, in which accountants, as the agents of the public, are so largely concerned. It is the purpose of The Accountant to fill this gap; and perhaps the only reason which it is needful to urge in justification of the establishment of the journal, is the extent and value of the interests thus involved.

Digitized by Google

The main object of The Accountant will be to raise the status of, and generally to benefit, the profession; but it may reasonably be hoped (though in all modesty) that our labours in a field where abuses and extravagances are far from infrequent may result indirectly to the advantage of that portion of the mercantile world which looks to our Bankruptcy Laws for assistance and protection. The publication of reports of cases with which accountants have to deal from all parts of the kingdom will be one of the means adopted to secure this end, which will be further advanced by original articles, and an interchange of opinions and experiences upon professional topics. It is manifest, however, that these means will only be made available by the personal assistance of members of the profession. The columns of The Accountant will be open at all times for the discussion of principles and rules of procedure, and the ventilation of important matters connected with accountancy; and we wish it to be thoroughly understood that the gauge adopted in the admission of literary contributions will be one having regard solely to their general utility and fitness for publication, subject, of course, to considerations of the limited space at our disposal. It is our intention to use all means to make The Accountant in every respect the representative organ of the entire profession, and we hope in carrying out this view to receive the hearty support of all accountants.

We began with a semi-apology, and may therefore consistently conclude, to some extent, in a similar strain. The time has been too short to make complete arrangements for the supply of literary matter, and there are consequently deficiencies, particularly in regard to the reports of cases; but we hope to be judged not by results actually shown in our first number, but by the indications therein given of the course which it is intended to pursue in the conduct of this paper.

There is, perhaps, no subject so important to the world of commerce, or more worthy the consideration of the Lord Chancellor in the present recess, than the laws which govern our Bankruptcy Court. It was hoped that the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 would remedy the patent evils existing under the old statutes which it repealed, and that some of the avenues to the perpetration of fraud would be closed against evil-doers. But the reverse is the case. The liquidation and composition clauses of the Act still admit of precisely the same description of malpractices as formerly, with some few additions. Sworn affidavits of creditors apparently provided a safeguard against the operations of "friendly" creditors and the intervention of disreputable advisers; but the wide use of proxies encourages a system as discreditable to our integrity as it is harassing and unjust to the real creditors; and the manner of convening and holding meetings is also open to grave condemnation. A forcible illustration of this was recently exposed in a case heard before Mr. Justice Quain at the Central Criminal Court. Hall, an attorney's clerk, by using the name of a solicitor, undertook to release a certain debtor from his liabilities for a money consideration. A petition for liquidation was filed, the necessary formalities completed, and a meeting of creditors duly summoned. The next stage of the proceedings was the receipt by the Registrar of certain resolutions purporting to have been passed at the meeting for the liquidation of the bankrupt's affairs, which would have been followed in the ordinary course by the appointment of Hall as trustee, and the granting of the bankrupt's discharge. However, it subsequently transpired that not a single creditor attended the meeting, that proofs and proxies were forgeries, as were also the signatures of the Commissioners before whom the affidavits were said to have been sworn, and that Hall himself was the only person present at the so-called meeting. Eighteen months' imprisonment with hard labour rewarded this man's ingenuity; but it is not unreasonable to suppose that other cases of a similar character have escaped detection.

It is more within the province of the legal profession to suggest a remedy for the evil we diffidently point out; but it may be asserted that the presence of a Registrar of the Court, instead of a chairman appointed by the meeting, which admits of a person holding the proxies of a quorum of creditors to elect himself to the office—the presence, we say, of a Registrar of the Court at the meetings of creditors, and a narrower limit to the number of proxies, would do much to deter people from hazarding fictitious proofs, and would render impossible the holding of phantom meetings. A thorough revision of the liquidation and composition clauses is perhaps desirable in order to prevent the possibility of devising and carrying out the forms of fraud resorted to. Though at first sight it may appear an enormous undertaking to amend the Bankruptcy Act which has already undergone so many changes, yet we venture to think that the remedy lies mainly in the hands of the Chief Judge and the Lord Chancellor, in whom power is vested to make and vary the rules of procedure. The alterations these officials may themselves effect would be found sufficient to repair most of the defects; for it is not so much the general working of the Bankruptcy Act that is to be condemned as the looseness of certain formalities in the conduct of liquidations. These formalities are entirely at the discretion of the officials we mention to modify, or add to, without reference to higher authority; and it is to be hoped the exposures which have taken place may lead Lord Cairns and his colleague to see the necessity of reforms.

We have received from a subscriber copy of correspondence published in a provincial newspaper upon a subject which, although to some extent of only personal interest, nevertheless embraces a point which should be seriously considered by accountants. A circular is issued, stating that the member of one firm has been appointed receiver of certain property, "upon the application of a leading trade creditor." This is followed by a joint application from two other firms, in which it is asserted that the first-named gentleman "has been appointed receiver at the request of the debtor." Accountant No. 1 contradicts this, and adds that it might have been easily ascertained that the assertion complained of was incorrect, and his solicitor further requests an apology from the opposition, who, however, decline to apologise, on the ground that they were justified in making the statement, whereupon the first-named gentleman, in order to clear himself with the creditors and the public, publishes the correspondence. It is not our purpose to enter into the merits of this particular case, but rather to call attention to the loss of dignity to the profession (to say the least) which must inevitably arise from exposures of this kind, and to urge upon accountants the necessity of taking measures to remove the blot. This is a work which the several accountants' societies in the kingdom—each having some sort of authoritative control over its members—might well take in hand.

Vice-Chancellor Hall has appointed Mr. John Henry Tilly (Messrs. Tilly & Co.) official liquidator of the Penallt Silver Lead Mining Company (Limited), in the room of Mr. J. W. Thomas.

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES' ACCOUNTS.

By the passing of the Life Assurance Companies' Act of 1870, the accounts of all Life Assurance Companies transacting business within the United Kingdom became subjected to the supervision of Government, in that they were required to present annually to the Board of Trade, in prescribed forms, copies of their revenue account and balance-sheet, in addition to (at each valuation for declaration of bonus) a valuation account of no mean dimensions (extending as it has, in some cases, to upwards of between 25 and 30 pages of closely printed matter). The Board has further assumed the power to take exception to, and demand explanation of, any items bearing, in however small a degree, a suspicious appearance.

The sudden change produced by the passing of the above Act, from various, and free-and-easy systems of book-keeping, to others that necessitated the almost entire modification and alteration of the different books requisite for this somewhat exclusive business, startled to no small extent the officials holding snug appointments in the different departments of the life offices. The services of professional accountants were immediately obtained, and under their directions the many quaint old forms and books were abolished to make way for those of a more practical and useful nature, and adapted to facilitate the preparation of the companies' accounts in accordance with the requirements of the Act.

The magnitude of the transactions of the life assurance companies carrying on business within the United Kingdom fully demonstrates the necessity which existed for compelling them to make certain returns in specified forms. This every company has had to do, but notwithstanding that the schedules appended to the Act require detailed accounts of the same nature to be furnished in every instance, it is open to doubt whether half-a-dozen companies would, upon investigation, be found to be keeping their books upon anything approaching the same system.

After the disastrous failures of the Albert and European Life Offices it is obvious that the interference of Government in the affairs of the surviving offices became an absolute necessity, inconvenient as it probably at first was to such as were doing comfortable and honest businesses. We should, however, be glad to see that interference go a step further, in the shape of the compulsory adoption of a good sound system of book-keeping by such offices as have not yet availed themselves of one, and the employment of a professional accountant in the compilation of their accounts, who should be held personally responsible for the correctness of the figures presented under his authority to the assuring public.

The Blue Book for 1873 informs us that 125 different companies were carrying on business in the United Kingdom, and, excluding four American companies, the result of whose transactions were not to be obtained, and one company from which no return had been received, we learn that the income for 1872 of the remaining 120 life offices reached the enormous sum of £10,824,093 derived from "premiums," "consideration for annuities," "interest and dividends," and "other receipts;" while the accumulated funds possessed by the above offices, invested or in hand, and available for satisfying claims liable to arise under policies in force to the extent of £338,882,752, amounted to £94,260,592. From the foregoing details it will be apparent to everyone that the protection of so large an amount of what is neither more nor less than public money was by no means uncalled for, the only question being, not as to the necessity of legislation in the matter, but whether it has gone far enough.

ACCOUNTANCY.

The profession of a public accountant dates back but a short period, and has, like the profession of the civil engineer, been mainly created by the magnitude and complication of the appliances necessary to meet the growing wants of the age. Law and medicine, being of ancient date, are intimately connected with the laws, customs, and traditions of our land, and almost from time immemorial have been guarded by regulations to prevent, as far as possible, improper or incompetent persons from practising in them. The professions of public accountant and civil engineer, on the contrary, are open to any persons who choose to adopt them, though the engineers have their institutes and degrees for competent and distinguished members.

This free trade principle does not so much matter in the case of the engineers, in whom incompetency would very soon be discovered and reputation accordingly lost, but it is a great question whether in that of the public accountant—who, if ignorant and incompetent, may make the most egregious blunders without discovery, and on whose integrity and capability so much often depends—some means should not be taken to prevent the incapable and ignorant individuals who are at present bringing their profession into contempt from doing so any longer. It is essential that all respectable accountants should lay aside petty jealousies and co-operate together to obtain the sanction of Parliament to an association of which membership would be a guarantee of reputation; then the profession would be of some commercial influence, and able, in cases of legislation affecting its interests, to express its views to Parliament with some weight.

Such an association would also tend to promote a better understanding between accountants and members of the legal profession, and would materially assist in the conduct of the business of both. It is becoming an absolute necessity that the distinction between lawyer and accountant should be more defined and known, and that members of both bodies should be restrained within certain limits in practising their profession. Complicated and incorrect statements of accounts, and bad legal advice, are often the results of the lawyer attempting to play the accountant, and vice versâ, and the time has arrived when an end should be put to a state of things by which so much loss and inconvenience is thrown on the public. To carry out this view it would be necessary to devise a scheme for the examination of all persons desiring to practise as accountants; and this would be a matter requiring some consideration at first, but ultimately there would be no more difficulty than there at present exists in obtaining admission to the legal profession.

The Institute of Accountants in London, and the Society of Accountants in England, have been formed with the object of examining all persons desiring admission as members, and have moreover started libraries at their offices in London, and collect and issue information on all subjects of interest to accountants. To effect these and other beneficial objects, and to give bonâ fide public accountants that status to which they are entitled by virtue of their responsibility and skill, it would be well for all the respectable members of the profession to bind themselves together and, avoiding small matters of difference, work with a will to obtain the ultimate formation of an acknowledged profession. Independent local associations are of very little use in themselves, but one general association, with local branches, constructed on a right basis, properly conducted, and well supported, would be very effective in raising the standing and promoting the interests of accountants, and thereby benefitting the public at large.

BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

It is universally allowed that England has full title to rank as the first commercial country in the world, and, indeed, in most respects, her assumption of that position is fully justified; but it is open to question whether she does not at times fall behind some of her competitors in one or more ways.

The Bankruptcy Acts of 1861—8 were certainly defective. The present one was ushered in with a great flourish, as offering a check to the recklessness which constitutes the objectionable feature of "free trade." The community were led to expect that the provisions of the Act of 1869 were such as to ensure suspension until 10s. in the pound as a minimum had been obtained, and that defaulters whose estates produced less should be deterred from resuming business until they had paid the required dividend. How far these anticipations have been realised has been learnt by sad experience. The Act of 1869, as interpreted by the administrators of the law (who, of course, cannot be held responsible for its defects), is very stringent upon the solicitors, receivers, and trustees practising and appointed under it, but there never was a merrier time for dishonest insolvents, whether in bankruptcy, liquidation, or under composition.

Bankruptcy is and always will be, under any English or Continental laws, hard upon and painful to honourable men, who, by misfortune or errors of judgment, fail to meet their engagements; the disgrace consequent upon publicity being a severe blow to all right-thinking men, but to rogues who are devoid of the sense of shame, the chances of succeeding (under our present laws) in bold and impudent trading are twenty to one in their favour. The reason of this is palpable. The principle of fair play is with us carried to such an extreme that until convicted every man is legally assumed to be innocent. This is doubtless sound in principle, but if we not only assume the innocence of a defaulting debtor, but go farther, and invite him, so to speak, to conceal every clue to the detection of his guilt, so that while the onus probandi is thrown upon the injured individual or upon the general body of his creditors, the pièces de conviction are generally only obtainable (if at all) at great loss of time and expense.

A man starts in trade upon borrowed capital, or even insolvent, obtains credit by misrepresentations, recklessly incurs debts without the slightest prospect of being able to discharge them, lives extravagantly, and diverts a portion of his assets, keeping no books, or only making pretence to do so. After a time he is pressed for payment; he puts off the evil day as long as possible, and when the limit is reached files a petition for liquidation. At the meeting he produces a statement of his affairs (the truth of which can only be tested at a heavy expense to his estate), offers no explanation as to his deficiency, and eventually is generally able to get through by making a ridiculously small offer. Perhaps, however, his creditors, being dissatisfied, decide to liquidate or to throw the estate into bankruptcy; in either case he obtains an extended period of protection, and probably, in consequence of the trouble and expense entailed by following up the matter to its proper end, finishes by getting his discharge either for nothing or for a much smaller sum than was originally refused.

The French bankruptcy laws, and public opinion in France, go to the other extreme, and among the better classes the disgrace of a father's bankruptcy is a sufficient stigma to stand in the way of his children's marriage.

The German laws give more latitude; they are severe upon dishonest, and lenient towards honest insolvents. A house built upon a bad foundation will not stand, and the many good intentions contained in the 1869 Act are, for want of a proper basis, rendered ineffective. This basis can easily be created. Any one seeking or obtaining credit, either in trade, speculation, or otherwise, should by law be compelled to keep, de die in diem, a true record of all his business transactions, and any neglect to comply with such law should be prima facie an offence punishable by a specified term of imprisonment, reducible in the discretion of the judge, upon the offender proving satisfactorily that no fraud was intended or contemplated.

We offer these opening remarks, as we purpose dealing, in a series of articles, with the principal features of the bankruptcy laws of other countries; and in order that the subject may be thoroughly gone into, shall have pleasure in opening our columns to any gentlemen who may be willing to communicate their experiences.

LAW AND ACCOUNTANCY.

You may, Mr. Editor, be inclined to allow me sufficient space in one of your early numbers to express a few thoughts upon the relative position of lawyers and accountants. An accountant may very fairly take upon himself lowliness and humility of spirit in the presence of so vast and powerful a body as that of the organised solicitors of the United Kingdom. I am aware that the science of numbers is as venerable as that of the law, and that both of them rest equally upon the basis of pure reason, and achieve their successes, so far as they proceed in accordance therewith; but I must bow down before the ancient organisation of the law and confess its superiority over that of accountancy. Hundreds of years have rolled away while the law has been slowly but surely consolidating itself into the form of an adamantine science, and binding the sons of men with cords which cannot be broken. With this organisation accountants cannot compete; but the principles of the accountant's profession are as ancient as those of the law, and as important and necessary for the wellbeing of all mercantile nations, and need but the combination of the members of that profession to place them in as unimpeachable a position before the commercial world.

Is there a platform for each, and can they work together for the benefit of the public without interfering with, or injuring each other? Certainly. Is it necessary that either should decay in order that the other may flourish? Certainly not. They are two worlds, each distinct in itself. Neither profession ought to trespass on the other. In times past, and under the dictation of work-hunger, either party may have been guilty of breaking into the work of the other; but those times are past and gone, let us hope never to return.

It has passed into a proverb that solicitors are the worst accountants, and the liberal members of their profession will readily admit its truth. Speaking from an experience of about twenty years, I may say I have met with very few solicitors who could have become accountants if they had eversomuch desired it. At the same time I freely confess that the accountant makes a very bad lawyer. The action of the solicitor's ingenious and subtile mind is naturally adverse in its operations from the sharp and rapid action of the vivid and concentrative mind of the accountant. Both sets of qualities are seldom to be found in one brain, and there is little risk of the two running against each other if care be exercised in their professional practice.

A plain understanding only is required to make out separate grounds and domains, which shall be sacred to each profession respectively. One shall be at home on one ground and the other on the other. If there is to be lasting peace between the two professions some such terms must be arranged, founded in equity and sustaining the self-respect of both. To dabble in law should be utterly renounced by accountants, and to dabble in accounts should be as completely renounced by solicitors. Matters which require the intervention of a solicitor should be at once handed over to him, and matters of accounts should be handed over to the accountant. We should all agree in the propriety of these principles, and it is worth while to see how far they are now being carried into execution. Is there any effort being made to recognise these principles in practice? I am afraid not. Let us take the business of liquidation, &c. Does the solicitor, as a rule, employ an accountant to do the work of the figures, or do it himself? Why, is it not a fact that in at least eighty to ninety per cent. of the cases the solicitor does the work himself, and becomes for the time being both accountant and solicitor? In this matter then, at least, I am forced to believe that there is no progress being made towards the settlement of this most important question of the proper division of labour.

In other branches of the profession also, it is said the solicitor only employs an accountant when he cannot do the work himself. Is this then to be the rule, that each profession may do what it can either in law or accountancy? I am afraid that at present there is no other solution of the difficulty. We must not ask what is right or proper, but what is legal. I fancy that each profession must ascertain and stand upon its legal rights, and wait for such a solution of its difficulties as time and wisdom may afford. I shall be glad if any member of either profession can give some other answer to the very difficult problem before us. J. B.

The Glasgow Herald states that Messrs. M'Fadyen and Co., shipbuilders, of Port Glasgow, have suspended payment.

At a meeting on the 23rd ultimo of the creditors of Messrs. Gomersall Brothers, woollen manufacturers, of Dewsbury, the liabilities were stated at £63,097, and assets at £24,193. It was resolved to accept a composition of 9s. in the pound, payable within 18 months.

REGISTRARS.

(COMMUNICATED).

A doubt is sometimes expressed as to whether an accountant can, under any circumstances, give a favourable opinion of a solicitor. It is true it is a doubt only, for, of course, no such feeling as mere envy dwells in the mind of any respectable member of either profession; but to leave that part of the question, it may be asserted in the fullest confidence that in nearly every case in which a solicitor becomes a registrar, he worthily joins a class of gentlemen whose conduct towards the profession of an accountant entitles every member of it to the highest respect. There is in them a frankness in admitting the necessity of the accountant's profession, and a disinterested desire to assist in its being placed upon some formal and definite platform, with distinct and easily comprehended duties and proper modes of remuneration, which must secure the admiration of every one who is not most bigoted and narrow-minded.

It may be that the rules and orders, fees and charges, are capable of alteration, and are not the best which could have been drawn, and that it would have been better if accountants had been allowed to express an opinion upon them at their formation. But that is clear and distinct enough from the duties of the registrar, which are simply to administer the rules and orders after they are made, and it is in this aspect that the writer gratefully takes this opportunity of publicly testifying to the uniformly kind and gentlemanly treatment he has received at the hands of every registrar to whom he has made an application, of whatever kind or nature; while in the matter of taxation, the requirements registrars have made have been simply invaluable in suggesting the proper formation of an accountant's bill. It is, of course, easy enough to be captious and fault-finding towards the person who is asking you for more than you think you ought to do—and that is a course which is often taken by an accountant before a registrar. Instead of diligently trying to comply with all the requisitions in the best manner possible, and leaving the impossibilities to stand out by themselves, plain in their unreasonableness, he is frequently politely stubborn and cross-tempered, and unobliging enough almost to provoke even a registrar. But it should be remembered that in an obliging compliance with the requirements of registrars and a profitable use of their wisdom and experience, there is a course mapped out which will, if followed, greatly help accountants in reaching that firm, acknowledged position which the public demand, and which it is the interest of all members of the profession to attain.

SOCIETIES OF ACCOUNTANTS.

THE INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.

We learn from the report of the Council, presented at the third annual general meeting of the Institute, held at the Cannon Street Hotel on the 22nd April last, that the number of members is now 151, that is to say, 89 Fellows and 62 Associates. The extension of the scope of the Institute has been so far successful, that, up to the present time, thirteen provincial accountants have been elected to be members of the Institute, eleven of them as Fellows. With the view of promoting a community of interest between the London and country accountants in the proceedings of the Institute, the Council consider it expedient that those practising in various parts of the country should be represented in the governing body, and, therefore, recommend that the number of members of the Council be increased from twelve to sixteen, the additional four members to be provincial accountants. The Council call especial attention to the circumstance that two months only remain of the extended time during which Rule 9, for the admission of Fellows, will continue in operation. (This rule is as follows:—The Council shall have power to admit as Fellows, if otherwise eligible, all persons in practice as professional accountants in the United Kingdom, who shall make application for admission previously to 1st July, 1878, provided that the applicant shall have been in uninterrupted practice as a professional accountant for the five years immediately preceding his application.) With a view to the convenience of provincial candidates for admission as Associates, the Council propose that, with each provincial member of the Council who is ex officio an examiner, there shall be associated a paid local examiner, for the purposes of the examination contemplated by Rule 16. (The rule here referred to states that—applicants for admission as Associates up to 1st July, 1878 (save as hereinafter provided), must be twenty-one years of age, and must have served for not less than five years as clerks, either articled or otherwise, to a member of this Institute, or of some other institute or society of accountants, or else must have been in partnership with such person for not less than four years, or have been in practice as a professional accountant for the five consecutive years preceding the date of application, and shall undergo such examinations in their knowledge of book-keeping and accounts, of mercantile and bankrupt law, of the duties of auditors, and of the practical working of liquidations and bankruptcies, as the Council shall from time to time direct.) The proviso herein referred to runs as follows:—Up to the 1st July, 1874, each Fellow may recommend as an Associate one clerk, who shall have been in his employ at the date of recommendation not less than five years, and the Council may in their option admit such applicant without examination. The account of receipts and expenditure during the year ending 31st December, 1873, presented with this report, shows that the entrance fees amounted to £393 15s., and the annual subscriptions to £558 1s. 6d. The Institute has invested £3,402 5s., and the cash at bankers is set down as £591 13s. 7d. In the rules and regulations for the guidance of members, the objects of the Institute are described as being "to elevate the attainments and status of professional accountants, to promote their efficiency and usefulness, and to give expression to their opinions upon all questions incident to their profession." The scale of entrance fees and subscriptions is as follows:—Persons applying previously to 1st July, 1874, and who may be admitted as Fellows without first becoming Associates, shall on admission pay the sum of £31 10s. by way of entrance fee; persons applying later than 30th June, 1874, if admitted as Fellows without first becoming Associates, £52 10s. entrance fee; persons applying previously to 1st July, 1874, and admitted as Associates, £15 15s. entrance fee; persons applying later than 30th June, 1874, £26 5s. entrance fee. Associates admitted on an entrance fee of £15 15s. are required to pay a further sum of £15 15s. on admission as Fellows, and those in the other class a further sum of £26 5s. The yearly subscription for Fellows is fixed at £5 5s., and for Associates at £2 2s. The general meetings of the Institute are held on the fourth Wednesday in the months of April and October.

SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.

On the 11th January, 1872, a public meeting of accountants practising in London was held at the Cannon Street Hotel, for the purpose of establishing "The Society of Accountants in England." At that meeting suggestions as to the constitution of the society were discussed, the work then initiated being matured at a meeting held on the 21st February, and the rules and regulations adopted at a general meeting of members held on the 14th March in the same year. The objects of the society are thus described: "To promote the acquisition of those branches of knowledge which are essential to the practice of an accountant; to decide upon questions of professional usage or courtesy; and generally to advance the position and interests of members of the profession." The society consists of three classes of members, namely, Fellows, Associates, and Honorary Members, with a class of students attached. The qualifications for a candidate for admission as an associate of the society are as follows:—"1. He shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership as a public accountant, on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have made his application on or before the 1st day of January, 1873. 2. Or shall have been a clerk to a public accountant on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership, as a public accountant for three years consecutively after that date, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1878. 3. Or shall have served under articles for a period of three years to a public accountant in actual practice. 4. Or shall have been employed as accountant to a corporation or public body for three years, or as a clerk to a public accountant, or firm of accountants, for a period of seven years at the least; but the employment need not have been for more than two years continuously with one and the same person or firm. 5. Or shall have taken a degree at one or other of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, London, or Dublin, and shall have served under articles for a period of two years to a public accountant or firm of accountants. 6. But no candidate shall be eligible for admission as an associate after the 1st day of January, 1878, until he shall have passed an examination as to his proficiency to the satisfaction of the examiners of the society." The number of associates originally elected was 101. The report presented at the first annual general meeting of the society, held on the 13th May, 1873, stated that "the society started on the 11th January, 1872, with a provisional committee consisting of 65 accountants, representing the metropolis and all the large provincial towns. All but a very few of these became associates, thus first forming a recognised society. Since then, and up to the present time, the members have increased by 114, making a total of 170." The second annual general meeting of the society was held at the Cannon Street Hotel on the 12th May last. The report presented by the council on that occasion drew attention to the "success which has attended the society during the past year," and stated that "the members now number 181, and the accounts up to the 31st December, 1873, show an available balance in hand of £509 10s. 3d. This amount has been still further increased by the subscriptions for the current year, and in consequence the council has been able to add a further sum of £200 to the existing deposit account, making a total of £500 to the credit of this account."

MANCHESTER INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.

This society was established in 1871, and it has now on its list 47 fellows and 5 associates. We learn from the report of the council to the third annual general meeting held on the 6th April last, that "the council have not been successful this year in inducing members to prepare and read papers on subjects connected with their profession. The only paper read during the year was one by Mr. Thomas, on 'The proposal for a National Institute of Accountants.' The council observing in the public prints that Mr. Birley, M.P., intended, when the Juries Bill was brought up on report in Parliament, to propose certain exemptions from service, considered it desirable that the exemption of accountants should not be overlooked, and they will, when opportunity arises, revive the matter. The most important action of the institute has been in relation to the question of the assessment of the income-tax, and at one of the quarterly meetings certain resolutions were passed, a printed copy of which was forwarded to all the members of the institute, the members of both Houses of Parliament, the chairmen of the various chambers of commerce in the kingdom, and to the secretaries of the different institutes in England, Ireland, and Scotland. A copy of such resolutions was inserted in the leading papers of London and Manchester."

INCORPORATED SOCIETY OF LIVERPOOL ACCOUNTANTS.

The memorandum of association of this society, which bears date April 7th, 1870, describes the objects of the association as follows:—"First,—The protection of the character, status, and interests of the accountants of Liverpool, the promotion of honourable practice, the settlement of disputed points of practice, and the decision of all questions of professional usage or courtesy in conducting accountant business of all kinds. Secondly,—The consideration of all general questions affecting the interests of the profession at large, or the alteration or administration of the law. Thirdly,—The doing of all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects."

BANKRUPTCY STATISTICS.

An analysis (compiled from the Controller's Report for the year ending December 31, 1873) shows that of 430 estates closed in bankruptcy during 1873, in 135 cases the costs were one hundred per cent., in 146 cases seventy-one per cent., in 149 cases thirty-nine per cent. An analysis (made from the same source) of bills taxed since the Bankruptcy Act shows the following result:—

	Year
Solicitors' Bills...	1868	£56,936
" "	1869	61,570
" "	1870	62,391
" "	1871	163,362
" "	1872	177,870
" "	1873	224,831
Accountants' bills	1868	£7,436
" "	1869	6,142

The Controller's report also shows that whilst the 1s. compositions were 94 in 1870, they were 352 in 1873, and that the compositions from 7s. 6d. to 10s. were 482 to 1870, and 205 to 1873.

The Bankruptcy Act seems to be, therefore, plainly responsible for three results, and the General Rules for a fourth, which is perhaps worse than all the rest. The first result is the enormous expense of bankruptcy; the second result is the rapid increase of legal charges; the third result is a severe diminution in the rate of creditors' compositions; and the fourth and worst result is the power given to the debtor to place his estate beyond the control of his creditors and under that of his agents, and, in fact, to revive the old evil of debtors' petitions in their worst and most expensive form.

"DESCRIBED AS AN ACCOUNTANT."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—It is not unfrequently that one sees in the police intelligence of the daily papers a report of some swindling case or other, in which the person accused is "described as an accountant." This description, I fear, to no little extent tallies with one that was adopted a few years ago by some fast fellows who, when their pranks necessitated their removal to the nearest police station, invariably described themselves as "medical students," gentlemen studying medicine being presumably allowed greater license than others. A shrewd and sensible magistrate, however, suddenly put a stop to this assumption of description by stating publicly that he should inflict the heaviest penalty allowed by law on the next pseudo lot of aspirants to the healing art that came before him; the result being a marvellous diminution in the numbers of the stereotyped announcement, "described as a medical student." I think, Sir, you would be doing the body of bonâ fide accountants an immeasurable benefit if you could, through your columns, call the attention of our magistracy to the "described as an accountant" nuisance, and prevail upon them to deal in the strictest manner with the dishonest rogues who, when their rascality is brought to light, adopt a description to which they have no title, simply for the purpose of leading "his worship" and the public to believe them respectable men of business.

I am, Sir, yours truly,
L.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—I beg to call your attention to two rather interesting blunders in the Life Assurance Companies' Act of 1870, namely, in the Revenue Account (first schedule), and the Consolidated Revenue Account (fifth schedule), where the Dr. and Cr. sides have been made to change places. Is the public to accept the alterations to which I refer as an "official" blunder, or are we to take them as a further demonstration of the arbitrary and overwhelming power possessed by an Act of Parliament?

Yours truly,
City, 28th September, 1874. Accountant.

Accountants' Diary.—Mr. Alfred C. Harper announces the publication of what may be looked upon as a desideratum by the profession, viz., a folio diary for the special use of accountants. In addition to a variety of general information which will be very serviceable in the course of daily business, we have promise of a Directory giving the names and addresses of accountants in England and Scotland, and a list of the several societies and institutes, with terms and modes of admission.

Value of Life Reversions.—It frequently happens that accountants are called upon to give the present value of reversionary property on the spur of the moment, and when they probably have not their tables at hand to assist them. The following method, devised by Mr. C. M. Willich, will be found to afford a ready means of ascertaining the value of such property:—When the age of the life is between 5 and 60 years, then 81½, minus present age, divided by 3 and multiplied by 2, equals the expectation of life; age from 60 to 74, 88¾, minus present age, divided by 2, equals expectation of life; age 74 to 90, 103, minus present age, divided by 4, equals the expectation of life.

The failure was reported on the Stock Exchange last week of a firm of "jobbers," due to speculative operations for a fall in Imperial Ottoman Bank Shares, which of late have risen to a very important extent. The partners succeeded about three years ago to the business of an old and influential member of the "House," and their liabilities are understood to be rather considerable.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

September 3.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring Rice, as Chief Judge.)

In re J. H. Danvers.—The debtor, described as of 33, Wormwood-street, and Croydon, wine merchant, trading as Danvers and Company, recently filed a petition for liquidation, and the Court last week appointed a receiver of the estate, and granted an interim injunction staying further proceedings at the suit of certain creditors. The liabilities are returned at £5,200, and the assets, consisting principally of stock and book debts, are estimated at about £1,800. His Honour continued the injunction until further order.

In re Wirth Brothers, artistic furniture manufacturers, Paris, Brienz, and London.—The debtors filed a petition for liquidation on Monday, September 7th, and on the application of Messrs. Lumley & Lumley, of Conduit-street, solicitors to the debtors, Mr. Harry Brett, public accountant, of 150, Leadenhall-street, was appointed receiver. The liabilities are estimated at a little over £15,000, with assets at £20,000, consisting principally of stock and book debts.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray.)

In Re T. Sturdy.—At a first meeting held under the bankruptcy of Thomas Sturdy, of 66, Ludgate-hill, African merchant, proofs of debts were admitted, and a resolution passed appointing Mr. W. J. White, accountant, Cheapside, trustee. A statement of affairs discloses liabilities £9,965, and assets £997.

September 4.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring Rice.)

In Re J. R. Yglesias and Co.—The debtors were merchants of Jeffery's-square, St. Mary-axe. This was an application on behalf of Messrs. J. M. Ortiz and L. Zereleta, merchants, of Lima, for an order that Mr. Turquand, the receiver and manager appointed under the petition for liquidation, should hand over a bill of lading relating to certain hides, or the proceeds of the same. It seemed that in April last 1,000 hides were consigned to the debtors on the joint account of Ortiz and Zereleta, and the hides had arrived in this country, but were not yet sold. Mr. Turquand, as representing the debtors' estate, set up no claim against the bill of lading, but desired to be protected by the order of the Court before parting with the same. The Court accordingly made the desired order.

September 8.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re E. Scott Jervis.—The case of this bankrupt, who is described as of Queen's-gate, Hyde-park, came before the Court upon the occasion of the first meeting for the proof of debts, and the appointment of a trustee to the bankrupt's estate. The bankrupt was adjudicated on the 21st of July last, the insertion of which in the Gazette was stayed pending the result of the meeting under the liquidation petition. The resolutions passed at that meeting were to the effect that the estate should be liquidated in bankruptcy, and the adjudication then advertised. There was a large attendance of the creditors, debts to the amount of between £30,000 and £40,000 being admitted against the estate. Resolutions were come to appointing Mr. John Pattinson (Messrs. Harry Brett, Milford, Pattinson, and Co.) trustee of the estate, with a committee of inspection. No statement of affairs was produced, but the secured and unsecured liabilities are at present estimated at about £140,000. The assets consist of equities of redemption on large estates in Wales.

September 9.

In re Tiden, Nordenfelt, and Company.—Mr. H. P. Sharpe applied, under proceedings for liquidation by arrangement instituted by Messrs. Lorentz Tiden and Thorsten Nordenfelt, merchants, of 34, Clement's-lane, trading as Tiden, Nordenfelt, and Company, that Mr. Robert Fletcher, accountant, 2, Moorgate-street, should be appointed receiver of the estate. The liabilities are returned at £547,752 in the aggregate; of the value of the assets no estimate has yet been formed. A creditor for £4,200 supported the application, and his Honour made the desired appointment.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING RICE.)

IN RE GRANT AND BRODIE.—The debtors were merchants carrying on business in the East India-avenue. They recently filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement, with liabilities estimated at £185,000 in the aggregate; assets of uncertain value. At the first meeting of creditors a resolution was passed for a liquidation by arrangement, Mr. John Weise, accountant, Tokenhouse-yard, being appointed trustee to act with a committee of inspection. A question had arisen whether the necessary majority of the creditors had assented to the resolution. Messrs. Phelps and Sedgwick, as the solicitors having the conduct of the proceedings, now applied for leave to register. It appeared that some of the bills upon which the debtors were liable had run off since the institution of the proceedings, and in other cases existing liabilities would not rank against the estate. The debtors alleged that the necessary majority had been obtained. His Honour allowed registration, subject to the examination of the figures, it being understood that Mr. Penn, chief clerk, would go through the proofs and certify.

IN RE A. L. MONCKTON AND CO.—This was a first sitting for the proof of debts and the appointment of a trustee. The bankrupts, Messrs. Arthur Lewis Monckton, Charles Compton, and T. G. Doughty, were colonial brokers, carrying on business at 13, Great Tower-street, as "A. L. Monckton and Co." A statement of affairs showed the debts of A. L. Monckton, the senior partner, to be £4,685, with assets £307; the joint debts amounted to £304 only, with assets £2 2s. Mr. Calkin, on behalf of the separate creditors of the bankrupt Monckton, applied that his clients, although "separate creditors," should be permitted to vote in the appointment of a trustee. Mr. Lindo, for the petitioning creditor, in opposition, contended that as the bankruptcy was a joint one, joint creditors only could vote in the appointment of a trustee. His Honour held, in accordance with the Act and the settled practice of the Court, that although separate creditors might prove their debts, they could not vote. Mr. B. P. Daniels, accountant, was then appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection.

IN RE MARQUER AND ECKHAUS.—The bankrupts, Henry Marquer and Philip Eckhaus, described as of New London-street, Fenchurch-street, steamship owners and general agents, were adjudicated on the petition of Mr. J. R. Palmer, printing-ink manufacturer, Wine Office-court, Fleet-street; and the first meeting under the adjudication was now held. Mr. Dubois said he appeared for the bankrupt, Marquer, and desired to tender a protest against the continuance of the proceedings, on the grounds, first, that they had not come to his knowledge; and, secondly, that the firm had been adjudicated bankrupts in May last by the Tribunal of Commerce, Antwerp. The act of bankruptcy upon which the adjudication was founded was the alleged departure of the debtors from England with intent to defeat or delay their creditors, but the fact was that the debtors were never residents in England at all, and the petitioning creditor's debt had been contracted abroad. His Honour said he could take no notice of the protest, as any application to set aside the proceedings must be made in a formal manner. The protest might, however, be placed upon the file. Mr. Sydney stated that he appeared for the bankrupt Eckhaus, and intimated that he should apply for the annulment of the adjudication. With that view he asked for an adjournment of this meeting. His Honour thought that if there were any bonâ fide intention to apply to set aside the adjudication, it would be convenient for the meeting to stand adjourned. Mr. Ditton, who represented the petitioning creditor, did not object, and the meeting was adjourned accordingly.

IN RE SIR WILLIAM RUSSELL, BART.—The debtor, one of the members for the city of Norwich in the last Parliament, was a shipowner and merchant of Salter's Hall-court, Cannon-street, trading as Campbell and Co., and also late of the Bathurst Cement Works, cement merchant. He recently filed a petition for liquidation, and the creditors have passed a resolution for liquidation by arrangement, coupled with a proviso that the debtor should set aside his income beyond £600 per annum for the benefit of his creditors until they should be paid in full. His liabilities were £52,052, and assets £1,934, in addition to half-pay of £200 per annum as a colonel in the army. Mr. Munns now applied for registration of the resolutions. Mr. Linklater, on behalf of an opposing creditor, took the objection that the proceedings under a petition for liquidation presented by the debtor in March, 1870, were still pending, and in fact there were no assets which could vest under the present petition. His Honour: The point is an important one, and well worthy of consideration. Mr. Munns said he had understood the notice of objection to refer to the insufficiency of assets, not to the point as to whether or not the assets could, under the circumstances, vest in the trustee appointed under the present petition. Mr. Linklater said that he could not oppose the adjournment if his friend was taken by surprise and desired to consider the point. His Honour thereupon granted an adjournment.

IN RE EVERSHED.—A first meeting for the proof of debts and the appointment of a trustee was held under the bankruptcy of Arthur Evershed, described as of 8, Bellevue, Hampstead, licentiate of the Royal College of Physicians. A preliminary statement of affairs shows the following figures:—Creditors, £4,515; and assets, book debts, £49; cash at bankers, £19; furniture, fixtures, and fittings at Bellevue, £920; other property, £30. The adjudication had been made upon the petition of a creditor for £1,750, the act of bankruptcy being a declaration of insolvency. Mr. Strangways appeared for the petitioning creditor, and Messrs. Field and Co. also attended the proceedings. The case was adjourned, with a view to a proposal being made by the bankrupt for the annulment of the adjudication and the payment of a composition.

ROLLS' CHAMBERS.

September 29.

THE CROWN CO-OPERATIVE SOCIETY.—This society, which was carried on in Craven-terrace, Lancaster-gate, was under a winding-up order, and an application was made to carry on the business in order to sell the same as a "going concern," by which the creditors would be paid in full. Mr. Peckham, as solicitor for the official liquidator, Mr. White, and other parties, represented to the Chief Clerk (Mr. Peak) the importance that the business should be continued, by which it was expected that the creditors would be paid 20s. in the pound. The Chief Clerk sanctioned the course proposed, and directed the official liquidator to carry on the business to the 31st October.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS IN THE PROVINCES.

SHEFFIELD DISTRICT.

Accountants have, if one may judge by that part of their professional practice which comes to a certain extent before the public, of late been tolerably busy in the Sheffield district and at Sheffield itself. During the past month, for instance, there have been numerous small failures, besides one or two of considerable amount, involving much care and trouble in extricating matters from the state of chaos into which they had fallen, and reducing them to the clearly-defined condition of balance-sheets for presentation to the creditors. The largest failures which have been dealt with are those of Mr. John Whall, solicitor, &c., Worksop, Mr. Henry Hawkesley, Sheffield, Mr. Henry James, Sheffield, and Mr. Arthur John Fretwell, Whittington—the last three trading jointly as a brickmaking and colliery company, besides their separate estates; and of Mr. John Smith Swinton and Mr. Thos. Green, grocer, &c., Rotherham. Taking matters in the order of sequence in which they have occurred, I find that the failures, &c., of the past six weeks or so are as follow:—On July 31st a meeting of the creditors of Wm. Steele, late a farmer, but now of Ellesmere Road, Sheffield, was held at the offices of Mr. F. E. Machen, solicitor, Sheffield; liquidation was resolved upon, Mr. Cowton Appleby, accountant, being appointed trustee. On August 1st a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Wm. Hanson, tailor, &c., of Hatfield, was held at the offices of Mr. E. C. Peagam, Doncaster, liquidation resulting, with Mr. Edward Bennett, Sheffield, as trustee. On August 3rd a meeting of the creditors of Mr. George Richardson, hatter, &c., of 70, Infirmary Road, Sheffield, was held at the offices of Mr. W. C. Auty, solicitor, 66, Queen Street, Sheffield. It was decided to adopt liquidation, Mr. Isaac Jackson, of York Place, Leeds, being appointed trustee, with Mr. Auty to register the resolutions. On the 16th of August the creditors of Mr. Archibald Haswell, draper, &c., Brookhill, Sheffield, were called together at the offices of Mr. George Mellor, solicitor, Sheffield. The accounts showed the liabilities to be £794, and assets £305. It was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, Mr. Cowton Appleby being chosen as trustee, with Mr. Mellor to register. On August 21st the creditors of Mr. William Hunter, Bailey Lane, Sheffield, assembled at the offices of Mr. Fairburn, solicitor, Sheffield, liquidation resulting, with Mr. Edward Bennett as trustee and Mr. Fairburn to register. Three days later (August 24th), the creditors of Mr. Arthur Rawson, plumber and glazier, 21, Allen Street, Sheffield, met at the offices of Mr. Ralph Nicholson, solicitor, Sheffield. It was decided to adopt liquidation, Mr. Thos. G. Shuttleworth, accountant, Sheffield, being appointed trustee, and Mr. Nicholson to register. On August 26th Mr. Robert Hyde's creditors (Meadow Street, Sheffield, grocer, &c.) met at the offices of Messrs. J. Brook, Greaves, and Allen, Sheffield, and decided to liquidate the estate, Mr. Francis Day, accountant, being selected as trustee, and Mr. Samuel Allen being chosen to register the resolutions. The same day the creditors of Mr. John Smith, timber merchant, grocer, and dealer, &c., met at the Prince of Wales Hotel, Masborough. Mr. C. H. Moss (Hart and Moss, Rotherham, accountants), the receiver, read a statement explaining the debtor's affairs, and showing that during a recent partnership he lost £1,300, besides a further sum of £500 since its dissolution. The total liabilities were about £4,000, of which £800 were secured, and available assets £1,339. The meeting was adjourned until the following Thursday, when an offer of 5s. in the pound was offered, but liquidation was resolved upon, with Mr. Moss as trustee, and Messrs. Lee, Asker, Wood, Waddington, and Corbidge as the committee of inspection. During the next week, however (on Sept. 9th), the committee met on the debtor's premises and decided to accept an offer of 6s. in the pound, in two instalments within three months. On August 27th the creditors of Mr. Joseph Blake, tobacconist, &c., Doncaster, held a meeting at the offices of Messrs. Shirley and Atkinson, solicitors, Doncaster, and decided to adopt liquidation, with Mr. Edward Bennett as trustee, and the solicitors named to register. On August 31st a very noisy meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Whall, solicitor, Worksop, was held at that town. The liabilities were shown to be £20,228, and assets £2,702. Mr. E. S. Foster, accountant, Sheffield, read a long and exhaustive report on the state of Mr. Whall's affairs, detailing a very grave state of things. Many serious charges and allegations were made, both in the report and by those present at the meeting, it being alleged that a great portion of the total liabilities was formed of monies entrusted to Mr. Whall for investment or as security by clients. Mr. Foster was appointed receiver, and at a subsequent meeting, held at the Sheffield County Court, Mr. Foster and Mr. John Hardcastle, accountant, Leeds, were chosen joint trustees. On September 2nd Mr. Henry Hawkesley, carrying on business as a hatter at Sheffield, and in partnership with other persons as the Whittington Brickmaking and Coal Company, near Chesterfield, filed a petition in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court, and Mr. G. T. Earle was chosen as receiver. Next day a petition was filed against Mr. Henry James, another partner in the company, accountant, &c., Sheffield. Mr. James having absconded, an adjudication in bankruptcy was made against him some days afterwards, with Mr. E. Bennett as receiver, under the direction of the Court. Then, again, a few days later, Mr. Cooper Corbidge was appointed receiver and manager by the Court in the joint estate of the Brickmaking Company, Mr. Arthur J. Fretwell, the other co-partner, having no separate estate. On Sept. 21st a meeting of Mr. Hawkesley's creditors was held, liquidation being adopted, with Mr. W. F. Tasker as trustee, the liabilities and assets being shown to be nearly even. On Sept. 4th a largely attended meeting of the creditors of Mr. C. H. Disney, Morley Park Iron Works, Derbyshire, was held at Derby, Mr. Bean (Butterley Iron Company) being in the chair. The liabilities were stated to be £16,004 19s., and assets £2,984 18s. Liquidation was adopted, with Messrs. Harrison of Derby as trustees. On Sept. 3rd the creditors of Mr. Thomas Nicholson, grocer, &c., Harvest Lane, Sheffield, was held, Mr. Isaac Ellis, accountant, St. James's Street, being selected trustee. On September 7th a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. John and Alexander McIntosh, drapers, &c., was held at the offices of Messrs. Binney and Sons, Queen Street, Sheffield, liquidation resulting. On Sept. 15th the creditors of Mr. Thomas Green, grocer, &c., College Street, Rotherham, met at the offices of Messrs. Badgers and Rhodes, solicitors, Rotherham. Mr. Chapman (Hazlehurst and Sons, Runcorn) presided. The liabilities were shown to be £2,535, and assets £1,262. An offer of 7s. 6d. in the pound was accepted, the first three payments of 2s., 3s., and 2s., respectively, to be guaranteed. Mr. Moss was voted trustee. On Sept. 16th a petition was filed in the Sheffield County Court in the affairs of Mr. George A. Robertson, pawnbroker, &c., Sheffield, the liabilities being estimated at £1,300, and assets £300. Mr. John Edey was appointed receiver. On Sept. 17th a petition was filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court against Mr. Wm. Topliffe, publican, Doncaster, the liabilities being estimated at £1,500. Mr. E. Bennett was appointed receiver. On Sept. 18th a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Thomas Moreland, draper, &c., Sheffield, was held at the offices of Mr. Crang, solicitor, Sheffield; liabilities £943 3s. 7d., assets £755. Liquidation was decided upon, with Mr. Chesney, accountant, Bradford, as trustee. On Sept. 19th a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Job Henry Smith, grocer, &c., New Whittington, Chesterfield, was held at the Chesterfield County Court. The liabilities were shown to be £1,313, and assets £335. It was resolved to wind up in bankruptcy, Mr. John Edey, accountant, Sheffield, being chosen trustee, with a committee. It will thus be seen that there have recently been numerous failures, and it appears probable that several others will shortly take place. I have not space to mention several dividends which have just been declared invarious estates.

BIRMINGHAM.

JOHN THORNELOE, hairdresser, on the 31st August, at the office of Mr. Parry, solicitor, Bennet's-hill; two shillings in the pound was accepted, payable in three months.—JOHN PERRY, boot dealer, at the offices of Mr. Wilson, Bennet's-hill, on the 3rd ult.; resolved to wind up the estate.—JOHN ERNEST HYDE, Aston, schoolmaster, at the offices of Mr. J. F. Grove, solicitor, on the 2nd inst.; composition of 1s. in the pound was accepted. —JOHN SMITH, junior, grocer; the Hen and Chickens hotel, on the 9th ult.; Mr. W. Lomas Harrison presided, Mr. Henry Hawkes, solicitor, represented the debtor; liabilities £1,466 8s. 1d., assets £1,023 13s. 1d.; a composition of 9s. in the pound, payable in two and four months, was accepted; Mr. C. T. Starkey, accountant, was appointed trustee.—JOSEPH LEVI, outfitter's manager; held at the King's Head hotel on the 1st ult.; liabilities £1,089, assets nil; Mr. Cresswell appeared for the debtor; a composition of 1s. in the pound was declined.—JAMES OSBORNE, mattress maker; at the offices of Mr. A. East, solicitor, Colmore-row; a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound was accepted.—JOHN and ALFRED CRESWELL, builders, contractors, and agents; held at the Queen's Hotel Company, on the 11th ult.; Mr. E. Lloyd, Great Grimsby, presided, Messrs. Ryland, Martineau, and Carslake represented the debtors; receiver, Mr. Harrison (Laundy, Harrison, and Harris, accountants); liabilities £5,762 5s. 8d., assets £3,607 16s. 9d.; a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable in one, six, and twelve months, was accepted; Mr. C. A. Harrison, accountant, Waterloo-street, was appointed trustee.—F. J. CRESWELL, contractor; held at the offices of Mr. W. H. Griffin, Bennet's-hill, on the 11th ult.; Mr. Williams, solicitor, presided; liabilities £128 2s. 5d., assets estimated at £90; Mr. C. A. Harrison, accountant, appointed trustee.—THOMAS FORTNAM, Redditch, farmer; before Mr. Registrar Chauntler, Birmingham County Court, Mr. Parry, solicitor for the petitioning creditors; Mr. L. J. Sharp, accountant, was appointed trustee.—WILLIAM COPE, brass caster; held at the office of Mr. R. Duke, solicitor, on the 11th ult.; Mr. A. C. Cox, accountant, presided; a composition of 1s. in the pound accepted.—CHARLES PORTER, surgeon; held at the offices of Mr. Crowther Davies, solicitor, Bennet's-hill; a composition of 5s. in the pound accepted.—TERTIUS FARADAY, brush manufacturer; held on the 11th inst.; Mr. E. Wignall, accountant, was appointed trustee.—PIMM and DAVIES, electro-platers; a meeting held on the 23rd Sept., at the offices of Mr. J. M. Green, solicitor; a composition of 15s. in the pound accepted, and Mr. L. J. Sharp, accountant, appointed trustee.—HENRY BURNHAM, draper; meeting held on the 16th ult., at the offices of Messrs. Reece and Harris, solicitors; a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound was offered but refused; it was, therefore, resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, and Mr. Marris, accountant, was appointed trustee.—ZACCHEUS BOWEN, Hereford, gunmaker; meeting held at the offices of Mr. Richard Free, solicitor, on the 21st ult.; the statement of accounts submitted to the meeting showed liabilities amounting to £1,156 6s. 4d., assets £264 0s. 6d.; it was decided to wind up the estate in liquidation, and Mr. Robert Free, accountant, Bennet's-hill, was appointed trustee.

Whilst upon this subject, we may quote the following from a paper forwarded to us by a London accountant, who is of opinion that "the present state of the debtor and creditor insolvent practice is the worst in history, so far as the creditors are concerned—viz., the average costs under a petition for the proceedings up to the first meeting are £1 per creditor. The average number of petitions from 1867 to 1872 is 11,054 per annum. The average number of creditors under each petition is 42. Then, 11,054 x 42 = 464,268, and that number, reckoned at £1 each, may be taken as the fair average amount of unnecessary yearly expenses which the rules have compelled debtors to inflict upon their creditors. The rate of dividend has decreased. In 1870 the dividends at and over 7s. 6d., compared with those at and under 2s. 6d., were two to one. In 1872 they were one to two (see bankruptcy returns, 31st December, 1872). Further, the average rate of composition dividends in 1872 was lower than in any year since 1862, viz., 4s. 6¾d. The average amount from 1862 to 1870 was 5s. 6¾d. so that the rules have caused a loss of 1s. in the pound to the creditors. The amount of this loss may be arrived at as follows: the average amount of liabilities of the failures in each year from 1867 to 1872, both inclusive, is £32,186,071, and 1s. in the pound upon that sum is £1,609,302. If to this amount be added the estimate of £464,269 for legal costs, we may charge the rules with inflicting a loss upon creditors exceeding £2,000,000 per year."

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

There was a good deal of excitement on the Quay-side last week on account of one large firm having handed their books over to accountants and stopped payment. The large Limited Liability Company, with which this firm was connected, it is stated, has its capital intact. Some other establishments in Newcastle are said to be involved in transactions with this firm, and probably will have to appeal to their creditors for forbearance. There can be no doubt, however, that the commercial credit of the Tyne is in a thoroughly sound state, and the present embarrassments that have arisen have had their origin, not in business, but in inflated credit, or as some people put it, using too much paper.

PALMER'S SHIPBUILDING COMPANY.—The annual report of this company, which has just been issued, states that the works have been actively employed during the financial year. All the departments of the company (except the shipyard, in respect to the old contracts taken before the advance in prices, as stated in the last annual report, and completed during the year) have given satisfactory results; and but for the unfortunate and annoying losses on those old ship contracts, and the bad debt made with Watson and Campbell, of Glasgow, the profits of the year would have been satisfactory, and the directors would have been able to declare a liberal dividend. The net profits, as shown in the balance sheet, are £25,102 17s. 10d., and the directors recommend a dividend at the rate of 2½ per cent. per annum, which will absorb £22,522. The reserve fund remains at £30,000, and the actual share capital is £900,880. The meeting was held on Saturday last, at the Queen's Head, Newcastle, and was of rather a stormy character, considerable discussion arising as to loss on certain ships and as to circular issued in regard to the accounts and balance sheet by Mr. Bishop (Turquand, Youngs, & Co.), one of the auditors; the result in the latter case being a decided opposition to Mr. Bishop's re-election, and ultimately Mr. Collier (Chadwick's, Adamson, and Collier, of Manchester) was elected in his stead.

BIRKENHEAD.—In the County Court of Cheshire, in re Annie Metcalfe, of Dacre Hill, Rock Ferry, a bankrupt. This person was made bankrupt under a petition filed by Henry Wilson, a butcher, for £122 18s. 2d. In the statement of accounts filed by her and examined by the trustee, J. G. B. Mawson, of Birkenhead, accountant, the liabilities are £532 15s. 11d., and assets stated to be nil. Public examination adjourned to 13th October.

LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.

At the Tunbridge Wells County Court (J. J. Lonsdale, Esq., judge) the case of John Humphrey v. George Herbert Ladbury was a claim for £6, defendant being an accountant, of London, who was appointed trustee and manager of the estate of Henry Sandars, of Ticehurst, a liquidating debtor, and plaintiff a tallow chandler, &c., of Tunbridge Wells. Mr. Cheale for plaintiff, and Mr. Knight, of London, for defendant. Plaintiff stated that on April 11 last he received an order from Mr. Sandars for certain goods, which were sent by carrier, and on the 15th he executed a second order. In reply to Mr. Knight, he said he debited the goods to Mr. Sandars, and Mr. Ladbury had told him that he knew nothing about them. Had proved former debts under Mr. Sandars' bankruptcy, but not the present sum. James Jenner, carrier, proved the delivery of the goods, the second lot, on April 16. Henry Sandars, grocer, carrying on business at Ticehurst, stated that on April 11 he filed a petition for liquidation, and Mr. Ladbury was appointed receiver and manager. On that same day he gave an order to the plaintiff for some goods. The receiver did not come down until the 15th, and between those dates he (witness) carried on the business. He also gave the second order on April 15. In cross-examination he said he gave orders on his own account. He never received any instructions from Mr. Ladbury not to order goods, and what he did was to carry on the business. He gave no orders after the receiver arrived. Mr. Knight said Mr. Ladbury, who was engaged largely as a receiver, considered that he might be ruined if held responsible for all orders given by persons filing petitions. The petition was not filed when the first parcel of goods was ordered, and Mr. Ladbury knew nothing about them. He was sued as a trustee to the estate; but if a debtor ordered goods prior to the filing of the petition of bankruptcy the creditor must prove that claim under the bankruptcy; and if orders were given afterwards by the bankrupt, he must be held personally responsible. Defendant stated that he had never given instructions to Mr. Sandars to purchase goods on his credit, and he knew nothing about the goods. He gave strict injunctions to his man in possession that no goods were to be bought without his knowledge. Mr. Cheale maintained that the goods having gone into the estate, and the receipts therefrom and profit, if any, to the trustee, he was responsible for all goods received. His Honour said that the receiver should have found out what goods had been ordered, and then he could have rejected them, but he failed to do so. He thought that he should have inquired, and therefore must make an order against him as liable.

CHARGE OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. Gustavus Marks, a merchant, of No. 16, Gould-square, Crutched-friars, surrendered to his bail, before Sir Thomas Dakin, at Guildhall, to answer the charge of having committed various offences under the 11th section of the Bankruptcy Act. Mr. Ditton, solicitor, said that he had been instructed by the majority of the creditors who were opposed to the prosecution to ask for a remand. The trustee had not taken the proper course to get in the assets, or they might have been realised by other means. Mr. Besley objected to Mr. Ditton being heard, as he had no locus standi, he not being engaged either for the prosecution or defence. The prosecution had been ordered by the Court of Bankruptcy, and the evidence would show that that prosecution was justified. In July, 1872, the defendant started in business as a merchant, in Gould-square, Crutched-friars, and opened an account at the National and Provincial Bank of England with £50, and in the course of seven months' trading he had managed to run into debt £3,500, for which the creditors had not received one farthing. The petition in bankruptcy was filed against him on the 4th of February, 1873, and he was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 25th of March following. On the 17th of April a trustee was appointed, and the defendant was examined in May and July, but he failed to produce any accounts. In November he was ordered to file cash and goods accounts, but he did not do so. A peremptory order was then made that he should do so, but he neglected to do it, until an application was made for his commitment for contempt. On the 27th of June, 1874, he filed his accounts, and at the meeting of creditors which was held on the 29th their consideration was adjourned until the 31st of July last, when the meeting was adjourned sine die, with leave to the trustee to prosecute. The trustee was Mr. Jules Grabowski, of No. 66, Aldermanbury, and he was the agent for Messrs. Niel Frères, woollen manufacturers, of Paris. The defendant went to Mr. Grabowski, and wanted to purchase about £400 worth of merinos, but as he at that time owed them nearly £600 Mr. Grabowski refused to let him have them. It was ultimately arranged that the defendant was to pay £200 in cash, and the remainder in a bill, and then he should have them. On the 18th of December he gave them a cheque for £194, being one half of the amount, less discount at three per cent., and the goods were transferred at the packer's from Mr. Grabowski's name to the defendant's. At the time he gave that cheque for £194 he had only 13s. 2d. at the bank to meet it, and he never afterwards had any more there. He knew that the cheque would have to go to Paris, and be some days before it would be presented; and therefore as soon as the goods were under his control he went to a person named Davis, and obtained an advance upon them of £300. When the cheque was dishonoured Mr. Grabowski went to him, and he said that it was only a temporary difficulty—his money at the bank had been attached, but it would be set right in a few days. In his statement he had put Messrs. Niel down as creditors for £800, whereas they were creditors for over £1,000. In fact, there was scarcely an offence under the 11th section that the defendant had not committed. He had kept no accounts, he produced no books, he had made no entries of the receipt of money, he had disposed of his goods otherwise than in the ordinary course of business, and had not accounted for money that he had received.

Charles G. R. Lenfant, clerk in the Bankruptcy Court, produced the proceedings in bankruptcy, which were in detail as Mr. Besley had stated them generally.

Mr. Straight complained that application had been made to the registrar in bankruptcy for copies of the documents in the proceedings, and he had refused to give them. Perhaps if he (Sir Thomas Dakin) were to express an opinion before the officer of the Bankruptcy Court which he could convey to the registrar all further difficulty would be avoided. It was the most extraordinary and unheard-of thing that a person charged with a criminal offence should be refused copies of official documents.—Sir Thomas Dakin said he thought there could be no doubt that the defendant should have copies of the documents furnished to him.—Mr. Besley said he would give his learned friend every assistance, but the matter had been argued before the registrar, and he had given his opinion that copies of these documents ought not to be given.

Evidence was then given as to the above facts.

Mr. Lenfant objected to Mr. Straight looking at the bankruptcy proceedings, and said that he had been instructed by the registrar not to allow that to be done.

Mr. Straight said that Mr. Spring Rice ought to be ashamed of himself to give such an order, but he would not dare to say the same thing to him. He was not going to steal the documents, and he did not care what the registrar said.

Mr. Lenfant said there was an order on the file that the defendant was not to see the proceedings.

Mr. Straight said he should like to know how he dared to make such an order. He did not care what order the registrar had made; the documents were in court, and he should look at them. Mr. Besley asked him to read the order.

Mr. Straight complied. The order stated that defendant had applied to inspect and copy the proceedings, and the application was refused. That was really monstrous. If they were at the Old Bailey he wondered what the Recorder would think of such an order, and what attention he would pay to it. The documents were there in evidence and he should look at them. Mr. Besley knew the laws of evidence, and that he had a right to look at them.

At this stage of the proceedings the case was adjourned, the defendant being admitted to bail on the same sureties as before.

At the adjourned hearing, on the 16th Sept., Mr. George Blagrove Snell, one of the official shorthand writers of the Court of Bankruptcy, proved the notes he had taken of the examinations of the defendant before the Registrar in Bankruptcy. Other evidence was taken as to the transactions of the defendant, after which he was again remanded.

ELECTION OF AN ACCOUNTANT TO THE COMMON COUNCIL.

On Wednesday, the 23rd September, a numerously attended meeting of the inhabitants of the Ward of Bassishaw was held in the vestry-room of the Church of St. Michael, Bassishaw, for the election of a Common Councilman, in the room of the late Mr. Deputy Heath. Four gentlemen were duly proposed and seconded, viz.:—Messrs. William H. Pannell (of the firm of Slater and Pannell, accountants), of Guildhall Chambers, Basinghall-street; W. Whitton, W. H. Osborn, and W. Matthews. Mr. H. A. Dubois, in proposing Mr. Pannell, said that gentleman had time at his disposal, which he was willing to devote to the interests of the ward and the city generally. He was a member of the Loriners' Company, and was in every way qualified to fill the office which he sought at the hands of the ward. Mr. Walter W. Brown seconded the nomination. Mr. Alderman Stone put the names of the four candidates to a show of hands, and declared it to be in favour of Mr. Pannell, whereupon a poll was demanded on behalf of the other candidates, which took place on the following day. The poll opened at 10 o'clock and closed at 4, the number of votes recorded being—for Mr. Pannell, 59; Mr. Whitton, 43; Mr. Matthews, 43; and Mr. Osborn, 12. The announcement was received with very loud applause. Mr. Pannell, who was very cordially received, said he was deeply sensible of the honour which had been conferred upon him that day, and he was also fully alive to the responsibilities of the position. He was proud indeed at having been elected as a member of the ancient Corporation of the City of London—the greatest city in the world. He did not know whether politics were quite out of place at that meeting, or whether he was wrong in telling them that in politics he was a Conservative (hear, hear, and cheers). Whether or not that statement was out of place he would at once tell them that he was not at all ashamed of being a Conservative (cheers), and he certainly would not be one who would support, or approve, of the sweeping away of existing things unless they could be bettered. He would not pledge himself to support any rapid changes that might be proposed, but he would promise to give to every matter of public interest that came before him his best and most earnest attention and consideration. To their worthy alderman he begged to return his sincere and warm thanks for the kindness and urbanity with which he had presided over the election, and he also expressed his acknowledgments to his brother candidates for the great courtesy and goodwill he had met at their hands throughout the entire election. He also thanked his numerous friends for their assistance during the contest, and said he attributed his present position entirely to the efforts of his friends who had sacrificed their time and interests for the promotion of his own. (Loud cheers.)

Henry Charles Winston England, aged 24, of 36, Polygon, Somers' Town, described as an accountant, and Cecilia England, aged 66, of the same address, surrendered to their recognisances, at Clerkenwell Police-court, on Friday, to answer a charge of unlawfully assaulting and beating George Frederick Beverton in the execution of his duty as sheriffs' officer for Middlesex, and rescuing Philip Newbury England, a money lender, from his lawful custody at the above address. On the 10th of September the complainant went to England's house and apprehended him on an order from the Court of Queen's Bench, signed by Mr. Justice Blackburn, for his committal for six weeks for the non-payment of a sum of £1,033 19s. 6d., in a case of "Jennings v. England." On that occasion Philip Newbury England made his escape, but he has since surrendered, and is now in custody at Holloway Gaol. The assault now complained of was that the defendants struck Beverton, and pulled him away. Complainant said he did not tell either of the defendants on the day of the assault in question who and what he was, nor did he produce his warrant. Police-constable Bowen, 409 Y, proved that when Beverton attempted to enter, the male defendant caught hold of the side of the door, put his left arm around the neck of the prosecutor, and his hand over his mouth, and said, "I will see if you come in here." When evidence was given which confirmed the complainant's statement, Mr. Montagu Williams, who appeared for Henry England, said that he hoped the magistrate would not decide the issues raised in this case until the summons as to the validity of the present proceedings was decided. The matter would come before the judge at chambers. Mr. Cooke said he should most certainly not dismiss or commit for trial until the case had been settled elsewhere. He should like the learned gentleman to look up the case, as to whether the complainant was a peace officer or not. That the sheriff was a conservator of the police there could be no doubt; but whether the complainant was he would not at present say. At present his strong opinion was that he was not. He then adjourned the case for a week, and the defendants were allowed at large in their own recognisances.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor, George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham, 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps, and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

Will be published for the present on the 1st of every month. The subscription will be 10s. 6d. per annum, entitling the subscriber to one copy per month (post free). Single copies will be sold at 1s. each. Subscriptions to be forwarded to Mr. ALFRED W. GEE, 59, Basinghall-street, E.C. (post office orders payable at the Lothbury office), to whom also applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the Paper, should be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of THE ACCOUNTANT, at the same address.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Editor desires to express his thanks for the many flattering and encouraging communications he has received relative to the first number of THE ACCOUNTANT. It is impossible to obtain anything like completeness or perfection at a bound, but the Editor is encouraged in the hope that THE ACCOUNTANT will in time prove of great value to the profession.

It should be thoroughly understood that the Editor will be compelled to rely to some extent upon accountants for information respecting liquidation meetings and other matters of importance to the profession occurring in their respective districts, and it is hoped that all members will thus contribute towards the attainment of the object with which the Paper was started, viz., the advancement of the interests of the accountants of the United Kingdom.

The Editor will be glad to receive early information of any proceedings of unusual importance which may be about to take place; and in case a special report is required, the services of a shorthand writer may be obtained upon certain specified terms, which can be ascertained on application. In all cases where it is practicable the MS. should be forwarded to the Editor by the middle of the month.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by this Paper as an advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, THE ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. THE ACCOUNTANT will thus secure to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and it will be particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c.

The charge for single insertions of ordinary advertisements will be 1s. per line; a liberal reduction will be made for a series, and special terms allowed for standing trade announcements.

Advertisement "copy" should be forwarded, if possible, by the middle of the month, but late announcements can be received up to the morning of the day previous to publication.

N.B.—During the past month the Proprietor has received communications from several Advertisers as to the excellent results which have attended their Advertisements in the first number of this paper, thereby affording very gratifying proof of the value of THE ACCOUNTANT as a medium for advertising Vacant Partnerships, Estates, &c.

NOTICE.

In consequence of the large demands upon our space, it has been found necessary to increase the size of THE ACCOUNTANT from Sixteen to TWENTY-FOUR PAGES.

Notwithstanding the increased size, a considerable quantity of matter, including both London and Provincial reports, is unavoidably omitted. The Proprietor wishes to impress upon Advertisers and Contributors the urgent necessity of forwarding their "copy" in all cases where it is practicable by the 20th of the month.

The Accountant.

NOVEMBER, 1874.

The case of alleged conspiracy to defraud creditors, recently brought before the Middlesborough magistrates, is one which should possess a certain amount of interest for all members of the profession. Not that there is any special feature in the incidents of the alleged fraud. On the contrary, according to the statement for the prosecution, there has been nothing much more original than an attempt to defraud by means of an antedated agreement, and, if considered on that ground only, the affair would have no particular claim upon the attention of accountants. But when we learn that two of the leading actors are soi-disant "accountants," it becomes not merely a matter of curiosity or interest, but one of positive duty for members of the profession to give their serious consideration to the case. A brief statement of the facts will suffice:—An innkeeper, named Hodgson, became insolvent in May, and his affairs were in liquidation, when (according to the prosecutor's case) he made, on the 17th June, an assignment of certain fixtures, &c., in satisfaction of a debt of £80 said to be owing to an auctioneer named Hedley, who is, by the way, a member of the Middlesborough Town Council. The story of the witness who prepared the agreement is that it was done on the 17th June, that he was told by his master to leave the date blank, and that he subsequently received instructions to insert "April 27th." This was, in substance, the case upon which the prosecutor relied, whilst for the defence it was contended that the money was actually owing to Hedley, and that the document referred to was drawn up and attested on the 27th April, and not, as alleged, on the 17th June.

We can very well take up this matter without any infringement of the wholesome rule which bars discussion upon the merits of anything pendente lite; our comments will have reference solely to the so-called "accountants," who cut such very dubious figures in the case. Mr. John Henry Bennison, the master, stands accused of complicity in a gross fraud, and his confidential clerk, Mr. John Gibson, appears as the accuser, and relates a "plain unvarnished tale" of his own exploits, and his connection with the case, such as is seldom heard from the respectable standpoint of a witness-box. Indeed, the offence with which the master is charged pales into comparative insignificance when placed by the side of the achievements of the clerk, who has served one term of imprisonment for forging the name of a witness, and a second term for forging a testimonial to his own character, and who, in the course of his life, has dwelt in many places and cities, changing his name with his dwelling, and "playing billiards incessantly" when unoccupied by weightier affairs. After such a career Mr. Gibson must have felt rather strange in the witness-box, and it was highly essential that the prosecutor should bring other witnesses to support his story of the tell-tale diary, the purchase of a new one, the exciting negociations as to "old ink," and of his having virtuously refused the elegantly couched proposals of his master to copy another diary and "square" the matter for £10. However, upon the joint testimony of these witnesses, the magistrates could scarcely have adopted any other course than that of committing the accused for trial.

Accountants may draw a very palpable moral from this unsavoury story, quite apart from any considerations as to the guilt or innocence of the parties concerned, viz., as to the necessity for thoroughly united action, with the view to obviating the discredit which inevitably attaches to exposures of this kind. Of course we do not mean that any action accountants may take will prevent attempts at fraud; but it is very desirable that the various accountants' societies should unite in trying to bring about the establishment of a duly constituted authority, to decide upon, and enforce, a standard of admission to the profession, and to punish members found guilty of fraud or questionable practices, as a barrister would be punished by being disbarred, and a solicitor by being struck off the roll. Such an authority would not put a stop to frauds by the black sheep of the flock, but it would, at least, ensure respectability and comparative competency at the outset of a professional career, and would tend to obviate the scandal attendant upon persons convicted of, or charged with, malpractices being subsequently paraded through the length and breadth of the land as "accountants."

RECEIVERS' DUTIES.

A case we report from the Liverpool court is of interest, bearing as it does upon the duties of receivers. We cannot say, however, that the ruling of the judge meets altogether with our approval. Bankruptcy and liquidation proceedings are of the same force and effect. It has been the immemorial custom for the officer of the court, where he could not obtain peaceable possession, to effect forcible entry. It is quite true that an execution by the sheriff could not be similarly enforced without rendering him liable to an action, but in bankruptcy who is there that could bring an action? Surely not the bankrupt, for the property seized does not belong to him, but to his creditors, and it would be rather an anomaly if the representative of the creditors could not take forcible possession of their property. Where the property of a bankrupt is in possession of third parties it is only right that the directions and authority of the court should be invoked, but surely not where it is ostensibly in the possession of the bankrupt, he being the tenant of the premises. By the very terms of his appointment, the receiver is required to take immediate possession of all property, and it appears to us that he would sadly fail in his duty if he waited until the formality of obtaining the directions of the court had been gone through. Pending such application every fragment of property might vanish, and it would be difficult to say in such case who would be answerable to the creditors.

It is further extremely doubtful if the court would make any order, as the provision of the Act has reference more to the administration than to acquiring possession of an estate. Assuming that the court were to give directions, it is questionable whether the act of taking forcible possession would be valid or regular. If it be irregular to break into the premises of a bankrupt, no order of any court can make it regular. It is much to be regretted that the rules do not always definitely state what are the duties and powers of a receiver, and, as the chief judge possesses ample authority to alter and amend existing rules, as well as to frame new ones, we hope it will not be long before the omission and difficulty to which we refer will meet with his attention.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869.

The recent Bankruptcy Act, 1869, has been of no small assistance to accountants in bringing the importance and value of their business more directly before the public. A few years back and the accountant was comparatively unknown; but with the growth of commercial pursuits and the extension of our home and foreign relations, the necessity of a talented, experienced body of men for the purpose of regulating business transactions became apparent, and now manifests its presence in the persons of the men who have adopted accounts as their profession. The various societies that have been formed show the growing wants of the day, and the ultimate development of a new and acknowledged business cannot be far off. The legal profession generally has been for many years entrusted with the duties now undertaken by accountants, but in almost every case it has been found that the services of an expert, one conversant with the puzzles of book-keeping, have had to be obtained in order to disentangle the cobweb of figures which the well-meaning attorney has been vainly striving to master.

Enormous costs, delay of business, and unsatisfactory results are ipso facto the outcome of incompetence, and accounts furnished by the lawyer's clerk entail one of the three in almost every case. In the administration of the estate of an insolvent or deceased person, for instance, the only essential requisites are a general knowledge of business, with skill in preparing accounts. In questions of law which may possibly arise, the legal profession is entitled to be consulted, but certainly not in questions of accounts. The estate of an insolvent or deceased person should be administered in the same manner as if his business had never ceased, and the lawyer should be resorted to on such occasions only as he would have been under ordinary circumstances.

An accountant, untrammelled by 6s. 8d. and 13s. 4d. items, devotes his time and takes an "unprofessional" view of the difficulties which arise in the administration of an estate; and at a moderate and reasonable charge. The only drawback existing is that at present he is looked upon as an irresponsible party, and, unlike the lawyer, he cannot, except for embezzlement, be made amenable to the courts in the same way as a solicitor. To meet this requirement is one great object of the societies recently formed, and their utilisation in that respect ought not to be long delayed. The accountants supply a growing want of the age, and their main object should be to institute some test of fitness, both as to skill and respectability, which would secure for them a position upon which men of business would look with admiration and respect.

The Law Times says, "An accountant offers his services to solicitors in the following patronising terms:—

"'I take the liberty of enclosing my card. I have recently commenced business as Law Stationer, Law Bill Clerk, Public and Private Auditor and Accountant, House, Land, and Estate Agent, Rent and Debt Collector, and Trustee in Bankruptcy. From my past experience in Solicitors' Offices in the various capacities of Engrossing Clerk, Law Bill Clerk, Cashier, and Managing Clerk (extending over a period of twenty-two years), I have confidence that I am able, to your satisfaction, to audit your Books and Prepare Bills of Costs for delivery to your Clients, or for Taxation. In addition to the ordinary duties of a Law Stationer and Law Bill Clerk, I assist Solicitors in Drawing Conveyances, Mortgages, and other Deeds, Abstracts of Title, Wills, Agreements, Affidavits, Conditions of Sale, Residuary, Succession and Legacy Duty Accounts, and Pedigrees Tracing Heirships, Searching for Wills and Registers, Seeking up and Procuring Evidence, and Preparing Briefs and Cases for Counsel's opinion. I make journeys for the Examination of Abstracts with the Muniments of Title, and I attend Sales by Auction of Properties. I am present at the Assizes and Sessions to conduct Cases on behalf of Solicitors. I take journeys to Northallerton to search for Incumbrances and Register Deeds.'

"So long as the advertiser confines himself to endeavouring to do the work of solicitors for solicitors we cannot complain, but we are afraid the advertisement will lead to an infringement of the law. Perhaps a change is coming over the spirit of the accountants."

We think our contemporary is disposed to be rather hard upon accountants in describing this jack-of-all-work as "an accountant," for, to adopt this enterprising advertiser's own description, he is, first and foremost, "Law Stationer and Law Bill Clerk," and his strong point in the way of recommendation is that he has been for twenty-two years in "various capacities" in solicitors' offices. It is sarcastically suggested that "perhaps a change is coming over the spirit of the accountants;" but looking at these facts, it certainly seems that Law, and not Accountancy, is responsible for the production of this wonderful hybrid. However, we can assure the Law Times—if any such assurance be needed—that this individual is just as much, or, rather, just as little, allied to respectable accountants as (we are charitable enough to suppose) to the members of the legal profession, for whom he is so anxious to "take journeys to Northallerton."

RECEIVERS.

In our last issue we proposed to deal with the Bankruptcy Laws of the leading commercial countries. The first on our list are naturally those of England, and following the rotation in which the Act, rules, and orders have been framed, bankruptcy claims the first attention. The steps requisite to obtain an adjudication in bankruptcy are under the control of the legal profession, and it is only upon the appointment (where necessary) of a receiver that the services of accountants are called into action. The position of a receiver is somewhat anomalous. By his order of appointment (Form 13) he is directed to "collect, get in, and receive" the property of the bankrupt. These directions certainly appear to be clear enough. Supposing the estate to consist (inter alia) of stock and book debts, it would to all practical minds seem not only desirable, but even necessary, that the receiver should take an inventory of the stock of which he is to possess himself, in order that he may control its custody, and account in due course to the trustee for the same. In one instance within our knowledge the bankrupt (a publican) was detected throwing bottles of wines and spirits out of a window to conniving friends; and yet it has been decided by the London taxing-masters that a receiver is not entitled to take an inventory, or at least he must not ask to be remunerated for the trouble of so doing. To "collect, get in, and receive" certainly also implies that it is part of a receiver's duty to apply for book debts (and when required, to deliver particulars of the same), and this the more so as it is far from uncommon for a bankrupt to collect and divert all he can; nevertheless the taxing-masters have ruled that a receiver is not only not entitled to collect book debts, but also that it is no part of his duty to send notices of his appointment to debtors to the estate. Common sense would also argue that a receiver should know of what he is to take possession, and for this it would in many instances be necessary that he should have the books made up to date; but if he does so he will again find himself at variance with the taxing-master. The difficulties of a receivership in this respect might certainly be rendered much less and the result more satisfactory, if power existed (pending the passing of a law rendering book-keeping compulsory on traders) to compel bankrupts, under a penalty for contempt, to make up in books detailed accounts of their liabilities and assets, without waiting until the estate is partially wound up. Let it not be supposed that we are seeking to find fault with these gentlemen, who carry out their duties with unfailing courtesy. Their position is in this respect as undefined as that of a receiver, who knows that he has undertaken certain duties, but can only by practice (and at a sacrifice of time and money) learn what those duties really are. In fact there is in the Act and rules nothing to clearly show what a receiver should and what he should not do. We believe the now accepted practice has arisen mainly from the fact that in the majority of early cases (under which the principles of taxation were fixed) the assets were so small, in proportion to the difficulties presented, that their value was indirectly made the basis of the system of remuneration, instead of the receiver being remunerated for the time and trouble involved. Notwithstanding these facts a receivership entails serious responsibilities, so that while a receiver's hands are fettered by the present restrictions he may find himself called upon to make good a missing asset, which was perhaps only nominally under his control, unless he succeeds in satisfying the court that he has not been guilty of neglect. For the interests of the profession and of the public (upon whom defective laws necessarily re-act) we trust that some good representative case will be brought under the notice of the Lords Justices, in order that the duties of a receiver may thereby become clearly defined, and more especially with regard to stock, and book debts. At the present time a receivership implies both too much and too little.

PRACTICAL BOOK-KEEPING.*

It is, without doubt, a somewhat venturesome undertaking to lay before the public a work professing to deal with the many varied systems of book-keeping, more particularly when it is in the wake of a numerous body of writers on the subject that an author necessarily has to follow. A treatise explaining the practical keeping of accounts or books for any and every description of trade, it might reasonably be surmised, would be a work of no small dimensions, and at the first glance it appeared to us hardly credible that, in "Practical Book-keeping," the author could possibly have carried out what he claims in his title-page to have done. He gives, however, in as concise and handy a form as possible, and in a terse and simple manner, an extraordinary amount of useful information and instruction, supplying at the same time, in an appendix, an explanation of the terms peculiar to commercial transactions and accounts. By dividing the work into separate parts, and dealing with the different systems individually, the confusion which generally attends the perusal of books of this class is avoided; consequently for the student or the practitioner, no publication could possibly be more handy for instruction or reference. In Part I. the principle of double entry is lucidly explained, and the various plans, so to speak, adopted by wholesale traders, life assurance, limited liability, and shipping companies, are amply illustrated. Section 6 deals with the "cost book" system, and furnishes specimen pages of a working cost book. Part II. is devoted to the principle of single entry, with a set of books illustrative of the accounts of retail traders. In Part III. the author deals in an exhaustive manner with what he aptly terms the mixed method of book-keeping; and the forms of accounts showing the Scotch and English methods of keeping solicitors' accounts are well worthy of attention. Specimens of judicial, factory, and curators accounts, accounts for newspaper and printing businesses, books for private investors and for public institutions, with many valuable remarks, are here given. In conclusion, we may observe that the work has been carefully got up, and the author has wisely availed himself of the assistance of many practical men, whose courtesy he amply acknowledges in his prefatory remarks. The book should certainly be in the hands of every student, and indeed it is of so complete a nature that we do not doubt that it will become a favourite with many practitioners.

SOLICITORS' BOOK-KEEPING.†

In presenting to the public this practical work on the keeping, by double entry, of solicitors' books, a good deal has undoubtedly been accomplished by the author. Comparatively small though the work is, the book-keeping requirements of a solicitor are very fully entered into and explained, whilst upwards of forty pages are devoted to examples of various detailed accounts. Although the author modestly affirms in his introductory observations that he does not presume his treatise to be altogether capable of supplying a long-standing want, it is, nevertheless, apparent that his endeavours have been so far successful as to have placed within reach of the lawyer a knowledge of book-keeping sufficient to enable him almost to be his own accountant, or at any rate to understand how his accounts should be systematically and correctly kept. The examples given of the entry-book, attendance-book, and disbursement-ledger, are, perhaps, rather out of place, but there can be no doubt as to their absolute practical utility in the course of business. The only fault, if any, in the other examples of accounts consists in the peculiar wording adopted in them, which, however, there would be no necessity to copy. However, altogether the work is certainly very complete in itself, and is a thorough digest of the whole system, upon which the accounts of solicitors might be easily and simply conducted.

THE INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.—At the half-yearly meeting of the Institute, held on the 28th October, at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, Mr. Samuel L. Price in the chair, the minutes of the annual general meeting held in April were confirmed. The chairman announced that this meeting was held in conformity with rule 46, for the purpose of electing members under the special power conferred by rule 19, and discussing questions incidental to the profession. The election of Mr. Charles John Schreidau as an Associate was then proceeded with, and that gentleman was declared to be unanimously elected. A discussion ensued as to the desirability of fixing a day when the members of the Institute may dine together (as they did towards the close of 1873), and the council was requested to do what may be necessary in the matter. Some further discussion took place as to what topics could with propriety be brought under the notice of a general meeting of the Institute, and as to the advantage which would result if some member of the profession would make a commencement of the discussion of topics of general interest by preparing a paper on one of such topics; after which thanks were voted to the chairman, and the meeting terminated.

SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.—The monthly meeting of the council of this society was held on Wednesday last, at the offices, Cowper's-court, Cornhill, Mr. John Bath, vice-president, in the chair. Mr. John Hepburn Dudgeon, of 6½, Austin-friars, was admitted an Associate of the society, and two other applications for admission were considered by the council. The chairman moved, and Mr. G. E. Ladbury seconded, the following resolution: "That steps be taken to ascertain what work can be legally undertaken and charged for by accountants," and the secretary was instructed to communicate with the secretary of the Incorporated Law Society on the subject of this resolution.

Messrs. Hart Brothers & Co., accountants, 57, Moorgate-street, announce that, having taken Mr. Tibbetts (who has been connected with their house for over 20 years) into partnership, the style of their firm will be in future Hart Brothers, Tibbetts, & Co.

A. B. C.—The point referred to in your letter should be left to the personal judgment of the firms concerned.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—The subject of the respective provinces of solicitors and accountants having been noticed by J. B. in your first number for October, 1874, and there being evidently, to judge from the frequent remarks and letters as to "Our Invaders" in one, at least, of the legal journals, much misapprehension on this subject, I am induced to ask for space in your next number for this letter.

Before proceeding further I beg readers to bear in mind that though I use the word "Accountants," I do so the rather because under that designation the said legal journals often class those whom they call "Our Invaders." Yet under that term must evidently be included a number, I may almost say a great number, of professional persons other than accountants, namely, land, house, and estate agents; stock, share, and ship brokers, &c. I premise that, in my opinion, no respectable accountant would ever think of invading the province of an attorney or solicitor; but it appears to me that no good will result from any discussion on the subject until it is clearly ascertained what an attorney or solicitor is, and what are his privileges.

Now an attorney or solicitor is protected by his certificate, and by that only, and the protection extends thus far: he alone can act in the courts of common law and in the Court of Chancery, and he alone can prepare conveyances of land and real estate in general, including, as quasi-conveyances, mortgages; leases—whether I am technically right or not I expressly except, for reasons which will presently appear. For this privilege he pays a stamp on his articles, and certain fees on his admission and future practice. I ignore any plea for exclusive privilege on the ground of his legal education, because it probably costs as much for a respectable accountant—in which word, once for all, I include a land, house, and estate agent; stock, share, and ship broker, &c.—to become master of his profession as it does an attorney or solicitor to acquire the requisite knowledge and ability. Why, then, should not an accountant prepare transfers of stock, shares in public companies, or in ships? Why should he not prepare leases of houses and land? He is certainly more likely to be competent for this duty than any attorney or solicitor; nay, it is certain that when any transfer, or any dealing with stocks or shares is concerned, a broker is more competent than an attorney or solicitor, and that, in point of fact, a broker is actually, directly or indirectly, employed, and really does all the work required; and it is also well known that in cases of leases of houses or farms the agent is the person who really prepares the lease; for an attorney or solicitor generally, if not universally, knows nothing of the details as to repairs, routine of cropping, and management in general, which are necessary to be provided for in a lease. It may safely be said that nine-tenths of such a lease are really prepared by the agent, and that only one-tenth falls to the attorney or solicitor to put into shape; and further, that this one-tenth, though of a legal nature, is not so much so but that any person of ordinary capacity and business training may do what is necessary as well as any attorney or solicitor.

A great effort is being made, and a great and constantly increasing desire is being expressed, for facility in the transfer of, and dealing with, landed property, and it is argued that landed property ought to be dealt with and transferred as easily as stocks and shares. I do not agree with this. The transfer of landed property is one thing, and the transfer of personal property another; but some members of the legal profession oppose this with mistaken and misplaced energy, and I must say, with rather bitter temper. I say some members, because I well know that the opposition is not at all universal, and that there is a feeling and opinion in the legal profession that the outcry of some in that profession is unreasonable; and I have even heard in high legal quarters, such an expression as "tight-laced" used in reference to those who stickle so unreasonably for what they are pleased to think and term their privileges, but which are no privileges at all.

Now I have mentioned the outcry in legal journals of "Our Invaders." Let us see who the real invaders are, bearing in mind that the attorney or solicitor must confine himself to the monopoly granted by his certificate, and that he has no prima facie right to claim more than it gives. Monopolies are proverbially odious in a state, and he who claims one must abide by the very letter of his charter. This monopoly, as I have said, is that he only shall conduct proceedings in the courts of law and equity, and prepare conveyances and mortgages of real estate. It is within living memory that one of the first noblemen in the kingdom had not long ago a land agent who kept the court rolls of his manors, which were and are both numerous and extensive, and prepared the admittances in respect of lands therein. And it is also within living memory that a corporation (I do not disclose whether it was a lay or an ecclesiastical corporation) had a land agent who did just the same thing; and lest it should be said that these are things of the past (though that would be no good answer), I add that at this moment I know there is a titled commoner of large possessions whose land agent keeps the manor books, holds the courts, and prepares the admittances, and from whom even the solicitor of this titled commoner does, when occasion requires, take admittances for his clients, without for a moment thinking of any interference. And why should not this be so? There is little or no special or peculiar knowledge, save that of a well educated man, required in the land agent for this duty.

Then as to leases of houses or farms, as before intimated, does not the agent prepare or settle all the important parts of such leases, and could the attorney or solicitor prepare a proper lease without him? Certainly not. The fact is, attorneys and solicitors have by some means or other crept into offices which do not, as is evident from what I have adduced, belong to them, and that THEY are the real "Invaders." If their unreasonable claims are allowed, the liberty of the subject must be greatly interfered with, and the Solicitor-General was quite right in opposing the lately attempted Attorneys and Solicitors and Legal Practitioners Bill as at first framed. Why do not they, who so cry out, demand that there shall be no land or estate agents, no stock, or share, or ship brokers; no insurance agents; and why not also demand, for it would be equally reasonable, that no one should transact any business with any other person unless there be an attorney or solicitor behind his counter or in his office?

Commercial men understand commercial matters; land and estate agents understand matters relating to houses and land; brokers understand stocks and shares, and all that relates to them, far better than attorneys and solicitors, who indeed are proverbially nearly useless in anything but technical points of simply legal practice or learning. I am far from contending that accountants should act in legal matters, but the question really is, What are legal matters? Would it be tolerated for one moment that attorneys and solicitors should take out of the hands of stock and share brokers their peculiar business? and yet these stock and share brokers, I suppose, transfer as much property in one day as all the attorneys and solicitors transfer—in real estate—in a year. Even the legislature, or at least the executive, fully recognise all this by providing printed forms on stamp for such transfers. No; the idea of giving attorneys and solicitors such a monopoly could not be entertained for a moment. No minister of the country would listen to such a proposal, and the case is the same with respect to ships, leases of houses, or farms and personal estate in general.

The true distinction in deciding on this question appears to be that, as respects landed property, an attorney or solicitor alone should prepare transfers, whether by way of absolute sale or mortgage; but that as respects personal property and leasehold interests there should be no restriction, or any such exclusive right or privilege; and unless it be as to leases—possibly—there is none by the present law.

I have not noticed wills, because I conceive that it would be simply impossible, except at the sacrifice of all justice and freedom of the subject in general, without reference to right or wrong in the matter, to impose any restriction; but I will just add that from thirty-five years' experience I learn that where one will prepared by a so-called non-professional man is disputed, 100, I think I may safely say, prepared by attorneys or solicitors, are contested or come into question. And in conclusion, supposing attorneys and solicitors obtain the exclusive privileges which some—but only some, and they the least important members of the profession—ask for, ought they not to be prohibited from acting as brokers, insurance agents, collectors of debts, rent, and interest, &c. For why should they claim both a monopoly in one thing and also the privilege of trespassing in respect to every other thing? If I read the signs of the times aright I would advise the attorneys and solicitors to be VERY QUIET. Accountants, properly so called, will know how to accept these remarks, which constitute, as I have said, only an exercise; but legal journals having chosen to use the title "Accountants" in their attacks on those they call "Invaders," I had no other alternative than to take the name chosen by themselves. Respectable accountants know their own business. I may just add that not only "Accountants," so called by the law journals, but barristers also are at present, and have been for some time past, treated as invaders.

I am, &c.,

26th October, 1874. B. J.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I am favoured with a copy of No. 1 of THE ACCOUNTANT, in common, I presume, with other members of the profession. The paper supplies a want in the profession, and with a continuance of the enterprising spirit indicated in the first number, the proprietors will, I trust, succeed in making the paper intrinsically valuable. There are one or two matters, however, referred to in ACCOUNTANT No. 1, in regard to which, with your permission, I would make a few remarks. The first matter I would refer to is the article on Life Assurance Companies' Accounts, the second paragraph of which is very greatly at fault. It makes a sweeping assertion regarding the book-keeping of life assurance companies prior to 1870, and the effect of the Act of that year, which calls for very grave qualification. In short, the general terms of the statement are only applicable to certain of the English companies, and these not of the best, while the whole of the great Scotch companies, without exception, have not only been built upon an admirable system of book-keeping, but have found it unnecessary to make any material change in their book-keeping in consequence of the Act of 1870. Moreover, I believe, in no case has the operation of that Act rendered it necessary for the companies I have referred to to call in professional assistance for the preparation of the statutory accounts. It would indeed have been matter of surprise had it been otherwise, since the managers of at least the Scotch offices are thoroughly trained men, and many of them were formerly prominent members of the Society of Accountants in Edinburgh, videlicet Mr. Raleigh, of the Scottish Widows' Fund; Mr. Maclagan, of the Edinburgh Life Office; Mr. Ramsay, of the Scottish Union; the late Mr. George Todd, Scottish Equitable Society, &c. As so large a proportion of the life assurance business of the country is transacted by the Scotch offices, it is a matter for regret that the paragraph in question was expressed in such unqualified terms.

The second matter I would especially refer to is the paragraph on page 10, headed "Value of Life Reversions," giving the very ingenious method of Mr. C. M. Willich for ascertaining approximately the expectation of life according to the Carlisle table. It would have been well to have added to this paragraph a caution to avoid the very prevailing error, on the part of accountants who are not actuaries, of attempting to value reversionary interests by discounting the sums in reversion for the period indicated by the expectation of life. The effect of this very natural, but very serious error, when the sums dealt with are of large amount, is pointed out in "Jones on Annuities," vol. i., p. 122; and I may mention that in a calculation of the value of certain life interests which I had occasion to make last week, the difference in the two methods amounted to no less than £3,000. One other remark I would make on this paragraph is, that the Carlisle table (which, although not mentioned by you, is the table approximated to by the formula given) has been proved by recent investigations to be totally unreliable at the advanced ages, its expectation of life being considerably too high.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

Edinburgh, Oct. 16th. J. E. D.

VALUE OF REVERSIONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I observe in your last number a paragraph, under the above heading, professing to give, under the authority of the late Mr. Willich, a compendious rule for the valuation of reversionary interests, for use "on the spur of the moment." It is due to the late Mr. Willich to say that the rule quoted has no reference to the value of reversions, but supplies simply an approximation to the "expectation of life." Accountants should by no means use this rule, as it is both inapplicable and incomplete. There are many elements that affect the market value of a reversion as distinguished from the table value; the securities in which the fund is invested, the limitations of title to the same reserved by the conditions of sale, the costs of litigation and winding up, legacy duty, &c., all more or less influence the market value.

It is an error to suppose that any reversion that possesses a "table value" (when properly computed, and not by false rule above referred to) will sell for a fair value, or sell at all. There are many reversions that are good to hold, but valueless, or nearly so, at auction. Accountants should note this when dealing with bankrupts' estates, and especially when the interests are contingent and remote. I must refer to the suggestion of making valuations "on the spur of the moment." My strong recommendation is never to give any opinion or valuation either "on the spur of the moment," or whilst people wait. I am often pressed to do so, but always decline.—Yours, &c.,

Fleet-street, Oct. 12th. ACTUARY.

(INCORPORATED BY ROYAL CHARTER.)*

The business open to an accountant in Edinburgh is varied and extensive, embracing not merely all matters of account, but requiring for its proper execution a knowledge of actuarial science, and a thorough acquaintance with the general principles of law, particularly of the law of Scotland, and more especially with those branches of it which affect mercantile relationships, insolvency, and bankruptcy, and all rights connected with property. The Court of Session—the Supreme Law Court in Scotland—has frequently before it suits involving matters of accountancy, in the extrication of which an accountant is almost invariably employed to aid the court in eliciting the truth, as such investigations are manifestly quite unsuited to such a tribunal as a jury, yet cannot be prosecuted by the court itself without professional assistance on which it can rely, the accountant to whom such a remit is made by the court performing in substance all the more material functions discharged in England by the Masters in Chancery. Accountants in Edinburgh are also largely employed in judicial remits in cases which are peculiar to the practice of Scotland, as, for instance, in bankings and sales, in processes of count and reckoning, multiplepoinding, and others of a similar description. They are also commonly selected to be trustees on sequestrated estates, and under voluntary trusts. It will be readily understood that, with such a range for professional practice, a successful accountant in Edinburgh requires not only great experience in business and very considerable knowledge of law, but also other qualifications, which can only be attained by a liberal technical education, and it was specially in order to provide this necessary training that the principal members of the profession, in the year 1854, applied for, and obtained from Government, a royal charter, incorporating them under the name of "The Society of Accountants in Edinburgh."

The regulations for admission to the society, which in the matter of the examinations have recently been placed on a new footing, now stand as follows:—The applicant must serve an apprenticeship of five years to a member of the society, under a duly recorded deed of indenture (the apprentice fee being 100 guineas). He must be 16 years of age before he can be articled, and must also first pass satisfactorily a preliminary examination in rudimentary education. In the third year of his apprenticeship the candidate undergoes a further educational examination, divided into two branches, viz., imperative and voluntary. A bursary of £10, tenable for two years, is annually awarded for the highest proficiency in the imperative examination, and another of £20, also for two years, to the apprentice highest in both the voluntary and the imperative.

In the course of his apprenticeship the candidate is also required to attend the Scottish Law and Conveyancing Classes at the University of Edinburgh. After his apprenticeship has been completed, and the discharge of his indenture recorded in the books of the society, he may apply for final examination previous to being proposed for admission.

As the final examination indicates the extent of the professional training required by the Edinburgh society, we give the syllabus of examination in full, as follows:—1. Law of Scotland:—(a.) The dates, import, and effect of the Statutes on which the original Bankrupt Law of Scotland was founded, and the principles thereby established applicable to alienations by insolvents in favour of parties related to the granters, and to transactions involving preferences to particular creditors; (b.) The dates, import, and effect of the modern Sequestration Statutes, and the leading rules of law applicable to the administration of bankrupt estates; (c.) Specially the rules of Ranking of Creditors, secured and unsecured, at common law and under the Statutes; and the mode of treating Claims against Companies and individual Partners, and upon Accommodation Bills; (d.) The dates, import, and effect of the Statutes and Acts of Sederunt relating to the estates and affairs of minors and incapacitated persons, and to property subject to Judicial Factory, and the legal principles applicable to the powers and duties of officers appointed by the Court to manage such estates; (e.) The principles of law and practice applicable to Judicial Reference and Private Arbitration, and the powers and duties of Arbiters acting under the same; (f.) The law relating to Partnership, Succession, and Life Assurance. 2. Actuarial Science:—(a.) Compound Interest and Annuities certain; (b.) The Elementary Theory of Probabilities; (c.) The Elementary Principles of Life Annuity and Assurance Calculations. 3. Candidates will also be examined upon their knowledge of the general business of an accountant; this examination will embrace—(a.) The Theory and Practice of Book-keeping; (b.) The Management of Sequestrated Estates, Private Trusts, Judicial Factories, &c.; (c.) Audit of Accounts. The society awards one Fellowship of the annual value of £30 in respect of the highest proficiency attained in this final examination. The Fellowship is held for three years, and is awarded only in the event of the examiners being satisfied with the proficiency attained.

We may mention that the honour of being the first holder of this newly instituted Fellowship was awarded by the examiners, at the beginning of the present year, to Mr. John Edwd. Dovey, C.A., 6, North Saint David Street, Edinburgh. The society is in a flourishing condition, and at present numbers 113 members.

* The members of this society, in common with the Glasgow society, are distinguished by the initial letters "C.A." (Chartered Accountant) written after their names.

THE ACCOUNTANT.—The Law Times says:—"We are glad to see that the accountants have determined to be represented in the Press. A new monthly periodical called by the appropriate title of "The Accountant" undertakes to support their interests. We can assure our contemporary that solicitors have no ground of complaint against accountants as a body; they only find fault with individuals when they attempt to overstep the limit of their own duties and to perform the duties of solicitors. We hope that the new publication will take accurate views of the relative positions of solicitors and accountants, and enforce them by a strong expression of opinion. If it takes this course we shall wish it every success."

IMPORTANT TO TRUSTEES.—The following case was heard before the judge of the County Court at Romford, on Tuesday, 27th October:—BLOWS v. BATH.—The plaintiff sued Mr. John Bath, of 40a, King William-street, accountant, for the sum of about £13, for goods supplied to carry on the business of which the defendant was the trustee, on the ground that the goods were ordered by the man placed in possession by the defendant. Objections were taken by Mr. Rawlings, of Romford, solicitor for the defendant, first, that defendant could not be personally liable, and ought to have been sued, if at all, as trustee; secondly, that the man in possession had no authority to pledge the trustee's credit; and thirdly, that the goods were in fact supplied to the debtor, and not to the trustee. Verdict—Plaintiff nonsuited, with costs, the third point not being considered.

CONTEMPT OF COURT.

At the Liverpool County Court, on the 3rd Oct., application was made to Mr. Registrar Watson for a rule nisi upon John Mayor, of Byrom-street, provision dealer, and Alfred John Richards, of Victoria-street, provision merchant, to show cause why they should not be committed for contempt of court. The circumstances stated shortly were these:—A petition for liquidation was presented by Mayor two months ago, and at the first meeting of creditors his explanation of his affairs was deemed so unsatisfactory that the creditors refused to pass any resolution, but one of them at once filed a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy. This petition, as is usual, was made returnable seven days afterwards, but as service thereof could not be effected the time was extended for a fortnight, in order that the necessary advertisements might appear. Pending the hearing of the petition, Mr. William Williams, solicitor to the petitioning creditor, obtained the appointment of Mr. Bolland as receiver of the property. This consisted of stock-in-trade in Byrom-street, and the furniture in the dwelling-house. The former, it appeared, had been transferred some months ago to Mr. Richards, and he was in possession, and the latter also was claimed by Mr. Richards, but he was not in possession. This property was accordingly seized by the receiver and a bailiff left in possession. It appeared that on the day after possession was taken Mayor and his wife obtained entry to the house on the pretext that they wanted a change of linen, and they, a few minutes afterwards, on hearing a tap at the door, opened it and admitted some eight men, who were apparently acting under the directions of Mr. Richards, who was present. The receiver's bailiff, after showing his authority to retain possession, and expressing his determination to prevent any removal, was then, by direction of Mr. Richards, seized by two of the men, and removed to an inner room, where he was confined for several hours until the whole of the property had been removed. The possession of the receiver being deemed to be that of the court, any attempt to disturb the same is a contempt of court, and the present application was for the committal of the parties implicated. Mr. Williams, after proving the facts detailed, said that he founded his application upon the 66th section, which conferred upon the court all the powers and jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery. Here, it was true, there had been no adjudication of bankruptcy, and the course of procedure defined by the rules in order to commit did not apply; but in the absence of any prescribed mode there was no reason why the procedure adopted for a committal after an adjudication of bankruptcy should be varied in the case of a committal before adjudication. The 178th and 179th rules defined the mode of commitment, and the present application was in conformity with those rules. The Registrar said he considered it a proper case to be brought before the court, but he had grave doubts as to the mode of procedure. The rules referred to did not apply, as they had reference to the committal of some one over whom the court had jurisdiction by virtue of the bankruptcy, but here there was no bankruptcy. The practice in Chancery was to proceed by way of motion, and that appeared to him the proper course here. Mr. Williams replied that where there was shown so glaring a contempt of the authority of the court as this, it ought not to be too technical in the mode of bringing the delinquents before it, as the sooner it asserted its authority the better. Further, he submitted that there was no distinction between the present and the case of restraining an execution creditor in bankruptcy or liquidation. There, although there were no rules defining the practice, the court, in the first instance, granted a rule nisi calling upon the creditor to show cause why he should not be restrained. Where a person was alleged to be a wrongdoer the more summary the method of putting him on his defence the better. Practically there was no difference between proceeding by way of motion and that now proposed, except the delay. The motion would be that the parties be committed, and they would have the right to appear and show cause why they should not be committed. In the present case, he asked for an order calling upon them at once to show cause why they should not be committed, and there was really no difference in the modes suggested, except that one was more summary than the other. The Registrar said that the difference was something like issuing a warrant from a police-court where a summons was sufficient, and in a matter which might affect the liberty of the subject he did not feel disposed to issue any order, but would fix the earliest day for the court to consider the question by way of motion. Mr. Williams expressed his regret that the present Bankruptcy Act could be so construed as to throw a shield over bankrupts to the detriment of creditors. He should, however, act upon the Registrar's suggestion, and would proceed by motion.

The application was renewed before Mr. Collier on the 13th ult. Mr. W. Williams appeared for the receiver; Mr. Kennedy, barrister, for Mr. Richards; and Mr. Nordon for the bankrupt. Mr. Williams said his contention, which was a very simple one, was that the goods and chattels of Mr. Mayor, the debtor, being in the hands of the officer of the court, they were in reality in the custody of the court. His Honour: How did the receiver get in? Mr. Williams: That seems to me immaterial. His Honour: No, it does not seem to me immaterial. It is an omission in the history of the case, and I should like to have some information on that point in order to consider whether it is material or not.

Mr. Williams said his contention was, that so long as he was in possession, it was immaterial how he got possession; and that whether the goods were the goods of the debtor was equally immaterial, because the parties who had any complaint to make or any claim to make upon the goods ought to have come to this court to establish their right, and to have obtained an order against the receiver to deliver them up. He asked the court to commit both the debtor and Mr. Richards to prison for contempt of its authority.

Mr. Kennedy, on behalf of Mr. Richards, said that if his client had acted illegally he desired to make the most ample apology, and to express his deepest regret for such conduct.

Mr. Nordon, on behalf of Mr. Mayor, made to the court the amplest apology for any illegal act which his client might have committed whilst acting under the impulse of the moment.

Mr. Williams, in reply, submitted that, having ascertained that John Mayor, the bankrupt, resided upon the premises, the receiver was fully justified in taking possession of the house, even without being furnished with a key, and in taking possession of the property.

His Honour thought that the receiver in this case was undoubtedly justified in taking possession of this property. It was quite clear—indeed, it was admitted—that the house, 7, Grey-road, Walton, was in the occupation of the bankrupt, and the receiver had no notice of any bill of sale, and therefore he was justified prima facie in taking possession of the property. But he did not think he was justified in taking forcible possession of the property. The premises being shut up, it was the receiver's duty to apply to the court for directions how to act, and therefore, in the first place, there had been an irregularity, if he might use such an expression, on the part of the receiver. At the same time, the receiver being in possession, and showing the authority of the court, it appeared to his Honour that there could not be any doubt that it was a contempt of court to interfere with the receiver when he was still in possession. The party who had any grievance against the receiver should have applied to the court, and the court would have done justice between them. Although he considered the receiver had acted wrongly, it was quite clear to him that Mr. Richards and Mr. Mayor were a great deal more in the wrong, and he could not help thinking that an act of contempt of court had been committed. He quite agreed with the solicitor for the receiver that his wrongful possession—assuming it to be so—did not make any difference in the nature of the offence; but it made a very considerable difference in the degree of the offence, because the receiver thereby set an example of irregularity. If there had been no irregularity on the part of the receiver, if there had been no pretence of any right on the part of Richards, he should have felt it his duty to award a commitment in this case. He was not sure that he was right in stopping short of a commitment, but, having regard to the circumstances brought to light, he thought the justice of the case would be met if he ordered the costs the receiver had been put to in consequence of this interference, and the costs of the motion, should be paid in equal parts by Mr. Richards and Mr. Mayor. Judgment accordingly. An order was also made that the property in question should be restored to the custody of the receiver. An adjudication of bankruptcy was afterwards made against Mr. Mayor.

CHARGE OF CONSPIRING TO DEFRAUD CREDITORS.

The attention of the Middlesborough magistrates has lately been much taken up by a charge of conspiracy to defraud creditors, in which two so-called "accountants" have played conspicuous parts, one in the character of accused, and the other as a leading witness for the prosecution. The case has caused considerable sensation in the district, the leading facts being as follows:— On the 30th of July, James Hedley, auctioneer, and a member of the Middlesborough Town Council; George Harper, income-tax collector; John Henry Bennison, "accountant;" and Frederick Hodgson, late innkeeper, all of the borough of Middlesbrough, were charged by John Braithwaite, accountant, of Middlesbrough, the duly appointed trustee of the estate of the said Frederick Hodgson, a debtor in liquidation, "that within six months last past, at the said borough, they did unlawfully conspire, combine, confederate and agree together by divers false pretences and representations and subtle devices, falsely and fraudulently to obtain for themselves certain moneys, or securities for money or divers goods, the property of the creditors of the said Frederick Hodgson, he the said Frederick Hodgson then recently having become a liquidating debtor, with intent to defraud, contrary to the statute." As alleged, the act of conspiracy to defraud consisted in the ante-dating of an agreement to the 27th of April, 1874, the agreement being really signed on the 17th of June. Hodgson, one of the defendants, had become bankrupt in May, and his estate was therefore in the hands of his creditors. It was contended that he consequently had no right to assign over any of his goods, and that the ante-dating was concocted in order to make the transaction appear as though conducted before Hodgson's bankruptcy. The following is a copy of the agreement:—

Agreement made and entered into this 27th day of April, 1874, between Jas. Hedley, of Middlesbrough, auctioneer, and Frederick Hodgson, of the Ship Inn, Middlesbrough, innkeeper.

Whereas the said Frederick Hodgson is indebted to the said James Hedley in the sum of eighty pounds for fixtures and fittings, being in and upon the Ship Inn, Middlesbrough, and being about to leave the said house and unable to pay such sum of £80, hath applied to the said James Hedley to release and indemnify him, the said Frederick Hodgson, from and in respect of such sum. And it is hereby agreed between them that, in consideration of Christopher Bateson taking and becoming tenant of the said house known as the Ship Inn, and agreeing to purchase the whole of the fixtures in respect of which the said sum of £80 is due and owing to the said James Hedley, and upon the said Christopher Bateson agreeing to pay the said James Hedley the sum of eighty pounds for such fixtures, the said James Hedley hereby releases and exonerates the said Frederick Hodgson from and in respect of the said sum of eighty pounds for such fixtures as aforesaid, and the said Frederick Hodgson hereby assigns the whole of such fixtures and his interest therein to the said James Hedley, in consideration of such release and indemnity as aforesaid. As witness our hands the day and year first above written.

GEO. HARPER,
Witness to the signatures of
J. Hedley and Fred. Hodgson.

JAMES HEDLEY,
FRED. HODGSON,
27th April, 1874.
[Stamp.]

For the defence it was stated that it was a fact that Mr. Hedley sold Hodgson fixtures in the "Ship," and Mr. Hodgson paid him partly in cash and partly in bills. One bill for £80 was dishonoured, so that in April £80 was actually due from Hodgson to Hedley, and Hedley had a lien upon the fixtures for £80. Mr. Bateson wanted to go into the house, and Hodgson wanted to give up possession. It was then agreed that Mr. Bateson should become the purchaser of the fixtures, and that the liability for the £80 should be transferred from Hodgson to Bateson. Mr. Hedley at that time held Hodgson's dishonoured acceptance, and he was then a creditor and held a lien on the fixtures. It was then agreed that Hedley should give up his bill against Hodgson on having the liability transferred to Bateson. He held the bill on the 27th April, and that document explaining that transaction was prepared, drawn up, signed, and attested on that day, and could not defraud or prejudice Hodgson's estate. In point of fact it released that estate from a liability of £80, and that document was not a benefit to Mr. Hedley. The examination of the bankrupt Hodgson before the county court registrar was put in and read, and the case was then adjourned, and next came up for hearing on the 24th of August. On that occasion John Gibson, "accountant," was the first witness examined for the prosecution. His evidence was to the effect that on the 17th of June he was a clerk with the defendant Bennison, and on that day Bennison came into the office where he was, and told him to prepare an agreement between Hedley and Hodgson, so as to secure the fixtures of the Ship Inn against Hodgson's trustees. He was told to leave the date blank, and the date "27th" April was afterwards sent up to him from Harper on a piece of income-tax paper. He made an entry at the time in a diary he kept, charging the drawing and engrossing of the agreement under the date 17th June. When Hodgson had to be examined before the Registrar respecting his bankruptcy, it was found that the entry in his diary would look awkward if investigated by the Registrar. Bennison tried to get a similar diary, and Hedley endeavoured to persuade Gibson to copy out a fresh diary, putting the charge respecting the agreement under the date 27th of April, offering him as much as £40 to do this, and when he persisted in refusing, threatened to ruin him. John Henry Holmes, a clerk in the employ of Mr. Braithwaite, the prosecutor, was also examined, and his evidence caused considerable sensation, as he admitted having given information to the defendants of matters he had become acquainted with as Mr. Braithwaite's clerk. Mr. John Kemp, of the firm of Mr. John Kemp and Co., of the Mercantile Offices, 46, Cannon-street, London, produced a letter from Mr. Bennison, asking him to procure for him a Renshaw's diary for 1874, a diary similar to the one kept by Gibson. At the request of the counsel for the prosecution, the case was then adjourned to a day to be afterwards fixed upon, and the prisoners were then requested to enter into personal recognisances of £50, and two sureties each of £25.

The adjourned hearing took place on the 30th September, the leading witness being John Gibson, "accountant," whose charming candour upon the subject of his exploits and antecedents generally forms quite a noticeable feature in the case. The story of Mr. Gibson's accomplishments, as elicited by the opposing attorney, is as follows:—

Have you ever gone by the name of Albert Gibson? I have. Have you also gone by the name of Fitzclarence? No. Have you ever been known by the name of John Albert Fitzclarence Gibson? No. What other name have you been known by? Fitzmorris. What is your true name? John Gibson. When did you first assume the name of Albert? I can't tell. When were you first known by the name of Fitzmorris? When I was about 16 years of age. What other towns have you lived in? Glossop, Leeds, York, London, Oldham, Chertsey, Petersfield, St. Helens, and Bath. Where were you first convicted? St. Helens. What were you convicted of there? Forgery. What kind of forgery? Forging a witness's name to an order of sessions. What term of imprisonment were you sentenced to? 16 months. What year was that in? I think about '69.

Digitized by Google

Where did you serve the term of imprisonment? At Kirkdale Gaol. Where were you next convicted of forgery? I was convicted for forging a testimonial as to my own character. That is two years ago. Where were you tried? At Worcester. And you were convicted? I pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. Where did you serve that term? At Worcester Gaol. On that occasion was your previous conviction for forgery produced in evidence against you? Yes. Are those the only two occasions you have been convicted? Yes. Have you ever been in prison on any other occasion? No. I have been locked up one night at York, when I was about 16 or 17 years of age. It was on a warrant for assault, which was withdrawn the next morning. It was stated the warrant would not have been applied for had it not been for a mistake. Have you been charged before the magistrates in this cause for stealing a book from Mr. Bennison? Oh, yes, of course, that is a necessary result of this case. Were you in the employment of Mr. Brewster of this town once? Yes, when I was 16 or 17 years of age. I am 34 now. Were you dismissed? I was. Were you then charged with stealing the moneys of your employers? No. Was that alleged against you or named? No. Were you in Mr. Brewster's debt when discharged? No. I was discharged for being out of the office playing at billiards incessantly. Were you discharged at Bath? No. I left with the best testimonials. I was not accused of taking my master's money. Witness then proceeded to give evidence as to the circumstances above stated, and other witnesses were called upon to prove the facts relied upon by the prosecution. For the defence it was suggested that the charge had arisen in consequence of ill feeling on the part of Mr. Braithwaite against Bennison personally as a rival accountant, and it was strongly maintained that none of the accused had done a single act that could be construed into conspiracy to defraud, and several witnesses were called on their behalf. The case lasted two days. The defendants were ultimately committed for trial at the next York assizes, bail being accepted for their appearance.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

October 2nd.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE J. J. HODGE.—Mr. Spyer applied under proceedings for liquidation instituted by Joseph James Hodge, paper merchant, College-hill, Cannon-street, that Mr. Maynard, accountant, Old Broad-street, should be appointed receiver and manager of the estate; liabilities estimated at about £15,000, with assets £4,000. His Honour granted the application.

October 6th.

IN RE EDWARD RIDGWAY, of the Lion Tavern, Metropolitan Cattle Market, Islington, licensed victualler. Unsecured debts, £5,177; debts for which security is held, £1,718; and debts partly secured, £1,500; with assets, £655. A petition for liquidation had in the first instance been filed; but the creditors declined to pass any resolutions thereunder, and an adjudication was made. Mr. E. Moore, public accountant, was appointed trustee, together with a committee of inspection; Messrs. Layton, Son, & Lendon being the solicitors to the proceedings.

October 7th.

IN RE BARON L. DE LIEBENBERG.—The debtor, who is described as of 3, St. James-street, of no occupation, presented a petition for liquidation on the 11th of September last, with liabilities to the amount of £22,966 18s. 8d. The assets showed a large surplus over the liabilities, being estimated at £40,120; they are chiefly derivable from property in Austria. Resolutions had been come to liquidating the estate by arrangement, and appointing Mr. H. Brett trustee, with a committee of inspection. Upon the application of Messrs. Lumley & Lumley, Conduit-street, Bond-street, his Honour directed registration.

October 17.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE CHARLES COCHRANE.—This was an application on behalf of the bankrupt to annul an adjudication. He had carried on business at 42, Cable-street, Whitechapel, as a corn and coal merchant. Mr. Doria supported the application; Mr. Powell appeared for the petitioning creditors. His Honour annulled the adjudication, subject to the payment of the costs of the petitioning creditors.

IN RE BARWICK.—This was an application by a debtor, who had filed a liquidation petition and effected a composition with his creditors, to restrain proceedings by Mr. J. Willis, a bootmaker, of Sloane-street, Chelsea. Mr. R. Griffiths supported the application, which was opposed by Mr. H. C. Barker, on behalf of Mr. Willis. It appeared that notice of the meeting of creditors at which the resolution in favour of the composition was passed had been given to Mrs. Willis, the wife of the creditor, who carried on until about nine months since a separate business as a milliner at another house in Sloane-street. Mr. Willis denied having received the notice, but he stated that he gave his solicitor, Mr. Barker, a "proxy" to attend the second or confirmatory meeting, and he believed that Mr. Barker was present thereat. His Honour thought there had been an inadvertence on the part of the debtor, of which the execution creditor could not properly take advantage, and that under the circumstances all parties were bound by the resolution. The injunction would therefore be granted, subject to the payment of £2 2s. costs to the execution creditor.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE.)

IN RE C. J. WEALE.—Under a petition for liquidation presented by Charles James Weale, described as of 1, Adam-street, Adelphi, wine merchant, trading as Bull & Weale, resolutions were passed to wind up the debtor's affairs by arrangement, not in bankruptcy, Mr. Jas. W. Sully, accountant, 23, Gresham House, Old Broad-street, being appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection; and Mr. Hughes (Linklater & Co.) now applied for leave to register the resolutions. It seemed that certain small creditors had not received notice of the meeting, but the validity of the resolutions was not affected by the omission, and his Honour allowed registration. The debtor returned his liabilities at £14,838, with assets £7,404.

October 22.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE ELLIS BROTHERS.—The debtors, Ellis Ellis and Henry Ellis, of 21, Cockspur-street, Pall-mall, general merchants, trading as Ellis Brothers, have presented a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition; and Mr. A. E. Copp now applied for the appointment of a receiver and manager of the estate. The application was supported by creditors, and his Honour appointed Mr. Sydney Smith, public accountant, receiver.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE.)

IN RE H. MYER.—At a first meeting held under the bankruptcy of Henry Myer, described as of 138, Englefield-road, Islington, diamond dealer, a statement of affairs was produced, showing liabilities to the amount of £6,491, and assets £486. Mr. John Slater, public accountant, was appointed trustee, together with a committee of inspection, Mr. Louis Barneto being the solicitor to the proceedings. Mr. G. Lewis also appeared for creditors.

October 26th.

IN RE LEMON HART AND SON.—The debtors, George White and David Hart, were wine and spirit merchants, of George-street, Tower-hill, trading under the style of Lemon Hart & Son. Their liabilities are estimated at about £200,000, and the assets comprise stock and book debts to a large amount, some heavy contracts being also outstanding which it was necessary to complete. Proceedings in bankruptcy and at common law had been commenced, and it was material that the estate should be protected. Accordingly, upon the application of Mr. Hackwood (Linklater & Co.), his Honour appointed Mr. Arthur Cooper, accountant, George-street, Mansion House, receiver and manager of the estate, and granted the usual interim injunction.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, BRISTOL.

(Before Mr. R. A. Fisher, Judge.)

In re Joseph Bumford, late of the "Jolly Farmers," Great George-street, Bristol.—The debtor, having been committed for trial by the magistrates under a prosecution ordered by the late judge of the court, had raised an objection to his examination and had refused to answer any questions; Mr. Carter, barrister (instructed by Mr. S. B. Ward), therefore desired to bring the matter before the judge, and stated that he had been met by arguments that, as the debtor was being prosecuted under the criminal law and had been committed, he must not be examined because his answers might tend to criminate himself. Mr. Carter consequently applied that the debtor might be committed for contempt, unless he submitted to be examined. Mr. Norris, barrister (instructed by Mr. Williams), said that, as a matter of common justice, the examination should stand over until after the trial of the debtor. His Honour apprehended that the objection was that, because the debtor stood committed, the other side sought evidence by a course of examination in order to support the committal. Mr. Norris said that was so. In reply to an inquiry by his Honour if there was any provision in the Bankruptcy Act that a trustee might from day to day examine the debtor until he had sufficient evidence to satisfy himself, notwithstanding the charge against him, Mr. Norris said that it depended upon the view the court would take of the 96th and 97th secs. of the Act. Mr. Carter drew attention to a case, re Heath, reported in Deacon & Chitty's Reports, and said that in ex parte Jones re Jones, which was an appeal from a county court, it was decided that the court had jurisdiction, if a dissentient creditor made out a prima facie case of fraud, to order an examination of the debtor as to his affairs. His Honour said, what occurred to him was, whether a bankrupt could be examined when criminal proceedings had not only been instituted, but were pending, and asked if the 19th sec. did not contemplate the continuance of proceedings in that court, without reference to a criminal case being taken. It seemed to him to be a course not in accordance with the principles of the law of the country, and, assuming that he granted Mr. Carter's application, he thought it would be competent for the judge trying the case to say that that which had been extracted from the debtor after the criminal proceedings had been instituted could not be used in evidence against him. Mr. Norris thought it could be used against him by the prosecution producing a witness at the trial who might say that he had heard the prisoner examined and that he had heard him say so and so. His Honour thought he might avoid the difficulty by adjourning the examination, and asked whether he might not say that it was an inopportune time for the application, and adjourn the examination until after the trial. If the application was bonâ fide and in respect of the property, it could be made as well after the criminal proceedings as before. If he had the power to adjourn the examination he should be disposed to exercise it. The Registrar of the Court said he had no doubt the judge had the power. His Honour said that if the debtor closed his mouth and declined to answer he must commit, and Mr. Carter could not then get the evidence he wished. Mr. Carter said that the effect of the delay might be very serious, for, supposing that property was collusively withheld from the trustee, there would be ample time for the persons holding it to dispose of it. It was not a mere inference or presumption, because there had been an actual committal for fraud. His Honour said it would seem that he had the power to adjourn, and he wished to prevent an injustice being done, and if he ordered an adjournment it could not be said that an injustice had been done. Mr. Norris said that, as the debtor would be tried at Quarter Sessions in thirteen or fourteen days, an adjournment could not prejudice the estate. His Honour did not like the evidence being given with a view to aiding criminal proceedings. Mr. Carter applied to put questions to the debtor which were innocent and would not tend to criminate him, in respect to a proof for £41. His Honour directed the examination to take place on that question and the debtor was sworn, but in reply to the first question said that, under the advice of his counsel, he declined to answer any questions which might be put to him. His Honour said that the debtor was guilty of contempt of court, and after some considerable discussion as to the debtor's position, his Honour ultimately said, to avoid anything being done in regard to the criminal trial, he would adjourn that part of the examination which affected it. Mr. Carter was then allowed to proceed with his examination of the debtor as to a particular debt, and the examination was afterwards adjourned until the 2nd November.

THE PROVINCES.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.—October 10th.

(Before Mr. Collier, Judge.)

In re Arthur Greer.—This was an application involving a question of practice. The debtor was a metal merchant in Liverpool, and the creditors at their first meeting resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and to delegate the grant of the discharge to Mr. Chalmers, the trustee. These resolutions were duly registered, but that with respect to the discharge was held by the Registrar to be ultra vires, the Act giving the creditors no power to delegate their right to grant a discharge. A new meeting was accordingly called by the trustee in mode prescribed by Rule 95, viz., by transmitting to each creditor, at the address given in his proof, a notice of the meeting and its object. At that meeting the statutory majority of creditors allowed the discharge, but on the same being presented for the signature of the Registrar, it was refused, on the ground that the meeting had not been advertised, as was required by the practice of the court and the ruling of the Chief Judge. Mr. Goldney, on behalf of the debtor, now asked the court to vary the Registrar's decision, and after a careful analysis of the rules, submitted there was no necessity to have advertised the meeting. The only pretence for insisting upon the meeting being advertised was that afforded by the 21st section, which enacted that all the provisions of the Act with respect to the first meeting shall apply to subsequent meetings; but although the first meeting was advertised, it was not by virtue of a provision of the Act, but only of the rules. There was a dictum of the Chief Judge reported in Hazlitt and Roche's Practice, to the effect that all meetings at which the majority bind the minority, must be advertised, but that had not the force of a rule and was not binding on the court. In fact it was inconsistent with the practice of the court over which the Chief Judge presided, for second meetings in composition cases, also meetings to pass a trustee's remuneration, and many other meetings, where the majority bind the minority, were never advertised. His Honour said, although he was not in favour of a multiplicity of Gazette advertisements, and consequent expense to estates, he was indisposed to disturb any settled practice. In the present case he did not think the dictum of the Chief Judge a sufficient authority to bind the court, and, therefore, taking his own view of the construction of the rules, he considered a Gazette advertisement unnecessary. The discharge would accordingly be signed.

In re Duckworth and Hindle.—At the county court, on October 16, there was an application in this case to vary the decision of the Registrar refusing registration of certain resolutions of creditors, whereby they agreed to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, to be secured to the satisfaction of the chairman of the meeting. By the 280th rule it is prescribed that a composition, or any instalment thereof, may be secured in such manner as may be approved by a creditor, or creditors to be named in the resolution. In the present case the chairman was not a creditor, but the proxy of a creditor, and the resolution provided that the proposed composition was to be secured to his satisfaction. The resolution was presented for registration, but objected to by the Registrar on the ground that there was no certificate of the chairman that the payment of the composition had been secured to his satisfaction. Mr. Rodway, on behalf of the debtors, appealed from the Registrar's ruling, and the court, after hearing him, reserved its judgment until Tuesday, when it decided, without expressing any opinion as to the validity of the objection raised by the Registrar, that the resolution was in violation of Rule 280, there being no power conferred upon the creditors to delegate the approval of security to a proxy, but only to a creditor. Mr. Rodway said the point raised by the court had taken him by surprise, and he should be glad of the opportunity of looking to the authorities and re-arguing the case. His Honour assented, and accordingly the question was again brought before him. Mr. Rodway submitted that by virtue of section 80 a proxy, for all the purposes of the Act, stood in the same position as the creditor who appointed him, and therefore the chairman in the present case, being proxy for a creditor, was vested with all his powers. He could, and often did, turn the scale in passing resolutions; he could also grant a discharge; and it would be an anomaly if, when admittedly possessing such powers on behalf of his principal, he could not act for him in certifying as to the sufficiency of a proposed security. Further, the question of security was outside the provisions of the Act, and in the rules was merely supplementary. A resolution to accept a composition without security was equally as valid as one where security was named. If the form or mode prescribed for securing the composition did not in the opinion of the court exactly fit the terms of the rules it was but surplusage, and the court had no right of its own motion to prevent the creditors securing themselves in such way as they liked. The policy of the present Act was to confer upon the statutory majority of the creditors power to deal with their debtors' affairs as they thought best, giving them at the same time power to apply to the court to enforce their requirements. There was nothing in the Act or rules to prevent the creditors passing a resolution like the present, and he maintained, according to the decisions he cited, that the resolutions to be ultra vires must be something in contravention of the rules, and not supplementary thereto. He further urged that if it amounted to an irregularity, the court, by section 82, had power to rectify the same. His Honour said he was still of opinion that the sufficiency of the security should be certified by a creditor and not by his proxy; but as it had been suggested that that portion of the resolution might be so regarded as not to vitiate the whole, he would consider the matter further. Judgment was accordingly reserved.

BIRKENHEAD.

At the County Court, Birkenhead, motion was made to Mr. Tidswell for an order that a bill of sale executed on the 24th April last by Count D'Aragon, of Clifton-park, Birkenhead, whereby he assigned to Mr. Greenlaw, of Liverpool, auctioneer, all his household furniture, in consideration of a loan of £200, be declared null and void, and that the proceeds of the sale of the furniture comprised in the bill of sale be paid to Mr. Bolland, the trustee of Count D'Aragon's estate. Mr. J. B. Wilson appeared for Mr. Bolland; the debtor was unrepresented. The facts stated shortly were these:—In August, 1873, Count D'Aragon, being in want of money, obtained from Mr. Greenlaw £200 upon the security of a bill of sale of his furniture, valued at £500. That bill of sale was not registered within the twenty-one days prescribed by statute. In January of the present year, Count D'Aragon returned to France, where he still remains. Whilst abroad he remitted several sums of money towards the payment of his debts, Mr. Greenlaw receiving £70, and the original vendor of the furniture to Count D'Aragon receiving in all about £300, in payment of £500, the purchase-money. The latter being unable to enforce payment of the balance, obtained an adjudication of bankruptcy against the Count, the act of bankruptcy being that he had remained out of England with intent to defeat and delay his creditors. A trustee was in due course appointed, and he, on proceeding to realise the estate, found that the furniture had in part been seized and sold by Mr. Greenlaw under a bill of sale dated April 24th of this year, and the residue had been taken by Mr. T. H. Sheen, accountant, under a bill of sale dated 25th April following, given to him as security for repayment of a loan. The trustee impeached the validity of both these bills of sale, but to suit the convenience of Mr. Sheen, motion was now made with respect to Mr. Greenlaw's only. Mr. Wilson contended, first, that the bill of sale dated April 24th, 1874, must have been given for a past consideration, the loan being in August, 1873, and therefore comprising, as the bill of sale did, the whole of the debtor's estate in this country—it was an act of bankruptcy; secondly, it was executed, or purported to be executed, a month after the act of bankruptcy, on which the adjudication was founded, and of which Mr. Greenlaw must be assumed to have had knowledge; and thirdly, the bill of sale must have been falsely dated the 24th of April, at Liverpool, as the bill of sale given to Mr. Sheen, dated the next day, was executed at Cannes (where Count D'Aragon was residing), before the British Consul. Mr. Wilson was about to adduce authorities in support of his contention, when the Court interposed, and stated that it was unnecessary, as the point last taken was sufficient to warrant it in declaring the bill of sale void, and it accordingly made order in the terms of the prayer of the motion.

SHEFFIELD.

There have been numerous failures in this town and district during the past four or five weeks, which have resulted in the necessary meetings of creditors. There has also been at least one important decision given by the judge of the local county court (Mr. Thomas Ellison), the point in question being as to the adjudication of one partner in a concern in which there were three co-partners, the other two having been already dealt with by the court, the one partner having no private estate, and consequently no private liabilities. Details of this case, with his Honour's decision, will be found below. Resuming our report at the point at which last month's list terminated, the first failure is that of Mr. JOHN JOHNSON, plumber and coppersmith, of Pinstone-street, Sheffield, against whom a petition in bankruptcy was filed in the Sheffield County Court by Mr. Benjamin Taylor, builder, Sheffield, the debts being £130. On the application of Mr. E. K. Binns, solicitor, Mr. C. Appleby (Appleby & Lawson) was appointed receiver and manager. It being understood that Mr. Johnson was away from Sheffield, and the necessary notice having been given, an adjudication was made against him by Mr. Registrar Wake on September 28th, the liabilities being stated at £700, and the assets £256. The meeting of creditors was held at the County Court Hall on the 15th of October; Mr. Appleby was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.—On September 20th a petition was lodged against WILLIAM TOPLIFFE, publican and farmer, of Bearswood-green, Hatfield, near Doncaster, and the meeting of creditors was held at the offices of Messrs. Bennett & Co., accountants, 50, Norfolk-street, Sheffield, on October 12th. The statements of accounts presented showed the total liabilities to be £1,266 14s. 6d., with assets valued at about £195. Liquidation was adopted, Mr. Edward Bennett being appointed trustee, with Messrs. F. Brewster, N. Buchanan, and Cooper Corbidge as a committee of inspection; Mr. Peagam, solicitor, Doncaster, to register the resolutions.—A first meeting of the creditors in the private estate of Mr. HENRY HAWKSLEY, carrying on business as a hatter, and also a partner in the Whittington Brick, &c., Company, was held on September 21st. Mr. Fretson, solicitor, represented the debtor, and Mr. Limrey (Denton) occupied the chair. A detailed explanation of the peculiar position of the debtor (in consequence of the proceedings in the joint estate) was given by Mr. Fretson, who recommended the adjournment of the meeting until the result of the petition against the firm became known. Mr. Earle, receiver, read a report on the debtor's transactions, and presented a balance-sheet showing that in the private business Mr. Hawksley's liabilities were £2,221 4s. 1d., after deducting £1,057 19s. 10d. for creditors fully secured, the total assets being £1,106 14s. 3d. He also gave an estimate of the Brickmaking Company's position, showing its total debts to be £2,020 2s., those figures, however, being the balance after £7,296 17s. had been taken into account for fully secured creditors, who held security valued at £8,830. The assets he estimated at £2,093 3s. After a long discussion it was decided to wind up in liquidation, Mr. W. Fisher Tasker being chosen trustee, with Messrs. Z. Dearden (Denton), Limrey (Denton), Brewster (Sheffield), and N. Buchanan (Sheffield), as a committee; Mr. Fretson to register.—In the liquidation of Mr. GEORGE MOUNTFORD, jun., Eccleshall, Sheffield, Mr. W. Fisher Tasker was appointed trustee.—On September 25th a meeting was held in re the estate of Messrs. WILKINSON and LONG, surgeons, of Rotherham and Parkgate, at the offices of Mr. John Unwin Wing, accountant, Sheffield; a dividend of a fraction over 2s. in the pound was declared in the joint estate. Mr. Long had his discharge granted some time previously. In the separate estate of Mr. Wilkinson a dividend of 7s. 3d. in the pound was declared; his release was granted from November 10th, and the trustee will be released on December 31st. Mr. Marsh, solicitor, Rotherham, acted for the creditors in this matter.—A petition in bankruptcy was filed at Sheffield on the 25th September against WM. JARVIS, farmer, of Nine Scores, Finningley, near Doncaster, the liabilities being estimated at £5,000; small assets. Mr. E. Bennett, Sheffield, was appointed receiver. The meeting of creditors was held at Doncaster on October 23rd. In this instance also the debtor had been mixed up in bill transactions with Mr. James, of the Whittington Brick Company.—On September 26th a meeting of the creditors of Mr. ALFRED E. BUZZARD, veterinary surgeon, &c., Clay Cross, was held at the offices of Mr. Gee, solicitor, Chesterfield. The liabilities were stated at £368 14s. 1d., and the assets £33. Mr. N. Jepson was appointed trustee, and a composition of 6s. 6d. in the pound (guaranteed by the debtor's father) was accepted. —At a meeting of Messrs. DAVIE BROTHERS & COMPANY (Limited), Sheffield, on the 30th of September last, it was decided to increase the capital of the company to the extent of £50,000.—On September 23rd a petition in bankruptcy was filed in the Sheffield court against Mr. JOHN WHITTINGTON, oil and grease merchant, Darnall, but on the hearing the petition was thrown out and the proceedings nullified.—On Sept. 23rd petitions were lodged against DAVID TEAR, draper, &c., Sheffield, and WILLIAM McDOWALL, draper, Sheffield, both meetings being held on October 2nd. At McDowall's meeting, held at the offices of Mr. Alfred Taylor, solicitor, Norfolk-row, the liabilities were shown to be £447 17s. 5d., and the assets £225. Mr. J. Weir, Rotherham, trustee, with a committee. At Tear's meeting, held at the offices of Binney & Sons, solicitors, the liabilities were expressed at £880, with assets estimated at £460. Liquidation was adopted, Mr. P. K. Chesney, Bradford, being appointed trustee, and Messrs. Binney to register, subsequent proceedings being transferred to the Bradford court.—About the same date a petition was filed by JOHN HORSFALL, machine maker, Huddersfield, with liabilities of over £1,000.—A meeting of the creditors of DUNCAN McMASTER, draper, Retford, was held on October 6th; liabilities £4,188 4s. 2d., with assets worth £2,263 4s. 3d.; liquidation was determined upon, with Mr. Joshua Crowther, York-street, Manchester, as trustee, without a committee, and Mr. Bescoby, solicitor, Retford, to register. —On the 5th October the affairs of Mr. Henry James, "sometime accountant and financial agent, Sheffield," a partner in the Whittington Brick Manufacturing and Coal Company, near Chesterfield, and a partner in other affairs, came before a meeting at the Sheffield Court. Mr. Bennett, the receiver, read a statement of the private affairs, giving the net liabilities (after deducting £5,925 for fully secured creditors, who held £6,451 worth of securities, and £2,146 for partly secured creditors holding £1,980 worth of securities) at £11,159 8s. 3d. The assets he estimated at £1,119. In the estate of a colliery at Whittington, the balance sheet made the net liabilities £1,639 (after dealing with £4,354 11s. 2d. fully secured debts, held by creditors, with securities worth £5,250) and the assets £1,555 8s. 10d. As a partner in the Whittington Brick Company, the net liabilities were £980 (taking a balance to contra of £449 11s. 8d. as the over security held by fully secured creditors claiming £2,980 10s. 4d.), and assets £149 11s. 8d. Mr. E. Bennett was elected trustee, with a committee of inspection, the proceedings being in bankruptcy, as the debtor had absconded.—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. GOMERSALL BROS., manufacturers, Dewsbury, was held at Wakefield on October 3rd. The liabilities were about £70,000. A former offer of 7s. 6d. in the pound being now repudiated, it was decided to wind up the estate in bankruptcy. —On October 8th a petition which had been filed praying for the adjudication in bankruptcy of Messrs. HENRY HAWKSLEY, HENRY JAMES, and ARTHUR JOHN FRETWELL, the three partners of the Whittington Brick Company, came up for hearing before Mr. Ellison, judge of the Sheffield County Court. The application was opposed on the part of the trustees in the separate estates of Hawksley and James. Long arguments were given pro and con, but it will suffice for all practical purposes to place on record a précis of his Honour's decision, which was reserved and given on October 15th and 16th. His Honour said the petition prayed for the adjudication of the the three partners named; the acts of bankruptcy alleged against them being that Hawksley had filed a petition for liquidation, that James had absconded, and that Fretwell had filed a declaration of inability to pay his debts. The petition, however, was merely an ordinary one—it alleged no special act of bankruptcy against the three partners, as such. He had, therefore, to take into consideration whether he ought to make a joint adjudication on such a petition. So far as Hawksley was concerned, no doubt the filing of his petition was an act of bankruptcy—an act which could not now be disputed; at one time it might have been disputed, but after the decisions which had been given upon the point it was now too late. His Honour cited cases from the equity reports, in which it had been held that a petition for liquidation was not always available, and then reviewed the evidence in the present instance. He said it had been advanced that it would be more convenient that there should be a joint adjudication against the three, and it was also stated that there was some difficulty in proving the joint debts. He saw no difficulty in doing so, seeing that under the 101st section of the Bankruptcy Act he had power to adjudicate against Fretwell, and his estate, if any, would then vest in the trustee of James's estate, which was already in bankruptcy. What he should do would be to adjudicate Fretwell a bankrupt, to dismiss the petition against the other two partners (who were already dealt with by their respective proceedings), and then, if application were made, he might further direct that the amalgamated bankruptcies and proceedings in liquidation be consolidated and carried on jointly. Next day, on the question of costs, his Honour decided that the petitioning creditor was not justified in making the application against James and Hawksley, and condemned him to pay the advocates', &c., fees incurred in resisting the application by the trustees in their estates. This decision is undoubtedly worthy of being made a "note one." Mr. Corbidge was continued in his appointment as receiver and manager of the joint estate until the meeting of creditors therein.—A meeting of the creditors of G. H. BRUNT, provision dealer, Rotherham, held at the same time before the Registrar, resulted in bankruptcy, the liabilities being £150, and assets £50. Mr. Joseph Pearson, Harlshead, was chosen trustee, with a committee of three.— An application was made to the judge asking for the commitment of EDWARD GAMBLE, steel and file merchant, Sheffield, in whose accounts there was an alleged deficiency of £1,130; no cash-book had been kept, and articles had been disposed of since the bankruptcy. It was ultimately decided to adjourn the matter for one month, to enable the debtor to give full explanations.—At the same date and place, a meeting of the creditors of JAMES KEEN, late of Masborough, Stockport, and Denton, and now of Beighton, was held. Liabilities £538 11s., and assets £197 2s. 6d. Mr. John Robertson, Market-street, Manchester, was appointed trustee.—Same day Mr. John Weir, accountant, Rotherham, was appointed receiver in the affairs of JAMES M'DOWALL, draper, Fitzwilliam-street, Sheffield, whose liabilities were mentioned at £1,200.—The estate of Cornelius Chambers, an absconding bankrupt, has realised 20s. in the pound, and his examination has necessarily been adjourned sine die.—Same date a petition was filed in the affairs of Mr. E. C. Webb, surgeon, Sheffield.—On Oct. 13th the creditors of Mr. George A. Robertson, jeweller and musical instrument dealer, met at Sheffield. Mr. John Edey, the receiver, stated the liabilities at £1,467 11s. 3d., and the assets at £263 11s. 9d. Liquidation was adopted, with Mr. Edey as trustee, with a committee of three, and Mr. F. T. Hawkin, solicitor, to register. —A special meeting of the shareholders of the Sheffield Waterworks Company on August 12th, authorised the directors to borrow £55,333 6s. 8d., the second one-third part of the whole sum of £166,000 authorised to be borrowed by the Company's Act of 1867.—The Sheffield United Gaslight Company pay 10 per cent. as usual for the half-year but take £2,674 from the reserve fund to do so, the half-year's profits having been only £18,266.—On October 14th a petition in liquidation was filed on behalf of Mr. James Chambers, iron merchant, Sheffield, with liabilities amounting to £4,000.—On October 15th the creditors of Mr. George Cooke, grocer and publican, met at Gainsborough. Liabilities £339 6s. 11d., and assets £66 4s. Mr. George Jay, Lincoln, was elected trustee, with a committee.—A meeting of the creditors of Arthur W. Butterworth, grocer, &c., of Sheffield, granted his discharge from December 9th, when the liquidation will be closed.—On October 20th a meeting of the creditors of William Toplis, late victualler, Sheffield, was held and adjourned.—On October 21st the creditors of Mr. John Corson, draper, &c., Sheffield, met at the offices of Binney & Sons, solicitors, Sheffield. The statement showed the liabilities to be £667 9s. 5d., and assets £170 5s. 6d. Liquidation was decided upon, with Mr. P. K. Chesney, Bradford, as trustee, and Messrs. Binney to register.—Same date a meeting of the creditors of Joseph Bird, grocer, &c., Swinton, was held at the offices of Messrs. Webster, solicitors, Sheffield. Liabilities £1,147 18s. 2d., and assets £414 7s. 1d. Liquidation was adopted, with Mr. H. A. Styring, Sheffield, as trustee, and Messrs. Webster to register.—October 22nd had been fixed for the public examination of Mr. John Whall, solicitor, Worksop, but as the bankrupt died a few days previously, the Sheffield County Court judge granted the necessary order to continue the bankruptcy.—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Alexander Corson, draper, &c., Sheffield, has been held, the liabilities being given at about £600. Mr. Chesney, of Bradford, was appointed trustee, with Mr. Crang, solicitor, to register.—On Friday, October 23rd, petition filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court in the affairs of Messrs. Benjamin Matthewman & Sons, cutlery manufacturers, Milton-street; liabilities estimated at £4,500, with assets of considerable value. —On October 23rd, at a meeting of the creditors of Mr. George Harrison, grocer, Brownhall-street, Sheffield, held at the offices of Mr. J. S. Birks, Sheffield, a dividend of 7s. 6d. in the pound was declared, and the debtor's discharge was granted. —On October 24th a meeting of the creditors of Mr. William Jarvis, farmer, of Mirescones, Finningley, near Doncaster, was held at the offices of Mr. Peagam, solicitor, Doncaster, under the chairmanship of Mr. George Wiles, of Sheffield; Mr. Bennett (Sheffield), the receiver, presented a statement of accounts, showing that the unsecured creditors were £3,764 2s. 9d.; other liabilities, £1,475 17s. 9d.; rent, taxes, &c., £10; total, £5,250 0s. 6d.; assets, tenant right, £350; realised at sale, £1,510, less £1,248 for claims, rent, and charges; total, £612. Liquidation was determined upon, Mr. Bennett being appointed trustee, with a committee of four, Mr. Peagam being entrusted with the usual registration.—On October 26th a meeting of the creditors of James Chambers, iron agent, Parker's-road, Sheffield, was held at the offices of Messrs. Broomhead, Wightman, and Moore, Sheffield, the liabilities being stated at £2,712, and assets at £157. The chief creditors refused to pass any resolution in the matter.—Same day a meeting was held of the creditors of John McDowall, draper, Sheffield. Liquidation by arrangement was adopted, with Mr. Chesney (Bradford) as trustee, and Messrs. Binney & Sons, solicitors, to register.—On October 9th a meeting of the creditors of Job Pease, Denby Dale and Cumberworth Half, manufacturer of fancy skirtings and waistcoatings, was held at the Huddersfield County Court. Liabilities £2,661 5s. 7d., assets worth £946 3s. 5d. Liquidation by arrangement was decided upon, with Mr. Grisdale as trustee, with a committee of three, and Mr. Berry, solicitor, to register.—On October 24th an important motion came before Serjeant Tindal Atkinson, judge of the Huddersfield County Court, in re the bankruptcy of John Jagger, on a question of costs. His Honour had, on the application of Mr. Lowe, the trustee, made an order setting aside a deed of conveyance by which the bankrupt had conveyed a large amount of property at Leeds to Mr. Walter Battle, cloth merchant, of that town. Mr. Atkinson, barrister, appeared for the trustee, and applied for costs. On the part of Mr. Battle, Mr. Bond, of Leeds, submitted that the costs should not be given against his client, on the ground that the trustee did not succeed to the full extent of his motion, that was to say, he applied for an order to set aside the deed without attaching the stipulation that he should pay whatever he found to be due to Mr. Battle for money he had paid in mortgages on the property. Mr. Atkinson argued that the proceedings were rendered necessary by Mr. Battle's own conduct, which his Honour's decision had proved to be fraudulent, consequently he was not entitled to any relief, to say nothing of the fact that there had been no offer on his part by which these proceedings might have been rendered unnecessary. His Honour said his decision did not impute any fraud to Mr. Battle, but merely that there had been no adequate consideration, and that Mr. Battle had made a mistake; the fact that the consideration had been inadequate was sufficient, therefore Mr. Battle must pay the costs.—On October 24th a meeting in bankruptcy of the creditors of Messrs. Gomersall Brothers, manufacturers, of Saville-town and Dewsbury, was held at Dewsbury County Court. Proofs for upwards of £50,000 were admitted, but others for debts due on sundry bills of exchange were rejected on the ground that the bills were not produced. Mr. Gordon, of Leeds, accountant, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection of five. During the month the following dividends have been declared in the estates respectively enumerated: Joel and Griffiths, 4s. in the pound on £2,000 liabilities; second and final of 1s. 3d. in the pound, George Scorah, timber merchant, &c.; first of 1s. 8d., Charles Adolph Benno Pfeilschmidt, commission agent; first and final of 7s. 3d., Hubert H. B. Wilkinson, Rotherham, surgeon; first and final of 1s. 10d. in the pound, John B. Naylor, cattle salesman; first of 3s. in the pound, John Smith, Swinton Bridge, grocer, &c. Dividends are on the point of being declared in the estates of A. Haswell (draper), Wm. Steele (out of business), George Mountford, jun. (scythe manufacturer), W. Southern, Arthur Rawson (plumber, &c.), Samuel Osborne & Co. (steel manufacturers), and Seth Peace (coal merchant). In the bankruptcy of John Augustus Melton, of Sheffield and Chatham, the trustee was released on September 25th.

BIRMINGHAM.

The following creditors' meetings have been held during October:—William Davis, brassfounders' agent, Birmingham; meeting held on the 23rd Oct., at the offices of Mr. M. A. Fitter, solicitor; liabilities £2,830 8s. 7d., assets, consisting of stock-in-trade, &c., £4,745. H. Edwards in the chair; liabilities £821 5s., assets £134 15s.; composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound accepted. —F. A. JONES, Stourbridge, cooper; meeting held at the offices of Mr. Green, solicitor, Waterloo-street, Birmingham, on the 24th October. Liabilities £1,340 14s. 10d., assets £484 4s. 10d. It was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation. Mr. L. J. Sharp was appointed trustee, and Mr. J. M. Green represented the debtor.

BRISTOL.

A meeting of the creditors of ROBERT HOCKING, of Maesteg, Glamorganshire, ironmonger, painter, and glazier, was held at the offices of Messrs. Denning, Smith, & Co., accountants, Bristol, on the 13th Oct.; total liabilities £880 7s. 10d., and assets £563 17s. 7d.; composition of 10s. in the pound accepted; Mr. H. H. Beckingham, solicitor.—On 17th October a meeting was held at the office of Mr. Albert Essery, solicitor, Broad-street, of the creditors of EDWARD SMITH (trading as E. SMITH & Co.), of 40, Bridge-street, Bristol, wholesale stationer and printer; statement of affairs produced, prepared by Mr. Pitt, accountant, and the receiver in the matter, disclosed liabilities £736 0s. 2d., and assets £212 6s. 3d.; no offer being forthcoming liquidation resolved upon, and Mr. William C. Harvey, of the firm of Gamble & Harvey, 1, Gresham-buildings, Basinghall-street, London, was appointed trustee, and the debtor's discharge was refused.—Sept. 29, RICHARD CHANDLER, of Patchway, Almondsbury, Gloucestershire, builder, filed his petition for liquidation in the Bristol County Court, and the first meeting was afterwards held at the offices of Messrs. Hunt, Hodgson, & Bobbett, solicitors, Bristol; there did not seem to be any estate to liquidate, and the creditors separated without passing any resolution.—PAUL THEODORE PETERS and JOHN SAMUEL JEFFERIES (trading as PETERS & JEFFERIES), of 80, Quay, Bristol, india rubber manufacturers, filed their liquidation petition in the County Court, Bristol, on the 30th Sept., and their first meeting was held at the offices of Messrs. Murly & Sons, solicitors, Bristol, on the 16th Oct., when a resolution was passed to liquidate by arrangement, and a trustee appointed.

BRADFORD.

RE WILLIAM WOODHEAD, OF BOWLING.—On Monday, Oct. 19th, a meeting was held at the offices of Messrs. Terry and Robinson, Bradford, of the creditors of William Woodhead, of Park-road Works, Bowling, trading under the firm of William Woodhead & Co. At the last meeting the creditors accepted a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable by three equal guaranteed instalments of four, eight, and twelve months. The resolution of the previous meeting was confirmed, and Mr. Peter Kerr Chesney, of Bradford, accountant, appointed trustee. The liabilities are £14,660, and the assets £6,780.—A petition for liquidation of his affairs was filed on Monday, October 19th, in the Bradford County Court, through Messrs. Lees, Senior, and Wilson, solicitors, New Ivegate, Bradford, by Mr. JOHN GARBUTT, dyer and finisher, of Garnett-street, Bradford. The estimated liabilities are about £10,000. The estate is likely to realise a good dividend.—On Saturday, October 17th, a meeting of the creditors of W. HARKER, of Wilfred-street, law clerk, was held at the offices of Messrs. Peel & Gaunt, Chapel-lane, Bradford. The liabilities were reported at from £500 to £600, and the assets consist almost entirely of household furniture. The creditors separated without coming to any decision as to the course to be adopted.

RE KERSHAW JOWETT, innkeeper, of Tyersal, near Bradford. —A first general meeting of the creditors was held on October 12, 1874. The statement of affairs produced by the debtor showed liabilities about £650, against assets of about £150, which latter are subject to the claim of a bill of sale to be contested in the county court. Liquidation was resolved upon, Mr. Atkinson, accountant, Bradford, being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

RE JOSEPH LOFT, of Hull, innkeeper.—A meeting of creditors was held on October 5, 1874, at the offices of Mr. Summers, solicitor, Hull. Mr. Atkinson, accountant, of Bradford, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection. The debtor's discharge was granted conditionally on his paying into the hands of the trustee 5s. in the pound and all costs within a month.

NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE.

The third annual meeting of the shareholders of LANGDALE'S CHEMICAL MANURE COMPANY, Limited, was held on Tuesday, at the offices of the auditor, Mr. Charles Tattersall, 14, Marsden-street, Manchester, and was largely attended. It appeared that Mr. S. Langdale (the managing director) having failed in business, his holding of £30,000 in the shares of the company was subject to forfeiture, and that gentleman consequently tendered his resignation, as did all the directors. The resignation of Mr. Langdale was accepted; but Mr. John Knowles, Mr. Carl Lange, Mr. John Rycroft, and Mr. Septimus Brown, were unanimously re-elected; and the following names were added to the board, viz., Mr. J. Leppoc and Mr. Wright Turner, of Manchester; and Mr. Scott and Mr. Bell, of Newcastle. Mr. Charles Tattersall was re-elected joint auditor along with Messrs. Goddard, of Newcastle, for the ensuing year.—The failure of Messrs. JOHN SOFTLEY & Co., iron ship builders, of North Shields, is likely to involve several establishments in loss, though the indebtedness is understood to be a good deal scattered. It is said their liabilities are about £55,000. The firm is stated to have taken their orders too low, and it is said that the liquidation will be unfavourable to the creditors. During October petitions were filed in the Newcastle County Court by the following:—M. STENHOUSE & Co., merchants and commission agents; SPIER & WOODGATE, chemical manure manufacturers; THOS. W. HUGHES (trading as LOSH, BORRIES, & Co.), merchant and commission agent; sworn under £10,000; HESLOP, WILSON, & BUDDEN, iron and metal brokers; JOHN ELLIOTT, iron rolling mills, Jarrow-on-Tyne; JOHN SOFTLEY & Co., iron ship builders, North Shields; SAMPSON LANGDALE, manure manufacturer, &c.; gross liabilities sworn under £400,000; T. S. BRAMWELL, chemical and iron broker.

NOTTINGHAM.

The first meeting of the creditors of Messrs. THOS. HUTTON FARMER and WILLIAM BROWN, Stoney-street, lace manufacturers, was held on Friday, the 9th Oct., before the Registrar, Mr. Patchitt. The object was the appointment of a trustee, and other business. Mr. Gilbert was attorney for the bankrupts, and Mr. Richards, for the petitioning creditors, had the conduct of the proceedings. Mr. Richards commenced by producing various proofs of debts from the creditors, to which no objection was made. It transpired that their joint estate amounted to £7,808, their joint assets to £3,302 5s. 4d.; liabilities of

T. Hutton Farmer, separate estate £665 8s., assets £286 13s. 6d.; liabilities of William Brown's separate estate £105 3s., assets £82 18s. 6d. Mr. Charles Rogers, accountant, Willoughby House, was appointed trustee, with committee of inspection.

COVENTRY.

At the Coventry County Court, on the 30th September, a case was heard, involving a charge of fraud against a bankrupt named William Furnivall, residing at Earlsdon, near Coventry, veterinary surgeon, the trustee being Mr. E. T. Peirson, public accountant, Coventry. The main point upon which fraud was alleged was as to the sale, or pretended sale, of bankrupt's furniture to a brother-in-law named Nichols, the bankrupt's story being that Nichols agreed to purchase the furniture, and paid the sum of £117 10s. for it. On the other side there were very damaging affidavits as to the position and means of the man Nichols, and, under the circumstances, the solicitor to the trustee made application to the court to have "the sale or pretended sale" by the bankrupt of his furniture, &c., declared fraudulent and void as against the bankrupt's creditors and the trustee of his estate. Immediately upon the case being called, the solicitor who appeared for Nichols and the bankrupt intimated that he was not disposed to fight the case, and, addressing his clients in open court, said he could see great mischief likely to arise if the matter were pursued. He advised them both, therefore, to abandon the position they had taken up, and allow the furniture to be handed over to the trustee. He warned them that if they did not they might both be prosecuted for conspiracy, and might find themselves lodged in Warwick gaol for a long period. The Judge said no reasonable man could doubt that the transaction was a gross fraud. Even though money did pass, the transaction appeared to be a mere juggle, and as far back as the reign of Queen Elizabeth a statute had been passed rendering void transactions of this sort, where no actual transfer had been made. The whole thing, he added, stinks of fraud, and no amount of ingenuity on the part of their solicitor could have rescued these persons from their position. An order was then made by consent for the delivery of the furniture and other effects in question, to be delivered to the trustee, and Nichols signed in court an undertaking to give up possession forthwith. The costs of the application were also ordered to be paid by him.

HUDDERSFIELD.

A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Bance & Carter, woollen merchants, of Huddersfield, was held on the 23rd Oct.; the liabilities were stated at £20,130, and assets at £14,598. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement and not in bankruptcy.

BATH.

At the usual weekly meeting of the Board of Guardians held on the 14th October, Mr. H. Ponter, accountant, was elected Registrar of Births and Deaths for the district of Tiverton, in the place of Mr. McClure, surgeon, of Tiverton, who had lately vacated the same.

EDINBURGH BANKRUPTCY COURT.

At this court on the 7th October, William David Mackay, commission agent, residing at Lochside House, Duddingston, appeared before Sheriff Hallard for examination as a bankrupt. There were present Mr. W. B. Robertson, C.A., trustee; Mr. Robert Menzies, S.S.C., agent in the sequestration, and Mr. Campbell Smith, advocate, mandatory. From the state of affairs put in process, it appeared that his liabilities amounted to £642 8s. 7d., while his assets were estimated at £50 15s., leaving a deficiency of £591 13s. 7d. After examination, in the course of which numerous details were entered into, the statutory oath was administered.

The Bankruptcy of Mr. Robertson, Chamberlain to the Duke of Hamilton.—In the Hamilton Bankruptcy Court, on the 12th October, Sheriff Lees, Airdrie, presiding, Mr. Stewart Souter Robertson, Hutton Bank, Hamilton, was examined in bankruptcy. The sederunt comprised Mr. J. Clark Forrest, banker, Hamilton, trustee; Mr. Alex. Wylie, W.S., with Mr. E. T. Dykes, Hamilton, law agents, for the trustee; Mr. J. T. Bannerman Robertson, advocate, for the bankrupt; Mr. Alex. Fleming, S.S.C., for Messrs. Tods Murray and Jamieson, Edinburgh; W. Archibald, solicitor, and Mr. J. F. Mackenzie for creditors. The bankrupt was examined at length, and during the proceedings a draft statement of his affairs was handed in showing assets £29,439 odd, and liabilities £34,666. Adjourned till November 2nd.

GLASGOW.

The Bankruptcy of Messrs. Macfadyen and Co., Shipbuilders.—On the 20th October the examination of the members of this firm took place in Glasgow before Sheriff Guthrie, and as it was one of the concerns connected with the late failure of Messrs. Watson and Campbell, iron merchants, some interest was taken in the proceedings. The liabilities were stated to amount to £31,496, and the assets to £13,131, showing a deficit made during the 22 months the firm was in business of £18,365, and this deficit was attributed to losses chiefly on the building of 13 steamers of 6,323 tons. Mr. Archibald Macfadyen, in his examination, deposed that the firm of Macfadyen and Co. had commenced business in October, 1872. The total capital of the firm at that time amounted to £1,450. The partners were the bankrupt himself, Mr. M'Culloch, Mr. Polinus, and Mr. Low. Mr. Low had died on the 30th of September, 1873, and the firm paid out to his executors the sum of £948 12s., being his original capital and estimated share of profits. No balance of the books was made at Mr. Low's death, but the share allowed him was estimated by the members of the firm to the best of their ability. The bankrupt had charge of the commercial, Mr. M'Culloch of the iron, Mr. Polinus of the wood, and Mr. Low was draughtsman. At the beginning each partner drew £2 a week, after Mr. Low's death £3, and subsequently £4. The firm first felt itself in difficulties when Watson and Campbell suspended business. At that time the firm had acceptances to the amount of from £18,000 to £20,000. All the vessels had been built under contract. The firm made no balance of their affairs when they commenced finance. The other bankrupts, M'Culloch and Polinus, were afterwards examined, and corroborated the statement made by Macfadyen. The statutory oath was then administered. There were present Mr. James M'Kenzie, writer, Glasgow, agent in the sequestration; Mr. A. S. M'Clelland, accountant, trustee; and Mr. T. C. Young, writer, agent for a creditor.

At the Glasgow Bankruptcy Court, October 16, John Gilmour, baker, Glasgow, was examined before Sheriff Murray by Mr. J. A. Spens. The liabilities were stated at £2,479, and the assets at £570. The statutory oath was administered.

In the Glasgow Bankruptcy Court, October 15, John Walker, grocer, Strone, was examined as to the cause of his insolvency. The bankrupt stated that his liabilities amounted to £453 10s. 7d., and his assets to £94 14s., leaving a deficiency of £350 16s. 6d. The statutory oath was administered.

Thomas Henry Young, lithographer, Glasgow, was examined under bankruptcy on the 13th October, before Sheriff Guthrie, by Mr. J. H. Fergusson, accountant. Liabilities were stated at £1,434, and assets, after deducting preferable claims, £1,241. The oath was administered.

Thomas Harvie, sadler, Airdrie, was examined in the Bankruptcy Court, Glasgow, on the 13th October, before Sheriff Clark, by Mr. Meikleham, accountant. The liabilities were stated at £273, and the assets at £71. The oath was administered.

John Renton, formerly accountant, Glasgow, now quartermaster, Glasgow, was examined in bankruptcy on the 6th October before Sheriff Galbraith, and stated his secured liabilities at £363, and ordinary liabilities at £1,625, while his assets were £764. The examination was adjourned.

DUBLIN.

In the Local Court of Bankruptcy, on Wednesday, the 24th October, Mr. Barnard Cracroft, stockbroker, Austin-friars, London, sought to have John Westby Smith, stockbroker, of Belfast, adjudicated a bankrupt on failing to pay complainant's claim of £32,495. The case for Mr. Cracroft was that he acted in the purchase of stocks, shares, and securities for Mr. Smith, under a contract that the dealings should be conducted under the rules and regulations of the London Stock Exchange, and that he was to be indemnified from all losses. Mr. Smith pleaded that even if the contract had been made, it was void on account of being made for the purpose of gambling and wagering. The plaintiff, Mr. Cracroft, was (counsel said) a gentleman of education. He graduated in arts at the University of Cambridge, and was called to the English bar. In early life he became acquainted with some of the principal moneyed people in London, including the Rothschild and Goschen families, and other magnates of the financial world. When engaged in producing a history of banking institutions he applied for information to the directors of the Belfast Banking Company, and he was referred to Mr. William Smith, brother of the defendant, then chief accountant in their establishment. At this time the defendant, John Westby Smith, was also an officer of the bank, but soon after left and set up in business as a stock and share broker. In January, 1872, the defendant, his brother William, and Hugh W. Rogers, manager of the Cookstown branch of the bank, conceived the idea of entering largely into transactions upon the London Stock Exchange. In order to carry out this design it became necessary to obtain the services of a member of the London Stock Exchange of character and ability. Accordingly, on the 12th of January, 1872, the defendant, signing himself John W. Smith and Co., No. 2, Rosemary-street, wrote a letter to Mr. Cracroft. Mr. Cracroft being in Italy at the time, this letter was opened by his confidential manager, Mr. Murray Astin, who proceeded to Belfast, and saw Mr. Smith. The latter represented that he had at his back a powerful "syndicate" of wealthy men. He did not mention the names of any of the so-called syndicate, but Mr. Murray Astin returned to London, and commenced business transactions with Mr. Smith. All the documents forwarded from Mr. Cracroft from the commencement to the close of the proceedings bore on the face of them words stating that all transactions were conducted under the rules and regulations of the London Stock Exchange. From February, 1872, to November, 1873, all transactions between the parties appeared to have been closed, and it was in reference to the dealings in the month of December last that the question now at issue arose. During the earlier period Mr. Smith had sustained heavy losses, but he had honourably met his engagements so far. It was because he did not continue to do so that this case was brought forward. His losses had been in all over £80,700, and perhaps the jury would wish to know where the money came from to meet this large amount. He (Serjeant Armstrong) would inform them. All this time Mr. Smith, the chief accountant, and Hugh W. Rogers, the manager of the Cookstown branch, were engaged in robbing the bank, until at length their frauds reached a sum of no less than £142,000. William Smith and Hugh W. Rogers were arrested and committed for trial. They pleaded guilty, and were sentenced to long terms of imprisonment. This brought William Smith's career to a close, and then he wrote to Mr. Cracroft to say—"My syndicate is discovered, and all my money is gone." There was not a word of truth in the original statement to Mr. Astin. The "syndicate" was a myth. There was not a soul in connection with him, and he had no money to meet his liabilities. The magnitude of the transactions might be gathered from the circumstance that from the end of November to the middle of December, when they closed completely, the purchases had amounted to over £1,600,000, and that the loss upon them was £52,870. The defence set up was that the transactions were, with a few exceptions, gambling pure and simple. The case lasted several days and was concluded on Saturday, the 31st October. Having deliberated several hours, and after twice declaring their inability to agree upon one of the counts, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff on all the issues. The judge, however, stayed the bankruptcy proceedings pending a legal argument before one of the superior courts.

THE "CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT BANK" is the title of a novel and bold attempt to invite public subscriptions on the basis of confidence in a single individual, under the inspection of a board of accountants. It is not within the scope of this journal to advocate the claims of public companies or other form of joint-stock enterprise, but the peculiar principles on which the bank is founded induce us to draw the attention of the profession to the features of the scheme as propounded in the prospectus in another portion of our columns. The propositions of the projector and proprietor may be shortly stated as follows:—1. Financial business is eminently profitable. 2. It is virtually a monopoly, being confined to a few great firms. 3. It requires a large command of capital. 4. Like contracting, and other businesses of a cognate character, it can be more successfully conducted by individual skill than by the cumbrous machinery of a board of directors. 5. The management shall receive no remuneration until the contributors have been paid their interest, and a proportion of profit set aside for reserved fund. 6. The remuneration of the manager being dependent on the remainder, it is his direct interest to manage the business prudently. 7. The board of auditors shall be chosen from amongst the first accountants in the kingdom, and report quarterly to the subscribers the position of the bank. 8. There is no partnership liability, and, on the other hand, no published list of shareholders for "bears" to terrify by mendacious circulars. The obvious objection to the scheme is, that the entire management is committed to a single individual. To this objection the projector replies, "I am perfectly master of the business I offer to undertake. I am not a paid servant, but entitled to a remainder in case of success. Any man will be honest and prudent if you make it worth his while to be so; in this concern the remuneration you offer me in case of success is splendid—ergo, I shall manage your affairs honestly and prudently; and if from lack of skill or other cause I fail to conduct your affairs successfully, your auditors will speedily inform you."

REAL PROPERTY STATISTICS.—A recent Parliamentary return shows that as to property tax assessment, from the years 1815 to 1873, inclusive, the gross value of real property, according to Schedule A, in 1814-15, was £53,495,374. The gross rental of lands was, according to Schedule B, £36,260,000. In 1871-2, the amounts under these two were £159,983,932, and £48,914,230, respectively. The gross estimated rental assessed to the poor rates was, in 1855-6, the first year which appears in the return, £86,077,676; in 1872-3 it was £132,453,870. The rateable value assessed to the poor rate in 1840-41 was £62,450,030; in 1872-3 it was £112,317,603. The total sum levied as poor rate in 1814-15 was £7,547,676, and in 1872-3 £11,486,117. The sum expended in the relief of the poor in 1814-15 was £5,418,846, and in 1872-3 £7,692,169, according to this return.

ERIE RAILWAY.—The report of Messrs. Quilter, Ball, & Co., and Turquand, Youngs, & Co., the accountants appointed to investigate the affairs of the Erie Railway Company, states that the earnings were sufficient to justify the payment of the dividends on the Preferred Stock for two years ending 30th September, 1873. But by reason of deficiencies discovered in the accounts of the Gould administration, there was no sufficient balance applicable to the payment of dividends on the common stock.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

A sitting in this matter was held on Tuesday, the 20th October, at Westminster-chambers, by Mr. F. S. Reilly, the assessor. From the affidavit of the liquidators of the English Widows' Fund, it appeared that that company was wound up as far back as 1863, and up to the present time no call had been made. Several annuitants having now made claims against the company, it was necessary to make calls, in order to meet the sum of £5,937 18s. 7d., but as only about £200 was anticipated to be received from a certain portion of the contributories, another call of £4 per share was rendered indispensable. Great opposition was made to this. An objection was put in by one contributory on account of eleven years having passed, but without avail. Another contributory's case was permitted to stand over, on account of his connection with the British Nation, the winding-up of which, he stated, had reduced his circumstances to nil. A Mrs. Gilbert endeavoured to obtain exemption, on the ground of her having distributed the estate of her late husband, who was the holder of the shares for the call upon which she was now to be made liable, but notwithstanding her statement that she had lost heavily by the Albert and European Companies, the assessor, although condoling with her misfortune, retained her name on the list. Mr. John Young (the liquidator) promised to give her case his best consideration. The late Marquis of Northampton was settled on the list for one share, and the Duke of Cambridge for ten shares. A case was obtained by a gentleman, a general in the army, for the decision of the arbitrator as to the legality of the call.

The settlement of the B list was subsequently taken—a call of £3 on those who had paid £4, and £7 on those who had paid nothing. A solicitor disputed the liability of his client, on the ground of his having transferred his shares before the date of the winding-up order, but, as the Court of Chancery had settled him on, the assessor stated that the arbitrator would be bound by that. Another solicitor contended that the annuitants had freed the English Widows' Fund from all liability by accepting the British Nation in place of the former company, and that the official manager had agreed to settle the matter for a stipulated amount. Mr. Mercer observed that the only way of upsetting the calls would be to upset the claims, and that a summons for that purpose could be taken out, and the solicitor said that he would certainly adopt that course. The 5th instant was named as the day when the case would be brought before the arbitrator.

In Chancery.—The first account of the Paymaster-General under the Court of Chancery Funds Act shows that on the 31st of August, 1873, the securities and money in the Court of Chancery belonging to suitors reached the value of £66,239,818, or rather that nominal value, for the securities are not put at their actual cash value, but are the amount of stock which has been brought into court or purchased. The "cash" is not quite four millions sterling. Of this amount nearly two millions and a half are due from the Consolidated Fund, being the "book debt" due in cash from the Court of Chancery to the suitors. Nearly £600,000 had been placed upon deposit under the 14th section of the Act. The item of "securities" amounts to above sixty-two millions sterling, and is constituted chiefly of Government or Indian Stock, but includes a multitude of other investments, such as railway stock or shares, dock and assurance companies' stock, colonial bonds, Brazilian and various South American bonds, Spanish bonds, St. Pancras Skinner's Estate bonds, &c., all brought into court for safe keeping during some strife or suit. There are also a large number of boxes and miscellaneous effects in the Bank of England, deposited there on behalf of the Court of Chancery—boxes containing securities, jewellery, title-deeds, a will, personal ornaments, plate, a portrait, diamond necklace, coronet, and earrings, and many other articles, each box being marked with the title of the cause or matter in which the contents are in dispute or under discussion. The Controller and Auditor-General has had to report on the accounts, and observes that the limited audit which alone is at present possible does not fulfil the object contemplated by the Treasury in 1871—viz. the establishment of a "complete check on Chancery expenditure."

Fraudulent Bankruptcy.—At the Guildhall, on the 20th of October, Gustavus Marks, described on the charge-sheet as a furrier, of No. 44, De Beauvoir-road, Kingsland, surrendered to his bail to answer several charges under the 11th clause of the Bankruptcy Act. Mr. Besley appeared to prosecute, and Mr. Wontner defended the accused. The evidence, which had extended over several examinations, went to show that the defendant started in business as a merchant in July, 1872, and in February, 1873, became bankrupt, with unsecured liabilities £3,500, and assets virtually nil. Mr. E. J. Yaldon, accountant, of 70, Cheapside, was called, and stated that by order of the court he had had placed in his hands the goods, cash, and deficiency accounts of the defendant. He had investigated them, and could say from those accounts that it was untrue for the bankrupt to say that he had bought goods for cash. He had not accounted in his books for any of the advances he had received for the goods he obtained on credit. If he had bought any he had omitted them altogether from his accounts. It was impossible that the goods account could be a true one; there were discrepancies in that account and a uniformity in the amounts which, as an accountant, he could say could not occur in mercantile transactions. Some formal evidence having been given, Mr. Alderman Cotton fully committed defendant for trial, but admitted him to bail, two sureties in £200 each, one in £300, and himself in £700. The trial took place at the Central Criminal Court, and Mr. Justice Lush passed sentence of 18 months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

We learn that the improvements which are being carried out in connection with the Bankruptcy Court and its offices in Portugal-street and Lincoln's Inn-fields will soon be completed. On the completion of the work we understand all the business will be transacted there. This will be a great convenience to professional gentlemen, who have for a long time had their energies severely taxed in carrying on matters at Basinghall-street and Portugal-street simultaneously.

The Secretary of the London Financial Association (Limited), writes:—"In consequence of the sudden and lamented death of the late manager, Mr. B. Dunn, soon after the last half-yearly meeting of shareholders, the Board of Directors have anxiously considered the best course to be adopted for supplying the vacancy so occasioned. I am directed to inform you that the result of these deliberations is that they have appointed Mr. John Ball, of the firm of Quilter, Ball, & Co., provisional manager, to assist the directors in the realisation of the securities of the association."

A petition for winding up the London and Paris Hotel Company (Limited), has been presented to the Court of Chancery.

Mr. Albert Grant was presented on Saturday with a handsome silver centre piece by the Conservatives of Kidderminster, in acknowledgment of his political services to the borough. A presentation was also made to Mrs. Grant.

Lemon Hart & Son.—This case was brought before Mr. Registrar Hazlett to day (November 2), the interim injunction being continued upon the application of Mr. Linklater.

We learn from the City Press that Mr. D. R. Harker died at his residence, Osborne-villas, West-green-road, Tottenham, on Tuesday last, in his 70th year. Mr. Harker held the position of toastmaster for 38 years, till he retired a few years ago through ill-health. He was well known in connection with many other offices, and was much respected in the City.

BANKERS.—

MANAGER AND PROPRIETOR.
RICHARD BANNER OAKELEY, F.R.G.S.

SECRETARY.—

The object of this scheme is to afford to smaller capitalists an opportunity of participating in the enormous profits which are daily being made in the London Money Market by the magnates of finance.

It embraces all the useful features of a Syndicate, a Joint Stock Bank, a Private Bank, and a Finance Company, without the disadvantages attending either of them. In comparison with a Syndicate, it possesses a wide and varied, instead of a limited and special, field of operations. Its profits are frequently divided, instead of awaiting the result of operations which may require years to mature. It is conducted by one mind, thereby avoiding divided counsels, a constant source of ruin to syndicates. Its members can withdraw at any time, on giving the stipulated notice, instead of having their capital locked up indefinitely. It will command a larger range of credit than ever attached to any syndicate yet formed, being capable of unlimited extension, founded on first class personal responsibility, and it requires no cash payment for subscriptions exceeding £50.

If compared with a Joint Stock Bank, it will be found to possess all the weight and influence of such an association. Here again it utilises a far wider field of operations. The vast bulk of its capital being held at long notice of call, it can safely enter into lengthened engagements which no bank, liable to be called upon for its deposits at a moment's notice, could with safety undertake. No panic in the Money Market can affect it adversely; indeed, its profits can be made as readily in time of panic as in seasons of prosperity. Again, it can suffer from no division of opinion at its council board: its profits are divided monthly instead of half-yearly; and its balance-sheet audited and rendered quarterly, instead of a six months' report. Its members can withdraw, as aforesaid, at any time, the withdrawal being accompanied by an entire release from all liability. Lastly, the profits are immensely greater than can be obtained by investment in the shares of any joint stock bank, and, in this undertaking, accrue on the whole amount of the subscriptions instead of on the paid-up portion only.

In comparison with a Private Bank, it possesses equal secrecy as regards individuals; and it has also the same advantage of individual management. But, whereas, in a private bank the co-operative element is essentially absent, in this project it forms a prominent feature. No private banker publishes a balance-sheet; he relies on his own credit and reputation, and trades for himself alone. The Co-operative Credit Bank, on the other hand, divides a large share of its profits with its constituents monthly, and renders to them a certified balance-sheet quarterly.

Lastly, to compare it with a Finance Company. Societies of this nature were introduced into England in the year 1864-5, projected on the basis of the French Credit Mobilier, Credit Foncier, &c. They were eagerly taken up by the public, but they did not succeed, and for the following reasons:—Firstly, they were burdened with enormous sums of promotion money and preliminary expenses, and extravagant salaries to chairmen, deputy-chairmen, directors, and official staff. Secondly, they were, almost without exception, projected to benefit some particular individual, or firm, and to carry out some particular scheme; and that failing they had neither money nor credit to embark in any other business. Thirdly, they were projected with the idea that their acceptances would be universally discountable; whereas, the market being flooded with their paper, no banker would look at them; and this arose, not only from the large quantity afloat, or attempted to be floated, but also from the general distrust in the responsibility of the shareholders, who, it was known, were in many cases men of straw, who had subscribed for the shares on the small preliminary deposit and allotment call, expecting to sell them again at premiums. Although, therefore, a large margin of capital nominally appeared behind the paid-up capital, it was notorious that further calls would not be readily met; and subsequent events justified this opinion. Fourthly, the directors of these companies were harassed by the double fear of movements on the Stock Exchange, tending to depreciate their shares and credit at the same time, and of making calls which would be distasteful to their shareholders and with difficulty collected. The Co-operative Credit

Bank avoids all these rocks. It is burdened with neither preliminary expenses, promotion money, nor extravagant salaries, nor commission to chairmen, deputy-chairmen, directors, or expensive officials; the first charge on the profits of this Co-operative Bank, after working expenses, being the payment of the Bonus to Subscribers; the second charge being applied to the formation of a Reserve Insurance Fund, as hereinafter mentioned, and the proprietor deriving his remuneration from the remainder alone. It is his direct personal interest, therefore, to make the largest profits and the smallest losses. The constituents of the Co-operative Credit Bank are cautioned to subscribe for no more of the capital than they can really afford. Their responsibility is individually tested: the solidity of the Bank's credit can therefore never be brought in question. It has no shares to be gambled with on the Stock Exchange; no fluctuations on the quoted list can disturb its credit or the peace of mind of its constituents. It is not projected to serve any individual purpose or particular scheme. It will operate for its own benefit, whenever and wherever it finds profitable opportunity. It affords to all classes a channel of investment, and it cannot be too clearly stated that the proprietor is directly responsible to his constituents for the due application of the funds and guarantees entrusted to his charge, and is checked in the possibility of malversation by the independent quarterly audit and certified balance-sheet.

The subscribed fund will commence with £500,000, to be increased as occasion offers in amounts as above.

A fixed proportion of the profits, viz., £1 per £100 per month, will be paid IN CASH to each subscriber.

Any person desirous of becoming a Subscriber must sign the letter of proposal to such amount as he or she wishes to subscribe, and forward the same to the proprietor, together with two references as to his or her responsibility. If accepted after inquiry, his or her name will be registered for the amount, and a bill at three months' date for the amount of the subscription will be forwarded for his or her acceptance. This bill will be discounted with one or other of the bankers or discount houses with whom this Co-operative Credit Bank is connected, and the proceeds used in the operations of the Bank. It will be renewed from time to time as it falls due, so long as the proposal remains in force. If, however, the Subscriber prefers to pay up in CASH the amount of the proposal, instead of giving an acceptance, he or she can do so, and interest will be allowed thereon at the rate of SIX PER CENT. PER ANNUM, IN ADDITION TO THE ORDINARY FIXED RATE OF £1 PER CENT. PER MONTH, MAKING IN ALL 18 PER CENT. PER ANNUM. In such case a special deposit receipt will be given for the amounts paid up in cash. The proposal must be made in the first instance for six months certain, but at expiration of that period can be withdrawn at 60 days' notice, when both the proposal and acceptance, if any, will be returned cancelled to the Subscriber. The proprietor similarly reserves to himself the right of terminating the engagement by notice of 60 days after expiration of the first six months.

All subscriptions not exceeding £50 must be paid up in CASH, and in order to afford the INDUSTRIAL CLASSES an opportunity of participating in the project, such applications will have priority in acceptation. Such Subscribers are required to sign the subjoined form, and to forward the same, together with a copy of the Prospectus attached, and the amount of their subscription, to the Bankers. On acceptation of the subscription, a special deposit receipt for the amount subscribed will be given. All such subscriptions are available for the same periods, and are subject to the same terms of notice of withdrawal, on either side, as the proposals aforesaid, and will receive interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, in addition to the ordinary fixed rate of £1 per cent. per month, making in all 18 per cent. per annum.

The proprietor undertakes to set aside 30 per cent. of the remaining net profits to form a Reserved Insurance Fund, so long as any proposal remains in force. This, it is calculated, will accumulate at the annual rate of five shillings for every pound of capital subscribed, and will be invested in the names of trustees elected annually by the Subscribers.

The business of the Bank will embrace operations in stocks and shares, home and foreign funds, public loans, concessions, contracts, the promotion of public companies, discount of bills, advances on deposit of deeds and other valuable securities, mortgage loans, and every description of sound financial business.

For the convenience of subscribers, drawing accounts will be opened with them on the usual terms of London bankers.

The Bank is under the sole proprietorship and management of Mr. R. B. OAKELEY, who has had many years' experience in financial circles.

All the books, vouchers, and accounts will be independently audited on behalf of the Subscribers by two well-known firms of Accountants, and a Balance-sheet published quarterly and forwarded by them to each Subscriber. The quarterly Balance-sheet will also be published in the leading papers, so that each Subscriber will be accurately informed of the progress and position of the undertaking.

THE ADVANTAGES OF THE CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT BANK ARE:—

1st.—No promotion money or preliminary expenses.

2nd.—Managerial remuneration dependent on profits after payment of constituents' proportion and provision for reserve fund.

3rd.—Participation in profits on the whole amount of the liability.

4th.—Minimum of risk, the operations being spread over a large variety of subjects.

5th.—The proprietorship being vested in one person, no liability beyond the amount of subscription can accrue.

6th.—The secrecy and dispatch of individual management, so important in financial operations.

7th.—A fixed instead of an uncertain scale of profits.

8th.—A monthly distribution of the same.

9th.—A constantly accruing reserved insurance fund vested in trustees.

10th.—Power of total withdrawal after six months on 60 days' notice.

11th.—Quarterly published Balance-sheet issued and certified by auditors.

(Signed) RICHARD BANNER OAKELEY.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The objects of the Society are—

To promote the acquisition of those branches of knowledge which are essential to the practice of an Accountant; to decide upon questions of professional usage or courtesy; and generally to advance the position and interests of Members of the profession.

CONSTITUTION.

The Society shall consist of three classes of Members, namely, Fellows, Associates, and Honorary Members, with a class of Students attached.

ELECTION OF ASSOCIATES.

Every application for admission as an Associate of this Society must be made to the Council, and must be accompanied by a written recommendation from at least two Associates.

ENTRANCE FEES AND ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Every Associate who shall be elected a FELLOW of the Society shall, upon such election, pay the sum of £15 15s. by way of fee upon his election as Fellow. Every person admitted as an ASSOCIATE of the Society shall, on admission, pay the sum of £5 5s. by way of entrance fee if he be practising in the City of London or within the London postal district; or the sum of £3 3s. if he be practising beyond such district; and the undermentioned YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Society, that is to say:—FELLOWS, £5 5s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING IN THE CITY OF LONDON, or within the London postal district, £2 2s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING BEYOND SUCH DISTRICT, £1 1s.; and STUDENTS, £1 1s. each.

Every candidate to be hereafter proposed for admission as an Associate shall be twenty-one years of age or upwards, and shall come within one of the following conditions:—

(1.) He shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership as a public accountant, on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have made his application on or before the 1st day of January, 1873.

(2.) Or shall have been a clerk to a public accountant on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership, as a public accountant for three years consecutively after that date, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1878.

(3.) Or shall have served under articles for a period of three years to a public accountant in actual practice.

(4.) Or shall have been employed as accountant to a corporation or public body for three years, or as a clerk to a public accountant, or firm of accountants, for a period of seven years at the least, but the employment need not have been for more than two years continuously with one and the same person or firm.

(5.) Or shall have taken a degree at one or other of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, London, or Dublin, and shall have served under articles for a period of two years to a public accountant or firm of accountants.

(6.) But no candidate shall be eligible for admission as an associate after the 1st day of January, 1878, until he shall have passed an examination as to his proficiency to the satisfaction of the Examiners of the Society.

(7.) Or shall conform to such conditions as the Council shall in any particular case require to be observed, but such admission shall only be made upon the written recommendation of at least three-fourths of the Council present at a Meeting specially called for the purpose.

STUDENTS.

Students shall be persons, not under 18 years of age, who are or have been pupils of Fellows or Associates of the Society, and who have the intention of becoming accountants; and such persons may continue Students until they attain the age of 26 years.

Further information can be obtained, and copies of the Rules can be had, upon application to the Secretary.

IMPORTANT NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Notwithstanding the increase in the size of the paper (from 16 to 24 pages), the Editor has been obliged to omit a large quantity of matter, including original articles, and reports from London and the provinces. This lack of space, when considered in connection with the very flattering amount of encouragement and support which THE ACCOUNTANT has received, has induced the Proprietor to decide upon a further alteration, with the view to enhancing the value and usefulness of the paper. This object, it is considered, would not be attained by making the present monthly paper still larger, but rather by publishing more frequently, and the Proprietor has therefore resolved to issue THE ACCOUNTANT weekly, the alteration to commence with the new year.

A paper issued every Saturday will possess a degree of importance and value which could not possibly be attained by a monthly organ, however efficiently conducted. Opportunities will thus be afforded for bringing important topics at once under the notice of the profession; the Editor will be able to comment upon matters as they arise from week to week, to "shoot folly as it flies," and to bring any abuses or malpractices directly within the ken of the profession generally; whilst the reports from the metropolis and the provinces being presented weekly, will thus possess more of interest and of practical utility to accountants than when issued at intervals of a month. The Proprietor hopes that this will prove to be an important step towards one of the main objects for which the paper was started, viz., the advancement of the interests of the profession of accountants throughout the United Kingdom.

The weekly paper (No. 1 of which will be issued January 2nd, 1875), will consist of 16 pages, each number being sold at 6d. The price per annum will be 28s. (including postage), the following being the reductions for payment in advance:—Annual subscription, 24s. (post free); half-yearly subscription, 13s. (post free). Cheques and post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. ALFRED W. GEE.

In regard to the original subscribers, the Proprietor wishes it to be thoroughly understood that in making this change he has no desire to disturb the first arrangement entered into with them. The whole of the original subscribers (including those who have subscribed up to the present time, all having, with very few exceptions, received copies from the commencement), will therefore be supplied with the weekly issue regularly without any extra payment for the remainder of the term of their original subscriptions, viz., until the commencement of October 1875. The Proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased suppport on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements—a valuable aid to a newspaper, which accountants specially can readily render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute THE ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and the members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament.

Subscriptions, applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should be forwarded to Mr. ALFRED W. GEE, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C., Literary communications should be addressed to the Editor of THE ACCOUNTANT at the same address.

As indicated above, the next number will be published on Saturday, January 2nd, 1875, and after that date the paper will be issued weekly.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by this Paper as an advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, THE ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. THE ACCOUNTANT will thus secure to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and it will be particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c.

N.B.—During the past few weeks the Proprietor has received communications from several Advertisers as to the excellent results which have attended their Advertisements in this paper, thereby affording very gratifying proof of the value of THE ACCOUNTANT as a medium for advertising Vacant Partnerships, Estates, &c.

DECEMBER, 1874.

In another column will be found a letter from an auctioneer to which we willingly give insertion, one of the objects of THE ACCOUNTANT being to ventilate any questions at all affecting the interests of accountants or the business in which they are engaged. If auctioneers really have a grievance against accountants, it is as well that the latter should be made aware of the fact, and that the claims to a monopoly, such as that set forth in our correspondent's letter, should be thoroughly sifted. It appears to us, however, that "Auctioneer" starts from altogether wrong premises in his sweeping raid against accountants, who, by the way, will be interested to learn that in the eyes of this gentleman of the rostrum and hammer, "they have really no recognised professional position." Our correspondent does not complain that he has caught an accountant (either soi disant or properly so described) in flagrante delicto dilating upon the beauties of this estate or the excellent position of that mansion, preparatory to announcing it as "going" or "gone" at such a price; on the contrary the gravamen of his complaint is that "in almost every daily paper, and in nearly every advertising organ, are to be seen announcements of this, that, or the other partnership, business, &c., being for disposal, full particulars to be obtained of so and so, accountants." Our correspondent's charge being thus narrowed to one respecting private arrangements as to partnerships, &c., we ask in reply, by what right, specific or implied, auctioneers claim a monopoly of this particular business. The avocation of an auctioneer, rightly so called, is, as we take it, to manage an auction, in other words, a public sale, in which the property is disposed of to the highest bidder. Would it be desirable or even practicable to trumpet forth to the world the advantages of a partnership in this or that profession or trade, or to detail in glowing terms the special channels and monopolies of a particular business with the view to its disposal? Nobody questions the ability of auctioneers generally to negotiate matters of this kind, but it must be done privately; and that being so, the vendor, or the person desiring to enter into partnership relations, naturally turns to the accountant who has had the management of his financial affairs, or to the solicitor who has had charge of his estate, as the person most fitted to do the work. For it should be remembered that for every six accountants whose names appear in these advertisements, there are half-a-dozen solicitors mentioned in a similar capacity. If there is any "trenching" upon another's rights, solicitors are guilty in an equal degree with accountants. There is the semblance of a grievance in "Auctioneer's" case, but it is only a phantom wrong; and we decline to believe that the general body of auctioneers would be found to endorse the claim to such a monopoly as that implied in our correspondent's letter.

In another part of our columns we publish a letter signed "Unfortunate Creditors," and which appeared in the Times of the 20th November, with the remarks of our contemporary on the subject. The very grave charges against accountants there advanced (although to some extent qualified in the last paragraph of the letter) cannot be passed over without notice. It is, at least, satisfactory to note that our contemporary advocates the same measures as, we think, the entire body of accountants, whose practice takes them into the bankruptcy court, would support, and we agree that "legal supervision" and "fixed charges" would go far to remedy the evils which doubtless exist. It is, however, in a combination, only, of the entire body of accountants, to which we must look for assistance and reform in the direction of restraining or legally prohibiting practitioners of a doubtful character from transacting their business in a manner not only unprofessional, but seriously affecting the credit and status of the body to which they nominally belong. The personal attendance of creditors at meetings, as suggested, would be accompanied by great inconvenience to themselves, and the proposition appears to be somewhat impracticable. The remedy for the evils detailed certainly rests to a considerable extent with the creditors themselves. Let them use some little discrimination before accepting the services of an accountant, in the same manner as they would in employing any other man of business, and they will probably find some of the difficulties with which, according to the lament in the Times, they are at present afflicted vanish at once into thin air.

In a case we report from the Sheffield district, it appears that after an appointment duly and properly made by the registrar, the creditors have stepped in and negatived the matter by giving the receivership to a nominee of their own. This is, unfortunately, not without precedent, similar cases having arisen in the London Bankruptcy Court. Frequent complaints are made of the great expenses attending the liquidation of estates, and loud dissatisfaction is often expressed at the absurdly small dividends those estates produce. It would seem, however, by this and similar instances, that "Unfortunate Creditors," upon whom so much sympathy is occasionally lavished, are sometimes not disinclined for a little litigation. But if under such circumstances only meagre results are obtained, it is hardly just, though very much the fashion now-a-days, to turn round and lay the blame wholesale upon the shoulders of the professional man, who has probably been doing his best to carry things on smoothly and with the minimum of expense.

A legal contemporary has discovered the appended advertisement, which it quotes with the following comment:—"Here is another attempt to deceive the public. We will supply all information to any society which can see its way to a prosecution."

"'LEGAL ASSISTANCE.—Messrs. ———, Legal Agents and Accountants, are prepared to carry out and conduct liquidations and arrangements with creditors upon reasonable terms, without publicity, bankruptcy, or suspension of business. Also all actions and executions, whether in the Superior or County Courts, immediately stayed by injunction. Chancery, divorce, probate suits, wills proved, and common law actions conducted with dispatch, and County Courts attended. Wills, leases, assignments, and agreements prepared. Money advanced on mortgage, reversions, bills of sale, &c., and debts collected at 5 per cent. interest.—Apply to (name of firm and address).'"

Our contemporary has our entire sympathy in its efforts to expose cases of this kind. Probably, if the facts could be investigated, the advertisers would be found to possess as little right to be considered accountants, as ability to give "legal assistance." Assuming, however, that they have some claim to the title "accountants," we are sure that all respectable members of the body will be with us in repudiating such mongrelism.

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES' ACCOUNTS.

Sir,—I cannot permit "J. E. D.'s" remarks concerning the article on "Life Assurance Companies' Accounts," which appeared in your first number, to pass without offering an explanatory reply. It appears your evidently able correspondent (who addresses you from Edinburgh) is dissatisfied with the quantity of "sweeping assertions" and the paucity of "grave qualifications" contained in the second paragraph of the article in question. Perhaps if a more general and impartial view of what was written had been taken, no necessity for the use of such terms as sweeping and grave would have occurred to your correspondent. The acknowledgment of the excellent position of certain offices, both English and Scotch, would be a matter of superfluity, as those offices are, and have been for years, capable of ignoring all criticism, owing to the praiseworthy manner in which they are being, and have been, managed; but when we come to accounts, matters assume an entirely different aspect. The expressions employed regarding the systems of keeping life offices' accounts might have been "qualified" in a certain way by singling out those companies which have never had to make any alterations in their systems in order to obtain speedily, easily, and accurately, the necessary details for filling up the forms of account required by the Board of Trade; but my contention is, that those forms of account should be a part of the accounts kept. As regards the Scotch societies to which "J. E. D." refers in his censorious remarks, they number about twenty, eight of which were founded before 1830, and seven before 1840, the remainder having been ushered into existence since that date, 1870, I think, being the last year in which any, and then but two, made their appearance. It would be injudicious for one moment to question the abilities of the gentlemen whose names and offices your correspondent details, but I find English offices to be equally blessed with able and competent managers. What is so astonishing and perplexing is, that the societies founded previous to 1830 and 1840 had so organised their accounts that no alteration was necessary when the 1870 Act came into operation!

THE INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS AND ACTUARIES IN GLASGOW.

The Institute of Accountants and Actuaries in Glasgow was incorporated by royal charter, bearing date 15th March, 1855, and registered and sealed on the 16th May in the same year. The prayer of the petitioners, as recited in the charter, was:—"That the profession of an accountant has long existed in Scotland as a distinct profession of great respectability; that originally the number of those practising it were few, but that, for many years back, the number has been rapidly increasing, and the profession in Glasgow now embraces a numerous as well as highly respectable body of persons; that the business of an accountant requires, for the proper prosecution of it, considerable and varied attainments; that it is not confined to the department of the actuary, which forms indeed only a branch of it, but that, while it comprehends all matters connected with arithmetical calculation, or involving investigation into figures, it also ranges over a much wider field, in which a considerable acquaintance with the genera principles of law, and a knowledge in particular of the law of Scotland, is quite indispensable: That accountants are frequently employed by courts of law, both the Sheriff Courts, and the Court of Session, which is the Supreme Civil Tribunal in Scotland, to aid those courts in their investigations of matters of accounting, which involve, to a greater or less extent, points of law of more or less difficulty: That they act under such remits, very much as the Masters in Chancery are understood to act in England, and that they are also most commonly selected to be trustees on sequestrated estates, and to act as trustees under private deeds of trust on large landed estates; and that, in these capacities, they have often to consider and determine in the first instance important questions of ranking and of competition between creditors, and many other important questions of law relating to property: That it is obvious that to the due performance of a profession such as this, a liberal education is essential, and that the object in view in the formation of the Institute of Accountants of Glasgow, of which the petitioners are the members, was to maintain the efficiency as well as the respectability of the professional body in Glasgow to which they belong: That it appears to the petitioners that this object will be further greatly assisted by the formation of the petitioners into a body corporate and politic, having a common seal, with power to make regulations and bye-laws respecting the qualification and admission of members, and other usual powers," &c.

The objects of the Institute, as described in the book of rules, are "to elevate the attainments and status of the accountants and actuaries of Glasgow, to promote their efficiency and usefulness, and to give concentrated expression to their opinions upon all questions and laws bearing upon, or incident to, the business of their profession."

By the form of application for admission the applicant is made to declare that he is "not engaged in the business of a merchant, manufacturer, or land agent," and in order to ensure consideration by the council, the application must be accompanied by a written recommendation from three members of the Institute not being members of the council.

Applicants for admission must have served for four years at least as clerk or apprentice with a member of the Institute, or of some other institute or society of accountants or actuaries in Scotland, or have been in partnership, for four years at least, with a member of the Institute, or of some other institute or society of accountants or actuaries in Scotland.

The candidates are required to undergo an examination by the committee of examination, consisting of any two or more members of the council, with the addition of any other party or parties who may be specially appointed by them for that purpose, in their knowledge of the principles of arithmetic and algebra, bankrupt law, book-keeping, and accounts, and the practical working of bankruptcies, trust estates, and judicial and extra-judicial factorships.

If the applicant succeeds in satisfying the examiners, the council will, in the ordinary course, recommend him for admission at the next quarterly general meeting of the Institute. The sum to be paid on admission as a member of the Institute is 50 guineas, the yearly contribution being one guinea. By the rules of the Institute forfeiture of membership ensues upon any member engaging in the business of a manufacturer, merchant, or land agent, &c. The number of original members in October, 1853, was 9; the names of 49 members appear upon the charter granted in 1855; according to the list published in 1870 there were then 64 members; and the roll for 1874 contains 69 members. It may be added that the Institute is possessed of premises acqured about two years ago, and including a handsomely-furnished hall, containing a library, and in which the meetings of the Institute are held.

ACCOUNTANTS' DIARY AND DIRECTORY.—We have received advance sheets of the "Accountant's Diary and Directory," compiled by Mr. Alfred C. Harper, which will be ready for issue to the subscribers by about the second week in December. This is, we believe, the first publication of the kind brought out for the use of accountants, and Mr. Harper certainly deserves to be complimented both upon his enterprise in undertaking the task, and upon the admirable manner in which the work has been carried out. In addition to a good-sized and convenient professional diary, accountants have here a mass of varied information well arranged for reference, and likely to prove of great service in the course of every-day business. A statement of some of the contents will suffice to show the general character and extent of the diary and directory. Mr. Harper gives a list of the offices and officers of the London Bankruptcy Court; a list of the county courts having bankruptcy jurisdiction, and those excluded from such jurisdiction; table of fees in bankruptcy; instructions as to Gazette notices; forms required under the Companies' Acts, 1862 and 1867; and specimen tables of joint stock companies' books; statements of affairs in bankruptcy, and principal forms required, &c. In the directory portion we have the titles and names of officers of all the accountants' societies in England and Scotland; an alphabetical list of accountants in London; a list of accountants in the provinces and in Scotland, arranged alphabetically; and also in towns. There is also an interesting treatise on the Scotch Bankruptcy system. Mr. Harper has evidently worked with industry and energy, and we have little doubt that the Diary and Directory will be found upon the tables of the majority of accountants before the commencement of 1875.

At a meeting, November 13th, of the creditors of Messrs. Lemon Hart & Son, whose suspension was announced on the 26th ult., a statement of affairs was submitted by Messrs. Cooper Brothers, & Co., the accountants, showing a total indebtedness expected to be proved against the estate amounting to £83,069 17s. 3d., against assets of £28,608 19s., being equal to 6s. 10d. in the pound. No acceptable proposition was made to the meeting, and it was decided to wind up the estate in bankruptcy.

CHARTERED ACCOUNTANTS IN SCOTLAND.

A copy of a lecture on "The Origin and Present Organisation of the Profession of Chartered Accountants in Scotland," by Jas. M'Clelland, late President of the Institute of Accountants and Actuaries of Glasgow, has recently been forwarded to us for perusal. The lecture was written and delivered by Mr. M'Clelland more than five years ago, and as a consequence some of the writer's comments, and the comparisons drawn between English and Scotch accountants, are scarcely applicable to the altered circumstances of the present day; nevertheless, the lecturer's remarks are well worth quoting, as illustrating the nature of the training and the duties performed by Scotch accountants. And indeed England may well take a wrinkle from Scotland in regard to the curriculum considered necessary before the chrysalis student is allowed to appear as the full-blown accountant. Having introduced his subject with a review of some of the great financial schemes originated by Scotchmen, instancing the Mississippi bubble, and of some great commercial failures, Mr. M'Clelland says—

Besides the employment which accountants have always found under insolvency and bankruptcy, many of them, from time to time, have been engaged under the courts in remits relative to intricate accounts; in appointments as judicial factors for landed proprietors and deceased partners, and in numerous family trusts, needing men trained to keep accounts and analyse the wishes and directions of testators under family trusts. The profession in Scotland, unlike the same class in England, thus became similar to what was termed under the old administration of the Court of Chancery, Masters in Chancery—a class of men who were appendages of the court, and to whom every matter of accounting in litigation, where the necessity arose, was remitted for report. In this way the Scotch system came materially to differ from that in England. Under the one system, the accountants leant on their education, qualification, and merits. Where these were deemed sufficient, the courts remitted cases to them on any question requiring investigation in figures, and their application to the cases pending; whereas the practice in England, not only in Chancery, but also in Bankruptcy, was to lean on the officers of court, and on paid officials named and appointed by the courts or by the Government of the day. In this way the merit of Scotch professional accountants was unknown in England, and is even at the present day only beginning to be understood. And the practice above alluded to in England could not make it otherwise. While the Scotch system reared up a class of trained men, independent of patronage, to labour and practise the same vocation as in England, the English system has failed till lately to bring to the front men thoroughly trained as accountants. Hence the import of the word in the two countries has quite different significations. About this period (1853) a movement was made to form the body of accountants practising in Glasgow into an Institute of Accountants and Actuaries. The proposal was willingly taken up and adopted. It not only seemed to find favour with mercantile and professional bodies, but after being fairly constituted, and in operation as an Institute, it found the marked approval of the then Lord Advocate for Scotland, James Moncrieff, Esq.; and so satisfied was this gentleman of the importance of the movement, that he suggested to the Government of the day to recommend to the Queen to issue a charter in our favour, constituting us a corporate body; and it is under the auspices of this Institute we are now met. It may be proper at this stage to notice also the further recognition of the profession by the Act of 31 and 32 Victoria, cap. 100. The 81st and six subsequent sections of that Act recognise, under remits from the court, the legality of the employment of such accountants out of court as may by the judges be thought fit to undertake the duty committed to them. This is very important to the whole profession, marking the period wherein the legislature has come formally to admit the status of such a body as chartered accountants. Mr. Moncrieff now began to apply his mind strenuously to the question of reform in bankruptcy, and a bill under his auspices was introduced in 1855, and received marked attention from all public bodies throughout the kingdom. This bill took the simplest form, dealing only with the administration of the debts and assets of a bankrupt, and leaving the prosecution and punishment of those malversations, so prevalent among certain classes of traders on the eve of insolvency, to be dealt with by the criminal law of the land. This measure passed into an Act in the session of 1856, and has since been found to work beneficially, expeditiously, and economically for the public. It gives the creditors thorough control and possession of the bankrupt's property throughout the three kingdoms. It allows them to appoint a trustee to manage and wind up the whole affairs, and protects the creditors by stringent provisions in the management. A reform suggested by our Institute, and among various other suggestions adopted by the Lord Advocate, was the appointment of an accountant in bankruptcy, whose sole duty was, at stated times, to call for, record, and examine the accounts of the trustee, as these had been submitted to and approved of by the commissioners; and with power, should such call not be made, to require from the trustee reasons for the omission. Should these prove unsatisfactory, he is required to appear before the court that the case may be dealt with as seems fit. In this way the trustee is bound to get an audit made three times in the year of his intromissions, and copies of the accounts certified by the commissioners are transmitted to the accountant in bankruptcy. This appointment under the Act has been found to be of the greatest consequence; and the present accomplished and talented accountant in bankruptcy does his duty in a manner highly satisfactory to all members of our profession. We have now to direct your attention to the qualities necessary to make an accountant. You will have gathered from what we have already said, that such a party cannot be constituted by simply appending the word to his name. This is often done, however, and the public thus suffer through simple ignorance, both of the man and of his calling. Let us begin with a youth fresh from the public schools and from college, entering the counting-house of parties in the usual employment of chartered accountants. The youth, after writing out his own indenture, which is usually for a term of four years, enters upon the routine of all well-conducted offices. He soon finds that the education he has obtained at school only gives him, in a more or less efficient form, according to the attention he may have paid to his studies, the tools whereby he can be trained to the details of his profession. He soon masters many of these; and at about the end of the second year of his work, he sees the necessity of becoming more intimately acquainted with the higher branches of arithmetic and algebra, with a more definite knowledge of the art of bookkeeping, and learning for himself to note entries for books kept by double entry. His mind is led again to the knowledge of commercial, bankrupt, and civil law; and in order that he may be grounded in these branches of his profession, he finds it will be necessary for him to go back to school, and attend the prelections of the professors of commercial and civil law; and in giving his mind to this branch of knowledge, again, that it will need at least two sessions at college properly to follow out the study of these subjects. While at these classes, his companions in study will doubtless be found to be the Institutes of the Law of Scotland by Erskine, as edited by Lord Ivory, and the Commentaries of George Joseph Bell on the Bankrupt Law, as edited by Patrick Shaw. We should also call to his notice a standard English authority, entitled Archbold's Law of Bankruptcy. He will then find it necessary to turn to another branch of study, of great importance in the extended trade and commerce universal throughout the kingdom. He will find that with the imports and exports of the country reaching nearly five hundred millions sterling, few insolvencies or bankruptcies now take place without the parties having more or less extended transactions with foreign countries. This will lead him to acquire some knowledge of the various qualities of goods, manufactures, and productions sent out of this country, and of the productions of foreign countries acquired in exchange for these; and to understand the operation of such transactions, he will find it necessary to study and make himself master of the various exchanges with foreign countries, to enable him to turn them into sterling values. To ascertain, for example, the sterling value of a tael in China, and of a Chinese, North American, South American, and Spanish dollar. To learn the value of the rupee in India—of the franc in France—of the lire in Italy—of the gulden in Austria and some portions of Germany—of the thaler in Prussia—of the rouble in Russia—and of the process necessary to understand the worth of coins in the Roman States. This seems a formidable catalogue, but a little study and a little practice will soon enable the student to comprehend this important branch of knowledge. And for this purpose we cannot recommend to you a better book on Foreign Exchanges than the Modern Cambist, by William Tate, published in London by Effingham Wilson. We have now to turn your attention to another branch of our profession, a class of employment in which many qualified men obtain a large amount of work—in remits from the court—in adjustment of partnership accounts—in judicial factories for deceased, insane, or incapable parties—and in family trusts under wills of deceased parties. The student will therefore require his attention directed to the practice of these heads, and to the work necessary to make clear, distinct, and accurate statements and reports on trusts, and to see, where these are wanted, that proper books are kept for the various parties interested. A branch of the profession, which has hitherto had but a limited scope in Glasgow, compared with its development and practice in Edinburgh, we should like to see cultivated among the members of our Institute. The branch to which we allude is the important one of Life Insurance, and of the preparation necessary in the higher branches of arithmetic and algebra, to make the student an expert in the necessary calculations and problems required in this very large business. There are a vast variety of books on Life Insurance which the student will no doubt have at his command in the Library of the Institute. De Moivre and Price are among the authors who in their day held the most advanced views, and their books are well worthy of attention; but the works now most consulted are those of De Morgan, Baily, Davies, Jones, Peter Gray, &c., &c. The article on "Insurance" in the twelfth volume of the last edition of the Encyclopædia Britannica gives a learned and comprehensive view of the whole subject. And now to conclude, my young friends you see from the foregoing details which we have given, that there is thus placed before you a useful and honourable calling—one which places you in the position of inquiring into and administering sometimes to the fortunes, and at other times to the necessities of your fellowmen, and thus becoming, with your training and your applied knowledge, a helper to both. Let us entreat you, therefore, to persevere in the walk of life you have chosen, with the single aim of thoroughly and conscientiously doing your duty to every one by whom you may be entrusted with employment. You may thus become to one class of society as beneficial as the medical profession is to all classes. They nobly pursue their calling in administering to the sick, and in restoring to health those afflicted with disease. You are, on the other hand, and in another sphere, independent of other portions of your profession, often found to be devoting your talents to the relief of families in misfortune, and are sometimes called upon to be the advisers and comforters of the widow and the fatherless; and thus in attending on your daily avocations, you are performing one of the first practical duties of the religion common to us all.

Correspondence.

A COMPLICATED ESTATE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT,

DEAR SIR,—The following case may interest some of your readers:—

Some twenty-five years ago, A., B., and C. commenced business in copartnership in Switzerland, each partner introducing capital. The business premises were taken in the name of A., but the partnership was (and is) well and publicly known to exist, and indicated by the headings to letters, invoices, and bills of exchange. A. married; his wife, under her wedding contract, paid her dowry into the general business. B. also married, and his wife brought money into the business, under her ante-nuptial settlement. C. remained unmarried. Both wives, pursuant to the laws and customs of France and Switzerland, control their separate estates. Under English law the claims of the wives are certainly not preferential. Under Swiss law the claims of the wives are preferential to the extent of fifty per cent., the remainder ranking for dividend with the general body of creditors. Under French law the claims of the wives are preferable to the full extent. Branches were subsequently established in England and France, A. conducting (in the name of the firm) the Swiss section, B. (in the name of the firm) the English section, and C. (in the name of the firm) the French section. Upon balancing accounts between the respective branches, the Swiss appeared to be largely indebted to the English, and the English to the French branch. Under English law a partnership undoubtedly exists, and the three branches are but portions of one whole. Foreign and English creditors (with the exception of those who are preferential or secured), ranking alike. Neither partner claims to have a separate estate other than his capital in the business. The Swiss law requires that a partnership should be officially announced in a specified manner—by an oversight this had not been done.

Pecuniary difficulties having arisen in Switzerland, A. in order to protect all parties, sought to file a petition on behalf of the firm; but the Swiss creditors (many of whom held his drafts on the firm) intervened and insisted that he must file the petition in his own name, and that the Swiss estate was only available for them, and not for the general body of creditors. A.'s petition having been so filed some of the Swiss creditors, on acceptances, commenced to attack the English firm, thus seeking to participate twice in respect of the same claim. A petition for liquidation was thereupon filed in England in the name of the firm. The Swiss creditors, by appropriating (through their trustee) that section of the estate, clearly constituted themselves secured creditors. Inasmuch as they could not foresee the dividend result, they could not safely estimate the value of such security, without which (if challenged by English creditors) they would be unable to vote or participate here. Admitting the correctness of the Swiss argument, that no partnership existed there, it is evident that the capital standing to the credit of B. and C., as also the balance due by the Swiss to the English house, would become admissible claims (thus practically doubling the liabilities of that section independently of the wives' claims to preference).

Owing to the above complications, and the difference in the various codes, it was evident that if one house was liquidated the same result must follow with the other two, as no composition could have been carried for one section alone. Three trustees, each holding the views laid down by his own laws, would therefore have had to be appointed, entailing three distinct sets of costs, and endless litigation would undoubtedly have ensued.

All these facts having been brought under the notice of the English creditors, they recommended the Swiss creditors to adopt the English view, viz., to treat the three estates as one, and accept one general arrangement. After much trouble and negotiation, the Swiss creditors were induced to see matters in the same light; and the liquidating firm having made a proposal to pay in full, with interest, all these complicated points of law were fortunately avoided. If litigation has arisen in any similar case, it would be interesting to know what decisions were obtained.—Yours truly,

H. B. (LONDON).

ACCOUNTANTS AND AUCTIONEERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—A great deal has been written, and a good deal more has been said, concerning the relative positions of accountants and solicitors. Pending the solution of the many points upon which those two classes of (to the community) invaluable business men are at variance, I crave permission to say a few words in the interest of the auctioneers.

As matters stand, it is admitted by the accountants themselves that they have really no recognised professional position, and this becomes indisputable from the fact that they are at present, to some extent, agitating to obtain an alteration for the better of the place they occupy in the commercial world—namely, to become professional men. As an auctioneer, I cannot say that either I or my brethren aspire to a similar change; but whether some do or not, there exists no doubt but what we are, at any rate, more legally entitled to call ourselves auctioneers than the accountant is to style himself accountant, and this I will show. After having been articled, at a premium of from one to five hundred guineas (in some cases more) to a firm of auctioneers, for the purpose of learning the peculiarities and duties connected with his very versatile business, the auctioneer has to pay annually a fee of £10 to the Treasury in order to enable him to follow his adopted calling. What, I ask, has the accountant to contribute to the revenue in order that he may carry on his business? Nothing. I have no wish to cry down accountants, many of whom I am intimate with, and nearly all of whom I respect as good and shrewd business men, but, "given: a brass plate and a connection; result: an accountant," is a saying I have heard, which is not in some cases far from the truth.

Now, I have to point out a great grievance of which auctioneers have to complain. In almost every daily paper, and in nearly every advertising organ, are to be seen announcements of this, that, and the other partnership, business, &c., being for disposal, "full particulars to be obtained of So-and-so, accountants." I would gladly learn what accountants can possibly have to do with the disposal of property of the above-mentioned description? Surely should not transactions of the nature referred to be negotiated through an auctioneer? or is it to be accepted that the accountant claims to be equally entitled to the nickname, "happy medium," as the auctioneer? I submit auctioneering is not accounting any more than drawing a will or a marriage settlement is bookkeeping.

In conclusion, I take the liberty of suggesting that it would be as well for accountants, in making any efforts to gain the position they are apparently endeavouring to reach, to betake themselves more exclusively to their own affairs, and not to interfere with the legally authorised business of others, upon which, it cannot be denied, they now-a-days closely and improperly trench.—Yours obediently,

AUCTIONEER.

PROCEDURE UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

DEAR SIR,—Among the many anomalies which the present Bankruptcy Act has given rise to, is the one of the procedure under that Act being practically left to the rules and orders of the registrars. This was fairly illustrated in a recent case of ours under the 28th section. The resolutions for a composition were duly passed at a meeting called for that purpose, everything was found in order by the clerk (it was in the London Court), and an appointment obtained before the registrar. On attending this, however, with the solicitor who had been concerned in the matter throughout, we were asked, to our astonishment, whether notices had been sent to those creditors who had not signed the resolution. Our answer being made in the negative, we were informed that the appointment must be adjourned for that purpose, upon which we immediately applied that the resolutions be confirmed at once, taking as the grounds of our application: (1) That the sending of these notices was merely a practice of the court, and as such could be put aside by the registrar. (2) That the notices of the meeting which had been sent to each creditor, and advertised in the Gazette, stated full particulars of the composition. (3) That the composition was a fair one, as shown by the statement of affairs and the reports of the trustee and the committee of inspection. (4) That a large body of the creditors had signed the resolution, and that the meeting had been unanimous in accepting the composition. Our arguments were, however, of no avail, and the appointment was consequently adjourned—the clerk this time being good enough to inform us that, beside the notice itself, a copy of the resolutions would in addition have to be sent to each creditor. On conforming with these rules and attending the adjourned appointment, the resolutions were duly confirmed without opposition.

We find, on reference, that the first regulation referred to above—that of sending notices to all those creditors who had not signed the resolution—is inserted in the second edition of Roche and Hazlitt's Bankruptcy Act, as a practice of the court (in a note to the 28th section), but no mention is made of a copy of the resolutions having to be sent with such notice.

We do not wish to say anything as to the reasonableness of these or any such regulations, but would merely observe, that in our opinion, notice should be given of them either by posting them up in a conspicuous place in the Registration Office, by advertising them in the London Gazette, or by some other efficient means, which would not only benefit professionals, but would also draw public attention to them.—Yours truly,

J. B. & Co.

"TOUTING."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I wish, through the columns of THE ACCOUNTANT, to draw the attention of the profession to the very objectionable system of canvassing for proofs and proxies, which is I am afraid, being extensively adopted in matters of liquidation and bankruptcy, to secure the appointments of receiver and trustee. This system must, I am sure, be repugnant to the feelings of self-respect of all right-minded and respectable men, and cannot, I feel convinced, be countenanced by the better portion of the profession. To bankers, merchants, and the trading community generally, the being continually pestered by these solicitations must be a complete nuisance. Surely men of this class are competent to judge and decide for themselves who are suitable and likely persons to be entrusted with the protection of their interests, without unscrupulous parties endeavouring to forestall them in their choice. In a great measure the putting down of this touting rests with the legal profession. If, when consulted by a client as to his affairs, they were to confer with one or more of the principal creditors as to the appointment of a receiver, satisfaction would be given to the general body that a fit person had been selected, and the feeling often entertained that the receiver is merely the nominee of the debtor, and seeking only his interest, would be done away with, and confidence established that the interest of the creditors would be safe. This mode of nomination would, I believe, be generally acceptable to all respectable professional trustees, and be upheld by them. As matters now stand, it appears to be a race with some parties as to who can get first information of either a bankruptcy petition or a petition for liquidation; to get a nomination for the receivership from some creditor for an insignificant amount; then to run round and endeavour to secure the proxies of other small creditors, and afterwards rely upon the feeling of others who, to some extent, think it invidious (however dissatisfied they may be with the selection) to supersede a person who has already pushed himself into the business—and the general chapter of accidents, to secure the trusteeship.

"UNFORTUNATE CREDITORS" UPON "TOUTING."

The following appeared in the columns of the Times of the 20th of November:—

"The evil set forth in the following letter is a real one, but it is difficult to see any remedy for it so long as the parties interested are allowed such freedom from legal supervision. The facilities afforded by the Act of 1869 for "liquidation by arrangement" have not done the good intended, but they decidedly have often left both debtor and creditor helpless in the hands of third parties, whose interest it is to make the most out of both. Accountants ought to be tied down to fixed charges, and should never be allowed to act as irresponsible trustees."

"London, Nov. 17.

"SIR,—The time that has intervened since the coming into operation of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 has witnessed the gradual development of what may now be considered to have climaxed in a system of touting by accountants, or persons styling themselves as such.

"As the evil is one which admits of easy remedy, we venture to ask your powerful aid in the matter, being ourselves, at present, creditors on five estates.

"The course to be complained of is as follows:—No sooner does a debtor suspend payment than an active canvass of the creditors is commenced, each being asked to concur with others whom the accountant alleges he represents, in some course of action he indicates, invariably having for its ultimate object his own appointment as trustee. To attain this, all manner of expedients are resorted to; charges of misconduct are made against the debtor, in many cases without the shadow of foundation, and the claims of other bona fide creditors, who it is supposed will act upon their own judgment, disputed, no expedient being omitted to obtain a proxy.

"The support of some few unsuspecting or inexperienced creditors having thus been secured, the accountant attends the statutory meeting, armed with his proofs and proxies. Anything more deplorable than the mode in which the proceedings are conducted at some of these meetings it is impossible to conceive. Proofs are challenged and objected to, the debtor is sometimes again and again examined, and every reasonable suggestion, as to the mode in which the estate shall be realised in the interest of all concerned, thwarted. Eventually the creditors, utterly weary of useless discussion, arrive at some hasty decision, the opposition being frequently bought off.

"It is surprising that this state of affairs, the preying upon the carcass of a bankrupt, has not earlier received consideration, together with certain other points in our Bankruptcy Laws that are generally admitted to need amendment.

"The remedy, as has been stated, is simple: in a great measure it is in the hands of the creditors themselves, if they will only withhold their support from stray accountants, and attend these meetings personally. Undoubtedly many are unable to do so, and, unwilling to devote time to the recovery of something out of a loss already incurred, are glad to be relieved of trouble without additional expense.

"Moreover, the mode in which they are first approached throws creditors very frequently off their guard when representations such as the following are made:—'I represent Messrs. A and B, or the ——— Bank, and other principal creditors of Messrs. C and D, and am instructed to look into their affairs, and in this my friends desire you to co-operate,' &c. Such is the formula sometimes adopted, in some cases with, and in others without the authority of those professed to be represented.

"It should be distinctly understood that these observations in no way refer to the many eminent firms of accountants who are known to discountenance the practice complained of, if possible even to a greater extent than the many who, with us, must subscribe themselves

"UNFORTUNATE CREDITORS."

THE BRITISH IMPERIAL ASSURANCE CORPORATION AND THE CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT BANK.

In our November number we drew attention to the scheme of financial association, advertised in our columns under the title of the Co-operative Credit Bank, the pith of which is individual management, under the inspection of a board of accountants, in contradistinction to the multitudinous control of a board of directors. There can be no doubt that if the public could be satisfied with such a scheme of management as is advocated by Mr. Oakley, the principle would be extended to a great variety of businesses. It is in the experience of every accountant to have clients who are perfect masters of their respective businesses, but who are obliged to allow opportunities to slip through their hands for want of sufficient capital, and who would be only too glad to share their profits with one or more capitalists under the inspection of a respectable firm of accountants. This question of public confidence is answered by an announcement, made in another portion of our present issue, to the effect that the British Imperial Assurance Corporation, Limited, one of the most flourishing life offices in the kingdom, has intrusted the agency for issuing 90,000 shares of unallotted capital to the Co-operative Credit Bank. It is only necessary to glance down the list of names of those connected with the British Imperial to appreciate the importance of the operation with which Mr. Oakley has inaugurated the public career of his remarkable enterprise.

DECISIONS IN BANKRUPTCY.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE.—A bank carrying on business in Bombay sold to a Bombay firm acceptances of the bank for £25,000, payable three and four months after sight, in consideration of £5,000 cash and bills for £20,000 drawn by the Bombay firm on a London firm, and payable six months after sight. All the bills were accepted. The Bombay firm indorsed the acceptances for £25,000 to the London firm. The bank being unable to pay the three months' bills when they became due, gave the London firm security for £10,000, the amount thereof. Soon afterwards the bank was ordered to be wound up, and the Bombay and London firms both became bankrupt. The trustees of the London firm sent in a claim in the winding-up of the bank for £5,000, treating the acceptances of the London firm as capable of being set off against those of the bank, and they subsequently realised their security. They now sought to amend their claim (having ascertained that the bank had discounted all the acceptances of the London firm, and was not entitled to a set-off in respect of them) and to prove in the winding up of the bank for £19,000, the amount of the bank's acceptances, which were in the hands of the London firm at the date of the winding-up order. It was held (affirming the decision of Vice-Chancellor Hall), that as the London firm were indorsees for value, they were entitled to prove for the £19,000; that this proof must not be treated as a new proof, but as an amendment of the claim for £5,000, and that therefore the amount realised upon their security should not be deducted from the £19,000.

JURISDICTION OF THE COURT.—Where creditors have by the requisite statutory majority resolved, under the 110th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, to suspend proceedings in bankruptcy, and to have the estate wound up by trustees, the Court of Bankruptcy has still power, under the 136th section of the Act, to determine any questions that may arise in the winding up of the estate by the trustees, and will therefore restrain a Chancery suit for the administration of the estate.

SERVICE OF SUMMONS UNDER BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869.

Before the CHIEF JUDGE IN BANKRUPTCY.
November 9th.

EXPARTE BOLLAND, RE HOLDEN.—This was an appeal from the Liverpool County Court, and the case was brought to the Court of Appeal, avowedly at the expense of the solicitor, in order to decide the question whether the privilege of serving summonses under section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, belonged exclusively to the high bailiff to the court, or whether they might be served by the solicitor to the trustee. In this case service by the solicitor had been refused by the registrar; and on the matter being brought before the judge at the County Court, he had held that he had no option to allow service to be effected by anyone except the high bailiff. From this decision the solicitor to the trustee appealed. Mr. Channel (Mr. Herschell with him), for the appellant, contended that, in accordance with rule 58, service might be effected otherwise than by the high bailiff, when "directed or permitted by these rules;" and that it was so directed or permitted, was evident from rule 167, under which subpœna, might be served by the person at whose instance they were issued, or by his attorney; it being clear that subpœnas and summonses were practically the same, by their being sometimes used indifferently, as in form 75. He also urged, that, as a matter of convenience, it was much better they should be served by the solicitors. Mr. De Gex and Mr. Beaumont, for the respondents were not called upon. The Chief Judge held that it was a matter in the discretion of the County Court judge as to which course was most for the benefit of the public. The County Court judge had, by refusing to allow service to anyone but the high bailiff, practically exercised his discretion, and he could find no fault with the decision arrived at. The appeal was therefore dismissed.

IMPORTANT BANKRUPTCY CASE.

Before the CHIEF JUDGE.—Monday, 9th November.

EXPARTE GARDENER AND ANOTHER—IN RE JOHN CLARK.—This was an appeal from the Bath County Court against an order made by the Judge, on the 6th August last, directing the receiver, John Coombes, of Devizes, auctioneer, and the debtor, John Clark, and all other persons acting under either of them, and any trustee who might be appointed, to withdraw from, and they were each of them thereby restrained from interfering with the possession of the effects in and about the Black Swan Inn, Devizes, &c. Against this order the trustees, George Frederick Gardener and William Day, appealed, and they were represented by Mr. Cookson and Messrs. Ruddle and Thomas Skeate Ruddle; the respondents were represented by Mr. De Gex, Q.C. The learned counsel for the appellants stated that the contest was between Messrs. Gardener and Day, who were appointed trustees, under the liquidation of John Clark, at a meeting of creditors held at Bath on the 8th day of August last, and the mortgagees, under the bill of sale, who had, pursuant to the order of the Bath County Court, realised and sold the whole of the debtor's effects, and claimed a right to retain the proceeds as against the trustees. The allegation was that, pursuant to a secret arrangement, whereby the debtor agreed with Mr. Hooper, the agent of the bill of sale creditors, that in the event of the debtor getting into difficulties, and a seizure of his effects being made under an anticipated execution, at the suit of some Bristol wine merchants, he should communicate with Hooper, who would then take possession; and accordingly a request was made by the debtor to Hooper, by means of a telegram, to put the bill of sale into effect, and in consequence of such telegram, Hooper did, on the 4th day of July, place a man in possession under the bill of sale, but Clark was allowed to continue in apparent possession of the effects and to carry on the business without any interference, and so continued until he filed his petition on the 11th day of July, and under which John Coombes was appointed receiver. On the 6th August the order appealed from was made on the application of the bill of sale creditors. Subsequently the proceedings were, by resolution of creditors, removed to Bristol. In support of his contention that the goods were in the order and disposition of the debtor, within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, at the time of the committal of an act of bankruptcy by him, the learned counsel quoted, exparte Jay re Blenkhorn, a case recently decided by the Lords Justices, and upon the authority of that case, and looking at the suspicious circumstances connected with the case and disclosed by the affidavits filed by the respondents in the matter, he applied to have the order of the 6th August discharged.

Mr. De Gex having been heard.

His lordship said he was clearly of opinion that the goods were in the possession of the debtor at the time of the liquidation, and therefore passed to the trustees on their appointment. The order made in favour of the mortgagees would be discharged. No order would be made as to costs, but the deposit made by the appellants would be returned.

SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.—The monthly meeting of the council of this society was held on Wednesday last, at the offices, Cowper's-court, Cornhill, Mr. John Bath, vice-president, in the chair. The following gentlemen were admitted as associates of the society: Elias Needham, 121, Norfolk-street, Sheffield; William Augustus Quant, 16, Acresfield, Bolton; Harry P. Gould, Guildhall-chambers, Norwich, and Robert A. Pratt, Spalding: three other applications for admission were also considered. The secretary (Mr. Alfred C. Harper), was instructed to procure information as to the charges made by accountants, with the view to drawing up a definite scale of accountant's charges.

Among contemporary class publications we notice with pleasure THE ACCOUNTANT, described as "a medium of communication between accountants in all parts of the United Kingdom." At present the term "accountant" is used as vaguely as "agent;" and we may meet at every street corner men who describe themselves as accountants, for the negative reason that they are nothing else. The gulf is wide indeed between these nondescripts who haunt the precincts of county courts, and turn up at small debt-collecting offices, and the educated, carefully-trained gentlemen who are really professional accountants, to whose ability and honour confidential transactions are confided. The publication under notice will help to mark the distinction, and its well-written articles may be consulted with advantage by every man of business.—Warehousemen and Drapers' Trade Journal.

Mr. Edward T. Barrett, accountant and auditor, of 8, Finsbury Circus, London, E.C., has taken into partnership Mr. Henry H. Patey, a gentleman well known in City legal circles.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

November 3rd.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE SIDNEY AND WIGGINS.—In this matter it appeared that the debtors filed a petition for liquidation in 1873, and under that the creditors agreed to accept a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, to be secured by certain promissory notes. This arrangement they failed to carry out completely, having paid some creditors 1s. 6d., and others nothing. A year passed, and the debtors incurred fresh losses and liabilities, and were unable to pay the composition, and being pressed by creditors they filed a second petition, under which a statutory majority of the creditors agreed to accept 6d. in the pound. The resolution came before Mr. Registrar Roche, who adjourned the case for a fortnight to enable the debtors to consider their position. It now came on before Mr. Registrar Keene. The objections were stated in the notice of motion to be that the filing of the second petition was irregular and contrary to law, and not authorised or warranted by the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the previous petition and the resolution for a composition being still in force, and the creditors thereunder being still entitled to receive the amount of the composition; and further, that previously to the filing of the second petition application was made to the debtor's agent, and to the debtors themselves, for payment of the dividends under the first resolution, and payment had been refused; and that it would be inequitable to register the said resolution, on the ground that all those creditors who had already received a dividend of 1s. 6d. in the pound would, if such resolution were registered, receive 2s. in the pound on their respective debts, whilst those creditors who had not been paid the dividend of 1s. 6d. would, if such resolution were passed, receive 6d. in the pound only. Mr. F. O. Crump having been heard for the debtors, the registrar, without calling upon the representatives of the opposing creditors, said that his opinion was that the resolution was inequitable, and that the second petition was illegal. In the first place, it was inequitable because all the creditors were entitled to come in and get what they could under the first composition; secondly, the proceeding was illegal: there cannot be a second petition including debts which have been the subject of a first petition. The creditors had a right to say they would not take the 6d., and that they preferred that the debtors should go into bankruptcy. The creditors had a perfect right to object, and he refused to register.

November 6th.

IN RE FRUHLING AND CONRATH.—In this case a second petition for liquidation had been filed in consequence of difficulties having arisen in carrying out the terms of certain composition resolutions, which had been passed under a previous petition. The debtors were commission merchants of Brabant-court, Philpot-lane. Their liabilities were estimated at £60,000, but it was believed that certain bills would run off, and the amount be ultimately considerably reduced. The assets comprised furniture, and book debts to a large amount, and as remittances were daily coming to hand, it was asked that a receiver should be appointed. The application was supported by creditors for £3,500. His Honour, however, thought that in a case where the liabilities were so heavy, the concurrence of a larger body of creditors should be obtained, and the application stood over with that object.

November 13th.

IN RE ALEXANDER M'EWEN.—HEAVY FAILURE IN THE CITY.—Mr. Munns applied to the court for the appointment of a receiver, and an interim injunction, staying proceedings by creditors in the case of Alexander M'Ewen, of George-yard, Lombard-street, financial agent, who has filed a petition for the liquidation of his affairs by arrangement of composition. The liabilities were about £400,000, security being held to the extent of £300,000; and the assets comprised book debts to the amount of £40,000, which were continually coming in. The appointment of Mr. S. L. Price, public accountant, was proposed. His Honour appointed Mr. Price receiver, and granted an interim injunction.

November 17.

IN RE J. G. TAYLOR.—The debtor, who was a stockbroker carrying on business in the City, recently failed for a considerable amount, and Mr. H. Harcourt (Harcourt and M'Arthur) now applied for registration of certain resolutions passed at a meeting of creditors in favour of liquidation by arrangement. Registration was opposed by certain creditors, who objected to the proof of the official liquidator of the Silver Star Mining Company for a sum of £10,000, partly for calls already made and partly in respect of liabilities for future calls. Mr. Harcourt called attention to the 75th section of the Companies' Act of 1872, by which liabilities for future calls constituted a specialty debt which might be estimated. The calls already made amounted to £5,000, and the calls to be made were esti mated at the same amount. His Honour refused to allow the proof for more than the amount of the calls actually made, and this being insufficient to carry the resolutions the same were not registered.

November 19.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, as Chief Judge.)

IN RE OPPENHEIM AND SCHRŒDER.—The debtors, who were merchants trading in Mark-lane, failed in June, and it was resolved that their estate should be liquidated by arrangement, not in bankruptcy. The liabilities were returned at £140,971, and assets £37,615. In the course of the proceedings certain proofs tendered against the estate have been rejected by the trustee, and the case now came before the court on the hearing of appeals from such rejection. The proof appointed for consideration was presented by the Credit Lyonnais, Lombard-street, for £1,938, which had been rejected on the ground that due notice of the dishonour of the bill of exchange for the amount drawn by the debtors had not been given by the Credit Lyonnais. It appeared that the bill had been drawn in England and made payable in France, and the question mainly for consideration was whether notice of the dishonour should have been given according to the English or the French law. The authorities on the question were in conflict, but his Honour thought, having regard to the case of "Hirschfeld v. Smith," that the question respecting the sufficiency of the notice must be construed in reference to the circumstances of the particular case. In the present case the notice had been given according to the French law, and although the question was a doubtful one, the court would hold, under all the circumstances, that the notice was reasonable. The proof would, therefore, be admitted, and the creditors might take their costs out of the estate. Mr. Lord was counsel for the Credit Lyonnais; Mr. Lanyon, as in the previous claim, for the trustee.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—November 14th.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

EXPARTE SIR W. FOSTER, IN RE POOLEY.—This was an appeal by Sir William Foster against an order made on the 24th July last, by Mr. Reginald Pepys, acting as chief judge in bankruptcy, whereby he annulled an adjudication of bankruptcy made against Mr. Alexander Gopsell Pooley, on the 14th March last, on the petition of Sir W. Foster. His petition was filed on the 14th January. On the 27th February Pooley filed a liquidation petition. On the 14th March the adjudication was made, and all proceedings under it were, with the consent of Sir W. Foster, ordered to be stayed till after the 16th March, on which day the first meeting of the creditors under the liquidation petition was to be held. At that meeting the creditors resolved to accept a composition of 19s. 11d. in the pound, payable in three instalments of 10s., 5s., 4s. 11d., at twelve, eight, and twenty-four months. This resolution was confirmed at the second meeting, and was registered on the 8th May. The proceedings under the adjudication had meanwhile been on several occasions stayed again, and on the 20th May a final order to stay them was made. On the 24th July the registrar made the order annulling the adjudication. Sir W. Foster appealed. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., the Hon. A. Thesiger, Q.C., and Mr. Bagley were for the appellant; Mr. Roxburgh,

Digitized by Google

Q.C., and Mr. Finlay Knight were for Mr. Pooley. Their lordships were of opinion that the order under appeal was justified under sec. 80 (sub-sec. 10) of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and the 266th of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870, and they affirmed the decision of the registrar, dismissing the appeal with costs.

In re John W. Fox, 62, Seymour-street, Euston-road, Tobacconist.—A meeting of creditors in this case was held at the offices of Messrs. Willoughby & Cox (solicitors to the proceedings), 13, Clifford's-inn, on Thursday, the 19th November. The statement of affairs showed liabilities £575 14s. 7d., assets £299 7s. 6d. No offer being made by the debtor, the creditors resolved to liquidate, and Mr. W. L. C. Browne, public accountant (C. Browne, Stanley, & Co.), 25, Old Jewry, E.C., was appointed trustee, with Mr. Coultman (Tyler & Coultman), 2 and 3, West Smithfield, and Mr. Richard Lloyd (Richard Lloyd & Sons), Holborn-bars, as a committee of inspection.

BRIGHTON COUNTY COURT.—Monday, November 9th.
Before Mr. W. Furner, Judge.

In re Bostel.—A motion was made by Mr. William Botting, builder, Ship-street, Brighton, and a creditor of Daniel Thomas Bostel, sanitary engineer, Duke-street, Brighton, who had filed proceedings under sections 125 and 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, by his solicitor, Mr. Lamb, for the court to determine whether Mr. Frederick George Clark, being appointed a trustee for receipt and distribution only of the composition in the proceedings referred to, under rule 279 of the Bankruptcy Rules, 1870, had any power to decide for what amount Mr. Botting could claim for the purpose of participating in the composition resolved by the creditors to be accepted in discharge of their several claims; and if Mr. Clark had any power to reject the proof tendered by Mr. Botting in support of his claim. Mr. Warner Sleigh, instructed by Mr. A. F. Gell, of the firm of Messrs. Black, Freeman, & Gell, appeared for the trustee. Briefly, the question raised was whether, under the rule mentioned, the trustee was empowered to reject any debt. Mr. Sleigh pointed out that from rules 252 to 315 was a set of rules for certain purposes, and all the purposes analogous. The heading of the 252nd was, "Proceedings for liquidation by arrangement or composition with creditors;" that was, that the modus operandi of liquidation or composition was the same in either case, whichever was taken, so far as these rules went. The concluding clause of rule 279 was, "and they may name some person as trustee for receipt and distribution of the composition"—not as agent, not as bankrupt, not simply as receiver, but as trustee. And a trustee had responsibilities to bear, and duties to perform, not merely as trustee for property, not merely as a receiver, but as a trustee to see that the property was properly managed. The rule 313 stated the mode of proceedings under liquidation or composition; wherever the trustee rejected the claim or proof of any creditor, he should give notice to the creditor. Mr. Lamb asserted that notice was not given until a month after the proceedings were closed, and contended that it ought to have been given before they were properly filed. Mr. Sleigh remarked that at the meeting itself notice was given that a majority was against Mr. Botting, and that the claim would not be allowed; and maintained that the delay was not fatal, and that the question to be decided was, had the trustee the same duties to perform under composition as under liquidation? Mr. Lamb replied in the negative, holding that, as far as composition was concerned, the trustee was merely a recipient of a certain sum of money for distribution only. Whether the debt was £1,000 or £500 was to him a matter of no consequence; but where a man was trustee under liquidation—where there was a general distribution of property among the creditors—then the trustee had a perfect right to come forward and say that he objected to a claim. His Honour held that it was incumbent upon the creditor to come before the court and establish his claim, and decided that the trustee had the same power to reject a claim under composition as under liquidation. Costs were allowed to the trustee.

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT.—November 17th.
(Before Serjeant Tindal Atkinson).

Important Application in Bankruptcy, re Whitworth.—In this matter the application was dated the 8th of August, this year, and was made by Mr. George Mumford, solicitor, Bradford, on behalf of Messrs. Gibbes & Co., of Charlestown, America, and in connection with the liquidation of the affairs of Messrs. R. Whitworth & Co., Lee Bridge, Halifax, and Boy Mill, Luddenden Foot. The application was to his Honour to order and determine the ownership of seventy-eight bales of cotton, which at the time of the application were in the possession of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, having been received by them from the "Republic" and "Celtic," at Liverpool, conveyed by them to their station at Luddenden Foot. It was further stated in the application that the cotton was sent from Messrs. Gibbes and Co. to Messrs. Whitworth on their order; but before it was delivered to that firm the petition for liquidation was filed. Mr. Geo. Jordan, barrister, of Manchester, appeared for the trustee in the liquidation, instructed by Messrs. Rawson, George, & Wade, of Bradford, and Mr. Shaw, barrister, of Leeds, was instructed by Mr. Mumford, on behalf of Messrs. Gibbes & Co. Numerous affidavits were filed in the matter, from which it appeared that Messrs. Whitworth had been in the habit of buying large quantities of cotton for the purposes of trade from Messrs. Gibbes & Co., and a short time before the institution of proceedings for liquidation by Messrs. Whitworth, Messrs. Gibbes shipped seventy-eight bales of cotton from New York to Messrs. Whitworth, Luddenden Foot. The bill of lading consigned the goods to Liverpool, where they were received by Mr. Windle, manager of the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Company, who paid the shipping freights, &c., on behalf of Messrs. Whitworth, whose order he awaited for the cotton to be forwarded to their works at Luddenden Foot. Upon their order he sent the goods to Luddenden Foot, where they remained on the Whitworth siding—a siding made not at the expense of Messrs. Whitworth, but for the mutual convenience of both that firm and the railway company. Whilst the goods were upon this siding, the petition in liquidation was filed, and the cotton claimed by the trustees as a part of the estate, and Messrs. Gibbes inserted in the list of creditors as creditors for the amount which the cotton in question was worth. The point at issue seemed to be as to whether the cotton had been taken into possession by Messrs. Whitworth before their proceedings in liquidation were taken, or whether it was still in transit (under which circumstances its delivery to an insolvent firm could be arrested), whilst remaining on the siding at Luddenden Foot. His Honour reserved his decision until the next court.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.—November 14th.
(Before Mr. Collier, Judge.)

An Unclosed Bankruptcy.—In re Cohen v. Holden.—This was a case of considerable importance, and, somewhat singularly, is the first which has raised the question of the status of a bankrupt whose bankruptcy is unclosed, and his right to property which he may acquire during the continuance of the bankruptcy. Under former bankruptcy statutes it was considered that all property acquired by a discharged bankrupt he was entitled to retain, but it appears such is not the case now, and that, although he may be discharged, his property is liable to be seized by his trustee until the close of the bankruptcy. The present bankrupt was Mr. John Peakman, of Liverpool, metal merchant. His bankruptcy took place two or three years ago, and although there are no assets, the trustee, Mr. Bolland, had not closed the bankruptcy. The question was raised by an interpleader issue, and came before the court on the 4th November. His Honour now said: This was an interpleader issue to determine the right to certain furniture taken in execution for a debt. Holden, the execution creditor, levied an execution on the household goods of the execution debtor, at his house at Blundellsands. The execution debtor was a bankrupt. The furniture in question had been purchased by him, according to his evidence, during the continuance of his bankruptcy, with money acquired in trade. Before he removed to the residence at which the execution was levied, he had given a bill of sale of it to Cohen, the claimant. The validity of this bill of sale was not disputed. According to the form in which interpleader issues are tried in the County Court, the claimant is the plaintiff, and the execution creditor the defendant. The claimant has, therefore, to establish his title, and this I think the defendant can defeat by showing that the title is in some one else; for this the cases of Green v. Rogers (2 Car. and K. 148) and Gadsden v. Barrow (23 L. J. 134, Ex.) are sufficient authorities. The title defendant set up was that of the trustee under the bankruptcy of the execution debtor, and it remains to consider whether his title was a good one. By sect. 15, sub-sect. 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, the property of the bankrupt divisible among his creditors (in the Act referred to as "the property of the bankrupt") comprises all such property as may belong to or be vested in the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or may be acquired by or devolve on him during its continuance. By sect. 17, when a trustee has been appointed, the property of the bankrupt forthwith passes to and vests in the trustee. By sect. 19, if the bankrupt shall fail to deliver up possession to the trustee of any part of his property which is divisible among his creditors, and which may for the time being be in his possession or under his control, he is guilty of contempt of court. A bankrupt may be allowed to carry on business, and no doubt in many cases it is for the interest of the creditors that he should do so. If he may carry on business, he may contract and buy and sell and possess goods; but I think the policy and intention of the present bankrupt law is that until the close of the bankruptcy all his dealings should be carried on for the benefit of his creditors. It appears to me that any property he acquires forthwith passes under the Act to the trustee, and that the bankrupt can only deal with it on the sufferance of his creditors. It can hardly be said that a bankrupt's purchase of furniture for his own use is for the benefit of his creditors; and in this case, as the trustee had no notice of his possession, it cannot be inferred that he possessed it by the sufferance of the trustee or the creditors. In my opinion the furniture passed, as soon as purchased, to the trustee, and the bankrupt had no permission, expressed or implied, to part with it. There was no laches by the trustee in asserting his right, for he had no notice of the purchase, and therefore the bankrupt had no power to transfer it, and the claim of Cohen must fail. My judgment will therefore be for the execution creditor, with costs.

BANKRUPTS CHARGED WITH FALSIFYING BOOKS.—At Wolverhampton, on Friday, the 30th November, James, Thomas, and Edwin Smith, ironmasters, Bilston, were charged with that they, being persons whose affairs were under liquidation, had falsified their books with intent to conceal the state of their affairs and defeat the law. There was a considerable number of charges against the defendants, the theory for the prosecution being that in order to account for the large deficiencies they had made false entries in their books. Defendants had failed for over £15,000, with £2,000 assets, calculated at £80 per week during the whole time they had been in business. The case was adjourned, and was concluded on Saturday, when the defendants, who reserved their defence, were committed for trial, bail being allowed in two £200 sureties each.

At a meeting of the Finance Committee of the Urban Sanitary Authority, held at the Town-hall, Preston, on Thursday, the 19th November, Mr. Joseph Smirk, borough accountant, tendered his resignation of the office, which was accepted.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, BRISTOL.

(Before Mr. R. A. FISHER, Judge.)

IN RE COATES, SHARP, AND GRANGER, LATE OF BRISTOL, DRAPERS.—Mr. Swann, of the firm of Fussell, Prichard, and Swann, said he appeared in this matter on behalf of the trustees, who were resident in Manchester, and who had taken a position in opposition to the registrar of that court. The debtors had carried on business in Bristol, and the estate was of considerable magnitude, and in consequence of several Manchester houses being the principal creditors, they had appointed trustees in that city, but allowed the proceedings to remain in the Bristol Court, instead of removing them to Manchester. At a meeting of creditors, duly convened, amongst others a resolution was passed that the trustees' accounts should be audited by two of the largest creditors nominated by the meeting. The resolutions were presented to the registrar of that court for registration, but he declined to do so, on the ground that the trustees' accounts had not been filed. Mr. Swann contended that as all the requirements of the Act had been complied with, the registering of the resolutions was purely ministerial, and further, that as the accounts had not been submitted to the meeting at which the resolutions had been passed, the registrar had no right to require that they should be filed. The registrar (Mr. Harley) said that the resolutions were incomplete without the accounts, and that the resolutions sought to be registered released the trustee. The judge remarked that the accounts were part and parcel of the resolutions, and the latter were not in their absence complete, and, in his opinion, they ought to be filed. If that was not done, and the file of proceedings should some years afterwards be overhauled, the absence therefrom of the accounts might create considerable difficulty. His Honour upheld the opinion of the registrar, and ordered that the trustees' accounts, showing special payments and disbursements, be filed within fourteen days, and upon that being done the resolutions would be registered. Mr. Swann intimated that he should appeal to the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.

CURIOUS POINT.—IN RE PATTERSON, RICE, & Co., CONFECTIONERS.—Mr. Beckingham appeared in this case on behalf of the trustee of the separate estate of Thomas Clark Rice, who carried on business in conjunction with Mr. Patterson, his partner, as confectioners near Bristol. Mr. John Parsons, of Bristol, accountant, was the trustee of the joint estate, and was then present. The separate estate of Mr. Rice had been closed by the creditors, and the trustee discharged, under the impression that there were no assets beyond £15 or £20 disclosed by the debtor in his statement. Some months afterwards it was discovered that there was a valuable equity of redemption in a house which the debtor had mortgaged, and the debtor's explanation why this was omitted from his statement convinced him that the debtor had acted bona fide, and that the omission was not fraudulent, but that he really believed that the house was not worth more than the amount advanced on mortgage, and that he did not think it worth while to include it in his statement. The trustee had, however, sold the house, and after paying the mortgage and the expense of realisation, there was a surplus of £136 in hand. Mr. Beckingham submitted that notwithstanding that the liquidation had been closed, and the trustee released, the money should still be divided amongst them, as being an asset of the separate estate, and not an asset of the joint estate. His Honour took time to consider his judgment until the 3rd December next.

FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.—At the Bristol Quarter Sessions, Joseph Bumford, on bail, 39, licensed victualler, tiler, and plasterer, was indicted for that he "being a person whose affairs were in liquidation by arrangement, in pursuance of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, did not fully and truly discover to the trustee administering for the benefit of his creditors all his real and personal estate, with intent to defraud." This is the case in which an application by way of motion was made to the judge of the Bristol County Court, on the 10th ult., for an order for the committal of the debtor to gaol for contempt of court, and was fully reported in our last issue. Evidence having been given as to the charge, the Recorder summed up, and the jury, after some deliberation, through their foreman announced that they could not agree—that ten of them were satisfied that the prisoner was guilty. The Recorder directed them to retire and further consider their verdict, and they ultimately found a verdict of guilty. The Recorder sentenced the prisoner to twelve months' imprison-ment with hard labour, and refused to pass a lenient sentence, although the prosecution recommended him to mercy.

THE PROVINCES.

SHEFFIELD.

On October 28th a petition was filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court in the estate of Mary Hirst, widow, Alma-road, Rotherham. At the meeting of creditors held Nov. 17th at the offices of Mr. Hoyle, solicitor, Rotherham, the statement of accounts presented showed the liabilities to be £1,106 9s., and the assets £306 17s. 10d. Mr. Bellamy, accountant, Rotherham, was appointed trustee, with a committee.—Same date an application was made for the adjudication of Messrs. J. & M. Woollen, bone and scale cutters, Daisy-walk. Mr. Brailsford, solicitor, who appeared for the petitioning creditor, said notice had not been given of any intention to dispute the adjudication, and it being shown that the act of bankruptcy was fortified by affidavit, his Honour granted the application. The liabilities in this case are about £1,200.—On October 30th a meeting of the creditors of Henry Warrington, butchers' steel maker, was held; the liabilities £800, assets £276 18s. Liquidation was adopted, with Mr. James Andrews, jun., as trustee.—On November 2nd a petition was filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court, in the affairs of Mr. John Walker, draper, Castle-street, Sheffield. Liabilities stated at over £4,000.—A day or two afterwards a petition was filed in the same court in the affairs of Mr. John James Bagshawe, trading as J. J. Bagshawe & Co., Thames Steel Works, Arundel-street, Sheffield, with liabilities estimated at over £8,000.—On November 5th a meeting of the creditors of James Downey, Sen., tailor and draper, of Chesterfield, was held at Sheffield, the liabilities £948 11s. 10d., and assets £522 2s. 9d. Liquidation was adopted, with Mr. Blackburn, of Leeds, as trustee.—Same day a meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Gow, draper, &c., Sheffield, was held, and Mr. P. K. Chesney, Bradford, was appointed trustee.—A meeting was held, also on November 5th, at the Sheffield County Court, of the creditors in the separate estate of Mr. Arthur John Fretwell, one of the partners in the Whittington Brick Manufacturing and Colliery Company. The statement of accounts presented by Mr. Cooper Corbidge, jun., for the receiver, showed the liabilities to be £1,794 3s. 11d., with assets estimated at £900. Mr. Corbidge was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.—Same date a meeting of the creditors of Robert Coates, innkeeper, Doncaster, was held in that town, and Mr. Bennett, Sheffield, was chosen as trustee in liquidation.—On November 5th an application was made to Mr. Ellison, Judge of the Sheffield Court, for an adjournment sine die to be made in the examination of Edward Gamble, steel and file manufacturer, Sheffield. The application involved points of importance. Mr. Clegg (for Mr. Pearson, the trustee) applied that the passing of the bankrupt's last examination be postponed sine die. The ground for this was, that the day before the adjudication was made the bankrupt said he had in hand £84 17s. 5d., but he had never handed that sum over to the trustee. They might, as his Honour said, prosecute him. Again, in his examination before the Registrar, he had said he had a phæton, and without knowing whether it was "in his order and disposition," he had sold it, after the adjudication, for £23. That sum, also, he had never handed to the trustee. A diamond ring, and other property, also some gold studs, had been sold, but not accounted for. He had put down £30 a month for travelling expenses, but could not say how he arrived at that sum, further than that he fixed it at that amount in order to make his accounts balance! Notwithstanding this he had never obtained a single order after April 7th. Taking all these circumstances into consideration, he submitted that the bankrupt had not made a full disclosure of his estate, and that the law had not, therefore, been properly carried out. His Honour said that he quite agreed with them so far, but he did not see the use of adjourning sine die. The bankrupt could not obtain his discharge unless he obtained 10s. in the £; there was no probability shown that he was able to do this, and, therefore, he was practically in their hands. Mr. Clegg rejoined that if a man could manage to pass his examination, he could always go into business again in somebody else's name. The trustee and committee thought that this bankrupt ought not to get off so easily, having acted as he had done. Judging from his own balance-sheet, he commenced business with a deficiency of £200, and although only in business thirteen months, had ended with a deficiency of £1,100. His Honour remarked that he didn't do so very badly. Many people had done much worse than that. Mr. Clegg answered that the bankrupt had spent £900 of the creditor's money within twelve months, and he therefore contended he ought not to be allowed to pass his examination. Mr. Binney (for the bankrupt) admitted that his conduct could not be altogether defended. He had been exceedingly injudicious. The deficiency at the outset was really cash advanced by his brother long before the business was commenced. The man had been unsuccessful, but there had been no fraudulent intention, consequently he held that he ought to pass his last examination. As to the sale of the phaeton he (Mr. Binney) was prepared to hand over the amount for which it had been sold. The adjournment of the examination sine die would do no good. His Honour was of opinion that if the trustee pressed for the order he should be bound to make it. Mr. Clegg intimated that he must adhere to his application, whereupon his Honour remarked that although the bankrupt had gone through the form of giving a deficiency account, and had answered the questions put to him, the court could not deem his answers satisfactory. Upon that point the court was bound to consider the view taken of the matter by the trustee, because he (the trustee) was appointed by the creditors to investigate the bankrupt's accounts. When the trustee came before the court and said that the bankrupt's answers were not satisfactory, that he had money at the time of the bankruptcy which was not accounted for then, although the judge's view might be that to adjourn the examination was utterly useless to the creditors, and would inflict no injury whatever on the bankrupt himself, still he was bound to make an order that the examination be adjourned sine die. This decision is of considerable value to trustees generally.—On November 9th a meeting of the creditors of John Joseph Mason, hotel keeper and music hall proprietor, was held at Chesterfield, the liabilities £820, and assets £144. Liquidation being resolved upon, Mr. Jephson, Chesterfield, was appointed trustee without a committee.—On November 12th, at the Sheffield Court, an unusual application was made for the ousting of a receiver who had been appointed by the court at a previous sitting. The facts were, that a petition having been filed by S. G. Holland, builder and contractor, Mr. Appleby, accountant, was appointed receiver by the court. A meeting of the creditors was afterwards held, and a majority of them decided to appoint Mr. Andrews as receiver. It was therefore asked that Mr. Andrews might be substituted for Mr. Appleby. Mr. Barker, barrister, on behalf of Mr. Appleby, opposed the application on two distinct grounds. First, that the creditors could only appoint a receiver where no one had been appointed by the court, that being the language of the first part of rule No. 262. He further held that the nomination paper was not duly signed by the majority of the creditors, inasmuch as one signature was by a director on behalf of a limited liability company, and another was signed per procuration of a third party. He was informed that the practice of the court was only to appoint the nominee of the creditors in cases where the receiver appointed by the court was proven to be incompetent or guilty of misconduct. There was no such imputation in this case. His Honour said there was certainly some difficulty in construing rule 262, but in construing it they must bear in mind that the ruling principle in liquidation was to leave everything to the creditors. [He consequently held, according to the practice of the court, that if the creditors appointed a receiver where one had been previously appointed by the court, the court was compelled to accept the creditors' nominee in place of its own. He should, therefore, accede to the application, allowing costs out of the estate.—At the Sheffield County Court, on Nov. 19th, a meeting of the creditors of J. and M. WOOLLEN was held, and Mr. Edward Pearson was appointed trustee, the liabilities being £1,150.—On November 20th meetings of the creditors in the joint estate of MATTHEWMAN & SONS, Sheffield, and the separate estates was held. In the former the liabilities were £2,694 11s 11d., with assets valued at £1,543. Liquidation in this case was adopted, with Mr. Francis Day, Accountant, as trustee.

BRISTOL.

IN RE DAVID GRIFFITHS, of Llanelly, Currier. — First meeting of creditors held at the offices of Messrs. Barnard, Thomas, Tribe, & Co., of Albion Chambers, Bristol, accountants. Mr. Sharp was appointed trustee, and Mr. Powell solicitor.

LEEDS.

On November 9th a petition for liquidation was filed in the Leeds County Court by Mr. DANIEL JACKSON, cloth manufacturer, Aire-street, Leeds, with liabilities estimated at about £8,000, but with considerable assets.—A meeting was held on the same date of the creditors of B. BENJAMIN, woollen merchant, of Leeds and London, whose liabilities were estimated to be £18,000, or thereabouts, and the assets about £700. The creditors were stated to number 198, and it was stated that the bankrupt had absconded, prior to which (within about six weeks) he had bought £8,000 worth of goods without having paid for them. Liquidation was resolved upon, with Mr. Routh, accountant, Leeds, as trustee.—Mr. JOHN SUTCLIFFE, cotton dealer, West-end Mills, Bradford, with £3,500 liabilities, and good assets.—A meeting of the creditors of W. H. MARTEN, woolstapler, Bradford, trading as W. H. Marten & Son, was held, the liabilities being £14,384, and assets about £809. It was decided to make the debtor a bankrupt.—At the examination of BENJAMIN WARD, wool merchant, the liabilities were stated at £39,190, with assets worth £1,100. The debtor admitted he had been dealing in accommodation bills for two years with various persons, amongst others with his own bookkeeper, to the tune of £4,050. This examination was adjourned.—At the same court, same day, the affairs of ROBERT WEBSTER, manufacturer, of Leeds and Pudsey, were investigated. He had been mixed up with bill transactions with Ward, the debtor in the last-named case. His liabilities he estimated at £7,800, of which £6,468 would rank against the estate, with assets which had realised £1,115. The further examination was adjourned.

SINGULAR PARTNERSHIP.—On Wednesday, the 11th November, at the Leeds Bankruptcy Court, the case of JOSEPH WALSH, tanner and currier, of Otley, came up. The total liabilities are £27,468, whilst the assets only amount to about £2,357. Walsh on a former occasion stated that he had been requested by Mr. Henry Henchman, late manager of the Midland Banking Company (Limited) in Leeds, to "launch out" and attend his business, saying that if he did so he (Mr. Henchman) would increase his overdraught at the bank to the tune of several thousands. Walsh did so, and then Henchman wished to limit the overdraught or else to be taken in as a partner with Walsh. After some consideration Walsh agreed to accept Henchman as his partner, the bank manager promising to put £500 into the concern, and according to Walsh's statement, to receive £500 per year for the loan of it. The transactions between them lasted about two years, but by that time Walsh had got tired of the bargain, and gave Henchman eight six-months' bills for £300 each to get him out of the concern. One of these bills had been met, and Mr. Henchman was now attempting to prove the others against the estate. Mr. Henchman, who is not now a bank manager, was to-day examined at considerable length by Mr. Simpson, solicitor, as to his dealings with the bankrupt. He admitted that the turn-over had largely increased after he had accommodated Walsh. He declined to say whether or not he told his directors he was a partner. At the instance of the directors he attempted to induce Walsh to reduce his account. He had received bills from Walsh to the extent of £2,400 to dissolve the connection. Only one had been met. The examination was adjourned.

In the Court of Bankruptcy, November 6th, the liabilities of Mr. BENJAMIN WARD, a foreign wool merchant, were stated at about £40,000, including £31,320 on accommodation bills, while the assets represented only £1,100.

DEWSBURY.

IN RE BENJ. BENJAMIN, of London.—On Thursday, the 19th November, at the Dewsbury County Court, before Mr. Serjeant H. Tindal Atkinson, judge, Mr. G. A. Rooks, solicitor, London, appeared on behalf of the trustee in the liquidation of Benj. Benjamin, clothier, of London, to make several applications. Mr. Rooks said he appeared on behalf of Mr. John Routh, trustee in the liquidation of the affairs of Benj. Benjamin, to make several applications. The first was for an order of the court empowering him to examine witnesses, and also authorising him to examine those witnesses in a London court, inasmuch as the said witnesses resided in, or near to London. They were persons to whom the debtor had sold property within two months before he filed his petition. The debtor had conducted the business of a clothier in London; had purchased his cloth in the West Riding of Yorkshire; then manufactured such cloth into wearing apparel, which he sent into the provinces. Strange to say, in the month of July, and in fact, up to the month of October, the debtor greatly increased his purchases. They amounted in August to £2,100; September, £3,300; and October, £1,061. On the 9th October the debtor filed his petition; and at a meeting of creditors, a statement was made which showed that debts, amounting to £17,278 had been contracted. The creditors, up to the present time, had made every possible inquiry, and they discovered that in July last the debtor opened a place of business in Leeds. Goods were purchased, sent to Leeds, then to London to the debtor, and subsequently to various packers, and those packers were amongst the persons against whom subpœnas had been issued. After the 9th of October, and so late as the 22nd October, the debtor had dealings with a number of persons, amongst whom was a person named Richardson. Some of the goods sold to Richardson had found their way to Birmingham, and afterwards to the warehouse occupied by Messrs. Taylor, of Southwark. Messrs. Taylor had been summoned to show cause why they did not give up the property. He (the speaker) also desired to apply for an injunction, restraining any person from removing the goods from Messrs Taylor's premises; also for a warrant enabling them to search the goods; and he might say that the court had power to grant that application under 76th and 99th sections of the Act. He also made an application for the postal direction of letters. Richardson was apprehended last Tuesday, in Birmingham, and when conveyed to a police-station in London, a ticket was found upon him which had enabled the trustee to trace whereabouts of the goods. His Honour suggested that the examination ought to be taken in London. All the other applications were granted, with the exception of the one relating to the search warrant, his Honour holding that the goods were not concealed.

HUDDERSFIELD.

At the County Court, on the 11th Nov., an application was made on behalf of Mr. Savile Crowther, late waste dealer, Huddersfield, asking the court to make absolute an interim injunction, granted in June, restraining Mr. Henry Hirst, jun., and Mr. Henry Wild, accountant, creditors of the estate by virtue of being executors under the will of the late Mr. S. K. Hirst, and also the Sheriff of Lancashire and his officers at Liverpool, from proceeding further with an execution under a writ of fi. fa., and also, so far as Messrs. Wild & Hirst were concerned, from proceeding with an action upon an open account against the debtor. The motion further asked the court to confirm resolutions passed by the creditors, by which they agreed to accept a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound. The application was opposed, and an adjournment was asked for, on the ground that there had not been time to answer the affidavits filed in support of the motion, in consequence of the illness of an attorney, and also on the ground that the resolutions were obtained by fraud. After each side of the case had been stated at length, the registrar said he could not try the question of fraud, and it was no answer to that motion. He would, however, grant an adjournment if it was desired. It was decided to abandon the request for an adjournment, but to come before the court subsequently with a substantive motion. The registrar thereupon granted the motion.

PLYMOUTH.

SALES BY INSOLVENTS.—The case of E. W. Pinches, a bankrupt, came before Sir James Bacon, the chief judge in bankruptcy, on Tuesday, Nov. 10th. It was an appeal on behalf of Mr. E. Wilkes, accountant, of Plymouth, the trustee of the bankrupt, who formerly occupied the Bedford Wine and Spirit Vaults, Plymouth, against an order pronounced by the judge of the Stonehouse County Court on the 12th of August last, whereby he refused the application of the trustee, that Mr. Edward George Lewer, brewer, of Plymouth, should pay to him as trustee the sum of £67 6s. 4d., and likewise ordered the trustee to pay Mr. Lewer's costs from the time of filing certain affidavits used in support of such application. Mr. Robertson Griffiths (instructed by Mr. Abraham Rhodes, solicitor, of London, agent for Mr. J. E. Curteis, solicitor, of Stonehouse), appeared for the appellant, and Mr. F. Knight (instructed by Messrs. Guscotte, of London, solicitors' agents for Mr. Sparkes, solicitor, of Crediton) for the respondent, Mr. Lewer. From the affidavits filed it would seem that at a time when bankrupt was perfectly insolvent the respondent, on behalf of himself and Mr. Badcock, of Crediton, purchased the bankrupt's business, and claimed to deduct the debts due from Pinches to himself and Badcock. The County Court judge decided that he was entitled to do this, but the trustee being dissatisfied with this decision appealed. Mr. Griffiths contended that the sale by Pinches to Lewer was for a past debt, and without adequate consideration, inasmuch as the £28 paid was not sufficient, and that not only was Lewer's a bygone debt, but Badcock's was one also. Mr. Griffiths quoted an analagous case of Newton, assignee of Steelfox v. Chandler, in which Lord Ellenborough decided in favour of the assignee. Mr. Knight argued that the judge of the County Court was right in making the order. His Honour held that whatever verbal agreement might have been come to on the 17th Dec. about deducting the amount of the debts from the purchase money, not one word to that effect was inserted in the agreement signed on the 19th of that month, and could not therefore be entertained. Anything more of a fraudulent preference to Lewer and Badcock he could not conceive. Lewer could not say he was ignorant of his (Pinches) condition, for he was told that the bailiffs were in Pinches' house, and knew of his poverty by advancing him £10. Badcock likewise showed by his acts that he was aware of Pinches' condition. He had not, therefore, the slightest hesitation in saying that the knowledge of Pinches' position had been brought home to Lewer before the contract had been completed, and as nothing could be clearer in his mind than that Lewer was bound by the express terms of the contract, it was unnecessary to refer to any cases. The trustee being bound to ask Lewer to pay the balance of the purchase money, his application to the judge of the County Court was a proper one, and therefore his order was that the order in the court below be discharged, Mr. Lewer to pay to the trustee the £67 6s. 4d. and the costs in the court below.

WOLVERHAMPTON.

A meeting of the creditors of WILLIAM ALFRED CLARKSON, of Hednesford, in the county of Stafford, cabinet maker and general dealer, was held on Saturday, at the offices of Mr. Charles Barrow, solicitor, 48, Queen-street, Wolverhampton;

Digitized by Google

Mr. T. Broadhouse, of Wednesbury, in the chair. Mr. Barrow appeared for the debtor, and Mr. C. L. Starkey, of Birmingham, accountant, represented creditors. Liabilities, unsecured, £479 19s. 2d.; assets, consisting of book debts, &c., £84 5s. 7d. It was resolved that the estate should be wound up by liquidation, that Mr. Starkey be appointed trustee, the debtor receiving an immediate order of discharge.—A second meeting of the creditors of Mr. JOHN MORRIS JONES, of North-street, Wolverhampton, grocer and provision dealer, was held, also on Saturday, at the offices of Mr. Charles Barrow, Queen-street, in this town. Mr. Barrow appeared on behalf of the debtor, and Mr. Stratton and Mr. Starkey, of Birmingham, accountants, represented creditors. The statement showed liabilities unsecured £816 9s. 4d., assets £340 14s. 7d. Resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Starkey being appointed trustee, and Messrs. Skidmore, Ingram, Roberts, Hibbert, and Warren, being appointed a committee of inspection.

BIRKENHEAD.

At the County Court, on November 17, before Mr. Gilmour, deputy judge, Mr. Downham, instructed by Mr. Thompson, trustee of George Briscoe, saddler, of New Haymarket-square, whose affairs are in liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, applied for an order against Susan Livingstone, of 5, Hampton-street, Birkenhead, for the delivery of household furniture once belonging to the debtor, and in her possession, which formed part of his estate. She did not appear. The debtor, on being sworn, said Mrs. Livingstone had taken part of the goods in question from his premises before he filed his petition, and part afterwards, and that they belonged to his trustee. Order accordingly.

During the month petitions have been filed by FREDERICK WILLIAM THEOBALDS, victualler and farmer; liabilities £1,200, assets estimated at £280; in liquidation.—JOHN LANCASTER HOPKINS, grocer, and wine and spirit merchant; liabilities £1,200, assets estimated at £400; adjourned.

WEDNESBURY.

STEPHEN JUKES, grocer, Darlaston. A meeting of creditors in this matter was held at the offices of Mr. Sheldon, solicitor, Wednesbury, on the 20th Nov. Liabilities £1,791 15s. 8d., assets £433 14s. 10d. A composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, secured, was accepted, and Mr. C. T. Starkey (Harrison & Starkey) was appointed trustee to distribute the bills.

BRADFORD.

At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. W. H. Maiten, woolstapler, Bradford, held on the 9th Nov., the liabilities were stated at £14,384, and the assets at £809 11s. 1d.

RE WILLIAM POSKITT, of Pontefract-common, Brewer.—Meeting held on the 10th of November; liabilities about £2,000, assets about £750; liquidation resolved upon; Mr. Atkinson, of Bradford, accountant, and Mr. Londen, of Pontefract, joint trustees.

BLACKBURN.

A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Alexander Marnie, provision merchant, of Blackburn, was held on Wednesday, the 18th Nov., at the office of Messrs. Addleshaw & Warburton, solicitors, Manchester. The statement of accounts showed the debtor's liabilities to be £1,647, and assets £827. The debtor's offer of a composition of 6s. 8d. in the pound was accepted.

YEOVIL.

Before J. BATTEN, the Registrar.

IN RE ALFRED PATCH, Brewer, Martock, Somerset.—A meeting was held for the bankrupt's last examination. Mr. Watts appeared for the petitioning creditor; Mr. Thomas Westlake, of Singleton, and Mr. M. Millan, of South Petherton, for bankrupt; and Mr. Marsh for the trustee, Mr. Smith, of Bristol. The trustee had rejected the petitioning creditor's proof for £1,750, on the ground that only £1,450 was due. After some discussion the registrar allowed the claim. Mr. Watts opposed the bankrupt being allowed to pass his last examination on the ground that the accounts were not satisfactory. It was ultimately arranged that the books of the bankrupt should be deposited in the court, and that if the petitioning creditor thought it necessary, an accountant might be employed to examine them. Upon this the bankrupt was allowed to pass his last examination.

A meeting of creditors of JAMES RICHARDS, greengrocer, of Clifton, Bristol, was held at the office of Mr. H. M. Clark, of High-street, Bristol, accountant, on Saturday, 7th November. Mr. Frederick George Gardener, chairman. Liabilities £320; assets £8. Liquidation resolved upon. Mr. H. M. Clark, trustee.

MIDDLESBOROUGH.

A meeting of creditors of Mr. JAMES HEDLEY, auctioneer and valuer, of Middlesbrough, was held on the 19th November, at Wharton's Hotel, Leeds, to consider the proposal he had to make to them. At the first meeting of creditors, held a short time ago, it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and Mr. J. S. Barnfather, accountant, of Leeds, was appointed the professional trustee, with a committee of inspection. It was now stated that the debtor was prepared to offer 10s. in the pound, and this composition was yesterday accepted by the creditors. Mr. Hedley's liabilities were stated at £2,190, and his assets at £803.

GLASGOW.

BANKRUPTCY COURT—A TRUSTEE CENSURED.—On the 19th November, before Sheriff Dickson, Mr. Peddie, trustee in the sequestration of James Anderson, commercial traveller, was examined as to his non-appearance at a previous diet, and stated that a petition having been presented to the Court of Session, praying that the sequestration might be annulled, he had understood that his duties were at an end. By the Sheriff's order he then made out a written explanation, which he handed in. Mr. W. B. Faulds, writer, who appeared for a creditor, contended that the reasons given by the trustee were wholly inadequate, and that he could not resign his duties whenever he pleased. After hearing the trustee, the Sheriff pronounced the following interlocutor:—"Having considered the trustee's explanation, finds that the same is unsatisfactory, inasmuch as the sequestration was subsisting at the time when the trustee failed to appear: Finds that the trustee has neglected his duty in failing to attend personally or by agent on the day appointed, and censures him accordingly, and ordains him to proceed with the discharge of his duty as trustee, and more especially to take all proper steps to have the state of the bankrupt's affairs prepared and lodged in process, and to have the bankrupt brought up before the Sheriff for examination."

LEITH.

EXTENSIVE FAILURE.—Messrs. H. P. Hansen & Co., shipbrokers and coal exporters, have had to call a meeting of their creditors. Their liabilities are variously stated at between £10,000 and £20,000, but as heavy consignments are afloat, it is difficult to come to an approximation of the real amount. The failure has arisen from contracts having been entered into with coalmasters at a period when prices were extremely high, and for some time past the foreign market has fallen very considerably. A general decrease in freights has also helped to the present unfortunate result. Another house not engaged in the coal trade, but having extensive dealings with Messrs. H. P. Hansen & Co., has also succumbed, and it is rumoured that two more firms are unable to meet their liabilities.

A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. H. P. Hansen & Co. was held on the 19th November. A statement of affairs was shown which made the liabilities £37,000. The assets are calculated to pay a dividend of 1s. 3d. per £.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.

It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor, George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham, 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps, and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

"The source of many a writer's woe has been discovered."

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

Issue of remaining portion of the Capital of the BRITISH IMPERIAL INSURANCE CORPORATION, LIMITED.

The final allotments of shares in the corporation when made, are issued as share warrants to bearer, and are therefore freely negotiable as a Bank of England note, and devoid of all risk to the purchaser.

The half-yearly interest and bonuses are payable to bearer, and these facts are recorded by endorsement on the warrants, so that no irregularity can arise,

These warrants are always available as a security for monetary purposes, and can be so employed without exposure of any kind; this fact confers a sterling value on shares represented by warrants to bearer, which ordinary registered non-negotiable shares can never attain.

The shares are entitled to 5 per cent. interest, and further participate in 20 per cent. of the profits. The financial position attained by the BRITISH IMPERIAL INSURANCE CORPORATION is, that the subscribed capital, guarantee fund and amount invested in English Government Securities, exceeds ONE HUNDRED AND THIRTY THOUSAND POUNDS.

The corporation has already issued nearly 3,000 life policies, insuring THREE QUARTERS OF A MILLION STERLING, and has received more than £60,000 in premiums.

The capital as at present issued is held by more than 800 shareholders; the entire constituency, policy and shareholders, exceeds 4,000 persons, thereby influencing a large connection, and one which is capable of enormous development.

The features of the BRITISH IMPERIAL INSURANCE CORPORATION, Limited, have been thus summed up in The Times, January 1st, 1869.

From "The Times," London.

It is now pretty generally known that the surrender value of an ordinary life policy is for years worth next to nothing, and that even when the policy has acquired some value the surrender price is totally disproportionate to the premiums that have been paid. It is true that the gains on insurances from lapsed policies swell the profits of an office and that on the mutual principle those lives that are enabled to hold on participate in the surplus derived from such source of revenue; but the dread of the risk of forfeiture of the sum insured, and of the loss of the value of the policy, have hitherto proved great obstacles to the extension of life insurance, for if the insured at any time should fail to pay the annual premium when due, the policy would be forfeited, and any fraction which might be allowed for it would be accorded as a pure act of grace, and be uncertain in its amount. By a new system devised by Dr. Farr, and adopted by an insurance company at Manchester and London, an insurant can, at any time after having paid his first premium, even when the policy is only one year old, draw out, either as a loan or as the surrender value of his policy, rather less than one-half of the whole amount of the premiums that have been paid As each policy has a current realisable value, it becomes a security as readily negotiable as a bank-note, and can at any time be converted into cash. The only form of investment allowed by the Company is Government security. Eighty per cent. of the premiums is invested in the Funds, at compound interest, to provide for the policies; the remaining twenty per cent. being set apart for expenses. The insurance premiums being thus invested in the Government Funds, the risk necessarily attendant upon doubtful security is avoided. Even to persons of settled and certain means the loss of all control over their contributions, and the compulsion to go on paying the premiums punctually, down to death, under pain of forfeiture, are objectionable, but to the million whose incomes are uncertain. and which might perish on an interruption of health, a decline of business, or the approach of old age, the system of insurance in general use, presents great hardships. Another new feature connected with the "BRITISH IMPERIAL CORPORATION" consists in the endorsement of the surrender value on the back of every policy issued, for the first and every subsequent year it may be in force. Some of the improvements which are offered to the public by Dr. Farr's new system may be shown as follows:—A man, twenty-seven years of age, insures for £300, to be paid at his death, for which he pays £7 1s. 3d. per annum. Immediately £5 13s. is invested in Government securities, and of this sum £3 is withdrawable or on demand, either for temporary or permanent use, on deposit of the policy. Suppose at the age of 37, when his policy has been ten years in existence, he is taken by reverses of any kind, and requires temporary assistance, he can demand the banking account invested in Government securities, amounting to £34 1s., and thus obtain the aid he requires without prejudice to his insurance. Under these arrangements every insurant participates equally in the same solid advantages; there are no benefits to one at the expense of the other, therefore the principle of equity has full play. Another illustration of the advantages of the new system may be shown thus:—A person accustomed to travel, aged 44 next birthday, effects a Government security life policy of £2,500 on his own life. After a period of three years circumstances require him to reside abroad. The usual renewal notice is forwarded, but it fails to reach the insurant: the premium is not paid, and therefore, in ordinary cases, the policy would be valueless. This can never happen under the new system. The insurant dies at the end of the next seven years. His executors, on searching among the papers of the deceased, find the policy and three receipts for premiums paid. On examination of the policy they discover that it possesses an indisputable value, and that, in accordance with the banking account endorsed upon the policy opposite to the third year, they can demand the immediate payment of £138 15s., being the value of the policy after three premiums have been paid. Under Dr. Farr's system, a policy valuation table is published by which each insurant can ascertain for himself the correct realisable valuable of his policy for every premium paid. Under the title of "Self Insurance," the new system has been advantageously combined with cases where policies are made payable at a certain specified age, during the life of the insurant; in case of death before the age specified, the insurance being paid in full. In case of endowments on the lives of children with Government security, nearly the whole of the premiums paid are returned in case of death before the age at which the endowment is made payable. Contrasting this plan of life insurance with that heretofore in operation, it will be found that insurants enjoy privileges of a most valuable character; and the public will do well to look into the principles of the new system now in operation, which offers perfect security and also protects their rights and interests.

It is obvious that as this equitable system of Insurance becomes generally understood by the public that the law of natural selection wil operate, and that it will receive a very large measure of support. The profits of a Life Insurance Company increases in enormous ratio as the business increases. It may be assumed, therefore, as a fact, that as the business acquires larger dimensions the present moderate payment of 5 per cent. will form the least portion of the profits of the shareholders.

The premiums are the source from which the admitted large profits of the shareholders in such establishments are derived, the ratio of profits being, as a rule, governed by the extent of the business—that is to say, by the number and amount of the policies issued.

As observed in a circular recently issued, it is the surplus premium income that has caused the £10 shares in the "Law Life" to be worth £104; the "Rock" shares, with 10s paid, to be worth £8 15s.; the "Crown" shares, with £5 paid, to be worth £32 10s.; the "Star," with £1 5s. paid, to be worth £13; the "Life Association of Scotland" shares, with £1 per share paid, to be worth £25 10s.; and those of the "Standard," with £1 paid, to be worth £73, and has caused the value of the shares of many other companies to run up to hundreds per cent. above the sums originally paid upon them.

These great advances in sterling value are due to the profits or bonuses divided among the shareholders, with dividends of twenty, thirty, forty, and in some cases even more than forty per cent. Prices naturally rose in corresponding ratio.

Some life offices have increased their paid-up capital many times over, and continue to pay liberal and rising dividends upon the vastly augmented amounts. Thus both the income and the solid capital of the shareholders have been multiplied.

The BRITISH IMPERIAL has now passed the period of early development, and has entered into the position of an established life office, when the approach of very high profits may be predicated with a certainty greater than of most other sound commercial enterprises.

The extension of capital, by the issue now offered for subscription, will enable the corporation to make advances in association with life policies on a larger scale. This is one of the most lucrative features of life insurance, and uniformly proves most successful in attracting business.

FACTS WORTHY THE ATTENTION OF INVESTORS.

1. Life offices, when properly constituted and well managed, are the safest and most lucrative joint stock companies ever devised. The experience of over a century and a half demonstrates this.

2. The security, the solidity, the continuously rising nature of these profits are characteristics to be kept in mind. There is admitted truth in Professor DE MORGAN'S remark, "That nothing in the commercial world approaches even distantly to the security of a well-established life office." They are steadier in their action at all times, whether during monetary panics, epidemics, or other visitations, than any other description of joint stock company or mercantile undertaking, public or private, because their transactions extend over long periods of years, and their liabilities under policies cannot fall in at greater rate than is known and amply provided for.

3. There is a greater field for the development of life insurance in this country than for almost any other branch of monetary business. There are millions of persons who could, and would, effect life policies, provided the doubts and uncertainties attendant on ordinary life insurance were removed.

4. The BRITISH IMPERIAL effectually removes all objections, and has already obtained a large amount of public attention and support.

5. In proportion to the amount of life and self insurance business transacted, so may shareholders look for profits, because there is no speculation involved in transacting a sound and well-established life business.

6. The new life business presented at each successive weekly board meeting is of a most encouraging and satisfactory character, and is largely in excess of the business obtained by many of the most respectable and best known old life offices.

The objects of the Society are—

To promote the acquisition of those branches of knowledge which are essential to the practice of an Accountant; to decide upon questions of professional usage or courtesy; and generally to advance the position and interests of Members of the profession.

CONSTITUTION.

The Society shall consist of three classes of Members, namely, Fellows, Associates, and Honorary Members, with a class of Students attached.

ELECTION OF ASSOCIATES.

Every application for admission as an Associate of this Society must be made to the Council, and must be accompanied by a written recommendation from at least two Associates.

ENTRANCE FEES AND ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Every Associate who shall be elected a FELLOW of the Society shall, upon such election, pay the sum of £15 15s. by way of fee upon his election as Fellow. Every person admitted as an ASSOCIATE of the Society shall, on admission, pay the sum of £5 5s. by way of entrance fee if he be practising in the City of London or within the London postal district; or the sum of £3 3s. if he be practising beyond such district; and the undermentioned YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Society, that is to say:—FELLOWS, £5 5s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING IN THE CITY OF LONDON, or within the London postal district, £2 2s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING BEYOND SUCH DISTRICT, £1 1s.; and STUDENTS, £1 1s. each.

Every candidate to be hereafter proposed for admission as an Associate shall be twenty-one years of age or upwards, and shall come within one of the following conditions:—

(1.) He shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership as a public accountant, on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have made his application on or before the 1st day of January, 1873.

(2.) Or shall have been a clerk to a public accountant on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership, as a public accountant for three years consecutively after that date, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1878.

(3.) Or shall have served under articles for a period of three years to a public accountant in actual practice.

(4.) Or shall have been employed as accountant to a corporation or public body for three years, or as a clerk to a public accountant, or firm of accountants, for a period of seven years at the least, but the employment need not have been for more than two years continuously with one and the same person or firm.

(5.) Or shall have taken a degree at one or other of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, London, or Dublin, and shall have served under articles for a period of two years to a public accountant or firm of accountants.

(6.) But no candidate shall be eligible for admission as an associate after the 1st day of January, 1878, until he shall have passed an examination as to his proficiency to the satisfaction of the Examiners of the Society.

(7.) Or shall conform to such conditions as the Council shall in any particular case require to be observed, but such admission shall only be made upon the written recommendation of at least three-fourths of the Council present at a Meeting specially called for the purpose.

STUDENTS.

Students shall be persons, not under 18 years of age, who are or have been pupils of Fellows or Associates of the Society, and who have the intention of becoming accountants; and such persons may continue Students until they attain the age of 26 years.

Further information can be obtained, and copies of the Rules can be had, upon application to the Secretary.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor, George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

CIRCULAR ADDRESSING done at the Technical Industrial School for Women, 50, Warwick-gardens, Kensington, W. Terms, 5s. per thousand. Ten to fifteen hands always ready.

The Accountant

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

As stated in our last issue, the ACCOUNTANT will in future be published weekly: a change which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. It may be repeated that this change will not affect the original subscribers, who will be supplied with the weekly issue regularly without extra payment for the remainder of the term of their subscriptions—viz., until the commencement of October next. The weekly paper will consist of not less than 16 pages, and it will be published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails. The price will be 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space and letters relating to the general business of the paper should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT will thus secure to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and it will be particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand.

The Accountant.

JANUARY 2, 1875.

It is in no captious spirit of mere complaint, but with the feeling that there is an error which requires redress that we have again to call attention to the unrecognized status of the profession of accountants, and the manner in which they are ignored by the chiefs of the legal profession. And a remarkable instance of this is to be found in an occurrence to which attention is called in another part of our columns. During the past session the Lord Chancellor appointed a committee "to consider whether, having regard to the experience now obtained of the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, any, and what, changes, either through the medium of legislation or orders, might be advantageously made in the details of the present system." The members of this committee are Mr. Rupert Kettle, the well-known County Court Judge, Mr. Registrar Brougham, Mr. Mansfield Parkyns, the Comptroller in Bankruptcy, and one of the official assignees of the Court, Mr. Henry Nicol, the Superintendent of County Courts, and Mr. William Hackwood, one of the best-known of bankruptcy solicitors. This list, it will be seen, does not contain the name of a single accountant, nor indeed, with the exception of Mr. Hackwood, the name of any person practically conversant with the working of the Acts. The Lord Chancellor's attention was directed to this omission by memorials from several of the Societies of Accountants, but the gist of the answer received, in at least one case, is a mere acknowledgment of the memorial, and an intimation that the committee appointed in August "have been now engaged for more than a month in prosecuting enquiries which, it may be presumed, are now approaching their conclusion."

This reply can scarcely be regarded as being altogether satisfactory. If a committee of men, all of whom are busily engaged during the day, and one of whom resides some distance from London, have been holding their sittings during the space of one month only, they must either have not made any great advance in their deliberations or must have met merely to come to a pre-determined conclusion. In the former case there can be no possible objection to adding one or two experienced, practical men to the committee, a step which is by no means without precedent. The latter hypothesis, notwithstanding the sinister rumours of a proposed return to a system by which all the bankruptcy business would, practically, be concentrated in the hands of a few officials and their immediate friends, we prefer summarily to discard.

The practice of the Bankruptcy Court ought, indeed, to be as far as possible analogous to the practice of the Court of Chancery in "winding-up cases;" the object being the same, namely to administer the estate in due course, and to realise the assets for the benefit of creditors. Let us suppose that the Lord Chancellor was to appoint a committee to inquire into the working of the "Companies Act." Surely in selecting the members he would include besides one or more judges, and the chief clerks of his court, and solicitors, some of the eminent men whose names are painfully familiar to speculative shareholders as official liquidators, and their assistance would be of the highest possible importance in framing the recommendations of the committee. The principle holds good in the smaller matter as well as in the greater. The trustee in whom, in all cases of liquidation and composition as well as of bankruptcy, the property of the debtor immediately vests is appointed by the creditors, and is bound to act entirely for their protection, being subject to a great many liabilities, and dependent for his remuneration on the will of the majority of the creditors. Now, it seems obvious that an experienced trustee, one who has been concerned in winding-up many bankruptcies, is the person whose opinion ought to be sought first of all, as to the practical working of the Act. Mr. Mansfield Parkyns' experience as an official assignee, and Mr. Hackwood's skill as a legal practitioner, would be well supplemented by the appointment of a skilled accountant, a fair representative of the class of men from whom trustees are mainly drawn. It is not too late even now to repair the error that has been committed. Let Lord Cairns add the name of some well-known accountant, whose experience as a trustee has been extensive and varied, and he will not merely be doing justice to an influential and honourable profession, but he will make his committeee truly representative of the classes most deeply concerned in carrying the Act into practical operation.

The case of the bankruptcy of Mr. John Whall, a solicitor of Worksop, which has been previously referred to in our columns, raised, as will be seen by our report, a question of the extent of the jurisdiction of the Court of Bankruptcy. Stripped of legal technicalities the point is simply this. The Court has power to decide any questions relating to or in any way arising out of the bankruptcy, a power which it has shown, notably in the case of the Chief Judge, a very strong inclination to enlarge as much as possible. But no one has ventured to assert that any question can be decided which does not directly affect the bankrupt or the trustee, but in which third parties, whether creditors or not, are alone concerned. In the case of Whall's bankruptcy, a dispute arose as to the right to certain papers, one claimant asserting that they belonged to him as a mortgagee, and that Whall was only a custodian of them for him, and the other asserting that he had duly paid off the mortgages, and so was entitled to have them returned to him. Here was clearly a matter in dispute which the judge could not settle in bankruptcy in the form in which the matter was brought before him. But supposing the mortgagor alleging that he had paid off the mortgages, which was admitted by Whall, had applied to have the securities given up and cancelled could not the judge have made the order? The practical point, however, for trustees is as to their costs. The trustee were clearly justified in submitting the question to the Court. With rival claimants, either of whom might have commenced an action against them, the course was clear to hold the papers as stakeholder in trust for the real owner. It seems to us that the judge, in refusing the motion, has practically decided the point at issue, though the trustee cannot yet safely hand over the papers to Mr. Ward.

Our attention has been called to several announcements, taken from various sources, in which gentlemen who describe themselves as "accountants" undertake to do a great many beneficent things for a confiding public. One of these enterprising individuals is under the impression that the business of an accountant will be improved by an alliance with that of "financial agent;" he undertakes to "negotiate loans" for anybody temporarily in a state of impecuniosity. Another trumpeting philanthropist is kind enough to promise "immediate protection, and release from judgments, liabilities, and suits at law;" and with the modest accompaniment of "reasonable charges," he ought to find plenty of credulity ready to take shelter under his roof. We do not intend to question the right of any man to adopt what he may consider the best means to obtain business suited to his varied accomplishments, provided there is no infringement of the law, but accountants generally should not blink the fact that it is precisely this class of touting which tends so greatly to bring their name into disrepute. Unfortunately, there does not appear to be any effectual remedy for the evil without the assistance of legislative protection. But the fact that it is possible to remedy matters to some extent should be sufficient inducement to the several accountants' societies to take vigorous and united action in the direction of ridding the profession of the numerous parasitical inconveniences with which it is at present so unpleasantly surrounded.

The report of a case decided last month by Sir James Bacon shows strongly the determination of the Court of Equity to uphold the rights of the creditors in bankruptcy matters, though, as in the present case, at the cost of some apparent hardship to the debtor. The point is governed by section 125 of the Act, the 10th subdivision of which provides that "the trustee shall report to the registrar the discharge of the debtor, and a certificate of such discharge given by the registrar shall have the same effect as an order of discharge given to a bankrupt under this Act." The decision, though, however technically correct, seems to bear very hardly on the debtor. The creditors evidently meant to release him entirely, after the beginning of December, and the delay on the part of the registrar, it may be fairly contended, ought not to be allowed to prejudice him. Besides, the equity maxim, "What ought to be done, shall be taken to be done," may be considered to apply, and the certificate of the registrar held to relate back to the time when it ought to have been given, namely the 1st of December. But, according to the letter of the Act, the decision of the Vice-Chancellor is fully justified, and the creditors may be congratulated on their lucky windfall.

The question of irregular proxies at the Manchester County Court was decided too much upon a collateral issue to give any guidance to trustees. The Court seems to have gone entirely on the ground that the order of discharge having been once granted it could only be set aside, if fraud were clearly established. As to the validity of the proxies, if the objection had been taken before the granting of the order, nothing seems to have been decided. Probably, however, they would have been held to be invalid. The fact of Mr. Barker believing that he really could give the proxies may morally justify him in doing so; but it is hard to see how any amount of belief in the correctness of an act can uphold its validity if it is legally wrong. If at the time Mr. Barker gave the proxies, the firm had been dissolved and he himself in liquidation, it is clear that whatever authority he possessed passed to his trustee, and that he could no more give a vote than a receipt for money. The decision seems to have been dictated rather by an unwillingness to set aside an order once drawn up, and reopen the proceedings at great expense, than by an intention to affirm the regularity and validity of the proxies.

RECEIVERS CONTINUED.

In our last article we referred to receivers in Bankruptcy. Therein we asserted that at present a Receivership means both too much and too little. Since then a case, strongly confirming this view, has come under our notice. A receiver was appointed in a case for the purpose of restraining actions and taking possession of goods claimed under a disputed bill of sale. The usual indemnity was given on behalf of the receiver that he would be responsible for any damages. The creditor claiming under the bill of sale attended the meeting, tendered his proof, was appointed chairman, morally supported an offer of composition, and before the close of the meeting withdrew the proof. The composition being carried, the creditor went on with his bill of sale and cleared the debtor out of the only asset practically available for his composition. The receiver, who has not even recovered his charges, is saddled with an amount for damages and costs, which will have to come out of his own pocket. Surely if receivers are to be held responsible for acts to which they are only parties pursuant to the requirements of the Act, their remuneration should be based on some rate recognizing Trustees, and remunerating this risk.

The receivership ceases at the first meeting of creditors, when one or more Trustees are appointed.

Under our present laws a bankrupt is not required to disclose his position or produce a statement of his affairs until the first meeting of creditors, convened for the purpose of appointing one or more trustees (with or without a committee of inspection). In most countries one of the preliminary steps in bankruptcy is the compulsory production by the bankrupt of a statement showing his liabilities and assets, and the want of this information frequently prevents any concerted action between creditors until it is too late to prevent the bankrupt from obtaining the appointment of his own nominee. The duties of a trustee, unlike those of a receiver, are well defined and very stringently enforced. Where no committee of inspection is appointed, the supervision of the Trustee's Estate Book falls upon the Registrar, whose duties are already sufficiently onerous. For this reason, and also in order to relieve the trustee from a portion of his discretionary responsibility, we prefer the supervision of a Committee of Inspection, who should be consulted on all important points and their views (so far as is compatible with practice) adopted. The administration of an estate while fresh is generally interesting to inspectors; but when, as too often transpires, the majority of the assets prove valueless and the prospect of a dividend remote, they are apt to think that they can abandon their duties and, without resigning, refuse to act. When such is the case, the trustee is placed in a very awkward position, as without them he cannot render his three monthly audited accounts to the Comptroller, and if their refusal to act is persistent, the trustee must either report them to the Court and make them pay the costs, or be himself reported and ordered to pay the costs personally. It is the practice with many of the accountants who take upon themselves the duties of trustee to study as much as possible the convenience of the inspectors by sending a clerk with the accounts and vouchers to the offices or residences of the members of the committee, but this courtesy is not always appreciated, and sometimes the inspectors still refuse either to act or resign.

In poor cases, where perhaps the only items in the Estate Book are disbursements made out of the trustee's own pocket, the auditing of a miserable sum of 2 or 3 shillings frequently entails an expense and loss of time amounting to £4 or £5. The Act requires it, the Comptroller will have it, and it must be done. The French law is much more practical and reasonable. There, when the Trustee reports that there are not assets enough to cover costs, the Court directs the suspension of the Bankruptcy until by a later report the Trustee states that he has discovered available assets when the Court orders the resumption of the Bankruptcy. The position of Trustee is at the best a thankless one, for creditors are too apt to look at the dividend result and not at the anxieties, and difficulties, and risks sometimes necessary to get in the Estate. In chronological order the duties of a Trustee may be stated as follows:—1. On his appointment withdraw all proofs, his certificate, &c., from the file of the Court. 2. Insert notices of appointment (and request for all claims to be sent to him) in the London Gazette and local paper. 3. Send a copy of such a notice to each creditor shewn on the statement of affairs. 4. File a copy of the Papers containing the advertisements, together with an affidavit of postage of notices, with list of creditors to whom sent. (These duties were formerly left to the solicitor to the Trustee, but in consequence of the decisions of the Court that they apply personally to the Trustee the practice now is for him to perform them.) 5. The Trustee should also ascertain that the affidavit of service of summons on the Bankrupt (to attend on his public examination) has been duly filed. 6. As soon as convenient after his appointment the Trustee should take steps to examine the Bankrupt as to his affairs and if the statement is not in his opinion (or in that of the Inspectors) satisfactory, he should without delay demand of the Bankrupt in writing, such further accounts as are deemed necessary, notifying to him at the same time that unless such accounts are forthcoming (in duplicate) at a given date prior to the public examination, steps will be taken to enforce his compliance with the Trustee's requirements; and that in the event of the public examination being adjourned in consequence of such delay, application will be made to render him responsible for the expense. 7. The proof of each creditor should be carefully investigated, and as soon as the Trustee is satisfied as to its genuineness, it should be endorsed and signed by him as "admitted," and placed on the file of any Court. Should the Trustee have reason to doubt the bona fides of any claim, or the bankrupt adduce good reasons (in writing, or in preference, by affidavit) to dispute it, the Trustee should in writing apply to the creditor for a detailed statement of his claim, and, if not then satisfied, consult the solicitors to the Estate, as to the course to be pursued. Under no circumstances should a Trustee take upon himself finally, to reject a disputed claim, as the Court alone can deal with it if the creditor persists. We shall continue the subject in our next issue.

H. B., (LONDON.)

THE INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.

The members of this Institute dined together on Friday, the 11th Dec., at the Albion Tavern, Aldersgate-street. The chair was taken by the Vice-President, Mr. Wm. Turquand. Amongst those present were, Mr. John Ball, Mr. G. A. Cape, Mr. James Cooper, Mr. Robt. Fletcher, Mr. A. A. James, Mr. G. H. Ladbury, Mr. S. L. Price, Mr. G. E. Swithinbank, Mr. F. Whinney, and Mr. John Young.

The toasts proposed were:—"The Queen and Royal Family," "The Institute," "The Legal Profession," "The President and Vice-President," "The Visitors," and "The Officers of the Institute."

Digitized by Google

In proposing the toast of the evening—"The Institute"—Mr. Turquand alluded to the fact of the committee lately appointed by the Lord Chancellor for the purpose of considering what amendments can be effected in the details of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; and expressed a hope that its labours would be productive of good results. He referred to the wish entertained by many members for the incorporation of the profession in some manner recognized by the law, as one which might in time be fulfilled, notwithstanding the serious obstacle presented by the alteration of the practice of the Government as to granting charters.

Mr. W. Bush Cooper in responding to the toast of the Legal Profession, took occasion to observe that the advantages obtainable from a legal incorporation of the profession might perhaps be counterbalanced by the loss of that entire freedom in the management of its internal affairs which was now enjoyed by the Institute.

Mr. Markby, however, drew attention to the position attained by the Incorporated Law Society, and was inclined to consider the advantages of public recognition as being much more important than any disadvantages of the kind suggested.

Mr. Robert G. C. Hamilton, of the Board of Trade, responded on behalf of the Visitors.

Mr. Welton, on behalf of the Officers of the Institute, gave expression to their anxious wish to advance its interests; and added that the Council might soon perhaps see their way to the enactment of such bye-laws as would assist in regulating the practice of the profession, and strengthen the hands of any of its members who might, through adhering to a strictly professional line of action, find themselves subjected to attack.

ENQUIRY INTO THE WORKING OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869.

According to an announcement made a short time ago, by a legal contemporary, the Lord Chancellor has appointed a committee to enquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. This authority states that the members of the Committee are:—Mr. Rupert Kettle, Judge of County Courts; Mr. James Rigg Brougham, one of the Registrars of the Court of Bankruptcy; Mr. Mansfield Parkyns, Comptroller in Bankruptcy; Mr. William Hackwood, Solicitor, (of the firm of Linklater, Hackwood, Addison, and Brown), and Mr. Henry Nicol, Superintendent of the County Courts Department of the Treasury; the object of their appointment being "to consider whether having regard to the experience now obtained of the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, any and what, changes, either through the medium of legislation or orders, might be advantageously made in the details of the present system." Since the announcement was made, we believe several of the Societies of Accountants in Great Britain, have memorialized the Lord Chancellor, urging the desirability of the Accountants being properly represented, by one or more members of the body being placed upon this Committee. We have before us a copy of the memorial forwarded by the Society of Accountants in England, which is worded as follows:—"In accordance with a vote of the Council of this Society, we, the undersigned members thereof, beg to memorialize your Lordship with reference to the expediency of placing one or more Accountants, experienced in the practice of bankruptcy, liquidation and composition matters, upon the Committee, recently appointed by your Lordship, to consider the working of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869. As a rule, receivers, managers, and trustees, under the present Act are elected from members of our profession, and principally on the ground that they are Accountants; hence your Lordship will not fail to observe that Accountants must necessarily be familiar with the working of the rules and orders in bankruptcy. Should your Lordship deem it advisable to accede to this memorial, a special meeting of our Council shall at once be called for the purpose of nominating for your Lordship's selection such gentlemen as are, in consequence of their experience and position, most suitable to act on the Committee." The reply to this communication, received a few days ago, was as follows:—

"I am desired by the Lord Chancellor to acknowledge the receipt of a memorial from the Society of Accountants in England with reference to the expediency of placing one or more accountants upon the committee appointed to consider the working of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869. The Lord Chancellor desires me, in reply, to inform you that the committee referred to was appointed as far back as August last, and has been now engaged for more than a month in prosecuting its inquiries, which it may, therefore, be presumed are now approaching their conclusion, and his Lordship, under these circumstances, does not think that it would be advisable to make any addition to, or alteration in, the composition of the committee."

It may be added, that we have reason to believe that the replies to the other memorials were not more satisfactory in one sense than that above recorded, although we are not at present possessed of information as to the exact nature of these answers.

THE GRIEVANCES OF TRUSTEES.

"An Unhappy Trustee" writes as follows:—There appears to be a prevalent idea that the charges of Accountants acting in the capacity of Trustees to the various estates which succumb to liquidation under the 1869 Act, are more than necessarily heavy, and are in fact unjustifiable and extravagant. On the other hand, complaints are made of the difficulties, annoyances, and impediments which are so obstructive to the speedy and amicable realization of estates; and, in justification of the so-called "enormous charges," it is urged that a remedy should be looked for in the abolition of a quantity of the absurd routine, that has to be strictly observed before a matter can be finally and definitely wound up. If these complaints represent a general grievance, the office of the Comptroller in bankruptcy would seem to be seriously inefficient, and greatly needing improvement ere the existing inconveniences can be removed; or else it requires replacing by some more satisfactory court of administration. In the case of an absconding bankrupt, a trustee not infrequently finds himself in a comparatively ridiculous, and palpably unenviable predicament, when the assets of the estate are ascertained to amount nearly to nil, and legal proceedings are perhaps pending or necessary, in order to obtain the best arrangement for the creditors. The failure of the litigation carried on under such circumstances, invariably entails considerable pecuniary loss upon the trustee, who having no one upon whom to rely for his expenses, has to meet them entirely out of his own pocket. On the one hand he sees the anything but gratifying picture of a body of dissatisfied creditors, in whose interest he has unsuccessfully worked, and on the other, the anything but comforting prospect of nothing in the pound, combined with the disadvantage of having wasted his own time and money. The fact of acting in concert with a duly appointed Committee of Inspection (asserted to be one of the most farcical of institutions) gives the Trustee no other assistance than a periodical worry. Of very little use at the best, gradually becoming quite tired out by litigious and other impedimentary proceedings, and ultimately ready to put their signatures to anything to be "rid of the job," the members of the committee probably add to the serenity of the Trustee, by gradually disappearing, and the "delinquent" Accountant is then reported to the Court, mulcted in the payment of costs, and peremptorily admonished to close the matter without delay; the last proceeding involving increased loss, and personal inconvenience. The outcries of a similar strain to that in the letter of "Unfortunate Creditors," are not altogether made on a genuine basis. Where there are sufficient assets, and the Trustee demands a proportionate and equitable amount of remuneration for administering them, the censure now so rife with respect to charges made, becomes unreasonable, and there is but little sense in the frequently promulgated argument, that because the assets are small, the charges should be correspondingly minute, it being invariably the case that the collection of a number of debts is far more tiresome and expensive in a small estate than in a large one. Now that an alteration in the law is contemplated, it is to be hoped that those appointed to frame its amendments, will consider the real practical working of the Act. With the view to securing this it appears most advisable that the services of an accountant of experience should be obtained, in order that the irregularities and blunders now existing may be removed. Should the post of Official Trustee come into existence, there can be no doubt that many evils now complained of will be remedied, but it would be rather premature to enquire at this stage whether estates in liquidation would be in any way benefitted by such an appointment, or whether creditors would be any the more satisfied, or their dividends any larger—or smaller—than at present.

THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ABERDEEN.

This Society, though not an extensive one in point of numbers, has been established for several years, the Royal Charter of Incorporation bearing date March, 1867. The petition upon which the charter was granted sets forth: "That the profession of Accountants in Aberdeen, to which the Petitioners belong, has of late years grown into considerable importance: That the business of Accountants, as practised in Aberdeen, is varied and extensive, embracing all matters of Account, and requiring for its proper execution an acquaintance with the general principles of law, particularly of the Law of Scotland, and more especially with those branches of it which have relation to the law of merchant, to insolvency, and bankruptcy, and to all rights connected with property: That they are also frequently selected to take the charge of landed properties and of bankrupt, insolvent and other trust estates, and in that capacity they have duties to perform, not only of the highest responsibility and involving large pecuniary interests, but which require in those who undertake them, great experience in business, very considerable knowledge of law, and other qualifications which can only be attained by a liberal education: That in these circumstances the petitioners are induced to form themselves into a Society, to be called 'The Society of Accountants in Aberdeen,' with a view to unite into one body those at present practising the profession, and to promote the objects which, as members of the same profession, they entertain in common." Amongst the powers granted under the charter is one to "constitute and appoint a committee of examiners for the purpose of regulating and conducting such examinations of persons desirous to become members of the Society, as the Society may, from time to time, direct, and in such manner as they may appoint, in furtherance of the objects of the Society; and that the course of education to be pursued, and the amount of general and professional acquirements to be exacted from such persons, shall be such as the Society shall, from time to time, fix." In the Society's book of rules, we find certain orders as to apprentices. An apprentice must have attained the age of fourteen years, and the period of service is fixed at five years except under the following circumstances, viz: "It shall be competent to a member to take an apprentice for a shorter period of service than five years, where the person entering into indenture has been previously in the business chambers of a member of the Societies of Chartered Accountants in Edinburgh, or Glasgow, or of a member of the Corporation, or of a member of the Society of Writers to the Signet, or of a member of the Society of Solicitors before the Supreme Courts of Scotland, or of a member of any Incorporated Society of Solicitors-at-Law, or with a member of the Society of Advocates in Aberdeen, or with a member of any other body of Solicitors in Scotland—such shorter period to be computed on the principle of deducting one year from the term of service under indenture for each two years during which such person has been previously employed as above; but in no case shall the term of service under indenture with a member of the Corporation be less than three years. The apprentice fee is fixed at twenty-five guineas. All apprentices are required to attend during their apprenticeship a course of at least two Sessions of Scots Law Lectures in Aberdeen University. All indentures are required to be lodged with the Secretary, for the purpose of being recorded by him, within six months from the commencement of the apprenticeship; the dues of recording being £1 1s., payable to the general fund of the Society." On the completion of the apprenticeship, the apprentice may apply for examination; and the rules under this head provide that "The examinators shall examine candidates for admission in such form and to such extent as they may consider necessary upon subjects usually occurring in the practice of the profession, such as algebra, including the use of logarithms—annuities—life assurances—liferents—reversions—book-keeping framing of states under sequestrations, trusts, factories, executries—the Law of Scotland, especially that relating to bankruptcy, private trust and arbitration, and rights and preference of creditors in rankings." The entrance fees are twenty, forty, and sixty guineas according to the date and conditions of entrance, the annual payment by members being fixed at one guinea. The rule having reference to "malfeasance of members," states that "In order to maintain the respectability of the Society, it is ordained that if it shall appear that there are reasonable grounds for suspecting that any member of the Society may be charged with any flagrant misdemeanour or breach of duty, the Council shall make strict enquiry into the circumstances, and if, after such enquiry, or such other enquiry as may be directed by the Society—full opportunity being always afforded to the member charged of being heard, and of producing evidence in his vindication—the Society shall, by a majority of three-fourths of the members personally present at any meeting, called with notice of the object, declare such charge to be well founded, and of such a nature as to render the person so charged unworthy of being or continuing a member of the Society, they may resolve to exclude or expel such person from the Society, and thereupon he shall forfeit all claim, benefit, or privilege upon, or from, the Society or its funds." The names of twelve gentlemen appear upon the petition for the charter; and the Secretary informs us that the Society at present numbers fifteen members.

The Master of the Rolls has ordered the voluntary winding up of Balfer Bros. and Co. (Limited) to be continued under the supervision of the Court, and has confirmed the appointment of Mr. Alfred A. Broad (Broad, Broad, and Paterson) and Mr. J. W. Sully (Sully and Girdlestone) as liquidators.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—You are doubtless aware that the Lord Chancellor has appointed a Committee, to enquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and I think it will be well for accountants to be on the qui vive respecting any proposed alterations that may affect their interests.

I have reason to believe that it has already been decided, to recommend a return, as far as possible, to the old system of "Official" Trustees; that in every case High Bailiffs shall be appointed Receivers, and that no Trustee shall be allowed to act unless "certified" by the Comptroller in Bankruptcy: that the powers under the system of Debtor Summonses shall only be exercised in the interest of all the creditors of an estate, and that a printed copy of the request list shall be sent to every creditor in Liquidation cases. The Committee are receiving suggestions from County Court Registrars, and it is but natural they should recommend the "Official" system, as in many towns the Clerks of Registrars at present make a considerable addition to their income, and consequent saving to their employers, by getting appointments as Receivers and Trustees—and as the taxation of solicitor's bills is usually practically in the hands of a Registrar's Clerk, it is a direct inducement to Solicitors to nominate him as Receiver. Unless accountants are up and doing, it is quite possible that they may find quite unexpectedly that their occupation as receivers and trustees will be gone. Of course it will be quite impossible to frame a Bankruptcy Law that will satisfy creditors until they get one which will ensure them 20s. in the £, and therefore it is not unlikely that persons like the "Unfortunate Creditors" quoted in your December issue will be quite willing to welcome a change in the law which will apparently guarantee an effectual supervision over estates, but will in reality bring back one of the chief evils of the old system, that is, a practically irresponsible management of estates. Under the present system an Accountant who desires to gain and retain a connection in bankruptcy matters must of necessity give all his energy to satisfy his employers, the creditors, but an official trustee not having those inducements; would naturally go through a certain routine and consider his duties fulfilled. In a large number of estates the principal assets often consist of book debts, more or less doubtful, and requiring great care and patience to recover; and no person who was devoid of a direct interest in collecting them would give any special attention beyond a formal application and registering the result. I have in many small cases paid handsome dividends by patience and perseverance in recovering such debts, which without the stimulus I have referred to, I certainly should not have exercised. It will be thus seen that it is for the interest of creditors as well as accountants that such matters should be left in the control of accountants, amenable to those who employ them, and not in that of county court clerks.

Yours truly,

QUI VIVE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I beg leave to trespass upon your space in order to make a few remarks regarding the committee recently appointed by the Lord Chancellor to consider the working and advisability of amending and patching up the ridiculous legislative failure called "The Bankruptcy Act of 1869." To the two appointments of an able Registrar in Bankruptcy and a well-known solicitor conversant with common and commercial law, no one will take the least exception, although there might be some question as to the special fitness of one or two of the remaining members; but why the committee has not been strengthened by the appointment of two or more accountants of experience and ability is certainly, I think, a very serious matter that requires explanation.

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES' ACCOUNTS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I regret that the terms of the explanatory reply of your correspondent on this subject, which appeared in your last issue, render it necessary for me again to trouble you.

With every desire to take a general and impartial view of the statement made in the second paragraph of the article in your October number, I am unable to put any credible construction upon the general terms in which it is expressed. Certainly, neither the "free and easy systems" of book-keeping, nor the "startled officials" referred to by your correspondent, were to be seen in Assurance Offices on this side of the Tweed, and from your correspondent's reference to the able managers of the principal English offices, it is not likely that his description was more applicable to them than to their Scotch confrères. If this be so, it was surely unfair to characterize Life Offices generally in terms applicable only to some inferior companies.

I would only further add that the writer of the article, in concluding his explanatory reply, has apparently not observed that my remarks as to no material change in the book-keeping of Life Offices having been rendered necessary by the Act of 1870, had no reference whatever to the forms in which it was the practice of companies to prepare their annual accounts prior to that date, but were strictly limited to the book-keeping of the Life Offices referred to. It is a pity that your correspondent did not observe this in time to save himself the "astonishment" and "perplexity" which the statement appears to have occasioned him.—I am, &c.,

ACCOUNTANTS AND AUCTIONEERS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I beg to thank you for your courtesy in inserting my letter on the above subject in your last issue, and also for the editorial comments with which you were pleased to notice my communication. I regret, however, that the matter should not have been allowed a longer time for discussion, and that you deemed it necessary to raise, in justification of Accountants' acts, the plea that Solicitors tread as much, and as often, on our toes. As regards your remarks concerning private arrangements for the disposal of businesses, etc., my answer is simply, if private, where does the cogency of advertising them exist?

In again trespassing upon your space, I trust you will permit me to observe that, although the argument you use against the views I hold respecting the relative positions of the Accountant and the Auctioneer, is by no means to be unheeded, there does exist many an Accountant who transacts business which should properly and fairly be conducted by an

AUCTIONEER.

[If Auctioneer refers again to our remarks he will find that no such plea was urged in "justification" of Accountants. We said—"If there is any 'trenching,' Solicitors are guilty in an equal degree with Accountants." As to the second point of criticism, we referred to private sales only as compared with public auctions. —Ed. ACCOUNTANT.]

GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

The report submitted to the shareholders at the meeting held on the 29th October is of a very satisfactory character. Mr. W. H. Thornthwaite, the chairman, lucidly explained their position. He said: "The report states that, during the financial period, 3,518 proposals for assurance were made, and that 3,017 policies were issued, the aggregate assurances being £1,384,577. These, gentlemen, are very large figures; but in my opinion, they do not give a fair idea of the amount of labour, intelligence, and activity which is necessary to get together such an extent of business in a single year. It represents an average of upwards of sixty policies per week, and the amount of labour entailed, I need hardly say is very vast. For the results attained, a meed of praise is due to the agents who have devoted themselves so entirely to the interests of the society, to the energy of our various branches, and more especially, I think, to the very able and skilful executive which is possessed by this parent stem—our chief office. The report goes on to state that the income derived from premiums is £378,826, including £43,016 in premiums for the first year of assurance. I may say that the financial part of the report is a kind of paraphrase of the first and second schedules which have already been circulated amongst the members; so that, if I call your attention to those schedules, it will in effect be tracing the chief items of the report through those accounts. Referring to the first schedule, you will see that the amount of available fund with which the society commenced the year's operations was £1,842,795 9s. 8d. To that must be added the different receipts of the year. The new premiums were £43,016, and the renewals £338,914. It may strike you as curious, that although the new business during the year really produces an annual income of £47,000 odd, the amount set down here is only £43,000. I have explained this discrepancy on previous occasions. It is due to a number of the assurances being paid in quarterly and half-yearly premiums, and consequently the whole year's premium does not come into the account. We have, then, received as consideration for annuities £19,837 19s., and in interest and dividends £86,964, making a grand total receipt of £2,322,424. The amount which is really invested and producing interest is £1,828,225 1s., and the annual interest which this yields is 5·115 per cent. The amount which is, as I have explained, a kind of floating balance, is £171,646 7s. 3d. If you add this to the £1,828,000 odd, which is bearing interest, it will form a total, as I have just mentioned, of close upon £2,000,000 The interest which we receive upon that sum is equal to 4·65 per cent. Now, when I mention to you that our valuation as given to you last year is made upon a basis of 3½ per cent., you will see that the investments fully, and more than fully, bear out the rate at which the policies have been valued. This must, I am sure, be very satisfactory. The general operations of the year may be epitomized in this way: in round figures we have increased our contingent liabilities by £1,300,000 of new business, represented by an annual income of £47,000; contingent liabilities have been entirely extinguished to the amount of just upon half a million pounds; and we have been able to add to the general fund £106,000. The report having been adopted, Mr. Devonshire proposed that Messrs. G. H. Ladbury and Venn be re-appointed auditors, and in doing so paid a high tribute to the ability of those gentlemen. Mr. Janes seconded the motion, which was then put and carried. The Chairman proposed, in highly eulogistic terms, a very cordial vote of thanks for the great energy, skill, and urbanity with which their chief officer, Mr. Curtis, conducted the business of the office. Mr. J. Williams had great pleasure in seconding the vote of thanks. The resolution was carried with acclamation. We congratulate the directors and shareholders on the strong position of the society.

QUESTIONS UNDER A SOLICITOR'S BANKRUPTCY.

The Judge of the Sheffield County Court has been occupied for two days in dealing with an application affecting the trustees of the estate of John Whall, a solicitor of Worksop. The case has been referred to in previous numbers of the Accountant. The bankrupt died during the progress of the proceedings. On the 10th December the matter was brought before the Judge in the form of an application by Mr. J. R. Smith, of Mansfield, on behalf of Joseph Harvey Roper, letter-carrier, of Mansfield, for the recovery of certain deeds now in the possession of the trustees of the estate.—Mr. Pye Smith said he appeared on behalf of the trustees. There were several cases in which the mortgagor had paid over monies to the bankrupt to be handed over to the mortgagee. These monies had never been handed over, and the parties for a time thought all was right, but now they were brought face to face, rival claims were made for documents. The trustees felt that they could not decide between the parties, and asked them to come before his Honour.—Mr. Barker, instructed by Mr. Whall, son of the bankrupt, said he appeared on behalf of Mr. Wm. Squire Ward, who had paid off a debt, to object to have these papers given up to the original lender of the money, on the ground that they had discharged the debt by payment. He thought that if these documents should be given up to anybody they ought to be given up to his client. Having paid off the debt he was entitled to the documents. Mr. Smith said that with regard to the two sums of £100 they were advanced by Mr. Whall in Mr. Roper's name, and a promissory note was drawn in his favour, and an equitable charge for a memorandum of agreement upon certain property. At Mr. Whall's bankruptcy these papers were found among his papers, and, as Mr. Roper stated that he never gave Mr. Whall authority to receive the principal of the money, he applied to-day to make the trustees give up these papers. The Judge: The question arises whether the attorney is the agent or his client. Mr. Smith: That is so. We never gave any authority either expressed or implied. He then proceeded to quote from "Wittington v. Tate" and other cases in support of his case, and stated that he made the application under Rule 50. Mr. Barker desired to know under what section the application was made. The Judge: I suppose it is under section 72? Mr. Smith: No; it is under section 20. The Judge: I think you would be safer under section 72. Mr. Barker said the only effect of this application would be that they should give up the documents and they would be left to fight it out. He did not see that any advantage would arise from the papers being given up. The trustees were willing to produce the documents so that the parties could see them and copy them and pursue their remedies. It was an ex parte application to the Court to say who were the proper parties to hold the papers, yet his Honour's decision was not to be decisive, but the question was to be litigated upon hereafter. The application was quite unnecessary, as nothing would be gained or lost by it. If it were necessary to go into the case he could show to his Honour that his client was entitled to the papers. His Honour: If the papers are his, and there be no claim upon them, he ought to have them. Mr. Barker said they did claim them, but when the applicant said he would move hereafter he thought it would be better to let the trustees retain them and fight the action. His Honour: He is merely standing upon his rights, and if he is standing upon his rights he ought to have them. Mr. Barker: If your Honour would wish to hear me upon the rights I think I could show you that the papers belong to my client, but I do not think it is for your Honour to interfere. Mr. Pye-Smith: The trustees prefer that the Court would settle the matter. The Judge: The Court has power to settle the whole matter. Mr. Pye-Smith: There are several cases of this description, and it would be the cheapest way to settle the question of priority in this Court. Mr. Barker: If it is stated on the other side that your Honour should decide the question finally, subject of course to the Court of Appeal in Bankruptcy, I am willing that the case should go on, but not when it is declared that "we will get the decision from your Honour and fight it out hereafter." His Honour to Mr. Smith: Do you contend I have no jurisdiction in the whole matter? Mr. Smith: All we ask your Honour is to make an order for the papers to be given up to us. Mr. Pye-Smith: I have no power to put any pressure on Mr. Smith, but as a matter of saving expenses, the trustees would prefer that your Honour would decide this under section 72. We hold the deeds as trustees of Mr. Whall; the parties were at liberty to go into Court. His Honour: I shall consider it; I do not think I am quite clear on the point. Mr. Pye-Smith said they had no right to retain the papers; they belonged to one party or the other, but they thought it would be the cheaper method to let this Court decide the matter. Mr. Barker submitted that Mr. Smith had never proved the debt, and had therefore no locus standi. His Honour, to Mr. Smith: The objection to you is that you, not being a party to the bankruptcy, have no right to make a motion of this kind. If you submit yourself to the bankruptcy then you can make the motion. If the trustees retain the deeds wrongfully you can get them out of this Court through the trustees, and you can bring an action against them or any other body who may wrongfully hold the deeds. Mr. Pye-Smith asked what right Mr. Smith had, not being a creditor or representing a creditor, to come there and move in the bankruptcy? The Judge: He says, "The bankrupt wrongfully took upon himself to receive some money, and I, repudiating his action, wish to get my deeds or money." In answer to Mr. Pye-Smith, his Honour further said that the applicant could bring an action against him as trustee. Mr. Pye-Smith: I do not deny he can bring an action against us, but we want to have the question decided as cheaply as possible. His Honour said it was his impression that under the circumstances he had no jurisdiction. Mr. Smith said the deeds came into the hands of the trustees as trustees of the bankrupt. His Honour: The question is whether they can retain them or not. Mr. Pye-Smith: We do not want them on behalf of Mr. Whall, but we have two claims. Mr. Barker said that an action might be brought against the debtor, and the trustees would merely be required as witnesses to produce the papers. Mr. Pye-Smith: An action of detinue might be brought against us. Mr. Barker said that, looking at the first paragraph of the applicant's affidavit, they found that he stated that he gave Mr. Whall £650 to invest in his name, but it was clear that Mr. Whall had no specific instructions how to invest it. Applicant further stated that he had repeatedly asked Mr. Whall how the money was invested, which showed that up to the time of the bankruptcy applicant was ignorant of how the money was invested. The fact of the deeds remaining in possession of Mr. Whall when Mr. Roper could have claimed them showed the consent of the applicant in the action of Mr. Whall. His Honour: No, not consent. Mr. Barker: Well, if not consent at least acquiescence. He contended that the money was merely handed to Mr. Whall to invest as he thought proper. Mr. Smith stated that his client never applied for the money to Mr. Whall. Mr. Barker did not think that affected the position of his client. His Honour said that the question was whether Mr. Whall was the agent of Mr. Roper. Continuing further, he said this raised the whole question of jurisdiction. Sometime since the Court of Bankruptcy decided that they could enter into matters outside the bankruptcy, but this was too wide a jurisdiction, and later it was decided that they could not interfere in anything but the parties and matter within the bankruptcy. The case then stood over for a week, when his Honour gave judgment as follows :—This was a motion made on behalf of Joseph Harper Roper, and he applied to the Court for an order upon the trustees under the bankruptcy of John Whall to deliver up to him all deeds and documents belonging to him, particularly a certain indenture, dated 1871, between Cuckson on the one part, and Roper on the other part; and, secondly, a promissory note for £100, dated 1871, drawn by William Squire Ward in favour of Roper; and, thirdly, a memorandum of agreement, dated June, 1871, and made between Ward and Roper. The motion was served upon Ward, but not upon Cuckson; and the discussion that took place was really between Roper, Ward, and the trustee. The facts were very clear, and were not in dispute between the parties. Whall was a solicitor previous to his bankruptcy, and, as Roper's solicitor, he received from him £650 for the purpose of investment. Of that sum £100 was lent by Whall to Ward upon his promissory note and a memorandum, by way of equitable mortgage, which were the two documents sought by this motion to be given up. They remained in Whall's custody until his bankruptcy, and then they came into possession of the trustees. Roper now asked that they might be given up to him. Of course, if there was nothing more in the case he would be entitled to them, and the trustee would be wrong in detaining them; but the respondent Ward set up an entirely different case. He stated that after repeated applications he paid the money back to Whall, who had promised to return the note and memorandum, but did not do so, and he now claimed them. Therefore, upon the facts there was a question to be tried, but it was not a question between Roper or Ward and the trustee, but entirely a question between Roper and Whall. The question was, "Had he jurisdiction to make this order either by trying the question or without trying the question?" It was absurd to say that he had jurisdiction to make an order without trying the question, because that would be a palpable injustice. It was a monstrous proposition, and only required to be stated to show its absurdity. He did not consider that he had jurisdiction to settle that question, even if he were asked to do so. Supposing Roper brought an action to recover the money which he said was unpaid, could he (the Judge) restrain that action? Clearly not; but that he must do if he considered the question; therefore there was no jurisdiction for the Court of Bankruptcy to deal with this motion. Therefore, the motion must be refused, and he thought it might be refused with costs as against Ward, the respondent. With regard to the costs of the trustee, it would be for him to show that he would have incurred risk in giving up the documents. Mr. Pye-Smith replied that they had notice of rival claimants to these documents. His Honour thereupon granted the trustee his costs

RIVAL RECEIVERS.

The Registrar of the Manchester County Court has just reinstated a receiver who had been supplanted two or three days after his appointment, upon the action of certain creditors. The facts were as follows:—The debtor filed a petition on the 17th of November, and estimated the amount of his liabilities at £600. On the same day he filed a request and list of creditors representing debts to the amount of £293 10s. 9d. On the 19th of November he filed a further request representing £199 15s., and on the following day Mr. Harding (Messrs. Sutton and Harding), accountant, filed a nomination paper, signed by four creditors, for appointment as receiver and manager in lieu of Mr. Kidson, who was appointed on the filing of the petition. On the 23d of November the debtor filed a third request and list of creditors representing £102 13s. The aggregate amount of debts, as represented by the three lists, was £596. Mr. W. Cobbett subsequently applied, on behalf of certain creditors representing a majority in number and value, for an order of the Court, under the 262d and 263d rules, cancelling the appointment of Mr. Harding, and reinstating Mr. Kidson as receiver. He did so on the ground that Mr. Harding was the nominee simply of the holder of a bill of sale. Mr. Harding's nomination paper was signed by four creditors, representing £236. Of these, one (the holder of the bill of sale) was a creditor for £221, and the three others only £15. The nomination, therefore, of Mr. Harding was not signed by a majority in value, as appeared by the three requests filed, and therefore the order of the Court must be cancelled. Mr. Lascelles, who appeared to show cause against the order, said that Mr. Harding's nomination was perfectly regular, being supported by a majority of the creditors according to the lists then on the file, and although he admitted the force of Mr. Cobbett's argument, based upon the list now presented, still the order applied for was entirely within the discretion of the Court. Upon this the Registrar reinstated Mr. Kidson.

A QUESTION OF IRREGULAR PROXIES.

A case recently before the Manchester County Court affords some rather striking comments upon the proxy system. The matter arose out of the bankruptcy of Washington Irving, Mr. Kennion (instructed by Messrs. Earle, Oxford, and Earle) moving to set aside a motion which had been made in this case on behalf of the firm of J. B. Thompson and Co., of Liverpool. An order was made on the 4th of June by which a discharge was given to the bankrupt. That order was made by the court in pursuance of a resolution passed at a meeting of the creditors on the 4th of May. At that meeting Robert Wood Barker, one of the firm of Messrs. King and Company, who were creditors against the estate to the amount of £2,734, gave to Mr. Henry Earle proxies, and it was by means of these proxies that the resolution giving the bankrupt his discharge was carried. The learned counsel contended that at the time Robert Wood Barker gave the proxies on behalf of King and Company he had no power to do so, as they were then bankrupt, and whatever power he possessed had then vested in the trustee of the estate. Barker, at the time of the occurrence, was the only member of the firm of King and Company residing in England, the other members of the firm at the time of the bankruptcy being in India. These proxies given by Barker on behalf of the firm were therefore irregular and illegal. They were given by Barker as a partner of the firm, but at that time the partnership had long since been dissolved, and any power that he possessed when the firm existed had passed away. After the dissolution of partnership Mr. Barker went into liquidation, and, therefore, all the interest he had was vested in the trustee under his bankruptcy. The only person who could have given the proxies was the trustee. In the affidavits that had been filed there were allegations of fraud, but he (the learned counsel) would frankly say that there was no proof of fraud; but there was proof and suspicion of some sort of collusion between Barker and the bankrupt Irving. After the bankruptcy of Irving, Barker came under liquidation, and amongst the creditors was Irving, to whom it was alleged money had been lent by the firm of King and Company, and an unconditional discharge was given by Irving to Barker. This was the collusion of which he complained. Mr. Jordan contended that Irving's vote at the meeting of creditors did not affect Barker's discharge at all. There could be no doubt that Mr. Barker honestly believed that he had power to give the proxies, and before the motion could be set aside it must be proved that fraud had been committed in giving the proxies. The Registrar said that unless it could be shown to the Court that the order which was sought to be set aside had been obtained by direct fraud, the Court must dismiss the motion. It was clear that there was no evidence of fraud. The question was whether the order of discharge was valid or not. The Court having granted the order it must be held as valid, and it could not be rescinded unless proof was given of fraud. Proof of this had not been given, and he would make an order dismissing the motion, but without costs.

Mr. James Waddell, accountant, has been appointed receiver in the liquidation of Messrs. Wylde and Co., bankers, of Southwell, Nottinghamshire, who suspended payment on the 14th ult., with liabilities estimated at £100,000.

SENTENCES FOR FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

At the Central Criminal Court, Dec. 17th, Arthur Cooper, who had been convicted under one of the clauses of the Bankruptcy Act, of unlawfully obtaining goods within four months of his bankruptcy, under the false colour and pretence that they were to be used for the legitimate purposes of his trade, and afterwards disposing of them with intent to cheat and defraud his creditors, was brought up for judgment. The Common Sergeant said he fully concurred in the verdict of the jury, and it was quite impossible for mercantile men to have returned any other verdict than they had done. There were, however, some circumstances of mitigation in the case, and he believed that his conduct had been reckless rather than intentionally fraudulent. This being so, as he had been already in prison for a month, he should only sentence him to be further imprisoned for a month. —James William Oliver was charged with obtaining goods within four months of his bankruptcy, with intent to defraud his creditors, and also with wilfully making away with his books, and with making false answers in his examination before the Court of Bankruptcy. In the course of the case it was proved that on some occasions the defendant directed his cashier not to make any more entries in the daily takings book, and that only £20 were entered when the actual takings were £50; it also appeared that during a period of seven weeks' trading the defendant had actually taken nearly £800 over the counter, which was entirely unaccounted for. It was further proved that the prisoner's books were last seen in his own possession, and from that time they had been missing. The jury found the defendant guilty, and he was sentenced to eighteen months' hard labour.

See-Saw in Bankruptcy.—The Law Journal says:—"The decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy in ex parte Bolland re Holden is very unsatisfactory. The solicitor for the trustee was laudably anxious to settle the question whether summonses under section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act must be served by the high bailiff, or whether such summonses could be served by the solicitor. Section 96 relates to the discovery of the bankrupt's property, and empowers the court, on the application of the trustee, to summon before it for examination the bankrupt, or any one who can give information concerning the bankrupt's property or dealings. It is manifest that cases might arise in which it would be of advantage that the solicitor should serve such a summons, as having a better opportunity of knowing the parties and effecting service without delay, and without any uncertainty as to the identity of the parties served. Now rule 58 says that, unless otherwise directed or permitted by the rules, it shall be the duty of the high bailiff to serve all orders, summonses, petitions, and notices; while rule 167 permits a subpœna to be served by the person issuing it, or his attorney. The summons contemplated in section 96 is in the nature of a subpœna. When the matter was before the County Court Judge at Liverpool, his Honour thought that he had no authority to permit the solicitor to serve the summons. In fact, he considered that rule 58 was imperative; that it not merely defined the duty of the high bailiff, but made service by the high bailiff essential to its validity. In a word, his Honour held that he had no option or discretion in the matter, and so refused the application of the solicitor to be allowed to effect service of the summons without the intervention of the high bailiff. The Chief Judge dismissed the appeal on the ground that the County Court Judge had exercised his discretion in the case, and that, as it was a matter of public convenience, as to which the County Court Judge could well decide, he would not interfere. The result is that the Chief Judge has refused to impeach the discretion of the Court below on a matter concerning which that court held that it had no discretion. The Law Times, referring to the appeal says:—"Without confining ourselves to the facts of this particular case, we do not hesitate to say that in very many cases it would facilitate the despatch of such business as that in question to allow solicitors acting for trustees to serve such summonses. Solicitors are often better informed as to the whereabouts of those proposed to be so served, and are, moreover, more likely to take unusual trouble to effect such service."

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

December 2.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray.)

In re M'Ewen and M'Ewen.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition was recently filed by Alexander M'Ewen, a well-known financial agent, described as of Lombard House, George-yard, Lombard-street; and Mr. Munns (Lewis, Munns, and Co.) now applied to the Court under the following circumstances. He stated that when the separate petition was filed by Alexander M'Ewen, his brother, Lawrence T. M'Ewen, was in America, but he had since returned to England. The receiver (Mr. S. L. Price) upon investigating the case, found that a considerable portion of the liabilities and assets which Alexander M'Ewen considered to be separate were in fact joint, and in this state of things it was deemed expedient that a joint petition should be filed, which, accordingly, had been done. Mr. Price stated that a large portion of the indebtedness of Lawrence T. M'Ewen, in respect of which he was liable, on the 17th June, 1873, when the partnership between him and Alexander M'Ewen was dissolved, was still unsatisfied, and that a considerable portion of the partnership assets existing at that date were still unadministered. He was also satisfied that many of the transactions of the debtors had since the date of the dissolution of partnership been so conducted as to create a continuing partnership between the parties. The appointment of Mr. Price as receiver under the joint petition was now proposed.—His Honour made the appointment, and granted an interim injunction restraining proceedings by creditors, so far as the same affected Lawrence T. M'Ewen.—The liabilities are about £400,000, against assets £300,000, and Lawrence T. M'Ewen is stated to have separate property to the value of £6,000.

(Before Mr Registrar Roche.)

In re Lemon Hart and Son.—The bankrupts, George White and David Hart, had traded in copartnership as wine and spirit merchants in George-street, Tower-hill, under the name of Lemon Hart and Son. The failure occurred about six weeks since, and a petition for liquidation, filed by the debtors, fell to the ground, the creditors preferring that the estate should be administered in bankruptcy. Mr. Arthur Cooper, public accountant, was now appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection, consisting of five of the principal creditors.—The statement of affairs disclosed liabilities to the amount of £83,069, and assets, £28,608.—Messrs. Hollams, Son, and Coward are the solicitors to the proceedings; Mr. Linklater represented the debtors.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring Rice, as Chief Judge.)

In re Sir William Russell, Bart.—This was an application for leave to register certain resolutions come to by creditors in this case, providing, inter alia, for liquidation of the debtor's affairs by arrangement. It appeared that the debtor, who traded as a shipowner and merchant in Salter's-hall-court, Cannon-street, had, under a former petition filed about four years since, covenanted to pay, as a condition that he should receive his discharge, the sums of £4,000 and £5,000 respectively. He paid the £4,000 and £2,000 out of the £5,000, and the question arose whether the resolutions come to under the second petition for liquidation could be registered, having regard to the non completion of the proceedings under the first petition. The case was argued about three weeks since, when judgment was reserved.—His Honour said that registration was opposed on the ground that the resolutions were unreasonable and inequitable, and that in substance the debtor had no assets. This latter part of the objection proceeded upon the assumption that the debtor could have no assets inasmuch as the proceedings under the first petition had not been closed when the second petition was filed. In reply it was said that it would be premature for the Court at this stage of the proceedings to consider the question of assets; but his Honour took a different view, as the proceedings under the first liquidation were still pending, and therefore primâ facie there were no assets capable of administration under the present petition. One of the resolutions was in the nature of a composition resolution, but it had been duly confirmed; and another resolution, granting the debtor his discharge subject to certain conditions, was ultra vires. Upon the whole the Court must decline to allow the registration.—Mr. Munns gave notice of appeal, and his Honour, in view of the importance of the question, reserved the costs, stating that it would be very desirable to obtain the opinion of the Court of Appeal upon the subject.

December 14.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE BOTTING, IN RE BASTEL.—This was an appeal from the Sussex County Court, holden at Brighton, the question mainly involved being whether a trustee appointed under composition resolutions to receive and distribute composition payable by the debtor was entitled to reject a proof tendered by a creditor. In this case the trustee had rejected a proof tendered by Mr Botting, and such rejection had been confirmed by the County Court judge. Mr Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr Crump now argued that a trustee appointed as in this case was not at liberty to reject a proof, his duty, as prescribed by the resolutions, being simply to receive and distribute the composition. A trustee under a liquidation by arrangement had larger powers; but in composition resolutions the estate continued to be vested in the debtor, and any questions arising upon the proofs had to be decided between the creditors on the one hand and the debtor on the other, not between the creditors and the trustees. Here, also, the trustee had absolutely rejected the proof, instead of admitting such portions of it as to which there could be no question, and requiring further evidence in support of the residue. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Horton Smith were counsel for the trustee. The Chief Judge, without deciding whether a trustee appointed under composition resolutions was entitled to reject a proof, held that in the present case the proof ought not to have been absolutely rejected, and directed an inquiry for the purpose of ascertaining what amount was actually due to the creditor, the costs being reserved. The order of the Court below was accordingly discharged.

December 15.

(Before Mr Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE G. C. HOUNSELL.—This case came before the Court on an application to register the resolutions passed at the first meeting of creditors. The objections to proofs were withdrawn on all sides; but the meeting having been twice adjourned by verbal resolutions to different premises, the point was raised whether the proceedings were in order. Mr Maitland argued that the proceedings were quite regular, it being a continuous meeting. The Registrar decided that by Rule 275 the Court was bound to take cognizance of only such resolutions as are reduced into writing. Registration was accordingly allowed.

December 17.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE LEWIS BRODZIAK.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination. The bankrupt had traded as a merchant in Coleman-street. Mr. T. Phelps, who appeared for the trustee, stated that the bankrupt had filed accounts disclosing liabilities to the amount of £10,455, with assets £3,656, of which £3,455 was represented by an alleged surplus from consignments to Sydney; but according to information received from Sydney, the consignees, instead of being indebted, had a large claim upon the estate. It was therefore submitted that the bankrupt ought not to be allowed to pass upon the accounts as they stood. Mr. J. Emanuel, for the bankrupt, submitted that he was not responsible for the accounts rendered by other parties. He had filed the best accounts in his power, and any further adjournment would be useless. His Honour held that the bankrupt was bound to give further particulars respecting the consignments, and said that there must be another adjournment for that purpose.

December 21.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE ASA P. STANFORD.—The bankrupt, described as of 6, Great Winchester-street-buildings, applied (by adjournment) to pass his public examination. Mr. Willoughby, for the trustee, said the bankrupt, who was an American, came to this country in September, 1872, being then possessed of £10,000. It appeared that he had since engaged in large speculative transactions jointly with a person named Davis, who afterwards left the country. Profits to the extent of £116,000 had been made, but the bankrupt's accounts now disclosed a total liability of £42,000, the assets being returned at £120 only. The bankrupt had furnished a statement of losses in explanation of his deficiency, containing the following items:—Loss by "Josepha" Mine, purchased in Spain, £8,000; loss by iron patent, £10,000; ditto by Montrotier Asphalte shares, £5,000; ditto by Saturn Mining shares and debentures, £10,000; ditto by Erie shares, £60,000; depreciation in value of "Teconia" shares, £8,400; depreciation in other shares by fall in markets, £50,000; and private expenditure, £5,000. It was submitted that further details of these losses should be furnished. Mr. Harston, who supported the bankrupt, said it appeared from his answers to interrogatories, that he could furnish no better accounts, and it would, therefore, be useless to keep him before the Court. His Honour held that the bankrupt could not be allowed to pass his examination without furnishing a better account of his deficiency, and therefore ordered a further adjournment.

December 23.

(Before the Hon. W C. SPRING RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE SUSSEX NEWTON.—The bankrupt, formerly carrying on business as a licensed victualler at the Duke of Sussex tavern, High-street, Kensington, was adjudicated in August, 1870, and subsequently passed his examination on accounts showing debts to the amount of £9,808, with assets £7,879; but it appeared that nothing had been realised for the creditors. This case now came before the Court on the hearing of an application for the confirmation of certain resolutions recently come to at a meeting of creditors, held in pursuance of the 28th section, providing for the acceptance of a composition of 1s. in the pound, payable by two instalments at six and twelve months; and the annulment of the bankruptcy. Mr. Polak, a creditor, opposed, and stated that but for the resolutions which had been come to, the right of the creditors to enforce payment of the full amount of their debts would have revived by operation of the 54th section, inasmuch as the bankruptcy had been closed very nearly three years before the passing of the resolutions, and the bankrupt had not obtained his order of discharge. His Honour said that he was bound to give effect to the wishes of the majority of creditors, and as they had agreed to accept 1s. in the pound in satisfaction of their claims, the resolutions would be confirmed.

IN RE W. G. SWINHOE.—This was also an application for the confirmation of resolutions come to under the 28th section. The resolutions provided that the bankruptcy should be annulled, the bankrupt agreeing to remain liable for the payment of the full amount of the provable debts. His Honour, considering the resolutions absurd, being in the nature neither of a composition arrangement, nor of a scheme of settlement as contemplated by the Act, refused the application.

IN CHANCERY: BENNETT'S TRUSTS.

On August 22, 1872, Mr. C. J. Mold filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, and on September 16, 1872, his creditors passed the necessary resolution for liquidation, and granted his order of discharge from December 1, 1872. On February 4, 1873, the registrar certified the order of discharge. J. B. H. Bennett died on January 13, 1873, having by his will given a legacy of £1,000 to C. J. Mold. The executors paid this money into Court under the Trustee Relief Act. C. J. Mold and certain assignees petitioned for payment out to them, but Vice-Chancellor Bacon held that the discharge did not take effect till the registrar's certificate, and that consequently the legacy was the property of the trustee under the liquidation.

GLASGOW INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.—In our notice of this Institute published in the December number, it was stated that the applicant for admission is required to declare that he is not engaged in the business of "land officer;" this should have been printed law officer, the Scotch term for solicitor.

Mr. W. T S. DANIEL, Q.C., on Tuesday, the 8th December delivered judgment, in the Bradford County Court, on the motion of Mr. A. B. Kemp, trustee under the bankruptcy of Moses Topham, for an order compelling the Exchange and Discount Banking Company, Bradford, to pay to him an aggregate amount of £1,695 3s. 6d., which Topham had paid into their bank after they knew he was insolvent. His Honour granted the order with costs.

THE WARDMOTES.—Mr. Waddell, of the firm of James Waddell and Co., accountants, has been elected as a representative of the Ward of Cheap, in place of Mr. Tegg, resigned. At the Bassishaw Wardmote, Mr. W. H. Pannell (Slater and Pannell, accountants) was re-elected, and in returning thanks spoke of the Temple Bar question, and of the Municipal Government of London Bill.

Messrs. G. Whiffin and Co., public accountants, have announced that from the 1st January, 1875, the name of their firm will be altered to "G. Whiffin and Schneidau," and will consist, as hitherto, of Mr. George Whiffin and Mr. Charles John Schneidau.

A FREE AND EASY INSOLVENT.—A meeting of the creditors of David Davies, of Dark Gate, Carmarthen, was held at the Town Hall, Carmarthen, on Saturday, the 26th inst. Messrs J. Parsons (J. and S. Parsons), Bristol; J. Kemp, Birmingham; Charles T. Starkey (Lomas Harrison and Starkey), Birmingham; and Mr Rollason, from Mr G. B. Lowe's, solicitor, Birmingham, were representing nearly the whole of the trade creditors in their several districts. There were also present Mr Thomas (Barnard, Thomas, Cawker, and Co.), Swansea, representing a few trade creditors. Messrs Green and Griffiths and the insolvent's solicitor represented a number of persons claiming to be creditors for money lent. The total liabilities are estimated at £5,041 18s. 8d., and the assets at £2,039 12s. 3d. There was considerable dissatisfaction expressed at the meeting being called for the day after Christmas Day, such day being a general holiday, and also being held at Carmarthen, when the principal trade creditors resided in the Midland district. Much discussion ensued as to two proofs held by Mr Griffiths, viz., one of the insolvent's brother for £790 13s., and one of Lewis Daniel (the insolvent's late partner in the ironmongery trade and present partner in the market tolls) for £529. In answer to questions as to the cause of the deficiency of £3,000, insolvent stated that he had drunk and smoked most of it, and been robbed of the remainder. An offer of 7s. 6d. in the pound was made by the debtor's solicitor and refused. The meeting was adjourned until the following Saturday, to be held at the offices of Messrs Lomas Harrison and Starkey, 37, Cannon-street, Birmingham.

Mr. Edward Sylvester, accountant, of Oxford, was amongst the victims of the railway accident at Shipton on the 24th December; his remains were interred on the following Tuesday.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold - security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

REPORT OF THE DIRECTORS OF THE GRESHAM LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

THE DIRECTORS have the pleasure to present their Annual Report on the operations of the 26th Financial Year of the Society, ending June 30, 1874.

During that year 3,518 proposals were made to the Society for assuring the sum of £1,623,661. Of these proposals 3,017 were accepted for the assurance of £1,384,577, and Policies were issued for that amount of assurance, with a corresponding annual income of £47,577 18s. 11d. The Annuities granted during the year were £1,420 7s. 10d. per annum.

The Income derived from Premiums, after deducting therefrom the amount paid for Re-assurances, was £378,826 17s. 10d., including £43,016 8s. 3d. in Premiums for the first year of assurance.

The balance of the Interest Account amounted to £86,964 1s. 8d. The interest, which had become payable during the year but which had not been received at the date of closing the accounts, is included in the item of "Outstanding Interests" among the assets.

The claims made upon the Society, and admitted during the year, under Life Assurance Policies, were for an amount of £174,713 0s. 8d., of which sum £467 13s. 3d. was reassured, whilst the claims under Endowment Policies which had reached their term, amounted to £54,164 8s. The sum of £31,239 2s. 6d. was also paid to Policyholders for the surrender of the policies which they desired to discontinue.

After providing for these amounts—for the annuities falling due within the year, for all necessary office expenses and every other charge on the income of the year—there remained a balance of £105,273 17s. 4d., which merged in the fund available for the existing policies of the Society. This fund amounted, at the end of the financial year, to £1,927,357 7s., and together with the amount of £50,802 1s. 3d. reserved for settlement of claims outstanding for the payment of annuities, &c., not applied for, and for other purposes specified in the balance-sheet, make up a total of £1,999,871 8s. 3d., which the Society possess in realised assets, as shown in the 2nd Schedule.

The accounts have been duly audited by G. H. Ladbury, Esq., the public accountant (a shareholder of the Society), on the part of the shareholders, and by the notary public, William Webb Venn, Esq. (a policyholder), on behalf of the policyholders. The whole of the securities, or documents representing the realised assets of the Society, have been verified both by the Directors and by the Auditors above named.

The funds of the Society invested at interest will, upon the average, yield fully 5 per cent. The income from interest on invested funds, added to that arising from premiums, raises the general income of the Society for the current year to £471,684 12s. 4d.

A list in detail of realised assets, although not required by the terms of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, is subjoined to this report.

This detailed list of the assets shows the nature of the securities selected for investment, the nominal capital purchased, and the price paid for it. Therefore, a correct judgment on the value of the investments can be formed.

The Directors have given complete information as to the composition and value of their invested funds, deeming it essential to the full enlightenment of the assured upon so important a branch of the operations of a Life Assurance Company.

With reference to the freehold property belonging to the Society in the Poultry, the Directors have to report that the negotiations, which they have been carrying on for some time past with the Commissioners of Sewers, for the mutual cession and acquisition of ground, have been brought to a satisfactory conclusion.

Before they could arrange terms with this Society, the Commissioners of Sewers found it necessary to negotiate with the Corporation of the City of London, and to purchase from them some part of the area required by the Society for its new offices.

These negotiations were unavoidably very protracted; but the additional property required from the Commissioners gives to the whole a greatly enhanced value, and fully justifies the delay which these negotiations have occasioned in the prosecution of the works.

The whole freehold area, which has now become the property of this Society has a frontage, in the most central position of the City of London, of 1[illegible]8 feet, and it will be covered by a suitable building standing alone.

The Directors retiring on the present occasion are William Trego, Alfred Hutchison Smee, and Joseph Williams, Esquires, who, being eligible, are recommended by the Board for re-election.

Mr. Ladbury and Mr. Venn retire as Auditors, but, being eligible, they offer themselves again for election—the former on behalf of the shareholders, and the latter on behalf of the policyholders.

The Directors are convinced, that, by persevering in the same course of prudent and energetic action which they have followed hitherto, the Society will maintain its present high position amongst kindred institutions.

By order of the Board.

The Objects of the Society are—

To promote the acquisition of those branches of knowledge which are essential to the practice of an Accountant; to decide upon questions of professional usage or courtesy; and generally to advance the position and interests of Members of the profession.

CONSTITUTION.

The Society shall consist of three classes of Members, namely, Fellows, Associates, and Honorary Members, with a class of Students attached.

ELECTION OF ASSOCIATES.

Every application for admission as an Associate of this Society must be made to the Council, and must be accompanied by a written recommendation from at least two Associates.

ENTRANCE FEES AND ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Every Associate who shall be elected a FELLOW of the Society shall, upon such election, pay the sum of £15 15s. by way of fee upon his election as Fellow. Every person admitted as an ASSOCIATE of the Society shall, on admission, pay the sum of £5 5s. by way of entrance fee if he be practising in the City of London or within the London postal district; or the sum of £3 3s, if he be practising beyond such district; and the undermentioned YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Society, that is to say:—FELLOWS, £5 5s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING IN THE CITY OF LONDON, or within the London postal district, £2 2s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING BEYOND SUCH DISTRICT, £1 1s.; and STUDENTS, £1 1s. each.

Every candidate to be hereafter proposed for admission as an Associate shall be twenty-one years of age or upwards, and shall come within one of the following conditions:—

(1.) He shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership as a public accountant, on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have made his application on or before the first day of January, 1873.

(2.) Or shall have been a clerk to a public accountant on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership, as a public accountant for three years consecutively after that date, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1878.

(3.) Or shall have served under articles for a period of three years to a public accountant in actual practice.

(4.) Or shall have been employed as accountant to a corporation or public body for three years, or as a clerk to a public accountant, or firm of accountants, for a period of seven years at the least, but the employment need not have been for more than two years continuously with one and the same person or firm.

(5.) Or shall have taken a degree at one or other of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, London, or Dublin, and shall have served under articles for a period of two years to a public accountant or firm of accountants.

(6.) But no candidate shall be eligible for admission as an associate after the 1st day of January, 1878, until he shall have passed an examination as to his proficiency to the satisfaction of the Examiners of the Society.

(7.) Or shall conform to such conditions as the Council shall in any particular case require to be observed, but such admission shall only be made upon the written recommendation of at least three-fourths of the Council present at a Meeting specially called for the purpose.

STUDENTS.

Students shall be persons, not under 18 years of age, who are or have been pupils of Fellows or Associates of the Society, and who have the intention of becoming accountants; and such persons may continue Students until they attain the age of 26 years.

Further information can be obtained, and copies of the Rules can be had, upon application to the Secretary.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.

It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

UPHOLSTERERS, FURNITURE DEALERS, and Others. A very old established BUSINESS, situated in a most important Market Town in Hampshire, is to be SOLD by a Trustee on most reasonable terms. No one need apply who cannot give references showing he possesses about £1,000. Apply personally, or by Solicitor, to Messrs. BARRETT and PATEY, 8, Finsbury Circus, London. E.C.; Mr. S. CHANDLER, Basingstoke; or to Mr. W. S. COOPER, Auctioneer, Basingstoke.

TO SOLICITORS.—A Gentleman is anxious to article his Son to a good Firm of Solicitors. 100 Guineas Premium will be paid. Address—A, ACCOUNTANT Office, 62, Gracechurch Street, E.C.

The Accountant

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand.

The Accountant.

JANUARY 9, 1875.

Two correspondents, whose letters we print in another column, call attention, in a clear and practical manner, to some of the defects in the Bankruptcy Act, and suggest amendments which well deserve consideration by the Lord Chancellor's Committee. "Matter of Fact's" letter directly hits a blot which is, we believe, the main cause of nearly all the delay, expense, and inconvenience which occur in the working of the Act: that is, the appointment, with a desire of saving expense, of a trustee who has really no professional acquaintance with his duties. In very many cases one of the creditors is chosen trustee; a good man of business, possibly, in the ordinary relations of life, thoroughly honest, knowing perhaps enough bookkeeping to enable him to keep his accounts with sufficient correctness as regards his own affairs, but utterly incompetent to unravel the intricate meshes in which the affairs of a bankrupt are frequently involved. Such a man is soon in difficulties. The accounts of the bankrupt have probably been kept in a very loose and unsatisfactory style; of the creditors, the majority may be straightforward honest men, but some may be inclined to adjust their proofs to meet the probability of a small dividend, or may be in open or secret league with the bankrupt. Such a trustee naturally resorts to a solicitor on every occasion, in alarm at the liabilities and responsibilities he is incurring, and declines to take any step whatever, unless he is fortified by legal advice. Of course, costs under these conditions, soon become excessive and the mythical Jarndyce v. Jarndyce, is repeated in many a trifling case of bankruptcy.

It is generally in the instance of small estates that these miscarriages occur. In the effort to save money, and to carry the proceedings through in as economical a manner as possible, the creditors are apt to avoid seeking the assistance of really qualified persons. This leads us to notice the advantages of the Scotch system, under which a staff of trained and qualified accountants is always at hand from whom a proper trustee can be selected. The saving of expense by the adoption of this course would be immense, and it would be, in reality, almost as acceptable to solicitors as to creditors, Many of the occasions on which the advice of the solicitor is sought are such as demand the aid of practical experience rather than of deep legal knowledge. The doubts and hesitation of the unfortunate trustees are such as would never occur to a practised mind, and are such as the most nervous of tradesmen placed suddenly in a position of responsibility, would never entertain, if he was chosen as a trustee on a second occasion. And a respectable solicitor is placed in a somewhat delicate position, in such a matter. He has either to submit to have his time occupied without making any charge, or else must deliver a bill of costs made up of trifling items with the probability of finding himself a mark for the light artillery of the cheap press, and the columns of our contemporaries filled with indignant references to the disgraceful extravagance of the new Bankruptcy Act. But a skilled accountant would stand in a very different position. He would not only be able to disentangle difficult accounts, but he would make light of most of the so-called legal difficulties which prove so formidable to the inexperienced. The Act presents but little real difficulty, and the very slight knowledge of law which is required for its administration would soon be learnt by familiarity with its provisions.

Under such circumstances far more reliance might be placed by both court and creditors, upon the trustee's knowledge of his duties. He might be allowed to give notice of his appointment to creditors who had commenced actions, and after such notice no creditor should be allowed to continue proceedings without leave of the Court; while if he was not hampered with vexatious regulations, he would soon be able to lay a clear statement of facts before the creditors. He might, also, be armed with decisive powers as to admitting or rejecting proofs; and further, have power to state a short case for the opinion of the Court, when any novel or difficult point arises, so as to obtain a decision for his guidance in the shortest and most summary manner, and without swelling the expenses by legal costs. Indeed, the Court ought at once, on an application by a trustee, to give an authoritative interpretation of any of its rules. Our practical correspondent who signs himself "A Trustee in Bankruptcy," objects also to the vexatiousness of a three-monthly audit of the trustee's accounts, and the difficulty he finds in getting a committee to meet with sufficient regularity for the purpose either of auditing the accounts or certifying that there have really been no accounts to audit. His proposition of having the accounts verified by affidavit, and then audited by the Comptroller, seems to us thoroughly sound. The practice of verifying accounts by affidavit is common in proceedings in the chambers of the Chancery Judges, and is found to work well there. And then the double passing of accounts is absurd. At present, the trustee, having passed his accounts with the Comptroller, goes over them again with the Official Assignee for the "satisfaction of the Court." If the Court is not satisfied with the approval of the Comptroller, who is one of its officials, it is not easy to see what special virtue can be attached to the approval of another official, even though he bears the time-honoured title of Official Assignee. Surely the certificate of either of these officers ought to be sufficient. Considering the constitution of the Lord Chancellor's Committee we would urge upon those of our friends who have practical experience of the defects of the Bankruptcy Act, to communicate to us any suggestions for their amendment, not only with reference to the points we have mooted above, but as to the general working of the Act. The important point obviously is, how to realise the assets of a debtor to the best advantage, and with the least possible delay, and at the same time at the smallest cost consistent with efficiency. Whether the amendment sought is to be effected by removal of vexatious restrictions, by the creation of a regular practised body of trustees, or by some other method, can be known only by a comparison of experiences. In any case the collection of such a body of skilled opinion can scarcely fail to bear good fruit.

The point as to the rival receivers noticed last week in our reports from the Manchester County Court is so obvious, even to a non-legal mind, that it is difficult to imagine how it ever came to be seriously raised. Nothing is clearer than that the choice and appointment of a receiver is invariably in the discretion of the Court. In the Courts of Equity an order will be made for the appointment of a receiver, on due cause being shown, but, unless with the consent of all parties, and even then only after careful discussion, no individual is actually named for the office, but it is referred to the Judge in Chambers to select a fitting person. In Bankruptcy proceedings the receiver is not, as he frequently is in the Court of Chancery, a permanent official, but is appointed merely to preserve the property and prevent litigation till a trustee is duly chosen. If the Registrar of the Manchester County Court had upheld the appointment of Mr. Harding on the ground that he was the nominee of a statutory number of the creditors who had proved at a certain date, he would have set a very dangerous precedent. In that case the receiver would be liable to be removed at every meeting of creditors, as the majority fluctuated with the accession of new proofs, and the uncertainty of his position would completely paralyse his utility. In any case, however, the Registrar's judgment was correct. The gentleman appointed at the filing of the petition, chosen, it is to be presumed, after due evidence as to his fitness, ought not to have been capriciously removed from his post, at the will of the majority of the creditors for the time being, and it is easy to see how a collusive arrangement might be effected very detrimental to the interests of the bonâ fide creditors. If, on the other hand, Mr. Kidson was properly removed, it follows as a matter of course that as soon as, by further proofs coming in, the minority who had supported him became a majority, they were justified in appealing to the registrar to reinstate him. In the interests of all concerned, we hope that the registrar used his discretion on the first-mentioned ground.

The case of Mr. H. D. Marsh, in which Registrar Keene refused to register a resolution for liquidation on the ground that the "Court of Bankruptcy was never intended to be the means of whitewashing debtors," seems a little at variance with the plain wording of the Act. The 125th section deals with liquidation by arrangement, and the 4th subdivision provides that upon a "special resolution for liquidation, together with the statement of the assets and debts of the debtor, and the name of the trustee appointed, and of the members, if any, of the committee of inspection being presented to the Registrar, it shall be his duty to inquire whether such resolution has been passed in manner directed by this section, but if satisfied that it has been so passed, and that a trustee has been appointed, he shall forthwith register the resolution." If therefore, as seems by the report was the case, the resolution was regularly passed, the Registrar was bound to register the resolution, whatever may have been his private knowledge of the purposes for which the Court of Bankruptcy was not meant. The 9th subdivision, too, provides that the discharge of the debtor shall be granted by the creditors, and they might refuse to grant this, even though the liquidation proceeded. Moreover, the 48th section of the Act provides that an order of discharge shall be granted if the creditors think that "the failure of the bankrupt to pay ten shillings in the pound, has in their opinion arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt cannot justly be held responsible, and desire that an order of discharge should be granted to him," which seems to have been the case here. It may be observed, too, that the suspension or witholding of the order of discharge is in the discretion of the Court, but that the creditors must pass a special resolution to call the attention of the Court to the fact that the bankrupt has made default in giving up property, or is to be prosecuted as a fraudulent debtor. In Mr. Marsh's case this does not seem to have been shown. To punish a man for reasons apparently dehors the Act is possibly another thing, which was never meant by Parliament when they passed the Act.

The two cases on the law of Bills of Sale, reported in our present number, require but slight comment. The first case, re James, proceeds in accordance with the doctrine that the date of the act of bankruptcy is the date from which the trustee's rights commence; and as Harris and Co. had notice of this act their claim was clearly bad, except as regards the bills of sale, which they had paid, and which were registered before the committal of the act of bankruptcy. As the holders would have been entitled to enforce their security, the creditors generally are not damnified by the ordinary rules of equity being allowed to prevail, and the brewers are allowed to retain the money they had actually paid. The second case seems to press heavily upon the money lender, as the "condition," which he omitted to register, though hard upon the debtor, was not of a kind to make the bill of sale illusory. The point worthy of notice in this case, is that the omission to register the slightest memorandum involves the invalidity of a bill of sale as against any trustee or creditor enforcing his legal rights, if the goods are in the "apparent possession" of the bankrupt. In this case, though a man was in possession, he seems not to have interfered in the management of the farm. The moral to be deduced is, that holders of bills of sale should exercise their rights more in their own interests than in those of their debtor.

A report of a case in which a post-nuptial settlement was set aside in consequence of the bankruptcy of the settlor, leads us to the consideration of the law on this subject as it now stands, a point on which a good deal of misconception exists. Formerly a settlement not made for valuable consideration could be upset only upon proof that the settlor was indebted and insolvent at the time he executed the settlement and the onus lying upon the creditors to show this, gave rise to many scandals, The 91st section now provides that any voluntary settlement made by a trader is absolutely void as against creditors, if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years after the date of settlement, and will be void if the settlor become bankrupt within ten years from its date, unless he can prove that at the time of making the settlement, he was able to pay his debts in full without the aid of the property comprised in such settlement, a fact very difficult of proof. It must be observed that these provisions apply only to the case of one of the classes of persons defined as traders in the schedule to the Act. In the case of a non-trader the old law stands. An antenuptial settlement, even in the case of a trader, will however almost invariably hold good, althouh the whole of his property be settled, leaving him nearly insolvent. Any interest he has reserved for himself will nevertheless devolve on the trustee. Such, for instance, is a first or second life interest in the property. Such a settlement might however be set aside, as has been done by the Court of Chancery, if the Court considers that the marriage was a mere arrangement for the purpose of defrauding the creditors. But since Hardey v. Green, marriage settlements are almost unimpeachable, and this view has been taken in a very recent decision in Bankruptcy.

An important point to trustees was decided in the case re Bostel, (reported in the present number,) which narrows to extreme limits the duties and rights of a trustee under an arrangement for a composition. In case of bankruptcy, or of liquidation, the duty devolves upon the trustee of accepting or rejecting the proof of any creditor. He is governed in these cases by the 72d and 313th rules. On examination of the proof, if he considers the evidence of the debt unsatisfactory, he can peremptorily reject the claim, and no dividend is, in this case, payable to such creditor, unless within fourteen days from the time of the rejection of his proof he has appealed to the Court to vary or reverse the decision. In the case of a composition, it is authoritatively decided that the duty of a trustee is, to be the mere channel for the reception and distribution of the amount due to each creditor. This construction is fully justified by the wording of the Act. At first sight the distinction seems unreasonable. The proceedings are so little varied in any of the three ways of arrangement mentioned in the Act, that the rules for the guidance of the trustee are nearly invariable. In liquidation or bankruptcy, however, it must be noted that all the property of the bankrupt vests at once in the trustee. In the case of a composition the bankrupt retains possession of his property on the condition of paying duly the amount he covenants to pay. In any case the ultimate acceptance or rejection of a proof must depend upon the Court, if the creditor choose to appeal to it. The reason for the decision probably rests on the inferior authority of the position of a trustee under a composition as compared with a liquidation. In the one case the whole management of the debtor's estate devolves upon him to the exclusion of the debtor himself, in the other case he has no right to do more than obtain and distribute the composition. He is in fact a mere executive officer of the Bankruptcy Court.

Another so-called "Accountant" has been paraded in the daily papers as the accused on a charge of embezzlement. In this case the prisoner acquired his professional knowledge in the service of a firm of tailors and robemakers, and when they dissolved partnership, he was entrusted with the collection of their debts, and, in consequence, dubbed himself "Accountant." It is really quite time for the Accountants' Societies to take some steps to secure an acknowledged status for the profession, and to protect it against hangers-on of this character.

THE ENQUIRY INTO THE WORKING OF THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869.

We printed last week the text of the reply forwarded by the Lord Chancellor to the memorial from the Society of Accountants in England, asking his lordship to place one or two accountants upon this committee. This reply was considered at an adjourned meeting of the Council of this Society held two or three days ago —a report of which will be found elsewhere. We now learn that the Manchester Society of Accountants received a communication similar to the one above referred to in answer to their memorial; and we understand that this society has under consideration the possibility and practicability of placing before the Committee of Enquiry certain suggestions with the view to the improvement of the Act. We believe that the Liverpool Society of Accountants has not thought it necessary to take any action in reference to this matter.

HARD-HEARTED CREDITORS.—At the meeting for the adjourned examination of a Scotch bankrupt, a medical certificate was read to the effect that he could not attend on account of the state of his health. Some of the creditors were unbelieving, and the Sheriff sent a doctor to examine and report upon the bankrupt.

The Liverpool Town Council have just increased the salary of Mr. P. S. Rhind, the Borough Auditor, from £650 to £750 per annum. Mr. Rhind was appointed in 1859 at a salary of £300, which was increased in 1860 to £400, in 1863 to £500, and in 1870 to £650.

BILL OF SALE.

EX PARTE COLLINS, RE LEES.—This case raised an important point as to what constituted a "condition" which ought to be registered under Section 2 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. The debtor, John Lees, was a farmer. On February 11, 1874, he applied to Collins, who resides at Nottingham, for an advance of £130, and executed a bill of sale of his live stock and other effects to secure that amount. The money was to be repaid by instalments of £3 per month, though the bill of sale gave Collins power to sell at once. Only £98 was ever paid to Lees, £30 being retained as a bonus, and £2 for expenses. With the bill of sale, Lees signed a memorandum, which stated that the £30 was to be paid to Collins in full, notwithstanding that the money secured by the bill of sale might be repaid, or the rights of Collins under the bill of sale enforced, before the expiration of the time for repayment mentioned in the bill of sale. The bill of sale was duly registered, but the memorandum was not. On March 6, Collins put a man in possession, but did not interfere with Lees' management of his farm. On March 10, Lees filed a petition for liquidation, and on the 11th a receiver was appointed. On March 13 the man who was put into possession drove away some cattle, and sold them in Nottingham. The trustee under the liquidation made an application to the County Court for an order that Collins should pay to him the amount he had received for the cattle. The Chief Judge held that the bill of sale was void, because the memorandum amounted to a condition, and, as such, ought to have been registered under section 2 of the Bills of Sale Act. He considered the trustee right, and ordered Collins to refund him the amount he had received for the cattle.

COMPOSITION AND LIQUIDATION.

A case originally decided by Judge Furner in the Brighton County Court, and finally decided by the Chief Judge, draws a strong distinction between the powers of a trustee under composition and under liquidation. A petition for composition or liquidation was filed by Mr. D. T. Bostel on the 27th of June, 1874. The first meeting of creditors was held on July 15, and resolutions were then passed in favour of accepting a composition. At an adjourned meeting of creditors, a creditor who had opposed the composition, presented a proof for £488. The trustee rejected this proof, and gave notice of his rejection to the creditor, according to rule 313, at the same time asking him to come in and prove his debt before the Court in the usual way. The creditor declined to do this, and moved before the County Court for a declaration that the trustee being merely, according to rule 279, a "trustee for receipt and distribution of the composition," had no power to reject the proof. The Judge held that a trustee had power to reject proofs under composition as well as under liquidation; but on appeal to the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, Sir J. Bacon, held that there was a distinction between a trustee in liquidation and in composition with regard to the powers to reject proofs, that the trustee had no right peremptorily to reject the proof, and that the proper course would be to refer the matter back to the County Court to ascertain the amount of the debt due at the time of the composition, the trustee to pay to the creditor the composition on such amount when so ascertained.

A petition to wind up the Lion Assurance Company, Limited, is to be heard on the 15th inst.

EFFECT OF A BILL OF SALE.

EX PARTE HARRIS, RE JAMES.—On January 14, 1874, the debtor, who was a licensed victualler, committed an act of bankruptcy. On May 23 he executed a bill of sale of his effects to Harris and Co., brewers (to secure £193), who, however, had notice of the act of bankruptcy. Of the £193 the sum of £122 was paid by Harris and Co. in satisfaction of two properly registered bills of sale, which had been executed previous to the act of bankruptcy. These securities were, however, not transferred or assigned to Harris and Co. The bill of sale of May 23 was duly registered. On the bankruptcy of James, the County Court judge, on the application of the trustee in the bankruptcy, declared that the bill of sale was void against such trustee. On appeal, however, the Chief Judge held that Harris and Co. were entitled to have the £122 paid to them in satisfaction of the prior bills of sale, before the trustee could claim.

THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.

The adjourned monthly meeting of the Council of this Society was held at the offices, 2, Cowper's-court, Cornhill, on Wednesday evening last; present, Messrs. Jno. Bath (Vice-President), in the chair; E. N. Harper, G. E. Ladbury, J. H. Tilly, F. Nicholls, Joseph Andrews, and E. T. Peirson (Coventry).

The chief business before the meeting was the reply of the Lord Chancellor to the memorial of the Society urging "the expediency of placing one or more accountants experienced in the practice of bankruptcy, liquidation, and composition matters" upon the committee appointed to consider the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. As stated in our previous issue, the reply of Lord Cairns was to the effect that the committee, having now been engaged for "more than a month," his lordship "presumed" that their labours were "now approaching their conclusion," and therefore did not consider it advisable "to make any addition to, or alteration in, the composition of the committee."

This reply was now discussed by the Council, various suggestions being made; and it was ultimately resolved, upon the motion of Mr. E N. Harper, seconded by Mr. G. E. Ladbury, that a Committee be appointed to consider whether any, and if so, what reply should be forwarded to the communication of the Lord Chancellor, the Committee to report the result of its deliberations to a special meeting of the Council on the 14th inst.

An order was afterwards made for the purchase of certain books to go towards the formation of a library for the use of members of the Society.

The following gentlemen were admitted as Associates of the Society:—William King, Prideaux Chambers, Sheffield; Geo. Henry Carter, 1, Queen-street, Cheapside; and James Heys Atherton, 4, Union-buildings, Liverpool.

AMERICAN FAILURES.—The following failures are just reported from America:—Messrs Thornton and Smith, owners of the Wamsutta Mills, Philadelphia, with liabilities of £20,000. It is thought they will be granted an extension. Messrs Rice, Goodwin, Walker, and Co., dealers in silk goods, 476 Broadway; liabilities estimated about £60,000. Messrs Minzesheimer, Lindheim, and Co., in the millinery trade, 534, Broadway, close on £20,000. Messrs Stimson, Marguand, and Co., jobbers of woollens, &c., had also been announced.

AUDITORS.

No. 1.—AUDITING.

One of the most important requirements in an Accountant is the capability of fulfilling faithfully and with satisfaction to his clients and himself, the manifold duties which he undertakes in accepting a position of the above nature. To look over, in a hurried and cursory manner, the accounts rendered for inspection, was at one period frequently the mode of conducting an audit, but this fashion of auditing has proved to be entirely insufficient. Errors and discrepancies, unavoidably passed unnoticed, in the course of a short and superficial investigation, were subsequently exposed in the settlement of business transactions; consequently professional men have found it absolutely necessary to alter in its entirety the system of auditing, and to adopt a more perfect method of determining the accuracy of the various accounts placed in their hands for verification. It would be out of place, in these columns, to refer particularly to the enormous frauds that have remained for great lengths of time undiscovered, owing rather to the laxity or ineffacacy of the system of Audit, than to the want of efficiency or fidelity in the Auditors; but that many such malpractices have been unwittingly favoured by the former cause cannot be disputed. For many years a fraud may have been creeping gradually along in the security afforded by the want of thorough examination; when the stringent exercise of their duty by those employed to detect irregularities and discrepancies, would have checked it in its infancy. There are many systems now in use, one, the most general, being to follow and check the various items, which culminate in the details forming the Balance Sheet, or whatever Statement requires authentication; another and more laborious mode is to analyze the whole of the transactions in abstracts specially prepared for the purpose, something in the manner adopted in compiling a statistical return. Some Auditors however, are satisfied with simply checking the totals here and there of the Cash and other books, ascertaining that the statement rendered, agrees with the Ledgers, and that the result tallies with precedents. There exist many more ways of auditing, some more or less complicated, but the three quoted will serve to illustrate the work of an Auditor, who, notwithstanding the smallness of his fee, is expected to verify accounts which, perhaps on a thorough investigation would be found teeming with errors and inaccuracies. In a subsequent article I propose to refer in detail to the duties of auditors, and in a third contribution to their responsibilities.

THE GRIEVANCES OF TRUSTEES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—With reference to the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, permit me to reply to the grievances complained of by "an unhappy trustee" in your paper of the 2d inst. Your correspondent refers to the complaints made of the "extravagant charges" of accountants when acting as professional trustees on the one hand, and of the "absurd routine" which impedes the speedy realization of estates on the other. The former is presumably a creditor's grievance, while the latter is a trustee's complaint, and apparently put forward as a reason for, and the cause of, the former. "An unhappy trustee" then proceeds rather illogically to attribute both complaints to the "inefficiency" of the office of comptroller in bankruptcy. "Inefficient" means producing no effects, yet the office in question is charged with being the cause of the ill effects complained of. Further, your correspondent states that the office must be greatly improved or replaced by a more satisfactory court of administration ere the existing grievances can be removed. In what respect the office of the Comptroller, as at present constituted, is a "court of administration," or what suggestions "an unhappy trustee" makes for improving that office, I entirely fail to gather from his letter. What has the question of "extravagant charges" to do with the Comptroller in bankruptcy? Your correspondent is, or ought to be, aware that the remuneration of a trustee is determined by the creditors themselves, and all the Comptroller has to do with the matter is to see that what the trustee charges in his accounts has been properly voted by the creditors. Perhaps your correspondent, however, means that "extravagant charges" would be lessoned, and the good effects of the office of Comptroller increased by giving that officer power to cut down such charges. Again, how does the office of Comptroller "impede the realization of estates?" The realization of the estate is entirely in the hands of the trustee, subject to the directions of the creditors and the committee of inspection. The trustee has simply, so far as the Comptroller is concerned, to make periodical returns showing what he has realized, and how the proceeds have been disbursed. With regard to delinquent accountants being reported to the Court and ordered to pay costs personally for neglecting to make the prescribed returns to the Comptroller, my experience is that if a trustee gets reported it is his own fault. The trustee's attention is called to the fact of his returns being due by circulars from the Comptroller, and if he has any good reason for failing to furnish such accounts, such as the neglect of the committee of inspection to attend the audit meetings, the Comptroller is not so unreasonable as to report the trustee, for what he cannot help. On the contrary, I have found the Comptroller always ready to assist trustees in this respect by calling upon defaulting committees to attend to the performance of their duties. If a trustee having a reasonable excuse for not making his returns, fails to acquaint the Comptroller therewith, he must not be surprised if he finds himself reported to the Court. Your correspondent "H. B." takes a more correct view of the office and duties of the Comptroller, and it seems to me he hits the grievance which we at present feel from the action of the Comptroller's department. The periodical returns are peremptorily required, whether there be any estate or not. "The Act requires it, the Comptroller will have it, and it must be done." But it is absurd to blame the Comptroller for insisting on trustees doing what the Act and rules require them to do. The fault, then, is in the Act of Parliament and rules of courts, and does not lie with the officer who performs his duty by insisting upon the requirements of the statute being obeyed. If these requirements are unnecessary—and I think some of them are—the true remedy is to get rid of them, and now is the time to do so. A bankruptcy committee is now sitting, and although, as I regret to see from your journal, the Lord Chancellor has declined to allow our profession to be represented on it, still it is open for us, I should imagine, to memorialize the committee itself. Any suggestions coming from the councils of the societies would no doubt meet with that attention and consideration at the hands of the committee which their importance may demand. In the first place, some more discretionary power should be vested in the Comptroller to waive the requirements of the rules where he thinks proper. It is, in my opinion, quite unnecessary to have an audit of a trustee's accounts every three months till the close of the bankruptcy. An audit every four months during the first year of the bankruptcy, and every six months afterwards, would answer all purposes. Then, as to the manner of audit, I think some alteration should be made. I have had some experience of the difficulty of getting committees to meet every three months to audit the accounts or sign certificates of no receipts or payments. Why could not the accounts be verified by affidavit, and audited either by the Court or the Comptroller? The latter would be preferable, as no fee should be charged for auditing the accounts. The "periodical worry" we at present experience would then disappear. I do not propose that committees of inspection should be got rid of altogether. That would be very undesirable, as they have at present other important duties to perform besides that of auditing the trustees' account. I have in many cases received valuable assistance from committees with regard to the manner of realizing the effects of bankrupt traders—such assistance as could not possibly have been rendered by the Court in the absence of a committee. I see no reason why a single creditor should not be eligible to act as the committee, when the creditors desire it. At present the Courts generally insist upon the committee being composed of at least two members. If these alterations are adopted, the grievances of trustees, in the audit of their accounts, would disappear, and there would be no grounds whatever for laying the blame of "excessive charges" to "absurd routine." On one other point I would suggest the societies should recommend an alteration—that is with regard to the close of a bankruptcy. There is, I consider, especially in the London Court, an unnecessary amount of routine required to be gone through by a trustee before he can obtain a closing order. In cases where there are no assets, this bears heavily on trustees, and where there are assets the creditors have to bear unnecessary expense. It seems very absurd that, after having passed his accounts with the Comptroller, a trustee should be compelled to go over the same ground again with the official assignee for the "satisfaction of the Court." A certificate from the Comptroller to that effect ought to be quite sufficient to satisfy the Court of the desirability of closing a bankruptcy, and a rule made in pursuance of section 47 would effect a desirable improvement in the present procedure. Trusting these remarks may come under the notice of the Councils of the Accountants' Societies, and result in a memorial to the Lord Chancellor's Bankruptcy Committee, I remain, yours truly, A TRUSTEE IN BANKRUPTCY.

London, 4th January, 1875.

THE INQUIRY INTO THE BANKRUPTCY ACT OF 1869.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I shall be glad if you will allow me to make a few remarks upon the constitution of the committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869. Exception appears to have been taken to the members of that committee, or some of them; but in my opinion the fault lies in the fact of the committee not being sufficiently comprehensive. I think it would have been more satisfactory if professional accountants had been represented on the committee by one or two eminent accountants practising in bankruptcy. One or two commercial gentlemen interested in the subject of the bankruptcy law might also have been advantageously added to the committee. It is, however, quite evident, from the tone of the Lord Chancellor's reply to the memorial of the Accountants' Association that the committee will not be enlarged. As already announced, it is composed of Mr. J. R. Brougham, Mr. Rupert Kettle, Mr. Mansfield Parkyns, Mr. H. Nicol, and Mr. Hackwood. The first-named gentleman is one of the Registrars of the London Bankruptcy Court, and will no doubt ably represent the official element on the committee. Mr. Rupert Kettle is a well-known County Court Judge, and one of the Standing Committee for framing rules and orders for County Courts. He has also had the advantage of having been consulted by the Associated Chambers of Commerce with reference to the amendments in the Bankruptcy Act and rules proposed by the Chambers. Mr. Parkyns, who is the Comptroller in Bankruptcy, may be looked upon as the connecting link between the old and new systems of bankruptcy administration. He was formerly, but is not now, as erroneously stated in your leading article of the 2d inst., an official assignee of the London Court. His experience under the present act may be judged of by the annual reports which he has made to the Lord Chancellor, and which exhibit no inconsiderable acquaintance with the working of the Act. Mr. Nicol is the superintendent of the County Courts, and also holds, I believe, a distinct appointment as "bankruptcy adviser to the Great Seal." It is only natural, therefore, that on any question affecting the amendment of the bankruptcy law, the Lord Chancellor should refer to him. In fact, the other gentlemen on the committee may be looked upon as aiding Mr. Nicol in coming to some definite conclusions as to what amendments may be desirable. Mr. Hackwood is well known as one of the principal London solicitors, practising in bankruptcy, and one who is practically acquainted, not only with the operation of the 1869 Act, but also with that of former Acts. So that, altogether, I can see no objection to the constitution of the committee, so far as it goes, the only fault, as before stated, appears to me to be that it does not go far enough; but, such as it is, the accountants should make the best of it, and lay before it any difficulties they at present experience in the performance of their duties as professional trustees with a view to their removal.—Yours truly, A. A.

London, 5th January, 1875.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I see by your last number that the Lord Chancellor has informed the Society of Accountants in England that the Committee of Enquiry into the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, "was appointed as far back as August last, and has been now engaged for more than a month in prosecuting its inquiries, which it may, therefore, be presumed are now approaching their conclusion." What are we to understand by this? Has our Judicial Homer been nodding? The committee appointed "as far back as August last," has actually been engaged for "more than a month;" and moreover these five gentlemen, seeking, it would seem to rival that nasty job of Hercules in the Augean stables, are getting towards the end of an enquiry into the working of the last Bankruptcy Act in "a little month," as Hamlet says: "Oh most wicked haste." Appointed since last August, and working "more than a month" (extreme diligence, or taking things easy, as you please, Mr. Editor); and the Lord Chancellor presumes that their labours are approaching conclusion. Well, either Lord Cairns is guilty of great presumption, or the phrase "approaching their conclusion" must be taken to mean something like that "Christmas," which is no doubt "coming" for good little boys, even at this early period of the year.

Yours truly, Q. E. D.

"BANKRUPTCY ABUSES."

A correspondent of the City Observer, who signs himself "Matter of Fact," comments upon the correspondence which has recently appeared in the Standard, relating to the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. "Matter of Fact" tells us that he has had "a very large experience" under this Act, and some of his comments and suggestions are certainly worth reprinting for the consideration of accountants. He writes:—

"It ever was, and will be always the case, that trifling assets are absorbed in costs, there being precisely the same routine to go through as in larger estates; and it would be by no means always fair to estimate the value of professional work by the amount of the real assets, which are often most deceiving on paper. I know, from large experience, of many instances where the creditors have subscribed to pay the professional charges, there being insufficient assets in the estate, and prosecuted the debtor. I hope I shall not be accused of being 'more or less interested' if I venture a few remarks on solicitors' charges, and the way to reduce them. Your correspondent G. J. G., states that out of an estate of £125, he had to pay law costs, £69, and that he had no control over the taxation. Probably, the solicitor had a great deal of work to keep G. J. G., straight. He certainly shows a lamentable want of knowledge of the Bankruptcy Act in respect of law costs, at any rate. In the first place, the solicitor was bound to give the trustee notice of taxation if required, and if he did not do this, but taxed behind the trustee's back, the trustee could have obtained, by paying for it, an office copy of the Bill; and if the work charged for had not been done, he could have made an application to review the taxation in the usual way. The less the trustee knows of his business the more he must go to the lawyer, and I think it will be found that fit and proper persons as professional trustees are the cheapest in the end. Creditors really know little of the heavy responsibilities that rest upon a trustee who, though only the baillee of a trifling estate of £100, may have an action brought against him for hundreds of pounds, for which he is personally liable outside the estate, if he for want of knowledge, or by any other accident, makes a mistake. In Scotland they manage these things better. They appoint chartered accountants, who have passed a thorough examination in Bankruptcy Law, as trustees, and the Act there is found to work well. Where the shoe really pinches, is in the preliminary costs incurred prior to the first general meeting, the expensive process of calling the creditors together, and obtaining injunctions. The costs of calling the first meeting are enormous, and could be done for one-fifth of the present charges. They make a large hole in the assets before the creditors have a chance of arriving at any decision. When a debtor files a petition for liquidation, nearly every form is printed, or can be printed at a very small cost; one shilling per notice would pay well; 2s. 6d. for each affidavit and the stamp duty. A meeting therefore of say 100 creditors could be called for a little over £10. The costs now, on the lower scale, amount to nearly £40, even where no receiver is required. Let there be an approved list of receivers and trustees on the roll of the Court, and let the debtor or the creditors select any of these in their turn to take possession, investigate, &c. Let a form of notice, to be approved, be served upon any creditors to be restrained, the receiver being responsible, in case he makes an improper injunction, either personally or out of the estates as the Court may determine. The creditors at the first meeting cannot then have any but a professional trustee, but the costs can remain as now a matter of contract between the creditors and the trustee. The chances are that the receiver, a public accountant, would carry the whole matter through, and there would be no doubt about his being an independent person, not nominated by the debtor or his friends, an objection often set up under the present system. Let it also be made a standing order that every trader must keep proper books and accounts of his trading, and unless he does keep proper records, and is insolvent, or obtains goods within four months from his bankruptcy, he shall be deemed guilty of fraud. Let the onus of proof be upon the debtor to show he was solvent, and not upon the creditor. If there be extenuating circumstances, the debtor will have the benefit of them, and let the Bankruptcy judge sentence for the fraud without having to go to any other tribunal. Let there be a more summary mode of disclaiming cases and onerous contracts, also of getting in the book debts due to the estates by a form of notice that must be answered on affidavit by the person who is indebted to the estate of the insolvent, or there shall be no defence, and the Court have jurisdiction as under Section 2 of the County Court Act. All this will lead to cut down the expenses by a saving of labour and red tapeism, and the trustees will be able to wind up estates with much greater expedition. I will not say much about the provincial trustees many of them calling themselves accountants. But there is now an Institute and a Society of Accountants, the respectability of any one of whose members can be easily ascertained; and if creditors will give their proofs and proxies to Tom, Dick or Harry, it is their fault if the estates get badly handled. I do not say much about the circulars asking for proxies, provided there are no misstatements. It lets the creditors know who is in the field, and often brings about a beneficial combination by which larger dividends are obtained, and prevents the debtor and his friends from carrying their own resolution. A single-handed creditor, unless his debt happens to be one-fourth of the whole of the liabilities, may have no control over the proceedings. But evils here, as in everything else, will loom in the distance, and they must be guarded against and avoided as much as possible. That the Act does want revising there is no doubt, but all will admit it is the best Act we have had for many years, if worked by the creditors properly, as was intended. Creditors have ever been clamorous for reform. No one was ever satisfied with the Insolvency Laws and never will be. But if they want the legislature to provide an official staff at the expense of the country to look after their bad debt departments so that they may persecute and torture many really unfortunate debtors within an inch of their lives and then for a very small per centage wind up their estates, all I can say is 'don't they wish they may get it.'"

There are 167 original applications to be admitted as attorneys in the ensuing term, in addition to a number of renewed notices.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

The correspondence in last Thursday's Times included the following lament:—

"Sir,—All 'European policyholders' ought to be grateful to you for the letter you inserted from one of their number in the Times of yesterday. Your correspondent speaks of 'a miserable dividend of only 2s. in the pound after an interval of nearly four years of anxiety and suffering.' What, then, is to be said of the case of those who, like myself, have had no dividend at all, but, on the contrary, have had large sums of money taken from them by the liquidators? You kindly admitted into the Times last October a letter of mine which led to a long correspondence, the good effected by which in drawing attention to the present condition of life insurance offices has been incalculable. Your advocacy of the cause of us downtrodden policyholders even put a little vitality into the dry bones of the European Arbitration, and stirred up the liquidators to a consciousness that, possibly, there was room for a little more activity in their operations. On the 6th of November I actually received a letter from Messrs S. Price and J. Young, 'official liquidators,' informing me that, under the decision in 'Cuff's case,' I was entitled to a refund of the last premium paid by me to the European. I was, however, recommended to wait before I applied for payment till the Arbitrator had decided whether the shareholders in the British Nation (on which I had a prior claim) were liable as contributories. Meanwhile numerous letters from fellow-sufferers, scattered throughout the country, poured in, thanking me for having written to the Times, and exuberant with expressions of gratitude to the Times for having taken up their cause. These 'rustics' were simple enough to suppose that the fathomless stream of Arbitration was about to roll by, and so enable them to walk across to an Elysium on the opposite shore, where radiant liquidators would receive them with open arms and present them with cheques for the full amount of their claims. I was myself simple enough to fall into the trap of waiting, as recommended by Messrs. S. Price and J. Young, for another decision of the Arbitrator. I forgot that official liquidators are generally disciples of a school of chronology in which days and weeks are merely figurative expressions for indefinite æons of time, and that to wait for a few weeks might mean to sit down patiently while the Herculean task of attempting to unravel knot after knot of conflicting claims, hopelessly entangled, was bringing down another Arbitrator with sorrow to the grave. In short, three years have gone by, two Arbitrators have passed away, and I am still in the attitude of Rusticus expectans. Arbitration has as yet done nothing whatever for me, or for thousands of others who are less able to afford delay than I am. Arbitrators may come, and Arbitrators may go, but the stream of Arbitration—and that, too, without liquidation—seems likely to flow on for ever."

The same correspondent writes subsequently to say that he has "received a communication from Messrs Price and Young, enclosing two printed forms for my signature, with the view to the refunding of my last premium and the payment of 2s. in the pound dividend on the value of my policy. The policy, however, is estimated at only a little more than half the actual sum paid by me in premiums for 26 years."

Mr. F. S. Reilly, the assessor to this arbitration, has had an interview with the Lord Chancellor respecting the unfortunate condition of the matter, and the manifold difficulties which the unfinished decisions of Lord Romilly, reversing those of Lord Westbury, have brought about, Lord Romilly's death having supervened just at the critical moment when so many cases of vital interest to the share and policy holders awaited determination. The object of Mr. Reilly's interview with Lord Cairns was to obtain his lordship's sanction to the appointment of an arbitrator ad interim, and it is expected that this will be forthwith done. It is stated that owing to the complicated state of matters, no ex-Lord Chancellor can be at present prevailed upon to accept the post until the difficulties have been removed by means of an Act of Parliament. It was generally believed that Lord Selbourne would consent to act as arbitrator, but his lordship's determination on the matter is not yet known.

A SCOTCH BANKRUPTCY EXAMINATION.

We extract the following report of an examination in bankruptcy from the columns of the Glasgow Daily Mail. It possesses rather a novel freshness for English readers unacquainted with the phraseology of Scotch law reports. The scene is the Sheriff Court, Glasgow, the subject, the sequestration of Bowers, Aitken, and Co:—

Compeared Wm. R. Dick, commission merchant, Glasgow, who deponed—I have had transactions with the firm of Bowers, Aitken, and Co. These transactions consisted of discounting bills and lending money on I O U's. I began by charging bank interest on the bills discounted, latterly at 5 per cent commission. Interrogated: Did you in any of your transactions with the firm deduct from the proceeds of the discounted bills a sum amounting to 25 per cent? Depones: I charged 5 per cent interest and 5 per cent commission. Question repeated. Depones: I may have done so, but it arose in the following way: I explain now that the above statement is incorrect, and that I never charged more than 5 per cent interest and 5 per cent commission. Thus, for example, supposing they came to me with £100 bill at four months, I would charge them £5 of commission and £1 16s 8d of interest, and would thus deduct £6 16s 8d from the £100. I am not aware that I ever charged more than 5 per cent commission besides the usual rate of interest, but I am aware of charging less. On 4th October, 1873, I obtained from Mr Bowers an assignation of his life policy for £300. Interrogated: What were the good and onerous causes and considerations for which the assignation was granted? Depones: I got it as security to be held by me till such time as I got clear from Bowers, Aitken, and Co., and till every obligation of theirs to me was cleared off. I refer to obligations both prior and subsequent to the date of the sequestration. I do not remember if that was explained to Mr. Bowers at the time, because it was given gratuitously, and he at the same time offered me another bill for £500 which I refused. The obligations for which the assignation was granted have not being implemented. I have several of their unpaid bills. Interrogated: Were there two bills drawn by Thomas Forgie or J. and T. Forgie on Bowers, Aitken, and Co., one for £55, and due 6th Oct., and another for £25, due 4th Oct., endorsed in your favour by Mr. or Messrs. Forgie? (Question objected to, and objection repelled.) Depones: Yes, I believe so. Compeared John Bowers, one of the bankrupts, who deponed that it was never meant or explained that the assignation of his life policy should cover future as well as past obligations. After making some further explanations with regard to two other bills, the statutory oath was administered to both bankrupts.

BANKRUPTCY OF AN INSURANCE MANAGER.—At the Birkenhead County Court on Tuesday, the Judge was occupied for some time with the bankruptcy case of Edward Gale, who was some time ago a manager of the London and Lancashire Insurance Company. His alleged defalcations were £1,700, and he absconded from thence on his defalcations becoming known. Warrants were issued for his apprehension; and on the 21st of November Mr. J. P. Harris presented a petition, at the instance of David Russell, printer, Moorfields, Liverpool, under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. The petition was notified in the London Gazette and the local papers, and a receiver was coincidently appointed. On the 12th December last another petition, at the suit of David Forbes and John Wilson Paton, surgeons, of Rock Ferry, was filed by Messrs. Kenion and Tyrer. The act of bankruptcy alleged in the first petition was that he had departed the kingdom. There had been several adjournments of both petitions, some difficulty having arisen in proving the trading according to the form required by the Act. At this sitting, on the request of Mr. Harris and Mr. Kenion, the second petition was heard, and evidence offered of the debtor having absconded from the country. Adjudication followed. Mr. Moore, who represented an execution creditor, wished to be heard, but his Honour ruled that he had no locus standi. The meeting of creditors was fixed for the 22d instant.

A PROVINCIAL CRITIC ON THE BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

The following brilliant specimen of Quixotic, slapdash criticism (cut from a provincial daily) will interest the members of "a most lucrative profession" therein mentioned. We are almost tempted to regret that the writer has not imitated the world and given us details of these startling cases. This is the way the Don charges the windmills:—

"We have had five Bankruptcy Acts, and are to have a sixth, making one for bankrupts on every day of the week. The first was in 1824, the second in 1825, the third in 1849, the fourth (Lord Westbury's) in 1861, and the fifth (Sir Robert Collier's) in 1869. They have given rise to such a mass of litigation and expense that there is no chance of our making them fairly workable, and rather than amend the present Act, it is found easier to bring in a new one, of which we presume Sir Richard Baggalley will have charge. Here are a few specimens of proceedings under the present law. In one case the estate of a debtor was supposed to yield 7s. 6d. in the pound only; one of the creditors, disbelieving this statement, was advised to offer 10s., and take the estate himself. The solicitor offered him a bribe, which he refused, and the result was that the estate paid 15s. instead of 7s. 6d. A wholesale manufacturer compounded for a few shillings in the pound, and immediately bought landed property to the value of £40,000. A firm of accountants (a most lucrative profession) were appointed liquidators of a company holding a large estate; after a good pull out of it they sold it for £4,000 to nominal purchasers, then the solicitor 'got up a company,' and £120,000 was obtained for the property. In many cases it is notorious that first-class houses will let debtors who have just compounded for a small sum, have goods to go on again with, believing that they have money at their back, through the smallness of the composition paid; whilst the unfortunate but honest trader who has given up every pennyworth he possessed is distrusted as being troubled with a conscience. Certainly a law which suffers such things to be requires amending very much indeed."

CHARGE AGAINST AN "ACCOUNTANT."—At the Cambridge Borough Sessions on Thursday, before Mr Bulwer, Q.C., Recorder, James Hall, described as an "accountant," surrendered to his bail to answer a charge of having embezzled two sums of money received by him from former members of the University for, and on behalf of Messrs Milligan and Johnson, tailors and robemakers. Upon this firm dissolving partnership, Hall, who had previously been their clerk, but who then set up as an accountant, was entrusted to get in certain outstanding debts. Having a difficulty with some of the debtors, he, with the consent of the prosecutors, employed a solicitor, who obtained the sums mentioned from gentlemen named Wood and Bindley. These moneys were handed over to Hall, and the prosecutor (Johnson) alleged that he never received them. A legal point was raised as to whether Hall was a clerk or servant within the meaning of the act constituting the crime of embezzlement; but the learned Recorder said that he should decide, for the purposes of this indictment, that there was a case to go to the jury, and allow the prisoner a case for the Court of Criminal Appeal, if necessary. The jury, after a long deliberation, found the prisoner guilty, but recommended him to mercy, on account of his previous good character; and he was bound over in bonds of £400 to come up for judgment at the next sessions, by which time the legal point will have been decided.

FAILURES IN PARIS.—The number of failures in Paris during the year 1874 was 2,044, or a diminution of 84 on 1873. As usual the wineshop-keepers furnish the largest contingent numbering 287; next in order come the merchants and wholesale houses, of 143, and they are followed by hotel and lodging-house keepers, 121; cafés, 60; builders, 57; commission agents, 49; grocers, 45; upholsterers, 23; linendrapers, 19, &c. Six directors of theatres or music-halls also failed.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

January 2.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE THORN AND LAWRENCE.—Messrs Henry Friend Thomas Thorn, and Charles Delaney Lawrence, army agents, of 443, Strand, have filed a petition for liquidation, with debts returned at £4,816, and assets £1,600.—Mr Harcourt applied that Mr William Brooks, accountant, of 11, Old Jewry-chambers, should be appointed receiver of the estate. It appeared that the debtor was being sued by creditors, and that his assets consisted partly of bills of exchange falling due, and in respect of which the debtor believed that sundry sums of money would be paid before the first general meeting of creditors.—His Honour granted the application, an interim injunction being also allowed to restrain proceedings by some of the creditors.

January 5.

(Before Mr Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE H. D. MARSH.—The debtor, formerly an officer in the Army, is described as late of Hertfordshire House, Coleshill, near Amersham, also of the Grand Hotel, Scarborough, and now of Gloucester-street, Pimlico, farmer. His debts are returned at £7,036, of which £4,305 are unsecured, with assets £20 15s. only. It appeared that at the first meeting of creditors a composition was proposed, but at the second meeting a resolution in favour of liquidation was passed and a trustee appointed, leave being reserved to sell the equity of redemption of the debtor's farm for £150. Mr. Gammon now applied that the second resolution should be registered, but a difficulty arose as to the figures, there being assets of £20 only to meet unsecured debts of over £4,000, besides the cost of the proceedings. In answer to Mr. Registrar Keene, Mr. Gammon stated that the debtor valued the equity of redemption at £20 only, but some of the creditors considered it to be worth £150. The creditors were aware of the position of the debtor's affairs, and they desired to give him his discharge. Mr. Registrar Keene said that under the circumstances he could not assist the debtor. It was never intended by the Act of Parliament that the Court of Bankruptcy should be the means of whitewashing debtors. The Act of 1869 was passed in order to put an end to the practice, and he declined to register the resolution in the present case. Application refused.

January 6.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE SKINNER.—This was an application for an order upon the Serjeant at Mace of the City of London to withdraw from possession of the goods of a debtor who had presented a petition for liquidation. Mr Brough appeared in support of the application; Mr Stopher for the execution creditor. The petition was presented by the debtor (a trader) on the 22d of December, and on the same day a receiver was appointed, who entered into possession of the property. At that time an action was pending against the debtor in the Lord Mayor's Court at the suit of Mr Hull, who claimed to be a creditor for the amount of certain goods sold, but, the debt being disputed, the name of Mr Hull was not included in the list of creditors filed at the registration office. A few days after the presentation of the petition Mr Hull recovered a judgment in the Lord Mayor's Court against the debtor, who then, for the first time, caused notice to be given to Hull of the first meeting of creditors. On the 4th inst. the Serjeant at Mace of the City of London levied an execution upon the debtor's goods at the suit of the judgment creditor, and it appeared that the receiver had required him to withdraw, but he declined to do so. In support of the application it was contended that the judgment creditor had no power to proceed to execution after notice of an act of bankruptcy; but, on the other side, it was argued that the debtor having chosen to exclude him from the list of creditors, the proceedings were not binding upon him. His Honour said the duty of the debtor was to have inserted the debt in the list as "disputed." As the matter stood the creditor had been allowed to incur additional costs by proceeding in his action. At the same time he had no right to retain possession of the debtor's property, and an order would be made that he withdraw, but upon the terms that the creditor received out of the estate the amount of costs incurred subsequently to the date when notice should have been given to him of the filing of the petition, together with the costs of the present application.

January 7.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring Rice.)

In re Emile Vieser.—At a first meeting under an adjudication obtained against the bankrupt, described as a merchant, late of Aldermanbury Postern, and Davenant-road, Upper Holloway, proofs of debt were admitted, and Mr. Massy, accountant, 24, Gresham-street, was appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection. The bankrupt, who has absconded, was adjudicated upon the petition of Mr J. G. Mare, of 5, Savage-gardens. Mr. J. R. Bailey appeared for the petitioning creditor. No statement of affairs has yet been produced, but the liabilities are believed to be of considerable amount. It was stated that, on account of the character of the bankrupt's transactions, strict investigation would be necessary.

In re R. G. J. Barnett.—A first meeting was also held in this case, which resulted in the appointment of Mr. A. Ford, accountant, 46, Ludgate-hill, and Mr H. A. Dubois, accountant, 2, Gresham-buildings, as trustees. The bankrupt is described as a commission agent, of 8, Buckingham-street, Strand. Debts amounting to about £5,000 were proved, but no accounts have yet been furnished.

January 8.

(Before Mr Registrar Roche.)

In re L. Diespecker.—Upon the application of Mr. R. Martin, an interim injunction, granted last week, restraining proceedings instituted by creditors against Louis Diespecker, wine and commission agent, of Colebrook-row, Islington, who has filed a petition for liquidation, was continued until further orders. Debts estimated at about £2,000, and assets £200.

In re G. Bargen.—A similar order was made in the case of Gustav Bargen, described as of Railway-place, Fenchurch-street; of Oxford-terrace, Islington; and of the German Gymnasium, King's-cross, restaurant keeper, who returns his debts at £5,400, and assets at £1,350.

CURIOUS BANKRUPTCY CASE AT HULL.

Mr. Bedwell, judge of the East Riding County Court, recently gave judgment on matters connected with the bankruptcy of Duncan Dawson, leather seller, Hull. The bankrupt, who has for many years done a large trade throughout the northern counties and Scotland, failed some time ago to a very considerable amount, owing on bills about £20,000, the parties drawn upon being district customers, in many cases of small means. The overdraw on these customers and others was about £11,000 beyond what they owed in trade, and the bankrupt said they had allowed it in consideration of the accommodation he gave them with goods. It was stated that a very loose system had prevailed in connection with the bills, and customers had left blank bills with Mr. Dawson for him to fill in as he chose. The bankrupt admitted he knew most of the country side who had given bills would stop if he stopped. In 1865 a Newcastle accountant, at the instance of the bankers, examined Mr. Dawson's affairs, and reported them £4,000 to the good; but the trustee now contended he had not taken into account the bills, £3,000 of which were bad. In that year Mr. Dawson made a post-nuptial settlement of his place of business and other property on his wife, and it was contended that as ten years had not elapsed, and bankrupt was then insolvent, the deed should be set aside. It was also sought to claim property which for years had been allowed to accumulate in the name of the debtor's only son.—His Honour, after a long review of the Bankruptcy Acts of 1849 and 1869, and the Act of Elizabeth, decided that the onus of proof of solvency of the debtor lay with those claiming under the deed. As to the property in the son's name, he described the evidence of the debtor, wife, and son as most unsatisfactory and contradictory. The statements that the son paid for the property out of his and his mother's savings, and that the father did not assist, was disproved by one of the missing cash-books—that for 1867, showing cheques from the father for the building society's instalment, and the cheques were also produced. After observing upon the debtor's affairs that he owed £35,000, and the assets were about £5,000, he must decide that the property in question be declared part of the estate, and against the claim of the son to be a large creditor on the estate in respect of property sold. He would make the requisite order.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following are amongst the creditors' meetings which have been held during the past few days :—

Wade Brothers.—A preliminary meeting of the creditors of Messrs Wade Brothers, contractors, of Miles Platting, Manchester, &c., was held on Tuesday, at the offices of Messrs Marriott and Woodall, solicitors, when the statement of affairs submitted by the receiver, Mr E. B. Harding (of Sutton and Harding, accountants), showed liabilities, £10,963 14s 11d, and assets £2,360 18s 3d. After a long discussion it was resolved to appoint a committee of three of the creditors to investigate the affairs of the debtors, in conjunction with the receiver, and to report to the statutory meeting to be held on the 13th inst. Messrs Sale and Co., and Messrs Sutton and Elliott, of London, appeared for the creditors.

E. Cazeaux and Co.—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs Edward Cazeaux and Co., of Liverpool and Newcastle-on-Tyne, importers of Spanish copper, lead, zinc, and iron ores and esparto, was held at the office of Mr Sydney Mayhew, solicitor, Walbrook, London. After some discussion it was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, and not in bankruptcy, and Mr Henry Bolland, of Liverpool, public accountant, was appointed trustee. The total indebtedness amounted to £5,500, and the assets were estimated at £1,012.

W. H. Sharples and Co. —A meeting of the creditors of Messrs W. H. Sharples & Co., 8, Walton's-buildings, Cannon-st., Manchester, yarn merchant and bleacher, and trading with J. Nichols, at Bridgefield Works, Glossop, was held at the offices of Messrs Gardner, Horner, and Co., solicitors, 26, King-street. The statement of affairs submitted showed: Liabilities, £1,795 17s. 3d.; and assets, £1,098 10s. 0½d. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and Mr J. J. Graham, accountant, with Mr Peter Kevan, accountant, Bolton, were appointed trustees.

Robert Strahan.—A meeting of creditors under the failure of Mr Robert Strahan, of Temple Lane, Liverpool, was held at the offices of Mr Nordon, Cook-street, Liverpool. Debts amounting to £2,500 were proved, and Mr Bellringer was elected chairman. The statement of accounts disclosed trade debts, £2,646; liabilities as part owner of the steamship Beverley, £10,919; and other liabilities. £1,213. The assets consist of stock in trade and debts, estimated to produce £1,098, and also half share of the Beverley, valued at £9,000. There being no offer of composition, it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and to appoint Mr Bolland trustee without a committee of inspection. Mr Bellringer was retained as solicitor to the trustee.

Fisher and Collins.—A meeting of the creditors of Frederick A. Fisher and Josiah Collins, 56, Charlotte-street, Birmingham, was held on Thursday at the offices of Mr Jelf, Newhall-street. The statement of accounts submitted to the meeting showed that the debtors' liabilities were £1,009; assets, £850 9s. 10d. A composition of 14s. in the pound was accepted, payable 6s. in one month, 4s. in two months, and 4s. in three months. Mr. Walker N. Fisher was appointed trustee.

At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Zerolech Brothers, held on Wednesday, at the offices of Messrs. Cooper Brothers and Co., resolutions were passed accepting a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound. The creditors of the Trieste and Corfu houses have also acceded to arrangements.

Walter John Newey, stay and corset manufacturer, of Birmingham, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities estimated at £3,500 or thereabouts. Upon the application of Mr. John Boraston, solicitor for the petitioner, Mr. Registrar Chauntler has appointed Mr. William Henry Brown, of Bennett's Hill, accountant, receiver of the estate.

CHARGES OF FRADULENT BANKRUPTCY.

At the County Sessions, Northampton, on Thursday, John Blunstone surrendered to take his trial on the charge of concealing a portion of his property from his creditors. Mr. Merewether, M.P., prosecuted on behalf of the trustee. The evidence proved that in May last defendant, who was a miller and corn merchant, carrying on business at Slapton Mill, Oxfordshire, and Yardley Gobion, Northamptonshire, purchased a quantity of growing corn at Woodside of Mr. Towchester. In the July following, he became a bankrupt, and in August the corn was reaped and disappeared. From subsequent information it turned out it was concealed by defendant in different parts of the country. On this being discovered, the attention of the county court judge was directed to it, and he at once ordered a criminal prosecution. The defendant stated that the business at Yardley Gobion belonged to his mother, and he purchased the corn on her account. It was shown that the practice of the defendant appeared to be to give large orders for corn, especially favouring the factors of distant places. He then made an entry of having sold this corn to his mother, and afterwards disposed of it for her as her agent. The mother could not now be found to substantiate this statement.—The Jury found the prisoner guilty.—Before passing sentence, Mr. Merewether stated that in 1868 the prisoner had been a bankrupt, and he then carried on the same plan, with the difference of substituting his brother for his mother. Unfortunately there was no Debtor's Act then, and he could not be prosecuted.—The Court sentenced him to fifteen months' imprisonment with hard labour.

At the Birmingham Police Court, on Thursday, before the Mayor, Maurice Jacobs, described as a general dealer, of 198, Gooch-street, was charged, on remand, with committing fraud under the Bankruptcy Act.—Mr. Motteram (instructed by Messrs. Rowlands and Bagnell) prosecuted; Mr. Loxdale Warren (instructed by Mr. Crowther Davies) defended.—As alleged, the accused obtained goods on the representation that he was solvent, whereas a pork butcher in Birmingham had a bill of sale over his stock-in-trade.—Evidence having been given as to prisoner's transactions with various houses, and as to his dishonoured bills, a policeman was called and stated that at about 20 minutes to six on the morning of the 13th January, 1874, he saw a furniture van at the back door of the prisoner's house in the Lower Priory. Entering the shop, he found that most of the goods had been cleared away. A van loaded with goods stood at the door.—Mr. Luke J. Sharp, accountant, trustee to the prisoner's estate in bankruptcy, stated that after being appointed he had a conversation with the bankrupt relative to a bill of sale given by him to Henry Stephenson. Prisoner stated that the men who packed up the goods on the morning of the 13th were placed on the premises by Stephenson, under the bill of sale, and that the goods were removed at about six in the morning. Prisoner also said that he never knew what became of the goods, and added that his brother-in-law bought the furniture from Stephenson for £12 or £14.—Prisoner, who pleaded not guilty, and reserved his defence, was committed for trial at the Sessions, bail being allowed, himself in £200, and two sureties of £100 each.

Nathaniel Riley, of Leeds, flax spinner, was brought up on Thursday, and remanded for a week, bail being refused, on the charge of commiting various offences under the Bankruptcy Act. Prisoner, it was stated, had filled a petition for the liquidation of his affairs, after which he had drawn several sums of money, amounting to nearly £2,000, without accounting for them. He had also handed over to his brother and another person nearly £1,000.

A NEW THING IN INSURANCE.—The police of the Northern District have ascertained that amongst a numerous body of the lower grades of the working classes, there exists a kind of insurance society against punishment for assaults. If any one of the members of the body is fined for assaults or disorderly conduct, the hat is set round, and the requisite amount is collected in sixpences and threepences. It was for a while a matter of astonishment how readily the money was forthcoming for liberating men who did not appear to be possessed of a shilling in the world. But the question was solved when it was ascertained that there existed this novel mode of insurance. The most of the heavy penalties imposed this week for grave assaults in the Northern District were promptly paid.—North British Daily Mail.

THE BANK RATE.—After being maintained at 6 per cent. for rather more than five weeks, the Bank rate was lowered on Thursday to 5 per cent. The principal object for which it had been found necessary to keep the rate for so long at the highest point reached in the year 1874 may be said to have been achieved in a sufficient degree before the old year had closed, as shown by the course of the Bullion-market and the open Money-market for some little time past: but at the turn of the year and in the early days of January the movements of money are always very considerable, involving, as we have seen, large transactions between the Bank of England and the dealers in money in the outer market, and until such operations have been satisfactorily adjusted the course which has been pursued by the Bank is the natural one under the circumstances. While it was possible to lend money on Government security in the open market at 7 per cent., and that in large amounts, the directors could not be expected to make a reduction in their rate of discount on bills, knowing as they did how very limited was the demand. During the last two or three days, however, the advances referred to were rapidly cleared off, and the market outside gave way, especially on Wednesday, in a manner which showed pretty clearly that a 6 per cent. Bank rate had run its course. The return issued on Thursday afternoon shows some considerable changes in the totals, resulting in an increase of something under £100,000 in the reserve, and an improvement of rather over 1 per cent. in the proportion of reserve to liabilities. The Government securities are about three millions more, and the public deposits about £2,300,000 less, from which it may be inferred that the Bank has repurchased something under three-quarters of a million of stock upon which it borrowed in December, and has lent the Government about two millions and a quarter. The other securities, as was expected, show that loans to the extent of three millions and a half have been paid up, and the bullion is increased by £592,518. In whichever direction the course of the market tends, 5 per cent. is a point at which the value of money has not, as a rule, long remained, a week or somewhat more having been the duration during the past few years, and therefore, unless business is stimulated by the cheaper money which now prevails, causing a much better demand for capital—of which there is not much sign at present—or some other unforeseen circumstance comes into operation to reverse the present tendency, we may reasonably look for lower figures. At the corresponding period of last year the Bank rate was reduced from 4½ to 4 per cent., and on the 15th of January to 3½.—Times.

FAILURE OF AN EYE LIQUID MANUFACTURER.—At a meeting of the creditors of John Ede, Birchfields, patent eye-liquid manufacturer, the statement of affairs presented showed the total liabilities to be £10,535 19s. 2d., principally unsecured creditors. The assets amounted to £945, less creditors to be paid in full, £29 15s. 7d., making the total assets £915 4s. 5d. Mr Lomas Harrison, the receiver, read a report that he had prepared, and which showed the number of creditors to be 489, the greater portion of them holding bills in respect of advertising. It was apparent that the debtor had conducted his business in a reckless manner, more especially as regarded his extensive mode of advertising. The debtor's advertisements had been out of all proportion to the amount of business he had carried on, or was likely to transact in the future. It was agreed to appoint a committee to investigate and report.

The liquidators of the Mercantile and Exchange Bank, Liverpool, having sold the Rotunda Buildings, in Bold-street, Liverpool, are enabled to make a tenth return of capital of 7s. 6d. per share. As the remaining assets are of small value, and will take a considerable time to collect, a plan is in contemplation to enable the shareholders to dispose of their interest in those assets, so that a final dividend may be paid, and the liquidation completed early next year.

DAILY NEWSPAPERS.—According to the Printers' Register, there are now published in the United Kingdom 137 daily newspapers, distributed thus:—London, 21; provinces, 78; Scotland 15; Ireland, 18; Wales, 2; Channel Islands and Isle of Man, 3.

FREEDOM OF THE CITY.—The freedom of the City may be obtained—1st. By servitude, being bound to a freeman according to the custom of the City, and serving duly and truly at least seven years. 2nd. By patrimony; that is, being the son or daughter (unmarried or a widow) of a freeman born after the admission of the father. 3rd. Gift of the City, or honorary freedom. 4th. By redemption or purchase, viz., persons on the Parliamentary register of voters for the city are admitted upon their application to the Chamberlain (either with or without the interference of the company), and without the usual presentation to the court for an order. Persons not on the Parliamentary register for the City, but who are £10 householders, and rated to the police and other rates, upon producing a certificate (on their application to the Chamberlain) from the beadle or other authority of their ward that they are so rated, are admitted (with or without the interference of a company) upon the Chamberlain presenting their names to the court, and obtaining an order for their admission. Persons who are neither on the register, nor are rated, nor resident in the City are admitted by order of the Court of Aldermen, if free of one of the livery companies. All the foregoing pay 5s. on their admission. All persons are admitted by order of the Court of Common Council, on payment of £2 11s. 8d. The sons of aliens born in England. &c., are now admitted the same as natural born subjects. All the fees for freedoms are carried to the credit of the Freemen's Orphan School.—City Press.

LIQUIDATION BY ARRANGEMENT.—The Solicitors' Journal prints the following judicial statistics for 1873:—Under the separate heading of liquidation by arrangement, it appears that there were 7,673 petitions, and that 4,152 resolutions were registered; and that the gross amount of debts was £11,019,375, and the gross amount of the estates, £4,034,553. Under the heading of compositions with creditors it appears that 2,422 resolutions were registered, and that the gross amount of debts was £4,120,310, and the gross value of the estates was £1,228,541. Of the whole number of compositions, it appears that in 2,257 estates the composition was less than 10s. in the pound, and in 165 cases it was over that amount; in only 40 cases was the composition 20s. in the pound. According to the summary of liabilities and assets in bankruptcies, liquidations, and compositions, it appears that in 1873 the total liabilities were £19,184,812, and that the total assets were £5,938,117; in 1872 under the same heading the total liabilities amounted to £14,287,418, and the total assets to £4,314,597.

A CONTRACTOR'S FAILURE.—John Dickson, of 9, Hamilton-square, Birkenhead, one of the contractors for the Mersey tunnel, filed his petition under the 125th section of the Bankruptcy Act, for the liquidation of his affairs, and on the 30th December a resolution to liquidate was passed by his creditors. The statement of accounts showed liabilities amounting to about £16,000, and assets represented to be about £14,000. The resolutions had not been filed within the required time, the application was made at the Birkenhead County Court on Tuesday that, notwithstanding the delay, the registrar should be allowed to receive them. An affidavit of the debtor was put in, showing that in consequence of the sheriff being in possession of his goods he had been unable to raise the stamp duty, but the trustee had since advanced the required amount. His Honour directed the registrar to receive and file the proceedings. It was incidentally mentioned that the stamp duty would be argued before the registrar.

RE HENRY BOTTING, BUILDER AND CONTRACTOR, No. 73, GEORGE-STREET, PORTMAN-SQUARE.—A first general meeting of the creditors was held at the offices of Messrs Deane, Chubb, and Co., 14, South-square, Gray's-inn, on Monday, the 4th inst. From the statement of affairs prepared by Mr Flaxman Haydon, the receiver and manager, it appeared that the unsecured creditors amounted to £2,557 15s. 5d.; assets, consisting chiefly of book debts, plant in town and country, and amount (subject to realization) on a contract, £5,783 6s. 5d. Resolved to wind up in liquidation, Mr Haydon being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

The bills and cheques cleared through the Bankers' Clearing-house for the week ending the 6th instant amounted to £124,012,000, against £120,225,000 at the corresponding period of last year.

On New Year's Day, the "City Article" of the Times was for the first time dated from "Printing House Square." As our readers are aware, though bearing no address, it was always supposed to be written from the City, and under the undivided responsibility of the City editor. Does this change indicate that the responsibility of the "City Article" will henceforth be assumed at the head office?—Birmingham Morning News.

Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for winding up the Shrewsbury Colliery Company Limited, and Cwm Rycham Silver Lead Mining Company, Limited.

SEQUEL TO A LIBEL CASE.—The sequel to the Liverpool Leader libel case, which resulted in a verdict for £3,000 against Mr Frederick Lowry Richardson, proprietor of the Leader, was a petition in bankruptcy at the instance of the plaintiffs, the liquidators of the Civil Service Association. An adjudication followed, and several meetings of creditors were called, but at none was there a quorum. Application was therefore made under the 84th section that the bankruptcy should be annulled, and this was done.

INSURANCE IN 1874.—It will probably be found that, despite the unfavourable effect on the public of the cry of Insolvency, which caused a serious diminution of proposals in the last two months, the year 1874 has been, on the whole, more favourable to our Life Offices even than its predecessor. Few Companies will, we believe, have to complain of excessive mortality, or of a falling off in new premiums, while some will, in consequence of larger views obtaining with reference to investments, show a perceptible improvement in the rate of interest on accumulations.—Post Magazine.

A PROVISION MERCHANT'S BANKRUPTCY.—In the course of an examination under the bankruptcy of Messrs, Hoppner, and Bergl, provision merchants of Leith, it was stated that the herrings purchased by the firm amounted to £109,580 in value, and the loss sustained under this head was estimated at £5,195.

IRISH LAW APPOINTMENTS.—Lord Chancellor Ball has continued Mr Arnold Lawson and Mr Clifford Lloyd, who had been appointed to the offices of purse bearer and train bearer by the Commissioners of the Great Seal, in their offices. In consequence of the lamented death of Mr. William Napier, who had been designated for the office of secretary, the duties of which he had, under the commissioners, discharged with remarkable ability, Mr. Robert Arbuthnot Holmes, an officer of the Court of Probate, has been appointed official secretary. Mr. Alexander Hamilton, barrister-at-law, is the private secretary.

DOUBLE PROFIT.—A correspondent of the Times calls attention to what he considers to be "a system of imposition in practice at Somerset-house in the Post and Stamp-office Departments." He says:—"Some months ago a correspondent in the country sent us a deed asking us to get it stamped with a 30s. stamp, and enclosing a Post-office order on Somerset-house Post-office for the money. Our messenger got the money and took it and the deed into the Stamp-office, when they charged him 8d. for light gold. This morning the same thing has occurred. We received a deed to be stamped with a 10s. stamp and Post-office order for the money on Somerset-house Post-office. The messenger got a half-sovereign at the Post-office and took it and the deed to the Stamp-office, and was charged 2d. for light gold; so that it would from this seem to be the practice to pay in light gold at the Post-office and charge the public for it in the Stamp-office."

DEATH OF SIR SAMUEL BIGNOLD.—We have to record the death of Sir S. Bignold, of Norwich, in the 84th year of his age. In 1815 he was appointed secretary of the Norwich Union Life Office, and in 1821 secretary of the Norwich Union Fire Office, both of which institutions were founded by his father.

The Post Magazine in its review of 1874, says: "Two defaulters, a Manager and an Accountant, disgraced the Insurance profession. Neither have, we are sorry to say, been brought to justice."

HEAVY FAILURES IN SCOTLAND.—The failure of Mr. John Russell, grain merchant, Glasgow, is announced, with liabilities of about £60,000. It is stated that the estate shows 11s. in the pound. Messrs. Ross and Co., dyers, Milngavie, have also been announced, and at a meeting held on Wednesday the state of affairs showed liabilities close upon £34,000.

A petition for the winding up of the Tecoma Silver Mining Company (Limited) is to be heard in the Court of Chancery on the 15th inst.

A petition for the winding-up of Dando and Co. (Limited) is to be heard in the Court of Chancery on the 16th instant.

The Law Times says it is reported to have been found impossible satisfactorily to tinker the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Consequently a new bill is to be introduced into Parliament next session.

A member of the New York Stock Exchange has been expelled for having purchased stocks heavily, knowing himself to be a bankrupt.

The Manager of the Westbourne-grove Drapery and Furnishing Company (Limited), Bishops-road, Bayswater, writes to disclaim any connection on the part of this company with the Bayswater General Drapery and Mourning Warehouse Company (Limited), whose books are now in the hands of a firm of accountants. He says that the Westbourne-grove Company is in a prosperous condition, having a paid up capital of £17,000 with an unpaid reserve of £7,500, and that a number of the shares have lately been dealt in at a premium.

This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.
"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.
N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold - security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873) This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The Objects ofthe Society are—

To promote the acquisition of those branches of knowledge which are essential to the practice of an Accountant; to decide upon questions of professional usage or courtesy; and generally to advance the position and interests of Members of the profession.

CONSTITUTION.

The Society shall consist of three classes of Members, namely, Fellows, Associates, and Honorary Members, with a class of Students attached.

ELECTION OF ASSOCIATES.

Every application for admission as an Associate of this Society must be made to the Council, and must be accompanied by a written recommendation from at least two Associates.

ENTRANCE FEES AND ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

Every Associate who shall be elected a FELLOW of the Society shall, upon such election, pay the sum of £15 15s. by way of fee upon his election as Fellow. Every person admitted as an ASSOCIATE of the Society shall, on admission, pay the sum of £5 5s. by way of entrance fee if he be practising in the City of London or within the London postal district; or the sum of £3 3s. if he be practising beyond such district; and the undermentioned YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS to the Society, that is to say:—FELLOWS, £5 5s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING IN THE CITY OF LONDON, or within the London postal district, £2 2s.; ASSOCIATES PRACTISING BEYOND SUCH DISTRICT, £1 1s.; and STUDENTS, £1 1s. each.

Every candidate to be hereafter proposed for admission as an Associate shall be twenty-one years of age or upwards, and shall come within one of the following conditions:—

(1) He shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership as a public accountant, on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have made his application on or before the first day of January, 1873.

(2.) Or shall have been a clerk to a public accountant on the 11th day of January, 1872, and shall have been in actual practice on his own account, or in partnership, as a public accountant for three years consecutively after that date, and prior to the 1st day of January, 1878.

(3.) Or shall have served under articles for a period of three years to a public accountant in actual practice.

(4.) Or shall have been employed as accountant to a corporation or public body for three years, or as a clerk to a public accountant, or firm of accountants, for a period of seven years at the least, but the employment need not have been for more than two years continuously with one and the same person or firm.

(5.) Or shall have taken a degree at one or other of the Universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Durham, London, or Dublin, and shall have served under articles for a period of two years to a public accountant or firm of accountants.

(6.) But no candidate shall be eligible for admission as an associate after the 1st day of January, 1878, until he shall have passed an examination as to his proficiency to the satisfaction of the Examiners of the Society.

(7.) Or shall conform to such conditions as the Council shall in any particular case require to be observed, but such admission shall only be made upon the written recommendation of at least three-fourths of the Council present at a Meeting specially called for the purpose.

STUDENTS.

Students shall be persons, not under 18 years of age, who are or have been pupils of Fellows or Associates of the Society, and who have the intention of becoming accountants; and such persons may continue Students until they attain the age of 26 years.

Further information can be obtained, and copies of the Rules can be had, upon application to the Secretary.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor, George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

The Accountant

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand.

The Accountant.

JANUARY 16, 1875.

The tendency of modern legislation is undoubtedly chiefly directed towards the simplification of legal process, and is framed in the interests of that numerous class of persons who are crying out for a system of law which everybody can understand and practise for himself. To a great extent, no doubt, simplicity is beneficial to all concerned in legal matters, and, indeed, the most rigid enthusiast for the wisdom of our ancestors can scarcely maintain that even our present much-improved system of judicature is immaculate. But there is a growing divergence, in all matters which may be governed by science, between the thoughtless mass of public opinion and scientific men. The first cry out for general education, and for law, physic, and divinity, made easy and plain to all capacities. The latter are more and more subdividing their ranks into bands of specialists, who understand, it is true, little more, perhaps, than the one subject to which they have devoted the attention of their life, but who are thoroughly masters of it. The results of their study are communicated to the world, and by this means a vast edifice of knowledge is rapidly, though laboriously, built up. It used to be a current saying that knowledge was knowing the book to which to look for information. Knowledge may be better defined, in the same spirit, as knowing a specialist in the subject of inquiry.

One of the chief outcries against the law is that while every British subject is theoretically supposed to be acquainted, not only with the contents of all the statutes that have ever been passed, but with every rule of law and equity, he must go for their interpretation to some lawyer, whose profession it is to expound them, and even then with the knowledge that he will get only an opinion, varying in authority with the experience and position of his adviser, but still entirely valid, only, except in rare cases, when it has been actually confirmed by a judicial decision. The panacea for this is supposed to be a simplification of the law, which it is fondly imagined can be, with a little arrangement, so condensed and cut down as to be actually, and not theoretically, within the grasp of every man of ordinary education. A very little reflection will dispel the illusion. The general principles of law are well-known to every educated lawyer, and may be learnt from countless textbooks; the real difficulty consists in their due application to the facts. It is very seldom that any barrister can, even after hunting through volume after volume of reports, lay his finger upon a decided case which is on all fours with the statement of facts before him. His skill is used rather to reason by analogy on the point, and to form a quasi-judicial opinion on the facts. Take, for instance, the various cases as to priorities, of which several have been reported in our columns. These are governed by a well-known maxim, "Qui prior est in tempore potior est in Jure," which we may familiarly render, "First come, first served." Of the law there is no doubt. The ingenuity of counsel and the judicial mind of the Court are occupied mainly in settling which claimant was first in order, as a matter of fact, and whether there was any such fraud or unfair dealing as would tend to invalidate his claim.

In fact, it may be laid down generally that in law as in everything else, there must be men who make it their profession, and devote their time to its exposition. And there, too, the division of labour obtains. Just as a medical man, in a difficult case, or one requiring special treatment, recommends his patient to go to one who has studied particularly the disease, so a solicitor will select for further advice one of a special class of counsel. One man is a famous criminal lawyer, an adept in the arts of cross-examination, but would break down utterly in some dry argument before a Judge in Equity. Another is a learned conveyancer famed for unravelling any title however abstruse and complicated, but would be hopelessly at sea in trying to address a jury. Thus to all who are involved in any legal troubles the rule will always be, to seek the advice of the most noted practitioner in the requisite line. No amount of legislation can ever alter this. The most violent reformers never seriously contend that cases should be tried before a man who has not had a vast amount of legal training and experience. It follows that the arguments must be conducted before him by men in the same plane of thought and mental habit. The difference between the confusion of our county courts, and the practice of our law courts, is clear evidence of the truth of both rule and deduction.

The difficulties of trustees in cases of bankruptcy afford a final illustration of our views. We pointed out last week that it was absurd to expect a man whose business horizon was bounded by his own counting-house, whose knowledge of accounts was sufficient merely to enable him to keep his books on a system peculiar to himself, or to see that his cashier committed no grievous error, and whose knowledge of law was absolutely nothing, to act as trustee in a bankruptcy; and we showed further, that in the attempt to save expense the estate was frequently saddled heavily with costs, which might have been avoided by a judicious expenditure in the first instance. A man might certainly learn enough law to carry him safely through the trusteeship of an ordinary bankruptcy, but it is doubtful if any one would take the trouble to do so, unless he expected frequently to avail himself of the knowledge he had acquired. It will therefore be always necessary to seek professional assistance, whether that of a solicitor, whose general legal training has fitted him to carry a client through the mazes of bankruptcy; or an accountant, whose "specialism" may be equally useful for the purpose. If an Act of Parliament is to be duly carried out, its administration must invariably be trusted to those classes, who have made its details their special study.

It has often been said that companies have neither bodies nor souls upon which penalties, temporal or spiritual, may be inflicted, but it seems that insurance companies possess highly sensitive feelings which may be very seriously wounded by the shafts of those rude critics who, suadente diabolo, have suggested that the accounts which these benevolent institutions are compelled to render, do not invariably bear out the flourishing statements of their actuaries and managers. Nothing can be more distressing to a mind duly impressed with the immaculate condition of assurance offices than the inconsiderate pamphlet of Mr. Knott, who is so presumptuous as to think that the interests of the insured are more to be considered than the tender feelings of companies, and has actually ventured to tabulate the results of their accounts, and afford a rough and ready test by which a man may judge whether the payments he painfully makes towards a provision for his family are likely or not to be wholly thrown away. Mr. Knott thought that no bad test of the stability of an office was afforded by an estimate of the proportion which its assets bore to its liabilities, and its expenditure to its yearly income, and he printed a series of tables, showing this in the case of several offices. Unfortunately the Prudential stood at the bottom of the list of companies, classified according to the percentage of assets, and at the top of the list of companies classified according to the percentage of expenses, and Mr. Knott, not content with this, actually cast some doubts on the literal accuracy of the figures and estimates of persons whose business it is to make matters appear as pleasant as possible. The result was that the Prudential filed a bill in Chancery, praying that Vice-Chancellor Hall would restrain the further dissemination of such statements. The Vice-Chancellor was, however, blind to the merits of the case. He was unmoved by the statement that the company was formed in the interest of what it termed touchingly, the Industrial Classes, and made its profits by the habit of the working man, of letting his policy lapse after paying a few premiums. Without even calling upon the defendant's counsel, Sir Charles Hall dismissed the bill, and thus increased still further the percentage of expenses by the addition of the costs of an unsuccessful suit. The decision is undoubtedly right. As long ago as Lord Eldon's time, it was held that the Court of Chancery would not interfere to prevent the publication of a libel, except in such cases as belong to the protection of infants, and even a guileless Insurance Company scarcely comes under that category. It is difficult to understand why the matter was brought into Court at all, as the result will scarcely remove any unfavourable impression which the pamphlet may have caused. In the interests of criticism, we are glad that the motion was refused. The law of contempt of Court has been lately greatly abused, and the fairest comments may render the writer liable to a criminal prosecution at the instance of a rich and ambitious adversary. It is the duty of the press to watch and check the undue pretensions of individuals of all sorts and conditions, of course exercising that power within the limits of fair criticism. If any malice had been shown the case might be different; as it is, if the Prudential does not answer a fair test, the sooner it reforms its ways and moderates its expenditure, the better both for itself and those who look to it for a provision for their own old age or their orphan children.

The quaintly worded Scotch case, which we quote at page 13, with its, uncouth jargon of strange law terms, may be fitly illustrated by reference to our own Bankruptcy Act. Section 92 makes void as against the trustee any transfer of property and every obligation incurred, with a view of giving the creditor a preference over other creditors, if the debtor becomes bankrupt within three months after the date of the transaction. This clause is to a certain extent modified by the 98th section, which provides that "any disposition of property, by delivery of goods, by any bankrupt in good faith and for valuable consideration, before the date of the order of adjudication, with any person not having, at the time of the making of such disposition of property, notice of any act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt, and available against him for adjudication," shall be held valid. If Gowlay v. Hodge had been an English case, this section would have governed it, and the decision would probably have been the same. The charges of collusion must be taken as badly founded, and in the absence of notice of any specific act of bankruptcy the transactions would have held good, especially as the delivery of goods was made for valuable consideration. It must be observed, too, that the defendant's knowledge of debtor being in embarrassed or even insolvent circumstances would not be sufficient to invalidate the transaction, as the Act says, plainly, notice of "an act of bankruptcy," which must necessarily be one of the various acts enumerated in its opening sections. We must note also that the Scotch limit is more favourable to the debtor than our own, which extends the period to three months, the penal clauses of the Act extending as far back, in the case of any fraudulent debtor, as four months. Nearly all cases of this class are, however, cases more of fact than of law, the bona fides of the transaction being the main point for decision. The case from the Halifax County Court, which we give in another column, though turning in another point, shows that to upset any transaction, notice of the Act of Bankruptcy must be clearly proved.

Had the order of the County Court Judge been upheld, the case of William Smith, reported in this issue, would have added materially to the many difficulties of the arduous and responsible post of an under-sheriff. The debtor was really and ostensibly a farmer, and, as such, not amenable to those numerous sections of the Bankruptcy Act, which relate exclusively to traders. Indeed, not only does the defining schedule to the Act expressly declare that a farmer shall not be considered as a trader, but a series of decisions such as the famous case of the Queen v. Silvester, where it was decided that a farmer was not within the meaning of the Lord's Day Act, have established this position. The 87th section of the Bankruptcy Act, which was referred to in argument, provides that "where the goods of any trader have been taken in execution, under a judgment for a sum exceeding fifty pounds, and sold, the sheriff shall retain the proceeds of the sale in his hands, for a period of fourteen days; and, upon notice being served on him within that period, of a bankruptcy petition having been presented against the trader, shall hold the proceeds, after deducting expenses, on trust for the trustee." The point is of more importance perhaps to under-sheriffs, than to trustees. It is clear that the selling or being ready, if a purchaser came, to sell any articles in the way of ordinary business will constitute a trader, and, being such, a debtor within the more stringent clauses of the Act. Notice to the sheriff should, in all such cases, be given without a moment's delay. If the sheriff had had notice that the debtor was being proceeded against as a trader, he would then have been bound to retain the goods.

The case of Mr. Von Hafen's bankruptcy was decided clearly in accordance with the 103d section of the Act, which provides that "if one partner of a firm is adjudged bankrupt, any creditor to whom the bankrupt is indebted jointly with the other partners of the firm, or any of them, may prove his debt for the purpose of voting at any meeting of creditors, and shall be entitled to vote thereat, but shall not receive any dividend out of the separate property of the bankrupt, until all the separate creditors have received the full amount of their respective debts." This section is intended to apply to the case of one member of a firm becoming bankrupt, though his partners were still carrying on the business, and adjusts fairly enough the rights of the respective parties. In the case of the full amount being received, the bankrupt would of course, be entitled to be recouped a due proportion by his partners. The present case is not only strictly within the section, but it is easy to see that injustice would have been done if a creditor had been allowed to release entirely the estate of one debtor, and by so doing, reduce the dividend payable to the creditors of the other. By postponing his claim till the separate creditors are paid in full, this is avoided. Any other decision would infallibly have opened way to undue favour and fraud.

We have been favoured with a copy of a lithographed circular sent out by "an accountant and liquidator, with a view to the extension" of his practice. This gentleman is prepared to undertake a great variety of work, from "balancing books" to "obtaining marriage licenses;" he is equally ready to attend "county and other courts of law," or to advance cash "at a few hours' notice." From his "long experience in commercial and domestic law," he is "bold to assert that his advice would lead to the attainment of all objects sought,"—and this advice, so the circular says, is to be given gratuitously. And if the client is not satisfied with the wisdom gathered from long experience, he is "prepared to recommend solicitors and counsel pre-eminent in particular branches of the law." Now, anybody who can do an addition sum (and even that may not be considered a sine qua non) may set up as an accountant or liquidator, and so long as the individual from whose circular we have quoted "inspires confidence" in his customers, and keeps clear of the law, probably nobody has much right to interfere; but it is a mistake to suppose, as some do, that accountants of respectability and standing encourage this sort of poaching on legal preserves. Apart from questions of right and privileges, the profession have nothing to gain by dabbling in lawyers' work, and they cannot set their faces too strongly against touting of this character.

The contributories and shareholders of the Brampton and Longtown Railway have been the means of pointing anew a valuable moral to those who invest moneys in companies. It is the old story told again; the value of an indemnity, and the fallacy of people expecting to have work done for them for nothing. Investors and speculators generally would do well to beware of any condition that nothing shall be paid unless the work is actually done, and should put scant faith in "representations" of any kind made by promoters, unless they are content to look to them for guarantee against any loss. Whether an action upon the alleged covenant of indemnity would lie, must remain for the judgment of a court of law. It is difficult to imagine, having regard to the wording of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, how the Lord Chancellor could have come to any other decision than that at which he actually arrived.

The failure of an eye-liquid manufacturer, which resulted in a meeting of his creditors at Birmingham, will afford a useful lesson to those traders who pin their faith exclusively on advertising. It used to be frequently said that any man who would spend ten thousand pounds in advertising an article would be sure to make double the amount by his speculation. The creditors of Mr. Ede scarcely viewed his prospects in so sanguine a light, and rejected a proposition that they should recoup themselves for their losses by expending £2,000 in advertising and making £10,000 profit, in favour of a more moderate resolution, to content themselves with a dividend of three shillings in the pound.

Another "accountant" (so described), figures in this week's police reports, and the Morning Advertiser finds in the fact a fitting theme for a little merriment, at the expense of accountants. There is a certain amount of cynical humour in the way in which the organ of the publicans puts unfortunate public-house customers into the pillory. Our contemporary says:—

"We live and learn. From a Police Report of yesterday we learn that accountants, as represented by a Mr James Thomas Dawson, carry umbrellas of the value of thirty-five shillings. Secondly, we learn that accountants, as represented by Mr James Thomas Dawson, drink with privates in cavalry regiments, on Sunday evenings at half-past eleven, until at least one of the said privates is the worse for drink. Thirdly, we learn that it is not beyond the scope of the hebdomadal otium of an accountant to offer a private in a cavalry regiment a lift home in a cab, to entrust him with that rarity, a thirty-five shilling umbrella, and finish up by giving the very 'full' private into custody for felony because he levants to the barracks with the article in question. It is impossible to admire too much the courage of—not the man of war—but the accountant, in coming forward to give a detailed account of the evening's amusement, and it must have been somewhat depressing to that individual to be told by Mr d'Eyncourt that 'it was not fair to give the prisoner into custody on a charge of felony. Seeing the prisoner was the worse for drink, the prosecutor ought not to have entrusted him with the umbrella.'"

Truly: "we live and learn," and the writer of this article may learn that, to use a hackneyed expression, there are accountants and accountants. We have no wish to detract from the importance and respectability of the principles and interests represented by the Morning Advertiser, but we venture to think that respectable accountants do not congregate in public-houses late on Sunday nights; and it should be added, that—notwithstanding the elasticity of the term "accountant,"—the name of the prosecutor in this case, does not even appear in the published lists of accountants. After all then, it would seem that the chief claims of Mr. Dawson, to the honour of a recognition by the 'Tizer, are, that he is the possessor of "that rarity, a thirty-five shilling umbrella," and the boon companion of publicans and sinners.

THE ENQUIRY INTO THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869.—At the adjourned meeting of the Council of the Society of Accountants in England, held on Thursday, the report of the committee appointed to consider what reply, if any, should be forwarded to the communication of the Lord Chancellor relative to the above matters, was presented and adopted by the council, the committee recommending that no reply be sent.

INSURANCE CRITICISM IN AMERICA.—The American papers record a little incident of how an insurance critic was settled there. Col. Tardy having criticised (in an insurance journal) a company of which Dr. Lay was actuary, and the former having acknowledged that he was the author, was struck by the fiery actuary. A duel followed in which the critic was killed. The Edinburgh actuaries, and the critics of the "Briton," may thank their stars that they don't live in America.

FIRE INSURANCE OFFICES.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—A recent edition of the Hour contained an article on the above subject, in which certain critics were charged with questioning the solvency of certain offices. It is well that the public should be cautioned against some of the "chevaliers d'industrie" who, by courtesy only, can receive the name of "critics." When I started in practice, some 5 or 6 years ago, the "European" was the subject of much discussion, and I was sent for by a certain gentleman who, "being desirous of pushing me on in the world," had expressed to a friend of mine much interest in my welfare. Being naturally anxious to obtain business, I promptly called upon him, and was then informed that he and his friends had combined and marked down nine offices for destruction, and that if I would come to terms with them as to participation of the plunder, they, without asking me to find any funds, would put me forward as liquidator of each in turn, the names of the offices being mentioned to me "in confidence;" some of them are in high repute at the present day. The game was to "wreck" one office at a time, and by the profitable result avoid all future business cares. Although a member of a much maligned profession, I had some scruples of conscience, and having been taught to call a spade a spade, called the scheme a piece of wholesale villiany, and refused to have anything to do with it. (One of the offices, the first on the list of victims, has since come to grief, but, fortunately for the public, the clique in question did not carry its proceedings.) My frankness was not appreciated, and I was called a fool for my scruples, which very naturally created a lasting coolness between myself and the philanthropist who was so anxious for my success in life! He and his set may, however, be on the move again, and it would be well for share or policyholders to consult a respectable actuary before allowing themselves to be influenced by broadcast assertions against any office. But while caution in this respect is necessary on the part of those who have invested in either shares or policies, equal caution should be employed in trusting any office whose position is not honestly and regularly made public. Some time ago my firm was induced to accept the auditorship of an insurance office, which was to start with certain new, but as I still believe (if they had been fairly carried out) sound principles. My firm accepted the position, conjointly with another firm, upon the express understanding that we should be allowed to audit thoroughly, and not certify to balances found in the ledger without knowing how those balances were arrived at. Things went smoothly for a while, and we were instructed to open, and write up, a set of books for the company. The manager, who was the originator and promoter of the company, was most anxious to have things done his way, "in consequence of his many years' experience of Life Assurance business;" but we presumed to differ from him, and while obeying his instructions, which were frequently altered, point-blank told him that we should, as auditors, refuse to pass many of the entries. Although we had been appointed auditors by the shareholders, the balance-sheet was issued unaudited by us, as, in spite of our written protest to the Board, we were not allowed to audit. A wild scheme has since been issued by the manager, and was discussed at a "private meeting" convened for the purpose, where, thanks to questions we as shareholders were enabled to put (not one of which was answered straightforwardly), the shareholders did not increase their holdings. The last published balance-sheet of the company (which has removed its office from London), is not reassuring, and the prospects of a call are promising. It is such offices as this one that do the harm in creating distrust. No bona fide office need dread to make its position publicly known; on the contrary, it is the best advertisement it can have. The more stringent the requirements of the Board of Trade are, the better for all. It should be impossible for life assurance offices to keep back or garble any facts in connection with their position. Some years ago when a "life assurance panic" existed, I spoke with a wealthy business friend, who told me he had dropped his policies, considering his first loss the cheapest, and regularly invested in consols for the benefit of his children, the monies he would othewise have paid in premiums. This, I argued, was taking an extreme view; but he reasonably urged that he had no time to investigate accounts himself (even if he had the power), and he would not, after the exposures which had (then) recently taken place, trust his money out of Government Securities, where they were safe. Every sound office will, with the public, approve of the Board of Trade's decision with regard to the Briton office, and, if that office is really sound, publicity is the best advertisement it can have. I shall be happy to satisfy you personally as to the truth of all the above statements, and enclose my card. Were it not that by so doing this letter might be construed into an advertisement I would publish my name.—Yours truly,

A PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT.

BANKRUPTCY OF A SCOTCH CONTRACTOR.

On Tuesday afternoon George Hunter, contractor, Port Hopetoun, Edinburgh, was examined on commission, before Mr. Gardner (Sheriff Clerk Depute), at his residence, 10, Archibald-place. Sederunt—Mr W. B. Robertson, accountant, trustee; Mr George Beg, S.S.C., agent in the sequestration; Mr A. J. Young, advocate, for workmen at Ratho Quarry; Mr. Theodore Macdonald, ironmonger, a commissioner on the estate; Mr John Robertson, jun., S.S.C., for Mackenzie and Kermack, agents for Mr George Caddell Bruce, a creditor; and Mr John W. H. Corns, for Mr D. Marshall, C.A., also creditor. The bankrupt made the following statement of his transactions:—He commenced business as a contractor about twenty years ago at Newcastle, with no capital. He continued there for six years and then came to Edinburgh, where he entered into partnership with his uncle, Taylor Hunter, a contractor, in a joint adventure to finish the harbour at Granton. About ten years ago he had also a contract on his own account in connection with the Bridge of Weir Railway. The contract lasted about eighteen months, and was a profitable one. He never kept any regular set of business books, except in connection with a Queensferry contract, and these were burned by bankrupt and Mr Geo. C. Bruce, C.E., in the office at Port Hopetoun. He did not remember the exact day on which the books were burned, but he thought it was on the day on which he signed the lease of Ratho Quarry. At the same time that he had the Bridge of Weir contract, he had also one for the building of a new pier at Oban. He realized about £1,000 of clear profit out of that contract. The Granton Breakwater contract was also profitable. As far as he could recollect, his uncle and him realized a profit of about £4,000 on it. He thought the Oban contract would terminate about 1864 or 1865. Immediately after that he obtained a contract to form the branch railway from Ratho to Dalmeny, known as the Queensferry Branch. That contract resulted in the loss of about £20,000, of which bankrupt lost £13,000 and Mr Bruce about £9,000. Mr Bruce was also his partner in the Oban contract, and he was engineer for all the contracts, except the Queensferry one. After the completion of the last-named contract, Mr Bruce and bankrupt took the Shilliehill Bridge contract at Dumfries for about £5,000. The profit realized from it was about £300 or £400. Bankrupt and Mr Bruce then took the Arkan drainage contract, which, like the preceding, lasted about a year. The amount of the contract was £10,000. So far as he could recollect, that contract would be about square—i.e., there was neither profit nor loss. His brother, Thomas Hunter, who was also a contractor, and bankrupt, then went into partnership, under the firm of Hunter Brothers. Their first contract was the Wigtown Waterworks. It amounted to a few hundred pounds. There was no profit on it. Their next contract was the Ballater Railway, which amounted, he thought, to £4,000 or £5,000. After the partnership with his brother, Mr Bruce had no copartnery interest in any of the contracts. He thought they would lose about £300 by the Ballater contract. There was still a balance due to the firm under the award of the arbiter, Mr Bruce, but bankrupt could not name the exact sum. Their next contract was the Glasgow Corporation gas tank, amounting to £10,000, which resulted in a profit of about £1,000. Their next contract was from the Maryhill Gas Company, which was a scheduled one, and was paid according to the work done. They next had the Hilton Railway, in England. The amount of that contract was £30,000. The firm first felt themselves in difficulties in November, 1872, when they stopped payment. They then consulted their law agents, Lindsay, Paterson, and Hall. The firm of Hunter Brothers never kept a regular set of business books. They made up a state of their affairs in November, 1872, which was handed to their agents. Being shown a conveyance by his firm to Mr Bruce, dated 7th May, 1873, and interrogated—What was your understanding of the nature of that conveyance when you signed it? Depones—That Mr Bruce was to pay all debts remaining due by the firm of Hunter Brothers in the best way he could. The firm of Hunter Brothers ceased to carry on business after November, 1872. Bankrupt had carried on Ratho Quarry, on his own account, for about seven years. He ceased to work that quarry some time before the rent became due at Martinmas last. He could not carry it on for want of means. He did not think the men had refused to work. He continued, however, to carry on Crooks' Quarry, because the stones were selling at a higher price. When he ceased the Ratho Quarry he was largely indebted to the workmen in arrears of wages, which might amount to about £300. He had been in ill health, and unable to give close attention to business for the last ten months. He had latterly always been in difficulties as he had had no capital since the dissolution of Hunter Brothers. The workmen at Crook Quarry were all paid with the exception of one week. At the time of his sequestration the men would not allow the stones to leave the quarry, which prevented their being paid wages. Two or three months ago he contracted for a drain at North Berwick, and he then removed a few picks, a hammer, and other tools from Ratho Quarry. The contract price was about £100. He worked at it for about a fortnight, but he found he was unable to carry it on for want of means. On the motion of the trustee, the commissioner adjourned the further examination of the bankrupt till Monday.

THE FAILURE OF THE LOWTHER HEMATITE COMPANY.

An examination respecting the affairs of the North of England Hematite Iron Co., now known as the Lowther Hematite Iron Co., carrying on business at Workington, Cumberland, and St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, took place in the Sheriff Court, Glasgow, on Tuesday. There were present Mr Andrew Paterson, C.A., Edinburgh, trustee; Mr Robt. Ross, writer, Glasgow, law agent in the sequestration; Mr W. D. Paterson, S.S.C., for the bankrupt, Barclay; and a number of creditors. The following statement as to the affairs of the firm was given by David George Hoey, an accountant in Glasgow. He said:

I am an accountant in Glasgow, and a partner of the Lowther Hematite Co. The partners of that concern were Mr Andrew Barclay and myself. It was formed in 1872. It began under the name of the North of England Hematite Iron Co., but the name was changed in July last to the Lowther Hematite Iron Co. The reason of the change was to prevent mistakes as to the character and quality of the iron, there being North of England iron in the market which was of an inferior quality to that produced by our company. There were one or two drafts of co-partnership prepared, but they were never completed. Mr Barclay and I were to be equally interested in the business, both as to profit and loss. We were also to provide the capital in equal proportions. £10,000 of capital was put into the business, £6,000 of which was contributed by me, and £4,000 by my partner. I was to take charge of the financial department, and Mr Barclay of the practical. We commenced to build the works at Workington, near Cumberland, in September, 1872, on ground acquired on a 99 years' lease from Lord Lonsdale. The first furnace was put in blast in April, 1873, and another in September, 1874. The works at present consist of two furnaces completed and in working order, while the foundation of a third has been laid. The works cost £109,523. That was exclusive of railway rolling stock, movable plant, and utensils, which cost about £7,000 additional. The iron work was mainly and the machinery was entirely supplied by Messrs Andrew Barclay and Son, Kilmarnock, who were paid by acceptances. The greater portion of these acceptances have been paid, but there is between £14,000 and £15,000 still unpaid. We carried on a profitable business from the time we began to make iron. We made £17,000 profit the first year of the company's operations. In consequence of the depressed state of the iron trade our profits after that were not so large. Early in 1874 we were pressed for capital, and we raised £35,000 on the works. In July following we got a further advance on the works, of which there is still a balance owing of £44,000. The liabilities of the firm amount to £121,979, and the assets to £115,834, which show a deficiency of £6.145. The value of the works and machinery is £80,000, being £29,523 less than they cost us. The depreciation of the works is more than sufficient to account for the deficiency in our state of affairs. Besides the liabilities of my own firm for its own business we are liable for £13,329 of acceptances of Andrew Barclay and Sons to us and endorsed by us. These acceptances were for the accommodation of Andrew Barclay and Sons, who were indebted to another firm who had become bankrupt, and at the date of the bankruptcy acceptances to a large amount were current, and which were all for value. I was the financial manager of Andrew Barclay and Sons, and I interposed to get these bills in part. I am individually liable to Andrew Barclay and Sons for cash credit bonds amounting to the extent of £15,000. I endorsed all their bills receivable as their commercial manager, but I do not anticipate any loss will arise on that account, as the acceptors are all good. After the sequestration was awarded I made an offer of 20s. in the pound in cash to the creditors mentioned in the state of affairs. The offer of 20s. per pound was contingent to my being able to settle certain claims for damages for breach of contract, and I had settled all these with the exception of one which amounted to £24,802. I do not admit that liability at all. I explain that that creditor referred to was willing to modify his claim to £13,000. This sum was larger than I could pay, and so my intention to pay 20s. a pound fell through. My drawings from the company were at the rate of one hundred pounds per month, or £1,200 a year. I have made a full disclosure of my affairs to the trustee.

Andrew Barclay, the other partner, was next examined, and concurred in Mr Hoey's statement so far as it related to the business of the company. He had handed to the trustee a state of his individual affairs. There were two policies of assurance on his life to the amount of £7,000. These policies were in force. Mr W. D. Paterson, on behalf of the creditors, moved for an adjournment of the examination sine die. The Sheriff objected to the adjournment of the examination without fixing a specific date. His lordship fixed 19th January for the adjournment.

SHERIFF COURT, GLASGOW.

(Before Mr Sheriff GALBRAITH.)

RE ANDREW BARCLAY AND SON.—In the sequestration of Andrew Barclay and Son, engineers, Kilmarnock, and St. Vincent-street, Glasgow. There were present—Mr Andrew Paterson, C.A., Edinburgh, trustee; Mr Robert Ross, writer, Glasgow, law agent in sequestration; and Mr John Naismith, writer, Glasgow, for a creditor. Andrew Barclay, one of the bankrupts, was examined, and stated that he had been in business in Kilmarnock for upwards of thirty years. Until early in 1874 he carried on the business under his own name, and had no partner. About the month of May, 1874, he assumed his son, James Wilson Barclay, as a partner. There was, however, no contract finally concluded between them. There was an understanding that his son was to have a fifth share, but no final arrangement was made. His son gave him £1,000 some time before he was assumed as a partner, and the sum was allowed to lie in the business capital. That was all the capital his son had put into the business. In 1871 he became pressed for capital, and he had to get indulgence from his creditors. He paid them 20s. in the pound, of which 10s. was paid in cash and the balance by bills, all of which were duly retired. About the time of the arrangement with his creditors, he took the assistance of Mr Hoey, accountant in Glasgow, to manage his financial affairs and keep his books. Mr Hoey had no interest in the business, but was paid a salary. From that time to the present his financial affairs and books were kept under Mr Hoey's supervision. He was a partner in the Lowther Hematite Company, which was formed in 1872. Since the formation of that company he had been engaged exclusively at Workington managing the business for that company. He had the charge of the working department. He was not conversant with the whole details of the Kilmarnock business during his absence. His son James took charge of the practical department of the business. His Kilmarnock business was a profitable one up to the time of his suspension. He had handed to the trustee a statement of the affairs of his Kilmarnock business. It was made up by him from information communicated to him by his son James. The statement showed the assets to amount to £47,050, subject to a heritable security, on which there was a balance due of £13,500. The liabilities in the statement amounted to £26,946 10s. 1d. His Kilmarnock business was very much mixed up with the Lowther Iron Co.'s affairs. He had granted for the benefit of the Lowther Iron Company, two heritable securities, on which there was owing £35,000 and £44,000 respectively. There were numerous bills to a large amount between the Lowther business and the Kilmarnock business which were at present unadjusted. These bills were in the hands of third parties. Mr. Hoey could give a better explanation than he could of the complication between the two firms, and he must refer to that gentleman. He had heritable properties at Kilmarnock and Kilbirnie which belonged to himself individually. The Kilbirnie property, he thought, was subject to a heritable debt of £400. These properties were also included in the heritable securities granted for the benefit of the Lowther Co. Mr Ross at this stage moved for an adjournment, and the Sheriff accordingly adjourned the examination until the 19th inst.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR and Lord Justice MELLISH.)

IN RE THE POOLE FIRE BRICK AND BLUE CLAY COMPANY—HARTLEY'S CASE.—This was an appeal by the official liquidator of the Poole Fire Brick Company from a decision of the Master of the Rolls declining to fix Mr Hartley with liability in respect of 200 shares of which the allotment had been cancelled. The company, which was registered in December, 1870, entered about the same time into an agreement for the purchase of property and plant for the purposes of the company's business. The consideration was to consist of £1,200 cash and £4,800 in fully paid-up shares of the company. In January, 1871, pursuant to the vendor's request, 200 fully paid-up shares (part of those to which he was entitled) were allotted to his nominee, George Hartley, one of the directors of the company. In June, 1871, the directors discovered that the agreement with the vendor had not been filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, as required by the Companies' Act, 1867, sec. 25, and they thereupon cancelled the shares issued to Hartley, who delivered up the certificates of the shares to the secretary, who wrote across the counterfoil "issued in error and cancelled." On the 13th of June, 1871, the agreement was duly filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, and 200 fully paid-up shares were subsequently issued to Hartley in lieu of the 200 shares cancelled. In March, 1873, a resolution for voluntarily winding up the company was passed, and in the course of the winding-up the liquidator sought to make him liable in respect both of the 214 shares allotted in June, 1871, and also in respect of the original 200, the allotment of which had been cancelled. The Master of the Rolls having decided that Mr Hartley was not liable in respect of the original 200 shares, the liquidators now appealed. Mr A. G. Marten, Q.C., and Mr Chester appeared for the liquidators in support of the appeal; Mr Cracknall, for Mr Hartley, was not called on. The Lord Chancellor said that the facts of the case which appeared necessary to be stated were that an agreement was entered into with the owner of the estate on which the works of this company were to be carried on for the sale of the land to certain persons. Part of the payment for the land was to be in the shape of paid-up shares in the company. After the formation of the company, but before this agreement was registered, as required by the Companies' Act 1867, 200 paid-up shares (part of the stipulated payment) were allotted at the request of the vendor, to Mr. Hartley, one of the directors of the company. The form of allotting these 200 shares was gone through, and the certificates were made out. This was in January, 1871; and in June, 1871, notice was taken by the directors, and apparently also by the vendor, that the agreement in question had not been registered, and accordingly that there had been an irregularity in the issue of shares which might render the whole transaction open to question. The agreement was then registered, and the original allotment of shares cancelled, and 200 shares were de novo allotted to Mr Hartley as paid-up shares, together with an additional 14, as to which no question arose. It had been contended on behalf of the official liquidator that he had a right to fix Mr Hartley, not merely with the 214 shares allotted de novo, but also with the 200 shares professed to have been cancelled. Now, this was not the case in which Hartley was applying for the first time, either before or after the winding-up, to have his name removed from the register. If such an application came to be made after the winding-up it appeared to his lordship that, having regard to the authorities, it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to accede to it; if made before the winding-up, Mr Hartley would have been put to strict proof of his case, and he would have had to show, as against the directors, all those elements of mistake and irregularity which would alone entitle him to relief on that ground. But that was not the case here. The directors and Mr Hartley some years before the winding-up, apparently in perfect bona fides, considered the question, and determined that it was not the intention of the directors to give, while it was not the intention of Mr Hartley to receive, anything but paid-up shares which could legally be allotted. When they found that, through complete inadvertence, a mistake had been made, they agreed to cancel the shares as having been allotted in error. In order to invalidate the transaction, it was incumbent upon the official liquidator to show that what was done was not done bona fide or under circumstances which would give him the right to undo the transaction. It appeared to his Lordship that it was a perfectly bona fide transaction, and that it was not incompetent, a mistake having been made, to the directors to cancel the allotment. He might also observe that this was a case in which no harm had been done to any one. No one, either creditor or shareholder, could have been misled, as no return was made to the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies until after the original had been replaced by the new allotment. The official liquidator, therefore, was not entitled to fix Mr Hartley with the original 200 shares. The motion failed altogether and must be dismissed, with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. The real question was whether it was the intention of all parties that the 200 shares should be cancelled. When the mistake was discovered, they perceived that the vendor had not, in fact, been paid by those 200 shares. It was for the common benefit of all parties that the mistake, whether of law, in ignorance of the requirements of the Act of 1867, or of fact, should be rectified, and it was competent to them to do so. This they did by cancelling the shares issued in mistake and by issuing new ones. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

JAN. 14.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR and Lord Justice MELLISH.)

IN RE THE BRAMPTON AND LONGTOWN RAILWAY COMPANY—SHAW'S CLAIM—NIMMO AND M'NAY'S CLAIM.—These were appeals from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon. The Brampton and Longtown Railway was projected in 1863. A subscription contract was signed by several landowners and others resident in the district, and an Act of Parliament was passed in 1866 incorporating the company to construct and work the railway; but sufficient subscriptions could not be obtained, and the project had to be given up. A warrant for authority to abandon the railway was granted by the Board of Trade under the Abandonment of Railways Act, and the company was ordered to be wound up on petition in the Court of Chancery. Messrs Nimmo and M'Nay, engineers, claimed to prove for a debt in respect of plans and surveys made and work done preliminary to the passing of the Act. Mr Shaw, the solicitor engaged in preparing the Bill, in like manner claimed for preliminary expenses. The claims were grounded on the general provision in the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, making such expenses debts of the company, and also a clause to the like effect in the special Act of Parliament. The claims were resisted by the subscribers to the scheme other than the claimants, on the ground that they had been induced to subscribe on the representation that they should be liable for nothing unless the line was actually made. The Vice-Chancellor admitted the claims. Some of the alleged contributories appeared. The Lord Chancellor said that for the present purpose the appellants stood in exactly the same position as the official liquidator, and they must show that Mr Shaw and the other claimants were not entitled in respect of their professional services to maintain any claim whatever against the company. The question was, whether, assuming the evidence tendered on behalf of the claimants to be uncontradicted, there was any evidence of a contract to indemnify the company against these claims. His Lordship thought that what occurred did not amount to any contract intended to inure for the benefit of the company; it was at the utmost a contract made with individuals for the purpose of assuring them that they, as individuals, would not, by reason of their signing the subscription contract, be called upon to pay anything if the railway was not made. It was, however, argued that inasmuch as the individuals could only be called on to pay as contributories to a common fund, the agreement was in effect an engagement not to call upon any one to contribute to that fund, in case the line was not made, and therefore not to call on the company. That argument could not prevail. Taking the evidence to be uncontradicted, the agreement alleged did not amount to more than an agreement to indemnify individuals. Whether there was in fact such an agreement, his Lordship expressed no opinion now, and how effect should be given to it if it existed could not be decided upon the present occasion. All that could now be said was that the respondents were entitled to make these claims in the winding up, but nothing was decided as to the quantum of the claims. The appeals must be dismissed, with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. The Lord Chancellor said the order would be made without prejudice to any claim which the contributories might make to an indemnity in any other way.

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir C. HALL.)

THE PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY v. KNOTT.—This suit was instituted for an injunction to restrain the defendant from publishing or circulating a pamphlet which he had written, entitled "Solvent Life Offices and others; or, What Becomes of Ten Millions a Year." The bill in the suit stated that the plaintiffs' company (which has been in existence since 1848) carried on the business of life assurance on an extensive scale, but the character of its business was very exceptional. It consisted for the most part of what is termed "industrial business"—that is to say, the business of granting policies of assurance upon the lives of artisans and other members of the working classes of society. The plaintiffs' company was the only English life assurance office which transacted industrial business upon any considerable scale. Its industrial (which was its principal) business was one of great magnitude; but its other, or ordinary, business was comparatively insignificant. The policies effected with the industrial department were in a large majority of cases kept on foot for a few years only. The premiums on them were numerous, and, having regard to the expenses of their collection, unusually high; but the ratio of the amount of the reserve fund in the industrial business to the total amount assured might properly be and was correspondingly small. In short, no fair estimate could be formed of the solvent or other condition of an office carrying on industrial business by comparing the ratio of its expenses with its premium income, or the ratio of the amount of its reserve fund with the total amount assured, as might be ascertained in the cases of offices transacting ordinary life assurance business. The defendant, who had taken a prominent part in the discussions which have prevailed with respect to the solvency of companies engaged in the business of life assurance, had published the pamphlet in question. On one of the fly leaves of it were the following passages:—"Ten millions sterling are paid annually by the public for life assurance. It behoves every policy-holder to ascertain, before it is too late, whether the life office he has chosen is solvent, or one of the 'others.' Particular attention is directed to pages 32 and 45." Then, at page 32, there was a tabular statement, setting out the names of 15 chief offices, arranged according to "per centage of expenses and commission to premium income." The plaintiffs' company stood at the head of that list, and opposite to their names 46 per cent. That was the largest per centage in that list; the least, or last on it, being 3 per cent. At the foot of that list was this note, appended to the plaintiffs' name—"Largely industrial." At page 45 there was another tabular statement, setting out the names of 15 chief offices, arranged according to "percentage of assets to liabilities." The plaintiffs' company stood at the bottom of that list, and opposite to their name, 4 per cent. That was the smallest per centage in that list; the largest, or first on it, being 55 per cent. The bill then stated that the pamphlet, after asserting that by far the greatest proportion of the failures which had occurred among life assurance companies within the last 30 years had been caused by reckless extravagance of management, and that, in judging of the solvency of an office, the question of expenses demanded serious attention, proceeded to add that the immediate questions that concerned policy holders were—What was the present position and what were the future prospects of those offices which from their high per centage of expenses, and from other reasons, were placed beyond what were admittedly the limits of safety? Of the 41 offices in that category, or "Black List," as it might well be termed, two only having a premium income of over £200,000 were to be found. The percentage of one of those offices was 22 per cent., while that of the other was 46 per cent. In other words, that latter office was unable to collect £458,262 without incurring an outlay of £213,984. The pamphlet, then, without specifying the peculiar nature of the plaintiffs' company's industrial business, contrasted their expenditure with that of other offices in their ordinary life assurance business; spoke of the folly of considering valuations made by a company's own actuary in any light than that of "a serious joke," referring, in proof of that, to the case of the plaintiffs' company. The pamphlet also stated that if by any possible chance or misconception the reader still hankered after the valuation flesh-pots of the office in which, possibly, he might be assured, he was invited to note that, whereas every life office showed by valuation a surplus, Mr Sprague, in a recent letter to the Times, stated that the result of the publication of their accounts by certain companies, some of which were doing a large business, had led the actuaries who had studied them irresistibly to the conclusion that the companies in question were insolvent beyond all hope of recovery. The effect of the defendant's pamphlet was to represent that the plaintiffs' company was being managed with reckless extravagance, and was in a state of insolvency and unable to fulfil its engagements. Those representations were utterly untrue. The company's affairs were managed without any extravagance. It had been for many years past, and was now, in an exceedingly prosperous and thriving condition, abundantly solvent, and earning large profits, and the continued publication of the pamphlet, which the defendant threatened, would be most injurious to the credit and greatly damage the business and profits of the company. The case now came on upon an interlocutory motion for an injunction, and considerable evidence of actuaries and others was adduced on both sides. Mr Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr Phear for the plaintiffs, insisted that the pamphlet was a false and libellous attack on the company. They did not impute wilful or malicious motives to the defendant, but they said that when a person undertook to write about any special subject it was his duty to master it previously. The defendant had not done so. Had he inquired at the company's offices he would have found out the true nature of their business, and would have seen that it was unlike that of other offices. They concluded an elaborate argument by an analysis of the particular business of the plaintiffs' company, showing that the common calculations with respect to ordinary insurance offices did not apply to this one; that it was clearly in a flourishing condition; that it was imperilled by the defendant's pamphlet; that, although this Court might not have power to restrain a "libel" simpliciter (which was a crime), if a libel was accompanied—as this was—by injury to property, then the Court had complete jurisdiction to restrain the libel by an injunction, and that an order for one should accordingly be made upon this motion. Mr Osborne Morgan, Q.C., and Mr H. B. Ince, for the defendant, were not called upon. The Vice-Chancellor said the question he had to determine was whether he should, at the present instance of the plaintiffs, grant an injunction to restrain the publication by the defendant of the pamphlet in dispute. The plaintiffs complained of it in two important respects. They said the defendant had adopted two tests of the solvency or insolvency of insurance companies, which did not apply to the plaintiffs' company; and that the defendant by publishing the pamphlet which mentioned those tests, so really inapplicable to the company, had libelled it. It was necessary, therefore, to refer to the character of the pamphlet, the object of it, and, to some extent, its probable effects. The writer of it was a gentleman who had turned his attention to insurance offices, and he had conceived the idea of writing a book about them, which should be profitable to himself and useful to the public. All possible notion of any malice on his part towards the plaintiffs was entirely out of the case. He, however, having in his mind the idea suggested, thought he could bring all insurance offices to a test as to whether they were safe or unsafe, and that he could explain the nature of that test to the public at large. No doubt by the word "unsafe" he would imply insolvent. In the pamphlet he had specified certain offices which, according to his test, would appear to be insolvent. But on that the Vice-Chancellor would express no opinion. The plaintiffs had produced the evidence of two most eminent actuaries in proof of the fact that their company was perfectly solvent. If, indeed, it had been necessary to consider that, he should have thought the plaintiffs had a good case as against the pamphlet in question; but it was not requisite for him to give any opinion on the point; and, after all, although the pamphlet contained the names of as many as 41 companies, which the writer placed in what he called the "Black List," it was only his opinion as to them, and a mere statement of what he (the writer of the pamphlet) thought about them. The readers of the work must be left to exercise their own judgment in the matter. If the writer had taken an erroneous view of the nature and applicability of his proposed tests, the public and persons who had studied the subject were fully capable of pronouncing upon them. The tests proposed—viz., the percentage of expenses and commission to premium income, and the percentage of assets to liabilities—were things as to which many people were not agreed. The whole matter was, after all, one of opinion only. But it had been specially argued on behalf of the plaintiffs that the defendant in his pamphlet had not fully explained—had suppressed—certain particulars which, if he had stated them, would have shown that his proposed tests were not applicable to the plaintiffs' company. The plaintiffs might be right as to that, but the defendant thought they were not. Judging from the evidence adduced, it would seem that he was wrong, and that his views were unfounded. But, before an injunction could be granted on this motion to restrain the publication of the pamphlet, the Court must be reasonably satisfied that there had been such a suppression of circumstances as would, if stated, have made a difference in the result of the cause at the hearing. He thought there had not been such a suppression as to justify the Court in stopping the publication of the pamphlet on that ground. Then again, having regard to the evidence adduced, although the writer's view was such as had been mentioned, it could not be said that the matter of his pamphlet was libellous; and so far, also, the plaintiffs' case for an injunction was not made out. Indeed, as already observed, the subject was one which, after all, was a matter of opinion. It was not to be assumed that the public would be led by the nose by this gentleman's statements, nor was there such an injury to property in the case as required the interference of this Court by an injunction. He should have thought that the plaintiffs might have protected themselves by some published statement of their own against the allegations in the pamphlet, so as not to lose the confidence of the public. On the whole case, he considered that it was not one in which the plaintiffs should be protected by the injunction of this Court; and the motion must be refused, with costs.

INTEREST TIME TABLES.—We have received a copy of the Interest Time Tables compiled by William Lewis, of Plymouth, and published by Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange. The compiler claims for his work, "the advantage of showing at a glance, without any moveable or sliding parts, the number of days, from any day in the year to any other day in the same or following year. This result is obtained by having a page for every day, from the 1st January to 31st December, and calculated to 365 days." This claim is amply substantiated by inspection, the chief merits of the book, being, as indicated above, clearness and simplicity.

FARMER OR TRADER.

Ex parte THE SHERIFF OF HEREFORDSHIRE. Re WM. SMITH.
(Before the CHIEF JUDGE in Bankruptcy.)

The debtor was a farmer in Herefordshire. In 1872 he invented a medicine for the cure of the foot-and-mouth disease among cattle, which he advertised extensively, and succeeded in selling a considerable amount of it. At the close of 1872 the cattle disease abated, and after that time the debtor had no further sale for his medicine, though he stated that he always kept a stock on hand ready for sale. In May, 1874, judgment was recovered against the debtor in an action, and on May 18, at the direction of the execution creditor, the sheriff of Herefordshire levied the amount and costs on the farm, stock, and goods of the debtor. The sheriff retained the amount levied in his hands till May 30, and on that day paid the amount recovered to the execution creditor. On June the 1st the debtor filed his petition for liquidation, and on the same day (being within fourteen days after execution) notice of the petition was served on the sheriff. The trustee under the liquidation claimed from the under-sheriff the amount he had paid to the execution creditor, on the ground that, the debtor being a trader within the meaning of section eighty-seven of the Act, the under-sheriff ought not to have disposed of the amount he had levied in execution till after the fourteen days had elapsed. For the under-sheriff it was contended that the man was a farmer, and appeared nothing but a farmer, and as the under-sheriff had no knowledge of his being a trader, he was right in paying the money to the execution creditor within the fourteen days. The Chief Judge held that it would be unreasonable to cast upon the sheriff the duty of ascertaining whether a debtor was a trader or not, or had been engaged in any transactions which amounted to trading. No notice of the trading having been given to him, the sheriff had merely discharged his plain duty in handing over the proceeds of the execution to the execution creditor.

THE FAILURE OF AN EYE LIQUID MANUFACTURER.

A statement of the affairs of John Ede, eye liquid manufacturer, of Birmingham, was submitted to a meeting of the creditors held on the 8th inst. The chair was occupied by Mr J. B. Dyson, of Bartholomew-street, and Mr J. F. Grove appeared for the debtor. Mr Griffin, Mr Collis, Mr Joseph Rowlands (Rowlands and Bagnall) Mr W. Fellows, Mr Lomas Harrison (the receiver), Mr Spencer Dominy, and others, appeared on behalf of the creditors. Mr Grove stated that the proposals he had to make to the meeting were, that the original offer of 2s. in the pound down should be accepted, or that the creditors should take 20s. in the pound in "eye liquid," or that 3s. in the pound should be paid—1s. 6d. down, and 1s. 6d. in six months, secured to the satisfaction of the chairman of the meeting for confirmation, or that the debtor should carry on the trade under inspection for six months, the creditors undertaking to expend in that period £2,000, or thereabouts, in advertising, and to pay the debtor a salary. Mr Fellows proposed "That the offer of 3s. be accepted." Mr Collis seconded the proposition. Mr Stratton proposed, as an amendment, "That the affair be worked for 12 months under a committee of inspection, the debtor receiving 30s. per week as remuneration." He considered that the debtor's trade had been of the most reckless kind, and he would ask the creditors whether they were going to let a reckless man like Mr Ede square up his accounts for 3s. in the pound, and then go and laugh at them. He (the speaker) had calculated that the advertisements would provide an income for the next year of something like £10,000. Mr Fellows: What, out of the eye liquid? Mr Stratton: Yes. He does not come here to put himself in our hands, but he only offers to work under a committee of inspection for six months. Mr Rowlands thought the working of the concern under a committee of inspection for six or twelve months would not be at all practicable. The debtors assets amounted to £915 4s. 5d., and the offer of 3s. in the £1 would amount to nearly £1,600 in round numbers. Adding £200 or £250 for cash, the debtor would have to pay close upon £2,000 if the offer were accepted. He strongly objected to give three or six months for the payment of 1s. 6d. in the pound, and he proposed that 3s. in the pound should be paid cash. Mr Bates seconded the proposition. Mr Lewis proposed, "That we don't take less than 6s. 8d." Mr Sargent seconded the motion. The last motion, upon being put to the meeting, was lost, seven voting in its favour and ten against it. Mr Rowland's proposition was then put and carried, 17 being in its favour and one against it. Put as a substantive motion, the result was 12 votes in its favour, and three against. It was remarked that "cash" meant payment in a month. Mr Grove said the debtor was unable to pay the sum required down; and Mr Rowlands ultimately proposed "That such composition of 3s. in the pound be paid or secured within such time and such manner as the Chairman may approve before the confirmation of the resolution." Carried. The meeting then terminated.

LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES.

At the Halifax County Court on Tuesday, before Mr Serjeant Tindal Atkinson, Judge, an application was made by Mr Jubb, on behalf of Mr Frederick Whitaker, woolstapler, Halifax, for an order calling upon Mr C. J. Rhodes, the trustee in the bankruptcy of John Shackleton, woolstapler, Halifax, to deliver up to Mr Whitaker three sheets and three bales of wool, delivered to the bankrupt Shackleton on the 12th December last, or in default to pay £61 10s. 6d., the value of the wool. Mr Smith (Holroyde and Smith) represented the trustee. The facts of the case were as follows:—On the 5th December Mr Whitaker had a sale by auction at the Mechanics' Hall, at which he disposed of various lots of wool, which had been previously advertised and catalogued. The bankrupt attended the sale, and became the purchaser of the wool in question, which, however, remained in Mr Whitaker's possession until the 12th December, when it was delivered to the bankrupt's carter. On the 19th ult. Mr Whitaker was surprised to find Shackleton's bankruptcy advertised, and he at once consulted his solicitors, who gave notice to the registrar of the court, acting for the time being as trustee, not to dispose of the wool. It transpired that a debtor's summons was served upon the bankrupt on the 23d November; that he committed an act of bankruptcy on December 1st; that a petition in bankruptcy was filed and served upon him on December 3d; that he attended Mr Whitaker's sale on the 5th; that the wool was delivered on the 12th, and that Shackleton was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 14th, two days after the delivery. The debtor had given no notice of any intention to dispute the petition as was required by the Act, hence Mr Jubb contended that at the time he purchased the wool, Shackleton had committed an act of bankrupty, and that goods coming into the possession of a bankrupt after a bankruptcy, were not in the order and disposition of the trustee. Mr Smith maintained that as Mr Whitaker had parted with the possession of the wool, and had failed to take any steps to regain its possession, the bankrupt was entitled to it. Mr Jubb repeated that Mr Whitaker knew nothing about the bankruptcy until the 19th December. His Honour ordered the wool or its value to be given up to Mr Whitaker.

Hard Hearted Creditors.—As a sequel to the paragraph under the above heading which appeared in our last issue, it may be stated that the doctor appointed to examine the bankrupt submitted a certificate setting forth that the state of his health was such that he would incur great danger in attending the Court, and it was consequently resolved that the examination should take place at the bankrupt's residence.

The Law Times is requested to state that any suggestions to the Bankruptcy Committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor, may be addressed to them at the Treasury.

A petition for the winding up of the Teplitz Colliery and Coal Oil Company (Limited) is to be heard before the Master of the Rolls on the 23rd inst.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar Pepys, sitting as Chief Judge.)

Re Wustenfeld and Siedenberg.— The debtors, described as merchants and commission agents, of Dunsterhouse, Mincing-lane, have filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities returned at £10,000, and assets, comprising stock-in-trade, book debts, and furniture, about £4,000. It appeared that the debtors had been extensively engaged in the cotton trade. Claims to portions of the assets had been made, and in order to guard against fluctuations in the market, it was necessary that the cotton now on hand should be realized. Mr. W. A. Crump now applied that Mr. Shubrook, accountant, Gracechurch-street, should be appointed receiver and manager. He stated that contracts were pending which rendered the appointment desirable. His Honour granted the application.

January 11.

This being the first day of Hilary Term, the sittings in Lincoln's-inn-fields were resumed. The morning's list was unusually short, two cases only being entered for hearing before Mr Registrar Hazlitt, as Chief Judge.

Re Ernest Scott Jervis.—This was a sitting for public examination. The bankrupt, described as of 54, Queen's-gate, Hyde Park, of no trade or occupation, had been adjudicated upon the petition of M. Rudolphe Helbronner, embroiderer, of Regent-street, a creditor for £261, for goods supplied to the bankrupt. The debts are estimated at £150,000, with assets of doubtful value. At a former meeting the bankrupt was ordered to file his accounts, but he had not yet done so. Mr Brough, for the trustee, asked that a peremptory order should be made requiring the bankrupt to file his accounts within a period to be named, and that in the meantime the sitting for the public examination should be adjourned. Mr Lumley, for the petitioning creditor, concurred in the application. His Honour made a peremptory order that the bankrupt should file his accounts within one month, and adjourned the examination until the 22d of February.

(Before Mr. Registrar Hazlitt.)

Re Dean, Gilbert and Elderkin.—Application was made to continue the interim injunction granted against several sueing creditors until the further order of the Court. The debtors are woollen warehousemen, Little Britain, and 4, Carr's Lane, Birmingham, who failed in December last for £4,000, the assets being about £3,000. An application was made to the Court last week for the appointment of Mr James Waddell as receiver and manager of the estate, in the place of Mr J. Jordan, who had tendered his resignation at the first meeting, at the request of the creditors—he having been a clerk in the employ of the debtors. Mr H. Wright now applied to his Honour to continue the injunction granted against five of the creditors until the further order of the Court. In reply to a question from the learned Registrar, Mr. Wright stated that he applied on behalf of the late receiver, Mr Jordan, on whose behalf he had given notice of the present application previous to the appointment of Mr Waddell. His Honour continued the injunction against all the creditors until the further ordering of the Court.

January 12.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge.)

Re Francis Godrich, jun.—The bankrupt was the defendant in the late divorce suit of "Godrich v. Godrich." He had been adjudicated upon the petition of Mr A. Beddall, solicitor, a creditor for £253 10s. 6d., being the petitioner's costs directed to be paid pursuant to an order of Sir James Hannen. There have been several adjournments of the sitting for public examination, and at the last meeting, held on the 24th of November, the bankrupt was ordered to file a full account of his transactions with his father, to whom, it was alleged, his property had been transferred A statement of affairs showed debts of £2,081, and there were no assets. Mr Beddall appeared for the trustee; Mr Bagley for the bankrupt. It was stated that since the last sitting the bankrupt had filed an account of his transactions with his father, but the trustee, who still opposed, pointed out that the statement rendered was defective in several material particulars. On behalf of the bankrupt, and in opposition to any further adjournment, it was urged that the case had been before the Court for more than a year, and the facts had been fully investigated. The bankrupt was described as the not very careful son of a very indulgent and liberal father; he had been engaged in unfortunate litigation, which had led to his ruin, and in the absence of books no better accounts could be rendered. His Honour thought the bankrupt was bound to furnish specific details respecting the payments made by his father on his behalf. He regretted that much perverseness had been shown throughout the case, and said that one of the parties had acted very improperly in writing a letter to him privately. Mrs Godrich said she did not intend to prejudice the mind of the Court in any way. She had been most cruelly treated. His Honour said that if Mrs Godrich had any complaint to make she could bring it forward in the usual way. The matter was then adjourned, Mr Paget, the official assignee, undertaking to assist the bankrupt in the preparation of the further account desired.

January 13.

(Before Mr. Registrar MURRAY, sitting as Chief Judge.)

RE VON HAFEN.—The question in this case was whether a joint creditor, who had obtained an adjudication againt one of two members of a firm, was entitled to prove upon the separate estate for the purpose of receiving a dividend. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Bagley were counsel for the petitioning creditor, and Mr Davey and Mr F. O. Crump for the trustee. It appeared that on the 2nd of May, 1874, Sir Thomas Pasley, being a creditor of Messrs Von Hafen and H. Pasley for the sum of £3,186, filed a petition against Von Hafen, under which, on the 19th of May, adjudication was made. On the 7th of May the same creditor presented a petition against H. Pasley, and on the 27th adjudication resulted, but an order was afterwards made, by consent, that the two bankruptcies should be worked separately. No claim had been made by Sir Thomas Pasley to rank against H. Pasley's estate in respect of his joint debt, but, as petitioning creditor, he sought to prove and receive dividends under the separate estate of the bankrupt Von Hafen. His Honour held, however, that the petitioning creditor could not receive any dividend out of the separate property of Von Hafen until all the separate creditors had received the full amount of their debts.

RE LAURANCE VAN PRAAGH.—The debtor, who is a diamond merchant and jeweller, carrying on business in Oxford-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities of £6,000, and assets, consisting of stock in trade, £1,500, and book debts £200. Upon the application of Mr C. Harcourt, for the debtor and two of the creditors, the Court appointed Mr T. H. Wintle, accountant, Coleman-street, receiver of the estate.

January 14.

(Before Mr. Register BROUGHAM, as Chief Judge.)

IN RE GRANT, BRODIE, AND CO.—The debtors, who traded as commission merchants in East India-avenue, failed in June last, and their affairs are now under liquidation by arrangement, in pursuance of resolutions come to by the creditors. The liabilities were returned at £167,556 and assets £23,755. The case now came before the Court on the hearing of a motion made on behalf of Messrs J. C. im Thurn and Co., agents for Messrs L. C. Stagg and Co., of Guayaquil, for an order that the trustee do hand over to Messrs J. C. im Thurn and Co., as such agents, remittances amounting to £1,760, subject to a slight deduction, and which remittances had been cashed by the debtors at the date of their suspension of payment.—Mr Nicol appeared in support of the motion; Mr Winslow, Q.C., and Mr Morley were counsel for the trustee.—It not appearing for what purpose the remittances in question had been made, his Honour said this was very material, and allowed the motion to stand adjourned for further evidence on the point.

January 15.

(Before Mr. Register PEPYS, as Chief Judge.)

IN RE HENRY BRINSLEY SHERIDAN, THE YOUNGER.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination. The bankrupt was described as of George-street, Westminster, and Garway-road, Bayswater, contractor, trading under the style of Sheridan, Kemball, and Co.; and adjudication against him was made on the petition of Messrs D. McStephens and Co., discount brokers, Manchester.—Mr Baker, who appeared for the trustee, said he understood that the bankrupt had been prevented by illness from filing his accounts, and desired further time for the purpose; also to enable him to annul his bankruptcy upon payment by instalments of a composition of 10s. in the pound.—Mr E. Lee represented the bankrupt.—A further adjournment for a month was taken by consent.

IN RE VINCENT CHARD.—The bankrupt, who was a stockbroker, of 31, Threadneedle-street, late of Austen-friars, was allowed to pass his public examination without opposition on a statement of affairs disclosing liabilities to the amount of £4,938, and assets £150.—Mr Lumley appeared for the trustee, and Mr. Rooks for the bankrupt.

ACTION AGAINST A LIQUIDATOR.

(before Baron BRAMWELL and a Common Jury.)

COULSON V. ROBERTS.—Mr Garth, Q.C., and Mr Israel Davis were counsel for the plaintiff; Mr Grantham, Mr Fullerton, and Mr Kildare Robinson for the defendant. The plaintiff was a book-keeper to the Co-operative Croydon Brewery Company, now in liquidation, and the defendant was the liquidator of the company. The action was brought for an alleged slander, imputing dishonesty and embezzlement to the plaintiff, and evidence was called to prove the terms of the slander; but upon the defendant denying that he had ever cast any imputation on the plaintiff's moral character, although he had complained of the negligent manner in which he kept the books, the jury stopped the case, and found a verdict for the defendant.

COURT OF SESSION, EDINBURGH.

JAN. 7.

(Before Lord YOUNG.)

GOURLAY (PINKERTON AND SONS' TRUSTEE) V. HODGE.—In this case the trustee on the sequestered estates of John Pinkerton and Sons, merchants, Glasgow, sued William Hodge for reduction of certain delivery orders, &c., of pease, beans, and oats sold and delivered by the bankrupts to the defender, the value amounting in all to £238 5s. The pursuer alleged that the parties were conjunct and confident, the defender being father-in-law of one of the bankrupts, and that the transaction was struck at by the Act 1621, cap. 18. The pursuer further alleged that at the date of the transaction, which was within sixty days of the bankruptcy, the bankrupts were insolvent, and were largely indebted to sundry persons who have since ranked on their estates, and that the same fell under the statute 1696, cap. 5. In defence it was maintained that the goods in question had been delivered in partial implement of a contract of sale, under which the price had been paid to the defender; that the action, so far as founded on the statute 1696, cap. 5, could not be maintained, in respect the deliveries were made not in satisfaction or security of prior delivery, but in fulfilment pro tanto of the bankrupts' obligations under the contract between them and him; that the deliveries not having been made to a conjunct or confident person without a just, true, or necessary cause, to the prejudice of pursuer's creditors, they were not challengeable under the Act 1621, cap. 18; and that the defender having under the transactions in question paid the sum of £500 to the bankrupts within sixty days of the bankruptcy in consideration and on the faith of performance of their counter obligations as to delivery, and the deliveries made in pursuance of the contract having been of much less value than said sum, the defender ought to be assoilzied. The Lord Ordinary decided that the deliveries of the goods referred to in the summons and on the record were not in contravention of the Act 1696, and therefore assoilzied the defender from the conclusions of the summons, with expenses.

THE SCOTTISH HERITABLE SECURITY COMPANY (LIMITED) V.

Digitized by Google

Watson and Son.—This is an action of poinding the ground against John Watson and Sons, coalmasters and oil manufacturers at Bathville, near Bathgate, and in Glasgow, and the individual partners thereof, and William Mackinnon, accountant, Glasgow, trustee on their sequestrated estates. Watson and Sons obtained an advance from the pursuers of £6,500 in 1871, in consideration of which they granted an absolute conveyance in favour of the pursuers of the farm of Harestanes, now called Bathville, belonging to them. A personal bond was also granted at the same time, in which it was stipulated that, notwithstanding the absolute conveyance in favour of the pursuers, they were to allow the defenders to possess, manage, and draw the rents of the subjects thereby conveyed, so long as the instalments stipulated in the bond were regularly and punctually paid. The defenders having failed to make any payment to account since Whitsunday, 1874, the present action has been raised. The estates of the defenders were sequestrated on November 24, 1874, and the trustee has lodged defences, in which he pleads that the pursuers being, at the date of instituting the action, heritable proprietors infeft in the subjects in question, and the bankrupts being in the lawful occupation thereof with their consent and not in virtue of any real contract or other heritable right or title, their effects are not liable to be attached by the diligence of poinding the ground; that the debt due by the bankrupt to the pursuer not being debitum fundi, the same is not a sufficient ground and warrant for the issue of the diligence of poinding the ground; and that the present action is not a habile or effectual mode of attaching the bankrupt's effects; that under the Bankruptcy Act, 1856, the right of the defenders, as trustee to the whole of the effects situated in said subjects, is preferable to that of the creditor poinding the ground after the date of sequestration; that in the circumstances the pursuer's preference is limited to the specific subjects conveyed to them under the ex facie absolute title; and that in any view, the subjects ought to be attached, and particularly the machinery, coals, &c., are not subject to the diligence of poinding the ground at the instance of an heritable creditor.

Petition – Blair Official, Liquidator of Southern Bank of Scotland. – This is a petition at he instance of Hugh Blair, C. A., Edinburgh, official liquidator of the Southern Bank of Scotland, for winding up the affairs thereof, in terms of the Companies' Acts, 1862 and 1867. The bank in question was established in Dumfries in the year 1838. It was formed on the footing of a joint-stock company, under an order contract of copartnery among the shareholders, but without any charter or Act of Parliament. The Company commenced business on the 11th June, 1838, and after about four years its business was transferred to the Edinburgh and Leith Bank. It was part of the arrangement and transfer of the business that the Southern Bank should realize its assets and discharge its liabilities. The petitioner was appointed by the Court in November, 1873, and he made up a list of the contributories, and now presented the present petition for the purpose of having the said list settled, and for further purposes, with a view of winding up said bank. A revised list of contributories has now been settled, and the Court to-day ordered claims to be lodged within eight days.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

(Before the Hon. Judge Miller.)

Re Edmond O'Beirne.—The bankrupt had been manager of a branch of the National Bank at Kells, county Meath. He had left the country, having first executed a deed, vesting his property in trustees. The liabilities were considerable. The present sitting was for the examination of witnesses, to whom the bankrupt had been indebted—Mr Francis Chadwick, Mr Joseph Marley, solicitor to the Crown Assurance Company; and Major John Leslie. These gentlemen denied having any knowledge of the deed executed by the bankrupt, and stated that the latter before leaving the country, went to them stating that arrangements had been made for the payment of these debts, and the promised payment was never made afterwards. Mr Carton (instructed by Mr Larkin) appeared for the assignees; Mr Foley, Q.C. (instructed by Mr Foley), for the bankrupt; and Mr Eaton, solicitor (Oldham and Eaton), and Mr Fitzgerald (D. and T. Fitzgerald) for witnesses.

Re O'Toole and Son.—The bankrupts were printers carrying on business in Great Brunswick-street, and the meeting was for examination of witnesses. Evidence was given in reference to a bill of sale of their premises to a Dr Gordon in 1873, and also in reference to certain contracts for the printing of books not yet completed Mr Scallan appeared for Miss Cusack, of Limerick; Mr Heron, Q.C., appeared for Mr Duffy, publisher, Wellington-quay; and Mr Samuel Walker, Q.C., for Mr Wyley. It was arranged that the bankrupt should be permitted to complete the works at present in hand, after which the case was adjourned. Mr Perry (instructed by Mr Davoren) was for the assignees.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following meetings of creditors have been held during the week :—

Kelly, Hill, & Co. (Glasgow)—At a meeting of the creditors of Kelly, Hill, & Co., merchants and colonial agents, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, held on Thursday, in the Faculty Hall, Mr Wm. Brown (of Moore and Brown, accountants, Glasgow) was elected trustee. The liabilities were stated at £12,417 12s. 8d., and the assets at £9,317 12s. 8d.

Thos. Brown (Bingley).—A first meeting of the creditors of on Mr T. Brown, bobbin maker, Beechfoot Mill, Bingley, was held Thursday afternoon at the office of Messrs Lees. Senior, and Wilson, solicitors, at Bradford. From a statement of affairs produced by Mr Buckley, accountant, it appeared that the debtor's liabilities were £1,621, and the assets £1,817, which were more than equal to the payment of 20s. in the pound. Some difference on the matter of insurance had involved the debtor in difficulty. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and the debtor received his discharge, and Mr C. J. Buckley was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

E. T. Wood (Manchester). –The first meeting of creditors of Edward Thos. Wood, 49, Ashton New-road, Beswick, and Hyde-road, Manchester, baker and flour dealer, was held on Thursday at the Manchester County Court, before Mr Registrar Kay. The statement of affairs produced showed liabilities £1,937 14s. 5d., assets £1,487 9s. 4d. Mr Cobbett (Messrs Cobbett, Wheeler, and Cobbett), solicitor, appeared on behalf of the principal creditors. Resolutions were passed appointing Mr Wm. Butcher, of 73, Princess-street, public accountant, the trustee, with a committee of inspection.

David Davis (Carmarthen).—An adjourned meeting of creditors of David Davis, ironmonger, Carmarthen, was held Jan. 11 at the offices of Messrs Lomas, Harrison, and Starkey, accountants, Cannon-st., Birmingham. Mr Parsons, Bristol, presided. After a long discussion, Messrs Parsons, Kemp, and Harrison, who represented creditors, succeeded in obtaining a composition of 12s. 6d. in the pound from the debtor, who was represented by Mr Lloyd. It was resolved that the composition should be payable—5s. at three months from the 22nd January, 5s. at six months, and 2s. 6d. at nine months from the said date. It was also agreed that the money should be paid by the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and another person to the satisfaction of Mr Parsons.

Robert Lumgair (Arbroath).—At the Forfar Sheriff Court, on Monday, Mr R. Lumgair, export merchant and manufacturer, Arbroath, was examined in bankruptcy. He said he had been in business since 1847, as a partner in the late firm of David Lumgair and Sons, Millgate. That firm was dissolved in 1860, when the bankrupt commenced business on his own account—his capital amounting to £2,700, to which had been added £3,000 which he had received from the estate of his father and sister. Some of his books were "back" for two years. His last balance was made in December 1870, when his assets amounted to—freight consignments, without advances, £10,989 15s 6d; with advances, reversion after deducting advances, £11,737 10s 3d; cash, £12 9s 6d; flax stock, £927 13s 8d; manufactured stock, £3,400; heritable property, £2,549 13s 8d; an expected sum from his father's estate, £1,000; and sundry small sums, amounting in all to £113 4s 8d—total, £30,750 7s 3d. His liabilities at that date amounted to £15,676 19s 1d, leaving a reversion in his favour at that time of about £15,000. The state of affairs he made up for his first meeting of creditors showed a deficiency of £1,640, which he now amended by making the value of his household furniture £1,000 instead of £500. He believed, however, that he had overstated the reversion by about £840. This arose from an omission on the part of his clerk. He attributes his losses to laying out money on the factory to the extent of £1,500 beyond its value; on the mill to the extent of £500; on Greenbank House to the extent of £1,000, and the depreciation on foreign consignments. About two years ago he also made a bad debt of £1,000. His average annual expenditure was £900, and he paid £2,500 a year for commission and discount. He had latterly entered into a partnership in the firm of Lumgair and Son, the partners being his son and himself. The usual oath was administered.

J. MELROSS AND CO. (GLASGOW)—At a meeting of the creditors of Jas. Melross and Co., commission merchants, Hutcheson-st., Glasgow, held on Monday, Mr David Black, Hutcheson-street, Glasgow was appointed trustee; and Messrs Roger, Watt, and Paul Glasgow, law-agents in the sequestration. The liabilities of the firm amount to between £600 and £700, and the assets nil.

CHARLES QUERNER (LIVERPOOL).—At the County Court, on Wednesday, before Mr Registrar Watson, a meeting of creditors was held under the bankruptcy of Charles Querner, of Lombard-chambers, Bixteth-street, commission merchant. The accounts disclosed liabilities £4,364 19s 8d, and assets £470, consisting of book debts £6,073, estimated to produce £440, and office fixtures £30. Debts amounting to £1,600 were proved, and Mr Bolland chosen trustee, with a committee of inspection. Mr W. Morris and Mr Lyon represented the creditors. The public examination was appointed for the 12th February.

ROBERT TAYLOR HARDING.—The debtor, described as a packing-case and paper-box maker, of 21 and 22, Caroline-street, and Victoria-cottage, Hunter's-lane, Birmingham, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities estimated at £2,000, and assets at £500 or thereabouts. Upon the application of Messrs Saunders and Bradbury, solicitors for the debtor, Mr Registrar Chauntler appointed Mr Charles Wm. Elkington, the High Bailiff of the said Court, receiver of the estate.

A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Peat, Coal, and Charcoal Company (Limited).

Sir Sydney Waterlow, Bart., M.P., has been appointed by the Union Bank of London a duly qualified proprietor, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Mr W. W. Arbuthnot.

AT THE VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.
This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.
"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.
N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The Accountant

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Accountant is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the Accountant a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the Accountant, 127, Strand.

JANUARY 23, 1875.

The pamphlet of Mr. Knott, which the Prudential Assurance Company has so kindly advertised for him, will be of good service, if it draws the attention of insurers to the varying positions occupied by the many offices which compete for their patronage. Till the Board of Trade compelled Insurance Offices to publish their accounts, there existed no means of ascertaining whether an office was solvent or not, except to those initiated into city mysteries. And, even now, the published accounts are hard to understand. Facts and figures are proverbially fallacious, and we suspect that to the vast majority of the world a balance-sheet might as well be a piece of blank paper for all the information which it conveys to them. What the proportion of assets to liabilities ought to be, what is and what is not an extravagant percentage of working expenses, can hardly be decided by any general rule, as it depends on many things—on the age of the company, on its constitution, whether mutual or proprietary, or on its system of division of profits, and, it may be added, on its practice of selecting lives carefully, or of admitting old and young, strong and sickly, with equal want of discrimination. Nor is it easy to know where to turn for advice and information. Few persons can dissect the mass of figures, and those who can are seldom wholly disinterested. Almost everybody who likes can become an agent for some office or another. His duties are confined to filling up a few forms and answering a few questions, while his remuneration is dependent on the amount of business he does. Go into a solicitor's office. It is decorated with an almanac containing much information about the affairs of some insurance office. Ask the solicitor's advice. He is probably an agent for that very office, and his opinion, though genuine, can scarcely be disinterested. He may know literally nothing about the position of the office; indeed he has seldom any opportunity of ascertaining it. But to say so would be fatal to his chance of gaining his commission. He will probably strongly recommend the office for which he is concerned. All may turn out well; the office may meet any claim on it punctually and honourably. But if anything goes wrong, the agent shields himself under the plea that he really knew nothing about the state of the company's affairs.

Digitized by Google

It is, perhaps, wise to choose an [illegible] for which a solicitor is agent. The law offices are numerous [illegible] well managed, and a professional man has a character for prudence and caution in business matters, which is generally justified by facts. His investigations may not be very profound, and his knowledge of accounts still less so, but he has means of forming an independent judgment, and it would be damaging to his reputation to be connected with anything which was not tolerably substantial. But, unfortunately, agents are of all classes, and the lower their social status the more pushing they are. The commission allowed is a nice addition to the returns of their business, it is earned with but little trouble, and, the insurance once secured, it is regularly paid. The statements of agents for any particular office should, therefore, be very carefully sifted, and treated merely with the amount of respect due to the recommendations of interested persons.

An intending insurer therefore is driven to rely mainly upon his own observation, and, perhaps, his best course is to apply to one of a class of men which is not very numerous, but of extreme utility. There are firms who make it their business to advise on all questions of insurance, and whose advice is generally straightforward and of some practical value. They can set before him the terms of various offices, and point out to him which offices charge the lowest premiums, and which, while charging apparently high rates, make up for it by their additions to the value of a policy. This plan might well be extended, and many accountants in provincial towns might devote some attention to this branch of their business. An insurer must, in most instances, be guided by considerations peculiar to himself. He may look upon insurance not so much as a means for providing against loss to his family by a sudden death, but as a judicious system of saving money, and his attention will be naturally directed towards the question of large bonuses and a full division of profits. He may be a poor man, to whom it is a matter of extreme self-denial to lay by the due amount of premiums. He chooses, therefore, an office in which the rates are low. Decision must in each case be the result of a close comparison of relative advantages; and to afford the means of obtaining this comparison is a beneficial and lucrative branch of business, which might, with advantage to all concerned, be far more developed than it is at present.

We have left to the last the all-important question: how can a man make certain that the money he has invested in insuring his life may not after all be wasted? In the first place, a few simple rules may guide him. A young office is always more or less uncertain. The strain is seldom felt till after five and thirty y[illegible] existence. Then an office doing a large amount of business [illegible] necessarily safer than a smaller one. So long as enough [illegible] is transacted to afford a proper average of profit and sufficient security is given, the true test being the ratio between the assets and liabilities. But, as to these points, the best advice will be given by men who make a profession of giving it, and whose status is a guarantee for their responsibility. They will be bound down to serve no particular masters, whose wishes they must promote at all hazards; but they will feel that their duty is to their clients, and that duty need not clash with their own interests. Besides such, a keen watch would be set on the doings of various companies. This seems a duty that accountants as a body might well perform. How much business is done through agents the vast sums paid for commissions sufficiently show. If accountants, as a rule, acted on the principles we have indicated above, all parties would be gainers. Insurers would be protected from loss, and companies would gain not only in business but in experience of what the public really desires. The ideal system of life assurance has yet to be devised.

The little note as to the Cheque Bank which we quote from the Pall Mall Gazette does more credit to our contemporary's sense of wit than its knowledge of the practical working of the institution in question. For its rules clearly provide that the suppositious "Smith," on showing his counterfoil duly filled up with the amount of one pound only, shall be credited with the balance. But there is another point which is not so clear, and that is the course which the Cheque Bank would take in case of forgery. Their cheques are analogous to a circular note. The amount must be lodged before the cheques are issued, and is retained till the cheque is presented for payment. By this means the payment of a Cheque Bank cheque is absolutely certain. But supposing that a depositor loses his cheque-book or has it stolen, and that the new possessor determines to utilize the cheques. He may fill them up with any name he pleases and in any kind of signature, and the forgery cannot be detected by a person to whom they are paid. In such a case, will the bank pay the cheques, and if so, on whom will the loss fall? It is obvious that to cast upon the casher of the cheque the duty of inquiring whether the signature is genuine would destroy that perfect negotiability of their cheques which is essential to the success of the system of operations of the bank. And if the cheques are to be [illegible] about available as bank-notes, they must [illegible] the inevitable result of loose in the pocket[illegible], and a consequent loss to the bank. We do not know how this difficulty is solved, but we would suggest to the directors that they might, if they think the point worth consideration, still further assimilate their practice to that of bankers when issuing circular notes, and give each customer a paper on which he may write his usual signature, to be formally attested and sealed with the seal of the bank. This document can be produced whenever a cheque is signed, and would afford an easy mode of testing the genuineness of the signature. Of course if it was not asked for, the person neglecting the precaution would have to bear the loss, in the event of his cashing a forged cheque. In country towns and abroad, the genuineness of the signature is, according to our own tolerably varied experience, the subject of considerable investigation. Unless some such plan is adopted, it is possible that some ingenious gentleman may turn his attention to the reproduction of cheque bank cheques. To imitate the cheques of any ordinary bank, would not be a very profitable speculation, but if the cheque bank cheques are taken without inquiry in every quarter, a sure fortune might be reaped by a successful forger. We commend these observations to the consideration of the directors.

It is rash for persons south of the Tweed to comment upon Scotch law, but the case of Ritchie v. Balgarnie and Ritchie seems to bear rather hard by upon the trustee. The point is simply this. The trustee rejected a proof as insufficient, but allowed the creditor eight days within which to adduce more satisfactory evidence. This the creditor failed to do, and he also took no steps to appeal against the trustee's decision within fifteen days, the time limited by the Scotch Bankruptcy Act. The creditor however, when the trustee was proceeding to distribute the assets, applied for an injunction to restrain him from so doing, on the ground that the trustee ought to have informed him that any appeal must be lodged within fifteen days, a theory which was supported by the Court. In England the answer to such a claim would have been, that every man is supposed to know the law thoroughly, and that it was not the trustee's business to inform him of it. In conformity with this doctrine, we find that in ex parte Hinton Sir James Bacon summarily dismissed an appe[al] which was not lodged within due time, though the appellan[t] [illegible] some show of technical justice on hi[s] [illegible]. It is certainly strange doctrine [th]at a trustee should be bound to act not only as an officer of the Court to manage and distribute the estate but also as legal adviser to the creditors. It is satisfactory to find that we are more technical and, indeed, more practical in England.

A case reported from the Birkenhead County Court, and which follows a decision of the Chief Judge, is worth noting for practical guidance. The stamps to be affixed to a special resolution for liquidation, are to denote a duty computed at the rate of five shillings per cent. on the gross amount of the estimated assets, such duty not in any case to exceed £200. This rule has been further modified by the Chief Judge in a manner which is only fair. Where the assets exceed the liabilities, duty is to be paid upon them only to the amount of such liabilities, and not according to the strict wording of the rule. It will be necessary for trustees to exercise due care in estimating both assets and liabilities, before the resolution is presented for registration, or they may have to pay heavier stamp duties than the case warrants, as the Court may hold as it did in the present instance, that as there is a possibility of further claims coming in, the assessment of the stamp duty was premature.

We call attention to the Lord Chancellor's judgment in the Prudential Assurance Company's case, as it confirms most strongly the view we took last week, and as to which there has hitherto existed some difference of opinion among lawyers. The doctrine we laid down that the Court of Chancery would not interfere to prevent the publication of a libel, has been called in question by one or two correspondents, who maintained that where there was danger of injury to property the Court would interfere. This opinion was, however, summarily disposed of by Lord Cairns, who referred to the very decision of Lord Eldon's in Gee v. Pritchard, which we cited. The liberty of the press is surely sufficiently curtailed by the growth of criminal informations, and the extension of the doctrine of contempt of Court, without adding to these checks the terrors of a possible injunction, especially as the question of what is a libel is mainly one for the consideration of a jury.

Sir Charles Domvile's case shows that the Court of Bankruptcy in Ireland is as determined to oppose any attempts to restrict its jurisdiction, as the Court of Bankruptcy in England. Such a question as the validity of a lease would be clearly within the province of the Court to determine, if any question of fraud was raised, and it was contended that the lease was merely colourable or amounted to a fraudulent preference, and the case may now be tried before a jury in the same way as in a Court of Common Law. Both simplicity of procedure, and limitation of expense, are promoted by construing, as widely as possible, the powers of the Courts of Bankruptcy in dealing with the contracts and engagements of any bankrupt.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—It seems that notwithstanding all the legislation of the last 300 years, the Law of Bankruptcy is not yet satisfactorily settled. What can be the reason? I think it is because no proper basis has been fixed. I do not wish to notice the various complaints made from time to time by creditors and others as to this or that particular part of the Law of Bankruptcy, or rather I would pass by all the grievances of both creditors and debtors, and endeavour to discuss the matter in something like a scientific manner; for I am persuaded that the dissatisfaction evinced with respect to the Bankruptcy Acts is almost entirely, if not altogether, owing to the absence of a proper consideration of the subject. I am, however, quite aware that to treat of the subject as it requires would demand a small volume rather than a letter, and I shall endeavour as much as possible to compress my remarks, and give, as it were, only hints and heads of thought, that others may work out my ideas. The first statute made concerning English bankrupts appears to have been the 34 Hen. VIII., c. 4. Then Statute 1 Jac. 1, c. 15, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, with subsequent statutes until 5 Geo. II., c. 30, and so on to the last Act of 1869. Now, a bankrupt was at first considered merely as a criminal offender, and his punishment was transportation. To realize this fact we may perhaps do well to revert to the ancient Roman law of the XII Tables, by authority of which the creditors might cut the debtor's body into pieces, and each of them take a proportionable share; and although some learned men have doubted whether the law, "de debitore in parte secundo," is to be understood in so very butcherly a light, I am mistaken if one or more of the Latin poets do not favour the more literal interpretation. Be this as it may, our own laws in the time of James I. treated a bankrupt as a criminal, and, to be very short, it is equally clear that subsequent legislation has pared down the horror of opinion as to bankruptcy until we have now come to such a pass that the creditors may be thankful if they escape the condemnation which formerly awaited the bankrupt. I must not be sentimental, but keep to my task. What, then, is the true state of things in a bankruptcy, looking at the matter in a strictly scientific manner? or, rather, what should be done in a bankruptcy, judging philosophically, and with a view to the fair settlement of the law in any state concerning it? It appears to me, at the outset, that taking the case of a debtor and creditor, in which by any evident and plain sign or testimony the debtor is not able to pay his creditor 20s. in the pound, the estate of the debtor belongs to his creditor, and that it is contrary to all true principles of statesmanship and legislation for any State, by its own action, and through the instrumentality of the law, to meddle with the matter unless it be to empower the creditor to take possession of the effects of the debtor; for, to put the case in the simplest form, if A obtains from B goods to the amount of £10.000, and then avowedly is made to pay for these goods, surely B ought to take back those goods, or so much of them as is left on the failure of A, and the case is just the same if B represents 100, 500, or 1.000 creditors; the whole business is evidently their own business, and the only question is how far legislation is to intervene in the realization of the bankrupt's estate. The first consideration is that the whole matter lies between the debtor and his creditors; the public and the State at large have nothing to do with the matter, and as, by the necessary terms of the question, A cannot pay 20s. in the pound, the whole matter is with the creditors, it follows that legislation should be applied only; first to protect A, if necessary, from his creditors, and secondly, to protect the creditors from one another but any interference of public courts, public trustees or assignees, and machinery like the old Bankruptcy Courts, &c., is altogether out of the question; the creditors, the estate being altogether theirs, ought to please themselves how they dispose of it, without any interference from without, whether Parliamentary, legal, or otherwise, subject only to an appeal to some court, and to the law, if they do not right, either as between the debtor and themselves, or as between one another. If this view be correct, then it is plain that there ought to be no Bankruptcy Court that is as hitherto constituted, and only for decision of legal points and questions, no Official Assignee, no Comptroller, &c., &c., but that the creditors, whose the estate avowedly is, should be at liberty to make the most for themselves of that which, by the very terms of the proposition, is their own property. And this brings me to observe that, in my opinion the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, is, in the main, a good Act; it recognises all I have said in its provisions for liquidation and composition; it seems to say "the estate belongs to the creditors, let them do as they please with it"; whilst it makes provision for appeal both by debtor and creditors to a court if any injustice is complained of. With respect to complaints by creditors of expenses and small dividends, it surely is evident, without any proof that in all these cases expenses must be incurred and that dividends must depend upon realization of assets. As to the first, a very sensible rule has been adopted in one or more districts of making a trustee's remuneration the same as that fixed by the bankruptcy rules for the Registrar when acting ex officio, and such further remuneration, if any, as the committee of inspection—or if no committee, the registrar—shall allow. Nothing, surely, could be fairer than this, at least for the creditors! As to the latter, it is quite clear that if the remuneration lie on this footing, it is the interest of the trustee not only to get in as much of the estate as he can, but also to keep down expenses, so as to pay as large a dividend as possible; indeed, this admirable arrangement simply makes the whole matter the business of the trustee to do the best he can for himself by doing the best he can for the creditors. I cannot now work out the question, but a reference to and consideration of the rules will show that I am right in my argument. Then as to the parties to be appointed trustees. In the first place, it may be remarked that by the law, as it now is, solicitors MAY act as trustees. I suppose that none will contend that the law should be that none but solicitors shall so act; for it would be obviously impossible to pass such an obligatory enactment; and I know from extensive experience that solicitors, after having had a little trial of the thing, shun the office and will not have it. The same reasoning applies to creditors; it could not be that any section of a bankruptcy act should declare that none but a creditor should be a trustee; a creditor can be a trustee now, but he cannot either now or hereafter be compelled to be trustee; and here also I remark that I have known creditors determinedly refuse the office; it does not suit them to leave their regular business, in which they are making, not perhaps cent per cent, but some per centage, to look after the dilapidated affairs of a bankrupt for the benefit, not of themselves alone, but it may be of a hundred other creditors. There remains, therefore, unless the office of trustee is to be, as at present, in the choice of the creditors, as it is contended it ought to be, the whole affair being theirs—only the old official trustee or assignee. Surely we have had enough of him. The commercial world, suffer as they may from small dividends, will never consent to restore him; is there any one so bold as to propose his reinstation? If permitted to offer a recommendation, I should, on the whole, propose that there should be no longer any such thing as simple bankruptcy, and that liquidation or composition should be the only modes of winding-up an estate; then I think the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, along with the Debtors' Act, 1869, would, with some slight but effective alterations, put the Law of Bankruptcy on a sound basis. What those alterations ought to be, so far as my opinion goes, I may endeavour to show in a subsequent letter: in the meantime, I would beg all who take an interest in the matter to take a comprehensive view of it and go to the root of it. The old principle was "bankruptcy is criminal," just as burglary, &c.; the modern principle is, "bankruptcy may result from unforeseen and even unavoidable consequences"—that is, considering the course of modern trade and commerce, and the bankrupt ought not to be punished as a criminal unless he has been fraudulent, but under any circumstances it is recognised by the provisions in the Act of 1869 for liquidation and composition that when a debtor cannot pay 20s. in the pound his estate evidently is the estate of his creditors, and that they must, subject to certain conditions and restraints as amongst themselves, be at liberty to appoint what trustee they like, and to do as they like with what is in fact their own property.—I am, Sir, &c.,

MESSRS. OVEREND, GURNEY, AND CO.—Messrs. Turquand and Harding, the liquidators of Overend, Gurney, and Co., have published a statement of the affairs of the company as they stood at the end of the year. From this we learn that the assets realized £41,496 13s. 6d last year, allowing a further 10s. to be distributed to shareholders. There are still considerable sums to be realized, but those assets of which the liquidators feel satisfied that the value will come up to their estimate only reckon for £38,471 9s. 4d. The doubtful assets left to be realized (Class B in the account) are nominally worth £224,425 18s. 2d., but what they will yield cannot be stated. It is some satisfaction, however, to find that so far as the liquidation has gone, the properties of the firm have realized £1,515 odd more than estimated. £20,248 5s. 11d. was received from the life interest last year, and some insignificant sums have come in on account of calls upon shares.

ACTION AGAINST A LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

In the Court of Exchequer, on Tuesday, (Barons Cleasby, Pollock, and Amphlett sitting in banco), judgment was pronounced in the case of "Beake v. the British Imperial Insurance Company." It was an action arising upon an insurance policy effected by the late Dr. F. B. Beasley with the insurance company for £1,000. The plaintiff was the widow of a man to whom the policy had been assigned, and who was killed by a railway train passing over his body at the Battersea Station. Dr. Beasley, who had been a medical officer of the defendants', was drowned while attempting to ford a stream or river in New Zealand. The action was tried before Baron Pollock at the after-term sittings in June last, and resulted in a verdict for the plaintiff for the sum claimed. Subsequently a rule nisi for a new trial was obtained, on the application of the Solicitor-General, on the ground that the deceased had voided the policy by going to New Zealand without the leave and license of the company, and without paying for the additional risk incurred, as required by the conditions of the policy. It appeared that Dr Beasley had made two voyages to New Zealand within the period of 12 months. On the occasion of the first voyage the premium for the additional risk of such voyage, amounting to 1 per cent. had been duly paid. Returning to England within the period of about five months, he undertook a second voyage to New Zealand, but met his death in the way described about a day or two before the expiration of the twelve months from the date of his certificate of leave, and the payment of the £10 for the additional risk. Before the news of his death reached England the plaintiff applied for, and ultimately obtained, from the defendants the cash value of the policy in accordance with a clause in the policy. The facts of his death, and the circumstances attending it, having arrived in this country a few days afterwards, the plaintiff, through her solicitor, tendered back to the insurance company the money she had received from them, and demanded the entire amount of the policy on the ground that the death of Dr Beasley had taken place on the 27th of September, 1873, before the expiration of the year from the date from which the policy ran. The company having refused, on the ground that the policy had been put an end to, the action was the result. The chief point to be determined was whether the leave and license granted to Mr. Beasley was only for one voyage or whether it was for one year. The Court made the rule absolute on the ground that it was only for one voyage.

WORKMEN UNDER A SCOTCH SEQUESTRATION.—Sheriff Fraser has issued an interlocutor in the case of the workman, Rodgers, against the trustee on the sequestrated estate of the firm of Macfadyen and Co., shipbuilders. The action was to recover wages due, and payment of which was refused by the trustee, on the ground that the pursuer was earning wages beyond £60 per year, that being the limit fixed by the Bankrupt Act for the preferable payment of wages to servants and others on sequestrated estates. The case was decided adversely to the pursuer by Sheriff-Substitute Smith, and the pursuer lodged a reclaiming petition, the case being a test one, raised on behalf of the other unpaid workmen of the late firm. Sheriff Fraser dismisses the appeal, and adheres to the interlocutor of Sheriff Smith, finding the respondent entitled to expenses. In a note, his Lordship says he has great doubts as to the competency of such a petition. If there be a good claim against the trustee, the mode of making it effectually is by summons in the ordinary way, which, it appears, has been already tried in the Summary Court ineffectually, and if the amount of wages in dispute be of the importance stated in the reclaiming petition, the question should be tried in such a form as will enable the petitioner to get a judgment on behalf of himself and his fellow-workmen, without the risk of the case being shipwrecked upon a technicality.—Glasgow Daily Mail.

The Lords Justices have confirmed the order made by Vice-Chancellor Malins ordering the secretary of the Emma Mining Company to produce all the books and documents of the Company before the special examiners.

COURT OF CHANCERY, LINCOLN'S INN.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EX PARTE SYDNEY.—IN RE SYDNEY AND WIGGINS.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr Registrar Hazlitt, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, and it involved a question of some general importance with regard to the power of a debtor who has instituted proceedings under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to institute fresh proceedings before the first have come to an end. Messrs Edgar Sydney and Edward Joynes Higgins were ship-brokers in partnership, carrying on business at Greenwich and in Great Tower-street. On the 19th of July, 1873, they filed a liquidation petition. They stated their debts as being £39,023, and their assets as £779. Their creditors agreed to accept a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, payable in three instalments of 6d, 1s, and 1s, at periods of three months, six months, and twelve months from the date of the registration of the resolutions. The resolutions were registered on the 9th of September, 1873. The debtors then resumed their business and incurred new debts. On the 26th of August, 1874, before the third instalments of the composition became due, they filed a second liquidation petition, stating their debts to be £42,682, and their assets to be £81. Meetings of the creditors, old and new, were held, at which it was resolved by the proper statutory majority to accept a composition of 6d in the pound. The registration of these resolutions was opposed by some of the old creditors, and Mr Registrar Keene refused to register them, on the ground that the composition accepted under the previous petition had not been fully paid. Mr Registrar Hazlitt affirmed this refusal. The debtors appealed. Mr Davey and Mr F. O. Crump, in support of the appeal, argued that the sole duty of the Registrar was to see that the resolutions had been duly passed in compliance with the provisions of the Statute. It was admitted that this had been done in the present case, and therefore the resolutions ought to have been registered. M. De Gex, Q.C., Mr Finlay Knight, and Mr J, Linklater, for the opposing creditors, were not called upon. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the decision of the Registrar was right. The real question was, whether there could be in truth two compositions subsisting at the same time; whether when there was a composition which was capable of being enforced by this Court against the debtor, he could get another composition resolved upon so as to interfere with the rights of creditors under the first. His Lordship thought that when a debtor had once placed his affairs under the Court he could not summon a meeting of his creditors as if he had not done so. Until the proceedings first commenced were at an end he was not a free man capable of entering into a new arrangement with his creditors, so as to interfere with the rights of the creditors under the previously existing arrangement. The Registrar was, therefore, right in holding that these debtors were not in a position to make a new composition, and, in refusing to register resolutions which were inoperative as regarded the old creditors, and, therefore, inoperative as regarded the new creditors also. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs. Lord Justice Mellish concurred.

RE BARNED'S BANKING COMPANY.—This was an appeal on behalf of the Joint Stock Discount Company from an order of the Master of the Rolls, directing, in accordance with what is technically known as the rule in "Ex parte Waring," 19 "Ves." 345, that the proofs against Barned's Banking Company in respect of certain bills of exchange endorsed by the Banking Company, and now held by the Joint Stock Company, ought to be reduced by the amounts paid to them out of the realized proceeds of certain securities for the bills in question. The bills had been endorsed by (among other parties) Barned's Banking Company, and payment thereof had been secured by mortgages of certain ships. All the parties to the bills had become insolvent, and the bills had been proved against the estates of all of them by the holders, whose claims had been satisfied, partly out of the proceeds of the sale of the ships and partly by dividends paid by the liquidators of Barned's Banking Company. The Joint Stock Discount Company (which was in liquidation) had endorsed the bills subsequently to Barned's Banking Company, and had now become entitled to the benefit of the proofs against the drawers, acceptors, and prior endorsers of the bills. The liquidators of Barned's Banking Company insisted that the proofs in respect of the bills now held by the Joint Stock Discount Company ought to be reduced by the amounts paid to the bill-holders out of the proceeds of the sale of the ships; and dividends had been paid to the Joint Stock Discount Company on the amounts of the proofs so reduced. The Joint Stock Discount Company, on the other hand, claimed to be entitled to receive the dividends on the full amount of the proofs, and the question was raised by an adjourned summons taken out for the purpose of enforcing their claim. The Master of the Rolls refused the application, holding that the proofs must be reduced by the amounts actually received, according to the order made in "Ex parte Waring," when, according to the view taken by Sir G. Jessel of that most complicated and abstruse decision, Lord Eldon treated the matter as if the securities had been already realized at the moment of bankruptcy and the proceeds actually applied at the time when they ought to have been applied (i e., as soon as the bills became due); so that the holders could not prove in bankruptcy for more than the difference between what they were thus supposed to have received, and the amount actually due. From the decision of the Master of the Rolls the Joint Stock Discount Company had appealed. Mr Romer (Mr Roxburgh, Q.C., with him), in support of the appeal, contended that the case was not governed by the rule in "Ex parte Waring," but by the doctrine prevailing in Chancery and in winding-up cases, according to which, where both drawer and acceptor became insolvent, the proof of the bill-holder was not affected by any payments made to him out of the realized proceeds of securities given for the bill. Mr Southgate, Q.C., and Mr Kekewich, for Barned's Banking Company, were not called on. The Lords Justices concurred in the view taken by the Master of the Rolls—that the case was governed by the rule in "Ex parte Waring," and that the holders of the bills were not entitled to the benefit of the realized securities without having their proof against the estates of the insolvent parties to the bills reduced to that extent. The appeal would be dismissed, with costs.

THE PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE COMPANY V. KNOTT.—This was an appeal on behalf of the company from an order of Vice-Chancellor Hall, refusing an interlocutory injunction to restrain the publication and circulation by the defendant of a pamphlet entitled "Solvent Life Offices and others; or What Becomes of Ten Millions a Year." This case was before the Vice-Chancellor at the beginning of the present Term, and was reported in the last issue of the ACCOUNTANT. It will be sufficient to state that the case made by the bill was that the effect of the defendant's pamphlet was to represent that the plaintiff company (together with other companies, the statistics of which were appended to the pamphlet in a tabular form) was being managed with reckless extravagance, and was practically insolvent and unable to fulfil its engagements. These statements were met by the company with an unqualified denial, and evidence was produced that the company had been for many years past, and now was, in an exceedingly prosperous and thriving condition, perfectly solvent, and earning large profits. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the pamphlet, being a mere expression of the writer's opinion as to the solvency and mode of conducting the business of the plaintiff company and other insurance companies, the matter of his pamphlet was not libellous, and that the case was not one in which the plaintiffs were entitled to the protection of this Court by injunction. From this decision the plaintiff company appealed, and the case having been argued, the appeal was dismissed with costs.

The late Mr. William Milner, a safe manufacturer, of Liverpool, has in his will bequeathed to the charitable institutions of Sheffield about £4,000. The charities of London, Liverpool, and Manchester will also receive a similar amount—about £4,000 to each town.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

January 16.

THE LLANGENNECH COLLIERIES COMPANY (LIMITED).—Mr Southgate, Q.C., and Mr Dixon appeared in support of a shareholder's petition for continuing the voluntary winding up of this company under the supervision of the Court. Mr Badnall, for the debenture holders' trustees, supported the petition. Mr Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr Caldecott, for the miners employed by the company, to whom a large arrear of wages was alleged to be due, said they had no confidence in the liquidators nominated by the directors, and contended that there ought to be a compulsory order, having regard to the circumstances under which the company was launched; but the Master of the Rolls granted the prayer of the petition.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE T. S. WEBB.—The debtor, Thomas Stammers Webb, a colliery proprietor, having offices at 85, Gracechurch-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities estimated at £94,000, and assets £80,000. Upon the application of Mr Morley, his Honour appointed Mr H. J. Walter, accountant, 24, Gresham-street, receiver of the estate, and granted an interim injunction to restrain proceedings under an execution for £500 levied at the private residence of the debtor.

IN RE WILLIAM FINNEY.—The bankrupt was a coal merchant carrying on business at the Coal Exchange. His accounts disclosed unsecured debts of £13,293; creditors holding securities (of no present value), £5,000; other liabilities, £7,000; with assets returned at £3,803. This was a sitting for public examination. Mr Crump appeared for the trustee; Mr Bagley and Mr Finlay Knight for opposing creditors; and Mr Bush Cooper for the bankrupt. The bankrupt's transactions had been of considerable magnitude, and a cash account required by the trustee had been filed very recently. The opposing creditors asked that further time should be allowed for investigation. The Court ordered an adjournment for one month.

IN RE WILLIAM JAMES CROOK.—The bankrupt was a merchant carrying on business at 77, Gracechurch-street. He now applied to pass his examination on a balance-sheet which showed debts amounting to £7,539, of which £5,469 was due to unsecured creditors, with assets £350. Mr Digby appeared for the bankrupt; the trustee appeared in person. It was stated that the bankrupt intended to submit a proposal to his creditors with a view to the annulment of the adjudication. He passed his examination.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE HINTON, RE HINTON.—This was an appeal from an order of the County Court of Stoke-upon-Trent refusing to register a resolution in favour of liquidation by arrangement. Mr Bush Cooper appeared for the appellant. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Cracknell, for the respondent, took a preliminary objection on the ground that the appeal was too late. Although the order under appeal was dated the 27th of November, the decision of the Court was pronounced on the 3d. The 143d rule provided than an appeal from an order of a Judge of a County Court should be entered with the Registrar of Appeals within, and not later, than 21 days from the decision or order. The appeal in the present case was not lodged until the 12th of December. The Chief Judge held that the appeal was too late. The reason of the rule was obvious, and it was the duty of the appellant to have drawn up the order before. The application was made to the County Court on the 3d of November, and was then disposed of. The appeal must be dismissed.

EX PARTE THE EXCHANGE AND DISCOUNT BANKING COMPANY OF LEEDS AND BRADFORD, RE TOPHAM.—This was an appeal from an order of the Bradford County Court directing the payment by the appellant to the trustee under the bankruptcy of Moses Topham of sums amounting to £1,605. Mr West appeared for the appellant, and Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Wilberforce for the respondent. The bankrupt formerly carried on business at Bradford as a stuff merchant. He had a banking account with the Exchange and Discount Banking Company of Leeds and Bradford, which he had been allowed to overdraw in consideration of certain securities held by the bank and a guarantee from a gentleman named Tattersall. In the spring of last year the bankrupt got into difficulties, and at his monthly pay-day on the 16th of April he was unable to make his customary payments to creditors, his banking account being then overdrawn to the extent of £2,000. Between the 18th and the 29th of April the bankrupt, for the purpose, as it was alleged, of protecting the surety, made payments to the bank amounting in the aggregate to £1,695. The manager of the bank was aware that in the early part of the same month the bankrupt had dishonoured a bill of exchange, and he knew or suspected that he was in difficulties. On the 1st of May the bankrupt was adjudicated upon the petition of a creditor served on the 27th of April, and his liabilities then amounted to £18,000, with assets £711. The trustee under the bankruptcy afterwards brought the matter before the County Court Judge, and his Honour decided that the payment to the bank constituted a fraudulent preference, and ordered the sum of £1,695 to be refunded to the trustee. From that order the bank appealed. Without calling upon the learned counsel for the respondent, Sir J. Bacon held the evidence to be clear and distinct that the bankrupt at the time of the payment being made was unable to pay his debts as they became due from his own moneys, and that he intended to prefer, and did prefer, the bank to his other creditors. The manager of the bank knew that the bankrupt was insolvent, and that proceedings in bankruptcy were going on against him. The appeal must be dismissed.

(Before Mr Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE VALNAY AND PITRON.—The bankrupts, Messrs Ernest Valnay and Alexis Pitron, were formerly the proprietors of the Princess's Theatre, Oxford-street. They had been adjudicated upon the petition of Mr Edouard Ambrosetti, theatrical agent, Rue Chabannais, Paris, a creditor for £106, money lent to the bankrupts and paid for them; and at the first meeting Mr James Waddell, accountant, was appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection. A statement of affairs disclosed debts of £2,087, and there were no assets. The bankrupts came up for public examination in November, when an adjournment was taken for the purpose of submitting a proposal to the creditors. This was an adjourned sitting. It appeared that negotiations were still pending with a view to the annulment of the adjudication, and a further postponement sine die was arranged. Mr G. Lewis represented the trustee.

January 19.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE WHITE AND HART.—The bankrupts, Messrs George White and David Hart, were wine and spirit merchants, carrying on business at 1, 2, and 3, George-street, Tower-hill, under the firm of Lemon Hart and Son. A joint statement of affairs showed the following items:—Unsecured creditors, £36,137; creditors partly secured, less value of securities held, £37,563; creditors for rent, rates, &c., £4,632; liabilities on bills discounted, of which it was expected would rank against the estate for dividend, £4,736. The assets consisted of stock-in-trade at Tower-hill, estimated at £3,400; at the cooperage, £596; and in bond, £8,527; book debts, £23,084, estimated to produce £12,284; bills of exchange, £41; and surplus from securities in the hands of creditors, £3,659. The separate debts of the bankrupt Hart were returned at £360, and those of White at £4,000, without assets in either case. This was a sitting for public examination. Mr Hollams, jun., appeared for the trustee, and Mr Harvie Linklater for the bankrupts. On behalf of the trustee an adjournment was asked for, in order that the accounts, filed only on the previous day, might be investigated. The bankrupts had carried on a very large business, and inquiry was necessary, particularly as to the stock-in-trade and the book debts. An adjournment was not resisted by the bankrupts, but their solicitor stated that the accounts were identical with those which were prepared under a petition for liquidation in October last. His Honour granted an adjournment until the 23d of March.

(Before Mr Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE M'EWEN AND M'EWEN.—The debtors, Messrs Alexander M'Ewen and Lawrence Thomson M'Ewen, were financial agents carrying on business in George-yard, Lombard-street. Their liabilities were returned at £132,490, and assets £24,623, securities being also held by creditors to the extent of about £190,000. At the first meeting the creditors passed resolutions to wind up the estate by arrangement, Mr S. L. Price, accountant, 13, Gresham-street, being appointed trustee to act with a committee of inspection, and the discharge of the debtors being also granted. Upon the application of Mr Munns, registration of the resolutions was ordered.

Ex parte JARDINE re M'MANUS.—This was an appeal from the decision of the judge of the Blackburn County Court, who had ruled that certain stock-in-trade mentioned in an inventory attached to an indenture of mortgage, but not included in the deed itself, did not pass with the other effects contained in the mortgage. After lengthened arguments the appeal was dismissed with costs. It was stated that the liquidating debtor in this case failed for £18,900, the creditors being chiefly Manchester, Sheffield, Blackburn, and Liverpool firms.

January 21.

(Before Mr. Register BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE LEWIS BRODZIAK.—The bankrupt, described as a merchant of 68, Coleman-street, applied to pass his examination. He had been before the Court since December, 1873, and his amended statement of affairs showed liabilities of £16,875, with assets £200. Mr Phelps appeared for the trustee; Mr Emanuel for the bankrupt. The bankrupt passed his examination.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. J. F. COLLIER, Judge.)

IN RE HOLDEN AND PERRY.—This was an application on behalf of Mr Bolland, the trustee of the property of the bankrupts, coal merchants, in Liverpool, to expunge a proof of debt for £123, which it was alleged had been improperly admitted. The circumstances aptly illustrate a line of Shakspeare—"That striving to do better, oft we mar what's well." It appeared that Holden and Perry, with three other persons, were engaged in an adventure which had resulted in a loss, and that an action by those who had paid the loss against Holden and Perry for their proportion, had been referred to Mr Fleet, who found that Perry and Holden were individually liable for their share of the loss. They subsequently became bankrupts, and thereupon proofs of debt were tendered for Holden's proportion against his separate estate, which has yielded 20s. in the pound, and for Perry's proportion against the joint estate of Holden and Perry, it being contended as a point of law that Perry, in taking part in the adventure, was merely the agent for undisclosed principals, viz., his firm of Holden and Perry, and that on the discovery of the principals the claimants had a right to elect to rank upon their estate. There was no separate estate of Perry, and but a few shillings in the pound in that of Holden and Perry. The trustees admitted the proof against the separate estate of Holden, but rejected that against the joint estate, on the ground that he was bound by the award of the arbitrator, Mr Fleet. From his rejection of the proof the parties appealed to the court, and it, after an investigation of the books of the bankrupts, by which it appeared that the co-adventure had been on partnership account, notwithstanding the award of the arbitrator, decided that the proof against the joint estate had been improperly rejected. Under these circumstances the trustee now moved as a necessary sequence that the proof he had admitted against the separate estate of Holden might be expunged. Mr Potter, instructed by Messrs Barrell and Rodway, appeared for the trustee; and Mr Kennedy, instructed by Messrs Duncan and Co., for the creditors. Mr Kennedy took exception to the motion, proceeding on the ground that the trustee had not given his reasons for wishing to have the proof expunged, but the Court ruled that although it was a convenient practice for the trustee to state his reasons, and one that should be adopted, it thought, under the circumstances of this case, it might be dispensed with. Mr Kennedy then submitted that the Court ought not to entertain the motion of the trustee unless it was satisfied other information bearing upon the claim had come to his knowledge than that possessed by him when he admitted the proof. Here all the facts were before him on its admission, and it was too late now to ask the Court to expunge. He further urged that the proof now sought to be expunged from Holden's estate was for a sum which was in a different category to that dealt with by the court previously; and finally, he contended that, assuming it was not so, Holden, who signed the contract in his own name, could not rid himself of his liability because he happened to be contracting for principals of his firm. The creditors had a right to claim either from him or his firm. Mr Potter argued that the decision of the Court as to the admission of Perry's proportion of loss against the joint estate governed the present claim. Perry and Holden were precisely in the same position with respect to this co-adventure, and as the Court had found that Perry's loss, although apparently on individual account, was for partnership purposes, and could only be allowed to rank on the joint estate, it followed as a sequence that Holden's loss must rank similarly. As to laches on the part of the trustee, the reverse had been proved. On the proofs being tendered he considered himself bound by the award of Mr Fleet, and was prepared to admit them against the individual estates; but the claimants were not satisfied, they accepted the offer to rank on the estate of Holden, which shows 20s. in the pound, but declined to rank against the estate of Perry, which is nil, and successfully asserted their right to rank on the joint estate. The court having decided that the co-adventure was on partnership account, the trustee would have been guilty of laches if he had not moved for the proof he admitted against Holden's estate to be expunged. With respect to the question of principal and agent, it did not apply to a case like the present. His Honour said he must accede to the application. This conclusion, he said, necessarily followed his decision in the former case. The costs of the trustee would come out of the estate.

IN RE J. S. EDGAR.—This was an application to the court for an order upon Mr Bolland, the trustee, and the committee of inspection, to proceed with the investigation of the affairs of the debtor, who formerly traded as a wine merchant in Liverpool, under the style or firm of "R. P. Stainton and Co." It appeared that the proceedings in liquidation were instituted so far back as August, 1873, and at the first meeting of creditors it was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, to appoint Mr Bolland trustee, to nominate a committee of inspection consisting of five creditors, and to grant the debtor his discharge, on the trustee and committee certifying that they were satisfied with his disclosure of his estate. An investigation of his affairs took place shortly afterwards in presence of the committee, and although the debtor's explanations were not considered satisfactory and not altogether borne out by his books, the committee, with the exception of one of their number, whose debt was twelve times in excess of all the rest, expressed their opinion that there had been a full disclosure of the estate. They, however, at the instance of the dissentient committee-man, agreed to withhold their assent to the discharge until he and the debtor had met and further investigated the affairs. From various causes no such investigation had up to the present time taken place, and the Court was now asked to force the inquiry forward or to grant the debtor his discharge. Mr Segar, instructed by Bimson, appeared for the debtor, and Mr Bellringer for Mr Bolland. Mr Bellringer took exception to the jurisdiction of the court over the committee of inspection and trustee in liquidation cases, and cited several authorities on the point. His Honour, after hearing Mr Segar, said he had considerable doubt on the point, and would prefer, until he had further considered the matter, not to make any order. A long discussion followed as to the jurisdiction of the court, the proper course to be pursued under the circumstances, and the duty of the trustee, and finally, after several ineffectual attempts on the part of Mr Segar to enter upon the merits of the case, it was agreed to allow the motion to stand over for the debtor to supply the trustee with a deficiency account, and for the trustee within a fortnight afterwards to call the committee together and report to them the result of his investigation.

BIRKENHEAD COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr GILMOUR, Deputy-Judge.)

IMPORTANT BANKRUPTCY CASE.—An important decision was rendered by the judge, in reference to an application from Mr Goldney (instructed by Mr Isham Gill), acting for the trustee of the estate now in liquidation of Mr John Dickson, of Hamilton-square, Birkenhead, contractor. The application was that the judge would order the registrar, Mr Wason, to register the creditors' resolutions under the circumstances set forth in the judgment. His Honour, in delivering his decision, said:—An appeal has been made to me, from the decision of the registrar of this court, who refuses to register the resolution of the creditors of the debtor, at their meeting held on the 30th December last, that the affairs of the debtor should be liquidated by arrangement and not in bankruptcy. The registrar is of opinion that the stamp duty impressed of £40 5s. is insufficient, because the statement of the affairs of the debtor shows an estimated gross amount of assets of £114,125 15s., which would require, if no cause to the contrary were shown, a stamp duty of £200. It appears also that the local liabilities, exclusive of disputed claims, amount to £16,008 7s. 3d. The trustee, in his affidavit, says that to the best of his knowledge and belief, the amount of the assets to be distributed amongst the creditors does not exceed £16,100; but the difficulty of the registrar seems to have been this: looking at the filed statement of the affairs of the debtor and the affidavit of the trustee, how to determine the duty. The disputed claims being neither ascertained nor satisfactorily estimated, it may be doubtful whether the liabilities are only £16,000, or whether they may not exceed the £114,125 of estimated assets. It appears to me that the trustee's affidavit, made from the necessarily slight information afforded him at this early stage of the proceedings, is based on unreliable materials. What time has he had? Having been appointed so recently as the 30th of December, he has only had a few days to inform himself of the facts and conditions of a large estate like this. The scale of fees annexed to the bankruptcy rules, table A, provides that "Every special resolution presented to a registrar for registration under section 125, par. 4, shall bear stamps denoting a duty computed at the rate of 5s. upon £100, or fraction of £100, on the gross amount of the estimated assets, not exceeding a total duty of £200." Following this table, the registrar would probably have had no difficulty in settling the duty, were it not for the decisions of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy which have been brought before me in the argument of Mr. Goldney, and which, as I gather from the language of the registrar's memorandum of refusal, have been present to his mind in his consideration of this matter. In ex parte Murray the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy held that "where the assets of a liquidating debtor exceed his debts, stamp duty upon the registration of the special resolution of the creditors is not payable upon any amount exceeding the sum estimated as necessary to pay all the creditors in full. His Lordship said: "I think the intention was that in a liquidation the duty should be payable upon no larger amount than that which is necessary to satisfy the debts." In re Berger a debtor filed a liquidation petition, and in his statement he estimated his assets at £4,660. The creditors resolved on a liquidation. When the trustee presented the resolution for registration he had made an affidavit in which he stated that he believed the assets would not realize more than £1,000. It did not appear that the value of the assets, as estimated by the debtor, would be more than enough to pay the creditors in full. His Lordship held, in that case, that stamp duty must be paid on the amount of the debtor's estimate. He said: "It would lead to almost uncontrolled abuses if I were to adopt the view which has now been pressed upon me, if the trustee's mere guess as to the value of the assets were to be necessarily adopted." Following the order of the Chief Judge in ex parte Murray, I apprehend the registrar would have had no difficulty had the liabilities of the debtor in this case been ascertained, and not have been, as they are, in considerable doubt and uncertainty; for it is possible, as I have already observed, that they may even exceed the estimated gross assets, and, applying the language of his Lordship in re Berger, I think "it would lead to almost uncontrolled abuse if I were to adopt the view which has been pressed upon me; if the trustee's mere guess" of the liabilities of the debtor, derived under the peculiar circumstances of this estate, as revealed by the filed statement of the debtor, were adopted. I think the registrar was right in refusing to register the resolution, and this application must therefore be refused.

THE AFFAIRS OF A RATE COLLECTOR.—FORD V. EARP.—Mr A. L. Ford, trustee of the estate of James Moseley, formerly rate collector of Liscard, whose affairs are now in liquidation, sued Joseph Earp, of Church-street, Egremont, for £2 18s 4d, money paid for rates. Mr Pugh for plaintiff, and Mr Parkinson for defendant. Mr Moseley stated that he paid the money in 1872, in order to close the rate. It was now observed by Mr Ford that this was but one out of many similar cases, and it was a test for the rest. The overseers' books were put in, showing that Moseley had entered the amount to his own debit, and that the counterfoil receipt book showed the absence of the receipt. Moseley said he had never been requested to pay the amount. He admitted the defalcations arose in his office and led to his dismissal, and that he had paid the money out of his own pocket. The defence was that defendant was quite willing to pay to the proper authority when called upon to do so. Mr Pugh argued that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, inasmuch as the law held him responsible for the accounts in his book, and liable to a surcharge by the auditor. Mr Parkinson said he was assistant-overseer only, and not personally liable to a surcharge.—His Honour nonsuited.

COURT OF SESSION, EDINBURGH.

JAN. 14.

RITCHIE V. BALGARNIE AND RITCHIE.—The estates of Ritchie and Co., wholesale tea, wine, and spirit merchants, Leith-walk, Edinburgh, and of John Ritchie, sole partner, thereof, were sequestrated on 3d December, 1873, upon the application of the bankrupt, with concurrence of his father, Malcolm Ritchie, residing in Blackness-road, Dundee, who claimed to be creditor to the extent of £406 16s. 10d., in respect of two bills granted by the bankrupt to him, the one being for £210, dated January 16, 1873, payable twelve months after date, and the other being for £200, dated 13th August, 1873, payable six months after date. Mr J. H. Balgarnie, C.A., Edinburgh, who was appointed trustee in the sequestration, rejected Mr Malcolm Ritchie's claim as not being sufficiently vouched, he being the bankrupt's father, and therefore conjunct and confident with him. But the trustee allowed him eight days within which to lodge corroborative evidence of his claim. Mr Ritchie not having submitted any further evidence to the trustee, and not having appealed against the deliverance within fifteen days of the date of its publication, the same became final in terms of the 127th section of the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Act, 1856. Some correspondence thereafter took place between Mr William Stiven, accountant, Dundee, on behalf of Malcolm Ritchie, and Mr Balgarnie, in the course of which the latter refused to delay payment of the dividend which he proposed to pay to Ritchie and Company's creditors. Malcolm Ritchie thereupon presented a note of suspension and interdict, praying that the trustees should be interdicted from paying said dividend until he had a proper opportunity of establishing his claim. In that suspension he alleged that he had acted in the matter on the advice of Mr Balgarnie, the trustee, who failed to inform that it was necessary to lodge further information within fifteen days from the date of the deliverance; and that payment of the proposed dividend would exhaust the whole bankrupt estate, whereby the complainer would be deprived of any share thereof. He pleaded, inter alia, that having been throughout the proceedings misled by the respondent as to his claim, the interdict ought to be granted. The respondent maintained that no appeal having been presented against his deliverance within the fifteen days in question, the same became final and conclusive; that as regards the dividend the said deliverance was a valid objection to the claim in question, notwithstanding the allowance therein of further evidence; and that the complainer not having taken advantage of the opportunity allowed him to produce further evidence within the time specified, the rejection became absolute and final, and no appeal having been presented against the deliverance, the same is now final and conclusive. After proof, the Lord Ordinary (Young) repelled the reasons of suspension, refused the note, and found the complainer liable in expenses. The complainer reclaimed. After hearing counsel, the Court to-day recalled the interlocutor reclaimed against, sustained the reasons of suspension, and interdicted, prohibited, and discharged the respondent from proceeding to divide said estate or any portion thereof until he has disposed of the complainer's claim, either by rejecting or admitting the same. They also found the respondent liable in expenses.

GLENDINNING (ROBERTSON'S TRUSTEES) v. LESLIE AND OTHERS. —This is an action at the instance of the trustee on the sequestrated estate of Wm. Robertson, farmer, Whitekirk Mains, Haddingtonshire, and residing in Glasgow, against the trustees under the marriage contract between his son George Bishop Robertson, some time farmer at Whitekirk Mains, now at Berwick-on-Tweed, and his wife, concluding for reduction (1) of a minute of agreement entered into between the said Wm. Robertson and G. B. Robertson, whereby the said Wm. Robertson became bound to grant a bond and disposition in security in favour of his son's marriage trustees for £1,000, being, as alleged, a sum which had been lent by said trustees to the said G. B. Robertson, and had not been repaid by him; and (2) of a bond and disposition in security granted by the said Wm. Robertson in implement of that agreement, whereby he conveyed to the said trustees certain heritable subjects in Dunbar then belonging to him. The bankrupt, Wm. Robertson, carried on business for many years as a clothier in Glasgow. In 1862, with the view of setting his son up in life, he took for him a lease of said farm of Whitekirk Mains for a period of nineteen years, the rent of which was £1,800 per annum. Mr. G. B. Robertson, the pursuer alleges, had no means of his own, and the farm was stocked and the necessary improvements executed at the expense of his father, William Robertson, the cost of these improvements for the first six years of the lease amounting to upwards of £6,000. William Robertson was at and prior to 1862 in good circumstances, being possessed of a considerable sum of money realised from his business in Glasgow. The pursuer further alleges that, owing to the extravagant habits and reckless management of the said farm by G. B. Robertson, the speculation proved ruinous to his father; that demands for large sums of money to meet obligations and debts contracted by G. B. Robertson were from time to time made, until the whole means and estate of the said Wm. Robertson were squandered; that the liabilities thus incurred by him rendered him insolvent, and the large cash advances to meet obligations undertaken by him on account of his son were the sole cause of his insolvency, which resulted in the sequestration of his estates. The pursuer also alleges that in December, 1869, Mr G. B. Robertson importuned his father to advance him a further sum of £1,000, to save him from the diligence of his creditors; that Mr Wm. Robertson declined to lend his name further, knowing that he was then unable to meet the liabilities already undertaken by him; that he ultimately sent to his son's marriage trustees a bill held by him for a deposit, but declined to become security either directly or indirectly for his son. Mr William Robertson thereafter took over the lease of the farm to himself, to terminate further liabilities, and a minute of agreement was entered into between him and his son's trustees with that view, being the minute now sought to be reduced. The bond and disposition in security also sought to be reduced was subsequently granted in terms thereof. The pursuer pleads that the said minute of agreement and bond and disposition in security, having been granted by William Robertson when he was in solvent circumstances, without any consideration having been paid therefor in favour or for behoof of a conjunct or confident person, and the same having operated to the prejudice of the pursuer as trustee aforesaid, is null and void in terms of the Act 1621, cap. 18, and ought to be reduced. The defenders plead that the pursuer had no title or interest to sue, that all parties are not called, that the reduction sought by the pursuer is incompetent, being without restitution of the consideration given for the said William Robertsons' obligations under the agreement, and of the defender's position at its date; that the said William Robertson and his sequestrated estate having taken and retained all the benefits which formed a consideration for granting the deeds.

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS IN SCOTLAND.

THE LOWTHER HEMATITE CO.—At the Sheriff Court, Glasgow, on Tuesday, the adjourned examination in regard to the affairs of this company took place. There were present Mr Andrew Paterson, C.A., Edinburgh, trustee; Mr Robert Ross, writer, Glasgow, law agent in the sequestration; Mr D. W. Paterson, S.S.C., for the bankrupt Barclay; Mr Duncan Macfarlane, writer, Glasgow, for creditors; Mr J. A. Bryson, writer, Glasgow, for a creditor and a number of creditors. David Geo. Hoey, accountant, Glasgow, one of the partners of the company, stated: When Mr Barclay and I resolved to build first, before the formation of the company, the first estimate of the cost of the works then to be erected, consisting of one small furnace, was £15,000. I cannot say that it was, in the proper sense of the word, an estimate, but it was a jotting. The outside cost of one furnace was stated to me at about £30,000, and never higher. The £6,000 of capital contributed as my share was in cash, which belonged to myself, and I did not borrow any of it. Mr Barclay's share of capital was £4,000, consisting of two bills for £2,000, drawn by James Wilson Barclay, and discounted by us. The capital to be outlaid at the highest estimate ever given to me was £60,000, and I saw my way clear enough in the circumstances to finance sufficiently for the purposes of the company. The advance of £35,000, which we raised on the works in the beginning of 1874, was procured from the Heritable Investment Association. I think the security took the form of an absolute conveyance, qualified by a back letter. The advance was to be repayable in eight years by half-yearly instalments. We were to pay interest at the rate of 6 per cent. In July last I received a further advance of £35,000 from a gentleman in Glasgow. The advance was contained in his acceptances to another person, and the proceeds after the bills were discounted were received by our firm. These bills were all granted at one time. As a security to the acceptor, I granted him a conveyance and bill of sale to our reversionary interest in the heritable subjects previously conveyed to the Heritable Association. That deed was executed in July last. It was executed on the same day as that on which I received the acceptances, and, in fact, it was one transaction. At the time that these bills were accepted for our accommodation, I did not exhibit to the acceptor any balance-sheet showing the state of our affairs. He was, and has for a long time been, well acquainted with the state of our affairs, and I have no doubt he saw our balance-sheet of May, 1874. He was also a creditor at that time to our firm. Our books were balanced as at 30th May, 1874. The balance-sheet is engrossed in our business books. My attention is called to the state of the company's affairs, and to an asset, the Wolborough Mine, upon which no value has been put by me. This was a mine which was purchased by the company in midsummer last from Mr J. F. Harrison, M.P. for the Kilmarnock burghs. The price was to be £6,000, payable two years after the date of purchase. Mr Harrison drew a bill on us for the £6,000, which was discounted by the Credit Foncier Company of England (Limited). This was the only transaction we ever had with the Foncier Company prior to that date. There was a further arrangement under which we were to pay £4,000 additional, provided the ore of the mine was found to produce first-class Bessemer iron in our works. On the faith of the mine turning out, and as part of the arrangement, we gave the firm's acceptances to Mr Harrison for the £4,000 additional. Mr Harrison was to renew these bills from time to time, and this was expressed in a formal agreement or letter which passed between us, and which is now in the hands of the trustee. None of these bills for £4,000 have been paid, and to the extent of £3,000 these appear in the list of bills payable. With reference to the remaining £1,000 of the £4 000, I explain that on one occasion, when a £1,000 bill fell due, Mr Harrison asked me to discount the acceptance with his firm of Harrison and Son for that amount instead of his discounting another acceptance by my firm. This was done by bills discounted on the Scotch bank, and the discount was included in the bills. The discount of the £4,000 was payable by Mr Harrison as arranged. Mr Harrison stated to me that he had spent £4,000 in working the mine in addition to the purchase price paid by him, which he stated to be £6,000, and it was in consequence of this that he asked us to pay £10,000 for the mine, and we having refused to do so, he then asked the acceptances under the arrangement. We had ore brought from the mine to our works, but in my opinion it was an utter failure. Before effecting the purchase Mr Harrison produced an analysis of the ore, and Mr Barclay inspected the mine twice, and it was upon these reports that I consented, very unwillingly, to the purchase of the mine. I had been all along against such transactions as the loans and the purchase of the mine. My partner and I frequently differed on that point. I urged him to agree to the introduction of a money partner; indeed, from the time that the original cost of £15,000 was mentioned I was in favour of a money partner being assumed. I named several persons who were willing to become partners; but Mr Barclay would never come to the point, and when it came to the point he positively refused, and said he would rather become bankrupt than assume a money partner. The sequestration was rendered necessary owing to our inability to meet certain bills which he had discounted for Andrew Barclay and Son. Andrew Barclay, the other partner, having been examined, the statutory oath was administered to both bankrupts.

ANDREW BARCLAY AND SONS.—In the sequestration of Andrew Barclay and Sons, engineers and ironmasters, Kilmarnock, Andrew Barclay, the senior partner of the firm, stated.—In 1871 when I made arrangements with my creditors, Mr Clinkskill, consulting engineer, Glasgow, valued my works at Kilmarnock at £24,115 19s. 10d. I think my works are now worth £30,000; that is the reason I have put them down at that sum in my state of affairs. That is my own estimate. I estimate the work in progress at about from £4,000 to £5,000. I cannot be certain, as that is a very difficult thing to estimate; and I have been a good deal away from home for some time. Mr Clinkskill, at the date of his report, valued the work in progress at £9,000 odd. Except a depreciation of tools and tear and wear I consider the works quite as good now as they were in 1871. I consider an allowance of 7½ per cent. a reasonable deduction for such depreciation. These works of mine have been conveyed to the Heritable Security Society as security for the loans, but no letter was passed stating the terms on which the loans had been got. I wanted to get one, but it was never got. James Wilson Barclay, the junior partner, concurred in the deposition of his father. He had made up and handed to the trustee a state of his affairs as one of the partners of the firm and as an individual. According to it the liabilities were stated to be £1,205. and the assets £4,500. He explained that the entry of £4,000 in the state of affairs as against the Hematite Iron Co., was for money advanced by him, and for that amount he was a creditor on the estate. Nothing was arranged as to what this money was advanced to the Hematite Iron Co. for. I got in a letter from Mr Hoey relative to that £4,000, and dated 19th Sept., 1874. No interest had been paid on that money. The statutory oath was administered to both bankrupts at the close of the examination.

John Steel, corn and commission agent, Royal Exchange, Edinburgh, was examined in bankruptcy before Sheriff Hamilton on Thursday. The bankrupt deposed he commenced business as a corn and commission agent in September, 1873. At that time he was a partner of George Steel and Co., grain and manure agents, Montrose. He had no capital and no property at that time. The only property possessed by said company was a store with ground attached at Laurencekirk, the value of which was about £400; but there was a security over it for £200. His father died on 15th December, 1873. Besides the property at Laurencekirk his father left a policy of insurance and some household effects, which were realized by bankrupt in payment of his father's debts, the result being that the estate owed him £200. In March, 1874, a new company was formed in Montrose under the name of Steel and Company. That company had a capital of £165, advanced by bankrupt's wife to his mother, one of the partners. He was not aware that his wife got any acknowledgment of the debt. His interest in that company was half the profits. The business of said company paid well enough while it was in existence, but like his own business, it suffered through the insolvency of Spier, Woodgate, and Company, Newcastle, the amount of loss being £60. The furniture in bankrupt's house was the property of his wife. It had been bequeathed to her by her mother under her settlement. A portion of his wife's estate secured to her by her mother's settlement was still unrealized. Besides the furniture, his mother-in-law left his wife a house in Montrose and four shares in a Patent Slip Company. He knew of no other property to which his wife had succeeded. By Mr. Sutherland—When did you first find yourself in difficulties? Bankrupt—When I commenced business. The liabilities were stated as £3,127 16s. 3d; the assets, £565 16s. 4d; deficiency, £2,561 19s. 11d.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY; DUBLIN.

January 18.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR the Lord Justice of Appeal and Mr Justice LAWSON.)

In the matter of Sir CHARLES DOMVILE, Bart., a bankrupt.—This was an appeal from an order of Judge Harrison, restraining Mr Robert Roberts from prosecuting an action at law against the messenger of the Court of Bankruptcy. The case had been partially heard last term. It appeared that on the 23rd of May, 1874, the bankrupt executed to Mr Robert Roberts, who had been his steward, a lease of Santry-place and demense for his own life at the yearly rent of sixty pound. On the 14th of July following a notice was served on behalf of the assignees for an order that this lease might be set aside as fraudulent and void against the assignees. The action in question had been brought against Mr Freeman, the Messenger of the Court, for an alleged trespass on the lands comprised in the lease, and in the affidavit of Mr Roberts' attorney, it was submitted that he (Mr Roberts) was entitled to have the validity of his lease tried at common law, and, as he declined to submit to the jurisdiction of the Court, the judge had no jurisdiction to declare the lease invalid. A motion was made on behalf of the official assignee for an injunction to restrain the proceedings at law, but Mr Roberts again protested against the jurisdiction of the Court. The judge held that he had jurisdiction to hear and determine the question as regards the lease, and made an order restraining Mr Roberts from further prosecuting the suit commenced, from which order the present appeal was brought. The arguments occupied the day. On the following day the Court gave judgment in favour of the order below, and dismissed the appeal, with costs.

IN THE MATTER OF RICHARD WARING, AN ALLEGED BANKRUPT.—This was an appeal from an order of Judge Miller, made on the 6th of October, 1874, when he adjudicated the appellant, Richard Waring, of Ligoniel, near Belfast, a bankrupt. The petition was presented by the Provincial Bank of Ireland against Mr Waring, who had dealings with the firm of Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk, and he mortgaged to them a policy of insurance to secure the general balance which might be due from time to time by him to them. Messrs Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk deposited this mortgage and policy, with other securities, with the Provincial Bank, to secure the balance due on their account with the bank. The bankrupt contended that this deposit made the Provincial Bank secured creditors of his within the meaning of the Bankruptcy (Ireland) Amendment Act, 1872. The bankrupt had shown cause against the adjudication, which cause was disallowed by Judge Miller, and it was against the order disallowing the cause that this appeal was brought. The Court gave judgment affirming the adjudication.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following meetings of creditors have been held during the week :—

W. WILEMAN (LIVERPOOL).—A statutory meeting of the creditors of Wilmot Wileman, of Cable-street, Liverpool, wine and spirit merchant, was held at the office of Mr J. Carruthers, solicitor, on Friday. The debtor's statement showed liabilities to creditors secured and unsecured, £3,273 0s 7d, with assets £845 16s 6d. After considerable discussion, the meeting was adjourned, to enable the debtor to amend his accounts and to produce a deficiency account. Mr Etty, solicitor, and Mr T. H. Sheen represented several trade creditors.

HIGGINBOTTOM AND WILLIAMS (SOUTHPORT).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs Higginbottom and Williams, of Southport, wine and spirit merchants, was held on Friday, at the office of Mr Quelch, Dale-street, Liverpool. A statement of the affairs of the debtors prepared by the receiver was produced, showing liabilities £1,054 3s 7d, and assets £170. No offer of a composition being made, the creditors resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, and appointed Mr Thomas H. Sheen (Sheen and Broadhurst) the trustee, without a committee of inspection.

JOHN TOMLINSON (BLACKBURN).—A statutory meeting of the creditors of John Tomlinson, tailor and draper, King William-street, Blackburn, was held on Thursday. Mr J. H. Tattersall, solicitor, attended on behalf of the debtor. Mr Hutchinson (of the firm of Broadbent and Hutchinson, accountants, Blackburn) presented a statement of affairs. After very little discussion, the creditors resolved to accept a composition of 10s. in the pound, in satisfaction of their debts, to be paid by several instalments, extending over a period of eighteen months. Mr Hutchinson and Mr Barrow (of the firm of Barrow and Gate, accountants, London) were appointed trustees.

WILMOT WILEMAN.—The meeting of the creditors of Mr W. Wileman, adjourned from the 15th inst. in order that the debtor might amend his accounts and produce a deficiency account, was held on Monday at the offices of Mr J. Carruthers. No offer of composition being made, liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and Mr Hayes Sheen (Sheen and Broadhurst) was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

N. D. CARANDREA (MANCHESTER).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr N. D. Carandrea, Bond-street, Manchester, a merchant in the East India and Levant trade, it was stated that Mr Carandrea having left the country, his position with his Constantinople correspondents could not be ascertained. The statement presented showed his liabilities to be £6,627. The creditors formed a committee of three of their number to decide upon the course to be pursued in the interest of the creditors.

R. D. RUSDEN (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Richard Dunn Rusden, of 56, Dale-street, Manchester, merchant, who suspended payment in July, 1873, and whose affairs are being wound up in liquidation, has been held, and a resolution granting the debtor his discharge duly passed.

D. PRESTON (COLNE).—At the first statutory meeting of the creditors of Daniel Preston, cotton and worsted manufacturer, of Bunker's Hill Mill, Colne, the statement presented showed liabilities to unsecured creditors, £2,239 12s. 5d.; to fully secured creditors, £2,245; other liabilities, £87. Assets—machinery and stock, &c., £1,053; book debts, £93; surplus for securities, £55. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon.

J. KNOX (PAISLEY).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs J. and J. Knox, saddlers, Paisley, was held on Tuesday, Mr James Winning, accountant, Paisley, being elected trustee. The liabilities of the bankrupt are stated to be about £1,000, and the assets have not been ascertained.

RE J. C. LEE (BIRMINGHAM).—On Thursday a meeting of the creditors of James Christopher Lee, draper, Birmingham, was held at the offices of Mr East, 9, Colmore-row. It was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr Joshua Crowther, of York-street, Manchester, public accountant, being appointed trustee. The liabilities were stated to be £1,453 14s. 7d., and the total assets £411 16s.

RE THOMAS HAWKES (ALCESTER.)—A meeting of the creditors of Thomas Hawkes, of Haselor, near Alcester, innkeeper and farmer, was held at the office of Mr Edward Eaden, solicitor, 21, Bennett's-hill, Birmingham, yesterday. The statement of accounts showed the liabilities to be—unsecured creditors, £919 5s.; creditors for rent, taxes, &c., £154 14s. 2d.; total £1,073 19s. 2d.; assets—stock-in-trade at farm, £240; furniture, &c., at the Crown Inn, £100; total, £340. Deducting payments in full—£154 14s. 2d.—the available assets for the benefit of unsecured creditors were £185 5s. 10d. The meeting which was largely attended, passed a resolution for liquidation by arrangement, authorising the trustee, Mr Alfred Eaden, accountant, the receiver, to sell the business to the debtor or any other person for a sum sufficient to pay a dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound. It was also resolved to grant a discharge to the debtor.

WALTER JOHN NEWBY (BIRMINGHAM.)—A meeting of the creditors of W. J. Newby, stone manufacturer, Birmingham, was held on Thursday, at the office of Mr John Boraston, solicitor, 55, Ann-street. The liabilities were estimated at £3,518, and the assets at £1,033. Mr. Boraston, on behalf of the debtor, offered a composition of 5s. in the pound, which was rejected, and ultimately it was decided that the estate should be wound up in liquidation, with Morris as trustee, and a committee of inspection.

R. MAXWELL AND CO.—At a meeting of the creditors of Robert Maxwell and Company, held on Thursday, a statement of affairs prepared by Messrs Broad, Broad, and Paterson was submitted, showing liabilities to the amount of £102,833, of which about £42,000 were fully secured; and assets of small amount. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and Mr H. Evans Broad was appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection. The debtors' discharge was also granted.

J. MALAINGRE (SHEFFIELD).—A meeting of the creditors of James Malaingre, manufacturer of fancy inlaid work, Broomspring-lane, was held on Thursday, at the offices of Mr. Charles Godfrey Esam, solicitor, George-street, Sheffield. Mr. John Neal occupied the chair.—Mr. Shuttleworth, as receiver, read a statement of the affairs, which showed—unsecured creditors, £490 10s 2d.; creditors fully secured, £822 14s.; (estimated value of securities, £1,200;) creditors partly secured, £575, holding securities valued at £377 6s; creditors for rents, rates, and taxes, £45 11s., showing total liabilities (unsecured) £733 13s. 2d. Assets, £389 16s. 5d. After a considerable discussion, it was resolved to liquidate the affairs by arrangement and not in bankruptcy, Mr. T. G. Shuttleworth being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

FAILURES.

The following failures have been announced during the week :—

ENGLAND.—The failure of Thomas Webb, a South Wales colliery proprietor, is announced; liabilities, £90,000.

AMERICA.—Advices from America report the failure of Messrs Roe Brothers, wholesale grocers, with liabilities of £38,000. Messrs Schwerin and Blum, Philadelphia, in the boot and shoe trade, had also suspended, with liabilities of £5,000. Messrs Evans, Webster, and Co., in the dry goods trade, Boston, had stopped. The suspension of the dry goods house of Messrs J. and D. S. Saulsbury, at Providence, with liabilities of £36,000, had been announced. New York advices received on Tuesday announce the failure of Messrs Chas. T. Goodwin and Sons, bakers, 226, Front-street. Liabilities estimated at £20,000.

AUSTRALIA.—Melbourne advices announce the suspension of Messrs Wilson, Crosbie, and Co., wholesale grocers, with liabilities close on £24,000. An offer of 14s. in the pound had been accepted. The failure of Messrs William Mitchell and Co., brewers, Richmond, had also transpired; liabilities, £4,500.

NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

(Before Judge WILDMAN.)

RE JOHN FEATHERSTONE.—In the case of John Featherstone, Mansfield, grocer, Mr. Hind, on behalf of the trustees, made an application to the Court against Joseph Greenwood, of Mansfield, for the delivery of a sewing machine and a piano, which the bankrupt had given to Greenwood on the eve of his bankruptcy. Mr. Belk appeared for Greenwood, and Mr. Hind for the trustees. From the evidence of the bankrupt's wife, and of Greenwood, it appeared that the Act of bankruptcy was the absconding of the debtor on the eve of his bankruptcy. The evidence of the bankrupt's wife went to show that in September last, a day or two prior to the absconding of the debtor, the piano and sewing machine had been given in satisfaction for a debt. Greenwood said the defendant owed him money, and he pressed him for payment. His Honour held that it was a fradulent preference, and ordered the piano and sewing machine to be surrendered. Mr. Hind also examined the bankrupt's wife as to an equitable mortgage security which she and her husband gave to Mr. John Adlington, for securing £200. Mr. Smith, of Mansfield, appeared for Adlington. From the examination of the bankrupt's wife, it appeared that a day or two before the bankrupt absconded, her husband signed a memorandum charging their property with the payment of £200. It transpired in the evidence that this was given after Mr. Adlington had issued a debtor's summons against the bankrupt. His honour held that the charge was not a voluntary one, as it was given under pressure. He, therefore, refused to recognize it, but would not give Mr. Adlington his costs.

RE PALLISER.—In the matter of Palliser, bankrupt, who failed for nearly £1,000, Mr. Hind appeared for the trustees, and applied for the public examination of the bankrupt to be postponed until the 18th February. The application was granted.

LIQUIDATIONS.

The following are amongst the petitions for liquidation filed during the week, with the appointments made, &c. :—

JAMES CHAPLIN, licensed victualler, of the Red Lion Inn, Smallbrook-street, Birmingham ; liabilities estimated at £1,300. Mr Luke Jesson Sharpe, public accountant, receiver.

CHARLES LYONS, licensed victualler, of Knowle, Warwick; liabilities estimated at £1,200. Mr Wm. Lomas Harrison, public accountant, receiver.

HAMILTON GERRAND, draper, of 2, Anderton-street, the Sandpits, Birmingham ; liabilities estimated at £2,500. Mr Luke Jesson Sharp, public accountant, receiver.

In the so-called Times libel case—Mr. M. B. Sampson, the late City editor of that paper and Baron Grant being parties to the suit—the jury, on Monday, found, firstly, that the articles were libellous ; and secondly, that plaintiff was not guilty of the charges imputed to him. They assessed damages at £500; and found that Baron Grant was not a party to the publications. The jury deprecated further legal proceedings as threatened.

CHECK-MATED.—A correspondent, adopting the signature of "Jones," writes to us :—"I am a shareholder in the Cheque Bank, and I owe Smith a grudge which I have long declared I would give a sovereign to gratify. Smith has just been fool enough to pay me £1 that he owed me by a Cheque Bank draft covering £10. I have put the said draft into the fire, thereby enriching the bank to the full amount of £10, which Smith cannot touch while the draft is outstanding, and leaving my friend Smith and his heirs £9 out of pocket for ever."—Pall Mall Gazette.

BRAZILIAN LOAN.—Messrs. N. M. Rothschild and Sons have issued the prospectus of the new Brazilian 5 per cent. loan, which is for the nominal amount of £5,000,000. The price is 96½ per cent., and, allowing for the discount on payment in full, the net price is reduced to 94¾ per cent. Redemption is to be effected by a 1 per cent. sinking fund, to commence on the 1st January, 1877. No reference is made to the object for which the loan is required.

AN ABSCONDING BANKRUPT.—On Wednesday, at the Birmingham Police Court, Mr. John Wood, a bankrupt, who has been "wanted" for several months, surrendered himself under a warrant. Mr. Wood had carried on the business of a pork butcher and provision dealer, and occupied extensive premises in Great Hampton-street, Birmingham. He filed his petition for liquidation of his affairs on the 3d March last, at the Birmingham County Court, with liabilities amounting to about £14,000, and assets about £1,000. Several examinations of the debtor took place. Mr. Wood, however, absconded, and in July last a reward of £50 was offered by the trustee for his apprehension.

Mr. Johann Treuttman, merchant, of Great St. Helen's, was charged at the Mansion House, on Thursday, with conspiring to defraud the Stock Exchange Committee and others by means of false allegations respecting the Illinois, Missouri, and Texas Railway Company. The prosecutor in this case was a Mr. Burkett, who had supplied the defendant with a large quantity of goods, and taken the bonds of the company in part payment. The summons was adjourned after the prosecutor had been partially examined.

THE COUNTY COURTS BILL.—A deputation from the Associated Chambers of Commerce waited on the Lord Chancellor on Wednesday on the subject of the County Courts Bill, which provides for the appointment of a commercial assessor. The Lord Chancellor declined to give the assessor the rank of a judge. Other points were discussed, but the interview was private.

At the annual meeting of the Birmingham Law Society, on Wednesday, a resolution was carried to the effect that in the opinion of the meeting, the rules requiring bankruptcy processes and summonses to be served by the bailiff of the Court was inconvenient.

We are requested to state that Mr. William Wainwright, junr., has joined Mr. Henry Nottingham, accountant, 1, King's Arms yard, Moorgate-street. The business for the future will be carried on in the name of "Wainwright and Nottingham."

In the Rolls Court, on Saturday, in the case of the Ipswich Public Hall Company (Limited), the usual compulsory winding up order was made with the assent of the company.

An order to wind up Dando and Company (Limited), under supervision, was made in the Rolls Court on Saturday.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has granted an interim order, restraining Messrs. Bischoffsheim, contractors for the Honduras Loan, from destroying documents relating to the loan. The application was made on behalf of the holder of a £1,000 bond, who has filed a bill in Chancery against the contractors.

The Bombay Gazette says:—"Our readers may be interested to learn that the Mr Alex. M'Ewen, whose failure in London for £200,000 has just been announced, is the man who came out here and established that pretty speculation the London, Bombay, and Mediterranean Bank. Perhaps some of the "grateful" shareholders in that concern in Bombay might get up a subscription for poor M'Ewen in his hour of need.

WINDING UP PETITIONS.—A petition for the winding-up of the Mutual Society Trust Fund is to be heard before Vice Chancellor Malins on the 29th inst.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Catherine and Jane Lead Mining Company.—A petition for the winding-up of the Hart's Pure Whole Meal Bread and Biscuit Company (Limited), is to be heard in the Court of Chancery on the 30th instant.

REVENUE RETURNS.—The receipts on account of revenue from the 1st April, 1874, when there was a balance of £7,442,854, to the 16th inst. were £55,038,606; against £55,732,608, in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year, which began with a balance of £11,992,705. The net expenditure was £60,942,171, against £63,289,182 to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balance on the 16th inst. amounted to £1,649,031, and at the same date in 1874 to £1,256,156.

A FAMILY ARRANGEMENT.—At the Colchester County Court the Judge heard an appeal to the court from a decision arrived at in bankruptcy by the Registrar, in the matter of Mr. Popham, a tambour-worker, of Coggeshall. It would seem that the debtor called together his creditors in London, and the proceedings partook so much of a family or friendly arrangement that Mr Goody, who appeared for creditors, protested, and objected to the resolutions being filed. Some informality having been proved, the Registrar refused to file the resolutions, and Mr Aird now appealed against the decision. His Honour, after a long investigation, upheld the decision of the Registrar, and strongly censured the proceedings taken by the debtor and his advisers.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham ; 6d. each ; by post seven penny postage stamps ; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.
"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.
N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of 1863, vide "Times," 12th Sept, 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The Accountant

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Accountant is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the Accountant a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the Accountant, 127, Strand.

The Accountant.

JANUARY 30, 1875.

A legal contemporary, in noticing our issue, raises again the old cry that accountants are infringing the privileges of solicitors, and gives as an instance that our columns are to a considerable extent filled with reports of bankruptcy decisions and of comments on the points of law raised therein. For our own part, we can only say, that we have scrupulously sought to define the limits that separate the two professions. We are, of course, not liable in any way for the doings or pretensions of the so-called accountants, who profess to transact every style of business from bankruptcy to conveyancing, and from advising on simple points of law to carrying through a law suit. The men who frame these announcements are not in reality accountants at all. They are mere outsiders doing all sorts of work, and seeking to obtain credence in their professions of professional knowledge by usurping the title of accountants. "Captain" is, we all know, a good travelling name, and possibly "accountant" may be considered a good business name, but it is as absurd to consider the eminent body of men who form the backbone of the profession as responsible for the vagaries of their self-styled associates, as it would be to consider the whole military service disgraced by the acts of a swindler who styles himself a captain.

In truth the lines of demarcation which separate the professions of solicitors and accountants are not so easy to trace exactly, though there are certain well defined limits which no accountant could overstep. Our contention is, that there is business habitually transacted by solicitors which belongs in all strictness to accountants. Questions of account, of investigation of the state of business of insolvent firms, of the value of assets, belong to the domain of accountants. And these are questions which arise in cases of bankruptcy, of composition, and of liquidation. If points of law arise, if legal measures have to be taken to enforce payment of debts, then comes the time for the intervention of the solicitor. Of course, an accountant, if appointed a trustee would take upon himself to write such letters and transact such business as the bankrupt himself would have done. A letter enclosing an account and asking for payment would be properly written by an accountant. If the debtor refuses to pay, and a writ has to be issued, the matter is removed from the province of the accountant and placed in the hands of the solicitor.

We have said that, bankruptcy and the liquidation of companies should be ruled by the same guiding principles. In both the object is the same—to realize and distribute the assets to the best advantage. The duties of the official liquidator, and the solicitor, are as distinct and clearly defined as possible; and surely no man would raise the cry of unprofessional conduct if one of the well-known men, whose names are seen in connection with the winding up of so many companies, were to purchase, and carefully study all the textbooks and reports which would help him in his business, and enable him to form a clear opinion, on the various points which arose. If either trustee or liquidator relied too strongly on his own judgment, and made mistakes, he would be personally responsible; and the liability to be fixed with heavy costs, would ensure his taking steps to procure proper professional advice when it was needed.

What the liquidator may do cannot be wrong for the trustee. Our object in giving these reports and comments, which have so grievously vexed the spirit of our contemporary is, merely to afford a simple code of rules for the guidance of accountants in cases of any doubt. It can be no disadvantage to any man to be thorough master of his profession, and it is a decided advantage to those who employ him. It is a trifle ungracious in a class journal to twit us upon seeking to advance the interests, and improve the professional knowledge of the class to whose support we appeal. If our contemporary will point out and expose the devices of the so-called "accountants," it will be doing a service to both professions, and in pursuing this course, at least, solicitor and accountant will work together with hearty cordiality.

The stringency of winding up orders is being much modified, and the Court of Chancery has shown an increasing disposition to consult the wishes of the vast body of shareholders or contributories, instead of making a winding up order in the petition of a single individual. In the case of the British Timber Company, Vice-Chancellor Malins, who has always shown a strong desire to check the scandals which winding-up cases so frequently present, carried out this doctrine, and refused to make an order for the compulsory winding up of a company at the instance of one creditor, when the majority were in favour of a voluntary liquidation. The Vice-Chancellor drew the analogy we have so frequently insisted upon between liquidation of the affairs of companies and the affairs of individuals, and seemed to intimate that the statutory majority of three-fourths ought to decide the fate of companies. The practice of winding up a company compulsorily at the request of a single creditor, is likely to be injurious to the safety and stability of any concern.

The system of deferred payments is being so widely adopted that the decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, in ex parte Marston, may usefully be studied by many persons. The Judge considered the practice of the trade as to hire to be clearly proved, and he possibly attached some importance to the peculiar wording of the alleged condition, which makes the transaction a loan, with an option of purchase at the end of a certain time. But in the case of a piano bought on what is termed the "three years system," the question of ownership must frequently arise. Here there is not the case of the hire of an article with an option of purchase, but a distinct provision that the piano shall become the property of the hirer at the end of the three years, if the instalments are duly paid. It is true that these agreements usually contain stipulations that any failure to pay an instalment shall cause a forfeiture of all preceding payments; but it is doubtful how far such a clause could be legally enforced. Certainly the three years system, and the variety of documents by which it is carried out, must cause some embarassment to trustees.

A correspondent who sends us the report of a case in the Barnsley County Court in which the executors of a surgeon brought an action to recover a sum of money from a debt collector, enters a complaint against "the race of debt collectors who unblushingly style themselves 'accountants,' and not infrequently bring discredit upon a profession to which they do not belong, and into which they would not be admitted." There is, no doubt, reason in the charge: but, as we have pointed out several times of late, the remedy rests with accountants themselves, and the work is one quite worthy of joint action on the part of the various accountants' societies throughout the Kingdom. It is quite time that accountants of respectability and standing showed themselves alive to the necessity of erecting a strong and palpable barrier between themselves and men who, however honest and respectable their calling, have no right to a place in the professional ranks. Accountants must set their own house in order, and the sooner they do it the better.

The attention of trustees should be called to the case of exparte Leonard, in which it was decided that the "representation" to be made by a creditor or inspector, that the debtor has been guilty of any fraudulent act, in order to induce the Court to order a prosecution, must be in writing. It is to be noticed that Section 16 of the "Debtor's Act" sets the power of the Court to order a prosecution on the "report" of a trustee, or the "representation" of a creditor. A report, obviously means a report in writing, and the proceedings are now assimilated. It would have been as well if this had been distinctly stated in the Act.

DRAPERY "LIMITED."

Our attention has been called to the balance sheet, dated December the 23d, 1874, of the Bayswater General Drapery and Mourning Warehouse, Limited, of Westbourne Grove. A capital consisting of 1,446 shares, at £5 per share, should naturally produce £7,230, but when 500 shares, announced as having £4 paid upon them, become, in accordance with arrangement, the property of the vendor, and sundry debtors on shares to the extent of £4,546 10s., have not the good-feeling to "pay up" the remaining "cash" capital at disposal, amounting to £683 10s., would appear barely sufficient, even to the most sanguine of enthusiastic promoters, to carry out the beneficent objects, whatever they may have been, of the Bayswater Company. Its transactions, of a more than ordinarily limited nature, and, extending over a by no means lengthened time, have resulted in a deficiency of £1,088, 5s., for a portion of which sum "debtors on goods account," to the extent of £730, 2s. 7d. are held to be responsible. On the other side, creditors appear in a rather formidable array to the amount of £5,468 3s. 10d., the sum total of the whole statement, embracing everything, reaches £16,686 2s. 10d. Salaries due, and Directors' fees, would seem to have but a small chance against an available cash balance of a shilling in the pound, and it may be said that but little scrutiny of this company's affairs would have sufficed to establish the absurdity of its formation. On one side at least, the Bayswater Drapery concern is a success, and although the benefits expected to be enjoyed by its supporters may or may not be looming in the distant future, they have certainly cause for congratulation at having their affairs laid before them in so open and straightforward a manner; but it would, perhaps, not be amiss to warn sentimental or susceptible investors that there are, judging, at least from the present instance, better ways of making money than "going into mourning."

At the Mansfield County Court Judge Wildman has decided that a £5 note of the Southwell Banking Company, which had been paid after the bank had stopped, but before it was known, was not sufficient payment.

In the preceding article we recommended the trustee, in dealing with disputed claims, to consult the solicitor to the estate. It is as well to point out that although the trustee cannot employ a solicitor without the sanction either of the creditors or of the Committee of Inspection, when such consent is given, the nomination rests solely with the trustee who is entitled to select any one he chooses. This fact is of importance, as, although it is customary to consult the wishes of the inspectors, there may be, and occasionally are cases in which it is desirable that this option should be exercised; as for example when inspectors have interests distinct from those of the general body of creditors, or are known to be strongly biassed towards, or related to, the bankrupt. In the event of such sanction being withheld, and the trustee considering that legal advice is necessary, he has the right to go to the Court, and the Court, if satisfied that the circumstances of the case warrant it, will make the required order. As a rule, however, the necessary permission is asked for, and obtained, at the first meeting of creditors.

The trustee having made such examination into the bankrupts' affairs as the materials he has been able to get together afford him the means of doing, should be in a position, prior to the date of the public examination, to consult his committee as to the course to be then adopted. Assuming that the bankrupt has complied straightforwardly with what has been required of him, and that the trustee and Committee of Inspection are satisfied as to his disclosures and dealings, (no opposition being offered,) the bankrupt is allowed to pass; but if on the other hand he has neglected to comply with the requisitions served on him (and which requisitions should be approved by a resolution of the Committee of Inspection) the solicitor should be fully instructed (in preference in writing) as to the grounds for opposing the bankrupt's passing, with a view to obtaining such order thereon as the circumstances of the case may justify; but, inasmuch as the interpretation of the Act is the reverse of hostile to bankrupts, it behoves the trustee to be very accurate in his complaints and requirements. Under the old Act a bankrupt who had passed his public examination was to all intents and purposes a free man, whereas under the present Act he is not released without the payment of 10s. in the pound, unless by a resolution of his creditors, and with the sanction of the Court. The learned Registrars, having, we suppose, this distinction in view, and bearing in mind that the trustee can always (even after the Bankrupt has passed his public examination) demand his attendance, and, if necessary, examine him on oath as to his dealings and transactions, appear to regard such passing as immaterial. The experience of trustees does not, however, accord with this view. In the first place, a certain dread of repeated publicity and possible censure, with the contingent risk of a committal for contempt, undoubtedly have an influence even over the most unscrupulous bankrupts, who are generally well enough versed in the act to know that when once they have passed, the trustee must pay travelling and other expenses either out of the estate (if there are assets), or out of his own pocket (if there are none). It is in connection with the bankrupt's accounts, and his public examination that, to our mind, one of the greatest defects of the present Act is to be found. It is true that "the freedom of the subject" is one of the greatest boasts of England; nevertheless a paternal form of government is gradually creeping onward. People are not allowed to be nuisances to their neighbours, sanitary defects are remedied compulsorily, and education is no longer a matter of choice. On what ground then should this paternal principle be ignored in connection with Bankruptcy Laws, upon which, to a great extent, the trade of the "first commercial country in the world" depends? Is it not a pecuniary wrong to the nation, as well as an indirect attack upon commercial morality, (which is certainly at a discount just now), that honest and industrious traders should have to compete with men who start in business unhampered by any scruples of conscience, and with the practical certainty that they may (except in very rare instances) perpetrate with impunity almost any degree of rascality. We have before urged, and we insist, that no Bankruptcy Laws will prove effective until we accept the principle, adopted almost without exception by continental nations, of making it compulsory for men who trade (or speculate) to keep books, therein recording every transaction, under, in the event of failure, a penalty reducible in the discretion of the judge, if the insolvent can adduce good reasons for a mitigation of his sentence. We would go even farther than this, and do away with the necessity for a public prosecutor (so far at least as Bankruptcy is concerned) by giving the Chief Registrars, aided if needs be by a jury, the power to imprison. There would be no danger in this, for if they have a failing, it is that of too much leniency towards "unfortunate bankrupts"; the creditors and trustees receiving far less consideration at their hands; thanks, perhaps to the tendency of the present laws.

To resume the duties of trustees which we left at the question of public examination. It must not be supposed that the trustee has no other duties to perform until that point is disposed of. As soon as he has by receipt of the Statement of Affairs (which should be produced at the first meeting of creditors, but which is often not forthcoming until compulsion is used), the bankrupts books, or by other means, —ascertained the particulars of the assets (if any), he should proceed to realize the same with all due diligence, consulting the views and taking the directions of the inspectors as to realization of stock in trade, freehold or leasehold property, reversions, &c., and applying for the book debts. If, after a second application, the debtors neglect to pay, a third courteous but firm notice should be sent intimating that unless paid on or before a certain date, the solicitor to the estate will be instructed to proceed.

A trustee should also, when assisted by a solicitor, invariably send him a notice to attend each committee meeting, for the recent decisions throw so much personal responsibility upon trustees, that unless acting under legal advice he may find himself directed by the inspectors in perfect good faith, to assume a false and dangerous position; and every trustee should bear in mind that any liability incurred is personal to himself, and cannot be passed on to his inspectors, although the result of their directions. The latter may, however, by resolution (duly stamped) jointly, or jointly and severally, indemnify the former against the consequence of any acts which they desire to have performed. It is in this respect that the greatest tact is often required. Inspectors are frequently ignorant of the first principles of the law, and regarding questions from a common sense point of view only, are apt to take umbrage at the objections of the trustee; and here the solicitor of the estate is often enabled to intervene and, by expounding the principles of the law, prevent misunderstandings and unpleasantness.

ACTION AGAINST AN "ACCOUNTANT."

A correspondent sends us the following:—At the Barnsley County Court, on the 19th inst., before Mr. Vincent Thompson, Deputy Judge, Messrs. Squire and Gill, executors of the late Mr. Allott, surgeon, of Hoyland Nether, near Barnsley, brought an action against Mr. Thomas Swaine, a rent and debt collector at Barnsley, to recover from him the sum of £49 6s. 11d. Mr. Ownsworth appeared for the plaintiffs, and Mr. Freeman for the defendant. Mr. Ownsworth said that the defendant had long practised in that court as an accountant. The money claimed was a sum which had been collected by the defendant as a rent and debt collector. He (defendant) had paid £22 into court, but they claimed £49 odd, less certain deductions. His clients had engaged Mr Swaine to collect the debts at 5 per cent., which was the usual rate of commission paid, but the defendant had charged 10 per cent., which, on being objected to, he had reduced, first to 7½ and then to 5 per cent. In addition to commission at 5 per cent., the plaintiff had allowed the defendant certain expenses, but not so much as he claimed. For instance, Mr. Swaine had the audacity to charge a shilling a letter for writing 117 letters. He (Mr. Ownsworth) did not know that an accountant had any right to charge for writing letters; he thought that was a right which belonged exclusively to the legal profession. His Honour said that writing letters was work which any man had a right to charge for. Mr. Ownsworth proceeded to say that the defendant had also charged commission on debts which he had not collected, but which had been taken out of his hands by the plaintiffs. His Honour thought it would be best to refer the matter to an accountant. Mr Ownsworth objected; submitting that it was not a question of account alone, as he contended that the defendant had no right to charge for writing letters, more especially after he had agreed to collect the debts for 5 per cent. commission. His Honour said he knew of no law which prevented a man charging for writing letters. Mr Ownsworth replied that his clients considered that 5 per cent. on the amount actually collected was quite sufficient without other charges and expenses. His Honour said that would be so if any agreement had been made to collect the debts for 5 per cent. without other charges, The defendant was then called, and said that he had been instructed by the plaintiffs to get in the debts, but he had never made any agreement as to what he was to charge for collecting them. Before he could begin to collect the debts he had to examine and make up the books, which was an accountant's, and not a collector's work. For collecting tradesmen's debts his charge was 5 per cent., but, in this case, owing to the greater difficulty of getting in doctor's bills, he had charged a higher rate of commission. Although some of the debts had been taken out of his hands, he claimed commission on the whole, because he had had as much trouble with the debts taken out of his hands, as with those he had collected. After having heard the evidence of Mr. Squire (one of the plaintiffs) and of a clerk lately in the employ of the defendant, examined on behalf of plaintiffs, his Honour went into a minute investigation of the case, and concluded by giving the plaintiffs' a verdict for £18 2s. 11d. in addition to the £22 paid into Court by the defendant.

COURT OF CHANCERY, Lincoln's-inn.

(Before the Lords Justices of Appeal.)

Lewis v. King.—This was an appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins. In November, 1871, Mr John Vaughan Lewis was indebted for various creditors at Bath in sums amounting to £420. Some negotiations were entered into between his solicitors with a Mr King, one of the creditors, on behalf of himself and the others. A proposal was made that an insurance should be effected on Lewis's life by way of security and that the debts should be paid by instalments. On the 5th of February, 1872, Lewis's solicitors wrote a letter to King, in which they said:—"If you effect an insurance on Mr Lewis's life for £500, what would become of the money assured thereby when you were paid? If it should only stand as a security to you and those acting with you for the amount which might be due to you and them, and it is understood that the same shall be assigned to him or his representative on payment of what is due to you and your colleagues, and interest, then we see our way to advise Mr Lewis to accede to the same." In reply to this letter the solicitors of the creditors wrote on the 12th of February, 1872, to Lewis's solicitors as follows:—"The creditors who would join in payment of the premiums on the policy would assign it to Mr Lewis on payment of their debts, together with all premiums paid and interest on such premiums. The policy must be effected through us in the Law Life Office." This was acceded to, and Mr King and a Mr Mann, as trustees for the creditors, effected a policy on the life of Lewis for £500 with the Law Life Office. The policy was dated the 7th of March, 1872; the annual premium was £10 7s. 11d., Lewis being then aged 26. It was arranged that the debt should be paid in nine instalments, the first instalment being payable on the 31st of May, 1872, and the last on the 31st of May, 1874. Lewis gave promissory notes to the creditors for what was due to them, with interest. The creditors paid the first two premiums on the policy. All the instalments were duly paid. On the 25th of February, 1874, shortly before the third premium became due, the solicitors of the creditors wrote to the solicitors of Lewis, "Do you feel disposed to take an assignment of the policy on payment of the premiums we have paid, and interest, or are we to let it drop?" Lewis's solicitors declined this proposal, but afterwards offered on his behalf to give £10 for the policy. This offer was not accepted. On the 27th of May, 1874, Lewis's solicitors sent to the creditors' solicitors a cheque for the last instalment, and they, in acknowledging the cheque, wrote:—"As soon as we get in all the promissory notes we will send them to you. As to the policy, if none of the creditors will purchase it, we will let you know, in order that you may take it if you feel disposed. Under instructions from one of the creditors we paid the premium last due, so it is in full force." On the 19th of July Lewis died, having by his will given all his property to his widow, whom he appointed his executrix. She in August last offered to pay the three premiums, with interest, and demanded an assignment of the policy. The creditors refused to accede to this. This bill was then filed against King and Mann, and the Law Life Society to enforce the widow's claim and to prevent the society from paying the £500 to any one except her. The defendants King and Mann demurred to the bill for want of equity. The Vice-Chancellor overruled the demurrer and the defendants appealed. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the demurrer ought to have been allowed. He quite agreed that if this policy had been the property of Mr Lewis and had been pledged by him to the creditors, and they, though under no obligation to keep it alive, had chosen to do so, it would still have been the property of the pledger, and would have retained its original character of a redeemable pledge. But the policy in this case had no resemblance whatever to property of a debtor pledged to a creditor. The creditors effected it with their own money, without there being any obligation on the part of the debtor to repay them anything which they paid for it. They might at any time have dropped the policy if they pleased. Their only bargain with him was that when he had paid the whole of the debts, with interest, he should be entitled to the option of having the policy assigned to him on payment of the premiums which had been paid wtih interest. This was a right given to him, and it was his duty to ask for the policy. There was no obligation on their part to tender it to him. He was bound to exercise his option within a reasonable time. It was like a lottery ticket for which the creditors had paid, and it was his duty to have applied for the policy within a reasonable time after the 31st of May, 1874. He did not do this, but he waited till the chance had become a certainty—till the lottery ticket had drawn a prize. He was not entitled to do this. It could not now be averred in a Court of Law or in a Court of Equity that he had always been ready and willing to make the payment. The correspondence strengthened this view of the case. After the letter of May 27,1874, his Lordship thought it was absolutely incumbent on Mr Lewis, if he meant to insist on his right to the policy, to have written by return of post, and to have said, "Don't sell it at all; I am willing to pay the money; keep it for me." It was too late to make the claim now, after the accident had happened which had made the policy a valuable property. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. The first question arose upon the construction of the letters, whether the policy was to be considered as originally the property of Mr Lewis or of the creditors. As they were to pay the premiums, prima facie it would be their property; and this, his Lordship thought, was the true construction of the letters. Then came the question whether he had exercised his option in due time. There were some negotiations before the third premium became payable, and Mr Lewis might then have said, "I decline to exercise my option at all until all the instalments of the debts have been paid." But he did not. He declined to take the policy at the price asked. Then afterwards he offered £10 for it. This was not accepted, and one of the creditors paid the third premium. Perhaps even then Mr Lewis was not absolutely precluded from his option. But nothing was more natural than that the creditors should suppose that he had abandoned it altogether. Then came the letter of the 27th of January. The meaning of that plainly was,—"We take it for granted that you do not intend to exercise your option under the original agreement. But you have offered us £10 for the policy. If none of the creditors will give more for it, we will let you have it for that sum." On receiving such a letter he was bound to answer it at once, and if he meant to insist on his original option he should have said,—"I have changed my mind, and I am ready to take the policy on the original terms." He did not do so, and this amounted to an admission on his part that the policy was the creditors' property.

ROLLS' COURT, Chancery-lane.

January 23.

The Agriculturist Cattle Insurance Company.—A curious question in the winding up of this company came before the Court by adjournment from Chambers. It appeared that a call of £20 per share, being the remainder of the share capital, was made by the official manager on the 11th of October, 1863. Other calls were subsequently made, and the question was whether the sums received by the official manager under compromise with a number of contributories ought to be taken as paid in respect of the first call, or to be apportioned rateably among all the calls. The question was of some importance to the remaining contributories, from the liability of the shareholders being unlimited as regards outside creditors, though limited to the capital as regards policy holders. The Master of the Rolls held, following a decision of Lord Justice James, when Vice-Chancellor, in the State Fire Insurance Company's case, that the sums in question ought to be apportioned rateably among all the calls.

Amateur Auditing.—In regard to the flight of Mr. Stiles, late cashier of the Melksham branch of North Wilts Bank, whose defalcations are estimated at £15,000 it is stated that "The accounts of the Melksham branch were regularly examined every half-year by two resident directors, and it was not until that duty devolved upon the manager at the end of the past year that the real state of the case was ascertained."

VICE-CHANCELLOR'S COURT.

January 22.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. Malins.)

In re The Eupion Fuel and Gas Co. (Limited).—This petition was presented ex parte under section 167 of the Companies Acts, 1862, by the official liquidator of the above company, now in course of winding-up, and by the prosecutors in the proceedings against the directors of the company, before the late Lord Mayor Lusk, who it will be remembered, committed the defendants, Messrs. Aspinall and others, for trial, the Grand Jury ultimately finding true bills against them. The petition asked that the official liquidator might be at liberty to conduct the prosecution on behalf of the prosecutors, and that the costs of the prosecution might be paid out of the assets of the company. The Vice-Chancellor declined to make any order on the petition, but without prejudice to any application being made to the Court of Appeal on the subject.

In re The British Timber Co. (Limited).—This was a petition for the winding-up of this company, presented by the executors of a shareholder and debenture holder. The company was formed in April, 1865, but having recently got into difficulties, a resolution was passed by a large majority of the shareholders, at a meeting held in November last, for a voluntary winding-up, and liquidators were duly appointed. Mr Higgins, Q.C., and Mr W. F. Robinson for the petitioners, contended that, being creditors, they were entitled to a compulsory order, or at least a supervision order. Mr Glasse, Q.C., and Mr North, for the company, opposed the petition on the ground that an overwhelming majority of the shareholders and also debentureholders were in favour of a voluntary winding up. Mr Rigby, for a debenture-holder, also opposed the petition. The Vice-Chancellor said that when the case was first presented to him he thought it was simply a petition by a creditor against shareholders, and was, therefore, inclined to make an order, as he did not see why the management of the affairs of the company should remain in the hands of the debtors instead of the hands of the creditors. But now it appeared that not only all the shareholders but also all the creditors, except the petitioners, or at all events an overwhelming majority of them, were unanimous in the desire that the Court should not interfere in the affairs of the company, but that they should be left to manage them themselves. Mr Higgins had argued that he was entitled to an order ex debito justitiæ; but, as he had already decided in the case of the "Langley Mills Steel and Iron Company" ("L.R." 12 Eq. 26), where he carefully considered the subject, the Court must, in deciding whether a winding-up order should be granted or not, have regard to the wishes of the majority of the contributories of the company. That was, in fact, laid down by the 91st section of the Companies Act. In the case of the "Brighton Hotel Company" he directed a meeting of the shareholders to be called, in order that their wishes might be ascertained, and if this were a doubtful case he should adopt the same course. But here it would be useless, as it was perfectly clear that the resolution would be in favour of a voluntary winding-up. Therefore, as he must regard the wishes of the shareholders and creditors, he found that there was an overwhelming majority in favour of a voluntary winding-up, and the majority must bind the minority. In bankruptcy, three-fourths of the creditors could bind the remaining fourth, but here the majority was far greater than three-fourths. He must, therefore, leave the matter in the hands of the majority and refuse the order asked for. With regard to the costs, the petition had been presented in good faith, and therefore, he should make no order, except that the costs of all parties on the petition be paid by the official liquidator out of the assets of the company.

Glasgow.—Institute of Accountants.—At the twenty-first annual meeting of this institute, held a few days ago in their own hall, the following gentlemen were appointed office-bearers for the ensuing year, viz.:—Wm. Anderson, president; Alex. Moore, George Robson, A. S. M'Clelland, John E. Watson, John Miller, Samuel Robertson, jun., members of council; with Walter Mackenzie, auditor; Robert M'Cowan, treasurer; and Alex. Sloan, secretary.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

January 22.

(Before Mr. Registrar PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE JOSEPH WARD.—The debtor, a surgeon of Heath-street, Hampstead, filed a petition for liquidation in July last, and at the first meeting the creditors passed a resolution accepting a composition of 8s in the pound, payable by instalments. Mr Ransford was appointed trustee for receipt and payment of the composition, and to him the debtor undertook to assign his furniture as security for his observance of the terms of the resolution. The debtor made default in payment of the instalments, and the trustee called upon him to execute an assignment of the furniture, but he refused to do so. He afterwards removed a portion of the furniture, which had been allowed to remain in his possession pending the liquidation petition; but upon criminal proceedings being instituted against him, he paid to the trustee the sum of £200. The matter was now brought to the notice of the Court by the creditors, who asked that the amount in the trustee's hands should be distributed rateably among them. His Honour was of opinion that as the debtor had made default in paying the composition, the creditors had a right to ask that the funds in the hands of the trustee should be distributed according to the terms of the resolution. Application granted.

January 23.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE T. S. WEBB.—The debtor, described as a colliery proprietor of 85, Gracechurch-street, had filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities returned at £94,000, and assets of uncertain value. His Honour now granted an extension until further order of an injunction restraining proceedings under an execution levied at the debtor's private residence, but at the same time declined to direct the sheriff to withdraw.

IN RE ABRAHAM POWELL.—The debtor is a warehouseman, carrying on business at 79, Wood-street. He has presented a liquidation petition, the liabilities being estimated at £9,000, assets, consisting of book debts, £3,000, and stock-in-trade about £2,000. His Honour now appointed Mr J. D. Viney receiver of the estate, and granted an interim injunction to restrain action by creditors.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE MARSTON, RE HILL.—This was an appeal from the Nottingham County Court, and involved a question of some little importance to carriage builders and proprietors. The appellant, Mr Marston, was a carriage builder at Birmingham, and he had been in the habit of letting out cabs upon hire to various persons upon the "deferred payment principle," or, in other words, upon the terms of payment of so much money by way of deposit and for hire, with a provision that at the expiration of a certain time the hirer should have the option of purchasing the cabs, the money paid to be taken as part of the price; and with a further provision that if the hirer made default in carrying out the terms of the agreement, the money paid should be forfeited. On the 20th of June, 1874, an agreement of this nature was made between the appellant and James Hill, a cab proprietor at Nottingham, for the hire of two Hansom cabs. Hill paid a deposit of £52, and the cabs were delivered to him, and his name appeared to have been painted in gilt letters upon both sides of them. The cabs remained in the possession of Hill until the 9th of October, when he filed a petition for liquidation without having made any further payment to the appellant; and the trustee subsequently took possession of the cabs, on the ground that they were in the possession of the debtor with the consent of the true owner at the time of the presentation of the petition. Mr Marston afterwards applied to the County Court for an order for the delivery of the cabs to him, but the learned Judge declined to interfere. Mr Marston appealed. Mr Finley Knight appeared for the appellant; and Mr Bagley for the trustee. On behalf of the appellant the evidence of carriage builders and others engaged in, or connected with the trade was adduced, which showed that there existed in the trade a well-known custom and practice to let out carriages and other vehicles upon what was known as the "deferred payment principle." On the other hand, evidence was given which went to prove that no such custom prevailed, and creditors of Hill stated that they were not aware of such custom, that they believed the cabs to be the property of Hill, and that if they had been aware of the circumstance that Mr Marston was the owner, they would not have supplied goods to Hill upon credit. The Chief Judge held that, dealing with the evidence as it stood, the custom contended for by the appellant had been proved, and that it could not be said the cabs were in the possession of the debtor with the consent of the true owner. So much of the order of the Court below as refused the delivery of the cabs to the appellant must be discharged, without prejudice to any application the trustee might be advised to make as to the deposit in the hands of the appellant.

EX PARTE LEONARD, RE LEONARD.—This was an appeal from an order of the County Court at Bury St Edmund's that the bankrupt, a cattle-dealer at Soham, in Cambridgeshire, should be prosecuted for offences under the Debtors' Act. During the opening of the appeal it transpired that the "representation" of the creditors made to the Court upon the hearing of the application for leave to prosecute was merely a verbal one, and that the evidence of the trustee had not been reduced to writing and filed with the proceedings. The Chief Judge expressed an opinion that the "representation," which the Act required, should be in writing and filed with and made a part of the proceedings, and that the evidence should appear upon the record. His Lordship discharged the order, without prejudice to any further application which the trustee might make to the County Court.

(Before Mr Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE A. P. STANFORD.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination under the failure of Asa Philip Stanford, described as of 6, Great Winchester-street-buildings, and who had been engaged in large speculative transactions in mining and other shares. The bankrupt had filed accounts disclosing liabilities to the amount of £42,052, and assets £120 only. He had been adjourned on several occasions for the amendment of his accounts; and Mr Willoughby, who appeared for the trustee, said that the bankrupt had not complied with a former order of the Court, but proposed to submit the accounts to a meeting of his creditors. With that view he consented to a further adjournment. His Honour allowed another adjournment for a month.

IN RE JOHN CRUICKSHANKS.—The bankrupt, described as of Belgrave-road, St. John's-wood, commission agent for the sale of wines, was allowed to pass his public examination on a statement of affairs showing—Unsecured debts, £1,478; and assets, £120.

January 26.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE FRANCIS GODRICH, JUN.—An adjourned public examination was held under an adjudication obtained against the bankrupt, who was the defendant in the protracted divorce suit of "Godrich v. Godrich." At the last sitting the trustee opposed, and the proceedings were adjourned until to-day in order that the bankrupt might file a further account in reference to his expenditure. Mr Beddall, for the trustee, referred to various items of the accounts which he considered to be unsatisfactory, but left it to the Court to decide whether the bankrupt should be allowed to pass his examination. Mrs Godrich, who appeared to oppose, pointed out that the bankrupt had not made a complete return of his professional earnings. She stated that he had at one time an income of £3,000 per year, and that up to 1871 he held a public appointment; and she reiterated in general terms her complaints in regard to the conduct of the bankrupt. Mr Bagley, in support of the application to pass, urged that the present was an exceptional case, and, even assuming that the bankrupt had been wrong throughout, the only question now before the Court was whether the accounts were reasonably sufficient. He deprecated these public displays, which had the tendency to provoke scandal. His Honour regretted the animosity which had been exhibited throughout the proceedings, and said he believed the bankrupt had given the best statement of accounts that was possible. He might now pass, but he would remain liable to answer any question that might be put to him.

IN RE B. F. H. CAREW.—The debtor, described as of 29, Duke-street, Manchester-square, gentleman, filed a petition for liquidation in July last, and a composition of 19s. 11d. in the pound was accepted, payable within 14 days from registration. It appeared that the debtor was the tenant for life of estates of the value of £6,000 per annum, which were settled under the Carew Estates Act. In order to satisfy his creditors he obtained a loan of £26,000 upon security of the estates from the Eagle Insurance Company. The composition was duly paid by trustees appointed to receive and distribute it, and the debtor now applied to the Court for the return of £4,123, which he alleged to be the balance in the hands of the trustees after satisfying the creditors. The claim was disputed by the trustees, who admitted that they had only a balance of £2,148 to account for, and they were also placed in a difficulty in consequence of having received notice of a claim from the plaintiff in the Chancery suit of "Pigot v. Stuart." Mr Winslow, Q.C., and Mr Bradford appeared for the debtor in support of the application; Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Turner for the trustee; Mr Northmore Laurence and Mr E. C. Willis represented other interests. The case having been partly opened, his Honour said he presumed that the object of the motion was to obtain an account from the trustees of their dealings with the funds which had come into their hands. Mr Winslow said this was so, but he contended that before any such account was taken the trustees were bound to pay over in the first instance the admitted balance. The case had not concluded when the Court rose on this day.

IN RE H. W. HEMSWORTH.—The bankrupt, described as of Stratford-place, Marylebone, gentleman, was adjudicated on the petition of the Rev. J. A. Giles, D.C.L., of the Rectory, Sutton, in respect of a sum of £3,132, due under a marriage settlement, and for which judgment had been recovered. The unsecured debts were returned at £6,905, and debts for which security is held £2,300; with assets, £4,502. Several proofs were tendered and discussed, and an adjournment ordered.

IN RE N. KETTLE.—This was a novel application. The debtor carried on business as a bootmaker in Fulham-road, and a resolution to liquidate his estate by arrangement has been passed by the creditors. Mr. Michael, as representing the trustee, said that the resolution had been lost, and he applied for permission to file a duplicate resolution which was duly verified. There was no precedent for the application, but Mr. Michael said he would contend that the resolution was not a sheet of paper signed by the creditors—the paper being merely evidence of the wishes of the creditors—and not the resolution itself. He read an affidavit in support of the application, and it appeared that the creditors desired that a duplicate resolution should be filed and registered. His Honour thought that strong grounds had been shown in support of the application, and allowed a duplicate resolution to be filed.

IN RE L. A. DA COSTA.—This was also a singular application. The bankrupt, who was a merchant, of King-street, Cheapside, had filed a petition for liquidation, but the proceedings proved abortive, and an adjudication which followed, had also been annulled. It was now asked that the liquidation proceedings might be revived, and leave given to call a new meeting of creditors. His Honour suggested that the proper course in the first instance would be to apply for the dismissal of the petition for liquidation, the proceedings thereunder having become abortive. The Solicitor said that with his Honour's permission he would now ask for the dismissal of the petition; but the learned Registrar declined at present to deal with the application.

The Lord Mayor has dismissed the summons against Mr Johann Trautmann, a City merchant, who was charged last week with having obtained a large quantity of goods in exchange for some bonds of the Illinois, Missouri, and Texas Railway Company. The prosecution withdrew all imputations, and Mr Poland stated that the defendant had been summoned under a complete misapprehension, and that there was not the slightest foundation for the charge.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.
(Before Mr. J. F. COLLIER, Judge.)

IN RE JAMES FERRY SILBY.—This case incidentally involved a somewhat important point of practice. Mr Silby, the debtor, was formerly in partnership with Messrs J. and H. Keyworth, as agricultural implement makers. The partnership was dissolved by mutual consent in 1869, and upon the taking of accounts between the parties it was found that Mr Silby was indebted to the firm in a considerable amount, which was ultimately fixed at £1,500. The continuing partners, Messrs Keyworth, agreed to accept the sum of £750 as a compromise, payable by instalments secured by bills of exchange at long dates, without interest; but it was also agreed in writing that if default were made in payment of the bills, the debt or sum of £1,500 was to revive, less any sum that might have been paid in the meantime. The bills were regularly met until November of last year, when, £500 of the £750 having been paid, Mr Silby presented his petition under the arrangement clauses of the Act. At the first meeting of his creditors a resolution was passed to accept a composition, Messrs. Keyworth tendering a proof of debt for £1,300, being £1,000 the balance of the original debt, and £300 for interest. The proof was objected to on behalf of the debtor, on the ground that interest was not payable under the agreement. This objection was duly marked on the proof by the chairman (Mr Bolland), and on the resolutions being presented to Mr Registrar Watson for registration he ruled that in a case of composition where the question of the amount of the proof did not affect the passing of the resolution—i.e., that, whether the objection was a valid one or not, where the resolution was assented to by the statutory majority of creditors—he had no alternative but to register, and leave the parties to seek the opinion of the court as to the validity of the objection. He ruled that rule 271 and subsequent rules must be read together. The matter accordingly now came before the court, on motion, to reduce the proof by the amount of interest charged, £300. Mr Rodway appeared in support of the motion, and Mr. Gill opposed on behalf of Mr. Banner, the liquidator of Messrs. Keyworth's estate. It was submitted by Mr Rodway that, inasmuch as the agreement did not actually provide for the payment of interest, no interest could be recovered. The intention of the parties undoubtedly was that on the original debt being revived no interest, was (as is usual on the dishonour of bills of exchange,) to be charged, but that the original debt should be merged in the compromise; and, in fact, until Mr Silby had made default in meeting his bills, the original debt was not revived. It was expressly stated in the agreement that the £750 was not to bear interest, and it could not have been intended that the £1,500 was to be chargeable during the currency of the bills. Further, it was necessary, as a matter of law as to interest, that it should have been inserted in the agreement, as no parole evidence was admissible that had the effect of adding to the written agreement. Mr Gill, in reply, urged that the original debt, with all its incidence, revived; if it was originally a debt that bore interest, such interest must be allowed. He further contended that evidence might be received to show that the debt was of such a nature. His Honour said he was of opinion that it was necessary the agreement should have provided for interest, to enable the parties to recover. He also considered it clear that it was not the intention of the parties that interest should be charged, or it would have been so expressed in the agreement. The order would be to reduce the claim by £300, the respondents to pay the costs of the motion.

MANCHESTER INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.—The Council of this institute has prepared a series of suggestions for the improvement of the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; and these suggestions have been forwarded to the Lord Chancellor's Committee for their consideration.

BANK RATE.—The Bank rate was on Thursday reduced from 4 per cent., at which it has remained for a fortnight, to 3 per cent.

A BOGUS CREDITOR.

At the Manchester County Court, on Thursday, before Mr Registrar Kay, Mr Sampson (Messrs Grundy and Kershaw) moved the Court to rescind an order made by the Court on the 12th instant, directing certain resolutions to be registered. The motion was made on the ground that the passing of the resolution had been obtained by fraud. The debtor whose estate the resolution affected was Mr T. W. Whitchurch, a botanist in Tib-street. Previous to the filing of the petition on the 4th December last the debtor saw Mr George Melville, auctioneer, at his office at 28, Old Millgate, who also acted occasionally as an attorney's clerk. Affidavits filed in court by the debtor state that by Melville's directions a bogus creditor was inserted in the request and list of creditors in order to obtain the majority requisite to carry the liquidation. Melville's clerk, it was stated, was therefore entered. Resolutions were by this means passed, one of which appointed Melville trustee. The debtor, however, subsequently gave Melville notice not to proceed further with the liquidation proceedings, because his relations were about to pay all his creditors in full. The creditors were paid on 8th December; Melville's clerk, of course, excepted. This fact, it is stated, was made known to Melville by several creditors, but Melville persisted in his course, and applied to the Court for an order to register, and he placed three men in possession of the debtor's property. On the application of the debtor on the 13th Melville was directed to withdraw from possession by the order of the Court. The motion now before the Court was first heard on the 15th instant, when Mr Fleming appeared as counsel for Mr Melville. The motion was then adjourned to allow Melville to file affidavits. He now, however, withdrew opposition to the motion, and consented to pay the debtor's costs. The Registrar said it was well that such a course had been taken. Had the matter gone on, steps would have been ordered by him which would have been very serious to parties concerned; for it appeared to him that there had been an endeavour to play a gross fraud upon the Court, and at the time the fraud was attempted he feared the trustee knew more about it than he should have done.

An Insuring Bankrupt.—The estate and interest in policies of insurance of a bankrupt stockbroker's clerk have been put up for sale in Dublin. The details of the bankrupt's provident forethought in this respect, and the results of sale, are as follow:—Policy of insurance, with profits, dated the 3d of July, 1873, on the life of the bankrupt for £100, effected with the Masonic and General Insurance Company; annual premium, £2 10s.; sold for £2 10s. Policy for £100, with profits, Royal Exchange Assurance Corporation, January, 1871; annual premium, £5 13s. 6d.; sold for £9. Policy for £200, with profits, City of Glasgow Life Insurance Company, dated 21st February, 1873; annual premium for first five years, £3 5s. 4d., and thereafter £6 10s. 8d.; sold for £2 10s. Policy for £200, Provident Life Assurance Society, dated October, 1867; half-yearly premium, £2 12s.; sold for £15. Policy with the Scottish Provident Assurance Company for £300, dated November, 1866; half-yearly premium, £3 3s. 9d.; sold for £15. Policy for £200, Scottish Provident Assurance Company, dated December, 1861; half-yearly premium, £1 18s. 6d.; sold for £17. A debenture of five shares of £1 each on the British Imperial Investment Corporation, limited; sold for £1 5s.

The Morning Post says:—"The well-known Gog and Magog figures, striking the hours and quarters, in front of Sir John Bennett's Cheapside watch manufactory, have been sold to a nobleman, and will be immediately set to work at the castle to which they are to be transferred. In their places in Cheapside, we are informed, will forthwith appear a new and more remarkable set of figures."

SCOTCH COURT OF SESSION.

Jan. 26.

Duncan v. Middleton and Co.—The estates of William Milton, who sometime carried on business as an ironmonger and coal agent at Larkhill, were sequestrated in June last, and the pursuer, Thomas Duncan, banker, Larkhill, was appointed trustee on the sequestrated estate. Prior to the date of his sequestration Mr Milton supplied the defenders, D. Middleton and Co., timber and coal merchants, with certain quantities of coal amounting in value to £640 19s. 9d. The defenders made certain payments in cash to Mr Milton, and returned two waggons of coals supplied to them. They also furnished to Mr Milton a quantity of pit-props, and the pursuer alleges that the balance due to him, by the defenders on these transactions as trustee, amounts to £256 18s. 6d.; and the present action was raised to enforce payment of that sum. The defenders averred that Milton was in the habit of forwarding quantities of coal to them and other parties in the north without orders. When these coals reached their destination the parties to whom they were addressed, on various occasions, refused to take delivery; and demurrage, and other charges, were incurred to, and claimed by, the carriers. On those occasions Milton was in the practice of appealing to the defenders to relieve him of the coals on any terms, and to pay the demurrage and other charges on his behalf, and the defenders frequently did so, at the same time debiting him with the demurrage and other charges, which they paid on his account. They also forwarded, under contract, certain quantities of pit-props, part of which Milton refused to take delivery of, and the defenders aver that they have thus suffered loss and damage to the amount of £421 13s. 1d. They therefore plead that they are entitled to absolvitor. The record was closed to-day.

Glendinning v. Leslie and Others.—We reported the particulars of this case lately. The pursuer, Peter Glendinning, estate factor, residing at Leuchold, Dalmeny Park, near Edinburgh, trustee on the sequestrated estate of Wm. Robertson, farmer at Whitekirk Mains, Haddingtonshire, residing in Glasgow, sued the marriage contract trustees of George Bishop Robertson, residing at Berwick-on-Tweed, for reduction of a minute of agreement entered into between the bankrupt and the said George B. Robertson, dated 8th August, 1870, whereby the bankrupt agreed to grant a bond and disposition in security in favour of the defenders, as trustees under said marriage contract, for £1,000, being, as therein alleged, a sum which had been lent by the trustees to Geo. B. Robertson, son of the said Wm. Robertson, and had not been repaid by him, and (2) a pretended bond and disposition in security for the said sum of £1,000 said to have been granted by the bankrupt in implement of the obligations alleged to have been undertaken by him under said minute of agreement, whereby the said Wm. Robertson bound himself to pay the said sum of £1,000 to the defenders, and in further security he disponed to the defenders certain subjects at Dunbar then belonging to him. The defenders pleaded that the reduction sought by the pursuer was incompetent, being without restitution of the consideration given for the said Wm. Robertson's obligations under the agreement and of the defender's position at its date; and that the deeds sought to be reduced having been granted by Wm. Robertson when solvent, and for onerous considerations, and the action being otherwise unfounded in fact and law, the defenders were entitled to absolvitor with expenses. The case came up in the Procedure Roll to-day, and after hearing counsel for the pursuer the Lord Ordinary stated that he was satisfied without calling upon the defenders to reply. He found that the agreements libelled were not granted in favour of conjunct and confident persons, and he therefore assoilzied the defenders with expenses.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has appointed Mr. J. Wagstaff Blundell (Wagstaff Blundell, Biggs, and Co.), official liquidator of the Barry Railway Company.

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS IN SCOTLAND.

KELLY, HILL, AND Co.—At the Sheriff Court, Glasgow, on Tuesday, in the sequestration of Kelly, Hill, and Co., merchants and colonial agents, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, James Kelly was examined, and stated that he began business in partnership with Mr Hill in October, 1872, as merchants and colonial agents, with a capital of £1,000, which was put in by Mr Hill. During the first year, the business of Kelly, Hill, and Co., was profitable, at least he thought so, although they had not made a complete balance. They, however, made a trial balance, but it did not show their profits or losses. That was the only balance they ever made prior to their stoppage. Their business consisted chiefly of purchases from houses abroad to their order and consignments on their own account. They first found themselves in difficulties about the end of September last by the non-arrival of expected remittances, chiefly from the West Indies. They suspended payment on the 2d October last, and endeavoured to effect a composition arrangement with their creditors of 7s. per £, but they failed to carry out the offer, some of the creditors having declined to accept it. He had a difficulty in putting a valuation upon debts due by the foreign houses, but in his opinion they would realise the amounts at which they were set down. The liabilities of the firm amounted to £13,088 5s. 7d., and the assets to £3,100, showing a deficiency of £9,938 5s. 7d. The chief losses of the firm arose from bad debts and consignments.—At the close of the examination the statutory oath was administered.

At the Edinburgh Bankruptcy Court, on Friday, James Pattersen, farmer, Chapelhill, Hawick, appeared before Sheriff Hamilton for examination in bankruptcy. An amended state of affairs was produced showing debts and liabilities amounting to £10,414 19s. 2d. Of that sum there were preferable claims to the amount of £505. His assets were £2,427 1s. 3d. Bankrupt accounted for the deficiency of his estate and his present position by the following causes:—It had been more immediately occasioned by the liabilities under accommodation bills granted to Mr Sampson Langdale, of Newcastle, and relatives of that person, who appeared to have got bills with bankrupt's name upon them from Langdale to the extent of £3,391 2s. 6d. Secondly, he lost on farming when in Ireland, and which now formed part of claims against him, £400. Third, his farm had been carried on entirely on money got on credit, for which he had to pay a continuous large rate of interest. That interest could not be less during his possession of the farm than £3,000. Fourth, he expended considerable sums of money in draining and liming the farm, which had not been restored during the currency of the lease, and he calculated this expenditure at £1,000. On various recent occasions he had experienced losses by death of sheep and horses to the value of £350. All these losses amounted to £8,141 2s. 6d. The statutory oath was administered.

UNION BANK OF SCOTLAND V. TRUSTEE ON SEQUESTRATED ESTATE.—This was an action in the Glasgow Sheriff Court at the instance of the Union Bank of Scotland against a deliverance of the trustee in the sequestration of Messrs Watson and Campbell, iron merchants, Glasgow. It appears that the pursuers claimed to be ranked as creditors for the sum of £13,040 17s. 1d., but the trustee on the sequestrated estate deducted the sum of £980 10s. 4d. in respect that the claimants held security to that extent for iron belonging to the bankrupt, or that they had realized that sum by the sale of the iron. The Union Bank appealed to the Sheriff against the deliverance, and Sheriff-Substitute Guthrie has issued the following interlocutor on the subject:—"Having heard parties' procurators, &c., on the appeal for the Union Bank of Scotland, for the reasons stated in the note sustains the appeal and remits to the trustee to rank the appellants (the Union Bank of Scotland) on their claim without any deduction in respect of the sums received on account of the iron mentioned in the deliverance appealed against; finds the appellants entitled to expenses, &c." The note is as follows:—"The Union Bank is a creditor of the bankrupts as holders of certain bills current at the date of the sequestration (March 17, 1874), drawn by the bankrupts and accepted by Tyndall and Loudon, iron merchants, Dublin. The bills, which were discounted with the bank by the bankrupts, were drawn against certain quantities of iron shipped by them to Tyndall and Loudon. On the 7th and 8th of April, an agreement was made between the Union Bank and certain other banks holding bills of the same parties, on the one hand, and Tyndall and Loudon on the other, by which Tyndall and Loudon on the narrative that they would be unable to meet their acceptances when due, surrendered their estates, and particularly a quantity of iron lying in their store at Dublin, to the banks; and Messrs John Stewart and Sons were appointed to sell the iron and divide the proceeds among the banks. It was agreed that in consideration of doing so, Tyndall and Loudon should, subject to the consent of Watson and Campbell's trustee, receive a full discharge of their liabilities under the bills in question. The iron was sold, and it was admitted that Union Bank received in November last the sum of £980 7s. as its share of the proceeds. The trustee maintains that the Union Bank can only be ranked for the amount of their claim after deducting this sum of £980 7s.; and it was contended in a full and able argument that the agreement or the possession of the iron by Messrs Stewart for the bank (it does not clearly appear which) was a security over part of the bankrupt's estate, on which the bank in their oath for ranking were bound by section 65 of the statute to put a specified value, which should be deducted from their debt. The respondent's case was mainly rested on this clause of the statute, and he attempted from the proofs to show that the iron shipped by the bankrupts to Tyndall and Loudon, having been consigned to them as factors for sale, and not having been sold to them as merchants, was really part of the bankrupts' estate. The evidence on this subject is certainly loose and unsatisfactory, partly because the partners of the iron firm were not adduced as witnesses, and partly, perhaps, because the terms of the transaction were not very precisely defined as between the parties originally engaged in them. After considering the evidence, the Sheriff-Substitute is rather inclined to think that the transactions between the bankrupts and Tyndall and Loudon should be regarded as sales. They are so ex facie, and he thinks that the burden of proof must be on the party maintaining the reverse. There are certainly some probabilities arising from the circumstances of the parties, in favour of the trustee's contention; but these do not seem sufficient to counterbalance the considerations the other way, and particularly the fact that the trustee himself made a claim upon the iron in Messrs Stewart's hands as a simple creditor of Tyndall and Loudon's, so late as 9th and 21st July last, after he had the conversation with Mr Loudon, from which he appears to have got the information upon which the deliverance appealed against proceeds. Perhaps, however, it is not very material to determine whether these transactions were sales or not. Even if it be assumed that the iron was consigned to Tyndall and Loudon as agents for sale on behalf of Watson and Campbell, as the respondent contends, the case appears to fall within the operation of two well-established principles which lead to a different result from that embodied in the deliverance appealed against. The bank is holder of a bill, and claims in this case on the estate of the drawer. It is settled by a series of decisions that the rights of parties claiming on a bankrupt estate must be regulated as at the date of the sequestration, and that therefore a payment received from a co-obligant or his estate, after sequestration, is not to be imputed in extinction pro tanto of the debt. The Sheriff-Substitute apprehends that this rule must apply in the present circumstances, even if the iron had been consigned to Tyndall and Loudon as the agents of the bankrupts. For in this case Tyndall and Loudon were entitled, in accordance with the rule clearly expressed in Broughton v. Stewart, Primrose, and Co., Dec. 17, 1814, and ever since acted on in the law of Scotland, to sell the iron in their hands in order to relieve themselves of the obligations they had undertaken for their principals, Watson and Campbell. This they did in the present case by the agreement No. 43 of process, and no plausible reason has been suggested for holding that it was not competent for them to make effectual their lien as factors by applying it upon condition that the assignee should pay over the proceeds to the creditors on the bills drawn by the principals. The result may be shortly stated thus—if there was a sale to Tyndall and Loudon, the 65th section of the Bankruptcy Act does not apply, because the iron was no part of the bankrupt's estate. If there was no sale to Tyndall and Loudon, the iron vested in the trustee by section 102 of the statute, subject always to the factor's preferable right to sell or assign their right of sale, for relief of their obligations on behalf of their bankrupt principals. It was only in right of Tyndall and Loudon, the primary obligants in the bills, and in virtue of the lien which they possessed, and which their principal's bankruptcy entitled them at once to make good by sale; that Messrs Stewart could sell the iron, and the payment of the proceeds to the appellants must, therefore, be regarded in any view as a payment out of their estate after the sequestration, and not as one out of the bankrupt's estate. It is not, therefore, to be deducted from the amount of the appellant's claim before ranking."

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following meetings of creditors have been held during the week :—

J. E. GALE (BIRKENHEAD).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr J. E. Gale, the defaulting manager of the London and Lancashire Insurance Company, was held on Friday, in the Birkenhead County Court. The bankrupt having absconded, there was no statement of accounts ; but debts amounting to about £15,000, principally due to loan societies, were proved, and a trustee was appointed.

ROBERT MAXWELL AND CO.—At a meeting on Thursday of the creditors of Robert Maxwell and Co., the statement of affairs shewed liabilities £102,833, of which about £42,000 was fully secured, and assets of small amounts. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement.

A. LYNN, (GLASGOW).—At a meeting held in Glasgow, on Friday, of the creditors of Alexander Lynn, engineer (partner of the now dissolved firm of Lynn, Mann, and Louden, engineers, millwrights, and waggon builders, Irvine), Mr John Gourlay, C.A., was appointed trustee. The bankrupt's liabilities amount to about £7,000.

JOHN EDE, (BIRMINGHAM).—An adjourned meeting of the creditors of Mr John Ede, of Birchfield, Aston, the manufacturer of "Ede's Eye Liquid," was held on Friday morning. The proceedings were purely formal, the object of the meeting being to confirm the resolution passed at a meeting on the 8th inst. accepting a composition of 3s in the pound. It was resolved to confirm this resolution, and that the composition should be paid; 1s 6d cash in a month, and 1s 6d within six months, to be secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor and his two brothers.

CHAS. SULLEY (MANCHESTER.)—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr Chas. Sulley, manufacturer, 7, Dale-street, Manchester, held on Tuesday, the resolution accepting a composition of 10s. in the pound, payable in four equal instalments at three, six, nine, and twelve months, was unanimously confirmed.

JOHN ASHTON (MANCHESTER.)—A meeting of the creditors of Mr John Ashton, of Hollinwood, contractor, was held on Tuesday in Manchester. The liabilities were estimated at £9,200, and the assets at upwards of £3,700. It was resolved that the estate should be liquidated, and terms of arrangement satisfactory to the creditors were accepted.

R. WILSON AND SONS (NEWCASTLE.)—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. R. Wilson and Sons, provision merchants, of Newcastle, has been held. Their liabilities are put down at £79,589, with assets at £11,401.

CASTLE KELSEY (HULL).—At the Hull County Court on Wednesday a first meeting was held in the bankruptcy of Castle Kelsey, of Hull, merchant. The bankrupt stopped payment in September last. The gross liabilities at that time were £220,054 5s. 1d., and since then about £50,000 of liabilities on bills receivable have run off, leaving the gross liabilities of every kind at this date £170,000. The accounts have been in the hands of Mr Benjamin Pickering, the accountant, since the stoppage, and he now estimates the debts to be proved on the estate for dividend at £90,918 4s. 7d., and the assets to produce £10,005 9s. 9d. At the meeting the same day debts amounting to £40,000 and upwards were proved, and Mr Pickering was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

MR. E. G. KEAY (BIRMINGHAM).—On Friday, at the office of Mr. W. H. Griffin, Bennett's-hill, a meeting of the creditors of Edwin George Keay, Vale street, Birmingham, boot and shoe manufacturer, was held. Mr. Barrow, of London (receiver), read the statement of affairs, showing unsecured creditors to the amount of £2,175 11s. 11d. ; creditors fully secured, £411 11s., less estimated value of securities, £590 ; surplus to contra, £178 9s.; total assets, £691 15s. 4d. It was resolved that the affairs would be liquidated by arrangement, that Mr A. Barrow and Mr L. J. Sharp should be appointed trustees, with a committee of inspection.

MR. G. B. BLOOMER (WALSALL).—On Tuesday, a meeting of the creditors of Mr. G. B. Bloomer, consulting engineer and machinery and general broker, Walsall, was held at the offices of Messrs. Duignan, Lewis, and Williams. Mr. Bissell, jun., occupied the chair. The creditors were represented by Mr. L. W. Lewis, who presented a statement of accounts, which showed that the liabilities amounted to £9,000 (£7,000 of which would rank against the estate), and the assets to £1,300. The majority of the creditors were in favour of liquidation, with the appointment of trustees. Mr. Griffin, of Birmingham, who represented a creditor for £4,000, would not agree to such a resolution, and no resolution was arrived at.

FAILURES.

The following failures have been announced during the week :—

ENGLAND.—Messrs. Benjamin Wilson and Co., plush manufacturers, 81, Southwark-street, London, have suspended payment. The liabilities are estimated at about £100,000, and the books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Kemp, Ford, and Co., Walbrook.

SCOTLAND.—The failure is reported of Mr Malcolm M'Donald, the sole partner in the firm of Messrs Malcolm M'Donald and Co., merchants and manufacturers, of Glasgow and St Louis, United States. The liabilities amount to about £34,000, while the assets show only 4s. 5d. in the pound.

AMERICA.—The failure of Messrs. M'Bride and Williams, butter merchants, 333, Greenwich- street, New York, is announced with liabilities close on £20,0 00. The Allegheny Trust Company, of Allegheny City, have suspended payment, with liabilities put down at £25,000.—The suspension is reported of Messrs. Waring, Brothers, and Co, a well-known and extensive oil firm in Pittsburgh. They had a very extensive trade and stood high. Depression of trade and heavy investments are said to be the cause of their difficulties, which, it is thought, they may overcome. Mr. Walter M. Rice, of Montreal, has made an assignment of his estate with liabilities of about £40,000 ; his assets, it is said, will exceed that amount.—New York advices announce the suspension of the Union Bank of Jersey City. When the mail left the liabilities had not been definitely ascertained, but it was hoped the assets would meet all claims. The cause of stoppage was attributed to a large accumulation of suspended paper taken under the former management of the Bank. The present directors have only been in office six months.

The South African papers report the failure of Messrs. Benjamin Brothers, wool washers, of Graham's Town, with liabilities amounting to about £140,000.

"It is rumoured that a large wine merchant in Dublin and Armagh is arranging with his creditors, to whom it is alleged he owes £180,000. Serious losses will be incurred by several houses in Dublin."—Glasgow Herald.

WINDING-UP.—In the Rolls Court on Saturday the 23d inst., an order was made for the winding-up of the Teplitz Colliery and Coal Oil Co. (Limited); and an arrangement was made continuing the voluntary winding-up, under supervision of Joseph Lucke and Co. (Limited.)—A petition for the winding-up of the Hart's Pure Whole Meal Bread and Biscuit Company (Limited) is to be heard in the Court of Chancery to-day (30th). —Petitions for the winding up of the Morvale Consols Tin Mining Company (Limited), and the Treleigh Wood United Mining Company (Limited), are to be heard by the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries on the 6th proximo.

THE EUROPEAN ARBITRATION.

Mr. C. J. Bunyon writes the following in Wednesday's Times:—

Sir,—Having seen the European Society's Arbitration come to a complete deadlock, from which the temporary acceptance of the office of Arbitrator by even so accomplished a lawyer as Lord Justice James can scarcely be said to have completely released it, we may find it not uninstructive to look back and retrace the steps which have led to this deplorable history. It is said that nothing is certain save the unexpected; but nothing that has happened has been unexpected in this case. Every false step, misadventure, and misfortune was foreseen and foretold in your columns, and the voice of warning was freely raised, though it met the fate of the voice of Cassandra. When Vice-Chancellor Malins made the provisional order for winding up the European, the Albert Arbitration was going rapidly forward, and it was at once proposed to follow that precedent. But the dangers of that course were very apparent to those who were then intrusted with the management of the liquidation, and by them a bill was prepared which received the cordial approbation of the Vice-Chancellor, which in the place of the violent remedy of an arbitration should enable the Court of Chancery to carry out the liquidation with rapidity and certainty. "The provisions proposed were, inter alia, to limit the right of appeal from the Vice-Chancellor's Court to the Court of Appeal alone; to prescribe the mode in which all contingent interests, such as policies and annuities, were to be valued; to throw upon the liquidators the duty of valuing all such claims, and settling the list of contributories according to the mode pursued in voluntary liquidations; and to provide for the winding-up of indemnifying and indemnified companies in such a manner that no disputed claims on the latter could delay the liquidation of the former." This bill was unfortunately lost in the Select Committee of the House of Commons without a witness being heard in its favour. "We prefer the Arbitration Bill," said the Chairman, on the principle, no doubt, of the dicta, "As little law as possible, if you please, gentlemen," and "Whatever you do, keep out of the Court of Chancery." An arbitrator in the eyes of our legislators was to be a deus ex machinâ, to descend from an exalted sphere, and set all things right by magic. They little knew that a legal arbitration without appeal or responsibility represented the legal disease in its most virulent form. The rejection of this bill did not, however, settle this controversy, the Arbitration Bill was only viewed with increased repugnance, and it was pointed out that, in addition to the objections arising upon constitutional and public grounds, the practical difficulties would be insuperable. "The same questions," it was said, "will be fought over and over again. There will be no binding precedent, since the opinions of successive judges are sure to vary in this as in all other branches of the law, and the result must be mere chaos and confusion. Not only will there be unseemly contests of opinion, but every unsuccessful suitor who would have obtained a decree in his favour from a previous arbitrator will feel himself wronged, and nothing but discontent can follow." In consequence of these objections (as prophecies since fulfilled to the letter) clauses were introduced by the Board of Trade, with the advice of the law officers of the Crown, into a bill then passing through Parliament, and which has since become law as the Life Assurance Companies Amendment Act, 1872, to enable the Court of Chancery to deal with compound companies like the European, and render Arbitration Bills unnecessary. When these clauses had become part of a Government measure it was not surprising that it was expected that they would supersede the Arbitration Bill, and that no further attempt was made to improve the latter by at least introducing a provision to give the suitor a limited right of appeal. I have reason to think that in the early part of the proceedings Lord Westbury would not have objected to some such provision, but it would have been a concession, and was not volunteered. It would, moreover, have greatly altered the character of the measure, which would have become little more than one to erect an additional Vice-Chancellor's Court to meet an extraordinary press of business. That the private Arbitration Bill and the public bill to render Arbitration Bills unnecessary should have passed the Upper House on consecutive nights might have been thought incredible. We have now seen the result, but I cannot doubt that if the liquidation had been allowed to proceed either under the original bill approved by the Vice-Chancellor, or under the Amendment Act of 1872, it would by this time have been far advanced towards completion, and an immense and profitless expenditure would have been avoided. What is of still greater importance, instead of the "mere chaos and confusion" into which the subject has fallen, we should have had a continuous and orderly series of decisions of the Court of Appeal, consistent in themselves and settling for the future the principles upon which such liquidations are to be conducted. It now remains to be seen whether any remedy will be proposed in the ensuing session of Parliament. Should the liquidation remain in the hands of the Lord Justice—and no abler hands could be found to direct it—it would not seem unreasonable that, with his consent, an Amendment Bill should be introduced giving a limited right of appeal for the very purpose of clearing and consolidating the law. Should he not propose to retain it, the Arbitration Court might be reduced to more modest dimensions as a mere additional Vice-Chancellor's Court, or the whole proceedings transferred back to the Court from which they were taken. In any case there need be no interruption to the work now in progress, and the officers of the Arbitration Court might become those of the new tribunal, and we need not have the scandal of seeing a new set of men paid to learn a lesson which had been previously mastered by others. There is another even more important cognate question upon which legislation is required, and that is how to prevent liquidations of this nature in future. They are wholly unsuited to the settlement of the affairs of an insurance office, unless it has reached the very depths of insolvency, and the true remedy is the reduction of the contracts and the reconstruction of the office, or the transfer of its business to another. This is far from impossible, and the principle is already recognized in the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, but in terms far too general to have any practical effect. The true application of the principle has, moreover, been only lately recognized even by actuaries. It is in the place of a dividend in cash, to give a reduced insurance for the sum provided in each case by the dividend, and also such an insurance as the premiums payable would provide at the advanced ages, and to reduce every policy to the addition of these two sums. If the calculations which gave effect to such a scheme were made upon sound principles, there would be little, if any, inducement to the more recent insurers to leave an office thus restored to a thoroughly safe footing, while the older insurers would be placed in a far better position, and there would be few, if any, cases of real hardship. Shareholders liable for a deficiency could not escape from their responsibilities, but even for them a very considerable relief might be provided. Such a measure as this might with advantage occupy the attention of the Board of Trade, whose authorities must be well aware of the dangers which beset the weaker offices—dangers which the events of every year prove to be intensified by the imperfect provisions of the Act of 1870."

The following is from a Times leader commenting upon this letter:—"In time to come, when the judicial system of this country has been brought into harmony with the dictates of plain good sense, the history of the European Assurance Arbitration will be regarded with amazement. Already the perpetration of a series of melancholy blunders has to be confessed, and at every turning-point in the process a fresh controversy arises. The mischief is, indeed, irreparable in the case of most of the unfortunate persons who were interested in the liquidation of the European Society. Hardly any exertion of legislative capacity, of judicial acumen, or of practical wisdom could now avail to improve their condition. But, at all events, the lessons of this painful experience may be condensed and made ready for future use. If they can be employed to mitigate the evils that were inflicted upon innocent persons by the original breakdown of our judicial arrangements, and by the mistakes made in the attempt to devise a makeshift, we shall be well pleased; but we confess we are not confident that a great deal can be done, either by Parliament or by any other power. The Arbitration, like everything else, must come to an end some time or other, and after a while its distressing incidents, its vexatious delays, and its disturbing vicissitudes will be forgotten; but it does not appear to be within the scope even of an omnipotent Legislature or of an infallible tribunal to accomplish what time alone can effectually achieve. By the time the affairs of the European Society were recognized to be so hopelessly involved that liquidation was inevitable, and the powers of the Court of Chancery were seen to be inadequate for the task, the embarrassments of the Albert Association had already been submitted to an arbitrator, and Lord Cairns was energetically carrying through the toilsome business of unravelling hundreds of intricate and disputed contracts. Arbitration, therefore, suggested itself to many people as the simple, swift, and efficient solution of the difficulty. Others foretold that the working of the Arbitrator's Court might produce results not so satisfactory to the suitors as were then anticipated, and an effort was made to substitute for the suggested arbitration a bill enlarging the powers of the Vice-Chancellor's Court and providing an appeal. This bill was promoted by the persons who were at that time intrusted with the liquidation, but there was a general feeling that any settlement, provided it was rapid and final, was better than the misery of prolonged suspense. The select committee of the House of Commons was unanimous in approving the bill which set up the Court of Arbitration, while the measure supported by those in charge of the liquidation was rejected, as Mr Bunyon reminded us, "without a witness being heard in its favour." Accordingly, the business of unravelling the intricacies of the European Society was given over to Lord Westbury with the same ample and irresponsible powers that Lord Cairns had received in the case of the Albert Office. In neither was an appeal provided, though a divergence of opinion between two Judges so different in character was seen from the outset to be probable. The natural result was that the suitors in both arbitrations became discontented; the shareholders on whom Lord Westbury's decisions in the case of the European Society bore heavily, appealed to the different measure which Lord Cairns was meting out to the shareholders of the companies that had been amalgamated with the Albert, while the policy-holders with whom Lord Cairns dealt, were envious of the more fortunate lot of those who came under the jurisdiction of Lord Westbury. Then came another turn of the wheel. Lord Westbury died, and was succeeded by Lord Romilly, who at first was inclined to follow the principles laid down by his predecessor, but who soon adopted the very different conception of the law on which Lord Cairns had acted. There was nothing to bind Lord Romilly to follow Lord Westbury's judgment more than that of Lord Cairns, and he soon broke away from the authority of the former. As if the scandal of the two co-ordinate tribunals deciding similar cases in different ways were not enough, we saw two successive arbitrators dealing with successive portions of the same proceeding upon different principles. The death of Lord Romilly has involved a further change, the effect of which upon the parties to this long and barren litigation can at present only be guessed at. Meanwhile, the utmost confusion and discontent are rife among the persons concerned in those proceedings. Suitors who have been disappointed by the decision of one arbitrator are tempted to agitate for a re-opening of settled questions by looking at the law laid down in some case analogous to their own by another arbitrator. If they have been unsuccessful in making their views prevail with Lord Westbury or Lord Romilly, they think, perhaps, that Lord Justice James, or somebody else who may succeed him, will do them fuller justice. This unsettled state of opinion is destructive, we need scarcely say, of all the public benefit that legal tribunals are intended to bring the community; nor is it much more consistent with the individual interests of the litigants. It has always been held to be for the advantage of the State that there should be an end of lawsuits, and this desirable finality relates not only to the time that is wasted and the passions that are roused in the course of litigation, but to the settlement of legal principles. But regrets are now unprofitable. With the appointment of Lord Justice James the policyholders and shareholders of the European and its amalgamated companies have every reason to be content, provided only they can be left to him. But, if it remain possible to reopen questions that have been apparently closed, the labour of the ablest lawyers will be thrown away, suitors will continue to look for changes in their fortunes, and the law will elude definition. The suggestion that a limited right of appeal might be provided by a short Act of Parliament does not appear open to objection if Lord Justice James is willing to retain charge of the business. If not, and if the Amendment Act of 1872 is a sound working measure, the Court of Chancery ought to be able to finish the work which it was formerly compelled to decline. But nothing that is now to be done can repair the waste of time and money, or compensate the sufferings of innocent litigants, or obliterate the discredit of a judicial conflict without an effective solution.

FRAUDS UNDER THE BANKRUPTCY ACT 1869.—The Law Times says:—"A solicitor, who has had a large experience of the working of the Bankruptcy Acts of 1849, 1861, and 1869, assures us that he is confirmed in his opinion by officials in the Bankruptcy Court and others fully competent to form an opinion that the percentage of cases under the last-named Act, which are more or less tainted with fraud, is far in excess of the number of similar cases under the two previous Acts, and moreover, so unsatisfactory does he consider the working of the present Act to be, that in the interests of creditors he would far sooner go back to the Act of 1849 and revive the office of official assignee. Save in the case of those who are dependent upon bankruptcy business alone for a livelihood, the present Act seems condemned on all sides.

FACULTY OF ACTUARIES IN SCOTLAND.—The annual general meeting of the Faculty was held in the Standard Assurance Office on Wednesday, Mr Spencer C. Thompson in the chair. A highly satisfactory report by the Council on the proceedings of the past year was read, in which it was stated that the membership consisted of 8 honorary fellows, 59 fellows, and 12 associates; that, of the 33 candidates for examination last April, 19 were passed through the several stages; and that the matriculated students now numbered 145. Messrs. Samuel Raleigh and A. H. Turnbull were elected to fill the vacancies in the council.

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.—The Lord Chancellor has appointed the Right Hon. Sir William Milbourne James, one of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, to be arbitrator under the European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts, 1872 and 1873. The appointment of so able and astute a lawyer for the performance of the many onerous duties in connection with the arbitration of cases constantly arising under the above Acts, reflects as much credit upon the judiciousness of the selection as it does honour to the right hon. gentleman appointed, and will inspire confidence amongst the sufferers by this disastrous failure. The Law Times, referring to the appointment, says:—"It is generally understood that the new arbitrator will not at present enter upon the litigating part of the work, but will merely carry on the administrative portion, until an application has been made to Parliament to reconstitute the arbitration, with a view to allowing appeals from the arbitrator. At present the arbitrator is omnipotent, having power to settle matters "not only in accordance with the legal and equitable rights of the parties as recognized in the courts of law or equity, but on such terms and in such manner in all respects as he in his absolute and unfettered discretion thinks most fit, equitable, and expedient, and as fully and effectively as could be done by Act of Parliament. This uncontrolled power in the hands of Lord Cairns led to a speedy and satisfactory settlement of the affairs of the Albert Assurance Company. But in the case of the European Assurance Company, the unfortunate deaths of Lords Westbury and Romilly, and the fact that some of their decisions are conflicting, have led many to think it advisable that an opportunity of appealing should be established."

The Master of the Rolls has made an order to wind up the People's Coal and Colliery Company (Limited), and has made Mr John Smith, of the firm of Harding, Whinney, and Co., the official liquidator.

Mr John Peter Gassiot has retired from the board of direction of the London and Westminster Bank.

The office of Secretary of the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, vacated by the recent death of Sir Samuel Bignold, has been filled by the appointment of his son, Mr Chas. Edward Bignold, who was on Tuesday elected sole secretary of the society.

Vice-Chancellor Bacon has granted a sequestration against the South Metropolitan Tramway Company for breach of an injunction restraining them from so conducting their business as to cause a nuisance to the occupant of the Manor House, Brixton.

FAILURE OF A LAW FIRM.—On Monday an advertisement appeared in the newspapers calling a meeting of the creditors of Messrs Scarth and Scott, W.S., Leith. As the firm was an old-established one, standing high in public estimation, the circumstance took people by surprise. Much sympathy was felt for the partners of the firm, especially the senior one, Mr Scarth, who is far advanced in life. Strange rumours were afloat regarding the causes of the failure. It is supposed the liabilities are considerable—some say as much as £60,000. Fears are entertained that not a few clients and aged people, whose business was in the hands of Messrs Scarth and Scott, will lose heavily.—Edinburgh Daily Review.

The suspension of the Ohno Bank, the second in importance of the native banking establishments of Japan, has been announced. The unsecured liabilities amount, it is said, to about a million and a half of dollars, the secured being little short of ten millions.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand.

The Accountant.

FEBRUARY 6, 1875.

The discussion on the auditing of accounts which has been commenced in our colums will, we trust, lead to the remedying of a very serious and growing evil. Commercial integrity is limited and fenced in by so many "customs of trade" and secret understandings, that it has come to mean something very different from what the plain significance of the words would imply. Recent polemical discussions have taught us all something about the way in which casuists interpret such terms as "morality" and "conscience." But all have agreed in this: that a man who refers anything to the decision of his conscience or the precepts of morality, uses those words to express some higher authority than mere human laws, and is to be considered, so far as he is guided by them, as a good and upright, though possibly a mistaken man. But the adjective "commercial" is more qualifying even than adjectives generally are, and not only modifies, but actually changes the sense of the word with which it is united. Commercial morality and commercial honour are fine-sounding terms; too often in the present day they are like the tale,

> "Told by an idiot full of sound and fury,"
> "Signifying nothing."

There is perhaps scarcely anything more deceptive than a balance sheet, except to really practised eyes. The way in which items appear apparently twice over, the very multitude of the figures confuse an ordinary mind. The innocent shareholder gazes in amazement at the report of the company in which he has invested his money, and probably reads no more than the statement of the dividend, or of the absence of a dividend, and the dignified sentence in which the auditors certify their examination of the company's accounts, and testify to their correctness. The auditors are probably men of respectability and high standing, and he is satisfied with the fact that their names are appended to the balance-sheet. What their examination has been, and to what they really testify, he perhaps scarcely knows. They may have made the searching investigation which it was their duty to make; they may have vigorously disallowed every payment for which a voucher was not produced; they may have estimated each asset at its real and not its nominal value, or they may have gone through their task in a perfunctory manner. Probably all has been regularly done. But the auditor can only certify to the correctness of the balance-sheet, as it is made out. To give a true statement of the affairs of the company they ought not merely to be audited, but to be actually sifted and set out by an independent and skilful accountant.

For the true method of auditing we can only say, that the more the subject is discussed in our columns, the more likely will be the arrival at some accurate decision. The practice widely differs, and possibly the reputation of the auditor may safely be taken as a guarantee for the thoroughness of his system. Directors of companies are generally chosen on the "lucus a non lucendo" principle, and their knowledge of the affairs of their company varies frequently in an inverse ratio with their confident assurance of its stability. There is one master spirit, be he secretary or managing director, to whom every particle of the concern is familiar, and in whose hands his nominal superiors are mere children. Too often the auditors are as simple as the directors, and are thus made the medium of still further deception. But a strong and resolute man can here be of immense service. If he considers himself, as he, in fact, is, the delegate of the shareholders, chosen to protect them and to act entirely in their interests, if he looks upon officials as his natural enemies and pursues his task of investigation with fearless thoroughness, no harm can arise. Possibly reports would be less pleasant reading, and general meetings less peacefully serene; but many insolvent companies would be exposed before they had time to do much mischief, and investors, apart from pecuniary saving, would be more at ease in their mind in knowing the worst at once, and have the satisfaction of reflecting that there had been no opportunities for crafty knaves to reap a harvest by reading between the lines of an apparently cheering balance-sheet.

There is another series of cases in which, after all, auditing is still more at fault than in the instances to which we have alluded. We mean in the accounts of hospitals and other charities. A man who invests his capital in financial companies, or foreign mines, is presumed to have the design of increasing his income, and must be supposed to know the risk he runs of receiving nothing in return for his money, except the benevolent one of having contributed to the maintenance in luxury of a class of men who could best benefit the world by quitting it. Such a man must take the consequence of his action. The charitable donor is really to be condoled with, who finds that his money is misapplied. And, unfortunately, charitable accounts receive far less scrutiny than they deserve. The auditing is too often confided to some liberal donor, who appreciates the "brief authority" comprised in the name. The spirit of charity has so thoroughly permeated his mind, that he "thinketh no evil" of the figures that are laid before him; he is afraid to make investigation, and he finally appends his name to a balance-sheet in which any practised person would find much to which to object. There can surely be no graver crime than to misapply the funds of benevolence, whether incapacity or a worse motive be the cause. The best security is unquestionably found in proper auditing. And there is a curious feeling, as the Hospital Sunday Committee can tell us, on the part of many charities against allowing any investigation into their affairs. This is strangely blind. Let the accounts of all charities be audited by a professed accountant, and those that were well managed would soon reap the benefit. His certificate would do more to promote a wise distribution of charity than any amount of sensational advertisements and piteous appeals for help. Many are now deterred from giving by the scandals of charity administration. Here is the remedy. Restore confidence, and the stream of giving will at once flow. There are many men who would give their professional services. Only let it be understood that the task of auditing is not the mere pastime of amateur accountants, but the serious work of men whose business it is to detect errors in accounts and test the proverbial fallaciousness of figures; and the duty would be placed in the proper hands. No better reform can be taken up by our charity organizers.

It is satisfactory to think that the Lords Justices have finally settled the law as to the discharge of sureties in all cases under the Bankruptcy Act. That the discharge in bankruptcy of a principal, does not discharge a surety has long been law, and though the case has not been formally decided in Bankruptcy, it has been held that in the case of liquidation, the surety still remains liable to the holder of the security for any balance due. The only question remaining for decision was as to the result of accepting a composition. There is a case now some fifty years old of Lewis v. Jones in the fourth volume of Barnewall and Creswell's reports, which decides that a creditor who has released the debtor, in consideration of a composition, loses his right of action against the surety. This decision proceeds in the well-known principle of law that where the position of a surety is altered by the act of the creditor, his liability at once ceases. Lord Justice James in giving judgment referred to this doctrine, but distinguishes such a case from those arising under the Bankruptcy Act by saying that the proceedings were governed by the desire of the majority of creditors, and that whether the holder of the bill voted or not he would still be bound. But it is conceivable that the statutory majority might only be obtained by the vote of such a creditor, and that he might be induced to accept a smaller composition from the knowlege that any balance must be paid him by the surety. Again is a surety, strictly speaking, a person "jointly bound with the debtor" so as to be within the 49th and 50th Sections of the Act. The decision is, doubtless, good law, but it certainly seems to confirm the theory which is now universally held, that the Act of 1869 opened the door to a vast amount of fraud.

The letter of J. H. C., though correct in saying that a trustee cannot himself examine a bankrupt on oath requires a little comment. The writer of the article is however right, though his language is a little liable to misconstruction. The entire sentence runs as follows:— The Registrars, bearing in mind that the trustee can always demand the attendance of the bankrupt, and examine him on oath, appear to regard such passing as immaterial. This refers obviously to the power given to the trustee to bring the bankrupt before the Court for examination, and would, we imagine, be so regarded by most persons. But we cannot understand the last part of our correspondent's letter. Surely all proofs of debts must be verified by affidavit made before some commissioner, and not by oath to the trustee. And the office of commissioner would not empower him to examine any human being on oath. A commissioner's duties are simply to swear a witness to the truth of his affidavit, and sign what is technically called the "jurat." Anything beyond this would be utterly ultra vires.

A review of bankruptcy legislation from the pen of Mr. George Wreford, of the Department of the Comptroller in Bankruptcy, will shortly be published. The pamphlet is dedicated by permission to the Right Hon. Sir Stafford Northcote, as President of the Exeter Chamber of Commerce.

The Scottish Widows' Fund and Edinburgh Life Assurance Companies, being assessed for inhabited house duty, sought to bar the claim by urging that their premises were used for trade purposes—the servants residing in them being there only to protect them. The Commissioners refused to entertain this appeal, and the companies having taken the case for opinion to the Court of Session, the Court has found the companies liable in assessment, holding that they are not engaged in trade within the meaning of the Act.

Circumstances alter cases, and no two trusteeships are exactly alike, but the general principles are identical, and the necessity for a practical accountant is daily proved. And when we speak of a practical accountant we no not mean simply a man who is versed in the question of debit and credit, but one who is well acquainted with trade customs, &c., which vary with every trade and every country. Considering that England boasts of her commercial supremacy, that her business relations extend over the major part of the habitable globe, and that scarcely one business estate out of twenty is without some amount of foreign transactions—we, as taking a very high view of the profession of accountant, would strongly and earnestly urge upon all its members the desirability of making modern languages, and the commercial laws and customs of the leading nations, their especial study. The position of an accountant has never been clearly defined. So far as Bankruptcy laws are concerned, we will endeavour to give our view of that position. Over and above the qualifications as to questions of account, he should be well versed in the various English and foreign trade customs and usages, and should make himself conversant with all the important decisions, thus constituting himself not a competitor of, but an adjunct to the legal profession. The professions should always run parallel and never "collide." They are or should be entirely distinct. Figures and facts are accountant's work, and if they go beyond this, both they, and their clients are likely to suffer for their temerity. The interpretation and application of the laws belong to the sister profession. The important point to trustees is the question of remuneration. This must be approached with much caution, for it is one of the most difficult questions to deal with. Various principles have been tried, such as a percentage on the liabilities and assets, fluctuating according to the magnitude of both, or either, but we believe the result of the application of this principle, although perhaps satisfactory in isolated instances, has not proved so when distributed over a series of cases. The amount of the liabilities is no certain guide—claims may be put in which the trustee feels bound to contest, and the legal disposal of which may entail a serious loss of time. On the other hand an estate may show a large amount of paper assets, and nothwithstanding the trustees exertions he may succeed in getting in but a small portion, and that at a heavy cost only. In many instances trustees have to run personal risks, in order to endeavour to get in assets, in which, if unsuccessful, the costs of the other side are payable out of the trustees own pocket if no estate is available —(see re Angerstein, also ex parte Villars re Rogers, and other cases)—and it would be unreasonable to deal with such cases as a question of percentage only. On the other hand, where no disputed claims exist and the assets come in readily, a small percentage would fairly remunerate the trustee for his services. We, however, are strongly of opinion that the fairest way both to the trustee and to the creditors, until by mutual understanding or an improvement in the law some more defined principle can be arrived at, is to make the time occupied the basis, and leave the rate to the appreciation of the committee of inspection. Trustees do not make the laws, and they are not even consulted in the framing of them; it is therefore hardly fair to throw all the responsibilities on a trustee, and then to base his remuneration on the unsatisfactory result. Trustees have of late been much abused, but one fact is generally forgotten, and that is that although the trustee has all the risk, responsibility, and trouble, of realising the estate, he is not entitled to any remuneration until all prior costs are paid, and therefore, even if there is an estate, he has to take his chance of being paid for his trouble. In fixing the percentage of profit in any business, the average of risk and bad debt must be taken into account, and professional trustees cannot deviate from this principle, which is too sound to be ignored. At the same time, it would be greatly to the advantage of all parties if some fair principle of remuneration could be arrived at and finally determined, in order that the present uncertainty may cease. H. B., (London).

AUDITORS AND AUDITING.

A correspondent writes to us as follows:—"I am glad to observe that this subject has been taken up by a writer in the Accountant, who promises two more articles thereon. I am sure it is one which demands attention, with the view to defining what the duties of an auditor really are, and the value of the service, when properly rendered. It would be well for Accountants' Societies generally to move in this matter, as also in that of accountants' charges, which like the duties of an auditor, require to be defined with the object of securing uniformity. I believe no dozen men would have the same view as to the said duties; nor do directors, or the public, appreciate as they ought, the immense value of them, if honestly performed. Many consider an audit has nothing more in it than certifying to the agreement of balances in a balance-sheet with those in the ledgers from which they are taken; and that cash at the bankers is stated conformably with the pass book, (cash in hand being in some cases absolutely ignored). An auditors' duties are much more important, and should embrace his right to have the accounts kept on such a system that he can really get at the essence of affairs; and that his supervision should extend throughout a year, and not merely at the end of it. His signature to a balance-sheet then would mean something, and responsibility in the shape of a guarantee, would rest upon him towards the shareholders, for which fees should be paid equivalent. See the various forms of certifying accounts, daily appearing on balance-sheets, and you at once detect how very vague are the views of the different parties signing the accounts on the subject. At any rate, whether I take a wrong view of the matter or not, it is certainly one which must sooner or later be discussed. The public as well as the profession (which would gain also in status very considerably), would be gainers by the duties of an auditor being properly understood, defined, and performed as a bona fide service, instead of, as it appears to be a mere sham, and as fees paid and various forms of certifying prove it to be at present."

Our correspondent adds:—"I am glad also to notice an article in the Accountant of 2nd inst., on those who style themselves accountants, professing at the same time to be Jacks-of-all-trades, and touters accordingly. What we want is a feeling of esprit de corps, in the profession, and a determination on the part of its respectable members to set their faces against anything of the sort. Touting should be denounced, and those descending to it should be shown up. I am in hopes that the profession of a P. A., may some day be looked upon as the most honorable of honorable callings.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—The letter of your correspondent "B. J.," appearing in your issue of 23d ult., has much interested me. He is certainly not devoid of vigour, and would probably prove a doughty opponent in a tilt. It seems to me, however, that he would have done better to point out the particular defects of which he complains, rather than have gone in for sweeping changes. It would prove of little advantage to do away with the bankruptcy section of the Act, without at the same time so ameliorating the defects of the liquidation and composition clauses as well as the Debtors Act, so as to make them a perfect substitute for bankruptcy. On many points I agree with him. A bankrupt should not per se be regarded as a criminal. There are in modern trade many causes which might bring the most honest and industrious man to grief; and where a man's failure (and consequent deficiencies) is proved by him to be bona fide, the law should endorse the general feeling of creditors (who, as a rule, are far from hard upon their debtors), and leave the insolvent free to begin the world again. "B. J." is, however, right in saying that at present (like railway legislation, which has run from one extreme to the other) "creditors may be thankful if they escape the condemnation which formerly awaited the bankrupt." Theoretically, too, "B. J." is right in saying that where the debtor is not able to pay his creditors 20s. in the pound the estate should belong to his creditor, or rather to his creditors, if he have more than one; but in practice I do not agree with him that "it is contrary to all true principles of statesmanship and legislation for any State, by its own action and through the instrumentality of the law, to meddle with the matter unless," &c. "B. J.'s" theory is as good, theoretically, as that of a friend of mine who asserts that until we dispense with kings, priests, and lawyers, the world will not be happy; but my friend qualifies his remark by adding, that this can only happen when every man is his own king, his own priest, and his own lawyer, which will happen when the millenium arrives. "B. J," however, forgets that creditors sometimes require protection against each other. It is a sad thing to say, but nevertheless true, that there is about as much cohesion among a body of creditors, as among a parcel of jack tars—each tries to take care of himself, and will follow the dictates of human nature in that respect unless the law intervenes and prevents him from taking a preference over his co-sufferers. Why should not the continental principle be adopted? Compel a man to keep books, take out an annual statement of his position, and as soon as he finds himself deficient, render it obligatory on him to deposit a statement of his position at the Court, not necessarily with a view to bankruptcy, but in order that in the event of a subsequent adjudication the real commencement of his deficiency may be verified. "B. J." appears to be a ready writer, troubled only with a too great prodigality of ideas. Let him do violence to his feelings, and, by degrees, impart to his colleagues, through your columns, the benefit thereof. I for one will promise to read such communications with attention and gratitude.—Yours truly,

EXPERT COMPTABLE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—In the article on "Bankruptcy Laws—No. 4," the writer says that the trustee can always demand the bankrupt's attendance, "and, if necessary, examine him on oath." I venture to submit that the statement which I have italicized is incorrect, and that a trustee has only power to administer oaths in connection with proof of debt (B. Act 1869, Sec. 25). Anything more than this would render a trustee liable to criminal proceedings, unless, of course, he held some authority independent of the above Act, such as being a solicitor who was also a commissioner, &c. I held a different opinion once, and my solicitors submitted a case for opinion of counsel, who enunciated the views expressed in this letter.—

Yours truly,

J. H. C., London.

SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN EDINBURGH.—At the annual general meeting of this society, held on Wednesday, the following gentlemen were elected office-bearers for the ensuing year:—President—Mr. C. M. Barstow. Members of Council—Messrs. D. S. Peddie, J. M. Macandrew, Charles Pearson, Thomas Martin, Thos. Scott, Adam Gillies Smith, Kenneth M'Kenzie, and F. H. Carter. Examiners—Messrs. George Auldjo Jamieson, Samuel Raleigh, and William Wood. Secretary—Mr Jas. Howden. Treasurer—Mr. A. W. Robertson. Auditor—Mr David Pearson. Law Agent—Mr. J. Clerk Brodie, W.S. The society when electing Mr. Barstow as President, requested him to sit for his portrait as an expression of the esteem in which he was held by them, and their appreciation of the services rendered by him as President during the last six years.

Vice-Chancellor Bacon will for the future take opposed petitions every Saturday after the unopposed petitions, instead of on alternate Saturdays, as has been his practice hitherto.

Parliament was opened yesterday (Friday) by Commission.

COURT OF CHANCERY, LINCOLN'S INN.

January 29.

EX PARTE JACOBS, IN RE JACOBS.—In this case a question of considerable general importance with regard to the construction of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, was raised, a question, too, upon which there have been conflicting decisions in the Courts of Common Law and Equity. It is well settled that the discharge in bankruptcy of a principal debtor does not operate to discharge his surety, and in the recent case of "Ellis v. Wilmot" the Court of Exchequer held that the discharge of a principal debtor in liquidation proceedings under sec. 125 of the Act does not release his surety. But the further question remained, whether, when the creditors of a debtor resolve, under sec. 126 of the Act, to accept a composition in satisfaction of their debts, the rights of the creditors against sureties are thereby put an end to. In "Wilson v. Lloyd" Vice-Chancellor Bacon decided that the acceptance of a composition from the principal debtor released the surety; but in the later case of "Mograth v. Gray" the Court of Common Pleas arrived at an opposite conclusion. In the present case the same question arose under the following circumstances:—An appeal was brought by Mr Sidney Jacobs, of Camberwell New-road, from an adjudication of bankruptcy made against him on the 17th of September last by Mr Registrar Spring Rice, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. The petitioning creditor was Mr James Martin, of Epsom, a trainer of racehorses. Martin was the holder for value of a bill of exchange for £100, dated the 13th of April, 1874, which had been drawn by Jacobs upon, and accepted by, one Samuel Phillips, and was payable two months after date. Phillips was a trimming manufacturer, carrying on business in Ely-place as S. Phillips and Co. On the 1st of June, 1874, he filed a liquidation petition. The first meeting of the creditors was held on the 30th of June. Martin, who was inserted in Phillips's statement as a creditor in respect of the bill of exchange, and who had made an affidavit on the 29th of June to prove his debt, attended the meeting by his solicitor as his proxy. The meeting was adjourned to the 14th of July, Martin's solicitor voting for the adjournment. On the 14th of July the creditors resolved by the proper statutory majority to accept a composition of 5s in the pound "in satisfaction of the debts due to them from Phillips." Martin's solicitor on this occasion voted against the composition. The resolution was duly confirmed at the second meeting on the 24th of July, and was afterwards registered. Martin's solicitor voted on his behalf in favour of the confirmation, but the majority would have been sufficient independently of his vote. Martin afterwards filed a petition in bankruptcy against Jacobs as the drawer of the bill, upon which petition the adjudication now appealed from was made. The objection to it was that Martin had, by reason of what he had done under Phillips's petition, discharged Jacobs, the drawer of the bill. Secs. 49 and 50 of the Act provide that an order of discharge in bankruptcy shall discharge the bankrupt from all debts provable in the bankruptcy, with certain specified exceptions, but shall not release any person who at the date of the order of adjudication was jointly bound with him. Sec. 125 provides that, with certain modifications, all the provisions of the Act shall, so far as they are applicable, apply to the case of a liquidation by arrangement in the same manner as if the word "bankrupt" included a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation, and the word "bankruptcy" included liquidation by arrangement. One of the modifications referred to relates to the mode in which an order of discharge is to be granted. Section 126 provides that "the creditors of a debtor unable to pay his debts may, without any proceedings in bankruptcy, by an extraordinary resolution resolve that a composition shall be accepted in satisfaction of the debts due to them from the debtor," and that "the provisions of a composition accepted by an extraordinary resolution shall be binding on all the creditors whose names and addresses, and the amount of the debts due to whom, are shown in the statement of the debtor." The appeal was argued on the 15th January, and this morning the judgment of the Court (which had been prepared by Lord Justice Mellish) was read by Lord Justice James. Mr De Ge

Q.C., Mr Winslow, Q.C., and Mr E. C. Willis were for the appellant; Mr Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr Lamaison, of the Common Law Bar, were for Mr Martin. Lord Justice James, after stating the facts and referring to "Wilson v. Lloyd" and "Megrath v. Gray," said—We entirely agree in the decision of the Court of Common Pleas and the reasons they have given for it. We think that the discharge of a debtor under a liquidation or a composition is really a discharge in bankruptcy by operation of law. When a creditor voluntarily agrees to a composition by deed or agreement with the acceptor of a bill, it is by his act alone that the acceptor is discharged, and the position of the drawer altered. When, however, a debtor summons his creditors under the 125th and 126th section of the Bankruptcy Act, the proper majority of the creditors have power to assent to the terms on which the debtor is to be discharged, whether the creditor who is the holder of the bill chooses to attend or not, or chooses to vote or not. The consequence of deciding that the holder of a bill could not vote at a meeting of the acceptor's creditors without discharging the drawer would be that in many cases a great number, and in some cases the majority, of the creditors could not vote at the meeting. On the other hand, if resolutions for liquidation by arrangement or for composition were to contain a reservation of remedies by the creditors against any other person than the debtor, the consequence would be that the debtor would not, either by arrangement or by composition, be completely discharged from any of those of his debts in respect of which the creditors had a remedy against any other person. This, we think, would be contrary to the intention of the Act. On the whole we are of opinion that the order of the Registrar must be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed.

In re the International Life Assurance Society.—In the winding-up of this society an arrangement was made that the Prudential Assurance Company should assume the liabilities of the society in consideration of a payment of £329,000 out of the society's assets, which was by a subsequent agreement reduced to £303,000. The question now raised, by way of appeal from an order recently made by Vice-Chancellor Malins, was, whether the Prudential Assurance Company were entitled to have two sums of £13,322 and £4,069, raised by means of calls upon the shareholders of the International in excess of the nominal amount of their shares. The sum of £13,322 represented deductions in respect of costs which had been made from a sum of £20,000 deposited in America by the International as a security for the fulfilment of their policy contracts there, and it was part of the arrangements that this £20,000 was to be handed over to the Prudential on their assuming the American liabilities of the International. The £4,069 also related to the American policies. The Vice-Chancellor decided this question in favour of the Prudential Company. The International shareholders appealed. Their Lordships held that the Prudential Company were entitled to be paid these two sums out of the assets of the International, but not to have any calls made on the shareholders beyond the nominal amount of the shares. They varied the Vice-Chancellor's order accordingly.

A Scotch Sheriff on Bankruptcy Laws.—In the Sheriff Court, Aberdeen, on Saturday, Sheriff Dove Wilson is reported to have adverted to the serious defects of the law he was administering, saying that it was extraordinary that imprisonment for debt should still exist in Scotland when it had been abolished in England and Ireland and most other civilised countries. Again there was one law for the bankrupt on the larger scale and another for the bankrupt on the smaller. The large trader can always obtain, after a certain time, a discharge from the court; but for the smaller class of bankrupts, with nothing but a few small debts, or perhaps, as in this case, a single creditor, the benefits of the bankruptcy laws are absolutely closed.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURT, Lincoln's-inn, February 1.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. Bacon.)

Re Caerphilly Colliery Company (Limited).—This was a petition for winding up the above-named company. The Company was established in 1869, with a capital of £20,000, divided into 4,000 shares of £5 each. In 1871 the company raised a sum of £3,500 by an issue of debenture bonds. In the year 1872, however, the company got into difficulties, and on the 20th of March, 1873, a special resolution was passed for winding up voluntarily; at the same meeting Mr Maclure, of London, and Mr Schofield, of Huddersfield, were appointed liquidators. The colliery which the company was established to work, and which was by the debenture bonds mortgaged to the bondholders, was sold by the liquidators, and realized £5,000. Some of the bondholders now presented a petition alleging that this £5,000 had been improperly applied by Mr Maclure, and that their rights would be prejudiced if the voluntary winding up were continued, and praying for a winding-up order by the Court. The Vice-Chancellor, while acquitting Mr Schofield from any suggestion of improper conduct held that the conduct of Mr Maclure in the matters connected with the liquidation had been such as the Court could not be expected to countenance, and that there was abundant evidence to show that the continuation of the voluntary winding up would be prejudicial to the petitioners. He therefore made the usual order for winding up by the Court.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge at Lincoln's Inn.)

In Re C. Bedell.—In this case, coming on by way of appeal from Mr. Registrar Keene, the following important question arose:—Heading and Bedell had been in partnership, and on the retirement of the latter he received a bond to secure the repayment of his capital which remained in the business. In 1861 Bedell made an arrangement, by which he agreed to pay all his creditors in full, by instalments extending over several years, but in 1867, having again fallen into difficulties an arrangement was made with all his creditors, who agreed to take 10s. in the pound. Heading was party to this agreement, and consented to postpone the payment of his debt, which was estimated at £6,500, for the period of 10 years, Bedell, on his part, covenanting to pay off the debt by certain quarterly instalments extending over the same period. The deed, which was intended to give effect to this agreement, provided "that in case the debtor should become bankrupt, or liquidate his estate," the entire debt of £6,500 should revive and become payable; but the provision immediately following declared that in no case should more than one half, namely, £3,250, be recoverable in any action or proceeding whatever. Bedell filed his petition for liquidation in October, 1874, and at the first meeting Heading tendered a proof for £6,500, which Mr. Registrar Keene had reduced to one half, deducting from that one half the sum of £1,848, which Bedell had paid in instalments. Mr Robson, in support of the appeal, argued that the arrangement was made with the full consent of all the parties; that the postponement of Mr Heading's claim had been beneficial to the creditors, who otherwise would not have received their 10s. in the £, and that under the circumstances Heading was entitled to prove for the full amount of his debt, in the event which had now happened, viz., the liquidation of the debtor's estate. Mr De Gex, with whom was Mr Finlay Knight, insisted that the provision with regard to the revival of the original debt was contrary to the policy of the Bankrupt laws, because he gave a preference to this particular creditor, and cited re Murphy, 1 Schoales and Lefroy. Mr Registrar Roche said that no rule was clearer than this, that when an arrangement was made with creditors there must be perfect equality. In the present instance, if the provision in the deed was held to be good, the appellant would receive a dividend of 20s. in the £, and thus have a preference over the other creditors. Besides, the two provisions in the deed were wholly inconsistent, for if the debt revived that right was limited and cut down by the words which followed immediately after, namely, "that in no case should more than one-half be recoverable." He must hold that the arrangement with Heading was contrary to the Bankrupt laws, and affirmed the decision of Mr Registrar Keene. Mr De Gex pressed for costs. The Registrar said no doubt Mr Heading had acted with kindness in postponing his claim, but as the law was against him the strict rule must be enforced; he must pay the costs.

In re James Buchan.—The bankrupt was a merchant carrying on business at 3, Great Winchester-street-buildings as Nankevill and Co.; and this was an application on behalf of the trustee that Messrs Emil Henkin and Henry Sleeman should be ordered to pay to the trustee the sum of £102 8s. 2d., received from the bankrupt on the 1st of September, 1874. Mr Doria was counsel for the applicant, and Mr J. Linklater for the respondents. It would appear that on the 23d of July, 1874, the bankrupt was served with a debtor's summons at the suit of Messrs Henkin and Sleeman, and on the 19th August a petition for adjudication, returnable on the 27th, was left at the bankrupt's office. On the 27th of July Mr A. A. Rumpff, another creditor, caused a debtor's summons to be served upon the bankrupt, who, in order to avoid an adjudication, applied to the solicitor acting for the respondents for time, stating that he was negotiating a sale of his business as a wine merchant, then carried on by him under the style of Nankevill and Co.. The proceedings upon the petition were adjourned from time to time accordingly, and on the 1st of September the bankrupt paid to the respondents' solicitor the sum now claimed, and the petition was thereupon dismissed. On the 26th of October adjudication occurred at the instance of Mr Rumpff, the act of bankruptcy alleged being the non-compliance with the terms of the debtor's summons served on the 24th July. The ground upon which the present application mainly rested was that at the time of the payment being made the respondents had notice of an act of bankruptcy committed by the bankrupt and available for adjudication. His Honour held that sufficient notice had been given to the respondents of the act of bankruptcy, and that the sum claimed having been received subsequently, they were bound to refund it. Application granted.

In re B. F. H. Carew.—This was an application on behalf Mr Benjamin Francis Hallowell Carew that the trustees under a deed of composition should be ordered to pay over the sum of £4,129, being the alleged difference between the amount received under the deed and the amount which they had paid or were entitled to retain. It would seem that in May, 1874, Mr Carew being in temporary pecuniary difficulties filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement. He then owed to secured and unsecured creditors the sum of £22,000, and he was entitled under the provisions of the Carew Estates Act, 1859, to a life interest of very considerable value. On the 23d July a meeting of creditors was held, when a resolution was passed for the acceptance of a composition of 19s. 11d. A deed embodying the resolutions was afterwards prepared, and trustees were appointed thereunder for the purpose of receiving and distributing the composition. The creditors were satisfied, and the trustees admitted that there was a balance of £2,148, not £4,129, in their hands, but desired to be protected before parting with the fund, inasmuch as they had received notice of a large claim from the plaintiff in a Chancery suit of "Pigott v. Stewart." The arguments occupied the whole day, and, at their conclusion, the Court reserved judgment.

In re Joseph Chappell.—Mr Oldman applied under proceedings for liquidation instituted by the debtor that a receiver and manager should be appointed, and for an interim injunction to restrain actions by creditors. The debtor, it appeared, carried on business at 6, Lima-street, Chelsea; 174, Lancaster-road, Notting-hill; and also at Holbeach, in Lincolnshire, as a builder and contractor. The liabilities are stated at £27,904, with assets of very considerable value; the debtor being now engaged in the completion of outstanding contracts. His Honour appointed Mr Edward Hart, accountant, Moorgate-street as receiver and manager, and granted the usual interim injunction.

In re Alfred William Maberly.—The debtor, who is an architect and surveyor, carrying on business in the Strand and at Gloucester, has presented a petition for liquidation, estimating his liabilities at £8,000, and his assets, consisting chiefly of book debts, furniture, &c., at £1,000. Upon the application of Mr. Guscotte (Guscotte, Kelly, and Scott), his Honour appointed Mr Flaxman Haydon, accountant, of 29, New City Chambers, receiver of the estate.

(Before Mr Registrar Keene.)

In re C. W. Spark.—Registration was ordered of a resolution of creditors in favour of liquidation by arrangement. The debtor was a mine proprietor and ironmaster, of 31, Threadneedle-st., and also of West Brompton, and elsewhere. His liabilities amounted to about £20,000, and assets £4,536.

In re Louis Faber.—The debtor, a wine merchant, carrying on business at 23, Rood-lane, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities stated at £15,000, and assets, consisting of book debts, stock-in-trade, furniture, and other items, of the estimated value of £8,650. Mr Finlay Knight, for the debtor and one of the creditors, applied that Mr J. T. Snell, accountant, should be appointed receiver and manager of the estate. It appeared that a creditor had placed an attachment upon the debtor's banking account, and the premises had been closed. As remittances would be forthcoming before the first meeting, it was desired that the business should be continued, and the proposed receiver and manager had undertaken to provide the funds necessary for that purpose. His Honour granted the application.

(Before Mr Registrar Roche.)

In re W. J. Prosser.—At a first meeting under an adjudication obtained against the bankrupt, a wine merchant, of 20, Mark-lane, formerly carrying on business in partnership with John Prosser, under the firm of Prosser, Brothers, proofs of debt amounting to about £9,000 were admitted; and Mr F. B. Smart, accountant, was appointed trustee to act with a committee of inspection. The bankrupt had filed a petition for liquidation, but, the creditors not having passed any resolution, an adjudication followed. A balance-sheet showed liabilities amounting to £34,102, with assets estimated at £13,142.

His Honour was engaged during the greater part of the day in hearing motions under the liquidation of Messrs Grant, Brodie, and Co.

In re Joseph Aspinall.—The debtor, a merchant and financial agent, carrying on business at 33, Gresham-house, presented yesterday a petition for liquidation, with liabilities returned at £41,000, and assets consisting of shares in public companies, furniture, &c., £1,264. Upon the application of Mr W. H. Roberts, and with the concurrence of creditors for £26,500, his Honour appointed Mr Lewis Henry Evans, accountant, Coleman-street, receiver of the debtor's property.

In re W. A. and A. Burr.—This case has been frequently before the court. The bankrupts were metal merchants, carrying on business in Gracechurch-street. Mr Bigham, who appeared for the trustee, asked for a further adjournment of the bankrupts' examination for three months. Mr H. F. Linklater, on behalf of certain opposing creditors, said he desired to examine the bankrupts, but they failed to appear, and a memorandum of non-appearance was recorded. An outline of the bankrupts' accounts has already been published, and discloses liabilities to the amount of £81,986, with assets £5,787.

CARMARTHEN COUNTY COURT.

The Judge of the Carmarthen County Court has recently heard a motion in regard to the bankruptcy of William Burton, involving some rather lively incidents. The facts stated in opening were as follows:—An action was brought in the Pembrokeshire County Court on the 12th December last, in which Miller and Miller were the plaintiffs, and Burton the defendant. Judgment was recovered, and an order made for immediate execution. One of the plaintiffs, accompanied by Mr Thomas, an accountant, proceeded by the next train for Haverfordwest, the residence of Burton, and went to the Registrar's office for the purpose of having the order reissued. The Registrar, who was in his office, declined to reissue on the ground that it was past office hours. Under these circumstances the warrant was left in the hands of Mr H. Davies, who, on the following morning, soon after the opening of the office, got the reissue signed, and levied on the goods of Burton. Mr Lascelles added that he should be able to prove that on the next morning, in consequence of messages sent him from the Registrar's office, Burton went there and filed a petition in bankruptcy, and as a consequence, on the 17th of the same month a restraining order was served on the man in possession, signed by the Registrar. Under these circumstances, he submitted that the petition in bankruptcy could not have been filed in time, and on these grounds he asked that the proceedings in bankruptcy be set aside, or that the trustee in bankruptcy be ordered to pay the amount of the judgment given in favour of Messrs Miller. Mr Griffiths, who appeared on behalf of the debtor, trustee in bankruptcy, and Mr Lloyd, the registrar, said he believed there was a rule by which the County Court offices were closed at four o'clock. His Honour remarked that if the Registrar had been away from the office, the warrant could not have been reissued, but as he was there he ought to have done it. Writs of execution were oftentimes matters of the most extreme necessity, and ought to be enforced at once. It was quite right to fix certain hours in large towns, but for a little office like Haverfordwest to refuse a reissue a short time after hours was absurd. In the course of the evidence, Mr Thomas, accountant, Pembroke, gave the following account of the affair:—He went to Haverfordwest on the 12th of December with Mr Miller. Called on the Registrar and asked him to re-issue the warrant, and he refused. Witness asked Mr Lloyd particularly to re-issue the execution, and told him that Messrs. Edmonds and Rees had sent circulars round saying that if a composition of 5s. in the £ was not accepted Burton would go through the Court. On my pressing him and informing him of this cause, the Registrar said there was no fear of Burton going through the Court, because a few days ago he had paid a large sum of money into Court. Witness again asked him particularly to reissue, but the Registrar said he would not and walked away. The Registrar did not call attention to any irregularity in the warrant, nor did witness observe any. Witness attended the meeting of creditors on the 30th at Mr Lloyd's office. When witness went into the room the only persons there were Mr Edmonds, Mr Lloyd, and his clerk. Mr Lloyd said, "Let's begin business," and asked for proxies. Mr Edmonds proposed and seconded that himself be appointed chairman, and as there was no one else there with proxies he was appointed. Mr Lloyd asked witness if Messrs Miller and Miller intended proving. Witness said "No," and Mr Lloyd then said he had better leave. Witness declined, and asked Mr Lloyd if he had any proxies, and Mr Lloyd said "No," he represented Burton. Witness asked Edmonds if he had Allsopps' proxy, and Edmonds replied, "No," and asked witness if he had. Witness said, "That is best known to myself." The bankrupt and other witnesses having been examined, Mr Lascelles submitted that the appointment of the trustee was irregular; he appointed himself, seconded himself, and took the chair at the meeting; and further, that the petition was not filed according to the rules laid down in the Act of Parliament. His Honour: As far as my experience goes this Act ought to be cited as an Act of Parliament to encourage fraudulent debtors. Mr Lascelles said the object of the action was to set aside the bankruptcy, or to order the amount of the judgment obtained by Messrs Miller to be paid by the trustee. Mr Griffiths, who appeared for the trustees, said he should not oppose such an order being made. His Honour, in giving his judgment, said it was the duty of every official of the County Court in every possible way to assist suitors, and to render available the judgments of the Court, and not to prevent suitors from taking out warrants. Under certain circumstances, in certain places, it might be necessary to fix a hard and fast rule, but he hoped to find every official of his court rendering willing aid towards forwarding the business of the court at all times, even at a little personal sacrifice. Then there was a serious imputation upon Mr Lloyd, that having received this warrant he availed himself of it to inform the defendant, and sent to him in order that he might come to him (Mr Lloyd) and evade the order of the Court. A more grave imputation it was impossible to imagine, and he (the judge) thought he could say it was not proved. Still he thought it was only fair to Mr Lloyd that he should be sworn, and give his own version of the affair. Mr Lloyd said he had no objection to be sworn, and on the oath being administered, said: I never saw Mr Burton until he came to my office. I had no communication either by writing or by word of mouth with him until he came to my office on the morning of the 13th. His Honour expressed himself satisfied with Mr Lloyd's statement. The effect of the judgment is that Messrs Miller's debt is declared to be exempt from the bankruptcy, and leave was granted them to enforce the levy which was in process of execution when the restraining order was received. The bankruptcy proceeding will remain in force.

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS IN SCOTLAND.

At the Sheriff Court, Glasgow, before Mr Sheriff Guthrie, in the sequestration of Campbell and Alexander, thread manufacturers, Glasgow, present Mr Walter Mackenzie, accountant, trustee, Mr David Lockhart, writer, law agent in the sequestration, John Campbell, one of the bankrupts, deposed: Mr Alexander and I entered into partnership as thread manufacturers in December, 1867, for the purpose of carrying on business at Rutherglen. No formal deed of copartnery was executed between us. We were equally interested in the business. I put in £2,000 capital at the outset, and about two years afterwards a further sum of between £2,000 and £3,000. That money belonged entirely to myself, and was not borrowed. We kept regular books, in which were entered all our business transactions. Mr Alexander put in £1,000 of capital. The capital contributed by the partners was to bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent., that is to say on the £2,000 originally put in and Mr Alexander's £1,000; but the additional contributions by me were to bear interest at the rate of 7½ and 10 per cent. The state of affairs shows the liabilities to amount to £17,062 2s 2d, and the assets to £9,546 2s 6d, showing a deficiency of £7,415 19s 8d. That state of affairs is correct. Robert Alexander, the other bankrupt, having been examined, the statutory oath was administered to both bankrupts.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

In re Thomas Flannery.—The bankrupt was a draper at Ballagaderreen, county Mayo. The sitting was for final examination, which was opposed by Mr Blood, upon the grounds that the bankrupt's schedule was totally unvouched, and that under any circumstances the examination should not be passed until the debts were collected. Judge Miller said he would allow the bankrupt to make his final deposition, but he would adjourn the passing of the final examination pro forma for a month, in order that the bankrupt should have an opportunity of assisting the official assignee in collecting the debts due to the estate.

on motion, on behalf of the trade and official assignees and one of the creditors, for liberty to sell the estate and interest of the assignees in the company, which had been adjudicated bankrupt in the year 1865, without appealing to Parliament for a special Act. Judge Miller delivered a lengthened judgement, holding that in no view of the case did he consider that the Court had power to direct a sale of the property without the intervention of a special Act of Parliament, and that, therefore, the application should be refused, each party to pay his own costs. Judge Harrison concurred. The application was accordingly refused.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

THE SOUTHWELL BANK.—A large and stormy meeting of the creditors of the Southwell Bank, Nottingham, was held in the town on Friday, the 29th January, to hear the result of the investigation of the accountant, Mr Waddell. The examination was instituted on the death, in December last, of Mr Bradwell, who had been manager for over 40 years. Mr Waddell stated that, as far as he could estimate with the books in confusion, the liabilities to rank were £96,244 10s. 4d., and the general assets £44,305 17s. 3d. After some hours' discussion the creditors resolved to liquidate the affairs by arrangement. Mr Baker, of Lawrance, Plews, and Co., was the solicitor having the conduct of the proceedings.

JOHN PRIESTLEY (HUDDERSFIELD).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Priestley, cotton-spinner, of Huddersfield, it was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation and not in bankruptcy. The liabilities amount to about £35,000.

HART, MACFARLANE, AND CO. (GLASGOW).—At a meeting of the creditors of Hart, Macfarlane, and Company, merchants in Glasgow (individual partners of Macfarlane, Blair, and Company, merchants in San Francisco), the liabilities were reported to be about £60,000. The suspension is due to a fall in the price of Californian wheat, and in freights of ships during last year. The assets are chiefly in San Francisco, and the amount to be paid to the creditors will depend upon their realisation.

JAMES GUTHRIE (DARLINGTON).—A meeting of the creditors of James Guthrie, of Darlington, builder and provision dealer, was held on Saturday at the Fleece Hotel, Darlington. The statement of affairs showed unsecured creditors to the amount of £3,427; creditors fully secured, £24,680. Estimated value of securities, £31,971; surplus to contra, £7,291; total assets, £7,857. It was resolved that the affairs should be liquidated by arrangement, and that Mr G. Hudson (Hudson and Pybus, accountants, Darlington) and Mr Brown, of Darlington, builder, should be appointed trustees with a committee of inspection.

WM TIMMS (WORCESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Wm. Timms, who is to be tried at the next Oxford Assizes, on a charge of abduction, was held on Monday, at the White Hart Hotel, Chipping Norton. Mr Saunders, Chipping Norton, represented the debtor, Messrs. Wilkins, and Mace, Chipping Norton, and Mr R. J. W. Pitt, Worcester, the creditors. Mr Prior having been elected chairman, Mr Saunders laid the following statement of Mr Timms' affairs before the meeting:—Secured debts, £35,932 1s 7d; partly secured, £4,543; unsecured, £4,577. The assets, which included the estimated value of the mortgaged farms, stock-in-trade, book debts, cash in hand, &c., showed a balance in favour of the debtor of £6,934 7s 8d. Mr Mace moved, and Mr Saunders seconded, that in consequence of the state of affairs, the presence of Mr Timms be dispensed with. Mr Pitt strongly opposed this, and urged that having called his creditors together, Mr Timms was bound to appear and answer any question which any of the creditors or those who represented them might wish to put. He moved that Mr Timms be requested to come to the meeting. Mr Wilkins seconded this, and after some discussion, Mr Timms was sent for. On his arrival, Mr Pitt questioned him at some length as to the management of his affairs, after which Mr Mace moved, Mr Saunders seconded, and the meeting agreed, with the exception of Mr Pitt, who withdrew his proofs, that the affairs of William Timms be liquidated by arrangement, and that a committee of inspection, be appointed.

GEORGE WADE AND SONS (BRADFORD).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. George Wade and Sons, commission woolcombers, of Clarence Works, Thornton-road, Bradford, was held on Thursday, at the office of Messrs. Terry and Robinson, solicitors. From a statement of the affairs of the firm, submitted to the meeting by Mr C. J. Buckley, public accountant, it appeared that their liabilities were £2,675 19s., and the assets £1,999 15s. 3d. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr C. J. Buckley was appointed the trustee, with a committee of inspection.

FRANK ACKROYD (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Frank Ackroyd, of 26, Fennel-street, provision merchant, was held on Thursday, at the Angel Hotel, Liverpool. The statement of affairs submitted to the meeting by Mr Sutton (of Sutton and Harding, accountants), the receiver, showed total liabilities, £2,099 6s 8d, and assets £598 4s 9d. It was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, Mr Sutton being appointed trustee.

ROBERT HUME (Northwich).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Robert Hume, of Cuddington Mills, near Northwich, miller and corn merchant, a bankrupt, was held on Thursday, at the offices of Mr J. Bost, solicitor, Regent Chambers, 64, Lower King-street, when resolutions were passed to remove Mr T. Capper from the office of trustee of the estate, and appointing Mr Peter Bates, of Stockport, accountant, in his stead, for the removal of Messrs Cross and Goode from the committee of inspection, and appointing Messrs Hudson and Cookson members in their place; and for the transfer of the proceedings to the Manchester County Court.

N. D. CARANDREA (MANCHESTER.)—At the Manchester Bankruptcy Court on Thursday, in the matter of Nicolaos D. Carandrea, of 20, Bond-street, and late of Lloyd's-house, Albert-square, merchant, now a bankrupt, the first meeting of creditors was held. The bankrupt did not appear. Proofs of debts amounting to £3,172 were admitted, and Mr. J. Lawson, manufacturer and agent, Kennedy-street, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection consisting of two of the principal creditors.

A LAND SOCIETY IN LIQUIDATION.—A sitting of the Birkenhead County Court was held on Monday, before Mr Gilmour, deputy judge, for the purpose of fixing a list of contributories in connection with the Birkenhead Freehold Land Society, under a winding-up order from the Court of Chancery. Mr Billson appeared for the official liquidator, Mr Strongitharm, and Messrs Downham, Moore, Pugh, and Kent for various defendants. The society was registered in 1856, and it soon afterwards became owner, by purchase, of an estate in Higher Tranmere, known as Tranmore-park, The land was vested in three trustees. who, after the shares had been generally paid up, allotted the greater part of it to the members. In the case of one allotment the purchase money was not all paid when the conveyance was executed to the purchaser, and a dispute subsequently arose regarding it. Eventually it was decided to dispose of this particular holding, and Mr D. Roberts, of Higher Tranmere, became the purchaser. He could not obtain any title, nor would the representative of the society consent to recoup him for all the expense he had gone to, and allow the purchase to be voided. He then brought an action in the superior courts, and obtained a verdict for £102 5s. 4d. and costs, but as the society had no property from which to recover the amount of this large claim, he applied to the Court of Chancery for a winding-up order, which was granted by Vice-Chancellor Bacon, and the matter referred to the Birkenhead County Court. Had this dispute never arisen the society must have wound up its affairs at the time, the object for which it was formed having been accomplished. There were now 218 names on the defendants' list, of whom a certain number admitted liability to the amount of ninety shares. A majority resisted the claim, and after the court had been sitting for several hours deciding who should be contributories, an adjournment was agreed to until the 12th instant. Some of the defendants had never been recognized members of the society, or connected with it for a long period of years.

FAILURES.

America.—American advices report the failure of Messrs Davidson, Judd, and Co., dry goods dealers, Philadelphia, with liabilities of £40,000; assets £10,000. The suspension of Messrs Babcock and Co., wholesale grocers, Park-place, New York, is also stated. The firm was largely interested in lard, and were understood to have been "short." Messrs Waring Bros., petroleum dealers, of New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Pittsburg, had suspended. Liabilities, £150,000. The Sturtevant Manufacturing Company, of Lebanon, N.H., have made an assignment of their property in trust to Mr D. N. Skillings, of Boston. Their personal property alone, however, will pay all liabilities, and leave a surplus of £44,000 in shops and machinery.

England.—Messrs Carter, Tyrer, and Parker, timber merchants, of 15, Canada Dock, Liverpool, have suspended payment, with liabilities amounting to upwards of £120,000. Over-importations of pitch pine are said to have produced the catastrophe. The estate is expected to realise about 15s. in the pound.—Mr James Lear, of Caroline-street, Birmingham, and Montreal, has made an assignment to a public accountant of Montreal for the benefit of his creditors. Amount of liabilities, principally in London and Birmingham, about £17,000; assets about £3,000. It is expected that the estate will not realize more than about 2s. or 2s. 6d. in the pound. The failure is said to have resulted from overtrading and the high prices paid for discount and monetary accommodation.—A petition for liquidation was filed on Tuesday in the Manchester County Court, by Messrs John Ward and Co., of the Beehive Mills, Jersey-street, Manchester, cotton spinners and doublers. Mr Wm. Dowling is the solicitor in the matter, and the Court appointed Mr John J. Graham (Lees and Graham, accountants), Manchester, receiver and manager.

Germany.—The National Zeitung reports the suspension of Messrs E. Schlomer and Co., in the corn trade, of Lubeck, with liabilities estimated at £40,000.

INSTITUTE OF ACTUARIES.

The following gentlemen have been elected Fellows by this Institute:—William Wilberforce Baynes, Star Life Assurance Society; Wilhelm Lazarus, Assicurazioni Generali, Hamburg; Emory M'Clintock, Milwaukee, U. S.; Arthur Thomas King, National Debt Office; George William Lane, London Life Association; John Thomas Miller, British Equitable Assurance Company; John W. THE DEBTS OF THE WORLD.

The Pall Mall Gazette publishes the following curious statistics:—We endeavoured nearly two years ago to give in these columns an approximate estimate of the national debts of the world. We concluded on that occasion that the indebtedness of the world might be placed at about £4,200,000,000. During the two years which have since passed there is good reason to believe that a large addition has been made to this sum. New countries and old countries vie with each other in the money markets of Europe; and even China has within the last few weeks commenced a national debt. There is a considerable difficulty in ascertaining the liabilities of the various nations which are thus heavily indebted. The annual almanacs give us some assistance in the subject; and the careful information which the Economist publishes in the "Investors' Manual" affords also considerable help in solving the question. The following are the best estimates which we can form of the principal national debts at the present time. We have contrasted them with the figures which we gave two years ago:—

Country.	Debt (Estimated). 1873. £	1875. £	Increase. £	Decrease. £
France	748,000,000	900,000,000	152,000,000	—
Great Britain	790,000,000	780,000,000	—	10,000,000
United States	433,000,000	440,000,000	7,000,000	—
Italy	360,000,000	390,000,000	30,000,000	—
Spain	261,000,000	375,000,000	114,000,000	—
Austria	306,000,000	350 000,000	44,000,000	—
Russia	355,000,000	340,000,000	—	15,000,000
German Empire (Sts. composing)	208,000,000	200,000,000	—	8,000,000
Turkey	124,000,000	135,000,000	11,000,000	—
India	108,000,000	130,000,000	22,000,000	—
	3,690,000,000	4,040,000,000	380,000,000	33,000,000
Net increase			£347,000,000

The apparent increase in the indebtedness of the United States and the apparent decrease in the indebtedness of the Russian Empire are due to our having followed on this occasion a different and, we believe, more accurate authority than in 1873. These ten countries, therefore, owe in the aggregate upwards of £4,000,000,000, and have added nearly 10 per cent. to their indebtedness during the last two years. No other country in the world owes anything like £100,000,000. The ten next largest debts stand, we believe, about as follows:—Brazil, £82,000,000; Holland, £80,000,000; Egypt, £75,000,000; Portugal, £69,000,000; Mexico, £63,000,000; Australasian Colonies, £46,000,000; Peru, £37,000,000; Belgium, £36,000,000; Hungary, £32,000,000; Canada, £30,000,000; making a total of £550,000,000. The 20 largest national debts in the world amount, therefore, in the aggregate to £4,590,000,000. If we add £160,000,000 for the smaller debts, the national indebtedness of the world must amount to £4,750,000,000. It is nearly as difficult to ascertain the charges which these debts involve as the amount of the debts themselves. But again taking in the main the Economist as our guide, we shall arrive at the following conclusions:—

	Debt	Interest.	Rate per cent.
France	£900,000,000	£33,000,000	3⅔
England	780,000,000	26,700,000	3½
United States	440,000,000	20,600,000	4⅔
Italy	390,000,000	15 350,000	4
Austria	350 000,000	15,000,000	4½
Spain	375,000,000	11,000,000	3
Russia	340,000,000	13,450,000	4
Turkey	135,000,000	9,500,000	7
Germany	200,000,000	9,000,000	4½
Egypt	75,000,000	7,500,000	10
India	130,000,000	5,900,000	4½
Mexico	63,500,000	4,000,000	6
Brazil	82,000,000	3,100,000	4
Australasia	46,000,000	2,700,000	6
Peru	37,000,000	2,600,000	7
Holland	80,000,000	2,250,000	2⅔
Portugal	69,000,000	2,150,000	3
Belgium	36,000,000	1,750,000	5
Hungary	32,000,000	1,500,000	5
Canada	30,000,000	1,500,000	5
	£4,590,000,000	£188,550,000

The debts of these 20 countries alone impose, then, a charge of £188,000,000 a year on their inhabitants. If we add £11,000,000 or £12,000,000 for the unenumerated debts, the national debts must impose a charge of £200,000,000 on the taxpayers of the world, or of twice the sum which France, the country with the largest revenue in the world, is annually raising. The rate of interest which these countries are severally paying on the nominal amount of their debt must not, of course, be confounded with the rate at which they can now borrow. Judged by the latest quotations on the Stock Exchange, some of these may be given as follows:—England, 3¼ per cent; India, 4 per cent; Holland, 4½ per cent; Canada, 4½ per cent; Australasia, 4½ per cent; United States, 4¾ per cent; France, 5 per cent; Russia, 5 per cent; Brazil, 5 per cent; Italy, 6 per cent; Portugal, 6 per cent; Hungary, 7½ per cent; Egypt, 8 per cent; Turkey, 10 per cent; Peru, 10 per cent; Spain, 15 per cent; Mexico, 18 per cent.

LIQUIDATION.—The Law Times says:—"It seems to be pretty generally admitted that liquidation, whether of the estates of companies or individuals, is a blunder. Had we not the remarkable evidence furnished by the European and Albert Insurance Societies before us, we should have declined to believe it possible that any human affairs could have assumed a shape of such complication and apparently interminable difficulty. Again, did we not know intimately the iniquitous abuse to which liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act is liable, we should have deemed it impossible that any Bankruptcy Act could so thoroughly and completely defeat the end and object of bankruptcy. The idea of Parliament that it would be advisable to wind-up the affairs of a company by means of a single arbitrator, whose decisions on all questions should be final, was most unfortunate. In practice it has proved positively disastrous, but, as Mr Bunyon points out in a letter to the Times on Wednesday, the question now is how to prevent liquidations of this nature for the future. Unless an insurance office has no property at all, 'unless it has reached the very depths of insolvency,' Mr Bunyon thinks that reconstruction or transfer must be better than liquidation. We quite agree, and the observation is applicable to bankruptcy. In the vast majority of liquidations creditors got nothing; any estate remaining is, as a rule, swallowed up, no one knows how; the files of the Court are encumbered with 'proceedings,' all sorts of 'points' are taken by trustees; and, to the scandal of our jurisprudence be it said, the only persons who profit by liquidation in bankruptcy are lawyers and accountants. It may be to the present interest of these gentlemen that this condition of things should continue, but the result must be a violent change, a wrench which will dislocate many existing arrangements. For this reason, we hope some assistance will be given to the committee now sitting by those most competent to give it. The avidity with which creditors snap at any composition is the best possible evidence that liquidation and bankruptcy are distrusted by the public. There is, however, no valid reason why dividends should not be secured out of insolvent estates. There are those who consider the old system of official assignees preferable to that which now prevails, and unquestionably the Court of Bankruptcy should have a larger control over trustees than it now exercises. We do not profess, however, to be able to devise any plan for amending the law, and we shall await the report of the Lord Chancellor's committee with considerable interest."

SERVICE OF BANKRUPTCY SUMMONSES BY BAILIFF.—The Birmingham Law Society has passed a resolution to the effect that the rules requiring bankruptcy processes and summonses to be served by the bailiff of the court are inconvenient. The Law Times, referring to this and to the case of ex parte Bolland re Holden, reported in the ACCOUNTANT—is "more than ever impressed with the opinion that, in a large number of cases in which service of summonses and other process issued under the Bankruptcy Act, are required to be served on persons who may fairly be expected to avoid or delay such service, it is desirable to entrust such service to some officer of the court (especially solicitors) more interested than a high bailiff, in effecting such service. Practitioners in County Courts are only too familiar with the oft-repeated irregularities which take place in regard to the service by bailiffs of the common law process of such courts, and we are satisfied that if County Court judges would exercise the discretion which is vested in them by certain of the bankruptcy rules of 1870, especially rules 58 and 167, by entrusting service of processes, by such rules authorised to be issued, to solicitors, great advantage would follow such a course. In the event of a new Bankruptcy Act the point should not be overlooked."

WHY PAY MORE?

The Law Journal, in an article under the above title, says:—

"When the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, was before Parliament, no small debate was held as to the conditions of the 'order of discharge.' Commercial morality had sunk pretty low in the water under the combined weight of Lord Westbury's Act of 1861 and the panic of 1866. Virtuous people thought it high time to enter a protest against 'shilling' lists and 'eighteen-penny' lists of creditors wiped off at such modest compositions; and at last the Legislature was induced to enact that an absolute order of discharge in bankruptcy should not be granted unless the debtor paid a dividend of at least 10s. in the pound. On paper nothing could look better. Even experienced people were beguiled by this show of novel honesty. Two registrars of the court sang a sort of pæan at this triumph over the 'composition mongers.' 'The conditions in section 48,' said Messrs Roche and Hazlitt, 'are substituted for those provided in section 159 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, which, though carefully framed, failed to exclude that class of insolvents with whom the process of "whitewashing," as it is called, was so popular.' Even Mr Edward Lawrence seems to have been deluded by the section, for he actually took the trouble to protest against its principle, and to argue that it was expedient to discharge all bankrupts who had given up all their assets, and so let them start once more free in business. The hopes of the two registrars and the forebodings of Mr Lawrence were alike futile. Where there is a good property, capable of paying costs, proceedings in bankruptcy are occasionally instituted, and carried through in the most orthodox manner; and there may be some cases in which the insolvent is relegated to his 'three years' probation. But nothing of the kind takes place where the estate is utterly impecunious, and where the assets are practically nil. It is not, then, worth while for solicitors and accountants to trouble themselves about the matter, and nobody is eager to be trustee. So parts vi. and vii. of the Act come into play. 'Liquidation by arrangement and 'composition' usurp the place of a regular and formal bankruptcy; a general meeting is held, and after some protests from indignant and inquisitive creditors, and some skilful manœuvres on the part of the debtors' friends, an 'extraordinary resolution," accepting a composition in satisfaction of the debts due, is passed by the requisite majority in number and value, and solemnly registered. The farce having been played out, the debtor is 'whitewashed,' quite as effectually as ever he was by the celebrated deeds under Lord Westbury's Act; and having paid, or perhaps only promised to pay, some wretched fraction of a pound, he starts for fields untried and pastures new. To a gentleman of this class section 48 of the Act of 1869 is a capital joke, and the greater the disparity between his liabilities and his assets, the more completely does he defy the doctrine of 'conditional discharge.' But even an insolvent of this stamp has his superiors in the art. We wonder whether Mr. Registrar Hazlitt remembered his own delightful comment on the old system of 'whitewashing,' when the case of Messrs. Sydney and Wiggins was before him. These worthy traders, according to the report, were shipbrokers in partnership, carrying on business at Greenwich and in Great Tower-street. On July 19, 1873, they filed a liquidation petition. They stated their debts as being £39,023, and their assets as £779. Their creditors agreed to accept a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, payable in three instalments of 6d., 1s., and 1s., at periods of three months, six months, and twelve months from the date of the registration of the resolutions. The resolutions were registered on September 9, 1873. The debtors then resumed their business and incurred new debts. On August 26, 1874, before the third instalment of the composition became due, they filed a second liquidation petition, stating their debts to be £42,682, and their assets to be £81. Meetings of the creditors, old and new, were held, at which it was resolved by the proper statutory majority to accept a composition of sixpence in the pound. Some of the creditors under the first insolvency were actually so unreasonable as to object to this pleasant arrangement, and to insist on payment of their third instalment of 1s. in the pound. Mr Registrar Keene agreed with these uncomfortable remonstrants, and refused to register the resolution for a composition at 6d. in the pound; on appeal Mr Registrar Hazlitt did the like. The debtors, who seemed to have quite as much money to spend on the lawyers as on their creditors, appealed to the Lords Justices, who had no difficulty in deciding that a debtor who had not yet completed one set of proceedings in liquidation or composition was not competent to commence another set. This is rather a fortunate judgment, and shows that in insolvency, as in all other things in this world, the line must be drawn somewhere. There is a good West-end story told of a liquidating captain, who had made an offer of half-a-crown in the pound to his creditors, and who expressed in bitter language his disappointment at the rude, unseemly, and unamiable conduct of some of his creditors at the meeting. 'One of them, however,' said the gallant officer, 'a corn-dealer, spoke up like a man and said, "Well, gentlemen, so far as I am concerned, the captain shall never want a feed of corn for his horses so long as I am in business."' This is the sort of creditor whom compounding debtors thoroughly admire, and Messrs Sydney and Wiggins must be regarded as very unlucky in having such a set of malcontents in their half-a crown list. There is a Bankruptcy Committee sitting at the Treasury at the instance of the Lord Chancellor, and hints from the profession and from traders are invited. Perhaps the creditors of Messrs Sydney and Wiggins will favour the committee with their views on the law of bankruptcy."

NEW COMPANIES.

The Investors' Guardian gives the following particulars of new companies, during the week: –

A special meeting of the Prudential Assurance Company will be held on the 8th February, to confirm the resolution passed on the 21st ult., "approving the bill proposed to be introduced into parliament for removing difficulties attending the conduct of the business, and the exercise of the powers of the company, and for other purposes."

We observe that a patent has been taken out by Mr. John Bath, the Vice-President of the Society of Accountants in England, for obviating those dreadful results which follow from the breaking of a wheel or axle when the train is in motion. It is evident that, under the present system of running, the breaking of either of the four wheels upon which the carriage runs must be followed by the tipping over of that carriage, its almost sudden stoppage, and the impingement upon it of the whole force of the after part of the train, before the break can be employed. Mr. Bath proposes to attach a chain from the top corner of the preceding carriage to the bottom corner of the succeeding one, and to do this at each of the four corners, so that in case of even all the wheels coming off, the body of the carriage would remain suspended from the ground. We are not engineers, and so cannot give an opinion upon the practicability of the plan, but we conceive that a railway journey would be vastly more pleasant by the consciousness that the carriage in which we were riding was in some degree protected against the frightful consequences of a broken wheel or axle.—[COMMUNICATED.]

EXTRAORDINARY BILL TRANSACTIONS.—At the Bradford Bankruptcy Court, on Tuesday, several cases were heard, in the course of which some extraordinary revelations were made respecting bill transactions. In the affairs of Foster and Hinings, wool merchants, a motion was made on behalf of J. Hainsworth and D. Hainsworth, cloth manufacturers, of Farsley, asking that an order of the court might be made directing the trustee in Foster's estate, Mr H. Dickin, to set aside his objection to their proof on the estate for the sum of £873. It appeared that the Hainsworths and Foster had done business together, and shortly before Foster's failure in the early part of last year, he had gone to Hainsworths' and asked them to give an accommodation bill. David Hainsworth got a 9s. bill stamp out of his pocket, and wrote on it a blank acceptance, to be filled up by Foster. Foster drew a bill on it for £873, giving to Hainsworth an indemnity to the effect that he (Foster) would meet the bill when it became due. The bill was given to another firm—Lister Greenhough, of Bradford—and shortly after Foster failed. On this Hainsworth being anxious about the bill, Foster, after he had filed his petition, gave Hainsworth a bill accepted by himself for £900, dating the bill on a date anterior to the presentation of his petition, in order to recoup Hainsworth for his loss on the bill for £873. This coming to light, however, Hainsworth now wished to abandon this £900 bill, and to prove on Foster's estate for his indemnity for £873. His Honour, however, held the fact that Hainsworth had accepted the bill for £900 as satisfaction for his claim would debar him from proving for the £873, the indemnity.

THE TRANSFER OF FOREIGN BONDS.—A proposal has been put forward by a member of the Stock Exchange with a view to obviate the risks and inconveniences which dealers and holders experience by the present system of transferring foreign bonds from one person to another. There is a serious loss of time in counting the bonds, which are often for small sums each; risk of loss in passing the bundles from office to office, inconvenience through their bulk, as well as danger of coupons getting detached and lost. These and such evils Mr Ingall proposes to remedy by establishing, under Government supervision, or as a branch of the business of the Bank of England, what we take to be a sort of clearing-house for bonds. Instead of bonds passing from hand to hand, as now, receipts or certificates would be given on stamped paper, to be crossed or not at the holders' option, while the bonds would be deposited to lie secure in the coffers of this office. It would be, in short, a sort of Hamburg Bank, only that the property lying in its vaults, and transferred from hand to hand by tickets and ledger entries, would be bonds instead of bullion. So far as the Government is concerned we do not think that the proposal is feasible, except as a source of revenue; but there does not seem any reason why the Bank of England or some equally unimpeachable institution should not do such work, and relieve dealers and the public from much worry and trouble. The labour would still be very heavy, but it would be concentrated in one place, and the risks would be fewer, while much time might be saved, as after a time people would buy and sell the certificates as they stood, singly or in bundles.—Times.

ENGLISH AND SCOTCH BANKERS.—The Daily News understands that final arrangements have now been made on behalf of the London and English provincial bankers to introduce a Bill into Parliament early next Session prohibiting the Scotch banks from establishing branches in England, and directing such branches as have been already established to be closed, unless the privilege of note-issue in Scotland is surrendered. In the event of a resolution to inquire into the matter as a preliminary to such a Bill being carried, it is proposed that an interim Act should be passed prohibiting the Scotch banks from establishing any new branches in England until the inquiry has been made and a reasonable interval for taking action upon it has elapsed. Without discussing the propriety of the course to which the English bankers are thus finally committed, we may express the hope that the discussion which must be raised will be beneficial to the public, and that an inquiry into the whole subject of the currency arrangements of 1844 will be found inevitable. It is clearly in the interest of the public to make banking as free as possible, and place all banking institutions on an equal footing; and a measure in a contrary sense, which aims merely at putting an end to what is thought by some of the monopolists themselves an extremely unfair adjustment of the privilege to the advantage of certain of their number, is manifestly a step in the wrong direction. When asked to pass such a measure, Parliament may well inquire why it should not rather extinguish all monopolies, and either extend the privilege of note-issue to every respectable bank which deposits with the Government ample security for the full amount of its issues, or substitute a State paper currency, so as to deprive all banks alike of the privilege. Meanwhile it is reported that several of the Scotch banks which have not yet come to England, are discussing the expediency of doing so provisionally, in order to escape the operation of any measure which would take advantage of their not having come already, to place them on a different footing in point of right from those which have already established branches.

FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.—At the Central Criminal Court on Wednesday Ewen Morgan surrendered to take his trial for having, after being adjudicated a bankrupt, fraudulently concealed a portion of his estate, with intent to defraud his creditors, and also with having by false representations induced them to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound upon the amount of their debts. Mr Straight and Mr Gill prosecuted; Mr Besley and Mr G. Lewis appeared for the defence. The defendant carried on business as a grocer in the Kent-road, and failed for about £300, and subsequently made an offer of 5s. in the pound to his creditors. According to his own statement of his affairs, his assets would have been about £70, but it was subsequently discovered that he had concealed certain articles, which were recovered, and in the result the creditors obtained about £167. The prisoner pleaded guilty while the case was proceeding. The Recorder said there were some mitigating circumstances in the prisoner's conduct, and he should, therefore, only sentence him to two months' imprisonment.

WINDING UP PETITIONS.—Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Bradford Tramways Company and Leicestershire and North of England Fire Insurance Company (Limited). A petition for the winding-up of the Mountain Chief Mining Company of Utah (Limited) is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 12th instant. Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the London Cotton Mills (Limited), Steam Stoker Company (Limited), Vimenet and Co. (Limited), and Pirsch Silverine Company (Limited).

WINDING UP ORDERS.—In the Rolls Court on Saturday, Jan. 30th, the usual winding up order was made in the case of the Catherine and Jane Lead Mining Company (Limited), and of Hart's Pure whole Meal Bread and Biscuit Company (Limited). In the first case it was suggested that the mine should be carried on in order to avoid a forfeiture of the lease, and the Master of the Rolls observed that any person advancing money for that purpose would be entitled to a charge on the property for the money advanced, with interest at 5 per cent. In the Vice-Chancellor's Court, Jan. 29th, an order was made for the winding up of the Battersea Foundry and Horse Shoe Works Company; and petitions in respect of the Cagliari Mining Company case came on again to be heard, and after considerable discussion the Vice-Chancellor said that the present voluntary winding up would be continued, but under the supervision of the Court. The petitions for the winding up of the Tecoma Silver Mining Company were ordered to stand over till after the result of an action against the company become known.

COUNSEL'S FEES.—It has been publicly announced that the fee paid to Serjeant Ballantine upon his retainer to defend the Guicowar of Baroda was 5,000 guineas, and that a "further scale of fees" not likely to be less than 5,000 guineas, but "depending somewhat on the time the Serjeant will be absent from England," has been also "arranged." Speculation has already fixed the period of absence from England at about three months. If this be correct, the honorarium is probably among the largest ever paid to counsel, and it furnishes a curious commentary on the superstition which, as Mr Forsyth tells us ("Hortensius," p. 410), has prevailed in every country where advocacy has been known, of looking upon the exertions of the advocate as given gratuitously. It hardly needs, however, the example which he cites from Roman history of the speedy relaxation of the decree of Augustus prohibiting advocates from taking fees to show how rapidly the custom becomes more honoured in the breach than in the observance. In our own country, except in the ecclesiastical courts (see canon 131), the rule has always been that a barrister has no legal right to a fee. The reward, says Sir John Davys, "is a gift of such a nature, and given and taken upon such terms as albeit the able client may not neglect to give it without note of ingratitude. . . . yet the worthy counsellor may not demand it without doing wrong to his reputation." A curious comparison of the fee-books of Dunning and Kenyon may be found in the life of the latter recently published by his great-grandson. It appears that the utmost amount realized by Lord Kenyon in one year (when he was Attorney-General) was £11,038 11s., of which more than 3,000 guineas was made by opinions. The fee-book of Lord Eldon when Attorney-General is given by Lord Campbell in his "Lives of the Chancellors," and the highest total for one year is put down as £12,140 15s. 8d. Erskine appears to have received £1,000 for the defence of Admiral Keppel, but that was after the acquittal. In our own time two fortunate Attorney-Generals and a late leader of the Parliamentary Bar are stated to have respectively received £30,000 in one year. But as far as we remember, although refreshers have often been very liberal in proportion to the retainers, no retainer, since the fee of 4,000 guineas marked on the brief of Serjeant Wilde in "Small v. Atwood," has at all approached in amount that given to Serjeant Ballantine.—Solicitors' Journal.

OUT OF THE FRYING PAN, &c.—At the Birmingham County Court on Monday the Judge granted an order for the release of J. Wood, an absconding bankrupt. Mr Wood was accordingly released about four o'clock, but was almost immediately afterwards arrested on a warrant, charging him that he "being a person whose affairs were being liquidated by arrangement, in pursuance of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, did not, to the best of his knowledge and belief, fully and truly discover to Luke Jesson Sharp, the appointed trustee, administering his estate for the benefit of his creditors, all his property, real and personal, and to whom and under what circumstances, and when, he disposed of any part whereof, except such part as had been disposed of in the ordinary way of his trade (if any) or laid out in the ordinary expenses of his family." At the Birmingham Police Court on the following day the prisoner was brought up, and it was stated that the deficit amounted to about £10,000.

THE INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL SOCIETY.—A meeting was held on Monday of the Internatoual Financial Society, Mr. R. A. Heath in the chair. On the Chairman moving the adoption of the report, Mr. Dunphy, after attacking the policy of the Board, and complaining that the fees paid to the directors and solicitors were excessive, proposed the following amendment:—"That the statement of accounts be received, and that the dividend be declared; but that, regard being had to the serious losses or suspension of capital, and that expensive and unnecessary cost of management, as evidenced by the circumstance that £52,000 had already been taken by the directors, whilst they had sanctioned the payment of fees to the solicitors to the extent of £14,250, in addition to untaxed costs, no election of directors should be made until a committee of independent shareholders shall have reported on the history and position of the society." This resolution failed to find a seconder, and the original motion in favour of the directors' report was carried, a dividend of 5s. per share, or at the rate of 5 per cent., being declared, £10,000, added to the reserve fund, raising it to £70,000, and £4,351 carried forward.

Mr. M'Ewen, the London stockbroker, who recently failed with very large liabilities, attributed his collapse to the critical onslaughts of the World, and intends to sue one of its proprietors, who was also the writer of the articles, for damages, which he lays at the substantial sum of £100,000.

TYPE-SETTING TOURNAMENT.—A type-setting tournament is to take place shortly in Washington, in which the contestants are all to be boy apprentices in the printing offices of that city. The person setting the most type in two hours is to receive a German-silver composing-stick.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating arounds us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Accountant is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the Accountant a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the Accountant, 127, Strand.

The Accountant.

FEBRUARY 13, 1875.

The announcement with reference to the European Assurance Arbitration, forms a curious comment on the extravagant expectations which the system of arbitrators raised and, also, in some degree throws a light on the means by which the much talked of régime of cheap law will be, probably brought about. It is difficult to imagine how arbitration could be expected to do what it was intended to effect, unless it could be invariably entrusted to the hands of one man. The complications and difficulties that have arisen might, with a very little foresight, have been anticipated, though the devisers of the system can hardly be held liable for the consequences that have resulted from the appointment and the death of Lord Romilly. But that arbitrators would differ among themselves was certain, especially when no very distinct rules were ever laid down for their guidance, and the present scheme will, at any rate, establish some definite code by which liquidators and shareholders may ascertain their relative duties and liabilities.

Arbitration, as originally planned, sounds very plausible. The unfortunate contributories startled by the application of the doctrine of novation, were to have their liabilities defined without suffering the agonies of delay, or having their burdens increased by the addition of heavy law costs. The still more unfortunate sufferers, who saw all the provision they had made for their families suddenly swept away, were in like manner to be speedily relieved from anxiety, and to have a large fund provided to meet their claims without a toll being levied thereon, by solicitor and liquidator. At first nothing could have worked better. The arbitrator was bound to be an ex-judge in whose matured wisdom, and trained legal intellect, unfettered by precedent, every confidence was to be placed, and Lord Cairns was pre-eminently fitted for the post. His decisions on the many points that arose out of the Albert Arbitration were pretty generally approved, even among lawyers, and those who differed from him were satisfied that the system possessed great advantages. But the European arbitration produced a decided alteration. Lord Westbury was a lawyer, whose reputation is in no wise inferior to that of Lord Cairns, and who was actuated by a peculiar independence of thought, and a strong view of his own on every subject. Naturally his decisions on the great question of novation were in some respects hard to reconcile with those delivered by Lord Cairns, and the element of uncertainty at once arose. Had Lord Westbury lived to complete his task, all would yet have been well, and, though a valid and binding settlement of many of the legal questions involved might still have been lacking, yet each arbitrator would have brought his own task to a consistent conclusion. The death of Lord Westbury proved the real hollowness of the new system.

The completion of the European arbitration was entrusted to Lord Romilly, an ex-judge far inferior in legal strength to his predecessors. As Master of the Rolls he was generally liked and esteemed, and many of his decisions evinced a practical spirit and an eagerness to do equal justice between contending parties, which were well in accord with the traditions of the Court of Equity. Yet as a matter of fact there was no judge whose ruling was so seldom upheld by the Court of Appeal, or whose opinion on a pure point of law carried with it so little weight. But to his own views on every subject, carefully reasoned out and carrying undoubted conviction to his own mind, he nevertheless adhered, as far as he possibly could, regardless of superior authority and precedent. As an original arbitrator, Lord Romilly would have been perfectly satisfactory. He might not have delivered any of those luminous and exhaustive judgments on points of law which command the willing respect and obedience of the profession. But his decisions would have been carefully considered and calculated to do rough and simple justice, from which those who considered themselves aggrieved would scarcely dissent. As a successor to Lord Westbury, Lord Romilly threw matters into confusion. He declined not only to walk in the lines laid down by his predecessor, but in some cases he actually reopened questions which had been already decided, and the result was a painful amount of expense and confusion.

As it is now definitely announced, the main work of the arbitration will be entrusted to the assessor Mr. F. S. Reilly, subject to a right of appeal against his decisions. This virtually puts an end to the much lauded system. Mr. Reilly has doubtless gained very considerable experience during the performance of his duties as assessor, but it can scarcely be pretended that his decisions will command any great amount of respect. Mr. Reilly's standing at the bar is some twenty years or more, though his name is not very widely known. Still, if he fulfils the duties of a chief clerk, and contents himself with preparing the ground for the ultimate decisions of a superior tribunal his work will be worth doing. But it cannot be denied that his appointment is a complete abandonment of the old system.

The course that has been adopted in the present instance, forms a likely precedent. The business of the Court of Bankruptcy is mainly carried on by officials of an inferior legal status, subject to a right of appeal to the Chief Judge. Probably this will be the solution of the difficulties caused by the block of business in the Law Courts. Instead of an increase in the number of judges, we shall have a class of subordinate officials who will deal with the great mass of ordinary every day business, and prevent the time of the judges from being wasted on matters of no importance. We do not wish to infringe on the privileges of the legal profession when we state that the great majority of cases may be disposed of in this way. Points of pure law will still be left for judicial decision, ordinary questions can best be dealt with by lay assessors.

The ingenuity of contributories is very marvellous, and Mr. W. A. Richardson certainly stands very high in the list of his talented brethren. Usually the contributory, when expectant of being obliged to contribute against his will, finds some man of straw into whose name he may transfer his shares; and the number of worthless individuals,—worthless, that is in a pecuniary sense, who appear on the register as the holders of many shares, and dignified with brevet rank, and who are ultimately removed therefrom by the energy of the official liquidator and the virtuous indignation of the Court of Chancery, would gratify a philanthropist who was writing on the elevation of the toiling million. Indeed, individuals who are willing to hold shares in a company which is in danger of being wound up, are at as great a premium, as dummies, when some eminent financier wants to promote a new venture. Mr. Richardson's plan combined safety in business, with a praiseworthy parental affection. He bought his shares in the name of his infant son, thereby escaping, as he fondly hoped, all liability to calls, and, we hope, duly applying the dividends he received to the maintenance and education of his offspring. It seems almost a pity that so ingeniously benevolent a scheme should not have succeeded; but Vice-Chancellor Bacon characterized the transaction somewhat harshly, and placed Mr. Richardson himself on the register. It is to be hoped that filial gratitude will make up for the harshness of the law.

AUDITORS.

No. 2.—(their duties.)

In continuation of the article on the above subject, we now proceed to deal with the duties and obligations of professional auditors. For the purpose of avoiding complication, it must be borne in mind that there are two distinct classes of general audits, which, for the sake of convenience, may be briefly characterized, one as of a restricted, and the other of an unrestricted, nature. Regarding the former, it may be taken for granted that a definition of the duties is at the outset arranged with the client; and the extent and period of the investigation determined; and it follows that any subsequent dissatisfaction and personal responsibility become disposed of so long as the mechanical work undertaken is performed as agreed. Such audits, however, being mere affairs of routine and of but little practical value, need not be further discussed, it being obvious that unless an investigation can be carried on in an unrestricted and independent manner its utility is insignificant. One of the most essential qualities in an auditor should be a stern determination to fulfil his obligations in a free and unfettered manner. In far too many cases personal feelings tend to bias the professional man in the performance of that which should be divested of the minutest taint of partiality. Again, he may find himself obliged to co-operate with unprofessional men, who, however praiseworthy their intentions may be, are unfortunately so carried away by the fact of holding an appointment, or are so flustered and timid in consequence of their inexperience in matters of business, that it verges almost on the impossible to maintain a systematic regularity in examining accounts under such circumstances. Hence arises the imperative duty of ascertaining beforehand the qualities of the colleagues with whom it may become necessary to act. In public companies the inconveniences of such associations is more particularly manifested, and the Accountant-auditor should use every endeavour to clear himself from the opinionated impedimenta known as co-auditors. To those who are young and growing up in the profession, it cannot be too strongly pointed out that officials and others having some latent purpose to serve, will, by a plausible argument, or an off-hand representation, seek to hide the importance of an auxiliary book or document, thereby successfully concealing transactions which, if brought to light, might possibly lead to an awkward exposure of carelessness, neglect, or fraud. Consequently, the principle of self-reliance is by no means the smallest of the qualifications for the post of Auditor. Referring more particularly to the auditing of companies' accounts, it must be remembered that a large portion of the public will as a rule rely more implicitly on the Report of the auditor than on any other statement submitted to them, so that the authentication of this class of accounts should not be undertaken without the strictest scrutiny. Many whose tendencies lead them to a connection with concerns either for the purposes of investment or speculation, place the utmost faith in the auditor's certificate, and rather than permit the publication of half-audited accounts, his testimony of their correctness should decidedly be withheld. To detail the duties of those who make this their special business would be impossible in these columns; but among the general matters requiring careful scrutiny may be mentioned the vouchers, and cash securities. A code embracing the most important points relative to the duties of auditors, drawn up and adopted by the various London and Provincial Societies, would without doubt, give universal satisfaction. This would demonstrate to the public the amount of security afforded by the employment as auditors of Accountants actuated by a full appreciation of their obligations and duties.

THE BANKRUPTCY ACT, 1869, AND ITS PROPOSED AMENDMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—I hope the gentlemen who have been intrusted with the work of providing suggestions for the amendment of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, will not fail to consider whether one of the amendments called for is not that of giving to a short assignment for creditors the force and effect of an adjudication in bankruptcy. The present law is, to my mind, and I venture to think it is not less so to the minds of many others, much overweighted with formality and routine. Its provisions, while suitable to, or desirable for, some conceivable cases and circumstances, are not, to my thinking, the best suited for a large number of others. I mean, more especially those instances where proceedings are instituted by a debtor himself, in all of which, I think, an assignment for creditors could be used with quite as much of present good effect, and yet at a very much less expense.

Most of us know the reason why an assignment for creditors is rarely resorted to now. I have with difficulty, but successfully, used it myself on some occasions, and always with the effect of satisfying creditors, both in the matter of expense and the time taken up in realizing and dividing the estate. Two-thirds of the estates I have liquidated under the 1869 Act,(and I have dealt with no small number,) might have been realized in the same way, and with the same satisfactory result, if in the outset an assignment had been available with the requisite statutory force to bind a dissenting minority. Accountants of experience must, many of them, be able to call to mind instances where an assignment has been generally desired, and called for, and even prepared and assented to by say (for example) eighteen out of twenty creditors, but which after all has had to be abandoned simply because the two dissenting creditors having, it may be comparatively, small claims, and being under no legal obligation to concur, have refused to give in their adhesion.

Cheapness and despatch are always desiderata with creditors, but they are not often unanimous on any other common ground. The use of the assignment I suggest would give these desiderata.

Accountants, who for the most part monopolise the bankruptcy practice, are doubtless, and perhaps without exception, experienced and acceptable men, and, in the case of practitioners in provincial districts, well known to the officials of the local courts. To these accountants would be commonly depu'ed the office of trustee. The trustee under an assignment should, in accepting the trust, be made to take upon himself the obligation of preparing a statement of affairs and calling a first meeting of creditors, and to that meeting might be left the power to retain that trustee, or to substitute another in his place, subject only to the veto of the local Registrar, to whom might be left that power for the purpose of checking the caprice, and often mischievous influences of proxies. To the Registrar might also be left the duty of vouching and ultimately passing the trustee's accounts.

An amendment in this simple form would soon tell its tale, and one of the first effects from it would be, I feel sure, a saving to creditors upon many small estates of at least fifty per cent. We all know that the present costs up to a first meeting, and before a trustee moves or does any of the work that creditors value (that is realizes)—constitute a very great diminution of small estates. There is no doubt about it; these heavy preliminary expenses ought to be done away with. Under the plan I suggest £15 ought to be the outside average expense up to, and inclusive of, a first meeting, when a trustee would, in the average cases of liquidation, be able to state the ultimate expense. The proceedings filed in the courts under the present practice bear evidence of a lot of trouble on the part of trustees or solicitors; but it would be interesting to know what proportion of the work thus hidden away, and the fees paid in connection therewith, might not just as well have been left undone and unpaid. The average creditor is a man of good sense and business knowledge, and, according to my experience, refuses to believe that a large proportion of the estates that go into liquidation cannot be liquidated without a heavy preliminary expense, amounting on occasion to, say from £50 to £100. They are not always the trustee's charges that constitute the objectionable items in a liquidation account, though it is no uncommon thing to hear the contrary. I would undertake to realize and distribute under an assignment any estate (with very few exceptions) of £500 (estimated worth) at an expense varying from £25 to £50; and if creditors would realize to themselves whether there is anything or nothing in my suggestion, let them recall to their recollections what have been their experiences in the past with estates of the same value.

V.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I would much like half an hours chat with "Expert Comptable," your correspondent of February 6, 1875. I feel sure we should come to an understanding, because he writes so reasonably and courteously. He, however, does not, I think, render a true account of my remarks, when he says that I forget that creditors sometimes require protection against each other; if he again, reads my letter he will see that this is one of the two conditions I insist upon, which conditions being fulfilled, I contend that official interference ought to be excluded. I said, in effect, that the bankrupt or debtor ought to have proper protection against his creditors, and that the creditors ought to have necessary protection as amongst themselves. I have no doubt "Expert Comptable" will at once see this, and, therefore, I say no more on that point.

Perhaps it may not be impertinent to say that a 35 years' experience, or thereabout, has led me to think as I have written, and I feel quite sure that the only true principle in respect to bankrupt or insolvent estates is to leave the matter, subject always to the protection, as to the bankrupt or debtor on the one hand, and as to the creditors amongst themselves as just indicated on the other, to the creditors alone, to the utter exclusion of all state officials.

I think no argument can dissolve the fact that, if a debtor, avowedly, cannot pay 20s. in the pound, all his estate justly belongs to his creditors, and that the creditors ought to do as they please with the estate, it being really their own; but here comes in the objection that "there is about as much cohesion among a body of creditors as among a parcel of Jack Tars; each tries to take care of himself, &c.," and then there is mention of "taking preference over his co-sufferers." Be it so, But what more cohesion would there be if the matter were being dealt with by a Bankruptcy Court with all the array of Commissioner, Registrar, &c., &c., ad infinitum. And, therefore, from here I confess I cannot follow "Expert Comptable," for if any creditor will not take the trouble—(and, mark, if he will not take the trouble it is his own business and that of no one else, whether private individual or official)—to attend the requisite meeting and speak for himself, who is to blame? And how is such neglect to be rectified, or rather, who else has anything to do with it or has any right to speak about it? But if he does attend, and votes for a trustee, or is outvoted if there should be more than one proposed as trustee, where can any blame rest?

As I pointed out in my letter, if the trustee is appointed and provision made as to his remuneration, surely all has been done that can possibly be done; the trustee has every incentive to make the best of the matter, the creditors go away and look after their ordinary business and do their best to make no more bad debts instead of looking over their shoulders at the bad debt already made; and in one sense there is an end of the matter. But I beseech "Expert Comptable," that come what may, good, bad, or indifferent, he will never vote for an official assignee of the old type. This is one of those cases in which, if you cannot do as you wish, you must do as you can, and, in short, make the best of it. As to the prior part of "Expert Comptable's" letter, I said in mine that some provision would have to be made if pure bankruptcy were abolished; and I hinted that I might say something more on that head. I have not been able as yet to do so, but I may be allowed just to reiterate my own opinion, whatever it may be worth, that pure bankruptcy ought to be abolished. I hope I may be able soon to revert to the topic. "Expert Comptable" ought to see that my plan would really make every creditor his own king, his own priest, and his own lawyer also; and that I am vain enough to fancy that I could accomplish all this without waiting for the millenium, which, however, I devoutly wish might begin to-morrow.

I cannot understand what "Expert Comptable" means by "a too great prodigality of ideas." I am sure I thought I was burdened with only one idea, perhaps a large one in my opinion, but still only one; he is, however, so kind that I cannot quarrel with him. To conclude, he has raised a point which I have often raised, and I fully agree with him when he says, "Compel a man to keep books." I say let no man have a discharge or certificate who has not a complete set of books to hand over to his trustee. Without these creditors may talk, trustees may investigate, and the law may threaten, but you cannot track the bankrupt or debtor backwards, so as to decide reasonably and fairly, whether he is to be dealt with as a man who has fallen from adverse and unavoidable circumstances, or as a fraudulent debtor and bankrupt.—Yours truly,

February 10, 1875. A. B.

LIQUIDATIONS BY ARRANGEMENT.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—I have read with astonishment an extract from the Law Times in your issue of the 6th inst. It runs thus:—"In the vast majority of liquidations creditors get nothing; any estate remaining is, as a rule, swallowed up, no one knows how." Having had a large and varied experience as trustee under the Act of 1869, I state that these assertions are entirely void of foundation, and contrary to actual facts, In all cases of liquidation under my supervision, with only one exception, I have paid dividends ranging from 20s. down to 1s. 9d. in the pound; and in the case excepted the estate was very small, and various grave complications attached. The writer then goes on to state:—"The avidity with which creditors snap at any composition is the best possible evidence that liquidation and bankruptcy are distrusted by the public." This is certainly not borne out by my practical experience. As a rule, creditors do not snap at a composition. A debtor offering a composition generally asks his creditors to accept something less than his estate shows. He also asks for time, say payable by instalments of three, six, and nine months, or other similar terms. On the other hand, I generally find creditors sufficiently wide awake to examine how speedily an estate can be realized; and if it can be done readily, then I say that, as a rule, in eight cases out of ten they will resolve for liquidation. This is my own experience, and I have not the slightest doubt but that it is also the experience of professional trustees generally. It is very well to sneer and state that it is to the interest of accountants and solicitors that the present condition of things should continue; but I fearlessly assert it is also for the benefit of creditors that they should continue, rather than revert to the old system of official assignees, practically answerable to no one as to the administering of insolvent estates. The present system is capable of improvement in many points, but it is preferable to the old one. Creditors have now a supervision; before they had little or none, and they may make their own selection as to who are fit and proper persons to intrust with their interests. The great points to be remedied in the Bankruptcy Act seem to me to be more stringent provision for the punishment of debtors when necessary.—Yours truly, C. J. B.

Mr. Crawford, Director of the Bank of England, late M.P. for the City, was recently presented with a testimonial by some of the leading men who had been in his constituency. So long ago as May last a few of these met and proposed calling a public meeting to give expression to the feeling entertained towards Mr Crawford, but that course was abandoned on its being represented that such a step would be distasteful to him. The movement resolved itself therefore into a private one, but it has been very cordial, and the committee who took charge of the work had the pleasure of forwarding the gift at the end of last month, along with a letter expressing the feeling which had prompted Mr Crawford's old friends to present it.

A SCOTCH HAIRDRESSER'S BANKRUPTCY.

At the Edinburgh Sheriff Court, on the 10th inst., Henry Stanislas Bourdeaux, described in the Gazette as lately known as Henry Bourdeaux Stanislas, hairdresser, perfumer, and milliner, 29, Hanover-street, Edinburgh, and 153, Great Western-road, Hillhead, Glasgow, appeared for examination. In the course of the examination the bankrupt gave some rather likely particulars as to domestic affairs. He said that he commenced business at No. 3, South College-street, Edinburgh, on 1st September, 1866, and remained there for 3½ years. after which he went to 29, Hanover-street. When he first began business he had only a few pounds of capital, which was supplemented by Mrs Horne and some friends. He began business as a milliner in October, 1873. He was married on 28th December, 1869, to Miss Christina Wight. She was at that time a milliner at 7, South St. Andrew-street. She brought some money with her. How much?—I cannot recollect exactly; but during the last ten years Miss Wight has been giving me money. What to do?—She has given me money to take her to a ball, to buy champagne, and to buy a suit of clothes. Bankrupt continued: She had funds of her own, amounting to upwards of £1,000, which at various times before and after our marriage I received from her. Before our marriage I think I would receive about £700. I did not consider myself solvent at the date of my marriage. Besides the money above referred to my wife had millinery goods and some furniture. The latter has all been disposed of with the exception of a wardrobe and a small dining-table. Mrs. Bourdeaux consented to the sale of the furniture, the proceeds of which I received. I consider that at the present time the whole three branches of my business are going on well, but as yet little profit has been derived from them. I have not disposed of any goods since my sequestration other than appear from my books, and I have not put away since that date any of the wines which were in my cellar. I have prepared a state of affairs, which shows liabilities to the extent of £1,466 7s. 7d., and assets to the amount of £2,127 2s. 1½d., leaving a surplus of £660 14s. 6½d. I have not included in that state any claims by my wife. I am aware that she has made claims in an action at present pending in the Court of Session. I have seen the record in that action, under which she claims a sum of £3,500 as due to her by me under her contract of marriage. I do not admit that claim, and am disputing it. I do not consider she has any legal claim under the contract of marriage, except to a very limited extent. Have you nothing remaining of the furniture or other articles which belonged to your wife except the wardrobe and dining table previously mentioned?—I have a variety of other articles in my lodgings. My reason for not mentioning them before was, that I considered them to be mine as much as my wife's. I account for my bankruptcy by the proceedings at the instance of my wife, and in particular, by her having arrested my bank account and the most of my book debts. The moneys I received from Mrs. Horne were handed to me expressly as loans. My reason for not granting Mrs. Horne acknowledgments was because she never asked for such. Do you know the reason why she didn't ask for them?—I suppose she expected me to marry her. Was there anything to cause your insolvency in your wife's extravagance?—She is a very jealous woman, bought goods recklessly, and conducted the household affairs in an expensive manner. Sometimes I supplied her with from £3 to £5 a week, and occasionally I added sums of £5 for pocket money. Re-examined: My father has declined to make any claim in my sequestration for the money he gave me. I never paid any interest to my father or to Mrs. Horne, who never asked for it.—The statutory oath was administered to the bankrupt.

COURT OF CHANCERY, LINCOLN'S INN.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

IN RE THE LONDON, BIRMINGHAM, AND SOUTH STAFFORDSHIRE BANK (LIMITED).—This was an appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins. In February, 1865, an agreement was entered into between the above bank and the European Bank, that the former should transfer its business to the latter upon certain terms. Five thousand four hundred and forty shares in the European Bank were to be allotted to the shareholders in the Birmingham Bank. The latter bank was to wound up voluntarily, and Mr C. F. Kemp was to be appointed liquidator. The assets of the Birmingham Bank were to be applied (1) in payment of the costs of the liquidation. These costs were to be recouped by the shareholders of the Birmingham Bank in the event only of the surplus assets of the bank being insufficient to pay £15 per share and £10,000 to the reserved fund of the European Bank; (2) in paying and satisfying the debts and liabilities of the Birmingham Bank; (3) in finding £6,000 for the purpose of compensating the officers of the Birmingham Bank at the discretion of the directors; (4) the surplus (not exceeding the amount of £15 per share on 5,440 shares) to be paid to the European Bank; (5) the surplus (if any) not exceeding £10,000 to be carried to the credit of the reserved fund of the European Bank, subject to the payment thereout of any losses or expenses consequent on the arrangement. The ultimate surplus (if any) was to be divided among the shareholders of the two banks. No calls were to be made on the shareholders of the Birmingham Bank except only for the costs of the liquidation in the event of the surplus assets not being enough to provide the £15 per share and the £10,000, and, subject as aforesaid, the European Bank were to indemnify the Birmingham Bank against all their debts and liabilities which should not be satisfied out of their assets. This arrangement was duly approved by the shareholders, and the winding-up was resolved on, and Mr Kemp appointed liquidator. The liquidation was afterwards brought under the supervision of the Court. In 1866 the European Bank was ordered to be wound up. The Birmingham Bank occupied some leasehold premises, for which they paid a rent of £800 a year. This rent was paid for several years by the European Bank, but the lease was never formally assigned to them, and ultimately their liquidator repudiated any liability on the lease. There were conflicting claims made by the two banks, and ultimately in November, 1873, an agreement for compromise was made between Mr Kemp, as liquidator of the Birmingham Bank, and the liquidator of the European Bank, by which it was arranged that £1,500 should be paid by the Birmingham Bank to the European Bank. Another agreement of the same date was made between the same parties and the landlord of the leasehold premises, which provided for the surrender of the lease to the landlord, and the release of the Birmingham Bank from all liability under it, in consideration of the payment of £2,500 to him by them. These compromises were afterwards approved by the Court. The liquidator of the Birmingham Bank applied to the Court to order a call to be made on the shareholders to raise these two sums of £1,500 and £2,500, and also a further sum of £2,000 for costs, making altogether £6,000. This application was opposed by some of the shareholders, and it was alleged that Mr Kemp ought to have had funds enough in his hands for the purpose without having recourse to the shareholders, and also that the compromises were not binding. The Vice-Chancellor declined to order a call, and the liquidator appealed. Lord Justice James said that with all deference to the Vice-Chancellor he could not concur in his view that the question of the validity of the compromise could be gone into upon the present application. It would be pessimi exempli if on an application for a call everything previously settled and done in a winding-up should be unsettled and undone. Those things must be considered as settled and done until proper steps were taken to unsettle and undo them. In this case, rightly or wrongly, large claims were made or threatened by the European Bank against the Birmingham Bank. On the other hand, it was admitted that but for those claims the European Bank was bound to indemnify the Birmingham Bank against the liability to the landlord. Then the two agreements for compromise were made. For the present purpose it must be assumed that these compromises were well made and were binding. They were made in 1873, and no one had yet taken any proper steps to get rid of them. That being so, it was a mere matter of course that a call should be made to raise those sums which were payable under the compromises. It was said that the liquidator ought to have funds in his hands sufficient to pay these two sums of £1,500 and £2,500, and that he had committed some breach of duty. But that would be no reason why the landlord and the European Bank should not be paid in the way provided by the compromise; but as there was an application to make Mr Kemp personally liable for neglect it was right that an account should be taken of his receipts and payments in the liquidation. The present order would be without prejudice to any claim which the shareholders might be advised to make against Mr. Kemp personally. Probably, they might be content without any further litigation. The costs, and every other question would be reserved, and in particular the question how the call was to be apportioned between two classes of shareholders. Lord Justice Mellish said that there were conflicting claims which resulted in the compromise which was confirmed by the Vice-Chancellor. That was, therefore, a valid and binding compromise. If there was any reason why it should be set aside by a Court of Equity, proceedings for that purpose must be taken. Till that was done it must be treated as binding, and upon an application for a call to carry out the compromise it was not open to say that it was not binding. Being so treated, there were two sums of money to be paid by the Birmingham Bank, and they must be raised by a call unless there were other funds applicable to pay them. There were no funds in the liquidator's hands, but the shareholders said that they had a claim against him personally. That claim must (if necessary) be investigated, but no order could be made against the liquidator personally now. The European Bank and the landlord, however, could not be compelled to wait until that investigation had been made.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURT, LINCOLN'S-INN,

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR JAMES BACON.)

IN RE THE IMPERIAL MERCANTILE CREDIT ASSOCIATION (LIMITED)—RICHARDSON'S CASE.—This was an application by summons on behalf of the official liquidator of the above company, to place the name of Mr Wm. Arthur Richardson on the list of contributories in respect of 20 shares, instead of that of Frank Wm. Richardson. In January, 1865, Mr W. A. Richardson bought ten shares which he transferred into the name of his son, F. W. Richardson, who was then a boy of nine years of age at school, near Reading, the father executed the transfer himself in his son's name. In the instrument of transfer the son was described as "Esq., of Walthamstow," where the father was then living. In March, 1866, the father bought ten more shares, which were transferred in the same way, except that the son was described as of Belvidere, the place to which the father had removed his residence. The son when applied to for calls repudiated liability on account of infancy. The application was resisted on the part of the father, who alleged that the shares had been bought bona fide for the benefit of the son, and that the person, if any, liable to the company for each set of shares was the transferer. Mr Kay, Q.C., and Mr Ince appeared for the official liquidator; Mr H. A. Giffard opposed. The Vice-Chancellor said the case was a most transparent one. If John Thomas bought an estate at an auction in the name of John Brown, and took a conveyance in the name of John Brown, he would be treated as the real purchaser. That was just the case here, and Mr Richardson, senior, must have his name placed on the list of contributories, and pay the cost of the summons.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

February 5.

(Before Mr. Registrar Pepys, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re T. G. Taylor.—This was an appeal from an order of Mr Registrar Keene. The debtor, a stock and share broker, carrying on business at Pinner's-hall, Old Broad-street, had presented a petition to the Court, under which the creditors resolved to liquidate by arrangement. The debtor, it appeared, was a shareholder in the Silver Star Mining Company, and he had been placed on the list of contributories in respect of 1,000 shares. At the first meeting of creditors the liquidators of the company sought to prove for £10,000, of which £5,000 was the amount of calls already made upon the debtor, and the other £5,000 represented the estimated amount of future calls. Upon the matter being brought before Mr Registrar Keene, he rejected the proof so far as it related to future calls; and registration was disallowed on the ground that the requisite statutory majority of the creditors had not been obtained to the resolutions. The debtor appealed, and the question argued was whether the amount of the future calls was proveable. Mr Finlay Knight, for the appellant, submitted that by Section 75 of the Companies Act, 1862, the right to prove was clearly established. Mr G. Henderson appeared for the liquidators of the company. Mr Horace Davey, for the respondents, contended that the debtor had been improperly placed upon the list of contributories, and that, before so large a claim as £10,000 was allowed, further investigation was necessary. His Honour thought if the liquidators were entitled to prove for £5,000 they were, by virtue of the Companies Act, entitled to prove for £10,000; they had a right of proof for £10,000, or for nothing. If the resolutions were registered, the power to apply to the Court of Chancery for the removal of the debtor's name from the list of contributories would not be prejudiced. As the matter stood now, the order of Mr Registrar Keene must be reversed.

February 6.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring-Rice sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Pitchford and Pitchford.—The bankrupts, Messrs. Edward Beaumont Pitchford and Alfred Thomas Pitchford, were lead merchants and manufacturers, carrying on business at the Island Lead Works, Limehouse. This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. Mr F. H. Linklater appeared for the trustee. The bankrupts, who had been closely associated in their business transactions with Messrs Burrs and Co., were adjudicated about a year since, and adjournments have been taken from time to time for investigation. A statement of affairs as of the 5th of February, 1874, disclosed debts of £137,053, with assets £19,544, exclusive of an anticipated surplus from the separate estates of £1,000. The present position of matters in regard to Messrs Burrs appeared to be this—that Messrs Pitchford claimed to be their creditors for £37,000, and on the other hand, Messrs Burrs alleged that the bankrupts were their debtors in the sum of £40,000. His Honour, with the consent of the bankrupts, ordered an adjournment for three months.

February 8.

(Before Mr Registrar Hazlitt, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re William Pearson.—This application to review a taxation raised a question of some importance to receivers. On the 7th of August, 1873, the debtor filed a petition in liquidation, and on the 14th a receiver was appointed. On the 13th of the same month a petition in bankruptcy was presented against the debtor, and on the 20th another receiver was appointed under that petition. At a meeting of creditors, held under the liquidation proceedings, on the 18th of the same month, the petitioning creditor was appointed trustee, and the petition for adjudication then fell to the ground. The receiver in liquidation took possession on the 14th of August of the business premises of the debtor in Old Change, and of his private residence at Peckham, and remained in possession until the 20th of October. The receiver in bankruptcy also went into possession at Old Change upon his appointment, and retained possession until the 29th of September. Both receivers afterwards carried in their bills for taxation, the one claiming £61 0s. 1d., and the other £31 3s. 5d., constituting a total charge by the two of £92 3s. 6d. Upon the bills being brought before the taxing master he refused to treat them as other than one bill, and taxed them accordingly. The master, in his certificate, stated that in his opinion the appointment of two receivers was utterly unnecessary, and he pointed out that the fact that one receiver having already been appointed had not been mentioned to the Court when application was made for the second appointment; and he declined, without the authority of the Court, to allow more than one set of costs, which he divided between the two receivers. Mr Bastard, in support of the application, contended that the master, in exercising the discretion upon which he proceeded, acted altogether ultra vires, and that he had no authority whatever to go behind the orders appointing the two receivers. His honour held, however, that the decision of the master was not only sound in principle, but warrantable in practice. The amount in question might be small in comparison with the daily spoliation of estates by the charges of professional receivers and professional trustees, but the principle was the same. As to the second order, the solicitor was under the impression that the circumstances of an existing receiver had been brought to the notice of the Registrar who made the second order, but his Honour found, upon inquiry, that this was a misapprehension; on the contrary, the affidavit in support of the application proceeded expressly upon the ground that the debtor (a publican) was about to dispose of his business to his late barmaid, and that a notice was posted on the premises, then closed, that the business would be opened by her in a few days. What the personal services of the receivers in this case might have been the Registrar could not say, but where, as so frequently happened, the same accountant was receiver or trustee under a dozen, or a score, or even more, different estates, his capacity for personal service in each case must be of a very extraordinary ubiquitous power.

In re Fruhling and Conrath.—The bankrupts, Messrs. George Charles Fruhling and Anton Mortimore Conrath, were commission merchants, carrying on business at 3, Brabant-court, Philpot-lane. They now passed their examination without opposition.

February 9.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Baum.—The debtor, Godfrey Baum, a banker and money-changer, carrying on business at 46, Regent-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities stated at £10,000, and assets about £700. His Honour appointed Mr B. J. Bartlett, accountant, receiver of the property, and granted an interim injunction to restrain proceedings under an execution levied at the private residence of the debtor at Westbourne-park.

February 10.

(Before Mr Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re B. F. H. Carew.—This was a motion on behalf of a compounding debtor seeking to obtain an order for payment to him by the respondents, Messrs Hammond and Davis, of a sum of £4,129 15s. 2d., which he represented as the balance or surplus remaining in their hands of a sum of £26,819 6s. 10d. deposited with them, or which has come to their hands for the purpose, among other things, of paying an agreed composition with creditors of 19s. 11d. in the pound, for the distribution of which Messrs Hammond and Davis had been appointed trustees. The notice of motion had also been served on the plaintiffs in a suit of "Pigott v. Stewart," now pending in the Court of Chancery, for the recovery from the debtor and other defendants in the suit of a sum of money in respect of a breach of trust, for which it was alleged that the debtor was liable at the date of the filing of his petition for liquidation. It appeared that in May, 1874, Mr Carew, finding himself very heavily involved, filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement. He was then entitled to a life interest in settled estates producing an income of £6,000 per annum, and his unsecured debts amounted to about £10,000, the secured debts being stated at £12,000. At a meeting of creditors held in July the debtor proposed to pay a composition of 19s. 11d. in the pound to his creditors, which they accepted, and the resolutions having been confirmed, a deed, of which the draft was produced at the meeting, was executed, whereby the debtor covenanted to pay into the hands of the trustees a sufficient sum of money to meet the composition. A loan of £26,000 was afterwards obtained from an insurance office upon the security of the bankrupt's life interest, and, with the sanction of the debtor, the money was paid to Messrs Hammond and Davis, the trustees, a further sum of £819 being also paid to them by Messrs Davis, the solicitors of the debtor, and which represented the alleged balance remaining in their hands of other moneys which they held belonging to him. The case was argued some days since, when his Honour took time to consider his decision. Mr Registrar Murray, in giving judgment, said the sum admitted by the trustees to have come to their hands was £26,819, and from that amount they were now asked to discharge themselves in this Court upon an application by the debtor himself, his motion being launched, and his case urged at the bar, on the broad ground that, after providing for and paying the composition of 19s 11d in the pound to all the creditors, or at least those whose claims the trustees were bound to regard, they had a surplus of £4,000 in their hands which belonged to him, and formed part of his estate. The case of the trustees was that the claim of the debtor was extravagant and unfounded; that, after paying the composition to all the creditors (except the claimants in the suit of "Pigott v. Stewart") and making other large payments which they said were authorized by the debtor himself, and which they were prepared to justify, and setting aside the surplus of £2,148 to answer the claim of the plaintiffs in "Pigott v. Stewart" in the event of an adverse decree being made against the debtor in that suit, there was, in fact, nothing whatever coming to the debtor. Now it was clear that if this Court were to entertain such an application it must result in accounts being taken between the debtor and the trustees in order to ascertain the rights of the parties. If the Registrar could have seen his way to any such course he would have been glad to have dealt with the case in such a mode as would have been, if not satisfactory to all parties, at least the means of disposing of all the questions at issue between them in this court. But he could not assume jurisdiction where it did not exist, and, so far as he knew, there was no precedent for this court exercising such a jurisdiction in reference to the estate of a compounding debtor. To establish any such precedent would appear to be as inconvenient as it would be improper. His Honour then proceeded to refer to recent authorities bearing upon the question of jurisdiction, and held that the application was not one which the Court could entertain.—Application refused.

IN RE CORNELIUS B. HARNESS.—The debtor, carrying on business as an importer and shipper of jewellery and foreign goods in Aldersgate-street and the Strand, also at Battersea and Paris, in partnership with Henry Tebbitt, under the firm of Harness and Company, has petitioned under the liquidation clauses, his liabilities being estimated at about £10,000, and assets £7,000. His Honour now appointed a receiver and manager, and granted an interim restraining order.

February 11.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE WILLIAM SHERWOOD.—This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. The bankrupt was described as a club proprietor, of 12 and 13, Grafton-street, Bond-street, and he had been adjudicated upon the petition of Mr George Sims, looking-glass manufacturer, Aldersgate-street, a creditor for goods supplied. Mr J. S. Salaman for the trustee, said the bankrupt was formerly the proprietor of the Junior Oxford and Cambridge Club. His accounts showed that he owed £3,292 to creditors, and there were no assets, the lease of the club and the furniture being held by one of the creditors as security. The trustee asked that the bankrupt should be ordered to file a cash account for 12 months, and also a deficiency account. His Honour thought the bankrupt should be required to supply accounts extending over the period of his occupation of the club. The bankrupt said that he had kept no books in his business, and, however willing he might be to assist the trustee, it was impossible for him to file the desired accounts. His Honour said that if the bankrupt had kept proper books the application of the trustee might have been unnecessary. As matters stood, he was bound to render the best accounts which he could, and until he had complied with the order he would not be allowed to pass his public examination.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. PERRONET THOMPSON, Judge.)

IN RE GEORGE HARDY.—This was an application of importance to trustees in bankruptcy. It appeared that Mr. Hardy, a builder at Kirkdale, failed in February, 1871, and presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs by arrangement. At the first meeting of creditors it was resolved that the estate should be liquidated in bankruptcy, and, accordingly, an adjudication took place, and Mr. J. P. M'Arthur, timber merchant, was chosen trustee, with a committee of inspection, and Mr. Etty was retained by the trustee as the solicitor in the prosecution of the bankruptcy, the committee of inspection, as is provided by the Act, sanctioning such retainer. The statement of accounts disclosed debts £1,115, and assets £347. The latter item, it appeared by the affidavit of the trustee, had, by preferential payments and other expenses, been reduced to £7 7s, which was the only sum in his hands applicable to payment of costs. In the prosecution of the bankruptcy legal proceedings were instituted with the view of impeaching a security held by a creditor but without success. The bill of costs of Mr Etty in these and other proceedings was taxed at £43, and there being no funds in the estate, he commenced an action against the trustee for its recovery. The motion now on behalf of the trustee was that the action of Mr Etty be restrained. Mr Lewis Williams, instructed by Messrs. Miller, Peel, and Hughes, appeared for the trustee, and Mr Potter for Mr Etty. At the outset of the case it was stated that the trustee, who had made an affidavit in support of the motion, was not present, although notice had been given on the part of Mr Etty that his attendance would be required for the purpose of cross-examination. Mr Potter on that ground objected to his affidavit being read, and after a long discussion as to the practice, the court held in accordance with the case of Parker v. M'Kenna in the Court of Chancery, 30 L. T. reports, that it could not receive, as facts proved, on behalf of a party to a motion evidence upon which he had not been cross-examined. Under these circumstances, the parties agreed to an adjournment to the 12th February, for the attendance of the trustee, the question of costs to be reserved.

IN RE BARNETT, COX, AND CO.—This was an application for an order upon Mr Bolland to pay a Mr Cusker his costs for attending on an unsuccessful motion against him to give up certain securities he held upon the debtor's property. Mr Martin appeared for the trustee, and the applicant appeared in person. His Honour, after hearing the facts, dismissed the motion.

IN RE DAVID PILLING.—This was an application for the approval of the court to a resolution of creditors, whereby they assented to accept a composition of one penny in the pound and to annul the bankruptcy. The debts of the bankrupt, described as a gentleman residing at Southport, amount to £2,799. Mr R. J. Jones appeared for Mr Bolland, the trustee. His Honour said he could not interfere with the wishes of the creditors, and therefore the resolution must pass. Approved accordingly.

NEWCASTLE COUNTY COURT.

IN RE JAMES DRYDEN.—At this Court, on the 2d inst., before Mr T. Bradshaw, in the matter of James Dryden, of Newcastle, grocer, an application was made on behalf of the trustee (Mr Bowden) against Messrs Thom and Co., wine merchants, Mark-lane, London, to show cause why they should not pay to the trustee £55, the value of two hogsheads of wine sold by Messrs Thom and Co. to Dryden, and which the trustee claimed to form part of the debtor's estate; and also calling upon Messrs Thom and Co. to deliver up a quarter cask of wine or pay its value to the trustee. Mr Theo. Hoyle appeared on behalf of the trustee, and Mr Davis (from Messrs Mather, Cockcroft, and Mather's), appeared for Messrs Thom and Co. Mr Hoyle said that, according to the affidavits filed by the trustee, Dryden, in November, 1869, purchased from Messrs Thom a hogshead of wine, which was in bond at London Dock, and paid the price, £20, and Dryden received a delivery note, but did not get the wine out of bond. In November, 1871, Dryden purchased another hogshead of wine, and also a quarter cask of wine from Messrs. Thom, and gave a bill of exchange for £48 7s. 10d. in payment; and Dryden received a delivery order, but did not take the wine out of bond. Messrs Thom discounted the bill, which, on becoming due on June 1st, 1872, was dishonoured, and Dryden paid then £10 on account of the bill. On August 27th, 1872, Dryden filed a petition in bankruptcy, and on September 9th, 1872, Messrs Thom proved against Dryden's estate for £38 9s. 6d., the balance due on the bill, and no mention was made in the proof of their holding the wine as a lien. On December 13th, 1872, Messrs Thoms' solicitor wrote to the trustee stating that he withdrew Messrs Thoms' proof of debt. The proof was then on the file, and no one was entitled to remove it. The law laid down that a creditor who elected to prove his debt lost his lien if he had any, and that being done in this case, the trustee was entitled to the property which Messrs Thom claimed to have a lien over. If Messrs Thom had put Dryden's bill of exchange in their cash box and kept it until it became due, then their lien would never have been lost; but they discounted the bill, and having thus parted with their lien, it never could be revived. Mr Davis contended that Messrs Thom did not lose their right to recover by discounting the debtor's acceptance; and, as there was no delivery, the vendors had a perfect right to stop the goods until paid for. The proof was made by a clerk of Messrs Thom's by mistake, and who was ignorant of the fact that the wine remained in bond in Messrs Thom's name; and, according to the law, where a proof was made in ignorance of the existence of a lien, there was power to withdraw it; and Messrs Thom withdrew their proof, and elected to retain the wine. As to the quarter cask of wine, Messrs Thom were willing to give it up to the trustee on payment of 7s. still due on it. The judge gave judgment for the trustee, and allowed costs against Messrs Thom.

THE SCOTCH JUDICIARY.—We understand that Lord Advocate Gordon is about to introduce into Parliament a bill effecting important changes in the whole judiciary system of Scotland. Its general object may be described as the transfer of a large amount of legal business from the Court of Session to the Sheriff Courts. The main proposal, as we hear, is to extend the jurisdiction of the Inferior Courts to questions affecting heritage to an extent not exceeding the value of £2,000, to actions of declarator, to the reduction of deeds, and to such matters of administration as the appointment of tutors and curators. It is rumoured that there is also an intention to reduce the number of Lords Ordinary in the Court of Session by two—a step which would probably be accompanied or followed by an increase in the salaries of the remaining Judges.—Scotsman.

WINDING UP PETITIONS.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Common Road Conveyance Company (Limited).—Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Cheap Fuel Supply Association (Limited), and the Gravesend Steam Colliery Company (Limited).

BIRMINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

At a sitting of the Birmingham County Court on Tuesday, before Mr Gilmour, the affairs of Mr John Dickson, of Hamilton-square, which are in liquidation, came before his Honour. Mr Potter, instructed by Mr Gill, made an application to restrain an action brought against the debtor in the Court of Exchequer by a creditor, named Edward John Cox Davies. The affidavit in support of the motion stated that the declaration had been delivered on the 21st January, that the debtor had a good defence upon the merits, and that the plaintiff was not entitled to prove, but that his claim should be investigated by the trustee. Mr Etty, who represented the creditor, objected that the affidavit had been sworn before Mr Gill, the attorney in these proceedings for the debtor. After considerable discussion the judge decided to receive the affidavit, but dismissed the application on the ground that the resolution, although passed by the creditors, had not been registered; and that although the trustee had been appointed by the creditors, and the certificate of his appointment had been delivered, he had no locus standi in the matter then urged. His Honour was of opinion that after the resolution was registered the 289th rule would give all that was wanted, and that until after registration he could not interfere. The application was accordingly dismissed.

COURT OF SESSION, EDINBURGH—FEB 5.

ANDERSON (WATSON AND CAMPBELL'S TRUSTEE) v. BROWN AND SIMPSON, EX E CONTRA.—The pursuer in the leading action was Wm. Anderson, C.A., Glasgow, trustee on the sequestrated estates of Watson and Campbell, iron merchants, Glasgow, and he sued Brown and Simpson, shipbuilders, Dundee, for the sum of £1,371 17s. 7d., being the price of iron supplied to him by the defenders, and also for £470 in name of damages in respect of the defender's failure to accept the undelivered balance of iron which they had contracted for with Watson and Campbell. The contract in question was entered into in January, 1874, and under it Watson and Campbell undertook to supply the defenders with a specified quantity of iron for the purposes of their trade as shipbuilders. Part of the iron under the contract was delivered; but on 17th March thereafter the estates of Watson and Campbell were sequestrated. The defenders, on 21st March, wrote to the bankrupts stating that as they required the shell plates of the ship they were building, they presumed that in the circumstances they would have to cancel the contract, and reorder them elsewhere. On 27th March, the pursuer was appointed trustee on the sequestrated estates, and immediately thereafter he intimated to the defenders his readiness to fulfil the contract. The defenders telegraphed in reply that they had cancelled the contract, and intended to lodge a claim for damages sustained by them through the detention of the iron. The pursuer thereafter had iron manufactured and sent to the defenders, who, being urgently in need of it at the time, took delivery of the same. The value of said iron was £1,371 17s 1d, as first concluded for, but that sum was paid by the defenders subsequent to the raising of the action. The pursuer maintained that he was entitled to the sum of £470, concluded for in respect of the defender's failure to take delivery of the balance of the iron contracted for. Brown and Simpson maintained that they were not bound to take delivery of any iron from the trustee, and they raised a counter action against him, concluding for £1,000 in name of damages in respect of Watson and Campbell having failed to deliver the iron contracted for in terms of the contract. The actions having been conjoined, proof was led some time ago, and to-day the Lord Ordinary gave judgment in both cases. His lordship sustained the defences, and assoilzied Brown and Simpson in the first action, in respect that they were not bound to accept the trustee as contractor in place of Watson and Campbell. His lordship was of opinion that it was not the duty, or within the power, of a trustee under the Bankrupt Act to adopt a speculative contract so as to bind the estate in its implement. He did not, however, doubt that a trustee, with consent of the creditors, could effectually bind both himself and them to give implement of such a contract, the other party consenting to go on with it on their obligation. In such a case the trustee and creditors were bound to the other party absolutely, and in such a manner as to give him a right of action against them personally for implement or for damages in case of failure to implement; but the defenders were entitled to have a contractor of their own selection to furnish the iron required, and they were not bound to accept the responsibility of the trustee or creditors, assuming that the trustee was authorised to pledge their credit. With regard to the counter action, he was of opinion that it was untenable. The bankrupts were prohibited by statute from giving implement of the contract, and the action against the trustee in the sequestration was clearly not maintainable as to the breach of contract by the bankrupts. His lordship therefore sustained the defences in both actions, and found neither party entitled to expenses.

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS IN SCOTLAND.

THE SEQUESTRATION OF GEORGE HUNTER, CONTRACTOR, PORT HOPETOUN.—At the Edinburgh Bankruptcy Court on Thursday, John Robertson Kidd, chief clerk to the bankrupt, was re-examined. Before this was proceeded with, however, his lordship said it appeared that several important books necessary in this examination were not forthcoming, and matters in his previous examination satisfied him (the Sheriff) that Kidd was the last known custodier of them. The learned Sheriff had to inform witness that if he did not give such information as would lead to their recovery, he would send him to prison. He was quite satisfied that Kidd had been receiving monies that he did not wish to account for, and that was the reason that the books had been removed. Kidd, on being then sworn, was called upon to produce the books and papers referred to in his last examination as having been removed by him in October last, or give such information as will lead to their recovery. Witness adhered to his former statement with reference to the altercation with the workmen near Ratho Station. He did not say to them that he was taking the books to the Sheriff. They were insolent, and he threatened to take them before the Sheriff. When he broke open Mr. Nicholson, the foreman's desk, and removed the books, he did not examine them to see what he was taking away, but he took all the contents of the desk and what papers and books were lying outside. He could not say how many books there were, because he did not count them. On bringing them to Edinburgh he laid them in the office beside the safe, and they lay there until the day that the trustee took possession of them. He did not say to any of the workmen at Ratho on that day he removed the books that Hunter was down, or anything to that effect. He did not say to John Nisbet, quarryman, that if he got one of the books in particular he did not care for the rest. When Mr Hunter told him to go out for the books he said he was afraid they might be tampered with. He did not say who was likely to tamper with them, but witness understood he referred to the workmen. The trustee (Mr W. B. Robertson, accountant) stated that the day on which the keys of the bankrupt's office at Port Hopetoun were handed to him he visited said office and took an inventory of all the books and papers that it contained; that the only book relating to the Ratho quarry which he found was the piecework-book for last year. He, therefore, submitted that the witness (Kidd's) deposition regarding the books and papers removed by him from Ratho Quarry in October last was not satisfactory, and he moved that the diet be adjourned till that day week at twelve o'clock noon, and that the witness be ordained to produce the whole of the books or papers removed by him other than those already handed over to him (the trustee), or to give such information as shall lead to their recovery. The Sheriff adjourned the diet accordingly.

AN OLD BANKING HOUSE.—On Monday evening, the 8th inst., Mr. F. G. Hilton Price, F.G.S., read at a meeting of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society a paper on the history of Temple Bar and of the banking-house of Messrs. Child. As an instance of the proverb that "it is an ill wind that blows no one some good," Mr Price stated that the threatened downfall of Temple Bar last summer led to searches being made among the archives of Messrs Child, who for years have been tenants of the double chamber over the Bar, where they have stowed away their ledgers and journals for two centuries. On their removal into the house these archives were carefully searched, and materials were found towards a tolerably complete history of Messrs. Child, whose house is "universally acknowledged to be the first banking-house in succession to the goldsmith's trade out of which it sprung." It is generally said, but the fact rests only on tradition, that Oliver Cromwell kept here his cash accounts; but it is certain that Noll Gwynne did so, and the ledgers of the firm show the accounts of her executors, and also those King William III. and of Queen Mary, his consort. The original sign of the house was the "Marygold," which may still be seen in the watermark of all the cheques drawn on Child and Co. The original sign, too, though no longer set up outside in the street, is preserved in the "shop," as it is still called. It is of oak, the ground stained green, with a gilt border, a marygold and a sun; and below is the motto, Ainsi mon âme. Many of the customers of the bank towards the end of the 17th century used to address their letters to "Mr Alderman Child and Partner, Goldsmiths, at the Marygold, next door to Temple Bar"; and cheques with the same address are extant, dated as early as 1694. Again, in 1732, when the second Sir Francis Child was Lord Mayor, the Earl of Oxford addressed his cheques and orders on the firm to "The Worshipful the Lord Mayor and Company at Temple Bar." The sign of the Marygold appears to have arisen out of a tavern or public ordinary, which is known to have existed on the site as early as the reign of James I., and in 1619 its keeper, one Crompton, was "presented" by his neighbours on account of the disorderly character of his tavern. It was in 1681 that Francis Child took a lease of the premises from St. Dunstan's parish, agreeing to lay out £800 in building; and it appears that in course of time both the "Sugar Loaf and Green Lettice," and also the "Devil Tavern," with which Ben Jonson's name was associated, were absorbed into the banking-house, and the adjoining houses in Child's-place. The kitchen in the rear of the present bank, and the commodious cellars below it, in Mr Price's opinion, belonged not to the "Devil," but to the "Sugar Loaf and Lettice." The Devil's Tavern was pulled down in 1787, and no doubt originally it had for its sign "St. Dunstan pulling the Devil by the Nose." The original rules of the "Apollo" Club, which met here, are still in the possession of Messrs Child. He noted as worthy of remark, and as showing how the banker grew out of the goldsmith, the fact that the front office at Messrs Child's is still called the "shop," and the back office, where the ledgers are now kept, the "counting-house." He next noticed Nell Gwynne's account, and the fact of her dying in 1687 with her banking account overdrawn—a debt which her executors agreed to pay off with the very moderate interest of 5 per cent. One of her executors was Laurence Hyde, Earl of Rochester. Then he connected the bank with Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, by the following anecdote:—"It is recorded that in the year 1689 the stability of Child's Bank became precarious in consequence of a rumour being prevalent that a 'run' was about to be made upon it. This coming to the knowledge of the Duchess, then Lady Churchill, she set to work and collected among her friends as much gold as she was able, which she brought down to the bank in her coach on the very morning of the intended run, and so enabled the firm to meet all demands upon them." He also traced the use of pass-books as far back as the reign of Queen Anne, previous to which "a customer was wont to call occasionally at the bank and check his account in the ledger in the presence of one of the partners. The customer having agreed that his account was correct, would sign his name on the folio of the ledger, adding, 'I allow this account;' and very frequently the partners signed it as well." The first pass-book appears to have been issued to Lady Carteret, in compliance with a request conveyed in a letter; so that possibly we may owe to a lady this improvement on such primitive banking as that above described. In those early days of banking, added Mr Price, London bankers issued their own notes; there have hitherto been stored away above Temple Bar whole files of such bank-notes of Messrs Child, all of which bear the Bar itself, and not the Marygold, as a vignette. Mr F. Child, it appears, in 1729, devised a new form of promissory note, with a picture of Temple Bar in the left-hand corner; but they were discontinued before the end of the last century.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following meetings of creditors have been held during the week:—

THE SOUTHWELL BANK.—The creditors of the Southwell Bank, Notts, at their adjourned meeting on Friday appointed Mr J. Waddell, accountant, and a local creditor, Mr Milward, J. P., trustees, with a committee of inspection of the largest creditors.

T. M. MILLER (HALIFAX).—On Monday afternoon a meeting of the creditors of T. M. Miller, draper, Hillhouse, was held; the liabilities are £3,496 2s. 9d. It was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation.

THOMAS KERSHAW (HALIFAX).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Thomas Kershaw, worsted spinner and woolstapler, of Halifax, was held on the 5th inst. Mr James Bowman, manager of the Halifax and Huddersfield Union Bank, presided. The statement of accounts showed that the total liabilities were £10,510 9s. 2d., of which £532 11s. 1d. are accounts to be paid in full. The assets are £5,016 1s. 11d. Mr Kershaw made an offer of a composition of 7s. in the pound, payable by three instalments, viz., 2s. 6d. in three, 2s. in six, and 2s. 6d. in nine months, the last instalment to be secured. This the meeting accepted, and Mr W. Irvine, accountant, receiver, was appointed trustee to distribute the composition.

W. RUTHERFORD AND CO. (LIVERPOOL)—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs William Rutherford and Co., timber merchants, held in Liverpool on Saturday, a composition of 15s. in the pound was accepted, payable in twelve months and four instalments. The liability was stated to be under £43,000.

BOWLES BROTHERS.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs Bowles Brothers and Co., held at the Cannon-street Hotel (Sir Antonio Brady in the chair), the triple currency funding scheme of arrangement, proposed by the firm—now in reconstruction—was unanimously adopted.

A. DAVIS (GLASGOW).—On Monday at a meeting of the creditors of Alfred Davis, lessee and manager of the Prince of Wales Theatre, Mr John Gourlay, C.A., was elected trustee. The liabilities are stated to be between £500 and £600.

J.W. BAMBERGER (MIDDLESBOROUGH).—A meetingof the creditors of Julius Walton Bamberger, brandy merchant, Middlesborough, was held at Barker's Temperance Hotel, Middlesborough. From a statement of the affairs of the debtor, submitted to the meeting by Messrs. J. Braithwaite and Co., public accountants, Middlesborough, it appears that there are unsecured creditors to the amount of £2,235 5s 2d; creditors partly secured, £3,185; estimated value of securities, £1,370. Assets, £1,097. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. John Braithwaite (of Braithwaite and Co.) was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

E. B. TURNER (WEDNESBURY).—On Thursday morning a meeting of the creditors of Edward Bagnall Turner, gasfitter and tubemaker was held at the offices of Mr. Ebsworth. The statement showed liabilities, £3,983; assets. £1,406. An offer of 6s 8d. in the pound, in three instalments of four, eight, and twelve months was rejected, and a resolution carried to wind up under liquidation.

M. MAURICE (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Moritz Maurice, of Manchester, wine and spirit merchant, was held, Feb. 9th, at the Clarence Hotel, when the statement of affairs submitted to the meeting by Mr B. Aldred, of Bolton, accountant, showed liabilities £10,616 16s 10d, and assets £716. Mr Ramwell, Mr Elliott, and Mr Best, solicitors, and Mr Harding (Sutton and Harding), accountant, represented the principal creditors; and after some discussion, it was resolved to pass no resolution under the liquidation proceedings.

PEDLEY, BROS., (BRADFORD).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Pedley Brothers, manufacturers, Thornton Road, Bradford, has been held. The liabilities were stated to be £3,362, and the assets £2,059. It was agreed to accept a composition of 10s in the pound.

TAYLOR, SMITH AND CO. (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Taylor, Smith, and Co., of George-street, Manchester, and Whalley, calico printers, was held at their warehouse, Feb. 9, when a statement of affairs prepared by Mr Kerr, accountant, of 28, Faulkner-street, showed the liabilities to be £4,476 and the assets, £1,865. After explaining the causes of the deficiency, and laying before the meeting an offer for the estate, which was expected to pay 5s in the pound, it was unanimously resolved that the same should be accepted, and that Mr Kerr be appointed the receiver and trustee for the purposes of carrying out this resolution.

The Glasgow Daily Mail understands that the creditors of Messrs. Alexander Ross and Co., dyers, Milngavie, will receive close on 9s in the pound.

CHARGE OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY AT BIRMINGHAM.

At the Birmingham Police Court, on Tuesday, before Mr. T. C. S. Kynnersley, John Wood, pork butcher and wholesale provision merchant, formerly of Gt. Hampton-st., and Low. Hockley-st., was brought up, on remand, charged with various offences under the Debtor's Act, 1869, by defrauding his creditors, &c. Mr. Motterham (instructed by Beale, Marigold, and Beale) appeared in support of the prosecution; and Mr Duke defended. Mr Motterham, in opening the case, reviewed the whole of the details, pointing out several transactions by the prisoner of a fraudulent nature. Prisoner, he said, would be charged under the 1st, 2nd, 4th, 5th and 6th sub-section of the 11th section of the Debtor's Act, 1869. Contrary to the 1st sub-section, he had failed to make a full discovery of his property; 2nd, he had failed to deliver up the whole of his property; 4th, he had concealed his property; 5th, he had fraudulently removed property of the value of upwards of £10., and contrary to the 6th he had made a material omission in his statement relating to his affairs. It was proposed to go into those cases, which would be the easiest to prove, and at the least expense. He would call witnesses who would show that the prisoner had neglected to account for, and had concealed goods, he had in a house at Birchfield, and in a garden at Soho. One of the most discreditable and fraudulent transactions of the prisoner was with a Mr Adams, pianoforte maker, of Great Hampton-street, from whom he purchased a piano nine years ago. Prisoner went to him, and got him to enter the piano in his (Adams') books as a hired instrument, so that his creditors should not think it was his (prisoner's). Witnesses were then called. Mr L. J. Sharp, trustee to the prisoner's estate under the liquidation, produced the statement of the affairs of the prisoner, presented at a general meeting of the creditors. It purported to be a statement of affairs from the 3d of March, 1874, and was signed by the prisoner. It did not contain any mention of or reference to the bill of acceptance spoken of by a witness. Wm. Ben. Thomas Adams, pianoforte dealer, 4, Great Hampton-street, Hockley. Nearly nine years ago witness sold the prisoner a pianoforte for 60 guineas, and he paid him for it. In the beginning of the year 1874 prisoner came to witness and said—"Mr Adams, I wish you to protect a piano for me." As prisoner owed him a little account, witness consented to do so. Prisoner asked him to enter the piano into his book as a hired instrument, as if it belonged to him, witness. An agreement was then prepared to the effect that Wood had hired the piano from witness. Evidence having been given by the County Court bailiff and others as to the removal of goods, prisoner was committed for trial at the Quarter Sessions, bail being accepted, himself in £600 and two sureties in £300 each.

FAILURES.

The following are amongst the failures reported during the week:—

ENGLAND.—The bills have been returned of Messrs T. and C. Kingsford, corn and flour factors, of Seething-lane and Deptford, a firm established in 1816. Their liabilities are understood to be rather considerable, but a favourable liquidation is anticipated. The house had originally large contracts with the English Government, but the business appears to have been gradually diminishing for years past, and a large loss was made upon the termination of the Franco-German war.—The failure is reported of Messrs. Hassall and M'Murdo, timber merchants, of Liverpool, whose liabilities are estimated at about £50,000. The estate is expected to show from 5s. to 7s. 6d. in the pound. —Mr Hugh Davies, timber merchant, of Liverpool, successor to Mr Charles Chaloner, has suspended payment, with liabilities amounting to about £7,000. Judging by the results of other failures in the trade, the estate will probably realise more than 10s in the pound.—A petition for liquidation has been filed in the Dudley County Court on behalf of Joseph Beard, of Netherton, Dudley, draper, through his solicitor, Mr George Burn Lowe, of Birmingham and Dudley. The liabilities are estimated at £1,200, and the assets about £300. The Registrar has appointed Mr George King Patton, of 47, Ann-street, Birmingham, public accountant, the receiver of the estate.—The failure of a sugar refining-house recently opened at Plymouth, has been announced. The liabilities are under £20,000. One of the principal creditors is said to be a Bristol bank for nearly £8000.— Mrs Sarah Whitehouse, of the Bradford Ironworks, West Bromwich, has failed for £1,053 16s. 7d., the assets being £211 15s. 9d.

SCOTLAND.—The suspension is announced of Messrs M'Kellar, Duncan, and Co., general warehousemen, of Glasgow, whose liabilities are estimated at from £40,000 to £50,000. The firm have issued a circular to their creditors, in which they say they expect that with an extension of time, and the forbearance of their creditors they will be able to meet all their liabilities.

The Japan Mail says:—"Following closely upon the failure of the Ohno Bank the suspension of a large native house, with branches throughout the country, is reported. The failure is attributed to large speculations in grain, entered upon in expectation of the impending war. Ohno has resumed business, the Government having assisted him with a credit to tide him over his difficulties. Reports are now current of the shakiness of another banker, almost equally known."

AMERICA.—The suspension is reported of Messrs Martin Brothers, extensive manufacturers and dealers in iron, of Philadelphia, with liabilities amounting to £100,000.—J. P. Fulton & Co., of Conshocken, Penn., manufacturers of iron pipes, had also failed. Owing to the failure of the firm, the Landenburgers Hosiery Mills, at Frankford, Philadelphia, had been closed, throwing some 1,000 persons idle. Messrs Holmes and Lissberger, metal dealers, Pearl-street, New York, had held a meeting of their creditors. The claims of the secured creditors amounted to about $360,000, while those unsecured are put down at about 700,000 dollars. The rumoured complications in the trust account of Mr Henry Nicoll, of the law firm of Nicoll, Thurston, and Amman, 32, Pine-street, New York, are said not to involve more than £40,000, and his assets are said to be ample to meet his liabilities. The George Washington Bank, of Corning, a private institution, had suspended with liabilities of £20,000. Advices from Boston state that a meeting of the creditors of the dry goods firm of Heath, Anderson, and Co., had been held; liabilities about £60,000, assets £66,000. Messrs Hunt and Congdon, book publishers, and E Brock and Co., wholesale grocers, both of Philadelphia, had suspended. —Buenos Ayres advices state that several failures have occurred in the Argentine Republic. Messrs Lazica and Lanus, one of the most important houses in the River Plate, had been compelled to ask for a suspension of payments for twelve months. They are said to have surplus assets close on a million sterling.

CHARGE OF FRAUD AGAINST A BANKRUPT.

On Tuesday last, at Dublin, before Judge Fitzgerald and Mr. Baron Deasy, Samuel Doyle was indicted for having, on the 16th of November, falsely represented that he was a solvent man, living at Greystones, and that he had an account in the bank, and was able to pay the sum of five guineas, and that he did falsely pretend that he was able to pay said sum. The prisoner pleaded not guilty. Miss Catherine Darcy deposed that she was an assistant in the establishment of Messrs. Newton and Wilson, Grafton-street. The prisoner came to the establishment, and, after selecting a sewing machine, said he would come back and tell her where to send the machine. He (the prisoner) came back about the second day, and selected the five-guinea machine, saying that he would send a cheque for it, he being a merchant in Greystones. She produced pens, ink, and paper for him to write his address, but he told her to write it, and gave the name Samuel Doyle, Greystones, merchant. He afterwards sent a letter, on the strength of which the machine was sent to the house, 30, Stafford-street. A second letter came the same day, directing that a machine should be sent to Bray, and his van would call for it. An assistant in the pawn-office of Mr Martin, 48, Fleet-street, deposed that the prisoner pawned the machine with him for £1 on the 27th November. Mr. Henry Ebbs, returning officer of the county Wicklow, deposed that he was present at Mona-place, Greystones, on the 4th September, 1874, when an execution was levied on the house and goods of the prisoner. He (witness) gave possession of the house to Mr William Bazil Orpin. Mr William Young Donnelly, an officer of the Court of Bankruptcy, produced the petition of the Bankruptcy Court on which he was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 16th September. He had never received his certificate, not having passed a final examination. The jury, after an absence of a few minutes, returned into Court with a verdict of guilty on the first count, of obtaining money under false pretences. The prisoner was put back for the present, as there were other charges to be brought against him.

THE CANADIAN OIL WELLS CASE.—At the adjourned hearing of this case on Thursday, Mr James Waddell, of the firm of J. Waddell and Co., accountants, was examined, and stated that on the 17th August, 1871, Mr Sturgeon asked him to call at the office of the Canadian Oil Wells Company, in Pall-Mall East. He called on the 18th, and saw Mr Longbottom and two or three other gentlemen. A prospectus was given to him and the report of Mr Francis and some railway vouchers, and he was requested to check the statements in the prospectus by the vouchers and Mr Francis's report and Mr Herman's certificate. He suggested that it would be better to obtain these results from the books. Mr Longbottom replied that that might be the view of an accountant, but it was not their view. They preferred to have vouchers. He also said the property belonged to two or three owners, and that it was impossible to get the books. He sent the certificate on the 21st, and it was sent back, and the clerk told him Mr Longbottom desired that a paragraph it contained, "that, as accountants, they have wished that the returns were made from the books," should be struck out. He refused to strike it out. Cross-examined by Sir H. James: The prospectus speaks of the purchase-money being £140,000. There was another certificate, not drawn up by himself, placed before me by Mr Sturgeon and Mr Curtis, which I declined to sign. Mr Day submitted that this was not evidence against his client. The Lord Chief Justice: We have not heard Mr Curtis's name before, but Mr Sturgeon signed the articles of association. The witness seems to have acted with thorough conscientiousness. (To witness): You had no data but the figures put before you, no means of verification? Witness: No, and I was careful to state the data on which I went. I may state, my lord, that I never made any charge for my services, and to this moment remain unpaid. The Lord Chief Justice: I am afraid you are likely to remain so. (Laughter.)

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

The European Assurance Arbitration is to be revolutionized. When we consider in what confusion Lord Romilly left its affairs, we cannot think it at all too soon for something to be done. A bill that has received the approval of the present arbitrator, Lord Justice James, is to be brought into Parliament to amend the Acts of 1872 and 1873. In considering the proposed changes, it is well to ask why it is that, while the Albert Arbitration, under Lord Cairns, was so great a success, the European Arbitration, with an exactly similar Act of Parliament, is in its present state of muddle. Every one must remember with what vigour and with what ability Lord Westbury commenced the liquidation of the European Society. His judgments were masterpieces of eloquent reasoning and judicial acumen; and if he had lived, he would doubtless have completed the winding-up with the same ability, the same speed, and the same avoidance of great expense as that with which Lord Cairns has settled the affairs of the Albert Company. Unfortunately, his successor, Lord Romilly, did not think it incumbent on him to continue the arbitration on the lines which Lord Westbury had laid down. In one very important subject he thought Lord Westbury had erred, and he, accordingly, proceeded to establish different principles and to rehear Lord Westbury's decisions. At the time we drew attention to the confusion that would ensue from the adoption of this course, and to the perplexity which a third arbitrator would feel in entering on his office. It is to these proceedings on the part of Lord Romilly that the failure of the Arbitration may be attributed. The Act of Parliament no doubt enabled him to take this course, as it gave him unlimited powers; but it was a glaring fault of the Act that it did not contain a provision directing successive Arbitrators to be bound by the proceedings of their predecessors. The way in which it is now proposed to extricate the liquidation from its present difficulties is by allowing an appeal to the Court of Appeal in Chancery. This will be abandoning one of the cardinal portions of the original scheme. When the winding-up was in Chancery, it was at once seen that the machinery of that Court was not adapted to so intricate a matter, and that some special legislation was necessary, in order to avoid interminable delay and unlimited expense. It was thought that speed might be attained and expense diminished by having one man at all times prepared to decide any litigating cases that might be ready, and to superintend the management of the liquidation generally. And if that man were one who could command universal confidence, it was also thought that the enormous delay and expense of appealing might with safety be prohibited. This was an essential feature of the Act of 1872. And with this view the office of Arbitrator was limited by the Act to present and past Judges of the Superior Courts and of the Privy Council. Now that appeals will allowed, the Lord Chancellor will be enabled to appoint to the arbitratorship from among barristers of 15 years' standing. It is stated that this provision is introduced with a view to the resignation of Lord Justice James, who holds the post temporarily, and to the appointment of Mr Reilly, who for about five years has had the experience which attaches to the office of assessor to Lords Cairns, Westbury, and Romilly. Under the altered circumstances of the liquidation, it is probable that no exception will be made to such a provision; more especially as in any case of doubt the Arbitrator will, under the proposed bill, be authorized to state a case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal, and will be able to take the advice of the Lord Chancellor on any matter arising in the winding-up; in fact, the Arbitrator, instead of being "omnipotent" as before, will be in great measure carrying out the winding-up under the direction and control of the Lord Chancellor and the Court of Appeal. It will, we think, be a surprise to many to hear that there is at this present moment a Judge in England who is above the law, who can pronounce decisions either according to, or contrary to, law—who can, in fact, legislate. But such is the position of the Arbitrator of the European Assurance Society. He can settle and determine the matters of the Arbitration, "not only in accordance with the legal and equitable rights of the parties as recognized in the Courts of Law and Equity, but on such terms and in such manner in all respects as he in his absolute and unfettered discretion thinks most fit, equitable, and expedient, and as fully and effectually as could be done by Act of Parliament." All this is to be changed. The all-powerful monarch will not be dethroned; but, instead of exercising an unlimited sway, he is to be a constitutional sovereign merely. The bill proposes to enact that he shall settle and determine matters "in accordance with what are in his judgment the legal and equitable rights of the parties as recognized in the Courts of Law and Equity, and not otherwise." When the Arbitration Bill was before Parliament in 1872, it was felt that it was resorting to a dangerous expedient to give so great powers to one individual; but it was also thought that the risk would be compensated by the advantages. This was found to be the case in the Albert liquidation. But the European confirms the opinion that to allow a single Judge of First Instance to be uncontrolled by the feeling that there is another Court which can revise his judgments, is most unadvisable, unless he be a man of the very highest capacity. There is one part of the Amending Bill which may be reconsidered with advantage. It is proposed to grant appeals from all decisions of the Arbitrator, both past and future. Now, it is only on one subject—on novation—that the Arbitrators have differed. That, no doubt, is an all-important subject, affecting nearly the whole of the intricate ramifications of the liquidation. Nevertheless, in order to settle these differences, it does not appear to be necessary to give an opportunity of ripping open other cases in which there has been unanimity. It would be a waste of the company's money and a hardship on individuals to allow all the old battles to be fought over again, when they have all this time been supposed to be finally settled. It will be to repeat with regard to other things what Lord Romilly unfortunately did with regard to novation. Interest reipublicæ ut sit finis litium. The other cases comprise well-established principles of law; but with respect to novation, as applied to insurance policies, it is altogether a new subject; it is not so much a question of law as of the result of the application of principles of law. The acts of the policy-holders and the companies in past years have been very vague; and the difficulty lies in determining what inference can be drawn from these vague acts as to the contracts that were intended by the contending parties. On this question lawyers of the highest eminence are totally at variance. Lord Cairns took one view, emancipating the absorbed companies from a great deal of their alleged liability. Lord Westbury took another view, increasing the liability of the shareholders, and giving the policy-holders a corresponding advantage. The latter view, though perhaps less in accordance with the principles of law, was certainly, in popular opinion, more consonant with justice. Then followed Lord Romilly, who gave his support to Lord Cairns's opinions. A similar disagreement would be found to exist in the general body of lawyers. It seems to us that, with regard to past decisions, it would be sufficient to limit the appeals to these knotty and unsettled cases of novation. The Court of Chancery would quickly settle once for all in what way the acts of the policy-holders and the companies are to be interpreted; and when "novation" is no longer a stumbling-block, the Arbitration would, it may be hoped, recover its former stability.—Times.

Mr. H. D. Rawlings, the well-known mineral and aërated water manufacturer, of Nassau-street, has had conferred upon him the gold medal of the Société Nationale Agricole, Manufacturiere, and Commerciale de Paris, for the superiority and excellence of his mineral waters. This firm enjoys already a world-wide reputation, but this distinction may be considered another laurel, and it must be the more gratifying after the outcry we have heard of late as to lead and other foreign matters having been found in mineral waters, that Mr Rawlings' waters have been pronounced pure by the most eminent French analysts. This honour will no doubt still further increase the already extensive export trade of the firm.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating arounds us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand.

FEBRUARY 20, 1875.

Sir William Russell's case, and the remarks of Lord Justice Mellish in delivering judgment are well deserving of careful study by all who are, or may be in any way concerned in bankruptcies or liquidations. The case may be briefly summarised, but we strongly urge our readers to read through the full report which we give in another column. In 1870 Sir William Russell filed a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, and a trustee was duly appointed. The arrangement come to, provided, in effect that, Sir W. Russell should pay to the trustee a sum of £4,000 down, and execute a deed of covenant to pay to the trustee, the sum of £5,000 by equal yearly instalments. In the event of non-payment of any of the last mentioned instalments, the trustee, on being required by any of the creditors to do so, was to institute and duly prosecute against the debtor proceedings in bankruptcy in respect of the balance of instalments then remaining unpaid. The £4,000 was paid and two instalments of the £5,000, and then Sir William Russell, whose business transactions seem to have been singularly unfortunate, failed again, this time for a sum of £50,000 and only nominal assets to set against it. Naturally he tried the effect of a second liquidation, and his creditors agreed to this, and chose the same trustee as under the previous proceedings. The trustee, it must be noted, was trustee under both liquidations, and his vote it was, that carried the resolution on the second occasion. The validity of the proceedings under the second resolution were impeached on several grounds. First, it was said that till the first liquidation had been fully carried out, it was not competent to the debtor to present a second petition, as his former creditors had full power over his assets. Next, it was urged that the trustee had no right to vote without the permission of the committee of inspection. And, lastly, it was submitted that the proceedings under the second liquidation were entirely for the benefit of the debtor, and in no respect for that of his creditors. It must be noticed that no creditor had required the trustee to institute any bankruptcy proceedings. As regards the first point, the Court was of opinion that the creditors had fully exonerated any after-acquired property of the debtor, and as to the second, that the trustee was fully justified in voting. But on the last point the judgment of the Court was clear. The resolutions were passed entirely in the interest of the debtor, and could not in any way bind dissentient creditors. The second liquidation, therefore, fell through.

As regards all points the judgment of the court seems unimpeachable. It was clear that the creditors estimated the debtor's after-acquired property as being worth less than £5,000, or they would never have assented to the composition, and given up their rights. The second point is more doubtful, as opening the door to fraud; and but for the thirdpoint; which practically raised the question of collusion, would doubtless have been differently determined. But there can be no dispute that such transactions can never be allowed to hold good. Otherwise, with a friendly trustee, a new loop-hole would be opened to fraudulent bankrupts. A man unable to pay his debts summons a meeting of his creditors, and, secure of a majority of votes, or by various promises succeeds in appointing a friendly trustee. What composition is to be paid is perfectly immaterial. No sooner is one transaction completed, and possibly, one instalment paid, than the time arrives for complete liberty. A few fresh debts are incurred to friends, a petition is filed, a meeting is held, and the debtor is released at once from all liability. We do not say that this was the case as regards Sir William Russell; we are pointing out merely what might have been done, in strict compliance with the act, and yet utterly ousting the claims of the creditors. It is satisfactory to find that the Court decided on broad general grounds. "The act," said Lord Justice Mellish, "gave the majority power to bind the minority, but that was only for the purpose of doing the best for the creditors. If the votes were given only for the purpose of benefitting the debtor, the minority could not be bound." On these plain and simple principles the attempted liquidation fell to the ground. The Bankruptcy Act is not very firmly established in popular favour; a different decision would have given it the coup de grâce.

The case of ex parte Dawson reads a sharp lesson to debtors. The question was as to the retrospective effect of the 91st section, which makes void or voidable the voluntary settlements of a trader. In this case the settlement impeached was made in 1865, and Mr. Dawson must have realised the saying about "nine points of the law," and felt almost like a sailor shipwrecked in sight of port. But the Chief Judge in deciding that the section is retrospective was clearly right. The plain words of the Act apply to past as well as future cases, and are not in any way restricted in their operation. In Acts of Parliament the time for the commencement of the operation of the Act is usually indicated or limited. Thus, in the Trustees and Mortgagees Act, if we may, being but simple laymen, be allowed to illustrate our meaning by reference to the statutes of the realm, we find it enacted that settlements and other deeds should be deemed to contain certain powers. This would apply to all deeds of whatever date, but the 34th section provides that the provisions of the Act shall extend only to deeds executed after it has become law, that is on the 28th of August, 1860. So in the 91st section. If it had been meant to have no retrospective effect, it is to be presumed that words to that effect would have been inserted, and the section would have run, "Any settlement made after the passing of this Act." Besides, the 126th section of the Act of 1849 had been actually repealed.

Touting seems to be a vice inherent in mankind, and is usually termed forming a business connection. We are much grieved to see from the Law Times that solicitors are occasionally guilty of this failing, as we thought that it had been hitherto confined to "accountants." The case cited by our energetic contemporary is, we agree, one of touting pur et simple, and we cordially join in reprobating it. But, with every deference to the letter of our correspondent, "Lex," we must say there is a difference between mere touting and legitimate business efforts. Surely if a post is vacant, it is not touting to go and canvass for the directors in whose gift it is, or to bring to bear any friendly influence that may be possessed. And in the case of official liquidators it cannot surely be wrong for candidates for the post to make known their readiness to accept it. To undermine a tottering company is simply disgraceful, but to take advantage of its collapse is ordinary business. What is really "Lex's" complaint? A winding up order is made; candidate for the post of liquidators meet, and an applicant is either selected by the judge as "specially gifted" or chosen by the majority of the shareholders. What better, or more legitimate mode of appointment can be devised?

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. Cape (Cape and Harris) the Official Liquidator of the Teplitz Colliery and Coal Oil Company (Limited).

An Essay on the Qualifications and Duties of Accountants and Auditors. By John Caldecott. London: Letts, Son, and Co.

We are pleased to note the recent publication of an essay on the Qualifications and Duties of Accountants and Auditors, addressed to "the profession, merchants, traders, landowners, and companies." In addition to the fact that the essay proceeds from the pen of a provincial accountant of acknowledged standing, the little pamphlet possesses an interest as being, we believe, about the first attempt to deal with the somewhat enigmatical question of "Who is an accountant?" The first essential qualifications of an accountant the author correctly states to be the possession of a complete knowledge of the theory of accounts, and the ability of applying that knowledge practically; although the originality of this information is by no means apparent. The essayist's selection of quotations from the works of Malcolm (A.D. 1731) and Mair (A.D. 1760), relating to "the theory of this beautiful and curious science," and "the gentleman accountant, a person of honour," are of a rather more interesting nature to the brother members of his profession. Notwithstanding the care evidently bestowed on the compilation of the essay, a quantity of matter, rather foreign to the announcement on the title page, occupies a large portion of the work, which might have been made to serve a more beneficial purpose in extending the thread of useful argument and discussion. In Part I. the accountant will find his duties clearly defined, though perhaps in a rather too elementary manner. In Part II. the author sets forth at considerable length his own ideas on account keeping, claiming for his system the title of "The New Plan." In Part III. the qualifications of auditors are minutely detailed, and liquidators in chancery, trustees, and receivers in bankruptcy, are told pretty succinctly what the author considers to be their duties. The future of the profession forms the subject matter of Part IV., and is as strongly written as any other portion of the work. We cannot however, endorse the statement that "auctioneers, appraisers, and discounters would, instead of weakening, strengthen the profession of accountants and auditors;" and the author must not be surprised to find this opinion the subject of a considerable amount of adverse criticism. However, we venture to think that the author will have attained no mean object, if his essay serves to bring about a little wholesome discussion on the subjects dealt with in these pages.

Bankruptcy Legislation. By George Wreford. London: Effingham Wilson, Royal Exchange. 1875.

We have seldom met with a more thoroughly practical pamphlet than the one before us. Mr. Wreford, as an official of the Court of Bankruptcy, has gained considerable insight into the working of the various acts, and has stated with admirable clearness the result of his experience. We have pointed out in so many cases the various shortcomings of the Act of 1869, that we shall not attempt to recapitulate any of them. It is satisfactory to find that Mr. Wreford's practised judgment coincides in many points with our own views. We will state shortly some of the alterations which Mr. Wreford suggests. In the first place, he thinks that the limit of £50 for the petitioning creditor's debt is too high, and that it should be reduced to £20, the lowest amount for which a writ can be issued. Then he recommends that the filing of a petition should operate as a restraining order, which should become absolute upon an order of adjudication being made. In both of these recommendations we cordially concur. We should be doing no service to Mr Wreford if we were to make long extracts from his little book, which we cordially recommend to all interested in bankruptcy reform. He writes in a clear and plain style; free from all technicalities such as make legal treatises somewhat repulsive to lay readers, and there is scarcely any suggestion which is not of some practical value. With one of his statements we cordially agree, that legislation should be simply of an amending character, and as the Lord Chancellor is the author of what in Mr. Wreford's opinion was the most workable Bankruptcy Act ever suggested, we may hope for some good alteration from the present Government. Meantime we advise every reformer to study Mr. Wreford's pamphlet, which is as practical a work, and contains as much information in a small compass, as we have seen for some time.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—There has been, of late, a considerable outcry raised about the practice of touting for business; and the objectionable system pursued has formed the subject of tedious comment in most legal and commercial papers on too many occasions. I have, however, observed, that while reference has been made to touting for business connected more especially with bankruptcy matters, nothing has appeared to demonstrate that the habit is carried on to as great an extent for the purpose of securing business, in the form of liquidations "in," as well as out of, "Chancery." It is not my wish in offering these remarks to defend the system even in the most abstract manner; but my object in addressing you is, to show that certain of the profession who elect to practice more particularly in bankruptcy, do not exclusively represent the class which should be subjected to the stigma imposed on them by the press and the public. Taking Chancery practice; no sooner does a Company ("Limited" or otherwise), whose tottering condition has been carefully watched, appear to be on the point of collapsing, than a list of the shareholders is somehow obtained, clerks are set to work, and circulars are forwarded to the unfortunate speculators informing them of the date set down for hearing the petition, and appointing an official liquidator, enclosing a proxy or form of request, stating the advantages to be derived by filling up the form in favour of the applicant, and an announcement that, all further information will, if required, be furnished with the greatest pleasure. Following upon this, on the arrival of the day for appointing the official liquidators, four or five, or more gentlemen attend, all eager for the affair, and not always in the best of tempers nor in the politest of moods when they see a chance of their being ousted. Sometimes one carries all before him and is appointed; at another time one of the applicants appears so specially gifted that the judge selects him; and not infrequently two join issue, and are legally metamorphosed into co-liquidators. Such is a brief outline of what goes on "in chancery." Touting among the directors for a vacant auditorship is an equally common occurrence, and calling either alone or with an introduction in the shape of a friend who is to be "remembered," is another style of obtaining business; and the system of feeing is so generally known that I need hardly dilate upon it,—Yours, &c., LEX.

Digitized by Google

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—Some great authority said of the judgments of a learned judge,—"Oh, yes; your decisions are all right, but confound your reasons." It was in some such spirit that I read a report in your last issue of a judgment of Mr. Hazlitt. I hope I may never be found wanting in reverence towards the judgment of a gentleman so well versed in bankruptcy practice as is Mr. Hazlitt, but at the same time I must have a gentle laugh over the "tarradiddle" about accountants which accompanied it. The "daily spoliation of estates by professional receivers and trustees" quotha! Why, does he know that professional receivers and trustees cannot get their bills taxed to the amount of £10,000 per year, while the solicitors get more than £200,000? "Where the accountant was receiver under a dozen, a score, or even more different estates, his capacity for personal service in each must be of a very extraordinary ubiquitous power." Yes, that is what he said. Well, the idea at the bottom of that, which is to compel a receiver to serve personally behind a draper's counter, is too rich to be seriously dwelt upon. If I were discussing the sayings of a lesser magnate, I should certainly say they were positive proofs of "accountant on the brain." As it is, I only call them "tarradiddle's," and rest and be thankful it is no worse. But one word seriously: Is it not time that the accountant should be treated as reasonably as any other human being? If he works, why not pay him? If he is a necessity, why not acknowledge him? It surely cannot be fair to take his services and continually grumble against him because he wants to be paid for them; nor can it be that an accountant is the only person in England who is not allowed to live by his profession. The moral of this letter is—"Accountants, combine."—Yours truly,

ACO.

TOUTING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—A client of ours having recently had occasion to give a Bill of Sale, received shortly after its registration the enclosed interesting document. The issuer of the said document claims to be an "Official Liquidator and Bankruptcy Trustee," as also the proprietor of "Liquidation and Accountancy Offices." To these very useful avocations (when properly carried out) he adds other (valuable?) avocations, such as gratuitous advice, and advance of money to any amount on all sorts of securities; money lending is also a portion of his profession,—the rate per cent. however is not shown. The perfection of impudence is, however, reached in the last paragraph, which is to the following effect:—"Caution.—Several unqualified persons are copying this circular with an object to extort fees." I have been engaged in professional accountantship for a considerable time, and never had the advantage of coming across this wonderful gentleman; I should however imagine that his appointments as official liquidator must be few and far between, as touting in the Court of Chancery is supposed to render a man ineligible for such post. I am happy to see that the advertiser's name does not appear as a member of any Society of Accountants; nevertheless, it is to be regretted that the want of a Charter prevents the prompt and effective extinction of such benefactors to human kind!—Yours truly,

EXPERT COMPTABLE.

COURT OF CHANCERY, LINCOLN'S INN.

February 12.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EX PARTE SIR W. RUSSELL.—This appeal, from an order made by Mr. Registrar Spring Rice, sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, raised a question of considerable importance as to the effect of the discharge of a liquidating debtor under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Section 15 of the Act provides that the property of a bankrupt divisible among his creditors is to comprise (among other things) "all such property as may belong to, or be vested in, the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or may be acquired by, or devolve on, him during the continuance." By Sec. 47, "When the whole property of the bankrupt has been realized for the benefit of his creditors, or so much thereof as can, in the joint opinion of the trustee and committee of inspection, be realised without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy, or a composition or arrangement has been completed," the trustee is to make a report accordingly to the Court, and the Court, if satisfied of the truth of the report, "shall make an order that the bankruptcy has closed, and the bankruptcy shall be deemed to have been closed at or after the date of such order." By Sec. 48, "When a bankruptcy is closed, or at any time during its continuance, with the assent of the creditors, testified by a special resolution, the bankrupt may apply to the Court for an order of discharge;" and by Sec. 49, this order, when granted, is (with certain exceptions) to release the bankrupt from all debts provable under the bankruptcy. By Sec. 125, sub-sec. 7, all the provisions of the Act (with certain modifications), "shall, so far as the same are applicable, apply to the case of a liquidation by arrangement in the same manner as if the word 'bankrupt' included a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation, and the word 'bankruptcy' included liquidation by arrangement." The modification referred to is continued in sub-sec. 9, and is this, that "the close of the liquidation may be fixed, and the discharge of the debtor and the release of the trustee may be granted, by a special resolution of the creditors in general meeting, and the accounts may be audited in pursuance of such resolution, and at such time and in such manner, and upon such terms and conditions as the creditors think fit." Sir William Russell filed a liquidation petition in 1870. On the 26th of May, 1870, his creditors resolved on a liquidation by arrangement, and appointed Mr C. F. Kemp trustee. They further resolved that "the discharge of the debtor should be granted to him upon payment being made on his behalf to the trustee of £4,000 within one month after the registration of the resolution, and upon the debtor executing within the same period a deed of covenant or a bond for payment to the trustee of £5,000 by five equal annual instalments;" but the deed or bond was to provide that if default should be made in payment to the trustee of any of the instalments for twenty-one days, the whole of the then unpaid instalments should at once become payable. In case default should be made in payment of the £4,000, any of the creditors was to be at liberty to present a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy, or make such application as he might think fit against the debtor, to the intent that he might be adjudicated a bankrupt under Sec. 125 of the Act, and the debtor and the trustee were to consent to such adjudication being forthwith made. In case default should be made in payment of any of the annual instalments of the £5,000, the trustee, on being required by any creditor, was to institute and duly prosecute proceedings in bankruptcy against the debtor in respect of the balance of the instalments then remaining unpaid. These resolutions were registered; the £4,000 was paid, and the deed of covenant to pay the £5,000 to the trustee was entered into. Sir W. Russell went into business again, and incurred fresh debts. He paid the first two instalments of the £5,000, but failed to pay any more of them. In June, 1874, he filed a second liquidation petition. His statement of affairs showed that his debts were over £50,000, and that his assets were practically of no value, the only property available for the creditors being his half-pay as an officer in the Army, amounting to £200 a year. The creditors on the 30th of July resolved on a liquidation by arrangement, and appointed Mr Kemp trustee. They also resolved that, until full payment of all the debts provable under the liquidation, the debtor should pay to the trustee the surplus of his income above £600 a year, and that as soon as he should have executed a deed to give effect to the resolution he should be discharged from all debts provable under the liquidation, but that the discharge should be void if he failed to perform any of the covenants in the deed, and the trustee should certify that such failure had, in his opinion, been wilful. The trustee under the first liquidation voted in favour of these resolutions, having proved for the unpaid balance of the £5,000, and without his vote the resolutions would not have been carried. No creditor had required the trustee under the first liquidation to take proceedings in bankruptcy against the debtor. The Registrar refused to register the resolutions passed under the second petition, on the ground that the first liquidation was still pending, and all the debtor's property vested in the trustee under it, and that, till it had been closed, no valid resolution could be passed under a second petition. Sir W. Russell appealed. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Bagley (with whom was Mr R. Taunton Raikes) for the appellant, argued that, even if the first liquidation was not closed, still the effect of the resolutions then passed was to release all the debtor's after-acquired property upon payment of the £4,000 and execution of the deed of covenant. The resolutions contemplated that he was to be a free man and earn fresh property. He had been allowed to trade and to contract fresh debts, and the new creditors had thus acquired rights which could not be interfered with. Mr Little, Q.C., and Mr F. H. Linklater for a dissentient creditor, relied upon the provisions of the Act and the recent decision of the Court of Appeal in "Ex parte Sydney." The debtor had not fulfilled his contract under the first liquidation, and till he had done so his after-acquired property was not free. Moreover the trustee under the first liquidation had no power to vote in the second without the authority of the committee of inspection. In this case he not only had no such authority, but he voted against the express wish of one of them. Further, the debtor having practically no assets, the votes of the majority were really given simply for his benefit that he might get his discharge, and votes thus given could not bind the dissentient minority of the creditors. Mr Justice Mellish said that the ground on which the Registrar refused to register the resolutions was that the former liquidation proceedings were still pending. If those proceedings had been really still pending his Lordship would have thought, in conformity with the decision in "Ex parte Sydney," that it would not have been competent to the debtor to present a second petition; but he thought that the test whether the old proceedings were still pending was this—whether the debtor's future-acquired assets still remained liable to the creditors under the old liquidation. If they did, then whether there might be a bankruptcy or not (a point which it was not necessary now to decide), still the debtor could not, under such circumstances, present a fresh liquidation petition. On the other hand, if the debtor's future assets were discharged by the creditors under the first liquidation, then the future creditors must be entitled to the future-acquired assets. They would be entitled to take proceedings in bankruptcy, and his Lordship could not see why the debtor, having acquired assets, might not present a liquidation petition. The question now to be decided was whether the future estate of Sir W. Russell was discharged by the resolutions passed in the first liquidation. It was clear that the creditors had power to do this by virtue of sub-section 9 of Section 125 of the Act, and it seemed clear also that if the creditors had resolved that the debtor should be discharged and the liquidation closed as from a certain day, though the whole estate vested in the trustee had not been distributed, nevertheless, the future estate would have been discharged. In a case of "Ex parte Tinker," the Court held that, even though no discharge had been granted, yet if the creditors had dealt with the debtor in such a way as that it would be contrary to good faith that they should have his future-acquired property, that property would be free. The construction of the resolutions passed in the present case appeared to his Lordship perfectly plain. On the debtor paying the £4,000, and executing the covenant to pay the £5,000, there was (so to say) a purchase by him of his future property, as between him and his creditors. All his then existing estate was vested in the trustee, and therefore this purchase-money could not have been paid out of that. The difference between the provisions in case the £4,000 was not paid, and in case the instalments of the 5,000 were not paid, made this quite plain. In the first case, the debtor was, if he made default, to be made bankrupt upon the act of bankruptcy committed by the filing of the liquidation petition; in the second case, a fresh proceeding in bankruptcy was clearly contemplated; not a proceeding under the old act of bankruptcy under which he had already got his discharge. The trustee was to take proceedings as a creditor in respect of the unpaid balance of the £5,000, with all the ordinary rights of a creditor. If the old creditors gave the debtor credit for this sum as the price of his future assets, they could not at the same time claim those assets to the exclusion of the future creditors. As to the objection that the trustee in the first liquidation could not properly vote in the second liquidation without the assent of the committee of inspection, his Lordship thought that the provisions of the Act as to the powers of a trustee did not apply to a case where the creditors had come to an arrangement like this with the debtor. The trustee was placed in the position of a creditor, and was entitled to vote in the ordinary way. The third objection, that there were practically no assets, and that the liquidation was resolved on, not in order to distribute the assets of the debtor among his creditors, but only for the debtor's benefit, was deserving of great consideration. It was clear from the debtor's statement of accounts that he had practically no assets, and that there could be no dividend. The only thing really available for the creditors was the debtor's half pay, and the effect of the resolutions was to free that entirely from contributing anything to the payment of the creditors, and there was not the smallest security that they would ever get anything. There might be nothing morally wrong in creditors agreeing to such resolutions, but it was impossible that they could have been passed bona fide for the benefit of the creditors; they could only have been passed from kindly feelings for the debtor. Resolutions so passed could not bind the dissentient creditors. The Act gave the majority power to bind the minority, but that was only for the purpose of doing the best for the creditors. If the votes were given only for the purpose of benefiting the debtor, the minority would not be bound. On this ground the order of the Registrar must be affirmed, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Lord Justice James concurred.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL).

EX PARTE WALTON—IN RE DANDO.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr Registrar Pepys, as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. On the 4th of January last a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against Mr W. E. Dando was presented by Mr John Fitzpatrick. The petition came on to be heard on the 28th of January and an adjudication of bankruptcy was then made. On the previous day Dando had filed a liquidation petition, and the first meeting of the creditors under this petition was fixed for the 18th of February. On the 4th of February an application was made on behalf of the bankrupt and some of his creditors to the Registrar to stay the advertisement of the adjudication till after the 18th of February. This application was refused, and from this refusal the present appeal was brought. Lord Justice Mellish said he thought that, under sec. 80, sub-sec. 10, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and the 266th rule of 1870, the Registrar had under the circumstances a discretion whether he would simply make an adjudication, or make an adjudication and stay all further proceedings until after the meeting of the creditors under the liquidation petition, or postpone his decision altogether until after the meeting. His Lordship said he had expressed this opinion in the recent case of "Ex parte Foster" though it was not necessary for the decision of that case. But on further consideration he adhered to that opinion. The only question, therefore, was whether the Registrar had properly exercised his discretion in the present case, and upon consideration of the circumstances, his Lordship thought that he had. The appeal, must, therefore, be dismissed. Lord Justice James concurred.

EX PARTE DAWSON—RE DAWSON.—This was an appeal from a decision of the Hull County Court, and involved a question as to the effect which the 91st section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, has upon voluntary settlements executed prior to the passing of the Act. The 91st section provides that "any settlement of property made by a trader . . . shall if the settlor becomes bankrupt within two years after the date of such settlement be void as against the trustee of the bankrupt appointed under this Act, and shall, if the settlor becomes a bankrupt at any subsequent time within 10 years after the date of such settlement, unless the parties claiming under such settlement can prove that the settlor was at the time of making the settlement able to pay all his debts without the aid of the property comprised in such settlement, be void against such trustee." The deed in this case was executed in the year 1865, and if it was within the 91st section the onus of proving it would be thrown upon the persons claiming under its terms. On behalf of the appellants, it was argued that the deed must be dealt with under the 126th section of the Act of 1849, which provides that "if any bankrupt being at the time insolvent shall, except upon the marriage of any of his children or for some valuable consideration, have conveyed, assigned, or transferred to any of his children or to any other person any hereditaments . . . the Court shall have power to order a sale for the benefit of the creditors under the bankruptcy." The learned Judge held that the 91st section of the present Act was retrospective in its operation, and that the deed was void under it. The wife and son of the debtor appealed from that decision. The Chief-Judge held that the 91st section was retrospective, and that the 126th section of the Bankruptcy Law Consolidation Act, 1849, which had been in express terms repealed, had nothing whatever to do with the present case. To prevent any mischief arising from the repeal of that statute the 91st section of the present Act was introduced, which applied to every settlement made by a trader "not being a settlement made before, and in consideration of, marriage or made in favour of a purchaser or incumbrancer, in good faith and for valuable consideration, or a settlement made on or for the wife or children of the settlor of property which has accrued to the settlor after marriage in right of his wife." The deed in this case was clearly invalid, and the trustee under the liquidation was entitled to the property comprised in it. Appeal dismissed.

IN RE J. STAMMERS WEBB.—Application was made in this case for the registration of resolutions alleged to have been passed by creditors in favour of liquidation by arrangement, and appointing a trustee. The debtor was a colliery proprietor, having offices in Gracechurch-street, and his liabilities, in addition to secured debts, amounted to £32,753, the assets being returned at £10,602. Mr Douglas Straight appeared for the debtor; Mr G. W. Hemming, Mr Horace Davey, and Mr Finlay Knight for creditors. From an examination of the debtor it was elicited that he had been engaged in some partnership transactions in connection with collieries and ships, the particulars of which did not appear in the statement of affairs. Mr. Registrar Keene held that the proceedings were defective, and, in accordance with the case of "ex-parte Cockayne, re Cockayne" refused to register the resolution.

IN RE KINGSFORD BROTHERS.—The debtors, Messrs Charles Kingsford and Charles Tomson Kingsford, millers, cornfactors, and biscuit-bakers, carrying on business at the Corn Exchange, Mark-lane, at 35, Seething-lane, and several other places, under the firm of Kingsford Brothers, have filed a petition for liquidation. Their liabilities are returned at £39,200, with assets £15,600, and it would appear that the debtors are engaged in outstanding contracts which require completion. Mr Watney applied, with the concurrence of creditors for £20,000, that Mr J. Ford, accountant, Cheapside, should be appointed receiver and manager of the property. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE WILLIAM HOULDER, SON, AND CO.—The Court also appointed a receiver and manager in this case. The debtors, who have petitioned under the liquidation clauses, are vitriol and chemical manufacturers, of Paul's Wharf, Upper Thames-street, and Southgate. Liabilities, £15,000, and assets estimated at about the same amount.

IN RE THOMAS KEEPING.—The bankrupt was a stock and sharebroker and dealer in shares, late of Copthall-court, Throgmorton-street. He was adjudicated upon the ground that he departed out of England in April last with intent to defeat or delay his creditors, and now failed to attend the sitting appointed for his public examination. At the first meeting several proofs were admitted, and a trustee appointed, but no accounts have been filed.—Upon the application of Mr Doria, on behalf of the trustee, his Honour ordered the usual memorandum to be entered.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

February 12.

(Before Mr. J. F. COLLIER, Judge.)

IN RE GEORGE HARDY.—This was an adjourned application by a trustee for an order to restrain his solicitor from sueing him for his bill of costs. The facts which we have already published, were shortly these:—Hardy, the bankrupt, a builder at Kirkdale, failed in February, 1871, and after unsuccessfully attempting to arrange with his creditors, was driven into the Bankruptcy Court, and at the first meeting of creditors one of their body (Mr J. P. M'Arthur, timber merchant), accepted the office of trustee. According to the bankrupt's statement, the liabilities were £1,115, and assets £347; but the latter item, instead of realizing that sum, appears, as is too frequently the case in bankruptcy to have vanished into thin air, for the trustee, after making certain preferential payments, found himself with a balance in hand of only £7 7s., and a solicitor's bill of £43 unpaid. Application was made by the solicitor, too, for payment of this bill, but it was resisted on the ground that there were no funds applicable to its discharge, and accordingly the solicitor instituted proceedings against the trustee, personally, for its recovery. The two questions now raised were, first, whether the court had any power to restrain the proceedings of the solicitor, and, second, assuming it had, whether the claim was one that the trustee could be relieved from, seeing that there was no estate. Mr Lewis Williams, instructed by Messrs Miller, Peel, and Hughes, appeared for the trustee; and Mr Potter for Mr Etty, the solicitor. The case stood adjourned for the cross-examination of the trustee, who had made an affidavit in support of his application. Long and exhaustive arguments were addressed to the court by the respective counsel, and the court afterwards reserved its judgment.

February 15.

ARRANGEMENTS WITH CREDITORS.—This application raised several points of importance affecting the validity of arrangements with creditors which purported to be within the purview of the present Act. A debtor, who carried on business in Liverpool as a speculator in cotton, early in the present year failed, and presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs by arrangement or composition. At the first meeting of creditors it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and to appoint a trustee. A further resolution was passed, but on a separate form, allowing the debtor his discharge on payment to the trustee of a sum of £1,500. The debtor's accounts disclosed liabilities £9,280, and assets £70. The resolution to liquidate was duly registered, and the one allowing the discharge was filed with the proceedings. A creditor for £1,000 who dissented from the liquidation commenced proceedings against the debtor for the recovery of his claim, and the present application was to restrain him from prosecuting these proceedings. Mr Potter, instructed by Messrs Batteson and Company, supported the application, and Mr Lupton, instructed by Messrs T. & T. Martin, for the dissentient creditor, opposed. Mr Potter said the present application was one which ought to be granted, unless the Court, as pointed out by rule 289, was of opinion that the rights of the dissentient creditor were prejudicially affected by the resolution, or that the estate would yield a larger dividend if administered in bankruptcy. Here the contrary was shown, as, in addition to the assets vested by the resolution in the trustee, the friends of the debtor had come forward to pay £1,500 for his discharge. By Rule 301 the passing of a special resolution to liquidate is deemed conclusive evidence that the debtor had complied with the provisions of the statute, and by section 127 the registration of such resolution is, in the absence of fraud, conclusive evidence that such resolution was duly passed, and the requisitions of the Act complied with. Mr. Lupton, in reply, urged that the resolutions were not binding on the dissentient creditor, inasmuch as they had been assented to by creditors to whom the debtor had given preferences, or made promises of payment at a future time. His Honour said that he could not, on the present application, go behind the resolution to liquidate, which appeared to be duly registered. It was true fraud vitiated everything, but the proper time to have raised that question was on the application to register, or by a substantive motion to cancel the registration. Mr. Lupton contended that the power to grant the injunction to restrain was purely discretionary with the court, and he proposed to adduce evidence to show that this was not a case in which it should exercise its discretion adversely to the creditor. He then called the trustee and several of the creditors, who on examination deposed that prior to the statutory meeting of creditors a preliminary meeting was held, and that to one ot the hostile creditors a promise of payment of part of his debt in full had been made. It further appeared that the discharge of the debtor was granted on the understanding that only a portion of the creditors were to participate in the £1,500. This condition, Mr Lupton contended, was at variance with the policy of the Bankruptcy Act, which contemplated an equal division of the assets amongst all the creditors. Either, he said, those excluded from the arrangement were not creditors at all, or they must have consented to be excluded from friendly feelings to the debtor: but in either case the resolution was not a genuine expression of the wishes of the creditors. He cited a case decided in the Court of Appeal on Friday last, in which it was held that resolutions passed from kindly feelings to a debtor could not bind dissentient creditors. There was nothing morally wrong in creditors agreeing to such resolutions, but it was impossible that they could have been passed bona fide for the benefit of the general body of creditors. By the acceptance of the £1,500 the future earnings of the debtor were released, and the Act contemplated in cases of liquidation that he should not be so released till he had paid 20s. in the pound. The estate of a liquidating debtor did not simply comprise what he might possess at the date of the liquidation, but all that he might hereafter acquire until he had paid 20s. in the pound, and no resolutions which deprived creditors of this right could bind dissentient creditors unless they were passed bona fide. His Honour said he much doubted the propriety of having permitted the case to proceed to the length it had, as he was strongly of opinion that the question of the validity of the resolution by which the creditors allowed the discharge did not affect the present application. All that he had to satisfy himself upon was whether there had been a resolution to liquidate duly registered, and, if so, whether it was to the interest of the general body of creditors that the proceedings of the dissentient creditor should be restrained. The resolutions he found were registered, and it followed, almost as a matter of course, by the terms of the 289th rule, that every creditor, in respect of a provable debt, must be restrained, unless it was shown that such creditor was prejudicially affected by the resolution. Here the resolution was to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and to vest it in a trustee for equal distribution amongst all the creditors, and he could hardly conceive how, by such a course, one creditor could be more prejudicially affected than another. The separate resolution to allow the debtor his discharge was not before him on the present application, and could not be considered. The order to restrain the creditor, therefore, must be allowed. Ordered accordingly.

MANCHESTER COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr J. A. RUSSELL, Q.C., Judge.)

An application was heard in this Court involving a question under the 49th section of the Debtors' Act, 1869. The application was made by Mr Ambrose, Q.C. (with him Mr Jordan), on behalf of Mr G. F. Freeman for the dismissal of a debtor's summons taken out against him. The summons was taken out for a judgment debt by the Broughton Copper Company (Limited), for whom there appeared to support the summons Mr Williams, Q.C., and Mr Taylor. Mr Freeman, a metal agent and commission merchant, was a liquidating debtor, and had lately received his order of discharge, and the question to be decided by the Court was, whether the debt for which the summons was taken out was or was not barred by the order of discharge according to the 49th section of the Act. Under that section the order of discharge did not relieve a debtor from any liability which he had incurred through fraud. The debt in respect of which this summons was taken out was made up of a sum of £300 awarded to the Broughton Copper Company by the verdict of a jury in a case brought by them at the Liverpool Assizes against the plaintiff, and of the costs incident to that action. One of the counts on the record on which the jury's verdict was based, stated that Mr Freeman, having been employed as the agent of the plaintiff to purchase for them old copper rollers, neglected in certain cases where he was able to do so, to purchase such rollers for the plaintiffs, and purchased them on his own account and for his own profit, in violation of his duty. It was contended by Mr Ambrose and Mr Jordan that in the verdict given, only a breach of contract was implied, and no breach of trust, or fraud; and in reply to Mr Williams and Mr Taylor, who said they were ready to prove that Mr Freeman's liability was incurred by fraud, they held that it was not now competent to bring such proof. It was the judgment that made this debt, and if the record upon which the judgment was obtained did not allege fraud, counsel contended that evidence of fraud could not now be adduced. Mr Ambrose, however, stated that if the facts were gone into he would show that there was in reality no fraud. After a long argument, which the Judge described as very able on both sides, his Honour decided that, as the declaration in the record charging Freeman with a double breach of contract, involving a deprivation of the Copper Company's profits as well as a violation of Freeman's duty, had been found by the jury to be true, it was open to the company now to bring evidence as to whether for the whole or any part of the sum for which the summons was taken out, he was liable through his own fraud. To decide for how much he was so liable, his Honour ordered an issue to be tried at the Manchester Assizes.

At the Manchester County Court, on the 11th inst., an application was made by Mr Taylor on behalf of the trustee in the estate in liquidation of Mr John Grimshaw, woollen manufacturer, Rochdale, to compel the payment of £115 by Mr Thomas Bamford, the brother-in-law of the debtor. Mr Bamford was bookkeeper to the debtor, and a few days before the filing of the petition he had received £115 on the debtor's behalf. Bamford pleaded a set-off in the shape of an account he had against Grimshaw, but the bill having been received by the debtor himself and not by Bamford, his Honour decided that the trustee's claim upon the money was a good one. He made an order for the payment of the money to the trustee.

COLCHESTER COUNTY COURT.

At the monthly sitting of this Court, the Registrar, Mr J. S. Barnes, was engaged several hours in hearing an application in the bankruptcy of Freeman Parsons, late of the Star and Fleece, Kelvedon, by Mr Alfred John Shorten, veterinary surgeon, of Ipswich, a creditor for £413 19s. 6d., whose proof had been rejected by the trustee, Mr W. H. Cobb. Mr J. M. Pollard of Ipswich represented Mr Shorten, and Mr H. Jones appeared on behalf of the trustee. Mr Shorton's proof stated that the bankrupt was indebted to him in the sum of £413 19s. 6d., being £380 "balance of money lent, advanced, and paid by me, to and for the said Freeman Parsons, and for goods sold and delivered by me to him, and £33 19s. 6d. for interest on such sum of £380." As security for this sum, Mr Shorten held a bill of sale. Mr Jones said his objections to admit the claim were these: The sums were not owing to Mr Shorten; they were not lent, advanced, or paid by him to the bankrupt; and from the divers books, papers, and accounts, Mr Shorten did not appear to be a creditor but a debtor to the said estate. Another objection was that Mr Shorten and Mr Parsons were partners. The case has been before the court on several occasions. After a long argument, Mr Jones contended that so far as the capital invested in the horse letting business was concerned, they could not prove; but with regard to the half yearly receipts, which showed a profit, there he thought Mr Shorten was entitled to prove against the estate, because it was a debt fixed and determined between themselves. The fact that he was a partner preventing him proving. The accounts showed that the partnership was treated by both as existing long after the date of the execution of the bill of sale. The Registrar reserved his judgment until the next court.

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS IN SCOTLAND.

On the 11th inst. the examination took place of Hart, Macfarlane, and Co., merchants, Glasgow, and James William Hart and George Macfarlane, both merchants in Glasgow, the individual partners of that company, as such partners, and also as individual partners of Macfarlane, Blair, and Co., merchants in San Francisco, and the said Jas. Wm. Hart, as an individual partner of the firm of Hart, Blair, and Co., merchants, San Francisco. The bankrupt, James William Hart, deposed that he was senior partner of the firm of Hart, Macfarlane, and Co. That firm commenced business in the month of August, 1865. At first the business was fairly prosperous down to the end of 1872, at which time the capital at the credit of the partners amounted to £15,000. In 1873 their business was less prosperous, and during that year transactions which were closed in the course of it showed a loss of £15,000. During 1874 their losses continued, arising out of a number of chartered party engagements they had entered into in 1873, which they had gone into under the advice of their San Francisco house, and it was on their account that they were made. Their total losses on transactions for 1873 and 1874 amounted to about £78,000, which included partners' capital. The liabilities of the bankrupts amount to £66,556, and the assets to about £9,000, which, however, depend upon the realisation of shipments to San Francisco.

George Hunter, Contractor, Port Hopetoun.—On Monday this examination was resumed before the Commissioner, at the residence of the bankrupt, No. 10, Archibald-place, Edinburgh. The bankrupt underwent an examination of over three hours. He was asked—Did you ever give any one to understand that you could bring particular pressure to bear upon Mr Kidd in order to make him of service to you, irrespective of his being your clerk? Certainly not. I never led any one to believe that I had a hold over Mr Kidd. I told Mr. Nicholson I wanted the books brought to Edinburgh for the sake of handing them over to the trustee. I gave the same reason to Kidd. I said to Kidd, who went to Ratho for the books, that I wanted them brought in for fear they might be tampered with. I don't know that the books were brought into the office except from what Kidd said. When making up the state of affairs with Nicholson and Anderson no books were referred to, and I don't think a single book was brought out, and the state of affairs was entirely made up from memory, and from accounts lodged. I have no reason to suspect anybody of having removed the books. I can tell of no motive which anybody would have to remove the books. I don't believe Kidd has made away with or destroyed any of the books. Prior to the sequestration I asked Kidd whether he had brought everything from Ratho, and he told me he had. I never destroyed any books, or gave instructions to that effect, and am very vexed that any books should have disappeared. I don't know of any one but myself and the trustee to whom these books could be of value. At the close the statutory oath was administered.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

February 12.

(Before Judge Miller.)

In re Henry Anderson.—The bankrupt had been agent to the Ironmongers' estate in Londonderry. He was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 1st July, 1873, but afterwards effected an arrangement with his creditors. He was indebted to the Ironmongers' Company, and previous to his bankruptcy he had obtained a loan of £500 from James Hayden on a policy of insurance effected on his life with the Scottish Life Insurance Company, assigning as a security certain interest derived by him under the will of Sir James Anderson. The Ironmongers' Company agreed after bankruptcy to lodge £800 in court for distribution among the creditors if they had assigned to them all the interest in the bankrupt's property, which was accordingly done. They afterwards, however, filed a charge for the sale of the bankrupt's interest under the will of Sir James Anderson. Mr Hayden filed a discharge, and the case having been argued, stood for judgment, which Judge Miller pronounced, disallowing the charge filed, but directing each party to pay their own costs.

NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

February 18.

(Before Mr. R. Wildman, Judge.)

In re Farmer and Brown, lace manufacturers, of Stoney-street, Nottingham.—Mr. W. A. Richards appeared for the trustee, and Mr. Gilbert for the bankrupts. Mr. Richards said that on the accounts supplied during a certain period there was no account rendered showing how goods were disposed of. Their purchases during the time amounted to nearly £4,000. In May last the bankrupts' estate was shown to be worth £12,000, with a deficiency of £300. In August last they filed a petition showing a deficiency of nearly £7,000. This was a very great depreciation of the estate of the bankrupts, and he wished for an adjournment of the bankrupts' examination sine die.—Mr. Gilbert stated that the trading of the bankrupts was of the ordinary lace manufacturing kind. He also alleged that the bankrupts had furnished the best accounts they could. They had informed him that no better accounts could be produced. The Registrar said the bankrupts had filed no accounts; no accounts of their sales for four months. The accounts they had supplied showed from whom the goods had been purchased, but did not show how they had been disposed of. Not even a single sale had been recorded. The bankrupts had not complied with the order of the Court. Mr. Gilbert—I think we have partly complied with it, although not altogether. His Honour—It is necessary that you should supply an account showing how the goods were disposed of. The examination eventually stood adjourned sine die.

Mr. L. Boecker, who for many years kept the French Restaurant in Idol-lane, City, where he gained a reputation for his recherché dinners, notifies that he has undertaken the management of the restaurant in connection with the well-known "Bodega" Wine Stores, 13, Oxford-street, near Tottenham Court-road. Mr. Boecker's liberal style of catering will no doubt secure him many regular customers amongst the general public in addition to his old city connection.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—Messrs James Holroyd and Co., woollen manufacturers and merchants, of Leeds, and Barnard Castle, announce that they are compelled to suspend payment. The unsecured liabilities are said to amount to £50,000, and the assets reach about the same sum. Mr Holroyd says that up to two years ago he had a very successful business in Leeds and a considerable capital, and it had been lost within that limited period. His books had been placed in the hands of Messrs. Simpson and Burrell, of Leeds. At the Birmingham County Court on Wednesday a petition for liquidation was filed on behalf of William Wadhams, farmer and grazier, of Perry Barr and Great Barr, and also carrying on business at Wood End, Walsall. The liabilities were estimated at £10,000, and assets £1,000 or thereabouts.

AMERICA.—New York advices announce the failure of Mr Wm. Redmond, jr., stockbroker, 18, Exchange place. Messrs C. G. Harger and Son, private bankers, Watertown, New York, had stopped. The firm of Ames, Sherman, and Co., wholesale dealers in hats, caps, and straw goods, had gone into voluntary bankruptcy, with liabilities estimated at $133,410, and assets at $39,252, composed chiefly of outstanding debts. The liabilities of the Cook County National Bank, Chicago, lately suspended, amount to about £160,000; the assets will, it is believed, cover that sum. New York advices state that Messrs Turner Bros., who suspended some months ago, have resumed business. It was reported that the People's Savings Bank, St. Louis, Mo., had stopped.

The Buenos Ayres Standard states that the wool clip this year will give a deficit of 15,000 to 20,000 bales. There have been numerous suspensions and failures. Some of the largest property holders have become either bankrupts or insolvent debtors. Some old-established foreign importers of horses have been obliged to suspend business, notwithstanding that the debtors owe them millions. All large importing houses show splendid sales, large assets, but not one dollar which at the present moment can be collected.

American advices state that a well-known merchant in the city of Mexico had absconded, leaving behind him liabilities of £120,000. Several small firms, it was feared, would be compelled to yield in consequence.

It was reported on Tuesday that a leading firm of merchants engaged in the woollen trade at Malaga had suspended payment, with heavy liabilities. The chief losses will fall on the Huddersfield manufacturers.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following meetings of creditors have been held during the week:—

W. H. HARDY (LEICESTER).—At the meeting of creditors, it was resolved that a composition of twelve shillings in the pound be accepted, payable by four instalments, three at 3s. 4d. each, payable at three, six, and nine months from the date of meeting, and a final instalment of 2s. in the pound, payable at twelve months. The liabilities amount to £6,911 11s. 6d.

Advices from Melbourne state that a meeting of the creditors of Mr William Strickland, brewer, Colac, had been held. The statement of liabilities showed the indebtedness to amount to £6,000, the assets being estimated at within £50 of the liabilities. It was agreed to assign the estate to two of the creditors present. A meeting of creditors in the estate of Messrs Squire and Freeman, timber merchants, St Kilda, had also been held. The liabilities amount to about £5,000. The assets show a nominal deficiency of £700. It was resolved to put the estate in liquidation by arrangement under the act, DEFAULTING TRUSTEES.—The Law Times is responsible for the following:—"Since the commencement of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and up to the end of last year, thirteen trustees have been removed from their office, eighteen have become bankrupt, twelve have been ordered to be committed for contempt of court, and forty-five are not to be found. Several trustees have been charged 20 per cent. interest, under sect. 30, for retaining in their hands moneys belonging to the estates."

NEW COMPANIES.

The Investors' Guardian furnishes the particulars relative to the following Companies, registered during the week:—

Bell Mill—Capital £20,000, in £5 shares.
Bischof's Patent Spongy Iron Filter—Capital £30,000, in £10 shares.
Blackpool Skating Rink—Capital £3,000, in £25 shares.
Borough of Wenlock Conservative Newspaper—Capital £1,000, in £1 shares.
Coldhurst Cotton-Spinning—Capital £50,000, in £5 shares.

AMERICAN BANKRUPTCY LAWS.—An American critic writes as follows:—"The views which we expressed in the last number of the Review in reference to the policy of the amendments to this Act made at the last session of Congress, have only been confirmed by what we have seen of its working since. As the law stands to-day, we have no system which can be relied on to secure the equal distribution of a bankrupt's assets among his creditors. The State insolvent laws are suspended, and there is no efficient substitute. The result is that preferences are the rule; and, instead of an equal division, we have the scramble for the lion's share of the plunder, which it is one object of bankrupt legislation to prevent. The effect of all the cunningly devised protections to fraud with which the amendments were filled has been nicely calculated by the business community, and rogues prosper at the expense of honest men. We do not hesitate to say that it would be better to repeal the law altogether than to retain it in its present shape. We regret to find that this opinion is not shared by some of our contemporaries, as, for example, the Chicago Legal News, which remarks with evident gratification, 'It would be almost as much of a task to restore the old order of things in bankruptcy as it would to restore the Fugitive Slave Law.' The News is hostile to the old system, because 'it treated every man who was in embarrassed circumstances as a scoundrel, and gave an honest debtor no chance to turn himself,' and because 'it has been the ruination of thousands of honest men, who, if they had had the forty days allowed by the present law, would have been able to save themselves from bankruptcy.' In reply to these arguments, we can only call the attention of the News to two facts, tolerably familiar to business men: "first, that the creditors of an honest debtor, in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred, are even more anxious to keep him out of bankruptcy than he is to keep out, since to put him in is only to diminish their dividends by the expenses of the proceedings; second, that a debtor rarely, if ever, fails to meet his commercial paper, except by accident, until he has made every effort to 'turn himself,' has exhausted every expedient, and insolvency can no longer be deferred. Fourteen days is long enough to determine whether the failure to pay is merely accidental. Certainly, after a deliberate failure a debtor's condition rarely improves within forty days so that he can resume. The extended time now allowed, therefore, is valuable merely to the debtor, and to him because he is enabled to make arrangements that will prevent bankruptcy, or at least will make its processes of little benefit to creditors."

DEATH OF MR. JOHN GURNEY HOARE.—Telegraphic intelligence of the death of Mr. J. G. Hoare, at Biarritz, on Tuesday last, at the age of 64, was received on Wednesday at the well-known banking-house of which he was senior partner. The deceased had been for some time under treatment for Bright's disease.

A DRAWER'S RIGHT TO STOP A CHEQUE.—The decision given by the Court of Exchequer Chamber, in the case of "Glyns v. Mesa," as to the right of a drawer of a cheque to stop payment of it, will give satisfaction, we think, to all business men. The decision is to the effect that a cheque is to be treated as any other bill of exchange, rendering the drawer liable to be sued upon it, if unpaid, by any bonâ fide holder, who is not affected by an "equity" attaching to the party to whom or on whose account the cheque was given. The circumstances of the present case were that the plaintiffs, being the bankers of Messrs. Lizardi, who failed two years ago, pressed them for payment of their overdraughts or for additional security, and when doing so, on the eve of the failure, received from them an order on the defendants to pay the amount of two bills for £2,000, for which order the defendants gave the plaintiffs the cheque now in question, which the latter immediately placed to the credit of Lizardi's account. The defendants, hearing meanwhile that Lizardi had stopped payment, instructed their bankers not to pay the cheque, upon which the plaintiffs immediately sued. Two points were thus raised—one, whether the exchange of the order from Lizardi on the defendants for a cheque by the latter was a consideration between them and the plaintiffs; and the other, whether the plaintiffs had not in any case a good title to the cheque, even if they had received it direct form Messrs. Lizardi, on the ground that, being given for an antecedent debt, there was a valid consideration which prevented them from being affected by the equities attaching to Lizardi. The Court below had given most attention to the first point, holding that the giving up of the order on the defendants to pay the amount was a valid consideration for the cheque as between the plaintiffs and the defendants; but the Court of Error now went further, and decided, with reference to the second point exclusively, that "a negotiable security given for such a purpose is a conditional payment of the debt," and, being taken by the creditor as "money's worth," is as truly his property as the money which it represents would have been if paid in Bank of England notes or coin. The defence had been that a cheque was different from a bill of exchange at however short a date, because in the latter case the creditor gave delay to his original debtor, and this was a consideration entitling the creditor to proceed against the drawer, while there was no such consideration in reference to a cheque payable immediately; but the Court, it will be seen, refused to recognise the distinction, and has placed a cheque on the same footing as other bills of exchange. It is to be regretted, perhaps, that the Court was not unanimous, Lord Justice Coleridge having dissented from his colleagues in an elaborate judgment, on the ground that a cheque is not a bill of exchange, but an instrument sui generis; but the common sense of the matter is so plain that we hope there is no chance of an appeal or an alteration of the law as now settled.—Economist.

SOLICITORS IN THE COMMON COUNCIL.—Mr. Thomas Beard, solicitor, of Basinghall-street, City of London, for some years a member of the Common Council, has been elected chairman of the Officers' and Clerks' Committee of the Corporation, another solicitor, in the person of Mr. Frederick Kent, is chairman of the Law, Parliamentary, and City Courts Committee of the same municipality, and there are besides fifteen other solicitors in the Corporation of London in addition to the Lord Mayor.—Law Times.

SCOTCH BANKS.—As the question of the legal right of Scotch banks to open branches out of Scotland while retaining there note issues will, if possible, be discussed in the House of Commons this Session, it is important that the points at issue should be rightly understood, and with this object in view we submit the following remarks for consideration:—It has for a great number of years been the policy of the Legislature to prevent London banks from issuing bank-notes, and it has always been considered just that under these circumstances English banks possessing a circulation should be prevented from carrying on a banking business in the metropolis. This limitation, however, was not imposed on Scotch banks, doubtless because it was not supposed that they would open branches out of Scotland. By the Acts of 1844 and 1845 the banknote circulations of England and Scotland were subjected to new regulations. Those which relate to England were of a very stringent character, and have in fact reduced the country bank circulation of England from nine millions to six, while the Act is so framed that the English banks can only avail themselves practically of about three-fourths of this amount. English banks of issue are, moreover, still prohibited from opening branches in London or within 65 miles of it, unless, of course, they are prepared to give up their right of issue; and, in fact, the National Provincial Bank of England, which had the largest country circulation, has recently abandoned it because they were anxious to establish a branch in London. The Scotch banks possess much greater privileges, in consequence of which their circulation has considerably increased, and, what is of more importance, they practically enjoy a monopoly of the banking of Scotland. Since the year 1845 new banks have been opened in almost every part of England, but not a single new bank has been established in Scotland, while, on the contrary, several of those then in existence have ceased to exist. While these English banks of issue are precluded from opening branches in London, or within 65 miles, one or two Scotch banks have of late years opened agencies in London. Neither her Majesty's Government nor the Bank of England took any notice of this at the time, being no doubt under the belief that these establishments would be mere agencies and not actual branches; for it must be explained that English banks of issue may have, and some of them have long had, agencies in London, and with this right, which would also naturally be conceded to Scotch banks, it is not proposed to interfere. Within the last few months the Clydesdale Bank has opened three branches in the North of England. It cannot be supposed that Sir Robert Peel, while excluding English banks of issue from London, should have intended to allow Scotch banks, possessing even more exclusive privileges, to establish themselves there; and it is proposed, therefore, to provide for what was evidently a casus omissus, by subjecting the Scotch banks of issue in this respect to the restriction already imposed on English banks of issue. But more than this, the English country banks, while ready to face any competition on fair and equal terms, submit to Parliament that if Scotch banks desire to establish themselves in England, it is only reasonable to ask that before doing so they should surrender their present exclusive privileges, and become subject to the conditions imposed on all English banks. The English non-issuing banks have no wish to interfere with the issuing English banks so long as their privileges are exercised in accordance with the spirit and intentions of the Acts of 1844-5; but, subject to this, they submit that all banks doing business in England should do so on fair and equal terms. That these views are not confined to England may be seen from the very able article in the Scotsman of the 13th of October last. Under these circumstances it is proposed, as a measure which we believe would be considered just and equitable to all parties, that Scotch banks having special privileges of issue should be required to abandon those privileges if they propose to open branches in England, and that a similar condition as regards Scotland should in like manner be imposed on banks of issue in England.—Times.

At the meeting of the Corporation of Foreign Bondholders on Wednesday, Messrs Johnstone, Wintle, Cooper, and Co. were re-elected auditors of the corporation for the ensuing year.

WINDING-UP.—A petition is to be heard in the Court of Chancery on the 26th instant for the winding up of the Britannia Engineering Company (Limited).—Vice Chancellor Sir Charles Hall has made an order to wind up the Battersea Foundry and Horse-shoe Works (Limited), and has appointed Mr Frederick Whinney official liquidator.

After remaining just three weeks at 3 per cent., the Bank rate was on Thursday raised to 3½.

Mr Robert A. M'Lean notifies that he has withdrawn from the firm of Barnard, Clarke, M'Lean, and Co., public accountants, and that he will continue to carry on the business in his own name, and on his own behalf.

HOBBS, HART, & CO.,
AT THE VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION
This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.
"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.
N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.

It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

The Accountant

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Accountant is now Published Weekly: a change dating from the commencement of the present year, and which, it is hoped, will enhance the value and usefulness of the paper, and also tend to promote one of the main objects for which it was started—viz., the advancement of the interests of accountants throughout the United Kingdom. The proprietor ventures to hope that his efforts in this direction will meet with the appreciation and satisfaction of the subscribers, and be deemed deserving of increased support on their part, particularly in regard to advertisements, a valuable aid to a newspaper which accountants especially can render in the ordinary course of business. It may be added that the publication of the paper weekly will constitute the Accountant a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession will thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Weekly Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant may fairly hope for a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the Accountant, 127, Strand.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of cases for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The insurance companies have had some sharp blows lately, and it is to be hoped that they may be somewhat more modest in the future. Nothing can be more amusing than the air of benevolence which these bodies assume. The pamphlets that they circulate, telling of the good working man who insured his life, and who, being presumably too good to live, died in thankful conviction that his children were provided for, while the wicked working man, who would not insure, or who was one of those customers of the Prudential who are always letting their policies lapse, died unrepentant, leaving his family to starve, or be supported out of the rates paid by the enriched representatives of his excellent brother-in-toil—are unphilosophically amusing, and presume a little too much on the childish spirit of their readers, for it is obvious that so many losses would soon reduce the most solvent office to absolute ruin. Then the piteous complaints of the chairmen at annual meetings that the public will not come and insure without being canvassed by personal solicitation, flaming placard, or dexterously-worded advertisement, are amusing to those sceptics who reflect that all this benevolent anxiety for the public good is combined with a strong hankering after dividends. Discredit has been thrown on insurance companies principally with reference to their solvency, but two cases which we report this week throw some light on another danger to insurers, and one that is far too little regarded.

We have in a previous article pointed out the difficulty that there is in ascertaining the true financial position of any office. But a still greater difficulty lurks in the conditions. As to these Lord St. Leonards' opinion is well known. He distinctly stated that few policies were so framed as to render the company legally liable. Without quite assenting to this doctrine, we may lay down that few insurers know how much they are at the mercy of the companies, and how much they owe, not to their strict legal rights, but to the so-called "liberality of the company." The conditions, drawn up with every refinement of technical skill and legal cunning, are framed entirely in the interest of the insurers, and may be a serious hindrance to claimants. Lord St. Leonards' assertion is perhaps too sweeping, but there is certainly within our personal knowledge at least, one company whose conditions are so framed as to make a strict compliance with them impossible, and to enable the company to press cruelly on poor and weak insurers. And, then, as a rule, the insurance companies are the spoilt favourites of the judges. They are doubtless peculiarly liable to fraud, and it has been thought wise to strengthen their hands, and to strain and wrest the ordinary rules of construction in their favour. This has been taken advantage of, till the great rule for a company in dealing with its customers is conceived in the spirit which induced the bagman in Punch to ask the waiter what was the smallest sum he could give him without being considered mean; and induces them to try to compound for the minimum which will be accepted, without the "liberality" of the office being questioned, or the customer resorting to law; and a judicious use of their conditions is very effectual in producing this result.

It is, however, possible to be a little too technical, and this was the misfortune of the "Universal Non-Tariff Fire Insurance Company;" for though Vice-Chancellor Malins attributed their error to their insolvent condition, it is pretty certain that companies nominally solvent have taken similar objections. Their first condition was in the common form as to misdescription, and omission to state any fact material to be known for estimating the risk, though drawn less stringently than is the case in some policies we have seen. A fire took place, and the insured sent in a claim. The ground of resistance was that part of the property destroyed was roofed with felt, and that this was a misdescription. The answer of the insured was that this only affected a very small portion, and that the agent of the company had surveyed the property and fixed the premium. This, by the way, happened in Lord St. Leonards' case, and was then stated to be no protection. The company vainly endeavoured to repudiate the act of their agent, and contended, in compliance with a theory much in favour with insurance offices, that he was not their agent, but that of the insured. The Vice-Chancellor decided against them, on the ground mainly that their objections were not only frivolous, but such as could only have been resorted to by persons in so desperate a condition as to catch at any straw. But the case is none the less a very useful precedent. The insurance companies, we believe, contend that the agent who effects the insurance is merely the channel to convey premium and proposal to their office, and is not to be held to fix them with any responsibility for what he says and does. In so far as Vice-Chancellor Malins has disposed of this doctrine, he has made a great step towards freeing the body of insured from the galling fetters of musty precedent. As regards the materiality of the misdescription, he expressed no decided opinion. We wish he had stated boldly that such a misdescription would affect only the part of the property to which it applied, and that the cases of concealment are material only when a fire results from the operation of the facts which have been concealed.

Almost simultaneously with the case we have commented upon, an action against a Life Insurance Company had a similarly happy result. For thirty years, Mr. John Wells paid his premiums to the "Great Britain Society." The last premium fell due during his illness, and no notice was sent from the office as usual, or even then it would have been paid. On this ground the society claimed that all benefit from the insurance was forfeited. The "Great Britain" it must be noted is high in its rates, and it may be safely estimated that there is a gain to any company if the premiums have been paid for thirty years. However the directors, while repudiating any liability, offered to place the matter before the shareholders; but the solicitors for the plaintiff wisely brought their action at once without waiting to have a portion of their claim paid to them as a charity, with many shrieks of "liberality." Mr. Justice Brett severely commented on the conduct of the Company, which certainly richly deserved his censure. In fact the conditions of insurance companies ought to be like the bye-laws of railways—good only as far as they are reasonable, and to say that the failure to pay a last instalment when the amount insured has been more than made up, shall act as a forfeiture of the whole is wholly unfair and unreasonable. We hope that future judicial decisions may be as just and righteous as these which we have recorded.

The salary of Mr. Monckton, Town Clerk of the City of London, has been increased from £1,500 to £2,000 a year.

The case of Charlton v. Hay, which has just been terminated in so unsatisfactory a manner, affords a fresh illustration of what we have so often insisted on—the danger of amateurism in matters of business. A thorough sifting, by properly-trained professional men would soon have explained the fraud. Baron Grant at once saw through the scheme, and Mr. Mowatt was equally clear in his condemnation. But Mr. Torrens, in the face of all warning, seems to have been strangely unsuspicious as to the reality of the vendors' statements. Then, again, the persons sent out to examine the oil works were Mr. Eastwick—a man of undoubted integrity, but utterly unfit to undertake the investigation—and a young engineer, who was chosen because he was the son of one of the directors. How completely they were fooled is now a matter of history. The Lord Chief Justice spoke, in his charge to the jury, of the conduct of Mr. James Waddell, the accountant. It is much to be wished, in the interest of all concerned, that Mr. Waddell had been retained to visit Canada. A man of his training and experience would very soon have detected the frauds in connection with the railway invoices, and the pretended books of accounts, and even without the aid of a mining engineer, would have stopped the swindle in its inception. Amateur directors are fast falling into universal discredit. In future, let intending shareholders insist upon inquiry into schemes being made by independent men of position and character, each working in his own calling. To decline professional assistance on the ground of saving expense is an act the consequences of which are soon felt in litigation and ruin.

We hope that under the proposed amendments to the present Act, a portion of the existing red tape will be done away with, and the unremunerative work of the trustee be thereby reduced to a minimum. In small estates where the assets are insufficient to cover costs, it not unfrequently happens that the bankruptcy is kept open owing to the reluctance of the trustee to increase his loss by the expenses consequent upon closing; and that the eventual offer to annul, (accepted by the creditors perhaps out of sympathy for the trustee and solicitor) barely suffice to make good the costs and charges, a large proportion of which represent audits of the trustees payments and other formalities, which, however desirable in large estates, are of no possible advantage in poor ones.

In article No. 4, we advised trustees to take their instructions as to the course to be pursued at the public examination of a bankrupt in the form of a resolution by the Committee of Inspection.

This view has been confirmed by Mr. Registrar Roche, who on the 23rd inst., when sitting as Chief Judge, laid it down as a trustee's duty to consult his inspectors, and to take their direction by resolution in order that the court might be in possession of the written views of the creditors' representatives.

Coming back to the point at which we made a divergence. Within six months of his appointment the trustee, if he has not declared a dividend, should call a general meeting of creditors to report the position of the estate and offer explanations as to the reason for such non-payment. Where the trustee is so fortunate as to have the administration of an estate which has enabled him to declare a dividend, such a meeting is not requisite.

In taking steps to declare a dividend, the trustee should give a long notice of intended dividend; we advise a month clear.

The trustee must be careful not to overlook any claim which may be mentioned in the statement of affairs; and where there is a difficulty in arriving at an estimate of the eventual claim—as for instance creditors holding security—he should apply to them in writing for particulars, and if possible, obtain from them a valuation enabling him to estimate the ultimate result. Even if a creditor neglects to send in his claim, the trustee must in his declaration of dividend make a reservation, or his neglect to do so will entail a personal responsibility.

As soon as the estate has been realized and distributed, the trustee should take steps to close the bankruptcy and obtain his discharge.

The formalities requisite thereto, are so distinctly laid down by the act and rules, that there is no necessity to give them in extenso here, and, as since these articles were announced, the prospect of material changes in the Act have become more certain; we shall in our next article direct attention to composition and liquidation which run parallel, up to the first meeting of creditors, and then diverge.

REVIEWS.

Bankruptcy Legislation. By George Wreford. London: 1875. Effingham Wilson.

(SECOND NOTICE.)

We make no apology for returning to Mr Wreford's book, because a second careful perusal has confirmed the opinion we expressed last week as to its practical merits. And we think that we shall make a great step towards that full investigation of the working of the Bankruptcy Acts, which is so desirable, and in which our correspondents can so often assist us by recounting their personal experience, if we extract from Mr Wreford's work various alterations which he suggests, and invite free discussion upon them.

The first suggestions we have to call attention to are, as to the alteration of the proxy system, and what is closely connected with it—the remuneration of trustees. As to this we agree with Mr Wreford's observations at page 33:—

"A creditor should only be empowered to appoint as his proxy either another creditor in the matter, whose debt is above £10, or some person in his own permanent employment. A proxy should be only available at one specified meeting. No creditor should represent by proxy more than a certain number of the other creditors. The remuneration of a trustee should not be fixed by resolution of creditors, but should be in accordance with a prescribed scale of per centage on assets realized. A trustee should not be remunerated by time engaged, as such a system is really a direct premium on delay. But this remark does not apply where an accountant is employed to investigate a bankrupt's accounts or to prepare balance sheets. When so engaged, remuneration for time occupied may be a reasonable mode of payment. And on this point it is considered that the present bankruptcy scale does not afford an adequate remuneration for the services of a really able accountant, when engaged in elucidating intricate or complicated transactions. The writer is also fully aware from his own experience that any per centage scale on assets realized would, in certain cases, be but a sorry remuneration for the serious risks incurred, and the great labour and time bestowed by a professional trustee in endeavouring properly to discharge his duties, and carry out the instructions of the creditors in relation to the winding up of a bankrupt's estate. To meet such exceptional cases provision might be made for the grant of an additional allowance by the creditors, under a special resolution setting forth the grounds for such extra allowance. But to guard against the malpractices at present prevailing a trustee should be strictly precluded from voting on the question of his own remuneration, and any special resolution for remuneration in excess of the prescribed scale should require the approval of the Court before being operative."

Mr Wreford adds that in his view the Court should have a veto on the appointment of the trustee, and should, on the representation of the dissentient minority of creditors, examine into his fitness, and, if necessary, call upon the majority to make a fresh appointment. On no account should a relative or any person connected with the bankrupt, or the Registrar of the County Court, be appointed. He advocates, also, the approval and registration of "a class of persons, presumably accountants," from whom trustees might be selected. With these suggestions we agree.

We cannot join in Mr Wreford's proposal to free after-acquired property of an undischarged bankrupt absolutely, after the lapse of four years, though we agree with him that the functions of the trustee might be made to cease at an earlier period, and the creditors individually left to their remedy. It is early as yet to test the working of this portion of the Act, but we are decidedly of opinion that the Act should be administered in the interest of creditors, and that sufficient facilities exist already for shifty debtors without adding to their number. Again, with regard to sections 72 and 92, as to the jurisdiction of the Courts and "fraudulent preferences," Mr Wreford's objections come to this, that the Court is a little too much inclined to rely on precedent and not stretch its powers. How does it happen that a jury decided what constituted an act of bankruptcy, (p. 43?) Surely this is a question of pure law, and not for a jury to pronounce upon at all. We should like some fuller reference to this case. The trickery with regard to bills of sale will be met, we hope, by the passing into law of Mr Lopes' Act. Liquidations are undoubtedly much liable to abuse, and the sketch of the proceedings which Mr Wreford gives is very clear and accurate. His improved system is as follows:—

"A debtor desirous of having his estate liquidated should file a petition for that purpose with the consent of one or more creditors for £20, in which petition he should admit his inability to pay his debts, and should consent to the Court adjudging him bankrupt in the event of his creditors objecting to a liquidation and resolving on bankruptcy. He should, thereupon, file a list of his creditors and statement of his assets in duplicate, and the registrar should summon a first meeting of creditors as in bankruptcy; but giving, in addition to the notice required in bankruptcy, a notice by post to each creditor. The meeting should, as a rule, be held within 14 days of the filing of the petition. A return of each petition filed in the country should be made by the registrar to the London Court, and the duplicate list of creditors and statement of assets should also be forwarded. The filing of a petition should act as an interim injunction against all proceedings, as proposed with regard to a bankruptcy petition. The registrar should protect the debtor's property till the first meeting, as in bankruptcy, either as provisional trustee, or receiver, according as it is deemed desirable or not, that the property should vest in any person prior to the meeting of creditors. Possession of the property should be taken by the registrar through the high bailiff of the Court as in bankruptcy. The alterations proposed with regard to voting by proxy in bankruptcy should, as a matter of course, be extended to liquidation, for it is in the latter that its evil effects are most felt. The first meeting should be held in the same manner as in bankruptcy, except that it should be considered a private meeting before the registrar in chambers. It may be satisfactory to have as the chairman of an informal preliminary meeting of creditors, which is sometimes summoned in important cases for the purpose of discussing the debtor's affairs, one of the creditors themselves. It is, however, quite certain that in the majority of cases a person selected at random from a body of creditors is quite incompetent to properly fulfil the important duties of chairman at a statutory meeting where proofs of debt have to be admitted, and formal resolutions have to be submitted to the meeting and reduced into writing in the prescribed manner. At such meetings the chairman is at present too often either partial or incompetent, or both. The necessity of having a registrar of the Court, or some other competent officer to preside at statutory meetings of creditors, is therefore very apparent. If a certain number of the creditors should desire the meeting in any matter to be held at a place other than the usual place of the Court sittings, the rules applicable to bankruptcy should apply. The objects of the meeting should be two-fold:—First, to consider whether the debtor's conduct has been honest and straightforward, and, if so, to pass a resolution for liquidation by arrangement; but if unsatisfactory, to determine by resolution that he be adjudged bankrupt. Secondly, whether liquidation or bankruptcy be resolved on, to appoint a trustee, committee of inspection, &c., as at first meeting under a bankruptcy. If the creditors determine an open bankruptcy, the Court should forthwith make an order of adjudication, and appoint a sitting for the public examination of the bankrupt. If a liquidation by arrangement be resolved on, the debtor should, at the meeting, be sworn by the chairman as to the truth of the statement of his affairs submitted by him to his creditors. If the creditors fail to pass any resolution whatever, the Court should adjudge the debtor bankrupt without petition, and with or without an application by a creditor."

Except that the public examination would be dispensed with, the subsequent proceedings would continue as in bankruptcy. With regard to compositions, Mr. Wreford seemingly favours the Scotch system, in which a majority of nine-tenths in value is substituted for our majority of three-fourths. The objection to this is, of course, that one or two hostile creditors might be able to prevent a really deserving debtor from obtaining his discharge. He suggests also that where a composition of less than 10s. in the pound is paid, the debtor should be protected for the term of three years, as in bankruptcy, and should then remain liable for the balance to the dissentients. On the whole we prefer Mr. Wreford's alternation scheme, which we quote in extenso :—

"The creditors to have power at the first meeting, under a petition for composition arrangement summoned as above, to pass a special resolution that any proposal for compounding the debts due from the debtor be entertained, and that the terms of the proposal be embodied in a deed of composition to be made between the debtor and his creditors,or a trustee on their behalf to be named by the resolution, such deed to be binding upon all the creditors when signed or assented to in writing by a majority in number, and three-fourths in value, of all the creditors whose debts exceed £10, and when approved by the Court; a period of fourteen or twenty-one days to be allowed for obtaining the requisite signatures or assents, and notice of the time appointed by the Court for confirming the arrangement to be given to every non-assenting creditor—any dissentient to be heard in opposition to the deed. The Court to be satisfied that all creditors signing or assenting to the deed have proved their debts in the prescribed manner. The debtor's estate to be protected after the first meeting, and pending completion of the deed, by a receiver appointed by the creditors at the meeting, or prior thereto, such receiver to be the same person as the trustee, if any, appointed under the deed. If the debtor fail to obtain the requisite majority of assents within the prescribed time, the Court to adjudicate him bankrupt upon the application of a creditor for £20, and without petition."

The extracts we have made will show pretty clearly the spirit and the style in which Mr Wreford writes, and we shall be glad to see his views commented upon. The book can be judged from the specimens we have given; and we repeat our cordial commendation of it to our readers.

Correspondence.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

DEAR SIR,—As under the rules of the various Societies of Accountants, candidates are frequently subjected to an examination, I send you a few questions and answers to assist both the examiners and the candidates.

1. What is bankruptcy?—A system of whitewashing much in vogue at the present time

2. What are its peculiar advantages to bankrupts?—It enables them, if sufficiently unscrupulous, to punish those creditors who dare to differ from them, and to obtain complete protection from their menaces.

3. What are its advantages to creditors?—Doubtful; it does, however, enable them to reduce an uncertainty to a practical certainty, i.e; whereas outside of bankruptcy they might be paid; in bankruptcy they are sure to make a heavy loss.

4. How are bankrupts' estates administered?—Generally by professional trustees, but not unfrequently by trade creditors acting in such capacity, and supervised by a committee of inspection.

5. What are the trustees' duties?—To get in the estate if there is one to get in, to incur personal risks, such as damages and costs, with an occasional variation in the monotony of routine, such as being shot at; and to receive with good temper abuse or censure from anybody who chooses to volunteer it. To examine and settle the claims, and to hope to get paid for his services once in six times.

6. Is the post often accepted by trade creditors?—Not unfrequently, but rarely more than once by the same person, the mania working its own cure.

7. Is bankruptcy considered distasteful?—Yes, to honest men; but rather agreeable to rogues, as it affords a lively diversion to constant dunning.

8. What is touting?—A system of canvassing resulting from the Bankruptcy Laws, which is strongly reprobated by all respectable solicitors and accountants, and largely adopted by all.

9. If touting is considered so derogatory, why, then, is it adopted?—Because, under our present laws, unless it is done, swindlers have it all their own way.

10. How could it be prevented?—It is difficult to prevent it altogether; but it could be materially reduced if all respectable accountants were to agree not to interfere with the accountant who is first called in; and by holding him responsible,either pecuniarily,or in reputation, for making statements which he is not in a position to substantiate.

11. How could the responsibility be rendered effective?—By a charter, and by rendering a man liable to expulsion from his corporation (thus withdrawing his power to practice) in the event of his acts being such as to tend to bring the profession into disrepute.

12. Define an accountant?—At the present day there are two classes of accountants—those who know their business and those who do not. Those who know their business are competent to deal with accounts of all kinds, and are well versed in commercial customs and usages. They are eligible as liquidators, arbitrators, trustees, and for various posts requiring high business and professional attainments, and demanding integrity in conjunction with efficiency. Those who do not know their business have no business to exist: they are not only commercially, but also physically, a mistake.

13. Is it the duty of an accountant to garble or misstate accounts in the interest of his client?—Certainly not! A solicitor is bound to twist the law as best he can to suit his client's interests, because laws are open to various interpretations and constructions, but accountants should deal with facts and figures as facts. An accountant who misrepresents figures or facts is a mistake, and should be wiped out.

14. Then you have a rather high estimate as to the value of an accountant?—Certainly. He should be like Cæsar's wife, above suspicion, and honour and brains his sole stock in trade?

15. But accountants are liable to temptation like other men?—There is no denying this, but owing to the peculiar nature of their avocations their services should be properly appreciated, and the penalty for infringement of the highest code of honour, efficiency, and integrity, proportionately severe.

The foregoing, Mr. Editor, is only a small instalment of the outpourings of a full heart. There is more to come in due course from your obedient servant,

A MAN OF BUSINESS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—Some delay in receiving the copy of the Accountant of the 6th inst. and a variety of engagements, have prevented me from writing in reply to your comments on my previous letter; but you have one sentence which contains a statement by no means correct. You say, "All proofs of debt must be verified by affidavit made before some commissioner, and not by oath to the trustee." I venture to submit that the trustee has ample power to administer oaths in verification of proof debt in any matter in which he is a trustee. In support of which assertion I beg to refer you to the Bankruptcy Act 1869, sec. 25, par. 1; also to a comment on it in "Roche and Hazlitt's Law and Practice of Bankruptcy,"

p. 49, which is as follows:—"As the trustee after his appointment at the first meeting is empowered to administer an oath, persons swearing falsely will be liable to indictment for perjury."—Yours truly,

J. H. C.

COURT OF CHANCERY, Lincoln's Inn.

February 19.

(Before the Lords Justices of Appeal.)

Bankruptcy Business.—Yesterday Mr Glasse, Q.C., mentioned to the Court that Thursday is an inconvenient day for the hearing of Chancery appeals by reason of its being the motion day in the Courts of the Master of the Rolls and the Vice-Chancellors. Their Lordships then said that they would change the day for hearing bankrupt appeals from Friday to Thursday, if they found that this would not be inconvenient for those members of the Bar who practise in Bankruptcy. This morning the matter was mentioned by Lord Justice James, and both Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Winslow, Q.C., agreed that the proposed change would occasion no inconvenience. Thereupon, Lord Justice James said that during the remainder of the present sittings the bankrupt appeals will be taken on Thursday instead of on Fridays, and Chancery appeals will be taken on Fridays.

February 22.

(Before the Court of Appeal.)

In re Charles Lafitte and Co. (Limited).—Lafitte's Claim.—The object of this application was to obtain leave to enrol an order of Vice-Chancellor Bacon made in December, 1873, with the view of appealing against it to the House of Lords. The case arose out of a claim by M. Charles Lafitte, banker and financial agent at Paris, under the winding-up of Charles Lafitte and Co. (Limited), for damages sustained by the company's breach of their contract to purchase his business. The company, which was formed at the end of 1865 for the purpose of purchasing and carrying on this business, was in November, 1866, ordered to be wound up. After a long litigation, the House of Lords referred it back to the Court of Chancery to ascertain what damages M. Lafitte had sustained from the company's breach of contract. The official liquidator desired to have the question of damages assessed by a jury, and attempted, but without success, to obtain an order to that effect from Lord Selbourne, when sitting for the Master of the Rolls in July, 1873. The case was afterwards transferred to Vice-Chancellor Bacon's Court, and on the 11th of December, 1873, his Honour ordered that the question of damages should be tried before himself without a jury. This order was not enrolled, and in December last M. Lafitte's claim was heard by Vice-Chancellor Bacon, who allowed the claim for the whole amount (£90,000) with interest. The official liquidator, being dissatisfied with this decision, obtained on the 9th of February, a conditional order to enrol the order of December, 1873, notwithstanding the expiration of the period of six months prescribed by the Orders of Court. Cause was shown against this conditional order on behalf of M. Lafitte, who, on the 12th of February, succeeded in getting it discharged. From such discharge the present appeal motion was brought by the official liquidator. Mr Jackson, Q.C., and Mr Graham Hastings, for the appellant, contended that the burden of showing that the enrolment ought not to be allowed was thrown upon the party resisting the enrolment, which simply gave validity to the order made, and enabled the party wishing to appeal to produce to the House of Lords in the official form alone recognized by that tribunal the order of the Court below against which the appeal was brought. The hearing of the claim for damages in Vice-Chancellor Bacon's Court had been postponed until December last by the pending of other heavy matters, and until the result of that hearing was obtained it was not worth while to appeal from the preliminary question of assessment by the Vice-Chancellor sitting alone or by a jury. Lord Justice James said that the order of the Vice-Chancellor was quite right. The mode in which the question was to be tried, whether by the Judge sitting alone or with the assistance of a jury, was in this case the question to be tried; and now that the whole thing had been tried and determined by the Vice-Chancellor and all the expense had been incurred on the basis of the order, which had been allowed to remain unenrolled since December, 1873, it would be eminently unjust to allow the official liquidator to go to the House of Lords and endeavour to set aside all that had been done. The Court was intrusted with a judicial discretion, and was bound to exercise it by refusing leave to enrol in the present case, when the official liquidator had submitted to the order for more than 12 months, and had not only gone on incurring expense himself, but had put his adversary to very considerable expense, and only now, for the first time, when the decision had gone against him, turned round and sought to set aside everything that had been done under the order. The appeal must be dismissed with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. Of all other orders, an order which prescribed the mode in which a case should be tried was one that should be appealed from before it was acted upon. Allowing an appeal to be brought in this case was entirely a matter in the discretion of the Court, and in the exercise of that discretion their Lordships must decline to allow the official liquidator, who had waited to see if the decision of the Court below was in his favour before making up his mind to enrol the previous order, now to enrol that order so as to enable him to appeal from it to the House of Lords.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURT, Lincoln's-inn,

February 19.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. Malins.)

In re the Pneumatic Company (Limited).—Mr Graham Hastings appeared in support of a petition by a creditor for winding-up this company. Mr. Speed opposed the petition on behalf of the company, and stated that negotiations were in progress with two railway companies for a transfer of the undertaking. It appearing that the petitioners, a firm of engineers, had made repeated applications for payment of their debt, but without success, His Honour made an immediate order for a compulsory winding-up, but directed that it should not be drawn up for a month.

February 20.

In re the Universal Non-Tariff Fire Assurance Company (Limited), ex parte Peter Forbes and Co.—The arguments upon this adjourned summons were commenced on Saturday, the 23d of January, continued on Saturday, the 30th of January, and concluded on Monday, the 1st of February, when his Honour reserved his decision. Judgment was delivered this morning, and, as it will be seen, the case, which is a claim made in the winding up of the above-named company by persons who had effected an insurance with them, involves important principles with reference to the law affecting insurances against fire. Mr Higgins, Q.C., and Mr Langley appeared for the claimants, Messrs Peter Forbes and Co., in support of the claim; and Mr Glasse, Q.C., and Mr M. Cookson, on behalf of the official liquidator of the company, opposed it. The Vice-Chancellor said: This company was incorporated and registered on the 29th of March, 1871. The capital was to be £250,000, divided into 100,000 shares of £2 10s. each. The company was a failure from the beginning, for it appears from the evidence of Mr Jones, the manager, on his cross-examination of the 16th of December, 1873, that no more than 1,119 shares were ever taken, producing a capital of £2,817 10s. (assuming the shares to be paid in full, which they were not), out of which the expenses of forming the company had to be paid; and with this capital they had the boldness—I may say audacity—to begin the business of fire insurers, and to hold themselves out as a substantial company, with a sufficient capital to meet all demands that could be made upon them. It is plain that this is an imposition practised on the public for which all the parties concerned in it ought to be answerable. The claimants in this case were in 1871 carrying on business as manufacturing chemists and paraffin oil makers at Port Dundas, Glasgow, and believing the representation made by this company they had the misfortune to open negotiations with them for an insurance on their manufactory in the month of May, 1871, which resulted in their effecting a policy with them on the 8th September following, for the sum of £1,550. The insured property was destroyed in an accidental fire on Dec. 23 following, by which the claimants have sworn that property covered by the insurance to the value of £1,350 was destroyed. The claim for this amount was sent to the company in the usual course, and I have no doubt it would have been promptly met if they had been in funds, but the facts I have stated show that they were not in a situation to meet the demand, and the consequence was that, as might have been expected, objections were taken to the validity of the policy which would not have been thought of if it had not been for the wretched state of poverty and insolvency of the company. It appears from the cross-examination of the same Mr Jones, the manager, that when the demands of the claimants under the policy ought to have been satisfied, namely, in April, 1872, the balance of the company at their bankers was £20, and that they had the command of between £200 and £300 altogether, though upon being pressed he declined to say where it was. The claimants, being unable to obtain satisfaction of the demand under the policy, presented a petition to wind up the company on the 20th of March, 1872. That petition came on to be heard before me on the 31st of May following, when it was resisted on the ground that the company disputed the liability under the policy, and therefore the debt upon which it was founded, but they stated most erroneously, as it now appears, that they were perfectly solvent and able to pay the debt of the petitioners if they proved it. The debt in respect of which the petition was presented being thus disputed, I ordered the petition to stand over until the petitioners had proved their debt. For the purpose of doing so they immediately brought an action against the company, which was called on for trial at the Summer Assizes at Hertford on the 10th of July, 1872, but as there was not sufficient time to try the case, a verdict was taken for the petitioners for £1,350, subject to a special case or some other proceedings before the Common Law Courts; but, for some reason which has not been explained, the Judge who tried the case appears to have required the company to pay £1,000 into Court, which they accordingly by some means did. Before anything further had been done, the company resolved to wind up voluntarily in November, 1872, and another creditor having presented a petition to wind up the company, upon that petition an order to continue the voluntary winding up under supervision was made by me in December, 1872. Under this order Messrs. Peter Forbes and Co. have claimed the £1,350 which they say is due to them under the policy as a debt against the company, and their demand being resisted by the official liquidator, I have to decide the question which has been raised as to the validity of the policy. I should state that the premium paid on the policy was £33 17s 3d, being at the rate of £3 3s per cent. on the buildings and 31s 6d per cent. on the stock-in-trade. These, I am informed, are about the largest premiums ever paid, and it may therefore have been well supposed by the assurers that they paid such to cover all risks. But the liability under the policy is resisted on the ground that there was such a misdescription of the property insured as to render it void; and the misdescription consists in a statement that the buildings were slated—that is, roofed with slate; while one of them, the still and boiler-house, was roofed with felt. The assured contend that this is not such a misdescription as to vitiate the policy, and that if it could have that effect it would only do so as to the particular building, to which a liability of £200 only was attached, which they say became unimportant, as that building was not destroyed or affected by the fire. And they also contend that if the misdescription was important, it was not made by them, but by Mr Donald, who was the agent of the company at Glasgow to inspect the property for the purpose of fixing the amount of the premium, and that he forwarded the misdescription to the company without having been told by them what the roof was, or having made any inquiry on the subject. Now, as to the materiality of the misdescription, the first condition endorsed upon the policy was as follows:—"Any material misdescription of any of the property proposed to be hereby insured, or of any building or place in which the property to be so insured is contained, and any misstatement of, or omission to state, any fact material to be known for estimating the risk, renders the policy void as to the property affected by such misdescription, misstatement, or omission respectively." It is suggested on the part of the company that they would have refused the risk if they had known of the felt roof, but I am satisfied they would not have done so, and that a higher premium would not have been required, and I do not, therefore, consider that it was a material misdescription within the meaning of the first condition of the policy, and I am satisfied that no such defence would have been set up if it had not been for the miserable state of poverty of this company, to which I have already referred. Several cases were cited by the counsel for the official liquidator for the purpose of justifying the defence. There is no doubt that if the description is in the form of a warranty, or amounts to a warranty, it must be strictly true, or the policy will be void. His Honour then elaborately reviewed the various authorities upon this point, referring to "The Newcastle Insurance Company v. M'Mullan," 3 "Dow," 255; "Parsons v. Bignold," 15 "Law Journal Report, Chancery," 379; "Anderson v. Fitzgerald," 4 "House of Lords," 484, 497, 502, and "Bates v. Hewitt," "L. R., 2 Q. B.," p 595, from which later case he cited a passage from Cockburn, C. J., at page 604, that "the party proposing an insurance is bound to communicate to the insurer all matters which will enable him to determine the extent of the risk against which he undertakes to guarantee the insured." The Vice-Chancellor also referred to "Donald v. the Law Life Insurance Company," "L. R., 9 Q. B.," 328; "Doe v. Manning," 4 "Camp," 76; "Benham v. the Guarantee Society," 7 "Exch.," 744; and "Towle v. the National Guardian Society," 3 "Giffard," 42; and after stating that the principle applicable to the present case was that stated in "Smith's Merc. Law," 8th edition, page 405—viz., "if the description of the property be substantially correct, and a more accurate description would not have varied the premium, the error is not material," continued:—But, assuming the misdescription to be material, I am of opinion that it was made by Donald, as the agent of the company, and that the assured are not answerable for it. It was strongly contended by the counsel for the official liquidator that Donald was not the agent of the company, but the correspondence between him and Jones, the manager of the company, so completely showed that he was their agent that this part of the defence was virtually given up. The proposal for the insurance was made by him in a letter of the 30th of May, 1871, and the correspondence between him and the company was continued down to the date of the policy, and afterwards and throughout that correspondence he was treated as the agent of the company, and in their books he was stated to be so. A great number of letters were read on the part of the official liquidator, which it is unnecessary to go through; but there is one, dated the 22d of August, 1871, from Jones, the manager, to Donald, which conclusively shows that he was the agent of the company, for it contains this expression:—"Please do not put the company on risk until advised of its acceptance from here." How could Donald put the company on risk if he was not their agent? Was he, then, the agent of the company to inspect and describe the property to be insured? Upon a careful consideration of all the evidence in this case, I am of opinion that the description of the property was given to the company by Donald as their agent, and did not proceed from the assured at all, and that they are, consequently, not responsible for the mistake which was made as to the felt roof or any other misdescription of the property. I am, therefore, of opinion that the assured have established their right to stand as creditors against the company for the damage sustained by the fire, not exceeding the sum of £1,350 which they claimed in the action; and I am also of opinion that the £1,000 paid into court in the action must be applied in or towards satisfaction of the amount for which they may prove themselves to be creditors. I suppose the amount of the loss must be ascertained in Chambers if it is disputed. They must also have the costs at law and in the winding-up.

COURT OF COMMON PLEAS.

February 23.

WALKER AND OTHERS V. THE GREAT BRITAIN MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The plaintiffs were the executors of Mr. John Wells, and they sued to recover the amount of two policies upon his life for £499 each, which were effected in May, 1845. The defendants disputed their liability upon the ground that the last annual premium had not been paid. Mr D. Seymour, Q C., appeared for the plaintiffs; Mr M'Intyre for the defendants. It was stated that Mr Wells in his lifetime had more than once sent the premiums late, and further that the office was in the habit of sending notices when the time for payment arrived. Mrs Wells would state most distinctly that she had received no notice as to the last payment becoming due. If she had received the notice she would have paid the premium, as she had plenty of money in the house at the time. Mr Justice Brett said that the premiums had been paid for 30 years, and now what the defendants relied upon was that the last premium had not been paid. Mr M'Intyre said that was so, but the correspondence showed that the directors wrote to the plaintiff's attorneys saying that they had no power to pay the money under the circumstances, but they would bring the case before the shareholders, and strongly recommend them to pay it. The plaintiff's attorneys, however, refused to agree to this, and brought the action at once. This step having been taken, the matter must now be disposed of according to law. Mr Justice Brett made some strong observations upon the course which the directors of the company had thought fit to pursue. The defendants had received the premiums for 30 years, and their objection now was that the last premium, which became due when Mr Wells was out of his mind, and dying, was not paid. After some discussion it was arranged that a juror should be withdrawn, the defendants undertaking to pay both policies less the amount of the premiums due.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

February 19.

(Before Mr Registrar PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE HENRY BRINSLEY SHERIDAN, JUN.—The bankrupt was a contractor carrying on business in George-street, Westminster, and he had been adjudicated upon the petition of Messrs D. M'Stephens and Co., discount brokers, Manchester. This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. Mr Baker appeared for the trustee, and Mr E. Lee for the bankrupt. It was stated that the bankrupt had made a proposal with a view to the annulment of the adjudication, and the proceedings were adjourned for a month.

IN RE R. L. HOLLAND.—The debtor was described as lately carrying on business as an insurance broker at 10, Clement's-lane. He filed yesterday a petition under the 125th and 126th sections, with liabilities returned at £17,000, and assets consisting of furniture of the value of £1,000, and a reversionary interest under a settlement. It appeared that actions were pending at the suit of creditors, and in one case judgment had been signed, and execution would shortly issue. Upon the application of Mr Brough for the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors, whose claims amounted to £5,578, his Honour appointed Mr Spain, accountant, receiver of the property, and granted an interim injunction to restrain actions.

February 20.

EX PARTE EDWARD HARVEY, RE NUTT.—(The Bankruptcy Act 1869, s. 126. Rules 297, 298, and 299. Receivers and Managers: Payment of balances due to them and their charges).—This was an application by Mr Edward Harvey, the trustee under an extraordinary resolution for composition passed under proceedings for liquidation, or composition, instituted by the debtor, for an order that the debtor should repay Mr Harvey the balance due to him, as shown by his accounts, whilst acting as receiver and manager of the debtor's estate; and also for payment of Mr Harvey's charges for his services whilst acting as such receiver and manager, and for the costs of the application. Mr J. Seymour Salaman, solicitor, appeared for Mr Harvey, and stated that the debtor was a builder, and that the principal part of his property consisted of two contracts for the erection of two chapels; and that, at the time of his failure, some sums of money were required for the purpose of continuing the contracts. It also appeared that the receiver who had been appointed on the nomination of the debtor, was unable or unwilling to make the necessary payments, whereupon, at the instance of the principal creditors, Mr Harvey had been appointed receiver and manager, and at the first meeting the creditors assented to Mr Harvey continuing to manage the estate and to make the necessary disbursements. This continued until, at the adjourned meeting, a composition was offered and accepted by the creditors; and a resolution was passed that the receiver and manager's outlay, and his charges, should be paid in full. On the presentation of the resolution to Mr Registrar Keene, the learned Registrar rejected a portion of the resolution referring to the receiver's outlay and charges, but registered the rest of the resolution as to composition. Mr Harvey had then been appointed trustee, and had paid an instalment of the composition out of monies handed to him by the debtor for that purpose. Mr Harvey now claimed a sum of about £400 balance of account—having expended very large sums of money, portions of which he had been recouped; and he had also his claim for remuneration as manager. Another instalment of the composition was about to become due, and there were considerable assets belonging to the debtor in other directions. Mr Harvey now applied for an order that he should be recouped his outlay, and be paid his charges. Mr Salaman referred to the case of "re Lyons ex parte Brett," where it had been decided that, after the passing of an extraordinary resolution, the Court had no jurisdiction under the 72nd section of the Bankruptcy Act to interfere between the receiver and the debtor; but argued that, according to the judgments of the Lords Justices in that case, it appeared that the Court had jurisdiction, even in cases of composition, to take the accounts and exercise jurisdiction between receivers and the debtor who had been put into possession of his estate, but only subject to the charges created thereon—such as amounts due to receivers and managers, for their charges as officers of the Court. Mr Salaman also referred to Rules 297, 298, and 299, the latter of which applied the principles of the Court of Chancery as to receivers and managers appointed under the Bankruptcy Act, and cited "Kerr on Receivers" to show that the Court of Chancery would direct the payment of a receiver's expenses, and any amount due to him where he had made disbursements out of his own pocket in the management of an estate. Mr Williams appeared for the debtor, and contended that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application. His Honour expressed his opinion that the debtor was liable, but ultimately made an order that Mr Harvey should deliver his account of his receipts and disbursements to the debtor, and should carry in his bill of charges and expenses as receiver and manager to the Taxing Master's office for taxation; and reserved his judgment upon the rest of the application, with liberty to apply, and also reserved the costs of the application.

IN RE WM. FINNEY.—This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. The bankrupt formerly carried on business at the Coal Exchange as a coal merchant, and his accounts showed liabilities of about £25,000 and assets £3,800. He has been before the Court for a period of nearly 12 months. Mr. W. A. Crump, who appeared for the trustee, said the bankrupt had been examined privately as to his transactions, and no good object would be attained by again adjourning the matter. Mr Oswald appeared for the bankrupt. The Court allowed the bankrupt to pass.

IN RE ROLAND G. T. BARNETT.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination in the case of Roland Gideon Israel Barnett, described as of 8, Buckingham-street, Strand, commission agent, whose statement of affairs discloses liabilities to the extent of £9997, and assets £40.—Mr G. Lewis, jun., appeared for Mr H. A. Bass, of Rangemore, near Burton-on-Trent, a creditor for £512, and proposed to examine the bankrupt.—On the case being called the bankrupt did not appear, and Mr Lewis said he presumed that as it was a cold morning the bankrupt preferred the comfort of his fireside to attending the court.—Mr Lee represented the bankrupt.—His Honour said that if there was no appearance a memorandum to that effect must be filed. —Mr Lewis said that the bankrupt had not attended any of the sittings of the Court. His deeds were not unknown to the Court of Bankruptcy on previous occasions.—The Registrar: We won't discuss them now.—Mr Lewis said the creditors did not intend to allow him to pass through the court without opposition. It was noticeable that two trustees had been appointed in the bankrupt's interest to administer an estate of £40.—Mr Lee said that the trustees were highly respectable persons, and there was no ground for making any attack upon them.—Mr Lewis observed that the trustees, at all events, appeared to be represented by the bankrupt's solicitor.—His Honour thought it would be useless to continue the discussion, and directed a memorandum of the bankrupt's non-appearance to be filed.

February 22.

(Before Mr Registrar MURRAY.)

IN RE ALBERT PELLY.—The debtor, a merchant, carrying on business in Finch-lane, has filed a petition under the liquidation clauses, with liabilities returned at £44,000, and property of which the value is not yet ascertained. Upon the application of Mr Brough for the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors for £20,000, Mr Registrar Murray appointed Mr John Young, accountant (Turquand, Youngs, and Co.) receiver of the assets, and granted an interim injunction restraining proceedings by one of the creditors.

(Before the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy.)

EX PARTE HALFORDS RE JACOBS.—This was an appeal from the Derby County Court. Shortly before the debtor, Benjamin Jacobs, entered into a composition with his creditors, he persuaded the appellants to renew for a further period of two months a certain bill then due. He stated to them in writing that he was perfectly solvent, and should be well able to meet the bill at maturity. Before the bill matured he entered into a composition with his creditors. The appellants proved their debt and accepted the composition offered, but took no further part in the proceedings. They then brought an action against Jacobs for the balance due to them under section 15 of the Debtor's Act, 1869. The County Court Judge made an order restraining this action, and from his order this appeal was brought. The Chief Judge held that the County Court Judge had no authority to restrain the action, and discharged the order, giving to the appellants the costs in the court below.

EX PARTE DAWE RE HUSBAND.—This was an appeal from the Plymouth County Court. In August, 1873, James Bishop obtained two judgments against Samuel Husband. The first was for £80 18s. 4d., and under this he seized the goods of Husband on September 5, and sold them on the 17th. Under the second judgment, which was for over £50, he seized the goods of Husband again on September 23, and sold them on the 29th. The proceeds of the first execution were paid to Bishop on Oct. 13, and the proceeds of the second on the 15th. On October 21 a petition in bankruptcy was filed against Husband by two creditors, the act of bankruptcy alleged being the execution issued on September 5, and Husband was adjudicated bankrupt on this petition on November 5. An application by Dawe, the trustee, to the County Court Judge for an order on Bishop to pay over the proceeds of the second execution was refused, and from this decision the trustee appealed. The Chief Judge held that, as the execution creditor had issued the first execution, he had when he issued the second execution notice of an act of bankruptcy, and that, having such notice, he could not hold the proceeds of the goods seized and sold under the second execution against the trustee. The appeal was dismissed.

February 24.

(Before Mr Registrar MURRAY, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE WILLIAM CHAVASSE, ice safe manufacturer, of 505, Oxford-street, and Walthamstow.—A meeting for first examination was held in this matter, and the bankrupt was examined on a proof which had been tendered by his brother, Grant Chavasse, of Walsall, in which he swore that the bill exhibited was drawn and accepted by the debtor; but upon the bill being placed in the debtor's hands he stated that the signature was by his brother, Grant Chavasse. An account also appeared in one of the ledgers, which the trustee (Mr J. H. Tilly, of the firm of Tilly and Co., public accountants, Victoria Buildings, Queen Victoria-street), had reason to believe referred to the Walsall business, and from entries in this book he believed that the business really belonged to the bankrupt, although not so set out in the statement of affairs. The bankrupt explained this heading by saying that it was "The Washing Machine Account." An account also appeared in another ledger headed, "W. Chavasse, Walsall," which was debited with a sum of £1,300 as capital carried to the credit of the London business, the natural inference being that the Walsall and London businesses were one and the same. The debtor had also refused to give up certain papers and documents in his possession. The Judge ordered him to do so immediately. The further examination was then adjourned to the 21st April, leave being given to the trustee to apply for a private examination before the Registrar. The solicitor to the proceedings is Mr. Mathias Boyce, of 21, Abchurch-lane.

February 25.

(Before Mr Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE J. LANG AND SON.—The debtors, James Lang and Edward Lang, gun manufacturers, of 22, Cockspur-street, Pall-mall, have petitioned the court, under the liquidation clauses of the Act, estimating their liabilities at £14,300, and assets at £5,078, consisting of stock-in-trade, furniture, &c. Upon the application of Mr Bagley, instructed by Messrs Pritchard and Englefield, his Honour appointed Mr Josolyne (Baggs, Clarke, and Josolyne) receiver of the estate.

February 26.

(Before Mr Registrar PEPYS.)

IN RE JOHN BROWN.—The debtor was a shipwright, of Millwall. He presented a petition for liquidation about a fortnight since; but Mr. Owles now stated that the appointment of a receiver and an interim injunction were necessary in consequence of proceedings instituted by a creditor named William Lyne, who was seeking to attach money due to the debtor from a firm in the City. Unless the Court interfered, Mr. Owles stated that Mr. Lyne would shortly be in a position to have his garnishee order made absolute.—His Honour, under the circumstances, appointed a receiver and granted an interim injunction.

IN RE R. L. HOLLAND.—In this case, upon the application of Mr. Brough, an interim injunction granted last week was continued until further order. The debtor lately traded as an insurance broker in Clement's-lane, and his liabilities amount to about £17,000, with assets £1,000.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. J. F. COLLIER, Judge.)

IN RE GEORGE HARDY.—His Honour delivered judgment in this case, which was reported in the last issue of the Accountant. He said—This is a motion to restrain an action at law brought by Mr Thomas Etty, the solicitor employed under the bankruptcy of Hardy against the trustee, for costs incurred in and about the business of the bankruptcy. Mr Etty's retainer was in the following form:—"Liverpool, 28th February, 1871. Re George Hardy, a bankrupt. I, the undersigned John Parlane M'Arthur, the trustee of this estate, hereby retain Mr Etty as solicitor to the estate.—J. PARLANE M'ARTHUR. We, the committee of inspection, having requested the same—John Henry Mullin, Thomas Taylor, James M'Crossan, Hugh Lewis (per Hugh Roberts)." An affidavit was filed by the trustee, and he was afterwards cross-examined upon it in court. The general effect of this evidence may be stated to be that he used due diligence in getting in the estate, and that, after paying rent and taxes, and the solicitor employed in obtaining the adjudication, not only are there no assets remaining but he is himself under advances. There are two questions for my consideration:—First whether I have jurisdiction to restrain the action; secondly, whether, if I have jurisdiction, this is a case in which I ought to exercise it. The 72nd section of the Bankruptcy Act doubtless gives very wide powers to the court, but they are given "subject to the provisions of the act." The 13th section points out in what cases actions at law can be restrained; and where one section of an act gives general powers, and another points out, in a restrictive sense, in what cases an important branch of those powers is to be exercised, I should have thought that, according to the received rules of construction of Acts of Parliament, the general enactment would be held to be modified by the particular enactment. Authority is, however, I think, against me on that point in ex parte Anderson (L.R. 5, Chancery Appeals 70). Giffard, L.J., if I understand his judgment rightly, held a contrary opinion. What he says, however, of the 72nd section is this—"The terms of this clause, in my opinion, give the Court complete jurisdiction to decide everything that it may be considered necessary to decide with a view to the distribution of the bankrupt's estate." Taking that interpretation of the section, which I humbly think is the correct one, and supposing it to extend to the granting of a restraining order, it would not enable me to restrain this action, because the action would have no effect on the distribution of the bankrupt's estate. The next section to be considered is the 66th, which gives to a county court judge, in addition to his ordinary powers, all the power and jurisdiction of a judge of the Court of Chancery. Again, in the same case of ex parte Anderson, Giffard, L.J., says, evidently referring to both the 66th and 72nd sections, "I have no doubt it was the intention of the legislature that the bankruptcy courts should be complete and sufficient in themselves, and that they should, for the purpose of making a complete distribution of the bankrupt's property, exercise at least all the powers conferred upon any judge of the Court of Chancery." This, I think, is the test that must be applied, and as the action would not affect the estate, I think no jurisdiction is conferred on the Court to restrain it. I have thought it better to state my opinion on this point, that it may be decided by authority if desired, although as will presently be seen, according to the view I take of the case, there was no necessity for my doing so. For, even assuming that I had jurisdiction, I should not exercise it in this case. I apprehend that the Court of Bankruptcy will not interfere to restrain an action at law unless the remedy sought is contrary to equity and good conscience, or unless the Court of Chancery has already seizin of the matter, or complete justice cannot be done between the parties by an action at law. I am by no means of opinion that this court, proceeding upon motion and affidavit, is a better tribunal for deciding a matter which may possibly depend upon questions of fact—such, for example, as whether, by his words or actions, the trustee had rendered himself personally liable to the solicitor for his costs—than a court of law. Again, if I were to be of opinion that the trustee had made himself so personally liable, what order could I make on him? It appears to me that sufficient reason has not been shown for the interference of the court in this case, even if it could interfere, and I shall dismiss the motion. Mr Potter, who appeared for Mr Etty, applied for costs, which were granted. Mr Lewis Williams, instructed by Messrs Miller, Peel, and Hughes, represented the trustee.

SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.—The monthly meeting of this Society was held on Wednesday at the offices, Cowper's-court, Cornhill, present Messrs. John Bath (Vice-President) Bolton, Nicholls, Beddow, H. Brett, E. N. Harper, and A. C. Harper (Secretary). Two applications for membership were read; one, being informal, was not accepted, the other applicant, Mr. Thos. W. Handley, of Princess-street, Manchester, was elected an Associate of the Society.

AMERICAN FAILURES.—The failure is reported of Messrs. Seggermann and Co, foreign fruit merchants of New York. The requisite number of the creditors of Messrs. Rice, Goodwin, Walker, and Co., New York, had united to put the estate into bankruptcy. Messrs. John Haviland and Co., importers and dealers in foreign fruits, 267, Washington-street, New York, had failed with liabilities of £60,000, assets £40,000.

BIRKENHEAD COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. GILMOUR, Judge.)

IN RE J. S. CLEWETT.—This was an application to restrain a creditor on a bill of exchange from prosecuting an action against the debtor, a joiner and builder at Tranmere, who had recently presented a petition for liquidation. Mr. Pugh, in support of the application, cited the 28th rule, which he submitted conferred power on the court to grant the order. Mr Rodway, for the creditor, took exception to the application, on the ground that no receiver had been appointed, the Chief Judge, in re Robinson (22 L. T. report, 247), having held that no restraining order could be granted until a receiver was appointed. Mr Pugh, in reply, referred to the rule which, after providing for the issue of a restraining order, prescribed that a receiver also could be appointed, thereby clearly implying that one should be in addition to the other. Further, he contended that in the case cited the circumstances were different, as there the sheriff was in possession, and it might well have occurred to the chief judge, in removing the sheriff, that the property should be protected by an officer of the court. His Honour said his impression was that by the terms of the rule, a restraining order might be granted on the application of the debtor; but, as a different construction had been placed upon it by the chief judge, he must bow to that authority and refuse the order. Mr Rodway then applied for a receiver, and the court appointed Mr Bolland to that office

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

The following meetings of creditors have been held during the week:—

J. LOCKYER.—At the meeting of the creditors of this debtor, who is an agent for the sale of fancy goods, the statement showed unsecured creditors, £1,802 10s. 10d.; creditors holding securities, £233 13s., against assets of £184 19s. 9d. The creditors resolved to liquidate, and Mr W. L. C. Browne, of 25, Old Jewry, public accountant, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection. Messrs Allen and Edwards, of 8, Old Jewry, are the solicitors to the proceedings.

WILLIAM JACOMB, Taylor and Outfitter, High-street, Poplar.—At the meeting of creditors, the statement of affairs showed creditors unsecured £1,155 16s. 7d., against assets £175. The creditors resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr W. L. C. Browne, of 25, Old Jewry, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection. Messrs Kent and Kent, of Red Lion-court, Cannon-street, are the solicitors to the proceedings.

JONES AND FULFORD (Builders, &c.).—At a meeting of creditors the statement showed liabilities £6,910 2s. 7d., less creditors holding security, £4,760 5s.; assets estimated at £592 15s. A resolution was passed to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr W. L. C. Browne, of 25, Old Jewry, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection. Messrs Evans and Eagle, of 10, John-street, Bedford-row, are the solicitors to the proceedings.

HENRY BERRY, proprietor of the Queen of England Tavern, Hammersmith.—At the meeting, held February 18th, the statement of affairs, showed creditors £3,308 6s. 1d, of whom £2,125 were secured, against assets £482. The creditors resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr W. L. C. Browne, of 25, Old Jewry, E.C., who had been appointed receiver and manager to the estate, was appointed trustee with a committee of inspection. Mr J. Seymour Hubbard, of London Joint Stock Chambers, West Smithfield, is the solicitor to the proceedings.

JOHN AUSTIN WILLIAMSON, of 98, Regent-street, Piccadilly, trading as the Westminster Coal Company.—At the meeting held on the 19th February, the statement of affairs showed creditors unsecured £1,531, against assets, consisting of book debts, £100. Mr E. C. Chatterley, (C. Browne Stanley and Co.), public accountant, was appointed trustee to act with a committee of inspection. Mr F. W. Snell, of George-street, Mansion House, is the solicitor to the proceedings.

GEE AND CO. (BOSTON).—At a meeting on Friday of the creditors of Messrs Gee and Co., bankers, of Boston, Lincolnshire, who stopped payment in June last, Mr Waddell (trustee) made a report as to the outstanding assets and the prospect of realisation, and a resolution was passed confirming the arrangement made with the debtors by Mr Kearsey, on behalf of the trustees, whereby the liquidation was to be closed on the payment by the debtors, within a month, of a further 5s. in the pound—making in all 12s. in the pound.

Wilkinson (Great Driffield).—The statement presented by the debtor at a meeting of the creditors recently held, showed total liabilities £3,262 9s.; assets, £1,075 13s. 8d. The report of Messrs. M. Samper and W. C. Harvey (Gamble and Harvey) joint trustees, stated that there was a deficiency of £4,866 13s. 1d., for which the debtor ought to account. They were by no means satisfied with the manner in which he accounted for his losses, particularly an item of £1,000 at racing. They were of opinion that the debtor has not made a full disclosure of his assets, and they purposed laying the result of their investigation before a meeting of creditors shortly to be called, to take the opinion of the creditors as to what should be done with the debtor. A resolution was passed to liquidate the estate by arrangement.

Withers (Romsey).—At the meeting of creditors the debtor produced a statement of affairs showing the liabilities to be £2,053, assets, £823. A resolution was unanimously passed to liquidate the estate by arrangement, appointing Mr Gamble (Gamble and Harvey) and Mr Gue as trustees.

A. Petrali (Cardiff).—At a meeting of creditors a resolution was passed to the following effect:—"That in the opinion of the meeting a large portion of the money received by the debtor for stock-in-trade, is still in his possession, and that the trustee (Mr. Harvey, of the firm of Gamble and Harvey) be requested to lay the facts before the court, and apply for an order to prosecute the debtor criminally under the Debtors Act." It was also resolved to transfer the proceedings from the County Court of Glamorganshire to the London Bankruptcy Court.

W. Westwell (Blackburn).—The first adjourned meeting of the creditors of Mr Wm. Westwell, waste dealer, of Great Harwood, was held at the Blackburn County Court, on Wednesday, for the purpose of appointing a trustee. Mr. J. S. Scott (Blackburn), and Mr Scowcroft (Bolton), objected to the proofs of debt tendered by the father and uncle (Mr Cooper), of the bankrupt. The statement of the bankrupt's affairs showed—unsecured creditors, £3,088 18s 11d; assets, £633 18s 8d. The meeting was adjourned for proofs of debt to be enquired into.

Geering Brothers (Birmingham).—A meeting of the creditors of Henry Geering, jun., William Aaron Geering, and George Geering, brass and iron bedstead and galvanised hollowware manufacturers, of the Apollo Works, Moseley-street, trading under the style of "Geering Brothers," was held on Tuesday. The statement of accounts which had been prepared by Mr. Luke J. Sharp, receiver to the estate, showed the following items:—Liabilities: To creditors, £7,609 2s. 3d.; creditors fully secured, £192 12s.; less estimated value of securities, £192 12s.; creditors to be paid in full, £90 10s. 4d; liabilities on bills discounted, £1,690 14s. 5d., of which £70 4s. is expected to rank against the estate for dividend; total debts, £7,679 6s. 3d. Assets: Stock-in-trade, estimated to produce £1,472 8s. 7d.; book debts, about £1,535 7s., estimated to produce £857 10s. 7d.; other property, £298 6s. 1d.; total assets, £2,628 5s. 3d., less creditors to be paid in full (£90 10s. 4d.), £2,537 14s. 11d. After considerable discussion a resolution was passed to the effect that a composition of 10s. in the pound be accepted, payable as follows:—2s. 6d. in two months, 2s. 6d. in eight months, 2s. 6d. in 14 months, and 2s. 6d. in 20 months; that the security of Henry Geering, the elder, of Stechford, be accepted for payment of the composition; and that Mr. Luke J. Sharp be appointed trustee.

Accidental Death Insurance Co.—It is notified that Mr Edward Hart (Hart Brothers, Tibbetts, and Co.), the liquidator of the Accidental Death Insurance Company, has declared a fifth dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound, making, with previous payments, 13s. 6d. in the pound. Creditors who have proved their claims after the declaration of the last dividend will be entitled to receive 11s. in the pound, being the amount of the four preceding dividends.

FAILURES.

America.—American advices report the failure of Mr W. B. Whitney, of Columbia, O., in consequence of speculation in lard; liabilities £60,000. Owing to this the England Card and Paper Company of Springfield had been closed. Mr John P. Schermerhoon, iron merchant, New York, had called a meeting of his creditors. Messrs Gillett, Titus, and Co., wholesale druggists, Chicago, had failed. Canadian advices report that a meeting of the creditors of Messrs R. M'Kinlay and Co., manufacturers of carriage wood-work, St Catherine's, Ontario, had been held; an offer of 40 per cent. was accepted—payment over two years.

England.—Mr David Booth, cloth manufacturer, of Idle, has suspended payment. His liabilities, it is estimated, will be about £8,000. His failure is attributed to the suspension of Messrs J. Holroyd and Co of Leeds, upon whose estate he is a large creditor.

Scotland.—The Glasgow Herald understands that Messrs William Cunningham and Co., dyers, Paisley, have suspended payment. The amount of liabilities and assets had not been stated.

Severe upon Receivers.—Occasionally it happens that double appointment take place in bankruptcy under the winding-up of single estates. It may happen that a debtor may file a petition for liquidation—a trustee or receiver may be appointed. Then a petition is presented against the debtor, under which he is adjudicated bankrupt—another receiver is appointed. So it happened in re William Pearson, a case which came before Mr Registrar Hazlitt, sitting as Chief Judge, on the 8th inst. The petitioning creditor was appointed trustee under the liquidation, and the bankruptcy petition fell through. Both receivers, however, took possession of the property, and both sent in bills of costs, one claiming £61 and the other £31. They were submitted to taxation, but the taxing master treated them as constituting one bill. He considered the appointment of two receivers wholly unnecessary, and pointed out that when application was made to the Court for the appointment of a second receiver, the fact that one had been already appointed was not mentioned. Mr Registrar Hazlitt was rather severe. "The amount in question might," he said, "be small in comparison with the daily spoliation of estates by the charges of professional receivers and professional trustees, but the principle was the same." He also added, with equal disregard of the feelings of the receivers, "what the personal services of the receivers in this case might have been he could not say, but where, as so frequently happened, the same accountant was receiver or trustee under a dozen, or a score, or even more different estates, his capacity for personal service in each case must be of very extraordinary ubiquitous power." This case and these remarks furnish an excellent commentary upon one of the worst phases of our law of bankruptcy.—Law Times.

The Canadian Oil Wells Case.—Lord Chief Justice Cockburn concluded his summing up in the Canadian Oil Wells Corporation case on Thursday. Having presented the jury with an exhaustive history of the undertaking, he directed them that the first question they had to determine was whether, looking at the materials before them, the defendants had an honest belief in the prospectus when they issued it, and put it before the public with good faith, and not with the intention to deceive. If they answered that in the affirmative, next came the point whether, between the 2nd of September, when the defendants issued the prospectus, and the 22nd September, when they received the people's money, anything occurred to change their honest belief into disbelief and distrust in the prospectus. If so, they did wrong in not disabusing the mind of the plaintiff and in taking his money. The jury retired to consider their verdict at half-past three, and remained in consultation until nearly nine o'clock, when they returned into court a second time with the intimation that there was no hope of their coming to an agreement. They were accordingly discharged.

THE SCOTCH BANKS.—The Daily News says: "In addition to a number of letters which we have received regarding the proposal to turn the Scotch banks out of England, and which are too long for insertion, we have also had forwarded to us, on behalf of the Manchester bankers, a copy of a memorial addressed by them to the Chancellor of the Exchequer, setting forth their views of the grievance which the proposal is designed to remedy. The memorial explains very clearly the incongruities of the existing legislation, by which Scotch and Irish banks are permitted to come to London, while English country banks it is said, can only do so on giving up their note issue, and by which also Scotch and Irish banks, though having a more valuable note issue privilege than any English provincial banks, are left at liberty to compete with the latter on their own ground. We fail to see, however, that there is any evidence in the past history that the Legislature intended to prevent such incongruities, and only omitted to do so by accident. It is partly by accident that the Bank of England itself enjoys its superior monopoly, and if by another set of accidents the Scotch and Irish banks have a privilege less valuable than that of the Bank of England and more valuable than the other English banks, they are no more to be interfered with on that account than the Bank of England itself. When the Manchester bankers speak of the "obvious design" of the Legislature to "make an impartial adjustment of the equities between the existing interests affected by the new Acts," they are really attributing design to the promoters of the Bank Acts of 1844 and 1845 in regard to a question which was never in their thoughts at all. The English bankers have a good case for altering the law in the direction of abolishing all monopolies, but the less they say about the "equities between the existing interests" the better. The matter, if now dealt with at all, ought plainly to be touched for the public advantage only, and not for the benefit, or supposed benefit, of private interests."

COSTS OF PROSECUTING FRAUDULENT DEBTORS.—The following letter appeared in a legal contemporary:—"I should be glad if any of your correspondents could advise me how to proceed under the following circumstances:—Some little time since a client of mine, who was trustee under a bankruptcy, was ordered by a court of bankruptcy to prosecute the bankrupt. The order was duly drawn up and filed. The bankrupt, after a lengthened preliminary investigation, was committed for trial. At the time appointed for the trial the trustee and all the witnesses were present, and remained in court four days waiting for the hearing. The prisoner applied for an adjournment, which I strenuously opposed on the ground that my principal witness was shortly obliged to leave the country. The adjournment was, however, granted, and when at length the case came on for hearing, not only had the witness above referred to left the country, but the trustee had absconded. I wanted to make the best of my case with the remaining witnesses, but counsel in consultation were of opinion that it must fall through, and submitted to the court that we had not sufficient evidence to convict. A verdict of not guilty was therefore returned. During the progress of the case I laid out about £150 in counsel's fees and other expenses, thinking I was perfectly justified in so doing, and fully protected by the order of the court. It will be seen that the failure of justice was quite beyond my control, but on making application under section 17 of the Debtors' Act 1869 for payment of my costs (which had been taxed under protest), I was refused without the slightest reason for refusal being alleged. Surely I have some means of redress, and any information by your correspondents will be gladly received."

ALL ABOUT A BOUQUET.—The Liverpool Post states that an action involving the question of the right to throw bouquets to actresses is about to be brought against the manager of a Liverpool theatre. An elderly gentleman, almost nightly for some time, took his place in the stalls, prepared with bouquets, and threw them with great regularity at certain actresses, at certain points of the performance, sometimes rising on their acceptance of the nosegays and acknowledging the honour by profound obeisances. The manager at length interfered, and legal proceedings are threatened.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. B. B. Daniels (Good, Daniels, and Co., 7, Poultry, E.C.) official liquidator of the Bream Iron Mining Company, Limited.

The Glasgow Daily Mail says:—"Provost Neil is in receipt of a letter from Mr Grieve, M.P., stating that he intends to propose an addition to Mr Fortescue Harrison's bill dealing with the preference payment of the wages of workmen in cases where their employers fail. Mr Grieve's proposed addition is that where the privelege exists, workmen shall not be compelled to wait till the ordinary dividend period, before being paid their wages; but that, if there be funds, they shall be entitled to payment at once.

The net income from solicitors' annual certificate duty for 1874 amounts to close upon one hundred thousand pounds. The number of certificates issued was 14,060, for the United Kingdom, of which 10,983 were granted to English practitioners.

CHANCERY COSTS.—A new regulation has been made that no solicitor in suits in Chancery is to be paid money on account until the taxation of bills.

WINDING-UP PETITIONS.—A petition for the winding up of the Woollen Trade Association (Limited) is to be heard in the Court of Chancery on the 5th of March.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of 1873, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873) This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating arounds us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the Accountant a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the Accountant, 127, Strand. Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of Cases for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

The great question of the status of accountants is being raised both in hostile and friendly quarters. In the columns of our legal contemporaries the profession is constantly held up to public scorn as being liable for the discreditable practices of some of those gentlemen who advertise themselves as "accountants," and it is triumphantly asked what manner of men they can be, whose pure fame is tainted by such associates. It is useless for us to explain that these pretenders are utterly repudiated by the profession, just as much as an advertising quack is by the College of Surgeons, —the accusation is brought out at every possible opportunity. Now, we emphatically state that no law paper can be more anxious than we are to expose any, and every, one of those men who usurp our name and standing. We have given publicity to every complaint of the kind that has been brought to our notice, and we most certainly shall continue to do so. That the members of the profession are fully alive to this, is clearly shown by two letters we publish to-day, and it is to their co-operation we must look for assistance in eradicating the evil. Once for all, we repeat our determination to purge the profession from the reproaches cast upon it. To-day we shall consider what is the most effectual remedy.

We need scarcely insist upon the fact that the profession of an Accountant is one which demands not only a peculiar habit of mind, but also very considerable training. To deal with accounts seems very simple to the outside world, but it is, in reality, as difficult a task as to solve many of the legal problems which are submitted to solicitors. There are persons who profess to teach the whole art and mystery of book-keeping in a few lessons, just as there are books which profess to contain in a moderate compass an answer to any question on a point of law which can be asked. But the trader who trusted to the promises of his would-be tutor would be just as much deceived as the "gentleman in embarrassed circumstances" who consulted a handy book instead of going to his solicitor. The difficulty lies not so much in keeping as in checking the accounts. A very little learning may perhaps suffice to enable a man to keeps his books so that he understands them himself. But to extract order and method from such books, and to present an intelligible balance-sheet to the world, requires very considerable skill and experience. Even in this branch it is apparent that regular professional training is required, but in the present day an accountant is far more than a simple keeper or investigator of accounts. As auditors of public companies, as official liquidators, or as trustees in bankruptcy, they have duties to perform which are inferior not either in difficulty or responsibility to these of any other profession. We contend, therefore, that as the term "public accountant" has now a definite meaning, some measure should be adopted which shall confine the name to qualified and responsible men, and shall prevent outsiders from adopting such a designation.

At present there are several societies, to one or the other of which accountants may belong, subject to certain restrictions and tests as to their standing in the profession, and their capabilities. Now, we would suggest that these bodies should unite and demand a charter of incorporation, with the power of making such regulations as to admission to their order as may be deemed necessary. The term "certificated public accountant" would then be confined to members elected into such societies, and it should be made penal for any other person to style himself "accountant," even though it might be found impossible to prevent him from practising as such. The examination should be made so strict as to keep out incapable aspirants, and due provision should be made as to the amount of training and study to be undergone.

It can scarcely be doubted that such a course would greatly elevate the profession. At the present time it contains men whose names are as well known, and whose capabilities are as high, as those of any of the great London solicitors. But besides the outsiders whom we have so frequently joined in condemning, there are others upon whom the restraining influence of a supreme governing body might act beneficially. And especially in bankruptcy cases would the advantage be found. In every town where a County Court exists would be found a duly qualified person ready and able to act as trustee. Of course there would be no compulsion as to this. It would still be open to the creditors to manage matters in their own way. They might elect one of their own body to the post, and might reject an accountant just as they might, if they chose, dispense with a solicitor, or, in case of illness, refuse to call in a medical man. Then, in cases of auditing. The new Friendly Societies' Bill might well make the certificate of a qualified accountant necessary, with advantage alike to the depositors and the nation.

It is too late now to raise the cry that the accountants are usurping the privileges of the solicitors. The profession exists, working within clearly defined limits, and cannot be ignored. That it should be thoroughly organized, composed only of capable men, and enabled at once to put down pretenders and to keep at the highest level the status of its own members—is as expedient for the good of the country as for that of accountants themselves. Let then the profession apply for a charter. It must rest on their own efforts to obtain one, and public opinion will support the men who are striving so diligently to maintain their professional honour.

The proxy-system is one of the points in liquidations peculiarly liable to abuse, and it was certainly very ingeniously worked in the case which we report from the Birmingham County Court. Of course the interest of the debtor is to obtain as many proxies as possible, and the solicitor concerned naturally uses every effort to bring this about. The Birmingham case was very simple. The ordinary forms sent out to creditors, containing a proxy paper and bearing the official stamp of the Court, were filled up with the name of a particular person, instead of being left blank. Naturally upon receiving such a form, creditors would hesitate before striking the name out and substituting another. Some would be impressed by the official nature of the document, and would return it duly signed, others again would hestitate; and so what by passive, compliance, and doubting abstinence, the desired majority would be gained. At Birmingham, apparently, no one was to blame. The Registrar was above suspicion, the solicitor perfectly immaculate, and as only one paper was produced, it was thought that that could be of no real importance, and the matter passed over pleasantly. It might be interesting, however, to know how many similar proceedings have occurred.

It will be seen that the decision in Ex parte Collins, Re Lees, reported at p. 6 of our number for January the 2d, has been reversed by the Lords Justices, who hold that the non-registered memorandum was not a condition within the meaning of the Bills of Sale Act. In their view the condition that the £30 was to be paid in any event, at whatever date the principal sum was repaid, was merely a memorandum between borrower and lender, providing for the expenses of the latter. Chief Judge Bacon's decision seemed, as we pointed out at the time, hard upon the unfortunate money lender, but the language of the Court of Appeal which implies that, though a bill of sale must be registered, it need not express the real facts of the case, may possibly be interpreted in a sense very favourable to debtors. There are plenty of collusive bills of sale as it is. We fear that their number will not be diminished by the recent decision.

We were unable owing to want of time to notice the letter of "J. H. C." in our last number. We acknowledge the justness of his correction as to the power of a trustee to administer an oath in connection with the proof of debts, but we still do not understand the latter portion of his letter, as to being a "solicitor who was also a commissioner," &c. Perhaps we shall save some confusion if we re-state the law on the subject. A trustee may administer an oath to a creditor proving his debt, acting, in fact, as a commissioner, but he cannot do more than this. So far, "J. H. C." is, we take it, quite in accord with us. Any examination of the debtor on oath must take place before the Court, though the debtor is of course bound to give any information in his power to the trustee.

Correspondence.

PUFF!

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—My attention has been called to an advertisement emanating from a self-elected "public accountant." The notification in question is drawn up in the same monotonous manner as that which pervades all such classes of puffing announcements, and is quite a unique specimen of its kind. "Debtors requiring independent advice in any financial difficulty may (by rushing into the arms of this philanthropic (?) benefactor) obtain the practical assistance of a gentleman thoroughly conversant with the law of debtor and creditor!" (The note of exclamation is, by-the-bye, my own). All requiring advice as to the unsatisfactory state of their pockets, and bankers' balances, will be welcomed with open arms by so benevolent an individual, that neither "exposure nor great expense" will be the consequence of their confidence. Eureka! Difficulties, accounts requiring adjustment, embarrassments, settlements with unfortunate duns, and the financial scrapes of the youthful and indiscreet, can all be practically and definitely dealt with by this "gentleman thoroughly conversant with the law of debtor and creditor"; one who understands the difference between his right hand and his left, and the intricate morality of the laws of meum and tuum. Fond parents, responsible guardians, and "gentlemen in absentia" (whoever they may be), should, according to the advertiser's meek suggestion, repair to him for comfort and solace, advice and relief, between the hours of ten to five daily; but should their feelings be unable to undergo anything but a special appointment, combined with an exceedingly confidential conference, the victims of impecuniosity can be favoured with an interview of an exceptional nature between seven and nine p.m. on particular evenings. Seriously, Mr. Editor, allow me most respectfully to direct the attention of the members of the profession to this puff, and especially to commend the advertisement, &c., to the notice of the several councils and secretaries of the accountants' institutes and societies. When is this sort of thing to end?—Yours truly,

INQUIRER.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

DEAR SIR,—The enclosed advertisement, cut from one of the daily papers, is certainly not the sort of thing to be issued by an "established certificated public accountant in the city." It is no doubt fortunate for the said "public accountant," to have "a very remunerative and gentlemanly business," embracing principally, "Trusteeships and Receiverships in Bankruptcy, and the carrying out of Liquidations and Compositions." The advertiser is also fortunate, if the major part of his business consists of such cases, in being able to say that "the profits are large,"—I am afraid that is not the usual experience of receivers and trustees. No objection can, however, be taken to these statements if they are, as I suppose in accordance with facts, but I do, as a practical public accountant, object to the statement that, "as a previous knowledge of the profession is not requisite, a young man with £1,000 to £1,500, would find this a fine opening." Surely the day has passed for unqualified men to call themselves public accountants, and I am sorry to see a "Certificated Public Accountant of the City of London," express his readiness to associate himself in partnership with another person simply because that person has money, and entirely independent of the question of efficiency! When shall we have a Charter enabling us to offer something like a guarantee to the public that we are what we profess to be namely—experts?—Yours truly,

London, 1st March, 1875. PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT.

BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION.—Mr. George Wreford writes to us as follows in regard to the notice of his pamphlet on Bankruptcy Legislation which appeared in our last issue:—"There is one point on which the reviewer has misunderstood my remarks. I do not suggest that an undischarged bankrupt's property should be free at the expiration of four years from the date of his bankruptcy, but that the creditors, at the end of four years, shall be free to proceed against an undischarged bankrupt for the individual recovery of their debts under Sec. 154 (see page 39 of pamphlet)."

PLEASANT.—In the report of a bankruptcy examination in Scotland, published by the Edinburgh Daily Review, we find the following:—"Mr. M'Kay, agent in the sequestration, proceeded to examine the bankrupt as to certain bills, when, observing Mr. Scoular, who was present on behalf of the creditors, pass near him, and evidently imagining he was whispering to the bankrupt, he said, 'Don't do that again, Mr. Scoular.' Mr. Scoular denied that he was whispering to the bankrupt, and, addressing Mr. M'Kay, added—'You're a nasty cur of a fellow to allege such a thing against me.' Mr. M'Kay—'Don't say that again or you will have to go outside.'"

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL—March 4.

(Present—Sir James Colvile, Sir Montague Smith, and Sir Henry Keating.)

Adams and Another v. Nicholls and Another.—This was an appeal from a judgment of the Supreme Court of the Cape of Good Hope. The original suit was brought by Mr. Nicholls and Mr. Black, the official liquidators of the Frontier Commercial and Agricultural Bank, at Grahamstown, against Messrs. W. J. and A. W. Adams, merchants in London, for the breach of an agreement entered into by them upon a compromise between the bank and Mr. Locke, one of its customers. Mr. Locke was a merchant in the Cape Colony, and between him and Messrs. Adams there had been large commercial transactions. At the time of the alleged agreement Mr. Locke was indebted to the Frontier Bank in the sum of about £34,000, and to Messrs. Adams to the extent of £62,000. In 1869 the Frontier Bank was wound up, and Mr. Locke, who found himself unable to pay the amount of his liability, suggested that a compromise of his debt should be effected. Mr. W. J. Adams, one of the firm of Messrs. W. J. and A. W. Adams, happened then to be at the Cape, and with the consent of both Mr. Locke and the official liquidators, he, on the part of his firm, entered into an agreement that the goods then under order for Mr. Locke, amounting to £10,000 sterling, and such further goods as might be ordered within a year, should be delivered without their demanding any preferential security; that his firm would not withdraw their support from Mr. Locke for the same period, and that they would be contingently responsible for the payment of the premiums on Mr. Locke's life policy, which had been handed as security to the bank. That agreement was sanctioned by the Court and ratified two days later by Mr. Adams, on behalf of the firm. In consideration of that undertaking the liquidators accepted certain terms of compromise on the part of Mr. Locke, including, among others, the payment, at intervals of six months, of four promissory notes for £1,250 each. It afterwards turned out that so far from £10,000 worth of goods, as stated both in the agreement and in the subsequent ratification, being then under order from Messrs. Adams to Mr. Locke, the value of the consignment was not more than half. The later transactions between the firm and Locke only amounted to an additional sum of £8,000. The liquidators in the action at the Cape alleged that, notwithstanding the agreements in question, the goods then under order were never delivered to Mr. Locke, but were, on the contrary, taken possession of by the defendants; that they did not continue their support to him, but on the contrary withdrew it and caused his estate to be sequestrated; and that they took from him preferential security to a large amount. In consequence of their proceedings the promissory notes given by Locke to the bank, with one exception, were unpaid. The Supreme Court at the Cape held that there had been a breach of the agreement on each of these points, and ordered Messrs. Adams to pay to the liquidators, as damages, the sum of £2,000 and costs. Against that decision the present appeal was instituted. On the part of the appellants it was urged that there had been no breach of contract, that the compromise had not been effected by false representations, that the support which they undertook to give to Locke extended only to the supply of goods in the ordinary course of trade and not to the advance of money, or the guaranteeing of any payments; and that, in any view of the case, the damages awarded were excessive. Sir Montague Smith, after reciting the facts and reviewing the evidence at much length, said their Lordships would humbly advise her Majesty to affirm the decision of the Court below, and to dismiss the appeal, with costs.

Winding-up Petitions.—A petition for the winding-up of the Aldershot Brick and Tile Works Company (Limited) is to be heard before the Master of the Rolls on the 13th inst. A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Coal Economising Gas Company (Limited). A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Railway Service and General Co-operative Society (Limited).

COURT OF CHANCERY.

March 4.

(Before the Lords Justices of Appeal.)

Ex parte Collins—in re Lees.—This case involved a question of some importance as to the construction of the Bills of Sale Act, 1854. It was an appeal from the decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. The case was argued about a fortnight ago, and this morning the judgment of the Court was delivered. The Bills of Sale Act, 1854, requires that every bill of sale shall be filed or registered within 21 days after execution, in order to give it validity against the assignees in bankruptcy of the grantor, in all cases in which a sufficient possession of the goods included in the bill of sale has not been taken before the commencement of the bankruptcy; and section 2 of the Act provides, "If such bill of sale be made or given, subject to any defeasance, or condition, or declaration of trust not contained in the body thereof, such defeasance, or condition, or declaration of trust shall, for the purpose of this Act, be taken as part of such bill of sale, and shall be written on the same paper or parchment on which such bill of sale shall be written, before the time when the same or a copy thereof respectively shall be filed, otherwise such bill of sale shall be null and void to all intents and purposes" as if it had not been registered. On the 11th of July, 1874, John Lees, a farmer in Staffordshire, borrowed £100 from Abraham Collins, a money-lender in Liverpool, and to secure the repayment of the loan he gave Collins a bill of sale of his farming stock, live stock, and other effects. The deed was expressed to be made in consideration of £130, lent by Collins to Lees, and it was provided that the loan should be repaid by five consecutive monthly instalments of £3 each, on the 11th day of each month, beginning with March, and the balance of £115 on the 11th of August, 1874, and there was no provision as to payment of interest. The deed gave the grantee power to take possession of the property at any time after the execution of the deed, and further power in case of default in payment of any of the instalments to sell the property and repay himself. Collins, in fact, retained the £30 as his charge for making the loan. A contemporaneous memorandum, in writing, was signed by Lees, which provided that the charge of £30 was to be paid in full to Collins, notwithstanding that the money secured by the bill of sale might be repaid to him, or his rights under the bill of sale enforced, before the expiration of the time for payment mentioned in the bill of sale. The bill of sale was registered; the memorandum was not. On March 10, 1874, Lees filed a liquidation petition. Collins had not before this taken any sufficient possession of the property; but on the 13th of March he seized some of the cattle on Lees' farm, drove them away, and sold them. The trustee under the liquidation claimed to have the produce of the sale refunded; but the Judge of the Burton-on-Trent County Court decided against the claim. The Chief Judge, however, was of a different opinion, and ordered Collins to refund the money. Collins appealed. Lord Justice James, after stating the facts, said that the question was whether the non-registration of the memorandum had avoided the transaction under section 2 of the Act; whether the memorandum was a defeasance, or a condition, or a declaration of trust, within the meaning of that section. It was certainly not a defeasance; it was certainly not a declaration of trust. Was it a condition, either in the legal sense of the word or according to ordinary parlance? The word "condition" was a term well known to the law. The terms "condition precedent" and "condition subsequent" were familiar. The former was one by virtue of which a gift or an estate might never arise; the latter might defeat a gift or an estate after it had arisen. There might be a third species of contemporaneous condition by which a gift or estate was qualified or modified. But a condition annexed to a gift or estate was always something which diminished the rights of the grantee or affected them prejudicially in favour of the grantor. His Lordship was of opinion that in this memorandum there was no condition to which the bill of sale was made subject. The memorandum did not in any way diminish, defeat, or change that which was by the bill of sale given to the grantee. If it amounted to anything at all, it was really an additional bill of sale given to the creditor. It said in effect,—"Doubts may arise whether the £30 was not really in the nature of interest, and whether, if repayment of the loan should be made before the end of the six months, there should not be an abatement from the £30. To prevent any such doubt, I declare that the £30 shall be paid in full in any event." It was an additional right given to the creditor, of which, of course, he could not avail himself, because the memorandum was not registered; he could not rely on it at all. But if that was so, what were his rights under the bill of sale? That certainly contained a false recital that £130 had been lent, when the advance was, in truth, only £100. But the Act in no way dealt with any matter of that kind. It said that the bill of sale must be registered; but it did not say that it must express the real transaction between the parties. The bill of sale, when registered, must be dealt with in the same way as an unregistered bill of sale would have been dealt with before the Act. And if so, could there be any doubt that the creditor was entitled to be paid the full amount secured by the bill of sale? He could conceive a very sufficient reason why the debtor should not like to have the real nature of the transaction stated in the bill of sale. It would go so much against his credit. But he well knew what he was about. Before the Act he would have been bound by the terms of the bill of sale, and his creditors would have stood in the same condition. His Lordship was therefore of opinion that the memorandum did not require registration as being a defeasance, condition, or declaration of trust, to which the bill of sale was subject, and not included in it, and the deed must have full effect given to its terms. The decision of the County Court Judge was right, and it must be restored, and the appellant must have his costs of the hearing before the Chief Judge. —Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion.

RE LONDON AND COUNTY TRAMWAYS COMPANY.—This was a petition by the official liquidator of the London and County Tramways Company (Limited), asking for payment out to him of the sum of £762 5s 7d, being the money which, under the Tramways Act, and the rules made in pursuance thereof, had been deposited by the company before a provisional order which the company had obtained for making "the Uxbridge and Southall and Ealing and Brentford Tramways" could be delivered to the company. The company were the promoters in obtaining the said provisional order. On the 6th of November, 1874, the company was wound up on the petition of certain creditors, and in due course an official liquidator was appointed. The petition raised a question as to the construction to be put upon the 26th rule of the Board of Trade, which seems to give a discretion to the Court either to forfeit the deposit money, or to pay it to the official liquidator for the purpose of being applied as part of the assets of the company. His Honour had, when the petition was first before him, directed the solicitors for the Treasury to be served. Mr Crossley, for petitioner, now commented on the rule, and submitted that as the deposit money was required for the purpose of paying creditors of the company, it should be paid out to the liquidator, as prayed. Mr Hemming, for the Attorney-General, did not oppose the application; but argued that the Court had no discretion to pay the deposit out to the liquidator without the solicitor for the Treasury waived his right to have it forfeited, and further, that in any event the deposit could not be paid out except it was required for the purpose of paying creditors of the company, and that it was not the intention of the rule that any part of the deposit money should be applied for the benefit of the shareholders. After some discussion, in which reference was made to the rules of the Board of Trade under the Railway Abandonment Act, the Vice-Chancellor ordered that on an affidavit being produced showing the amount of uncalled capital of the company, and that the whole deposited fund would be required for payment of creditors of the company, and the Attorney-General not objecting, the costs of the Attorney-General should be paid out of the deposit fund, and the balance should be paid to the official liquidator to be applied as part of the assets of the company for the benefit of the creditors thereof.

IN RE THE HECKMONDWICKE IRONWORKS COMPANY (LIMITED). —The voluntary winding-up of this company was ordered to be continued, under supervision.

IN RE THE CO-OPERATIVE SUPPLY ASSOCIATION LIMITED.—This company was ordered to be wound up on a creditor's petition.

IN RE THE MUTUAL SOCIETY TRUST FUND.—This was a winding-up petition presented by two investors in the funds of the above society. The investors amounted to 40 in number, and consisted principally of clergymen and ladies, and persons in a humble condition of life investing their savings. The society having got into difficulties, the petition was presented. Mr Higgins, Q.C., appeared in support of the petition, which was also supported by Mr Romer, on behalf of other investors; Mr Everitt opposed the petition on behalf of creditors; and Mr G. Hastings, for the society, asked that the petition might stand over, in order that certain persons might be cross-examined. The Vice-Chancellor, however, said the case was a very bad one, and as clear a one for winding-up as he had ever seen, and that the application by the company for leave to cross-examine was a mere subterfuge to gain time commonly resorted to by companies in this position, but which, if allowed, would defeat the administration of justice. There must therefore be an immediate compulsory order for winding up the society.

ASHURST V. MASON—ASHURST V. FOWLER.—These were two contributory suits of some novelty in their facts. Mr Ashurst, the plaintiff in both suits, was chairman of a company called the English Assurance Company, which was registered under the Companies' Act in September, 1867. A Mr Brockett subscribed to the memorandum of association in respect of 250 shares. He retired from the Board in July, 1869, and applied to be relieved of his shares. The directors agreed that his shares should be placed in the names of nominees for the company, and accordingly a transfer was executed to Mr Ashurst, and Mr Leyland, the manager of the company. About the same time a Mrs Elder, who was entitled to 100 shares as executrix of her husband, being dissatisfied, applied to the company to find a transferee, and threatened to take winding-up proceedings in case this was not done. These shares were also transferred to Messrs Ashurst and Leyland, and £100 paid out of the company's assets as the price of them. The company had no power at that time to invest their funds in their own shares. The company was ultimately wound-up voluntarily, under a special resolution passed and confirmed in December, 1870. Messrs Ashurst and Leyland were settled on the list of contributories in respect of the 350 shares, and Mr Leyland not being able to pay calls, Mr Ashurst had to pay a considerable amount in respect of calls and also to recoup the £100 paid on the late transfer out of the funds of the company. He now brought these suits to get contributions from such of his co-directors as approved the transaction. In the suit of "Ashurst v. Fowler" a Mr Coles was made party. There was no evidence against him of knowledge, except that he had formally approved the transfer of Mrs Elder's shares. In the suit of "Ashurst v. Mason" one of the directors who had been present at the subsequent meeting, when the minutes of the meeting at which the transfer from Brockett had been approved, was made party. The Vice-Chancellor said that the case was a singular one, but the principle governing it was reasonably plain. A number of persons had to effect a common object come to a common design; in carrying out that design one of them had incurred liability; it was only reasonable that the other parties should contribute their share to the loss and not escape. Mr Banner had attended a meeting at which the minutes of the previous meeting had been read; he could not be allowed to say that he was not attending, or for some other reason had not notice. He would, therefore, have to contribute in respect of the 250 shares. Mr Coles was in a different position.

No motive could be imputed to him of the reason of the transfer he approved, and he would, therefore, not have to contribute. But against the other defendants a decree was made.

IN RE CAPEL COAPE.—This was an adjourned first meeting, the bankrupt being described as of Church-street, Fulham, colonel of militia. He now produced a statement of affairs disclosing debts and liabilities to the amount of £15,030, of which £12,000 had been incurred in connection with various public companies in which he had been a director or shareholder. There are stated to be no assets. In consequence of the continued absence of a quorum of creditors a further adjournment was taken.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE J. W. F. ROSE.—A question of considerable importance arose in this case. The debtor had filed a petition for liquidation in April, 1873, under which the creditors passed a resolution to liquidate by arrangement, and they granted the debtor his discharge. New debts had since been contracted, and the debtor, being desirous of making a proposal to his creditors, had signed a second petition, but the Registrar declined to receive it, on the ground that the former liquidation had not been closed. Mr Finlay Knight now applied for an order to file the petition, notwithstanding the refusal of the Registrar to receive it. He submitted that the debtor, having obtained his discharge nearly two years since, had a perfect right to present a second petition, and that the omission on the part of the creditors to close the liquidation could not affect that right. Mr Registrar Spring-Rice referred to Sir William Russell's case, recently decided by the Lords Justices, and to the 15th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, sub-section 3, which provided that the bankrupt's property should comprise all property belonging to him at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or acquired by, or devolving on, him during its continuance. The question was whether there were assets or not; prima facie, the debtor in the present case had no property whatever. Mr Knight asked that so serious and important a question should not be decided upon an objection of this kind taken in limine. Mr Registrar Spring Rice said he would consult his colleagues upon the subject, but the present inclination of his mind was against the filing of the second petition. He thought a clear distinction existed between the discharge of the debtor, and the close of the liquidation.

EX PARTE GREENER—RE LINDSAY.—This was an appeal from the Newcastle County Court. On October 20, 1873, Edward Lindsay entered into an agreement with Marshall, Osborne, and Co. to build for them an iron screw steamer at the price of £7,600. The agreement contained, amongst other stipulations, the following:—That the vessel and the materials should, from the time of giving or paying the first instalment, be deemed in every respect, and for every and all purposes, to be the property of Marshall, Osborne, and and Co. to the extent of their advances, "subject, nevertheless, to the builder's lien for any unpaid instalments." That the vessel should be delivered to the purchasers complete on September 1, 1874; and that Marshall, Osborne, and Co. should pay for the vessel as to £500 in cash, and as to the rest in bills of exchange, payments to be made by instalments in accordance with the progress in the construction of the vessel; but "all bills given during construction to be retired by Marshall, Osborne, and Co. at completion and transfer." In July, 1874, £100 had been paid in cash and £3,000 in bills of exchange. The bills were drawn by Lindsay and accepted by Marshall, Osborne, and Co., and were expressed to be for "value received in iron screw steamer now building." The bills were endorsed by Lindsay, and five out of the six of them, amounting to £2,700, were taken by him to his bankers, Messrs Lambton and Co., and were discounted by them. On July 31, 1874, a petition for liquidation or composition was filed by Marshall, Osborne, and Co.; and on August 14, Lindsay called a meeting of his creditors. On September 7, Lindsay was adjudicated bankrupt; but this adjudication was subsequently set aside under the circumstances stated in ex parte Lindsay re Lindsay. On September 18 the creditors of Marshall, Osborne, and Co. duly confirmed a resolution to accept a composition of five shillings in the pound; and immediately after, Mrshall, Osborne, and Co. gave notice to Lindsay that they abandoned the contract for the ship. On November 18 Lindsay filed his petition; and on this petition he was, on December 11, adjudicated bankrupt, and Joseph Greener, the appellant, was appointed trustee. On January 23, 1875, Lambton and Co. obtained an order from the County Court Judge, declaring that the steamer was a security to Marshall, Osborne, and Co. for indemnifying them against payment of the bills, and that Lambton and Co. were entitled to the benefit of the security. From this decision the trustee appealed. Mr Little, Mr Winslow, and Mr Colt for the appellant. Mr De Gex and Mr Doria, for Messrs Lambton and Co., contended that the case was governed by ex parte Waring. The Chief Judge considered that the whole contract was subject to the builder's lien for unpaid instalments; that the case of ex parte Waring did not apply, because, under the contract, no equities and no legal rights could arise until the purchaser had paid the purchase money. As, then, the purchase had been abandoned, he held that the holders of the bills had no lien on the ship, the proceeds of which belonged to the bankrupt's estate alone.

IN RE W. J. PROSSER.—This was a meeting for public examination. The bankrupt was a wine merchant of Mark-lane and Mincing-lane, formerly trading in partnership with John Prosser, under the firm of Prosser Brothers. He had filed a petition for liquidation, but the proceedings fell through and adjudication ensued. Liabilities £34,102, and assets £13,142. Upon the application of Mr Bagley, on behalf of the trustee and inspector, his Honour granted an adjournment for two months, the bankrupt in the meantime to furnish certain additional accounts.

IN RE ALBERT PELLY.—In this case an interim injunction granted last week, staying further proceedings at the suit of the Consolidated Bank, was continued upon the application of Mr Brough until further order. The debtor is a merchant carrying on business at 18, Finch-lane, and his liabilities are estimated at about £44,000, the assets have not yet been ascertained.

IN RE GEORGE MARRIOTT.—The bankrupt was a boot and shoe manufacturer, carrying on business in White's-row, Spitalfields. He absconded in January last, and adjudication was made upon the petition of Mr Wm. Somervell, leather merchant, 35, Noble-street. This was a sitting for public examination. Mr H. Montagu represented the trustee. The bankrupt was not in attendance; and the Court ordered the usual memorandum of non-appearance to be entered upon the proceedings.

IN RE MARY CROXON.—The debtor, described as of the Park Hotel, Park-place, St. James's, hotel keeper, has presented a petition for liquidation, and Mr. Watney, in now applying for the appointment of a receiver and manager, and an interim injunction to restrain proceedings by creditors, read an affidavit, from which it appeared the debts were estimated at about £6,000, and an offer had been made for the purchase of the hotel, furniture, and effects at the sum of £5,000, subject to the business being continued.—His Honour appointed a receiver and manager, and granted an interim injunction.

LIFE INSURANCE—DEPUTATION TO THE BOARD OF TRADE.—A deputation introduced by Sir Graham Montgomery, M.P., and consisting of Mr David Smith, manager of the North British Mercantile Insurance Company; Dr W. Smith, manager of the English and Scottish Law Life Insurance Company; and Mr M'Candlish, manager of the Scottish National Insurance Company, had an interview with the Right Hon. Sir C. Adderley at the office of the Board of Trade on Saturday upon the subject of life insurance. The object of the deputation was to urge upon the President of the Board of Trade the advisability of modifying some of the provisions of Lord Cairns' Act of 1872. Sir Charles Adderley promised to give the views of the deputation his favourable consideration.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS, TUESDAY, MARCH 2.

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY ARBITRATION ACTS, (1872 and 1873), AMENDMENT BILL.—The Lord Chancellor presented a bill for amending the European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts of 1872 and 1873. As the bill would have to be brought before the Standing Orders Committee and pursue the course which was usual in connection with private bills, it was unnecessary for him to detain their lordships by any lengthy explanation. The European Assurance Company failed some years ago, and there were involved in it, by amalgamation, as many as 44 other companies. The affairs of all these companies had to be considered, adjusted, and wound up, and for this purpose an Act of Parliament was passed authorising the appointment of an arbitrator. The Lord Chancellor for the time being was empowered to appoint a successor in the event of the arbitrator's death, and any such successor was to be chosen among those who had been Judges of the superior Courts of Law and Equity. Under this power the late Lord Romilly was appointed successor to Lord Westbury, and it was now necessary to choose another. The amount of business still to be done was both large and irksome, and among those qualified under the original Act there was none who could be found to carry on the work. It had, therefore, become necessary to enlarge the area under which the choice of an arbitrator could be made, and the matter was very important, inasmuch as, although the past arbitrators had from time to time pronounced opinions on the cases which had come before them, all that had to be done in the shape of making an award still remained to be done. Inasmuch as some difference of opinion on certain points had been expressed by those who had acted as arbitrators in this matter, it was thought desirable that in the event of the arbitrators differing from the decisions already given, there should be a single appeal allowed in certain cases to the Court of Appeal in Chancery, in order that a conflict of decisions might be prevented. With that explanation, he should merely present the Bill to their lordships, without asking them to read it a first time on that occasion.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MARCH 4.

PARLIAMENTARY DRAUGHTING.—On the motion of the Attorney-General, a select committee was appointed "to consider whether any and what means can be adopted to improve the manner and language of current legislation, and to report their opinion thereon to the House."

BIRMINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr H. W. COLE, Q.C., Judge.)

THE PROXY SYSTEM—RE CHARLES LYONS, FOREST INN, KNOWLE.—In this case Mr Nathan, instructed by Mr J. Ansell, appeared on behalf of Messrs Ind, Coope, and Co., who were secured creditors in the matter, and objected to the registration of the resolution for liquidation passed at a meeting of the creditors, on the ground of certain irregularities. Mr Loxdale Warren, instructed by Mr W. J. Burman, appeared for the debtor. Mr Nathan explained that it was the duty of the officers of the court to send to every creditor a notice of the holding of the first meeting of the creditors, accompanied with a form of affidavit for the creditor to use in proof of his debt, and appended to such affidavit was a form of proxy for the creditor to appoint some person to vote in his stead at the first meeting. The first objection which he had to make to the registration of the resolution was, that the notice so sent out in this case was accompanied by an affidavit, having appended to it an appointment of proxy, not blank, but filled up beforehand with the name of the debtor's own solicitor or his clerk. He handed in the notice containing the appointment of proxy filled up with the name of the debtor's solicitor, and bearing the seal of the Court, and said that the document being sent out in that form was in direct contravention of the order issued some time ago that that particular thing should not be done. His Honour said he considered it an improper thing to do, and he should speak to the Registrar about it. He was astonished that such a notice should go out officially from his court. It was most improper. Mr Nathan said that it seemed to him most extraordinary. He added that an uneducated creditor might be induced to sign the proxy appointing the debtor's solicitor, in the belief that it was an official document. His Honour said the document spoke for itself. Mr Nathan said that there was no improper motive attributed to the debtors' solicitor. Mr Warren: I think your Honour will find it has been regularly done. His Honour: It has not been regularly done; it has been done irregularly, and if I had known of it I should have stopped it long since. Mr Nathan: It really voids all resolutions taken under such circumstances. You cannot accept resolutions come to by a majority of the creditors when the proxies were obtained in such a manner as that. Mr Nathan then referred his Honour to the various sections of the Act in regard to the matter. His Honour, having sent for the Registrar, said that Mr Chauntler told him exactly what he expected, that these papers were delivered out of the Court to Mr Burman. Mr Nathan: No, they are brought in and posted by the Court. His Honour: Whose handwriting is this? Mr Chauntler: The solicitor's. His Honour: Is this written before or after the seal of the Court? Mr Chauntler: It is written, no doubt, before. His Honour: It is most improper that a proceeding of this kind should be adopted by the officers of this Court. Mr Chauntler: They never look at them any more than to seal and post them. His Honour: But the seal of the Court has to be put to a document, and before this is done it must be in a proper form, and the idea of putting the seal of the Court to a document without looking at it enables this to be done. It is grossly improper. Mr Chauntler: It has always been done. His Honour: It must never be done again. The seal of the Court has been put on the document which had already been filled up, and the proxy's name given, which ought to be blank for the creditor to select his own proxy. The solicitor in this way can take advantage of his position in a way that the Court never would sanction, and I am sure if your attention had been called to it you never would have allowed the seal of the Court to go upon it. Mr Chauntler: I never see them. His Honour: Then your clerk is the person who has the responsibility; he puts the stamp on. Mr Chauntler said that the solicitors brought in the proxies, and they were posted by the officers of the Court, who did not examine them beyond the directions. His Honour: For the future they must be examined. Before the seal of the Court is put to any official document, I require it, on the responsibility of the registrar, to be examined, and that no seal be put upon a document that has not been properly verified. It is impossible to say what irregularities may arise if this course is permitted. Mr Chauntler: The Act of Parliament has been fully carried out in every respect. His Honour: The Act of Parliament never intended that the solicitor should put in his own name as proxy. Mr Chauntler said that if his Honour made an order it should be obeyed. His Honour: Unquestionably it was an oversight, but it must not occur again. Mr Chauntler: Of course if you make this order it shall be done. His Honour: I shall certainly do it. Mr Nathan: I am told there was a communication from the Treasury before. Mr Chauntler: That was for the solicitors. Mr Nathan said that the effect of this practice was to give the debtor's solicitor complete control over the whole of the proceedings. His Honour pointed out that the officer of the Court who made the affidavit had made an affidavit that the notice was sent out in its blank form, and he had the notice produced bearing the seal of the Court, in which the form was filled up with the name of Mr Burman, or his clerk. If he had sent out the form in the way stated in the affidavit it would have been right. Mr Chauntler repeated that they did not examine the notices, but simply the addresses. His Honour added that such a form must not be sent out again. Mr Nathan then proceeded with his objection to the registration. His Honour said that he had nothing to show him that there were any other similar proxies, and Mr Nathan said that he was unable to say whether there were any more. Mr Nathan contended that the irregularity voided the proceedings altogether, and said that it was impossible to tell the mischief which might arise from the practice in regard to the voting of the creditors. His Honour said he could not see that the paper in question had any appreciable effect in the case. Mr

Nathan said his next objection was that the notice convening the meeting of creditors was not sent a sufficient number of days before the meeting. He argued that it was necessary there should be fourteen clear days' notice, and quoted cases in support of that view. Mr Warren said that it was a universal practice for solicitors to fill up forms in the way indicated, and it was not until very recently that the custom had been put a stop to. The Judge said there was not the slightest imputation upon Mr Burman. Mr Nathan concurred. Mr Warren then contended that there was no irregularity in sending out the forms. His Honour said he would not trouble Mr Warren on that point. He was of opinion that an irregularity had been committed, for which the Registrar was not to blame at all. It was not an irregularity of that kind which invalidated what had been done. The irregularity was occasioned by the gentleman who posted the notice and made the affidavit. The Registrar was not to blame personally; but the person was responsible for the irregularity who, by inadvertence, no doubt, did not perceive that the form in reference to which he gave an affidavit was filled up. If, however, it had been shown that the irregularity had had the effect of altering the statutable majority at the meeting of creditors, he should have considered that would have invalidated the proceedings; but it appeared that the one case did not affect the majority, and that the vote given by Mr Burman, as proxy, would have no effect whatever, and he agreed that it did not affect the right to have the resolution registered. Mr Warren then addressed himself to the question of the fourteen days' notice, and first of all asked his Honour to decide whether Mr Nathan's clients had any locus standi, as they did not raise any objection with regard to the fourteen days' notice at the first meeting of creditors. After further discussion, his Honour said that, on the question of fourteen days' notice, he was of opinion, on the authority of the case of "Mitchell and Foster," that fourteen clear days' notice of the meeting should be given. That being the case, he thought the meeting, which was summoned on the 25th of January, and held on the 8th of February, was not duly summoned. With regard to the irregularity of the form of proxy he thought that Mr Nathan had not shown him that any substantial injustice had arisen in consequence; but he gave some importance to the objection. He held that the proceedings at the meeting were ineffectual, and made an order that another general meeting of the creditors should be summoned in the place of the meeting held on the 8th February. He should suspend the registration of the resolution until that meeting had been held.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT—FEB. 26.

(Before Mr. T. P. THOMPSON, Judge.)

IN RE CHARLES QUERNER.—This bankrupt, a commission merchant in Lombard-chambers, appeared on his adjourned public examination. Mr. W. Morris represented Mr. Bolland, the trustee, and stated that the accounts, which were of a complicated and voluminous character, had been fully investigated, and although the result was far from satisfactory, he did not think any benefit would accrue from a further adjournment. The bankrupt, accordingly, was allowed to pass his examination. The liabilities were £4,364, and assets £470.

IN RE JAMES TATLEY.—This was an application to set aside a bill of sale. The debtor, a car proprietor at Ormskirk, presented his petition for liquidation on the 30th December last, and on the 14th January of this year liquidation was determined upon, and a trustee chosen. A creditor who held a bill of sale over the bankrupt's property took possession thereof on the 1st January, and the simple question for the court was, whether this seizure was not too late, it being after the commencement of the liquidation. Mr. Segar appeared for the trustee, and Mr. Cobbett for the creditor. The contention of the latter was that the liquidation did not commence until the appointment of a trustee, and therefore the seizure was in time. He argued the point at some length, but the court, without calling for reply, ruled, upon the authority of cases cited, that the liquidation commenced on the presentation of the petition, and therefore the property, being then in the order and disposition of the debtor with the consent of the true owner, passed to the trustee. The application would be granted with costs.

(Before Mr GILMOUR, Deputy Judge.)

Mr Potter, instructed by Mr Isham Gill, appeared in behalf of Mr Blease, trustee of the estate of John Dickson, of 9, Hamilton-square, contractor, whose affairs are in liquidation, for an order to restrain Edward John Cox Davies from further proceedings in an action brought by him against the debtor in the Court of Exchequer. The claim was for £2,000, and was for liabilities incurred in employing persons in the business of the debtor; that he had had an award made against him in the matter for money lent, and for money paid. Mr Etty, on behalf of the creditor, contended that as an element of damage entered into the claim, the debt was not a provable one, and until the matter had been adjudged the trustee could not have cognizance of it. Mr Potter urged that it was a matter for the trustee to investigate. His Honour granted the application but refused costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN. FEB. 27.

(Before Judge MILLER.)

IN THE MATTER OF A PETITION FOR ADJUDICATION.—The debtor in this case was a farmer residing near Tralee. He farmed over 500 acres of land. He had been adjudicated on a creditor's petition, in which he was described as a farmer and cattle dealer. The act of bankruptcy relied on was the failure to pay, secure, or compound, the petitioning creditor's debt within seven days from the service of the debtor summons. This summons had been obtained on an affidavit, in which the debtor was also described as a "farmer and cattle dealer," and immediately after the service of the summons, on a further affidavit, stating that the debtor had sold all his property and was about leaving Ireland, the creditor obtained a warrant from this court for the debtor's arrest, and he was subsequently arrested and lodged in Tralee Gaol. An application was then made to the Court for his discharge, on the ground that the summons was irregular and should be set aside, because in the affidavit obtaining it, and in the summons itself, he was described as a trader, whereas he was a farmer, and because the summons required him, as being a trader, to pay, secure, or compound the debt within seven days, instead of giving him 21 days, as in the case of a non-trader. A great number of conflicting affidavits was filed on both sides. On the hearing of the motion on Friday, the 12th inst., Judge Miller directed it to stand until the creditor had an opportunity of electing either to abandon the proceeding, or to proceed to an adjudication, on the alleged act of bankruptcy. He elected to adopt the latter course, the debtor having shown cause on the same grounds, against the adjudication. The case came on to be argued before the Court on Saturday. The debtor was brought up in custody, and he and some other witnesses were examined. Judge Miller said the only point in the case was, whether the debtor was a trader or not. Without levelling all the landmarks which separated traders from non-traders, and finding that every farmer who bought or sold cattle was a trader, he could not hold that the debtor in such a case was a trader, and while he did not approve of his act in selling his property, he should allow the cause against the adjudication, dismiss the debtor summons, and order the debtor's discharge, on the debtor undertaking not to bring an action. His lordship ordered the petitioning creditor to pay the debtor's costs of showing cause against the adjudication, as well as of the motion for his discharge, and his expenses back to Tralee.

March 2.

IN RE THE BANBRIDGE EXTENSION RAILWAY COMPANY.—This matter came before the Court in reference to the amended bill before Parliament, in relation to the sale of the line. Mr Wallace entered into a statement as to the details of the bill. The present liabilities of the company, he said, amounted to £5,600, and there were net funds available to about £3,000, or £4,000, which would leave a balance of about £1,200. If the matter were got out of bankruptcy, some chance would be given to the original shareholders. Judge Miller thought it would be a great matter if the undertaking could be taken out of bankruptcy. The line had now lain dirilect for ten years, and that in, perhaps, the first county in Ireland, with an opulent resident gentry. His lordship said he did not see how the Court could interfere with the matter at present. A bill was now before Lord Redesdale, of whose abilities in such matters he (Judge Miller) happened to have some knowledge. The Court had already given its sanction to the promotion of the bill, and would authorise the parties to incur any necessary expense in having proper clauses framed. He had no doubt that some provision would be made to revest the estate for the benefit of the creditors.

"A QUARREL AMONG THE ACCOUNTANTS."

The Liverpool Courier of March 1st contained the following, under the title of "A Quarrel among the Accountants":—

A battle royal, concerning which the public, as yet, hear little, but which costs that same unconscious public several thousands a year, has been waged, with intervals of months annually, between two Government departments for four years. There is in London a vast establishment known as the Accountant-General's and Audit Department, which is the best customer manufacturers of foolscap paper and Dechroic ink ever had. This department is under the control of Sir William Dunbar, a Scotchman, and, we understand, a connection of Mr Lowe. The business of this Audit Department was generally connected with shoe brushes, wax-ends, tacks, milk for arsenal cats, pens and penknives of Government clerks, &c. Vouchers were required for every article of this and similar classes charged in the public accounts, and in numerous cases the correspondence caused by the absence of a voucher for a hammer value 5½d. cost the public ten times the amount in stationery and stamps. It is said, (although we by no means vouch for the accuracy of the statement,) that Mr Lowe owes his great discomfiture to the Audit Department. Observing the enormous number of matchboxes charged to this department, the office transmitted, as we were informed, statistics to Mr Lowe. That poor man never thought of the number of cigars consumed by the legion of audit clerks who smoke to pass away the time, but simply took the returns as the average of the public consumption, and hence his fall. But when the Irish Church Bill was passed there was joy in the tents of Dunbar. There were the receipt and expenditure of 16 millions of money to be accounted for, and would not the "office" have glorious times of it, picking holes and searching for mare's nests in the accounts? So, as soon as the Irish Church Bill had obtained the royal assent, the Audit-office received a large number of new clerks. We admit that it was quite as well that part of the plunder should go to enterprising young men, as to Roman Catholic imbeciles, idiots, and cracked Cabinet Ministers. Then a special office was formed for the discovery of mites in the rich cheese of Irish Church plunder. The belligerents on the other side are the Church Commissioners; Lord Monk, late Governor-General of Canada, the statesman who inaugurated the new Dominion; the Right Hon. Mr Justice Lawson, formerly Professor of Political Economy in the University of Dublin. These gentlemen, in conjunction with Mr Hamilton, M.P. for the county of Dublin, and Secretary of the Treasury, who died in 1869, formed the Board of Irish Church Commissioners. This triad, appointed by Mr Gladstone, had to obtain accurate information respecting Church property, to settle the claims of 2,140 clergymen and 4,160 ecclesiastical persons, to value all the lands in the possession of the Church, to take up the collection of many thousand rent charges, to make arrangements with the Church representative body extending to 11,460 accounts, to manage landed property estimated at £210,000 a year, and to satisfy everybody. They never thought of the terrible Accountant-General. In 1870 the Church Commissioners published their first report, and after an interval of 13½ months the Comptroller-General pounces down upon them. His report seemed to prove that he had discovered that the Commissioners, in many thousands of accounts, some for sums as small as 3s. 1d., had made mistakes amounting in the aggregate to £58 4s. against the surplus fund. It is quite right that mistakes, however trivial, should be pointed out; but when the Audit-office claims credit for having caused the repayment of £58 4s., the officers should remember that by officious meddling they compelled the Church Commissioners to pay £2,500 as a compromise for a matter which no living man had heard of until the Accountant-General poked it up. Next, the report charged the solicitor of the Commissioners with receiving a week's interest on the small sums lodged by him in the bank, which allowed no interest on deposit, and in fine, they altogether mistook their position, and imagined that an ex-Governor-General of Canada, officially thanked by his Sovereign and Parliament, and an honoured judge of her Majesty's Court of Exchequer, were warders of convict prisons liable to be called to account in the matter of a shoe-brush. When the report of the Auditor-General was presented to Parliament, there was, of course, a shindy, and all the Roman Catholic members wanted to know how much was the surplus of the Church spoil and when would it be divided. It would be a good thing if Paulus Cullen could get six millions or so of Protestant Church money without delay. But the Commissioners were silent and bided their time. They say they were clothed with judicial powers by the disestablishing act, and they denied that they were bound to account or send vouchers to an accountant in London. But, on the last day of January, 1875, the Commissioners, having completed two parts of the three entrusted to them, published a full and minute account of every shilling received or distributed since their appointment in 1869. They do more; they publish in full the criticisms of the Accountant-General, and in juxtaposition their refutation. No public body ever received such a quiet but effective castigation before. The Audit-office should henceforth confine its inquisitorial duties to bills for shoddy, cats' meat, and lucifer matches. The curious part of the history is this: the Commissioners report extends down to the end of December, 1874, but on the 1st day of January, 1875, the Accountant-General publishes his comments on the accounts up to December, 1873! He had 18 months to hunt for mares' nests and found none. Altogether unaware of the bombshell which was to fall upon him next day, he recapitulated his old charges and inuendoes. He must now gird himself up to the task not only of "answering" the "answers," but of accounting for the animus which dictated his State report. The matter is of national importance in this way, The Accountant-General's office demanded and received from out of the Irish Church funds, £6,250 for auditing the accounts up to January, 1874. This is a neat little sum, sufficient to pay a small army of clerks, and to defray the cost of pleasure trips to Ireland "to look at the books." The office compels every public institution in the kingdom to furnish accounts and vouchers to it. The head of the office is, as it were, a Commissioner, above all other Commissioners, an autocrat of all he surveys, and his is the only office, and he the only officer, in the entire kingdom who is not subject to an audit himself. It is a glorious position this, to have all public boards, offices, departments, &c, trembling under the touch of the auditor, and paying in to his account vast sums of money, while no man dares to ask, Pray, have you, Mr Auditor, a voucher for that odd box of steel pens?

MESSRS. CHILD'S BANK.—Among the curious papers recently discovered on the shelves of Messrs. Child and Co., in the upper room over Temple-bar, are several of historic interest. One file of ancient documents contained, inter alia, several receipts signed by the executors of Sir Peter Loly, who lived hard by in Covent-garden. With them was one of Noll Gwyn's doctor's bills, which runs as follows:—"Received by the hands of Mr Child the summe of one hondert and nine pound yn full of all remedes and medecins delivered to Mrs Ellin Gwyn, deceased, I say received by me this 17 of November 1688; Christianus Harell, £109 .. 00 ,, 00 .." In the same parcel was discovered an acknowledgment for the sum of £200, received from the Duke of Bolton, signed by Lady Rachel Russell, the widow of William, Lord Russell, who was executed in Lincoln's-inn-fields in 1684.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

RALPH CHILD (SUNDERLAND).—Messrs Gamble and Harvey have issued a circular to the creditors of this debtor, who is making application for his order of discharge. The debtor filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement on the 23d October last, and in the statement of affairs presented to a meeting of creditors on the 19th November, he estimated his liabilities at £1,498 12s. 7d.; and his assets, consisting of stock in trade which cost £702 8s. 4d, and which the debtor put down as likely to realize £562, and book debts £253 3s. 6d., which he thought would realize £155 1s. 8d. In his examination before Mr Registrar Murray at the London Bankruptcy Court the debtor admitted that he gave a number of orders before filing his petition, and that goods were delivered within a month of that date to the amount of £306 2s. 8d. Just about that time he was very much pressed for money, and had been selling goods by auction. He was informed that the trustee had only been able to collect book debts to the value of 3s. 0d., and that all the other letters had come back through the Dead Letter Office. He accounted for the deficiency by the fact that he had been realizing his stock by auction to pay creditors. These facts are placed before the creditors in order that they may judge as to using their proxies towards the debtor's discharge.

A. W. MABERLY, Architect and Surveyor, Strand and Glo'ster. —The first meeting of creditors was held on Friday, 26th Feb., at the offices of the receiver, Mr Flaxman Haydon. The statement of affairs disclosed total liabilities £9,685 9d., with assets £850 12s. 2d., besides doubtful items. After long discussion it was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation with Mr Haydon and Mr J. Andrews, accountants, as joint trustees, assisted by a committee of three creditors. Mr Andrews, of Ironmonger-lane, who appeared for the "Protector" Life Office, occupied the chair. Messrs Guscotte, Kelly, and Scott, are the solicitors to the proceedings.

T. AND C. KINGSFORD.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs T. and C. Kingsford, who recently suspended payment, the accounts prepared by Messrs James and F. Ford showed the following results:—Joint estate, total liabilities, £15,221 4s. 5d., of which £3,500 is fully, and £4,296 8s. 2d. partly, secured; and assets of £4,917 11s. 7d.; and the private estate of Mr Charles Kingsford — liabilities, £22,041 15s. 9d., of which £9,136 18s. 8d. is fully secured: and assets of £5,760 17s. 11d. The creditors on the joint estate agreed to accept a composition of 8s. in the pound in four equal instalments, extending over a period of seven months; and those on the private estate of Mr C. Kingsford to a composition of 5s. in the pound, to be paid in three months, Mr James Ford being appointed trustee.

SOUTHWELL BANK.—At a meeting of the creditors of the Southwell Bank, Nottinghamshire, held on Wednesday, the resignation of Mr Millward, J.P., the local trustee, was accepted, and a resolution was passed appointing Mr Waddell the accountant, as sole trustee.

J. HOLROYD AND CO. (LEEDS).—A meeting of the creditors of James Holroyd and Co., woollen manufacturers, Leeds, was held at the Great Northern Railway Station Hotel, Leeds, W. B. Dennison in the chair. The greater part of the creditors reside in Yorkshire, but there are others connected with London and the county of Durham. The statement of affairs prepared by Messrs Burrell and Pickard, accountants, was laid before the meeting. It showed that the liabilities amounted to £56,433, and that the assets were estimated at £16,835. In addition to this statement, the deficiency account, showing the losses incurred by the debtor (James Holroyd) during the last two years was submitted. There was a long and excited discussion among the creditors present as to the way in which the debtor had conducted his business, upon the deficiency account, and the way in which the Barnard Castle mill had been managed. Heavy losses in Holroyd's business transactions were freely commented upon by the creditors. The position of the Barnard Castle estate was also freely discussed, as it appeared that the realisation of that property would materially affect the dividend which the debtor might be able to show. No offer being made to the creditors by the debtor, a committee, consisting of seven creditors, was appointed to investigate the accounts connected with the Barnard Castle concern, with orders to report to a future meeting of creditors. The debtor, trading as James Holroyd and Co., has long been associated with religious and philanthropic efforts in Leeds.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The stoppage is announced of Messrs. Schroeder and Mortleman, Russia brokers, of Old Broad-street, a firm established in 1857; but their liabilities are understood to be small. The difficulties of the house appear to have been chiefly caused by the fall in the price of tallow.—The suspension is reported of Mr W. H. Pridmore, corn merchant, of Birmingham, with liabilities estimated at about £30,000, chiefly due to Liverpool firms. The failure in Manchester of Messrs P. and J. M'Gregor, machine makers, is reported, with liabilities of £11,000.—Also, Mr Alfred Butterworth, shawl and mantle manufacturer—liabilities, £2,600—and Mr Ohanes Damgagion, merchant and shipper, with liabilities of £8,000.—Messrs Zucco and Kessissoglu, merchants, Adam's-court, Old Broad-street, have suspended payment, but their liabilities are understood to be small.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition with creditors has been filed in the Halifax County Court by Messrs Cockroft and Chambers, of Bottoms Mills, Ovenden, worsted spinners. Mr Samuel Johnson Beswick, of the firm of Beswick and Co., of Halifax, accountant, has been appointed receiver and manager to the estate. The liabilities are estimated at between £8,000 and £10,000.—A petition for liquidation has been filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court by Mr. John Arthur Ashbury, carrying on business as a Britannia metal manufacturer at Sheffield, under the style of John A. Ashbury and Sons. The liabilities amount to nearly £4,000, but the assets are not yet known. The creditors reside in various large towns.

AMERICA.—A New York despatch says the large Bowery dry goods house of Bradbury Brothers has suspended, and makes a bad exhibit—liabilities, $170,000; assets, $87,000. The estate promises a dividend of only 25 or 30 per cent.—American advices report the suspension of Messrs. Stauffer and Johnson, flour and grain merchants, Philadelphia, with liabilities of £10,000. Messrs. Bradbury Brothers, in the dry goods trade, had suspended, with liabilities put down at £34,000; assets £17,000. The estate, it was thought, would yield a dividend of 25 or 30 per cent. Mr. James Dodds, of Philadelphia, in the caned goods trade, had suspended. Liabilities, £20,000; assets, £12,000.

A Liverpool paper says:—"The recent failures in the timber trade have served to direct attention to what has for some time been felt as an evil—viz., the long-credit system. At present six months' credit is allowed, but it is proposed to make a determined and combined effort to bring about a system of payment of cash in a month less 2½ per cent. or of short-date bills, as is in force in London.

The Japan Mail says that Shimada, the native banker, stopped payment on the 19th February. His business ramifications were very extensive.

FRIGHTENING DEBTORS.—The Birmingham Daily Mail says: A practice has grown up of late for creditors to send to their debtors pseudo-legal documents for the purpose of frightening them into the payment of their debts. A case of this kind was heard at Salford Police Court on Wednesday. A tradesman named Rutter and a debt collector named Kitto had, it was said, issued a sham writ, drawn up on a parchment form, purchased at a law stationer's by Kitto, who had been promised half the debt, if paid. He had been careful not to omit from the document a further demand of 10s. for costs. Both men were committed for trial.

Vice-Chancellor Malins made an order on Saturday in a cause in which it is stated that every Judge on the Equity Bench has held briefs. It relates to the will of a gentleman who died in 1829, leaving an estate which is now valued at £135,000. His three sons have been in litigation ever since, and the costs are said to amount to £10,000.

Vice-Chancellor Sir C. Hall has appointed Mr. C. J. Schneidau, of the firm of Whiffin and Schneidau, official liquidator of the London Cotton Mills (Limited).

INSURANCE OF FEMALE LIVES..—On Monday evening, at the monthly meeting of the Institute of Actuaries, held at King's College, Somerset House, an interesting paper on the duration of female life as distinct from that of the male sex, was read by Mr Cornelius Walford, F.S.S. He showed that the subject was one which had not attracted much special attention till a comparatively recent period, Dr Halley, of Breslau, who wrote in 1693, having evidently supposed both sexes to be equally long-lived. Maitland, in his "History of London," published in 1739, was of opinion that the old idea of there being more females than males in the world was a fallacy, the christenings of boys within the Bills of Mortality being 3 per cent. greater than those of girls. Kerseboom, in his investigations into the mortality of Dutch annuitants in 1742, separated the male from the female lives; but he does not appear in his tables to have noted any difference in their relative longevity. Four years later, M. Deparcieux, in his observations on the nominees of French Tontines, lays it down that the "expectancy of life" is greater in the female than in the male at all ages; but he does not determine the precise ratio. It was the "Equitable" Society which, in 1762, first approximated to the truth of the matter, by making a distinction of the rates of premium for each sex, and taking no female lives under 50 years of age as insurers except at special rates. The well known Dr Price, a great authority on insurance matters, in 1771-3, speaks incidentally of "the greater mortality of males as compared with females" as being generally acknowledged; and Brand, speaking of the "Amicable," says that in it "the life of a woman as compared with that of a man is of the same proportion as two to one." Mr T. Chester, in 1783, asserted that the difference between male and female lives was in favour of the latter; and the same rule was laid down in some Swedish tables constructed by Dr Price about the same date. It is only in the fifth edition of his work on this subject that Dr Price appears to have awoke to the importance of the question, in the interest of insurance companies. Mr Walford then quoted the statements of the Carlisle Tables, of the Parliamentary Committee of 1827, of M Quetelet, of Messrs Bailey and Day, of Mr Finlaison, &c., as on the whole showing that from first to last the expectancy of life is greater in the female than in the male sex. The same result was arrived at from certain statistics of uninsured lives among the higher and wealthier classes, which were obtained and tabulated in 1874; a result which may be expressed in the following terms—viz., that "at every age the aggregate mortality from birth up to such age is greater among males than among females; and that out of the same number of each sex, born alive, fewer males than females survive to any given age." On the whole the above statement is confirmed, added the reader of the paper, by the experience of foreign countries, both on the Continent and in America. But this must be understood with some qualification; for, strangely enough, while the expectancy of life is greater generally among women than men, most offices find that of a given number of insured lives more women die than men. This, however, was to be accounted for by the fact that whereas male insurers are drawn from all classes, only one small class of females, as a rule, seek to insure their lives—namely, women in a state of actual or expectant pregnancy; and here, as he believed, lay the secret of the anomaly which had been observed, and to which attention had been already drawn in the "Insurance Cyclopædia," now in the course of publication. The paper gave rise to a long and interesting conversation, in which Dr. Alfred Smee, of the Bank of England, Mr W. B. Hodge, Mr Tait, Mr Allen, Mr Curtis, Mr Bailey, Mr Harben, &c., took part; and the proceedings of the evening were closed with a vote of thanks to the lecturer for his "able and lucid contribution to actuarial science."

BANKRUPTCY OF A COLLIERY PROPRIETOR.—At the London Bankruptcy Court, on Tuesday, an application was made to register the resolution come to by the creditors of R. Ward-Jackson, who failed in January last, describing himself as a colliery proprietor, of Hyde Park, and Brampton, in Derbyshire. The liabilities, appearing by the statement of affairs, amount to £74,748, exclusive of fully secured liabilities to the amount of £42,000, the assets being put down at £7,874. There is a very large list of creditors, among whom are numerous firms carrying on business at Leeds, Hartlepool, and Stockton-on-Tees, and other towns in the North Riding of Yorkshire. Messrs Linklater and Co. applied to register the following resolutions, viz.:—"That the estate be liquidated by arrangement, with Mr J. Cooper, of Coleman-street-buildings, and Mr R. Fletcher, of 2, Moorgate-street, as trustees." It appeared creditors to the amount of £1,970 had not been served with the notice of the first meeting, but it was explained that they had subsequently had notice, and did not now attend. Several of them were creditors on bills which had since run off, and even if the whole of them dissented from the resolution, they would not anything like affect the majority. All objections to proofs had been withdrawn, and referred to trustees to deal with them. Under these circumstances the learned Registrar ordered that the registration should take place in the usual form.

THE CREDIT MOBILIER.—At the meeting of the Credit Mobilier at Paris, on Tuesday, resolutions were adopted giving the administrative council extensive powers for entering into a compromise respecting the three actions pending between the company and the former directors. It was also resolved to add to the capital by the issue of £100,000 preferred shares, bearing interest at the rate of 8 per cent. on the whole capital.

STAR LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—The thirty-first annual general meeting of the Star Life Assurance Society was held at the Society's House, 48, Moorgate-street, on Monday last, Mr Alderman M'Arthur, M.P., the chairman, presiding. The report shows an addition of 1,502 new policies, assuring £511,240 for the past year, and states that the invested funds now amount to no less than £1,216,115. In evidence of what may be accomplished by means of careful and able attention to the affairs of life assurance societies by those elected to conduct such businesses, it may be well to mention that the shares of the "Star," on which the sum of 25s. only has been paid, are not negotiable under £13 per share. The last bonus declared amounted to £150,464; and there is every prospect, considering that each succeeding year advances the prosperity of the society, that the next quinquennium will afford still more gratifying results to the share and policy holders, whose interests are allied to this excellently managed office. It may be added that great satisfaction was expressed at the meeting with the manner in which the secretary (W. W. Baynes, Esq.) and the officers of the staff had conducted the business of the society. The auditors are Francis Parnell, Esq., Robert Davis, Esq., and Theodore Jones, Esq., F.I.A., and the official accountant, G. E. Ladbury, Esq., A.S.A.E.

A "BREACH OF PROMISE" BANKRUPTCY.—Geo. Henry Wildes, described as of Lowndes-square, London, gentleman, was formerly a captain in the 2d Cheshire Militia. He was the defendant in an action brought by Miss Nuttall for breach of promise of marriage, tried at the Liverpool Assizes in August last, in which damages for £3,000 were found. Previously to the trial the defendant re-married his divorced wife, and took up his residence in Brussels. The plaintiff in the action, unable to obtain the fruits of her judgment, instituted proceedings in bankruptcy, which resulted, after considerable litigation and expense, in an adjudication. The first meeting of creditors was held in London a fortnight ago, when the mother of the bankrupt tendered a proof of debt for £6,000, being for money she alleged she had paid to tradesmen on account of her son at his request, and for interest thereon. She was examined as to whether her payments were loans or gifts, but being unable to satisfy the registrar on the point, the meeting was adjourned to Tuesday last. On that day she again appeared and produced an account by which her claim was increased to seven thousand five hundred pounds. Mr. Yate Lee, instructed by Mr. Henry Gregory, of Liverpool, appeared for the petitioning creditor (the plaintiff in the action); Mr. Bolland, accountant, attended as proxy for Liverpool creditors; and Mr Lanyon and Mr Hulse for the bankrupt and his mother. The mother was again submitted to an examination as to her claim; but her evidence, although it did not differ from that she previously gave, was in many respects at variance with the account she produced. The counsel for the petitioning creditors thereupon submitted, on the authority of cases he cited, that the proof should not be admitted, the claims of relatives being those which ought not to be allowed, unless indisputable, where they would swamp the ordinary trade creditors. The Registrar (Murray) said he was of opinion that this claim was one eminently requiring the investigation of the trustee; but, as chairman of the meeting, he had no judicial functions. His duty was to satisfy himself as to the bona fide character of the claims. Here he was satisfied there was a bona fide claim, and such being the case, he should allow the proof. The doctrine referred to with respect to the proofs of relatives being left in the cold was recognized under the former bankruptcy acts; but now, as the creditors had the power of choosing a committee of inspection to supervise the trustee, there was no fear, as formerly, of the trustee being improperly influenced. The proof was accordingly admitted, and the nominee of the mother of the bankrupt appointed trustee.

MR FORSYTH'S MOTION.—The Law Times says:—"The profession are indebted to Mr Forsyth for directing attention to the language and manner of drawing modern statutes, and more particularly to the practice of legislating, by incorporating with, and referring to, portions of other statutes. There is no doubt, at present, great ground for complaint, and Judges and counsel alike have constantly expressed the difficulty felt in construing the provisions of many of the more recent statutes. A bill, as Mr Forsyth stated, might be admirably drawn, yet after the second reading, when it was considered in committee, amendments were introduced which conflicted with other parts of the bill, and which caused the greatest difficulty when the measure came to be administered as law and construed by the Judges. These amendments or alterations, it was suggested, should be finally considered and revised by a committee of the House, assisted by a legal officer, who should afterwards report to a committee of the whole House as to the accuracy of language, consistency of provisions, and harmony with existing legislation. The Attorney-General admitted the necessity for some amendment of the present system, and undertook, on the part of the Government, that it should receive early consideration. There is one point to which attention might, with advantage, have been drawn, whilst this subject was under discussion, namely, the modern mode of passing what may be termed a skeleton Act of Parliament, and relegating the minutiæ of the Act to rules which are to have the force and effect of the Act. This is an innovation of which the present Bankruptcy Act affords an unfortunate example. The Act itself consists of 136 sections only, yet the rules number 350, with 200 forms. These rules were assumed to be framed by the late Lord Chancellor with the assistance of the Chief Judge, but they bear no trace of his master hand. They are in many respects altogether outside the Act of Parliament, and in some instances at variance therewith, the Lords Justices, on more than one occasion, having ignored them in favour of the Act. How the Legislature should have consented to give the force of the Act itself—over nearly every section of which there was a discussion—to rules over which it had no control, seems inexplicable. Much of the dissatisfaction expressed with the expensive character of the Act is due to these rules, and it is to be hoped that the committee now sitting to consider the working of the Act will apply themselves to their speedy amendment.

HONDURAS BONDHOLDERS.—A meeting of Honduras bondholders was held on Wednesday afternoon at the London Tavern, for the purpose of adopting concerted action with reference to proceedings which have been instituted by one of the bondholders against the contractors for the loans. Major Peel occupied the chair. The proceedings of the meeting were of a somewhat stormy character, owing to attempts to prevent any legal steps being taken whatever, but a resolution was carried, we are informed, approving of the proceedings in Chancery, and of an appeal being made for subscriptions in order to support the committee in their efforts on behalf of the bondholders. According to another report, an amendment was carried in favour of the formation of a fresh committee, and of the lease of the railway to responsible parties.

BANK OF ENGLAND.—A general court of the proprietors of the Bank of England will be held on the 11th instant, to declare a dividend. A meeting is also called for the 6th of April, for the election of a Governor and Deputy Governor for the year ensuing, and on the following day 24 directors will be elected. It is understood that Mr Henry Hucks Gibbs, of the firm of Anthony Gibbs and Son, is recommended by the Court for the post of Governor, and Mr Edward Howley Palmer, of the firm of Dent, Palmer, and Co., for that of Deputy Governor.

A dividend of 6d. in the pound (making 16s.) is payable on the 4th inst. to the creditors of the Oriental Commercial Bank (Limited), at the offices of Messrs Cooper Brothers and Co.

Mr. Charles Chatteris, of the firm of Chatteris, Nichols, and Chatteris, has been appointed official liquidator of the London and Southwark Warehousing Company (Limited).

AMENITIES OF THE BAR.—On the trial of the municipal election petition, Mr Collins was the leading counsel for the petitioners, and Mr Cole, Q.C., for the respondent, and there were some sharp passages between these gentlemen. Mr Collins having remarked that a certain fact was what he wanted to bring out, Mr Cole retorted:—You are a devilish long time bringing it out.—Mr Collins: A member of Parliament and a Queen's Counsel uses such language as this!—Mr Cole: Perhaps I ought not to have said this.—The Commissioner: I think you should not have made the remark. I see Mr Collins's drift.—Later on, Mr Collins asked for certain coal tickets, and said he thought they were the other side (near Mr Cole). The tickets were handed to him by the Registrar, who had them in his possession.—Mr Cole: You have them in your hand.—Mr Collins: You can say that when you see them in my hands. Mr Cole (angrily): You say I am telling a lie then. I advise you not to do so again.—Mr Collins: I made no such imputation.—Mr Cole: You did, sir; and you had better not do so again.—Mr Collins: You get out of temper, and swear, and then say I make an imputation, which I do not.—Mr Cole: If you do not behave yourself, I shall ask his Honour to keep you in order.—Mr Collins: His Honour will tell me if I am wrong. I made no imputation.—Portsmouth Times.

The report of Brown, Bayley, and Dixon, Sheffield Steel and Ironworks, published March 1, shows a loss of £123,000 for the year ending March 1874, and the profit and loss account to December increases the loss to over £130,000.—Liverpool Courier.

A first dividend of 10s. in the pound has been declared in the matter of the Vron United Silver Lead Mining Company (Limited), and is now payable at the offices of Messrs. Tilly and Co., Victoria-buildings, Queen Victoria-street, London, E.C.

THE ROLL OF THE LORDS.—There are 26 spiritual and 465 temporal Lords upon the roll of the Lords. The total number—namely, 491—is one less than the number on the roll of last Session. The name of Prince Arthur, as Duke of Connaught and Strathearn, appears on the roll for the first time. The names of Lord Kildare (now Duke of Leinster) and Lord Panmure disappear. The other changes are but substitutions. The Earl of Clonmell and Lord Castlemaine take the places of two Irish representative peers deceased; the Bishop of Ely comes into the House on the retirement of the Bishop of St. David's and Baron Ravensworth is advanced to a place among the earls. The House of Lords consists of five Princes of the Blood, 28 Dukes, 32 Marquises, 171 Earls, 37 Viscounts, 26 Prelates, and 192 Barons. John Wilson Patten, Lord Winmarleigh, is still the junior Lord.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold - security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

By Her Majesty's Royal Letters Patent, dated 6th June, 1874.
It is well known that a steel pen, after being used for a short time, is corroded by oxidation, and becomes sharp and "scratchey" at the point or knib, and consequently useless. By means of the "Corrector" this sharpness is immediately removed, and the pen made useful again. The "Corrector" is, practically, indestructible, and can be carried in the waistcoat pocket, or attached to any desk, counter, or place where penmanship is exercised. Sold (with printed instructions for use) by the inventor. George Bailey, Law Stationer, Cheltenham; 6d. each; by post, seven penny postage stamps; and may be had of all stationers. Effectiveness guaranteed.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating arounds us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

ABRIDGED PROSPECTUS.

The Crystal Palace Aquarium yields a profit exceeding 25 per cent.; the Shares of the Brighton Aquarium Company are at 15 to 17 per cent. premium, dividends of 10 per cent. having been paid for the last two years, and £6,850 carried over; the Hamburg Aquarium recouped the proprietors their outlay in six years. These are results arrived at in spite of the costly trials which have been going on in the experimental undertakings alluded to.

The United Kingdom Aquarium Company is formed for the purpose of taking advantage of the experience gained in other undertakings of a similar character, by building Aquaria in various parts of the United Kingdom as opportunity may offer.

The plan upon which the buildings of the Company are to be constructed comprises a square court, surrounded by the corridors of the Aquarium. The court itself will be roofed in, and will form, at a small outlay, a spacious Floral-hall or Assembly-room, adapted for concerts, flower shows, balls, banquets, readings, lectures, exhibitions, and other entertainments, thus combining under one roof most of the lucrative attractions of the Crystal Palace at Sydenham.

It is proposed to commence with an Aquarium at Liverpool, and afterwards to erect one at Kingstown, and it is calculated that the sum of £75,000 will afford ample means for carrying out the two undertakings. The subject of the erection of an Aquarium in connection with the Alexandra Palace at Muswell-hill has also been before the Directors of that Company.

In Liverpool, a favourable site in Myrtle-street has been fixed upon. The buildings there will include a large Aquarium, a Floral Hall, or Assembly Rooms, a Public Hall, Shops, Club-rooms, and Galleries.

At Kingstown, a site in close proximity to the railway station will, it is expected, be obtained for the purpose of the Aquarium.

The only contract entered into by or on behalf of the Company is dated the 23rd day of January, 1875, and made between Willert Beale of the one part, and Thomas Kynnersley Gardner, on behalf of the United Kingdom Aquarium Company (Limited) on the other part.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be had of Mr. W. MAUNSELL, in Dublin; of Messrs. LANGTON and MATHISON, 22, Lord-street, Liverpool;
And at the Offices of the Company.

The LIST of APPLICATIONS FOR SHARES will be CLOSED on MONDAY, the 22nd March, 1875.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand. Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. The Accountant.

MARCH 13, 1875.

We spoke last week of the unsatisfactory condition in which the profession of accountancy is allowed to remain, and suggested to its members the means by which this might be remedied. But in order to bring about any effectual change it is necessary that the action taken should be vigorous and united. It should not be left to the energy of a few isolated men in different parts of the country to expose pretenders, and to endeavour to obtain legal sanction for the measures necessary to elevate the profession. It is to the great firms that we look for action in the matter. It is to their interest, as much as to that of the youngest member of the profession, that the evils which exist should be promptly removed.

We must briefly recapitulate what the sham accountant we have so often alluded to, is. In various papers may be seen an advertisement, emanating professedly from an accountant, which states its author's willingness to undertake business of almost any kind. Liquidations, arrangements with creditors, settlement of family matters, collection of debts, initiation and carrying into effect of legal process, raising of money, and various other matters, are all to be performed by this one man. Not unnaturally the outside world, but little skilled in professional technicalities, confound all accountants with such a specimen, and are apt in the case of their placing confidence in him (with the natural result of disappointment,) to cry out, not against their own blindness, but against the profession which numbers such men in its ranks. Here is a case which we urge upon our leaders to take up. Let them compare with their own apathy the conduct of the medical profession. No body of men were more liable to abuse than the doctors, and their reputation in many instances suffered from the trickery of the various quacks who abound. But in their own defence steps were soon taken to put down the evil, and now no man is allowed to hold himself out as a physician, unless he is duly qualified. Take again the case of the solicitors. There are good and bad members of that profession, men in whose honour and integrity secrets are guarded which affect the well-being of half England, men to whom anything like deception, or taking undue advantage, are wholly and utterly unknown, Others, there are whose business is to fleece their clients in every conceivable way, the entrance to whose offices is like the gloomy portals of the road to want and misery. But irregular practitioners there are none. A client aggrieved by the misconduct of his solicitor has an immediate remedy open to him; and besides, he has the protection of the great mass of organized professional opinion which passes with great weight upon even the most untrustworthy. Why should not accountants strive to elevate their profession as has been done by solicitors and doctors.

We hope to see the profession shake off its apathy in this matter. So long as any man may legally call himself an accountant, so long will some portion of the discredit attaching to the misdeeds of pretenders be incurred by every one of those who are not striving earnestly to shake off the reproach. The public are not always able to distinguish between the status of a man who calls himself an accountant, and of a man who bears the title of Fellow, or Associate of an Instituce, or Society, of Accountants- Rightly or wrongly they will hold fast to the opinion that the difference is one of degree, simply, instead of being as it is, the distinction between a true member of a honourable and responsible profession and a mere outsider.

But any action in the matter must be united as well as determined. Manchester and Liverpool must join their efforts to those of London, to form the incorporated society in which the profession must be fully represented. There may be local societies, and local organizations, but the headquarters should be in London. To this all real accountants should be required to belong. With a stringent examination for the future, and proper tests, the profession would then take its proper rank. There might still be one difficulty as to men who are not members of the existing societies, and whose practice is simply provincial, but who are neverthless well acquainted with the details of their business, and who do not aspire to undertake any of the higher branches. Obviously these men ought to be allowed to retain the name of accountants, and to receive the certificate of the new society, though they would not, without some very strong testimonial as to their fitness, be placed upon the register of the Bankruptcy Courts as duly qualified trustees. But then they might be trusted not to undertake such business, and the safeguard against the omnivorous pretenders, whose net is supposed to sweep in every kind of business, would soon be relegated to utter obscurity.

That the profession stands in need of purifying and elevating cannot be denied. We earnestly entreat those of its members, to whom, from their professional standing and high position, we look to take the lead in the matter, to exert themselves earnestly, and to let their boast be that they have regarded honour as much as the acquisition of wealth. The good name of the profession has been in their keeping; they find now that it is smirched and tarnished by the misdeeds of those associates, whose alliance they do not openly repudiate. Let them so work that their final recollections may be, that they were not content to leave the status of their profession as they found it, but that their efforts tended to bring about its purification and elevation.

The case of ex parte Stebbing deserves a few words of comment, as the necessary shortness of our report may make it a little obscure. In the case of liquidation, the Court has power under the 266th Rule—if it is of opinion that it has not sufficient power to protect the estate of the debtor by the use of its authority—to restrain actions to adjudicate him bankrupt, but is bound to suspend proceedings until it can be seen if a composition can be arranged; and in the event of a composition being agreed upon, will annul the bankruptcy forthwith. It may be presumed that the judge of the County Court considered that the circumstances were such as to justify this order, and that the fact of a creditor for so large an amount as to preclude any resolution being passed without his sanction being hostile, would prevent any substantial injustice being done. But it does seem, nevertheless, extremely hard to adjudicate a man a bankrupt without allowing him to be heard in his own defence, and it is satisfactory to find that the Chief Judge took this view and reversed the decision. It will still however be open to give proper notice, and try the question of the propriety of adjudication.

The point decided in Sir William Russell's case, as reported by us in our number for February the 20th, has, cropped up again in a somewhat different form, in the matter of J. F. W. Rose. In this case the debtor having received his discharge under liquidation proceedings, filed a second liquidation petition, though matters were not yet wholly closed. In this case the Registrars concurred in thinking that where there were assets for distribution the petition might be received, although it might still be open to refuse to register any resolutions passed. In Sir W. Russell's case the Court held that the after-acquired property, having been exonerated, and there being assets in the hands of the new trustee, the liquidation might continue, but stayed the proceedings, as being in the interest of the debtor, and not of the creditors. If there were no assets, it is clear that the creditors could reap no benefit, and in this case now no petition will probably be received.

LIQUIDATION BY ARRANGEMENT OR COMPOSITION.

As pointed out by Mr. G. Wreford in his well written "review," it was apparently the intention of the Act to treat liquidation by arrangement as something entirely distinct from composition, but up to the first general meeting of creditors, the rules and orders practically treat the two sections as one. We shall, therefore, follow the working of the Act, and deal with them as one, so far as they run together. The object of the legislature in framing the present laws evidently was to induce a man who found himself unable to pay his creditors in full, to place himself in their hands with a view to an amicable arrangement before his estate showed less than 10s. in the pound: and the first impression taken by the commercial community assuredly was, that "liquidation by arrangement or composition" would become the order of the day, and that the majority of estates would produce a minimum of 10s. in the pound. How far that happy anticipation has been realized, and to what a fearful extent the "liquidation clauses" have become a by-word, is but too well known. We shall in due course have a few suggestions to make on this point, which may be right or wrong, but which are the result of some considerable experience extending over a number of cases. At this point, however, we will content ourselves with suggesting that no arrangement outside of bankruptcy should be binding on dissentient creditors, unless the debtor can, by proper books of account, fully substantiate the causes of his failure and deficiency. At the present time a debtor "unable to pay his debts" has but to petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition, and this he frequently postpones until the last moment, adopting it as a last resource after he has, by keeping his creditors at arms length, put them to much needless expense.

RECEIVER OR MANAGER.

The petition having been duly filed, either the debtor, if he have executions to restrain, or one, or more of his creditors, if they can adduce grounds for such appointment,—applies to the Court for the appointment of a receiver, or of a receiver and manager, if there are grounds for the latter appointment. A receivership, pure and simple, is even more anomalous under liquidation or composition, than in bankruptcy. As a rule under the latter clauses the appointment is only sought by the petitioning creditors after adjudication, but under the former it is generally almost simultaneous with the filing of the petition. What, it may be asked, are the duties of a receiver under the liquidation clauses? To take possession of all effects in the "apparent" order and disposition of the debtor, and exercise no discretion whatever in the way of giving up any portion of such effects, however strong the evidence adduced to prove that the title will not vest in the trustee. Cash, bills of exchange, book debts remitted, stock in trade, furniture, leases, policies, &c., should all be taken over and secured, as well as the whole of the debtor's books, papers and documents. Following, however, the strict rule laid down by the court, he must not investigate the books (unless appointed by a majority of the creditors); he must not protect the estate by giving notice to persons owing money thereto of his appointment; he must not give up possession of goods which the debtor may, undisputedly hold only as an agent; he must not take an inventory of the stock, furniture, &c., although he may be put upon his defence on a charge of negligence if it transpires that any portions thereof have been converted without his knowledge; or rather he may do all these things at the risk, either of being called upon to make good the same, or of doing the work for nothing.

We need not point out how directly this is in contradiction of the accepted practice; for every respectable body of creditors expects the majority of these things to be done, and every respectable accountant does it, but does it at the risk of being disappointed of his remuneration for the labour entailed, unless protected by a resolution to that effect.

In one instance which came under our knowledge, the debtors (there were two) filed a petition in order to stop bankruptcy proceedings at the last moment, and thereby obtained nearly a month's delay. That time they carefully devoted to the collection of all the realisable book debts, and levanted to America some days before the meeting, having taken the best portion of the assets with them; and yet, although this fact was brought under the notice of the court, it was nevertheless decided that a receiver had no right to charge for notices to debtors. In another instance, the liquidating debtor, a publican, (whose estate eventually did not pay the costs out of pocket) entertained his friends to sumptuous champagne and brandy parties. This, the receiver, notwithstanding threats of personal violence, and one actual assault,—succeeded in stopping; but finding the stock diminish rapidly without a corresponding increase in the takings, (but rather the reverse) caused a watch to be kept, and found that bottles of wine and spirits were being systematically tossed out of the windows to friends below,—but the receiver must not charge for taking stock.

In another case the debtor was agent to various firms whose stocks were kept entirely distinct from his own, and the receiver having satisfied himself by an examination of the books and correspondence that such goods were not the property of the estate, and moreover procured very strong affidavits from the respective principals—attended before the Court in support of an application that he might be directed to hand over the articles specified, but the Court ruled that a receiver had no discretionary power, and adjourned the motion until after the appointment of a trustee, on the ground that the trustee might take a very different view of the matter.

Notwithstanding the many tricks which have been played on receivers by unscrupulous debtors, there is one nice point which has not to our knowledge been tried, although frequently threatened, viz., as to how far a receiver is justified in allowing stock to leave the premises in the ordinary way of trade. We are disposed to think that, although under a petition for liquidation or composition where there is a reasonable prospect of a composition being effected,—the receiver is in the happy position, if he refuses to part with goods on credit, of standing the chance of an action for damage for injury to the debtors connection (under a composition) or of being held responsible for bad debts made by allowing credit if liquidation results. It also appears to us that there is no justification for a receiver being required to give an indemnity to restrained creditors. We would emphatically urge that under the proposed amendment the appointment of receiver for the purpose simply of restraining actions should be done away with, and that notice of the petition should suffice per se to restrain; and that where a receiver is appointed, his powers should be extended in order to give him full temporary control under the supervision of the Court. At the present time estates are put to much needless expense by the almost universal appointment of receivers; while the receivers themselves justly complain that their risks are not even taken into consideration when the question of remuneration has to be settled. It is true that in the majority of instances creditors rectify the omissions of the Act where a receiver has done his duty from their point of view; bnt it is nevertheless a fact that he is at their mercy, and not infrequently comes off but poorly requited for his services, and more particularly when he is superseded by the choice of another person as trustee. Thanks to the present law, many estates do not suffice to cover costs; and as the trustee comes last he is by the law of self-preservation, in many instances, bound to protect his own interest at the expense of the receiver.

AUDITORS.

No. 3,—THEIR RESPONSIBILITES.

Before proceeding to deal with the legal and moral responsibilities of auditors, it would not be amiss to refer to some remarks concerning the auditing of public companies which have recently fallen from the pen of a contemporary, and which evince but a somewhat meagre knowledge of the requirements of the day. It can barely be conceived that there exist "scores of men of high character and fixed position who are only anxious for something to do, and who would be especially attracted by a position involving responsibility and rewarded by emolument, but not accompanied by the necessity for daily work." Such a statement appears slightly inconsistent with fact, and the assumption that a man, in consequence of his position and character, must of necessity possess pre-eminent qualifications for the onerous duties of an auditor is decidedly erroneous. What necessity there exists for "a new and very high profession to spring up" we fail to see, and are equally as blind to the fact that there exists any new and indispensable requirement for the appointment or selection of additional "men of high character" to investigate the accounts of public or other companies—in the face of the large body of eminent accountants who are amply qualified to grapple successfully and easily with matters of the greatest intricacy. The result of appointing Government auditors would be to saddle a disagreeable amount of irksome responsibility on some single department, and to bring about a piece of hampering legislation which would prove to be entirely superfluous and equally abortive.

As regards the immediate responsibilities of members of the profession acting as auditors, it may be said that the present system is not altogether to be admired. If the report or other document of the auditor should be found to be incorrect, and palpably false, a prosecution, in which every matter becomes public, is not always the wisest or most advisable course to be pursued, and consequently an unscrupulous or incompetent man can generally rely on coming out pretty free from any stigma attached to his name, beyond what may be known to a certain circle. There is no doubt that all this calls for alteration. In the first place, no one but a professional accountant should be allowed to take an auditorship; secondly, an auditor should be held responsible for any misstatements published in the certificate, report, or statement of accounts which he authenticates or vouches. An action for damages would in some cases act as a deterrent to malpractices, and the liability of being removed from the power of practising, in the same manner as a barrister is disbarred, and a solicitor is struck off the rolls, would not only make the would-be delinquent auditor scrupulously avoid offending, but would be, to the public, one of the strongest guarantees for his fidelity. So far as the employment of non-professional gentlemen as auditors is concerned, it is a system, the adoption and extension of which is to be thoroughly deprecated. It involves a vast waste both of money and time, and affords but a small modicum of security to anybody, to say nothing of the opportunity afforded for ample excuse in the event of any difficulty arising. There is doubtless a great deal to be said on behalf of those who, having a thorough sense of their obligations and a desire to fulfil them, have to accept for their important services a miserably small fee. We would advise such to release themselves, by previous arrangement, from any personal responsibility, otherwise the position in which they may possibly find themselves placed through their inability to perform their contract with justice to themselves, may be more than unpleasant.

We have before addressed those who are still young in the profession; and it will perhaps not be out of place to conclude these remarks by advising the student-accountant of to-day to bear in mind that no other branch of his chosen profession calls for more attention than auditing, and the duties and responsibilities connected therewith.

BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

DEAR SIR,—As the information afforded by the articles on bankruptcy appearing in your paper (signed H. B.) is, generally speaking, of a most reliable character, there is the more reason why a slight inaccuracy in the article of the 27th ult. should be corrected. H.B., in considering the duties of a trustee in bankruptcy, says—"Even if a creditor neglects to send in his claim, the trustee must in his declaration of dividend make a reservation, or his neglect to do so will entail a personal responsibility." This is not so. A trustee is only required to declare a dividend amongst those creditors who have proved to his satisfaction debts payable in bankruptcy (sec. 1, 41), and if, after giving the notices required by Rule 131, any creditor neglects to prove his debt in the prescribed manner, he is properly excluded from the benefit of the dividend. The trustee is, however, bound to reserve the dividend for any creditor who has not proved, provided his case falls within the operation of section 42, that is, where the creditor's proof or claim has not been determined by the trustee, or where the creditor resides at a great distance from the trustee.

Under liquidation by arrangement the case is different, as a trustee is required by Rule 312 to reserve dividends upon all debts appearing in the debtor's statement of affairs, whether proved or not.—I am, yours truly, G. W.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I observe that the Law Committee of the Scottish Trade Protection Society have been considering the propriety of having judicial superintendence of private trusts; and in their report to a meeting of the Society held on the 2nd inst. they recommend, "that steps be taken to prevail upon the Lord Advocate to introduce a measure which will place the accounts of all judicial factors and of private trustees under the surveillance of the Accountant of the Court of Session." As regards the accounts of judicial factories not falling under the Pupils Protection Act, it may be a question whether it is desirable that they should be audited by the Accountant of Court. But surely in the case of private trusts it may well be left to the trustees and beneficiares, in their own interests, to have their accounts regularly audited by competent professional men, which affords as perfect security as if audited by the Accountant of Court. If they fail to have this done, they are scarcely to be pitied if they are subjected to losses, which would have been obviated by an annual audit of their accounts. It is to be hoped the Lord Advocate will not consent to introduce such a measure—at least in so far as concerns the accounts of private trustees.—I am, sir, yours &c.,

Edinburgh, March 6, 1875. J. F. M.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURT, LINCOLN'S-INN,

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. MALINS.)

March 5.

IN RE THE LISBON STEAM TRAMWAYS COMPANY (LIMITED).—In this case a petition had been presented by a fully paid-up shareholder for winding up this company on the ground of insolvency, and Mr. Keith, the company's secretary, had been served with a notice to be cross-examined and also to produce the company's books at such cross-examination. Mr Keith, in the course of his cross-examination before the special examiner, read an entry in one of the books, but refused to hand the book itself to the cross-examining counsel, whereupon the cross-examination was suspended. The petition, which was presented some time ago, had been ordered to stand out of the paper until the cross-examination should be completed, but having been restored to the paper it now came on, together with a motion on behalf of the petitioner, to compel the company's secretary to make a proper production of documents on his cross-examination. On the petition being mentioned by Mr Glasse, Q.C., who, with Mr Montague Cookson, appeared for the petitioner, Mr J. Pearson, Q.C. (Mr E. C. Willis with him), for the company, submitted that the petition was demurrable, on the ground that it was presented by a fully paid-up shareholder. His Honour, however, overruled the objection, stating that several authorities had decided that a fully paid-up shareholder was a contributory within the meaning of the Companies Acts, 1862, and accordingly entitled to present a winding-up petition. Mr Glasse, Q.C., and Mr Cookson then argued in support of the motion, and cited his Honour's decision in the case of the Emma Mining Company, and affirmed on appeal. The motion was opposed by Mr Pearson, Q.C., and Mr Willis, on behalf of the company, on the ground that the secretary had practically conformed to the decision in the Emma Mining case, and that the books could not be handed to the cross-examining counsel without being properly put in evidence. Mr Higgins, Q.C., appeared for debenture-holders, in support of the petition and motion; and Mr Bristowe, Q.C., and Mr W. W. Karslake, on behalf of shareholders, opposed. The Vice-Chancellor said the books ought not only to have been simply produced but to have been handed to the petitioner's counsel for inspection. The petitioner was a shareholder, and therefore there ought not to have been any withholding of documents whatever. The company had resisted the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Emma Mining case, and, more than that, it appeared that the solicitors for this company were the solicitors for the Emma Mining Company, and were therefore well aware of that decision, by which the very same objection that they made in this case was overruled. This was a mere obstruction to the proper administration of justice, and those who raised it he could, he regretted, only punish by making them bear the costs occasioned by it. He was satisfied that the objection raised by the secretary to allowing an inspection of the books was merely made because he found himself pressed by the cross-examination. He should now make the same order as he did in the Emma Mining case—namely, that the company should, by their secretary, Mr Keith, produce the books and documents in question, and the company must pay the application.

IN RE THE UNIVERSAL NON-TARIFF FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY (LIMITED)—EX PARTE PETER FORBES AND CO.—This was an application on behalf of Messrs Forbes and Co., who had presented the petition for winding up the company and had established a claim against the company, as reported in The Accountant of Feb. 27th, that the costs of their petition for winding up the company and of the proceedings thereunder, and of the action at law under which they established their debt might be paid out of the assets of the company, in priority to all other costs. The whole of the facts of the case will be found stated in our former report. Mr Higgins, Q.C., and Mr Langley appeared for the applicants, Messrs Forbes and Co.; Mr Glasse, Q.C., and Mr Montague Cookson for the company. The Vice-Chancellor said it was clear the costs of Messrs Forbes had been incurred by the unjustifiable conduct of the company in disputing their claim, and he must consider every member of the company as having resisted this demand, to which the company ought at once to have submitted. It was important that liquidators should carefully inquire into the assets of the company in liquidation, and consider what action or other proceedings ought to be brought or defended by the company, and if they allowed improper proceedings to go on, they must take the consequences. They ought to know under what circumstances the petitioner was entitled to his costs. The ground on which he rested his decision in this case was that a petitioning creditor was entitled to have his costs in priority to those of other parties; that not only his costs in the winding-up, but also his costs properly incurred in establishing his right to a winding-up order. He must therefore decide that Messrs Forbes were entitled to have their costs of the petition and of the proceedings at law and in the winding up in priority to all other costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

March 6.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE J. F. W. ROSE.—An important question had arisen in this case in regard to the right of an insolvent debtor to file a second petition for liquidation. The debtor presented a first petition in April, 1873, under which a trustee was appointed, a resolution passed for liquidation by arrangement, and the creditors granted a discharge to the debtor; but the liquidation had not been closed. The debtor, having incurred fresh debts, signed a second petition, which he caused to be tendered to the Registrar, but the Registrar declined to receive it without the order of the Court. The matter was mentioned on Saturday last, when his Honour said he would consult his colleagues upon the point. Mr Finlay Knight appeared for the debtor. His Honour now said that he had communicated with the other Registrars in regard to the right of a debtor to file a second petition, and they agreed with him in thinking that each case must stand upon its own grounds, and that the Registrar of Liquidations was quite right in desiring to have the order of the Court before he received the petition. In the present case the first petition was filed so long since as the year 1873, and under it a resolution was passed granting the debtor his discharge. There might be circumstances which would disentitle the trustee under the first petition to recover the debtor's property as against the trustee under the second, and possibly assets might exist for distribution, but, at all events, that was a point which could be considered at a subsequent stage, upon an application being made to register the resolution of the creditors. He thought, however, and his colleagues agreed, that, in a case where there were no assets for division, the debtor ought not to be allowed to present a second petition. As that state of things was not shown to exist in this case, leave would be given to file the petition.

March 8.

(Before Sir J. BACON, sitting as Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE STEBBING—RE STEBBING.—This was an appeal from an order of the Colchester County Court adjudicating George Hutley Stebbing a bankrupt. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr R. Griffiths appeared for the appellant; Mr F. Knight for the respondent. The appellant was a farmer residing at Easthorpe, near Kelvedon. On the 23d of January he filed a petition for liquidation, and at the first meeting, held on the 13th, the creditors resolved to adjourn until the 20th. In the meantime, on the 19th of February, the London and County Banking Company, creditors for £1,800, presented a petition for adjudication against the appellant, who was on the same day (under rule 266) adjudicated a bankrupt. The appellant deposed that no notice or intimation was given to him of the proceedings under the petition for adjudication. There was no proof of the debt of the bank beyond the formal allegation contained in the petition; but it was alleged that the amount was such as to preclude the passing of any resolution for composition. His Lordship held that it was contrary to the intention of the Act to adjudicate a man bankrupt without notice, and that rule 266 did not dispense with proof of the requisites. The adjudication would be annulled.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE J. S. DE VASCONCELLOS AND CO.—The debtors are merchants, carrying on business at 39, Lombard-street, 24, Brown's-buildings, Liverpool, and Ceara. Two of the partners have presented a liquidation petition, the liabilities being estimated at £120,000, with assets consisting of outstanding debts and other property to about the same sum, subject to realization. The case was now mentioned to the Court upon affidavits showing that goods and money to a considerable amount were being received every day, and it was necessary that the business should be kept in working order, and for that purpose that a receiver and manager should be appointed. It was also alleged that in consequence of the principal creditors residing in South American States, it would be impossible for them to receive notice of the proceedings in sufficient time to attend the meeting of creditors unless the period limited by the Act and the rules were extended. Upon the application of Mr Brough, the Court appointed Mr J. F. Lovering receiver and manager, and extended the time for holding the first meeting of creditors until the 27th of May.

March 10.

(Before Mr Registrar MURRAY, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE THOMAS STAMMERS WEBB.—This case gave rise to a question of some importance in practice in regard to the right of a debtor petitioning for liquidation to convene a new first meeting of creditors, the meeting originally held having become abortive. The debtor in the present case, described as a colliery proprietor, of Gracechurch-street, had filed a petition for liquidation, with debts secured and unsecured amounting to about £90,000. At the first meeting, held on the 3rd of February, creditors whose debts amounted to £26,537 were present in person or by proxy, and of those 34 in number, representing an aggregate of £19,930, voted in favour of liquidation by arrangement, and eight creditors, whose total debts were about £6,600, dissented from the resolution. Upon the resolution being submitted to Mr Registrar Keene for registration, various objections were raised by opposing creditors, and after a short examination of the debtor the learned Registrar (following a decision of the Chief Judge in "ex parte Cockayne") refused the application to register, on the ground that the debtor, in his statement of affairs, had not distinguished between those debts which were due from him solely and those in respect of which he was liable jointly with other persons. Thereupon application was made to the Court on behalf of the debtor for leave to summon a fresh first meeting. He stated in his affidavit that he produced to the first meeting a statement showing the whole of his debts and assets, but from inadvertence and ignorance of the rule in that respect he had omitted to distinguish between his joint and separate creditors. Mr Finlay Knight appeared in support of the application. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Hemming, for creditors, opposed, contending where there was a defect that went to the constitution of the meeting the Court had power to order a new first meeting, but that where the defect affected the validity of the resolutions the Court had no such power. Mr Registrar Murray, in giving judgment, said it was not suggested that the whole of the creditors, joint and separate, had not received notice of the meeting, nor that any of the creditors had objected at the meeting to the statement of affairs. Rule 306 provided that any mistake made by a debtor inadvertently in his statement of debts might be rectified with the consent of a majority of the creditors present at the meeting. That rule applied in the present case, and his Honour had come to the conclusion that he might, consistently with the decision of the Chief Judge in "ex parte Cockayne," and of the Lords Justices in "ex parte Cobb, re Sedley," allow a new first meeting to be summoned; it being also consistent with reason and justice that the wishes of a large majority of creditors should not be rendered abortive by an omission on the part of the debtor, which was formal more than substantial. The application was accordingly granted.

IN RE ALFRED BOWES.—The debtor in this case carried on the business of general merchant and dealer in scrap iron at Queen's-street, Bermondsey, and New Kent-road. He has filed a petition for liquidation, estimating his debts at £35,187, and his assets at £9,000. Mr G. Lumley (Messrs Lumley and Lumley) now applied to the Court for the appointment of a receiver and manager. He stated that the application was supported by creditors to the extent of £10,000, and that a manager was requisite in order to prevent the stoppage of the business, which was a very valuable one, and would realize a large sum for the creditors if sold as a going concern. He proposed to ask for the appointment of Mr H. C. Brown, public accountant, of Old Jewry-chambers. Mr Burend, who stated that he represented a creditor to the extent of £12,000, opposed the application on the ground that it had come on him by surprise, and he wished to consult his client. The learned Registrar said that he thought a creditor to such a large amount as £12,000 ought to have a voice in the appointment of a receiver, and as the property was quite safe, he postponed making the appointment for 48 hours, and gave leave for the application to be made to the Registrar sitting as Chief Judge on Friday. Mr Burend then applied to the Court that he might be permitted to see the list of creditors filed with the petition; but the learned Registrar ruled that he could only do so after filing an affidavit stating that the creditor in question was a bonâ fide one, and that the applicant had his authority to represent him.

March 11.

(Before Mr Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE EDWARD FULLWOOD.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination. The bankrupt, described as of Somerset-place, Hoxton, was adjudicated on the petition of the liquidators of the Montrotier Asphalte and Cement Concrete Paving Company (Limited), and at the first meeting held under the bankruptcy, about a year since, Mr James Cooper, public accountant (Johnstone, Cooper, and Wintle), one of the liquidators of the company, was appointed trustee. The proceedings have been adjourned from time to time to enable the bankrupt to render further accounts, as required by the trustee, but he was still in default; and upon the application of Mr Cooper, his Honour now adjourned the meeting sine die.

IN RE G. GECK.—An adjourned meeting for public examination was held under the bankruptcy of Gustavus Geck, lately trading as a merchant in Little Trinity-lane, in the name of A. T. Geck. The liabilities were returned at £15,023, and assets £16 15s. Upon the application of Mr Cronshey, on behalf of the trustee, his Honour allowed a further adjournment for the investigation of the accounts.

(Before Mr Registrar PEPYS.)

IN RE ALFRED BOWLES.—This case was again mentioned to the Court. The debtor was a general merchant of Bermondsey and New Kent-road. He had filed a petition for liquidation, his debts being estimated at about £35,000, and assets £9,000. An application made on Wednesday for the appointment of a receiver and manager stood over in order that creditors might be consulted on the subject; and his Honour, having regard to a desire expressed by a majority in value of the creditors, now appointed a receiver and manager.

IN RE GRIEVES AND LOVERIDGE.—The debtors, who have petitioned under the liquidation clauses, are provision merchants, of Wood-street, Westminster. Their debts are about £28,000, and assets of considerable value. Upon the application of Mr Watney, on behalf of creditors for £20,000, his Honour appointed a receiver of the estate.

BILL CHAMBER—March 8.

(Before Lord CURRIEHILL.)

APPEALS IN STEWART SOUTER ROBERTSON'S SEQUESTRATION. —(1) Appeal for GEORGE AULDJO JAMIESON, Accountant, Edinburgh, and JAMES AULDJO JAMIESON, W.S. there.—The appellants were creditors on the bankrupt estate for two bills for £2,000 and £700. They were also co-obligants with the cautioners of the bankrupt in a bond for £2,000. They also held certain securities belonging to the bankrupt estate, the value of which securities they insisted on imputing primarily towards payment of their liability under the bond for £2,000. The trustee rejected the claim so far as regarded the cautionary obligation. The Lord ordinary has now reversed the trustee's decision by the following interlocutor, which explains the nature of the claim, &c.:—

"The Lord Ordinary, having heard counsel for the parties, and considered the note of appeal and productions, sustains the appeal, and recalls the deliverance of the trustee appealed against. Finds that the claimants are co-obligants with the cautioners for the bankrupt in a bond for £2,000 to Wm. Burnett, which, at the date of the sequestration, amounted, with interest, to the sum of £2,033 8s 3d, but in security of which Mr Burnett held an assignation to certain policies of insurance on the life of the bankrupt: Finds that Mr Burnett realised the surrender value of said policies, amounting to £172 2s 9d, which reduced the amount due under the bond of £1,861 5s., for which sum he has been ranked in the sequestration, and will receive a dividend of 3s. 6d. per £, amounting to £325 14s 6d, whereby the liability of the claimants as cautioners foresaid will be reduced to £1,535 11s; Finds that the claimants held at the date of the sequestration, and still hold on titles ex facie, absolute and unchallengeable securities over certain shares and other assets of the bankrupt; Finds that the securities so held by the claimants consist of (1) 600 £10 shares of the State Line Company, the value of which is £1,485 19s 8d, being the value of said shares at £3 10s each, or £2,100, less £614 0s 4d, being the amount of calls paid by the claimants. (2) Claim on Lewis T. Merrow under his letter to the bankrupt guaranteeing said shares, the value of which is £50. (3) Claim on the estate of L. T. Merrow and Co. in respect of a bill for £2,500 granted by them to the bankrupt and endorsed by him to the claimant, George Auldjo Jamieson, in security of the claim of the claimants against the bankrupt, the value of which is £125, being an expected dividend from the estate of L. T. Merrow and Co. of 1s. per £; Finds that in the value of, the said shares there ought not to be included the sum of £430 18s. 1d., being the amount of an expected dividend on a separate claim in this sequestration made by the said George Auldjo Jamieson in respect of said endorsed bill of £2,500, which claim has been rejected by the trustee; Finds that the true share of the whole securities so held by the claimants is £1,660 19s. 8d.; Finds that the said securities are available to the claimants for extinction and relief pro tanto of all their lawful claims against the liabilities for the bankrupt; and that they are entitled to hold and apply the same, in the first instance, for their relief of the said balance of £1,535 11s., or for such other balance as shall be ultimately claimed from them by Mr Burnett under the aforesaid cautionary obligation:—Finds that on the assumption that the liability of the claimants under said cautionary obligation will amount to £1,535 11s., the value of their said securities available for payment or satisfaction of the debts due to them by the bankrupt, and falling to be deducted from the claim of the claimants in respect of the bankrupt's acceptances to them for £2,000, and £700 and interest, £125 8s. 8d: Remits to the trustee to rank the claimants accordingly, and decerns: Finds the appellants entitled to expenses, &c.

(2) APPEAL FOR GEORGE AULDJO JAMIESON.—This was a claim for £2,465 0s. 4d., on a bill for £2,300 by Lewis T. Merrow and Co., to the bankrupt, and endorsed by him to the claimant. The trustee rejected the claim in respect that a creditor was not entitled to rank on a security (which the present claim appeared to be for) which he held for a debt due by the bankrupt. The Lord Ordinary has pronounced the following interlocutor:—"The Lord Ordinary having heard the counsel for the parties, and considered the note of appeal and productions, dismisses the appeal, and refuses the prayer thereof, and remits to the trustee to proceed: Finds the appellant liable in expenses."

(3) APPEAL FOR D. S. ROBERTSON OF LAWHEAD.—This claim was for £2,872 8s. 8d., in respect of a bond of caution to the Duke of Hamilton, under which the claimant was cautioner along with the bankrupt. The claim was rejected by the trustee, as no vouchers nor an assignation were produced, and as the claim was a contingent one. The following is the interlocutor in this appeal:—"Allows the appellant to amend the note of appeal to the effect proposed by him (that the trustee be ordained to set apart a dividend corresponding to the debt for which the appellant claims to be ranked, with bank interest on the dividend from the time the same was or ought to have been set aside by the trustee), and sustains the note of appeal. Recalls the deliverance of the trustee complained of, and remits to the trustee to investigate the claim of the appellant, and dispose thereof in terms of the statute."

(4) APPEAL—D. S. ROBERTSON.—This was a claim for £2,117 5s 2d in respect of an acknowledgment for £2,000 by the bankrupt to Miss M. S. Robertson, and a letter of guarantee by the appellant to Miss Robertson for that amount. Both documents were stamped with a penny stamp only. The trustee rejected the claim on the ground of want of the proper stamps, the one document being equivalent to a promissory note, and the other to a bond, and also that no assignation had been produced. The Lord Ordinary has pronounced the following interlocutor in this case:—"Allows the appellant to amend the note of appeal to the effect proposed by him (that the trustee should be ordained to 'set apart' a dividend, instead of 'making payment' of the dividend corresponding to the debt for which the appellant claimed on his oath to be ranked with the bank), and the same having been done at the bar, sists procedure to enable the appellant to have the documents founded upon stamped in terms of law."

BANKRUPTCY PROCEEDINGS IN SCOTLAND.

Strange Disclosures.—Thomas Davidson, formerly wool agent in Hawick, and now committed for trial on a criminal charge, was examined in bankruptcy in Jedburgh on Saturday. Sheriff-Substitute Russell was upon the bench, and there were present—Mr Lindsay, C.A., Edinburgh, the trustee; Mr J Renton, jun., S.S.C., Edinburgh, agent for the trustee; and Mr Charles Anderson, Jedburgh, local agent. According to the bankrupt's statement, he commenced business as a commission agent in July, 1869, for the sale of wool and other articles used in manufactures. He had no capital. His first agency was from Mr Robert Leggett, Edinburgh, and he afterwards sold for Messrs Thos. Laidlaw and Son, manufacturers, Hawick. At first he got one per cent. for selling Laidlaws' wool, but it was afterwards reduced to a half per cent. He had no risk from bad debts. He invoiced the wools in his own name, collected the money, drew bills and discounted them in his own name on the customers, and handed the Laidlaws the proceeds. As a compensation for the reduction of the percentage on the sales of the wool, the Messrs Laidlaw gave him their yarns to sell, also at a half per cent. He had no charge with the yarn, as it was invoiced by the Laidlaws, and sent from their premises. He purchased a wool store in 1871, and for the sake of appearance, a large quantity of Laidlaws' wool was placed in it. No rent was charged for the storage, though other parties who had wool in the store had to pay rent in the usual way. Laidlaws' men brought wool to the store, and took it away again without consulting Davidson, and no record was kept of it. His reason for selling wool at a half per cent., and giving storage besides, was that he expected it would give him a status in the trade, and that he would be able soon to obtain wools on credit for himself. At one time the Laidlaws had the wool in the store insured for £5,000. He had the liberty of showing this wool to intending purchasers, and to draw samples when necessary. In the beginning of 1872 he ceased to sell on commission for the Laidlaws, and he then requested them to remove all their wools from his store. This led to their leasing of the upper flat of the store, and as their premises were adjoining, communication was made between the two places. He believed that in two years and a half he would sell for the Laidlaws wool to the value of from £80,000 to £100,000. He afterwards purchased wool from the Laidlaws as well as from other firms. He had bought wools from them in 1871. About the end of that year, or the beginning of next, he bought from a marine dealer a little Cape fleece wool, which he thought had not been got in a right way. He informed the Superintendent of Police of this, and his advice was to continue purchasing this if again he offered it, and this might lead to a detection. He bought small quantities several times afterwards. The wool was similar to some of his own, and he took every precaution to secure that no wool should be taken from his place. On the morning of the 9th of August, 1872, he received a message, on passing Laidlaws' mill, to come and speak with Mr Laidlaw immediately. He went into Mr Laidlaw's private room, the door of which was at once either bolted or locked. Mr Laidlaw then told him that he had the most serious charge to make against him which one man could make against another. Wool had been missed from their store, and they had evidence that he had taken it. He (Davidson) expressed his surprise at this, and declared his innocence, but Mr Laidlaw said it was no use denying it, for it was either him or his men, and that warrants were prepared for the apprehension of him and two of his employés, and it just came to this, that he had either to arrange the matter at once or leave under arrest. The only way to settle the matter was to give a cheque for £500, and write a letter to the effect that he would make good all loss that could be proved. He (Davidson) hesitated. His wife was lying dangerously ill, and the news of his apprehension was almost sure to prove fatal to her, and were a single whisper of this charge to get abroad it was sure to destroy his credit, and he was in credit at that time to the extent of £30,000. Laidlaw promised "eternal secrecy," so that the only course open to him was, in his opinion, to give the cheque, the amount being limited for the time to £400, determined at the same time that, when independent of credit, he would have the whole matter overhauled. The other £100 was to be paid along with any balance of loss which could be shown. At a future meeting he (Davidson) expressed his regret at what had taken place; but Laidlaw told him that he had made his bargain, and he would have to stick to it. On the 10th (the following day) he went again to Laidlaws', and asked if a list of the missing wools had been made up, as he wished a final settlement, being much distressed about the whole affair. Mr Laidlaw said that the list had not been as yet made up; but the sum would be very large. He, however, would be prepared to take £1,500 as a final settlement. He (Davidson) replied that if that was to be the claim he would demand his £400 back, and leave him (Laidlaw) to take what steps he liked. The claim was then reduced to £1,200, and finally to £1,000, including the £400 already paid. Davidson agreed to pay this on condition that it would be taken in wool, which was done. During 1871 he lost by bad debts about £2,000, and had made it up again by the spring of the following year, and he thought that the money given to Laidlaw would be just a few months' profit, and his credit would still be kept good. He found, however, by August, 1873, that, in consequence of forced sales, the transaction with Laidlaw had cost him £7,000 or £8,000, and to that amount he was deficient, although at the date of that transaction his assets were sufficient to meet his liabilities. Future wool speculations in a falling market proved a great loss, and he never recovered from his difficulties. He attributed his insolvency, in the first place, to the £1,000 transaction, which on becoming known destroyed his credit, and, in the second place, to the forced sales which he was compelled to make. He made nominal sales of wool to Laidlaw, some of which were redeemed at considerable advances. Previous to the bankruptcy Laidlaw made no allusion to the £1,000 transaction, but while he (Davidson) was in London, after he had left Hawick, he got a message to the effect that Laidlaw thought he should leave the country. There had been no other direct communication from him, but since Davidson was lodged in gaol he had been waited upon by Mr Laidlaw's agent, who said it would be much better to say nothing about the £1,000. There was no promise of any reward for keeping quiet, only it was said it would be better for him if he said nothing. Davidson had told his own clerk about the £1,000, and said he had been forced into the transaction by severe pressure, but that he hoped to make Laidlaw account for it yet. This closed the examination for the present. The bankrupt has been liberated on bail.

Robert Cooper (Glasgow).—Robert Cooper, importer of Norwegian and Swedish timber and iron, 83, West Regent-street, was examined in bankruptcy before Sheriff Clark, on Monday. Bankrupt deposed that he was a partner of the firm of Pay, Nillson, and Co., Adolfors, Sweden. The company became insolvent in September or October, 1874, and were sequestrated. The total amount of his assets was at the date of sequestration £32,607 0s. 11d.; and his liabilities £32,005 2s. 3d. He explained that said assets were composed of a claim on the sequestrated estate of Pay, Nillson, and Co., on which no value could be placed. In addition to the above there was an asset of £1,548 19s. 6d. in cash in the hands of the trustee. The statutory oath was administered.

The Bankruptcy (Scotland) Law Amendment Bill is to be read a second time on the 17th of March.

(Before Judge MILLER.)

NEW REGULATIONS.—In the case of a bankrupt in County Mayo, a complaint had been made by the practitioners of the court that the collection of debts had miscarried in consequence of the new regulations, whereby the official assignees communicated directly with the trade assignees, who, it was submitted, never knew anything whatever about the debts. Judge Miller said the matter was of considerable importance. He would recommend the orders to be amended by an arrangement that the official assignees should take directions from the Chief Registrar, or the Chief Clerk as to the mode of recovering debts. Mr Larkin suggested that the solicitor for the assignees in each case should receive notice of any application made by the official assignee to the Chief Registrar or Chief Clerk. Judge Miller approved of the suggestion.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MARCH 8.

BANKRUPTCY LAW IN IRELAND.—Mr C. Lewis asked the Solicitor-General for Ireland whether the attention of the Government had been called to the unsatisfactory state of the Law of Bankruptcy in Ireland, and if any measure for the amendment of such law might be expected to be introduced by the Government during the present Session.—The Solicitor-General for Ireland: The only communication that the Government has received calling attention to the Law of Bankruptcy as at present administered in Ireland is one from the Great Northern Law Club, forwarded to us since my hon. friend placed his question on the paper, and advising that clauses should be introduced into the Judicature (Ireland) Bill to facilitate the transaction of local bankruptcy business at Belfast. I can assure my hon. friend that those suggestions, together with any which he himself may make, will meet with a very careful consideration. It is not the intention of the Government during this Session to introduce a measure dealing separately with the Irish Bankruptcy Laws.

MARCH 9.

NATIONAL DEBT COMMISSIONERS.—Mr Puleston asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his attention had been drawn to a recent article in the Pall Mall Gazette referring to a deficiency of over four millions and a half incurred by the National Debt Commissioners in their account with the Trustees of Savings-banks and Friendly Societies, whether such deficiency was still increasing, and whether her Majesty's Government proposed to bring forward any measure to remedy a system which made such accumulating deficiencies possible.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said he had read the article mentioned in the question of the hon. member, and which referred to a question frequently brought before the attention of the House in connection with certain yearly accounts supplied under the provisions of an Act of Parliament. The accounts between the National Debt Commissioners and the Trustees of Savings-banks and Friendly Societies showed a deficiency against the Commissioners, arising from the fact that in former years a higher rate of interest was allowed by them than they could earn from the investments then open. Of late years the rate of interest allowed by the Commissioners had been reduced, while they had been able to earn a larger amount; but the former deficiency had gone on accumulating. He hoped before long to call the attention of Parliament to some points connected with the National Debt, and this would form one of them.

In re the Erie Preferred Stock, Satterthwaite's circular states that the United States Supreme Court of the State of New York, in the suit of St. John against the Erie Railway Company, holds that the holders of preferred stock under the management of 1862 have no preference over bona fide creditors of the company who have become so since the arrangement, and have no right to insist, on a dividend unless there is a surplus affirmed. This we presume, terminates this question, as there is no appeal unless to the Supreme Court of the United States.—Liverpool Courier.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

The following is copy of a letter addressed by Mr. Henry Bolland, Accountant, of Liverpool, to the Committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor to enquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 :—

"Gentlemen,—The working of the present Bankruptcy Act being under the consideration of your committee, I take the liberty of offering a few suggestions. In doing so I would first observe that the rules are answerable for much that has created the strong feeling which exists as to the unsatisfactory character of the Act. Those framed for carrying out the provisions of the 125th and 126th sections, are perhaps most open to exception, and certainly, having regard to the great proportion of liquidations and compositions to bankruptcies, deserve greater consideration than the rest. The 125th section provides that a debtor unable to pay his debts may summon a general meeting, &c., but there is nothing to imply that the Court must be resorted to for so simple an object; yet the rules take the power virtually from the debtor and force him to go through the formality of presenting to the court a petition, and for what purpose? That notices convening such meetings of his creditors as may be necessary in course of the proceedings, may be sent in the prescribed manner. Why should we have to pray to the court for so small a favour? But, further, the court has no power to grant the request except as to the first notice, for it has no control over the trustee to compel him to call meetings in any prescribed manner. It is true that any resolutions which it may be necessary to submit to the court for registration, must be passed at a properly convened meeting, but in liquidations the majority of resolutions of creditors are simply for the guidance of the trustee, and do not come before the court. The great objection to proceedings by petition is that it unnecessarily brings into force court officialism, which means expense, delay, and trouble, especially in the country districts, and, furthermore, it was never intended under the arrangement clauses of the Act, that the court should be resorted to except to assist creditors in asserting their rights. With that view it is no doubt necessary when a man fails that he should, to protect his property for the general body of creditors, declare his insolvency. The petition referred to contains such a declaration, but in lieu of a petition for that purpose, with all its formality and expense, I would suggest that the debtor who determines to call his creditors together should simply file with the Registrar a declaration of insolvency; and to render it interesting as well as useful, the debtor should state therein the estimated liabilities and assets, and, if requisite, his desire to submit to the jurisdiction of the court of the district. In the form of petition now in use he submits to the jurisdiction of the court to which he presents his petition, all others being excepted. Thus, for instance, if the creditors transferred the proceedings to another court, the debtor might, if there was any virtue in the submission, plead that the other court had no jurisdiction. On the declaration being presented to the Registrar he should file the same, and, after ascertaining from the debtor or his solicitor the nature of the case, i.e., the amount of liabilities, the addresses of the principal creditors, and, other particulars, appoint a day and place of meeting and mark the same on the declaration, which he should forthwith direct to be gazetted. The meeting should be appointed for the earliest possible day, having regard to the magnitude of the estate. In cases where the assets do not reach £200, which number eight out of ten, the meeting should be called on the eighth day, and not later, as it is a source of great complaint now that a debtor, by filing his petition, can keep possession of his estate for some three weeks, and, generally speaking, during that period, making things, as it is termed, 'comfortable.' As receiver and trustee of about 500 estates under the present system, I have rarely found an instance in which the debtor has been strictly honest; but always either on the part of the debtor or his friends, I have found the chief study has been how to avoid surrendering the whole estate to the creditors. The present system affords unexampled facilities for such purpose. But to return to the suggestions. On the declaration being filed the debtor should be responsible for due notice of the meeting being given to all the creditors, and on the resolutions being presented for registration the Registrar must satisfy himself, as at present, that the meeting has been duly called. The notices could be in a short form, apprising the creditors of what can be done at the meeting, and not, as at present, contain a long legal jargon that is neither read nor understood by them. A list of creditors ought not to be filed in court, but should be in the solicitor's office, and open to the inspection of any creditor upon an order of the Registrar, which should be made on some affidavit setting forth the grounds for such inspection. At present the system of filing a list of creditors in court is productive of one of the greatest evils in connection with the present system. All over the country there are established what are termed 'protection societies,' 'societies for protection of trade,' or some other delusive title, which generally consists of an adventurer who styles himself an accountant, and issues a prospectus, in which, on payment of a nominal subscription, he undertakes the charge of all subscribers' bad debts free of cost. These prospectuses are sent broadcast through the country, and nearly in every town they bring a certain number of dupes. On the statutory notice of a meeting, therefore, being received, it is sent at once to the so-called society, and thereupon the accountant obtains a copy of the list of creditors, and proceeds to scour the country for proxies, making representations, generally with but one object, viz., to obtain possession of the estate, not in the interest of creditors, but for his own benefit. Whatever amendments your committee may suggest in the present procedure, there are none which would give greater satisfaction than those which would prevent untrustworthy persons from being either receivers or trustees. To secure that object every accountant who seeks to undertake bankruptcy business should hold some certificate from the comptroller of his fitness, and there ought to be lodged in each court a list of persons so qualified. The test of fitness is more a matter of detail, but it would not be difficult to arrange a mode of selection, For instance, let the accountant obtain the signature of a certain number of legal functionaries in the town he belongs to, pretty much in the same way as a solicitor is required to do on obtaining a commission to swear affidavits. A knowledge of accounts is not the sole qualification for a receiver or trustee. He ought to be a person of experience, with a thorough knowledge of the Bankruptcy Act, not with a view of advising on matters of bankruptcy, but to enable him to act on his own knowledge and judgment without having to fly to his solicitor in the smallest difficulty. My own experience is, that an accountant trustee, simply an accountant, saddles an estate with more legal costs than the former unpaid assignee. To return, I would suggest that on a debtor filing a declaration his property should be placed under the protection of a receiver who might be nominated by himself from the list already mentioned. The moment a man commits an act of bankruptcy he ceases to be a free agent; and to prevent him yielding to the importunities of creditors to return the goods bought from them, or in some other way to give them an undue advantage, his estate should be under the supervision of the court. Further, an independent individual should investigate his books, go through his stock, and prepare a reliable statement of accounts and report thereon, to be submitted to the meeting of creditors. Having spoken severely of the honesty of debtors, I cannot allow the opportunity to pass without saying that creditors' consciences are equally elastic, and I have rarely found a case where creditors, men of position, don't try all they know to obtain a preference over their fellow sufferers. They want watching as carefully as the debtors, and hence I should say their nomination of a receiver is open equally with that of the debtor to suspicion, but for choice give me the latter. In no instance where the receiver has been appointed by the court would I allow him to be displaced by a creditor's nominee, unless there has been some impropriety of conduct. Both the rules as to receivers and restraining orders, as they now exist, might with some slight amendments be retained, the suggestion I have made as to the abolition of a petition not affecting them. Where at a first meeting no resolution is come to, the court, on an affidavit of the facts, and upon the application of a creditor, ought to have power to adjourn the proceedings into open court, and to adjudge the debtor bankrupt, as under the arrangement section of the Act of 1849. At present a formal petition has to be filed, the debtor has to be served, and, although he can have no answer to the petition, ten days have to elapse before adjudication, and another fortnight before the creditors can vest the estate in a trustee, at a cost too of £25 at the least, the whole estate being possibly less than £100. There are two other points to which, in conclusion, I would refer, viz., the accounts of the trustee, and the meetings of creditors. As to the first, I would suggest that they should all pass under the supervision of the comptroller as in bankruptcy; and secondly, that at all first meetings of creditors a registrar should preside. At present, creditors are misled by professional and semi-professional men to an enormous extent, and often they pass resolutions in utter ignorance of their effect. I have gone seriatim through the rules, and shall take the liberty of finishing my remarks in a few days, providing your deliberations are not at an end."

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY ARBITRATION.

"Qui Vive" writes as follows in the Times of the 10th inst.:—

Another act in this judicial farce was enacted on Friday last. Policyholders in companies amalgamated with the European Society were summoned by advertisement to attend on that day at the office of the Arbitrators to support their claims. At the appointed time a mob of some hundreds of all sorts and conditions of men and women assembled and vainly struggled for ingress into the Arbitration Court, which is capable of holding at the utmost about fifty persons. After an hour or so of the wildest confusion, the crowd dispersed on a rumour being circulated that the stairs were giving way. The result of the meeting was announced to those who happened to get within hearing of the officials in attendance to be that all, claims, except against the European Society proper, were disallowed, and that those who desired to pursue their rights must apply officially to the Arbitrator. The vast majority of those who attended did not even get within sight of the door of the Court. Many came from remote parts of the kingdom; one poor woman stated that she had come specially from Ireland; and the result of the whole affair to them is that their claims are disallowed without their having the opportunity of saying a word in support of them. Surely, sir, no Oriental Cadi could improvise a greater parody of justice than this? My object, however, in writing is not so much to comment on the fatuity of the manner in which this meeting was conducted, as to offer a few remarks on the inconsistency and injustice of the course pursued with regard to the claims of the policyholders. The advertisement calling the meeting announced that the liquidators, "having regard to the decisions in the Arbitration," would object to all claims except those of annuitants. Now, it is a matter of notoriety that the policyholders have in their favour a large body of decisions by the greatest legal luminary of this generation, while they have against them only a few judgments of Lord Romilly; yet, because the latter happen to be later in point of time, they are selected to furnish the governing principle in the Arbitration, and that, too, while a bill is actually pending in Parliament the main provision of which is to provide an appeal to a regularly-constituted tribunal from the conflicting views of the two deceased Arbitrators. For what possible object is the decision of the Appeal Court thus prejudged, and why are policyholders and shareholders, already driven almost to distraction by the vacillations of the Arbitration, put to the trouble and expense of the premature and abortive proceedings I have described. Surely, Sir, Lord Justice James, the present Arbitrator, cannot have sanctioned such a course, and when the facts are known to him he will surely not allow the unfortunate policyholders to be prejudiced thereby nor the shareholders to be put to the expense of paying for it?

Messrs Broom, Son, and Hays, and Mr F. Tendron have been reappointed auditors of the London Tramways Company.

Messrs J. Allanson and J. Clark have been reappointed auditors of the Prudential Assurance Company.

Messrs Chatteris, Nichols, and Chatteris have been reappointed auditors of the United Limner and Vorvohle Rock Asphalte Company.

Mr Sydney Smith was unanimously appointed professional auditor of the Somerset and Dorset Railway Company at the recent half-yearly meeting of the company.

Vice-Chancellor Bacon has appointed Mr J. Waddell liquidator of the Cheap Fuel Supply Association (Limited).

Messrs Bates, Dickinson, and Yeats have been re-elected auditors of the Railway Passengers Assurance Company.

Messrs John Bury (Wrexham) and John Jones (Chester) have been re-elected auditors of the Provincial Insurance Company.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

JAMES CUNLIFFE (London).—A first meeting has been held under the bankruptcy of James Cunliffe, described as of 83, Gracechurch-street, steamship owner and commission merchant. No accounts were filed, but the liabilities were estimated at about £16,000, the assets being of comparatively small amount.

EDWARD WITHERS (ROMSEY).—A meeting of the creditors of Edward Withers, of Romsey, upholsterer, cabinet maker, &c., has been called by Mr. W. C. Harvey (Gamble and Harvey) one of the trustees, for the purpose of considering the propriety of sanctioning, "A scheme of settlement under the 28th Section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, whereby the trustees be authorised to sell to the debtor his estate, as disclosed in his statement of affairs filed in Court, for the sum of £1,050, and all costs incidental thereto and consequent upon the filing of the petition, such sum of £1,050 to be paid as follows:—£425 in cash within twenty-four hours of the approval of the Court of the scheme of settlement £312 10s 0d at three months, and £312 10s 0d at six months, the last two instalments to be secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the debtor, of James Withers of Romsey, and of Edward Withers of Lower Clapton, and a bill of sale over debtors stock-in-trade and household furniture."

The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian, gives currency to a report that Mr. W. Quilter, of Quilter, Ball, and Co., accountants, has paid Lord Dudley £35,000 for his interest in the Haymarket Opera House. It is further said that the place is to be used by Messrs. Moody and Sankey in one of their missionary journeys to the residents of the West End.

THE UNITED KINGDOM AQUARIUM COMPANY.—We have before us the prospectus of the United Kingdom Aquarium Company, which is formed for the purpose of building aquaria in various parts of the United Kingdom as opportunity may offer upon a novel plan. This plan, suggested by Mr. Willert Beale, and which it is intended to adopt in the construction of the company's buildings, provides for the erection of an assembly room within the aquarium, a very important feature in the project. The company propose to start with Liverpool, which may be looked upon as a sort of Metropolitan centre for the north and north-west parts of England, and where there is ample opportunity for the success of an institution of this kind affording high class entertainments with protection from the weather. Kingstown will probably be the next field for the company's operations, and an aquarium at the Alexandra Palace is also in contemplation. The financial success of the Crystal Palace aquarium is patent to everybody, so that the company is not by any means starting upon unknown ground. We venture to think that the investing public—sick of brilliant mines and diamond fields—will turn with relief to an undertaking in which utility and common sense are sufficiently allied, and which, on the face of the prospectus, bears evidence of every desire to protect the interest of Shareholders by giving the latter as much power, financially, as the directors forming the board.

WINDING-UP PETITIONS.—A petition for the winding-up of E. Broyaunt and Co. (Limited) has been presented to the Court of Chancery.—There are two petitions before the Court of Chancery for the compulsory winding up of the Bradford Tramway Company.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The failure is announced, by circular, of Messrs J. S. de Vascoucellas and Co., of Liverpool, London, and Brazil, after nearly forty years' trading. The liabilities are £120,000, including £65,000 acceptances, for the taking up of which negotiations with the drawers are in progress. The assets are estimated at about £90,000, subject to realization. The engagements of the firm are almost exclusively confined to the Continent. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs J. and F. Lovering, of Gresham-street, accountants. The Baron de Vascoucellas, the head of the firm, is in England.—Mr Mence Wilkinson, druggist, Sheffield, has been adjudicated bankrupt in the County Court there. His liabilities are estimated at about £7,000. Mr Wilkinson had filed a petition for liquidation in the London Court of Bankruptcy.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement has been filed on behalf of Messrs Crompton, Cooke, and Co., Manchester, yarn dyers and polishers. The liabilities are estimated at £600,000; assets not ascertained.—A petition for liquidation was presented on Tuesday on behalf of Mr John Davis, trading as John Davis and Co., factors, Ann-street, Birmingham. The liabilities are estimated at £18,000, the assets being considerable. The failure is attributed to heavy losses in trade. Mr Luke J. Sharpe was appointed trustee.—The failure of Messrs Grieves and Loveridge, in the London provision trade, is announced, with liabilities estimated at about £28,000, and the assets at £17,000.—The failure is announced of the firm of Alfred Bowler, carrying on business in Bermondsey as a general merchant and wholesale dealer in scrap iron. The debts are estimated at £36,000, and the assets about £10,000. A petition for liquidation has been presented. There are some creditors in Birmingham and Liverpool, but the country liabilities are not heavy.—William Hales Pridmore, described as a corn merchant, of 9, Burlington-chambers, New-street, Birmingham, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities estimated at £34,000 or thereabouts. Hugh Carmichael, of Cambridge-chambers, 77a Lord-street, Liverpool, accountant, has been appointed receiver of the estate.

AMERICA.—The suspension is reported of Messrs Vyse and Co., of 537, Broadway, New York, in the straw goods line, with liabilities estimated at £200,000.—The failure is announced of Messrs Jessup and Co., of 256, Broadway, ready-made clothing establishment, with liabilities of about £34,000.—The Grant Locomotive Works, Paterson, New Jersey, it is thought probable, will go into bankruptcy; their liabilities are about £160,000. American advices report the failure of Messrs Foster and Hall, wholesale grocers, Northampton, Massachusetts—liabilities, £12,000; Messrs A. and S. Baker and Co., fruit merchants, 268, Washington-street, New York—liabilities, £20,000; Mr Hermann, cotton broker, and Messrs Hart, Caugher, and Co., brokers, Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

American advices report the failure of Messrs Vivero and Co., Guayaquil, with liabilities of £120,000.

The Nottingham Guardian says:—"Disquieting rumours are reported from Belfast regarding the financial position of two or three houses connected with the linen, yarn, and flax trades. 'The liabilities of one house (an insurance and commission agency business) are said to be from £15,000 to £50,000. The principal is said to be connected with some of the oldest and most respectable firms in the linen trade.'"

The Liverpool Journal of Commerce states that for some days past rumours have been current at Liverpool regarding the financial embarrassments of several firms engaged in the African trade, and it has transpired that in one case a composition of 8s. in the pound was offered and accepted.

THE ONLY AND SPECIAL "MEDAL FOR PROGRESS," Was awarded for "Feuerfeste Eisene Schränke und Kunstchlosser Fortschritts," to

HOBBS, HART, & CO.,
AT THE VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION
This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating arounds us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation. and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand. Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

It has long been held as an axiom that teaching is intended for the pecuniary benefit of the teacher more than for the intellectual benefit of the taught, and it is now recognized as an equally indisputable truth that companies are often framed less in the interest of the shareholders than in that of the directors and other officials thereof. It is true that dividends are sometimes paid, and that exceptionally fortunate investors may sometimes gain, with much anxiety and perturbation of spirit, a return nearly as large as they might have received from a perfectly sound investment, but very often indeed the paid up capital is applied mainly in paying promotion money and salaries. And with rare devotion the official tribe cling to the wreck they have made. All hope of success is gone, the utmost that the most sanguine man can expect is to minimise his loss as far as possible by a speedy suspension and realization; but the concern is still kept above water in the interests of the few, till the knot demands the intervention of a stronger power, and the Court of Chancery pronounces the fiat of liquidation.

Such a case as that of the "London and Paris Hotel Company" is, we fear, only typical of a great many others. The old tale of a rash and reckless investment, of directors neglecting their duties, and of a concern which had dealt in hundreds of thousands of pounds kept alive simply to pay over nearly the whole of the receipts as a salary to their secretary. The usual argument followed on the petition, but the shrewd common sense of Vice-Chancellor Malins broke through the flimsy defences. "The Companies Act," he said, "provided that the Court might make a winding-up order whenever the Company had suspended its business for a year. This Company had virtually suspended its business for ten years; the greater part of its property had been squandered long ago, and the miserable remnant could only be effectually realized under a winding-up order." And the order was accordingly made forthwith.

The powers of the Court of Chancery over companies have, upon the whole, been wisely and beneficially exercised, and seldom abused. There are many cases of delay and of expense, but we believe that on the whole the result is far more satisfactory than could have been otherwise attained. One great advantage is in the class of official liquidators created by these demands for their services. Every year adds to their number, and to their experience. It is a task which calls for the exercise of very peculiar abilities. Apart from the duty of realising assets to the best advantage, of settling or compounding the claims of numerous creditors, and of arranging for the due extraction of the proper amount from the pockets of the unfortunate contributories, there is evoked another spirit, the spirit which animates the detective matched against the thief. To draw to light the truth hidden and sunk in many a fictitious entry or garbled statement; to reduce to their true dimensions the overcharged representations of those who, having fought long and hard for the retention of their ill-gotten gains, now fight as hard to retain the semblance of that honour and good reputation which may be so useful to them in any future attempts to delude the confiding public a second time; to set out a simple and unvarnished story for the warning of the speculator is a work always well and worthily performed. That stern legislation must some day be involved to strengthen the hands of those who are grappling with the giant evil of fraudulent companies, is admitted. It is on the reports of official liquidators that any alteration in the law must be founded, and their experience must be resorted to for the necessary measures. If they could only have the power sometimes of examining into the state of companies before the petition was made, if upon an application supported by fit evidence a judge could order an official investigation without the publicity of winding-up orders, and long argument in open court, a great step would be made. We venture to say that the scrutiny of a competent accountant would soon purge the country of such scandals as the "London and Paris Hotel Company," while it would strengthen many whose solvency is damaged by speculative machinations.

A technical point, possessing more legal than practical interest, was raised in ex parte Barrow. A debtor's summons having been issued on an affidavit made, not by the creditors themselves, but by their attorney, the debtor took instant steps to dispute it. In doing this he adopted rather too strenuous means of resistance. He filed an affidavit denying the debt; he applied to have the summons dismissed; and he, in addition, moved for leave to cross-examine, not the person upon whose affidavit the summons had been issued, but the actual creditors who were resident, and carrying on business in Spain. There he was, undoubtedly, technically incorrect. The creditors had made no affidavit, and there were, therefore, no materials upon which they could be cross-examined. And his practical course was clear. The creditors had made a claim which was disputed. It was for them to take the necessary steps to prove their case. If they declined to appear they left the field open for the debtor to make an ex parte statement, the effect of which might be to bring about the instant dismissal of the summons. But it might also fail to shake the original case in the faith of which it had been granted. If the contention that the creditors were to attend to be cross-examined under pain of having their summons dismissed had been upheld, it would have proved a great hindrance to any bankruptcy proceedings at the instance of foreign creditors. The debtor has the advantage of being able to defend himself, and to tell his story in his own way, without the additional power of being able to stave off bankruptcy by appealing to narrow technicalities.

The Scotch are so very patriotic and nationally minded, that it is pleasant to find that they can see good even in our much abused Bankruptcy Act, and have condescended to patronize one of its clauses, while the Lord Advocate seemed to think that the clause in its entirety might properly be adopted. There seems no apparent reason why the three bankruptcy codes of England, Scotland, and Ireland, should not be assimilated by incorporating the good features, and omitting the bad, even if, as the Lord Advocate proudly declared, England was to be made like unto Scotland, and the faults of English law were to be held to begin at their departure from the Scotch system. Each country might still retain its technicalities of language, and even some slight diversity of procedure, though the principles of the statute would be the same in all cases. The diversity of system between the component parts of the same kingdom is quite as incongruous as the much censured difference between law and equity.

The letter in the Times, signed "Another Solicitor," while making some good suggestions for Bankruptcy Reform, shows that the writer is in a curious state of darkness as to accountants, who, he seems to think, sprang into existence only since the Bankruptcy Act, and its system of proxies. Dr. Johnson once said of a certain writer that he was "generated by the corruption of a bookseller," and so we suppose that "Another Solicitor" would say that accountants were "generated by the corruption of bankruptcy officials." We would respectfully remind him that though, as we have often maintained, the proxy-system is extremely liable to abuse, it is not always the accountants who abuse it, and a case we reported recently of the gross irregularities in connection with proxies may be with advantage referred to as a proof of this. Surely it is time that this silly battle about accountants should cease.

The case of ex parte Kibble in re Onslow gives a timely warning to those speculative tradesmen who do business with "expectant heirs," and shows that the Courts of Equity are resolved as far as possible to put down any attempts to evade the spirit of the "Infants Relief Act." To contend, as the petitioning creditors did, that a judgment must be taken as conclusive evidence of the existence of a debt would lead, as was pointed out by Lord James, to all sorts of family arrangements. The common sense of the decision is obvious. And supposing that an order for adjudication had been made, these claims could not have been allowed without diminishing the amount of the assets unfairly to the other creditors. The law says, that contracts made during infancy are utterly void and incapable of ratification, and creditors would have a clear grievance if such claims were allowed to rank for dividend merely because the debtor, careless or ignorant of his rights, did not choose to resist an action in respect of them.

BANKRUPTCY LAWS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

SIR,—I am obliged by the correction of "G. W." which appears in your last issue. Theoretically he is right, but I nevertheless hold that a trustee is bound to take cognisance of, and reserve for, claims which are within his knowledge owing, whether in bankruptcy or liquidation. How, otherwise, could a creditor partly secured, but who has been unable to realize his security in time to prove for a proposed dividend, obtain that protection to which he is entitled, viz., to rank for the uncovered portion of his claim? My practice under such circumstances is to ascertain from such creditor what he considers his security worth.—Yours truly,

H. B. (London.)

NATIONAL DEBT ANNUITIES.—During the year ended the 5th of January last, the annuities granted for life and for terms of years amounted to £56,961 12s. 4d. The money paid, including commission, was £425,503 8s. 6d.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL—MARCH 16.

(Present—Lord Justice JAMES, Lord Justice MELLISH, Sir JAMES COLVILE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, and Sir ROBERT COLLIER.)

THE BANK OF SOUTH AUSTRALIA V. THE OFFICIAL LIQUIDATOR OF THE TALISKER MINING COMPANY (LIMITED) AND OTHERS.—Judgment was also given in this appeal from an order of the Supreme Court of South Australia. It had been decided by that tribunal that certain debenture holders of the Talisker Mining Company were entitled, in priority to the general creditors, to be paid the amounts due to them in respect of their debentures out of certain calls on shares of the concern, which calls had not been made at the date of the debentures. The arguments were reported in the Times of Friday last, and it will be recollected that the main question to be determined was, whether the company in August, 1871, had power to mortgage, firstly, sums then remaining unpaid in respect of previous calls on its shares; secondly, calls made after that date, and before the voluntary winding-up of the company; and, thirdly, calls made after the winding-up. By its deed of settlement the company had power to raise money by way of mortgage of its "property," or on its bonds, debentures, loans and promissory notes or other securities. The Court below held in substance that unpaid and unmade calls formed part of the company's property, and might be mortgaged. Lord Justice James, in delivering the judgment of their Lordships, expressed their regret that the attention of the Supreme Court had not been directed to the leading decision of the subject, namely, Stanley's case, in which the then Lords Justices, affirming a decree of Vice-Chancellor Kindersley, held that future calls could not be validly mortgaged under a provision in the deed of settlement authorizing directors to borrow on the security of the funds or property of the company. That judgment was based on most intelligible grounds, and had been uniformly acted upon ever since. Their Lordships failed to see anything in the present suit to distinguish it from the principle there laid down, and they would, therefore, humbly advise her Majesty to allow the present appeal, and to discharge the order of the Supreme Court. The two respondents, who were debenture holders, must pay the costs of the appeal.

COURT OF CHANCERY, LINCOLN'S-INN.

March 11.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EX PARTE BARROW—IN RE IRVING.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr Registrar Spring-Rice, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. On the 10th of December last a debtor's summons was issued by Messrs Barrow and Roman, merchants, at Almeria, in Spain, against John Irving, a broker, in Mincing-lane. The summons claimed £178 as due upon a balance of account. The affidavit in support of the summons was made, not by the summoning creditors themselves, but a Mr M'Allum, acting under a power of attorney from them. Irving filed an affidavit denying the debt, and applied to the Court to dismiss the summons. He also gave notice to Messrs. Barrow and Roman to attend the Court, and be examined on the hearing of his application. The case came on for hearing by the Registrar on the 4th February; Messrs Barrow and Roman were not present. The Registrar was of opinion that the debtor was ex debito justitiæ entitled to the attendance of the summoning creditors for the purpose of examination, and on this ground he ordered the hearing to be adjourned to the 4th of March for the attendance of the creditors. Messrs Barrow and Roman appealed. Lord Justice James said that the Registrar had greatly miscarried. The question was whether the moment a debtor denied the debt claimed by a debtor's summons, it was instantly a matter of right for him to have all the summoning creditors brought from every part of the world to be examined, when they had made no affidavit upon which they could be cross-examined. There was no injustice or hardship upon the debtor in saying that he had no such right. He having denied the debt, the creditor must, just as in an action, prove the debt to the satisfaction of the Court. He must prove it either absolutely, or to such an extent that the Registrar might order the question to be tried. If the creditors did not attend, the debtor would have the opportunity of telling his own story, and the matter would be determined on his own ex parte statement. It would be monstrous if there were an absolute right to have any number of parties summoned from any part of the world because the debtor wished it. The Registrar's order must be discharged. Lord Justice Mellish concurred.

Digitized by Google

Ex parte Kibble—In re Onslow.—This case raised a question of some importance upon the construction of the Infant's Relief Act of 1874. It was an appeal from the refusal of Mr. Registrar Hazlitt, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, to make an adjudication of bankruptcy against Mr Augustus P. L. Onslow, a young gentleman, who attained 21 on the 25th of August last. Before he came of age he had incurred debts for jewellery supplied, and for money lent to him by several jewellers in London. On the 5th of November last a debtor's summons was issued against him by Mr Emanuel, of 27, Old Bond-street, Mr W. Kibble, of 22, Gracechurch-street, Messrs H. C. Green and Co., of 94, Hatton-garden, and Mr R. A. Green, of 82, Strand, claiming, respectively, debts of £258 8s. 2d., £53 18s. 7d., £14 14s., and £29 6s. On the 8th of December an order was issued by Mr Registrar Brougham, on the undertaking of Onslow's solicitor on his behalf to pay Kibble's debt within three days, staying proceedings on the summons as to Emanuel's debt, upon security being given, and as to the debts of Green and Co. and R. A. Green without security, pending the trial of the validity of the debts claimed. Kibble had on the 22d of October recovered judgment in the Queen's Bench, in an action commenced on the 10th of October, under the Bills of Exchange Act, 1854, upon a bill of exchange for £50 drawn by Onslow upon and accepted by his mother, on the 18th May, 1874, and endorsed by him to Kibble in payment. Onslow did not appear, and judgment went by default against him for £53 18s. 7d., debt and costs. The money not having been paid under the undertaking given on the hearing of the debtor's summons, Kibble, on the 14th of December, presented a bankruptcy petition against Onslow, founded on his failure to comply with the summons so far as his debt was concerned. Onslow gave notice of his intention to dispute the making of an adjudication. The debt was disputed on the ground that it had been contracted while Onslow was an infant, and that it could not be ratified after he came of age. The Registrar refused to make an adjudication, and Kibble appealed. By the Infants' Relief Act (37 and 38 Vic., c. 62) sec. 1,—"All contracts, whether by specialty or by simple contract, henceforth entered into by infants for the repayment of money lent, or to be lent, or for goods supplied or to be supplied (other than contracts for necessaries), and all accounts stated with infants, shall be absolutely void; provided always that this enactment shall not invalidate any contract into which an infant may, by any existing or future Statute, or by the rules of Common Law or Equity, enter, except such as now by law are voidable." And by section 2—"No action shall be brought whereby to charge any person upon any promise made after full age to pay any debt contracted during infancy, or upon any ratification made after full age of any promise or contract made during infancy, whether there shall or shall not be any new consideration for such promise or ratification after full age." That Act came into operation on the 7th of August last. Mr E. C. Willis (with whom was Mr Roxburgh, Q.C.), for the appellant, argued that the judgment at law was conclusive, as Onslow did not raise the defence of infancy. Mr Winslow, Q.C., and Mr Bagley, for Onslow, contended that the Court of Bankruptcy was, notwithstanding the judgment, entitled to inquire into the consideration for the alleged debt, and that since the Act of 1874 it is impossible for a contract made during infancy to be ratified. Moreover, even if it was regular that a number of creditors should join together in one debtor's summons, still if they commenced together they must go on together in the subsequent proceedings. One of them alone could not sustain a bankruptcy petition founded on a debtor's summons applying to all. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the decision of the Registrar was quite right. It was the settled rule of the Court of Bankruptcy that the consideration for a judgment debt might be inquired into. There was obviously very strong reasons for this. The object of bankruptcy administration was to distribute a man's assets among his just creditors. If a judgment was always conclusive a man might allow any number of judgments to go by default in favour of friends or relatives without any debt being due to them at all. There was in this case no ratification of the original debt or bill of exchange till after action brought by allowing judgment to go by default. The question was whether that ratification was not made invalid by the Act of 1874. The effect of section 2 of that Act was, in his Lordship's opinion, to make a ratification by an infant after the Act came into operation as void as a contract after the Act was made by sec. 1. On this ground therefore the Registrar's decision was right. But as the other question, about the form of a summons, had been raised, it was right to say something about it too. It was very inconvenient that a number of creditors should club together to issue the summons, though this course appeared to be recognized by Form 4 in the Schedule to the Rules of 1870. But, if they did unite together in this way, his Lordship thought that they must all stand or fall together. The summons could not be dealt with piecemeal. There could be only one act of bankruptcy upon it. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. It was quite clear that in bankruptcy the consideration for a judgment might be examined into, even when the judgment had gone by default. This would not go to the extent that whenever a debtor had not pleaded a defence which he might have pleaded, such as that he had no notice of dishonour of a bill of exchange, the Court of Bankruptcy would say that there was no consideration for the debt. But his Lordship thought that the effect of the Act of 1874 was to make this debt one without consideration, notwithstanding the judgment. The case was not within sec. 1 of the Act, because the bill of exchange was drawn before the Act was passed. But when the Act came into operation the bill was not due and the drawer had not attained 21. The effect of sec. 2 was to prevent any action being brought against the drawer, even though he had ratified the contract after he attained 21. The consequence was that this was a contract which the infant could not ratify when he became of age, and that was equivalent to saying that there was no valid consideration for the debt. The statute in effect made a debt contracted during infancy void like a gambling debt. His Lordship also agreed with what had been said by Lord Justice James on the other point.

Ex parte Carew—In re Carew.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr Registrar Murray, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. Mr Benjamin Francis Hallowell Carew, in May, 1874, filed a liquidation petition. He was then in possession of an income of £6,000 a year, arising from the rents of settled estates, but he had contracted debts beyond his immediate means of payment. In the statement of his affairs which he filed he mentioned that a claim had been made against him by the executors of Lady Pigott for £1,500, but that he did not admit the claim. At the first meeting of the creditors, held on the 23d July, it was resolved by the proper majority to accept a composition of 19s.11d. in the pound in satisfaction of the debts; that Messrs William Hammond and Benn Davis should be appointed trustees for the purpose of receiving the composition and distributing it among the creditors: and that the terms of the composition should be embodied in a deed to be made between the debtor, the trustees, and the creditors. The resolutions were duly confirmed at the second meeting of the creditors on the 4th of August, they were registered on the 6th of August, and the deed was executed on the 18th of August. Before the resolutions were passed notice had been given to the debtor, on behalf of the infant children of Lady Pigott, of a claim against him jointly with another person, in respect of an alleged breach of trust. The sum claimed was £2,215 and interest, and a Chancery suit of "Pigott v. Stewart" had been instituted to enforce it. No one attended at the creditors' meetings to represent these claimants, and no one on their behalf executed the deed. To carry out the composition a sum of £26,000 was borrowed by Carew from an insurance company, and was placed in the hands of the trustees. This sum included a provision to meet the claim of the Pigotts. The composition was paid by the trustees to all the other creditors, and there remained in the hands of the trustees a balance of £2,148. Carew then applied to the Court for an order that the trustees should pay over this balance to him. The Chancery suit of Pigott v. Stewart has not yet been decided. The Registrar was of opinion that the Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the application, and he refused it. Carew appealed. Mr Winslow, Q.C., and Mr Job Bradford, for the appellant, contended that the Court had jurisdiction, and that the claimants, not being bound by the composition, could derive no advantage from it. Mr Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr E. C. Willis, for the claimants in "Pigott v. Stewart," argued that any creditor, whether bound by the composition or not, had a right to claim the benefit of it; and it would be very unjust to pay this balance over to the debtor while there was this large outstanding claim against him. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr F. Turner were for the trustees; Mr Northmore Lawrence appeared for the solicitors who had acted for the debtor in the composition proceedings. Lord Justice Mellish said that the statement by the debtor that there was a claim made by the executors of Lady Pigott was not such a statement of the names and addresses of the creditors and the amount of the debt due as that the persons really interested in the claim, the infant children of Lady Pigott, would have been bound by the composition under the provisions of section 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. The persons who represented the infants did not attend any of the creditors' meetings, but they gave notice of the nature of their claim to the trustees and to Mr Carew. All the other creditors had received their 19s. 11d. in the pound, and £2,148 now remained in the hands of the trustees. The first question was whether the Court of Bankruptcy had any jurisdiction to entertain this application. His Lordship was of opinion that, if the trustees had no valid reason why they should not pay the balance over to the debtor, and if an account had to be taken between them and him, that account might be taken in the Court of Bankruptcy. Sec. 72 of the Act applied, for a composition had been decided to be a "case of bankruptcy" within that section. It was clear that any creditor who claimed to share in the composition might apply to the Court, and his Lordship thought that, if there was a surplus, the Court ought to be able to take the account as between the debtor and the trustee. That raised the question whether the account ought to be taken now, or whether it should wait until the Chancery suit had been decided. The first question, therefore, was whether any creditor who was not bound by the composition might, nevertheless, take advantage of it if he chose to do so. His Lordship was of opinion that the provision of section 126 that the composition should be binding on "all the creditors whose names and addresses, and the amount of the debts due to whom, are shown in the statement of the debtor, produced to the meetings at which the resolution has passed, but shall not affect or prejudice the rights of any other creditors," was inserted for the purpose of compelling the debtor to give a full description of the names and addresses of his creditors and the amounts of their debts, but was not intended to enable him, by leaving out any creditor, whether intentionally or by accident, to deprive him of the advantage of the composition; and therefore an application under the 9th clause of section 126 to enforce the composition might be made, not only by a creditor who was bound by the composition, because he was properly entered in the debtor's statement, but by any creditor who would in a bankruptcy or a liquidation have been entitled to prove his debt. If there were not funds placed in the hands of a trustee for the purpose of paying the composition, it would probably not be to the advantage of a creditor who was not bound by the composition to claim it when he could sue the debtor for the whole debt. But if, as might be done, the whole property of the debtor was assigned to trustees as a security for the payment of the composition, or if a sum of money was placed in the hands of trustees for the purpose of paying the composition, it might possibly be to such a creditor's advantage to apply for the composition. If he did not attend the creditors' meetings he might not be able to prejudice the rights of the other creditors if he had not given due notice to them of his claim. But, as against the debtor, and when all the other creditors had been paid their composition, the money having been paid by the debtor to the trustee for the general benefit of all the creditors, his Lordship could see no good reason why a creditor who was not bound by the composition should not be able to apply to the Court to enforce its payment to him. In the present case, having regard to the nature of this claim, which was made in respect of a breach of trust, it was clear that, as other persons were involved, the Court of Bankruptcy, in the case of a proof in bankruptcy or liquidation, would have allowed the Chancery suit to proceed and a decree to be made to determine the amount of the claim, and would then have admitted a proof for the amount so determined; and that which would have been a proper case for admitting a proof in a bankruptcy or a liquidation was, in his Lordship's opinion, a case in which the creditor might apply to the Court under a composition in which a sum had been placed in the hands of a trustee for the creditors generally. It would be wrong to order the trustee to pay back to the debtor any of that sum which remained in his hands while there was a claim made by a creditor which might turn out to be valid. No order ought to be made on this application until the result of the Chancery suit was known. The order of the Registrar must be affirmed, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. But this would be without prejudice to any application to be made hereafter. Lord Justice James said, with regard to the question of jurisdiction, he thought that the Registrar could take any account which might be necessary in order to ascertain the real amount of the balance in the trustees' hands.

IN RE GLOBE MUTUAL LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK.—This was a petition for the return of the deposit of £20,000 made a few weeks ago by the above-named company upon commencing business within the United Kingdom, pursuant to the requirements of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870, which deposit is by the same Act repayable so soon as the life assurance fund accumulated out of the premiums shall have amounted to £40,000. The Master of the Rolls, upon evidence that the reserve fund amounted to £800,000, made the order.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURT, LINCOLN'S-INN,

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR R. MALINS.)

IN RE THE LONDON AND PARIS HOTEL COMPANY (LIMITED).—This was a petition for winding up this company presented by three shareholders—Lieut.-General Robertson, Mr Newton, a wine merchant, and Mr Nichols, an accountant. The company was formed in 1862, with a nominal capital of £400,000, in 20,000 shares of £20 each. They succeeded in placing out not more than 9,141 shares, of which the greater part were handed to the vendors of the property acquired by the company in part payment of the purchase-money, and one promoter alone, named Jay, received no less than £10,000 in cash. The only properties actually acquired by the company were certain leasehold premises called "Crockford's," in St. James's-street, and a house adjoining it; the West Cliff Hotel, Folkestone; and Meurice's Hotel, Paris; for which they agreed to pay the total sum of £195,000. Part of the property was subsequently sold by the company's mortgagees at a heavy loss. The house in St. James's-street was let to the Junior St. James's Club at a rent of £1,500 a year, out of which the company had to pay a ground-rent of £1,000 a year, but out of the balance of £500 a year the company had further to pay a salary of £350 a year to their secretary, Mr Baker, who had also been appointed a director at a meeting of the Board, without any notice to the shareholders.

The company never paid more than one year's dividend, and the result of their operations was that their only asset was the leasehold house in St. James's-street, which they had entered into a contract to sell for the sum of £2,500. Mr Baker, the secretary, was cross-examined, and stated that at only one or two meetings in the year were the directors able to form a quorum; that the remuneration of the directors was £3,500 per annum, subsequently reduced to £750, and that during the last five years about £3,000 had been expended in law costs. Mr Nichols, one of the petitioners, was also cross-examined, when he stated that he only paid £10 for the five shares which he held. Mr Newton, another petitioner, had died since the presentation of the petition; and Lieut.-General Robertson, the remaining petitioner, had not made any affidavit in support of the petition, the only petitioner taking any active part in supporting it being Mr Nichols. Mr Higgins, Q.C., and Mr Crossley appeared for the petitioners; Mr Glasse, Q.C., Mr J. Pearson, Q.C., Mr C. H. Turner, and Mr Northmore Lawrence, for creditors and shareholders, supported the petition; Mr Bristowe, Q.C., and Mr Montague Cookson, for the company, and Mr Karslake, Q.C., and Mr Bigg, for shareholders, opposed the petition on the ground that the only active petitioner, Mr Nichols, had no substantial interest in the company, and that the wishes of the general body of shareholders ought to be consulted before making an order. The Vice-Chancellor said that if Mr Nichols had been the only petitioner he should not have paid much attention to the petition, because, although he had said he had paid £50 for his shares, it turned out that he had paid only £10. That, however, did not disqualify him from presenting a winding-up petition. But whatever objection might be made to his appearing on the petition, there were two other petitioners, who held a considerable number of shares. One had died, and it was said that the other, General Robertson, was a petitioner only in name. But he was there in substance, and had incurred the responsibility of presenting the petition and the liability of having to pay the costs of it if it should be dismissed. The petitioners, therefore, were good petitioners. The question then was, what ought to be done with this case? It was one which presented a lamentable history, and it was surprising that gentlemen in the possession of their faculties could embark in such a concern. They commenced business by purchasing the four properties mentioned for the large price of £195,000, a great part of which they had to borrow. The result of it all was that the net produce of the property now belonging to them was less than £50 a year. Under such circumstances he should have thought that the shareholders would have said the concern was a wretched one, the money had all been wasted, the directors had been guilty of folly, or something worse, to let the concern be wound up; but, instead of that, the greater part of the day had been occupied in resisting a winding-up. In his opinion there was much in the transactions of this company which called for investigation. Here was a case in which the time of the Court had been occupied by one of the most ridiculous contests in resisting a winding-up order that he had ever seen, and he was surprised that a winding-up should have been resisted. If he refused to wind up this company what would be the consequence? There was some property which would have to be dealt with somehow or other. If he left the matter to the shareholders there would be nothing but wrangling. Here was Baker, the secretary, who had insulted the shareholders by refusing to allow them to inspect the books, and, in the course of his examination before the special examiner, he had obstructed the administration of justice by refusing to produce them. The manner in which the affairs of the company had been conducted for the last five years was most discreditable, and could but be regarded as disgraceful by all men of rational faculties. Dishonesty there must have been; and could it be said that the large number of shareholders who had lost their money, and the creditors were bound to leave their affairs in the hands of persons so unworthy to be trusted as Baker and his co-directors, who could only form a quorum once or twice a year? He could do nothing for these persons unless he made the order. If he decided that the company ought to pass a resolution to wind up voluntarily, some time must elapse before they could do so; and, if they did pass such a resolution, there would inevitably be a petition to continue the winding-up under supervision. This, therefore, was not to be thought of for a moment. It had been said that a meeting ought to be called, as in the Brighton Hotel case, but that was a going concern, and there seemed to be a prospect of the company becoming successful. The result justified his anticipations, and now the company were making large profits; but with this miserable concern the case was quite different. He was satisfied that this company had only been kept on by the directors for the purpose of drawing their salaries, and for other reasons personal to themselves. Now, what were the circumstances under which the Court would make a winding-up order? The 79th section of the Companies Act, 1862, provided that the Court might make the order whenever the company had suspended its business for a year. This company had virtually suspended its business for ten years; the greater part of its property had been squandered long ago, and the miserable remnant could only be effectually realized under a winding-up order. He was satisfied that to make an order to wind-up was the best course for companies such as this. It was the clearest case for winding-up he had ever seen; and he should therefore make the order, and the company must have only such costs as they would have had if they had simply appeared and consented to the order.

(Before Sir CHARLES HALL.)

RE THE BOG MINING COMPANY.—This company was established for the purpose of working certain mines with a capital of £24,000 in £2 shares. The capital was duly subscribed, but on the 28th October, 1874, a resolution was passed to wind up the company voluntarily, and Mr A. Good was appointed liquidator. Subsequently, however, a meeting of the company was held, at which it was considered that the company might be carried on at a profit, and in March, 1875, it was resolved that the proceedings under the voluntary winding up should be stayed, and that the directors should be at liberty to make arrangements with the creditors, and that application should be made to the Court of Chancery in order to carry into effect the above resolution. Accordingly a petition was presented by Col. Corbet, as representing the company, that the proceedings under the voluntary winding up might be stayed. Mr Greene and Mr Grosvenor-Wood, for the petitioner, said that the difficulty was this:—Under the 131st and 133d sections of the Act of 1862, after a voluntary winding up the business of the company was ipso facto stopped. By the 89th section the Court was authorized to stay proceedings at any time after an order was made, but that was necessarily in a winding-up by the Court. But by the operation of the 138th section the power given by the 89th section was extended to cases of voluntary winding up. Mr Rice and Mr L. Webb appeared for the creditors and the liquidator. The Vice-Chancellor made the order.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MARCH 17.

BANKRUPTCY (SCOTLAND) LAW AMENDMENT BILL.—Mr F. Harrison moved the second reading of this bill, the object of which was simply to give workmen a preference claim in bankruptcies to the extent of a month's wages where their salary was not more than £100 a year, instead of limiting the salary, as at present, to £60. The latter amount was fixed by an Act of 19 and 20 Vic., and had, perhaps, been reasonable enough at the time, but, having regard to the increase of wages, was no longer sufficient. It was felt by the working classes of Scotland that they were under a great disadvantage in this matter as compared with their fellows in England and Ireland, who had the benefit of later and more liberal legislation. Mr Leith approved the principle of the bill, and would vote for the second reading; but maintained that a much more extensive measure was needed, and that, if possible, there ought to be an assimilation of the bankruptcy laws of the United Kingdom. The existing diversity was the cause of great evils and inconvenience. On a memorial being received from the Associated Chambers of Commerce, the late Lord Advocate promised to take up the matter, and it was to be hoped his successor would show the same disposition. With regard to the present bill, it was to be regretted that it did not borrow from the English Act of 1869 the provision which gave to clerks and shopmen a preference to the extent of four months' wages, and in the case of labourers and workmen to the extent of two months', with, of course, a limitation as to the total amount. Sir G. Balfour would vote for the bill on the ground that it hit an undoubted defect in the Scotch Act and did not attempt a general revision of the law. The Lord Advocate would not oppose the second reading of the bill, but he should be glad to put himself in communication with the promoters of it with a view to its improvement in committee. He did not look forward to the assimilation of the Bankruptcy Laws of the three kingdoms. There was no great dissatisfaction in Scotland, though, of course, there would always be some, and when the law of England was under revision the attempt was made to assimilate it as much as possible to that of Scotland, from which it seemed to follow that the faults of the English law began at the points of departure from the Scotch system. (Laughter.)—The bill was read a second time.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

March 13.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE SAMUEL BRANDRAM.—The debtor, who has presented a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition, was a wine merchant, of Pall-mall, Mincing-lane, Aldershott, and Surbiton, and also proprietor of the late Junior St James's Club. His liabilities, taken at a liberal estimate, amount to about £30,000: the value of the assets has not yet been ascertained. Upon the application of Mr Walters on behalf of the debtor and certain creditors, his Honour appointed Mr J. Pierson, public accountant, receiver and manager of the estate, it being important that the goodwill of the business should be preserved.

(Before Mr Registrar MURRAY.)

IN RE J. R. DEAN.—This was an application on behalf of Mr Murray, a creditor, for an order that certain resolutions come to under a petition for liquidation presented by the debtor, who was a bootmaker in Buckingham-street, Strand, should be set aside on the ground of fraud. It appeared that the resolutions provided for the acceptance of a composition of 1s. in the pound, but their validity was impeached upon the ground that the debtor's accountant had bribed a creditor named Marshall by giving him a bill of exchange for a sum equal to 10s. in the pound on his debt in fraud of the other creditors. His Honour, in giving judgment, said it had been laid down by the Lords Justices, in "Ex parte Cobb, re Sedley," in accordance with previous cases, that the power of a majority of creditors to bind the minority must be exercised fairly. While acquitting the debtor of any knowledge in the first instance of the transaction with Marshall, the fact of the bill having been given appeared to have come to his knowledge before registration, and the resolutions being thus tainted with fraud, the Court would declare them to be void. Mr Ryan appeared for the applicant; Mr Button for the debtor.

March 15.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE GEORGE GREAVES.—The debtor, who is a machinist and woollen merchant, of 18, Basinghall-street, and Leeds, has presented a petition for liquidation, estimating his liabilities at about £25,000. Mr Finlay Knight (instructed by Messrs Learoyd and Learoyd), in applying for the appointment of a receiver of the estate, said that the debtor was possessed of a large mill and foundry at Leeds, on which there was valuable stock in trade, machinery, and effects. There was a mortgage on the buildings and fixed machinery held by a Manchester building society as security for a sum of £30,000 advanced; the mortgagees had recently taken possession, and as there was a large amount of stock and effects, which formed the principal portion of the debtor's assets, it was important that a receiver should be appointed to take possession in the interest of the creditors; he therefore asked that Mr Blackburn, public accountant, Park-row, Leeds, should be appointed to the office. The appointment was concurred in by the whole of the creditors. His Honour made the appointment.

March 18.

IN RE JACKSON.—This was an application by a solicitor, who had presented a debtor's petition for liquidation by arrangement, and had afterwards been appointed solicitor to the trustee, for payment of the amount of his taxed costs out of the estate. It transpired during the inquiry that the solicitor had received from the debtor sums of money for payment of ad valorem duty upon filing the special resolution for liquidation. He had furnished his bill to the trustee without giving credit for these receipts. The trustee was willing to pay the amount actually due, after deducting the duty, but he declined to pay more. His Honour held that a solicitor, when he made out his bill, was bound to give credit for every sixpence which he had received. The matter was so clear that he could not imagine there could be any question about it. A solicitor was perfectly justified in requiring payment of the duty, but he was also bound to give credit for the amount. The admitted balance only must be paid by the trustee.

IN RE SAMUEL BRANDRAM.—The debtor, a wine merchant, carrying on business at 12, Pall Mall, and also in Mincing-lane, City, at Aldershott, and elsewhere, recently filed a petition for liquidation; debts, about £30,000. Mr Walters, for the receiver, now applied for an injunction to restrain the holders of wine warrants deposited by the debtor as security for advances from proceeding to a sale, the ground of the application being that loss would probably ensue to the estate by immediate realization. His Honour said that, primâ facie, creditors holding securities were entitled to realize those securities, but it did not at present appear that a sale was contemplated. He must decline to make any order. Notice of the petition might be given to the parties.

HULL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

March 15.

(Before F. A. BEDWELL, Esq., Judge.)

In re Duncan Dawson, currier and leather, Bridge-street, Hull. Mr. Hodgson (Holden, Sons, and Hodgson), appeared for the trustee. Mr. Pickering and Mr. Spink (Walker and Spink), for the bankrupt. On the 19th of December last, his Honour made an order nisi for the prosecution of the debtor, under or within the 1st, 2nd, 4th, and 6th sub-sections of the 11th section of the Debtors' Act, 1869, and the 3rd sub-section of the 13th section of the same Act.—Mr. Spink remarked that under the 16th section of the Act, it was necessary there should be first a representation of some creditor (which had been made), secondly, that his Honour had grounds for believing the debtor had been guilty of an offence, and further that there was reasonable grounds for believing the person charged would be convicted. All the sections under which the bankrupt was to be prosecuted related to the concealment of property. He could not contend, after the judgment of his Honour, and the result of the appeal thereon, that there were not grounds for believing the bankrupt had been guilty of an offence, but he asked his Honour to consider whether there was any ground for believing he would be convicted. There had been several attempts to show that he had been guilty of various things within the criminal law. His Honour would recollect there was an attempt to show by evidence that he had obtained goods by false pretences, but all the charges resolved into this one, that he had concealed property from the trustee. If his Honour thought the case came within the third requirement of the section alluded to, he (Mr. Spink) would reserve his defence, so as not to show what it was.—His Honour observed that he considered there was a prima facie case, and after his judgment, which was fortified by the decision of the Judge of Appeal (Vice-Chancellor Bacon), it was his bounden duty to follow up the judgment by directing the trustee to punish the debtor for what he believed to be an undoubted offence, concealing in the face of the Court itself property belonging to him. It was a question, however, for a jury to consider whether this was a fault for which he was punishable, and the duty was cast by the legislature upon a jury, and he felt no hesitation whatever in saying that however painful the duty might be, it was his duty to direct (following up his previous judgment) that the trustee take the necessary steps for bringing the matter before a criminal court, and he therefore directed a prosecution. He thought it was most judicious on the part of Mr. Spink, under the circumstances, to reserve his defence so as not at present to make known the case he had on his brief. —Mr. Spink said he anticipated his Honour's decision, and was not prepared with any evidence.—His Honour remarked that if Mr. Spink had been prepared he should have pressed upon him to reserve his defence.—The order for a prosecution was then made absolute.

March 17.

In re Castle Kelsey, Corn Merchant.—The case of Mr. Castle Kelsey came on for the public examination.—Dr. Rollit (Rollit and Sons) appeared for the trustee (Mr. Pickering), and for the committee of inspection (Messrs. Joseph Lambert, Maxsted, Bailey, E. Harrison, and others); and Mr. Lowe (Moss, Lowe, and Moss) represented Messrs. Smith Brothers and Co., bankers, and another creditor for a very small amount. At the opening of the case it was stated that Dr. Rollit represented creditors for £55,688, and the trustee and committee of inspection; and Mr. Lowe represented Messrs. Smith Brothers and Co., who were creditors for about £30,000, of which £10,000 was secured, and a small creditor for £53, Mr. Henry Briggs.—Mr. Lowe intimated that he should have to ask, after an investigation, that certain criminal proceedings be taken against the bankrupt.—Dr. Rollit read the report of Mr. Pickering, the trustee. It stated that the bankrupt had carried on a large business in Hull for many years. He had been insolvent since 1868. He was insolvent before that date, but recovered his position. Since that date the balances against him in his private ledger had been as follow:—1868, £7,778 2s 3d; 1869, £18,413 8s 11d: 1870 £24,648 4s 7d; 1871, £26 025 13s 10d; 1872, £34,012 14s 8d; 1873, £47 595 9s 10d; 1874. £55,924 4s 6d. The last had been considerably increased by depreciation in the value of grain held at the date of the stoppage. The bankrupt stopped payment on the 2d September last and a private meeting was subsequently held to consider the course they should pursue with respect to the estate. At that meeting the trustee presented a statement of the bankrupt's affairs, and reported on the accounts. A committee of investigation, on the suggestion of Messrs Smith Brothers and Co., was appointed, consisting of Joseph Lambert, F. B. Grotrian, E. P. Maxstead, C. Roberts, E. Harrison, S. Earle, W. Mason, Leeds; and W. F. West, of which Mr. Joseph Lambert, of the firm of Lambert and Smiths, who were creditors for £14,000, was chairman. Several adjournments of the meeting took place, and ultimately, on the 13th October, a petition for liquidation was filed, under which he (Mr. B. Pickering) was appointed receiver. The first meeting of creditors under the liquidation was held on the 2nd November, and, after repeated adjournments, the creditors were ultimately found to be divided in opinion, One creditor for £30,000, Messrs. Smith Brothers and Co., who were further secured to the extent of £10,000 by the bonds of Messrs. W. Leetham and W. F. West and another for £53, insisted on bankruptcy, and creditors for upwards of £50,000 were in favour of accepting a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound offered by the bankrupt, or a liquidation by arrangement, but the latter, requiring by the Bankruptcy Act three-fourths in value and a majority in number, could not carry a resolution to that effect. The matter, therefore, fell into bankruptcy, Messrs. Bailey and Leetham, who like all the creditors, except the two mentioned, were not hostile to the bankrupt, were the petitioning creditors, and presented their petition through Messrs. Rellit and Sons, who up to that time had acted for the bankrupt. Messrs Rollit and Sons were subsequently, at the first meeting under the bankruptcy, appointed by the creditors solicitors to the estate. Since the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings, his attention had been principally directed to making the most of the estate for the benefit of the creditors, and he had not made any investigation of the bankrupt's affairs with a view to his public examination, or any other proceedings against him, the committee of inspection being of opinion that after the repeated examinations and investigations which had taken place by them, and after the information given by the bankrupt, such a course was unnecessary, and they had passed a resolution, of which the following was a copy:—"Re Castle Kelsey, resolution passed at a meeting of the committee of inspection, held the 15th March, 1875.—Resolved, The trustee having stated that after a careful examination of the bankrupt's books and paper, he is satisfied that there has been a full disclosure by the bankrupt of the state of his affairs, and the bankrupt having been examined by the committee, it is resolved that, in the opinion of this committee, it is unnecessary to examine the bankrupt in public, or to take any further steps against him.—Signed, J. Lambert, E. R. Harrison, E. P. Maxsted, W. Bailey."—The statement of affairs presented at the first meeting for liquidation disclosed liabilities £90,918 4s 7d; assets, £10,005 9s 9d. The contention of Messrs Smith Brothers and Co., so far as he understood it, was that the bankrupt obtained from them bills of lading upon an undertaking to pay into the bank the proceeds of such bills of lading, a course of dealing which he believed had continued for some years. There was no doubt of the fact that the bankrupt sold the goods referred to in the bills of lading obtained from the bankers, and did not pay to them the specific proceeds or any sum sufficient to cover the value of such bills of lading, a course of conduct which could only be excused—if there was any excuse for it—by the course of business between the parties, and by the lax usages of commercial life. Messrs Smith Brothers and Co. claimed to be entitled to receive certain debts returned by the bankrupt as being due to his estate for goods sold by him and unpaid for at the date of his stoppage, on the ground that such debts were for goods included in the bills of lading handed to the bankrupt under the circumstances previously stated. If Messrs Smith Brothers and Co. should be right in this claim it would have the effect of reducing the bankrupt's assets dividable amongst the general body of the creditors, and, therefore, so far their interests were in conflict with the general body of creditors. They also contended that they were entitled to recover from Mr. W. F. West, a creditor for £9,000, a sum of £3,500, being the value of certain goods sold to him a few days before the stoppage, on the ground that such goods were their property, and formed part of one of the bills of lading referred to, and that the transaction was not a bonâ fide sale to Mr. West. This, however, would not, if Messrs Smith were to succeed in their contention, affect the estate, being simply a transfer from one creditor to another. It had also been alleged by the bankers that if they were not entitled to recover from Mr West, the trustee was entitled to recover on the ground that the transaction was in the nature of a fraudulent preference. The committee had not yet come to a determination on this question. The committee of inspection, who were merchants of high standing in Hull, and who had heard the allegations of Messrs Smith Brothers and Co., did not regard the matter as one that ought to be seriously pressed against the bankrupt under the peculiar circumstances of the case. They did not wish the money of the estate to be spent in ventilating a grievance of a single creditor, unless such a course would be likely to benefit the general body of creditors. He had no reason to believe that the bankrupt had not made a full disclosure of his estate, and he had rendered every information and assistance he had required. The probable dividend was 2s in the pound.—(Signed), B. Pickering. The bankrupt ultimately passed his examination.

BANKRUPTCY AMENDMENTS.

The following letters have recently appeared in the Times. "A Solicitor" writes:—

"Will you permit me through the medium of your columns to draw the attention of the committee which is now sitting on the Bankrupt Laws to what appears to be a grave defect in the Bankruptcy Act of 1869? By section 16 (sub-section 5) a 'secured creditor' is defined to mean 'any creditor holding any mortgage, charge, or lien, on the bankrupt's estate or any part thereof, as security for a debt due to him.' The practical effect of this clause is that any creditor claiming upon a bankrupt's estate in respect of any covenant or obligation entered into by the bankrupt as surety for the benefit of a third party, can prove upon the bankrupt's estate so as to entitle himself to vote in the proceedings for the whole of the amount for which the bankrupt may be liable upon such covenant, notwithstanding that the creditor may hold from his principal debtor security for more than three times the amount of his entire debt; and, no matter what the number of sureties may be, his right to prove against the estate of each without valuing the security he holds from the principal debtor would equally apply. The result is that it is a constant occurrence for a creditor in this position to override or neutralize the opinion of the whole of the bona fide creditors of a bankrupt, and practically to take the management of the bankrupt's affairs out of the hands of those who, the Legislature designed, should have the exclusive control and dominion over them —viz., the unsecured creditors. It seems to me that in any supplementary legislation which may be contemplated for the improvement of our Bankrupt Laws it should be enacted 'that no person shall be deemed to be a creditor or entitled to prove or vote in respect of the administration of a bankrupt's affairs unless and until he shall have valued the whole of the securities held by him (from whatever source derived) in respect of the debt or claim for which he seeks to prove or vote as aforesaid."

"Another Solicitor" retorts as follows:—

"Your correspondent 'A Solicitor,' in his communication to you appearing in your City Article of the 10th inst., alludes to a defect in our present Bankruptcy Law, which, upon further consideration, will not appear to exist to the extent suggested. The acceptor of a bill of exchange is primarily liable to meet it, and although the drawer or endorser may, to enable him to discount it, lodge security with the holder, under no circumstances ought the acceptor to be treated as entitled to the benefit of this security. At law he could not claim it, and why should his position be improved when his estate is in course of realization for the benefit of his creditors? The drawer or endorser of a bill being in the case quoted not the holder, is clearly not in a position to prove, and consequently should the holder having security be required to give credit for it, the acceptor would avoid all liability for payment, although as between himself and the drawer the liability was his and his alone. I am not now speaking of what are known as accommodation bills. There are other defects in our Bankruptcy Law of a much more glaring description, and which it is hoped will be dealt with by the committee now sitting. Among these I would shortly refer to the distinction preserved by the Act of 1869 and the Consolidated Orders between 'Trader' and 'Non-Trader,' a distinction the necessity for which if it ever existed no longer remains. Another evil is the system of proxies, which has given rise to a class of persons styling themselves accountants, whose procedure can only be appreciated by those who are thrown in contact with them. Except in cases of a corporation or of a creditor residing or carrying on business beyond a given radius from the place of meeting, proxies might well be abolished or limited to persons in the actual employment of the creditor. Another point in which the Act manifestly requires modification is this. The creditors of a liquidating debtor may at the statutory meeting agree that his estate shall be liquidated by arrangement and not in bankruptcy, or they may accept a composition or come to no resolution at all. In the event of their accepting a composition this requires confirmation at a subsequent meeting, to be held at an interval of not less than seven or not more than 14 days. It would seem reasonable that the practice should on this point be assimilated, and one meeting suffice for all purposes. Again, if the creditors separate without coming to any resolution, it becomes necessary, in order to vest a debtor's estate in his creditors, that a petition in bankruptcy be presented, this involving considerable expense and further delay. All this might be obviated by creditors being allowed at the first meeting, under a petition for liquidation, to determine in what way the estate shall be administered. If the creditors should decide on bankruptcy, power should be given to the Court, upon being satisfied that all the requirements of the Act have been complied with and the resolution properly passed, to forthwith adjudicate the debtor bankrupt, and give all necessary directions."

"A Solicitor's" reply to the second letter appeared in yesterday's Times, with a comment by the editor of the Money Article, which we also append:—

"We subjoin a further letter on defects in the present Bankruptcy Laws, a subject which, judging by the numbers of letters that reach us, appears to be exciting much discussion just now. Another correspondent raises again the question of costs, and makes the sweeping statement that 'should an estate unfortunately get into the Bankruptcy Court, every mercantile man knows that means nothing, or next to nothing, for the creditors, even if an estate shows 20s. in the pound, and would probably realise 15s. if liquidated by the creditors with the assistance of the debtor.' We are loth to believe that things are come to so bad a pass as that, but there is no doubt that the whole question of bankruptcy costs needs looking into. They are very onerous as mere law charges, and official liquidators' fees are also so devoid of any regulation or control that public companies as well as private firms which come into their power find solid assets melt away with singular rapidity. It is for the benefit of the estate, of creditors, of debtors, and of all but those who officially do the work that insolvent estates should be wound up at little cost, and our Bankruptcy Laws can never be esteemed sound so long as they permit a state of things at all approaching to that depicted in the extract we have quoted:—

"March 16.

"Sir,—Your correspondent, 'Another Solicitor,' seems quite to have misapprehended the gist of my letter which you kindly permitted to appear in your City Article of the 10th.

"'Another Solicitor' observes that 'the acceptor of a bill of exchange is primarily liable to meet it, and although the drawer or endorser may, to enable him to discount it, lodge security with the holder, under no circumstances ought the acceptor to be treated as entitled to the benefit of the security. At law he could not claim it, and why should his position be improved when his estate is in course of realisation for the benefit of his creditors? In this I entirely acquiesce, but supposing the acceptor had himself lodged the security (which, except in the case of an accommodation bill pure and simple, is what would happen in nine cases out of ten), is it consistent with either justice or common sense that the holder should be entitled to prove against the estate of the drawer and all the endorsers, who in this case are merely the acceptor's sureties, without first giving credit for the value of the security deposited by the principal debtor?

"My complaint against the present system is that it permits a creditor to prove against the sureties, in exoneration in certain cases of the principal debtor, and that by this means much practical hardship and injustice are occasioned.

"Let me quote a case of actual occurrence. A borrows from B £20,000 on the security of a freehold estate. Before, however, advancing the money, B requires that A's friends, C and D, should join in the covenant to pay as A's sureties, which they agree to do. Ultimately all three, borrower and sureties, go into liquidation, leaving B's debt undischarged. Under these circumstances, if B seeks to prove against the estate of A, the principal debtor, he will be called upon to value his security, and will be admitted to prove for the difference only, if any. But as against the estates of C and D, the sureties, he proves for the whole amount of the debt and ignores the security altogether. Is this right or reasonable?

"In the strictures of your correspondent upon the other defects in the existing law to which he points attention I entirely concur. The question, however, is of too much importance and much too wide in its bearings to admit of its adequate consideration within the limits of any space which I dare now ask you to accord to me."

FAILURES.

FAILURE OF J. C. IM THURN AND CO.—The suspension was announced on Saturday of Messrs J. C. im Thurn and Co., merchants, of 1, East India-avenue, Leadenhall-street, with gross liabilities of over three millions sterling, of which two millions are the firm's acceptances, the remainder being open claims and indorsements on bills receivable. The losses have arisen largely from bad debts and money being locked up, but it is confidently believed that the liquidation will be favourable, although it is very difficult to form any reliable estimate. The house was established in 1844, and through the personal energy and perseverance of its founder attained the highest character as regards respectability and means. In 1872 Mr John Conrad im Thurn, jun., was admitted into partnership, and Mr G. W. Speth retired. The books have been placed in the hands of Messr[illegible] quand, Young, and Co. The Times, referring to the failure[illegible]

"The heavy mercantile failure which it was our painful [illegible] record yesterday furnishes another memorable instance[illegible] a parallel for which we have to go some 10 years back, o[illegible] lapse arising mainly from the radically vicious system of [illegible]ing blank credits. It appears that no longer ago th[illegible] months the late firm of J. C. im Thurn and Co. poss[illegible] capital of about £700,000, having its name under acc[illegible] for the enormous sum of about five millions sterling. [illegible] believe that large credits were granted to persons in a[illegible]ters of the world, Australia alone excepted. Apart from this credit business the firm was largely interested in several speculative enterprises in which it is understood about one-third of the capital has been lost. On the first signs of the credit of the house being in the slightest degree impaired by the extent of its liabilities getting wind, resolute efforts were at once made to reduce them; but such is the perfection of the machinery of freemasonry among bankers, aided as they are in these times by the telegraph, that all was of no avail. Three millions of direct liabilities were disposed of in a short time, and yet a house of thirty years' standing, with an acknowledged reputation in the mercantile world, found it impossible to stem an opposition which had gathered in such unprecedented force against the name in the discount market that apparently the greater the exertions the more hopeless did the task become of meeting the liabilities as they fell due. An impression prevails that the losses will fall more heavily abroad than here, and it appears that the difficulties to be encountered latterly were due in no small degree to distrust having spread on the Continent to such an extent that bills which should have been remitted some days before the maturity of the acceptances they were intended to cover were purposely not forwarded, thus leaving the firm to meet its own acceptance—a precaution taken by the remitters for obvious reasons. Such a circumstance, however, shows the danger of these open credits, and may well act as a warning to others, of whom it is to be feared there are many, with similar engagements resting merely upon the good faith of foreigners, of whose distant operations too little is known until the truth comes to light, as is often the case, that the assistance was applied for because it could not be obtained on the spot, and then helped but to prop up for a short time a position already unsound. It is thought that the gross liabilities may amount to four millions, of which, however, not more than three-fourths will rank against the estate. The very extensive business transactions of the firm in every part of the world will render it an arduous task to complete the balance-sheet.

Siordet and Co.—The magnitude of the liabilities disclosed by the failure of J. C. im Thurn and Co. prepared the public for further revelations of the same nature, as it is obviously impossible that a house having such extensive connections could suspend its payments without causing embarrassment to others. Accordingly, on Wednesday the stoppage was announced of Messrs. Siordet and Co., of 59, Mark-lane, with liabilities estimated at from £250,000 to £300,000. The house has been in existence between 80 and 90 years, and has undergone various changes, the title of the firm originally having been James L. Siordet and Co., which was altered in 1839 to Siordet, Meyer, and Co. In 1868, Mr. Meyer retired, leaving as partners Messrs John James, Alfred James, and John Louis. In 1870, Alfred James retired and Mr William Hume Trapmann was admitted as a partner. It is understood that the firm became connected with im Thurn by marriage, which resulted in large transactions between them. As in the case of J. C. im Thurn and Co., the books were placed in the hands of Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co.

England.—Messrs D. and W. Lockwood, trading as ironfounders under the title of Foster, Lockwood, and Co., and Wm. Lockwood, carrying on business as a steel and railway spring manufacturer, in copartnership with John Smith, under the designation of Lockwood & Smith, have filed a petition in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court. Liabilities about £6,000.—Mr Thomas Hunter, tailor and outfitter, Bradford, has filed a petition for liquidation. The liabilities were stated in the petition at about £4,000.

America.—American advices report the failure of Mr James O. Woodruff, real estate operator, Indianapolis, Indiana, with liabilities of about £140,000. Several minor failures are also reported.

Alfred Bowes, a metal and general merchant, carrying on business in Bermondsey, has failed for about £35,000, with assets between £8,000 and £9,000. The liabilities will be considerably decreased by bills running off and securities. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Browne, Stanley and Co., public accountants, 25, Old Jewry, E.C. On the application of Mr. Barrand Mr. Read, of Abchurch-lane, has been appointed receiver and manager of the estate. Messrs. Lumley and Lumley, of 15, Old Jewry Chambers, are the solicitors to the proceedings.

Advices from Naples, published by the Economiste Francais, state that a commercial panic prevails in that city. A large firm of colonial produce merchants has suspended payment, with liabilities amounting to upwards of £80,000. Other failures have also occurred. These disasters are attributed to a large accumulation of merchandise at Civita Vecchia, which, until the beginning of the present year, has been a free port. Since then the ordinary import duties have been enforced. It has been expected, however, that some indulgence would have been granted, as was the case at Ancona and Venice, and large importations of goods had been made by speculators in the hope of realising a handsome profit by passing their merchandise through the Custom House at reduced rates.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

S. Booth (Hull).—At a meeting of the creditors of Samuel Booth, wholesale grocer, &c., Hull, the liabilities were stated to be £10,600; assets, £8,500. The estate was sold for 15s. in the pound.

Thos. Crook (Bolton).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Thomas Crook, of the Union Foundry, Bolton, engineer and ironfounder, trading under the style of Rothwell and Co., the statement of affairs submitted showed the liabilities to be £67,521 6s. 10d.; and assets, £15,874 19s. 1d. Liquidation was resolved upon.

W. Illingworth (Bradford).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Henry W. Illingworth, cloth manufacturer, of Idle, was held on Saturday at Bradford. A statement of the affairs of the debtor showed that the liabilities were £5,014, and the assets, £2,997. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement.

George Ferrer Green (Kidderminster).—A meeting of the creditors of George Ferrer Green, timber dealer and sand merchant, at Kidderminster, was held on Monday at the Lion Hotel, Kidderminster, Mr George King Patten, of 47, Ann-street, Birmingham, accountant, who represented several creditors, took the chair. The statement of accounts showed—liabilities, £2,572 12s. 9d. (exclusive of secured creditors for £3,300, and partly secured for £808 5s. 6d.), with estimated assets, amounting to £527. After considerable discussion, and the examination of the debtor, a resolution was carried to sell the estate to Mr J. T. Lawrence, of Kidderminster, timber merchant (who was included in the list of creditors for a large amount), and to pay the creditors a guaranteed dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound on the 1st of May next.

Henry Cowl (Great Yarmouth).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr Henry Cowl, of Great Yarmouth, notary public and smackowner, was held at the offices of the Registrar of the Court, Great Yarmouth, on Tuesday last, when Mr Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay-chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, was appointed trustee, with a Committee of Inspection. Mr C. H. Wiltshire is solicitor in the proceedings.

J. Holroyd (Leeds).—At an adjourned meeting of the creditors of Messrs James Holroyd and Co., merchants, of Leeds and Barnard Castle, it was mentioned that the debtors owed £56,433, in addition to liabilities on bills discounted amounting to £36,174, of which nearly £9,000 is expected to rank, while the assets represent £16,835. It was proposed to pay a dividend of 6s. 6d. in the pound, but this was refused by the banks interested.

W. Riley (Southwark).—At a meeting held at the offices of Messrs Gamble and Harvey, the creditors of the above-named debtor agreed to a resolution providing for the sale of the debtor's estate for £1,150, payable by four instalments, at periods extending over about a year.

Solicitors and Accountants.—The following is extracted from a letter addressed to Mr Charles Ford, as Hon. Secretary of the Legal Practitioners' Society:—"I beg to suggest that as Government takes about £100,000 from solicitors yearly for certificate duty, we should be protected from invasion of our rights, as our profession has required years of study and great expense to fit ourselves for it; and, moreover, the Government ought to benefit the public by making the accountants a profession qualified in some manner, as in the case of auctioneers, appraisers, &c., so that the public may have a guarantee for their respectability, for I assure you, around this neighbourhood, we look on them in quite another light."

"ACCOUNTANTS" AND LEGAL WORK.—The Law Times says:—"A solicitor furnishes us with the following portion of a circular, issued by an accountant at Hereford. He "Conducts among other things (1) Negotiations for the sale and conveyance of freehold, copyhold, leasehold, and other property, and for mortgages, assignments, transfers, leases, and loans. (2) The drawing of abstracts of title." In our opinion the preparation of abstracts of title lays an an unauthorized person so acting open to a penalty of £50 under the Stamp Act. We have received similar circulars which it will now serve no useful purpose to publish." [We can only add that all respectable members of the profession will support the Law Times in exposing so-called "Accountants" who profess to do legal work.—ED. Accountant.]

UNQUALIFIED LEGAL PRACTITIONERS.—The Law Times says:—"From three different sources we have received a report of a case which came before the Exeter County Court last week, which illustrates in a marked degree the necessity for further legislation to protect the Profession against depredations by unqualified and unauthorized persons, and, moreover, it points to the desirability of a ready assistance being lent, to the accomplishment of this object, by members of the other branch of the Profession; for, as our readers will see from the report, in more than one instance conveyancing business (otherwise likely to have found its way into a conveyancer's chamber) was transacted by the bailiff, whose appearance before the court as a bankrupt, for the purpose of passing his public examination, led to the startling disclosures to which we direct particular attention. This bankrupt, then, is a County Court bailiff, who has at the same time carried on the business of an accountant. Being asked if he did a considerable business in conveyancing, he is advised by his solicitor, Mr Floud, not to answer; but, happily or unhappily, the facts are got out by the solicitor of the trustee. He admits having "prepared the papers" for the sale of a house and other conveyances and leases, for all of which he charged and was paid; and in the case of one lease he was paid by both lessor and lessee. On being asked if he prepared a conveyance of real property to Sir Wm. Peek, the learned judge suggested that he should be asked if he had not done "a lot of this kind of work." Here is a County Court bailiff, of all other unauthorised persons, systematically breaking the law to his own pecuniary advantage, and thereby depriving professional men of emoluments which must otherwise have come to them. The mystery is that respectable people should, for the sake of saving some small sum in the shape of professional charges, commit their conveyancing business to such persons. But we look to the action of the judge of the Axminster County Court in this matter only to find that he retains this bailiff in his situation, and to that of the judge of the Exeter Court, only to find him commiserating the bankrupt on the smallness of his salary, and not only not ordering a prosecution, as we venture to think he might have done, but not so much as entering that strong and emphatic protest against the unlawful proceedings of the bankrupt officer of County Courts, which we feel sure would have had a salutary effect on a certain class of persons in the district quite apart from any prosecution which the Profession in the district may resort to, and should resort to, however disagreeable such a proceeding may be. The bankrupt's excuse amounts to this, that he thought anyone might prepare any legal document and charge for it. Such excuses can no more be tolerated than would a similar one be, if made by such a person appearing to conduct a case in a County Court, or say in the courts at Westminster, if that were possible. That he has violated the law is certain; that it is necessary to the due protection of the profession, in the interests of the public, that he should be prosecuted is, in our opinion, undoubted, the more so as the whole of the facts, constituting as they do a glaring case, have been made as public as they well can be. One solicitor in writing to us on it, expresses the hope that "some one in authority will take it up." Our answer is, "Don't expect or hope anything of the kind." Action must be taken by those in the locality, or the matter will go unnoticed."

REGISTRATION OF FOREIGN LOANS AND COMPANIES.—A Bill, bearing the names of Mr. H. B. Sheridan, Mr. C. Lewis, and Mr. M'Lagan, has been printed, which proposes to provide "for the compulsory registration of foreign loans and the statutes of foreign companies." The Bill is headed "Foreign Loans Registration (No. 2)." It enacts that all proposals of foreign States to borrow money in England, certified copies of all contracts, agreements, &c., relating to such loans, and statutes of foreign companies or associations who seek to raise capital in England, should be registered by the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, and that the register should be open to inspection.

THE ALBERT COMPANY ARBITRATION.—The formal closing of the arbitration may now be expected soon. So far as home matters were concerned the arbitration was completed some twelve months ago, and the principal part of the expenses were then stopped. The final award might then have been made but for the circumstance that there had been a large insurance business in India. This branch had been conducted by the company through local directors, with separate accounts at Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay. It therefore became necessary to give the Indian policy-holders an opportunity of proving their claims and receiving their dividends where they had been in the habit of paying their premiums. This was also considered the safest and the quickest course. The liquidators have been represented in India under a power of attorney given by them. All claims have now been paid, the accounts closed, and the books and vouchers sent to England, and the liquidators will therefore soon be in a position to submit the accounts to the Lord Chancellor as the basis of the final award.

WINDING-UP.—In the Rolls Court, on Saturday the usual winding-up order was made in the case of the Aldershott Brick and Tile Works Company. ing of the North Shields Steam Shipping Company it was resolved to wind up the undertaking voluntarily.—A petition for the winding-up of the East Llangnog Lead Mining Company (Limited) is to be heard before the Master of the Rolls.—A petition has been presented to the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries for the winding-up of the Crenver and Wheal Abraham United Mines Company (Limited).—Vice-Chancellor Bacon has ordered the Caerphilly Colliery Company (Limited) to be wound up compulsorily, and has appointed Mr Edward Hart (Hart Brothers, Tibbotts, and Co.) official liquidator.—Vice-Chancellor Malins has sanctioned the payment of a further dividend of 1s in the pound to the creditors of the Joint-National Agency (Limited), which will be paid at the officesof Mr J. W. Sully, the liquidator. —An order has been made for the voluntary winding up under supervision of the New Merrybent Company.

The Liverpool Daily Courier says:—"In commercial circles there is a pretty general belief that the investigation now in progress before Sir Henry James's Committee on Foreign Loans will result in highly important revelations, likely to prove beneficial to many unfortunate investors. It is expected that in consequence of these disclosures, the agents responsible for introducing certain of the loans to the British market will be compelled to surrender a very considerable proportion of their clients' illgotten gains. According to the latest report current on 'Change, claims have been preferred to the extent of nearly £3,000,000 by a number of disappointed subscribers, and the bulk of the loss will fall upon one or two of the principal financial houses of the city."

A SPECULATIVE CASHIER.—Mr Edward T. Barry, cashier to Messrs Duncan, Ewing, and Co., timber merchants, Liverpool, absconded some days ago in consequence of large defalcations in his accounts. A warrant has been issued for his apprehension, and investigations are being made into the state of his books. The firm believe that the defalcations amount to £20,000, and the accounts show that Barry, though only a servant, succeeded with the co-operation of share brokers, in carrying on speculations on the Liverpool Stock Exchange to the extent of £1,000,000 sterling since 1872. One transaction extending over about 10 days involved the sum of £25,000. The firm naturally felt indignant that stock brokers should have dealt so largely with one who was not a principal in business, and they are making the strictest inquiries into the relations which subsisted between the cashier and certain stock brokers. Barry was an officer in a corps of Volunteers.

THE DURATION OF LIFE.—In ancient Rome, during the period between the years 200 and 300 A.D. the average duration of life among the upper classes was 30 years. In the present century, among the same classes of people it amounts to 50 years. In the 16th century the mean duration of life in Geneva was 21·21 years, between 1814 and 1833 it was 40·63 years, and at the present time as many people live to 70 years of age as 300 years ago lived to the age of 43. In the year 1693 the British Government borrowed money, the amounts borrowed to be paid in annuities, on the basis of the mean duration of life at that time. The State Treasury made thereby a good bargain, and all parties to the transaction were satisfied. Ninety-seven years later, Pitt established another tontine or annuity company, based on the presumption that the mortality would remain the same as 100 years before. But in this instance it transpired that the Government had made a bad bargain, since, while in the first tontine 10,000 persons of each sex died under the age of 28, 100 years later only 5,772 males and 6,416 females died under this age. From these facts it appears that life under certain favourable influences has gained in many and probably in all its forms and manifestations, both in vigour and duration. To still further promote this tendency, it is only necessary that those conditions under which the attainment of the desired end is possible be made to accord with the fundamental natural laws.—Deutsche Versicherungs-Zeitung.

PUBLIC INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—A Parliamentary paper was issued on Thursday, containing an account of the gross public income and expenditure in the year ending the 30th September, 1874, and for the year ended the 31st of December, 1874. The total income for the year 1874 was £76,505,790 6s., and the total expenditure £75,178,323 2s 3d; being an excess of income over expenditure of £1,327,467 3s 9d. The balances at the Banks of England and Ireland on the 1st of January, 1874, amounted to £3,983,633 15s 10d. The money raised during the year by the creation of terminable annuities was £1,100,000, and repayments of advances added to the excess of revenue of expenditure over revenue brought up the balances to £8,405,023 7s 11d. On the other side of the account of the balances, it appears that £1,486,144 8s 7d. was applied to the reduction of the National; £463,043 0s 7d was applied in repayment of Bank advances for deficiency; £222,600 of Exchequer bills were paid off in money; advances for purchase of bullion and for local works, &c., amounted to £3,399,260 11s 8d; advances for Greenwich Hospital £135,157 3s 11d; and the balances at the Banks of England and Ireland on the 31st of December, 1874, amounted to £3,624,904 4s. 4d.

A DOGGY BANKRUPT.—At the examination of John Shackleton, of Halifax, who, it seems, combined the business of wool stapler with that of dog dealer, Mr Jubb, the bankrupt's attorney, said he understood there was a dispute between the trustee and the bankrupt as to whether some dogs belonging to the debtor were in the possession of somebody else. Mr Smith: There is one valuable dog that he parted with a few days before the bankruptcy. Mr Jubb: The trustee will easily find that out by bringing before the Court the person who has the dog. The bankrupt says the statement he has made is true, and that he was agent for these dogs, which he kept for a man named Wilson, of Huddersfield. In answer to Mr Smith, the bankrupt denied having in his possession eight days before the bankruptcy a bitch called "Belinda," and eight pups. He handed the bitch over to Wilson in October. The cur dog "Sampson" he parted with two years ago. Mr Smith: How is it then that you have shown the dogs for prizes in your own name? Bankrupt: It is a custom among the "fancy" to borrow dogs from anybody for that purpose. The examination was adjourned.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £130, vide "Times," 12th Sept., 1873) This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being, annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly do., 13s. (post free.) Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62, Gracechurch-street, E.C. to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday

N.B.—Subscriptions and advertisements will now be received at the Branch-office of the ACCOUNTANT, 127, Strand. Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62, Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

MARCH 27, 1875.

A NAUGHTY SOLICITOR.

A legal contemporary—the results of whose lynx-eyed search for non-professional persons doing professional work, or professional persons doing work in an unprofessional way, we have had occasion to note with commendation in these columns—has just got scent of a very flagrant offender, and pillories him accordingly with merciless rigour. The Law Times has been so particularly "down upon" so called "accountants" who profess to do legal work, that we cannot refrain from acknowledging its sincerity as a reformer, as manifested by the way in which one, within the legal fold, is subjected to merited castigation for his wrong doings. To be brief, our contemporary has discovered the following advertisement in a country paper:—

"TRADE ANNOUNCEMENTS.—Money to be Lent.—Sums from £5 to £100 advanced, on note of hand, to clergymen, farmers, tradesmen, and to any respectable person, for any time, from a week to two years, repayable by instalments if desired. The strictest secresy observed. Interest moderate. Acceptances. Trade bills discounted. Proper accommodation bills discounted. Inviolable confidence ensured. Discount very moderate. Every facility afforded for the renewal of bills. Deeds and writings. Sums small or large advanced on deposit of deeds and writings, at a low rate of interest. No surety or bondsman required. No mortgage or law expenses. May be repaid by instalments if required. Advances on furniture, stock-in-trade, farming stock, and crops without removal. Loans on plate, watches, books, jewellery, &c., negotiated for persons of respectability. Small sums from £2 to £25 lent to respectable working men, repayable either in one sum, or by weekly or monthly instalments. Cash advances on life policies, shares, and legacies. General advantages of this office: Advances are made without delay. The interest is extremely moderate. No inquiry fees or other preliminary expenses. No law charges. The strictest confidence and inviolable good faith are ensured. Every facility is given for renewing bills or loans, where the security continues satisfactory. There are no expenses when the loan is paid off. Additional information and explanation free on application, either personally or by letter.—Mr ——, Financial Offices, —, High-street, ——."

One almost gasps for breath upon learning the universality and variety of the accommodation offered. Here we have a loan office in which "inviolable confidence" is absolutely "ensured," and money lent upon next to no security at all, "no surety or bondsman" being required; a haven where one may get "proper accommodation bills discounted," with every facility afforded for their renewal. Here, O ye flyers of kites, is accommodation galore, if ye can but impart to your "paper" the charm of being "proper." And our advertiser is as condescending as benevolent. If bills are too high game, he is quite ready to elevate pawnbroking to the dignity of a profession by "negotiating" (mark the delicacy of the phrase) loans on watches, jewellery, &c.; old clothes being presumably beyond the pale, for the very sufficient reason that the line must be drawn somewhere, and vests, shirts, and old boots are "popped" in contradistinction to jewellery, which is "negotiated." After the recital of these facilities for discounting, negotiating, or borrowing, according to the relative degrees of refinement in the applicant, we, of course, expected to find that the beneficent donor was "an accountant;" but no, the righteous ire of the Law Times is not this time aroused by a "layman." "We are astonished to find," writes our contemporary, "that Mr ——— is a practising solicitor." Nay, more, it would seem, by the phrase "financial offices," that he has not only been sojourning in the tents of those Philistines the "accountants," but that he glories in it. No doubt, as our contemporary candidly adds:—"The statement, 'No law charges,' together with the general tenor of the advertisement, led us to the conclusion that this was one of those baits held out by the many unqualified and unauthorised persons who trade upon professional usage. In the midst of our distress at this (to us) painful exhibition, there is consolation to be found in the fact that the word 'solicitor' is not appended to the advertiser's name, who, it may be, is therefore looked upon by many as an ordinary money lender or financial agent, who has no sympathy with professional men and their 'law charges.' We may be permitted to add to this pathetic admission (with an apology for dragging the Scripture into such company), that the Law Times has been so very much occupied of late in looking for "motes" in the form of "unauthorized persons," that the discovery of such a transcendant "beam" as one of the faithful indulging in "unauthorized practices," must have been painful indeed.

A case of Ex parte Marston re Hill, reported in our number for January 30th, and as to the correctness of the decision in which we expressed some slight doubts, has come before the Lords Justices, and the judgment has now been reversed. It might be as well to make any such transactions absolutely void unless they are duly registered. It appeared that Hill's name was painted on the cabs, and that he used them in his business as if he was their owner. Under these circumstances creditors might easily be misled, and consider that these cabs were actually the property of the bankrupt. It is also very well to pay due respect to the customs of trade where business men are concerned, who may fairly be supposed to be aware of those customs, but this doctrine may be carried too far. With reference to the case of reputed ownership, we may refer to Ex parte Lovering re Jones, 432 p. 116, where the debtor sold his furniture, and then hired it back from the purchaser. On his filing a liquidation petition it was held that the furniture passed to his trustee. In our opinion a strict system of registration should be adopted. This would prevent a great many frauds, and check debtors from obtaining credit under a misconception.

We are decidedly of opinion that the name of Mr. Bolland deserves immortalizing as one of the very sharpest of sharp trustees, if we may judge from the case of J. L. Palethorpe's bankruptcy, which we report elsewhere. Mr. Palethorpe was not so successful as might have been wished in the business of a cotton broker, and his assets formed a very singular contrast to the amount of his liabilities. Among the few creditors who proved, was one who held security in the shape of a policy of assurance, which he valued at £200, leaving a very large margin still due to him. By the 100th rule any secured creditor so proving must pay over to the trustee any amount beyond the estimated value produced by the realization of his security, and the trustee may, at any time before the realization, require the creditor to hand over the security to him in payment of such assessed value. The death of Mr. Palethorpe made the policy valued at £200 worth £1,200, and thereupon Mr. Bolland immediately made a claim for the balance of £1,000, to which, under the rule, he was entitled; and as creditors for £4,000 only had come in and proved their debts, they will obtain a dividend of five shillings in the pound. We hardly know which is the more fortunate, the little knot of creditors who had chosen Mr. Bolland as their representative, or the fortunate possessor of such acumen. We may add for the information of lay readers, that the trustee in question is a well-known Liverpool accountant.

The case ex parte Lawrence on the authority of which Mr. Registrar Roche refused to allow the public examination of Messrs. Lemon, Hart, and Son, was decided very soon after the coming into operation of the act, and may be considered as the leading case which defines the duties of trustees as regards the examination of debtors. In his judgment, the Chief Judge laid down in the strongest terms the imperative duty of the trustee to make the strictest examination into the bankrupt's affairs, so that when the final examination was held he might be enabled to state positively whether or not his doubts and scruples had been satisfied. It was his duty to summon the bankrupt before him over and over again, if necessary, and to point out the information he required to complete the accounts. If after this anything remained to be explained, it would be the subject of a special order by the Court. The whole judgment is intended directly to discourage trustees from seeking the aid of the Court, except in an extreme case of emergency, and may be profitably studied in vol. 22 of the Law Times Report, p. 246, by all who are likely to be called upon to act as trustees.

Correspondence.

"SOLICITORS AND ACCOUNTANTS."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Dear Sir,—By your last issue it appears that Mr. Charles Ford, as Honorary Secretary of the "Legal Practitioner's Society," has received a letter containing the following extract:—"I beg to suggest that as Government takes about £100,000 from solicitors yearly, for certified duty, we should be protected from invasion of our rights, as our profession has required years of study and great expense to fit ourselves for it; and moreover, the Government ought to benefit the public by making the accountants a profession qualified in some manner, as in the case of Auctioneers Appraisers, &c., so that the public may have a guarantee for their respectability, for I assure you around this neighbourhood we look on them in quite a different light." Now, Sir, I, as a public accountant of some years' standing, heartily approve of the principle of accountantship being recognized as a profession. No profession requires more general experience and careful study than ours, and it would probably be found that the business education of the majority of those accountants who have made some mark in their calling has cost quite as much time and money as is necessary to qualify for the sister profession of the law. It must be borne in mind that accountantship proper has arisen from the requirements of modern trade, so that we have the advantage of not being trammelled by old-fashioned and obsolete customs. Speaking for myself (and I am sure that all respectable members of our profession will bear me out), I can say that I have never met with the slightest hostility or jealousy on the part of respectable solicitors. It is true that a certain hostility does exist against us as a profession, but I assert emphatically that it is due to the animus of men of small reptutaion. Accountantship proper is as distinct from law as architecture is from engineering. It is most desirable both for the interest of the public and for the interest of two sister professions (which should never, if properly carried out, encroach upon each other), that respectable accountants should be legally recognized, and I am sure that none of those worthy of the name of accountants would object to a Government fee similar to that paid by solicitors. Let Government appoint a Commission for the purpose of settling the principles upon which we should be remunerated, and the fee we should pay, and grant us a charter enabling us to control the acts of our members, excluding or expelling therefrom all who tend to bring us into disrepute, and nobody will welcome the change more heartily than accountants. True it is that "black sheep may be found in every fold." The legal profession would not like to have their reputation for integrity and efficiency as a body estimated by the conduct of their most disreputable members. The majority of legal practitioners stand undoubtedly high in their reputation for respectability and efficiency, but it cannot be denied that both fools and knaves in a small proportion defile their ranks. Would it be fair to value solicitors at the worth of their most disreputable colleague; in fact, to regard the whole profession as a chain, the strength of which is only equal to the tenacity of its weakest link? That principle unfortunately appears to be adopted by some of our opponents as the test of merit for the whole body of our profession. I do not mind how stringent the law may be made, if once a recognized status and a proper principle of remuneration is accorded to us. There are plenty of men among our ranks who will succeed in making an honest living out of an honourable vocation, and who only ask for a fair field and no favour.—

Yours truly, Public Accountant.

AUDITING.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—Referring to the able articles on "auditing" which have appeared in your columns from the pen of "X," I would venture to ask the favour of a continuance of the subject. The elevation of our profession is a matter which is of special consequence to all who are thoroughly earnest and desirous of being recognized, legally, as well as commercially, and it is on the ground that there appear so few accountants ready and willing to publish their views on the different branches of their profession, that I beg your correspondent to extend his contributions. For although in giving vent to an opinion there is no doubt that a certain amount of responsibility is incurred, I do not think there is much harm involved either in opening discussion or engendering even dispute, when in the end a beneficial result is obtained. "Auditing" is merely a branch of accountancy, and there is ample field for competent and experienced men to give us, their brother accountants, such assistance and advice through your columns as their pens are able, and their discretions directs. There are so few books of reference on the subject of accounts, and those which do exist are so obsolete and useless in consequence of their age, that it is most desirable to obtain by the means I suggest, and for which you will undoubtedly receive the thanks of your supporters—some further information of a reliable nature concerning the duties and obligations of accountants. In asking for this, I do not infer that the body to which I am proud to belong is either negligent or ignorant of its responsiblities, but there is no doubt that in complying with my suggestion you will not only be acting in accordance with the wishes of many of the profession, but will at the same time be instructing and directing the inexperienced. A trustworthy definition of the limits of the practice of the legitimate accountant would be of infinite benefit to the profession and the public. I hope, therefore, Mr. Editor, you will not deem it inexpedient to consider the request contained in this letter.—Yours truly,

ACCOUNTANT.

COURT OF CHANCERY, LINCOLN'S-INN, MARCH 24.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EX PARTE PRESS—IN RE HILL.—This was an appeal from a decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, and it raised a question of some interest to traders and their creditors with regard to the operation of what is known as the "reputed-ownership" clauses of the Bankruptcy Act. By this clause (section 15, subsection 5, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869) it is provided that the property of a bankrupt divisible among his creditors shall include "all goods and chattels being at the commencement of the bankruptcy in the possession, order, or disposition of the bankrupt, being a trader, by the consent or permission of the true owner, of which goods and chattels the bankrupt is reputed owner, or of which he has taken upon himself the sale or disposition as owner." Mr James Hill was a cab proprietor at Nottingham. On the 20th of June, 1874, he entered into a written agreement with Mr John Marston, who is a carriage builder at Birmingham, for the hire of two cabs, Nos. 1,406 and 1,407, the property of Marston, for 18 months, at the rent of £5 4s. per month. The hirer was to pay a deposit of £62 10s. on taking possession of the cabs, to be held by Marston as security for the fulfilment of the agreement, and in case of failure by Hill to fulfil his part, this sum was to be forfeited to Marston as liquidated damages. Then there was this clause:—"If the hirer should be desirous to purchase the said cabs he shall be at liberty to do so within the first 12 months from the date hereof, at the sum of £130, by giving one month's notice of his intention to do so, and all money paid for deposit or hire to go towards the purchase." Should the hirer allow the hire to fall into arrear for one month after it became due, or should become bankrupt, insolvent, or make any deed of composition or assignment, it was to be in the power of Marston to take possession of the cabs and terminate the agreement, and the advance in hand became forfeited. This species of arrangement is called the "deferred-payment system." Under this agreement the two cabs were delivered to Hill, and used by him in his trade, and his name was painted upon them. He failed to pay any part of the hire, and in October last he filed a liquidation petition, under which Mr J. Press was appointed trustee of his estate. Marston claimed to have the cabs given up to him, on the ground that it is a well-known custom in the trade that cabs should be let out for hire in this way, and that this was sufficient to exclude the application of the doctrine of reputed ownership. The trustee denied the existence of the custom. To prove the existence there were affidavits made by six persons engaged in the carriage building trade—four in Birmingham, one in Sheffield and one in Nottingham. On the other hand, the trustee, five cab proprietors, a coach builder, and two corn dealers in Nottingham deposed that they had never heard of the alleged custom. The two corn dealers were creditors of Hill. Two of those witnesses, however, said that they had heard that Marston had been endeavouring to introduce the deferred-payment system into Nottingham. In reply to this, there was evidence that Marston had during the last few years supplied 19 cab proprietors in Nottingham with cabs on the "deferred payment system," and that another carriage builder in Birmingham had let out cabs in the same way to two cab proprietors in Nottingham. The Judge of the Nottingham County Court decided in favour of the trustee, but on appeal to the Chief Judge this decision was reversed, and it was declared that Mr Marston was entitled to the two cabs, on the ground that the existence of the custom was proved. The trustee appealed. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr Bagley were for the trustee; Mr Finlay Knight was for Marston. The appeal was argued on the 4th inst., and this morning the judgment of the Court was delivered by Lord Justice Mellish, who said that there was no doubt a complete case within the reputed-ownership clause, unless Marston had succeeded in proving the existence of a custom so well known as to take the case out of the clause. There was no doubt as to the law, which had been fully considered by the Court of Appeal in the recent case of "Ex parte Watkins" (Law Reports, 8 Chan., 520). The custom cannot be proved to such an extent as that it might be reasonably inferred that the trade creditors of the debtor had knowledge of it. In the present case the evidence was very conflicting, and it was almost impossible to come to any satisfactory conclusion. The witnesses had not been cross-examined on either side, but his Lordship thought it was pretty clearly established that Marston had for some years been endeavouring to conduct his trade on the deferred-payment system in Nottingham, and that cab proprietors in that town were aware of this. But this, his Lordship thought, was not enough. A man could not establish a custom for himself so as to get out of the reputed-ownership clause. Here the Judge of the County Court and the Chief Judge had come to opposite conclusions, and after giving the best consideration in their power to the case, their Lordships had come to the conclusion that Marston had not established the existence of the alleged custom. His Lordship said he was afraid Marston could not safely carry on this business unless, in addition to painting the name of the hirer on the cab, he also placed his own name on them with some intimation of his ownership. The appeal must be allowed, and the order of the County Court must be restored.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE. March 24.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

IN RE METROPOLITAN COUNTIES CO-OPERATIVE COAL ASSOCIATION (LIMITED).—The question in this matter was whether the company was to be wound-up compulsorily or under the supervision of the Court. The petition was presented by one of the directors in his capacity of an unpaid creditor of the company. Mr Chitty, Q.C., and Mr Hanson for the petitioner, Mr Graham Hastings for the company, and Mr Romer for a creditor, claimed a compulsory winding up. Mr Marten, Q.C., and Mr Kirby, for a number of creditors, including the promoter, advocated a winding up under supervision as cheaper and better for the interest of all concerned. The Master of the Rolls said winding up under supervision might be cheaper in the case of a solvent company, but in the case of an insolvent company the less expensive course was to have it wound up by the Court. It was admitted that this company was insolvent, and he should therefore make the usual order to wind up.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS. March 19.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. MALINS.)

IN RE VERNEYS' TRUSTS.—This was a petition by Mrs Shapcott, the tenant for life of a legacy under the will of one Peter Verneys, now represented by a sum of £2,000 Consols, which, since April, 1870, had been standing in the name of a single trustee, who, in December, 1874, was convicted of felony, praying that Mr John Batchelor, her solicitor, might be appointed a trustee of the fund in question, in the place of the felon trustee for the purpose of transferring the fund into court within a limited time, and that on such transfer being made the dividends might be paid to the petitioner for her life. It appeared that the trustee in question had been the manager of the Margate Branch of the Canterbury Bank, and that in December, 1874, he was convicted of embezzling certain money and valuable securities, the property of the proprietors of the bank, and sentenced to ten years' penal servitude. The petitioner had placed a distringas on the fund, and so preserved it for the benefit of herself and the persons entitled in remainder. Mr J. E. Horne appeared in support of the petition. The Vice-Chancellor made the order prayed for, remarking that it was singular the Legislature had made no provision by which in such a case as this a fund might be paid into court without the necessity of a trustee being appointed merely for that purpose.

IN RE THE EMMA SILVER MINING COMPANY (LIMITED).—The hearing of the petition to wind up this company, which was presented in October last, after having been postponed in order to give an opportunity for the cross-examination of Mr. Tooke, the secretary of the company, was resumed this morning. It appeared from the statements contained in the petition that the company was registered on the 8th of November, 1871, with the object, as stated in the memorandum of association, of carrying out an agreement, dated the 4th of the same month, between the Hon. Trenor William Park and G. H. Dean, and of acquiring and working the Emma Mine, in the Territory of Utah, with a capital of £1,000,000, in 50,000 shares of £20 each. The prospectus stated that the extent of the mine was nearly half a mile in length, with a right to an extension of 600 feet, that the title was perfect, that the mine was discovered in the early part of 1870, but was not worked to any extent till the autumn of that year, from which date certain particulars were given as to the raising and the shipment of ores, and it was stated that the estimated net yearly yield was at the rate of £700,000 per acre, capable of being raised by economy in the system of working to nearly £800,000 per annum. That the purchase-money of the property was to be £500,000 in cash, and £500,000 in 25,000 fully paid-up shares, for which the company was to get the Emma Mine, the extension claim, £46,300 cash profit on consignment, ore forwarded to England of the value of £70,000, ore filed at the mine of the value of £64,000, ore developed of the value of £357,750, and the whole of the plant; and it was proposed to pay monthly dividends limited to £18 per cent. until the formation of a fund of £180,000 to equalize the dividends, after which the whole earnings were to be divided among the shareholders monthly. On the faith of this prospectus, Mr Askew, the petitioner, applied for and had allotted to him 100 shares, paying for them, it was said, upwards of £2,500. The purchase was completed and the company began to work the mine, but it appeared that these magnificent prospects were not realized, for after paying the monthly dividends at the rate of £18 per cent. per annum for ten months, the payment of dividends ceased, and no further dividend had since been paid, and it was stated by the counsel for the petitioner that the monthly dividends for November and December, 1872, were paid out of a sum of £33,000 which had been borrowed from Mr Trenor Park for the purpose. It appeared also from the statements in the petition that in the month of July, 1872, the company's title to the property was disputed by an American company, called the Illinois Tunnel Company, which was compromised by the Emma Company agreeing to pay the Illinois Company the sum of £18,000. The petitioner submitted that the company was a bubble company, brought out by fraudulent schemes, and that it could not pay its debts, and ought to be wound up. Among other evidence in support of the petition, an affidavit of one Wm. Eddy, who had been a working miner in the Emma Mine, was read, and he deposed as follows:—"In my judgment as a practical miner, nearly all the rich deposit of ore was cleared out of the Emma Mine previous to the same being sold to the company, and all that remained to be purchased by the company was the carcase of the old mine, with a very small quantity of rich ore to go on with that would be readily exhausted. During the time I was employed at the mine in breaking ore I have been instructed (as well as other miners) to allow loose ore to remain on and around the limestone rock, and in my presence the superintendent has pointed out the same to strangers as a mass of ore. I considered at the time that this loose ore was left there for the purpose of deceiving those not acquainted with the working of the mine. Shortly before my leaving the mine orders were given that no miners were to go below the track or tunnel floor of the mine, except four or five men who were specially employed upon that business, and from what I heard I was very curious to go below and see for myself. Accordingly, one night I took an opportunity of going down to the bottom of the mine, and then saw for myself that the ore was, as I have before stated, practically exhausted." Mr Cotton, Q.C., and Mr Graham Hastings, for the petitioner, contended that the company ought to be wound up, not because the purchasers of the mine had been imposed on by the vendors, but because the company was unable to pay its debts and carry on its business, and the object for which the company was formed could not be carried out, and was practically abandoned. The mine was, in fact, worked out before it was bought by the company. Moreover, the present directors of the company were taking proceedings in America to recover from the vendors the purchase money paid by the company; and, as they were thus repudiating the contract, they could not claim to continue to hold the property acquired under it; and, if money was recoverable, the dissensions that existed in the company rendered it most desirable that it should be recovered by a liquidator in a winding up. The assets of the company, as it appeared from the cross-examination of Mr Tooke, consisted of £9,994 18s. 4d. in the hands of trustees and some assets in America. The mine, some said, was worthless, others said it was a geological chance. Against these assets there were liabilities of about £15,000 in respect of the £18,000 compromise, and further liabilities on overdue bills in respect of the £33,000 borrowed. It had been suggested by the Court that a meeting of the shareholders should be called to consider whether the company should not be wound up, but seeing that bills had already been filed by Mr M'Dougall to set aside proceedings at past general meetings, this would be of little use; and, under all the circumstances, a winding-up order was the only course. Mr Nash, for seven shareholders holding 150 shares, supported the petition. Mr Higgins, Q.C., and Mr Kokewich, for some of the original directors, said that upon full consideration, after hearing the opening of the petition, they, on behalf of their clients, who had placed themselves unreservedly in their hands, had reluctantly come to the conclusion that a winding-up order was advisable. Mr J. Pearson, Q.C., and Mr F. H. Colt, for the company, and also for 700 shareholders holding shares to the amount of £416,880, opposed the petition. The present directors, against whom it was admitted not a word could be said, and who had had nothing to do with the transactions complained of in the petition, and were backed by an enormous majority of the shareholders, had made themselves thoroughly acquainted with the affairs of the company. The Vice-Chancellor, stopping them, suggested whether it might not be desirable that two of these gentlemen should be appointed liquidators. Mr Glasse, Q.C. (with whom was Mr W. F. Robinson), for Mr M'Dougall and other shareholders, protested against any winding-up order being made at all. No winding-up order could be made except upon allegations in a petition which would justify the order, and here there were none such. Mr Glasse had only commenced his argument at the rising of the Court, and the hearing was adjourned until the following Wednesday. Mr Grosvenor Woods appeared for shareholders holding shares to the value of £2,000 in opposition to the petition. The hearing of the petition was resumed on Wednesday before Vice-Chancellor Malins. Mr Glasse, resuming his argument in opposition to the petition, said that when the petition was opened on Friday he was instructed to oppose it on behalf of shareholders holding 1,000 shares, and that since then shareholders holding 20,000 more shares had signified their desire that the company should not be wound up; so that he now represented shareholders holding 21,000 shares. There were no allegations in the petition upon which a winding-up order could be founded. There was ore in the mine, and so long as the vein of silver was not absolutely lost it might improve and the mine again become a profitable concern. The mine, moreover, was perfectly solvent, it did not owe £50 in the world, and had £12,000 in hand, and the proceeds of the mine were sufficient to cover the working expenses. Up to the 31st of December, 1872, there had been 2,792 tons of ore sold in England, and 6,500 tons of ore sold at Salt Lake, and there were 430 tons of ore on hand, the net proceeds of these amounts being £167,000. In 1873, 5,587 tons were sold at Salt Lake, leaving 214 tons on hand, and the estimated value of these amounts was £74,365. £12,000 worth of ore was raised in 1874, and £5,000 worth this year. The evidence of Mr Eddy as to the mine having been worked out was valueless, for he left the mine in August, 1871, before the workings of the company had begun, and since that time over £200,000 of ore had been sent home. Then there was the remarkable circumstance that not one single creditor had come forward to support the winding-up of the company, which was strong presumptive evidence that there were no creditors at all. The only persons who desired a winding-up were the petitioner, who held 125 shares, and seven other shareholders, who held 150, making altogether 275. On the other hand, shareholders holding the overwhelming majority of 21,000 shares desired that the company should go on, believing that as ore was still being raised and the mine was paying its expenses, their only chance was to push on the exploration. The four present directors were until the hearing opposed to a winding-up, and, though in consequence of the suggestion made by the Court three of them had withdrawn their opposition, Mr Burnand, the remaining director, opposed a winding-up, seeing that the immense majority of the shareholders who had expressed any opinion were in favour of going on. Mr Grosvenor Woods, for Mr Burnand and other shareholders, also opposed the petition. Mr. J. Pearson, Q.C., and Mr F. H. Colt, on the part of the three present directors, said that the withdrawal of their opposition to the petition was solely owing to the suggestion made by the Court. The Vice-Chancellor: The suggestion came from me only. Mr Cotton, Q.C., in reply, while admitting that fraud in the inception of a company would not give the Court jurisdiction to wind it up without other circumstances, contended that the company was insolvent; that it was impracticable to carry on its business; and that the mine, its undertaking, was exhausted, and, in fact, abandoned. Litigation in America was in prospect, and, considering the dissensions in the company, the only proper course was a winding-up order. The Vice-Chancellor said that when the petition came on he had asked the various parties appearing by counsel whether they supported or approved it, and on that occasion Mr Pearson, who appeared for three out of the four present directors, was instructed to oppose it. In consequence, however, of a suggestion of his Honour, those three gentlemen withdrew their opposition, and were ready to consent to a winding-up order. The three original directors who appeared by Mr Higgins also considered that a winding-up by the Court was advisable. But, besides these gentlemen, there were, on the one side, in favour of a winding-up order only the petitioner, Mr Askew, who was a holder of 125 shares, and seven gentlemen who held between them 150 shares. Thus, the supporters of the winding-up order only held between them 275 shares, while, on the other hand, shareholders to the amount of £416,800 strongly opposed it, and the views of each side were urged so strongly and with so much zeal, that it was difficult to know what ought to be done. The facts common to both sides showed how unfortunate the shareholders in this company had been. It had been formed in 1871 upon statements of a most delusive character coming from persons on the other side of the Atlantic, that the property of the company was actually making £700,000 a year, and that the profit might be increased to £800,000 a year, the purchase-money asked being one million. These expectations of a profit of 70 or 80 per cent., which induced the petitioner to embark in the concern, were so strong that the company would not take the usual course of waiting till the close of the half-year to declare a dividend, but began at once to pay monthly dividends at the rate of £18 per cent. per annum. And, no doubt, seeing that this £18 per cent. (not in itself a very common dividend) was only part of a future £70 per cent., the shareholders thought themselves very fortunate persons. These hopes, however, soon came to an end, for though the company received £176,000 in the course of the first year, they only paid the monthly dividend of 18 per cent. for ten months, and the directors, among whom were three members of Parliament, a C.B., and an Ambassador, had to borrow the money to pay the last two monthly dividends. Then the bubble burst, and the directors found that they had been abominably cheated and imposed upon by the promoters of the company on the other side of the Atlantic. This, however, was not the first case of the kind, for similar cases, such as the Mineral-hill, in which Mr Albert Grant had been so imposed upon, had already been before his Honour. In his Honour's opinion this mine was not worth the working, and it appeared that a compulsory order for winding-up would be the best course. Still, he must look at the interests of all parties concerned, and his conclusion might be erroneous, and although the evidence was strong that the whole scheme had been concocted and that the mine had been exhausted, it might yet turn out to be worth working, for there was evidence that miners were now at work in the mine, that £12,000 had been received in 1874, and that £5,000 had been earned this year. While, therefore, there was a doubt whether something might not be made by going on, it was clear that if he now made an order to wind-up the company he should be acting in opposition to the wishes of an overwhelming majority of the shareholders, Of the three original directors represented by Mr Higgins, his Honour had no other disapproval to express except that they had received a present of the shares constituting their qualifications—a practice which he never heard of without disapprobation. The present directors had only come in at a late period to do their best to rescue the concern. Under these circumstances, though it was only suggested that the principal object of going on was to seek to get back something by litigation with the vendors, the fact that shareholders holding so large a portion of the capital desired to continue, afforded some evidence that the case was not a hopeless one. Had it been Mr M'Dougall alone who was desirous of going on with the company, his Honour would not have been much influenced, for that gentleman appeared to have bought his shares for litigious purposes when the company was in a hopeless state, but if his Honour acceded to the application of so small a number of shareholders, he would, to a certain extent, be cutting off all hope. Was it, then, worth while to wind-up the company in order that an official liquidator should conduct the proposed litigation instead of the directors? It was said that the confusion and disputes existing in this company rendered such a course desirable, but his Honour had the power to rectify the register of shareholders, and when that was done the shareholders could select their own directors, and those gentlemen when elected would be a proper body to conduct the litigation. Although a fully-paid-up shareholder was in a position to ask for a winding-up order where the company is not insolvent, the Court looked with doubt as to the propriety of making the order on his application, and inasmuch as such a shareholder already had the protection afforded by his limited liability, the Court ought to be satisfied that he would derive some benefit from the order; and his Honour did not see what benefit the petitioner, who had already lost over £2,000 in this company would obtain by winding it up, for it was a matter of pure speculation whether anything would be got back from America. Amid these difficulties, however, the Companies Act of 1862 afforded guidance to the Court. The 91st section of that Act empowered the Court in all matters relating to winding-up to have regard to the wishes of the contributories, and if expedient to direct meetings to be held for the purpose of ascertaining their wishes, and to appoint a person to act as chairman of such meeting. It was said, "Why hold a meeting in this case, when the wishes of the majority had been expressed already?" His Honour, however, thought that in this case the wishes of the shareholders, as far as they had been ascertained, had been ascertained in some haste, and without full consideration; and, upon the whole, he came to the conclusion that it was not right in this case to make an immediate order to wind-up the company, but that the shareholders should have an opportunity of expressing their wishes at a meeting which he should direct to be called for the purpose, and that such meeting should be presided over by some independent person competent to keep order thereat, who should be appointed by the Court for the purpose. The petition must, therefore, stand over in order that such a meeting should be held, and the time, place, and chairman of the meeting would be determined in his Honour's Chambers.

IN RE THE GENERAL SOUTH AMERICAN COMPANY (LIMITED).—This company was established in 1868 as merchants and bankers, having transactions principally with South America. The capital of the Company was £392,000 in fully paid-up shares of £100 each. On the 18th inst. a petition to wind up the company was presented by Mr Venables, a creditor upon bills endorsed by the company, to the extent of about £12,960. Some of these bills had been accepted by the firm of Messrs J. C. im Thurn and Co., and upon being presented for payment were dishonoured. It was stated that the company's liabilities amounted to £400,000. On the 19th, upon an ex parte application made to his Honour in Chambers, Mr G. A. Cape was appointed provisional liquidator until Tuesday, the 23rd inst., and at the same time his Honour directed a notice of motion for the continuance of Mr Cape as provisional liquidator, to be forthwith served upon the company's solicitors, and that the motion should be brought on this morning at the sitting of the Court. Accordingly, Mr Glasse, Q.C. (Mr Montague Cookson with him), now moved that Mr Cape should be continued as provisional liquidator for the purpose of receiving the remittances coming in for the company from South America, and to take possession of the company's assets. Mr Higgin, Q.C., for the Crédit Rural, creditors of the company, supported the motion. Mr W. Pearson, Q.C. (Mr Everitt with him) for the company, asked that the motion might stand over until Tuesday, stating that if the application were now acceded to it might seriously affect the position of the company, it being a going concern, and there being a prospect of its being able to meet its engagements. The company had received no notice that the acceptances of Messrs im Thurn and Co. had been dishonoured until after the presentation of the petition. After some discussion, the Vice-Chancellor extended the order appointing Mr Cape until the following Thursday. At the sitting of the Court on the following Wednesday it was arranged that Mr Schwank, one of the directors of the company, should be associated with Mr Cape as provisional liquidators of the company until the hearing of the petition for winding up the company.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir C. Hall.)

Croysdill v. Rickards.—The plaintiff in this suit was the trustee for the creditors of a Mr Carew, who was the tenant for life of the estates mentioned in the "Carew's Estate Act, 1857," and also entitled to the income of the "trust stock" comprised in the Act. The material facts of the case were briefly these:—Mr Carew was in 1866 indebted to Mr. Rickards. In July of that year he effected a policy on his own life, in his own name, for £5,000, with the English and Scottish Law Life Assurance Association, in Edinburgh, and handed the policy to Mr Rickards. On the 27th of December, 1866, Mr Carew gave Mr Rickards an equitable mortgage of his interest in the Carew estates for £6,876, and agreed to keep up the policy to the full amount of his debt. On the 10th of May, 1867, Mr Carew gave Mr Rickards another security for £8,800, which included the previous debt. On the 29th of June he gave Mr Rickards a further security, which was in effect a memorandum that Mr Rickards had that day sent him £200, and he had bought a grey cob of him at £225, which he was to keep for him a few weeks free of charge; and he had given him his acceptance for the £425, payable on the 1st of August then next, to be included in the mortgage, signed C. H. Carew. Mr Carew had on the 10th of May, 1867, given Mr Rickards a warrant of attorney to enter up judgment against him for £9,577 12s 8d, the aggregate amount then alleged to be due from him to Mr Rickards on the security of the memorandum, with interest at £20 per cent. per annum, but that judgment never was entered upon. On the 6th of August, 1867, Mr. Carew duly executed a conveyance to the plaintiff under the 192d section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, of all his real and personal property, and effects whatsoever, and whether legal or equitable, for the benefit of Mr Carew's creditors. Mr Rickards was not a consenting creditor to the deed, but he had notice of it. Mr Carew died on the 17th of September, 1872. The plaintiff alleged that there was now due to Mr Rickards, on the security of the memoranda and policy, £2,149 or thereabouts, all the interest on the memoranda and all the premiums on the policy having been paid; and the plaintiff, therefore, claimed for Mr Carew's creditors the balance of the policy moneys. The defendant, however, claimed the whole of the £5,000 in respect of further advances which he had made to Mr Carew after the deed of the 6th of August, 1867, and on account of the payments of premiums by him (Mr Rickards) to keep the policy on foot. He said the policy ought to have been effected in his name, and not that of Mr Carew; that soon after he had it handed to him he found one half-year's premium on it had not been paid; it was forfeited at the date of the deed; that he himself then paid the requisite premiums, and therefore considered the policy to be his. At all events the equitable mortgage of the 27th of December, 1866, operated as an assignment of it to him. He had in December, 1867, instituted a suit of "Rickards v. Carew," to which the plaintiff in the present one was a party. The suit was afterwards compromised. Mr Rickards further insisted that because Mr Croysdill had not given any notice to the insurance office of his claim to the policy prior to Mr Rickard's subsequent advances in respect of it, and he had made no demand on account of it in the suit of "Rickards v. Carew," he (Mr Rickards) was entitled to claim a priority over Mr Croysdill in the distribution of the policy moneys. The object of the bill in this suit was to obtain a declaration that Mr Rickards had no charge on the policy for advances made to Mr Carew, after the 6th of August, 1867, and for an account. The principal question in the suit was whether the policy passed to the plaintiff by the deed of the 6th of August, 1867. The Vice-Chancellor, without calling for a reply, held that the policy passed to the plaintiff by the deed of the 6th of August, 1867; that even if it could have ever been thought to have been forfeited, it had been revived; that Mr Rickards had, in a letter written by him to the office, himself taken a view inconsistent with the actual forfeiture of the policy; that when he made the further advances on which he relied he knew of the deed of the 6th of August, 1867; that the plaintiff had not been guilty of any laches; and, on the whole case, made a declaration that Mr Rickards was not entitled to a charge or lien on the moneys payable in respect of the policy for any advance to Mr Carew after the 6th of August, 1867, and, on the footing of that declaration, decreed an account of what was now due and owing to Mr Rickards on his securities reserving the further consideration of the cause, and the costs of it.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

March 19.

(Before Mr Registrar Pepys, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Henry Brinsley Sheridan, Jun.—The bankrupt was a contractor, carrying on business in George-street, Westminster, under the style of Sheridan, Kemball, and Co. This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. Mr Baker appeared for the trustee; Mr E. Lee for the bankrupt. It was stated the failure was attributable to the fact that the bankrupt had engaged in a business of which he had no experience, and to his having incurred liabilities on bills of exchange, for which he did not receive any value. The case had been before the Court for a considerable time, and a proposal, though not of a very definite character, had been made to the creditors. The trustee now pressed an application for the filing of accounts. His Honour ordered the bankrupt to file his accounts within one month, and adjourned the further hearing for six weeks.

In re W. Barker.—The bankrupt, a goldsmith, jeweller, and silversmith, carrying on business at 164, New Bond-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities stated at £29,000, and assets consisting of stock in trade, the lease of the premises, trade fixtures, and fittings on the premises, book debts and household furniture of the total value of £30,000, the stock in trade alone being of the estimated value of £15,000. Mr Bagley, for the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors, asked that Mr H. H. Ashworth, accountant, 3, Salter's-hall-court, Cannon-street, should be appointed receiver and manager, and for an injunction to restrain actions by creditors, one of whom had recovered a judgment. The evidence showed that it was necessary the property should be protected until the first meeting of creditors, the debtor's intention being to offer a composition. His Honour granted the application.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring-Rice sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Charles S. Edwards.—The debtor is a warehouseman carrying on business at 15, Watling-street. He has filed a petition for liquidation, with debts estimated at £15,000, and assets, consisting of furniture, stock-in-trade, book debts, and other property, £5,477. Mr G. A. Rooks, for the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors for £6,366, applied that Mr J. F. Lovering, accountant, Gresham-street, should be appointed receiver and manager. The affidavit used in support of the application showed that stock of the value of £547 had been forwarded to the debtor by a firm in the North, now in liquidation, in part security for the amount of accommodation acceptances given by the debtor in their favour; and there was also upon the premises stock of the value of £2,000 forwarded to the debtor for sale by various firms. It was of importance to the general body of creditors that a receiver and manager should be appointed to take possession of the property. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE G. N. CALEY.—In this case, upon the application of Mr Brough, his Honour appointed a receiver and manager; the debtor, carrying on business at the Hope Iron Works, Vincent-street, Westminster, and at Lambeth, as an ironfounder, having filed a petition for liquidation, estimating his debts secured and unsecured at about £10,000, and assets £3,000.

IN RE WILLIAM AIRD.—Upon the application of Mr Munns, his Honour also appointed a receiver and manager, under a petition for liquidation presented by Wm. Aird, of the Ferry-lane Brick Works, Walthamstow, whose debts are returned at £3,000, with assets of about the same amount, subject to realization.

March 23.

(Before Mr Registrar ROCHE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE LEMON HART AND SON.—This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. The bankrupts, Messrs George White and David Hart, were wine and spirit merchants, carrying on business in George-street, Tower-hill, under the firm of Lemon Hart and Son. They had filed a petition for liquidation, under which an offer of a composition was made, but the creditors declined to accede, and an adjudication of bankruptcy followed. A statement of affairs showed the following items:—Unsecured creditors, £36,137; creditors partially secured, less the value of securities held, £37,563; creditors for rent, rates, &c., £4,632; and liabilities on bills discounted, which it was expected would rank against the estate, £4,736. Assets—stock in trade at Tower-hill, estimated at £3,400; at the cooperage, £596; and in bond, £8,527; book debts about £23,084, estimated to produce £12,384; bills of exchange and other similar securities, £41 and surplus from securities in the hands of creditors, £3,659. Mr Lanyon, for the trustee and committee of inspection, proposed to examine the bankrupts in regard to their dealings with their property. He stated that the transactions of the bankrupts had been very extensive, and that the trustee was dissatisfied with the information he had received. Mr Linklater, solicitor for the bankrupts, said that accounts prepared by gentlemen of great experience in such matters were duly filed, and an adjournment had been taken until to-day for investigation. His Honour held, in accordance with a case of "Ex parte Lawrence," decided by the Chief Judge, that it would be contrary to the practice of the Court to permit a long examination of the bankrupts now. If the trustee required further information, he could apply for a private sitting, and the facts then elicited might afterwards be brought under the notice of the Court. An adjournment was then ordered until the 4th of May, a private examination of the bankrupts to be held in the meantime.

March 24.

(Before Mr Registrar MURRAY.)

IN RE STIFF AND FLOWER.—This failure occurred in March, 1874, the bankrupts being then the proprietors of the Weekly Dispatch, subject to a mortgage thereon. It appeared that previous to the bankruptcy disputes had arisen between Messrs. Stiff and Flower, and a suit of "Flower v. Stiff" was instituted at the Court of Chancery, with the object of taking the accounts and obtaining a dissolution of the partnership. In December, 1873, Mr Saffery was appointed receiver in the Chancery proceedings, and Mr H. W. Oliphant manager, for the purpose of carrying on the newspaper. The trustee in the bankruptcy now applied that an account might be taken of what was due under the mortgage, with a view to the application of any balance that might so be found due to the benefit of the unsecured creditors It was stated that a sale had recently been effected of the Weekly Dispatch to Mr Wentworth Dilke for the sum of £11,000, and a question had arisen respecting the amount that the mortgagees were entitled to claim out of that fund. It was alleged that during the Chancery proceedings a deficit had occurred in the cash, money having been paid for advertisements which were not entered in the books, and the Court had to consider whether the mortgagees were liable to account for the deficiency. The evidence adduced was of a very conflicting character, and Mr Wood, the mortgagee in possession, altogether repudiated any liability in reference to the alleged abstraction of cash.—Mr Linklater was counsel for the trustee; Mr R. Griffiths for the mortgagees.—At the conclusion of the arguments his Honour reserved judgment.

YORK, MARCH 23.

CROWN COURT.—(Before Lord COLERIDGE.)

James Hedley, George Harper, John Henry Bennison (described as an "accountant"), and Frederick Hodgson were indicted for a conspiracy to defraud the creditors of Hodgson, who had become bankrupt, and to defeat the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act. Our readers will remember that the case was reported at considerable length in the November number of the Accountant. Mr Maule, Q.C., and Mr Skidmore prosecuted; Hedley was defended by Mr Campbell Foster; Harper by Mr Whitaker; Bennison and Hodgson by Mr Tenant and Mr Etherington Smith. The defendants all lived at Middlesborough, and Hodgson had been tenant to Hedley of a public-house there, which he gave up in April last, and in June became a liquidating debtor. The substantial charge was that the four defendants had conspired to make a false agreement in June, which was antedated to April, purporting to assign the fixtures of the public-house to Hedley, in consideration of the release of Hodgson by Hedley from a debt of £80, for which the latter held Hodgson's acceptance. The depositions were very voluminous, and the principal witness against the defendants was a late clerk of Bennison's, who had been twice convicted of forgery, and whose examination occupied the Court till its rising at 6.30 last evening. This morning, after the case had proceeded about an hour, one of the jury was taken ill, and as his Lordship said he could not begin so long an inquiry afresh, it being the Commission day at Leeds, the jury were discharged, and the defendants bound over to appear for trial at the Summer Assizes.

HOME CIRCUIT.

BRIGHTON, MARCH 22.

(Before Mr Justice DENMAN and a Special Jury.)

WATSON V. THE IMPERIAL UNION LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY.—Mr Day, Q.C., Mr. Willis, and Mr Marshall Griffiths appeared for the plaintiff; Mr Serjeant Parry, Mr Merrifield, and Mr Grantham for the defendants. This was an action upon a policy of life assurance for £1,000 which was resisted on the ground that the deceased had misrepresented to the defendants the state of his health and habits. The deceased, a farmer, residing at Hove, executed the policy sued on in September, 1871, and in answer to the usual questions put to him by the defendants stated that he was in good health and of temperate habits. He died suddenly in February, 1873, and it appeared from the post mortem examination made on his body that the death arose from fatty degeneration of the heart, liver, and kidneys. The case for the defendants (who, owing to the form of the pleadings began) was that this was the result of chronic drunkenness, and they called a number of medical and other witnesses, who deposed that the assured had for some years previous to the date of the policy been of excessively intemperate habits, and that his state of health was in consequence very weak. The medical witnesses called by the defendants were also of opinion that the state of the deceased's organs disclosed at the post mortem examination could only have been caused by drunkenness of long standing. It was also stated that the assured had concealed from the defendants the facts that he had constantly required medical attendance, and that he had met with an accident in a Hansom cab. For the plaintiff it was admitted that the deceased had become addicted to drink before his death, but it was said that this was in consequence of pecuniary and other troubles arising after the date of the policy. His widow, the plaintiff in the action, was called and gave evidence to this effect. Sir Cordy Burrows, who had examined the assured on behalf of the plaintiffs and passed him as a "first-class life," described him as being a perfectly healthy man, and stated that in his opinion the symptoms decribed by the doctors who had made the post mortem examination were quite consistent with the assured having taken to drinking only a short time before his death. The case for the plaintiff was not finished when the Court rose. The hearing was concluded on the following day. Several additional witnesses were called for the plaintiff, who stated that although the assured had undoubtedly contracted habits of intemperance shortly before his death, still at the date of the policy he was a perfectly sober and healthy man. The learned Judge left it to the jury to say whether the statements of the deceased, that he was of temperate habits and had no regular medical attendant (or either of them) were untrue, and if so whether they were fraudulent. The jury, after having been absent from court for more than an hour and a half were discharged without having been able to agree. The case had been tried before, at the last Spring Assizes, when a verdict was found for the plaintiff, which was afterwards set aside.

LIVERPOOL BANKRUPTCY COURT.

March 19.

(Before Mr. J. F. Collier, Judge.)

In re J. L. Palethorpe.—In this case the debtor, a cotton broker in Liverpool, presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs, in September last, and at the first meeting of creditors liquidation was determined upon, and Mr Bolland chosen trustee. By the statement of accounts the liabilities were represented to be £21,189, and assets £163 17s. 6d. Debts amounting to £4,000 were proved at the first meeting, and other debts not then tendered were subsequently proved by lodging affidavits with the trustee, a provision in the recent Act enabling creditors to make proofs of debts in that manner. Amongst other proofs tendered was one by Mr H. W. Meade-King for £1,209 1s.4d., being for money lent to, and paid for, the use of the debtors, and for which, he stated, he held no security except a policy of insurance on the life of the debtor for £1,200, which he valued at £200. By the rules under the present Act a secured creditor is bound to state the particulars of his security in his proof, and the value at which he assesses the same, and he is to be deemed a creditor only for the balance, and if it happens at anytime afterwards that the security produces more than the value at which it has been assessed, the creditor is bound to hand over the difference to the trustee. This is an innovation in bankruptcy procedure which, although the Act has been in operation for five years past, appears to have escaped the consideration it deserves. In the present case the debtor, subsequently to the admission of the proof of debt, died, and in due course the creditor received from the insurance office the amount of the policy. Mr Bolland, the trustee, thereupon made application to Mr King for the odd £1,000 which the security had realized in excess of the value placed upon it in the proof, but the creditor's advisers having doubts as to the rights of the trustee, it was agreed to submit the case to the decision of the Court. Mr Kennedy, instructed by Messrs Anderson, Collins, and Robinson, appeared for the trustee; and Mr Potter, instructed by Messrs Thornley and Dismore, for the creditor. Mr Kennedy shortly stated the facts of the case, and referred to the rules and decisions under former statutes as to the effect of a secured creditor proving his debt, and Mr Potter was afterwards heard in reply. His Honour, without calling upon Mr Kennedy, said the only question in doubt was whether a policy of insurance was such a security as was contemplated by the 272d rule, and, in his opinion, it was, and, in fact, the creditor had so treated it. The order must be in the terms of the motion that the creditor pay to the trustee the difference between £200, the sum at which he had valued his security, and the amount of the policy, £1,200. The costs to be allowed out of the estate.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN, March 19.

(Before Judge Harrison.)

In re John M'Elwaine.—The bankrupt was a farmer in the County Donegal. This was the first public sitting; but no assignee was proposed. On a former day an application was made for the discharge from custody of the bankrupt, who had been arrested under a judgment obtained by Lord Leitrim for £100 for the rent of a farm, and on that occasion the detaining creditor opposed the discharge. The bankrupt held two farms, one by lease under Lord Leitrim and the other a grazing farm of 440 acres, for the rent of which the bankrupt had been arrested. It was stated on the former occasion that the bankrupt would be discharged on giving up possession, but there was a difficulty in doing this, as the bankrupt's son had been given possession of a house in which he carried on the business of a publican. Mr Scallan now renewed the application for the discharge of the bankrupt. Mr Holmes (instructed by Mr Lott) opposed the discharge on the part of Lord Leitrim, unless some security was given by the bankrupt for the rent which he owed. Judge Harrison, by consent of the parties, made an order for the discharge of the bankrupt on his giving up possession of the grazing farm.

FAILURES.

It is stated that the acceptances of Messrs im Thurn and Co. have already been taken up by other parties to the extent of £1,500,000, and that the dividend to be declared on the estate has been dealt in at 10s to 12s 6d in the pound.

England.—Messrs T Barnard and Co., Tib-street, Manchester, warehousemen, have suspended; liabilities, £3,500.—The suspension was announced in Bradford on Saturday of A. W. Ramsden, manufacturer, Bingley. Liabilities are estimated at £40,000. The creditors are few in number.—The failure of a firm of stuff manufacturers with £25,000 liabilities was announced in Bradford on Monday. Mr. Henry Crosland, of Netheroyd Hill, stone merchant, formerly carrying on business in copartnership with Mr. Thomas Dyson, Lindley, stone merchant, has filed a petition in the Huddersfield County Court for the liquidation of his affairs by arrangement. The debtor's liabilities are estimated at £3,400.

The North British Daily Mail says—It is announced that the banking house of Messrs Caralli, Efstathiadi, is being wound up by the shareholders. Its capital was 1,000,000 francs, but the shares have been for some time past at a considerable discount. The suspension of payment by the house of A. G. Mavrogordato, of Marseilles, is also announced, and it is attributed to the difficulties of the Société de Crédit et de Commission of Constantinople, with which it had large dealings.

The National Zeitung reports the failure of Herbers and Company, sugar manufacturers, of Uerdingen, on the Rhine. The liabilities are estimated at upwards of 1,000,000 thalers.

American advices report that a meeting of the creditors of Messrs Beal and Hooper, furniture dealers, Boston, had been held; the liabilities were estimated at £50,000, with assets about £34,000. Messrs C. Orff and Co., dry goods, Fort Wayne, Indiana, had stopped; liabilities £13,000, and it was thought they would pay 40 cents on the dollar. The creditors of Messrs May, Moyer, and Co., wholesale dry goods, Cincinnati, O., had brought a suit against them, with a view to bankruptcy; liabilities £15,000. A financial crisis had been experienced in the Dominion, Canada. Messrs Pickham and Haag, Toronto, Ont., extensive lumber dealers, had failed. The banks had held a meeting, and agreed to assist one another in the event of difficulties. A meeting of the creditors of Messrs Wheatley, Williams, and Co., extensive sugar refiners, New York, had been held. A statement of their affairs was submitted, and a committee appointed to investigate.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

Dunn (Newcastle).—At a meeting of the creditors of this debtor, held at Newcastle, the statement of affairs presented showed liabilities £1,058 6s. 1d.; assets, £415. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr Harvey (Gamble and Harvey) was appointed trustee.

At the statutory meeting of the creditors of Messrs Crompton, Cooke, and Co., of Chester-street Mills, Chorlton-upon-Medlock yarn polishers, dyers, and doublers, the statement of affairs showed total liabilities £3,485, and total assets £3,374. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon.

S. M'Cracken (Bradford).—On Monday afternoon a meeting of the creditors of Samuel M'Cracken, of Godwin-street, Bradford, wholesale jeweller and hardwareman, was held at the office of Mr Crowther Davis, Bennett's Hill, Birmingham. Mr John Brookes (of the firm of Messrs Ashford and Brookes) was appointed chairman. Mr Crowther Davis appeared for the principal creditors, and Mr Harvey represented certain London creditors. The statement of affairs showed total liabilities £3,311 11s. 5d., and assets £1,900 8s. 11d. After several offers had been made, liquidation by arrangement was agreed upon—authority, however, being given to the trustee to sell at a sum sufficient to pay 6s. 8d. in the pound. Mr Crowther Davis was entrusted with the registration of the resolution, and Mr L. Sharp was appointed trustee.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr F. W. Pixley, A.I.A., has been appointed by the Master of the Rolls, official liquidator of "Hart's Pure Whole Meal Bread and Biscuit Company (Limited)."

Mr Cape (Cape and Harris) has been appointed official liquidator of the Lion Assurance Company (Limited) by Vice Chancellor Hall, and official liquidator of the Co-operative Supply Association (Limited) by Vice Chancellor Malins.

Vice Chancellor Malins has appointed Mr James Wood Sully official liquidator of the Metropolitan Licensed Victuallers and Householders' Collieries Association (Limited).

Messrs Tilly and Co. have been reappointed Auditors of the Montevidean and Brazilian Telegraph Company, Limited.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr T. S. Evans official liquidator of the Grovesend Steam Coal Colliery Company (Limited), and also of the Cwm Bychan Silver Lead Mining Company (Limited).

BANKRUPTCY LEGISLATION.

"T. A. W." writing in the Law Journal says:—"In your issue of March 13 you say: 'We think it would be far better to do away with the liquidation clauses.' Having seen the working of the Acts of 1849, 1861, and 1869, during twenty-seven years' experience in connection with the Court of Bankruptcy, I took the liberty of suggesting to the Lord Chancellor's committee on bankruptcy the following as a substitute for these most mischievous sections (125 and 126), which, in fact, were a return to the evils of the deed clauses in the Act of 1861, before they were so wholesomely corrected by the Amendment Act of 1868, known as 'Moffatt's'":—

"1. A debtor should be allowed to petition for adjudication of bankruptcy against himself, filing a list of creditors as under the Bankruptcy Act, 1861, provided he could show £ assets to be administered (17 & 18 Vict. c. 119, s. 20).

2. A debtor petitioning against himself should be allowed to have the advertisement of adjudication delayed and proceedings stayed until a meeting of creditors could be called to consider a composition offered for a scheme of settlement proposed by the bankrupt (as in No. 3), provided he deposited funds for the expense of such meeting, and also produced to the Court within a certain time the assents of one-fourth in value of his creditors to such course. The scheme of settlement might contain a proposal of the terms on which the bankrupt should obtain a discharge from his debts. At or before such meeting the bankrupt should produce a statement of affairs, and the majority in value of the creditors might pass the necessary resolution for composition or scheme of settlement, when the proceedings should be followed up as in No. 3; or they might resolve that the estate should be administered in open bankruptcy, and proceed to choose a creditors' trustee. This course would simplify the proceedings, and do away with the expense of receivers and restraining orders. Concurrent petitions by the debtor and the creditor ought not to be permitted to exhaust the assets.

"3. The bankrupt, after having filed his statement of affairs, should be at liberty to offer a composition or propose a scheme of setttlement, to be decided in the first instance by the resolution of a majority in value of the creditors present or represented at a meeting called for the purpose, and to be confirmed by the assents in writing of sufficient creditors to constitute a majority of three-fourths in number and value, or a majority in number and four-fifths in value, of all the creditors, within a prescribed time. All assenting creditors to be required to prove their debts, and the proceeding to be similar to that under the Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1868, commonly known as 'Moffatt's,' and to be subject to the approval of the Court upon the report of its officer."

"I may add, by way of explanation, that No. 3 is the course proposed to be pursued, after the appointment of a trustee, in the case of a bankrupt adjudicated on a creditors' petition. No. 2 is a similar course, before the appointment of a trustee, in the case of a debtor adjudicated on his own petition, in place of the present liquidation procedure."

IRISH BANKRUPTCY BUSINESS.—Our Dublin correspondent informs us that there were nearly 90 entries in the Dublin Bankruptcy Court list for Tuesday last, an unusually heavy accumulation of business.

A COTTON FAILURE.

Under the above title the Liverpool Courier comments upon the case in re J. L. Palethorpe, in the following terms:—

"A curious and, if we are not mistaken, a unique incident in bankruptcy procedure has just occurred in the Liverpool court. A cotton broker, named Palethorpe, failed six months ago with debts to the amount of £21,189, and assets £163 17s. 9d., the latter sum, we suppose, being just about sufficient to pay the expenses of commercial whitewashing. The estate was so very unpromising that few of the creditors took the trouble of proving their debts, and the total amount proved was only about £4,000. Among the latter was a proof of Mr. Meade King for £1,209 1s. 4d., for money lent and paid on the bankrupt's account, and in respect of which he stated that he held no security except a policy of insurance on Palethorpe's life for £1,200, which he valued at £200. This insurance policy has turned out a lucky windfall to the creditors who proved their debts, but not quite so lucky to the holder as he probably anticipated. By the rules under the present act a secured creditor is bound to state the particulars of his security in his proof, and the value at which he assesses the same, and he is to be deemed a creditor only for the balance, and if it happens at any time afterwards that the security produces more than the value at which it has been assessed, the creditor is bound to hand over the difference to the trustee. Mr. Palethorpe died, and thereupon Mr. Bolland, the trustee, with a thorough knowledge of bankruptcy law, and a lynx eye for assets, made a claim for the proceeds of the insurance policy on behalf of the general creditors. The question was referred to the judge of the County Court, and his Honour has just affirmed Mr. Bolland's action. The proceeds of the insurance policy are required to be paid into the general estate, and of course the dividend will be increased by this substantial addition. The estate will thus yield a dividend of about 5 shillings in the pound to those of the creditors who thought it worth while to prove their debts, this result being entirely due to the shrewdness of the trustee in understanding the minutiæ of bankruptcy practice, and keeping a keen look-out for contingent assets. Nor is there any reason to complain of the decision. It is clearly more equitable that the whole body of creditors should pro rata receive the benefit of the insurance policy than that one creditor should be paid in full, and all the rest obtain nothing whatever."

EJECTING A BANKRUPT IN SCOTLAND.

We extract the following from the Dundee Advertiser:

William Robertson, iron merchant, Dundee, and Wm. Stiven, accountant, Dundee, trustee on the sequestrated estate of Chas. Denoon Young, have presented a petition to Sheriff Barclay to grant warrant for summarily removing and ejecting C. D. Young from Inveralmond House, where he resides. The petition set forth that part of the sequestrated estates of C. D. Young consists of the lease of Inveralmond House up to the term of Whitsunday next (old style), and also of the household furniture therein; and on the 1st of the present month Wm. Stiven sold to Wm. Robertson the whole of the household furniture at the sum of £555, which price had been paid, it being part of the bargain that Wm. Robertson should have right to the use of Inveralmond House from the 1st of March current to the term of Whitsunday, and also that a person on his behalf should be entitled to enter the house and remain in possession; that Mr Young, although desired and required by Mr Stiven to remove and flit on the 5th March, had declined to do so; that the petitioner, Wm. Robertson, in terms of the agreement between him and Mr Stiven, on the 2d March sent Robert Pullar, carter, residing in Dundee, to enter Inveralmond House and remain in possession of it; and that the respondent refused to allow him to enter, but that, having at last effected an entrance, he was now in possession of it and the household furniture; that the respondent illegally and wrongously threatened personal violence towards Joseph Pullar, and summarily threatened to eject him. The petitioners therefore prayed the Sheriff to grant warrant to eject Mr Young, to grant warrant against him ejecting Joseph Pullar, and also for interim interdict. The Sheriff has issued the following interdict:—

"Perth, 4th March, 1875.—The case being called on the roll of new actions, the agent for the defender stated that his client was at present from home, and, from the extreme shortness of the induciæ, he was unable at present to state a defence. But he called for production of a mandate from Mr Stiven, the trustee, authorizing this action, and for the other papers founded on, and which productions the Sheriff-Substitute orders, and adjourns the case till Friday, at 11 o'clock forenoon, for receiving these productions and proceeding with the record; and the pursuer's solicitor having moved for interim interdict, refuses the same.

(Signed) "Hugh Barclay."

"Note.—The interdict appears to be most anomalous. If the petitioners have right to the furniture they may get it removed: and if the defender interferes to prevent this they can apply for a warrant. If they are entitled instantly to remove the defender and take possession of the house they will in proper time be heard thereon under the prayer of the petition; but at their own hand to intrude a man into the house in which the defender and his family are admittedly dwelling, and to seek the aid of the law to prevent the possessor from extruding that stranger or any person who may succeed him as sentinel, is something most extraordinary. A man's house in this country is proverbially his castle, and no one, even Royalty, can enter without leave or warrant of the law. The householder may be bankrupt and in the depths of poverty, but this only renders him all the more entitled to the protection of the law against such invasion or inroad.

Long as was the record of the failures last year, we see from the foregoing statistics that the number in 1861 was much greater. As to their aggregate amount, the failures of last year were almost equalled by those of 1872, and greatly exceeded by those of 1857, 1861, and 1874. The suggestion may also be made that the total business of the country has doubled since 1857, so that the percentage of failures in that year must have been three or four times as great as in 1874. Moreover, if we compare the failures of last year with those of previous returns, the result is less disadvantageous than might have been supposed. The total in 1874 is reported at $155,239,000. This amount of liabilities was divided among 5,830 insolvent firms. An easy calculation shows that each insolvent firm averaged $26,627 of liabilities, and that assuming the same average for the 650,000 solvent firms referred to above, the aggregate liabilities of the commercial classes amount to $17,307,550,000. In round numbers, therefore, the average liabilities may be taken at $17,000,000, and assuming that liabilities run off every 90 days, the total liabilities created during the year are nearly $68,000,000.

THE WILLS OF GREAT LAW-MAKERS.

The fact that the wills of two Lord Chancellors, within as many years, should have occasioned grave difficulty, is not a little remarkable. Lord Westbury's will, carefully prepared by himself, was said to be exceedingly hard to construe by the Master of the Rolls. In the case of Lord St. Leonards the difficulty is still more grave. His will, written "in his own handwriting, on five or six sheets of old quarto white letter-paper," has been lost, and the advertisement declares that it has been "lost since August, 1873." Unless the document is forthcoming, the presumption of law may possibly be in such a case that the testator destroyed this will animo revocandi, and serious results to his family may be the consequence. It is curious how often the wills of eminent lawyers have occasioned litigation. Lord Chief Justice Saunders appears to have made a speculative devise, upon the validity of which his executors—Maynard, Holt, and Pollexfen, all great lawyers—were divided in opinion. The wills of Lord Chief Justice Holt and Mr Serjeant Maynard were the subject of Chancery proceedings. So was the will of Chief Baron Thomson. Mr Serjeant Hill's will was "so singularly confused that, but for the respect due to the very learned serjeant, it might, not unreasonably, have been held void for uncertainty." The will of Sir Samuel Romilly was inartificially drawn. The will of Mr Bradley, the celebrated conveyancer, was set aside by Lord Thurlow for uncertainty; "and a late learned Master in Chancery directed the proceeds of his estate to be invested in Consols in his own name."—Pall Mall Gazette

An Exalted Audit.—The Spectator says:—"There are hundreds of men of high character in England, and scores of men of high character and fixed position who are only anxious for something to do, and who would be specially attracted by a position involving responsibility and rewarded by emolument, but not accompanied by the necessity for daily work. It would be invidious to mention living names, but take a man like the late Sir Charles Jackson, who investigated the affairs of the former Bank of Bombay and of the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway with such success. What would it be worth the while of any company to pay for his distinct assurance after investigation that all was going on straight? We do not say that any minor company could afford to pay such a visitor, but a dozen companies might, and would in paying him secure services as valuable as those of a State auditor —and indeed more so, as the State auditor would be compelled, more or less, to trust the figures before him. We believe, if the innovation becomes general, a class of men would come forward who would be as much trusted as the judges, and very nearly as discreet, whose visits would be the terror of dishonest directors, and who would have the power to insist that any suspicious transaction or method of doing business should be at at once abandoned. A new and very high profession would spring up, with a professional honour, and with, in time, a certainty that the raspy honesty which might occasionally cost them work would in the end recommend them to the public choice. It is in the existence of an officer with power to investigate, yet unfettered by personal responsibility for the measures adopted, that the security of shareholders must lie, and he can be obtained only through the intervention of the State, or their own election.

Chief Clerks in Chancery.—Of these officers there are twelve. Three are attached to the Master of the Rolls, and nine are distributed amongst the Vice-Chancellors. They are paid a minimum salary of £1,200, and a maximum of £1,500. They are assisted by 46 clerks, viz.: - Twenty-five junior clerks, at a minimum salary of £400, advancing by yearly increments of £20 after five years' service to £500; nine additional clerks, of whom eight are at fixed salaries, ranging from £200 to £300, and one enters at £250 and advances by £10 a year to £300; twelve assistant clerks, who enter at £150, and advance by annual increments of £10 after five years' service to £250.

INFANT MORTALITY AND INSURANCE.—Mr T. B. Sprague, Vice-President of the Society of Actuaries, has just completed a report on the mortality among the infants whose lives are insured in the Royal Liver Friendly Society. The investigation, he explains, was undertaken in consequence of certain remarks contained in the fourth report of the Friendly Societies Commissioners. The Commissioners state that they cannot agree with the opinion expressed by the House of Commons Select Committee in 1854, that the instances of child murder with the motive of obtaining money from a burial society are very few; and they add that the records of the criminal courts unhappily prove that the danger to human life from insurance is real. In support of these views, various facts and arguments are brought forward in the report, including, Mr Sprague regrets to say, an erroneous deduction from his evidence before the Commissioners. Mr Sprague continues:—"Although I stated that the mortality among the general body of members in the London district of the Royal Liver Friendly Society was much higher than the mortality throughout the whole country, I did not say this was the case as regards the children insured in this society; and, as a matter of fact, I did not find the rate of mortality among those children unduly high. The committee of management of the Royal Liver Friendly Society, immediately on becoming aware of the opinions on the subject of infant mortality expressed by the Commissioners, at once resolved to make the completest possible investigation into the actual facts of their experience as regards infant mortality, feeling certain that the results would show that the opinions held by the Commissioners are entirely mistaken—at all events, as regards the lives insured with the Royal Liver Society. The registers kept at the head office of the society in Liverpool furnish all the materials that are necessary for any investigation of the kind. In those are recorded the name of every member, the date of joining the society, the particulars of the insurance, and the date of death, or (as nearly as can be ascertained) the date of the member leaving the Society voluntarily. These registers having been carefully kept since the 1st of January, 1869, a vast mass of statistical material has been accumulated, from which exact information can be readily extracted, as regards the rate of mortality among the members, and similar questions. The committee of management having previously resolved to have a complete investigation and valuation of the Society's affairs made up to the 31st of December, 1871, the number of members of the Society at that date had been carefully ascertained, and the particulars of their insurances extracted from the registers. The number of members dying at each age during the years 1871 and 1872 was also carefully ascertained; and by means of these facts I was enabled to arrive at the conclusions as to the rate of mortality among the children up to three years of age, contained in my report to the committee of management of the 19th of June last, from which the following is extracted." After giving various tables of mortality among the insured, and commenting on them, Mr. Sprague concludes:—"It is now clear beyond dispute that, regarding the Society as a whole, these facts conclusively prove that the cold-blooded calculations attributed by the Commissioners to the members of the Royal Liver (among other Societies) have no existence save in the imagination of the Commissioners. When the figures for the individual districts are examined, it is found that in consequence of the numbers of children under observation being smaller, the figures representing the rates of mortality in successive months do not proceed with the same regularity. The progression has, however, the same general character, and nowhere is there seen any such sudden increase in the mortality at the 7th or 13th month of insurance as to lend any countenance to the opinion hazarded by the Commissioners. Such irregularities as occur are clearly due to the smallness of the numbers under observation in the various districts; the larger the number of deaths in a district, the less are the irregularities; and they are not confined to any particular months as the 7th and 13th, but in one district occur in one month, and in others at quite different months. Although in the case of London an apparent sudden increase in the rate of mortality is seen in the 13th month, there is, in another instance—that of Leeds—a still more marked diminution of the mortality in that month; and the general conclusion is, as stated above, that such fluctuations in the rate of mortality as this table exhibits are to be considered as the accidental fluctuations that are unavoidable when limited numbers of observations are dealt with. Although, in making the investigation above described, my object has been not so much to clear the Royal Liver Society from the charges brought against it in common with other Societies as to ascertain the real facts of the case, yet it is no little satisfaction to me to find that the result so convincingly proves that the Commissioners are wrong, and that the House of Commons Select Committee in 1854 was more correct when it said that 'the instances of child-murder, where the sole object has been to obtain money from a burial society, are so few as by no means to impose upon Parliament an obligation for the sake of public morality to legislate specially with a view to the prevention of that crime.'"

WINDING UP.—In the Rolls Court, on the 20th instant, an order was made to wind up the Leicestershire and North of England Fire Insurance Company (Limited). A petition for the winding-up by the Court of Chancery of the General South American Company (Limited) is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 16th prox. A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Great National Fire Insurance Company (Limited). A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Builders' and General Advance Association (Limited).

THE LONDON BANKRUPTCY COURT.—The court will be closed until the 15th of April. Applications may be made at the court in Basinghall-street, except on the 27th and Easter Monday and Tuesday, on which days the courts and offices will be entirely closed.

Berrow's Worcester Journal, of March 20th, says that in the case of Alexander Hunter, a bankrupt, formerly of this city, an application was made by the Comptroller for the committal of Mr Charles Russell, accountant, Dudley, trustee in this bankruptcy, for failing to comply with a requisition of the Comptroller as mentioned in an order of the Court, made on January 20. On the application of Mr Ernest Whitehouse, Dudley, who appeared for Mr Russell, his Honour allowed a further period of fourteen days for the trustee to comply with the order of the Court.- [We do not find the name of this trustee in the last published list of Accountants in England.—ED. Accountant.]

NEWSPAPER STATISTICS.—From the "Newspaper Press Directory" for 1875 we extract the following on the present position of the Newspaper Press:—"There are now published in the United Kingdom 1,609 newspapers, distributed as follows:—England—London, 308; Provinces, 939--1,247; Wales, 58; Scotland, 149; Ireland, 137; Isles, 18. Of these there are—daily papers, England, 98; Wales, 2; Scotland, 14; Ireland, 19; Isles, 2." On reference to the first edition of this directory (1846) we find the following interesting facts—viz., that in that year there were published in the United Kingdom 549 journals; of these 14 were issued daily—viz., England 12, Ireland 2; but in 1875 there are now established and circulated 1,609 papers, of which no less than 135 are issued daily, showing that the Press of this country has very greatly extended during the last 29 years, and especially so in daily papers, the daily issues standing 135 as against 14 in 1846. The magazines now in course of publication, including the quarterly reviews, number 643, of which 240 are of a decidedly religious character, representing the Church of England, Wesleyans, Methodists, Baptists, Independents, Roman Catholics, and other Christian communities.

INSURANCE OF INFANT LIVES.—A deputation recently waited upon the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with whom was the Home Secretary, with reference to the "Infants' Insurance" clause of this measure, to ask that the Government would not limit the insurance, as proposed, because of the "stigma" attaching to the working classes in consequence. Mr. Macdonald, M.P., introduced the deputation, among whom were Mr. George Potter, Mr. George Howell, Mr. Broadhurst, Mr. Campin, Mr. Thomas Conolly, Mr. Wheatstone, Mr. Thomas Ashton, and Mr. Dyer. Several members of the deputation addressed the Ministers, and put it that a decided stigma would be attached to the working classes if the £3 limit was maintained, and said that £6 would not more than cover funeral expenses. Mr. Broadhurst went further, and said that there should be no limitation, as the parents could not afford to pay many premiums. Sir Stafford said he had listened with great interest to the views which had been expressed, and he said he should like to know if they discussed the matter as a question of reason or of feeling. If they looked at it as a question of feeling, he should like to ask them if they could conceive any motive the Government could have in doing anything which would unnecessarily wound the feelings of the working classes. Nothing but the conviction that what the Government had proposed was necessary for the real interest of the working classes would have induced the Government to undertake this measure. He thought too much had been said of the stigma which would attach if this clause passed. No such idea was in the minds of the Commissioners or of the Government, and it was with great regret he had seen it stated that this stigma would attach. He proceeded to point out that the evidence of the Commission showed that the children had to be protected against others than their parents, and he stated that it was within his experience that this was so, as a father at Liverpool had told him that others had had to do with the death of his child. Sir Stafford pointed out, too, that no other class of the community could insure infant lives but members of Friendly Societies, and that, therefore, it was a privilege and not a right; and the necessity of its being guarded he showed from statements of the Macclesfield Societies, an officer of the Association of those Societies having stated that one child was found to be insured in several to about £30. Sir Stafford spoke also of the "drinking" rules of other societies, and said the Government did not desire to stop the progress of Friendly Societies, but to urge them on in a right way, and to give them all the support the law could. He concluded by putting some practical questions to the deputation, and by assuring them of the best desire of the Government towards the working classes. Mr Howell acknowledged that the bill was a good one and fair towards the working classes, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer reiterated that he should be glad of information on all points. The deputation then retired.

Bullion and Specie.—The Custom-house accounts of the imports and exports of gold and silver bullion and specie registered in the year 1874 show £30,380,968 as the value of the imports into the United Kingdom, and £22,853,593 the value of the exports, both amounts being less than in the preceding year, the imports by £3,222,256 and the exports by £6,045,692. The import of gold in 1874 amounted to only £16,743,352, a decrease of £3,867,163; and the export of gold was £10,641,636, a decrease of £8,429,584. The import of gold from Australia declined from £9,444,495 in 1873 to £6,720,878 in 1874; from South America from £3,122,803 to £2,863,412; from Egypt from £2,206,804 to £223,250; from France from £1,508,985 to £740,395; but our import of gold from the United States increased from £3,174,472 in 1873 to £4,508,740 in 1874. The decrease in our exports of gold was most marked in the instance of Germany, the export thither falling from upwards of eight millions in 1872, and upwards of seven millions in 1873, to £132,000 in 1857; the export to the United States and to Spain fell to a merely nominal amount in 1874; the export to Egypt from £1,178,069 in 1873 to £910,663 in 1874; but our export of gold to South America increased from £928,034 in 1873 to £1,876,727 in 1874; and to France from £632,316 to no less than £4,848,562. Our imports of silver in 1874 amounted to £13,637,616, being more by £644,907 than in 1873; and our export of silver in 1874 rose to £12,211,957, an increase of £2,383,892. The import of silver from South America rose to £3,996,316, and from Germany to £2,351,968; the import from France declined to £1,172,272, and a very great decrease brought the import from the United States down to £3,477,322. The export of silver to Egypt, destined chiefly for China and India, rose to £6,683,456, or much more than double the amount in 1873; the export to Spain rose from £376,700 to £1,882,312; but the export to France being but £1,321,658, was much less than half that of 1873. The result of these Custom-house returns is that they show in 1874 imports of gold exceeding the exports of gold by £6,101,716, and imports of silver exceeding the exports of silver by £1,425,659, making our total increase £7,527,375 in the year.

Purchase of Government Life Annuities.—In the year 1874 life annuities amounting to £56,499 were purchased by the public at the National Debt Office. The consideration for the grant of these annuities consisted of £172,307 stock, and £423,693 money, transferred and paid to the National Debt Commissioners.

Defaulting Trustees.—We are indebted to the Law Times for the following information:—"Five hundred trustees were summoned before the Bankruptcy Courts during 1873, at the instances of the official assignee, for neglect of duty, chiefly in regard to audit of accounts. About 200 of these, complying before the hearing of the summons, no orders were made against them. The majority of the remaining 300 were ordered to furnish the required accounts, and to pay the costs occasioned by their default, which came in the aggregate to a considerable amount.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating arounds us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lock-maker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th Sept, 1873). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

TRANSLATIONS.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,
BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,
62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages, on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

APRIL 3, 1875.

Two letters which we publish on the subject of bankruptcy reform deal with the question from a different point of view. The solicitor, as usual, rails at the accountants, objects to local courts of bankruptcy, and has, evidently, but little faith in County Court Judges, who ought certainly to be prodigies of learning and intelligence to fulfil the various duties cast upon them. The letter of Mr. Bolland is a sound and practical contribution to the story of the working of the Act. He has undoubtedly shown that, with regard to the realisation of small estates, it is impossible to devise any satisfactory means of preventing the costs swallowing up a large portion of the assets, though he thinks that a very little alteration would render the machinery of the Act admirably fitted for realising and distributing large estates. Many of his suggestions for diminishing petty expenses are good, and we cordially echo his protest against the excessively high charges of the auctioneers, which need certainly not be higher than in ordinary cases of sale. We are glad to see that Mr. Bolland endorses the views we have so often expressed as to the difficult and laborious nature of the duties which devolve upon the trustees in small estates. The question of their remuneration is a difficult one. Of course a per centage arranged upon a sliding scale would answer very well in large matters, and we should be inclined to apply it to all cases. But then we advocate the establishment of a class from which official trustees might be chosen. This class might fairly be required to undertake duties which would be little more than barely remunerative, if they were employed also in heavier cases which would pay them well for their time and trouble. It might also be in the discretion of the court to award an extra fee, if satisfied that features of unusual difficulty or laboriousness had presented themselves. And a ratio might be established between the estimated and realised assets, which might also be taken into consideration in calculating the amount of extra remuneration. One thing is certain, that the amendment of the Act is only to be effected by the co-operation of the much abused accountants; and if they take the chief part in working it, they are surely the persons best qualified to offer suggestions as to its alteration or improvement. We hope to record many more letters, as fertile of suggestion and as practical in spirit as that of Mr. Bolland.

We have before spoken of the contract with Insurance Companies, and of the manner in which these bodies protect themselves by carefully drawn conditions, so framed as not only to render the enforcing of a fraudulent claim next to impossible, but to act in too many instances as a weapon with which to resist claims of undoubted justice. One of these conditions is as to misrepresentation, which it is provided shall make void the policy. In a case we reported last week, of Watson v. The Imperial Union Assurance Company, a question turning on this point was tried. Mr. Watson, in answer to the usual questions put when he effected his insurance, asserted that he was in good health, and of temperate habits, and also that he had no regular medical attendant. His death was, there seems to be no doubt, accelerated by drink, and the great question was whether he had indulged in this habit previous, or subsequent, to insuring his life, for though Mr. Watson had represented himself as being of temperate habits, there was no undertaking on his part to continue so. The evidence was of the usual conflicting description, some doctors saying that his intemperance must have been of long standing, others, among whom was the medical officer of the company, being equally positive that there was no appearance of this. Mr. Justice Denman left the matter to the jury; in our opinion, more equitably than is often done, expressly raising the question whether or not the statements were fraudulent, though it is usually held that the company escape payment if they have been, even unintentionally, misled. The jury were unable to decide between the various statements made to them, and were discharged without giving a verdict. The evidence of the physician to the company is perhaps the most curious feature in the case, and we should have thought the most conclusive. Medical evidence too often labours under the suspicion of not being free from partisanship, and the conflicting opinions exhibited in every trial have not tended much to raise the professional in general estimation. The present instance is a striking exception.

A letter from W. J. R., commenting upon the decision in Mr. Palethorpe's case, must be read in connection with our remarks of last week. From the report by which we were guided, we gathered that the debts provable amounted only to £4,000, including in this total the unsecured portion of Mr. Meade King's claim, after deducting the £200. This, we understand from W. J. R., who speaks with apparent knowledge, is incorrect. Of course, if other creditors can prove their claims in time, the dividend will be proportionately diminished. But we must call the attention of our correspondent to the 43rd section of the Act, which provides that though "a creditor who has not proved his debt before the declaration of any dividend shall be entitled to be paid out of any monies for the time being in the hands of the trustee any dividend or dividends he may have failed to receive before such monies are made applicable to the payment of any future dividend or dividends, he shall not be entitled to disturb the distribution of any dividend declared before his debt was proved, by reason that he has not participated therein." Nor is it obligatory on the trustee to provide for any debts appearing in the bankrupt's schedule, except those of persons who, by reason of residence at a distance, have not had time to prove their claims, or of claims not yet determined. It is, therefore, quite possible that a large dividend may yet be paid; and as the committee of inspection, if there is one, determine the declaration of a dividend, and as such committee is chosen by the creditors who have proved at the first meeting, the sooner W. J. R., if he is a creditor, sends in his proof the better. Reasonable notice (Rule 181) is a term of varied meaning. We must add that our remarks applied to the case of bankruptcy only, and not to that of liquidation, as the report we had before us when we wrote treated the case as one of bankruptcy pnr et simple. If, however, the proceedings were by liquidation, then of course the 312th Rule applies. We may refer as to this to the letters of G. W. and H. B. in our numbers for March 13th and March 20th.

It will be seen from our report that a new first meeting of creditors under Sir W. Russell's liquidation is to be held. The grounds on which the Registrar refused to register the resolution were, that a second petition could not be presented till the first liquidation was closed. This reason the Court apparently disapproved. But it was held most clearly that unless it appeared that the creditors were to obtain some advantage by these proceedings, the Registrar's decision must be upheld. The leave now given is based entirely on the fact that a fair proposition will probably be made to the creditors; unless this is done, the proceedings must again prove abortive.

ERRATUM.

A reference in our second leader at p. 3, line 15, of March 27, has been made unintelligible by the printers. It should run thus:—Ex parte Lovering, re Jones, 43 Law Journal (Bankruptcy) p 116.

Mr. John Fraser, Accountant, notifies that the business heretofore carried on by him at Founder's Court, Lothbury and Martin's Lane, Cannon Street, will hereafter be conducted at No. 10 Clement's Lane, Lombard Street.

THE RESPONSIBILITIES OF A TRUSTEE.

(From a Correspondent.)

There has just been brought to our notice a little incident at the present Liverpool Spring Assizes, the circumstances of which, considered in conjunction with the responsibilities attaching to the office of Trustee in Bankruptcy, are deserving of some comment. A short narrative of the facts, though no very momentous issue is involved, will help to dispel the too common and very erroneous belief, that a trustee's office is at all times an office of profit without trouble or risk.

About January 1870 one John Brown and one E. T. Pemberton were carrying on business together in Lancashire as common brewers, the arrangement between them being of a very indefinite character; and as too often happens under similar circumstances, contending disputes arose between them upon their respective rights, ending in this particular case in an adjudication in bankruptcy against Brown, under which a trustee was duly appointed. The trustee's appointment was at once the signal for a series of expensive and wearisome litigations between Brown's creditors, through the trustee, on the one hand, and Pemberton on the other. Brown's trustee claimed all the effects, of whatever character, at the brewery where the business had been carried on. Pemberton set up a counter and similar claim. Amongst the effects in dispute was some ladies' wearing apparel. The litigation commenced with an issue tried before the Local Court, under which a Jury found all to be the property of Brown, and as such divisible amongst Brown's creditors. Some ineffectual attempts were made to induce the Local Judge to vary the order, and Pemberton next made an unsuccessful appeal to the Chief Judge, and not discomfited with that result, he appealed to the Lords Justices, where he was again unsuccessful, and the end was, everything was sold and divided amongst Brown's creditors. The law expenses incurred up to this stage had been very large, and in the meantime there had always been the fact, that if Brown could not be established the owner of the brewery effects, he had little or no other estate; and in that state of things the trustee's position, so long as there was any uncertainty, was one that meant possible and very considerable personal loss. Pemberton, unable to meet the expense his defeat had entailed upon him, himself resorted to bankruptcy under the liquidation clauses of the present Bankruptcy Act, and amongst his largest creditors at the meeting was his opponent, the trustee. This meeting was in October 1870, previous to which there had been some correspondence with, and threats against, the trustee to recover the said ladies' wearing apparel; but ultimately, and in order to finally compromise all matters between Brown's Estate and Pemberton, the latter signed a document (carefully prepared to cover the said wearing apparel), giving the trustee a general release; the trustee simultaneously, and in consideration thereof, withdrawing his opposition at the meeting of Pemberton's creditors.

Brown's bankruptcy was closed in September 1871, and the trustee released in due form in the following November, when most people would suppose he had seen the last of this very harassing case.

The disputes, however, were made to be the subject of further litigation. A dilatory correspondence ensued, and was maintained at intervals down to the end of last year on a claim raised by Pemberton's wife for the said wearing apparel. Pemberton had married two sisters in succession, and the contention therefore was propter hoc that the second wife was not legally Pemberton's wife, and might consequently maintain an independent action for the wearing apparel: and by force of the same reasoning it was said Pemberton did not, and could not, have intended by the document he signed to release that claim. The trustee did not take Pemberton's view of the arrangement; and he was in consequence sued for the value at the Liverpool Winter Assizes, 1874.

The plaintiff claimed £150 damages. The trustee incurred great expense in anticipation of the trial, and retained two counsel for the defence, but was apprised at the last moment that the Plaintiff had not entered his cause. The case was, however, entered for the following and present Liverpool Spring Assizes, and the trustee had a further preparation to make, at a further expense. The case occupied the Assize Judge a considerable part of one whole day, when it was adjourned to occupy a portion of a second day. In the end the action was very abruptly terminated by an intimation from the Jury to the Judge that they had already agreed upon a verdict for the defendant, and counsel were not asked to address the Jury for the defence. Pemberton, therefore, was unsuccessful once more, and if the great expense the trustee has been put to be paid by the plaintiff, there will be no great harm done beyond the worry the trustee has had inflicted upon him; but if this be not done, then it will be readily seen that the trustee will have to endure very considerable personal loss.

We have been tempted to recite the details of this case because they aptly illustrate some of the difficulties of a trustee's position. The trustee in the case named is a man of good parts, and, luckily for himself, a man of substantial means. We shall most of us rejoice always to see cases of a similar character in the hands of men possessed of the same advantages: smaller men would have quailed under such a case, and met the claim by a compromise. The estate of Brown having been closed, the trustee is, of course, without a shilling of assets to cover his loss.

Just now it is the right thing to do, in some circles, to clamour against Accountant's charges, and only a short while ago we saw attributed to one of the Registrars of a London Court some harsh observations having the same tendency. We do not, however, ourselves believe that the dissatisfaction towards Accountants in this sense is so general as some people would have us believe. But we would commend to those who abet or participate in that clamour the consideration of the details of the case to which we have here called attention. We do not wish it to be thought that it is an exceptional or isolated case; but it is one where the particulars are well authenticated to us, and on that account we name it particularly.

Trustees in bankruptcy, who are able men, and honourable in the discharge of their duties, do, doubtless, in framing their charges, take cognizance of the fact that their position is one involving risk, and that such risk may, and often does, arise in a manner that neither foresight nor prudence can obviate. At one time there was a desire among creditors, more or less common, that the position of trustee should be taken by one of themselves. Such a desire is little heard of now, owing, doubtless, to a keener appreciation of the responsibilities of the office. There are, no doubt, many instances in a professional accountant's experience which present none of the difficulties peculiar to the case we have been referring to, but we suspect we are within the fact if we say that there must be a very large number in the profession who could relate experiences equal to, if not like it, and to whom the sum total of losses so incurred for the last five years would be no inconsiderable item of deduction from the aggregate charges made in individual estates for the same period. Tradesmen who credit extensively run proportionately greater risk of bad debts, and inasmuch as it is not given to them to divine in anticipation which will be a good debt, and which will be a bad one, a superaddition is made to their charges, whereby a fund is created to rectify the inevitable catalogue of bad debts. As the tradesman or merchant sells his wares or merchandize, so does the trustee sell his services. He furnishes ability and knowledge of his business, but he also requires a compensation for his risks and responsibilities, and charges, or ought to charge accordingly.

The partners in a firm recently adjudicated bankrupt possess the following motley assortment of names:—William Pickles, Thomas Hanson, John Jagger, James Heliwell, Levi Bottomley, and Samuel Woodhead.

The Society of Accountants in England.—The monthly meeting of the Council of the Society of Accountants in England was held on Wednesday, at the Society's Offices, Cowper's Court, Cornhill. Present—Messrs. J. C. Bolton (in the chair), Harry Brett, F. Nicholls, J. H. Tilly, G. E. Ladbury, and the Secretary (Alfred C. Harper). The following were admitted Associates of the Society, viz. Marshall Preston, 3 Clarence Street, Manchester; and Joe Sharp, 27 Estate Buildings, Huddersfield.

"DEFAULTING TRUSTEES."

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Sir,—A paragraph under this heading appears in your last issue, and you state you are indebted for it to the Law Times. The original source of the information will be found in the annual report of the Comptroller in Bankruptcy to the Lord Chancellor for the year 1873, published about twelve months since. I call attention to the paragraph, as it conveys a somewhat erroneous impression. Your readers may reasonably inquire what the "official assignee" has to do with summoning defaulting trustees before the Court of Bankruptcy. Instead of "official assignee," the paragraph should have stated, "Comptroller in Bankruptcy." I have not seen the Law Times, so am unaware whether the blunder originates with that Journal or with you. But a consideration of the serious number of defaulting trustees is of much greater moment than the technical error to which I have alluded. It appears from the Comptroller's report that on the 31st December, 1873, there were 2819 pending bankruptcies. That the trustees in no less than 500 of these bankruptcies, or an average of nearly 18 per cent., were placed on the Comptroller's "black list," and suffered their neglect of duty to be reported by that officer to the various courts, seems somewhat alarming, and affords a subject for inquiry among professional trustees. I should, as a professional trustee, have been glad to have gathered from the Comptroller's report some statistics as to the proportion of professional to non-professional trustees who thus incurred the unpleasantness of being brought before the Court; and as to the nature of the neglect of duty which formed the subjects of complaint. No information is, however, afforded by the appendix on these points, and for the honor of the Accountants' profession, I must assume that the bulk of the defaulters were non-professional trustees, whose neglect of duty arose rather from ignorance of the rigid requirements of the rules than from a desire to conceal their dealings with the estates from the scrutiny of the Comptroller. This leads me to make a few remarks as to these requirements. I think I shall speak for my professional brethren generally in saying, that some of these requirements are absurdly vexatious, and although we manage to steer clear of the annoyance of being "reported to the Court," still I consider we are, under the present system of procedure, put to a great deal of unnecessary trouble, and the estates, as well as ourselves, to a good deal of unnecessary expense. To summon a meeting of the Committee of Inspection every three months is oftentimes useless and vexatious both to the trustee and committee. The latter naturally protest against being called together to countersign a certificate signed by the trustee to the effect that no money has been received or paid by him since last audit. And having attended one or two such meetings, they positively refuse to attend more. The trustee is in a dilemma. He calls meetings and no one attends. If he happens to be a non-professional he is at a loss what to do, and the chances are he allows the matter to sleep till he is disagreeably aroused by the formal complaint to the Court from the Comptroller which he has served on him with notice to appear before the Court. On the hearing, he finds himself ordered to comply with the requirements of the Rules, and to pay the costs, generally out of his own pocket, the "compliance" consisting in his getting, by hook or by crook, the signatures of the committee to the certificate above referred to. Surely if the signature of the trustee to a certificate is not sufficient guarantee of its truthfulness, the trustee has no business to be filling that office. He cannot possibly be a "fit" person for a position of trust, if his word cannot be accepted unless vouched for by some other persons who, in the majority of cases, cannot answer for its correctness. But if a certificate is not sufficiently binding on the conscience, let an affidavit be substituted. At any rate it is high time to get rid of the present absurd system. Men of business must naturally think that trustees have very little to do, when they find them running after them, begging them as a favour to attach their signatures to such documents as these certificates. And it is just as unbusinesslike to ask committees to audit accounts where the payments during three months consist of a few pence expended in postage stamps. I am myself in favour of getting rid altogether of the necessity of audit by committees, (which has been suggested in your columns,) and of substituting an audit by the Court, or comptroller, at intervals of not less than six months. If such an alteration were made, I am convinced that the comptroller's record of defaulting trustees would soon assume a much healthier aspect. There would remain no excuse for failing to furnish the Court periodically with a Dr. and Cr. account of the trustee's transactions, and the record of defaulters would dwindle down to real defaulters—that is—trustees who have something to conceal, who have mis-appropriated the monies entrusted to them, &c. No doubt there are some such as these, but I am satisfied from my own experience that the blame of the "default" in the majority of the 500 cases reported by the Comptroller may fairly be laid to the present system of audit and to the inattention of committees. I must apologise for trespassing at such length on your valuable space, but I feel that this question must have a personal interest for every accountant who gives his attention to the winding up of bankrupt's estates. I shall therefore be glad to see the matter well ventilated and these suggestions well criticised.

Yours truly,

Trustee in Bankruptcy.

[The paragraph was correctly quoted from our contemporary.—Ed. Accountant.]

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

Dear Sir,—Your issue of the 27th instant contains a paragraph extracted from the Law Times stating that "500 trustees were summoned before the Bankruptcy Courts during 1873, for neglect of duty chiefly in regard to the audit of accounts."

It would have been only fair to state how many of the above number were so summoned in consequence of the Committees of Inspection refusing to act.

I have been summoned for this latter cause, and proved to the Court on affidavits, and by exhibits, that I had both personally, by my clerks, and by letter, requested as a favour that the Inspectors would do their duty, and I was made to pay costs, not because I had neglected my duty, but because I was loth to summon the persons in default.

It is a common thing for Inspectors, when they find an estate is unlikely to pay a dividend, to persistently neglect their duty, and it is not a pleasant position for a trustee to be in. Since I obtained the above experience, I have caused a printed form of notice to be used, which notice clearly warns Inspectors of the consequence of refusal to carry out their share of the duties imposed by the Act and Rules. I enclose a form, and shall feel obliged by your publishing it along with a letter for the guidance of those members of the profession who take upon themselves the part of TRUSTEE.

London, 30th March, 1875.

The form referred to by our Correspondent is as follows :—

Dear Sir,

RE BANKRUPT.

Be good enough to meet your Co-Inspectors here on day, the day of at o'clock noon, for the purposes of auditing the accounts and Estate Book, and . I take this opportunity of reminding you, that, under the Act and Rules (which are very stringent), Inspectors are bound to audit the accounts every three months. Inasmuch as any default is reported by the Comptroller to the Court, the Trustee (in order to protect himself from personal responsibility) is compelled to apply to the Court for an order against any Inspector who shall fail in his duty; and it has been laid down that where an order is made, the offending Inspector shall bear all the costs of such application and order. Your due attention to this notice will, therefore, be deemed a personal favour by ————TRUSTEE.

RE J. L. PALETHORPE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE ACCOUNTANT.

DEAR SIR,—Your article last week with reference to the above matter, I think is likely to mislead some of the creditors interested. You say that the proofs put in amount to about £4,000, and consequently a dividend of 5/ in the £ will be paid thereon; but Mr. Bolland, the Trustee, will surely know that on declaring a dividend he must make provision for payment of the said dividend on all the debts (unsecured) as scheduled by the debtor, and which I understand amount to about £21,000, and also in addition Mr. H. W. Meade King will be entitled to the same dividend upon £1,009 1s. 4d., the amount of his proof, after deducting the assessed value of the security held by him.—Yours faithfully, W. J. R.

Newport, March 31st.

POLITICS IN BANKRUPTCY.—The Hampshire Advertiser thus skilfully mixes up politics and bankruptcy jurisdiction in a paragraph headed "Conservative Reaction.". — During the Liberal Administration we believe more than one attempt was made to recover for the Winchester County Court its bankruptcy jurisdiction, which had been removed to Southampton, to the inconvenience of local and financial 'unfortunates' and of their creditors. These Lord Hatherley did not comply with, but we now rejoice to hear that Lord Cairns, the Lord Chancellor of the Conservative Government, which our Liberal friends in the Council recently 'gently scorned,' has complied with the desire of the city authorities, and restored to Winchester Court its own jurisdiction in bankruptcy, and added to it that of Basingstoke.

Messrs. Broad, Broad and Paterson, Public Accountants, announce that they have taken into partnership, Mr. William Holmes May, and that in future their business will be carried on under the style or firm of Broads, Paterson and May.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

March 25.

(Before Mr. Registrar PEPYS.)

IN RE REED, OTHERWISE SINTZENICH.—Upon the application of Mr. Harston, his Honour appointed a receiver under a petition for adjudication presented against Edward Reed, otherwise Edward Reed Sintzenich, described as of 36 Finsbury-Circus, and of Holland-road villas, Kensington, banking and emigration agent. The debtor made an affidavit in support of the application, from which it appeared that his liabilities amounted to £8,000, the assets, consisting chiefly of furniture, to the estimated value of £1,700.—An interim injunction, restraining further proceedings at the suit of several execution creditors, was also granted.

IN RE HAY, INGRAM, AND CO.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition has been filed by John Ogilvy Hay and Matthew Lisle Ingram, trading as merchants, at 70 Great Tower-street, as Hay, Ingram, & Co., and at Akyab, Rangoon, and Bassein, in British Burmah, under the firm of John Ogilvy Hay and Co. The liabilities are estimated at £155,000, of which about £97,000 will probably be covered; the assets consist chiefly of margins on consignments, the value of which cannot yet be ascertained.—Upon the application of Mr. Baker (Lawrance, Plews, and Co.), his Honour appointed a receiver and manager, and granted the usual interim restraining order.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE SIR WILLIAM RUSSELL.—The debtor, a shipowner and merchant of Salter's-hall-court, Cannon-street, and formerly M.P. for Norwich, presented several months since a petition for liquidation. The creditors passed a resolution, but upon the papers being brought before Mr. Registrar Keene for registration he declined to receive them, on the ground that a former liquidation of the debtor's affairs was still pending, and there were, therefore, no assets in existence available for distribution. The Lords Justices upon appeal affirmed that decision, and the proceedings fell to the ground. Subsequently, with a view to the debtor making a substantial offer to the creditors, a new first meeting was applied for, and the Court gave the desired leave. Mr. Jeune, for Colonel Frazer, a creditor, now asked that the order appointing a new first meeting should be rescinded. He contended that the matter had been disposed of by the Court of Appeal, and that the proceedings under the second petition for liquidation were at an end. Mr. Registrar Hazlitt said that he had hesitated to make the order, but he understood that an offer to the creditors would be forthcoming. He thought if some reasonable proposal were made, unpleasant and troublesome proceedings in bankruptcy might possibly be avoided. Mr. Jeune pointed out that the affidavit used in support of the application was defective, and he urged that it would be competent to the creditors to adopt any arrangement they might think fit, under the 28th section, after adjudication. Mr. Linklater, solicitor for Mr. Lawrie, another creditor, also opposed the application, stating that the debtor had not yet paid the costs of the appeal to the Lords Justices. He submitted that the debtor must first purge himself of the obligations which rested upon him before he was entitled to ask for any indulgence. Mr. Munns, solicitor for the debtor, opposed the application to rescind the order. His Honour thought he could not interfere with the order. The Lords Justices had, no doubt, expressed their disapproval of the practice of allowing new first meetings of creditors to be held, but exceptional cases might arise. In the present case the creditors might get £3,000 or £4,000 if the meeting were allowed to be held; if not, £300 or £400 would be probably all they would receive. Of course, if the debtor was not prepared with a substantial offer the proceedings would be futile. Application refused.

April 1.

(Before Mr. Registrar Pepys.)

In re Reed, otherwise Sintzenich.—This was an application for the continuance of an interim injunction, granted last week, restraining further proceedings at the suit of various creditors. The debtor, Edward Reed, otherwise Edward Reed Sintzenich, was described as of 36 Finsbury-circus, and of Holland-road villas, Kensington, banking and emigration agent. His liabilities are estimated at about £8,000, the assets, consisting principally of household furniture, valued at £1,700. A petition for adjudication has been filed, and a receiver appointed. The question now arose whether the furniture, which had been seized by the sheriff of Middlesex and advertised for sale, should be sold, or whether the injunction should be continued with a view to the sale of the property by the trustee when appointed. Mr. Harston, on behalf of the receiver and petitioning creditor, submitted that it would be advantageous for the sale to be postponed, as a good offer would probably be obtained for the house and furniture if sold together; whereas a sale of the furniture by the sheriff was likely to be detrimental to the creditors. Mr. Sorrell and Mr. Flower, on behalf of the execution creditors, asked that the sale might go on (the cost of advertising it having already been incurred), and the proceeds would then be held by the sheriff subject to the order of the Court. His Honour thought this would be the better course, and, therefore, made no order for the continuance of the injunction.

In re W. T. Henley.—The debtor, whose liabilities are reported to be very heavy, is described as of Plaistow and North Woolwich; also of the Pontnewyndd Iron Works, in the county of Monmouth, and of 110 Fenchurch-street, telegraph engineer aad contractor. Upon the application of Mr. Sydney Gedge, on behalf of a creditor for £20,000, his Honour appointed a receiver and manager, it appearing that several valuable contracts were outstanding, which it was important to complete.

FAILURES.

England.—The suspension has been announced of Messrs. Hay, Ingram, and Co., merchants of London and Rangoon, and a petition has been filed for the liquidation of their estate. The liabilities are stated to be £150,000, with assets of unascertained value, consisting mainly of margins on consignments. On the application of Messrs. Lawrance, Plews, and Co. for creditors, Mr. J. Waddell has been appointed receiver and manager. The suspension has been announced on the Bradford Exchange, of Mr. John Rawnsley, jun., manufacturer, Dudley Hill, Bradford. The liabilities are said to be between £10,000 and £15,000. This is the second Bradford manufacturer who has gone to the wall within the last fortnight. Barlow Brothers, cotton spinners, Crawshawbooth, have failed. Liabilities £8,600; assets from £1,600 to £3,000.

America.—American advices report the following failures. The liabilities of Messrs. Wheatley, Williams, and Co., sugar refiners, New York, are put down at about £135,000; assets £134,000; £40,000 or more, however, being doubtful. The firm proposed paying 50 per cent. in instalments. The creditors had taken no action. The suspension of Mr. J. Winslow Jones, Portland, Maine, has been announced. Messrs. U. H. Dudley and Co., New York City, had sued and attached the property of the firm for the sum of £25,000 to secure an indebtedness of 83,000 dollars. Mr. Dan C. Fisk, stockbroker, 15 Wall-street, New York, had failed. The Western Savings Bank, St. Louis, Mo., had closed its doors. The National Fire Insurance Company, of Philadelphia, had suspended. Those interested were making efforts to make a compromise with the creditors. Mr. Cahoon, shipping merchant, Queen's County, N.S., had failed; liabilities about £10,000. Messrs. Park and Borrowman, of Amherstburg, Canada, in the hardware trade, had also suspended. Messrs. Timothy Rajotte, of Ottawa; Messrs. C. King and Co., Ottawa; Messrs. Desmarteau and Bond, Montreal; Messrs. W. Fairweather and Co., Peterboro; and Mr. Mark T. Rogers, of Napanee; all well known in dry goods circles, were unable to pay in full. Morris Run Coal Company, Syracuse, N.J., had temporarily suspended, with liabilities of abont £170,000. It was also reported that Messrs. Beck Brothers, stockbrokers, Boston had failed. Messrs. Simpson, Whitehead, & Co., in the hardware trade, Montreal, had suspended; Messrs. Armstrong Brothers, and Messrs. Guen Brothers, both of the same city, had made an assignment. Messrs. Champlain and Merritt Noyes, of Bennington, Vt., with liabilities £8,000. The Bridgeport (Conn.) Paper Company were in financial difficulties.

The National Zeitung quotes an account of a group of recent Austrian failures. The General Bohemian Insurance Bank (established in 1872) had, beside numerous branches in the provinces, agents in Hamburg, Amsterdam, and St. Petersburg. It began with an ostensible capital of 6,000,000 florins in 30,000 shares of 200 florins each. Only 10,000 shares, with 40 per cent. paid up, were placed, however, so that the paid up capital did not exceed 800,000 florins. Its operations were, nevertheless, very large, and it concluded insurances amounting to 66,000,000 florins, its existence mainly depending upon the prompt payment of the premiums. The year of the crisis, 1873, tested the institution severely as regards the payments due to it, and a succession of heavy claims made havoc with its capital. The failure has some political significance, as the bank was a national Bohemian institute. A second failure also affects the insurance business. The Pesth Cattle Insurance Company has succumbed after an existence of six years. Liquidation was resolved upon last year, but the association found itself in very straightened circumstances. A third stoppage is that of the Inland Gas Company, which had a paid-up capital of 2,000,000 florins. The third dozen of Austrian joint-stock failures is thus completed.

The failure of Mr. William Thomas Henley, telegraph engineer and contractor, was announced on Wednesday. The liabilities are variously estimated from £250,000 to £500,000. Mr. Henley's books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Robert Fletcher and Co., of 2 Moorgate-street, E.C., accountants.

J. C. im Thurn and Co.—In the matter of J. C. im Thurn and Co.'s failure, the Court of Bankruptcy made a special order fixing the first general meeting of the creditors to be held at the Cannon-street Hotel, on Wednesday, June 16 next, and also appointing Mr. John Young, of the firm of Turquand, Youngs, and Co., receiver and manager of the estate.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

John Gray (Mile End-Road).—In this case the debtor, John Gray, late of 75, Mile End-road, in the county of Middlesex, tobacconist, filed his petition for liquidation in July last, and Mr. W. L. C. Browne, of the firm of C. Browne, Stanley, and Co., Public Accountants, Old Jewry, was appointed trustee. The secured creditors amounted to £2,715, unsecured creditors £486 15s; the total assets being £6,300. In the face of these assets, it was rather extraordinary that the debtor should have filed his position, but the property being in the hands of Mortgagees, it was impossible for him to realize, and as creditors were pressing him, he was compelled to petition the court. The trustee with the assistance afforded him by the debtor, was enabled to effect an arrangement by which all the creditors have lately been paid 20s. in the pound, and the residue of the estate, after providing for the mortgages and expenses revested in the debtor by an order of the Court, made on the 5th March instant, dismissing the petition, Messrs. Smith, Fowdon, and Low, of Bread-street, Cheapside, are the Solicitors to the proceedings.

GEORGE HUNTLEY STEBBING (Witham).—A first meeting of the creditors of George Huntley Stebbing, cattle dealer, of Whitehall, Wickham Bishops, near Witham a bankrupt, was held at the Shire Hall, Chelmsford, on Wednesday, Mr. T. M. Gepp, Registrar of the County Court, presiding. Messrs. Evans and Eagles, of 10 John-street, Bedford-row, London, appeared as solicitors for the petitioning creditor (Mr. William Fenner, farmer and cattle dealer, of Lexden, near Colchester) and as proxies for several other creditors. Mr. H. W. Jones, of Colchester, and Mr. Middleton, of the firm of Philbrick and Middleton, Colchester, were also present. The petition was filed on March 8, and adjudication of bankruptcy made the same day on the debtor's consent to adjudication forthwith, the act of bankruptcy being that the debtor had filed, in the prescribed manner, a declaration of his inability to pay his debts. The bankrupt now filed his statement of accounts, from which it appeared that his liabilities amounted to about £6,000, and his assets to about £1,100. Debts were proved to the amount of £2,312. Mr. Middleton, who admitted that he had no status in the court, said he merely attended to protest against the proceedings as being utterly illegal, they having been, as he contended, improperly transferred from the County Court at Colchester to this court. The present adjudication, he said, was obtained when another jurisdiction was on the file and had not been properly removed, and the bankrupt, by fraud, had improperly removed from one place to another, his proper residence being still in the district of Colchester, where the large body of his creditors lived.—The Registrar: All this was founded and grounded on the affidavit of the solicitor conducting.—Mr. Evans said the answer was that the first bankruptcy was annulled by an order of the Chief Judge, and, secondly, that between the liquidation and the bankruptcy the bankrupt had removed to his present residence within the jurisdiction of this court.—Mr. F. C. Fitch, of Halstead, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

J. W. GIRLING (GREAT YARMOUTH).—A meeting of the creditors of John Warner Girling, of Great Yarmouth, butcher, was held on Wednesday, 31st March, 1875, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, being appointed trustee. Mr. F. W. Ferrier is solicitor in the proceeedings.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. J. Waddell has been appointed receiver and manager of the firm of Hay, Ingram, and Co., merchants, of London and Rangoon whose affairs are now in liquidation.

BANKRUPT APPEALS will be taken on the following days:—At Lincoln's Inn, Friday, April 16; Thursday, April 22; Thursday, April 29; Thursday, May 6th.

The London Gazette of last Tuesday did not announce a single adjudication of bankruptcy, either in town or country.

A SEEDY individual was arraigned for theft. Question by the judge: "Did you steal the complainant's coat?" Seedy individual: "I decline to gratify the morbid curiosity of the public by answering that question."

The Law Times says:—It may not be generally known that certificated special pleaders and conveyancers are liable to be sued in an action for the negligent discharge of professional duties, and can recover their fees by action at law from a solicitor or other client employing them. It is usually supposed that all associates of the Superior Courts of Common Law in England and Ireland are necessarily members of the Bar, the fact being that some have no connection with the Profession.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

As intimated in our issue of the 13th March, Mr. Henry Bolland, Accountant, Liverpool, has addressed a second letter to the Committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. Mr. Bolland's second letter is as follows:—

Gentlemen,—I took the liberty in a former letter to offer some suggestions with respect to the arrangement sections of the Act and rules, and intended in this communication to have referred generally to other portions of the Act and rules which, in my experience, have not worked harmoniously, but the question of the remuneration of trustees, and of the costs of solicitors, auctioneers, and receivers seems to be of greater importance, and therefore deserving of prior consideration. With respect to trustees' remuneration, no more difficult question could come before your committee than properly to estimate the value of his services, so as to frame a fixed scale of remuneration. At present, as you are aware, the matter is left to the creditors, and, practically, that means in small estates to the trustee himself, for with the proxies by which he votes himself trustee he can pass his remuneration, or fix it by resolution, at the first meeting.

But assuming the evil of the proxy system to be abolished, which I trust your committee may see their way to effect, the question remains what is a trustee's reasonable remuneration? Now one of the objects of the present Act was to reduce the expenses of administering an insolvent's estate, and with that view to assimilate it to the Scottish system, under which the average expenses do not exceed, if I remember correctly, 15 per cent.
