But how have the rules harmonised with this object? Why, according to the scale of costs, a trustee has to pay an auctioneer 10 per cent. on the first hundred pounds' worth of assets realised. The evil of the present system, like that of all its predecessors, is that the same machinery is required for the administration of a small estate as for a large one, where the assets are £1,000 or more. Assume an insolvent debtor, with liabilities £600 and assets £150, presents his petition for liquidation, or becomes bankrupt, what is the result? He has to employ a solicitor, whose costs, according to the scale, up to and including registration, reach at least £20, especially if legal proceedings are pending against the debtor, and restraining orders have to be obtained and a receiver appointed. The receiver, in possession for three weeks, up to the first meeting, requires, at a moderate estimate, £10. A trustee is chosen, who employs an auctioneer, whose charge is £12 10s. The trustee's remuneration depends upon circumstances. If there is a hostile creditor he may insist upon a deficiency account being prepared, also stock and cash accounts for the six months preceding the liquidation. These accounts have to be prepared under the eyes of the trustee, who has the custody of the books, and are afterwards investigated by him at considerable time and trouble. The debtor has to be examined on the accounts at meetings in the trustee's office, called for the purpose, and often this hostile creditor, being a person of small means, and, feeling his loss acutely, is far more exacting in his requirements than a creditor in a large case who has lost thousands of pounds. A suggestion which here arises is whether such a strict investigation, if demanded, should not be at the cost of the particular creditors seeking it, as it seldom is productive of any advantage to the general body of creditors. The estate we will assume to be realised, and what are the further deductions? First, rent, say £20; taxes, £5; wages, perhaps £10; the debtor and his employés always agreeing that such are due. These payments make a total of £77 10s. What in such case ought the trustee to charge? His duties in a small matter are as comprehensive as those where the estate is a large one, and may be thus enumerated under three heads.

Digitized by Google

First, investigating the statement of affairs, or, as often happens, preparing or remodelling it himself; holding usual meeting for examination at office, investigating debtor's books and affairs; and, as already stated, preparing or ordering the preparation, and then examining, extra accounts not demanded by the Act, such as deficiency, and cash, and stock accounts. Though the requirement of these latter in all cases would be a wholesome terror to debtors, and trustees sometimes fall into disgrace with creditors for not insisting upon them, it is a question how far they are justified in doing so, unless specially requested by the committee of inspection.

Secondly, realising the estate and other general routine duties of a trustee, not including the declaration of dividend. Taking possession of books and papers, and preparing list. Taking instruction of inspectors and keeping record book. Disposing of property through auctioneer (in which case attending sale, examining auctioneer's accounts, &c.), by tender or by private treaty, which may involve taking possession, taking stock, inventories, &c., obtaining possession of documents, examination into the nature and value of properties, real or personal, &c., and the properties themselves, and in case of legal difficulties preparing statement of case for opinion of solicitor, and consulting with him, and where necessary appearing as plaintiff or defendant, and taking the risk. Collecting debts, involving sending the usual sets of notices, interviews and correspondence with debtors, examination, adjustment, and compromise of accounts. Preparing and furnishing debtors with particulars, personal application at their residences or places of business, placing small amounts in County Court, and instructing solicitor in more complicated cases, and appearing when necessary as plaintiff and taking risk. Sending notices of appointment and general meetings to creditors, and attending at latter, taking minutes, &c., keeping accounts, and estate book, and preparing quarterly accounts for comptroller, and having same audited, annual statements, &c., keeping papers, &c., duly filed; general correspondence and interviews with creditors and others, often involving a very large expenditure of time and trouble; examining and paying, compromising, or objecting to, preferential or other claims arising in proceedings; receiving and examining proofs of debt, and admitting, reducing, or rejecting same; taking advice of solicitor when necessary, filing proof and monthly lists at court; considering as to propriety of closing estate, preparing accounts and papers for close, going through same with registrar, and obtaining appointment to hear application for close, giving creditors notice of same, order being obtained, giving instructions for same to be gazetted, &c., obtaining release from trusteeship.

Thirdly, declaring dividends, gazetting and sending creditors not proved notice of intended dividend, preparing lists of proofs admitted, held over, and debts not proved, calculating dividend, and giving creditors notice of same, and gazetting dividend declared, paying dividend, preparing receipts, &c., preparing and sending lists to comptroller of dividends declared, and afterwards of dividends paid and unclaimed, with vouchers, &c., declaring final dividend.

Of course, in liquidation cases these duties are somewhat curtailed, but by what fixed scale in the case instanced could a trustee be remunerated? A percentage would be clearly out of the question. If paid by time he might absorb the whole estate. There can be no scale devised for such a case, and therefore it must be left to the conscience of the trustee. Hence the necessity of having, as suggested in my former letter, men of respectability to fill that office. In the present case we will assume the trustee, for all his multifarious duties, charges £15 to £20, and his solicitor, when necessary, about £10, with perhaps an allowance for maintenance to the debtor by the receiver of £6 or £7, the net disbursements out of an estate of £150, at the most moderate calculation £120. Now, this is not an exceptional case, but on the contrary, although I have not made a calculation, I believe I am within the mark when I say that more than one-third of the estates wound up in bankruptcy and liquidation do not realise £150. What more palpable example does your committee require of the utter inapplicability of the present Act to meet such a case? All the alterations in the rules which ingenuity might suggest could not cure this defect.

Nothing, I apprehend, but an Act of Parliament can authorise an insolvent debtor with insignificant assets being dealt with differently from his brother in misfortune who may have large assets; nor yet without such authority ought the rights of creditors in either case to be dealt with differently. The Act ought to have made provision for two classes of insolvents; they cannot be dealt with under one category as now. The present Act, with some few amendments, would work admirably in large matters. But to return to the subject of my letter. I think that in all cases where the assets exceed £1,000 a percentage is the proper mode of remunerating a trustee. This should be on a sliding scale; of course the larger the assets the smaller the percentage. To charge by time would only be a premium for incapacity, for a competent person will do his work much quicker, as well as better, than an incompetent one; and, further, remuneration by time is a temptation to "nurse" an estate and delay its realisation and close. The scale of charges for solicitors might in large cases with advantage be increased; but although there be what is termed a lower scale in small matters, it is out of proportion to the work performed or required to be performed. One item applicable alike to both classes of cases may be instanced as an example of the necessity for revising the scale—viz., "searching if prior petition filed, 7s. 8d." Now this charge might well be discretionary with the taxing officer, for it very rarely happens that the solicitor presenting the petition is ignorant whether there has been a petition filed or not; but, if he were, the fact of there being a prior petition does not prevent a second petition being filed, as was the case in former times when the item was introduced into the old scale of costs. Solicitors' charges, however, on the whole are anything but excessive, and they have much reason to complain that they are disallowed for advice and assistance afforded to inexperienced trustees, on the theory that the trustee ought not to have consulted them, but have acted on his own judgment. Auctioneers' charges, too, are open to exemption, as for instance, a produce broker who sells £3,000 worth of produce for an estate can charge, according to the scale, 10 per cent. on the first £100, 5 per cent. up to £1,000, and so on; whilst for selling in the ordinary course of his business he would only charge 2 per cent. High bailiff's fees, too, are an anomaly. For example, "attending sitting of the court, 2s." "preparing advertisements (which is in reality a fiction), 3s. 6d." and other items too numerous to mention. In summarising these observations, I may remark that the difficulties in devising scale of remuneration for small cases are insuperable, and it must, as heretofore, be left to the creditors: but with respect to large estates a percentage might be fixed which would be satisfactory to creditors and trustees, as well as consistent with the economic administration of estates. As to the other professional charges mentioned, they are open to revision, as the scales are framed too much after the models of those under the old Bankruptcy Act, which were condemned for their costliness.—H.B.

P.S. I have overlooked court fees, such as stamps, office copies, &c., but more particularly the first named. They are imposed on the most trivial pretext; in fact, if a debtor sneezes he is mulcted in a 1s. stamp. The other day at Preston the ordinary notices to creditors of first meeting were objected to because they only bore the ½ stamp, sufficient for their carriage through the post, a general order having been received from Mr. Nicoll to insist upon a penny stamp. Who is Mr. Nicoll?

Mr. J. P. Murrough, solicitor, writes as follows on the same subject:—

"As a member of the legal profession of thirty years' standing who has enjoyed a very considerable practice in the Court of Bankruptcy, I need scarcely apologise for responding to your invitation for suggestions, and I would remark, in limine, that it is impossible for any one familiar with the practice and proceedings of the court to entertain any opinion other than that every Bankruptcy Act passed since that of 1849 has been the product of uninformed intellects, working under the pressure of crochet-mongers—if possible—still more uninstructed.

"One of the first and most deplorable effects of these inept revolutionists resulted in the suppression of the official assignees, messengers, and other officers of the court, upon the pretence that creditors should be permitted to take bankrupts' estates into their own hands; and this notable piece of legislation has warmed into existence a swarm of ill-educated, rapacious, and unscrupulous accountants, who, not being officers of the court, are subjected to no supervision, and consequently plunder and enrich themselves without control.

"Another and scarcely less calamitous piece of mischief was the extinguishment, in 1861, of the (BA) certificate of the Act of 1849, the abolition of which granted the most perfect immunity from consequences to all fraudulent bankrupts who could manage to evade the meshes of a criminal prosecution.

"But, as if the curiosities of legislation had not become sufficiently monstrous, the Parliament proceeded to restrict the limit of the London Court of Bankruptcy to the metropolis, to destroy the local bankruptcy courts, and give bankruptcy jurisdiction to the judges of the different County Courts, under the plausible sophism of bringing justice to every man's door. Now I assert, without fear of contradiction, from any person out of Earlswood, that you can effect no salutary change in the law of bankruptcy until the different Courts of Bankruptcy are restored to the condition in which they existed previous to 1861, and for the following reasons:

"First. As the principal creditors of a bankrupt generally reside or carry on business in the metropolis or some of the other large cities of the empire, the Act of 1869 has an effect diametrically opposite to that proposed by its author, and bears justice most effectually away from the creditors' door. Can absurdity reach further than requiring London creditors to follow their bankrupt debtors to such places as Croydon, Greenwich, Guildford, and Wandsworth? Yet to this extent our busy ex-chancellors have carried their adulteration of the bankrupt law.

"Secondly. The machinery of a County Court is utterly unfit for the administration either of equity or bankruptcy matters. Without speaking in disparagement of Lincoln's Inn or Westminster Hall, I think it may be doubted whether those institutions can spare more members, uniting in themselves the possession of commanding intellect and unsuspected integrity, than can be well absorbed in the administration of justice in our Superior Courts.

"Moreover, I entertain a strong opinion that the efforts which are now being made towards the decentralisation of our judicial tribunals will eventuate in a decline of talent and integrity, both in the judges and also in the practitioners who appear before them; for, after due regard to the existence of such able County Court judges as those of Circuits Nos. 11, 23, 33, 42, 57, and 58, I cannot blind myself to the fact that the appointments of very many of these officials are the result not of experience or ability, but of far less assuring causes, and, in some instances, an elevation to the County Court bench has been the reward of implication in corrupt practices at a parliamentary election.

"Furthermore, the County Court judges are peripatetic, and absent for weeks together from the court at which the bankruptcy law should be administered, and this objection of absence applies equally to the second officer in rank, namely, the registrar, who for the efficient administration of the law, should be a well-paid official, continuously in the office of the court, but who, under the present arrangement, is always a practising attorney in the town, whose income is merely supplemented by his salary as registrar, and who when wanted is oftimes absent on his private business.

"Leaving, however, the courts, and, in conclusion, turning to the law to be administered, I would observe that when the Act of 1869 became law, creditors waxed jubilant at the conditions imposed by sect. 68, but as cunning debtors soon learnt the value of parts 6 and 7 of the Act, "Liquidation by arrangement" speedily usurped the place of formal bankruptcy, and a debtors' friends easily procure the necessary 'resolution' which enables him to laugh at his creditors, and the whole doctrine of conditional discharges."

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

(From the Economist.)

The revelations before the Foreign Loans Committee and others like them, with which the reports of our Courts of Justice have lately been full, have made many people ask as to the Stock Exchange, is this market worse than other markets, or not worse? Are the frauds there which have been exposed only samples of what exists elsewhere, but which has not been exposed? And if it is said in reply that the Stock-Exchange is worse than other markets, people ask why is it worse. What are the circumstances which generate fraud in this kind of buying and selling, and which do not as much generate it in other kinds?

We believe that three causes conduce to this effect, First, dealers on the Stock-Exchange are in certain cases—and those influential ones—trusted with untold gold in a sense which others are not. The most peculiar characteristic of the Stock Exchange, as compared with other markets, is that it deals in commodities of which the price is not ruled, as in other markets it is, by the cost of production. The momentary value, indeed, of all articles is regulated by the "demand and supply" of the moment, and not by the cost of production; but in ordinary cases "demand and supply" are temporary causes, for if an article sells for more than it can be made for its supply will be increased till its price falls to the usual level. The cost of production is thus a steady cause limiting the fluctuations of the market; buyers will not long give what is above it, and sellers know that. They must not hold too long, or they may be obliged to take less. But to the shares of the Stock Exchange there is no such guiding average. The value of articles there dealt in does not depend on the cost of production in this direct way; often does not depend on it at all. These articles are, first, the "debts" or promises to pay of different Governments, which cost nothing and which can be multiplied at the will of those Governments; and, secondly, shares in monopolies, such as railways or telegraphs, which also are given at the discretion of Governments, which can be made many or not, as they choose, and which profess to give advantages to those to whom they are granted, which others do not share; or mines, to which a similar monopoly is given by nature; or banks, which are somewhat of the same nature, for the acquired credit is a privileged advantage given by history, which others may rival in time, but which is so much against them, and in favour of its possessor, till they have rivalled it. There are certain miscellaneous companies which might be multiplied in any number, but as many as possible even of these try to show that there is something peculiarly good about them, either from their having taken over an old business or some other cause. And, what is more to the present purpose, the dealings in the shares of small companies are but an insignificant part of the dealings of the present Stock Exchange. Ninety-nine hundredths of such dealings are concerned with "debts," the value of which has no relation to the cost of production at all, and monopolies which claim to have, and may have, a value far exceeding it. The ultimate regulator of price in other markets in this case does not act.

Unquestionably the value of stocks and shares which have long been before the public is often very fixed. The value of Consols has been, probably, more steady for years than that of any article of produce. But that has happened because the supply has been little altered, the position of England the same, and the number of persons who are ready to share an income with so perfect security varies little. The opinion of the public on this stock in these circumstances is made up. The value of English railways, though variable, is reducible to calculation, because we have had much experience of the rate at which traffics increase, of the cost of obtaining such increase, and of the effect of any given augmentation of net income on the price of the stock. We know here the supply, and we can tell, to a fair approximation, the amount of the demand. And, therefore, we have a good guide as to the price,

But in the case of a first loan to a new State, or a fresh mine in a distant country, there is no such guide from experience. The price is for the moment a "fancy" price. The article is worth just what the public can be made to believe that it is worth. No doubt arguments from general probability may be used to show that most likely this new State will become insolvent, as other similar ones have, and that this new mine will prove worthless as so many others. But in all markets the value of all articles but slowly conforms to the course of arguments; buyers and sellers read little, and are not much guided by what they read. They are more influenced by the present quoted prices than by anything else. Accordingly the value of an article on the Stock Exchange is for a time that which you can get quoted as the price. And this is what we mean by saying that in some circumstances the dealers there are trusted with untold gold. They preside over what may be called the "inception" of the value. If by manipulation they can raise the price of a worthless stock to an extravagant sum, they and those for whom they act, will receive and benefit by that price. Those who are skilful in such manipulations will obtain that price, and those who are unskilful will not. From the first projector who finds the mine, or acts for the State, far down among the dealers who sell the stock, there is a lore of artifices varied in form, but united in object, all meant to sell the stock. And they do sell it. In an ordinary produce market there is nothing like this. No dealer, however skilled, can there introduce an unknown and untried commodity for which he himself paid nothing, and sell it at a high price. The possibility of frauds like this poisons, and cannot but poison, the whole atmosphere. Many dealers on the Stock Exchange, no doubt, are as honest and trustworthy as any kind of dealers, but a taint is thrown over the market as a whole, because, from the nature of the commodities there dealt in, monstrous frauds can be practised, are so, and are known to be so, which are not practised elsewhere, and which generate a sort of tone, tolerant of successful fraud, if not admiring it—which is detestable to hear.

Secondly. This set of peculiarly crafty sellers finds ready to its hand a race of peculiarly foolish buyers such as is not to be found in other markets. In common markets the buyers are mostly skilled people. The importer of tea sells to the tea merchant, a very skilled man in the trade; the tea merchant to the large grocer, who is also skilled, if somewhat less: the large grocer to the small grocer, who is also skilled, though again less. No large amounts, as a rule, are invested by some one who has not been trained to the business. But on the Stock Exchange this is not so at all. The bonâ fide investor there is not a skilled trader buying to sell, but mostly an unskilled non-trader buying to keep. Many people who have sense for nothing else have sense enough to save, and in the old times, when savings were hidden in the thatch of houses, and all manner of curious places of concealment, their savings were safe. But now they are safe no longer. A quiet, simple, parsimonious person in the country is exactly what the active, greedy, and mendacious dealer in shares wishes to meet with. And there is a practically unlimited supply of such persons.

Thirdly. There is on the Stock Exchange a class of unskilled "outsiders" far exceeding those in any other market. There are some, no doubt, everywhere. Many a person in Liverpool begins speculating in "cotton to arrive" merely from hearing the talk of the place, and without the slightest real knowledge of the business. But in most markets this class is limited, because "outsiders" do not in general even hear the talk, or read anything equivalent. A clerk in Dorsetshire cannot practically speculate in cotton or in tea; but he can speculate in stocks and shares, for the necessary acquaintance with them is brought home to his door by unnumbered City articles and financial newspapers. Very likely prospectuses of the worst things come to him by the post. And to a person wishing to speculate there is undeniably something very attractive to them. On the face of the matter there is a new property just come out of nothing, and daily rising in value, which is tempting; and it is plain, too, from the nature of the case, and from what happens, that large sums can be made by dealing in such things if only you can get out in time. What such outsiders ought to know, but what they will never learn, is that the wires are pulled by far abler and more skilled persons than themselves—by the concoctors and managers of these speculations—and that everything is arranged so that they shall win, and every one else lose, as much as possible. An "outside" speculator pitted against such persons is like an indifferent chessplayer who cannot see the board, playing with a masterly one who can; he is in the long run certain to lose. And as far as he is concerned so much the better. A man who tries to gamble and cannot, has no claim to respect, either for good intentions or mental power. But unhappily the loss of these unskilled imitators helps and keeps alive the group of skilled machinators at headquarters. The entire evil is largely maintained at the cost, and by the destruction, of very many scattered and less evils. These reasons do not exhaust the subject, but they are sufficient for our purpose, because they specify the principal particulars in which the Stock-Exchange differs from other markets, and show that the effect of them is to make large and numerous frauds more to be expected in that market than in any other.

THE INCOME TAX.—The Inland Revenue Board give, in their annual Report recently issued, an account such as only they can give of the produce of the Income-tax in the year ending the 5th of April, 1873, the latest year for which these details can be stated. The total annual value of property and profits charged to Income-tax in the United Kingdom for that year was £453,585,000, which was £18,782,000 more than in the preceding year. Of this increase England contributed £15,658,000 being 4·20 per cent. more than the value charged for the preceding year; Scotland, £2,524,000, an increase of 6·94 per cent.; and Ireland £600,000, an increase of 2·32 per cent. The gross assessments under Schedule A for 1872-73 exhibit an increase over the preceding year of £1,805,000, thus distributed:—In England, £1,376,000, an increase of 1·08 per cent.; Scotland, £388,000, an increase of 2·51 per cent.; Ireland, £41,000, an increase of 0·31 per cent. In England the greatest improvement was in the four following counties:—Surrey, £98,000; York, £232,000; Lancashire, £248,000; Middlesex, £311,000. The gross annual value of "lands" assessed for 1872-3—namely, £65,513,000, shows a slight increase of £83,000 over the preceding year, as follows:—In England the assessment was on £49,009,000, being an increase of £45,000; Scotland, £7,363,000, an increase of £37,000; Ireland, £9,141,000, an increase of £1,000. The gross annual value of "houses" assessed exhibits an increase of £1,734,000 over the preceding year, thus distributed:—In England the assessment was on £77,832,000, showing an increase of £1,356,000, or 1·7 per cent.; in Scotland, on £7,876,000, an increase of £346,000, or 4·59 per cent.; in Ireland, on £3,748,000, an increase of £32,000. or 0·86 per cent, In England the increase of the assessments on houses was largest in the four counties already specified; it was £91,000 in Surrey, £225,000 in Yorkshire, £253,000 in Lancashire, and £309,000 in Middlesex. In the gross amount of the assessments under Schedule B for the year 1872-3 there is a slight increase—£33,000 in England, £38,000 in Scotland, but a decrease of £21,000 in Ireland. The gross amount of profits of trades, &c., assessed under Schedule D for 1872-73 exhibits an increase of £25,964,000 over the preceding year—£21,725,000 in England, £3,248,000 in Scotland, £991,000 in Ireland. The increase in England mainly arises from the assessments under the following heads:—On trades and professions, an increase of £14,091,000, or 11·52 per cent; public companies, £2,377,000, or 14·27 per cent.; railways, £1,926,000, or 9·73 per cent.; mines, £771,000, or 13·51 per cent.; ironworks, £1,182,000 or 44·67 per cent.; gasworks, £102,000, or 4·26 per cent.; dividends on foreign securities, £879,000, or 25·16 per cent. The increase in Scotland amounted to £2,102,000 on trades and professions, or 16·24 per cent.; public companies, £135,000, or 11·73 per cent. increase; railways, £296,000, or £12·46 per cent.; mines, 166,000, or 27·80 per cent.; ironworks, £440,000, or 88·88 per cent. The increase in Ireland is £722,000 on trades and professions, or 11·85 per cent.; public companies, £64,000, or 10·66 per cent.; railways, £88,000, or 9·12 per cent.; mines, £12,000 or 37·50 per cent. The number of persons who claimed abatement in the year 1872-73 exceeds the number in the preceding year by 77,967; this is in consequence of the allowance having been increased from £60 on incomes under £200 a year to £80 on incomes under £300 a year; and the amount of income relieved from tax by such allowance exceeds the amount relieved in the preceding year by £12,024,208. In England 315,462 persons claimed to have £25,196,995 abated; in Scotland, 38,008 abated £3,017,654; in Ireland, 16,078 persons £1,283,970 persons under Schedules D and E only; so that 369,548 persons claimed abatement amounting to £29,498,619. The result of the allowance of £80 on incomes under £300 was to afford relief to the extent of 6·68 per cent. on the total amount charged to tax. The Commissioners observe that in the year 1867-68 the actual net produce of Income-tax for each penny in the pound, after deducting sums discharged on various grounds or irrecoverable, was £1,451,342; in 1872-3 it had gradually increased to £1,757,537.

A CURE FOR SLEEPLESSNESS.—Mr. Frank Buckland during his researches into the natural history of everything, from baby hippopotami to American giantesses, has come across a sovereign specific for insomnia. Like many great discoveries the cure given to the world by Mr. Buckland in Land and Water is simple in the extreme. When unable to slumber he eats two or three raw onions, with the result that the drowsy god, probably attracted by the fragance of the sleep-compelling root, forthwith hovers in the air. For such weaklings as might object to a meal of raw onions at bedtime, the Spanish variety, stewed, is recommended, but it seems doubtful whether after all, this would not be one of those compromises with conscience which generally fail of full effect. Among other remedies that may be tried by the sleepless is a hard boiled egg or a bit of bread and cheese eaten immediately before going to bed, and followed up by a glass of wine or milk "or even water," adds Mr. Buckland with a palpable shudder. Should these fail of effect, another cure may be attempted. This was confided to Dean Buckland by the late Dr. Wilberforce when Bishop of Oxford, and consists in repeating very slowly the vowels A, E, I, O, which are to be faintly pronounced with each inspiration and expiration. Although said to be extremely efficacious, this remedy evidently should not be attempted by those who, in addition to insomnia, are afflicted by impecuniosity. As the vowel U must not be pronounced on any account, that letter being a great enemy to sleep, it is plain that people familiar with I, O, U's had better persist in a course of raw or stewed onions. Otherwise, just at the moment when tired nature's sweet restorer was falling on their eyelids the ruthless vowel in question might, from long custom, find its way into the soothing quartette of letters. While freely acknowledging a debt of public gratitude for these important discoveries, perhaps it may be allowable to hint that some of the remedies appear rather more objectionable than the disorder they are said to cure. To people of ordinary constitutions the consumption of hard-boiled eggs, cheese, and milk late at night would be followed by nightmares of the most terrific sort, and severe dyspepsia next day. But a grave objection exists to the raw onion specific. What mortal, except Mr. Buckland, would have sufficient courage to face such a horrible meal? Chronic sleeplessness for a week would to most people be far preferable to this abominable opiate.—The Globe.

SHERIFF, EXECUTION CREDITOR, AND TRUSTEE.—The legan relations of the sheriff, his execution creditor, and the trustee in bankruptcy were well illustrated by Ex parte Harper, Re Bremner, which was decided by the Lord Justices at a recent sitting. More than fourteen days after the sheriff had taken possession, a petition for liquidation was presented, a receiver appointed, and an injunction to the sheriff not to sell granted. This was followed by an adjudication, upon which the sheriff gave up possession to the trustee, who sold the goods. Harper then brought an action against the sheriff, who successfully defended himself by pleading the proceedings in bankruptcy. Thereupon he applied for an inquiry under the receiver's undertaking as to damage. Lord Justice Mellish held that the injunction under sect. 13 was merely to keep things in statu quo, and that the appointment of the receiver did not change the rights of the parties; that goods taken in execution do not become the property of the creditor; nor is the sheriff a trustee to hold them for the creditor. Consequently, if they are wrongfully given up by the sheriff, they cannot be followed as impressed with a trust, though the sheriff may be liable to an action. Lord Justice James said that if both parties had submitted to the jurisdiction of the Court to save expense, the Court of Bankruptcy ought to have decided the question. Lord Justice Mellish thought that Harper alone might have appealed for the equitable interference of the Court. But both the Lords Justices held that Harper, having pursued his remedy by action, had made his election, and must abide thereby.—Law Times.

ACCOUNTANCY.

An Escape.—A New York correspondent, writing on the 8th inst., says:—The country has been saved from the addition of 360 millions to its public debt by a mere accident. The Bounty Bill was amended in the Senate in such a way as to make it very probable that the amount of money expended under it would not fall much short of 360 millions of dollars, or £72,000,000, and the Secretary of the Treasury was authorised to borrow the money by issuing bonds from time to time as it might be needed. In this shape the bill went back to the House where it had originated. Even its friends there were somewhat dismayed at the magnitude to which the scheme had now grown, and they asked for a committee of conference. No time was to be lost, however, for the next day would be the last of the session. The committee of conference met, the Senate members adhered to their amendments, and the pressure of the Ring, who were lobbying the bill, was so great that the House gave way, and agreed to the amendments. On Thursday morning, the last day of the session, the bill came back to the Senate with the approval of the House, and an hour before noon the President of the Senate signed it. It now needed only the signature of President Grant; and Senator Logan, who had it in charge, hurried with it to the President's room, where he was busy signing other bills. He had intimated his favour of this measure, Senator Logan thought he would sign it at once; but the President was in a very bad humour that morning, on account of the failure of his Force Bill, on which he had set his heart. When Mr. Logan laid the bill before him he pushed it away impatiently. "I must think about it," he said. "But, Mr. President," said Logan, "there is scarcely time to think; it is now past eleven, and unless you sign the bill by noon it falls to the ground." "Well, then," answered the President, with much heat, "I won't sign it," and sign it he did not. The escape for the country was a very narrow one; the increase of £72,000,000 to its debt at this time would be almost absolute ruin to it. Chagrin of the lobbyists for the bill is immense. They were certain of success; they had spent large sums of money in securing its passage; and had it become law they would have pocketed vast sums of money. Only a very small portion of the sums which would have been paid under the law would ever have reached the sailors or soldiers; the great bulk of it would have been retained by the claim agents and speculators. It is astonishing that a measure so uncalled for, so unwise, and so almost fatal in its consequences could have thus been on the eve of success, and have been defeated at last merely by a whim of humour on the part of President Grant.—Scotsman.

Death of Mr. Samuel Brown.—The Post Magazine says, by the almost sudden death of Mr. Samuel Brown—for his illness lasted but little more than a day—Actuarial Science has suffered a heavy loss, and the Institute one of its most valued and respected members. For more than forty-five years Mr. Brown had been actively connected with the Assurance World, and for the past quarter of a century was a diligent contributor to its literature. A complete record of his contributions, commencing with his letters to this Journal in 1849, under the signature of "Crito," will be found in the pages of the Insurance Cyclopœdia, to which many of our readers will doubtless refer. Few men have left behind them more affectionate recollections than the deceased, whose memory will be long cherished, not less on account of his mental attainments than for the innate goodness of his heart. Mr. Brown died on the 20th instant, in the 65th year of his age.

A Millionaire.—The will of the late Joseph Love, J.P., of Mount Beulah, near Durham, has been proved in the Durham Court of Probate by Sarah Love, his widow, sole executrix. The testator devises all his real and personal property absolutely to his wife. The will is dated November, 1854. The personal effects have been sworn under one million of money. By this will the National Exchequer receives £18,500 for probate stamp.—Manchester Guardian.

The Money Market.—The money market seems again to be falling into one of those peculiar states of which we have lately had so many, in which one abnormal cause runs contrary to, and counteracts, the more natural tendencies. The continental exchanges are now favourable to this country; the American exchange will not take from us any money, though neither may it send us anything. Bating the usual efflux at the close of the quarter; and the ordinary transmission of coin or bullion in small amounts to various places, which is part of our regular trade, there is no trade demand on us for gold. Subject to them we might expect to retain what we receive from Australia and elsewhere, and in consequence the value of money would tend to fall. But it seems uncertain whether the natural course of events may not be interrupted, as many similar ones have been, by the operations of the German Government. Twice of late that Government has bought gold unexpectedly in the market. And possibly, though this is mere supposition, for we have no information on which to predict its movements, it may mean to buy gold here when it seems exceedingly plentiful and when it can get it without disturbing the general money market, and so have less to buy hereafter, when gold may be dearer, and the tension of credit greater. This would be a natural policy for the German Government to pursue, and it would counteract, as we have observed, the natural tendency of the money market, but whether that Government will adopt that policy is as yet a matter only of inference and conjecture.—Economist.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the Accountant a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of Cases for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

APRIL 10, 1875.

The fate of the Emma Mine Company is still undecided, and the shareholders have now to come to their final conclusion whether they will make any further attempt to obtain any profit from their property, or whether they will put up with their loss without running any additional risk. At present, as far as can be judged, the balance of opinion is in favour of continuing the undertaking, and the evidence of the experts, who depose either to the rottenness or to the soundness of the mine, is just as positive as that of experts usually is.

It is, we suppose, utterly hopeless to attempt to convince investors that mining property is hazardous in the extreme, even when the fullest opportunities of investigation are allowed. The most experienced engineers are frequently deceived; a vein of ore may end abruptly in simple rubbish, or may become of extraordinary value, and the shareholders' dividends fall or rise accordingly at a very short notice. And in the event of success, such large amounts are frequently realised that it can scarcely be a matter of surprise if speculators are tempted to venture a small stake, on much the same principle as that which actuates the gambler who backs his choice at long odds. Of course, no legitimate objection can be raised to this, except by that moral section who class the Stock Exchange with Tattersall's, and see little to choose between the integrity of a stock-broker and a horse-coper; and if it was fully recognised that mining was really a speculation only to be undertaken by "adventurers," little harm would be done. But the real evil lies in the fact that the system of joint-stock enterprise was intended to catch, and, in fact, does catch just that very class of persons whom it is most desirable to discourage from any kind of hazardous undertaking whatever,—the people who are utterly inexperienced in financial matters, who believe implicitly the statements put forth in highly-coloured prospectuses, and who are just as depressed by the first symptoms of adversity as they are elated by a favourable report or an interim dividend. This is the class of persons who sell their shares in alarm on the first hostile rumour, who are the bêtes noirs of official liquidators, whose panic-driven conduct depreciates the value of their property, and whose inability to pay up their calls presses so heavily on their more solvent and, we must say, more honest fellow-contributories. If they would buy a fully paid up share and hold it, accepting thankfully their dividends, and content to bear their share of any loss, they might not benefit themselves, but they would not hurt others. As it is, the larger the promised dividends, and consequently the greater the risk, the more numerous are those small shareholders, and disaster consequently follows in the case of the slightest check.

The cases of some of the foreign mines bear so strong a family resemblance, that we should hope that by this time even the most credulous of investors must have become acquainted with some at least of their prominent features. The eminent mining engineers whose vast experience enables them to speak with such confidence as to the success of the operations, the long list of titled or sensational directors leavened with a few representatives of other companies, the vendor who shares his confidence by taking half his purchase money in paid-up shares, and will guarantee a minimum dividend of ten per cent., and the additional security conferred by the gracious presence of certain notorious city magnates,—are the decoys which ought now to be spread in vain in the sight of every bird. We can only hope that this may be so in the future, though the history of such cases as the Emma Mine scarcely leads to sanguine expectation as to this. The Court of Chancery has lately shown a disposition to relax the rigidity of the rules as to winding-up. In many early instances it seems to have been thought that an order followed, almost as a matter of course, upon a petition, and that very strong grounds must be shown for the Court to exercise any of the discretionary powers conferred upon it by the Companies' Act. But the practice of petitioning has been somewhat abused. A successful petitioner is, as a rule, in a very pleasant position. He can exercise influence or the choice of a liquidator, and his solicitors have plenty of pickings, for which they may be expected to evince their gratitude in an extremely practical manner. The curiously lively interest which holders of a very small number of shares take in the welfare of a company has attracted the serious attention of Vice-Chancellor Malins, and he invariably makes inquiry as to the wishes of the majority in value of the shareholders. In the case of the Emma Mine the figures are very significant. Of the directors, three out of four who originally opposed a winding-up, subsequently changed their minds; a proceeding which will not cause much bewilderment to those who have ever attended at the hearing of a company's case before the senior Vice-Chancellor. Apart from this, the petition is supported by holders of 275 shares, eight in number; while its opponents are represented by the holders of over 21,000 shares. Upon the strength of these facts, the Vice-Chancellor held that the shareholders were the best judges of their own interests, and ordered a public meeting to be called at which they might formally decide upon the course to be adopted.

There can be no question that in many instances the result of a liquidation has been to sacrifice the property of the shareholders, and to enable the original vendors to re-purchase their property at an undervalue. There can be no doubt that in many instances also, companies have been launched with the double view of making money, both in the shape of promotion-money at their birth, and of the costs of liquidation at their extinction. It is, we suppose, out of the question to institute any system of supervision which shall prevent a man from selling a property worth £10,000 for ten times that amount in cash, and as much more in paid-up shares. This would be undue interference with the rights of property, freedom of trade, and other blessings of our high and noble civilisation. But it might be possible to enact that directors shall be liable for the statements they put forth, if they have not taken every means to test their absolute correctness, and to punish rigorously carelessness, and wilful blindness, as well as fraud. That is for the Government to take in hand. For the rest we must trust to the growth of public intelligence. Let the general investor, whether country clergyman, retired officer, or widow lady, distrust all mines, all properties which are to pay such fabulous dividends, and let them above all see who vouches for the correctness of the accounts. Unless these are examined and approved by a professional auditor of standing, there is sure to be something that will not bear investigation. Let all who have money to invest see to this, and let those whose profession it is to undertake this duty consider the high interests involved in it, both to their own professional honour, and the safety of those their investigation will protect.

The practice of the judge of the Liverpool County Court in requiring two distinct and separate applications to be made when the creditors desire that a composition should be accepted and the bankruptcy annulled, may lead to expense in some cases, and it seems that it is not sanctioned by the words of the Act or the Rules. The 28th section allows the creditors to accept a composition "with or without a condition that the order of adjudication is to be annulled, subject to the approval of the Court, to be testified by the Judge of the Court signing the instrument containing the terms of such composition or scheme." These words, and the corresponding form No. 58, seem to imply that the transaction is single, and that the only application needful to be made is to ask the Judge's sanction to the arrangement. If he agrees, he shows this by signing the instrument; if he objects, he simply does nothing. The section goes on to say that the order for annulment may be made on the application of any person interested. Rule 266, and sub-section 10 of sec. 80 of the Act, apply to the change of composition or liquidation proceedings into bankruptcy, and there, various applications are necessary. On looking to Form 58, it appears that that form actually contains words annulling the adjudication, so that it seems clear that the meaning of the Act is, that the instrument embodying the terms of the composition ought, when presented for the judge's approval, to contain words to a similar effect. If these are omitted, the omission may be rectified on the application of any creditor.

We print in another column a short report of an application made a few days ago to the Judge of the Exeter County Court for an order directing a bankrupt to set aside a portion of his earnings for the benefit of his creditors. We have always considered the power given to the Court, to order portions of the salaries and incomes of non-trader bankrupts to be applied in payment of their debts, to be very just and reasonable, and one which the Courts would not be backward in exercising for the benefit of creditors. Especially is this the case with respect to any bankrupt employed in the service of the Crown, either civil or otherwise, and still more so in regard to a bankrupt officer of a County Court, these courts having now jurisdiction in bankruptcy. In the case we report the bankrupt is the High Bailiff of a County Court. His liabilities amount to £400, and his assets to £12, which means, of course, practically "nil." The bankrupt appears to have passed his public examination, at which, if we mistake not, it transpired that he had sought to increase his income by systematically performing legal business for clients. Then the creditors, finding that the bankrupt retains his official position, as High Bailiff, with its emoluments, very naturally ask the Court to exercise the power given to it by the Act of Parliament, by ordering the bankrupt to set aside something out of his official income towards the liquidation of his debts. A most reasonable application this seems, and one that can scarcely be refused in principle;—the amount being in the discretion of the Court, and governed by the circumstances of the particular case. But not so thinks the learned Judge. In the words of the report, his Honour "did not think it would be right or just, "in the present case, to make an order, because it "would inflict a penalty on the man which he could "not set right again, and if he were put to great ex-"pense, it would utterly ruin him." This certainly seems a most astonishing principle to lay down, and quite at variance with what we conceive to be the principles of the present Bankruptcy Act. The decision can only be accounted for on the assumption that the Judge has the idea that the Bankruptcy Court is intended solely for the relief of debtors from their liabilities, and that creditors must expect no help from it in recovering their bad debts. In other words, that debtors must be "white-washed" at the public expense with the least possible inconvenience to themselves. It also seems as if the Judge had lost sight of the fact that the Court might at any time rescind or vary its order, if on a future occasion the bankrupt could show that his income had diminished, or that the order was bearing too hardly on him. Besides, the wording of Sections 89 and 90, in our judgment, almost renders it obligatory on the Court to make an order upon the trustee's application. "The trustee shall receive, &c.," "the Court shall, from time to time, make such order, &c." are the words of the Sections.

We should like to know if the Exeter County Court Judge has fairly interpreted the spirit of the Act, or whether the higher Court would put a different construction upon the matter. It would, indeed, be well to take the opinion of a higher Court on this case for the guidance of creditors in future. It is true that, under the present Act, the bankrupt cannot get his discharge unless it is voted by the creditors, or unless he pays 10s. in the £. But what does this practically amount to? The creditors, we assume, would oppose the discharge, and there being no assets, the bankruptcy would probably be "closed" without delay. Then the bankrupt is protected for three years, at the expiration of which period the creditors' rights theoretically revive. These rights are, however, subject to the rights of any new creditor, and subject to each creditor obtaining from the Court an order directing the bankrupt to pay the debt; the Court would be the same Court as that which has just refused to make an order setting aside a part of the bankrupt's salary for the benefit of his creditors; and is it all likely that the creditors would, three years hence, get any more consideration at its hands, than now? They would, probably, find they had simply added to their loss the expenses of the application for an order.

Some idea may be formed from this as to the practical value to creditors of the present system of proceeding against after-acquired property. We must confess to a preference for the old system, which vested all after-acquired property of an uncertificated bankrupt, or an undischarged insolvent, in his assignees for the benefit of his creditors. Why not let the three years' "ticket of leave" be abolished, at any rate in the case of non-traders, and let all the after-acquired property of an undischarged bankrupt vest in his trustee, whether before or after the close of his bankruptcy?

BANKRUPTCY ADMINISTRATION.

There has been great outcry against the costliness of proceedings in liquidation and bankruptcy, and to some extent it has not been ill-founded. The accountants have been the scape-goats, and our columns have been open to the exposure of their sins of omission and commission; but their sacrifice, in this practical age, cannot blind us to the shortcomings of others. The appointment of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy was thought to be the panacea of all the evils previously suffered from the erratic decisions of the old Commissioners in Bankruptcy, but what has been the result? Sir James Bacon, lauded to the skies by the late Lord Chancellor, at the period of life when a man's faculties are considered on the wane, is appointed Chief Judge. He was referred to in the House of Lords as the most eminent authority in bankruptcy the country could produce, and by universal consent took the appointment. Singularly, however, although the Chief Judge was to be a sort of warranty for the consistent administration of the law, he was empowered to delegate his authority to the Registrars. He so exercises the authority and deputes the Registrars to sit as Chief Judges five days out of the week. What is thus created? The anomaly of Mr. Registrar Roche sitting in judgment upon Mr. Registrar Pepys, and vice versa. And what is the status of these learned Registrars amongst lawyers?

These appointments of Registrars saw the light of day, as did those of the Messengers of the Court, to afford the Chancellor in power the opportunity of placing a hanger-on in place. In fact, it is but a few years since it was recorded in print, that one of the Registrars, after his appointment to a country district,—and then not a barrister—allowed his generous patron, a part of his salary. This, however, has little in common with our point. What is matter for observation is the fact that men of the legal status of the London Registrars should be placed above the County Court Judges. It may be asked, how are they so placed? The answer is simple. A suitor in a case in the London Court, in any motion before it, can go direct to the Lords Justices, whereas an appeal from the County Court Judge must be filtered through the Chief Judge. There would be no great harm if the decision of the Chief Judge was final; but in six cases out of ten it is appealed from, and turns out to be a delusion and a snare. We believe the Chief Judge knows more as to the principles of bankruptcy than the two eminent Judges who sit in the Appeal Court; but this is of no avail. A case which the Chief Judge in solemn tones announces as the clearest that ever came before him, and where, with apparently peculiar pleasure, he reverses the decision of the County Court Judge, is, without hearing a reply on the part of counsel, held by the Lords Justices to be erroneously decided. The County Court Judge is pronounced right; but what becomes of the costs? Those only of the erroneous decision of the Chief Judge are allowed. (See re Hill in the Accountant of March 27th.) What in such a state of things is a trustee to do? If the assets are small, and he has a righteous decision in the Court below, is he to appear on appeal, or allow judgment to go by default? With all their faults it will be seen that the accountants are not entirely answerable for the unsatisfactory working of the Act, and their wisest course, under the circumstances would be to raise a fund sufficient to allow the Chief Judge to retire with the honour and respect to which he is entitled.

ACCOUNTANTS' CHARGES.

A matter which is just now attracting a great deal of general attention, and has been, moreover, the subject of no little discussion, and some considerable dispute, is that of the various scales of charges adopted by individual accountants and auditors for their professional services. So different and exceptional, it may be urged, are the demands made on the manifold branches of the profession for assistance in cases of complication and difficulty that it would be scarcely feasible, or fair, to draw any distinct or arbitrary rules by which the remuneration of accountants should be definitely settled. For instance, in times of a great commercial crisis or panic, when sober and judicious advice is eagerly solicited, there is no possibility of gauging the value of the experienced suggestions of the numerous able and eminent members of the profession. To many, it is now a matter of history how disasters, by which commercial enterprize would have become paralyzed, have been avoided, or their extent at all events considerably limited, entirely through the skilful negociations and timely interventions of accountants. In such emergencies it would be palpably fallacious and absurd to attempt to define, by any possible rule, the precise worth of the services rendered.

There would be also, doubtless, no inconsiderable difficulty in stating the remuneration which would be adequate to the trouble and anxiety incurred in unravelling the intricacies of extensive accounts, rendered more than ordinarily complicated in consequence of gross mismanagement or wilful neglect; more particularly when the investigation has to be conducted and concluded within a given time, and when, perhaps, the continued supervision of a principal is absolutely necessary.

It is evident, however, that the charges made by different firms of accountants for auditing, investigating, or keeping books and accounts, are so undefined and varied, that it is absolutely in the interest of themselves and the public that some assimilation, if not thorough revision, should take place; and to accomplish this end, as well as to arm the profession against attacks for so-called overcharging, it appears to us indispensable that the leading accountants of the day should come to some mutual arrangement and understanding on the subject. The results of their deliberations could then be published, after having received the approval of, and having been adopted and recognised by, the different metropolitan and provincial Institutes and Societies.

In making a general rule by which accountants' costs should be regulated, one of the greatest difficulties which will be found to arise will be that of classification. The position of the client, the nature of his requirements, and his class of business, will all have to be carefully considered. And besides these considerations, there arises the question why a bill should not be liable to taxation, either by some government official appointed specially for that purpose, or by the Council of the Institute, or Society, of which the accountant is a member, and whose decision he would have to abide by. Fair remuneration for fair work, is all that the profession desires, and in opening the subject we hope it will be understood that we do so purely in the interest, and to the advantage, of Accountancy.

BANKRUPTCY LAWS, No. 8.

LIQUIDATION BY ARRANGEMENT OR COMPOSITION.

Our last article dealt with the duties of a Receiver. This present one will deal with the duties of a Receiver and Manager. There is a marked distinction between a simple receivership, and a receivership carrying with it the post of manager, for whereas a receiver has no discretionary power whatever, the discretion of a manager is, in our opinion, practically unlimited, except upon certain definite points where a trustee alone is competent to act. The appointment of manager is now comparatively rarely made, and only in instances where strong evidence is produced to the Court as to the necessity for keeping together a business of some importance, by closing or suspending which, the interest of the creditors would be likely to suffer. The position of manager is, to all intents and purposes, equivalent to that of an agent holding full power of attorney from his principal; he may be guilty of errors of judgment, but we do not see how, except in the case of mala fides, he can be held responsible for his acts. It is in connection with the appointment of manager that, to our mind, one of the marked defects of the Act exists. Mr. Wreford, in his review, mentions that the intention of the Act evidently was to treat composition as distinct from liquidation, whereas by the rules the two sections are practically merged into one. Under a proposed liquidation, unless there be a really valuable goodwill, it would undoubtedly be far more economical in the majority of instances to at once close the business and put up with the first loss; whereas, under composition the debtor generally relies upon being able to continue his business for the means of paying his composition. It is also only fair and reasonable that the creditors, immediately upon the filing of the petition, should have some idea of the position and intentions of the debtor, in order that they may shape their course accordingly. Many men in filing their petition have, from the first, no intention of compounding; there should therefore be some short and ready means, when this is the case, of getting the estate promptly under control.

It is clearly the duty of a receiver and manager (not qua receiver but qua manager) to take an inventory of the stock of which he possesses himself, inasmuch as he has eventually to become an accounting party, either to the debtor under a composition, or to the creditors under a liquidation. It is also his duty to apply for book debts, and to realise stock at about the usual rate of profit if customers are forthcoming, or even to sell a portion at a discount if no other course be open, to cover the sum necessary to keep the business together: but on this point he should obtain in writing from the liquidating debtor a concurrence in the step, so as to avoid possible after disputes. It frequently becomes necessary for the manager to purchase further stock in order to meet the requirements of the trade; for such stock he, of course, becomes personally liable to the parties who supply the same, but we do not remember any instance in which a manager charged an extra commission or remuneration for the risk so taken.

A manager is also clearly justified in causing the debtor's books to be written up at the expense of the estate, for otherwise it would be impossible for him to deal with the accounts of customers. For his own reputation's sake it behoves him to be very cautious in dealing with the question of credit. We have known of attempts being made (by the liquidating debtor) to induce the manager to grant credits to friends from whom it would afterwards have been difficult to recover; but on the other hand, under a composition, the debtor may have reasonable cause for complaint if by refusal to grant credit to regular customers, his connection and thereby his means for carrying out his composition have been prejudicially affected; so that while the discretion left to the manager is great, the moral responsibility is far from small.

We quote from our last article the following paragraph:—

"In another case the debtor was agent to various firms "whose stocks were kept entirely distinct from his own, and "the receiver having satisfied himself by an examination of the "books and correspondence that such goods were not the "property of the estate, and moreover, procured very strong "affidavits from the respective principals, attended before the "Court in support of an application that he might be directed "to hand over the articles specified; but the Court ruled that "a receiver had no discretionary power, and adjourned the "motion till after the appointment of a trustee, on the ground "that the trustee might take a very different view of the "matter."

A point similar to this arose in a matter wherein a manager had been appointed, and the goods sought to be recovered were "season goods," the season having only about six weeks more to run. The manager, having fully satisfied himself as to the facts, and knowing from experience that a heavy loss would be entailed upon the principal in the event of the season being missed, suggested that the difficulty could be surmounted by his bringing forward his own nominee as purchaser (and by accepting him, releasing the estate from any responsibility), upon condition that he paid the usual commission on such sale as in the ordinary course of business. The stock in question represented a considerable sum, and the transaction would have produced a considerable benefit to the estate, but the principal unwisely refused to adopt the proposal, and so, in order to save a commission averaging about 1½ per cent., he, by losing the control of his goods for above two months (the time taken to complete registration), eventually had to sacrifice them for about 25 per cent. less.

All questions in connection with the carrying on of a business, such as the employment or discharge of workmen, clerks, and others, are in the full discretion of a manager, and his regard for his reputation as a man of business, and for integrity, are practically the only guarantee that the creditors have.

H. B. London.

Mr. John Francis retired on Thursday from his long and honourable service in the Bank of England, where for the last five years he held the position of chief accountant. Mr. Francis is well known as the author of the "History of the Bank of England," and other works. The Court of Directors have appointed Mr Henry Gerald Aylmer to be chief accountant, and Mr. Thomas William Innes to be deputy-accountant in succession to Mr. Aylmer.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

April 2.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE EMANUEL WEIGNER.—The debtor, described as of 46 Gower-street, commission agent, also carrying on business as a dressmaker in the names of Madame A. Alexina and A. A. Harris, has presented a petition for liquidation; and, upon the application of Mr. Michael Abrahams, his Honour appointed a receiver and manager of the estate.—The debts are estimated at about £7000, with assets consisting of stock £100, furniture of considerable value subject to mortgages, and book debts £350.

April 3.

(Before Mr. Registrar PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE IM THURN AND CO.—The debtors, who are merchants of the East India-avenue, have filed a petition under the arrangement clauses. Mr. Nicol, solicitor for the petitioners, now applied for leave to issue the notice conveuing the first general meeting on the 16th of June next to certain of the creditors, notwithstanding the estimated amount of the debts due to them was not stated. It appeared from the evidence that a very large proportion of the debts owing by the firm arose in respect of bills of exchange drawn upon and accepted by the debtors, and of bills drawn and accepted by third persons and endorsed and accepted by im Thurn and Co. In many instances the liabilities had run off, and it was impossible to state with accuracy the amount for which some of the creditors would be entitled to rank against the estate. The point being novel, Mr. Registrar Pepys referred the matter to Mr. Penn, the chief clerk in the liquidation department, and the application was afterwards granted.

IN RE ALFRED BOWLS.—In this case the debtor, who was a general merchant, of Bermondsey and New Kent-road, had presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs on a statement of accounts showing debts £22,745, and assets £6,692; but the proceedings at the first meeting proving abortive, he has since been adjudicated bankrupt upon the petition of Messrs. Baldwin and Hough, of Ratcliff, creditors for £271. Mr. Baker now applied to the court for the appointment of a receiver and manager to the estate under the bankruptcy petition. His Honour granted the application, and appointed Mr. G. Reid, public accountant, of Crooked-lane, to the office.

April 5.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE HAY AND INGRAM.—The debtors, who have petitioned under the liquidation clauses, were merchants of Great Tower-street, also trading at Akyab, Rangoon, and Bassein, in British Burmah. Their aggregate liabilities are about £155,000, but the amount will be considerably reduced by homeward freights; the assets consist principally of margins on consignments, the value being at present unascertained. The Court recently appointed a receiver and manager, and granted an interim restraining order against several suing creditors; and, upon the application of Mr. Baker, his Honour now continued the injunction until further order.

April 6.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE RICHARD CUSKER.—The debtor, described as of Warwick-square, Southwark, formerly trading as a general merchant, and now out of business, had presented a petition for liquidation; and application was now made for registration of the resolutions purporting to be passed at the meeting of creditors, and providing for liquidation of the estate by arrangement, not in bankruptcy. The unsecured debts were returned at £3470, and assets £190.—Mr. Crump, on behalf of the Adelphi Bank, Liverpool, opposed registration.—His Honour, upon the ground that there were virtually no assets capable of being administered for the benefit of the creditors, declined to register the resolutions.

April 7.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE JONES AND JONES.—This was an unusual instance of a bankruptcy of husband and wife. The bankrupts, Arthur Stephen John Warren Jones and Julia Mary Jones, were described as school proprietors, formerly of Fairseat-house, Wrotham, then of Pond-street, Hampstead, and now of 85 Abingdon-villas, Kensington, of no business or employment. They had been adjudicated upon the petition of Mr. F. S. de C. Bisson, scholastic agent, of Berners-street, Oxford-street, a creditor for £145, the act of bankruptcy being a declaration of insolvency. It appeared that the petitioning creditor had made a cash advance to the female bankrupt, then Miss Strutt, and after the marriage, which was celebrated in January, 1874, he lent a further sum of money to the husband. The goods of the bankrupts were sold, and realised £38 19s. 6d., and the petitioning creditor claimed a balance of £145. A first meeting for the proof of debts and the appointment of a trustee was now held, when a statement of affairs was produced, which disclosed debts of £1,328, and assets £1 17s. Several proofs having been admitted, Mr. W. Brown, accountant, St. Thomas-street, was appointed trustee.

IN RE SIR W. RUSSELL, BART.—This case was again in the paper, but only in reference to an application for the payment of certain costs incurred by creditors in opposing the registration of resolutions which had been passed under a petition for liquidation filed by the debtor. The costs were reserved, and the Registrar's refusal to register the resolutions was confirmed by the Lords Justices on appeal, but on somewhat different grounds.—His Honour now decided that the creditors were entitled to payment of the costs reserved by the Court.

April 8.

(Before MR. REGISTRAR PEPYS, as Chief Judge.)

IN RE A. H. MOBSBY.—The debtor, described as of 10 Callum-street, and formerly of 9 Fenchurch-street, merchant, has presented a petition for liquidation; and Mr. A. H. Miller now applied on behalf of a creditor for the appointment of a receiver. The liabilities were estimated at about £5,000, and the assets consisted of property standing in the debtor's name at various wharves, and which it was desirable to protect, proceedings having been instituted at the suit of creditors.—His Honour, however, thought that the evidence in support of the application was insufficient, and declined to make an order.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

April 2.

(Before Judge HARRISON.)

IN RE RICHARD ROSE O'GRADY.—The bankrupt was formerly a captain in the 44th Regiment. He offered a composition of 5s. in the pound after bankruptcy, which was to be paid within three months after the offer had been approved of by the Court. Mr. Monroe, instructed by Mr. Clay (Messrs. Casey and Clay), appeared for the assignees. Mr. Houston, L.L.D., Mr. W. M'Laughlin, and Messrs. Tench and Reynolds appeared for creditors. Mr. Carton (instructed by Mr. Mathews) appeared for the bankrupt. Mr. Houston complained that the first sitting had been carried by means of proofs, handed in by members of the bankrupt's family, and suggested that a sitting should be held for proof of debts. Mr. Matthews acquiesced in this, and the case was adjourned.

IN RE TIMOTHY CARMODY.—The bankrupt was a draper at

Digitized by Google

Kilmallock. He had been in trade for about a year, during which he had incurred liabilities to the amount of £1,700. His books were irregularly kept. Witnesses were examined in reference to a statement made by a brother of the bankrupt, to the effect that the bankrupt had marked the word "paid" opposite the names of several debtors in his books, although the amounts were still due, the intention being to collect the amounts after the bankruptcy proceedings had terminated. The bankrupt denied that he had ever done so, except in the case of his brother, who had paid bills for him to an amount more than the debt he owed him. The examination of witnesses having closed, Judge Harrison said the trading of the bankrupt had been most reckless. Still, after the explanations that had been given, he did not see what advantage would accrue from further postponing the case. He would, therefore, accept the bankrupt's undertaking to assist in collecting the debts due to him, and would pass his final examination. Mr. P. Martin, M.P., instructed by Mr. Blood (Findlater and Blood), was for the assignees; and Mr. Scallan for the bankrupt.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

APRIL 3.

(Before Mr. PERRONET THOMPSON.)

IN RE HENRY THORNTON.—This was an application which involved a point of practice. The debtor, a grocer in Liverpool, became bankrupt some months ago, and Mr. Price was chosen trustee. By the terms of the 28th section the trustee may, with the sanction of a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors, accept any composition offered by a bankrupt, with or without the condition that the bankruptcy be annulled, subject, however, to the approval of the court, to be testified by the judge signing the resolution. In the present case the creditors had agreed to accept 2s. in the pound guaranteed to the satisfaction of the trustee, and Mr. Bellringer now asked for the court's approval, and that the adjudication might be annulled. His Honour, on proof that the requisites of the statute had been complied with, signified his approval of the composition, but intimated that there must be a distinct and separate application to annul. Mr. Bellringer said he was aware that such a practice had been established in the court, but he respectfully submitted that it was not warranted either by the act or rules. The case of re Harrison decided by the Chief Judge had been cited by the registrars as an authority, but the circumstances of that case were exceptional, and it was no precedent for the course to be adopted in other cases. He further urged that there could be no object in incurring the expense of a separate application, as it was not one of which creditors should have any notice, and therefore would necessarily be unopposed. His Honour said he had no desire to increase the expense of proceedings in bankruptcy, but where he found a practice in existence which impliedly was authorised by the rules, he did not see why it should be disturbed. The approval by the court of the resolution, and the annulling of the adjudication, were clearly two acts and required two applications, and the latter could not be made until the former was granted. Mr. Bellringer admitted there must be two applications, but here, one having been granted, there was no reason why he should not then proceed with the other; of course, upon the usual application stamp. He further added that the terms of the arrangement had been carried out by the bankrupt, and there were special reasons why the annulment of the bankruptcy should not be delayed. His Honour said the matter might be mentioned at the close of the other business, and Mr. Bellringer then appearing, the court made the desired order.

EXETER COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. M. FORTESCUE, Judge.)

RE JOHN SAMUEL HELLIER, Accountant, &c., Axminster.—The bankrupt in this case passed his examination at the last Court. The liabilities amount to about £400, and the assets to £12, and an application was now made by Mr. Hirtzel that a portion of the bankrupt's salary and emoluments, as High Bailiff of the Axminster County Court, might be set aside for the benefit of the creditors. Mr. Hirtzel said he made his application under the 89th and 90th sections of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869. The former section provided "that where the bankrupt is or has been an officer of the army or navy, or an officer, clerk or otherwise employed or engaged in the civil service of the Crown," &c. His Honour, having heard the arguments of Mr. Hirtzel, declined to make an order. Under the circumstances, he did not think it would be right or just in the present case, because it would inflict a penalty on the man which he could not set right again, and, if he were put to great expense, it would utterly ruin him.

SPRING ASSIZES.

KINGSTON, MARCH 30.

(Before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE and a Special Jury.)

MOWATT V. THE CREDIT FONCIER OF ENGLAND.—This was an action by the late Chairman of the Credit Foncier to recover a sum of £3,000, as the alleged amount of remuneration for extra services rendered to the association. Mr. Hawkins, Q.C., Mr. Thesiger, Q.C., and Mr. J. C. Matthews were for the plaintiff; Mr. Serjeant Parry, Mr. Day, Q.C., and Mr. Lumley Smith were for the defendants. The Credit Foncier, it appeared, was formed some years ago, and in 1871 Mr. Mowatt was chairman. In the course of its transactions it became connected with a company called "The Belgian Public Works Company," which in 1871 was ordered to be wound up. On the 15th of March, 1871, the Credit Foncier Board entered into a resolution "That, considering the interest the Credit Foncier have in the affairs of the Belgian Public Works Company, the Chairman (Mr. Mowatt) be requested to undertake the office of liquidator. It appearing, however, that the Belgian Company has little or no funds to appropriate to the expenses of the liquidation, such expenses be borne and paid by this Company so far as the Chairman is one of the liquidators." It appeared that Mr. Mowatt accordingly acted as liquidator, and received a salary as liquidator (apart from his salary as chairman) of £500 a year. In December, 1873, Mr. Mowatt, in consequence of illness, resigned his office as chairman, and was succeeded by Sir Cecil Beadon, but he continued to act as liquidator of the Belgian company. The Belgian Public Works Company, which had been formed for the construction of public works in Brussels, was involved in litigation with the municipal authorities of Brussels and the contractors, and a judgment was obtained against it in the Court there to recover a sum of £115,000 which had been paid to the Credit Foncier. After long negotiations an arrangement was entered into by which the Credit Foncier was to retain the £115,000 and was to receive also the sum of £240,000, amounting to the sum of £355,000; and the case for Mr. Mowatt was that his assent as liquidator was required to this arrangement, and that he only consented to act on a distinct agreement with the then chairman of the Credit Foncier that he was to have £3,000 for his extra labours as liquidator (independent of the £500 a year), which amount he accordingly claimed in this action. The claim, however, was denied, on the ground that there had been no such agreement, but that the amount of remuneration was for some time under consideration and ultimately settled at £1,500, which he declined to accept. This was the question between the parties, depending upon the arrangement entered into in 1871. The case was not concluded until the following day, when, after some suggestions from the Lord Chief Justice, the parties and their counsel engaged in an amicable conference, which resulted in an arrangement.

FAILURES.

A Copenhagen telegram announces the suspension of Baron Gedalia and Co., bankers. The cause is said to be over speculation in railway construction. The liabilities are estimated at 600,000 crowns.

According to despatches from Berlin, the statements respecting the failures on the Bourse in that city had been considerably exaggerated. Seventeen small operators for the fall, whose total liabilities did not exceed 70,000 thalers, have been declared insolvent, but no firms have failed. One bear speculator, with liabilities of 40,000 thalers, committed suicide on Saturday last.

The National Zeitung mentions that the failure of Messrs. im Thurn and Co. has caused that of Messrs. Siemssen and Larsen of Stockholm.

England.—Messrs C. and J. May, large coal and iron masters and brick and tile makers, of Burslem, have placed their estate in the Bankruptcy Court. A meeting of creditors is convened for the end of this month. The immediate cause of failure is said to be inability to meet a claim of £16,000 made by the Earl of Macclesfield for mine rent.—The suspension is reported of Messrs. Burghardt, Kreuels, and Co., merchants in the German trade. The Manchester Courier says that the amount owing in Manchester for yarns will be small, the stoppage being understood to be consequent on share transactions. On Wednesday a petition for liquidation was presented to the Local Court by Messrs. John Longton & Co., Shipowners, Liverpool. Their liabilities are stated to be £3,488, and assets doubtful. The first meeting of creditors is to be held at the offices of Messrs. Gibson and Bolland, on the 23rd April.—On the 2nd instant a petition for adjudication of bankruptcy was presented against William Phillipson, Jeweller, Liverpool. The debts are about £750, and assets £250. Mr. Bolland was appointed receiver.—On the 3rd instant a petition for liquidation was presented by Charles Whittle, of Thalto Heath, near Liverpool, Hotel Keeper, with liabilities about £600. The meeting of creditors is to be held on the 22nd, at the office of Messrs. Gibson and Bolland.—The failure is announced of J. Soulsby Anderson, of Threadneedle Street, London, and Llanelly. The liabilities are £33,000, and the estimated assets £3,000.—A petition was filed in the Dewsbury County Court on Wednesday, on behalf of Mr. J. Wm. Akeroyd, machinist and woollen manufacturer, of Phœnix Mills, Batley. The liabilities are estimated at £10,000.—A petition has been filed in the Manchester County Court, on behalf of Messrs. Burghardt, Kreuels, & Co. German merchants. The liabilities are estimated at £30,000.—A petition has also been filed on behalf of Messrs. Jacob Guedalla & Co., merchants, Manchester, with liabilities amounting to £15,000.

America.—Advices from America announce the suspension of Messrs. Gross, March, & Co., tea and coffee merchants, 99 Wall-street, New York, with liabilities estimated at from £100,000 to £120,000. The firm has been in business for 35 years, and was held in good repute. Shrinkage of value is said to be the cause of their difficulties; they are said to have offered a settlement at 60 per cent.—The failure of Messrs. Hooper, Reese, & Co., bankers and brokers, 122 Baltimore-street, Baltimore, had also transpired.—The creditors of Messrs. Thomas Brownlow & Co., wholesale dealers in dry goods, Toronto, had accepted a compromise of 65 cents, secured.—The liabilities of Messrs. C. King & Co., dry goods dealers, Ottawa, are put down at £15,000.—The Pittston and Elmira Coal Company, in the Western section of New York State, had failed.—Messrs. Barclay, Voorhies, & Co., bankers, Chicago, were reported to have suspended with liabilities of £15,000; as also the Canadian houses of John Watson and George Craig.—Messsrs. George B. James and Co., lumber dealers, Boston, Massachussetts, had failed with liabilities of £160,000.—The suspension is also announced of Messrs. William Pryor and Sons, Halifax, N.S., and of the Equitable Life Insurance Company, Elizabeth, N.J. The announcement is made of the suspension of two old banking firms in Forsyth, Georgia, viz., Messrs. B. Pye and Son, and Messrs. W. L. Lampkin and Co., with liabilities estimated at £50,000.—Messrs. Preston and Stetson, wholesale boot and shoe merchants, Mobile, Alabama, had also failed, with liabilities of £50,000.—Oldham and Co., sugar refiners, New York, are said to be in difficulties.—Messrs. Watson, Craig, and Co., Canada dealers, Chicago, had suspended, with liabilities close on £15,000. The creditors of Messrs. Hooper, Reese, and Co., bankers, Baltimore, whose stoppage was recently reported, had held a meeting, when it was announced their affairs would be wound up. Their liabilities fall chiefly on New York.

Scotland.—Glasgow advices report the stoppage of Messrs. Wilson, M'Lay & Co., metal merchants, of Glasgow and London. The liabilities are set down at £200,000. It is well known that the difficulties of this and some other firms arise from railway contracts with American Companies.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

R. Baynes (Blackburn).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Richard Baynes, cotton manufacturer, Blackburn, the statement of affairs showed liabilities to the amount of £3,250, and assets £1,113. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon.

J. Wyatt (Manchester).—A meeting of the creditors of J. Wyatt, jun., builder, Salford, was held at Manchester on Tuesday. The liabilities secured amount to £4,800, and unsecured £3,000. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon.

Henry Barnard (Birmingham).—A meeting of the creditors of Henry Barnard, 48 Newhall-hill, wholesale jeweller and factor, was held on Wednesday at the offices of Mr. Jacob Rowlands, Ann-street. The statement showed liabilities amounting to £2,042 15s. 11d., and assets £301 10s. 4d. A composition of half-a-crown in the pound, payable in two and four months, was accepted. Mr. Spencer Dominy, accountant, was appointed trustee.

Lewis and Tetley (Bradford).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Lewis and Tetley, Bradford and Bingley, stuff manufacturers, was held at Bradford on Monday. The joint liabilities were stated at £5,283, and the assets at £396. In Lewis' private estate the liabilities were £2,100, and the assets £1,216. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. Kemp was appointed trustee.

Alfred Potts (Stockport).—The first general meeting of creditors of Mr. Alfred Potts, yeast importer, Stockport, was held at the County Court, Stockport, on Monday, the 5th inst., before Mr. Registrar Hyde, Mr. Markinson and Mr. Best, solicitors, Manchester, representing the principal creditors. Debts for £1,861 were proved, and resolutions were passed appointing Mr. Bates, accountant, Stockport, trustee, with a Committee of Inspection, and Mr. Best solicitor to the proceedings, which were transferred to the Manchester County Court.

Henry Lewis (London).—A meeting of the creditors of Henry Lewis, of 193 Oxford-street, cigar importer and tobacconist, was held at the Inns of Court Hotel, Holborn, on the 31st ult., when the debtor's statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,918 11s. 8d., assets £385 5s. 11d. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr Edmund Charles Chatterley (C. Browne, Stanley & Co., Old Jewry, E.C.) public accountant, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection consisting of three of the principal creditors. Messrs Lumley & Lumley, of 15 Old Jewry Chambers, are the solicitors to the proceedings.

J. H. Withers (Liverpool).—On the 6th instant a meeting of creditors was held under a petition for liquidation presented by James H. Withers, of Exchange buildings, Liverpool, cotton broker. The liabilities are £6,382, and assets £6,086. Mr. Bolland was chosen trustee with a committee of inspection.

John Wilson (Liverpool).—On the 6th instant, a meeting of creditors was held under the liquidation petition of John Wilson, of Great Howard-street, boot manufacturer. The liabilities are £1,256, and assets £165. An offer of a composition of 2s. 6d. in the £ was refused, and in lieu thereof a resolution to liquidate the estate by arrangement and appoint Mr. Bolland trustee, was carried.

R. Hopkins (Liverpool).—At the County Court on the 5th instant, before Mr. Registrar Watson, a first meeting of creditors was held under the bankruptcy of Mr. Robert Hopkins, of St. George's-crescent, Liverpool, brush manufacturer. Debts amounting to £2,000 were proved, the creditors being represented by Mr. Phipps and Mr. Martin. The statement of accounts produced by the receivers, Messrs Gibson and Bolland, disclosed liabilities £5,000 and assets £1,300. It was resolved to appoint Mr. Bolland trustee, with a committee of inspection.

John Davis (Birmingham).—A meeting of the creditors of John Davis, a factor's jeweller, carrying on business in Ann-street, as John Davis and Co., was held on Friday at the Queen's Hotel. The total liabilities amounted to £16,273 7s. 10d., and assets to £5,394 9s. 1d. The chairman (Mr. Councillor Payton) stated that the failure was the largest within his memory that had ever taken place in connection with the jewellery trade. After a long discussion Mr. Crowther Davies, the debtor's solicitor, offered a composition of 6s. in the pound. Ultimately the creditors expressed their willingness to accept 6s. 8d. in the pound secured, and payable in four, eight, and twelve months.

The Jersey Mercantile Union Bank.—A public meeting of the creditors of the Mercantile Union Bank was held on Monday evening, with a view to adopting means to hasten the settlement of claims. It is upwards of two years since the bank suspended payment, and nothing virtually has been effected in the shape of satisfying the demands of the creditors. An agreement was made between the shareholders and the creditors for the payment of about 6s. 8d. in the pound, but remains so far a dead letter. The Credit Foncier of England and another English creditor having appealed to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council against the agreement made with the shareholders by the Jersey creditors, a complete stop has thus been put to any speedy payment. The appeal to the Privy Council is based on two points relating to the want of formality in the proceedings before the Jersey Insolvency Commissioner. The meeting decided to appoint a committee to draw up a petition to the Privy Council, to be signed by all the creditors, requesting that the appeal should be heard on as early a day as possible, in order to put an end to the state of suspense and anxiety in which the creditors have been so long compelled to remain.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

The lovers of cheap justice who hailed with enthusiasm the withdrawal of the great European Society liquidation from the cognisance of the Court of Chancery, and its reference to a new tribunal of arbitration, peculiarly exalted in character, may be somewhat disappointed by the particulars just published of the actual expenses as yet incurred. English justice, to quote the inimitable Yankee sketched in Charles Reade's novel "Hard Cash," is "a prime article, but devilish expensive." The contributories and claimants of the European Society have had decisions of the highest importance by the greatest legal luminaries of the day, not always, perhaps, quite consistent with one another, but nevertheless commanding general assent, but the litigation has unquestionably been costly. A return issued yesterday on an order of the House of Commons shows the payments to the "arbitrators, assessors, liquidators, solicitors, secretary, and clerks," since the pssing of the Act in 1872, down to the present date, with the number of sittings and of judgments delivered. The total of these payments has been £49,216 5s. 10d., the number of sittings 49, and of judgments 116. This, in fact, is as nearly as possible £1,000 per sitting all round, and considering that some of them only lasted an hour or two, the figure may fairly be called high, while we must remember that it does not represent the total cost, but only the actual payments to date. Of the receivers of all this money the chief personage in the entire Court, the Arbitrator himself, appears to have only drawn £1,837 10s., which may perhaps be accounted for by the fact, that through the death of Lord Westbury and the elevation of Lord Cairns to the Woolsack, three different persons have filled the post. On the other hand, the liquidators and their clerks have absorbed £21,537, and surely the contributory and the creditor may alike be excused a certain pang on reading that "solicitors" have swallowed £21,141 in England and £185 in Canada. Nevertheless, although the legal bill of costs for this gigantic arbitration will, ere all is over, be doubtless enormous, it may prove to be moderate compared with what "might have been." It would be interesting to calculate how many suits would have been running on all at once in every Equity Court, and possibly in the Common Law Courts, with of course, in addition, several permanently blocking up all the avenues to the House of Lords, had not this sweeping, absolute, and most simple tribunal gathered every interest and claim into its own hands, and there kept them to finish off each in succession by a judgment from which there was no appeal. Fault has been found with the circumstance that, by the accident of a frequent change in the arbitrators both of the European and the Albert Society, apparently conflicting decisions have been given on various points, as for instance, what constitutes novation, or acceptance by an insurer of the new and amalgamated company for the original association. But it will be found that each case which came before Lord Westbury, Lord Cairns, or Lord Romilly had certain points of difference, not, perhaps, very palpable to ordinary apprehension yet strongly obvious to intellects which so delight in nice distinctions as those trained to the noble profession of the law; and, therefore, it is pretty certain that the opportunities for litigation, unless representative cases could have been selected to cover groups of others, would have proved almost infinite when the policies were numbered by many thousands, and the number of companies absorbed by dozens. On the whole, we do not think all concerned will have much cause for complaint. The end sought by the arbitration was not primarily cheapness, although relatively the Court has, of course, been inexpensive; but clearness and promptness in the decisions, with, above everything, finality. This, at least, has been gained, lawyers themselves being witnesses. We certainly shall not have the scandal of half-a-dozen "Jarndyce v. Jarndyce" suits dragging their slow length along to future generations, of which at one time there seemed a painful likelihood—Telegraph.

LAWYERS AND ACCOUNTANTS.

At a preliminary meeting held for the purpose of reviving the Portsmouth and Gosport Law Society, the Chairman (Mr. Cousins, clerk to the Justices of Portsmouth) is reported to have spoken as follows:—"The object was not for the purpose of meeting together and debating, but for the purpose of protecting themselves, and advancing their interests. The law was on their side, and they intended carrying it out, and enforcing its provisions. It seemed a discreditable thing that, having the law on their side, they should quietly stand by and allow other persons who had very often but little education, and who had been to no expense, to encroach upon them and usurp their business. (Hear, hear.) The accountant should carry out legitimately the business of an accountant, and he knew one in the town who never encroached upon anything in their profession, but confined himself to the particular business of his own occupation. But at the same time there were a few who did not scruple to give professional advice, who started proceedings in various courts of justice, men of unscrupulous character who shared the profits; and it was for the purpose of preventing those persons from so doing, and usurping the legitimate rights of solicitors, and to protect the public against them, that such a society should be established. How was it that gentlemen objected to take the initiative in such matters? Why, it was because they did not like to take proceedings against what they called near relatives of the profession. If he had a case of that kind brought to him, he should say he agreed that it was most objectionable, but at the same time he would rather not take it up. It was most invidious to take proceedings against an accountant, auctioneer, or agent, who was not carrying out his legitimate practice. But in a society they were in unison and strengthened, and if they were all united in endeavouring to support their common profession, there could be no invidious distinction with reference to any member."

LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

The following statements and abstracts of reports have been forwarded by the Board of Trade, in pursuance of the Life Assurance Companies' Act, 1870, to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, during the month ending 31st March, 1875, for inspection by the public at his office:—

THE STOCK EXCHANGE.

The Paris Correspondent of the Economist writes as follows:—

"After the evidence given by Mr. de Zoete before the English Parliamentary Committee on Foreign Loans as to the value of a 'quotation' on the London Stock-Exchange, it may be interesting to know the opinion of the Paris Chamber of Agents de Change on the same question. It may be remembered that last year the Syndicate of Agents de Change were condemned to pay damages to some bondholders of the Transcontinental railway swindle for having admitted the securities of that undertaking without sufficient caution to quotations in the official price current. M. Moreau, chairman of the Paris Company of Agents de Change, in his report to that body on the proceedings of the year 1874, touches on the subject to protest against the idea that the 'quotation' can create a responsibility for those who accord it. 'It is to be regretted" he says, 'that our business should be so imperfectly understood by the public, and that they should attach to certain of our acts a meaning which these have not, and never should have. It is supposed often wrongly, that the admission of a security to quotation is a sort of consecration given to it, a testimony in its favour, a recommendation of the Syndical Chamber. There can be no greater error. The quotation is nothing more than an affirmation that a security has been sold at certain prices. If it pleases a number of capitalists to do large business on any undertaking, to them belongs, and not to us, the delicate task of judging whether the affair is a safe or an unsafe one. Provided that it comes within the conditions required by the fiscal laws, and realizes sufficiently the conditions of competition and publicity, we cannot refuse our services, as we are in possession of a monopoly. . . . The Syndical Chamber of Agents de Change has always taken care to avoid all responsibility with respect to the quotation. In 1837 it wrote to M. Lacare-Laplagne, then Minister of Finance, a letter by which it asked him to decide finally on the admission of new securities; he refused categorically to do so, inviting the Chamber to do its best, and to act with prudence; and while himself repudiating the responsibility, admitted that it should not fall on us. Since that time the Syndical Chamber has obtained all the documents which have appeared to be of a nature to show, with the greatest probability, the value of the security. It has required that, by the importance of the capital and the diffusion of the titles, there should be a public interest in quoting the security; it has demanded lists of subscribers, constituting a serious guarantee of the undertaking, and for foreign securities the quotation of the country whence they came. Does that mean that the Chamber accepts any responsibility whatever? By no means. It simply obtains information which may appear to it useful to prevent fraud or folly; but it has not the pretension to make itself answerable for the undertaking. And if false lists have been submitted to it, and its good faith has been abused by authentic signatures, there are laws to punish the guilty parties, and judges to apply those laws. To ask for more would be to demand what is impossible, and to provoke the Chamber to refuse its offices to new securities; it would be to stop business and paralyze that great sprit of enterprise to which our age is indebted for being what it is, and humanity for the progress it has made during the last fifty years."

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice af appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. Charles Lee Nichols has been appointed by the Master of the Rolls provisional official liquidator of the Australia Direct Steam Navigation Company (Limited).

Bankruptcy Reform.—A Correspondent of the Law Times writes as follows in regard to the letter from Mr. Bolland on Bankruptcy Reform, which appeared in our last issue:—"The other day at Preston the ordinary notices to creditors of first meetings were objected to because they only bore the ½d. stamp sufficient for their carriage through the post, a general order having been received from Mr. Nicol to insist upon a penny stamp. I may, perhaps, be permitted to state that the order in question does not refer expressly to 'penny stamps' or to bankruptcy proceedings, but is a general one, and worded as follows:—'All proceedings, warrants, and summonses must be sent by letter, and not by book post.' The order was issued above twelve months ago, and it has since been the custom at this and neighbouring courts to require all proceedings (bankruptcy or otherwise) to be posted in accordance with the terms of the order or instruction, and in very few cases has demur been made, but on the contrary, approval expressed at the alteration. Creditors have oftentimes expressed a preference for sealed or covered communications in lieu of loose and open ones generally under the book-post system."

County Courts Bill.—In the House of Commons on Monday Mr. Cross said it was the intention of the Lord Chancellor to introduce in the House of Lords very shortly a Bill which was substantially the same as that of last Session with respect to County Courts.

MANCHESTER INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS. — The annual meeting of the Manchester Institute of Accountants was held at the Queen's Hotel, on Monday last, Mr. James Halliday in the chair. The report of the Council and the Treasurer's statement of receipts and payments for the year ending December 31st, 1874, were received and adopted: the retiring members of council, Messrs. John Adamson, Samuel Cottam, H. G. Nicholson, and Charles Tattersall were re-elected; and Messrs. Kett, Beardsall and Thomas Mottershead were appointed auditors of the Institute's accounts for the current year. The annual dinner took place after the proceedings of the meeting were concluded.

THE ANONYMOUS BENEFACTOR.—It is stated that an examination of the books of the late Mr. Benjamin Attwood shows that he has given away anonymously £1,000 cheques to the value of £475,000, so that the £350,000 which he was said to have distributed in this way was considerably under the mark. From the same source it is stated that Mr. Attwood gave away to his poor relations and dependents no less a sum than £400,000.

WINDING-UP.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Australia Direct Steam Navigation Company, Limited.

At a Court of Proprietors held at the Bank of England, Mr. Henry Hucks Gibbs, Deputy-Governor, was chosen Governor, and Mr. Edward Howley Palmer Deputy-Governor for the ensuing term.

Bank Notes.—According to a Parliamentary paper just printed, the amount of bank notes held by the public on the 30th December last was £26,142,000; the notes held in reserve on that day amounted to £9,642; the coin held in reserve, £709,000. The total amount of bullion in the Bank on the same day, was £21,493,000.

Savings Banks and the National Debt.—A balance-sheet has been issued setting forth the assets and liabilities of the Commissioners for the Reduction of the National Debt in respect of savings banks established under the Act of Geo. IV., c. 92; and showing the securities held by the said Commissioners on account of such savings banks on Nov. 20, 1874. The total amount due to trustees on that date was £41,826,438 15s. 11d. The different securities amounted to £38,462,982 4s. 3d., showing a deficiency of £3,363,456 4s. 8d.

The Lord Chancellor will receive the Judges, Qneen's Counsel, Benchers, and Registrars of the Court of Chancery, at his Lordship's residence, No. 5 Cromwell Houses, on Thursday, April 15 (first day of Easter Term), at twelve o'clock.

The Budget.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer will make his financial statement on Thursday, the 15th inst.

The Bankruptcy (Scotland) Law Amendment Bill passed through Committee of the House of Commons on Monday.

Alleged Embezzlement.— At a special sitting of the Widnes Petty Sessions on Tuesday, Robert David Simpson was brought up on a warrant charged with embezzling £147 5s. 6d., belonging to the Local Board of Widnes, in whose service he has acted as collector for about the last six years. The prisoner was remanded for a fortnight, the magistrates fixing the bail of the prisoner, himself in £4,000, and two sureties in a like amount. The books of the Local Board have been placed in the hands of Mr. William Rock, public accountant, Widnes, for investigation.

Admission of Attorneys.—There are as many as 135 applications next Term to be admitted as attorneys, besides numerous renewed notices.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

APRIL 17, 1875.

The annual meeting of the Manchester Institute of Accountants, of which we give a detailed report this week, was marked by a practical spirit and a determination to elevate the tone of the profession which make us very hopeful for its future. In nearly every respect the views of the speakers were identical with those expressed almost every week in our columns, and which we have urged strongly for the consideration of our readers. And we trust that the determination expressed at Manchester to support those who are striving so earnestly for the good of accountants may bear ample fruit, and that we may, as the result of our labours, have to record that an Incorporated Society of Accountants is watching over, guiding, and regulating, the best interests of their profession. We point to such meetings as that at Manchester as a proof that this consummation will soon be effected, and we hope that all members of the profession will co-operate heartily with those who are working for so unquestionably desirable an end.

Digitized by Google

What is wanted in the interest of the profession is very simple. It is, that measures shall be adopted by which the title of accountant may have as definite a meaning attached to it as that of surgeon or of solicitor. This would at once remedy the cause of complaint put forward by the Council as to the too frequent choice of incompetent persons to act as auditors. If it were once for all clearly understood that one of the duties of accountants was, to become fitted to examine and report upon the mysteries of ledgers, journals, and balance sheets, those who were concerned in the proper working of a public company or charitable institution would soon insist upon their employment. But this reform, in every way desirable as it is for the due protection of shareholders and subscribers, cannot be finally effected till it is an universal rule, admitting of no exception, that no man shall be allowed to style himself an accountant unless he has proved his competency by the test of a stringent and thorough examination, and is amenable in case of professional misconduct to the jurisdiction of a central council.

In fact, as Mr. Collier said, the profession of an accountant is by no means confined to the casting-up of a column of figures, and cannot be held to afford scope only for the abilities required in setting to rights the clumsily worded books of some petty tradesman. "To become a perfect accountant implied an acquaintance with almost every thing that came up in this world. They must know something of every trade, and in this sense might be said to belong to every trade." Upon the accountants devolve the duties of receiverships, of the management of bankrupts' estates, and of companies under liquidation; they must be keen men of business, and shrewd men of the world. And above all, they must be men whose honour and integrity are absolutely beyond the reach of the faintest breath of suspicion. The duty of an attorney is to do the best he can for the interests of his client, knowing that any steps he may take will be narrowly watched by an adversary as keen and vigilant as he is himself. He is bound scrupulously to guard the trust committed to him; but, beyond the duty he owes to his client, he is unfettered. Law is a game of chess, in which every move is made either as defence from a threatened attack, or as a step of bold offence. The attorney is merely the agent who sets the pieces in motion. He may and does advise as to the merits of a dispute; he may refuse to take action in a case which he thinks unjust or unfair; but as a rule he is simply the highly perfected engine which carries out the bidding of his client. To betray these interests would be infamy; and, to the honour of the profession be it said, the instances of this are almost absolutely unknown. But to his client alone his allegiance is due.

Far more wide are the duties of the accountant. He is not the organ of one man, but of all concerned. The duty of the solicitor to a bankrupt is to bring his man through with as little loss and unpleasantness as possible. Creditors may fume and fret, and enemies take all means known to the law to harass and delay the debtor; but it is the pride of the solicitor to defeat all their machinations, to oppose device to device and plan to plan, till, in sheer weariness, the opposition is lulled, and the bankrupt obtains his discharge. But the accountant trustee stands in a widely different position. His duties are primarily to the creditors, to realise the assets and distribute them without fear or favour. And he stands also in a fiduciary position towards the debtor, into possession of whose property he has entered. If he is bound to see that no assets which might be made available for distribution have been overlooked or neglected, he is bound also so to deal with them that the bankrupt's property is not needlessly sacrificed. In most cases the payment of a small dividend is the result of a bankruptcy, and the efforts of the trustee are directed to increasing this as much as possible; and so far he considers only the interests of the creditors. But it might happen that the estate yielded sufficient to pay all claims in full; in this case the "resulting trust" for the benefit of the debtor would come into operation.

There is another point too connected with liquidations. A receiver and manager is appointed that the property may be protected, and, if necessary, a business sold as a going concern. In this event, the trustee becomes necessarily cognisant of trade secrets and business details, which are of extreme value. Here is an additional reason for holding that an accountant's integrity should be unimpeachable, and that the world should place implicit faith in the inviolable honour of the men to whom such a responsibility is confided. If this confidence is once shaken, if an idea ever creeps abroad that there are men who might abuse their positions for the sake of gaining a private advantage—then accountants will sink into the ranks of those impostors with whom they are so often with wilful perversity confounded.

To avert this evil,—to raise at once the public estimation of the profession and of its own actual worth,—to make the name of public accountant as honoured as that of any other body of men,—can be brought about only by constant and strenuous effort. Manchester has led the way in many reforms, let her now lead the way in this.

There are various other points of interest in the report, to which we cannot now advert, and especially to the manner in which the leader of the Manchester solicitors referred to the accountants—a subject we propose to treat more fully next week. After the silly articles so frequently put forth on the relations between solicitor and accountant, there is something very refreshing in the remarks of Mr. Ponsonby. But as to this we must defer our remarks.

There is no more difficult question for any reformer to encounter than the due regulation of professional charges, so that the remuneration earned shall bear its just proportion to the amount of skill and labour expended. Even in trade a fair profit is often matter of dispute, though in that case what Adam Smith terms the "higgling of the market" fairly enough determines it, and there are few persons who seriously contend that a tradesman's profits should be limited by law. The question of accountants' charges will be found rather a difficult one to settle, and it may be worth while to indicate some of the rocks ahead in the way of reformers.

There is no class whose charges are more rigorously defined and limited than solicitors. A physician's fees are prescribed by custom, and regulated according to his own celebrity and the wealth of his patients. The fees of a barrister, though governed by certain rather vague laws, are, as regards the sums paid for advocacy, dependent, like those of the physician, on his professional position and on the importance of the cause and the wealth of the parties. As regards pleadings and drafting, the amount received is regulated mainly by length. A solicitor is tied down terribly. The work done is paid for mainly by length, and without much allowance being made for the labour or responsibility involved in the work. The consequent result is, that a solicitor's bill of costs is made up of numerous petty items which worry and annoy a client far more than the larger charges. By striking a fair average a satisfactory result is doubtless obtained. A solicitor sets off the heavy work for which he is inadequately remunerated against the lighter bits, and so manages to flourish notwithstanding taxing-masters and all their rigour. But the system is a faulty one, and has led to much evil in the shape of a growth of verbiage in instruments and in circuity and cumbrousness in legal forms.

The most difficult questions to deal with are those in which, while an immense amount of labour is expended, the subject-matter is of trifling pecuniary value. Many a solicitor has found that in some trifling purchase his charges, if he were to set them down on a fair scale, would amount to as much as the money expended. In the same way, the simple trusteeship of a small estate with almost nominal assets may entail an immense amount of trouble, and call for the exercise of considerable professional skill. A payment proportioned to work done would be out of the question; a payment by per-centage would be ludicrously insufficient. To pass to another aspect of the question, we may ask, how is an investigation to be remunerated where the property is of large amount? If, as is the practice in some cases, the payment is proportioned to the number of hours employed, a direct encouragement is held out to hesitation and delay. To pay by time without exacting some guarantee against the abuse, is as absurd as to pay a solicitor for the length of his draft without having regard to any thing beyond the number of folios.

The best solution of the difficulties would be to distinguish clearly between the different duties which an accountant has to perform. Accountancy simple, the examination and investigation of books and the preparing of balance sheets, might receive remuneration in proportion to the number of hours employed and of the importance of the business; it being in the power of the client to appeal against any overcharge to the Council of the Society of Accountants, who would decide upon the case. For bankruptcy and liquidations we would repeat our suggestion that an official class be established, and paid by a sliding scale varying with the amounts of assets and liabilities. This class must of course treat all cases on a similar footing; and their members might either be chosen in the ordinary way as trustees, or in the case of a possibly unremunerative piece of business might be called upon to act in rotation, it being clearly understood that any one who was chosen trustee would receive merely a proportionate remuneration. The auditing of the accounts of public companies and institutions would be given only to the recognised heads of the profession, and no question would be likely to be raised as to the amount of their remuneration.

But the regulation of charges must depend upon the establishment of some central authority able to carry out the rules it has itself made, while the courts of equity and bankruptcy would retain complete control over the charges of accountants acting in matters pertaining to their jurisdiction. The uniformity of charge can only be brought about by uniformity of professional action, and by ensuring that a certain minimum of skill shall be at least available in all cases. Till a definite governing body is established, charges must be left pretty much to the individual members. No more important duty can fall to their lot than that of drawing up a scale of fees which shall duly reward talent and merit, without pressing hard upon those who require assistance, or giving an undue advantage to the careless and incompetent.

"UNAUTHORISED PERSONS" IN COUNTY COURTS.

The professional spirit of the Law Times is sadly vexed by the frequent appearance of "unauthorised persons" in County Courts, and it has apparently become necessary to deliver a weekly homily on that subject. We can quite sympathise with our contemporary in these efforts to maintain, in their integrity, the rights and dignities of the legal profession, more particularly as the Law Times is at last showing some disposition to discourage the unreasonable and unjust practice of setting down debt collectors, and agents who follow a kindred calling, indiscriminately as "accountants." It would appear, however, from the following extract from our contemporary, that there is scarcely a great degree of unanimity on the subject of "unauthorised persons" amongst the lawyers themselves.

"Some County Court judges are determined to uphold the dignity of the Profession and to enforce the law against unauthorised persons practising as solicitors in their courts; some insist upon solicitors appearing before them in proper professional costume; some discourage agents of all kinds who are wont to hang about the purlieus of these local tribunals, while other of these judges are disposed to take an opposite view of the matter. His Honour the judge of the Chester County Court (Mr. H. Lloyd) is determined to enforce the provisions of sect. 36 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73 (the Attorneys' Act of 1843), in the interest of the public and the Profession, while in Mr. H. W. Cole, Q.C., the judge of the Birmingham court, the debt collector practising in his court appears to have a friend. "The rules and forms of the court" to which His Honour referred as recognising agents, cannot override an Act of Parliament, and the sooner such rules are made to conform with the several enactments passed for the protection of the public and the Profession, the better. In the case before us we have no doubt that a gross contempt of court has been perpetrated, a repetition of which on the part of agents, the judge, in our opinion, has, by his expression of opinion in open court, done much to encourage. If the Profession in Birmingham will only take the matter up with a will and make a formal representation to the Lord Chancellor, the difficulty and irregularity would soon be rectified. One County Court judge, but only one, has lately gone the length of having posted up in his court the names of certain agents whom he has directed the registrar to recognise, although the law expressly forbids such recognition. Surely it is not because no solicitor's fee is allowed where a debt is under £5 that therefore in such cases the express provisions of an Act of Parliament are to be discarded? The argument of the judge of the Birmingham Court, that in small cases suitors may employ and pay these debt collectors as agents in legal business, is purely fallacious. His Honour is reported to have said that some of the debt collectors who practised as agents were men of great respectability. No doubt that is so, but their proceedings are none the less on that account in direct contravention of several Acts of Parliament; and, on the other hand, it must not be forgotten that these agents are wholly irresponsible persons. Many of them, most of them, we fear, unscrupulous and dishonest, and at whose hands unfortunate and ignorant suitors and debtors suffer great injustice. His Honour complained that to stop this agency in County Court business would be to stop the business of the court. Even if this was an argument in favour of allowing a breach of the law, we fail to see that it need have such an operation. In conclusion, to carry his Honour's argument and contentions to their legitimate end, is to assert that in actions on contract under £5 any agent may be employed as though, because the amount is small, therefore difficult questions of law could not arise. The judge is entirely mistaken. Not only are these agents unable to recover their fees, &c., which they deduct from the moneys they receive no doubt, but they are guilty of contempt of court, and this latter condition the judge declines to recognise, to the advantage of these quack lawyers and to the detriment of every one else. Only last session the Legislature aimed at suppressing this class of persons or rather at confining them to the transaction of their legitimate business, by enacting the 12th section of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act 1874. The term "agent," as used in County Court rules, can only mean a wife or child or other relation or friend willing (without the expectation of fee or reward) to represent a suitor unable to attend the court or to do what is required by the process or order of the court. We believe the judge of the Birmingham County Court is the first to urge that this word "agent" may be considered to include a debt collector, whose business consists in issuing and charging for issuing, process in County Courts, and otherwise acting as the paid agent of the suitor in relation thereto."

THE MANCHESTER INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.—A meeting of the Council of this Institute was held on Monday evening at the rooms, in Cross-street, when the officers for the current year were elected, viz., Mr. Adam Murray, president; Mr. F. W. Popplewell, vice-president; Mr. William Aldred, treasurer; and Mr. Edwin Collier, secretary.

THE NEW COURTS OF JUSTICE.—The expenditure in respect of the new Courts of Justice in London up to the end of the year 1874 reached £1,042,905. As much as £933,288 of that sum had been spent in the purchase of the site and in incidental charges; and £85,596 in payments on account of contracts for the foundations and erection of the courts and offices, and architect's commission. The Civil Service Estimates show that a further vote of £75,000 is now proposed for the erection of the building; the revised estimate for this is stated at £826,000.

THE MANCHESTER INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.

The Manchester Institute of Accountants which was founded in February, 1871 " to increase the efficiency and usefulness of professional accountants; to protect the interests of its members; to express opinions upon all questions relating to the profession, and to do all such things as may be necessary for the attainment of these ends," held its annual meeting at the Queen's Hotel, Manchester, on Monday, April 5th, as briefly reported in the last issue of the Accountant. There was a large and influential attendance of members. Mr. Halliday, the President of the Institute, having taken the chair, the annual report was presented. In the report, the council stated that they had modified the rule for the admission of Fellows, so as to obviate the exclusion of any one who could make a reasonable claim to be admitted. Their quarterly meetings had been the occasion of interesting conversations on subjects bearing on the pursuits, and affecting the interests, of the profession. The Lord Chancellor having appointed a committee to inquire into the Bankruptcy Laws, the council memorialised his lordship to place one or more members of the Institute upon that committee. In this, however, they were unsuccessful, but, assisted by some members not in the council, they prepared a series of suggestions, and forwarded the same to the Lord Chancellor's committee, and they have every confidence that these suggestions, made, not solely in the interests of the profession, but of the commercial public will recive the fullest consideration at the hands of the committee. The council regret to find that in some instances public institutions, professing to have their accounts audited by professional accountants, have nominated gentlemen lacking the training and experience essential to the efficient discharge of such an office. The council feel it a difficult and delicate duty to interfere in such matters; but believing that such nominations result from want of consideration, are of opinion that by keeping the Institute and its objects before the puplic the objection will in time be remedied. The subscriptions, for the year, of the Fellows and Associates amounted to £100, and the financial year closed with a balance in hand of £340.

The Chairman moved the adoption of the report. Referring to the action of the committee on the Bankruptcy Laws, he said that when they communicated with the Lord Chancellor, as mentioned in the report, they received a courteous answer to the effect that the committee had not only begun but had made some progress in their labours. In spite of this they had no reason to doubt that the suggestions forwarded to the committee were utilised.

The report and financial statement were then unanimously adopted. The next business was to elect four members of the council to replace the four retiring members: Messrs. John Adamson, Samuel Cottam, H. G. Nicholson and Charles Tattersall. These gentlemen were after a ballot declared to be re-elected; and the retiring auditors, Messrs. Beardsell and Mottershead were again elected for the forthcoming year.

This concluded the formal business of the meeting. The members then sat down to the annual dinner, at which the President, Mr. Halliday, took the chair, and Mr. John Thomas the vice-chair. The chairman proposed in a few well chosen words, the toast of the evening: " the Manchester Institute of Accountants."

Mr. Edwin Collier, the honorary secretary of the Institute, in responding thanked the company for the heartiness of the response, and reminded them that the success of the Institute depended mainly on the gentlemen in the room that night. The active co-operation of all was necessary, and with that co-operation they were sure of success. As they were aware, the main objects of the Institute were to improve the status of professional accountants and to increase the usefulness and efficiency of the members. This had been in fact brought about by means of their quarterly meetings, where valuable suggestions and useful information were thrown out. But this was a matter which really depended on every individual member. Each must personally endeavour to increase his own efficiency and the increasing respect of others would inevitably follow. By means of that Institute the public might easily know whom they might trust. Their rules insisted on the necessity for examinations. By means of the recognition of such a standard it would become impossible for people who only just knew enough of book-keeping to tell the difference between the debit and credit side of a ledger, and who barely manage to add up a column of figures successfully, to claim to belong to the profession. In fact an accountant's work required something very different from a simple knowledge of the " three R's." (Hear, hear.) To become a perfect accountant implied an acquaintance with almost everything that came up in the world. They must know something of every trade, and in this sense might be said to belong to every trade. If the public would only look they would have no difficulty in recognising that the Manchester Institute of Accountants included in its ranks the pink of the profession, both as regards intelligence and honourable dealing with their clients. (Cheers.)

Mr. Adam Murray proposed the Manchester Incorporated Law Association. As accountants they were brought into frequent communication with solicitors, they ever received the fullest consideration at their hands, and looking at their frequent intercourse, the Manchester Law Association had a distinct claim on their regards.

Mr. Ponsonby, the President of the Manchester Incorporated Law Association acknowledged the toast. His association would always be glad to exchange kindly offices; their respective professions must of necessity be brought into close contact and they must therefore, in a manner, stand or fall together. The objects of the two institutions were similar, neither was seeking personal ends, and both were endeavouring to elevate the moral tone and character of their profession. Mr. Unwin, the Hon. Sec. of the Law Association, also acknowledged the toast.

Mr. W. Aldred proposed the " Manchester Chamber of Commerce," in a speech eulogising the efforts of that body, efforts that were gratuitous and assiduous, and which concerned the greatest and widest interests.

Digitized by Google

Mr. THOMAS BROWNING, the Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce, acknowledged the toast. People might think that the prosperity of accountants depended on the disasters of commerce, but they would not be suspected of rejoicing in those disasters.

Mr. GRAHAM proposed "Kindred Institutes," and referring to the existence of other similar Associations, said they were all working up to the same point, and that the time would come when they would form a great and united whole.

Mr. JOHN DUFFIELD, as a member of the London Institute, responded.

"The Council" was proposed by Mr. DAVID SMITH, who said they were really as yet only in their infancy, and their position was only just beginning to receive due recognition. In the minds of many people he feared they had been associated too nearly with respectable "bum bailiffs"; and that was a state of things which should be altered.

Mr. F. W. POPPLEWELL in replying, said that their only object was to train up a body of accountants who should be honourable, right minded, and able men. They were determined that none should practise but those who had served a reasonable term of apprenticeship and were competent accountants. He wished to contradict the statement that had been made concerning their interest in the disasters of commerce. There were a good many of them who did not get their living out of the disasters of the country, it would be fairer to say that they made their living by preserving estates for the benefit of the whole mercantile community. The Council had tried to do their duty, and they were exceedingly anxious to raise the moral tone of the profession. It would be a great thing to make themselves an incorporated society, so that no man should be allowed to call himself an accountant who was not included in its lists. But at present they could not get a charter. If they got one they would have to include all who at present call themselves accountants, which would really be greater evil than the present arrangements involved.

This brought the proceedings to a conclusion.

LONDON REGISTRARS.

We observe from the Civil Service estimates for the present year, that the salaries of the Registrars of the London Bankruptcy Court have been augmented. Hitherto the several Registrars have been in receipt of £1,200 per annum. The salary of the senior Registrar is now increased to £1,400, and the salaries of the other Registrars to £1,300. No objection can be made to these increments, as the amount of work performed by the Bankruptcy Registrars will bear favourable comparison with that performed by the Registrars of the Court of Chancery, whose salaries vary from £1,250 to £2,000. Even were the Bankruptcy Registrars relieved of the duties of Chief Judge, as advocated in our columns, these officers would still have most important and varied duties to perform. Probably, therefore, no exception can well be taken to the proposed increase of their salaries; on the contrary, looking at the recommendation made in regard to them by Lord Lisgar's commission of last year, the government could hardly have done less than make the increase.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

(Present—Sir JAMES COLVILLE, Sir BARNES PEACOCK, Sir MONTAGUE SMITH, Sir ROBERT COLLIER, and Sir HENRY KEATING.)

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY V. THE BANK OF TORONTO.—This was an appeal from judgments of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Review for Lower Canada, reversing a decision of the Superior Court. The Solicitor-General and Mr. F. M. White were counsel for the appellants; Mr. Henry Matthews, Q.C., Mr. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. R. Vaughan Williams for the respondents. The original action was brought by the Bank of Toronto against the European Assurance Society to recover the sum of 16,000 dollars and interest, being the amount of a policy of guarantee executed by the Society in October, 1864, against such loss as might be occasioned to the bank by the want of integrity, honesty, or fidelity, or by the negligence, defaults, irregularities of Mr. Alexander Munro, then their agent in Montreal. The bank alleged that Mr. Munro, without authority, and in direct violation of the instructions given him, granted to Messrs. Nichols and Robinson, brokers, of Montreal, large sums of money by way of overdraught on their current deposit accounts without security; that those overdraughts were concealed from the accounts; and that the moneys were used by the firm in respect of financial speculations in which they and Munro were jointly interested. The brokers becoming insolvent, the bank ultimately lost 28,160 dollars. The Society pleaded that Mr. Munro was merely acting in the ordinary exercise of his discretion as the banks agent; that the overdraughts were neither fraudulent nor irregular, and that Mr. Munro's dealings showed no want of honesty, or such negligence and irregularity as would be within the meaning of the policy. They also contended that the policy had been vitiated by the neglect of the bank to inform them of the alleged fraudulent overdraughts within two months of their discovery. Mr. Justice Monk decided that the allowance of overdraughts was not in itself an irregularity within the meaning of the policy; that there was no evidence of any fraudulent collusion, and that the policy had become void by the bank's neglect in the instance referred to. From that judgment the bank appealed to the Court of Review, who reversed it and ordered the Society to pay the sum assured (16,000 dollars) and interest. That order was upheld on a further appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench. The arguments in the case were unfinished when the Court rose on this day.

SIR BARNES PEACOCK gave judgment on Thursday: he said that in this case he saw there was one judgment for the Assurance Company, which was reversed on appeal, and there were two judgments for the bank. Two judges out of seven were in favour of the Assurance Society, and of the five there were four of opinion that there was fraud on the part of Munro, and, therefore, the bank could recover. After going through the facts, Sir Barnes said their lordships would advise her Majesty to affirm the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, and dismiss the appeal with costs.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Vice-Chancellor Malins has appointed Mr. F. Maynard official liquidator of the London and Paris Hotel Company.

Mr. Frederick Lucas, of No. 26 Maddox-street, W., has been appointed Receiver and Manager of the estate of Moritz Wolfsky, of No. 5 Pilgrim-street, Ludgate-hill, leather bag manufacturer.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In Re Siordet and Co.—This was an application for the appointment of a receiver and manager to the estate of John James Siordet, John Louis Siordet, and William Hume Trapmann, merchants, of 59 Mark-lane, carrying on business under the above style. Mr. H. W. Jones, (Nicholson, Nicol, and Co.), in making the application, said that the liabilities were estimated at £400,000, but that a considerable portion of that would come off, so that in all probability not more than £100,000 would rank against the estate. The assets were at present unestimated, but consisted of book debts, property abroad, furniture, and items of considerable value; also sums due from firms abroad, and remittances arriving daily. It was necessary that a receiver and manager should be appointed to receive the remittances and carry on the business. His Honour appointed Mr. Turquand (Turquand, Youngs, and Co.) to the office.

April 10.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray.)

In re A. H. Mobsby.—In this case an application was renewed—by Mr. A. H. Miller—for the appointment of a receiver. The debtor, carrying on business as a merchant, at 10 Cullum-street, and formerly at 9 Fenchurch-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, his liabilities being roughly estimated at £5000, and assets £2500. A considerable quantity of property was lying at various wharves, and it was desirable that some person should be appointed to protect the same. The application being now supported by creditors for £1950, his Honour appointed a receiver.

April 12.

(Before Mr. Registrar Brougham.)

In re Henry Bradley.—The debtor is a builder and decorator, of 180 Fulham-road. He has presented a petition for liquidation; and upon the application of Mr. H, Harris, his honour appointed a receiver, and granted an interim injunction restraining several actions. The debts are estimated at about £1,300, and assets £500.

April 13.

(Before Mr. Registrar Hazlitt.)

In re C. J. Bury and Roger Leech.—This was an application by Messrs. Nash, Field and Co., for the appoinment of a receiver. The debtors, who are Australian merchants, of Gracechurch-street and Melbourne, have filed a petition for the liquidation of their affairs. The liabilities are estimated at £65,000, but the value of the assets is not yet ascertained. His Honour appointed Mr. Whinney, public accountant, of the firm of Harding, Whinney, and Co., Old Jewry, receiver to the estate, and granted an interim injunction restraining the proceedings of suing creditors.

Mr. Registrar Keene held a sitting in liquidation matters, and disposed of several contested applications for registration. In one case the assets were returned at £1,425, and registration was opposed on the ground that the actual amount was £425 only. After an examination of the debtor, the Registrar held that the statement of affairs being erroneous, the objection taken to the registration was perfectly tenable, and must be sustained.

April 14.

(Before Mr. Registrar Brougham, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re John Morison.—The debtor, who is described as a merchant and manufacturer, ship owner, and ship insurance broker, of 27 Goodman's-yard, Minories, Hackney-wick, and 21 Billiter-street, has filed a petition under the arrangement clauses. His liabilities are stated at £200,000 in the aggregate; the assets consist, for the most part, of ships at sea on their way to this country, and the debtor has also a claim for £40,000, which is now the subject of arbitration. Mr. C. E. Jones, for the debtor, and with the concurrence of a creditor for £13,500, asked that Mr. Robert Fletcher, accountant, 2 Moorgate-street, should be appointed receiver and manager of the property. The evidence showed that one of the businesses carried on by the debtor was that of a rope manufacturer at Hackney-wick, and large contracts were pending. It was important that some person acting on behalf of the creditors under the authority of the Court should receive the freight of vessels payable to the debtor as owner. His Honour made the desired appointment, and also granted an interim injunction to restrain proceedings in an action brought by one of the creditors. He intimated, however, that the receiver should not interfere with the arbitration, but that he might make any application to the Court on the subject.

In re J. Miles.—The debtor, who carried on business as a lead, glass, and colour merchant, at High-street, Shoreditch, has presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs, stating his liabilities at £72,239. Mr. C. Knox now moved the Court for the appointment of a receiver, and said that the application was supported by creditors to the amount of £3,900. It did not, however, appear that the property was in any danger at present, and the learned Registrar therefore declined to appoint a receiver, but gave leave to the parties to renew the application if they found it necessary to do so to protect the estate.

April 15.

(Before Mr. Registrar Brougham.)

In re J. F. Sang.—The debtor, described as of 4 Cavendish-road, St. John's-wood, architect and artist, has petitioned under the liquidation clauses, and Mr. Pamphilon now applied for a restraining order with a view to the protection of the property against suing creditors. The debts were about £41,000, and the assets consisted chiefly of freehold land at Knightsbridge, valued at £61,000, besides furniture and other property to the value of £1,200. Although the debtor had a surplus, subject to realisation, he had been compelled, in consequence of the pressure of certain creditors, to file this petition.—His Honour, before making any order, said that further particulars respecting the debtor's property must be furnished, and it was also necessary to apply, in the first instance, for the appointment of a receiver.

(Before Mr. Registrar Spring Rice.)

In Re the Hon. W. F. Ormonde O'Callaghan, M.P.—This was a first meeting for proof of debts and the appointment of a trustee in the case of the hon. member for Tipperary, who has been adjudicated a bankrupt on the petition of Messrs. Ortner and Houle, jewellers, of St. James's-street, creditors for £233. No statement of affairs has yet been filed, and Mr. Cottman, solicitor for the bankrupt, applied to the Court to adjourn the meeting, in order to enable the hon. gentleman to make a proposition to his creditors. Mr. Theodore Lumley, on the part of the petitioning creditor and other creditors, opposed the application, stating that the creditors desired the bankruptcy to proceed in the usual way. Proofs were then put in to the amount of £2,600, and Mr. Albert Marley, public accountant, of Coleman-street, City, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

Mr. Edwin Waterhouse, of Price, Waterhouse, and Co., Accountants, was examined before the Committee on Foreign Loans on Monday. He stated that he had had the documents and books given in evidence placed before him, and he had examined them and made an abstract of them, and he handed in a print of his figures to members of the Committee.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 9.

THE APPELLATE JURISDICTION.—The Lord Chancellor, in calling attention to the present condition of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, referred to the report and recommendations of the Judicature Commission, on which the Judicature Act of 1873 was in great measure founded, but observed that in the creation of the Final Court of Appeal the recommendations of that Commission was not adhered to. That Act did not include Scotland and Ireland in its provisions with regard to Appeals, and, therefore, when the present Government came into office they had to consider what course should be taken in reference to Scotch and Irish Appeals. In determining that question, the Government resolved to be guided by three essential principles—namely, that as a general rule, a double appeal ought to be permitted; that there ought to be one and the same tribunal of final appeal for England, Scotland, and Ireland; and, lastly, that care should be taken that the Appeals should be heard before an adequate number of the most skilled and experienced judicial minds. However, the opposition which was offered to the provisions relating to the Final Court of Appeal compelled the Government to withdraw the bill, and they had since received a considerable quantity of advice as to the course they ought now to pursue. They had been recommended to allow the Act of 1873 to come into operation on the 1st of November next. The objection to that course was that the Judicature Act would then come into operation with certain defects and imperfections which required removal, and there would at once be a severance in the appellate system, as the Appeals from England would go to one tribunal and the Appeals from Scotland and Ireland to another. The Government also objected to postpone the operation of the Judicature Act for another year, and those who offered advice to that effect appeared, the Lord Chancellor observed, to look mainly to the creation of the ultimate tribunal of appeal and to overlook the great work which the Act of 1873 was intended to accomplish in other respects. Under these circumstances the Government, considering the satisfactory state of the business before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the House of Lords, proposed to detach for the present the more urgent part of the Act of 1873 from the other part not equally urgent, and the Lord Chancellor said he would lay on the table a bill having that object in view, and providing that there should be an intermediate Court of Appeal constantly sitting. He thought it important that the Court of Appeal should not sit in separate divisions, and with respect to decrees disposing of the whole merits of a case, it would be provided that the Court should consist of not less than three members and of not less than two members in cases of interlocutory Appeals or questions of practice upon which the whole merits of a case were not disposed of. With respect to the question of the Final Court of Appeal, the Government proposed to ask Parliament to suspend for twelve months the operation of those clauses in the Act of 1873 which took away the appeal from the House of Lords. In conclusion, the Lord Chancellor laid on the table a bill for carrying into effect the objects he had referred to.—Lord Selborne did not think it expedient to go into detail upon the subject of the bill at the present moment, but he expressed an apprehension that if there was to be an intermediate appeal, followed by a final appeal, the intermediate Court of Appeal was not likely to be powerfully constituted as representing the principles of Equity, because the Lord Chancellor would be withdrawn from the intermediate court in order to attend and hear Appeals in the House of Lords; and the Master of the Rolls would be sitting often in his own Court and only occasionally in the intermediate Court of Appeal. Though there might be some formal defects in the Act of 1873 which it was desirable to correct, yet, upon the whole, he should have preferred to let the Act come into operation. However, the country must now decide whether or not the best possible Final Court of Appeal was to be created without regard to sentimental or political considerations. — Lord Penzance believed that the course taken by the Lord Chancellor was the best that could be adopted, and that the plan now proposed would be satisfactory to the country.—Lord Hatherley protested against the continued unfortunate delay in settling the question of Final Court of Appeal; and after some observations in reply from the Lord Chancellor the Bill was read a first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, APRIL 13.

BANKS OF ISSSUE.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that the Select Committee on the subject should consist of 21 members. Mr. Hodgson took occasion to complain that out of 11 members for Cumberland and the adjoining county, not one was named to serve on the committee. He begged to move that one more member be added to the committee who, he thought, ought to be chosen from among the representatives of the counties of Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Northumberland.—Mr. M'Laren would recommend the addition to the committee of two members representing Scotch constituencies. (Laughter.) It was essential for the interest of property and of trade in Scotland that those members should be added. The 11 banks in Scotland formed one of the most perfect trades' unions that could possibly exist anywhere. He pointed out that Bank of England notes were not legal tender in Scotland. It was, he believed, impossible to maintain the monoply which at present exists. He thought under the circumstances his proposal was a very moderate one, and he hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would accede to it.—The Speaker pointed out that there was already one amendment before the House. Mr. Anderson said although he might not be considered a friend of Scotch banks, still he hoped they would receive that which they did not get—namely, fair play. He wished to see the House give the Scotch bankers fair play; and in the constitution of the Committee as now proposed, fair play would not be given. He disclaimed any personal feeling against any of the gentlemen whom he wished to see removed from the Committee; but there were strong grounds for what he purposed doing. There were two ways in which the Committee might be fairly constituted. The one was to select a given number of practical bankers from each party, and to fill up the Committee with men of business. The other was to keep the bankers entirely off the Committee, but to allow them to give evidence. But the right hon. gentleman had followed a third way—he had put a number of English practical bankers on the Committee, while there were no Scotch practical bankers to meet them. (Hear.) The Committee, as originally proposed, was to consist of 17 members, four of whom were to be Scotch, but not bankers. It was now intended that it should consist of 21 members, the number of Scotch remaining the same as before, while there were six practical English bankers to assist the right hon. gentleman the member for the City of London to make out a case against the Scotch banks. There was another reason against the appointment of those gentlemen—namely, that they had a direct pecuniary interest in the question which would come before them, and it was against the rules of the House that persons should vote in a case in which they had a direct pecuniary interest.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer would remind the House that experience had commonly shown that 15 was a much more convenient number for discussing a subject in committee than a larger number. However, on the present occasion it was entirely desirable that the committee should consist of a greater number of members. It should be remembered that such a committee was not appointed to take on itself the function of deciding finally on the questions submitted to it. The House did not part with its own judgment in the matter. What they had looked to in the appointment of the committee was that the gentlemen appointed should examine the subject and draw out all the different views that should be brought forward respecting it, place them in juxtaposition, and conveniently lay before the House and the public the questions to be decided and the considerations by which they should be guided. There should be on the committee gentlemen capable of putting questions and drawing forth opinions and facts necessary to enable the House to form its opinion. He looked on the committee as one which would be of very great use with reference to future legislation, but he did not look on it as one in which they could exactly count heads, and say because there happened to be a certain proportion of English and Scotch or Irish members a certain turn must be given to the decision of the committee. What was desired was to have a fair representation of the different interests and persons acquainted with the questions to be considered. With reference to the number of bankers on the committee, there would be representatives of the Scotch banks, of the Irish banks, the London banks, the provincial banks of issue, the provincial non-issuing banks, the joint-stock banks, and representatives of persons engaged in commercial pursuits. Great pains had been taken to form a list of a committee which would be qualified for the work, and he was very sorry to find it had been impossible to satisfy everybody. He saw a great number who were anxious to serve on so interesting a committee. The number he proposed was 21, but it was proposed by an hon. member to add other 10 names. It was necessary, however, to draw the line somewhere, and he submitted this was really a very fair proposal. He hoped the House would adhere to the number of 21, and there would then be a prospect of getting through the work in reasonable time, which was the more requisite as the Scotch banks had entered into an engagement to suspend any extension of their proceedings for another year with a view to the operations of this committee. (Hear.) The motion that the Committee do consist of 21 members was then agreed to. The committee was appointed as follows :—The Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Goschen, Mr. Stephen Cave, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, Sir Graham Montgomery, Sir John Lubbock, Mr. Hubbard, Mr. Anderson, Mr. Mulholland, Mr. Leveson Gower, Mr. Balfour, Mr. Norwood, Mr. Orr-Ewing, Mr. Mundella, Mr. Torr, Mr. W. Shaw, Mr. B. Denison, Mr. Backhouse, Mr. Kavanagh, Mr. S. Lloyd, and Mr. Hussey Vivian.

THE BUDGET.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer, on Thursday, made his annual Financial Statement. The estimated income of the year was £74,000,000, and the actual income was £74,921,870, leaving a surplus of close upon £497,000. The estimated expenditure of the year was £73,958,000, and the actual expenditure £74,328,000, being an excess of actual over estimated expenditure of £370,000. On the whole, making the necessary deductions and corrections, the surplus, estimated at £436,000, was actually £593,833. This, no doubt, was a small surplus, but he argued that it was better to have a surplus real, though small, than to create a fancy surplus by underestimating the Revenue. He admitted also that there had been some errors in the details of the estimates, but he showed that these had been much exaggerated, and, taking one item with another, that he had been tolerably accurate. Next, he read to the House a variety of interesting statistics, illustrating the condition of the people, and with regard to Local Taxation, he mentioned that £512,000 had been paid, last year, leaving £642,000 to be paid next year. Passing to the finances of the current year, he thus stated the estimated expenditure :—

Interest on Debt	£27,215,000
Consolidated Debt Charges ..	1,590,000
Army	14,678,000
Army Purchase	638,000
Navy	10,785,000
Civil Service	12,656,000
Revenue Collection	3,636,000
Telegraph	1,098,000
Packet Service	878,000
Total Expenditure	£75,266,000

While mentioning the Civil Service Estimates, the Chancellor took the opportunity of praising the energy and care displayed by Mr. W. H. Smith in the examination of those estimates, and before stating the estimated Revenue he premised that it took into account the normal growth of Revenue, and that they are neither too cautious nor over sanguine. The estimated Revenue is this :—

Customs	£19,500,000
Excise	27,800,000
Stamps	10,600,000
Land Tax and House Duties ..	2,450,000
Income Tax	3,900,000
Post Office	5,750,000
Telegraphs	1,240,000
Crown Lands	385,000
Miscellaneous	4,100,000
Total Revenue	£75,685,000

This leaves a surplus of £417,000, which may be reduced still further by supplementary estimates, especially in regard to Irish education. The Chancellor stated at once that he did not intend, with such a small surplus, to make any reductions of taxation, but he reminded the House that of the £5,476,000 taken off last year, £1,132,000 really came into operation this year—the remissions of the last Budget being for two years. He proposed, however, to make a re-adjustment of the Brewers' Licences by charging 12s. 6d. for every 50 barrels, which would be for the benefit of the small brewers, and would cost the Revenue £60,000. In addition to this he proposed another change, which would not affect the Revenue —substituting for the present Stamp Duty of 5 per cent. on written appointments an uniform duty of 5s. per £100 on all appointments, whether written or unwritten. As to larger readjustments of taxation, though our system may not be ideally the best, Sir Stafford urged there is no crying need for a great Reform. The objections to the Income Tax were much less felt when it was low, uniform, and steady, and if the tax was retained it was not for purpose of experiment, but in a state of abeyance ready for any necessity which might arise. Sir Stafford next turned to the question of the National Debt. contending that Parliament, though it had done much, had no reason to be proud of its efforts for the reduction of debt, and dwelling on the objections both to reduction by casual surpluses and terminable annuities. This served as an introduction to a plan for steadily acting on the Debt through a sort of Sinking Fund, by enacting that the annual charge in every Budget for the Debt shall be £28,000,000. This would only come into full operation the year after next. By this means he calculated that by 1885 £6,800,000 of Debt would be paid off, and in 30 years £162,000,000; and if the system of casual surpluses and terminable annuities were continued, by 1885 £21,000,000 would be reduced, and in 30 years £213,000,000. The Savings Bank deficiency he proposed to meet by amalgamating the accounts of the Old and New Savings Banks and by enlarging the field of investment; and, lastly, he enlarged on the question of Local Loans. It is proposed that all future debts are to be incurred by way of Debentures, and are to be subjected to a strict system of audit and registration. Other minor improvements are to be made in the system of Local Debt; and in conclusion he expressed a hope to be able to do something more next year for the relief of Local Taxation.

YARMOUTH COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. J. J. Worlledge, Judge.)

Blake (Trustee in re Wright, a Liquidating Debtor) v. Mercer and Peacock.—His Honour gave judgment in this case, which was a suit to determine the priority in respect of a sum of £120 11s. 6d., which was held or retained by Messrs. Mercer and Peacock, fish salesmen, as a set-off against a liability of Wright to them, arising out of a previous fishing voyage. Wright, it appeared, was indebted to the firm in the sum of £115, of which only £15 had been incurred on the last voyage. As usual, the firm was employed by Wright as salesmen, and at the close of the fishing season, when Wright was made bankrupt, they retained the money in their possession, resisting the claim of the trustee, who contended that it should be included in the estate. Mr. Wiltshire, when the case was previously before the court, submitted that the crew had a lien upon the earnings of the boat, and that Mercer and Peacock were bound to hand the money over, less their proper commission, without any retention for any claim arising out of a previous voyage. Mr. Blofeld, on the other hand, submitted that a maritime lien could not be inforced in that court, because the herrings caught by them could not be considered as freight. Mr. Wiltshire argued in reply that fish was quasi freight, and that the crew had a lien upon it. His Honour said he had no power in that court to enforce a maritime lien; but if the case had gone into the Admiralty Court, and a maritime lien had been established for a portion of the proceeds, then he thought Messrs. Mercer and Peacock would have been barred in setting off their claim against the amount of the lien. On that ground he thought the application on behalf of the trustee must be dismissed. It was a fresh case, and one which it was quite right to bring, and he should order the costs to the trustee to be paid out of the estate, but should leave Messrs. Mercer and Peacock, who had bagged a large sum, to pay their own costs. Mr. Moseley, solicitor in the case for Messrs. Mercer and Peacock, contended that costs should follow the event, and asked that his client's costs should be allowed. His Honour said he thought Mr. Moseley was right in his argument, and he must, therefore, allow the costs, although taking all the circumstances of the case into consideration, he would rather not have done so. The motion was then dismissed with costs, which are to come out of the estate.

BRADFORD COUNTY COURT.

On Tuesday, his Honour (Mr. Daniel, Q.C.) delivered judgment in re John Watson ex parte Douglas. The motion had been made on behalf of James Douglas, trustee in the estate of John Watson, draper, of Llanelly, for an order directing that Richard Gardiner, high bailiff of the Carmarthen County Court, and Samuel Powell, the sub-bailiff, should pay to him, as trustee, £50, value of a piano, bookcase, and books, seized by the respondents on or about the 17th October, 1874, being the property of the debtor, John Watson, at the time he filed his petition for liquidation. The petition was filed on the 18th September, 1874, at Carmarthen, and the majority of the creditors reside in the West Riding of Yorkshire. The question was whether the goods had been seized under an execution before the 18th September. His Honour characterised the circumstances as so strange, and the conduct of the respondents so reprehensible, that he felt bound to refer to them at greater length than he should have done under ordinary circumstances. After reviewing the facts in detail, he was of opinion that the goods which had been seized and sold by the respondents were the property of the trustee, and as the latter was willing to adopt the sale alleged to have been made of them, the order would be that the respondents should forthwith pay £18 10s. to the trustee, with costs.

FAILURES.

England.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition with creditors was, on the 3rd instant, filed at Wolverhampton County Court, by Messrs Pountney and Turner, of Darlington-street, Wolverhampton, auctioneers, the liabilities amounting to to about £4,500. Messrs. Coleman and Coleman, of Colmore-row, Birmingham, are the solicitors in the matter, and Mr. C. T Starkey, of the firm of Messrs. Lomas Harrison and Starkey, accountants, Birmingham, has been appointed receiver. The first meeting is fixed for the 29th instant.—A circular has been issued announcing the suspension of payment of Messrs. John Morrison and Co., of 21 Billiter-strret, E.C. The liabilities are believed to be considerable, and the cause of the failure to have arisen from intimate business relations with Mr. W. T. Henley, whose failure was lately notified. It is stated that the estate will show a considerable surplus, provided that of Mr. W. T Henley works out as anticipated. The liabilities are estimated at about one quarter of a million sterling. The books have been placed in the hands of Mr. Robert Fletcher, accountant, 2 Moorgate-street.—The suspension was announced on Monday of Messrs, J. and H. Browning, of Upper Thames-street, an old and respected firm engaged in the oil trade. The liabilities are estimated at about £90,000, with assets of nearly the same amount, and the cause is reported to have been a withdrawal of capital by members of the family. The books are in the hands of Messrs Baggs, Clarke, and Josolyne.—Mr. John Wilson Brown, merchant, Birmingham, has called a meeting of creditors for Monday next. The liabilities are roundly estimated at £10,000.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement &c. was filed in the Oldham County Court on April 12th, by Mills and Heywood, cotton spinners and doublers, Oldham, and Mr. David Smith, accountant, Manchester, was appointed receiver. The liabilities are stated to be £20,000.—Application for liquidation has been filed in the Stourbridge County Court by Mr. Benjamin Wood, coke manufacturer and coalmaster, trading as Wood and Co., at Pensnett, Staffordshire, and lately at Gellygaer and Merthyr Tydvil, Glamorganshire. The liabilities are estimated at £50,000. Mr. J. Bent, of Dudley, is appointed receiver, and Mr. Ernest Whitehouse, of the same place, is the solicitor acting for Mr. Wood.—According to the Manchester Courier the suspension has been announced by circular, of Messrs. Agop Dayian and Co., merchants, of that city. The liabilities are only small.—The bills have been returned of Messrs. Fearon and Co., East India and China merchants, of Leadenhall-street, a firm established in 1856, but the amount of their liabilities has not yet transpired. The difficulties are understood to have arisen from the absence of remittances from the East.—The stoppage is reported of Messrs. Mills and Heywood, spinners and doublers, of Oldham, with liabilities representing £20,000.

The National Zeitung mentions the failure of Messrs. S. Wertheimer and Sons, in the leather trade of Vienna. The liabilities are estimated at 600,000 florins, partly due to London firms.

America.—American advices announce the failure of Messrs. B. G. Smith and Co., on New York Stock Exchange; also that of the Banking house of S. P. Burt, New Bedford, Massachusetts, with liabilites of £60,000. It is thought payment in full will be made if time is granted.—Messrs. Simms Brothers, Boston, engaged in the furnishing goods line, had also succumbed, with liabilities of £70,000. An extension, it was thought, would be granted.—The Ashland Savings Bank Pottsville, Pennsylvania, had suspended.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

John Davis (Birmingham).—The creditors of John Davis, jewellers' factor, Ann-street, have held their adjourned meeting. The total liabilities had been announced at the first meeting as £16,273, and an offer of 6s. in the pound had been made by the debtor. A committee was appointed to arrange as to the securities to be given, and they reported on Friday that the estate would pay, after deducting costs, 6s. 0½d. An offer of 5s. 6d. cash in a month was, however, telegraphed just before the commencement of the meeting, and after an animated discussion was accepted by a large majority.

E. Jacobs (Birmingham).—A meeting has been held of the creditors of Emanuel Jacobs, jewellers' factor, 23 Frederick-street. The total liabilities are £17,938, the total assets being £4998 5s. The debtor's solicitor announced that, according to the statement of affairs, a composition could be offered of 5s. 7d. in the pound. But in order to avoid anything like liquidation an offer would be made in excess of what the assets showed, viz., 6s. A creditor remarked that on Thursday the debtor had submitted to him and other gentlemen some accounts which varied from those now presented. A resolution was ultimately adopted that the debtor should sign a declaration of insolvency, and it was agreed that the chairman of the meeting should file a petition in bankruptcy directly the debtor filed his petition in liquidation, unless the offer was considerably increased.

Boothman (Blackburn).—An adjourned meeting of the creditors of this bankrupt was held on Wednesday last at the Blackburn County Court, before the registrar. A statement of accounts presented by the bankrupt showed the liabilities to be £1,665 13s. 8d., and the assets £620. Mr. Thomas Duxbury, of Accrington, was appointed trustee, and Mr. Eastham, of Clitheroe, solicitor to the creditors.

A. W. Ramsden (Bingley).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. A. W. Ramsden, worsted manufacturer, of Bingley, was held on Monday afternoon at the offices of Mr. Gardiner, solicitor, Bradford. A statement of affairs was presented, showing that the liabilities were £29,100, and the assets £10,200. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. H. Dickin was appointed trustee with a committee of inspection.

Wilson, M'Lay & Co. (Glasgow).—A meeting of the creditors of Wilson, M'Lay, and Co., merchants, London and Glasgow—whose suspension was recently announced with liabilities estimated at £200,000—was held on Tuesday. Mr. Spens, of Messrs. Grahames, Crum and Spens, accountants, was appointed trustee, and three of the creditors were also appointed commissioners on the estate. The exact amount of liabilities cannot yet be ascertained, owing to transactions with other firms who have since suspended payment. The whole number of creditors is under twenty, and the bulk of the losses will fall upon English firms.

A. de Bussche (Ryde).—At a meeting on Thursday of the creditors of Mr. A. de Bussche, steam-ship owner, of Ryde, Isle of Wight, the liabilities were stated at about £100,000, and assets at £20,000, subject to realisation. Mr. F. B. Smart and Mr. Cape, the accountants, were appointed trustees to wind up the estate, with a committee of five creditors.

C. King (Yarmouth).—A meeting of the creditors of C. King, of Great Yarmouth, boatbuilder and smack owner, was held at the Star Hotel, Great Yarmouth, on Monday, 12th April, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, public accountant, and Mr. W. E. Suffolk, of Norwich, timber merchant, being appointed trustees with a committee of inspection. Mr. William Holt is solicitor in the proceedings.

J. B. Page (Gorleston).—A meeting of the creditors of James Bernard Page, of Gorleston, Suffolk, fishing-boat owner, was held on Tuesday, 13th April, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, public accountant, and Mr. John Hammond, of Gorleston, merchant, being appointed trustees with a committee of inspection. Mr. C. H. Wiltshire is solicitor in the proceedings.

J. Nelson (Lowestoft).—A meeting of the creditors of James Nelson, of Lowestoft, builder and beerhouse keeper, was held on Friday, 9th April, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, public accountant, being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection. Mr. W. R. Seago is solicitor in the proceedings.

J. S. Bates (London).—A general meeting of the creditors of J. S. Bates, 36 Great Castle-street, Regent-street, was held at the offices of Mr. Oliver Richards, 16 Warwick-street, Regent-street, on Tuesday, the 13th April, when the debtor's statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,146 0s. 3d.; assets £444 12s. The creditors resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. Edmund Charles Chatterley (C. Browne, Stanley and Co.), public accountant, and Mr. Howard Haughton Ashworth, 3 Salter's Hall-court, E.C., public accountant, were appointed joint trustees to act with a committee of inspection.

Bank of England Accounts.—The annual Parliamentary return, giving the weekly accounts of the Bank of England during the year 1874, shows that the amount of Bank of England notes held by the public ranged from £24,818,000 in February to £27,660,000 in October; the reserve of bank-notes, from £12,423,000 in February to £7,899,000 in December; the total amount of bullion, from £23,969,000 in June to £19,951,000 in December; the minimum rate of interest, from 2½ per cent. in June and July to 6 per cent. in December; the amount of bills discounted, from £6,414,000 in April to £3,236,000 in December; the balances held on account of the London bankers on the last day of the week, from £11,169,000 in October to £6,485,000 in December; and the Exchequer balances, from £809,000 in January to £7,615,000 in March.

Bankruptcy Legislation.—B. H. writes as follows in the Law Journal:—"The defect in the working of ss. 125, 126 is that they afford such facilities to dishonest debtors. The intention was of course that merely unfortunate men might, without incurring the exposure of bankruptcy, arrange with their creditors, the majority clauses being introduced to prevent merely malignant creditors from delaying matters. How these sections really work is well known to creditors: the debtor's solicitor soon shows the creditors that he holds enough proxies from the debtor's friends, or indifferent or other creditors, to carry his offer of 6d. in the pound; and the creditors present, though feeling sure that, if the matter were properly sifted, a much larger dividend would be forthcoming, are deterred by the fear of throwing away time and money from opposing the registration of the resolution. As for the debtor, he, not being on oath, can say what he chooses, and frequently does so. I would suggest that all meetings held under these clauses should take place before some official of the Court (privately, to screen an honest debtor), who should have power to take the debtor's replies to creditors' queries on oath, and whose remarks on the case should be a guide to the registration of the resolution accepting the composition. This substitution of an official in the character of an umpire would, I am sure, effect a wholesome change in the present style; honest debtors would be sure of a fair hearing, and dishonest ones would not be able to simply 'whitewash,' as they easily do now."

BANKING RETURNS.

The Bankers' Magazine furnishes the returns of the circulation of the private and joint-stock banks in England and Wales for the four weeks ending the 20th of March, 1875. These returns, combined with the circulation of the Scotch and Irish Banks for the same period, and the average circulation of the Bank of England for the four weeks ending the 17th of March (the nearest date furnished by their returns), will give the following results of the circulation of notes in the United Kingdom, when compared with the previous month:—

	March 20.	Feb. 20.	Increase.	Decrease.
Bank of England	£25,582,239	£25,944,794	—	£362,552
Private Banks ...	2,413,991	2,485,241	—	71,247
Joint-Stock Banks	2,278,126	2,300,253	—	22,127
Total in England	30,274,359	30,730,288	—	455,926
Scotland	5,543,920	5,634,553	—	90,633
Ireland	6,634,383	6,803,617	—	169,234
United Kingdom	£42,452,662	£43,168,458	—	£715,793

And as compared with the month ending the 21st of March, 1874, the above returns show an increase of £86,926 in the circulation of notes in England, and an increase of £103,809 in the circulation of the United Kingdom. On comparing the above with the fixed issues of the several Banks, the following is the state of the circulation:—

The English Private Banks are below their fixed issue ...	£1,431,600
The English Joint-Stock Banks are below their fixed issue...	374,867
Total below fixed issue in England ...	£1,806,467
The Irish Banks are above their fixed issue	279,889

The average stock of bullion held by the Bank of England, in both departments, during the month ending the 17th of March was £20,983,922, being a decrease of £414,102, as compared with the previous month, and a decrease of £2,181,259 when compared with the same period last year. The following are the amounts of specie held by the Scotch and Irish Banks during the month ending the 20th of March:—

Gold and silver held by the Scotch Banks	£4,025,847
Gold and silver held by the Irish Banks	2,807,771
Total	£6,833,618

—being a decrease of £80,633, as compared with the previous return, and an increase of £214,158 when compared with the corresponding period last year.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

At the Guildhall on Thursday, Angelo Petrali, a jeweller and watchmaker, of No. 90 Bute-street Docks, Cardiff, who was apprehended on a warrant at Cardiff by Detective-Sergeant Funnell, was charged on remand with making false representations for the purpose of obtaining the consent of his creditors to a composition arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; also with making material omissions in the statutory statement of his affairs presented by him at the meetings of his creditors; and likewise with fraudulently removing goods of the value of £10 and upwards belonging to his estate after the presentation by him of a petition for liquidation under the said Act. Mr. Miller prosecuted; and Mr. Chapman appeared for the defendant. Mr. Miller said this prosecution was ordered by the Court of Bankruptcy, and was instituted under the Debtors Act, 1869. The debtor was an optician, jeweller, and watchmaker at Cardiff, in Glamorganshire, and in the latter end of last year he presented a petition to the Court of Bankruptcy, under the Debtors' Act, for the purpose of inducing his creditors to accept a composition. In accordance with that Act he made a statement of his assets, in which he omitted to insert about £50 worth of stock which was then in his possession. The assets were put down at £691 16s., which included the stock-in-trade, which was put down at £622 5s. 6d. He offered 10s. in the pound, and the creditors in the first place agreed to accept it, payable by four instalments, provided he gave security for carrying out the arrangement. At the second meeting, when the resolution agreed to at the first meeting was to be confirmed, it was found that the defendant had not been able to procure the requisite securities, and therefore the creditors refused to confirm the proceedings of the previous meeting, and decided on winding up the estate by arrangement. Mr. W. C. Harvey (Gamble and Harvey, public accountants), was appointed trustee, and he at once telegraphed to his agent at Cardiff to take possession of the defendant's stock, and when that was done, and it came to be examined, it was found that one-third of that mentioned in the inventory furnished by the prisoner's solicitor at the first meeting had disappeared, and the trustee had not been able to discover it. When the whole of these facts were laid before the Court of Bankruptcy the Registrar ordered the present prosecution. Evidence having been called in support of the charge, Mr. Chapman contended that there was really no fraud made out to send the defendant for trial. Alderman Owden thought that it was a case to send before a jury, and committed the prisoner for trial. He consented to accept one surety in £200, and himself in £200, to appear at the Central Criminal Court.

Winding up.—Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Star of Nevada Silver Mining Company (Limited), and of the West of England Stud Company (Limited).

Mr. J. Waddell, trustee in the liquidation of the Southwell Bank, which suspended in December last, has given notice of a first dividend of 2s. 6d. in the pound, payable on the 22nd instant.

Messrs. Barrett and Patey, public accountants, notify that they have removed from No. 8 Finsbury Circus to 90 London Wall.

County Courts.—In the House of Lords on Thursday, the Lord Chancellor laid on the table a Bill to amend the Acts relating to County Courts, and the Bill was read a first time.

European Assurance Liquidation.—It is announced that the official liquidators of the European Assurance Society are in the course of paying a second dividend of one shilling per pound on the amount declared by them as the balance of the debt due to parties originally insured with that Society.

National Debt.—From a return to the House of Commons just issued it appears that the sums advanced by the National Debt Commissioners last year in commutation of pensions and of annuities for ten years was £354,288 2s., and, with interest accrued to the end of the year, was £361,003 14s. 3d. The annuities for ten years from the 1st April last, sufficient to repay the advances mentioned, with interest at 3½ per cent., amounted to £42,300 3s. 6d.

The Cost of the European Society Arbitration.—A parliamentary return obtained by Sir J. Eardley Wilmot respecting the expenses of the European Society Arbitration shows that between August 21, 1872, and February 11, 1875, there was paid to various persons for services in the arbitration a sum of over £48,190. The arbitrator received £1,837 10s.; the assessor, £2,525; joint official liquidator, £10,000; joint official liquidator's clerks, £10,937 18s. 11d.; solicitors, £21,141 16s. 11d.; and solicitors in Canada, £185. The remaining sums were received by the secretary, assistant secretary, assessor's clerks, and secretary's clerks. The number of sittings held by the arbitrator was nine in 1872, five in 1873, and twenty-two in 1874. The number of judgments delivered at these sittings was 116.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act; and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

APRIL 24, 1875.

We noticed last week, in referring to the meeting of the Manchester Society of Accountants, that the President of the Law Society was not only an invited guest, but spoke of the relations which existed between solicitors and accountants as being mutually advantageous, and not, as they are so often represented to be, utterly and irreconcilably hostile. We hope that after Mr. Ponsonby's common-sense remarks, the silly cry that is so constantly raised may be discontinued, and that the two professions may be allowed to go on working in their own entirely distinct ways. We concede at once to our opponents that every man is best kept to his own peculiar line of work, and that the outsiders who are perpetually trying to trespass within the confines of professional men deserve to be put down. But then, we must lay down as an equally clear principle, that the man who complains of unauthorised intruders on his demesne, must himself keep within his own limits. The small farmer has no right to pasture his cows in the carefully-fenced field of the neighbouring squire. On the other hand, the great landowner must not argue that, because his rights are absolute within certain carefully defined limits, he is therefore entitled to the exclusive use of land adjacent to his own to which no owner can be found and no title made: especially if he were to plead as a justification of his conduct that the local ne'er-do-wells were in the habit of poaching on his preserves. This, however, is tolerably analogous to the manner in which sundry members of the legal profession, and their organs in the press, treat the accountants.

The misunderstanding rests mainly on the attempt of solicitors to claim an exclusive monopoly in almost every branch of business which can in any manner be brought within their range, and in some of the letters which appear in sundry law papers this habit is carried to an extreme extent. In fact, it is doubtful, according to some of these authorities, whether it is not highly penal for a man to make his own will. For a "layman" to interfere in any way,—to draw a simple agreement, to make a will, to prepare the plainest possible legal document,—is a high misdemeanour, and punishable by law. In any of these cases a solicitor must be called in, and the whole routine of attendances, examination of deeds, perusing, preparing, and reading over gone through, much to the profit of the solicitors, and the increase of expense to the client. As a matter of fact, this professional rule is infringed daily. Every law stationer sells blank forms that may be readily used for any simple matter; there are plenty of books designed to instruct the most inexperienced in legal learning; and the standard work of reference on the duties of medical men, prepared by a barrister, and to be found in every law library, contains a chapter expressly devoted to the enabling of doctors to make wills for their patients. We do not say, that any wise man would ever refuse to avail himself of professional assistance. The man who physics himself, without going to a doctor, is not a wit more reckless than the man who draws his own will or settles his own purchase deeds. There is no obligation for any one to go to either solicitor or doctor, except the fear of an unpleasant blunder.

As a matter of fact, accountants are quite innocent of the heinous crimes so freely laid to their charge. They do not interfere in matters of conveyancing, they do not prepare wills, and their advice to any one who sought their opinion on a matter of law would be to go at once to a respectable solicitor. Their domain is that of figures, and a practical knowledge of accounts. Put a skilled accountant to carry on a business for a short time: he would be quite at sea as to many mechanical processes and trade secrets; but he would, from his keen intuition and knowledge of accounts, be as good a director as could be found. This skill of management is superadded to skill in figures, till the profession of an accountant is extended—just as the attorney, whose duties are to represent his client in courts of justice and to supply his deficiencies by the exercise of professional skill, performs in addition the functions of a conveyancer and draftsman of all documents which may at any time come within the ken of a court of law.

We suspect that the New Bankruptcy Act is at the bottom of all this outcry. Before the trustee system was introduced, accountant and solicitor met in perfect harmony. Companies were wound up by the joint efforts of liquidators and lawyers, both working in their own sphere. A solicitor would lay accounts before an accountant for his investigation, just as he would send a difficult abstract to his counsel. But the Act, which was expressly intended to diminish expense, has in some respects operated unfavourably for solicitors. When creditors chose some simple-minded member out of their own body as trustee the hearts of all debtors were gladdened. The trustee was afraid to take a step on his own responsibility, and referred every thing to his solicitor, except in those numerous cases in which every expense was to be sternly cut down. It soon became recognised that it is not every man who can reach the Corinth of unravelling accounts often intended not to be too easily seen through, and that a man whose profession it was to deal with this class of knavery was the best trustee that could be appointed. Undoubtedly the choice of a strong and capable man as a trustee who acted on his own knowledge, instead of a weak man who was always rushing to his solicitor, was not quite agreeable to the latter named profession. But it may safely be said, as to this system, that the Act allows it, that the interest of the trading community requires it, and that the petty attorneys who lose a small amount of their profits are not to be allowed to stand in the way. To complain of the iniquity of an accountant who charges for time actually expended instead of mulcting the estate out of the full fees which a solicitor would claim, is childishly ludicrous. Let our legal friends take comfort; they have still their own business to fall back on. We do not propose to allow "debt collectors" to have a legal status in our courts of law, and to address a judge and jury on the same footing as professional men. This we are quite willing to leave to trained advocates; but, while we will help them to put down any pretender who does unlawful work under any guise, we shall continue to assert the right of accountants to act where neither the dictates of law nor the requirements of professional etiquette forbid them.

We have on sundry occasions directed attention to the careless way in which people enter into a contract with an insurance company. The technically worded conditions, framed so as to leave every possible loophole of escape open, are never perused till the premium has been paid, and the declaration that is signed by the proposed insurer is too often looked upon as a mere form. Add to this, that the agent, whose profit depends upon the amount of insurances he obtains, is as liable to overstate and exaggerate as agents usually are, and it may be seen that life insurance is often a very hazardous business indeed—to the insurers. A case in which the United Kingdom Assurance Company figured in the police courts clearly illustrates this. Here is the instance of a man who believes and is told that his own statements as to his health are all that is required, and after whose death payment of the policy is disputed on the ground that he has misled them. His payments are made for some weeks before the policy is issued, and then it appears that there are stipulations as to entrance fees and payment of only half the amount due in case of death within one year. It is high time that the whole question of the insurance contract was put on a satisfactory basis, and that when once money has been paid to the company all objections should be considered to be waived. Some check should be kept on the agents, and the responsibility of the companies for their statements strictly enforced. The large companies are as much concerned in this matter as the small ones.

Mr. John Brearley Wood has evidently a very strong appreciation of the advantages of a judicious bankruptcy; and if he can only succeed in accomplishing a few more feats of the description of the one he performed at Birkenhead, he may become in time a very rich man. To offer, and get accepted, a composition of one penny in the pound, shows a spirit of daring and resolution which ought to do great things. It is possible that this confident gentleman may find some difficulty raised when the registrar has to decide whether he can register the resolutions. This is certainly a matter in which the doctrine laid down in Sir William Russell's case may be profitably applied, and registration refused. It is evident here that there are no assets, and that the creditors can derive no possible benefit by giving up their claims. In connection with this case, we may notice in re Cusker, which we report elsewhere. Here the assets appeared by the accounts furnished to be merely sufficient to pay the expenses, and registration would have been refused but for the filing of an affidavit which stated that more money might probably be received, and the fact that no discharge of the debtor was asked for. The Registrar seems to have acted here with due discrimination, but no one can fairly doubt that Mr. Wood's non-assenting creditors ought to have their interests duly considered and registration unhesitatingly refused.

We should not have thought that there could have been much doubt as to the social status of a miner. But it seems from the report of a case which we give elsewhere, that a question has been raised whether or not he comes under the denomination of a labourer or workman. The trustee apparently considered him to be a contractor, and so not within the 32nd section of the Act in respect to any claim to preferential payment. It is true that he contracted to do his work, and so does every man who accepts employment; but he might, on the same grounds, be termed a professor, and claim rank among the learned professions. If he had been paid a fixed rate of wages, either by time or by the week, the question would not have arisen; but if the appellant had been excluded from the definition of a labourer, all men who do piecework must have been excluded also. Piecework is coming much into vogue, and is considered by no less an authority than Mr. Brassey as one of the best antidotes to the powers of the trades unions. It favours a capable and industrious man, and it would be hard to place him in a worse financial position than men whose interest it is to spin out their time as much as possible.

The Australian Direct Steam Navagation Company.—Four petitions to wind up compulsorily the Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company (Limited) came before the Master of the Rolls on Saturday afternoon. This is the company against which summonses were recently heard at the Guildhall and the Mansion House, taken out by intending emigrants who had been induced to come to London in the expectation of sailing to Australia in the company's steamship Victoria, but who found that they had paid their passage-money to no purpose, as the vessel did not sail at any of the advertised dates. There was also a petition by Messrs. Suter, Hartmann & Co, ship painters, as creditors for the amount due to them for painting the ship's bottom. There were two others, one presented by Commander Cheyne, R.N, one of the directors, who claimed to be a creditor of the company, and the other by the Marine Superintendent of the company, Captain George Macdonald, M N. His Honour said it was clear the company must be wound up, and made an order, with costs, on the first three petitions, giving the conduct of the order to the petitioners, Messrs. Hopcraft, but refused to make any order on the fourth, as it was clearly presented only for the purpose of manufacturing costs, and after it was well known that the other petitions had been presented.

RE HELLIER A BANKRUPT.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—Will you permit me to correct an error in your report of this case (and consequently in your comments thereon) in your issue of the 10th April. His Honour decided against the application to set aside a portion of the bankrupt's pay under section 89 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, on the ground that he was not a "civil servant of the Crown;" and under section 90, on the ground that he received neither "salary nor income" from his office, but was paid by "fees," which were uncertain. I then said that we should appeal from his decision, on which he said that he should decide on the point of discretion vested in him—in order that we might not be in a position to appeal, "which he did not think would be right or just, &c.," as in your report.

An opinion has, however, been taken, and counsel has advised that an appeal lies, and accordingly the trustee has lodged an appeal motion, which will come on for hearing before the Chief Judge on the 26th instant, at 10 o'clock, or as soon after as it can be heard.

Yours, &c.,
GEORGE HIRTZEL,
Solicitor to the Trustee.

THE MANCHESTER INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—An inaccuracy (of small moment however) has crept into your report of the annual meeting of the Manchester Institute, given in last week's issue.

You say—after giving the names of gentlemen appointed to the Council, in place of those retiring, "and the retiring Auditors, Messrs. Beardsell and Mottershead, were again elected for the forthcoming year;" whereas the auditors are appointed for one year only, and the honorary duties of the office for the past year were discharged by myself, in conjunction with Mr. A. P. Popplewell.

I am, yours truly,
J. E. LEES.

The suspension is announced of Mr. John Antoniadi, merchant, George-street, Manchester, with liabilities variously estimated at from £10,000 to £15,000.

Winding-up.—Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Alton Coal, Coke, and Iron Company (Limited), Davis Maesteg Merthyr Colliery Company (Limited), Flagstaff Silver Mining Company of Utah (Limited), and Bronfloyd Company (Limited).—In the Rolls Courts on Friday the usual compulsory order was made for winding-up the Australian Direct Steam Navigation Company (Limited). Vice-Chancellor Malins has made an order for the voluntary winding-up, under the supervision of the Court, of the General South American Company (Limited), Messrs. Cope and Schwank, being continued as liquidators.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of the Port of London Wharfage and Warehouses Company (Limited).

COURT OF CHANCERY, Westminster.

(Before Lord Justice Mellish.)

Ex Parte Gibbs—In re Webb.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Murray, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. Mr. Thomas Stammers Webb, of Gracechurch-street, a colliery proprietor, filed a liquidation petition on the 16th of January last. The first meeting of the creditors was held on the 3rd of February, when a liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and an immediate discharge was granted to the debtor. An objection was raised to the validity of the proceedings, on the ground that the debtor had been in partnership, and that he had omitted in his statement of his affairs produced to the meeting to distinguish between his joint and separate assets, and his joint and separate liabilities. Upon the application to have the resolutions registered, the Registrar, upon the authority of the decision of the Chief Judge, in "Ex parte Cockayne" ("Law Reports, 16, Eq. cases), held that the objection was a fatal one, and refused to allow the registration. Upon the application of the debtor an order was afterwards made, directing that a fresh first meeting of the creditors should be summoned under the petition. From this order one of the opposing creditors appealed. The debtor made an affidavit, in which he stated that the omission in his statement arose from ignorance. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Hemming, for the appellant, argued that the Act and the Rules gave no power under any circumstances to direct a fresh first meeting to be summoned. Mr. Finlay Knight was for the debtor. Lord Justice Mellish thought that the Registrar's decision was perfectly right.

Beynon v. Cook.—This was an appeal from a decree of the Master of the Rolls, granting relief in respect of certain money transactions in which the late husband of the plaintiff had been concerned with the defendant. In July, 1861, Rhys Beynon, the plaintiff's husband, was about 26 years of age. He had no income but a salary of £1 a week as a solicitor's clerk, and no property except a sum of £600, secured in pursuance of a family arrangement as his share of the family property by the bond of his eldest brother, and payable on the death of his father, then a healthy Welsh squire, aged 54. Being at this time very hard pressed for money, he was introduced by one Whitcombe, to whom he applied in the first instance, to the defendant, Mr. Robert Cook, who carried on the trade of bill discounter and money lender, in Warwick-street, Regent-street. Cook made an advance of £85 in consideration of his promissory note at six months for £100, the loan being collaterally secured by a mortgage of the £600 post-obit bond, with a proviso that if default should be made in payment of the promissory note when due, the £100 should bear interest at 5 per cent. per month. Rhys Beynon, who died in October, 1872, continued in the same state of pecuniary distress until his death. In October, 1873, the £600 bond having become payable by the death of his father, Beynon's widow offered Cook his principal with compound interest (at 5 per cent.), but Cook refused to take less than £400. Mrs. Beynon thereupon filed her bill to redeem Cook on payment of the sum actually advanced, with interest at such rate as the Court might award. The Master of the Rolls, being of opinion that Rhys Beynon was in the position of an expectant heir, and that the bargain was unconscionable and unaffected by the Sales of Reversions Act (31 and 32 Vict., cap. 4), made an order for delivery up of the securities on payment of the £85 actually advanced, with interest at 5 per cent., and ordered Cook to pay the costs of the suit. Mr. Brett (Mr. Karslake, Q.C., with him), for the defendant, contended that the case was distinguished from those of a catching bargain with an expectant and inexperienced heir of tender years, of which "Earl of Aylesford v. Morris" (L. R. 8, Ch. 484) was a recent instance, inasmuch as Rhys Beynon was upwards of 26 years of age at the date of the transaction, and having parted with his expectancy, did not fill the position of an expectant heir; and further, that after acquiescence for so many years in the transaction it could not be now disturbed.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar Spring Rice.)

In re Jesse Morsman.—The debtor, who has for eighteen years past carried on a large business as builder and contractor at Lisson-grove, has presented a petition for liquidation, estimating his total liabilities at £6,000, a considerable portion of which, being bill transactions, it is hoped will run off; and his assets, consisting of leases, household furniture, book debts, and the goodwill of business, at about £4000. Upon the application of Mr. Chubb, supported by trade creditors, his Honour appointed Mr. Flaxman Haydon, (Haydon and Vivian) public accountant, receiver and manager, and granted an interim injunction.

In re im Thurn and Co.—Mr. Nicol, (Nicholson, Nicol, and Co.) mentioned this case to the Registrar under the following circumstances. The debtors had become interested in some large gasworks in South America, having advanced money to complete and carry on the works. It was necessary that a competent gentleman should be sent out there to investigate the amount of the debtor's interest, which was estimated at about £120,000, and he now asked the Court's sanction for the payment of a sum of £500 out of the estate towards the expenses of such investigation. The Registrar thought the creditors ought to be consulted in the matter, and directed the application to stand over for that purpose.

In re J. F. Lang.—The debtor, an architect and artist, of Cavendish-road, St. John's Wood, has filed a petition for liquidation, estimating his liabilities at £41,000, the assets being estimated to show a surplus. Upon the application of Mr. Pamphilon, his Honour appointed a receiver and manager to the debtor's estate.

April 19.

Before Sir J. Bacon, Chief Judge.

Ex Parte Allsop re Disney.—This case, which was brought before the Court by appeal from the Derbyshire County Court, raised a question of some little importance as to the right of men working in coal and ironstone mines to be paid in full the wages earned by them in case of the failure of the masters. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. E. C. Willis were counsel for the appellant; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Finlay Knight for the respondents, the trustees. The appellant had been for some time in the employ of Mr. H. C. Disney, ironmaster, of Morley-park Iron Works Derbyshire. At the date of the liquidation petition he was working in a gin pit as a miner, getting ironstone at the rate of 5s. to 7s. per ton, the master providing all necessary appliances, and the appellant finding merely the labour. The appellant had to get the stone and stack it on the pit bank, where it was measured up every fortnight. He then received a certain sum called a "subsist," for himself and others working with him, and at the end of each month the stone was weighed and a ticket given of the amount of work done. The 32nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, provides for preferential payment of "all wages of any labourer or workman in the employment of the bankrupt at the date of the order of adjudication and not exceeding two months' wages." It appeared that the appellant was subject to the rules and regulations in force at the mine and pits, and also subject to the provisions of the Truck Act, the Master's and Servants' Act, and the Mines Regulation Act. The appellant in his affidavit stated that the pits were under the control of a manager, who came round daily to see that the men were at work, and he had power to dismiss in case of misconduct. The trustees under the liquidation rejected the proof of the appellant on the ground that he was not a workman or servant, but a contractor, and the Judge of the County Court confirmed that rejection. After hearing the arguments of counsel, his Lordship held that the appellant was a "labourer or workman," to whom wages were due. He was employed to do work at wages; the hiring was for labour and nothing else; and his wages were to be paid by an estimate made of his services. The present case was within the protection which the Act of Parliament gave, and the order of the Court below must be discharged.

Ford v. Coughey.—This was an appeal from the judgment of the judge of the County Court at Liverpool. It was a case in which there having been a former unclosed petition, and a second petition having been presented, a sum of money was placed in the hands of Ford, the trustee, as assets divisible among the creditors, which assets were claimed by Mr. Read, the trustee under the first liquidation, the composition of 2s. in the pound not having been paid beyond 11d., and the County Court judge had decided that the assets in the hands of the trustee were applicable to the payment of the composition, under the case of Tucker and Hernaman. Attention being called to the fact that there was no evidence as to what creditors under the first petition had proved under the second, the learned judge thought he could not entertain the appeal at present, but that it had better go back to Liverpool to ascertain the fact. He thought that the whole matter should be referred to the County Court judge.

(Before Mr. Registrar Hazlitt.)

In Re C. W. Spark.—An application was made to confirm resolutions come to by the creditors of C. W. Spark, who is described as an ironmaster, of 31 Threadneedle-street, and elsewhere. The petition was presented in December last, the liabilities being estimated at £20,620, against assets £4,536. Liquidation by arrangement was agreed to by the creditors, but at a meeting subsequently held a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound was accepted. His Honour confirmed the resolutions.

April 20.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Bennett and Glave.—The debtors, described as woollen manufacturers, of 45 Cheapside, and of Leeds, have petitioned under the arrangement clauses, with liabilities returned at £46,000, and assets, consisting of book debts, £1,800, and stock-in-trade of the value of several thousand pounds. Mr. Brough, for the debtors, and with the concurrence of some of the creditors, asked that a receiver and manager should be appointed for the purpose of protecting the property and carrying on the business. The evidence showed that the debtors were extensively engaged in the manufacture of woollen cloth, and the work now in progress amounted to several thousand pounds. At the mills 200 operatives were employed, and it was desirable that the trade should be continued until after the first meeting of creditors, appointed for the 7th of May. His Honour nominated Mr. W. H. Burrell, accountant, Leeds, to act as receiver and manager of the property.

(Before Mr. Registrar Keene.)

In re Samuel Brandram.—Upon the application of Mr. R. V. Williams, registration was allowed of a resolution for liquidating by arrangement. The debtor was a wine merchant, carrying on business in Mincing-lane, City, Pall Mall, and at Aldershot, and also proprietor of the late Junior St. James's Club. His liabilities were returned at £23,947, and assets £22,605, subject to realisation.

In re William Barker.—The debtor had carried on an extensive business as a goldsmith and jeweller in New Bond-street. He recently failed for about £32,000, his estate being valued at £22,475. Resolutions to liquidate by arrangement, with a trustee and committee of inspection, have been passed, and upon the application of Mr. Oliver Richards, his Honour ordered registration.

April 21.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re R. Cusker.—This was an appeal from an order of Mr. Registrar Keene, refusing to register a resolution of creditors for a liquidation by arrangement. Mr. Bagley appeared for the appellant; Mr. F. O. Crump for the respondent. The debtor, Richard Cusker, a general merchant, carrying on business in Merrick-square, Southwark, presented his petition in February last, and at the first meeting the creditors passed a resolution in favour of liquidation by arrangement, and appointed a trustee. The statement of affairs presented by the debtor disclosed debts, secured and unsecured, £3,470, with assets, consisting of book debts, £190. Upon the resolution being presented to Mr. Registrar Keene, he declined to register it, on the ground that, after payment of the expenses of the liquidation, there would probably be but little, if any, dividend for the creditors. The debtor appealed, and an affidavit was produced on his behalf, which showed that the book debts might prove to be of greater value than the amount stated, and that a surplus might be derived from the securities in the hands of creditors. His Honour held that the case of Sir William Russell, upon which the decision proceeded, was distinguishable. There the creditors granted the debtor his discharge upon a covenant to pay a sum of money out of any income which the debtor might have exceeding £600 per year, and not the slightest security was given that any thing whatever would be received. Here the resolution contained no provision for the debtor's discharge; the creditors had come to a resolution to liquidate by arrangement, which had very much the same effect as a bankruptcy. He knew of no authority which showed that, because the debtor's assets were returned at only 1s. in the pound, registration should be refused. Appeal allowed.

Re John Morison.—The debtor, who has presented a petition for liquidation, was a merchant, manufacturer, and shipowner, of Billiter-street, Goodman's-yard, and Hackney-wick. His liabilities are about £200,000, and assets showing a surplus subject to realisation. The Court last week appointed a receiver and manager, and granted an interim order staying further proceedings at the suit of the London and County Bank; and upon the application of Mr. C. E. Jones, his Honour now continued the injunction.

(Before Mr. Registrar Hazlitt.)

In Re Sir W. Russell.—At a first meeting held under this adjudication several proofs of debt were admitted, and Mr. C. F. Kemp, accountant, was appointed trustee. The debtor, formerly M.P. for Norwich, was described as of Salter's-hall-court, Cannon-street, and elsewhere, merchant and shipowner. His statement of affairs returned liabilities of £64,784, and assets, £750.

April 22.

In Re J. C. im Thurn and Co. (The Touting System).—In this case Mr. D. Jones applied to the Court for an order that no person other than the debtors, or the receiver and manager, or Messrs. Nicholson, Nicol, and Co., the solicitors to the petition, should be allowed to inspect the file of proceedings or be furnished with copies of the list of creditors. The object was to prevent a practice which had grown up of unauthorised persons issuing touting circulars to creditors under the pretence of representing them at the meeting of creditors. Mr. Jones submitted that unless a creditor had proved his debt he was precluded by the ninth rule from inspecting the proceedings. The court was aware that the case was one of exceptional magnitude, and it was extremely desirable that the creditors, many of whom resided abroad, should not be misled by touting circulars.—Mr. Learoyd, amicus curiæ, said that the practice referred to was no doubt exceedingly irritating and obnoxious, but there was also an evil to be provided against arising from the proceedings being left too exclusively under the control of the debtors and their representatives. He suggested that the evil complained of might be met if the court gave an intimation that access should not be allowed to the proceedings except upon written request of solicitors specifying the creditors they represented.—The Registrar said that the court was fully alive to the evil of touting, but the practice was also often resorted to on the part of receivers and managers, who were appointed on an ex-parte application made in the interest of debtors. He asked Mr. Jones whether he was prepared to undertake, on behalf of those he represented, not to make any application to the creditors?—Mr. Jones replied that he would give the undertaking.—His Honour: Are you also prepared to make an affidavit that no applications have been made to the creditors?—Mr. Jones said he was informed that in a few instances letters had been sent by the debtors to their creditors.—His Honour (after consulting Mr. Penn of the liquidation department) said that under all the circumstances he was not prepared to lay down any general rule upon the subject, nor did it come within his province to do so. He understood that it was the practice in the office to produce the proceedings, and supply copies to any creditor producing an affidavit of his debt. The court, as he had already stated, was fully sensible of the evil of touting, and he thought it would be very desirable if it could be checked by some rule of practice; but the touting did not prevail more on the part of creditors or unauthorised persons than of debtors and receivers and managers. All were equally concerned in the matter, and in this particular case all he could do was to give an intimation to the officials in the liquidation department that the affidavit of debt tendered by a creditor who desired to inspect or have copies of the proceedings should be also filed.

Edinburgh Bankruptcy Court.—The adjourned examination into the affairs of Messrs. Scarth & Scott, law agents and conveyancers, Leith, took place on the 19th instant, in presence of Sheriff Hamilton. The sederunt was composed of Mr. Thos. Dall, C.A., trustee; Mr. Thos. White, S.S.C., agent in the sequestration; Mr. Reid (of Messrs. Drummond & Reid, W.S.), Mr. J. C. Campbell Lorimer, advocate (instructed by Messrs. Davidson and Syme, W.S), and Mr. Lindsay Mackersie, W.S., for creditors. John Scott, who alone represented the bankrupt firm having been examined, the Trustee stated that, while he proposed now to close the examination, he was willing, in the event of any creditor for more than £100 making a written request to him to that effect, to apply for a diet for further examination of the bankrupt. The state of affairs showed liabilities to the extent of fully £20,000, and assets to the amount of about £2,300. Both bankrupts took the statutory oath at the close.

Revenue.—The receipts on account of revenue from the 1st April, 1875, when there was a balance of £6,265,122, to the 17th instant were £4,187,773, against £3,567,380 in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year, which began with a balance of £7,442,851. The net expenditure was £7,370,775, against £6,837,673 to the same date in the previous year. The treasury balances on the 17th instant amounted to £3,066,966., and at the same date in 1874 to £4,081,806.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 16.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT, 1873 (No. 2) Bill.—Lord Granville, on the motion for the Second Reading of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (1873) Amendment (No. 2) Bill, reviewed the circumstances under which the Government measure on the same subject was suddenly withdrawn this Session without any previous notice, and in a most unprecedented manner, before any decision had been pronounced on it.—Lord Redesdale said that the Bill of 1873, as introduced, took away the second appeal, and it now remained to be settled what should be done with respect to the ultimate Court of Appeal. Lord Salisbury reminded Lord Granville that in 1854 Lord Russell, without notice, withdrew the Reform Bill of that year before the time had arrived for the Second Reading, and he added that the withdrawal of the Judicature Bill was, therefore, not unprecedented in its manner. The Government wished that the Court of Ultimate Appeal, in whatever form it might be constituted, should be a strong one, but they had pledged themselves against the adoption of harassing and violent legislation, believing that it was by persuasion that the most useful legislation could be adopted.—Lord Grey thought Lord Granville had a just right to complain of the course pursued by the Government in withdrawing a Bill in deference to objections brought before them privately, and added that the withdrawal of the Reform Bill of 1854 was not a case in point.—Lord Denman expressed satisfaction at the omission from the present Bill of the clauses of the late Bill relating to the Appellate Jurisdiction; and Lord Penzance said that the Act of 1873 was an imperfect measure, because it did not deal with Scotland and Ireland. Lord Selborne thought it would be advisable not to discuss on the present occasion the objections he felt to measures suggested to supplement the Act of 1873; but he condemned the extraneous pressure brought to bear in an unusual manner in this case.—Lord O'Hagan thought the Government ought not to be blamed for the course they now pursued.—The Lord Chancellor accepted the present discussion as highly complimentary to the present Bill, because he had not heard one word expressed in disapproval of it; and though it had been said that the Government might have carried the Bill with the aid of the Peers on the Opposition benches, he must declare that on the night of the withdrawal of the Bill he did not observe that there was any great attendance of Peers on those benches, and when the question for its withdrawal was put no objection was made. —Lord Waveney said he would give his most hearty support to the present Bill, which was then read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, APRIL 20.

BANKS OF ISSUE.—Mr. McLaren moved that the Select Committee on banks of issue consist of 23 members. He certainly thought two Scotch members should be added to the Committee as it now stood.—The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that when the Committee was appointed he stated his objections to greatly increasing the number of its members. If two Scotch members were now added, the Irish members and those representing constituencies in the North of England might also propose to nominate members of the Committee, and he must, therefore, oppose the motion of the hon. member for Edinburgh. The House divided. For the motion, 48; against, 119. Majority, 71.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, APRIL 22.

PUBLIC INCOME, EXPENDITURE, AND SURPLUS.—On the motion of Mr. Childers, returns were ordered of the total public income and expenditure of the United Kingdom, according to the actual receipt and issue at the Exchequer, during each of the ten years ending the 31st of March, 1866, to the 31st of March, 1875, inclusive; of the surplus of income above expenditure for each such year, certified during the following quarter by the Treasury to the National Debt Commissioners as prescribed by the Acts 10 George IV., cap. 27, sec. 1, and 29 and 30 Vict., cap. 39, sec. 16: and a copy of the certificate given by the Treasury to the National Debt Commissioners with reference to the surplus (or otherwise) of income above expenditure for the year ended the 31st of March, 1875. Also of the estimated amount of stock to be purchased in each year from 1875-6 to 1904-5 inclusive, under the operation of the plan applying a fixed sum of £28,000,000 annually to the interest and reduction of the National Debt.

NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

(Before MR. R. WILDMAN, Judge.)

RE GIBSON RICHARDSON PEARSON.—Bankrupt was a farmer and cattle dealer at Colston Basset.—Mr. Everall made an application on behalf of William Pearson, father of the bankrupt, to be allowed to prove on the estate for £593 7s., which applicant alleged was due to him by his son.—It appears that the trustee rejected the claim of applicant to the amount of £300, and he now applied to the Court for an order reversing the decision, and allowing him to prove to the full amount.—The applicant in his affidavit stated that on the 12th April, 1872, he delivered to his son certain horses, cattle, and sheep, under the agreement that the bankrupt was, in consideration thereof, to find applicant board and lodging whenever he wished to go, and the bankrupt was to pay him for such horses, cattle, and sheep, when he was in a position to do so. These cattle had since been sold for the trustees, and applicant therefore claimed to prove in respect of such horses, &c., the sum of £387, which was their value; and he held a promissory note for £200, making up the amount to £593.—Mr. Everall said that when applicant handed over the stock, he did so in the belief that it was arranged between them that he was from time to time to live with his son, and that his son was to maintain him.—His Honour observed that if he handed over the cattle and the sheep on the condition that he was to be maintained, the cattle and the sheep then became the property of the bankrupt. It was quite clear he could not have any claim for the cattle and sheep.—Mr. Everall said there were two sons; one had been successful in the world, and the one now in court had unfortunately failed. In answer to Mr. Everall, applicant said that the other son had taken all his house at a valuation. He gave him what he asked, about £300, and at the mother's decease he was to pay for these things.—Mr. Hind, for the trustee, read the agreement—which he remarked was very carefully drawn up—between the applicant and the other son. In continuing his evidence, in reply to Mr. Everall, applicant said he had a farm, and there was a quantity of stock upon it. That stock was taken by his son, the bankrupt. That was before the 6th April, 1873. He valued the stock in question at £387. His other son John took a public house on the land attached, and an agreement was drawn up between him and his son John. Applicant lived backwards and forwards between the two sons. He gave all his estate to his two sons, and he had nothing to live on but what they allowed him. By his Honour: There was no written agreement between him and his son Gibson, the bankrupt, only "verbal talking." Cross examined by Mr. Hind: Did your son take possession in 1872? Yes, I suppose so.—Do you know? I do not.—How many horses did you take? I took five horses.—What was the value of these? I don't know.—His Honour: About how much? £200.—By Mr. Hind: How many cattle and sheep? 75 sheep and 18 beasts. The sheep would be about 55s. each, and the beasts £18 each. My son had a certain amount of property to get at his mother's death, and he was to pay me when he could. We made an agreement between us that he was to pay me for this stock. I am quite sure about it. It was understood between him and me. There was an agreement that he was to pay me when he could. What was the agreement? He was to pay me

£387.—The applicant was then questioned closely by his Honour as to how he had arrived at the figures quoted, but no definite answer was obtained. Cross-examination continued: Mr. Robert Thorpe and Mr. Richards came to the farm at different times. I do not recollect having any conversation with them when they were discussing my son's liabilities. I did not say anything to them about money for the cattle, but I said I wanted £200, for which I held the note.—The bankrupt, examined by Mr. Everall, emphatically denied that there was any understanding between him and his father about paying for the cattle. I had no bargain with him.—His Honour: Were you to give him anything in consideration for the stock?—No; only to keep him at times.—Were you to pay him for the cattle?—No, there was no sum mentioned. —By Mr. Everall. Have you told the same story this morning that you are telling in the witness box? Yes.—Did you not say to my clerk this morning that there was a sum agreed upon?—Bankrupt (after a pause): Well, I told him. Since that, have you been in conversation with Mr. Thorpe? Yes.—Did he threaten to prosecute you and send you to prison? Something of that sort.—Had you made a different statement before? Yes.—Which was the true statement—the one you made to my clerk or the one you made to Mr. Thorpe? The statement I am now making is the true one. My father gave me the stock, and he was to come and live with me when he liked.—Did you not say you had agreed upon a sum? No. —Mr. Patchitt said the question was whether there was a contract or not.—His Honour: I am not satisfied that there was a contract. I think the old man did himself very little credit in the box. He was a most discreditable witness.—His Honour allowed costs.

Re Francis Wolfe, innkeeper, Fish Inn, Hazleford Ferry, parish of Bleasby.—This was an application by the trustee to show cause why a certain bill of sale, dated 6th January, alleged to have been made by the bankrupt on the one part and Mr. Dickinson on the other part, should not be set aside, on grounds set forth in the affidavits.—Mr. Weightman, barrister, appeared on behalf of the trustee, and Mr. Cave, barrister, for Mr. Dickinson. Mr. Weightman said that in the first instance he would like to draw his Honour's attention to one point, viz. the description of the bankrupt. He held it was not sufficient in the bill of sale to satisfy the Bills of Sale Act. There must be, as he understood it, the name, address, and occupation of the bankrupt—such an address as would enable persons who were anxious to find out if the bill of sale was a bona-fide transaction. The description in the present instance was simply "Francis Wolfe, of the Fish inn, Hazleford Ferry, in the County of Nottingham." There was no parish mentioned.—His Honour: Would the postman have any difficulty in delivering a letter. Do you say there are two Fish inns or two Francis Wolfes?—Mr. Weightman replied that the parish should have been specified. There might be more Fish inns in Nottinghamshire. The second point to which he wished to direct attention was that the debt was not owing. The claim under the bill of sale was £537.—Mr. Cave said he did not think it could be proved that the bill of sale was security for more than £350 principal, and any interest that there might be.—Mr. Weightman said that when Mr. Dickinson was on the premises on the 10th Dec. the bankrupt filed a document that he was unable to pay his debts.—His Honour: The bankrupt had not the goods in his order and disposition on the 11th.—Mr. Weightman argued that the goods were in the apparent possession of the bankrupt, and that nothing had been done to show that they were not in his possession. He contended that though the bill of sale had been registered it should be looked upon the same as unregistered, and the trustee should get the property. The goods were in the actual and apparent ownership of the bankrupt, and during the time the formal possession was being taken the bankrupt was committing an Act of Bankruptcy.—His Honour said the question was what was the bill of sale worth.—Mr. Weightman: I say it is good for £180.—His Honour: And Mr. Cave says it is worth £360.—Mr. Cave: £360 of principal and any interest that may be on it. We shall go before the registrar to prove every thing beyond that. If we don't exceed that, it is covered by the bill of sale.—The bill of sale was then upheld for £350, with liberty to Mr. Dickinson to prove for any amount over that when the bill is being taxed before the registrar. Mr. Cave asked that the costs should be paid by the trustee, and this his Honour allowed.

MANSFIELD COUNTY COURT.

The Southwell Bank Failure.—At the Mansfield County Court on Friday the case of the Rev. A. Pavey v. Mr. W. S. Cursham came on for hearing. This case was submitted to his Honour by agreement of parties, and was to determine who was to bear the loss of £55 in Southwell Bank notes, which had been paid by defendant as a deposit and part payment of certain property which he had agreed to purchase from plaintiff. At the time of the agreement to purchase Mr. A. J. Cursham, solicitor, Mansfield, acted for both parties, and about two o'clock on Saturday, 12th Dec. last, he sent the agreement signed by the defendant for the signature of the plaintiff, together with £50 in £5 notes of Messrs. Wylde and Co.'s Bank, as a deposit and part payment of the purchase money of £1,000. Plaintiff at once signed and returned the agreement, retaining the notes. The Mansfield branch of the bank usually closed at one o'clock on Saturdays, for half holidays, but upon this occasion Mr. Cursham obtained the notes from the bank at 1.45, and his clerk went direct and paid them to the plaintiff. On the following Monday morning a notice was affixed to the shutters of the bank that payment was suspended, and the affairs are now in course of liquidation. The plaintiff, on hearing of this notice, during the afternoon, and on the Tuesday morning, called upon defendant, told him of it, and asked him to take back the notes. Defendant referred plaintiff to his solicitor.—Mr. W. Bryan, solicitor, Mansfield, appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. A. J. Cursham for defendant.—Mr. Bryan, for plaintiff, pleaded that the bank had virtually closed when the notes were given, and there was, therefore, a failure of consideration. That plaintiff offered the notes to the defendant the day after the stoppage was announced, and, therefore, there was no delay or neglect on his part, as in the case of Timmins v. Gibbins it was held that presentment at the bank was not necessary. That in the case of Henderson v. Appleton it was decided that if notes were promptly tendered back want of presentment was no defence, and in the case of Robson v. Olliver that notice within a reasonable time is sufficient.—Mr. Cursham, for defendant, pleaded that the notes were good at the time they were paid over to and received by the plaintiff, and might have been paid away any time during the Saturday afternoon, and that he did not give notice to defendant until the Tuesday.—Judge: You gave that which turned out worthless paper, but had there been an opportunity of returning it to the bank, had it been open for a single hour on Monday morning, it would have altered the case.—Mr. Cursham applied for an adjournment.—Mr. Bryan asked that the matter might be decided at once.—Judge Wildman said had he the slightest doubt he should give defendant the benefit of it, but in this case he must give judgment for plaintiff.

It is proposed by a bill now in the House of Commons that for a clerk, officer, or servant who shall falsify the accounts of his employer, the law be amended to increase the penalty to seven years' penal servitude, or to two years' imprisonment.

The Consolidated Fund.—According to a Return printed this week, the estimated expenditure of the Consolidated Fund for the year 1875-76 is £29,660,000, and the actual issues in the year 1874-75, £28,678,068.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

Agop Dayian and Co. (Manchester.)—A preliminary meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Agop Dayian and Co. of Lloyd's House, Manchester, merchant shippers, was held on Monday. The statement presented showed liabilities £13,691 10s. 2d. and the assets £18,499 9s. 3d.

J. M. Harris (London).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. J. M. Harris, of London and Sierra Leone, merchant, was held in Manchester on Friday. The total liabilities were about £30,000. The debtor was not prepared to make any offer, and it was arranged that the estate should be liquidated, Mr. Halliday, accountant, being appointed trustee.

Foster and Lockwood (Sheffield).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs Foster and Lockwood, steel manufacturers, Sheffield, was held on the 15th instant. The liabilities amounted to £3,160, and the estimated assets to £1,000, most of which it was stated consisted of damages which would, it was expected, be recovered in an action now pending. It was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation.

Mills and Heywood (Oldham).—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Mills and Heywood, cotton spinners and doublers, of Oldham, the liabilities were stated at £25,898, and assets at £11,158. A committee of investigation was appointed.

Broad and Sons (Plymouth).—A meeting of the creditors of Alfred Broad and Sons, late wine merchants of George-street, Plymouth, was held on Tuesday at the Duke of Cornwall Hotel, under the presidency of Mr Christopher H. Bulteel, for the purpose of receiving the report of the trustees of considering whether the claims of Mr. Wise, late a partner in the firm, should be admitted for dividend, and of deciding as to the remuneration to be paid for their services. The trustees' report having been read, the following resolutions were passed—"That the report of the trustees now read be received and approved; that, considering the trustees have done all in their power to obtain information and accounts from the debtors, the creditors are perfectly satisfied with the services rendered by the trustees, and do not consider it advisable to incur the heavy expenses which might be attendant on further proceedings against the debtors under the application for committal; that the claim of Mr. David Woodfield Wise to receive dividend out of the estate be admitted; that, in addition to the percentage voted at the first meeting of the creditors for the trustees' (Messrs. J. E. E. Dawe and W. Arliss) remuneration, a further percentage of £5 per cent. on the gross receipts be paid to them for their services, and this meeting desires to express to the trustees their best thanks for the valuable assistance rendered by them, which has resulted in not only exposing the transactions of the debtors, but in obtaining upwards of £600 for the creditors."

FAILURES.

England.—Messrs Bennett and Glave, woollen merchants and manufacturers, of King-street, Leeds, and Potterdale Mills, have issued a circular to their creditors, announcing their regret that they are obliged to suspend payment. It is supposed that their liabilities will be between £60,000 and £70,000. The suspension, it is stated, is due to depressed trade and losses.—Messrs. E. K. Fox and Co., woolstaplers, Canal-road, Halifax, have filed a petition for liquidation in the County Court. The liabilities are stated to be about £2,000.—The failure is announced of Mr. Donald Mackenzie, factor, of Sand-street, Birmingham, the liabilities amounting to about £10,000. Heavy losses in America and Australia are said to be the cause of failure.—A petition was filed on Friday afternoon, in the County Court, Burnley, by Mr. T. Howell, solicitor, Burnley, in the affairs of Mr. J. Lord Clarkson, wholesale grocer, Burnley. The liabilities are set down at £4,700, and the assets are not yet known.

Ireland.—It is announced that Messrs. Magill, Riddle, and Co., merchants and commission agents, of Belfast, have stopped payment, and that their liabilities are expected to be large. The partners hold the paper of Messrs. im Thurn and Co. to the extent of £30,000.

Canada.—Canadian advices report the following failures:—Messrs Fairbairn and Coons, brokers and produce commission merchants; Messrs. M'Donald Brothers, of Vernon Bridge, Prince Edward Island, general merchants; Messrs. Taylor and Fisher, Chatham; Messrs. E. W. Chipman and Co., dry goods, Messrs. J. R. Jennett and Co. crockery, both of Halifax; Messrs. Green Brothers, shoe trade; Messrs. Alexander, Murphy, and Cuddihy, wholesale fancy goods, both of Montreal. The proprietor of the Mohawk and Hudson Iron Works at Waterford, N.Y., had made an assignment.

The failure of the firm of Messrs. Augustine, Heard & Co., of Shanghai, has been announced by telegraph, with liabilities believed to be of considerable amount, chiefly due to native houses. Messrs. Whittall and Linstead have been appointed trustees to the estate, and rumours are current of the native creditors having destroyed the warehouses of the firm in Hongkong. The suspension of Messrs. Fearon & Co., which occurred some ten days since, was due to the non-receipt of remittances from this firm, who were their principals.

LIFE ASSURANCE AND THE POOR.

At the Worship-street Police-court, on Saturday, Mr. Joseph Frith, on behalf of the Newington district branch of the Charity Organization Society, applied to Mr. Bushby, under the following circumstances, on behalf of a poor woman, widow of man named Bignell, of Belgrave-place, Walworth-road. Bignell, it appeared from the statement of Mr. Frith, who produced a number of papers and letters to support his case, had in his lifetime been insured for £11 4s., to be paid to his widow on his death, with the United Kingdom Assurance Corporation, the head office of which is at 27A Finsbury-square, in the district of this court. Bignell paid 2d. per week premium to an agent who called, and the payments were entered week by week in a book kept for that purpose. Bignell appeared to have joined the Society during the first week in October, 1873, but the policy issued to him by the society bore date the 27th, the payments having up to that time been claimed as a kind of entrance fee. There was also a stipulation in the policy that if the assured should die before the expiration of 12 months from the time of entrance, only half the amount of the policy could be claimed. It appeared that it was the course of business of the United Kingdom Assurance Corporation not to require a medical examination of the assured, but to accept him upon his own statement of his health, &c. It so happened that domestic troubles worried Bignell shortly afterwards, that towards the close of the year he was found to have become uncontrollable, and was obliged to be handed over to the parish, which in December sent him to Caterham Asylum. He died there of general paralysis and exhaustion in the following April, the payments to the insurance office being kept up all the time by the wife. Bignell had thus died within a year of his insuring himself, and the wife only claimed the sum of £5 12s. This, however, the United Kingdom Assurance Corporation refused to pay, and the woman, who was in great distress, and had a family to support, had been from April, 1874, up to the present time kept out of her money. Mr. Barker, honorary secretary of the Charity Organization Society, Newington, had taken up the case to endeavour to get some arrangement from the Society, but the letters from the manager (which were produced to Mr. Bushby) said that after consideration the corporation could not recognise the claim. The letters hinted at several grounds which "might" be taken up for the refusal, but stated one, which was that the deceased had misled the office as to his state of health at the time the insurance was effected. The widow, anxious to obtain the money, which would be to her a little fortune in her present need, applied to the magistrate at Lambeth, but he referred her to this court. Her case was not a solitary one with the same office. A widow, named Reeves, who had represented her case to the Charity Organization Society, had applied to the Alderman at Guildhall, because she had been refused payment of a sum of £9 due on the death of her son, she having insured two of them at 2d. a week—1d. each. That case had been answered by the solicitors to the United Kingdom Assurance Corporation, but Mr. Alderman Finnis had expressed his surprise that there was an insurance company which took 2d. a week from the poor people, and thought that such a class of society was prohibited by Act of Parliament.—Mr. Frith said that up to this time Mrs. Reeve's claim had not been met, but the Society disputed the case under their rules. He wished to know if it was not possible to bring the manager or directors before the court upon a summons in each case.—Mr. Bushby thought it was a case for the county court, and after some further discussion the applicant withdrew, expressing a hope that the public would know how the office dealt with its clients.—Standard.

"GENEROUS" CREDITORS.

The Liverpool Daily Courier of the 20th inst. says:—An example of the present unsatisfactory working of the bankruptcy law occurred at the first meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Brearley Wood, described as of No. 38 Chestnut-grove, Tranmere, in the county of Chester, formerly carrying on business as an African merchant, under the style of "Wood and Barclay," but now out of business, held on Saturday last at the office of Mr. T. M. Downham, solicitor, Birkenhead. Mr. T. Theodore Rogers, accountant, Lord-street, Liverpool, and Mr. Thompson, of the firm of Messrs. Thompson and Simm, accountants, Birkenhead, represented several creditors, and there were also present at the meeting about a dozen Birkenhead tradesmen, representing almost every branch of business, who had claims against the debtor, in some cases for large amounts. Mr. Downham, the debtor's solicitor, who held the proofs and proxies of friendly creditors, amounting to about £4,000, including one by the debtor's wife for £250 for money said to be lent, voted himself to the chair and read the statement of affairs, which showed liabilities £4,923, against assets, cash in hand £5, and on behalf of his client made an offer of one penny in the pound. Mr. Rogers, on behalf of bona-fide creditors severely examined the debtor as to the statement submitted, and in reply to one of his inquiries, it was admitted that the asset named in the statement was a sum of money which a friend had given the debtor to deposit with his solicitor to cover court fees consequent upon his petition, hence there were really no assets. Mr. Rogers indignantly protested against the whole proceedings, characterised them as an attempt on the part of the debtor to be relieved of legitimate debts in a way never contemplated by the framers of the act, and although he knew it was futile, in the face of the proxies held by Mr. Downham, to prevent at that meeting the passing of the resolutions, he asked the creditors present to mark their disapproval of the debtor's conduct by refusing their consent to the resolutions, with which, as a body, they complied. It was stated at the meeting that the debtor's wife is possessed of a large amount of property which has been settled upon her, and under this circumstance the creditors were loud in expressing their opinion that it was a shame they should be compelled, by being outvoted by friendly creditors, to accept a penny in the pound in satisfaction of their just debts.

COSTS OF THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

Our contemporary, the Post Magazine, in its issue of the 17th instant, says:—"We ask the careful consideration of our readers to the Parliamentary Return of payments on account of the expenses of the European Arbitration between 21st August, 1872, and 11th February, 1875, a period of little under two years and a half. The amount is £49,215. Of this £21,327 represents the payments to the solicitors; £10,000 for the personal services of Messrs. Price and Young, the joint official liquidators; and £11,537 remuneration for their clerks. The outlay, moreover, represents but one side of the charges involved in the Arbitration. How much the costs paid by the unfortunate contributaries amount to cannot even be estimated. We think some member of parliament should call for a further return of the sums due, but not paid at the date of this return, and also for an account of the general expenses of the arbitration, for that above referred to includes only payments to the arbitrators, assessors, liquidators, solicitors, secretary and clerks. The appointment of joint liquidator is evidently a valuable one; Mr. Price and Mr. Young receive for their services the handsome allowance of £2,000 per annum each, and as both of them act in a similar capacity under the Albert Arbitration, and are besides liquidators to quite a number of companies winding up in the Court of Chancery, the aggregate of their remuneration derived from the miserable failures of joint-stock institutions must be enormous. The question naturally arises whether the services of two of such highly paid officials are necessary, and on this point we would suggest inquiry by some of the parties interested. A saving of £2,000 a year is something satisfactory in the direction of economy. An inquiry might also be made with reference to the solicitors' payments—whether they are in satisfaction of bills of costs delivered and taxed, and if so, by whom, or whether they are on account only."

The City Editor of the Times writes as follows on the same subject:—"Allowing fully for the difficulties and for the length of time over which this liquidation has extended, we think these figures show, so far as the lawyers' and accountants' bills are concerned, that the winding up of estates is, under our present system, most ruinously costly. This bill is but small, however, compared with those of many other liquidations where estates are literally swallowed up. The whole subject should be looked into in the interests both of unfortunate bankrupts and equally unfortunate creditors. In the present case 116 judgments were given, and the arbitrator sat 49 times, so the cost was over £1,000 a sitting, and about £425 per judgment."

Down with Accountants.—A correspondent of the Law Times, who signs himself "K. K," expresses his opinion of accountants in the following terms:—"Too much liberty is given to debtors; they laugh at their creditors, file petitions for liquidation, get friendly accountants appointed receivers, and get their discharge for next to nothing in the pound. If creditors would attend meetings of creditors themselves, or instruct their solicitors to do so, instead of giving proxies to accountants, who do nothing but fight for trusteeships, things would be different. Creditors too readily give their proxies to gentlemen who have nothing to recommend themselves with beyond boundless impudence and audacity, and who are so conscientious that when they cannot get appointed themselves, they object to others being appointed, and eventually rob a small estate by three of these rapacious wolves being appointed. In small estates, whilst the solicitor's charges are reduced by three-fifths, the accountant gets his full charges for every thing he does. Some people are under the impression that nobody besides lawyers can charge for attendances; but they are mistaken, the accountant charges for going to swear affidavits, going to see his solicitor; if any one calls upon him at his office relating to the estate, he charges for the time it occupies in speaking to the creditor or other person; but all this is done, not by charging an orthodox 3s. 4d., 6s. 8d., or 13s. 4d., but so much per hour. Fancy an item: 'Time going to solicitor and before commissioner, being sworn to affidavit that I would accept the office of trustee, 1s. 8d.' "

In the House of Commons on Wednesday, the Bankruptcy (Scotland) Law Amendment Bill was read a third time and passed.

BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.

The following is the official return of the cheques and bills cleared in the Bankers' Clearing-house for the week ending Wednesday, April 21st:—

Thursday, April 15th	£18,510,000
Friday, April 16th	19,652,000
Saturday, April 17th	20,647,000
Monday, April 19th	20,820,000
Tuesday, April 20th	15,966,000
Wednesday, April 21st	15, 957,000

The report of the London and Provincial Law Assurance states that new assurances were effected during its past year's business for £208,620, yielding in premiums £8,812. The total funds amounted to £683,960, and were invested at an average rate of £4 18s. 2d. per cent. interest.

Public Loans.—A Parliamentary return has been issued giving an account of loans advanced by the Government for relief of trade or of individuals, the employment of labour, the promotion of public works, or for other local purposes, from 1792 to the end of the financial year 1873-74. The total reaches the large sum of £66,961,526—namely, £27,454,400 for English purposes, £3,669,589 for Scotch purposes, £32,727,198 for Irish purposes, and £3,110,339 for Colonial purposes. The greater part of this amount has been repaid, with interest; but no less than £9,406,030 has been remitted—namely, £249,021 of the advances for English purposes, £196,549 of those for Scotch purposes, £463,028 of those for Colonial purposes, and as much as £8,497,431 of the advances for Irish purposes. The whole result has not been profitable. The repayments of principal, with the interest paid, have amounted to £55,174,327, and the outstanding principal estimated to be recoverable is £12,741,323, the two sums amounting together to £67,915,650, being £954,124 more than the amount advanced. Spread over 80 years this is equal to little better than a merely nominal rate of interest, and, in fact, it is not much more than the interest actually received in the last two years on such of the loans as were still outstanding.

Administering Oaths in Bankruptcy.—The power conferred by the rules framed pursuant to the Bankruptcy Act 1869, whereby a trustee is authorised in certain cases to administer an oath and to take affidavits, is one which we have reason to fear has been greatly abused, so much so, that any amending Act which continues this power will perpetuate a radical evil. Too often a trustee is not only an unreliable person, but a friend, or supposed friend, of the debtor's, and it is hardly too much to say that such a person is frequently in an equally impecunious state with the debtor himself, the required certificate of character, &c., notwithstanding. That this power puts temptations in the way of the trustee as well as of the debtor (sometimes to the injury of the debtor, more frequently to the loss of the creditors) under such circumstances, can hardly be denied, and it becomes a serious question whether the power to administer an oath must not be confined to certain responsible persons commissioned for the purpose, and moreover, that no affidavit should be sworn to until the person administering the oath has read over, and if he consider it necessary, explained to the proposed deponent, the nature of the matter as to which he seeks to be sworn. This latter course seems necessary, because of a growing practice on the part of commissioners for oaths, to administer the oath without even inquiring the general purpose or object of the affidavit. The question has been often discussed as to whether such a commissioner ought to inform himself of the contents of an affidavit or declaration, and although the fees are such as do not warrant such additional work, still we cannot help thinking that the practice which usually obtains in such matters would admit of remodelling. The Judicature Act and Rules promise to accomplish certain alterations, to which others might be usefully added.—Law Times.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

TRANSLATIONS.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,

BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,

62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages, on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Subscribers to the fact that the publication of the paper weekly constitutes the ACCOUNTANT a "newspaper" within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Act, and members of the profession thus have the opportunity of contributing towards the success of their own organ by the insertion of statutory notices required to be advertised under this and other Acts of Parliament. The Paper is Published every Saturday in time for the early morning mails; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

MAY 1, 1875.

We have spoken so frequently as to the short-sightedness of the numerous class of individuals whose constant endeavour is to cut down to the very lowest point possible the remuneration of professional men, that we shall do little more than point out the fallacies of the circular to which our correspondents "Cynic" and "O" have alluded. As a matter of fact, nothing is more common than the desire to get every thing done as cheaply as possible, in total oblivion of the truth that a bad article is dear at any price. In buying an article, the purchaser knows, when he has paid his money, that the article remains, and is perhaps less disposed to grumble as he has got something. But in dealing with professional men, clients are often strangely forgetful of the skill and labour that have been employed in their service. To say that the physician is looked upon as a friend and benefactor in the time of trial, and a sinecurist who has earned his money very cheaply, when the danger is over, is a mere commonplace. Every solicitor will admit that numerous cases which have taxed the learning and patience of counsel to the utmost, have brought him into disgrace with clients when fees and costs have to be paid, and that much work is done in a risky manner to save this expense. And so it is with ourselves. Loss of money by fraudulent bankruptcies, and bad debts, is one of the incidents of trade, and a mere item in the profit and loss account. The amount paid to those who have minimised this loss appears to many business men in the semblance of an odious and onerous tax.

Probably the general ignorance of the business members of the world of any thing beyond their own peculiar occupation, is at the bottom of the matter. It seems a simple thing to investigate accounts and to examine into a debtor's real estate, requiring the slightest possible technical knowledge, and to be accomplished by any man of business training and habits. As a fact, the system of amateur trustees has broken down in the light of extended experience, which shows that the expense is greater, while the results are proportionately less, and that it is difficult to get a creditor of any standing to undertake the duties of trustee at all. What is to be the remedy? A trustee must be appointed, and must be a man trained for the post. A paragraph from the Law Times exultingly proclaims that solicitors are now acting as trustees. Unless universal opinion is much mistaken, this substitution will not curtail expenses. A competent man must be paid for his labour, whichever his profession. Supposing the circular is acted on, what will be the result? The trusteeships will fall into the hands of men of no professional standing and no great ability. It is absurd to contend that under this system he public interests will not suffer.

In the mean time the Society of Accountants in England is taking action in the matter. Let them resolve to check all unauthorised intruders; and whilst having due regard to the welfare of the business world, let them also jealously guard the interests of their profession.

The decision of the judge of the Birkenhead County Court in Palethorpe's case has been affirmed, and may now, pending any further appeal to the Lords Justices, be considered as law. Though bearing rather hardly on the unlucky creditor, the point seems sufficiently clear, and but for the nature of the security would scarcely have been seriously disputed. The creditor places his own value on his security, which, judging from the age of the policy and its amount, seems scarcely too inadequate, and claims for the difference between that and the amount of his debt. If any dividend had been paid he would have reaped the benefit of it, and on this he must be supposed to have calculated; while a policy of assurance, though a useful collateral security, is hardly, except under peculiar circumstances, an eligible investment, however important it may be to a business man, who is willing to put up with an unremunerative mode of dealing with his money if he lives, on the faith that an early death may not leave his family entirely penniless. The simple nature of the point appears more plainly if we treat the security as being of another nature. Suppose the security given had been stock of a railway company. The value of this would be taken at the market price of the day; and if the trustee chose to take this and pay the price, as in this case, he would be justified in doing so. But if, after it had been taken over, a sudden rise took place, as we have seen lately in the stocks of one or two railways, the secured creditor would never think of claiming the "unearned" increment. The same reasoning really governs the present matter.

History is said to repeat itself, and sometimes history repeats fiction, as we may see if we compare the career of the Great National Fire Insurance Company and that of the Anglo-Bengalee. The capital of the latter institution has never been accurately stated; but they seem, for a time at least, to have honourably met their engagements, even though they were reduced to realise every thing except a grand piano. The Great National has been hardly so fortunate. With a capital of five millions, they were unable to meet a debt of little more than fifty pounds, and their consequent extinction was accordingly decreed by the Court of Chancery. There can be no doubt that an insurance company, provided it can hold its own without any serious losses by fire for a few years, is about as paying a speculation as can possibly be imagined; and every improvement in building arrangements, and every increased facility for water supply, must add materially to its value. But in order to realise this proud position, it is necessary that a short period should elapse, and, above all, that creditors should be paid or pacified; otherwise, as in the case of the Great National Company, the shareholders may be left to reflect sadly on the vanished visions of Eldorado, and the truth of the proverb that it is the first step which is all important.

The Lord Chancellor has ordered that the offices of the County Courts may be closed on the 17th day of May.

THE INSTITUTE OF ACCOUNTANTS.

The Fourth Annual General Meeting of the Institute of Accountants was held at the Cannon-street Hotel, on Wednesday last. There were present, Messrs. John Ball, H. W. Blackburn (Bradford), S. Barrow, E. G. Bradley, J. O. Chadwick, F. H. Collison, J. W. Ford, J. Harris, C. F. Kemp, G. H. Ladbury, S. Lovelock, E. Moore, S. D. Nix, S. L. Price, S. Smith, and T. H. Wintle, Fellows of the Institute; and E. J. Gardiner and T. A. Welton (Secretary), Associates.

In the absence of the President (Mr. William Quilter), Mr. C. F. Kemp was elected to the chair.

The minutes of the previous meeting having been read and confirmed, the report of the Council was taken as read.

It stated that "The Council announce that since the date of their last report, fourteen new Members have been admitted, raising the total number of Members to 160; namely, 97 Fellows and 63 Associates.

"The Council having been informed that the committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor to consider the practical working of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and of the Rules made under its authority, would gladly receive any suggestions, the Council accordingly submitted various recommendations to the consideration of that committee."

The balance sheet was appended to the report; and it appears that since the formation of the Institute in November 1870, it has received in entrance fees, subscriptions, and dividends on investments a total sum of £6,764 18s. 11d., whilst the current expenses have amounted to only £1,800 5s. 9d., leaving a balance of £4,964 13s. 2d.

The Chairman said the report was a short one, but it must not be taken as conveying any idea of the many and various questions arising out of the affairs of the Institute, which had been discussed from time to time by the Council. Notably various suggestions had been made to the committee appointed by the Lord Chancellor to inquire into the working of the Bankruptcy Act 1869, and they hoped that this would lead to a more distinct recognition, on the part of the Court, of the Institute, and of the class generally of which they were members. (Hear.) The Council had always been desirous to do every thing possible to advance the object of the Institution, viz. the elevation of the status of the profession, but of course not much could be gained in that direction until they were recognised by the proper legal authorities. And one of the modes to attain that end was, to see that the personal conduct of every member was such as to command the respect of the Courts and the legal profession. (Hear.) Another question that had occupied a great deal of the time of the Council, but which it was not thought desirable to refer to in the report, was the position in which members of the profession were occasionally placed in discharging the important and responsible duties of auditors. He thought there was not one member of the Institute, with any experience, who had not at times found himself, when acting as auditor of Public Companies, placed in an extremely unpleasant position. (Hear.) He had on one side the interests of the shareholders to protect, and on the other that of the directors: he was liable to the charge of needlessly interfering, and on the other hand, if any thing went wrong, he would be called to account for not having interfered enough. He had read recently that one of the leading members of the Institute had felt it necessary to resign his post, because of an exception taken by the directors of a company whose accounts his firm audited, to the manner in which the firm had performed the duties of auditors. He hoped that every member of the Institute would do his best to uphold his professional brethren in such a case, and would decline to accept an appointment of public auditor if he found that his predecessor had been dismissed, or compelled to resign, because he had tried to discharge his duties honestly and fearlessly. (Applause.) The Council had considered this matter, and it was in their minds to promulgate a bye-law on the subject; but they felt that it was a large question to deal with, and that it would perhaps be better to defer all action for the present. They were, however, unanimous in feeling that if any member found himself in a difficulty in connection with his post of auditor, they would, upon the facts being placed before them, do every thing they could to uphold him in the just discharge of his duties. (Hear, hear.) He was afraid that, from the very constitution of their order, they would have to wait some little time before they could show much in the way of practical results. But the position of public accountant was now becoming more recognised, and he believed the period would arrive when they would have an acknowledged status; and this would be achieved by time, by consolidation amongst themselves, and by their securing and retaining public confidence. (Applause.)

The report, &c. was then formally adopted.

Mr. S. D. Nix asked for information as to what the Council proposed to do with the large sum which was accumulating in their hands. He inquired whether there was any likelihood of a building being erected for the use of members, and whether it would not be practicable to give lectures upon topics connected with the profession.

Mr. Lovelock asked whether the attention of the Council had been drawn to some remarks by one of the Registrars of the Bankruptcy Court; and if so, whether it was proposed to take any action upon the matter.

The Chairman said, in regard to the first question, he thought the time had hardly arrived when they could go into the project of building. As to lectures, the challenge had been sent forth, and they were waiting for some volunteer to come forward and deliver one. In regard to the question of "touting," he saw that the attention of the Registrars had been directed to the subject. If any member would come forward with a direct complaint, and statement of facts, the Council would be quite prepared to act; but they felt that there was considerable difficulty in laying down any general rules on the subject.

The following members of the Council being eligible for re-election, were then re-elected, viz., Messrs. G. A. Cape, Robert Fletcher, C. F. Kemp, and G. H. Ladbury.

It having been intimated to the meeting that Mr. Henry Chatteris, one of the auditors, desired to be relieved of the duties, his place was filled by the election of Mr. Samuel Barrow (Barrow and Gates), on the motion of Mr. S. D. Nix, seconded by the Secretary. Mr. Frederick Whinney was then re-elected one of the auditors.

The Council recommended the election of Mr. Robert Ferguson Miller (Monkhouse, Goddard, Miller and Co Newcastle on Tyne) as an Associate of the Institute, and the recommendation was adopted by the meeting.

The proceedings were concluded with a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

Scotch Bills.—In the House of Commons on Wednesday, the High Court of Justiciary (Scotland) Bill was read a second time, and the Sheriff's Court (Scotland) Bill was withdrawn. The second reading of the Licensing Courts Appeal (Scotland) Bill was then moved, but it was rejected by 176 to 99, Proposed Winding-up of a Steam Ship Company.—The Western Mail announces that the Directors of the South Wales Atlantic Steam-ship Company, which has been running a line of steamers for nearly five years, have decided on winding-up the company. A meeting of the shareholders to sanction the resolution will be held in London next week. The same paper states that during the existence of the company the Marquis of Bute has not only foregone all dock dues on its vessels, but has supplied them gratuitously with coal to an extent represented by a sum equal to £30,000. His lordship also subscribed £5,000 in shares to the original company, and subsequently doubled his stock.

Scotch Bankruptcy Examinations.—At the Glasgow Bankruptcy Court on Monday, Thomas M'Guffie, of M'Guffie, Sutherland and Co., merchants, Glasgow and Rangoon, appeared before Sheriff Clark for examination as a bankrupt. The bankrupt deposed that the insolvency of his firm was caused by losses on foreign transactions. During the past four years the Rangoon firm had not been punctual in forwarding statements of the business affairs, and until quite lately he had no reason to suspect that the concern had not been successful. A statement of affairs prepared by his partner, who had absconded, showed liabilities to the extent of £24,076, while the assets were estimated at £11,400. The statutory oath was administered to the bankrupt, and a warrant granted for his partner's apprehension.—Wilson, M'Lay & Co. (Glasgow).—At the examination in bankruptcy of Messrs. Wilson, M'Lay and Co., iron and metal merchants, of Glasgow and London, the total liabilities were stated to be £172,000 and the assets £20,000.

ACCOUNTANTS' CHARGES.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—Your attention will doubtless have been called to two public meetings of wholesale houses which appear to have been called at the Guildhall Coffee House, on the 12th January last, and 9th instant, respectively, for the discussion of the above subject. I have made inquiries in various quarters, and do not know of a single professional accountant having been invited to attend upon the discussion of questions of such vital importance to every member of the profession, and it is, therefore, self-evident that the wholesale houses are seeking to legislate upon the point with an ex-parte knowledge, viz. the result in the shape of dividends, without taking the labour of realisation into account. Surely, this is not in accordance with the sound common sense for which the wholesale warehousemen are, as a rule, remarkable. What would they think of the retail traders meeting and passing a resolution determining the price and terms upon which they would purchase goods, ignoring the cost of production and the terms of credit to the wholesale trade; or of retail consumers at a public meeting pledging themselves not to take less than twelve months' credit, and only to pay such prices as suited their fancy? They would naturally brand such a step as preposterous; and yet they, by their present action, are practically seeking to effect a like object. I have to take objection also to the principle of drawing a hard and fast line. No two estates entail an equal proportion of trouble. One is wound-up without difficulty, the next is only got in by hard fighting. An estate realising £200 (or less) is often more troublesome than one of £20,000 (when you can find one; like the hare, such estates want catching first, and are not over numerous). In the proposed scale liabilities are entirely ignored; whereas every practical accountant can show that no scale of remuneration which ignores the liabilities, (other than one by time) can be equitable.

What inducement is held out to an accountant to upset fraudulent or excessive claims? What inducement is held out to an accountant to do his best? Look again at the scale. A scale of 10 per cent. on the first £200 realised, descending gradually to 5 per cent. over £1,000 and up to £1,500, and reaching 4 per cent. only on amounts over £3,000. Why, it is comparatively little more than an auctioneer's scale, and even lower than the average of 5 per cent. for rent collections. And for this an accountant is to investigate claims, settle them equitably, often with the aid (?) of unreliable books, or no books at all, and perhaps an obstructive debtor acting in collusion,—to realise the estate possibly with an infinite amount of trouble and expense,—and all this independent of conferences and interviews with inspectors, creditors, and others interested in the estate. The remuneration proposed might be barely fair under a good system of laws, (such as those which prevail in France or Germany) with good estates, capable of easy realisation; but, I assert that under our existing rotten laws, in many instances the proposed scale would not recoup the trustee his outlay for salaries and office expenses.

The most startling feature in the movement is the formation of the committee. Among the members appear some names which stand high in reputation for integrity and liberality; they must have acted without consideration. Surely they will agree that "sauce for the goose should be sauce for the gander." That they do not work for nothing, is evident by the colossal fortunes many of them are known to possess, and many of those fortunes have been acquired within the last 20 years.

A few accountants have made large fortunes, but a few only. Profit for profit, I defy the warehousemen to prove that our average leads to such results as their trading shows. True it is that we do not buy and sell goods; but we do have to acquire experience, and the wear and tear of our profession, (who, for the benefit of warehousemen, are often called upon to work against time and at high pressure), not infrequently undermines the health and sometimes even the minds of one of the hardest working set of men of the day. By all means let us meet as a body and discuss the question, not hostilely towards the "Warehousemen's Committee," but in order that we may among ourselves arrive at some principle of remuneration fair and equitable to all concerned.

On the terms proposed by the committee, I defy any accountant to honestly do his best for the creditors without a loss to himself. He may by luck make one estate pay a profit, but the average would, I am convinced, compel him to call his own creditors together.

Yours faithfully,

O.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir—Your persistent efforts to rouse the attention of accountants to the fatal consequences of their division of counsel, to their want of cohesion, and their apparent incapacity of combination, could scarcely have had a more effective corroboration than that which is furnished by the circular which I, for one, cannot treat as anything else than insolent, recently issued by a sort of association of warehousemen and other wholesale tradesmen, who, as far as I can judge, are a great deal more solicitous to make it impossible for an honourable profession to earn a fair and sufficient remuneration for honest services rendered to them, than to use common circumspection in selection of customers to whom they may safely extend the necessary confidence, and credit of trade. Can it be possible that the circular is the outgrowth of a deliberate calculation of a definite per centage of loss upon estimated bad debts, that is, a calculated speculation in insolvency, of which an item in the account is the fee of the honest man who is called in to reduce this contemplated loss to the lowest possible figure? This seems to me remarkable in the position taken by these persons, what limit do these men impose upon the contemplated profits of their own trade? Let us consider a moment. Suppose the body of accountants should take it into its head that there is a violent taint of usury in the trade of these people and should summon a public meeting at Exeter Hall to consider the scale of prices of shirtings and stockings, supposed to constitute in their excessive prices a tax unjustifiable (at least ethically unjustifiable), upon, (together with the rest of the community), the said accountants; and suppose further that in their indignation at the hunger of these men for inordinate profits the accountants should draw up a scale of prices for shirtings, stockings, and hosiery, and should thereupon issue a circular to all the gentlemen engaged in these trades, calling upon them to agree in writing to serve the accountants, together with the rest of the world perhaps, with all these articles at the prices fixed by the accountants. What opinion would sensible men entertain of the economic folly of the accountants, and of their preposterous presumption? Suppose the accountants should fix the tariff of prices at such rates that the trade of the warehouseman could not be carried on under its conditions except at a serious loss, what would happen to the accountants? Certainly the ordinary world of sensible people would look upon them as something approaching to idiots, for, besides the palpable economic fallacy of an attempt, which the very Legislature itself would shrink from making, to prescribe to any occupation the limits of its profits, it is quite plain that the warehousemen must compensate themselves for this loss by cheapening the process of their wares, and the only real effect of such a ridiculous attempt by the accountants would be that they would get mildewed shirtings, shoddy woollens, and gauzey stockings. And what possibly can these gentlemen expect from their little commotion but the adhesion of a few outlying accountants whose opinions would not be worth the ink with which they were written. It is plain that these gentlemen derive their only strength (if they have any at all) from combination, and this consideration should be dwelt upon, and dwelt upon very earnestly, by accountants.

For the outsiders we have spoken of this can be a matter of no consequence at all, but to the bulk of the profession it is a matter of the very greatest consequence, that, by the isolation of its members, and the absence of any joint action, they are powerless even for the maintenance of a position so economically clear and just as that which is assailed by this stupid stipulation by a little coterie of warehousemen. A certain combination has been effected by the efforts of the Society of Accountants in England, and everything may be anticipated by the extension of the operations of that useful Society.

The Society of Accountants in England have called a meeting to consider this circular, and would earnestly press upon the members of the profession that they should, though it may be at some inconvenience to themselves, make a point of attending it.—Yours truly,

CYNIC.

"TOUTING IN LIQUIDATION PROCEEDINGS."

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—Enclosed I send you a paragraph extracted from the Globe of the 22nd instant, which bears the above heading. If I am correctly informed, the parties making the application to the learned registrar are the debtor's solicitors, upon whose application the receiver and manager was appointed. It is a somewhat startling theory, to seek to prevent creditors from combining for the protection of their interests. As it is, the law is far too much in favour of the debtor; and, had the registrar entertained the application, the difficulties in the way of enforcing reasonable arrangements would have been materially increased. "Touting" is undoubtedly objectionable; but how is it under the present state of the law to be avoided? It may have been abused, but in the majority of instances it has (I say it emphatically) done something to reduce the power of the liquidating debtor to have it all his own way. A remedy for touting could be found; namely, by making it etiquette for all respectable lawyers and accountants not to interfere with the professional men who are first called in, and by so altering the law as to make it practically and not theoretically penal for a debtor to make false statements, and rendering it impossible to effect an arrangement outside of bankruptcy, unless the deficiency is substantiated by a professional accountant, and holding the latter personally responsible for the truth of his report. Our status must, however, first be legally recognised in order that we may be protected from "outsiders."

Yours truly,
A PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT.

London, April 23, 1875.

[The matter referred to is an application in the case of im Thurn and Co., reported in the last issue of The Accountant.—ED.]

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,--As one of the objects which public accountants have in view in auditing and investigating the books and accounts of public companies, charitable societies, and mercantile firms is the detection of financial frauds perpetrated by clerks and other servants and officials, I think it would greatly add to the value of the Accountant, as an organ of the profession, if it could be made to comprise a record of all cases of fraud of this nature brought before the criminal courts, giving as far as possible an explanation of the modes in which the frauds were effected, and of the manner in which such frauds were attempted to be concealed from the observation of those interested in their early discovery. A history of the frauds perpetrated by Robson, Redpath, Pullinger, Higgs, &c., would not be without interest to the younger members of the profession.

I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
S. D. N.

[We shall be glad to comply with the wish expressed by our correspondent so far as considerations of space will allow, and trust that subscribers will assist by giving information in regard to any cases of the kind which may come under their notice.—ED.]

Our attention has been drawn to certain strictures in regard to an extract from an Insurance paper published in our last issue. The matter referred to was simply given as a quotation, without any endorsement on our part of the views therein expressed; and we conceive it to be the duty of a representative organ to make known to its subscribers any fair and competent criticism, unfavourable as well as favourable, upon subjects with which it is specially connected. If commendation and praise alone were to be admitted, and accountants were to shut eyes and ears against all comment from an adverse point of view, in what a fool's paradise would the profession soon find itself!

WINDING UP.—The West of England Stud Company (Limited) has been ordered to be wound up under the supervision of the Court of Chancery, and Mr. Henry Brown has been appointed liquidator.—A petition for winding-up the Petersburg and Viborg Gas Company (Limited) has been presented to the Court of Chancery.—An order has been made for the winding up of the Snowdon Slate Quarries Company (Limited), to be continued under the supervision of the Court.

LOVELL V. THE ACCIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY.—This was an action by the representatives of a farmer in Lincolnshire, who was killed while walking on the line of the North-Western Railway. The policy of assurance contained an exception of accidents occurring under circumstances of obvious danger, and the question was whether the circumstances were such as to come within the exception. The unfortunate deceased was walking along the line of the railway at night, which, it appeared, was usual in that district, as it saved time, when he was knocked down by a train or something projecting from it and thrown on the line, where his feet were cut off and he was killed. The case for the plaintiff was that from the evidence as to the precise circumstances it was to be inferred that the man was walking out of danger and had been knocked down by something projecting improperly from the train, and that, therefore, it was a not a case of "obvious danger." The company contended that it was, and relied on the exception. The Lord Chief Justice summed up in favour of the company's view; but the jury found for the plaintiff, being, they said, of opinion that the man was not walking under circumstances of "obvious danger." The Lord Chief Justice, however, stayed execution, and the Court had granted a rule nisi for a new trial, which was now argued. Mr. Metcalfe, Q.C., and Mr. Lloyd were for the plaintiff; Mr. Philbrick, Q.C., was for the company. After hearing the counsel for the plaintiff, without calling on the counsel for the company, the Court set aside the verdict, and sent the case to a new trial.

WHITAKER V. RHODES.—Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. Ambrose, Q.C. (instructed by Mr. Jubb, Halifax), appeared for Mr. Frederick Whitaker, wool merchant, Halifax, the appellant, and Mr. Finlay Knight (instructed by Messrs. Holroyde and Smith, Halifax) for Mr. C. T. Rhodes, Accountant, Halifax, trustee appointed under John Shackleton's bankruptcy, the respondent. This was an appeal by Mr. Whitaker against the decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, on the 15th day of February last, discharging an order of Mr. Sergeant Tindal Atkinson, the late judge of the Halifax County Court, ordering the trustee under the bankruptcy to deliver up to Mr. Whitaker three sheets of wool and three bales of wool, sold by him to the bankrupt on December 5th, 1874, after the presentation of the petition on December 2nd, upon which he was adjudged bankrupt, and delivered on the 12th December, two days prior to the adjudication (December 14th). The County Court Judge decided that the adjudication related back to the act of bankruptcy, and that it was a fraud on Mr. Whitaker for the bankrupt to buy the wool knowing the position he was in, and therefore there was no binding contract. The Chief Judge, in reversing the decision, stated that although it was a hard case, yet the order must be discharged, as fraud in such a case must be proved and not assumed, and there was nothing to show that the bankrupt did not intend to pay for the wool. After hearing the counsel for the appellant, and without calling upon the respondent's counsel, the Lords Justices upheld the Chief Judge's decision, and dismissed the appeal with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

April 23.

Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. MALINS.

IN RE GREAT NATIONAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY.—This was a petition by a firm of stationers and printers in St. Mary-axe, to wind up the Great National Fire Insurance Company, on the ground that they could not obtain payment of a sum of £57 14s. 6d., which was due to them for printing work done for the company. It appeared that the company was formed in October last, with a capital of £5,000,000 in preferred and deferred shares, and having, as the prospectus stated, for its president and vice-presidents, two noblemen, a colonial bishop, a foreign count, two honourables, and a baronet, and for the chairman of its London and provincial directors a foreign prince. The prospectus also stated that until 200,000 of the preferred share capital had been subscribed, no insurances would be effected; that £175,000 of this amount had already been applied for, and that the company had some special and important features, and had originated an entirely new plan of insurance. The petition stated that some small number of shares had been issued, but that many of the persons whose names had been affixed to the prospectus as vice-presidents and directors of the company had never agreed to accept office, and had taken steps to have their names removed; that the petitioners, on inquiring at the head office of the company in Queen Victoria-street, were informed that the secretary and auditors of the company had resigned, and that the managing director, who had given the order for the printing, had absconded. It was also stated that the company had about £20 at their bankers, that there were about 34 shareholders, and that the petitioners had unsuccessfully applied to some of the directors for payment. Mr. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Bund appeared for the petitioners; the company did not appear. The Vice-Chancellor made the order, but with some reluctance, as it would necessitate the formation of a list of contributories, and all to provide for so small a debt as £57.

IN RE STAR OF NEVADA SILVER MINING COMPANY.—This was a petition by Messrs. Cowdy and Moody, the former being a director and the holder of 230, and the latter being the holder of 135, fully paid-up shares in the company, to have the company wound-up upon the ground that it had ceased to carry on its business for more than a year—i. e. since March, 1873. It appeared that the company was registered in July, 1871, with a nominal capital of £50,000, in 25,000 shares of £2 each, in order to purchase a silver mine at Austen, in Nevada, called "The Star of Nevada Tunnel," which the prospectus represented as (if properly worked) likely in 12 months to return the shareholders not less than £25,000 per annum, and in two years double or treble that amount. Mr. E. C. Willis appeared for the petitioners; Mr. Solomon, for certain shareholders, supported the petition. The company did not appear; and the Vice-Chancellor made an order for a compulsory winding-up.

April 24.

IN RE THE BANGOR AND PORT MADOC SLATE AND SLATE SLAB COMPANY.—This company, in April, 1870, passed a resolution for a voluntary winding-up, which was afterwards continued under the supervision of the Court, in pursuance of an order obtained in the month of July following. After paying all the debts of the company, the liquidators had in their hands a sum of £4,678 surplus assets, and the question arose whether this sum ought to be distributed among the preference shareholders, to the exclusion of the ordinary shareholders, or whether the latter were entitled to participate with the former in the distribution of the fund. The company was formed in February, 1857, with a capital of £105,000, and by one of its articles of association it was provided that the company, in general meeting, might increase its capital to such amount and upon such terms, and either with or without special privileges or preferences to the holders of the shares in such increased capital, as it might from time to time deem expedient, and the capital should be increased accordingly. Such increased capital was to be raised by the issue of new shares of such amount as the company in general meeting might determine, and should be subject to the several provisions contained in the articles in the same manner as if it had been part of the original capital. At an extraordinary general meeting, held on the 21st April, 1863, a resolution was passed that further capital of £5,250 should be raised by the issue of a like number of preference shares of £1 each, entitled to a preferential interest of 10 per cent. per annum, which were to be repaid with a bonus of 25 per cent. in manner therein specified, and such payment of interest, repayment, and bonus was to be made before any interest or other money was payable to the original shareholders of the company, and at such times as must be determined by the resolution of a general meeting called for that purpose, but at which only the holders of original shares were to have votes. The preference capital was raised in accordance with these resolutions, and the question mentioned above now came on for argument upon an adjourned summons taken out in the winding-up. Mr. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Key, on behalf of the preference shareholders, claimed the whole surplus. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Loughborough, for the ordinary shareholders, while admitting that the preference shareholders were entitled to a preferential dividend, contended that under the articles of association the new capital was to be subject to the same provisions as if it had been part of the original capital, and that, therefore, as regarded the right to the receipt of capital sums, all the shareholders were on a footing of equality. Mr. J. Pearson, Q.C., appeared for certain trustees; Mr. Reginald Hughes for the liquidators. The Vice-Chancellor said that there could be no doubt that the articles of association gave power to the company to raise the new capital upon such terms as they might think fit, and the only question was whether, by the terms of the resolution, the holders of the new capital were intended to have priority in respect of capital. He was clearly of opinion that, under the resolution which had been passed, the preference shareholders who held the new capital were entitled to have the surplus in winding-up divided between them, in priority to the original shareholders in the company.

M'KEWAN V. SANDERSON. This was a suit instituted by the public officer of the London and County Bank to enforce against the defendant, George Sanderson, a certain guarantee given by him to the bank under the following circumstances:—In May, 1864, James Sanderson, the defendant's brother, a licensed victualler and bill discounter, opened an account with the bank at their Holborn Branch, and in the usual course of business the bank discounted for him and placed to his credit the proceeds of discount of various bills of exchange of which some were accepted and others drawn and endorsed by him. In the month of August, 1870. James Sanderson owed the bank on such account the sum of £6,800, against which they held acceptances which they had discounted for him. Being then in pecuniary difficulties, he, in July, 1870, filed a petition for liquidation, and on the 27th of August a first meeting of his creditors was held, at which it was resolved that a composition should be accepted of 2s. in the pound. The bank having threatened to oppose this resolution at a second meeting, George Sanderson gave the bank a written guarantee, dated September 7th, 1870, undertaking that the ultimate loss to the bank upon James Sanderson's acceptances which they held, amounting to £6,896, should not amount to more than £2,000, and that he (George Sanderson) would pay to the bank such sum as should be due to them in respect of the acceptances beyond £2,000. The bank thereupon withdrew their opposition to the resolution, and at the second meeting of the creditors held on September 7th following, the resolution was confirmed. The bank eventually realised the bills in their possession, and reduced the debt to £4,867, and claimed that sum, less the £2,000, as the amount due to them from George Sanderson on his guarantee. He, however, refused to to pay the sum, alleging that the guarantee constituted a fraudulent preference in favour of the bank over James Sanderson's other creditors, and was, therefore, void. The object of the bill was, therefore, to compel George Sanderson to make good the loss on the bills, less £2,000. Mr. Waller, Q.C., and Mr. Chubb appeared for the bank; Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Cottrell for the defendant, George Sanderson, were not called upon. The Vice-Chancellor said the right of every creditor in bankruptcy holding securities was to come in and prove for the deficiency remaining in respect of his debt, after he had realized his securities. If, therefore, the arrangement in question with George Sanderson had not been made, the bank would clearly have had the right of standing as creditors for the £4,867, less the £2,000 which they had agreed to take as a loss—that is, £2,867. Now, in considering the question, he must confess he did not admire the conduct of George Sanderson in taking advantage of the technical point as to fraudulent preference, in order to get out of his guarantee. It was, however, perfectly well settled, both in law and in equity, that in case of a bankruptcy, insolvency, or composition with creditors, it was the duty of all the creditors taking part in the proceedings to stand share and share alike on an equality with each other in carrying out a division of the assets of the debtor; and that if one creditor, unknown to the others, entered into any arrangement with the debtor by which that creditor obtained any advantage whatever over the other creditors, that constituted a fraudulent preference, and the Court would order the creditor so obtaining the advantage to repay any moneys thereby obtained by him. He hoped this case would prove a lesson to bankers that, in the case of the bankruptcy of a customer, it was their duty not to attempt to secure any private advantage for themselves, but to take their stand with the other creditors. All the Courts, as appeared from the authorities, were agreed that if one creditor entered into any arrangement whatever with the debtor with the view of obtaining an advantage over the other creditors, and that arrangement was not communicated to them, whether that arrangement might be merely to stay away from a meeting of the creditors, or whatever it might be, that arrangement amounted to a corrupt bargain, and the Court would compel the creditor to restore what he had obtained. Now, the result of the present transaction was that while the other creditors would have only 2s. in the pound, the bank would get between 11s. and 12s. in the pound. The bank were, in fact, bought off, and they did not attend the second meeting, at which they ought to have attended and co-operated with the other creditors in promoting an equality for all. It was clear they would have attended the meeting had they not received money as an inducement to stay away. This guarantee was opposed to all principles of public policy, and could not be sustained. He was sorry the bank had committed so great an error, but they they would no doubt know better in future. Under the circumstances, therefore, the bill must be dismissed.

The Newcastle Chymical Works Company (Limited) held two meetings the other day to consider the state of affairs, and to arrange about the payment of dividend. Owing to the enormous rise in the value of coals, the company had made no profit last year; but, under the deed by which the business had been sold to the company, Mr. Christian Allhusen, whose business it had been before, guaranteed 10 per cent. dividend on the paid-up capital. At the extraordinary general meeting, therefore, a resolution was passed sanctioning that form of payment, on the understanding that, should the company again prosper, Mr. Allhusen would be recouped his £42,000 without interest, but that if it did not, then he would have no claim for anything. This resolution has to be sanctioned next month, and then the dividend will be paid.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

IN RE C. E. ALFORTH.—This was another heavy failure. The debtor, Charles Edward Alforth, described as a timber merchant, of 17 Gracechurch-street, has filed a petition for liquidation. His debts are stated at £100,000, with assets, consisting of stock-in-trade, book debts, mortgages on property at Riga, railway bonds and shares, furniture, and a balance at bankers, amounting to about £50,000 in the aggregate. The case was now mentioned to the Court by Mr. Munns, and upon his application, his Honour appointed Mr. R. Fletcher, accountant, Moorgate-street, receiver and manager of the estate.

EX PARTE KING, RE PALETHORPE.—This was an appeal from the Liverpool County Court, and involved a nice question as to the effect of proof by a secured creditor. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Potter were counsel for the appellant; Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. W. R. Kennedy for the respondent. In October, 1868, the debtor being indebted to Mr. King in the sum of £631, assigned to him a policy of assurance effected upon the debtor's life in the Economic Life Assurance Society, dated June, 1868, for £1,200 as security for the amount due and the premiums for keeping up the policy. Notice of the assignment was given to the assurance society. In 1874, the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, under which a trustee was appointed and a resolution registered to liquidate by arrangement, and the debtor's discharge granted, but no resolution was passed for the close of the liquidation. In October, 1874, a proof was presented by King for £1,209, stating that he held as security the policy in question, which he valued at £200, and the trustee being satisfied with the estimate of the value admitted the proof. On the 5th of November, 1874, the debtor died, and King had since received the amount of the policy. The trustee under the liquidation claimed to be entitled to the sum received by King over and above the estimated value of his security, and King, on the other hand, claimed to be entitled to retain the money for his own benefit. It was admitted on both sides that the proceeds of the policy were insufficient to satisfy the whole amount due to King, he having paid the premiums upon the policy, except one, which became due in 1869. The County Court Judge decided that the trustee under the liquidation was entitled to the surplus of the money after deducting the £200, being King's estimate of the value of the policy. King appealed. The Chief Judge said it was the first time this question—a difficult one—had arisen for decision. No doubt this was a hard case upon the appellant, but that could not affect the point, which must be decided according to the terms of the statute and the rules. His Lordship referred to the various sections of the Act, and to the rules bearing upon the subject, and said that the creditor had the option of proving his debt and of estimating the value of his security. If he did so and the security realised more than the estimate, the surplus must be administered for the benefit of the creditors generally. The order of the learned Judge was, therefore, right, and the appeal must be dismissed.

IN RE WILLIAM M'ARTHUR.—The debtor is an iron merchant carrying on business at 122 Cannon-street, City, the Anchor-wharf, East Greenwich, and Clyde-wharf, Millwall. He formerly traded as an iron founder, under the style of the Caledonian Iron Foundry Company, at Somerset-buildings, Upper Thames-street. The liabilities, under a liquidation petition, are returned at £268,881, but this amount includes liabilities on bills receivable, many, if not all, of which will be paid by third persons; of the value of the assets no estimate can yet be formed. Upon the application of the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors for £70,560, the Court appointed Mr. John Weise (of the firm of Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co.) receiver of the property, and granted an interim injunction to restrain actions.

IN RE F. F. WYMAN.—The debtor, Frederick Frank Wyman, publisher, stationer, general agent, and merchant, of St. Bride's-chambers, Ludgate-circus, and Calcutta, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities estimated at £23,433, and assets, consisting of cash in hand, book debts, and other property, £30,000, the greater portion being in India. The matter was mentioned to the Court this morning by Mr. F. Knight, on behalf of a creditor for £6,000, upon an application for the appointment of Mr. F. H. Collison, accountant, as receiver. His Honour asked whether notice of the application had been given to the debtor, and receiving a reply in the negative, said it would be contrary to the practice of the Court to appoint a receiver without such notice. Subject, however, to the debtor's consent being obtained, the order would be granted.

IN RE ISIDORE LEVEAUX.—The bankrupt in this case is described as of 2 Carlton-road, Maida-vale, wine merchant. This was the first meeting of creditors.—Upon the application of Messrs. Hughes and Son the Court had recently appointed Mr. T. H. Wintle, public accountant (Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, and Co.), receiver to the estate.—A trustee was now chosen to act with a committee of inspection.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE.)

IN RE GODFREY BAUM.—This was a first sitting. The bankrupt was a banker and money changer, of 46 Regent-street, and 65 Talbot-road, Bayswater. He had filed a petition for liquidation, but the proceedings fell to the ground and adjudication followed. His debts are now returned at £9,807, and assets £670. Several proofs were now admitted, and a resolution passed appointing a trustee and committee of inspection, Mr. A. H. Miller being the solicitor to the proceedings.

UNITED STATES FINANCES.—The Treasury Department of the United States Government is preparing, as a contribution to the Centennial Exhibition, a volume exhibiting the financial transactions of the Government in the past 100 years. The work, it is said, will show the causes which led to borrowing money at various times, and a sketch will be given of debates in Congress upon such subjects. The design is to present a complete financial history of the Government during the first century of independence.

SMART.—At the Preston County Court, some extraordinary revelations were made in the matter of the bankruptcy of Thomas George Hooton, ironmonger, lately carrying on business in Church-street, Preston. It was alleged at the meeting of creditors held last month, that the shop had been broken into, and a cash-box containing about £800 stolen therefrom. —Berrow's Worcester Journal.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 23.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (1873) AMENDMENT.—On the motion for going into Committee on this Bill, after an explanation from Lord Granville in reference to some observations made by the Lord Chancellor on the occasion when the Bill was last under consideration, Lord Selborne declared that he should say "Non-content" to the Second Clause of the Bill, which suspended the operation of the Clauses of the Judicature Act of 1873 constituting a Supreme Court of Appeal, and at another opportunity he would enter fully into his reasons for regretting the proposed change with regard to the Appellate Jurisdiction. On Clause 4, Lord Coleridge objected to the proposal to remove from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which, as the Lord Chancellor had stated, performed its work satisfactorily, any of the paid members for the purpose of placing them on the Intermediate Court of Appeal. The Lord Chancellor anticipated that the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council would, under the arrangements proposed, perform its work as satisfactorily as before. The Intermediate Court of Appeal was strongly composed, and was similar in its constitution to the Supreme Court of Appeal of the Bill of 1873, though curtailed in the number of its members, for it was not intended to prejudge the decision of Parliament next year on the question of the Final Court of Appeal. Lord Selborne said, as the Clause was now stated to be only provisional, he should not take upon himself the responsibility of objecting to it. The Clause was agreed to, and with respect to Clause 26, relating to the salaries and officers of the Courts of Lancaster and Durham, the Lord Chancellor, on an appeal from Lord Winmarleigh, said he would reconsider whether the change there proposed should be made. The Bill then passed through Committee.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, APRIL 26.

NATIONAL DEBT.—In Committee of the whole House, the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved that it was expedient to amend the Acts relating to the National Debt by making provision for the further reduction of the Debt. The Bill he proposed to introduce was mainly for the purpose which he described in his financial statement—namely, to appropriate a fixed sum yearly towards the reduction of the Debt. There would, however, be another provision which he had not yet mentioned. It was in conformity with a recommendation of the Public Accounts Committee, which sat some years ago, and had reference to the existing Sinking Fund. The payments in connexion with this fund were at present made quarterly, and were of a very irregular character, and what he proposed was that the ascertained surplus upon any one year should be paid over in one sum in the course of the year following. The resolution was agreed to.

THE COURTS OF LAW IN SCOTLAND.—Dr. Playfair asked the Lord Advocate whether the Government intended to bring in a Bill, indicated by the answer his Lordship gave on the 16th of July last, to give effect to many of the recommendations of the Royal Commission, including an increase in the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Courts. The Lord Advocate.—I do not think my right hon. friend quite accurately describes the answer which I gave to him on the 16th July last. On referring to the usual source of information, I see I stated that "it is intended to give effect to many of the recommendations of the Royal Commission next Session, and the matter of the increase of the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Courts will be submitted for consideration." I did not then indicate, as I had no authority to do so, that the Government would during this Session bring in a Bill providing for an increase in the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Courts in Scotland. At the same time, it is proper I should say that I have submitted for the consideration of the Government many of the recommendations of the Royal Commission, including those relating to the increase of the salaries of the Judges of the Supreme Courts; but I have not yet received authority to propose to Parliament any legislation, except upon the matters dealt with in the two Bills relating to the Sheriff and other inferior Courts in Scotland which were read a first time on Friday last.

HOUSE OF LORDS, APRIL 29.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (1873) AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.—Lord Selborne, on the report of the Amendments to the Judicature Bill, reviewed the provisions with regard to Appeals of the Act of 1873, which the present Bill suspended, and said that the more he considered the matter the more he was convinced that the Court of Appeal constituted by the Act of 1873 would have been a strong Court, and was preferable to the one proposed to be formed by the present Bill. It was a point of great importance, he observed, to give strength to the Court which dealt with the first Appeals, which formed the great mass of Appeals, and it was by the Courts below that the law was built up. At the same time, the Act of 1873 provided for the re-hearing of causes with the leave of the Court; and there could be no doubt that in all proper cases such leave would have been granted. The Act of 1873 would have tended to discourage frivolous Appeals; but he had great misgivings as to the sufficient power of the Court of Appeal proposed to be established by the present Bill to do the work which it would have to perform. He would not say much as to what was eventually to be the Final Court of Appeal, as the Lord Chancellor had described the proposal made on that point as only provisional, but he saw no reason why the Act of 1873 should not have had a fair trial. Whatever the future Final Court of Appeal might be, it certainly would not be the House of Lords, but a Court constituted by Act of Parliament. He had thought it best to refer to this subject because he considered it one of great importance, and because he thought that the attention of the country should be directed to it. Lord Penzance contended that the machinery of the Act of 1873 did not establish an efficient second Appeal; but Lord Hatherley remarked that the Act of 1873 proposed that there should be a re-hearing in the event of the Court being of opinion that there ought to be a re-hearing; while Lord Redesdale protested against the assumption that an improvement could not be made in the House of Lords for the purpose of hearing Appeals. The Lord Chancellor said that as the Government desired to reserve till next Session the question what should be the Final Court of Appeal, he would not enter on that point upon the present occasion. With regard to the Court proposed to be constituted by the present Bill, he considered that it would be sufficiently strong for the important duties it would have to perform. The Report of the Amendments was then agreed to.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

APRIL 24.

(Before Mr. PERRONET THOMPSON.)

IN RE WINSTANLEY AND FORMBY.—This was a motion of a complicated character. Messrs. Winstanley and Formby, ironfounders and shipsmiths, became bankrupts in 1871, and passed their public examination, but obtained no orders of discharge, nor was their bankruptcy closed. Shortly afterwards Formby recommenced business as a ship's ironfounder, and was subsequently joined in the business by two other persons, and they continued as partners up to the end of 1873, when there was a dissolution, the last two partners retiring, leaving Formby with the stock and business conditionally on his discharging the partnership debts. Formby carried on the business up to February last, when he failed, and presented a petition for liquidation, his assets being about £300, and consisting in part of property which belonged to the partnership. Mr. Bolland was appointed receiver, but on taking possession he found the property was claimed by Mr. Vine, the trustee under the former bankruptcy of Winstanley and Formby. The right of the latter also was subsequently disputed by the two partners who had retired, on the ground that the property was primarily liable to the discharge of the partnership debts, and in order to enforce their rights they obtained an injunction in Chancery to restrain Mr. Vine from dealing with the property. The present motion on behalf of Mr. Vine was to restrain the Chancery proceedings, and for a declaration of the court that the property in dispute vested in him as the trustee under the old bankruptcy. Mr. Walton, instructed by Mr. Etty, appeared for Mr. Vine, Mr. Kennedy, instructed by Messrs. Harvey and Co., for the late partners of Formby, and Mr. T. Lupton for Mr. Bolland. His Honour, after hearing the opening statement of Mr. Walton, expressed his opinion that there was no case made out for his interference with the proceedings of the Court of Chancery, and therefore the motion must be dismissed.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. J. G. B. Mawson, Public Accountant, of 8 Duncan-street, Birkenhead, has been appointed Receiver and Manager in the estate of Ann Roberts, Price-street, Birkenhead.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. Alfred A. Broad, (Broads, Paterson, and May), official liquidator of the Metropolitan Counties Co-operative Coal Company (Limited)

Vice-Chancellor, Sir Richard Malins, has made an order appointing Mr. Frederick Whinney (Harding, Whinney and Co., of 8 Old Jewry) the provisional official liquidator of the Cornish Consolidated Iron Mines Corporation (Limited).

Mr. Frederick William Sperring, of 26 Philpot-lane, Fenchurch-street, Public Accountant, has been appointed Liquidator of the Suburban and Metropolitan Co-operative Society, Limited.

Mr. Frederick William Sperring has been appointed Trustee of the Estate in Bankruptcy of Thomas Wright Fenwick, of Stamford, chemist and druggist.

Mr. Frederick William Sperring has been appointed Receiver in Liquidation of the Estate of Lewis Barrett West, St. Mary Grove Park, Chiswick.

The Master of the Rolls has made an order appointing Mr. James Waddell the provisional official liquidator of the Universal Disinfector Company (Limited).

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

A. WHITE (MINCING LANE).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Alfred White, lately partner in the firm of Henry White and Co., of 17 Mincing-lane held on Friday, the statement of affairs showed liabilities £10,900, and assets £4,097,

HANSON PICKLES AND CO., (HALIFAX).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Hanson Pickles and Co., Spinners and Manufacturers, Halifax, was held at the County Court on Monday, the Registrar of the Court presiding. The bankrupts presented a statement of affairs (which had been prepared by Mr. J. J. Learoyd) which showed the liabilities to unsecured creditors to be £4,452 6s. 9d.; to creditors partly secured £29, 6s. 4d.; and to creditors for rent, rates, &c., £21, total £4,502 13s. 1d. The assets, consisting of stock and machinery at Westgrove Mill and Bailey Hall Works, Halifax, valued at £1,683 11s. 8d.; book debts estimated to produce £550; cash in hand £2 16s. 7d., and surplus from secured creditors £11 9s. 5d., total £2,247, 17s. 8d. Mr. C. T. Rhodes and Mr. Learoyd, Accountants, Halifax, were appointed joint trustees, with a Committee of inspection. Mr. Godfrey Rhodes, of Halifax, is the solicitor acting in the bankruptcy. The circumstances attending this bankruptcy are somewhat peculiar. The firm consists of six partners, viz., William Pickles, Thomas Hanson, John Jagger, James Helliwell, Levi Bottomley, and Samuel Woodhead. The partnership was dissolved in February—William Pickles continuing the Spinning department and Messrs. Hanson, Jagger, Helliwell, and Bottomley the Weaving, whilst Woodhead retired altogether. In March William Pickles filed a separate petition for liquidation of the partnership debts. In a few days this was followed by a second petition by Hanson, Jagger, Helliwell, and Bottomley, through two solicitors, and eventually, seeing that he was saddled with all the partnership liabilities, although not then a member of the firm, Woodhead followed suit. In this state of things—the largest creditor filed a bankruptcy petition against the whole six, on the hearing of which, all the debtors disputed the act of bankruptcy and Woodhead the actual trading. Mr. Registrar Rankin, however, after hearing Mr. Jordan, Barrister, of Manchester, on behalf of the petitioner, adjudged them all bankrupts, but stayed proceedings until the meetings under the various petitions—at none of which of course were any resolutions passed, and the affairs are now being wound up in bankruptcy.

JOHN LONGTON & Co. (LIVERPOOL).—At a meeting of the creditors of John Longton and Co., of 11 Brunswick-buildings, Brunswick-street, Liverpool, shipowners, the liabilities were stated to be £3,061, and assets £295. A composition of 1s. 6d. in the pound was accepted, and Mr. H. Bolland was appointed trustee to pay the same.

J. WHITFIELD (LIVERPOOL).—At a meeting of the creditors of John Whitfield, of 9 Boundary-place, Collingwood-street, Liverpool, cart-owner, the liabilities were stated to be £2,341; assets, £168. Mr. H. Bolland was appointed receiver upon the application of Mr. W. Lowe, solicitor.

H. CUMMINS (LIVERPOOL).—At a meeting of the creditors of Henry Cummins, of 20 Exchange-street East, Liverpool, stock and share broker, the liabilities were stated to be £13,600. Mr. H. Bolland was appointed receiver upon the application of Messrs. Barrell and Rodway, solicitors.

D. BYRNE (LIVERPOOL).—At a meeting of the creditors of Dennis Byrne, of 64 Regent-road, and 37 Bath-street, Liverpool, boot and shoe manufacturer and dealer, the liabilities were stated to be £1,991; assets, £196. Liquidation was resolved upon, and Mr. H. Bolland appointed trustee.

J. GUEDALLA & Co. (MANCHESTER).—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Jacob Guedalla and Co., merchants, of Manchester, held on Tuesday, the liabilities were stated at £16,400, including £11,267 in connection with accommodation bills, against assets representing only £541. There is, however, a surplus on the separate estates of the debtors. It was decided to liquidate the estate by arrangement.

C. WHITTLE (LIVERPOOL).—At a meeting of the creditors of Charles Whittle, of Thatto-heath, St. Helens, licensed victualler, the liabilities were stated to be £1,479; assets, £151. Liquidation was resolved upon, and Mr. H. Bolland appointed trustee.

BUCKNALL, SON & Co. (LIVERPOOL).—At a meeting of the creditors of Bucknall, Son and Co., of 2 William-street, Liverpool, brokers and agents, the liabilities were stated to be £1,807; assets, £121. Liquidation was resolved upon, and Mr. H. Bolland was appointed trustee.

T. M. FERMBOUGH (TRANMERE).—At a meeting of the creditors of Thomas Major Fermbough, of the Tranmere Castle Hotel, Tranmere, hotel-keeper, the liabilities was stated to be £2,015; assets, £37. Liquidation was resolved upon, and Mr. H. Bolland, of Liverpool, was appointed trustee.

S. DEMPSEY (MANCHESTER).—The statutory meeting of the creditors of James Samuel Dempsey, of Whittles'-croft, Ducie-street, Manchester, shirt and underclothing manufacturer, was held on Tuesday, the liabilities were stated to be £1,249, and the assets, £343. Mr. Addleshaw, solicitor, appeared for the principal creditors, and Mr. Edgar for the debtor. The meeting resolved that the estate should be wound-up in Liquidation, that David Smith, Accountant, be the trustee with a committee of inspection, and that Messrs. Boote and Edgar be entrusted with the registration of the resolutions.

W. T. HENLEY (LONDON).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. William Thomas Henley, telegraph engineer, who recently suspended payment, was held on Tuesday, when the statement of affairs presented showed that the total unsecured debts amounted to £212,406, and the total assets, including surplus from securities in the hands of creditors, to £519,669, showing an apparent surplus of £307,263. The debts to creditors fully secured represent £336,357, against an estimated value of securities amounting to £665,385, which gives the surplus of £329,028 held by creditors above referred to.

E. LLOYD (WOLVERHAMPTON).—A meeting of the creditors of Edwin Lloyd, of Wednesfield Road, Wolverhampton, general broker and metal dealer, was held at the offices of Mr. J. E. Sheldon, solicitor, Wednesbury, on Monday. Mr. Colbourn (of the firm of Gough and Colbourn, solicitors, Wolverhampton) and Mr. William Shakespeare, solicitor, Oldbury, represented creditors. The statements of accounts showed £3,306 14s. 2d. as due to unsecured creditors, £2,216 10s. 7d. (less £1,050 value of securities (due to partly secured creditors, and £570 to creditors fully secured; surplus from securities, £30; total amount of unsecured liabilities, £4,473 4s. 9d. The assets were: Stock-in trade, £874, and £30 surplus from securities in hands of creditors; deficiency, £3,569 4s. 9d. The debtor was closely questioned upon some of his transactions, after which it was resolved to wind up the estate by liquidation. Mr. Wignall, of 27 Colmore-row, Birmingham, accountant, was appointed trustee, and Mr. Sheldon was entrusted with the registration of the resolution.

J. GILROY (PAISLEY).—A meeting of the creditors of James Gilroy, bleacher at Nether Kirkton, Neilston, was held on Tuesday in the County Hotel, Paisley, at which Mr. John Fisher, accountant, was elected trustee.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The failure has been announced of Mr. C. E. Alforth, of Gracechurch-street, timber merchant. The issue of the circular created some little surprise, as the business, which was established in 1862, has been for several years, and until lately, very profitable, and the credit of Mr. Alforth has been good. The books are in the hands of Messrs. Fletcher and Co., of 2 Moorgate-street, who will submit a statement of affairs to the creditors as soon as possible.—Messrs. Gray and Buchanan, ship and insurance brokers, have suspended payment. The liabilities amount to between £25,000 and £30,000.—According to the Manchester Examiner, there have been various rumours of commercial difficulties in "La Plata," but the only house positively known to have suspended payment is that of Messrs. Gollan and Co., with rather extensive liabilities falling chiefly on London and Hamburg. They are said to have been engaged in army contracts.—The failure of Messrs. Jonas, Foster, and Co., spinners, manufacturers, and commission agents, Castlefield Mills, Bingley, near Bradford, is announced. A petition for liquidation has been filed; the liabilities are estimated at £30,000.—The failure is announced of William Rose Martin, of 28 Exchange street East, Liverpool, stock and share broker, with liabilities £7,723. The books are in the hands of Messrs. Gibson and Bolland.—The suspension is announced of Mr. James Graham, of Dickinson-street, Manchester, shipping merchant, trading as James Graham and Co. The stoppage, it is understood, has resulted from the failure of the South American Company, Bishopsgate-street, London, and the liabilities are estimated at £5,000.

SCOTLAND.—Messrs. Gray and Buchanan, ship and insurance brokers, Glasgow, have suspended payment. The liabilities amount to between £25,000 and £30,000. The books are in the hands of Messrs. M'Farlane and Hutton, accountants, West George Street.—The suspension is announced of Messrs. Leck, Cowan, and Co., turkey red dyers, Strathclyde Works. The liabilities are about £10,000, and the estate is expected to realise from 8s. to 10s. in the pound.

AMERICA.—American advances report the failure of Messrs. Howard, Hinchman, and Sons, flour and commission merchants, Philadelphia, with liabilities of £25,000; and of Messrs. T. and E. De Wolf and Co., shipping and commission merchants, Halifax, N.S., with liabilities estimated at £30,000. The Farmers' and Mechanics' Bank of Shippensburg, Pa., had suspended.—Advices received from America report the failure of Messrs. Walter Brown, Son, and Co., brokers and dealers in wool, 146 Duare-street, New York.—Mr. Thaddeus Smith, farmer, North Hadley, Mass., had suspended; liabilities, £30,000.

The National Zeitung reports the suspension of Herr Michaelis Breslauer, of Posen, and the chief director of the Brelau-Warsaw Railway, with liabilities amounting to about £90,000

BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.

The following is the official return of the cheques and bills cleared in the Bankers' Clearing-house for the week ending Wednesday, April 28:—

Thursday, April 22	£14,158,000
Friday, April 23	13,088,000
Saturday, April 24	15,110,000
Monday, April 26	13,746,000
Tuesday, April 27	13,635,000
Wednesday, April 28	15,087,000

The total at the corresponding period of last year, which included a Stock Exchange settlement, was £116,590,000.

THE BALANCE SHEET.—The annual account of the gross public income and expenditure of the United Kingdom shows that in the financial year ending on the 31st of March, 1875, Customs' duties produced £19,289,000; Excise, £27,395,000; stamps, £10,540,000; land tax and house duty, £2,440,000; income tax, £4,306,000; Post Office, £5,670,000; telegraph service, £1,120,000; crown lands (net) £385,000; miscellaneous, £3,776,873; making a total income of £74,921,873. The item of "miscellaneous receipts" includes £523,500 from India for British troops serving there; £797,000 for military and naval old stores sold, &c.; £467,000 for interest on public loans; £300,000 for diminution of balance in the Treasury chest. The year's expenditure comprised £27,094,479 for interest of the national debt; £14,519,434 for the army, besides £579,115 for the Army Purchase Commission; £10,680,404 for the navy; £125,000 vote of credit for the Ashantee expedition; £13,557,717 for civil services; £2,694,908 for the cost of the customs and inland revenue departments; £2,911,917 for the post office; £972,000 for the packet service; £1,193,066 for the telegraph service; making a total expenditure of £74,328,040, or £593,833 less than the income. There was a further expenditure of £300,000 on fortifications, and £300,000 for the localisation of the military forces; but this outlay of £600,000 was not taken from the year's income, but was provided by the sale (or at least the creation) of annuities amounting to £68,595, terminating in 1885. If the £600,000 had been a charge on the year's income, the surplus to £593,833 would have disappeared, and there would have been a deficiency of £6,167.

ALLEGED EMBEZZLEMENT BY A BUILDING SOCIETY'S SECRETARY.—At the Guildhall on Monday William Robert Warner, 29 Gaisford-street, Kentish Town, was brought up on remand, charged with having embezzled numerous sums of money, amounting in the aggregate to upwards of £34,000, belonging to the Sun Permanent Benefit Building Society, of No. 17 Holborn, of which he was the Secretary.—Mr. Douglas Straight prosecuted; and Mr. Blanchard Wontner appeared for the prisoner.—Mr. Straight said the prisoner had been the secretary of the Sun Permanent Benefit Building Society from its commencement many years ago. He had large sums of money passing through his hands, and was undoubtedly a very clever man of business, and an expert book-keeper. During the time he had held this office he managed from time to time to appropriate sums of money which he had received on behalf of the society to his own purposes. To prevent detection he credited certain accounts with the money he had received in the ledger, but never entered them in the cash-books, and by making errors in the additions of other books he made the accounts balance, and showed a much larger amount of stock than really existed. In that manner, and by falsifying the annual statement of accounts, he had carried on his frauds to a very serious extent. It was only when something occurred to arouse the directors' suspicions that they called in an accountant, who discovered the defalcations of the prisoner. Mr. Grantham, of Grimsby, in April 1874, sent two sums of £25 1s. 3d. each to the society by draft upon the Grimsby branch of the Lincoln Bank, and received in return the scrip for shares. Mr. Dangerfield, the accountant, found that only one of those sums was accounted for in the cash-book, but both of them were entered to Mr. Grantham's account in the ledger.—Mr. Scrotter, deputy manager at the Ludgate-hill branch of the City Bank, proved that the society banked with them, and the defendant had a private account there also. One of the drafts of Mr. Grantham was passed through the prisoner's private account, and never went through the society's accounts at all.—Miss Hodgson, of Rawcliffe, near Selby, Yorkshire, held four £25 shares; and being desirous of transferring them, wrote to the society for that purpose in January 1873.—Mr. Moreton, of Milton-road, Stoke Newington, bought four realised shares from the defendant, and then expressed a wish to have four transferred shares. The four shares which had been taken back from Miss Hodgson, and which were entered in the books as cancelled, were transferred by the prisoner to Mr. Moreton, he paying something over £100 for them. Early in 1874 he was desirous of parting with his eight shares, and received the money for them from the society, but the purchase money for Miss Hodgson's shares was never paid in to the credit of the society.—Messrs. Digby and Liddle, of No. 1 Finsbury-place, solicitors to the society, proved that they at different times received money in discharge of mortgages, and paid the amounts by cheques into the City Bank to the account of the society, at the same time advising the defendant that those sums had been so received by them and paid into the bank. None of these sums were entered in the cash-book, and it was therefore supposed that he had taken cash to these amounts from other moneys passing through his hands, which he had entered in the cash-books.—Messrs. Field, auctioneers, of 70 Church-street, Mile End, proved receiving rents from various estates belonging to the society to the amount of £122 4s. 4d., and forwarding cheques for the amounts to the prisoner. Two other smaller sums were also proved as having been paid to the prisoner, none of which had been accounted for in the cash-books.—Mr. Dangerfield, the accountant, said that on the debit side of the balance sheet the entry for realised shares was £50,737 10s., and it should have been £60,062 10s., which, with the increased interest, would bring the total up to £61,483 2s. 6d. The difference was created through "under castings" in the realised shares account.—Mr. Alderman Knight, in effect, committed the prisoner for trial, but formally remanded him for the completion of the depositions.

Solicitors as Trustees.—The Law Times "notices with satisfaction that in a recent issue of the London Gazette the names of two solicitors appear as having undertaken the offices of trustees in liquidation proceedings. So long as the present Bankruptcy Act, with all its imperfections—growing in intensity almost daily—remains on the statute book, we are of opinion that solicitors should endeavour, as far as possible, to undertake the trusteeship in liquidation proceedings. It is not unusual for solicitors to undertake trusts of another and equally onerous and responsible character, and we think the interests of clients (creditors) frequently require that they should do so in cases of insolvency. Without discussing the reason why, it is a fact that in nine cases out of ten, perhaps we might say 99 cases out of 100, a debtor by liquidating practically gets a fresh start in the world, and creditors get no dividends worth having. Experience proves the working of the Act to be a complete failure, wrong in principle, costly in its working, and satisfactory to none except the so-called bankruptcy trustees whom it has created."

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

TRANSLATIONS.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,

BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,

62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages, on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

MAY 8, 1875.

The meeting of the Manchester Society of Accountants has been followed by the meeting of the Institute of Accountants; and the reports which we gave of the proceedings on both occasions cannot fail to prove highly gratifying to all who are interested in the well-being of the profession. There was the same strongly marked feeling that the time had come for the decided recognition of accountants as a body, and the same marked determination to uphold their position and their privileges. These meetings, and the publicity given to them, do much towards the great step of thorough union and consolidation. The remarks of the Chairman at the Institute gathering were especially valuable, as directing attention to one very important branch of an accountant's duties, that of auditing. The cry against accountants is, that they are in reality a body of men who have sprung into existence since the Bankruptcy and Companies' Acts, and flourish simply on the ruins of once prosperous undertakings, and the wrecks of private fortunes. This cry is echoed, not only in the columns of mere professional organs, which may naturally be expected to utter shrieks of indignation at any thing which may threaten their interests, but obtains a wider publicity by letters to the daily press. It is true, of course, that the accountant is the man to whom is entrusted the task of saving as much as possible out of the fire; but there is another aspect of his duties to which we have frequently directed attention, and on which Mr. Kemp dwelt at some length, —that of protection of shareholders and creditors by means of fearless and rigorous auditing. Here is a ground on which no professional jealousy can give rise to any hostility, and on which the public can yield to the profession a sincere and hearty support. It is not too much to say, that but few of the terrible financial scandals which have sprung into such disgraceful notoriety could have taken place, if a thorough and independent system of auditing had been in force. Let the Institute follow up the principles enunciated by Mr. Kemp. Let them hold the professional honour of an accountant to be so high, that it forces him to decline to certify to the correctness of any accounts where he has not been allowed the fullest means of investigation. Let them stand by the man whose fearless discharge of his duty has brought about his dismissal, and let them insist upon his reinstatement. In this course they will carry with them the warm sympathy of the public; and they will find that those whom it is most necessary to hold in check, will soon cease to contend against them. The fact of an auditor of any company having been dismissed, and all men of eminence and standing in their profession refusing, with the support of the general body, to succeed to his post, will be proof positive to the world that the affairs of the company in question are not able to bear the light of publicity, and the necessary inferences will be readily drawn. Moreover, shareholders and investors will scrutinise carefully the audited account, and see the first threatenings of an impending danger which they may avert or escape from in time. A sound and solvent company need not fear the closest scrutiny into its affairs; and in answer to any alarming or disquieting rumours as to its stability, may point calmly to the signed approval of the auditors. A shaky concern will dread submitting its accounts to the keen eyes of a trained investigator, for fear of having its instability exposed to the world; and the dread of independent examination will tell its own tale. If the Institute of Accountants will persist in directing attention to these points, they will have done a very great service to the world, and laid the foundations of a really sound commercial prosperity. But they must attempt to educate the mind of the public. The idea of the importance of the post of auditor must be thoroughly grasped; and the necessity of his utter independence of any influences which may colour his conclusions, must be insisted upon. Where the auditor or examiner is a mere official of the company, his results cannot invariably be implicitly relied on.

It is to be hoped, also, for the honour and dignity of the profession, that the Council of the Institute will receive that support which they have a right to expect. The name of accountant is often used as a term of reproach, and he is wilfully and maliciously confounded with the outsiders of every calling who do the dirty work, if any. But to be a member of a large and influential body, trained for his work by a well-directed course of study, subject to the keen checks of professional restraint,—to feel that his fiat is looked upon as the test of the stability of many a seemingly prosperous undertaking, and that to his honour, integrity and skill numbers look for the safety of their fortune,—is a position, beyond all dispute, as high as can well be attained. The movement has now fairly begun; the progress towards the realisation of the wishes of the chief and best members of the profession is rapid; and we shall soon see, we trust, all working towards the same end, to place the profession of an accountant on the same level as those older professions which may be at present more dignified, but in no degree call forth greater skill or deeper responsibility.

Some idea of the work of an official liquidator may be gained from the statement made to the House of Lords Committee on the European Assurance Arbitration Bill, that the provisional liquidator of that unlucky company had handed over to the arbitrator, account books and papers weighing no less than thirty tons! In winding-up cases, and in fact in most proceedings in the Court of Chancery, a vast amount of work is done by men whose names and functions are almost wholly unknown to the general world. The chief clerks, one of the most hardworked set of officials in the public service, do an immensity of quiet business in every suit, and yet no one probably beyond the range of the legal world could name one of them. It is much the same with the official liquidator. A short paragraph announces his appointment, and then he is heard of no more till his duties are ended. He has no share in the glorious publicity of cunning arguments in points of law, his name is less mentioned than the most youthful counsel to whom nepotism or favouritism may have lent opportunities for distinction, he is a mere abstraction, whose personality is lost in his office. Few, who use the "Briton's privilege of grumbling" at having to pay money, know the actual amount of work by which a liquidator's remuneration is earned. It is easy to carp at the large sums to which the payments for hours of labour mount up, it is not so easy to find the men capable of undergoing the labour. There has been some comment on the sum required to discharge the claims of the European liquidators. We advise some of those ingenious gentlemen who are so fond of calculations showing how many globes of gold the size of the moon could be made out of the amount of sovereigns by which Sir Stafford Northcote will have reduced the National Debt in 1885, and other equally valuable feats in arithmetic, to endeavour to estimate what the liquidators are paid for each pound of matter they have to wade through. The result could scarcely fail to delight those who feel any interest in such statistics, and might possibly tend to raise the liquidators much in popular estimation. The would-be reformers of accountants' charges could deduce from it a sliding scale adapted to official liquidators based on a simple system of tonnage and poundage.

The liquidation petition by Mr. Richardson, the Liberal Member for Birkenhead, will raise no new question as to the vacating of his seat; though a member of the House of Commons who is adjudicated bankrupt is, during one year, incapable of sitting and voting in that House, unless within that time his creditors are satisfied or the adjudication annulled, and unless this is done his seat is adjudged vacant at the end of the year. But these provisions do not apply to the cases of liquidation by arrangement, which do not inflict any disabilities upon a member. This was expressly decided in the case of Sir William Russell (Ex parte Pooley 41 L. J. Bankruptcy 67), a gentleman who has achieved the somewhat sinister immortality of having settled the law in two disputed points of bankruptcy, and of pointing a moral and adorning a tale to an admiring posterity in the shape of a "leading case." It must be noticed that the "Bankruptcy Disqualification Act 1871," which refers exclusively to the case of Peers, extends disability to the event of liquidation by arrangement (sec. 8). But the Bankruptcy Act clearly exempts a member from forfeiting or endangering his seat by liquidation, though the reason for the distinction does not seem very obvious, especially as liquidation is a somewhat tedious process in general, and Mr. Richardson may be thankful that the fate of Sir William Russell has finally settled the law which might otherwise have been formally declared in his own person.

The terrors of an injunction are such that when issued by the Court of Chancery it must indeed be a very stout heart that would venture to disregard one. In the case of Ex parte Cochrane, however, the holder of a bill of sale restrained by injunction from realising his security, carried off the goods from the possession of a duly appointed receiver. This is an undoubted contempt of court, as the holder of the bill of sale had his remedy in consequence of the injunction by damages. The point is worth the attention of all concerned in bankruptcy administration. The object of the appointment of the receiver is to preserve the property as far as possible for the creditors, and, except where execution has actually been levied before the petition was presented, in which case the creditor is entitled to proceed to a sale,—no legal process or attempt to realise any security will be permitted. Besides, it must be borne in mind that nothing will be held to justify disobedience to an injunction of the Court. If it is wrong or irregular, it must be set aside on proper application; but so long as it is in force, it must be strictly and literally obeyed.

"ACCOUNTANTS' CHARGES."—We desire to call the attention of subscribers to the announcement of a meeting of accountants to be held at the Guildhall Tavern on Wednesday next, at 3 o'clock, "to consider a circular issued by wholesale houses having reference to a scale of charges for accountancy work relating to liquidations and compositions."

SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.—The third Annual Meeting of this Society will be held on Tuesday next, at the Guildhall Tavern, at 3 o'clock, and will be followed by a dinner at 5.30 p.m.

AN ABSCONDING BANKRUPT.—The examination into the sequestrated estate of F. Auchinleck, sole partner of the firm of F. Auchinleck and Co., lately carrying on business as commission agent at 71 Leith-walk, Edinburgh, was fixed to take place on Friday in the Edinburgh Bankruptcy Court. No appearance, however, was entered for the bankrupt, and a warrant was issued for his apprehension.

LAWYERS AND ACCOUNTANTS.

It will scarcely be credited that a journal of the position and influence of the Law Times allows itself to be made the vehicle for the propagation of such unmitigated rubbish as the letter we append. We are charitable enough to attribute the wholesale and unreasoning condemnation of accountants to the ignorance of a solicitor "from the country," who appears to have adopted without question the pretensions of a few grasp-all lawyers: and his statements would be worth no more than the paper on which they are written if a respectable organ of the profession had not given a tacit endorsement to the charges. Has "a country solicitor the faintest conception of the scandalous manner in which" legal charges have increased under the present Bankruptcy Act, and of the corresponding decrease in accountant's charges? We imagine not, and therefore recommend him to study the Comptroller's Reports, before he pens any thing further on the subject of professional robbery. The notion of "creditors and solicitors" being "robbed by accountants" has such a charm of novelty, in so far as the second named victims are concerned; and the manifest "scare" under which it is suggested that judges should have power to commit that enfant terrible, the accountant, for "say three months," is so amusing,—that we are tempted to give the letter of this rustic light in full:—

"Bankruptcy Trustees.—I understand there is a Bill before the House of Commons to guard the rights of the legal profession. No persons but solicitors can have the faintest conception of the scandalous manner in which creditors and solicitors are robbed in bankruptcy and liquidation cases by accountants and others acting as receivers and trustees. The most stringent legislative enactments are absolutely needed to prevent accountants and agents acting either in the Bankruptcy or County Courts. In reference to the County Courts, accountants and agents write letters demanding payment, and then follow them up by attending and entering plaints, thus deliberately acting as attorneys. The present law is insufficient to meet these men, and I think that there should be a plurality of remedies against them. The judges should have power to commit them for contempt of court, for say three months, persons should have remedy by actions for penalties, and the magistrates should also have power. In any attempt you may make to preserve the rights of the public and the profession, you will be well supported.

AN INSURANCE BLUE BOOK.*

To have at hand a perfectly reliable book of reference upon any particular subject, is a matter of no small importance and convenience in business transactions. Such a work has reached us in the form of the Insurance Blue Book for 1875, being the third year of its publication; and from the careful manner in which the present issue has evidently been got up, we may venture to anticipate that it will receive greatly increased support. The Blue Book commences with an elaborate and exceedingly well-arranged Commercial Directory of Insurance Offices and the different officials connected therewith; following upon which is some very useful information concerning exclusive business transacted by certain companies, the want of which has undoubtedly been often felt. The Northampton, Carlisle and Actuaries' Tables of the Expectation of Life, and the comparative Table of Life Premiums of upwards of ninety-seven Offices form material which will be found invaluable to every Insurance Agent. The most important portion of the book, however (occupying 112 pages), and that which is of more special interest to accountants, is the Life Revenue Accounts and Balance Sheets of the various Companies; and the manner in which these statements have been so accurately placed within reach of the public reflects the greatest credit on the compiler. Here every one, no matter how small his knowledge of accounts, can get for a merely nominal sum complete information as to the financial position of the Life Office with which he may intend to connect himself. Quoting the words of Mr. Gladstone, viz.: "You know a "good deal about the position of an Insurance Society "when you get three things: first of all, its date; "secondly, its income from premiums; and thirdly, its ac-"cumulations. From the relation of these one to another "you know pretty clearly the state of the Society,"—the work claims, and justly, to set forth all these "three things." A more useful volume of reference for those who desire to become acquainted with the affairs of an Insurance Office we have not hitherto perused, nor have we ever seen one which we can recommend with greater confidence to our readers and the public generally.

County Courts Bill.—In the House of Lords on Monday this Bill was read a third time and, after an amendment introduced by the Lord Chancellor, it was passed.

Winding up.—Petitions for winding up the Ifton Rhyn Collieries (Limited) and the Oriental Telegram Agency (Limited) have been presented to the Court of Chancery.—A petition to wind up the St. Just Amalgamated Mining Company (Limited) has been presented to the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries.

Shorthand Notes of Bankruptcy Cases.—A legal contemporary says:—Solicitors who practise largely in bankruptcy complain loudly of a practice insisted on by Mr. Registrar Keene requiring that a shorthand writer must be employed and paid a fee of one guinea by the solicitor to the proceedings in every case in which even a single witness is examined before the registrar. In another column we publish a letter upon the subject, and another solicitor, in writing to us, observes, "It is becoming a serious evil, and loud complaints are made by many solicitors about it." No doubt the rule presses unduly on small estates, and where, perhaps, only one or two questions are asked. We cannot but suppose, however, that some modification of the rule would follow upon the matter being properly represented to the registrar.

LAW AND ACCOUNTANCY.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR.—I have just read an extract from the Law Times in your paper, wherein "K.K." expresses somewhat freely his opinion of accountants. It appears to me that "K.K." is a little too jealous of the accountants obtaining business which he thinks he ought to have; but by what right he claims the exclusive privilege of acting as proxy or agent, he does not venture to say. It is quite amusing to see how self! self! self! pervades his remarks. I have had some experience in bankruptcy matters myself, but I never saw accountants struggle harder for a trusteeship than the solicitors themselves,—knowing, of course, where the legal business would go. "K.K." complains of accountants joining in a trusteeship. Would he not be very different to any of his brethren, if he did not make "joint business" of a bankruptcy rather than lose it altogether, provided, of course, that he had the chance? Yet for doing this forsooth, accountants are dubbed "rapacious wolves." He complains too, that solicitors' charges are reduced by "three-fifths" in small estates, he means "to three-fifths," at which price I am told by solicitors themselves, the business pays better than anything else in a solicitor's office. If "K.K." were to attend with a receiver before a commissioner, or to send a clerk, to be sworn to an affidavit, he would charge and be allowed 6s. 8d., and yet he objects to an accountant charging 1s. 8d. An accountant would be very glad, no doubt, to get an "orthodox 3s. 4d., 6s. 8d., or 13s. 4d.," instead of the miserable 1s. 8d.

Who, besides solicitors, charge for making out their own invoices for work done? or, as it is termed, "drawing bill of costs, so many folios, and fair copy, &c." If a solicitor's time is money, in such a case, why not a grocer's or a draper's? whose bills often contain quite as many items as the solicitor's, if not as many folios. No doubt both would assert that the labour occupied their time, and was not charged or included in the profit on the other items. "Fair play is a jewel," and I long for the time when accountants will be recognised, as are solicitors, and the rights and privileges of each defined and respected, and "encroachers and impostors" punished.

Yours truly,

TRUSTEE.

FALSIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS.

In the House of Commons on Tuesday last, the Falsification of Accounts Bill was read a third time and passed. The following is a copy of this Bill:—

FALSIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS.—A Bill to Amend the Law with reference to the Falsification of Accounts.

Whereas, it is expedient to amend the Law so as to punish the falsification by clerks, officers, servants, and others, of their employer's accounts, books, writings or documents,

Be it enacted by the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same as follows:—

1. That if any clerk, officer, or servant, or any person employed or acting in the capacity of a clerk, officer, or servant, shall wilfully, and with intent to defraud, destroy, alter, or mutilate any book, writing, document, or account which belongs to, or is in the possession of, his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, and which relates to any business transactions, or matters of, or with, his employer, or shall wilfully, and with intent to defraud, make, or concur in making, any false entry in, or omit, or concur in omitting, any material entry from, or in any manner, falsify or permit the falsification of, any such book, writing, document, or account; then in every such case the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour, and be liable to be kept in penal servitude for a term not exceeding seven years, or to be imprisoned with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years.

2. It shall be sufficient in any indictment under this Act to allege a general intent to defraud, without naming any particular person intended to be defrauded.

3. This Act shall be read as one with the Act of the twenty-fourth and twenty-fifth of Her Majesty, chapter ninety-six.

4. This Act may be cited as the Falsification of Accounts Act.

Gentlemen,

The Committee beg to inform you that at a meeting of Wholesale Houses held at the Guildhall Coffee House, on Friday, April 9th, 1875, it was resolved unanimously—

> "That the maximum scale of accountants' charges enclosed be submitted to the accountants of London for their approval, and that all accountants should be invited to agree to render a detailed statement on the plan of one or other of the two forms appended, one of such forms being adapted for compositions and the other for liquidations, showing the gross liabilities, and the gross amount realised upon each estate, and a detailed statement of all charges of every kind up to the final dividend, whether an estate is wound up by liquidation, assignment, composition, or otherwise; and that a printed copy of one or other of such statements as above described be sent to every creditor with the notice of the final dividend, or in case of composition immediately after the issue of the composition notes."

The committee beg to inform you that at the request of the meeting of the 9th instant, a list of those accountants who agree to adopt the scale of charges and to comply with the foregoing resolution will be printed and circulated among the wholesale houses.

Should you feel disposed to accept and adopt the scale of charges, and to comply with the foregoing resolution, you will gratly oblige by signifying your assent upon the other half of this sheet on or before May 3rd, 1875, and by addressing it to,

Gentlemen,
Yours faithfully,
(Signed) JAMES HUGHES,
Chairman of the Committee.

To Messrs.——

COURT OF CHANCERY.

May 3.

(Before the Lords Justices.)

In re the London and Paris Hotel Company.—This was an appeal by the Company from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins, ordering a compulsory winding up. The petition for the winding up was presented by three shareholders. The company was formed in 1862 for the purchase and carrying on of hotels in any part of Europe. The capital was to be £400,000, in 20,000 shares of £20 each. The amount actually paid up was £127,000. With this sum, and money borrowed upon mortgages, the company became the proprietors of the West Cliffe Hotel, Folkestone; Meurice's Hotel, in Paris; and Crockford's Hotel, in St. James's-street, London. They carried on business until the whole amount of their capital was lost, with one exception, which was that of St. James's-street Hotel, which was let, and from which they had a rental profit of £500 a year. Out of this money had been paid for some time past the salary of the secretary, £350; rent of offices, £80; and payment to auditors, £50; making £480. A proposal had been made for the purchase of the St. James's-Hotel, but the petitioners were not satisfied that the sum was sufficient, and there were outstanding bills of exchange which might be realised for the benefit of the shareholders. In the court below the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the directors ought to have had the company wound up many years ago, and he therefore did not hesitate in making an order for a compulsory winding up, and he should appoint a liquidator who would immediately realise the assets at the least expense. Upon appeal, Mr. Bristowe, Q.C., and Mr. Cookson for the company; Mr. N. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Crossley for the petitioners.—Their lordships were of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed, and the decree of the Vice-Chancellor affirmed.

ROLLS' COURT, Chancery-Lane.

May 1.

(Before the Master of the Rolls.)

In re East Llangynog Lead Mining Company, (Limited).—This was a shareholder's petition, praying that the voluntary winding-up of the company might be continued under the supervision of the Court, and for the removal of the liquidator. The company was formed in December, 1870, with a nominal capital of £100,000, for the purchase of a 21 years' lease of a piece of mineral ground in Montgomeryshire. The vendor was a Mr. Charles Rule, who had purchased the lease from the liquidator of a defunct company called the Craig y Mwyn Company, and the price was £90,000, to be paid as to £60,000 in nominally paid-up shares of £2 each, and as to the balance in 20,000 shares of £2 each, on each of which £1 10s. was to be credited as paid. A Mr. Joseph Taylor, who is a mining agent and share dealer at 86 London-wall, and who described himself as the agent to start the concern, purchased the bulk of Rule's shares shortly afterwards, and became the managing director at a salary of £300 per annum. In April, 1872, the petitioner, who is a Fifeshire farmer, received from Taylor a copy of a circular called "Messrs. Joseph Taylor and Co.'s Mining, Exchange, and General Shareholders' Guide," containing certain statements as to Taylor's opinion of the value and prospects of the mine, in consequence of which he applied to Taylor, who let him have 16 fully paid-up shares in the concern, at a premium of cent. per cent. on their nominal value. The company carried on operations at a loss until May, 1874, when resolutions were passed for winding up the company voluntarily. In July the liquidator, who is a clerk in Taylor's office, offered the mine for sale by public auction as a going concern, and it was purchased by Taylor for £3,500, a sum which enabled the liquidator to declare a first and final dividend of 1s. 0½d per share. Having completed the purchase, Taylor sold the mine to another clerk in his office as trustee for a new company called the Llanrhaidr Lead Mining Company (Limited) at the price of £20,000, to be paid as to £10,000 in cash, and £10,000 in fully paid-up shares, on condition that shares in the new company should be offered to the shareholders in the East Llangynog Company at a discount of 25 per cent., out of consideration for the loss sustained by the shareholders in the latter company. The petitioner, however, with an amount of caution which would have been more useful to him at an earlier period, declined the offer, and now presented the petition with the object of having the affairs of the company investigated. Mr. E. K. Karslake, Q.C., and Mr Dixon appeared for the petitioner; Mr. C. H. Turner, for the holders of 3,123 shares, and Mr. Badcock, for the holder of 40 shares, supported the petition. Mr. Waller, Q.C., and Mr Bunting, for the liquidator, opposed. The Master of the Rolls said the mode in which this unlucky petitioner took his shares disclosed an amount of credulity which one did not expect to find in a Fifeshire farmer, for he had allowed an utter stranger to accommodate him with 16 shares, at the price of £4 per share, on which nobody had ever paid any thing to the company, for they were some of the vendors shares which Taylor had acquired from Rule. Of course, the petitioner never received a dividend while the company lasted, and when it was wound up he was offered a first and final dividend of 1s. 0½d. Not unnaturally discontented with his bargain, the Fifeshire farmer presented his petition. The answer of the liquidator was that he had paid the debts and distributed the assets, with the exception of a few pounds due to shareholders who would not take the 1s. 0½d., and demanded a winding-up order because the present liquidation was a swindle, for that word had been used on their behalf. His Honour had investigated the facts and had seen and heard Taylor and the liquidator, and had come to the conclusion that, whatever his opinion might be as to the mode in which the concern was got up, and as to the means used to induce persons to take shares, he was not entitled to say that the liquidation was not fairly conducted. No doubt the liquidator was one of Taylor's clerks, but then Taylor was the principal shareholder, and he might wish to have some control over a winding-up. It had been argued that it was a case of suspicion; but the Court was not at liberty to entertain suspicion, and could not interfere unless a primâ facie case was made out for its interference. It had been imputed to the liquidator that he sold too soon, and on the spot, instead of in London; but what of that? It was his duty to sell as soon as possible, and persons would not buy mines except after inspection, though they would take shares in a mine without knowing any thing about it. It had been argued that the liquidator sold at an undervalue because of the increased price obtained by Taylor immediately afterwards, but such increased price appeared to his Honour to have no bearing on the question of value; and if, as Taylor had deposed, his practice in these cases was to value the mine at no more than the value of the plant and stock on the ground, then Taylor himself had given for the mine more than it was worth. He must dismiss the petition, with costs.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, Lincoln's Inn.

May 1.

Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. Malins.

In re the Adansonian Fibre Company—Mendel's Claim.—This was an adjourned summons in the winding-up of this company upon a claim carried in by Mr. Sam Mendel, and resisted by Mr. Quilter, the liquidator of the company. The company was established in September, 1871, by the four firms of Fox Brothers, Malcolm and Co., Merry, Willis, and Lloyd, and W. J. and A. J. Adams, for the purpose of carrying on in partnership a business of trading in fibre to the West Coast of Africa which was established by Fox Brothers. The partners agreed that each party should be liable in proportion to his share in the undertaking, and that the profits and losses should be divided accordingly, and Fox Brothers were to be paid for their services in the managing of the business. In the course of the business goods were ordered from Mr. Mendel by Messrs. Fox Brothers for the account of the partnership, and the claim now made was for the amount of the debt incurred for those goods. The claim was resisted by the liquidator on the ground that the goods so supplied were sent to Zanzibar, on the East Coast of Africa, and that, as the partnership was formed for trading to the West Coast of Africa, this was a trading beyond the scope of the partnership, for the debts in connection with which the three other firms could not be made liable. Mr. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Robinson appeared for the three firms; and Mr. Cotton, Q.C., and Mr. Rodwell for the liquidator. The Vice-Chancellor said that although the company was formed for trading on the West Coast of Africa, it would be contrary to every principle of justice if every man who supplied them with goods was to be bound to inquire minutely whether the goods were to be sent to the East or to the West Coast of Africa. They were, in fact, sent to Zanzibar, but whether to one place or another, the company had the benefit of the goods, and no doubt received the price of the cargo. He was satisfied that all the partners knew perfectly well of this transaction; but if they did not, still they were bound by the act of their accredited agents, Fox Brothers, who in this case acted within their authority. Under these circumstances he had no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that Mr. Mendel must be admitted as a creditor of the company in respect of claims he had carried in.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

April 30.

(Before Mr. Registrar PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE THOMAS RICHARDSON AND SONS.—Messrs. Thomas Richardson and John William Richardson, described as of 85 Gracechurch-street, and of Middleton, near Hartlepool, trading as Thomas Richardson and Sons, engineers and iron founders, have presented a petition under the liquidation clauses. The senior partner, Mr. Thomas Richardson, is M.P. for Hartlepool. The case was mentioned to the court by Mr. Munns, solicitor for the petitioners, upon affidavits which showed that the debts of the firm amounted to about £280,000, of which £50,000 were secured by charges upon the works at Middleton, and upon freehold land belonging to the debtors at Longhill, West Hartlepool. The assets of the partnership consisted of the works at Middleton, and stock there, of the estimated value of £240,000, and book debts, cash, bills, and other securities £50,000; the Longhill estate being valued at £46,000, and land at Cheltenham at £17,000 more. It appeared that a number of valuable contracts were being carried on by the firm, and the appointment of a receiver and manager was necessary with a view to the continuance of the business, and the payment of wages, which amounted to £1,500 per week. A meeting of creditors was held on Thursday at Hartlepool, and the petition for liquidation had been presented pursuant to a resolution then passed. His Honour appointed Mr. Robert Fletcher, accountant, Moorgate-street, receiver and manager of the estate, and granted an injunction to restrain actions by creditors.

IN RE FAREBROTHER AND COLLINS.—The debtors, who were corn factors and agents, carrying on business in Muscovy-court, Tower-hill, recently filed a petition under the 125th and 126th sections, and at the first meeting the creditors passed a resolution for a liquidation by arrangement, the debts being returned at £3,787, with assets £66. Upon the resolution being presented to Mr. Registrar Keene, he declined to register it on the ground that there was no property available for distribution. The debtors appealed. His Honour held that the case was distinguishable from that of Sir William Russell, recently decided by the Court of Appeal, on the ground that the creditors under the present petition had not granted the debtors any discharge, and upon the further and important ground that there were really no creditors who dissented from the resolution passed at the meeting. The order would therefore be discharged, and registration allowed.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE JAMES CLIFFORD HODGES.—This was an appeal from Mr. Registrar Keene. The debtor had traded as a merchant, in Metropolitan-buildings, Queen Victoria-street, in the name of May and Company. He had filed a petition for liquidation, and a resolution accepting 20s. in the pound was come to, but registration was refused on the ground that a scheme of settlement agreed to under a former bankruptcy was still pending. It appeared that the bankruptcy had been annulled upon the terms of the bankrupt paying 20s in the pound by certain instalments, but he had only paid 5s. in the pound, and in order that he might have further time for payment of the balance, filed the petition for liquidation. Mr. Registrar Keene being of opinion that under the circumstances the resolutions come to could not be registered, the debtor appealed. Mr. Merriman appeared in support of the appeal.—The respondents were not called upon, his Honour holding that in the face of the unfulfilled arrangement come to under the bankruptcy, and upon the faith of which the adjudication had been annulled, it was not competent for the debtor to file a petition for liquidation and thereby obtain a modification of those resolutions. The appeal was accordingly dismissed with costs.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE COCHRANE, RE MEAD.—This was an appeal from the Colchester County Court. The debtor Mead, formerly of Wix, in Essex, farmer, had filed a petition for liquidation under which a receiver was appointed. It appeared that prior to the date of the petition he had executed a bill of sale in favour of Mr. Cochrane, the representative of the National Deposit Bank, as security for £200. The bill of sale was duly registered, but the receiver obtained an injunction restraining further proceedings thereunder. Notwithstanding such injunction and the fact that the receiver had taken possession of the property, Mr. Cochrane, by virtue of a power contained in the bill of sale, proceeded to the debtor's premises and forcibly removed seven horses, two waggons, and some harness. On the facts being brought to the notice of the registrar of the county court, he made an order continuing the interim injunction, and also directed that Mr. Cochrane should appear in court to answer for his contempt. From that order the present appeal was brought,—Mr. D. Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Robson were counsel for the appellant; Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. Jones for the respondent. The Chief Judge held that as the receiver was an officer of the Court and in possession of the property, the bill of sale holder had no right to interfere. The appeal would be dismissed, with liberty to the trustee to redeem the property; all questions as to costs and damages (if any) sustained by the bill of sale holder in consequence of the injunction being referred to the county court judge for adjudication.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE W. J. PROSSER.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination. The bankrupt was a wine merchant, of Mark-lane and Mincing-lane, formerly trading in partnership with John Prosser, under the firm of Prosser Brothers. He filed a petition for liquidation in December last, but the proceedings became abortive, and bankruptcy ensued. The liabilities were returned at £34,102, there being also secured debts to the amount of £10,000; assets estimated at £13,142. Mr. Bagley, who appeared for the trustee, said that the proceedings had been adjourned for additional accounts, but the bankrupt had not yet filed them, and the trustee desired further time for investigation. Adjourned accordingly.

IN RE MATILDA FRIEDERBERG.—The debtor, carrying on business as mantle, costume, and skirt manufacturer, in Hamsell-street, Falcon-square, has filed a petition for liquidation, her liabilities being estimated at about £13,000, and assets £8,000. Upon the application of Mr. Downes, on behalf of the debtor and creditors for £3,000, his Honour appointed a receiver and manager, and granted an interim restraining order.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE FRANCIS BROWNING.—LIABILITIES £145,000.—This was an application for the appointment of a receiver to the estate of this debtor, who has filed his petition for liquidation on the statutory allegation of inability to pay his debts, which amount to £145,000, the assets being estimated at £55,000. The debtor carried on business at St. John-street, Smithfield, as an oil merchant. His Honour, upon the application of Mr. Horton Smith, appointed Mr. Silas W. Baggs, of the firm of Baggs, Josolyne and Clarke, public accountants, of King-street, Cheapside, manager and receiver, it being stated that there were several large contracts on hand for the purchase and sale of oil, from which a large profit would be obtained. The application was concurred in by a large number of creditors.

IN RE F. R. B. IRELAND.—This was another heavy failure. The debtor carried on business at Cannon-street, and Middlesborough, in Yorkshire, as an iron merchant. The liabilities amount to the sum of £60,000, and the assets are stated at £34,000, consisting of shares in steamships, collieries and public companies. On the application of Mr. Brough, Mr. Swithinbank, public accountant, of Newcastle-on-Tyne, was appointed receiver, and an injunction granted restraining the proceedings of suing creditors.

(Before Mr. Registrar MURRAY, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE STEPHEN HENRY EMMENS.—The debtor, described as a merchant and banker, of 8 Old Jewry, trading as Emmens Brothers, has filed a petition for liquidation. His debts are stated at £140,000, with assets £150,000. Mr. Doria, on behalf of Mr. Chatteris, the official liquidator of the Mutual Society Trust Fund, a creditor for £10,000, and another creditor for £1,000, applied for the appointment of Mr. Nicholls, accountant, as receiver and manager of the estate. The affidavits showed that the debtor was interested in mines in Cornwall, and he was also concerned in large financial operations in connection with public companies. At present the assets, which the debtor believed to be capable of yielding 20s. in the pound, were unprotected. His Honour inquired whether notice of the present application had been given to the debtor, and receiving a reply in the negative, said that he could not entertain the matter until such notice had been served. Mr. Doria asked for leave to give short notice, which was granted. Later in the day Mr. Brough, on behalf of the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors for £57,000, asked that Mr. Cooper, accountant (Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, and Co.), should be appointed receiver and manager. It appeared that the debtor had chymical works at Rotherhithe, and large premises at Redmoor in Cornwall, used for the manufacture of arsenic. A great number of workmen were employed, and it would be necessary to provide funds for payment of wages. His Honour thought, under the circumstances, that the appointment should be made, and directed that notice of it should be given to Mr. Chatteris.

IN RE ALFRED BOWES.—This was a meeting for proofs of debt and the choice of trustee. The statement of affairs by Messrs. Browne, Stanley and Co., accountants, disclosed—total debts, £22,745 12s. 6d., against assets, £6692 16s. Proofs to a large amount were admitted. Mr. Robert Hough, a creditor, and Mr. W. L. C. Browne, accountant (Browne, Stanley, and Co.), were appointed trustees, to act with a committee of inspection.

May 6.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE JAMES TAYLOR.—This is one of the failures arising from that of Messrs. Thomas Richardson and Sons. The debtor is described as a shipowner, steam shipping agent, and wharfinger, of 37 Great Tower-street, and of Middlesbrough, also trading as the Queen's Wharf Company and the Middlesbrough and London Steam Shipping Company. He has filed a petition for liquidation, with debts returned at £253,000, of which £133,000 is likely to run off, with assets about £82,000. He is the owner of a line of steamers running between Middlesbrough and London. Upon the application of Mr. F. S. Herbert, his Honour appointed Mr. G. E. Swithinbank, accountant, 9 Lawrence Pountney-lane, receiver and manager of the property, and granted an interim injunction to restrain proceedings at law by creditors.

IN RE JOHN GREAVES.—The debtor, a boot and shoe manufacturer of Hackney-road and Norwich, filed a petition for liquidation in November last, and at the first meeting the creditors passed a resolution, which was afterwards confirmed, accepting a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable by four equal instalments. The debtor paid the first instalment of the composition, but made default in payment of the second, due on the 22nd of April, having the day previously caused notice to be filed convening a meeting of creditors for the purpose of varying the terms of the resolution. On the 24th the debtor was served with a writ at the suit of Messrs. Egan and Grimsdell, to recover £424, being the amount of certain dishonoured acceptances, and application was now made for an injunction to restrain the action. The question was whether, under existing circumstances, the Court had any jurisdiction to interfere. Mr. Bagley was counsel for the debtor; Mr. Finlay Knight for Messrs. Egan and Co. His Honour thought Messrs. Egan and Co. had a right to bring the action, but that, as the meeting was summoned before the writ issued, the debtor was entitled to take the opinion of the creditors assembled at the meeting. But, inasmuch as the assets seemed to have been considerably reduced since the statement of affairs was presented, the injunction would be granted conditionally upon a receiver being appointed; Messrs. Egan and Co. to have their costs, and to be at liberty to sign judgment, but not to proceed to execution until after the meeting of creditors.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, MAY 3.

ARMY ACCOUNTANTS.—Mr. Hayter asked the Secretary of State for War whether he had yet come to any decision as to the formation of a department of Army Accountants, or whether the numerous vacancies at present existing among regimental paymasters were likely to be soon filled up.—Mr. Hardy said he did not altogether agree with the report of the committee upon Army Accountants, and was of opinion that it was better no action upon the subject referred to by the hon. member should be taken until the commission now engaged in inquiry had reported.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MAY 4.

A SCHOOL OF LAW.—Lord Selborne next laid on the table a Bill for the establishment of a School of Law, where all classes might receive instruction. He observed that he had been charged with wishing to confound together the two branches of the legal profession, but his opinion was strongly in favour of maintaining the present distinction between Solicitors and Barristers. At the same time he thought that such an institution as a School of Law would lose half its value if made exclusive. He could not agree entirely with the Lord Chancellor as to the expediency of making the School of Law an examining body only, and distinct from a teaching body, for he thought that the two systems were capable of being united advantageously. However, he did not propose to make the School of Law necessarily a teaching body, though a power would be retained in the Bill to provide instruction. Generally speaking, the Bill was the same as the proposal he made last year. It incorporated the School of Law, which would be governed by ex-officio members, and by persons nominated by Her Majesty, the Inns of Court, the Incorporated Law Society, and by Barristers and Solicitors. The Governing Body would have to superintend the examinations in the School of Law, and no one would be permitted to practise as a Barrister or Solicitor who had not passed an appropriate examination. —The Lord Chancellor was of opinion that the Bill should be confined to making the School of Law an examining body only; but that was a detail which might hereafter be discussed. —The Bill was read a first time.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

(Before Judge MILLER.)

IN RE GEORGE MEARES.—In this case some disclosures of rather a novel nature were made to the court. The bankrupt had carried on business as a manufacturer of stays and crinolines at 2 Crampton-quay, in this city. His liabilities amounted to about £1,400, and he carried a composition of 20s. in the pound. As a security for the amount, the bankrupt undertook to get his mother to sign two bills for the last instalment, and also to execute a mortgage to the official assignees of a property in which she had a life interest. The bankrupt's mother is aged about 80 years of age, and it was represented that she was extremely feeble, and could not possibly leave her home at Roundtown for the purpose of coming into town to perfect the bills. The documents were given to a clerk named O'Healy, who was in the bankrupt's employment, and who knew Mrs. Meares senior, to bring to Roundtown to be signed, which he accordingly did. Some evenings afterwards the same person accompanied Mr. J. G. Rynd, solicitor, and Mr. Logan, a clerk from Messrs. Casey and Clay's office, to Mrs. Meare's residence to have the mortgage executed. They were brought into a parlour, and after remaining there a short time were told that Mrs. Meares was ready for them. They then went into an adjoining room, where an elderly woman was introduced to them by O'Healy as Mrs. Meares. The mortgage was duly executed by this person. Immediately before the first instalment of composition became due the bankrupt represented that his establishment had been broken open and £280 (the money he had to pay the bills) stolen therefrom. A meeting of creditors was held at Mr. Rynd's office, when the bankrupt stated that his mother had never signed the bills or mortgage at all. Mr. Rynd, who was acting for him, at once withdrew from the case, and immediately afterwards apprised the official assignee of the imposition that had been practised. O'Healy and other witnesses, including the bankrupt's wife and sister-in-law, were summoned before the court, and were examined in reference to the transactions. They denied all knowledge of the person who signed the deed, and positively swore they were unable to tell who was there at the time, O'Healy adding that he was imposed upon himself. Judge Miller directed the evidence to be immediately transcribed, and informed the witnesses that if they did not disclose the whole business he would adopt a different course with them on the next court day. His lordship also granted a warrant to compel the attendance of Mrs. Meares, sen. Mr. Monroe, instructed by Messrs. Casey and Clay, appeared for the assignees, and examined the witnesses.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION BILL.

This Bill came before the House of Lords on Monday. The committee were—Lord Winmarleigh (chairman), Earl Amherst, Viscount Powerscourt, and Lords Wolverton and Lisgar. Sir Edmund Beckett appeared for the promoters, the joint official liquidators of the European Arbitration, and in his opening statement said the object of the Bill was twofold—first, to authorise appeals in certain cases from the decisions already given of the arbitrator for the time being; and, secondly, to authorise the Lord Chancellor to appoint a barrister of 15 years' standing as arbitrator in the event of a future vacancy. By the Act of 1872 Lord Westbury was appointed the first arbitrator, and upon his death Lord Romilly was appointed his successor. Upon Lord Romilly's death the Lord Justice James agreed to hold the office of Arbitrator until the arbitration arrangements could be altered. The present Bill is promoted with this Lordship's approval and sanction; and the Lord Chancellor had also approved the Bill, and had himself presented it to the House. The necessity for further legislation had arisen from the conflict of decisions between the deceased Arbitrators, and especially with reference to the question of novation; and until some final decision on these questions was arrived at the work of the Arbitration would of necessity be in abeyance. The Act of 1872 provided that the Arbitrator should be selected from among past or present Judges, none of whom would, however, in the circumstances, accept the appointment. It therefore became necessary to enlarge the circle from which the appointment could be made. It was accordingly proposed that the Court of Appeal in Chancery should have jurisdiction to hear, with the sanction of the arbitrator, an appeal from a judgment delivered by the arbitrator before or after the passing of the Act. After giving a history of the arbitration up to the present time, the learned counsel said that he could not better enforce his argument than by comparing the costs in the Albert arbitration, which was on all-fours with this, with the costs and expenses in the Court of Chancery. The Albert Company was in Chancery 19 months, and the costs were over £70,000, the amount realised being trivial. The Albert Arbitration had been in operation nearly four years, and the total amount of costs had only been £66,000, and the sum realised £390,000. Now, the Albert Arbitration was comparatively speaking a small matter when considered in relation to the European. In the former there were only eight companies in liquidation, whereas in the latter there were already 22 companies, and there would probably be more. The expenses up to the present time also showed that the work was being done at about one-tenth of what it would have been in Chancery. Lord Justice James had computed that the Albert would have taken 15 years to finish it in Chancery, and if that were so, it was reasonable to suppose that the European would have taken at least 50. As an illustration of the immense amount of work thrown upon the liquidators he might mention one instance in which the provisional liquidators under the Court of Chancery had handed over to the Arbitrator account books and papers weighing 30 tons. But besides the public decisions of the Arbitrator, there had been an enormous amount of judicial work done. Numberless cases had been decided on written statements, orders for compromise and orders to Sheriffs, lists of contributories settled, above 600 summonses heard, nearly 100 affidavits filed, and so forth, showing an extraordinary amount of activity on the part of the Arbitrator and his staff. The learned counsel said he believed that the opposition to the Bill was not serious, as it must be patent to the petitioners and every body else who gave the matter a moment's thought that the only way of settling the matter was by intrusting the work to some one who understood it, and who could give proper attention to it, with power to enable him, with the aid of the Court of Chancery, to get the vexed question of novation finally settled. Mr. Serjeant Sargood, instructed by Mr. Musgrave, opposed on behalf of a shareholder in one of the amalgamated companies, and succeeded in getting a few verbal amendments introduced. Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., instructed by Mr. Manning, on behalf of some policyholders and shareholders, also opposed, some of their objections being allowed. The Bill then passed committee.

STOCK-EXCHANGE STATISTICS.—The following is a statement of Stock-Exchange Clearing House statistics for the eighth year during which the institution has been in existence :—

"15 Lombard-street, May 1.

"Sir,—I beg to forward you the subjoined statistics, showing the working of the Clearing House for the year ending on the 30th of April, 1875, which is the eighth during which these statistics have been collected. The total amounts for the eight years have been :—

	Total for the Year.	On the Fourths of the Month.	On Stock-Exchange Account Days.	On Consols Settling Days.
1867-68	£3,257,411,000 ...	£147,113,000 ...	£444,443,000 ...	£132,293,000
1868-69	3,531,039,000 ...	161,861,000 ...	550,622,000 ...	142,270,000
1869-70	3,720,623,000 ...	168,523,000 ...	594,763,000 ...	148,822,000
1870-71	4,018,464,000 ..	186,517,000 ...	635,916,000 ...	169,141,000
1871-72	5,359,722,000 ...	229,629,000 ...	912,446,000 ...	233,843,000
1872-73	6,003,335,000 ...	265,965,000 ...	1,032,474,000 ...	243,561,000
1873-74	5,993,586,000 ...	272,841,000 ...	970,945,000 ...	260,072,000
1874-75	6,013,229,000 ...	255,950,000 ...	1,076,585,000 ...	260,338,000

"The total amount of bills, cheques, &c., paid at the Clearing House during the year ending the 30th of April, 1875, shows, therefore, an increase of £19,713,000, as contrasted with 1874. The payments on Stock-Exchange account days form a sum of £1,076,585,000, being an increase of £105,640,000 as compared with 1874. The payments on Consols account days for the same period have amounted to £260,338,000, giving an increase of £266,000 over 1874. On the other hand, the amounts passing through on the fourths of the month for 1875 have amounted to £255,950,000, showing a decrease of £16,891,000 as compared with 1874.

"I am indebted to Messrs. Derbyshire and Pocock, the inspectors of the Clearing House, for the above figures, which will, I think, be interesting to many of your readers.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
"JOHN LUBBOCK, Hon. Sec. London Bankers."

PUBLIC INCOME AND EXPENDITURE.—Mr. Childers has obtained a return, which was printed on Friday, as to the Public Income and Expenditure and Surplus for ten years ended the 31st March last. In 1866 the public income was £67,812,292 4s. 6d., and the surplus certified by the National Debt Commissioners, after stating the expenditure, was £1,337,935 11s. 3d. In 1867, income, £69,434,567 15s. 9d.; surplus, £2,204,171 17s. 3d. In 1868, income, £69,600,218 4s. 1d.; surplus, nil. In 1869, income, £72,591,991 12s. 8d.; surplus, nil. In 1870, income, £75,434,252 10s. 6d.; surplus, £6,369,500 11s. In 1871, income, £69,945,220 10s. 8d.; surplus, £246,680 18s. 6d. In 1872, income, £74,768,314 13s. 1d.; surplus, £2,848,294 6s. 8d. In 1873, income, £76,608,770 5s. 1d.; surplus, £5,586,322 0s. 5d. In 1874, income, £77,335,656 17s 1d.; surplus, £369,146 14s. In the present year to the 31st of March last the income was £74,921,872 14s. 1d., and the surplus nil.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

BURGHARDT KREUELS AND CO., (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Francis Burghardt, of High-bank, Green-walk, Bowdon, and Augustus Kreuels, 19 Plymouth-view, Upper Brook-street, Chorlton-on-Medlock, Manchester, trading as Burghardt Kreuels, and Co, 3 Greek-street, Manchester, merchants, was held May 1st, at the offices of Messrs. Richardsons and Trevor, accountants, Clarence-buildings, Booth-street, in that city. The creditors were represented by Messrs. Slater, Heelis, and Co., and Messrs. Rowley, Page, and Rowley, solicitors. The statement of affairs, prepared by Mr. Trevor, the receiver, was as follows :—Liabilities—to creditors unsecured, £27,025 12s. 4d.; liabilities on bills £9,581, 19s. 5d., of which it is expected there will rank for dividend, £4,111 19s. 5d.; rent, £79 7s. 9d.; total, £31,216 19s. 6d.:—Assets—stock-in-trade, £501 0s. 9d.; book debts, £4,106 14s. 2d.; cash in hand, £8 6s. 9d.; furniture, &c., £98, 18s.; goods abroad, £226 17s. 1d.; surplus from securities, £141 15s. 4d.; total, £5,083 12s. 1d. The creditors resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, and appointed Mr. C. R. Trevor, trustee, without a committee of inspection.

E. JACOBS (BIRMINGHAM).—At an adjourned meeting of the creditors of Mr. Emmanuel Jacobs, jewellers' factor, of Frederick-street, Birmingham, Mr. Luke J. Sharp, receiver, submitted a statement of the affairs of the debtor to the following effect:—To creditors, £15,395 8s. 5d.; other liabilities, £747 1s.; creditors to be paid in full, £49 19s. 5d.; liabilities on bills discounted, £10,054 6s. 1d.; of which it is expected will rank against the estate for dividend, £2,341 0s. 9d.; less bills in hands of bankers, £321 3s. 8d.—£2,019 17s. 1d.; total debts, £18,162 6s. 6d.; stock-in-trade at cost price, £2,121 11s. 1d.—less 10 per cent. for depreciation, £212 3s. 2d.—£1,909 7s. 11d.; book debts, £25,832 14s. 7d.—estimated to produce £2,536 11s. 11d.; furniture, fixtures, and fittings, valued at £279 1s. 9d., estimated to produce by auction, £230; total, £4,675 19s. 10d.; less creditors to be paid in full, £49 19s. 5d.; total assets, £4,626 0s. 5d. There was considerable discussion as to the debtor's transactions, Mr. Peirson, accountant, Coventry, stating that his clients received an order only ten or eleven days before the failure for £2,000 worth of goods, and if there was any case for a prosecution they would certainly be in favour of it. Ultimately it was moved that the offer of 5s., payable in four instalments of 1s. 3d. each, the last two secured, be accepted. Another resolution was proposed in favour of bankruptcy. The result was as follows:—Out of 63 creditors present or represented, 39 voted for the composition, representing in amount £18,829 15s. 5d., out of a possible £21,855. The resolution in favour of the composition was, therefore, carried by a large majority.

J. B. WOOD (TRANMERE).—A second meeting of the creditors of John Brearley Wood, of 38 Chestnut-grove, Tranmere, who recently filed his petition for liquidation, &c., with liabilities £4,923, against assets, cash in hand, £5, was held on the 29th April at the office of Mr. Downham, solicitor, Birkenhead. Mr. Winstanley, solicitor, Liverpool; Mr. Rogers, accountant, Liverpool; and Mr. Thompson, Birkenhead, represented several creditors. It will be remembered that at the first meeting Mr. Downham, the debtor's solicitor, who held the proxies of relatives and friendly creditors amounting to close upon £3,700, voted himself to the chair, and carried a resolution that a composition of a penny in the pound be accepted, payable on demand within three calendar months from the date of the registration, but which was strongly opposed by the creditors present. Under the 126th section of the bankruptcy Act, however, the resolution as to the acceptance of a composition has to be confirmed at a second meeting by a majority in value and number of the creditors, and at the present meeting Mr. Downham, as the proxy of friendly creditors, again voted himself to the chair, but finding himself unable to confirm the resolution by the statutory majority, adjourned the meeting.

BENJAMIN TURNER (NEWCASTLE-UPON-TYNE).—At a meeting of creditors of Benjamin Turner, of 11 Lawton-street, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, jeweller, (held at the County Court offices May 1st inst.) who was adjudged a bankrupt on the 15th April last. The bankrupt not having filed his statement of affairs was ordered to do so within a week. It transpired that the liabilities would exceed £2,800, and the assets would be small. Mr. Edward Thomas Peirson, public accountant, of Coventry, was appointed trustee.

W. SUNDERLAND (HALIFAX).—A meeting of the creditors of this person who carried on business as a grocer, in Woolshops, was held at the offices of Mr. Francis Jubb, solicitor, on Thursday. Mr. Roberts (of Messrs. Foster, Roberts and Co., public accountants), produced a statement of the debtor's. affairs. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and Mr. Roberts was appointed trustee, with a committee of inpection, and Mr. Jubb was entrusted with the registration of the resolutions.

W. R. MARTIN (LIVERPOOL.)—A meeting of creditors of Mr. William Rose Martin, sharebroker, of Exchange-street East, Liverpool, was held on the 5th inst., at the offices of Messrs. Gibson and Bolland, 10 South John-street. Debts amounting to £4,000 were proved, and a resolution passed to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and to appoint Mr. Bolland trustee. The statement of accounts disclosed unsecured debts £6,617, and those secured £1,394—the security, land at Oxton—being valued at £1,901. The assets consisted of book debts £233, estimated at £93, other property £78, and surplus from securities in the hands of creditors already referred to £505. Mr. Bolland read a summary of accounts showing the indebtedness to arise from losses on shares £2,903, cash borrowed £3,658, and other expenses £54. The household furniture was comprised in an ante-nuptial settlement. The deficiency was accounted for by losses in shares, chiefly Brightons, North British, and Caledonian Stocks, of which £6,450 was incurred during the last two or three months.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—Messrs. Emmens, Brothers and Co., described as financial agents, of 8 Old Jewry, have presented a petition for liquidation under the arrangement clauses of the Bankruptcy Act. The books are in the hands of Messrs. Johnstone, Cooper and Co., accountants, and the circular states that the estate, by proper and judicious realisation, will enable every creditor to be paid in full, with interest.—The failure was announced on Friday of Messrs. T. Richardson and Sons, of 85 Gracechurch-street, and Hartlepool, established in 1869, with liabilities estimated at £300,000, which is due to the fall in iron and the decrease in the export trade of the country. The senior partner in the firm represents Hartlepool as a Liberal in the present Parliament. The circular issued states that all the creditors will be paid in full, and that the arrangements which have been made between the committee of creditors and Mr. Robert Fletcher, of the firm of Messrs. Robert Fletcher and Co., of 2 Moorgate-street, London, accountants, are of such a nature that the business will be carried on without interruption.—Petitions for liquidation have been filed in the Manchester County Court by Stephen Agop Gevairgian, of Water-street, Liverpool, and of Cooper-street, Manchester, commision agent, liabilities, £6,000; by Richard Rome Bealey, of Joiner-street, Church-street, Manchester, commission agent, liabilities £2,633; and by James Graham, of Dickinson-street, Manchester, shipping merchant, trading under the style of James Graham and Co., liabilities £4,509.—A circular has been issued to the creditors of John Roberts, carpet factor and dealer, Market-place, Sheffield, asking them to meet in London in order to effect an arrangement. The liabilities are nearly £11,000, and the assets are within £1000 of that amount. Payment has been suspended.—The suspension is announced of Mr. W. E. Taylor, of Enfield Mills, near Accrington, with liabilities stated at from £40,000 to £50,000.

SCOTLAND.—On Tuesday, Messrs. J. H. and A. Bell, export linen and jute merchants of Dundee, issued a circular to their creditors, intimating their suspension. They attribute their insolvency to depression of the foreign markets. A meeting of the creditors is called for Monday the 10th. It is reported that the liabilities amount to £70,000, or £80,000, and the estate is not likely to realise a large sum. The loss will fall almost exclusively upon merchants in Dundee, Arbroath, and Forfar.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

A correspondent of a contemporary writes as follows:—"It requires but a very slight acquaintance with our bankruptcy laws to be convinced of their inefficiency to cope with one of their principal objects, viz., the prevention of fraud in regard to the dealings between a debtor and his creditors. The Bankruptcy Act of 1861 enabled a debtor to present a petition in relation to his own bankruptcy, and while the Act of 1869 expressly enacts that it shall not be lawful for a debtor to present his own petition in bankruptcy, it nevertheless gives him the right of presenting a petition for the liquidation of his own affairs, which is really tantamount to a petition in bankruptcy; but it seems that the principal defect in the bankruptcy laws consists in the power which they place in the hands of a majority of the creditors to resist the wish and often the interests of the remaining creditors in relation to the discharge of the bankrupt, and the liquidation of his affairs. Under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, a trader or non-trader may be declared a bankrupt on the petition of a creditor upon certain conditions, which it is not necessary to mention here. A meeting of the creditors is convened, and by a resolution of three-fourths in value, and a majority in number of the creditors, the bankrupt can obtain his order of discharge on the payment to his creditors of 10s. in the £. The mischief is, that often these so-called creditors are merely creditors for the occasion, and have an interest in co-operating with the bankrupt, often relatives who use their interest as a means of influencing the remainder of the creditors, who are for the most part glad to acccept the composition that is offered rather than allow the bankruptcy to proceed with the prospect of serious litigation, great delay, a heavy expenditure in law costs, and no dividend. The Court of Bankruptcy does not exercise sufficient control over the proceedings in bankruptcy, and too much power is vested in the creditors, which is often wrongfully exercised. It is only right and just that where a man has honestly become a bankrupt, he should be relieved from the pressure of his creditors; but the vote of the creditors on the subject should be unanimous, and it should be left in the discretion of the court or the registrar to confirm or relax the decision of the creditors. Surely the interest of every creditor should be considered alike, and no means should be afforded to place it in the power of a majority of the creditors to act prejudicially to the interests of the minority. My reason for drawing the attention of your readers to the subject is, that although they may not altogether share in my views of the subject, it may nevertheless serve to arouse the attention of the Profession and the Legislature to the flagrant deficiencies and evils of our bankruptcy system, to which attention is so frequently and forcibly directed in your columns. It is shocking, indeed, to observe the callousness of a certain class of persons (who have no reputation at stake) to dishonest dealings with their creditors. I have only touched upon one of the many abuses of the Act of 1869, and I trust that the many readers of your valuable journal will assist in the task to bring prominently before the Profession and the public, the many defects in the bankruptcy system, in the hope that the Legislature may do something to place the matter on a fairer and more impartial footing."

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. Giffard.)

Re Whitworth and Co.—This was an action brought by a trustee in Whitworth's bankruptcy, the hearing of which had been several times adjourned; it was again brought up for hearing. Mr. Shaw, barrister, of Leeds (instructed by Mr. Mumford, of Bradford), appeared in support of the motion; and Mr. Jordan, barrister, of Manchester (instructed by Messrs. Rawson and Co., also of Bradford), appeared in opposition. At the time of the failure of Messrs. Whitworth, certain goods were on their way from the firm of Gibbs and Co., cotton brokers, Charlestown, America, to their place at Luddenden Foot. These goods having arrived at Liverpool, and got into the hands of the railway company, a person named Windall took possession of them, acting on behalf of Messrs. Gibbs as vendors. This was a motion to settle the right of ownership. Mr. Jordan, in the course of his remarks, said the goods were at their risk in Liverpool; had the goods been destroyed by fire whilst there, the loss would have been theirs. He also contended that where there had been a partial delivery of goods, with the intention to deliver the whole, that was a constructive delivery of the whole.—Mr. Shaw said there was no intention to deliver the whole. Besides, Whitworth and Co. had disposed of the cotton which had reached them. Now, they were not merchants; and though merchants were in the habit of disposing of the goods in a falling market, they, having bought the goods for the purpose of consuming them, had no right to sell them as they did.—His Honour reserved judgment for a fortnight.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

AT A MEETING OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS

CONVENED BY THE

COUNCIL OF THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND,

Held at the GUILDHALL TAVERN, on Wednesday, the 12th inst.,

"TO consider a Circular issued by Wholesale Houses, having reference to a Scale of Charges for Accountancy Work relating to Liquidations and Compositions." MR JOSEPH DAVIES, PRESIDENT S.A.E., in the Chair, the following Resolutions, moved by MR. JOHN BATH VICE-PRESIDENT, S.A.E., were carried unanimously, viz. :—

(1.) That a charge by way of commission only, is not an equitable mode of remuneration, as the result may be very much out of proportion to the work done.

(2.) That a resolution as to maximum charges under all circumstances, and without any exception, is not a reasonable proposition.

(3.) That, in considering any method of remunerating Accountants, particular regard should be had to the important duties and special risks they are called upon to undertake in addition to the work done.

(4.) That a Committee, comprising the following gentlemen:—Joseph Davies, John Bath, James Cooper, Edward Harvey, H. Brett, Thomas Meggy, R. R. Robinson, J. C. Bolton, Henry Leatherdale, A. C. Harper (Sec.), R. A. March, and J. Killingworth, be appointed to confer with the several Societies of Accountants in England, in order to arrive at some satisfactory scale of charges and remuneration to Accountants in relation to Liquidation, Composition, and Bankruptcy.

(5.) That the foregoing resolutions be advertised in the Times, Daily News, Standard, Accountant, and several Provincial Daily Papers, with the statement that a report of the proceedings may be seen in the Accountant newspaper of Saturday, 15th instant.

TRANSLATIONS.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,

BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,

62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages, on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In consequence of the press of matter this week, several reports and other communications are unavoidably held over until the next issue.

The Accountant.

MAY 15, 1875.

We indicated a few weeks ago, some of the difficulties which would beset the path of those who were so busily endeavouring to reform the charges of accountants, and pointed out the fallacy of endeavouring to establish one uniform rate of payment for work of every description. We ventured too to suggest, that a system by which remuneration was fixed so low as to prevent men of standing from thinking it worth their acceptance, was one which could never prevail. Above all, a system by which a maximum percentage was fixed, was perhaps the most unsatisfactory of all methods, unless accompanied by various safeguards and checks to prevent its operating unfavourably. These views, we are happy to say, were generally held at the crowded and unanimous meeting which was held at the Guildhall Tavern, on Wednesday last, when it was in effect, declared that an accountant's work involving risks and heavy responsibilities must be remunerated in an adequate manner, and not left to find its due reward under influences which make it scarcely worth undertaking from any, except the most disinterested motives.

There can be no question that "payment by results" is a mode of payment which possesses many advantages. It leads the workman to put forth his best endeavours, and encourages the zealous and hard-working at the expense of the careless and incapable. It is looked upon by many authorities, of more or less eminence, as the sovereign remedy for strikes, locks out and other social amenities arising from the antagonisms of capital and labour. It is a rough kind of justice, by which in the long run, a due share of profit and loss is meted out to all, and upon the whole may be said to work fairly well in the cases in which it is generally employed. But theoretically perfect as it is, its working is not wholly unimpeachable. Granting that the conditions at starting are equal, the most successful is certainly the most deserving man. But looking at the various difficulties which beset every course, it is hard to say, without a considerable amount of investigation, in what instances success is a mere fortuitous incident earned by far less merit and industry than almost total failure. To introduce payment by results into professional business generally is plainly absurd. It is, if we remember right, the Emperor of Siam whose physicians duly receive a salary so long as their august master is in the enjoyment of perfect health, which ceases during the slightest indisposition. This may be considered pushing a principle beyond its logical result, though it is doubtless effectual, and is, perhaps, no more than an Eastern form of the tenure by which many a fashionable physician holds his patients. Indeed, even accountants might find some advantage in a modification of this practice. They are accused of being the jackals who are always in at the death. They may reply, "Let the living trust to us more, and we will do much to add to the security of their existence;" let us audit and examine the books and accounts of working and existing concerns, and you will soon find that there will be fewer failures to tax to the extreme our skill and experience.

It has been, we believe, sometimes suggested as a grievance in the legal profession, and especially at the bar, that no direct pecuniary benefit is derived in proportion to the amount in value of the subject matter, and it has been intimated that a large estate may be charged with higher costs than a small one. But it is obviously a work of no greater difficulty to deal with a property of large value than a property of smaller value, except such as is caused by a greater complexity of title. A larger fee would undoubtedly be paid from the very nature of the case, but the mere mechanical labour is the same, even though every figure be multiplied by ten. But take the doctrine of payment by results. Let the counsel be paid for his successful cases only; let the costs of every suit or action be a percentage on the amount recovered as easily assessable as the commission of a broker on the Stock Exchange; what fortunes would be made by the successful, and how soon would a cry go up that these heavy charges should be cut down. But the other side of the shield is less pleasant. There are cases which no man could lose, and others which no man could win. The highest skill and the most devoted industry might be hopelessly thrown away on a case which, from some hidden flaw, might utterly break down. Rident qui vincunt. The winners would exult, but with a heavy joy, foreboding that the next turn of the wheel might bring disasters and loss to them, and no voice would be raised against a return to the old ways.

It is strangely at variance with human nature, if the estates which yield the largest dividends are the estates which are administered with the most skill. On the contrary, the task of the trustee has probably been as easy as gracious. It is in the too frequent cases where a scanty dividend to commence with is eked out at intervals by small additional payments that the labour results. To those commercial moralists who, proud in their conscious rectitude and solvency, fortified by the colossal fortunes that their moderate profits have resulted in, after many years of toil, have publicly sent forth the now notorious circular, we will offer a very simple means of testing the truth of our statements. We will not ask them to become trustees themselves in the next bankruptcy which happens to any of their customers, though it is, as they seem to forget, perfectly open to them to undertake the duties. But a trustee can always be placed under the control of a committee of inspection, who have every opportunity of checking and controlling his movements. Trustees are constantly complaining in our columns that committees of inspection will not do their work, and that it is with the greatest difficulty they are induced to meet at all. Let these gentlemen, or any who wish to test the true state of the case, place themselves on these committees, and keep a sharp look out on the trustee. They will soon learn, if they pay strict attention, a good deal of the difficulty which they at present ignore, and may form a fairer estimate of the skill and labour involved, and of the duties of a trustee. We will undertake on the part of the profession, that any accountant trustee, be he whom he may, when they are appointed to inspect, will give them every assistance towards forming an opinion, and be glad of their company. Only if they will not look after their own affairs, they must leave off finding fault with those who serve them faithfully. The man who refuses to lock up "untold gold," must not expect to find sympathy or credence if he fancies he has been robbed. The best way to check the supposed misdeeds of trustees is to have the safeguard which the act provides, and to which no accountant will object. Till this is done all criticism and captiousness is premature.

That bankruptcy in its various phases is exactly analogous with the winding-up of Joint-Stock Companies, is a truth which we have often insisted upon. Bankruptcy is in fact a compulsory winding-up, and liquidation may be compared with a voluntary winding-up. But a company has some advantages over an individual, or, to speak more correctly, the creditors of a company are sometimes at a less disadvantage. This may be illustrated by the case of the "Universal Disinfector Company (Limited)," an association which, according to a well-nigh universal law affecting its species, gravitated towards the Court of Chancery for the purpose of being wound-up. A creditor of this ill-starred body had succeeded in obtaining judgment, but had not proceeded to execution, as a petition for winding-up had been presented. This it appeared from the judgment of the Master of the Rolls, was an unnecessary piece of courtesy. The creditor might, he said, have gone on with his execution, as no injunction had been granted to restrain him from so doing; but as he had seen fit to wait till a winding-up order had been made, his opportunity had gone by, and he must now take his chance with the other creditors. The moral of this case is, that execution and other creditors should be swift to enforce their rights when dealing with a company, otherwise they may lose the advantage of their judgments. In bankruptcy the general body of the creditors are more favoured at the expense of the individual. In the first place, the proceeds of the sale of goods taken in execution are to be retained for fourteen days, and not paid over to the claimant if within that time notice is given to the sheriff of a petition either for bankruptcy or liquidation having been filed. In this event the amount realised is to be paid over to the trustee (sec. 87 of the Bankruptcy Act). Notice, too, of any prior act of bankruptcy invalidates any execution as against a trustee, and a petition for liquidation is within the meaning of these words. Companies have therefore some few more guarantees for the protection of their judgment creditors than individuals.

Correspondence.

AUDITORS AND AUDITING.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—I have read with satisfaction the article in your paper of the 8th instant, drawing attention to the remarks which fell from the chairman at the recent meeting of the Institute of Accountants, on this subject, relating as it does, to my mind, to the most important and valuable branch of the profession at the present time, although so lightly thought of apparently by the commercial world generally that instead of being the first thing considered, it appears to be the last which presents itself to those who promote, float, and conduct the business of companies whose capital belongs to the general public.

Were the duties of auditors rightly understood and appreciated by shareholders, and the great advantage of accountancy as regards its essence discerned by what are termed "business people" generally, the public accountant, instead of being shunned and abused as he now is, as a "commercial undertaker," would and should, hold the position of a medical practitioner; the one, if called in before it is too late, saving the body from the clutches of death, the other, if likewise called in for the purpose of knowing the real state of affairs in times of prosperity, being able in most cases to prevent the necessity for services to save as much as possible to creditors from a wrecked business. Especially is this early appreciation of the necessity for a proper system of account being commenced with, and a practical auditor appointed to supervise the same,—valuable in the case of a company formed for the purpose of taking over a private concern, when, as is generally the case, the vendors are appointed managing directors, their colleagues on the board being frequently non-business men. But so long as the accounts are left out of consideration until the time of audit arrives, viz. at the end of the year, as is now the case, the value of that supposed check, is simply nil; hence the frequent collapse of companies whose balance sheets have nevertheless been approved and signed by auditors. Why? because their duty is considered to be fulfilled by a certificate to the effect that the balances as extracted from ledgers are correct, payment being made of a fee which about represents the time value of clerical labour. Such auditing is nothing more nor less than a shell without kernel, whilst what is wanted is the reverse.

What auditor could not prove by experience, how anxious are directors to keep down salaries, and auditors fees, whilst the greatest laxity has been shown in nearly every other class of expenditure, even to the absolute squandering of the shareholders' money. Of course there are exceptions, but they are I am quite sure rare.

If an auditor is to see that the shareholders (other than those forming the direction) are, as it were, represented in his person at the Board, (which to my mind is the very essential of such an officer,) it at once becomes apparent that his position is not only a very important and (honestly fulfilled) a most valuable one to the shareholders, but it is equally clear that it must in very many cases be unpleasant to a degree. I have always considered auditing under existing circumstances, to be a thorough sham, and so it always will be, until the shadow gives place to a reality, and responsibility is imposed and paid for, as it ought to be.

How often does one not notice balance sheets printed and audited, having as "assets" large amounts representing expenditure of capital ostensibly for the purpose of extending a business purchased at a handsome price for the goodwill, but in reality thus doubling or nearly so, and not unfrequently more than doubling,—that very price, and reducing the working capital,—the need of an increase of which was the stated reason for forming the company. In such a case as this an auditor, having the power to express an opinion on all matters of account, would surely point out that before parting with any of the capital for the purpose of extending that which was considered good enough in itself to pay a price for, it would be better to test the real value of the purchase first, and thereafter, if the result were satisfactory a judicious expenditure to be spread over three or four years, might then be reasonably decided upon, but not if it proved that the price given for the business was already excessive,— as the increased capital to work with should extend the connection paid for.

In the case also of patents being purchased, the "asset" side of a balance sheet frequently contains an item which, thoroughly investigated, would prove that the expenditure if represented ought properly to be borne by the vendor and not by the company, for perfecting that which in theory promised great things, but which in practice was found valueless until a large additional sum from capital had been expended to perfect it, thus placing in jeopardy the whole thereof, or materially reducing the dividends, if any, the patent was expected at the outset, by reliance on theory only, to produce.

Much more might be written on the subject in proof of the great importance to the public, and individuals, of bona-fide auditing in the true sense, but I have already taken up too much of your space, which I had hoped might be occupied on the same topic by abler pens; I trust, however, the outline I have sketched may be taken up by the profession with the view of substantiating our claim to be recognised, as solicitors are. Buyers and sellers in their vain conceit look down upon all other departments of business and pooh pooh accounts, which many say can be kept in their heads forgetting that death has a claim on their bodies of which the head, I believe, is a part, and that consequently, but for well kept accounts, much would be lost to their families. But it would not be difficult to prove that accountants are not naturally "wreckers" as they are often styled, but that on the contrary, if their services be used in time, their peculiar province is to save the necessity for bankruptcy proceedings by an efficient system of account and periodical audit, whilst a business is prosperous, or at any rate, solvent.

If traders and shareholders in commercial undertakings, as also directors would overcome their scepticism as to the value of proper accountancy, in due time the bankruptcy court would be very considerably relieved, whilst the labour and experience of professional accountants would become appreciated as it ought to be, thus proving mutually profitable to them and to their clients.

"A stitch in time saves nine," is an old saying worthy of practical application in the present day, and especially is it true as applying to the value of an accountant's services.

Yours truly,

A. S. A. E.

London, 11*th May*, 1875.

LAWYERS AND ACCOUNTANTS.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—Your issue of the 8th inst. communicates to us the startling fact that a country solicitor is desirous of bringing out an original, but rather indefinite patent, to be called, probably, "the accountant-crusher." As you very properly remark "professional robbery," has assumed quite another aspect. The Comptroller's reports certainly show that accountants only get about a tenth of the costs paid under the Bankruptcy laws, the majority of the remaining nine-tenths passing into the hands of solicitors. In a previous edition you quoted a similar letter, wherein a solicitor took exception to a charge by an accountant of 1s. 8d., for writing a letter. "Oh, that mine enemy would write a book;" he would have charged 3s. 6d., or more than double. The country solicitor, however, unconsciously defends our cause in the following paragraph. "The judges should have power to commit them for contempt of court, for say three months, persons should have remedy by actions for penalties, and the magistrates should also have power." The amount of twaddle in this one sentence is immense! but, I take it that if actions could be brought against us, it would have to be on the ground of our having some recognised status, and all we ask is that our status may be recognised and defined, and that we may be held amenable for our acts. I was in a court of justice yesterday, when a very disgraceful case was tried, and as the evidence was being elicited, I asked which was the pot, and which the kettle. If it is iniquitous for accountants to live by their professional services, it is equally abominable for solicitors to get a living out of their profession, and as the solicitors practising in the United Kingdom, far outnumber the accountants, England would appear to be a dreadful place to live in, as being a place largely peopled by parasites who prey on the vitals, not only of non-professionals, but also upon each other. I could tell you some horrible tales about solicitors, who have received their clients' money, made away with it, absconded, defrauded widows and orphans, and oppressed the poor, and it is possible to find that at some time or other one solicitor has been executed for murder. I could also tell you that there are solicitors practising in this city with whom no respectable accountant would ally himself; I could tell you that I have refused business—profitable business—from solicitors, in consequence of their dishonourable conduct; but, I do not for one moment attempt to convey the idea that because some blackguards have crept into the legal profession and not been expelled therefrom, therefore, a solicitor is necessarily to be shunned like a poisonous snake: on the contrary, some of my dearest friends are lawyers, men whom I respect, both in business and in private life, who hold out the right hand of friendship to me, and put business in my way. Each of us attends to his particular duties, without encroaching on the other, and we find ourselves mutual gainers, while our clients are benefited by the joint experience. Orthodox medical practitioners are fond of making raids on unauthorised ones, and for years struggled to include homœopathic practitioners in that category; nevertheless, the homœopaths have not only held their own, but have advanced yearly in public estimation, as is proved by the handsome incomes which many of them earn, and the high manner in which they are spoken of by their patients. All thinking people recognise the fact that the hostility to homœopathic practitioners is on account of its being so much practice taken from the orthodox doctors. The lower the reputation and ability of Doctor Orthodox, the greater is his animus against men who have gone through, and passed in all the studies whereby he (doctor orthodox) obtained his degree, and probably ceased study from that day, whereas the homœopaths have had the diligence to study a second science, and honestly choose the better.

Let a country solicitor before he again rushes so frantically and irrationally into print, take the precaution of making the acquaintance of a few respectable accountants, and he will perhaps find that neither in education, business attainments, integrity, nor efficiency is he (the country solicitor) superior to the average (respectable) members of our abused profession.

I wish the gentleman in all sincerity an enlargement of his reasoning organs and better manners.

Yours truly,
J. C. U.

In the House of Lords on Saturday the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (1873) Amendment (No. 2) Bill was read a third time and passed.

At the last meeting of the Council of the Society of Accountants in England, Mr. W. Hawkins Tilston, of Wrexham, was elected an Associate.

A Railway in Bankruptcy.—A decree of bankruptcy has been issued by the Royal Court against the Jersey Railway Company, whose line runs from St. Heliers to St. Aubin. For several months it has been in possession of the Sheriff in virtue of an act of insolvency declared against it. In order to prevent great public inconvenience that would arise by stopping the running of trains, the court has granted permission for working the line until it is transferred to new proprietors.

THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND

The Third Annual General Meeting of the Society of Accountants in England was held on Tuesday last, at the Guildhall Tavern. The following members of the Society were present at the meeting: Joseph Davies (President), John Bath (Vice-President), E. N. Harper, J. C. Bolton, Harry Brett, Francis Nicholls, E. C. Foreman, Joseph Andrews, C. Pember, L. Blake, H. P. Gould, F. Beddow, W. Short, W. J. Parry, H. Bolton, E. T. Peirson, R. Everett, F. Tendron, Henry Leatherdale, Henry Bolland, R. R. Robinson, G. E. Ladbury, D. W. Lambe, E. C. Chatterly, W. C. Harvey, J. H. Tilly, R. J. Clarke. The Secretary (Mr. Alfred C. Harper) being absent through indisposition, the President called upon Mr. E. N. Harper, who read the minutes of the previous meeting.

The report of the Council, which was taken as read, was to the following effect:—

"The Society now consists of 201 members, of which 19 " have been elected Fellows. On referring to the accounts on " the other side, it will be seen that the balance in hand, on " the 31st December, 1874, was £161 9s. 1d. The amount " of £500 on deposit account, mentioned in last year's report, " has been invested in the names of the Trustees, in Canadian " 5 per cent. bonds, and a further sum of £200, derived from " the subscriptions for the current year, in New Zealand 4½ per " cent. bonds,—making a total investment of £700. The " formation of a library has also been commenced, any pre- " sentations to which would be thankfully acknowledged by the " Council. The Council also beg to report, that, their atten- " tion having been drawn to the fact of a committee having " been appointed by the Lord Chancellor, to consider the " working of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, they at once " memorialised his lordship, with the view of having one or " more Accountants placed on the Committee, grounding " their application on the fact that Accountants are as a rule " chosen to act as receivers, managers and trustees under the " present Act. From his Lordship's reply, there is little " reason to doubt, that if the profession had taken measures " to advance its claim to be represented on the committee " at an earlier period, his Lordship would have seen, not " merely the advisability, but the necessity, of securing the " advantage of its experience on the committee. Every day " testifies to the increasing importance of the profession to " the trading interests of the country, and to the necessity of " its being placed on a sound and more responsible basis; and " the Council are strongly of opinion, that the time cannot " long be delayed, when steps will have to be taken to secure " for it, by charter or otherwise, a recognised legal position. " The Council have, therefore, to urge upon each member of " the Society, the importance of his using his influence " amongst his friends, to procure their adhesion to the " Society, that when the time arrives, your Council may be " able to act with authority as representatives of a large and " influential portion of the Accountants in England."

The report was accompanied by a financial statement for the year ending December 31st, 1874, which showed that at the close of the year the Society had in hand and at the bank the sum of £161 9s. 1d., and the sum of £533 15s. invested.

The President, in commenting upon the leading features of the report, said the Society had made satisfactory progress as regards numbers, for they had now 202 members, of whom 19 are Fellows; and as to the pecuniary position, a total of £695 4s. 1d. stood to the good of the Society on the 31st December, 1874. Considering that the Society had only been three years in existence, he thought they might fairly congratulate themselves upon this state of affairs. This was all very well, as showing the stability and progress of the Society; but they would all be anxious to know what progress had been made towards the development of accountancy. (Hear.) Amongst other matters brought forward with this view, the Council had been empowered to form a library, and they had got the nucleus of one which he hoped would prove worthy of the Society. He thought the action of the Council as to the Bankruptcy Act afforded evidence of the advantage of such a Society as theirs. If the Society had not been in existence, how, he asked, could they possibly have approached the Lord Chancellor on such a question? (Hear.) This also showed the necessity of a charter, for the protection of the interests of the profession. A charter would be difficult to get, but he did not look upon the task as insurmountable. In a charter, too, he saw a way of solving the difficult question of accountants' charges. He called upon members to use their influence with the gentlemen representing their respective neighbourhoods in parliament, towards obtaining a Charter of Incorporation: and he asked them to bear in mind this point, that a Charter would have to be based, not simply upon the requirements of accountants, but upon the requirements of society generally. (Hear.) If they did not approach the matter in that spirit, they would not succeed. (Applause.) Part of the report deal with the question of students. He thought they ought to give every encouragement to students to come and study under efficient members of the profession,—to give them, in fact, every facility possible with the view to making them good accountants. (Hear.) In conclusion, the President formally moved the adoption of the report and financial statement.

Mr. HARRY BRETT seconded, and the resolution was carried nem. dis.

Mr. JOHN BATH then moved a resolution in regard to certain alterations of the rules as to the re-election of members of the Council. Mr. Bath's resolution was as follows:—

"That Rules 35 and 36 be struck out, and in their place the following rules be inserted:—35. At each Annual General Meeting five Members of the Council shall retire, who shall be eligible for re-election. 36. The Council may determine among themselves the five members who shall retire, and in case of difference the rota shall be determined by ballot among the members of the Council. And that the latter part of Rule 38, commencing—'And the Members,' be struck out."

He said the object was to secure and retain upon the Council gentlemen who were able and willing to devote their time and attention to the affairs of the Society.

Mr. FOREMAN seconded the resolution, which was carried after a short discussion.

The names of the gentlemen selected to retire were then read, viz.—Messrs. J. F. Arnold, G. M. Bright, T. J. Sabine, P. Triggs, and W. H. Watson. It appeared that the majority of these gentlemen had not attended at all, and the remainder only one or two meetings of the Council.

The CHAIRMAN than moved that the following gentlemen be elected to fill these vacancies:—Robert Buck, 17 Fawcett-street, Sunderland; Frederick Tendron, 105 Fenchurch-street, E.C.; William John Parry, 4 William's-court, Bethesda; Walter Newton Fisher, 13 Waterloo-street, Birmingham. He also proposed that the name of the Secretary (Mr. Alfred C. Harper) be added to the Council.

Mr. FOREMAN, in seconding the proposition, bore testimony to the satisfactory manner in which the Secretary had performed his duties.

The gentlemen named were then elected without opposition.

The next business being the election of Auditors,

Mr. H. BRETT proposed that Messrs. R. R. Robinson (London), and C. Pember (Hereford) be elected auditors in the room of Messrs. C. Cooper and William Short.

Mr. ANDREWS seconded.

Mr. TENDRON had no objection to the change proposed in the present instance, but he thought it very undesirable that a Society of this kind should lay down the principle of changing auditors every year.

It was explained that there was no object in making the change beyond the desire to infuse a little new blood into the official element, and the resolution was then passed with a few complimentary remarks from the Chairman in regard to the late auditors.

Mr. JOHN BATH then proposed, and Mr. FOREMAN seconded, the re-election of Mr. J. C. Bolton as treasurer, the proposition being carried with an expression of thanks to Mr. Bolton for his services.

Mr. E. T. PEIRSON proposed, and Mr. W. C. HARVEY seconded the election of Mr. Ebenezer Chambers Foreman, of 7 Gresham-street, as a Fellow of the Society.

Mr. JOHN BATH having said a few words in support, Mr. Foreman was unanimously elected.

Mr. H. BRETT proposed, and Mr. E. C. FOREMAN seconded, that Mr. William John Parry, of 14 William's-court, Bethesda, be elected a Fellow of the Society, the resolution being carried unanimously.

Mr. JOHN BATH thought it was desirable to extend the field of operations of the Society. At present, the title of the Society being "The Society of Accountants in England," an accountant in Scotland or Ireland might take it for granted that he was not eligible for election. He therefore asked the meeting to pass a resolution to the following effect:—

"That the Council of this Society be empowered to receive applications from, and admit as members of the Society, persons who may reside in Great Britain, or any of the dependencies of the British Crown."

Mr. Lovewell Blake seconded, and Messrs. H. Brett and J. C. Bolton spoke in support of the resolution.

Mr. F. N. HARPER remarked that the Secretary had received one application for membership from Hong Kong. (Laughter.)

The resolution was then put to the meeting and carried.

Mr. JOHN BATH next proposed the following resolution:—

"That the Council be empowered to expend such money as they may see fit, not exceeding the sum of one hundred pounds, towards the promotion of amendments and improvements in the Bankruptcy and other laws relating to debtors and creditors."

The resolution was seconded by Mr. W. J. Parry, and after expressions of approval on the part of several members, it was put to the meeting and carried without opposition.

The proceedings at the business meeting were then brought to a close by a vote of thanks to the President, proposed by Mr. John Bath, seconded by Mr. Nicholls.

The members afterwards dined together, the chair being occupied by the President, with Messrs. John Bath and J. B. Geard in the vice-chairs.

The PRESIDENT having given the usual loyal and patriotic toasts, proposed "The Lords and Commons," to which Mr. Greenall, M.P. for Warrington, responded.

Mr. JOHN BATH, in proposing "The Legal Profession," said it used to be an idea that lawyers and accountants were opposed to each other: but, speaking from his own experience, which he believed was in accord with that of many other members, he thought that if there really was any estrangement, it was to be attributed in great measure to certain so-called "accountants," and not to the enlightened members of the legal profession. (Hear.) He could say for himself personally, and for many others, that when placed at a disadvantage, accountants had often no more strenuous supporters than the solicitors. (Hear.)

Mr. KNOTT, in responding, considered it no small compliment to hear the legal profession spoken of in such terms. When solicitors came to figures they found themselves at fault, and were very grateful for the assistance of accountants: indeed, lawyers very often got into considerable difficulty about their own accounts. (Laughter.)

Mr. EVANS, whose name was also coupled with the toast, thought the time had arrived when solicitors and accountants should understand each other. There really was no necessity for any so-called "encroachment" of accountants upon the legal profession. (Hear.)

The CHAIRMAN then addressed a few remarks to the company upon the desirability of the various accountants' societies uniting together for the universal good of the profession. There was, he said, no wish on the part of this Society to be at all backward in promoting such an object.

Mr. GEARD spoke of the necessity of such associations, arising from the fact that the commercial requirements of the present day rendered professional training indispensable for all those who were to deal with figures and accounts in the various transactions of commerce.

Mr. GREENALL, M.P., proposed the toast of the "City of London."

Mr. JOHN BATH, as a member of the corporation, responded to the toast.

Mr. H. BRETT expressed the hope that the time had arrived when accountants would see the necessity of fusing into one body, not only for the interests of the profession but for that of the public. (Hear.)

Mr. E. C. FOREMAN, in giving the health of the President, remarked that both solicitors and accountants were necessary, and they had each perfectly legitimate work to do. (Hear.)

The toast of "the Ladies" was next proposed, Mr. Henry Bolland, and Mr. G. E. Ladbury responding.

Mr. CHATTERLEY made a few remarks as to the desirability of making every effort towards securing incorporation. At present, any man, without training, could put a brass plate on his door, and announce himself as So and So, accountant; and so it came about that "accountants" not only figured in the law reports, but in the police reports. (Laughter.) He urged the necessity of getting the support of members of parliament on this point.

Mr. GREENALL, M.P. expressed his readiness to assist the Society in this respect.

The toast of the "Vice-President and Officers" was next given, Mr. John Bath, in responding, expressing regret at the absence of the Secretary.

Mr. BOLTON, the Treasurer, having responded,

Mr. ANDREWS gave "Absent Friends."

Mr. E. N. HARPER responded on behalf of his son (the Secretary).

This concluded the list of toasts.

WHOLESALE HOUSES, AND ACCOUNTANTS' CHARGES.

A meeting of public accountants, convened by the Council of the Society of Accountants in England, was held at the Guildhall Tavern on Wednesday afternoon last, the object being "to consider a circular issued by wholesale houses having reference to a scale of charges for accountancy work relating to liquidations and compositions." The following members of the profession were present, the firms named being also represented at the meeting: Messrs. J. Davies, J. Bath, H. Brett, Tendron, Geard, J. C. Bolton, E. N. Harper, Robert March, E. Harvey and Co., J. Killingworth, John Dyke, J. W. Kealy, F. J. T. Moore, Charles Colgrave, George Pye, Boddington, Luttman, William Short, Hill, Thomas Pickett, M. Frier, R. E. James and Co., H. J. Walter, Singleton, Fraser, Alabaster, Robert Pittman, F. Hodgson, Emdin and Robinson, J. H. Carter, Major-General C. Hill, John Champness, C. Pember, R. R. Robinson, B. Baxter, Alfred Beavis, Arthur Barron, W. Barrett, W. K. Marreco, Lovering, Thomas Meggy, C. W. Jordan, D. W. Lambe, S. D. Nix, W. G. Goodliffe, Sidney Smith, J. J. Kent, Henry Walker, Nottingham, Rutley, William B. Greening, R. W. Fleming, Benson, Seear and Dyson, Barrett, Harvey, Purday, Woodman, Turner, B. G. Austin, Bauer, F. R. Boydell, Westcott, H. S. Foster, E. P. Wilson, Parker, A. Shippey & Co., W. F. Smart, H. P. Gould, A. Smart, C. G. Carttar, W. J. Parry, T. G. Cooper, Everett, Whiffin, Schneidan, and Co., J. S. Parker, Charlton, Moore and Co., Hay, Newstead,

Mr. JOHN BATH proposed, and Mr. C. Pember seconded, that Mr. Joseph Davies, President of the Society of Accountants in England, take the chair. This receiving the approval of the meeting, Mr. Davies took the chair.

The CHAIRMAN having read the notice convening the meeting, said that they could not disguise from themselves the importance of the question they had now to consider. No doubt those who did not happen to belong to the Society of Accountants in England had in their respective societies discussed the vexed question as to a scale of Accountants' charges, and had felt the difficulty of determining what rate should be adopted. Hardly two cases were alike, and to draw a hard and fast line, would be to overcharge in some cases and in others to fix a sum not commensurate with the duties performed.—(Hear).—To-day he thought the matter must be discussed in rather a preliminary manner, for he did not expect this meeting to come to any determination as to the fixed rate of charges to be adopted. He thought there was sufficient in the scale to show that the gentlemen who compiled it had not given the subject the attention which it deserved. He would take the foot note which said "The following out-pockets will be in addition to the above charges, viz., possession-money, railway fare, printing and advertising, bill stamps, postages, and hotel expenses, not exceeding £10 on estates under £2,000." For a sum of £10 to be definitely laid down as quite sufficient to meet all these various items, showed on the face of it, that the scale of charges had not received the attention it deserved. But beyond the question of how far the scale might be desirable or proper, he asked, was there not a certain amount of impropriety in a scale of charges being fixed and determined by the gentlemen who have to pay those charges?—(Hear.) However, so far as he was personally concerned, he wished more to hear the opinions of others, and would therefore at once give way to any gentleman who might have a resolution to propose on the subject.

Mr. John Bath said that by way of saving time, he had drawn up a resolution, which he was prepared to submit to the meeting. In that resolution he did not propose to go into details, but simply to deal with the broad principle involved in the matter. They were all by this time pretty familiar with the difficulties of the question, which had been sufficiently evident for the last twenty years, but they had not at present been able to see their way to drawing up a complete and comprehensive scale of charges. A scale dealing simply with the question of assets would be idle and impracticable. (Hear.) The work of winding-up an estate differed as much as it was possible to conceive from any other kind of professional work, and they would in many cases be utterly baffled in attempting to arrive at a price estimate before the work was done. The resolution he intended to propose was as follows:

> "That a charge by way of commission only is not an equitable mode of remuneration, as the result may be very much out of proportion to the work done."

The meeting was called to consider a certain circular which had been issued, and he wished to state at the outset that the Chairman of the Wholesale Houses Committee had given him every facility in the way of supplying copies and information. He did not think they had any adverse feeling towards accountants. Mistaken they might be, but he thought the desire of the committee was to come to an equitable mode of remunerating accountants, although he did not think that the way they had set about it entitled them to admiration. In order to show the character of the circular he would read it over, only substituting "retail traders" for wholesale houses, and the latter for accountants. It would then read, that at a meeting of retail traders it was resolved unanimously that the maximum scale (enclosed) of the charges of wholesale houses be submitted to all the wholesale traders, who are invited to give their assent to those charges; and that a list of the houses agreeing to adopt the scale would be printed and circulated amongst the retail traders. (Laughter and applause.) What would the wholesale houses say to such a thing? But that was tantamount to the circular which had been sent to accountants. But he did not propose to treat the matter in that way. The movement would go on, and accountants themselves would be glad to see a settled scale, involving as it would a recognition of their position and of their work (Hear). As it had been remarked, if they accepted this suggestion, accountants would have only one object, viz. to get the commission in the shortest possible time and at the least possible trouble and expense. (Hear.) There would be no reason to look at proofs, no reason to take care that assets were equitably divided. It would simply be a race for assets, and that he thought was the greatest charge that could be brought against the scheme. (Hear.) He concluded by moving the resolution referred to above.

Mr. H. Brett said that as Mr. John Bath had so well touched upon the points connected with the question, it would not be necessary for him (the speaker) to say much. He would, however, refer to one point, viz., the responsibilities of accountants acting as trustees. Although the trustee might be acting with a committee of inspection, if any thing went wrong, he alone would have to bear the brunt of it. At the present time the Bankruptcy Laws were strongly in favour of fraudulent debtors, and he thought that they could not well offer a higher premium to fraud than this scale, for it compelled a trustee to accept things as he found them, and to make the shortest possible cut to the end of the business. (Hear.) As to the out-pockets, he might remark, that in a case which they recently had, the sum of £66 was paid for possession-money alone.

Mr. R. A. March said he was glad to see that accountants were at last rallying themselves together for the purpose of mutual protection. Some twenty-five years ago he called a meeting of accountants to consider an important matter, but out of the 200 or 300 accountants in the metropolis, only half-a-dozen attended. He characterised the circular as an impudent attempt to dictate to a class of men who ought to be the best judges of what their labour was worth. (Applause.) He considered the scale utterly ridiculous, and if they wished to maintain a character for honesty, he urged them not to attempt to do work under such conditions. (Hear.) A firm might require an accountant to minutely investigate certain books and papers, and could they if they worked honestly lay down a hard and fast line of payment to include such cases? (Hear).

Mr. J. C. Bolton said that because the movement had been confined to one particular trade, it might be supposed that it did not therefore greatly concern accountants who were not in that particular trade. But he looked upon it as the thin end of the wedge, and if they allowed it to be driven home, they might probably find themselves relegated to an income on which no man could live if he did his work honestly.—(Hear.) He hoped they would remember the fable of the bundle of sticks, and be united in their action. (Hear).

A member asked if it was known how many accountants this circular was sent to?

Digitized by Google

Mr. J. Bath said it was supposed that it had been sent to all in the drapery trade, but it appeared that it had only been sent to the most respectable houses who were understood to be connected with the drapery trade.

Mr. Tendron hoped that the circular would result in more good than might appear at first sight. No doubt men sometimes felt that the charges were unreasonable, particularly in the case of small estates. But he thought such questions as these should be a matter for negotiation not denunciation. (Hear).

Mr. Cooper suggested that a committee should be appointed to meet a committee of the Institute of Accountants, so that the two bodies might be in accord in regard to the proper course to be pursued.

Mr. Bath pointed out that although the Council of the Society of Accountants in England had convened the meeting, yet it was a public one open to any accountant who cared to attend.

Mr. Short thought the subject should be taken up and dealt with in a friendly manner.

Mr. Meggy thought they should not treat the circular as addressed to the general body of accountants. It appeared to have been addressed only to a few drapery accountants, and it was a matter for them to consider whether or not they would accept the terms. If they decided to go into the general question they might ask a committee of the wholesale houses to meet a committee of the accountants.

Mr. Pember said that although country accountants were not immediately concerned, it might affect them ultimately, and therefore they ought to support their professional brethren in London He looked upon it as most difficult to lay down a general rule as to accountants' charges. (Hear.)

Mr. Barrett thought that if they were going into the question of accountants' charges, they should not confine themselves to one or two branches, but should deal with charges for auditing, and other matters. He thought it would be advisable to appoint a committee to consider the entire question.

A Member said the circular referred to accountants who could be numbered on the finger ends, and he thought they ought not to take the slightest notice of it.

The Chairman thought it was a vexed question, and that it was desirable to consider the whole matter.

The resolution moved by Mr Bath was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

Following up the spirit of the first resolution, Mr. Bath then moved two others. which were put separately to the meeting and carried unanimously. These were worded as follow:—

> "That a resolution as to maximum charges under all circumstances, and without any exception, is not a reasonable proposition."

> "That in considering any method of remunerating accountants, particular regard should be had to the important duties and special risks they are daily called upon to undertake in addition to the work done."

Mr. Bath then moved a resolution to appoint a committee as suggested. The resolution, which was also carried unanimously, was as follows, the members of the committee being elected individually by the meeting:—

> "That a committee comprising the following gentlemen, viz.—Joseph Davies, John Bath, James Cooper, Edward Harvey, H. Brett, Thomas Meggy, R. R. Robinson, J. C. Bolton, Henry Leatherdale, A. C. Harper (Secretary), R. A. Marsh, and J Killingworth, be appointed to confer with the several Societies of Accountants in England, in order to arrive at some satisfactory scale of charges and remuneration to accountants in relation to liquidation, composition, and bankruptcy."

Mr. Bolton suggested that the work of the committee should not be confined to charges in bankruptcy, liquidation and composition.

It was, however, understood that the work of the Committee would probably at the close of this inquiry be extended so as to include other charges.

A formal resolution to the following effect was then put and carried.

> "That the foregoing resolutions be advertised in the Times, Daily News, Standard, Accountant, and several provincial daily papers, with the statement that a report of the proceedings may be seen in the Accountant of Saturday 15th instant."

The Chairman said he was not sorry that the meeting had been brought about, for he hoped that accountants having been thus thrown together, they would become much more united, and work with zeal towards the attainment of a charter. (Applause).

The proceedings were then concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

ROLLS' COURT, Chancery-Lane.

May 8.

(Before the Master of the Rolls.)

In re Oriental Telegram Agency Company (Limited).—Mr. Caldecott, for the petitioner in this case, said the evidence did not justify an order to wind-up the company, and submitted to have the petition dismissed with costs. Mr. Chitty, Q.C., and Mr. Bradford, for the company, said there was not the slightest excuse for the presentation of the petition, which might have been productive of irreparable injury to the company, and referred to the recent case of "Cadiz Waterworks Company v. Barnett," in which Vice-Chancellor Malins granted an injunction to restrain the defendant from presenting a winding-up petition as a means of enforcing payment of a disputed debt. The Master of the Rolls doubted whether that decision did not go too far; but if a man against whom a debtor's summons was issued might, if no debt was proved, bring an action for malicious proceedings against the person taking out the summons and recover damages, why should not a similar course be open to a company against whom a winding-up petition was presented without just cause?

In re Universal Disinfector Company (Limited).—Mr. Chitty, Q C., and Mr. H. J. Hunter appeared in support of a petition for winding-up this company, presented by the company themselves, on the ground of insolvency. Mr. Romer appeared in support of a creditor's petition with the same object. Mr. H. J. Hunter and Mr. W. C. Renshaw, for several creditors and shareholders, supported the company's petition. Mr. A. G. Langley, for holders of 460 shares, opposed; but the Master of the Rolls made the usual order, and gave the conduct of the winding-up to Mr. Romer's clients. Mr. E. Cutler, for a judgment creditor, then moved, in pursuance of leave given, for liberty to issue execution, notwithstanding the winding-up order. The Master of the Rolls asked whether there was any case in which execution had been allowed to issue after the winding-up order. It appeared there was no such case, although execution had been sometimes allowed to issue after the presentation of a petition on which an order to wind-up has been subsequently made. Mr. Cutler then argued that it was a case in which the Court would be justified in exercising the discretion conferred by the 87th and 163rd sections of the Companies Act, 1862. The action, which was on an unpaid bill of exchange, had been commenced as far back as the 18th of February, and but for the unwarrantable conduct of the company in defending the action he would have been in a position to issue execution before the presentation of the company's petition. The Master of the Rolls said the judgment creditor might have gone on to issue execution notwithstanding the presentation of the petition, inasmuch as no injunction had been granted to restrain him from so doing. The simple question he had to decide was, whether this was a case in which he ought to allow a judgment creditor to proceed to execution after the winding-up. The sole object of the Companies Act was to make an equitable provision in the nature of bankruptcy for the distribution of the effects of the company among the persons entitled. If a judgment creditor was entitled to no preference in the bankruptcy of an individual, why should he be entitled to any preference in the winding-up of a company? It had been argued that he was entitled to preference on the ground of hardship, because he had been misled by the company and prevented from issuing execution sooner; but whatever equity that might give him against the company, it could give him none against the other creditors, who were no parties to the alleged misconduct of the company. The motion must be refused, but he should allow the costs of the application.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir C. HALL.)

IN RE THE TECOMA SILVER MINING COMPANY (LIMITED).—These were two petitions to wind-up this company, which was formed in January, 1873, with a capital of £300,000, for the purpose of acquiring a mining property in Box Elder County, in the Territory of Utah, in the United States of America, and known as the Stanley, Lumsden, Orbit, and Gladstone claims; the consideration for the purchase being £280,000, £150,000 in fully paid-up shares, and £130,000 partly in cash and partly in fully paid-up shares. The petitioners were both former officers of the company in Utah, one their manager and the other their bookkeeper and accountant, and they petitioned for the winding-up of the company, as creditors for arrears of salary and other moneys. In each case the company disputed, but as the petitioners alleged without cause, the amount of the petitioning creditor's debt, and set up counter claims against them. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. Dawney appeared for the petitioner in the first petition; Mr. Karslake, Q.C., and Mr. Solomon for the petitioner in the second petition; Mr. Lindley, Q.C., and Mr. Alexander for a creditor; Mr. Greene, Q.C., and Mr. Grosvenor Woods for the company; and Mr. Nalder for shareholders. The Vice-Chancellor, considering that the debt of the petitioning creditor was disputed, would not make a winding-up order on either petition, but upon the company agreeing to pay each creditor £100 on account, and without prejudice, and to pay into Court the balance due in regard to their respective salaries, his Honour ordered the petitions to stand over, so that actions at law might be brought by the petitioners against the company.

IN RE THE FLAGSTAFF SILVER MINING COMPANY OF UTAH (LIMITED).—This was a petition to wind-up another company formed to work mines in Utah. Captain Forbes, the petitioning creditor, had obtained judgment against the company, but had not issued execution, because the company's solicitor had told him there was no property of the company on which he could levy, and the company having since paid the petitioner's debt, objected to paying his costs of the petition, on the ground that under the 80th section of the Act of 1862, the company could not be considered as unable to pay its debts (which was the ground of this petition), unless the judgment creditor petitioning had actually levied and failed to find assets. The Vice-Chancellor, however, held that when the judgment creditor was told by the company that they had no assets on which he could levy, that was evidence of their inability to pay, so as to relieve the judgment creditor from the necessity of actually levying; but as, in this case, the company had since the petition was presented paid the petitioner's debt, his Honour made no order except that the company should pay the costs of the petition. Mr. Lindley, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings appeared for the petitioner; Mr. Greene and Mr. Grosvenor Woods for the company.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before the HON. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE THE HON. W. F. O. O'CALLAGHAN, M.P.—This was a sitting for public examination. The bankrupt, who is member of Parliament for Tipperary, is described as of the Hôtel de Bade, Boulevard des Italiens, Paris, and of 31 Old Burlington-street. He had been adjudicated upon the petition of a firm of jewellers at the West-end, and at the first meeting debts amounting to £1,798 were proved, and Mr. Albert Marley, accountant, was appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection. The bankrupt did not appear to-day, and it was stated that he was unable to attend through illness. Mr. Cottman, for the bankrupt, asked for an adjournment, stating that his client was prepared to file his accounts, and to submit a proposal to the creditors under the 28th section. Mr. T. Lumley, for the trustee, consented to the application. His Honour ordered an adjournment until the 5th of June, subject to the production of an affidavit showing the cause of the bankrupt's absence.

IN RE FREDERICK FURNISS.—The debtor, a contractor, of 9 Victoria-chambers, Westminster, has filed a petition for liquidation, with debts returned at £35,000, and assets £30,000, consisting of a contract with the Justices of Kent for the erection of a lunatic asylum. Upon the application of Mr. H. R. Hodson for the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors, his Honour appointed Mr. Charles Beckwith, accountant, 70 Aldermanbury, receiver.

May 10.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE WILKINSON, WATTS, & CO.—The debtors, who are steamship owners, carrying on business at 90 Leadenhall-street and 8 Billiter-square, have filed a petition for liquidation, stating their liabilities at £100,000. The assets—which consist of shares in steamships to the estimated value of £75,000; shares in public companies, £10,000; policies of insurance, cash, bills and book debts, £35,000—amount to a total value of £120,000, but this amount is subject to realisation. The affidavit of the debtors stated that the stoppage of the firm was due to the recent failure of Messrs. Richardson. Upon the application of Mr. Brough, Mr. R. Fletcher, public accountant, of Moorgate-street, was appointed receiver and manager; and his Honour granted an injunction staying the proceedings at law of several suing creditors.

MAY 11.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE W. T. HENLEY.—The debtor, William Thomas Henley, described as of Plaistow, North Woolwich, the Pontnewynydd Iron Works, in Wales, and also of Fenchurchstreet, telegraph engineer and contractor, had filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition, and at the meeting of creditors recently held it was determined to liquidate by arrangement, a trustee and committee of inspection being appointed. The liabilities were returned at £212,000, the assets being of the estimated value of no less than £519,000. Mr. Millet now applied for leave to register the resolutions. The application was not opposed, but Mr. Penn, the chief clerk, called attention to the fact of notice having been omitted in the first instance to as many as 68 creditors, whose total debts were £4,199. It appearing, however, that the validity of the resolutions was not affected, the same having been carried by a statutory majority in number and value of the creditors, and that the estate would yield 20s. in the pound, his Honour gave effect to the resolutions by ordering registration.

May 12.

((Before the Hon. W. C. Spring-Rice.)

In re Stephen Henry Emmens.—The debtor, carrying on business as a merchant and banker in Old Jewry, under the style of Emmens Brothers and Co., has filed a petition for liquidation, estimating his liabilities at £140,000, and assets £150,000, consisting of the following particulars:—Numerous valuable interests in mines; stocks, shares, and debentures of joint-stock companies; freehold, copyhold, and leasehold properties in England and elsewhere; also chemical works at Rotherhithe and large premises at Redmoor, in Cornwall, used for the manufacture of arsenic. The Court last week appointed Mr. James Cooper, public accountant (Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, and Co.), receiver and manager of the estate, and granted an interim injunction staying further proceedings at the suit of various creditors, and on the application of Mr. Brough, his Honour now extended the injunction until further order. Messrs. Crook and Smith, Fenchurch-street, are the solicitors in the proceedings.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. F. B. Smart, of the firm of Frederick B. Smart, Snell and Co., to be official liquidator of the Australia Direct Steam Navigation Company (Limited).

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. B. P. Daniels, Public Accountant, of No. 7 Poultry, to be official liquidator of the Bream Iron Mining Company, Limited.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

H. Ready (Hickling)—A meeting of the creditors of Henry Ready of Hickling, Norfolk, clerk in holy orders, was held at Messrs. Blake, Keith and Blake's, the Chantry, Norwich, on Saturday 8th May, 1875, when it was resolved to Liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, and Mr Robert Baldry, being appointed trustees, with a committee of inspection.

W. E. Taylor (Accrington).—A preliminary meeting of the creditors of Mr. W. E. Taylor, of Enfield Mills, Accrington, cotton manufacturer, was held at the Clarence Hotel, in Manchester, on Tuesday. The statement of affairs, read by Mr. Collier (Messrs. Chadwick, Adamson, and Co., accountants), showed the liabilities to be £53,000, and assets £70,000, with £27,000 owing to secured creditors. It was resolved to carry on the business under inspection, Mr. Collier to continue to act as receiver.

E. Hopwood (Huddersfield.)—A meeting of the creditors in the affairs of Edwin Hopwood, Lower Aspley, Huddersfield, wine and spirit merchant, was held at the office of Messrs. Craven and Sunderland, King-street, Huddersfield, solicitors, on the 6th instant. The statement read to the meeting showed liabilities amounting altogether to £2605 11s. 5d., and the assets amounting to £888 3s. 9d. The debtor offered a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable in three equal instalments at two, four, and six months, but the creditors would not accept the offer, and they resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement. Mr. G. P. Cotton, accountant, Huddersfield, was appointed trustee, and Messrs. Craven and Sunderland were appointed to register the resolution.

Mills & Heywood (Manchester.)—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Mills and Heywood, cotton spinners and doublers, held at Manchester on the 6th instant, the liabilities were stated at £26,349, and assets at £5,951. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement.

Bennett & Glave (Leeds).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Bennett and Glave, woollen manufacturer and merchants, of King-street, Leeds, and Potterdale Mills, Dewsbury-road, was held on the 8th instant, The statement of affairs showed liabilities amounting to £25,610, and assets amounting to £18,548. It was resolved that the estate should liquidated under the liquidation clauses of the Bankruptcy Act.

G. Pulford (Yarmouth).—A first meeting of creditors under the bankruptcy of George Pulford the younger, of Martham, was held on Tuesday, May 11th, 1875, when Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, was elected trustee. Mr. Charles Henry Wiltshire is solicitor in the proceedings.

W. W. Batty (Yarmouth).—A first meeting of creditors under the bankruptcy of William Waddingham Batty, Great Yarmouth, oil and color merchant, was held on May 10th, 1875, when Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay-chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, was elected trustee. Mr. C. H. Wiltshire is solicitor in the proceedings.

Alfred Bowes (London)—This was a meeting on the 5th instant for proofs of debt and the choice of a trustee. The statement of affairs by Messrs. Browne, Stanley, and Co., public accountants, 35 Old Jewry, E.C., disclosed total debts £22,715 10s. 6d., against assets £6692 16s. 0d. Proofs to a large amount were admitted. Mr. Robert Hough, a creditor, and Mr. W. L. C. Browne, public accountant, (C. Browne, Stanley and Co), were appointed trustees to act with a committee of inspection. Mr. Baker (Lawrence Plews, and Co.) was concerned for the petitioning creditor. Mr. Finlay Knight (instructed by Messrs. Lumley and Lumley) represented the bankrupt and creditors; Messrs. Ashurst, Morris, and Co., Mr. Barrand, Mr. R. Gole and Mr. W. H. Roberts represented creditors.

J. Drake (Halifax).—The first statutory meeting of the creditors of Joseph Drake, of Derby-street, Woodland-terrace, Halifax, was held at the Talbot Hotel, on Tuesday. The statement of affairs, read by Mr. S. J. Beswick, showed the liabilities to be as follows:—Unsecured creditors, £506 14s.; creditors fully secured by mortgages, £1,237 5s.; estimated value of securities held by mortgagees, £1,490; surplus to contra, £252 15s. The assets consist of stock-in-trade and working tools, £92; book debts, £15; furniture, fixtures, and fittings, £20; amount to be received from works on various contracts, £166 10s.; and surplus from securities in the hands of creditors fully secured, £252 15s.; making a total of £546 5s.; from which, deducting £21 1s. 1d. payable to creditors in full, leaves the total assets £525 3s. 7d. The debtor made no offer of composition, and after a lengthened discussion, it was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, Mr. Beswick, of the firm of Messrs. Beswick and Co., accountants, being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection consisting of three of the principal creditors. Mr. C. H. Leeming, solicitor, Halifax, was intrusted with the registration of the resolutions.

B. WOOD (DUDLEY).—On Monday afternoon Mr. Benjamin Wood's creditors met at Dudley. The liabilities were £35,354; assets, £910. The debtor said he had lost £61,000 in four years by contracts made for coke, just before coal doubled in price. An informal offer of 2s. in the pound was made but not accepted, and a committee of investigation was appointed.

J. H. & A. BELL (DUNDEE).—A meeting of the creditors of the firm of Messrs. J. H. and A. Bell, export linen and jute merchants, Dundee, who suspended payment last week, was held in the chambers of Messrs. W. and D. Inglis, accountants: a statement of the affairs was submitted, showing liabilities amounting to £100,220, which includes about £30,000 of reclamation on foreign consignment accounts, and £1,050 of preferable debts. The assets amount in all to £32,390, and consist of assets of the firm, £24,706; assets of Mr. J. H. Bell, £3,300; and assets of Mr. Alexander Bell, £4,300. The state of affairs also showed a probable dividend of 6s. 3d. in the pound. A committee was appointed to investigate the statement of affairs. At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. J. H. & A. Bell, export merchants, Dundee, who failed a fortnight ago with £100,000 of liabilities, a composition of 6s. per pound was accepted.

JESSE MORSMAN (LONDON).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. Jesse Morsman, 4 Grove-terrace, Lisson-grove, builder and contractor, a statement of affairs was presented showing liabilities £6,082 7s. 8d. and assets £2,401 0s. 5d. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. E. C. Chatterley (Browne, Stanley and Co.), public accountant, 25 Old Jewry, E. C., was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

B. WOODS (DUDLEY).—On Thursday the creditors of Mr. Benjamin Woods met at Dudley. His liabilities were stated to be £32,354, and assets £910. The debtor said he had lost £71,000 in four years by contracts made for coke just before coal doubled in price. An informal offer of 2s. was refused, and a committee of investigation was appointed.

H. CRAWSHAW (FARNWORTH).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. H. Crawshaw, Farnworth, cotton spinner, which had been convened by Messrs. Hulton and Son, solicitors, Bolton, was held on Thursday. The statement submitted showed liabilities £2,128, and assets £2,223. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—At the Sheffield County Court, on Monday, a petition was filed on behalf of Joseph Radford, cutlery manufacturer, Boston Works, Milton-street. The liabilities are estimated at £1,200.—A petition has been filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court by Mr. Joseph Radford, manufacturer, of Boston Works, Milton-street, Sheffield. The liabilities amount to about £1200.

SCOTLAND.—The Dundee Advertiser says it is understood that in consequence of his funds being locked up in America, Mr. Robert Mackenzie, merchant, is not able to meet his liabilities, which amount to about £30,000. Matters are complicated by Mr. Mackenzie being at present on the other side of the Atlantic, where he recently proceeded with the view of realising means to forward remittances. Misunderstandings with an American house regarding transactions extending over a considerable period and of large aggregate amount are spoken of as the cause of the difficulty.

IRELAND.—The failure is reported of Messrs. Neil and Shaw, in the provision trade, and of Messrs. Alexander Guild & Co., linen merchants, both of Belfast. The liabilities in the former case amount to £40,000 and in the latter to £25,000.

IRELAND.—The estate of Messrs. Magill, Riddel, & Co., of Belfast, whose failure was announced ten days ago, is expected to turn out very badly. A large portion of the assets are in Havana, and cannot be profitably realised. Their liabilities amount to £59,000.—North British Daily Mail.

AMERICA.—American advices report the suspension of Messrs. J. B. Fry and Co., in the shoe trade, Lynn, Mass., with liabilities of £8,000; and of Messrs. Brown Brothers, in the same trade and place, with liabilities close on £16,000. Mr. M'Murray, butter dealer, Delhi, N.Y., had also failed, with liabilities at £8,000. Mr. A. K. Forbes, flax-spinner, Hatton-mill, near Arbroath, suspended payment on Saturday. The state of his affairs is not yet known.—New York advices report the suspension of Messrs. Brown Brothers, in the shoe trade, Lynn, Massachusetts, with liabilities close on £16,000.

WINDING-UP.—Vice-Chancellor Malins has made an order for the compulsory winding-up of the Cornish Consolidated Iron Mines Corporation (Limited).—A petition for the winding-up of the Tynemouth (Borough) Tramways Company (Limited) is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 28th inst.—A petition to wind up the Ifton Rhyn Collieries, (Limited) has been presented to the Court of Chancery.

LANDED ESTATES.—Mr. E. J. Wilson, the secretary of the Estate Exchange, has published the following return of Landed Estates, &c., from the 1st of January to the 30th of April, as compared with the three preceeding years:—Return of landed estates, &c., registered as sold by public auction and and by private contract at the Estate Exchange, Tokenhouse-yard, E.C.:—January 1 to April 30—1872, £1,560,394; 1873 £1,378,492; 1874, £1,600,727; 1875, £1,979,488.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

AT A MEETING OF PUBLIC ACCOUNTANTS

CONVENED BY THE

COUNCIL OF THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND,

Held at the GUILDHALL TAVERN, on Wednesday, the 12th inst.,

"TO consider a Circular issued by Wholesale Houses, having reference to a Scale of Charges for Accountancy Work relating to Liquidations and Compositions." MR. JOSEPH DAVIES, PRESIDENT S.A.E., in the Chair, the following Resolutions, moved by MR. JOHN BATH VICE-PRESIDENT, S.A.E., were carried unanimously, viz.:—

(1.) That a charge by way of commission only, is not an equitable mode of remuneration, as the result may be very much out of proportion to the work done.

(2.) That a resolution as to maximum charges under all circumstances and without any exception, is not a reasonable proposition.

(3.) That, in considering any method of remunerating Accountants, particular regard should be had to the important duties and special risks they are called upon to undertake in addition to the work done.

(4.) That a Committee, comprising the following gentlemen:—Joseph Davies, John Bath, James Cooper, Edward Harvey, H. Brett, Thomas Meggy, R. R. Robinson, J. C. Bolton, Henry Leatherdale, A. C. Harper (Sec.), R. A. March, and J. Killingworth, be appointed to confer with the several Societies of Accountants in England, in order to arrive at some satisfactory scale of charges and remuneration to Accountants in relation to Liquidation, Composition, and Bankruptcy.

(5.) That the foregoing resolutions be advertised in the Times, Daily News, Standard, Accountant, and several Provincial Daily Papers, with the statement that a report of the proceedings may be seen in the Accountant newspaper of Saturday, 15th instant.

TRANSLATIONS.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,

BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,

62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages, on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

We make no apology to our readers for returning to the subject of the important meeting at the Guildhall Tavern, which we can but regard as one likely to have the greatest possible influence on the future of the profession in many ways, and especially in one perhaps the most important of all. For a long time, the calling of accountant has been one holding no particular position, and accountants themselves have been but little alive to the necessity of organization. There has been want of mutual sympathy, and want of cohesion. The great city firms have looked down upon their provincial brethren, and have left the name of accountant to be usurped by the nondescript fry whose doings have given such offence to our grave legal contemporaries, and against whose invasion of the province of other professions, we have been not the least strenuous in protesting. It is only within the last few years that the various societies have been formed; and even now there are still divisions and disunion in the ranks. That these societies should be united,—that accountants should be governed by common rules and regulations, and, as far as possible, assimilated in details of order and governance to other professional bodies, is what we have often insisted upon. But what friendly counsel and willing advice have hitherto failed to do, may yet be brought about by external pressure. The instinct of self-defence seems likely to consolidate the various atoms. The question that has been raised by the "Warehousemen's Circular" affects Manchester and Liverpool, as well as London, and necessitates that community of action which is sure to bring about a closer and more complete alliance. If it terminates in incorporation by charter, in a strict system of examination for aspirants to membership,—in the maintenance of a rigid professional etiquette, by which the honour of the profession may be jealously guarded,—and in the establishment of a fair and equitable scale of charges,—accountants may be grateful for the hostile movement, out of which so much good has come.

We have on various occasions dealt with the system of accountants' charges, and pointed out the difficulties of duly regulating them. Our observations have been addressed to the public at large, as well as to the profession, and we should have been glad to have the opinion of our lay readers on the matter in question. It is beyond dispute that the uncertainty of charge is viewed with general disfavour, and that the charge by time employed is one which may readily lead to abuse in unscrupulous hands, and is, in addition, very unsatisfactory to the employer. An accountant is called in to exercise his craft, and sends in a claim based upon work of so many hours. This is often viewed unfavourably. The accountant produces his diary and vouchers, and shows that he has actually expended the time for which he charges. And very possibly his account is true and exact, erring more on the side of liberality than that of stringency. But still there remains the fact that this work may have been merely the occupation of leisure moments, or that time has often been unduly wasted. And again, there is a positive premium on slowness. A quick, keen-witted man does more in an hour than another in two; and yet the same rate of pay is expected for each man's work. It is not our province to suggest a remedy. To find the due solution of the equation between time and labour, is the problem set. We can only invite attention to it.

Uncertainty of charge is equally difficult to meet. An accountant's labours may result in a statement which bears no marks on its face of the trouble which it has cost its author. A solicitor preparing a draft, knows that he will have something to show for his pains. The time it has taken him to prepare will be roughly estimated by the number of folios which it contains, and is remunerated according to a fixed scale. A barrister may write a short and apparently simple opinion, which may have cost him the most intense labour to prepare. But then the value of his work is estimated for him by a professional judge. The solicitor by whom the case has been prepared can form some notion of the difficulty of the task that has been set, and apportion the honorarium accordingly. But the accountant labours under the peculiar difficulty of working for an employer who may not be able to judge his merits adequately. It is impossible to fix a price beforehand; it is equally difficult to fix a scale which shall be applicable to all and every transaction. But on this point we may take a hint from the practitioners of the law. The aggrieved client has his remedy against extortion and overcharge. He can have the bill taxed by an officer specially appointed for that duty, wary in the devices of the attorneys, keen to detect error, and erring more on the side of judicial severity than of leaning towards the profession of which he has been a member. The client may be dissatisfied with the result; but he must at any rate own that the arm of the law has been reached out for his protection, and set in motion in a very simple manner. Let us, then, have a taxing master for accountants. If the charge is for so many hours, let him make due investigation, and say how many hours a man of reasonable skill would have employed. Let him work by a fixed scale, and on principles as clearly defined as those which regulate an ordinary taxing-master. This would gradually produce uniformity of charge; and though it might take some time before the effects were perceptibly felt, the benefit would be very decided. Of course, it would still be open for any accountant to make any bargain he liked for his services, independent of the powers that be. It might be very seldom that the assistance of taxation would be required. But the knowledge that this power of regulation and moderation existed would soon have its effect.

Our suggestions and remarks have been intended to apply to what we may term the non-contentious branch of an accountant's business. As regards bankruptcy and liquidations, to which the circular has drawn special attention, we have frequently stated our views, which we may here briefly recapitulate. An official liquidator is an official of the Court of Chancery, and as such amenable to the stringent jurisdiction of that Court; a sufficient safeguard against any overcharge by him. But we would frame a scale for bankruptcy business, giving power to the trustee to apply to the Court of Bankruptcy for the sanction of an extra payment on the ground of heavy labour. And we would meet the admitted difficulty of those cases in which the assets will not bear the burden of any charges or costs which would adequately remunerate any professional man, by restoring as an alternative the class of official assignees to whom such cases could be allotted; leaving it to creditors to appoint one of their own body trustee, or to make any other arrangements they liked.

We shall await with much interest the various replies which may be sent to the Society of Accountants, and the report of the committee of conference, and we shall also be glad to receive any expressions of opinion from our readers, both lay and professional. We feel satisfied that the present is an auspicious moment for the settlement of the question, for which accountants are as anxious as any one else. To frame a just and proper scale, is a task of admitted difficulty; but we have every confidence in the ability of the committee to grapple with it. But they must bring united action to bear. We do not advocate the formation of a close union, pledged to maintain high charges, and to put aside any suggestions of reform or moderation. Such a movement would most certainly fail. But to regulate charges so that all interests would be guarded, to protect the client from overcharge, and the accountant from undue parsimony,—is a task worthy of the best men of the profession; and we look to them to accomplish it.

"C. B. N." raises a somewhat novel point of practice, but we confess we do not see much difficulty in it. The case is governed by the 140th and 141st sections of the Companies' Act, 1862, which provides that a "general meeting for the purpose of filling up such vacancy may be convened by the continuing liquidators (if any), or by any contributory of the company;" and in the case of a sole liquidator dying, the Court of Chancery may, on the application of any contributory, fill the vacancy. We apprehend, therefore, that it would be the duty of the continuing liquidator to call such meeting. But if not, as the office is joint, he would have full power of acting alone. The case is analogous to the common one of trustees, in which property vested in several passes to the survivors by virtue of such survivorship. If "C. B. N." is stating a case of actual experience, we should advise him to call a meeting to elect a colleague; otherwise, any contributory may do so. But he is not actually bound to call such meeting, and can act safely till it is held, or if it is not held at all.

LAWYERS AND ACCOUNTANTS.—A legal contemporary places before its readers two cases in which unauthorised persons have been punished for performing legal work. In the first case, the Law Times informs us that "a Bristol tradesman has been fined £10 for illegally practising as a solicitor, by preparing a deed:"—although our contemporary remarks at the close, "We believe the offender styled himself an accountant." The two statements are hardly in harmony, but we presume our contemporary had good reasons for this belief. The second case was that of an "accountant and agent in Manchester," who "was convicted of felony, in having served a document falsely purporting to be a copy of a writ of summons of the Salford Hundred Court of Record, and was sentenced to four months' imprisonment, with hard labour." In the first instance no name is given, and we cannot therefore test the accuracy of the statement; but the name of John Kitto, the offender in the Manchester case, does not, we are happy to say, appear in the published lists of accountants. We can only repeat, that we have as much interest, and shall feel as little hesitation as the Law Times, in exposing cases in which persons are found "poaching upon the rights of the legal profession."

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Vice-Chancellor Sir Richard Malins has appointed Mr. James Cooper, of the firm of Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, & Co., official liquidator of the National Mutual Shipping Assurance Association (Limited), in place of Mr. George Whiffin (late official liquidator), who has resigned.

Correspondence.

Dear Sir,—It is sometimes a rather difficult matter to harmonise the different parts of the lex scripta of bankruptcy—the law of the "bankruptcy rules" —with that of the "bankruptcy act." But I confess myself entirely at sea on the subject of the lex non scripta of bankruptcy—the law as promulgated by the various Registrars of the London Bankruptcy Court. The rules of practice laid down by these officers for the guidance of the profession and public on points supposed to be outside the purview of the act and rules, are certainly puzzling and sometimes conflicting. One of the latest of these unwritten laws is, that in cases of liquidation petitions, no receiver shall be appointed by the court until after notice of the application for the appointment has been served upon the debtor. Any one conversant with the manner in which these things are worked, will see at once that such a rule as this must give undue facilities to the debtor for influencing the appointment of receiver; in fact, it must place the appointment practically in the debtor's hands. The Act of Parliament treats the property of a person unable to meet his engagements as belonging to his creditors. This being so, the sooner that property is protected, in the interests of the creditors, by the appointment of a receiver nominated by the creditors, the better. The system of allowing a debtor to nominate the receiver, which office is often a stepping-stone to that of trustee, has led to many abuses, and is responsible for much of the evil complained of in regard to proxies.

A somewhat extraordinary case, bearing on this question, recently came before the court. A liquidation petition having been filed by a large firm in the city, an application was made to one of the Registrars on behalf of large creditors for the appointment of a receiver. The Registrar required notice of the application to be given to the debtors before making the order, and adjourned the matter till a subsequent day. Later in the day on which the above mentioned application was made, the debtors applied for the appointment of a receiver; and the application was at once acceded to by the same Registrar, and the debtor's accountant was appointed receiver. This appointment appears to have been made, notwithstanding the prior application, and without notice to the prior applicants before making the order.

I make no suggestion that the gentleman proposed as receiver under the first application was better qualified for the office than the one who has been appointed. I can have no reason to doubt that the receiver appointed, being as he is a member of a firm of most unquestioned respectability, will carry out the duties of his office fairly and impartially. Still, this does not affect the principle at issue, which is, that if a bankrupt's property belongs to his creditors, it is their agent who should have the management of it, and not the debtor's. And although, in the present instance, the interests of the creditors may not suffer, yet it cannot but be a matter of frequent occurrence that they do suffer under the present system.

For myself, I confess that, rather than see that system continue, I should prefer to have an impartial person, such as an officer of the Court, appointed receiver in all cases. The creditors would then have a much better chance of being unfettered in the selection of the person whom they might desire to have as their trustee. If the services of an accountant are required to prepare a statement, or investigate accounts prior to the first meeting, he should be appointed by the Court upon the application of a certain proportion in value of the creditors; but the office and duties of accountant should be distinct from those of receiver. For the latter office a certain number of accountants might be registered on the Rolls of the Court, from whom the Court might appoint receivers, as occasion required. They would then act as officers of the Court, and presumably impartially, being accountable to the Court for their conduct. Then, in all cases, the first applicant for the appointment of a receiver should, subject to the approval of the Court, select the receiver from the list, and obtain the appointment. Trusting that the whole question of appointment, duties, and remuneration of receivers will be satisfactorily dealt with when the Act and Rules are amended,

I am, yours truly,
RECEIVER.

LONDON, May 11, 1875.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—I am induced to ask for some information from yourself and correspondents, on a "point of law and practice in liquidations," and I have in view "the Companies Act, 1862." I will briefly state the facts.

A joint stock company went into liquidation, and at an extraordinary meeting of the Shareholders, as it was supposed it would be prudent to appoint more than one liquidator, two were appointed.

Just as the liquidators are ready to render their final accounts of the winding-up, one of the liquidators dies. In the Act, under the winding-up clauses, it names several times, both with respect to official and voluntary liquidations, that if any vacancy occurs in the office of such liquidators, the company may fill up such vacancy. But, if there is no command to fill up such vacancy, can the remaining liquidator exercise all the powers of the former joint liquidators, without being specially appointed at an extraordinary meeting, to be summoned by him or the shareholders: and further, suppose money is banked in the names of such joint liquidators, (on proof being produced of the death of one liquidator) can the bank authorities raise any obstacle to the use of the funds by such remaining liquidator?

I cannot obtain an experience of a similar case. I should be glad of an insertion as early as possible of the query as above stated.

Yours faithfully,
C. B. N.

THE JUDICATURE BILL.—A deputation from the Liverpool Law Society and the Liverpool Chamber of Commerce waited upon the Right Hon. R. A. Cross on Tuesday, at the residence of Mr. Gilbert W. Moss, Aigburth, with regard to the Judicature Bill. The deputation urged the necessity of retaining in the bill the "vested rights of the County Palatine of Lancaster," namely, the Court of Common Pleas of Lancaster and its district registrars. They represented the partial promise to this effect which they had received, and handed to Mr. Cross printed statements of their case. Mr. Cross, in reply, said he could do but little in the matter himself, but he would present the documents to the Lord Chancellor.

BILL OF SALE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

At a meeting of the manufacturers, &c., of the borough of Northampton, on Thursday last, as convened by Messrs. Beswick & Co., Accountants, Stationers' Hall Buildings, Ludgate Hill, London, the following resolutions were adopted, viz.:—

1. That the bill entitled a bill to amend the act of the 17th, 18th Vic., cap. 36, relating to bills of sale, will not only not prevent the evils complained of in the preamble, but facilitate the perpetration of fraud by dishonestly inclined retail dealers and others upon trade creditors.
2. That in order to evade the 1st part of the 2nd section of the bill fictitious claims will be created, and, in the shape of cheques, bills, I.O.U.'s and other documents, brought up in the event of bankruptcy or liquidation, to carry the trusteeship.
3. That the last clause of the same section is impracticable.
4. That a petition in the following terms be signed and presented to the House of Commons:—

"To the Honourable the Commons of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland.

THE HUMBLE PETITION OF MANUFACTURERS, WHOLESALE MERCHANTS AND DEALERS OF THE UNITED KINGDOM.

SHEWETH,—

That your Petitioners who supply goods have been frequently defrauded by the holders of unregistered and secret bills of sale, notwithstanding the 17th and 18th Victoria, chapter 36.

Your Petitioners humbly beg leave to express their fear that the second section of the bill before your Honourable House, entitled a bill to amend the act of the 17th and 18th Victoria, chapter 36, relating to bills of sale, will not prevent the evils complained of in the preamble.

Your Petitioners therefore humbly pray your Honourable House to take into consideration the following suggestions:—

1. That no unregistered bill of sale, shall give the holder a preference over the grantor's other creditors, or any manner of right to the chattels conveyed, whilst they remain in the apparent possession, or use of, or on the premises of, the grantor.
2. That all bills of sale shall be registered within forty-eight hours of their execution.
3. That no bill of sale shall operate as a bar to bonâ-fide execution creditors who had prior to the registration of said bill of sale obtained judgment against the grantor in any court of law or equity."

A copy of the petition lies at Messrs. Beswick and Co.'s office for signature. The following are among the firms in the City of London who have already signed:—Messrs. Leaf, Sons & Co., John Howell & Co. (Limited), Vyse, Sons & Co., D. Dewar, Son & Sons (Limited), Smith & Lister, Fownes Brothers & Co., Rylands & Sons (Limited), Hutton & Co., Hitchcock, Williams & Co, Silber & Fleming, Olney, Amsden & Co., John Kynaston & Sons, W. A COUNTY COURT HIGH BAILIFF ON BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

[Although we cannot endorse a good many of our correspondent's opinions, we readily give insertion to the following communication, as treating the subject of Bankruptcy Reform from a point of view different from that taken by either bankruptcy lawyers or accountants.—ED. Accountant.]

SIR,—With your permission, and through the medium of your columns, I shall be glad, as one having had some practical experience in the working of the details of the law in its present form, to give the result of my experience to the bankruptcy reform committee, and from a stand-point which I believe has not hitherto been taken.

Both the Act and the rules are so very vague and indefinite, that the practice differs at almost every court in the kingdom, which, of course, is very undesirable, and is only accounted for by there being, in my opinion, too much of the permissive character about them. The intention of the Act in cases of bankruptcy proper, appears to have been to vest bankrupts' estates in the court and its permanent officials (sec. 17) until the creditors have had an opportunity of meeting together and deciding what course to adopt. This practice is pursued at many courts, but not at all; and it would be well, therefore, to say what shall be, instead of what may be done in these, and in fact in all other cases (sec. 13, rule 33). At some courts the appointment of a receiver is refused on the filing of a petition, although good grounds may be shown; but on an adjudication being made, a receiver is either appointed, or the property is left to take care of itself, instead of the proper officer being directed to take possession (table B, &c.); and all this confusion and indecision caused by "may" this, and "may" that. The main provisions of the present Act, in cases of bankruptcy, are, I think, on the whole good, and ought to be extended to liquidation proceedings if debtors' estates are to be protected from the shoals of land sharks styling themselves professional trustees, most of whom are as ignorant of figures and accounts as they are of the law, and who, strange to say, are allowed at many courts to copy the lists of creditors filed with the proceedings merely on payment of a one shilling stamp for search, and who then go "fishing" from one end of the country to the other in search of proxies from the creditors, promising eternal fidelity to their interests, but in reality seeking their own gain in the prospective trusteeship, which being secured, all interests save their own are thrown aside. There are, of course, many honourable and straightforward accountants who act as trustees, but who would scorn to stoop to such a practice, and who, having made a specialty of bankruptcy matters, are well qualified for the business they undertake. I would suggest that no search whatever, at any rate as a matter of course, of the proceedings filed at the court should be allowed, but under very exceptional circumstances, and then only on an affidavit setting forth the "object" of the search, which should be satisfactory to the Registrar, who ought to have power to allow or refuse the same in his discretion. Proxies, and, if possible (?), canvassing for trusteeships, should be done away with entirely; they are the source of most of the evils of the present system.

As a matter of cost—which seems to be the greatest defect of the present Act in the eyes of the public—I think the practice under the Act of 1861, of filing a list of creditors with the petition at the court, and the high bailiff preparing and despatching the notices to creditors, at fourpence each, including stamp, will compare favourably with the present practice of solicitors charging 2s. 9d. each, besides postage, and 3d. each for the registrar posting same, making a total of 3s. 1d. each notice for the first twenty, and 1s. 7d. each afterwards, besides other incidental charges! The high bailiff, even under the present Act, is allowed 4s. 6d., including agent's charges, for preparing, sealing, and gazetting a notice—say of the appointment of a trustee in liquidation—obtaining copy Gazette, and filing same, &c.; but although there is no rule either "directing" or "permitting" a solicitor to insert the notice, yet the scale of attorney's costs attached to the rules of 1871, allows him, for a clerk filling up form of advertisement and copy, 6s. 8d.; sending office lad to court to get same sealed, 6s. 8d.; ditto, folding and posting to Gazette office or agent, 6s. 8d.; sending lad with copy advertisement to file at court, 6s. 8d.; total, £1 6s 8d.! and this, besides costs of advertisements, &c.; out of pocket, and often other charges not in the scale, but usually allowed by registrars. Of course this is one item in a solicitor's bill of costs only. Under the old Act high bailiffs prepared and inserted all advertisements—surely this is a sufficient reason why they should still do so. If a notice, say of an intention to register resolutions where same objected to is served, the high bailiff does it for 4s. 6d., including affidavit of service, a 1s. stamp and filing, &c.; whereas a solicitor is allowed for his clerk or office lad—although there is no rule authorising either—serving notice, 5s.; drawing affidavit of service and copy, 6s. 8d.; oath and stamp, 2s. 6d.; attending to be sworn to affidavit and filing, 6s. 8d.; total, 20s. 10d.!

I have authority for stating that under the 1861 Act, taking about 400 small bankruptcies, the total average cost did not reach £20 each, including the solicitor, registrar, and high bailiff, or messenger as he was then called. The dividends occasionally reached 20s. in the pound. Then there was no appointment of a receiver—which now alone costs from £3 to £10, and £15, according to the ability of the solicitor's bill clerk—and consequently there were no receiver's charges, varying now from £5 to £150. The high bailiffs were already appointed, prepared their own warrants, took possession as a matter of course—(without making a costly application to the court), made inventories if necessary, prepared the notices for, and sent them to the creditors, prepared the advertisements for the Gazette and newspapers, and filed the same, superintended the realisation of the estates and many other minor matters, without ever a complaint of any kind, to my knowledge, being preferred against one of their number—the charge rarely exceeding £5; whereas the same result is scarcely ever now obtained for less than £50! In cases of composition under the present Act it is a reckless waste of money to require a second meeting, merely for the purpose of confirming what has been done at a first meeting. The creditors at a first meeting ought to be fully competent to finally decide as to the course to adopt; besides it is an extraordinary circumstance for a creditor who was not present at the first meeting, to "turn up" at a second, and where such has been the case, I have never known such an one object to what had been decided by the creditors at a first meeting; but suppose he did, in 999 cases out of every 1000 he would be powerless.

Whilst creditors have no opportunity of protecting themselves, all estates of insolvents should be protected by some official and responsible person—say the high bailiff,—who should take possession of the estate immediately on a petition being filed, bankruptcy or otherwise, and hold same until he can call a meeting by preparing and sending a notice to each creditor mentioned in the list which should be filed with the petition, and by preparing and inserting the necessary advertisments (which should be more clearly defined), and at a reasonable cost. All meetings should be held at the courts in which the proceedings are instituted, and be presided over by the registrar in person, with power to examine debtors, bankrupts, creditors, and witnesses on oath, according to a prescribed form, which would prevent creditors being misled and imposed upon by unprincipled persons, as at present. If creditors will send travellers into the country soliciting orders I cannot see any injustice, nor yet ought they to complain, if they are suddenly called upon to attend a meeting of creditors, also in the country, where they have literally "swarmed" about an unfortunate debtor so long as he "paid up" to time, and have not failed to "put it on" in cases of suspicion that all was not right, just to cover the extra risk and the expenses of the journey, &c. The creditors present personally at the meeting, or such agents only as are in their permanent and exclusive employ (but not these unless they are the only persons who can prove the debt, and have the general authority of their employers to transact all or any business in their names), should of course resolve what to do, whether to let the estate be distributed by the registrar or the high bailiff, or some outside properly qualified and substantial person as trustee, who should also have power to swear the bankrupt and examine him upon oath—that is, if the public examinations of bankrupts are to be conducted as at present—they being a perfect farce, and no examination at all. Once this was considered a wholesome terror to bankrupts, now the trustee is merely asked if he is satisfied with the bankrupt's (generally untruthful) statements, and this is called a "public examination," and the bankrupt is allowed to pass! ! Solicitors—many of them being also fond of pocketing a testament and touting for proxies—should not be allowed to act at any meeting, but as advisers only to their clients, who ought to be present personally at the meeting In no case should a creditor, if a tradesman, be appointed to the office of trustee, the practice of appointing "novices" having proved one means of increasing the cost; the work, in such cases, having to be done by the solicitor, for which, of course, he has charged "professional charges," meaning thereby about three or four times the amount that would be allowed to some other and more competent person; for as a rule solicitors are notoriously but poor men of business, and worse accountants, and therefore totally unfitted to act as trustees. Providing solicitors' costs being apparently the main object of the present Act, that may be said to have been eminently successful, solicitors themselves agreeing that nothing more could be desired! Why on earth should such an item as the following be introduced into an attorney's bill of costs? "Instructions and attending on debtor, drawing statement of affairs at 1s. per folio, and fair copy thereof at 4d., and attendances on debtor, and obtaining his signature thereto." Who have growled more than solicitors at the encroachments on their "rights?" Accountants, look to yours! (if any persons but solicitors have any.) In the event of no creditors being present at the first meeting, and the proper notices having been given, the property should then vest in the court official as trustee, preferably the high bailiff, who should at once proceed to realise and distribute the estate. Registrars should not be allowed to act in the quintuple capacity of judge, registrar, high bailiff, trustee, and taxing master, it sometimes happening that the duties of these parties lie in very opposite directions; besides, it is unwise, to say the least, to allow a man to be judge in his own cause. At some courts, the registrar, in addition to his registrarship, now acts as high bailiff, and, where such a court has bankruptcy jurisdiction, also as judge, under delegated powers. Suppose a case: A registrar, first acting as the "court," adjudicates a man a bankrupt, then orders himself, acting as high bailiff, to take possession of the estate. At the first meeting, the solicitor (knowing who is the taxing master) uses his influence, and procures the appointment of the registrar (or one of his clerks who receives a fixed salary) as trustee. Is it right that in such a case the registrar or his clerk, acting as taxing master, should tax his own bill of costs? The answer is perfectly clear, "One man cannot serve two masters." Some few people (accountants) object to high bailiffs acting as trustees. A short time ago, on an objection being taken by some accountant to the high bailiff of a County Court acting as a trustee, the judge expressed his opinion that the high bailiff of a county court was the very best person whom the creditors could select.

The high bailiffs proper, are at present being slowly but surely diminished in number, and got rid of as "expensive luxuries;" but if county courts are to exist, so surely must high bailiffs—the error made in displacing them having already shown itself in many and varied forms. No creditor ought to be bound by the proceedings whose name has not been inserted in the list filed at the court. The costs of a thoroughly competent and respectable accountant in assisting, to prepare a statement of affairs for the first meeting in difficult cases, might be allowed; but there is no necessity for the hundred and one charges usually made by accountants when acting as receivers. Restraining orders are also a mistake, and ought to be dispensed with; they are of no use whatever, and are very expensive. The fact of possession being taken by the officer of the court, or a petition being filed, ought in itself to be a "restraining order," and the notice of meeting to the suing creditors sufficient to prevent them incurring any further costs except at their own risk.

The rules relating to the close of a bankruptcy, release of a trustee, &c. might be simplified very much, and with great pecuniary benefit to bankrupt estates, the substitution of the word "shall" for "may" in the concluding paragraph of sect. 47 would also be an improvement, for this simple word "may," I believe, has caused more dissension than all the other words in the Act put together.

The failure to pay a dividend of less than 5s. in the pound being made, per se, a criminal offence, might have a tendency to induce debtors to "bring matters to a crisis" before all hope of a dividend has disappeared.

One great drawback in the working of the present system is the want of a provision for "foreign service," as in equity and ordinary County Court cases. The concurrent jurisdiction of County Courts cannot be too highly appreciated, and the "unlimited" jurisdiction now awarded these courts in bankruptcy matters, seems to have given almost universal satisfaction. It would be well, therefore, to assimilate the practice as to service and duration of process. Costs too in bankruptcy and liquidation proceedings would be very materially reduced byproviding that all notices and process shall be served, and all advertisements shall be prepared and inserted, by the high bailiffs of the courts, whether in a "home" or a "foreign" district, without exception. It would be cheaper by from five to twenty times to allow double fees, that is to the "home" bailiff for dispatching, and the "foreign" one for serving, than to continue the present practice of sending a man from north to south to serve a summons, as implied by Table B, there being no provision to the contrary, as in cases of attorneys acting by agent. What could be more simple or more effective in ordinary cases than for the "home" bailiff to re-issue the process to the "foreign" one, as in the case of County Courts' warrants or executions. Of course, in special cases special leave might be obtained for the home bailiff to travel personally into a "foreign" district, as in County Court matters. I have occasionally, in order to avoid expense in cases of great distance, sent process into a "foreign" district for service. Of course the "foreign" bailiff has claimed the 3s. 6d. and mileage (if any), and I have had all my trouble in the matter for nothing, such as writing with process, and again with fees, filing, &c., &c., besides being actually out of pocket for the postage. Where a solicitor has sent the process, in many cases the cost has been as much as the journey. As the rules at present stand relating to advertising the service of process, &c., they are anything but satisfactory, and if they are to be taken as the ground-work for the "rules to come," it may be well to note a few objections. Rule 50, for instance, states that a notice of motion shall be served; it does not say whether personally or otherwise, and may therefore come under Rule 14 or 58. The same remark applies to Rule 51. Rule 52 says: "In cases in which personal service is required," &c.—required by whom? To be served by whom, when required? There is an item in the scale of attorney's costs for "service," yet there is no rule which says that an attorney either "shall" or "may" serve the notice. Rule 58 says "Unless otherwise directed or permitted by these rules," &c. If the "direction" or "permission" of the court is intended it would be much better to say so, but it would prevent much wrangling and confusion and save a "lot" of costs, if the first eight words of this rule were omitted altogether, and the latter part made more definite. It would be well too, to define more clearly what are "sittings of the court." Rule 61 says, that "a debtor's summons or a petition shall be served by an officer of the court (Query: Who are officers of the court? I presume a receiver now is one?) or by the creditor or his attorney. There is no mention of an attorney's "clerk," as in sect. 2 of the County Courts Amendment Act, yet these are the persons who do serve these processes, and many of whom are "here to-day and gone to-morrow." There is no provision in any Act of Parliament that I am aware of, that an "attorney" shall include his "clerk," as there is with respect to "high bailiff," which does include his "assistants," and who, as a rule, are "fixtures." It is within my own knowledge that an attorney's office lad made an affidavit that he had served one of these sect. 2 summonses personally, whereas there had not been any service at all! One County Court Judge decided that "attorney" did not include "attorney's clerk" and I think very properly so too, though I know that others have allowed the service (?) to pass. The idea entertained by some solicitors that their clerks and office lads take more pains to serve process than the bailiffs, or are better informed as to the whereabouts of the parties to be served, &c., is a delusion: such being by no means the fact, but quite the reverse. Rule 3 states that the appointment of a trustee shall be gazetted and inserted in one local paper by the trustee, &c. Does this mean that the trustee shall attend personally at the Gazette office? or does it mean that he shall be responsible for its being done, and that he "must" or "may" employ an agent, and if so, must that agent be the high bailiff (Rule 58) or the solicitor. (Rule —, Sect. 125, sub-sect. 7, states that "all the provisions of this Act shall, so far as the same are applicable, apply to the case of a liquidation by arrangement in the same manner, &c." I know that the appointment of a trustee in liquidation is often advertised under this provision and in connection with the scale of attorney's cost in the rules of '71, although many in high authority are of opinion that this and other advertisements are not required. Would it not be well to say what is, or what is not, required in plain and unmistakeable language? The high bailiffs at most courts claim, and the registrars at some courts allow the claim, especially where the offices are combined, to advertise all notices and serve all process, &c., under Rule 58; the attorneys in many cases preparing and charging for the notices, but inserting them through the high bailiff, thereby incurring two sets of costs. It may even be implied by the present rules that this "may" be done, and possibly it "may" be the correct thing to do; but I cannot find any excuse for the registrars allowing the solicitor 4d. per folio for a "fair copy," and then charging the 2d. per folio for sealing same, and calling it an office copy. Office copies, I think it was intended, should be made and sealed as such by the registrar at the 2d. per folio. (Rule 12). There are many quite useless advertisements inserted, especially in the London Gazette, which might very easily be dispensed with, or, at any rate, they might be inserted if required, at one sixth the present cost, "as of old." Rule 168 states "service of a subpœna shall, where required, be proved by affidavit." When is it to be required, and who is to require it? Service of process ought in all cases to be proved by affidavit, which would be filed forthwith after service.

Rule 312 requires a trustee in liquidation to reserve dividends for all creditors whose names are inserted in the debtor's statement of affairs, &c., whether they have proved their debts or not. It would be interesting to know what has become of all the unclaimed "dividends" and "funds reserved" for dividends under this rule? I think that it would give more satisfaction to creditors generally if, instead of unclaimed "dividends" in bankruptcy being "vested" in the "Crown," and the "funds reserved" in liquidation being "pocketed" by trustees, they were divided amongst those creditors who had proved their debts, in pursuance of notice. Were I to attempt to point out all the defects in the Bankruptcy Act and rules of 1869-70, I am afraid that I should have to "write a book," and even then could not by any means succeed. I have, therefore merely taken a cursory glance at such defects as have come more especially before my own notice; and should you consider my remarks worthy of a place in your journal, I shall feel amply repaid for the little trouble I have taken.

HIGH BAILIFF.

THE WORK AND PAY OF COUNTY COURT JUDGES.

A County Court Judge writing in the Times says:—"The County Court Judges at present administer almost every branch of civil jurisdiction, and in this respect have a special, and I may say unique, claim on the consideration of Parliament. They have (1) a Common Law jurisdiction in personal actions up to £50, and by consent to any amount, besides jurisdiction in several special matters, such as the Charitable Trusts Act (1853), the Friendly Societies Act (1855), and the Probate Act (1857)—which may be considered their original statutory jurisdiction; (2) an equitable jurisdiction (1865) up to £500; (3) actions as to real esate (1867) up to the annual value of £20—which is more than £500 capital value; (4) actions referred to them by the Superior Courts (1867) of any amount, and almost of any description; (5) an Admiralty jurisdiction (1868) varying, under different circumstances, from £300 to £1,000 in amount; and (6) a Bankruptcy jurisdiction (1869), without any limit, and extending to any question whatever, either of Law or Equity. In 1865 the salaries of the Judges were fixed at £1,500, and since then there has been the immense addition to their labours and responsibilities referred to under the above second, third, fourth, and fifth heads, without any increase of their remuneration, while at the same time the cost of living has notoriously increased in a very considerable proportion—perhaps one-third. In the year 1867, when a Bankruptcy Bill was introduced into Parliament, Mr. Hibbert, the member for Oldham, and afterwards Secretary to the Poor Law Board, gave notice of his intention to move the insertion of a clause giving an increase of salary of £300 to all the County Court Judges, inasmuch as the Bill proposed to give all of them Bankruptcy jurisdiction; but the Bill did not pass. In 1868 Mr. Norwood, the member for Hull, introduced the Admiralty Jurisdiction Bill, and proposed an increase of salary of £500 for such of the Judges as had jurisdiction under the Act, but withdrew this clause on Mr. Hibbert giving notice of a clause in the Bankruptcy Bill giving £300 to those Judges who had jurisdiction given to them either in Bankruptcy or Admiralty; but again the Bankruptcy Bill did not pass, although the Admiralty Bill did pass.

"In 1869 the present Bankruptcy Act passed, and Mr. Hibbert moved the above clause, which was seconded by Mr. Cross, M.P. for South Lancashire (now Secretary for the Home Department), and met with considerable support from both sides of the House, but was held by the majority to be premature—a conclusion to which the sitting of the Judicature Commission doubtless greatly contributed.

"In 1872, when it was attempted to reduce the County Court Judges' incomes by an impracticable scheme with regard to their travelling expenses, the House of Commons unmistakably testified its opinion that the County Court Judges were underpaid, and by a resolution, proposed by Mr. Henry James, and seconded by Mr. Cross, stigmatized the conduct of the Government as 'inequitable and unjust.' Now in 1875 it is proposed, by the Agricultural Holdings Bill and the Pollution of Rivers Bill, to impose upon the County Court Judges new, extensive, and most difficult jurisdictions, without as yet providing any compensation to them for the same or for the additional labours already imposed upon them since 1865 by Act of Parliament, and to which must also be added the work of no less than four Circuits, which have been absorbed since 1869.

"While the country has received the benefit of the services of the County Court Judges in the various additional fields of labour which have thus been thrown open to them since 1865, it has also received direct pecuniary advantage from such services in several ways, and, at all events, in the following respects:—

1. Saving of abolished District Courts of Bankruptcy and Insolvency	£56,447
2. Surplus fees in Bankruptcy (say)	15,000
3. Saving in salaries of Judges of four absorbed Circuits	6,000
	£77,447

Digitized by Google

The second item requires some explanation. The Bankruptcy Act, 1869, empowers the Treasury to exact certain fees in Bankruptcy, out of which certain remuneration is given to the Registrars and High Bailiffs, the balance remaining in the hands of the Treasury. What that balance is I have been unable to find out from any Parliamentary papers or otherwise, but I understand from good authority that it has exceeded in one year the amount I have mentioned; and here I must remark that for every additional jurisdiction given to the County Courts, additional remuneration has invariably been provided for the Registrars and High Bailiffs. I submit that it is time for Parliament to "improve the position" of County Court Judges in respect of the increased work thrown upon them, for which the savings, and even the fees, arising through their performance of such work seem to provide a fund. It is quite true that the Judges have not all got the same claims; for instance, the Metropolitan Judges have no Bankruptcy, Admiralty, or travelling; but, on the other hand, they have more cases referred to them from the Superior Courts, and also heavier Courts than the average of County Judges; and I submit that any distinction between the County Court Judges in point of salary would be invidious, and that any irregularity in their labours might be gradually removed by the absorption of Circuits now in progress."

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE JOHN GREAVES.—In this case a petition for liquidation was presented by the debtor in November last, and a composition of 5s. in the pound was accepted, payable by certain instalments. The debtor was a boot and shoe manufacturer, of Hackney-road, and Norwich. He paid the first instalment of the composition, but made default in payment of the second instalment; thereupon an action was commenced by Messrs. Egan and Grimsdell for recovery of £424, the balance of their claim. The court, however, granted an interim injunction staying further proceedings in the action, subject to the payment of costs, it appearing that the debtor had called a special meeting in pursuance of the sixth paragraph of the 126th section, with a view to the modification of the terms of the original resolution. Mr. Cock now applied for an extension of the injunction, the creditors having resolved to accept 1s. 9d. in the pound in cash in discharge of their claims; and the 22nd instant had been appointed for the confirmation of the resolution. After hearing Mr. Lucas on behalf of Messrs. Egan and Grimsdell, his Honour, without at present deciding any question respecting the rights of Messrs. Egan and Grimsdell, held that the injunction must be extended until after the meeting appointed for confirmation of the resolution.

IN RE WILKINSON, WATT, & CO.—The debtors, trading as steamship owners in Leadenhall-street, and previously in Billiter-street, had presented a petition for liquidation, and the court last week appointed a receiver and manager, and granted an interim order staying proceedings at the suit of creditors. Mr. Robertson Griffiths now applied for the continuance of the injunction, and the order was made without opposition. The liabilities are about £100,000, and the assets consist of shares in steamships, £75,000, shares in public companies £10,000, policies of insurance, cash, bills, and book debts £35,000, besides office furniture and fittings.

IN RE W., G., AND H. WOODS.—Mr. A. G. Ditton applied under proceedings for liquidation by an arrangement or composition, instituted by Messrs. William, George, and Henry Woods, described as proprietors of the City United Club, Ludgate-circus, that Mr. Chatteris, accountant, should be appointed receiver of the property, and for an interim injunction to restrain actions by creditors. It appeared that the liabilities were estimated at £9,000, with assets £12,000, consisting of furniture, stock, and effects, together with the lease and goodwill of the premises. The court granted the application.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

(Before Judge HARRISON.)

IN THE MATTER OF SIR CHARLES COMPTON DOMVILE, BART.—This case came before the court on charge and discharge, with the object of setting aside a lease executed by Sir Charles C. Domvile to his steward, Mr. Robert Roberts, shortly before he left the country. He executed a lease of the mansion house of Santry Court, with the demesne, containing over 200 acres, for £60 a year, whereas it was sworn its letting value was £700 a year. Sir Charles Domvile was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 16th June, '74, and his liabilities then amounted to £30,000, and his unsecured liabilities to £25,000. The assignees impeached the lease on the ground of want of bona fides, that it was executed in contemplation of bankruptcy, and with a view to defeat and delay his creditors. On the other side it was submitted that £60 a year was not an extravagantly low rent, considering the expenditure which Mr. Roberts would have to incur in keeping the house in repair, &c. His lordship reviewed the evidence respecting the circumstances under which the lease was executed. He considered it conclusively established that it was executed as a cover, and with the intention of defeating and delaying the creditors, and he decided that the lease should be set aside, Mr. Roberts to pay the costs. Counsel for the assignees—Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. Carton (instructed by Messrs. Findlater and Blood). For Mr. Roberts—Mr. Purcell, Q.C., Mr. Andrews, Q.C., and Mr. Price (instructed by Mr. Froste).

COMMITTAL OF A BANKRUPT.—Judge Miller held a further investigation in the Court of Bankruptcy in reference to the fraud alleged to have been practised on the court in the case of George Meares, a bankrupt, who had carried on business as a stay manufacturer, at 2 Crampton-quay, in this city. The bankrupt had carried a composition after bankruptcy, and undertook to have payment of the last instalment secured by promissory notes from his mother, who was also to execute a mortgage to the official assignee of a small property in which she had a life interest. Notes and mortgage were executed, but the signatures were afterwards repudiated by Mrs. Meares, senior, and the witnesses examined on a former day denied all knowledge of the person who had signed the notes and mortgage. Mrs. Meares was now examined by Mr. Monroe, instructed by Messrs. Casey and Clay, on behalf of the assignees, and she positively denied ever having signed any of the documents. She also denied having ever signed the letter of retainer sent by the bankrupt to Mr. Rynd, solicitor. The bankrupt was also examined, but his evidence did not afford any new information. At the conclusion of his examination, Mr. Monroe applied to his lordship to commit both the bankrupt and his clerk, the witness O'Healy, on the evidence given. Judge Miller directed the bankrupt to stand forward, and, addressing him, said he was bound to ask had he any further explanation to make. The bankrupt replied that he had not. His Lordship then explained the circumstances of the imposition to him, and asked would he give any further information. The bankrupt—I have given all the information in my power. His Lordship—What is the amount of it? The Bankrupt—The amount of it is this, that I was not present when the deed was signed. I deputed parties to go to my mother's house and get her signature, and she was misrepresented on the occasion, and I know nothing about who misrepresented her. It is the same case with the bills, and it is the only thing I can tell you in reference to it. The witness O'Healy was then examined, and adhered to the evidence he had previously given. The Bankrupt—I wish to say, my lord, that the estate will realise 20s. in the pound; and if you like to commit me, I am willing. I am blameless in the case. His Lordship—You are an arranging trader here, and you undertook to secure your creditors by your mother's notes? I did. His Lordship—And on the files of this court there is an undertaking by Anne Meares which purports to be the signature of your mother. There are three documents now on the files of this court that are forgeries, and you are the person who procured them. I ask you again, have you any further explanation to give? The Bankrupt—I have no more than this, that I know nothing whatever of the person who misrepresented my mother, and I acted in no way disrespectful to this honourable court. I sent the documents out by three parties—Mr. Clay's Clerk, Mr. Rynd, and my own clerk—and if a personation took place, it is hard that I am to suffer for what I had neither hand, act, nor part in. I leave it to your lordship's discretion. His Lordship said he would commit them forthwith, and as soon as they refreshed their memories and intimated that they would make a full disclosure he would give them an opportunity of doing so. His Lordship then directed the shorthand writers to transcribe the evidence at once, so as the witnesses might sign their depositions. While the shorthand writers were transcribing their notes, his Lordship pointed out to the bankrupt the folly of the course he was pursuing. In the result his Lordship committed the bankrupt and his clerk O'Healy, who were sent to Kilmainham Prison.

BIRKENHEAD COUNTY COURT.

May 11.

(Before Mr. Mather, Deputy Registrar.)

Mr. Walton, barrister, instructed by Mr. Thomas Goffey, solicitor, Liverpool, made an application to set aside the resolution of a meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Brearley Wood, of Chesnut-grove, Tranmere, formerly carrying on business as an African merchant. The resolution was one accepting 1d. in the pound. Mr. Walton said the meetings had been held at the offices of Mr. Downham, solicitor, who was solicitor to the debtor and to several of the creditors. The liabilities were £4,923, and some friend of the debtor had deposited £5 with Mr. Downham for the purpose of securing a composition of a penny in the pound. At the meeting in question Mr. Downham voted himself to the chair, and having some proxies in his pocket, he thought he was entitled to do anything and vote what resolutions he liked. The resolution submitted to the meeting was the acceptance of a composition of a penny in the pound in full satisfaction of all debts the debtor might owe, and the composition to be payable on demand at the expiration of three calendar months from that date. At an adjourned second meeting the resolution was confirmed, all the creditors who took the trouble to attend voting against it, and the only creditors who voted for it were those who did so by proxy through Mr. Downham. No doubt they had adopted such a resolution out of motives of kindness to the debtor, and although there had been no moral fraud, yet there had been a legal fraud. Under those circumstances he objected, on behalf of several creditors to the registration of the resolutions.—A claim on the debtor's estate to the amount of £250, by the debtor's wife, Mrs. Wood, who voted by proxy in favour of the composition, was also objected to. It was stated that the bankrupt was indebted to her deceased mother's estate, of which she was the administratrix. The bankrupt was then placed in the box, and swore that he was indebted to the amount of £250 to his wife in respect to her deceased mother's estate, to which she administered. Mr. Downham, in reply, said that it did not matter what the composition was, whether it was a penny or a farthing in the pound, there was nothing in the Bankruptcy Act to prevent the creditors accepting it if they chose. He (Mr. Downham) represented the bulk of the creditors, who could not be termed friendly creditors. He never knew the debtor until he consulted him in the matter, and he filed his petition in consequence of several creditors putting him in the County Court, and sending him to Chester Castle for debt. He (Mr. Downham) found that the man was in a state of absolute bankruptcy, and had scarcely a shirt to his back. Under these circumstances he thought it was his duty, representing various creditors, to accept the smallest composition he could. Had he not accepted it he would not have done his duty to those persons who entrusted their proxies to him. Mr. G. W. Wood, shipbroker, of Fenwick-street, Liverpool, was put into the box, and swore that the debtor, who was his brother, was indebted to him for £2,644. On being pressed by Mr. Walton, he said that the debt was contracted on account of general transactions connected with his business. He could not give a detailed account of them, as his books had been taken possession of by the Court of Chancery. It had been very unfortunate for him, as he had been obliged to file a petition in consequence of the debt. There was over £3,000 owing to him by his brother. Mr. Walton pointed out that a proof of debt for £46 was not included in the list of creditors assembled at the first meeting, although it was filed with the other proofs and papers. Mr. Downham stated that it was not presented at the meeting of creditors in time, before the resolutions were signed. Mr. Rogers of Liverpool, accountant, swore that he handed in the claim just as Mr. Downham was beginning to sign the resolutions. Mr. Downham denied upon oath that the claim was handed to him before the resolutions were signed. He signed the resolutions while Mr. Rogers was cross-examining the debtor. His (Mr. Downham's) practice was to get rid of the meeting as soon as he could, and if he knew he had the majority of proxies in his pocket he got the resolutions ready and signed them, and let the other creditors talk as long as they liked. (Laughter.) Had the proof been handed to him in time nothing would have induced him to leave it out, but it was not. Mr. Walton pointed out that the bulk of the creditors which Mr. Downham represented were relatives of the debtor. Mr. G. W. Wood claimed £2,644; Mrs. Wood, the debtor's wife, £250; and Messrs. G. W. and J. H. Wood, a joint debt of £187, thus making £3,081 out of the £3,906 which Mr. Downham represented. After considerable discussion, the Deputy-Registrar ruled that the tradesman's claim referred to had not been put in early enough, and therefore he was relieved from the necessity of considering whether the debtor's wife had proved. He doubted how far he could go into the question as to the bona fides of the resolution. What he had to see was whether it complied with the requirements of the statute, and being of opinion that it did, he would register it.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

J. Graham and Co. (Manchester).—A meeting has been held of the creditors of James Graham, trading as James Graham and Co., shipping agents, Manchester. The statement of accounts showed liabilities £8,750 17s. 4d., liable to be increased by reclamations on consignments, and assets £3,629 8s. The debtor making no offer of composition, it was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation.

W. Page.—In this matter, in which the liabilities were estimated at £2,122 14s. 9d., and assets, £493 5s., on the application of Mr. George Castle, solicitor, of Cheapside, put before Mr. Registrar Spring-Rice, his Honour appointed Mr. Edmund Charles Chatterley, public accountant, (C. Browne, Stanley & Co.) receiver and manager to the estate.

G. SWAINSTON (SUNDERLAND).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. G. Swainston, shipowner and shipbuilder, Sunderland, held on the 11th, it was resolved to proceed by liquidation. In addition to secured creditors, there are unsecured creditors to the amount of £15,000, and the available assets are about £3,000. The trustees of the estate of Mr. Watson, shipbuilder, who had put in a claim for £5,000, protested against the decision of the meeting.

W. E. TAYLOR (ACCRINGTON).—A preliminary meeting of the creditors of Mr. W. E. Taylor, Enfield Mills, Accrington, was held on the 12th inst. The statement showed liabilities about £53,000, and assets £70,000; unsecured creditors, £27,000. It was resolved to carry on the business under inspection.

R. MACKENZIE (DUNDEE).—At a meeting yesterday of the creditors of Mr. Robert Mackenzie, merchant, of Dundee, a committee of investigation was appointed. The liabilities amount to £33,000, and assets to £5,500.

FAILURES.

The Daily Telegraph says: It was announced this (Tuesday) morning that cheques drawn on the City and County Bank, a small concern in Abchurch-lane, had been refused payment. A notice was also posted on the doors that the business had been transferred to Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co., but this arrangement, it appears, was not carried out. The total liabilities of the bank are supposed to be under £100,000, and the amount of its capital subscribed was £62,200. In case any importance should be attached to this incident by persons at a distance, it is right to mention that the bank is in no way connected with the well-known and old-established institutions of a somewhat similar name.

ENGLAND.—A petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition has been filed in the Bradford County Court by Mr. Joseph Leech, worsted manufacturer, Home Top Mill, Bradford. The liabilities are estimated at £12,000. Mr. James Wigglesworth, of Bradford, has been appointed receiver in the estate.

IRELAND.—The failure is reported of Messrs. Hupenden and Runge, of Belfast, a German export house in the linen trade, with liabilities variously estimated at from £40,000 to £100,000.

AMERICA.—American advices state that Mr. H. G. Morris, of Philadelphia, had made an assignment. He did a large business in Cuba in shipping sugar machines, for which he had been obliged to accept in payment Cuban notes worth from 40 to 50 cents on the dollar. He had consequently been in difficulties, and some of his creditors were pushing him. It is claimed that his assets will reach £120,000 to £160,000, while his liabilities will not amount to over £50,000.

The Rangoon Times announces heavy failures in that town amongst the Chinese merchants, and that more were expected.

The National Zeitung states that several firms in the corn trade have stopped payment at Leipsic, including Rudolph and Henkmann, L. Marx, Weber and Co., and Glass and Luders. The embarrassments are chiefly due to heavy speculations in grain and the fall in prices.

COURT OF CHANCERY.—The Court of Chancery will commence its sittings for Trinity Term on Saturday next. The Court of Appeal will sit at Lincoln-inn on the first day of Term and throughout sittings, which end on Saturday, June 12. Bankruptcy appeals will be taken on the following dates:—Before the Court of Appeal, Thursdays, May 27th, June 3rd, and 10th.

Mr. J. C. Bolton, public accountant, announces that he has taken into partnership his eldest son, Mr. A. C. M. Bolton. The title of the firm will be Bolton and Son, and the business will in future be conducted at 26 Great St. Helens.

WINDING-UP.—At an extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the Crenver and Wheal Abraham United Mines Company, a resolution for winding up voluntarily was passed unanimously, and Mr. Alfred Good, public accountant, Mr. George Stratton, and Captain Edwards, two of the directors, were appointed liquidators.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Wernpistill Colliery Company (Limited).—A petition to wind up the City and County Banking Company (Limited) has been presented to the Court of Chancery.—A petition for the winding-up of the Peat, Coal, and Charcoal Company (Limited), is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 28th inst.

Mr. Wynne Foulkes, the newly appointed judge of the Birkenhead County Court, took his seat for the first time on Tuesday. In reply to the congratulations of the bar, the learned gentleman observed that there seemed to be no limits to the duties which the law now imposed upon those tribunals.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS.—Bankruptcy business will be taken at the following sittings in Trinity Term: Before Vice-Chancellor Malins at Lincoln's-inn, Monday, June 7. County Court appeals: Before Sir C. Bacon, Mondays, May 24th and 31st; and June 7th, sittings in Bankruptcy.

BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.—The following is the official return of the cheques and bills cleared in the Bankers' Clearing-house for the week ending Wednesday, May 19th:—

Thursday, May 13	£14,591,000
Friday, May 14	41,258,000
Saturday, May 15	21,481,000
Monday, May 17, Bank Holiday....	——
Tuesday, May 18	24,542,000
Wednesday, May 19	17,631,000
	£119,503,000

The total at the corresponding period of last year, was £141,751,000.

CONSOLIDATION OF STATUTES.—Some further proceedings have been recently taken with a view to the consolidation of Statutes. About a year ago the Lord Chancellor summoned a meeting of the Statute Law Committee to confer with him on the subject of the expurgation of the Statutes of the present reign, and the expediency and practicability of a systematic consolidation of groups of those Statutes. The meeting was attended by Sir J. Lefevre, Sir T. Erskine May, Sir H. Thring, and Mr. Reilly, with Mr. Rickards and Mr. Wood. The result was that on the 4th June, after consideration, the committee presented to the Lord Chancellor a memorandum recommending that the Statutes requiring consolidation should be arranged in classes according to the extent of alteration or redrawing required, and that it would be expedient to begin with the easiest class, in which all that has to be done is to incorporate subsequent amending Acts with the original Act, making little or no alteration. Mr. Rickards was thereupon instructed to report upon these Statutes; and in January last he made his report, in which he gives a list of more than a hundred subjects on which there has been a succession of enactments, for which one Statute might be advantageously substituted. In many of these cases the work to be done would include wholly or partially redrawing; but he selects, for a beginning, 20 subjects of the easiest class, stating that the consolidation could be effected without any change in substance or effect, and without any alteration except such as are formal only—a statement which might be verified, if necessary, by showing in the margin of the Consolidation Bill, by diversity of type or otherwise, the actual alterations verbatim. From these 20 subjects the Statute Law Committee, in a memorandum of the 1st of March, selected for consolidation in the first instance the following 10:—Alkali works; chain cables and anchors; the House of Commons (issue of writs in recess); the summoning of Parliament; powers of Parliamentary Committees, oaths, costs, &c.; leases and sales of settled estates; naturalization; pharmacy (chymists and druggists); relief of trustees; and the Trustee Act of 1850, with the amending Act of 1852. On each of these subjects more than one Act has been passed, and it is not likely that there would be any material difficulty in passing a Consolidation Bill. The Committee suggest also that it would be very convenient to those who are practically engaged in the administration of the public schools if the seven Acts relating to these were consolidated; and that, although the consolidation would require a more extensive process of recasting than in the above ten cases, it could be performed without difficulty, and without involving any change in legal effect. Finally, the Committee recommended that these Consolidation Bills be prepared, under their superintendence, by Mr. Rickards, with the aid of the experienced assistants. The Treasury granted 200 guineas for the work, and we may expect soon to behold the result.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

There is no more dangerous doctrine in the present day, out of the numbers that are preached to the many, and held firmly by the few, than the doctrine of the right of the Englishman to do as he pleases, utterly unrestrained by any force other than his own self-interest. There is something very humiliating to a philosophic observer in the way in which this independent spirit is fostered by the press, and allowed to degenerate into a thoroughly selfish line of conduct. The individual is to be considered in every thing, the State in nothing. Legislation must consist in permitting people to do what is right; but to apply compulsion is out of all keeping with our notions of sturdy British independence. Perhaps our national characteristic is best shown in the way in which we compare the numerous institutions which individuals have founded with their state-aided equivalents in other countries. With us the individual leads the way, and the State only steps in to give him due support when the work is done. It is in this way that our great empire has been built up. Why, then, should we ever alter this line of action? Let the State still exist as a regulating power; let it collect our taxes, and govern mildly, so long as the individual is not interfered with. But yet private crotchets and foolish whims must not be interfered with; and above all, the one sacred principle of modern England—that of free trade—must be held inviolable. Let our tradesmen sell us what articles they will; let our railways prefer a small extra dividend to the safety of their passengers; let every mode of rascality and trickery flourish undisturbed, unless the victim resorts to the uncertain protection of the courts of law, and the capricious justice of an English jury. We are a nation of shopkeepers, and we are proud of the title; and if there is one thing more abhorrent to us than another, it is to have any attempt made at extending government supervision over private enterprise. To do business is the first duty of every Englishman, and the less he is harassed by "spy legislation" the better.

A change is, however, gradually coming over public opinion in this respect. Recent events have shown that liberty very often degenerates into anarchy, and that free trade, when it means trade carried on free from any restrictions imposed by morality or conscience, is far from the unmixed blessing it was once supposed to be. On every side complaints pour in. The sturdily honest merchant of olden days, is but scantily represented in our own times. Under the plausible term of "usage of trade," a system of deception and misrepresentation has gradually grown up, which requires to be strongly repressed by law. But these evils are dwarfed by the huge catastrophes that we have seen of late years. The principle of limited liability has proved a valuable instrument in the hands of speculators, and the list of utterly hopeless companies receives daily additions. Exposure follows exposure, but still the sanguine and the gullible persist in rushing to their ruin, and new financial arts are used to lure the wary and cautious. Till the State comes boldly forward to assert the paramount obligation of seeing that its members act with fidelity to their undertakings, not only by the severe punishment of fraud, but by enforcing every available mode of prevention, we may expect to see no diminution in the number of rotten concerns which are converted into companies in order, mainly, that a few worthless adventurers may become public men.

Some few regulations are certainly enforced, by which people may learn the position of a company; but generally, the statements of the prospectus and the reports of the directors are all that there is to rely on. The insurance companies have been the means of calling attention to a better state of things. No more wide-spread misery could possibly be inflicted than has occurred through the failure of some of these associations. Their peculiar composition is such, that the wisest and best-informed man can gain but little by his knowledge. He may be able to decide whether he shall make a greater or a less sacrifice, but that is all. Let the depositor in a bank learn the insecurity of the company which holds his money, and he profits by the intelligence to withdraw it. If he is in time, he has lost nothing. But prove to the man that the company in which he has insured his life, to which he has been transferred against his will, has from sudden losses, reckless amalgamations, or a too keen desire to do business without first counting the cost, become unsafe, and what can he do?

Digitized by Google

He can surrender his policy for a tithe of its value; or forfeit his previous payments, and commence anew at an enhanced rate in another office; or he may take his chance of an unexpected turn of fortune, and differ only from his unsuspecting fellows in having foreseen the blow which must fall, and which he was utterly unable to avert. Here the legislature has rightly stepped in, and by compelling all companies to publish their accounts, given some slight assistance to expectant insurers. The principle may well be extended to all companies, but even then creditors and shareholders alike could hardly know with sufficient certainty whom they may trust; for a mere statement of figures is no sufficient evidence of the existence of valuable assets, without the certificate of an independent auditor, who has examined and can judge of their soundness.

We have in our columns frequently urged the necessity of a strict system of independent auditing being made imperative upon all companies, and our correspondent "N" sends us an extract from the City of London Gas Act, defining and prescribing the duties of the official auditor, which he rightly thinks affords the true solution of the problem. First, we have a continuous audit and examination of the company's accounts, so that there can be nothing which will escape a practised eye. Then comes the most valuable suggestion, which enables, and, in fact, expressly directs the auditor to stop payment of any dividend if the accounts of the company are incorrect. This direction goes to the very root of the matter. The amount of the dividend is looked upon as the true test of a company's stability. The shares of a company may be purchased to pay a dividend of from 6 to 8 per cent., and in the case of a railway an average dividend of from 4 to 5. To produce this dividend is the great aim of directors and managers. If it can be fairly earned, the company is in a flourishing condition, and no auditor, however strict, would refuse his certificate of approval. But many companies succeed in declaring a dividend who have no right to do so. What is income, what is profit, and what is surplus, are subtleties of account which may be studied by political readers in the budget debates. It is possible that the larger proportion of the dividends of joint-stock companies, in their earlier stages of existence, are paid out of capital; and to these an auditor would be bound to refuse his sanction.

To take so decided a step as this, would be proof of a very high and very honourable devotion to duty. Independent as the class of men who are generally chosen as auditors may be, they cannot but feel that to assert their independence in so striking a manner would be in the outset a direct professional loss. With the support of their professional brethren, much of this might be averted. The Protean gentlemen who direct so many varied undertakings, with such a skilful adaptation of their duty towards their neighbours to their interests towards themselves, would be helpless in the face of an association so determined to support the independence and integrity of their members; and though the final victory would be won but by slow and painful engagements, it would be none the less decisive. A government official, with the full prestige of his position, would not be of greater power than the man who knew that if his fearlessness led to his dismissal, not one of his own profession would accept the vacant post. The tribe of speculators, fearful of the exposure of the hollowness of their schemes, would shrink from following too eagerly their dishonest course, and the many fraudulent financial undertakings would soon fall to the ground. The refusal to authorise a dividend would tell its own tale to investors who had studied the prospects of the undertaking, and who would be sure that they were not being misled by false signals; while shareholders would know that the dividends paid had been fairly and honestly earned. The air of the City is so tainted by speculation and trickery, that it is time that some steps should be taken towards its purification. The system of auditing cannot be made too searching. The sound and genuine undertakings will have much to gain and nothing to lose, the weak and unstable will be checked in their downward rush to ruin. That official auditing will ever be required by parliament, in the case of joint-stock companies, is doubtful; and its adoption will much depend on the course of events during the next few years. But it will be a grand boast for a profession to be able to say, "By our action we obviated the intervention of parliament; and while preserving in their integrity the rights of private enterprise, we have given security to all." To bring this about; to check fraud; to introduce the principle of absolute accuracy and truth into the affairs of companies; to make the certificate of an auditor as much respected and regarded as it is now suspected and despised,—is the task whose fulfilment is in the hands of our profession.

The case of Mr. John Brearley Wood so aptly illustrates some of the defects of our bankruptcy law, that we must again refer to it, especially as it involves a curious point of law as to the true construction of the Act. The strict and literal meaning of the words used in relation to the duties of the registrar, confirms the view which the deputy registrar of the Birkenhead County Court seems to have taken. Certain formalities as to sending notices, holding meetings and passing resolutions, are required to be observed; and the registrar, on receiving the resolution, has only to inquire if these have been duly complied with. He is not to make any inquiry as to the adequacy of the composition, or into what is best for the interests of the creditors; he sits merely as an expert, to examine into the technical accuracy of certain proceedings; and on being satisfied as to this, he is bound to perform the ministerial function of registration. It is impossible to read the Act without seeing that this is clearly what is laid down therein, and that those London registrars who indignantly refuse to allow the court to become a medium for "whitewashing debtors," are placing a construction of their own upon the plain words of the Act which they will not warrant. It is true that, thanks to the Lords Justices, the broader view now prevails, and that registrars are bound to use their discretion as to the propriety of the transaction, having in view the interest of the creditors. But it is also true, that this has been brought about by importing into the Act of 1869 some of the spirit of the Act of 1861, and by doing violence to ordinary principles of interpretation. The world at large will, however, look upon this with a lenient eye, if not with hearty approval; and any doubts that may linger in the mind of any legal precisian will be soon removed by a study of the memorable cause célèbre of Mr. John Brearley Wood.

We spoke a few weeks since of the difference between the position of an accountant and a solicitor in a case of bankruptcy. We pointed out that the accountant who is appointed to hold the place of trustee, and thus represents creditors as well as debtor, must have widely different interests from the solicitor, who represents only the interests of his client. That an advocate is bound to do his best for his client is a truism of the law, but we were scarcely prepared to hear it avowed with such cynical frankness as it was by Mr. Downham, who acted as solicitor for Mr. Wood. For this gentleman's remarks we must refer our readers to the report itself, and to the letter of "A. A.;" but we would venture to suggest to Mr. Downham, that such candour, though it might be admired in the mouth of Prince Bismarck, is scarcely likely to be viewed with favour by a world which, in its capacity of creditor, likes to get as much of its money as possible, and as a debtor would rather get rid of all financial difficulties with as little publicity as it reasonably can. Seriously, the whole case is a simple disgrace to the law, and Mr. Downham is lucky in having fixed his lines in a district where the letter of the law is so much regarded by its administrators. A London Registrar would, we strongly suspect, have made short work with the resolution, and cut still shorter the facetious candour of the attorney.

Bills of Sale have been a fruitful source of hindrance to creditors for some time, and have given rise to many ingenious devices on the part of debtors. Their registration is certainly a slight check, imposed in the interests of credit; and the judges have shown an inclination to mete out but a small share of favour to them. Still further strictness may be shown with advantage, and this, we think, will be brought about by the adoption of the suggestions set forth in the Northampton petition, which we printed last week. Three weeks is a long time in which to register; and by the clever contrivance of cancelling the old bill of sale and giving a fresh one before the lapse of the time for registration, many frauds were committed, whereby, to use the expressive words of the preamble to the Bills of Sale Act, "persons are enabled to keep up the appearance of being in good circumstances and possessed of property." This will be checked by the act which Mr. Charley has introduced this session, and which provides that a second Bill of Sale as security for the same debt will be void unless the first has been registered. But still we think the time within which registration can be effected is too extended, and might be contracted. There seems no valid reason why the limit of forty-eight hours should not be chosen, as suggested. The sooner creditors know of the charge the better, and the few instances of hardship which might arise would be of little importance compared with the general advantage. The third section, which gives priority to creditors who had obtained judgment previous to registration, is, we think, too harsh, if a shorter time for registration is adopted. After all, some bills of sale are not fraudulent; and, within reasonable limits, their holders have a right to be protected.

LAWYERS AND ACCOUNTANTS.

From the Law Times of the 22nd instant, we learn some further particulars of the case referred to in our last issue, in which an unauthorised person, resident in Bristol, had been compelled to pay a penalty of £10 for preparing a deed of partnership. We now find that the offending party is a Mr. C. J. Coates; and it is very satisfactory to know that, as in the Manchester case, which was coupled with this by the Law Times—the name of the offender does not appear in the published list of accountants. There appears to be as much anxiety amongst certain nondescripts to be written down "accountants," as agitated the breast of that most sagacious of fools, Dogberry, when he cried, "Oh, that I had been writ down an ass"; and our contemporary has got into the not particularly ingenuous habit of taking these persons at their own estimate, and writing them down "accountants" without the least qualification. We, therefore, commend to the consideration ot the Law Times the example set by the hon. secretaries of the Bristol Law Society, who, in taking up the case of Mr. Coates, write to complain—with much more of both justice and literal exactness—of the practices of "persons calling themselves accountants, and others."

Wholesale Warehousemen and Accountants' Charges.—A correspondent, referring to a leading article on the above subject in our last issue, says: —"The pressure now existing is not such as will consolidate all accountants. The action of the Manchester Houses is hardly of the least consequence to the majority of accountants. The task of taxing accountants' charges is one which has never been attempted; and the more it is considered, the more difficult it will appear. Had any "scale" been feasible, the Institute of Accountants would no doubt have been proud to have promulgated one; but no one scale will meet all cases, and any complex set of provisions would invite endless criticisms and disputes. Your attention should be given to the fact that the scale propounded by the warehousemen is only relative to shopkeepers' accounts, the least complex of any kind of liquidations, as the stocks are usually got rid of at once by tender, and there are but few creditors."

The Society of Accountants in England.—The monthly meeting of the Council of the Society of Accountants in England was held at the Society's offices, 2 Cowper's-court, Cornhill, on Monday last. Present—Messrs. John Bath (Vice-president), in the chair, J. C. Bolton, H. Brett, E. N. Harper, J. Beddow, E. C. Foreman, J. H. Tilly, F. Tendron, and A. C. Harper (Secretary). This being the first meeting of the Council after the annual meeting, part of the business was to elect the President and Vice-president for the ensuing year. Accordingly Mr. Joseph Davies (Warrington) was re-elected President, and Mr. John Bath (London) Vice-president of the Society.—At a meeting of the Council on the 11th instant, the following accountants were admitted as associates of the Society, viz.:—George Whitt, 64 Lower King-street, Manchester; Joseph Lunt, 57 King-street, Manchester; and Edward Saville Foster, 11 St. James's-row, Sheffield.

The Institute of Accountants.—In the advertisement of the Institute of Accountants which appeared in our last issue, the name of Mr. Samuel Barrow (Barrow and Gates) should have been substituted for that of Mr. Henry Chatteris, one of the auditors who resigned at the recent annual meeting.

Solicitors' Benevolent Association.—On Tuesday evening, the members of this institution, which was set on foot about 17 years ago, celebrated their anniversary by a dinner at the Freemason's Tavern. The association was instituted in 1858, and has for its principal objects the relief of poor and necessitous attorneys, solicitors, and proctors, in England and Wales, and their wives, widows, and families. The right hon. the Lord Mayor, David Henry Stone, himself long an eminent solicitor in the city of London, and a member of the association from its commencement, occupied the chair on the occasion, supported by, among other persons of consideration, Mr. Alderman and Sheriff Ellis, the Mayor of Peterborough, Mr. Monckton, Town Clerk of London; the respective Presidents of the Kent and Wakefield Law Societies, the Clerks of the Cutlers', Farriers', and Poulterers' Companies, Mr. F. H. Janson, and many other eminent members of the profession both in the metropolis and several of the large provincial cities and towns. It was stated, on authority, during the entertainment, that the association dispensed £1,366 in relief during the year, and that the number of solicitors enrolled as members was 2,373. The directors expressed a hope that solicitors who were not already members of the association would embrace the festival as a fit occasion to join it; the general object being, in the common interest of that branch of the profession, to relieve such poor and necessitous members as may be incapacitated for business through bodily or mental infirmity, or other inevitable calamity, and their wives and families, and the poor and necessitous widows and families of deceased members; in special cases also to relieve the parents or collateral relations of deceased members, and where the state of the funds and the circumstances appeared to justify it, to render pecuniary assistance to the widows and families of deceased attorneys, solicitors or proctors, who were members at the time of death. The Lord Mayor, in the course of the evening, said he thought the legal profession, consisting, as it did, of over 10,000 members, should never be reduced to the condition of seeking eleesmosynary aid, and, that it ought rather to inaugurate a movement by which—not merely one-fifth, as now, of the members of that association, but a very large proportion of the profession should become members. In such a case, they would be a very large and prosperous society indeed. Last year he found the sum spent in connection with it was £1,360, and there were investments amounting to something over £30,000. He thought that such a fund might be so raised, as to have sufficient amount in hand to enable the society to grant permanent annuities, and so to dissipate all anxiety as to future wants. He knew there was a disinclination on the part of members of the profession against any one thinking that any member of their body was in want, and he thought, if the society had a considerable amount of funded property it might be enabled to grant aid in bringing up the children of their poorer brethren. The institution, however, had determined to rely on itself, and the sooner the general body of practitioners put their shoulders to the wheel the better. Mr. Eiffe, the secretary, announced that the subscriptions during the evening amounted to rather over £500.

"A PENNY IN THE POUND."

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—The case of John Brearley Wood, which came before the Deputy Registrar of the Birkenhead County Court on the 11th instant, and a report of which appears in your paper of the 22nd, seems to me to deserve a little ventilation in your columns. No case could more clearly illustrate the defects of the composition clauses of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869; in fact, it should of itself be quite sufficient to condemn those clauses to immediate repeal. Any thing more flagrantly unjust than to allow a majority of family creditors to ride roughshod over a minority of trade creditors, and compel them to accept such a contemptible composition as one penny in the pound, can hardly be conceived. Surely, minorities have some rights? If not, it is high time they should. For my part, I cannot believe it was the intention of the legislature to permit a majority of creditors, however large, to dispose of the rights of dissentient creditors in the extraordinary manner in which the rights of those creditors of Mr. Wood, who voted against the resolution, appear to have been summarily disposed of. It would be a good thing if this case could be fully reported in every newspaper in the kingdom. It might have some effect in dispersing the apathy with which the public seem to treat this question, and tend to pave the way for a speedy repeal of an Act of Parliament which permits so palpable an injustice with respect to the rights of individuals. It is all very well for a majority of the creditors to determine how the estate of an insolvent shall be administered, but it is quite another thing to give that majority the power to compel the minority to discharge their debtor without, practically, any payment whatever. Strictly speaking, it is the same in law whether the composition which the majority compels the minority to accept be a farthing or ten shillings in the pound: but it does, nevertheless, appear a much greater injustice to the minority to be compelled to take a penny in the pound, than to be obliged to take ten shillings. I suppose creditors would hardly grumble at all if they could always secure the latter dividend from insolvent estates. I know nothing of Mr. Wood's case but what I gather from your report of it, but I should imagine from the remarks of Mr. Downham, the attorney for the debtor, that he must be somewhat of a cynic. I am scarcely disposed to treat his remarks seriously, as I cannot fancy a lawyer gravely asserting that he "thought it, his duty, representing various creditors, to accept the smallest composition he could, and that had he not accepted it he would not have done his duty to those persons who intrusted their proxies to him." Surely, Mr. Downham must have been joking, or else having a little facetious fling at the absurdities of our bankruptcy law. It would perhaps be well if a few more persons attending meetings with proxies in their pockets would make a point of accepting the smallest composition they could; it might have the effect of facilitating a much-needed reform. Then, again, Mr. Downham's statement of his conduct, as chairman of the meeting, throws a little light on the manner in which these meetings are conducted. To call such an assembly a "meeting of creditors" is absurd. The solicitor comes to the meeting armed with what he knows to be a majority of proxies sufficient for his purpose, and votes himself into the chair. What does he then do? Let him speak for himself,—"His practice was to get rid of the meeting as soon as he could, and if he knew he had the majority of proxies in his pocket he got the resolutions ready and signed them, and let the other creditors talk as long as they liked." Well might such a candid statement as this provoke "laughter." Still, to my mind, such a proceeding is humiliating. Is it any wonder, that a creditor attending such a "meeting" once, is careful not to attend a second? How far the Registrar was right or wrong in ruling that the creditor's proof, which was handed to the chairman after he had signed the resolutions but before he left the chair, was not tendered in time to be reckoned in the voting, is not for me to consider—but I should like to see the point settled by a higher authority. Perhaps the next time Mr. Downham is in the happy position of holding a sufficient majority of proxies "in his pocket," it will be as well for him to draw up and sign the resolutions before he goes to the meeting. The hostile proofs will then be excluded immediately the chair is taken, and the meeting will be purely formal. Every thing Mr. Downham did was no doubt legally done, and in accordance with the Act of Parliament; at least I must assume so as the Registrar was of that opinion, as shown by his consenting to register the resolutions—such registration being the finishing link in the chain which binds the poor dissentient creditors to accept the magnificent composition offered by Mr. Wood. I ought not to occupy your space in drawing attention to this case, without making some suggestions for reforming the present procedure in the direction of preventing a recurrence of such a flagrant abuse of the powers given to creditors by the Act of Parliament. The Registrar assumes his duties to be simply ministerial—that he has not to look at the bona fides of the resolutions, but only to satisfy himself that the requirements of the statute and rules have been complied with. Looking at such cases as those of Sidney and Wiggins, and Sir William Russell decided by the London court, and affirmed on appeal, it is certainly a questionable matter whether the Registrar was right in his view of his duty. But presuming the Registrar has no discretionary power, it should be one of the first points of reform to give him, or the court, such a power, and a wide one too. Under the Act of 1861, where the creditors wished to supersede a bankruptcy and accept an arrangement or composition under section 185, the court required to be satisfied that the proposed arrangement or composition was calculated to benefit the general body of the creditors under the estate; and if not so satisfied, it refused to sanction the arrangement. Also under section 28 of the present Act, in order to complete a composition arrangement after bankruptcy, the resolution of the creditors requires the confirmation of the court in order to make it binding on dissentients. If the court is satisfied, upon the representation of any creditor, that his rights are prejudicially affected by the resolution, it has the power to veto the arrangement. I would give the power to the court in all cases of composition, and make it imperative on the majority carrying the resolutions to satisfy the court, even without any representation from a dissentient, that the proposed composition was reasonable, and calculated to benefit the general body of the creditors. I would also require an officer of the court to preside at all meetings of creditors, and thus prevent the possibility of the proofs of bona-fide creditors being excluded by partial chairmen, acting in the interests of debtors and their family creditors. The debtor's attorney ought not to act as proxy for the creditors. How can he serve two masters? His duty to his client, the debtor, may very likely be to pay as small a composition as possible; but I should think that very few solicitors would seriously assert, as Mr. Downham does, that his duty to the creditors is to accept the smallest composition possible. Nor, if the court possessed the power, could it gravely order the confirmation of a resolution to accept a penny in the pound, on the ground of its being reasonable, or calculated to benefit the general body of the creditors. Such a composition could not possibly benefit any one except the debtor, and, perhaps, indirectly his attorney.

The importance of this subject must be my excuse for trespassing at this length on your valuable space.

I am, yours truly,
A. A.

OFFICIAL AUDITING.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—Several letters having appeared in your paper with reference to the necessity which exists for an improvement in the mode of auditing the accounts of public companies, and for vesting further powers in the hands of those charged with the performance of this responsible and important duty, so as to free them from the undue influence of those from whom they receive their appointments, I beg to call your attention to a letter which appeared in the Times of the 22nd instant, in which the duties of the auditor appointed by the Board of Trade, under the 81st section of the City of London Gas Act, 1868, are thus set out:—

"The official auditor is to prescribe the form in which the accounts of the company are to be kept, and to continuously examine, audit, and certify the same.

"He is not only empowered, but required, to stop the payment of a dividend to the shareholders, if 'he finds the accounts of the Company incorrect in principle or in detail.'"

It appears to me that an audit conducted under such conditions, and with such powers, affords the only real guarantee that the interests of the shareholders and of intending investors will receive due protection.

I remain, your obedient Servant,
N.

County Court Changes.—The following alterations in the arrangement of the holdings of the County Courts will come into effect (by an Order of the Queen in Council, dated the 13th day of May) on and after the 30th of June next:—The County Court of Lancashire, holden at Ormskirk, shall be holden at Southport as well as at Ormskirk; the County Court of Hampshire, holden at Christchurch, shall be holden at Bournemouth as well as at Christchurch; and the County Court of Norfolk, holden at Little Walsingham, shall be holden at Fakenham as well as at Little Walsingham.

Revenue—The receipts on account of revenue from the 1st April, 1875, when there was a balance of £6,265,322, to the 22nd instant, were £10,776,068, against £10,120,032 in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year, which began with a balance of £7,442,854. The net expenditure was £12,488,112, against £11,932,952 to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balances on the 22nd instant amounted to £4,214,119, and at the same date in 1874 to £5,132,521.

Smart v. Cannon and others.—This case had arisen out of the disputes of two conflicting bodies of the London United District Funeral and Widows' and Orphans' Fund of the Ancient Order of Foresters' Friendly Society, with reference to the prosecution of their secretary for defalcation. Early in 1868 the secretary was found to be in default to the amount of nearly £2,000; a prosecution was threatened, and he absconded. An offer was made on the part of some friends of his to make a payment in satisfaction, but nothing came of it. As the secretary had absconded, proceedings against him were suspended. In July, 1868, the society resolved that the legal proceedings be placed in the hands of the board of management and trustees, and Mr. Beard was employed; but still nothing was done. In January, 1869, another offer of compensation was made by friends of the secretary—£1,000 to be paid in cash, and a bond to be given for the payment of £700, and the balance, if any remained due, after the accounts were gone into. Mr. Beard, the attorney, however, advised that the compensation could not legally be accepted, as it would be a "compromise of felony." Thereupon, many of the society being in favour of accepting the offer, Messrs. Shaen and Roscoe were consulted, who gave an opinion in favour of the acceptance of the offer. The trustees, however, still declining to carry out the compromise, were deposed by a meeting of the society, which resolved to accept it. The members of the society, however, who were in favour of a prosecution, and had formed themselves into a committee for the purpose, persisted in pressing on the prosecution, and employed the attorney, Mr. Beard, and also employed the plaintiff as an accountant to examine the accounts with a view to evidence at the trial, and the bills of both the attorney and the plaintiff appeared in the accounts of the committee, only one of whom was a trustee. The society in the mean time, early in 1869, received the £1,000 in pursuance of the arrangement, and took the bond for £700, and any further balance which might be due. The prosecution was carried to trial by the committee and failed, from its appearing that the money had been received. The society then sued upon the bond, and failed on the ground of its illegality. The plaintiff then sued the society by its trustees for the amount of his bill, nearly £130. At the trial before Mr. Justice Mellor the defence set up was that he was not employed by the society but by the committee, and the learned judge was of that opinion, and a verdict was taken for the plaintiff, subject to the point of law as to the liability of the society. Mr. Gates, Q.C., and Mr. Kemp were for the plaintiff; Mr. Herschell, Q.C., and Mr. Charles were for the society. After hearing the counsel for the plaintiff fully, the counsel for the society had not long been heard when the Court determined in favour of the society, on the ground that the prosecution had not been carried on by the society, and the plaintiff had not been retained by them, but by a self-appointed committee, who disapproved the compromise and desired the prosecution to be carried on. The society, therefore, were not liable for the expenses of the accountant, and this action could not be maintained. Judgment for the society.

Ex parte Innes—in re Nelson.—This was an appeal from the dismissal by Mr. Registrar Hazlitt of a debtor's summons issued by Mr. Charles Innes against Mr. Marsh Nelson, the architect to Drury-lane Theatre. On the 21st of July, 1874,

Digitized by Google

Mr. Innes recovered judgment in an action in the Queen's Bench against Mr. Nelson for £1,169. The judgment was not satisfied, and on the 9th of October Mr. Innes obtained a garnishee order nisi, attaching the salary accruing due to Mr. Nelson from the proprietors of the theatre. On the 18th of November Mr. Innes issued a summons under the Debtor's Act, 1869, against Mr. Nelson, requiring him to attend for examination, and to show cause why he should not be committed to prison for non-payment of the judgment debt. This summons was on the 18th of December heard by Baron Amphlett, and an order was made that Nelson should pay the £1,169, with interest at 4 per cent., by assigning to Innes the balance that might be coming to him in a Chancery suit of "Innes v. Nelson," as security for the debt, and that upon the assignment being executed the attachment of Nelson's salary should be withdrawn. It was also ordered that Nelson should pay the debt by monthly instalments of £3. Innes accepted the assignment, and the attachment was withdrawn. Afterwards he issued a debtor's summons against Nelson, which the Registrar dismissed. Innes appealed. Mr. Edward Clarke was for the appellant; Mr. Bagley was for Mr. Nelson. Lord Justice James thought that the Registrar's decision was right. If it had been intended to preserve the creditor's right to proceed in Bankruptcy after the order obtained from Baron Amphlett, this ought to have been expressed. The order was really a matter of arrangement between the parties, and the creditor having accepted the assignment of what appeared to be a valuable property, it would be contrary to good faith that he should now take proceedings in bankruptcy against the debtor. The order of the Registrar must be confirmed, and the appeal dismissed with costs.

IN RE CITY AND COUNTY BANK (LIMITED).—An application for the appointment of a provisional liquidator of this concern, for the winding-up of which petitions are pending before this and other branches of the Court, came on by adjournment from Saturday last. Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. W. Latham), for the applicant, a creditor petitioner, stated that the application had been forestalled by another party who had obtained the appointment of a provisional liquidator from Vice-Chancellor Bacon on Monday. After a short discussion, the Master of the Rolls, with the consent of the bank, appointed Messrs. Hodges and Price joint provisional liquidators, with a direction that they shall not act without the permission of the Vice-chancellor. Mr. Bagshawe, Q.C., and Mr. E. Chitty appeared for the bank, which has no connection, otherwise than by similarity of name, either with the City Bank or the London and County Bank; Mr. Graham Hastings for Messrs. Brown, Jansen, and Co., who are said to have entered into some arrangement for taking over the business of the concern; Mr. M. Cookson for nearly all the depositors, about 200 in number; Mr. Whitehome for a party who has a winding-up petition pending before Vice-Chancellor Malins; and Mr. E. C. Willis for some creditors.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

May 22.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES BACON.)

IN RE THE LONDON, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, AND RIVER PLATE ROYAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—TAIT'S CLAIM.—This was a claim by the trustees of the estate of Sir Peter Tait and Co. to be allowed to prove in the winding-up of the above company for a sum of £1,236 17s. 4d. on the balance of accounts. Whether the balance was in favour of one party or the other depended on the right of Messrs. Tait to a certain sum of £5,000 in dispute. In the year 1868 Messrs. Tait and Co. had established a line of steamers between Europe and South America, and obtained a concession from the Belgian Government for the carriage of mails. The company was formed in that year, and a contract entered into between Messrs. Tait and a promoter, which was set out in the articles of association. Under this contract the company purchased four steamships at an ascertainable price, and Messrs. Tait agreed to transfer the concession and any future concession they should obtain for £10,000 and a further sum of £5,000 contingent on the company making a profit of £9 per cent. within the first two years. Messrs. Tait obtained a further concession from the Belgian Government, and at a meeting of the company held on the 18th June, 1869, the shareholders authorised the directors to pay a certain instead of a contingent sum of £5,000 to Messrs. Tait as part of the price of the concessions, and to take the ships subject to mortgages with a proportionate abatement of the purchase money. It was found that the Belgian Government would not consent to the transfer of the concessions, and ultimately the company obtained a concession direct to themselves. The company did not prosper, and was wound up, and the concession sold. Messrs. Tait declared themselves insolvent, and executed an inspectorship deed. The directors had not acted on the authority to pay the £5,000, but they took transfers of the ships subject to mortgages. Mr. H. M. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. F. Thompson appeared in support of the claim; Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Davey, in opposition, were not called on. The Vice-Chancellor said there were no dealings which amounted to a contract by the company to pay the £5,000. The contract, so far as it related to the purchase of the ships, was entirely distinct from the transfer of concessions, and the authority given to the directors to take transfer of ships subject to mortgage was distinct from the authority to pay £5,000 certain; nor was the modification of the contract relating to the ships a benefit to the company, but rather to Messrs. Tait. It was not, then, true that they took a benefit while they repudiated a burden tied up with it. The payment of the £5,000 was authorised on a mistake that Messrs. Tait had obtained an advantage for the company by their new concession. When the directors found they had themselves to obtain a new concession on less favourable terms, they were right in refusing to pay the £5,000. His Honour rejected the claim, with costs.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. MALINS.)

RE THE MARIA ANNA AND STEINBANK COAL AND COKE COMPANY (LIMITED).—The point which arose in this matter was said to be a novel one, and to be at present uncovered by any decision. The above-named company was formed in 1857, with articles of association under the Companies' Acts, 1856, with which that of 1862 was subsequently incorporated. In 1861 William Hargreaves and William Hill took 286 £10 shares in this company. This amount of the shares had been fully paid-up, and they were registered in the books of the company in the joint names of the two holders. William Hill died on the 9th of September, 1861. On the 6th of February, 1863, letters of administration were granted to his widow. William Hargreaves is still living. About two years ago an order was made to wind-up the company, and the official liquidator placed the name of William Hill on the list of contributories. An order was afterwards made, in chambers, for the placing of Mrs. Hill's name on the list in respect of the shares in question. She applied on the 24th of March last to have her name removed from the list; but no other order was made on that application beyond this, that the costs of the official liquidator were to be paid out of the assets of the company. The matter now came on upon a motion on behalf of Mrs. Hill to discharge that order. Mrs. Hill's right to have her name removed from the list depended on the question whether William Hill's liability on the shares was a several one, or whether he and William Hargreaves were jointly responsible for them. In the latter case the liability would survive to William Hargreaves alone. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Freeling supported the motion; Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Ford North, for the official liquidator, opposed it. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that, having regard to the provisions of the Companies' Acts, the liability of William Hill and William Hargreaves was joint, and that, consequently, that of William Hill ceased on his death in 1861. He therefore made an order to remove the name of Mrs. Hill from the list of contributories, and directed the costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate of the company.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

May 22.

This being the first day of Trinity Term, the sittings at the Court in Lincoln's-inn-fields were resumed.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE J. J. FRIEDLANDER.—The debtor, a commission merchant and dealer in diamonds, carrying on business in Bloomfield-street, London-wall, recently filed a petition for liquidation, and at the first meeting an offer was made of a composition of 19s. 6d. in the pound, payable in two years; but, upon the resolution being carried into the office, registration was refused, on the ground that the necessary majority of the creditors had not assented to the proposal. The statement of affairs disclosed liabilities amounting to £15,273, with assets £12,857. Mr. Goldberg, for the debtor, asked that a new first meeting might be convened, on the ground that the creditors would now probably assent to the intended arrangement. His Honour held, that having regard to the decision of the Lords Justices in the case of "Ex parte Cobb, re Sedley" ("Law Reports" 8, Chancery Appeals, p. 727), he could not allow a new first meeting; and he therefore refused the application, without prejudice to any right which the debtor might have to file a fresh petition.

IN RE WILLIAM M'ARTHUR.—The debtor was an iron merchant, carrying on a very extensive business in Cannon-street, and at Greenwich and Millwall. He recently presented a petition under the 125th and 126th sections of the Act, with liabilities returned at £268,880 (of which a considerable portion will probably run off), and property value unascertained. It appeared that previously to the filing of the petition two executions had been levied upon the stock-in-trade and effects, and the debtor now applied, with a view to the saving of expense, that there should be an immediate sale by the receiver, the proceeds, after deducting expenses, to be paid to a separate account. Notice of the application had been given to the execution creditors, and they did not oppose. His Honour granted the application.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE COLE AMBROSE, RE LEONARD.—This was an appeal from an order of the Bury St. Edmund's County Court, declaring a transfer by the bankrupt, a farmer at Soham, in Cambridgeshire, of certain cattle to the appellant, also a farmer, at Stuntney, in the same county, to be a fraudulent preference under the 92nd section, and an Act of Bankruptcy. Mr De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. R. Griffiths were counsel for the appellant; Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. G. W. Lawrance for the respondent. His Lordship reversed the decision of the Court below.

EX PARTE ROBERTSON RE MORTON.—This was an appeal from the decision of the County Court Judge of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, who ordered that a Mr. Donald Robertson, of Mayfield, Cupar Fife, should pay to Messrs. Greener and Benson, the trustees of the debtor's estate, two sums of £120 and £36 12s. respectively—one sum being the amount of a cheque paid to him shortly before the liquidation, and the other being the value of a certain quantity of potatoes. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., appeared on behalf of the appellant, and Mr. Little, Q.C., for the respondent. Mr. De Gex, in opening the case, said that this very important question was involved in the appeal—namely, as to whether a Scotchman domiciled in Scotland, and being a creditor of a bankrupt in England, was under the jurisdiction of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, which exempted Scotland and Ireland. Before going into the merits of the case he intended to submit a preliminary point to his Lordship, and that was as to whether there was jurisdiction over a Scotch creditor at all. When any claim was opposed, notice of motion had to be personally served on the creditor, and it was not disputed that Mr. Donald Robertson had been personally served in Scotland. It was a proceeding that could not have been done under the former Bankruptcy Law, and Ireland and Scotland were expressly exempted from the operation of the English Courts by the Common Law Procedure Act and the Chancery Amendment Act; and unless it could be brought within the 72nd section—the jurisdiction having been extended by the 65th section, that of the Court of Chancery and Common Law being given to it, and thereby granting it a legal as well as equitable jurisdiction—it could not be brought within the cognisance of the Court. The creditor did not live in England at all, and having appeared to object to the jurisdiction—which objection, however, was overruled—the question that now arose, as he thought for the first time, was as to the power of an English Court to make any order whatever against a Scotchman. He should refer to a case somewhat similar to the present case—that of O'Loghlan—which was the case of the service of a debtor's summons upon O'Loghlan, then living in Ireland. He did not always reside in Ireland, because, being a member of the Imperial Parliament, he was at times compelled to come and live in London. The order, however, was made for service upon him in Ireland of the debtor summons, and this was done personally, as it had been in the present case. It was rendered imperative by the 50th rule that any claim should be by motion supported by affidavit, upon hearing which the Court would make such order as might be just. The case of O'Loghlan was reported in the 6th Chancery Appeals, page 406, and it was there laid down by the Lords-Justices that attendance of Sir Colman in Parliament was not a residence of a domiciled Irishman any more than the Court of Chancery could be said to be the residence of the Lord-Justices. It was argued in that case that it was just as open to serve a Frenchman or any foreign resident in his own country, as it was to serve an Irishman with a debtor summons in Ireland. Lord-Justice James had expressed that opinion, and it was concurred in by Lord-Justice Mellish, who observed that the main question was an important one in dealing with Acts of Parliament intended only for a particular part of the United Kingdom, and that the true principle of construction in such cases should be that the acts that are to be brought within its jurisdiction must be acts done within the jurisdiction and contemplation of such acts of Parliament. Now, that rule precisely applied to this case, and it must be supposed that the notice of motion must be taken according to that diction. The Chief Judge said it would appear to be so, and before proceeding further with the case he had better hear what the other side had to say. Mr. Little, Q.C., said he must call his Lordship's attention to a few remarks he should have to make. His Lordship called Mr. Little's attention to the order, which stated that Mr. Robertson was understood to appear without prejudice, and retired from the case before the evidence was heard. Mr. Little said his attention had been called to that statement in the order, but he was certain that his Lordship would not grasp the point of the case unless he mentioned a few facts, unless he was possessed of miraculous power. The case was shortly this. Morton & Son carried on business at Newcastle, and failed in 1874. Robertson was a potatoe salesman living in Scotland, and claimed not only as a creditor, but had received a dividend under that failure. Two matters had to be inquired into—first, that Robertson had received a cheque for £120 on the day the petition was filed; and secondly, that having a quantity of potatoes belonging to the debtor, to whom by law there had been a complete delivery, he wrongfully reclaimed the goods, according to the trustees' view, and caused their delivery to his own agents. He was not entitled to the whole value of these potatoes, but only to an aliquot part. The commencement of the litigation was this. The trustees on the 5th March personally served Robertson with a notice that on the 12th an application would be made by the trustees to the effect that he should repay the cheque of £120, and also that he should refund the value of the two truck-loads of potatoes sent to the debtor on the 17th of February, but which he had afterwards obtained and sold. On the hearing of the case on the 12th March an order was made postponing the case for fourteen days after hearing Mr. Phillipson on behalf of Mr. Robertson, who applied for the adjournment on the ground that he was unprepared to go into the case. Mr. Robertson was required to pay the receiver £100 to abide the result of the hearing of the motion, and also to pay the costs. His Lordship would observe that this order was made after hearing Mr. Robertson's solicitors. Although it was true that Mr. Phillipson did object to the jurisdiction in the court below, it was upon totally different grounds to those stated in the affidavit. He did not object on the ground of service, because he was there to respond; but upon larger and higher grounds. The ground taken by Robertson's counsel was that Scotland was the land of freedom from any invasion of the laws of England. The question of irregular service was answered by the fact of the man who was said to be irregularly served having gone to the County Court and asked for further time. He could read Mr. Robertson's affidavit in reply to Mr. Greener's (the trustee), whose affidavit stated that the petition was filed on the 18th of February, 1874, and on the 13th March following it was resolved at a meeting of the creditors to liquidate by arrangement; and the trustee, finding that the debtor had on the 17th February, the day previous to the filing of the petition, but the day on which it was signed, given a cheque for £120 to Donald Robertson, immediately applied to him for the return of the cheque. The statement of affairs showed that the debtor was in the habit of purchasing potatoes from Robertson, and the accounts filed showed that on the 17th of February, Morton owed Robertson a considerable sum for potatoes. Morton kept an account at Lambton & Co.'s, bankers, of Newcastle, and on the day on which the cheque was drawn the amount of money owing to Robertson was £247 18s. 11d. The affidavit also stated that Robertson, having sent the quantity of potatoes to the debtor (he subsequently obtained possession of them), had sold them and retained the proceeds. The affidavit of Robertson stated that he was served with notice of the motion on the 6th of March at Mayfield in Scotland; that he was a domiciled Scotchman, and as such the Court had no jurisdiction over him, or to make the order it had done. It went on to show that on the 14th February, the debtor owed him £367 2s. 11d. for goods sold and delivered, and on the 17th he received a cheque for £120 from the debtor, which was paid to his bankers and was duly honoured. He was not aware at the time he received it that the Mortons were in difficulties, nor had he pressed them or brought an action against them. That reduced his debt to £247 2s. 11d. for which sum he had proved, and had subsequently received a dividend at the rate of 4s. 6d. in the £. The affidavit went on to state that on the 16th he sent to the North-Eastern Railway two trucks of potatoes, and invoiced them to Mortons; but he had not made any claim for them against the estate, and on the following day he received notice that they did not require any potatoes, and immediately thereupon, before delivery could be made to any one, he telegraphed to the North-Eastern Railway Company not to deliver them to any one except by his express instructions. The learned Judge here intimated that after what had fallen from Mr. De Gex he call edupon the other side, because he was willing to decide the question upon the objection raised as to jurisdiction; but in consequence of what had fallen from the learned counsel for the respondent, he felt that he must hear the case upon its merits. The case was accordingly adjourned to Monday next.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE A. E. WESTBEACH.—Mr. Baker applied, under proceedings for liquidation instituted by the debtor, that Mr. W. C. Cooper, accountant, Gresham-street, should be appointed receiver and manager, and for an interim injunction to restrain actions. The debtor had carried on business at 38 Fenchurch-street, as a general merchant, and at Brighton, under the style of "The Celestial Works of Art Company." His liabilities were estimated at £75,000, more than one half of which will probably run off; with assets about £20,000. His Honour granted the application.

May 25.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE JOHN MORISON.—Registration was allowed of a resolution to liquidate by arrangement passed by creditors in this case. The debtor had carried on business at 21 Billiter-street, and also in the Minories, as a merchant and manufacturer, shipowner, and ship and insurance broker. His balance sheet returns unsecured debts of £24,563, and secured debts, £191,202; the assets show a surplus, subject to realisation. Mr. R. Fletcher, accountant, Moorgate-street, is the trustee.

IN RE SIORDET AND CO.—The creditors of these debtors, who were merchants, of Mark-lane, and lately failed for £400,000, have unanimously agreed to accept a composition of 12s. 6d. in the pound, payable in three instalments. The resolution to that effect has been duly registered by Mr. Registrar Keene. Messrs. Nicholson, Nicol, and Co. have the conduct of the proceedings.

May 26.

(Before Mr. Registrar MURRAY, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE GEORGE LONGLEY.—The bankrupt, described as late of 60 Prince's-gate, then of Devonshire Lodge, Maidenhead, and elsewhere, Lieutenant-Colonel in the Royal Engineers on half-pay, applied to pass his examination. The adjudication had been obtained in the Berkshire County Court, and the proceedings were transferred by resolution of creditors. A statement of affairs disclosed debts of £11,375, with assets £1,756. The bankrupt passed without opposition. Mr. Morley, solicitor, appeared for the trustee.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE W., G., AND H. WOODS.—The debtors, William, George, and Henry Woods, proprietors of the City United Club, Ludgate-circus, recently filed their petition for liquidation, and the Court last week appointed a receiver, and granted an interim order staying further proceedings, at the suit of several creditors. The debts were about £9,000, and assets estimated at £12,000, subject to realisation. Upon the application of Mr. Cock, on behalf of the receiver, his Honour, in the absence of opposition, now made an order continuing the injunction.

In the House of Commons, on Tuesday, Sir E. Watkin brought in Bills for facilitating the establishment of Provident Savings Banks, and for providing Compensation for Accidents to Workpeople.

IPSWICH COUNTY COURT.

MAY 21.

Before J. WORLLEDGE, Esq., Judge.

EX PARTE GEARD, TRUSTEE, IN RE WALTER NUNN, LIQUIDATING DEBTOR.—An application for an order to prosecute Nunn upon the ground that he has been guilty of offences under the Debtor's Act, 1869.—Mr. W. B. Jackaman appeared for the trustee in support of the application; Mr. Hill for the debtor. Mr. Jackaman stated that Nunn had been a cattle dealer, and from the 2nd of March to the 10th of March he purchased at various auctions cattle to the value of £1,418 6s., and never paid a farthing of that amount. On the 16th of March Mr. R. Bond, auctioneer, filed a petition of bankruptcy against Nunn, who was in his debt to the amount of £553 11s., and alleged certain acts of bankruptcy. Nunn disputed the acts of bankruptcy, and the Registrar reserved his decision on the point. On the following day Nunn filed his petition of liquidation, and Mr. Bond was appointed receiver. Not having time for the duties of receiver, Mr. Bond appointed Mr. Geard. On the 25th of March Nunn told Mr. Geard that he had paid from £100 to £200 to Mr. Wainrabe, jeweller, Commercial-street, London; Mr. Whitehead, Woodbridge-road, £100; and his brother, Frederick Nunn, shipbuilder, London, £400; all of which sums he owed. £72 10s. he had in hand he gave up to Mr. Geard. Application was made to the parties named by Nunn as having received money. Frederick Nunn distinctly denied that the debtor had paid him a farthing, or that he ever owed him such a sum as £400. Mr. Whitehead also swore positively that he received no such sum as £100 from the debtor. As to Wainrabe, who was described as a jeweller, but who attended races, they had not yet been able to find him. Nunn had admitted that he had received £500, but his man Trenter had sworn that from the 2nd March to the 10th March he had paid Nunn £1,100. These actions, Mr. Jackaman contended, were offences under the Debtors' Act of 1869, and quoted the sections of the Act under which he based his application. He also referred to an affidavit made by Mr. Geard, but Mr. Hill objected to that affidavit, as it was sworn before Mr. H. M. Jackaman, a partner of the trustee's solicitor, as commissioner. It was sworn and filed only on the preceding day, and he had not received a copy of it. As to the statements made to Mr. Geard, at that time that gentleman was not trustee, and therefore, the sections upon which Mr. Jackman based his application did not apply. After a long legal argument, his Honour refused Mr. Geard's affidavit, as it was not sworn before a proper commissioner. As to the statements made by the debtor, he held that they must be made to a trustee to bring the debtor under the Act, and Mr. Geard not being at the time trustee, he refused the application, as he did not think there was reasonable grounds for supposing that the debtor would be convicted. His Honour ordered each party to pay his own costs.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

LEEK, COWAN, AND CO. (DALMARNOCK).—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Leek, Cowan, and Co., turkey-red dyers, Strathclyde Works, Dalmarnock, Mr. J. R. Strong, accountant, was elected trustee. The liabilities amount to £13,640 3s. 10d.

DAVID LANGHAM (IPSWICH).—A first meeting of creditors was held on Tuesday, the 25th instant, at the offices of Mr. F. B. Jennings, solicitor, 7 Falcon-street, Ipswich. It was resolved to wind up the estate in liquidation, Mr. George Wright, accountant, being appointed trustee, and Mr. F. B. Jennings being intrusted with the registration of the resolutions.

W. W. GARNHAM (LOWESTOFT).—A meeting of the creditors of William Woolner Garnham, of Lowestoft, newspaper proprietor, was held at the office of Mr. H. K. Moseley, solicitor, Yarmouth, on Tuesday, 25th May, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, being appointed trustee. Messrs. Worship and Rising are solicitors to the trustee.

WALTER WILLIAM KEMP (IPSWICH).—This was a first meeting of creditors, the debtor, a steam sawyer and miller, having filed his petition on the 7th instant. The meeting was held at the offices of Mr. F. B. Jennings, solicitor, 7 Falcon-street, Ipswich. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, Mr. George Wright being appointed trustee, and Mr. F. B. Jennings being instructed to register the resolutions.

CITY AND COUNTY BANK.—On Monday, the adjourned meeting of the creditors and depositors in the City and County Bank was held at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, Mr. E. Utten Brown in the chair; but, upon the meeting being constituted, Mr. Roberts, at the request of the chairman, stated that the negotiations with Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co. had been, to a certain extent, concluded, inasmuch as the draught agreement for the transfer of the business to them had been drawn up, and the result had been submitted to counsel. He believed that by the following Thursday some definite proposal would be submitted to the creditors and depositors. He was also instructed to say that by the arrangement the whole of the depositors would be paid in full. In reply to a creditor, Mr. Roberts said that the customers would be treated the same as the depositors, and be paid in full. He strongly advised the meeting to await the result of the agreement, and to adjourn till Thursday. There were several petitions before the Vice-Chancellor, and he had every reasonable hope they they would be stopped and the parties made to pay their own costs, and he hoped to have the co-operation of every shareholder as well as every creditor and depositor. The meeting was again adjourned. At the adjourned meeting, Mr. Godden, upon being called upon by the chairman, stated that the agreement for taking over the business of the bank which was under negotiation had been decided upon, and not only had the terms been arranged and approved by counsel, but the agreement itself signed, sealed, and delivered. It provided for the payment of all debts and liabilities of the bank by Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co., according to the schedule annexed to the agreement. The gross liabilities as certified amounted to £96,000, but a great proportion of those would, of course, run off, as many of them were bills which would be met at maturity. But the agreement could not come into force until after the meeting called for the 8th of June, at which it must be approved. Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co. were to appoint a liquidator, and the bank was to consent to a winding-up order. He therefore hoped that every creditor and shareholder would support the carrying out of the agreement. Some conversation then ensued. In reply to a question put by Mr. Chatterley, Mr. Godden said that there had been three provisional liquidators appointed, but they had no power beyond that of being mere receivers. In reply to a question, Mr. Crowe, the manager of the bank, stated that the schedule annexed to the agreement contained the whole of the bank's liabilities, excepting of course the paid-up capital of the bank. The deposit and current accounts were, of course, dead liabilities, which would have to be paid in full; but the acceptances which were included would, he had every reason to believe, be met in full. Upon the motion of Mr. Beaumont, seconded by Mr. Wicks, it was unanimously resolved :—"That Mr. W. H. Roberts be, and is hereby, instructed to continue to oppose any order being made upon any hostile petition that is or may be presented against the City and County Bank, and to use every effort to carry into effect the terms of the agreement dated this day, and made between the City and County Bank of the one part, and Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co. of the other part."

S. H. EMMENS (LONDON).—A meeting of the creditors of Stephen Henry Emmens, of 8 Old Jewry, merchant and banker, trading as 'Emmens Brothers and Co.,' was held on Thursday at the Cannon-street Hotel, when a statement of his affairs was submitted and read by Mr. James Cooper, of the firm of Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, and Co., public accountants. The liabilities were stated at £89,000, with assets, principally in mines and shares (subject to realisation), amounting to £109,000. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and Mr. Cooper was appointed trustee to act with a committee of inspection chosen from the general body of creditors, Messrs. Crook and Smith being the solicitors to the proceedings.

W. E. TAYLOR (ACCRINGTON).—A meeting of the creditors of W. E. Taylor, Enfield Mills, Accrington, was held at the Offices of Messrs. Stevenson, Lycett and Co., on Tuesday, at 12 o'clock, when a statement of affairs prepared by Mr. Edwin Collier, of 64 Cross-street, Manchester, was read to the meeting. The statement showed gross assets including property held by creditors £72,912 8s. 1d., and gross liabilities £53,606 14s., leaving an estimated surplus of £19,305 14s. 1d. Resolutions were passed that the works should be carried on under the supervision of a committee of inspection, with Mr. Collier as trustee.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The failure of Mr. James Hewett, gentleman, of Dormer-villa, Leamington, was on Friday before Mr. Brabazon Campbell, the registrar of the Warwick County Court. The estimated liabilities are about £50,000. The liabilities to unsecured creditors amount to nearly £10,000—The suspension is announced of Mr. Alfred E. Westbeech, of 38 Fenchurch-street, merchant, with liabilities amounting to £75,000, of which it is expected about £40,000 will run off or be covered by securities. The value of the assets cannot yet be ascertained. The business has been in existence 17 years. The failure is occasioned by the severe and rapid fall in prices in China. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Foreman and Cooper, of 7, Gresham-street. A petition for liquidation was on Tuesday filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court by Mr. Isaiah Danki Waddy, auctioneer and valuer, of Sheffield, whose liabilities are about £10,000, with assets estimated to be worth very little more than a shilling in the pound. The stoppage is said to result from stock and share broking transactions.

IRELAND.—We are informed that the liabilities of Messrs. Husseden & Runge, of Belfast, whose failure was announced last week, amount to £100,000, and that the assets will turn out to be very small. The liabilities fall chiefly on Belfast manufacturers, but some of them hold securities.

The Scotsman reports the failure of Messrs. Smith and Davidson, grain merchants, of Greenock, with liabilities amounting to £50,000, and large assets.

The stoppage was announced on Saturday last of the Deutsche Braziliansche Bank of Hamburg, whose difficulties have been the subject of comment for some days past. The institution has only been in existence about two years, and has a branch at Rio, where the present embarrassments have arisen. It was hoped that some assistance would have been rendered on account of the wealthy connections of the bank. The liabilities are expected to be very large, and will probably fall upon German houses chiefly. With regard to the failure of the Deutsche-Brazilianische Bank, advices from Hamburg state that a meeting of the shareholders has been called for the 22nd June next. An official notification of the suspension of the bank has also been issued, in which it is stated that the difficulties and embarrassments have arisen through the breach of instructions committed by the former manager of the bank at Rio, Herr Rieke, which led to the despatch some time ago to Rio of a delegate, Herr Brunn, in whom the company had complete confidence. The first information of the arrival of Herr Brunn in Rio reached the company in Hamburg with not unfavourable communications on the 11th of this month; but later, on the 17th, a telegraphic advice was received that Herr Rieke had disappeared, and had left behind him important engagements of unknown amount. Next day followed a farther telegram, which allowed it to be concluded that improper credits of large amount had been given, and later information still further increased the sum of doubtful assets of the concern. In these circumstances the directors had thought it advisable to stop the course of current payments to single creditors pending a farther clearing up of the position.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. B. P. Daniels (Good, Daniels, and Co.) official liquidator of the Bronfloyd Company, Limited.

Mr. H. Montague, of 5 and 6 Bucklersbury, solicitor to the trustee.

Mr. John Pattinson (of the firm of Harry Brett, Milford, Pattinson and Co.), of 150 Leadenhall-street, E.C., and 12 Vigo-street, Regent-street, W., public accountant, and Henry Brown, of 7 Westminster Chambers, Victoria-street, Westminster, public accountant, have been appointed trustees of the estate of Daniel Henry Doherty Waterhouse, of No. 5 Hertford-street, May-fair, in the county of Middlesex, of no occupation. Messrs. Lumley and Lumley, of 22 Conduit-street, Bo nd-street, solicitors to the trustees.

WINDING UP.—An extraordinary general meeting of the shareholders of the City and County Bank (Limited) is convened for Tuesday, the 8th day of June next, for the purpose of passing a resolution for the voluntary liquidation of the company, and for appointing a liquidator.—A petition to wind up "The Fibre Association (Limited)" has been presented to the Court of Chancery.—In the Rolls Court, on Monday, an order was made to continue the voluntary winding-up of the "Swiss Times" Company, Limited, under the supervision of the Court, on the petition of a creditor and contributary.—A petition for the winding-up of the Seal, Lock, and Registering Pressure Gauge Company, Limited, is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 4th June.—At a meeting of the Deer Park Mining Company on Wednesday, a voluntary liquidation was resolved upon, and Mr. Wilde, the secretary, and Mr. Hughes (R. Eaton, James, and Co.) were appointed joint liquidators.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.—In the House of Commons, on Tuesday, Mr Watkin Williams gave notice that on the motion for the second reading of this Bill he would move that it be read a second time that day six months.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

In our last impression we alluded to the importance of an efficient audit of the accounts of every public company, and to the advantage which might be gained if certain particulars were required by law to be shown in the published balance sheets of such companies. Not only would it be convenient that comparisons should be facilitated between the leading facts relating to different concerns which are of like character, and between the successive balance sheets of the same concern, but other advantages would be found to attend a well-judged scheme for the preparation of uniform accounts.

A careful study of the modes in which various kinds of fraud and error can be masked, would be a desirable preliminary step, before determining the shape in which the law should require accounts to be presented. It would probably be found that the classification and description of assets would in many cases be a matter demanding special attention. Few boards of directors are willing, perhaps, to disclose the existence of doubtful items until concealment has become impossible. This tendency towards secrecy is not always indefensible—for it may be better not to disclose to the whole world, including, of course, rivals in business, the exact nature of the difficulties with which one has to contend. A favourable liquidation of such doubtful matters may even be hindered by too much publicity. On the other hand, it is certain that any concealment whatever is an injustice towards those who, upon the faith of the published accounts, may become purchasers of shares. And in very many cases, the rivals and opponents whom it is most desirable to keep in the dark, have unsuspected means of information, and are perfectly acquainted with all the facts which directors are most anxious to conceal. On the whole, and giving full weight to the obligation of loyalty towards existing shareholders, we believe it will rarely be found that the reasons in favour of publicity are overbalanced by other considerations.

If, then, the assets of companies were divided in such a manner as to distinguish what is tainted with doubt, what is overdue and out of course, and what is incapable of immediate realisation, from current debts and bills and thoroughly convertible investments, the creditor and shareholder would alike gain much useful information. The vigilance and activity of the whole staff would be taxed, in order that unfavourable comment might not be excited by the existence in undue amount of uncollected rents or other periodical receipts. And here, too, it might be an easy matter of comparison between, for instance, two gas companies' accounts, to determine whether from the amount of apparent arrears, there was room to suspect a fraud like the well-known case of Higgs; or, on the contrary the moral certainty that no such thing was possible. Every self-acting contrivance like this is of assistance to a well-intentioned board of directors, and is an impediment to rogues.

The case of a less honourable direction, which disasters daily occurring show is not infrequent, is hard to meet. If we assume that there is a resolute determination on the part of a board to pay dividends for a time, and to conceal any unsoundness which might stand in the way of their policy of representing every thing to be couleur de rose, then we may rely upon means being found for evading the strictness of any Statute ever framed. Unproductive investments can often be recast, debts of a desperate character represented by renewals, in such style as to give the impression that old loans have been paid off with interest, old investments realised with profit, and new transactions, presumably safe, entered into with the same parties. A mining company, not long since, was enabled to pay dividends because the vendor entered into a contract to pay a fixed sum per month, for a limited period, for deliveries of ore, and for his own purpose went on with his payments without reference to the delivery or non-delivery of the ore he had purchased. In like manner, a railway contractor, by becoming the lessee of his own lines, can conceal the actual net earnings, (as the accounts would only show the sums paid by him in virtue of the lease,) until he has got rid of the shares which he holds. All these are temporary expedients; but such contrivances generally serve the purpose of unscrupulous promoters, who can often in one or two years at most work out their schemes sufficiently to enrich themselves and cause enormous losses to others.

It is a question for those interested in banking, whether any interest ought to be reckoned on accounts which have practically gone into liquidation, however ample the unrealised security may be supposed to be. Such "lock-up" accounts, on which the primary debtor cannot pay the current interest, are not rare. Sometimes they are of enormous magnitude, and such a regulation as we have suggested might have the effect of stopping dividends. But this, though entailing loss on some of the shareholders, would be no more than a fair warning to the outside world. And any thing that would tend to induce investors to avoid placing a large portion of their means in any one undertaking, must so far do good.

For the purpose of interposing some difficulty in the way of unprincipled schemers, who would evade the provisions of an Act of Parliament, however well devised, the services of a competent auditor are of inestimable value; and the regulations made might be of a character to afford support to such an officer in the discharge of his duty, and to define the sphere of his action. As things stand, an auditor who insisted upon overhauling the profit and loss account, and debiting it with every sum which in his view ought to be reserved to meet losses and outgoings, might be told that he was invading the province of the directors, and that these things were matters of policy. But what is prescribed by law, he could insist upon without exciting remark or ill-feeling. A further, if humbler use of such statutory provisions would be educational. There are many small and obscure undertakings, the accounts of which are miserably kept, and audited in a most inadequate manner, usually by shareholders. These concerns would probably find it necessary to employ a competent accountant to put their books on a proper footing so as to comply with the Act, and then they would see the utility and economy of engaging his future services in the capacity of auditor.

On another occasion, we may discuss the question as to what can, and what cannot, be accomplished by the best of auditors: meantime we hope enough has been said to draw the special attention of accountants to the important subject of companies' balance-sheets.

The general meeting of the shareholders of the Emma Mine has had for its result a determination to continue the operations of the company, and to try if it be yet possible to recoup former losses. The resolution, settled by Vice-Chancellor Malins himself, which embodied this decision, was carried by a clear majority of the shareholders on the register; while of those who actually took the trouble to vote either personally or by proxy, the proportion of contents and non-contents was about nine to one. Under these circumstances, it is somewhat surprising that a strong attempt was made to pass over the decision of the meeting, and to carry into effect the compulsory winding-up of the company. The arguments used were of a familiar nature. First of all, it was said that nearly two-thirds of the shareholders were absentees, and hence that the meeting did not truly represent the general body. The obvious reply to this argument is, that if shareholders will not, in a case of such vital importance to their interests, take the trouble of filling-up and transmitting their proxy papers, they may be fairly put out of the question; and besides, even if all the absent shareholders had attended, and voted en masse against carrying on the business of the company, their votes would have been outnumbered by those who were in favour of continuing operations. The second argument was peculiar. It was stated, that a pamphlet had been circulated representing in the most flourishing terms the future prospects of the company; and that many shareholders had been misled by its sanguine calculations. But it appeared that the petitioner had himself been rushing into print, and advocating his own views with much fervid power; and the court apparently set off one publication against the other, and in deference to the expressed wishes of the shareholders, dismissed the petition. The future must show whether this decision is wise, or whether the openly-expressed doubts of the Vice-Chancellor as to the ultimate prosperity of the company were not too well founded. But apart from legal and technical grounds, the judgment seems thoroughly sound and wise. If partnerships were to be carried on upon the footing of being liable to summary extinction against the wishes of the great majority of the partners, at the caprice of any timid or captious member of the firm, co-operation in any shape would be summarily put an end to. In the case of joint-stock companies, the winding-up power of the court was at one time exercised in a somewhat undiscriminating manner, and many of these associations too summarily extinguished. While the rights of creditors ought to be scrupulously regarded and protected, the shareholders may fairly be compelled to act more as a body associated in a common enterprise, and less as a heterogeneous mass of individuals. In other words, it ought to be left, more frequently than is the case, to the general body of the shareholders to decide whether they will wind-up their undertaking, or continue to carry it on. Companies suffer too much by over-sharp promoters and weakly distrustful shareholders, to have their assets made the prize in a lottery to be struggled for by every shrewd man of business who may happen to hold a few shares.

Without questioning the propriety of a compulsory winding-up of the City and County Bank, we may yet direct attention to the edifying scramble which took place for the privilege of conducting its obsequies. Six petitions in all were presented, three being by creditors; and these were distributed over the Vice-Chancellors' Courts. The result of it was, that Sir James Bacon made an order on a shareholder's petition which came before him, adding that any arrangement as to the transfer of the assets to another bank could easily be carried out, if found to be beneficial. It certainly seems a strong justification for resorting to a compulsory order, that from the various petitions it was clear that the pickings of the company were being fiercely fought for, and that the assets must have been wasted in the fight. But surely, without disputing the right of any body to petition, the scramble is a little unseemly. To say that the first petition shall always prevail, would be to place a still higher premium on sharp practices; and it would only be fair to give the conduct of the winding-up to the most deserving petitioner. If a little more judicial notice was taken of the proceedings in other courts, and the fact of a petition having been presented in one court, made it obligatory on any other division to refuse to hear any petition, or to make an immediate order for its transfer, a good deal of scandal would be removed.

The point decided by Vice-Chancellor Malins in the Maria Anna and Steinbank Company's case, which we reported last week, though unusual, has in a somewhat different form occurred before, during the proceedings under the Albert Arbitration. There, shares in a company stood in the names of two persons, one of whom died. In the winding-up, it was held that, they having been joint tenants, the beneficial interest in the shares passing to the survivor, and the deceased holder being liable, under his several covenant, for himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to perform all obligations attaching to the shares, only in respect of such obligations as attached up to the time of his death, his executors must be placed upon the register, of course in their representative capacity, in respect of such obligations only. It seems, therefore, that Mrs. Hill would, as representing her husband, be liable for any obligations attaching to his shares previous to his death, but not otherwise. The case we have referred to is reported in the 15th volume of the Solicitor's Journal, p. 922, under the heading of re Kirby's Executors.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES BILL.

SIR,—The following observations of Mr. W. E. Forster and Colonel Barttelot on the resolution moved by the latter in the House of Commons, on Monday last, "That no legislation with regard to the Friendly Societies can be deemed satisfactory which does not provide in some way for compulsory registration and audit, and for the gradual introduction in all cases of a properly calculated scale of contributions,"—may possibly be deemed by you worthy of insertion in your paper with reference to the vexed question of audit:—

"COLONEL BARTTELOT:—Every one connected with these societies must be anxious to know whether they were in a state of solvency or not. Hon. members would recollect the circumstances of a trial held at Liverpool at the beginning of the year, with reference to a fraud committed on a burial society. In that case, one Crossley was arraigned for stealing the key of a certain chest belonging to the society, and it appeared that his father, who had been the secretary of the institution, had been, during his life, what the world called a most respectable and flourishing man, and that after his death he had been buried with all the pomp and circumstance of an alderman. It soon afterwards, however, turned out that all his respectability was fictitious, and that he had been guilty of great frauds upon the society. But who were the auditors of this society? which numbered 120,000 members, and possessed £20,000 of assets,—why, they were two members of the society who had been made the tools of Crossley, who kept two bank books, a forged one for the inspection of the auditors, and a real one for the use of the bank. The fact was that auditors should be men sent down by the Government who had nothing whatever to do with the societies."

"MR. W. E. FORSTER:—No doubt there was to be a quinquennial valuation, but who was to be the valuer? He was to be appointed by the society. The whole advantage of such a valuation would be neutralized unless they insisted that the officer should, through the government, be responsible and fit for his office. Then came the other requisite,—a sound and an honest management of the society from year to year. That depended mainly on the accounts, and the accounts mainly depended on their proper audit * * If the audit were to be conducted by men appointed by the societies, with no check upon them from without, we might as well not ensure any audit whatever."

I may add, that according to the remarks of the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the same motion, it is proposed by the Friendly Societies Bill to give greater facilities for checking fraud, and to enforce against auditors and others penalties which do not now exist.

Yours, &c.,
N.

SAVINGS BANKS FUNDS.—The National Debt Commissioners report that in the year 1874 the interest accrued to them on the Post Office Savings Banks Fund invested by them amounted to £742,863; the interest allowed to depositors amounted to £524,560, and the expenses incurred in the year were £99,616; making together £624,176, thus leaving the Government a profit of £118,687 on the year's transactions. But the interest accrued in the year to the Commissioners on the Trustee Savings Banks Fund being only £1,406,610, and the interest allowed to depositors being £1,467,615, there was upon this account a loss of £61,005; and the interest accrued to the Commissioners on the Friendly Societies Fund invested was but £23,798, while the interest allowed to the societies amounted to £74,253, showing a loss of £50,455. Therefore, the surplus on the Post Office Savings Banks account being £118,687, and the loss on the other savings banks £111,460, the net result was a surplus of £7,227.

LAWYERS AND ACCOUNTANTS.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Sir,—Hearing that my remarks in your issue of the 8th instant, have "brought down" the editor of the Law Times upon me, I have had the curiosity to see for myself what the "oracle has spoken." I find it simply "bosh," and a friend adds, "too rubbishy to notice." I will, however, with your permission, just have a few words in reply, not exactly by way of answer,—for I really cannot find any thing requiring it,—but simply, because I feel in the humour. It is the old tale over again—the advocate's motto,—"If you have no argument, abuse your opponent." "What a most mistaken notion (says the Law Times), 'to think' that solicitors are 'always' paid for making out a bill of costs." Who said they were? And yet, when are they not, when they do make one out? For as the Law Times says, "they avoid it as much as possible, as a 'disagreeable duty.'" The client is informed that he has so much to pay, without being even furnished with particulars; and if he ventures to think the amount too much, then is the time for making out a bill of costs, in many cases, a professional "hand" being specially engaged. I know of one case where a solicitor's bill was originally sent in, including an item for making it out at about £4. The person having the same to pay, thought it too much, and he would have it taxed: another bill was made out for £12, and eventually £8 odd was actually paid! What other trade or profession can "manufacture" like this? It is no idle tale, I can vouch for its truth, for I paid the money myself! Take a solicitor with principally a bankruptcy practice. How many of his bills are made out without the item referred to? and your readers no doubt will be the best judges as to how many of them are required for "taxation by an opposing party." It is all moonshine! the shoe pinches, and the Law Times kicks, and "clouds" the dust, in the vain endeavour to blind its readers. If the editor of the Law Times himself considered my remarks the rubbish he would have his readers believe, I fancy they would have been allowed to pass unnoticed, and without comment from him. I have, however, myself noticed, that when an obscure M.P., for instance, has made a telling speech, there has generally been found some person or other to criticise, approving or disapproving what has been said; but if the speech has been dull, uninteresting and nothing in it, it has generally passed unnoticed. Truth is not always palatable, and so it is that my remarks have roused the anger of the Law Times. It was not, and is not, my wish to find fault with solicitors as a body, many of whom are my best and most intimate friends; but I, for one, do not care to be continually insulted by a few nameless pettifogging lawyers, some of whom are struck off the Rolls for "bad behaviour." I have brothers, and other relatives, in both law, physic, and divinity; yet I consider myself quite as far above doing a mean action as any of them, or their "kind," although I happen to be one of those "described as an accountant."

Yours truly,

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, Westminster.

June 1.

(Sittings in Banco, before the Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Mellor, and Mr. Justice Quain.)

Jay v. The Gresham Life Insurance Company.—The Court was occupied half yesterday and half to-day with this life insurance case—which was tried at the Assizes, and the trial of which had taken up six days. The insurance had been effected by the plaintiff on the life of his wife, who had been a Mrs. Lupton, and whose life he had insured after her marriage. He was married to her in September, 1871, the policy was in October, 1872, and the lady died October, 1873. The defence set up by the company was that the plaintiff had not answered truly the questions put by the company as to the usual medical attendant of the lady, and as to her being of sober and temperate habits, and that in point of fact she was, as he well knew, addicted to drinking, and to such an extent as to affect her health and shorten her life. It appeared that in 1871 the plaintiff had been introduced to Mrs. Lupton by a lady, a friend of his, and that he became engaged to her, but that afterwards he saw her in such a state of excitement, as he supposed under the influence of drink, that he spoke to her friend about it, and wrote a letter to Mrs. Lupton herself throwing up his engagement; but that in consequence of an explanation on her part, he was convinced that his suspicions were unfounded. He, however, before the marriage, consulted her medical attendant, Dr. Davis, who stated that he had cautioned her against excessive drinking, and warned her that she was suffering from disease in consequence of it, and that he told the plaintiff that she suffered from drinking, which he, however, denied, though he admitted that he had consulted Dr. Davis "whether he should marry the lady, with reference to her health." The marriage, however, was solemnized, and, afterwards the insurance was effected, and within a year she died. At the trial, Dr. Davis, the lady who had introduced Mrs. Lupton to the plaintiff, and many other of her relations and friends were called as witnesses for the company, and swore that she drank to excess, and that they had repeatedly seen her drunk; while on the part of the plaintiff many witnesses swore that she was perfectly sober. There was a great mass of evidence on both sides. The trial lasted six days, the learned Judge took up nearly a day in his summing-up, and the jury, after some hours' consideration found for the plaintiff; and there was an application to set aside the verdict as against the evidence. Mr. Giffard, Q.C., and Mr. Cave were for the plaintiff in support of the verdict; Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., for the company, was not called upon. The court, after hearing the counsel for the plaintiff fully, said that the mass of evidence was so great that they thought it better that the case should not be decided by a single trial. As the case was to go to a second trial, they thought it best not to say anything further as to their reasons for this conclusion, lest they should prejudice the second trial. Rule absolute for a new trial.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, Lincoln's Inn.

May 28.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir James Bacon.)

In re the Wolsingham Park Dinas and Fire Brick Company.—An order was made for winding-up the above company. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Bush appeared for the petitioner. Mr. Byrne, for the company, did not oppose.

In re the City and County Bank (Limited).—This was a petition for winding-up the above company, brought by a shareholder. Three other petitions, presented on the same day that this petition was presented, were brought by creditors in other branches of the Court. One came before Vice-Chancellor Malins this morning, and was directed to stand over for a week. The other two—one brought by Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co., the other by the Credit Foncier—were to come on before the Master of the Rolls on Monday. Mr. Kay, Q.C., Mr. Swanston, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings appeared in support of the petition; Mr. H. M. Jackson, Q.C., supported on behalf of creditors. Mr. Southgate, Q.C., Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Edward Chitty for the company; Mr. Whitehorne for the petitioner in Vice-Chancellor Malin's court; Mr. E. C. Willis for depositors; Mr. Waller, Q.C. and Mr. W. Latham for the Credit Foncier; and Mr. William Pearson and Mr. Dauney, for Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co., opposed. They said that the order, if made at all, ought to be made on one of the creditors' petitions, and that arrangements were in progress by which it was hoped the assets and liabilities would be taken over by Messrs. Brown, Janson and Co. on terms. They asked, therefore, that the petition might stand over to allow a general meeting to carry out the proposed arrangement by means of a voluntary winding-up, or, at least, to have all the petitions heard together. The Vice-Chancellor said everybody agreed that the company must be wound-up in some way. The facts were undisputed that the company was insolvent, had ceased to carry on business, and owed considerable debts, and the amount of assets was uncertain. It was the plain duty of the court to prevent the spoilation of the property and needless litigation. There was no case suggested that it would be possible to resuscitate the company, and he must therefore make an immediate order. It was said that a beneficial arrangement might be come to with Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co. If that were so, they or any one else could make an application in the winding-up to carry out such arrangement; and liberty to do so should be inserted in the order. His Honour then overruled some technical objections that had been taken, and said the one set of costs would be allowed the creditors. Those who opposed would not be allowed costs. The other petitions were not before him, and he could not, therefore, deal with the costs of those petitions.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir C. Hall.)

In re the Bradford West-End Mill Company.—This was a petition for the winding-up of the above company, which was formed in the year 1872. It appeared that the company had never commenced business, and that the only shareholders in it were the subscribers to the memorandum of association. Mr. W. C. Harvey was for the petitioners. The Vice-Chancellor made the usual winding-up order.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. Malins.)

Re the Emma Silver Mining Company (limited.)—A petition was presented in the matter of this company in October last, by a Mr. Askew, a shareholder, praying an order to wind up the company compulsorily. The petition stood over from time to time till the 24th of March last, when a decision was pronounced upon it, though no winding-up order was then made. The general facts attending the formation and operations of the company having been set forth in previous reports need not now be stated. By the decision of the 24th March last, the petition was ordered to stand over till a meeting of the company had been called to ascertain the real opinion of the shareholders as to its true position. Accordingly, on the 9th of May last a meeting was held, at which Mr. Whinney was in the chair, and 641 persons, holding 27,754 shares voted in favour of a resolution (settled by the Vice-Chancellor) that it was the opinion of that meeting that the operations of the company could be carried on with a reasonable prospect of success, and that the Vice-Chancellor should be requested not to make any order for the winding-up of the company. Eighty-five persons, holding 2,840 shares, voted against the resolution; and 19 persons holding 380 shares, sent their proxies to the petitioner, but he being prevented by illness from attending this meeting the proxies were lost. Upon the petition being now mentioned to the Court, it was urged on behalf of the petitioner that a winding-up order ought, notwithstanding the resolution of the company to the contrary, to be made. In support of that view, it was insisted that the total capital of the company being 50,000 shares, it followed that holders of 19,026 took no part in the meeting; and that of the persons voting in favour of the resolution, 599, holding 21,924 shares, had sent their proxies to Mr. Macdougall; that it was more than probable that many persons present at the meeting were swayed by the knowledge of his influence, and that they had voted as they did in consequence of a circular sent by him to the shareholders with reference to the solvency of the company, representing it to be realising £12,000 a year and free from debt, with £17,000 on hand; whereas, it was said, those representations were untrue. It also appeared that the petitioner had himself sent a circular to the shareholders, giving them his views on the condition of the company. Mr. Cotton, Q.C. and Mr. Graham Hastings, appeared for the petitioner, and insisting on the actual insolvency of the company, asked that it should be wound-up; but the Court declined to hear that argument. They then asked that the petition should stand over till some one could be found to advance money to work the mine. Mr. Glass, Q.C., and Mr. Robinson were for Mr. Macdougall and other shareholders who had, and still, opposed the winding-up of the company; Mr. J. Pearson, Q.C. and Mr. Colt were for the company; Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., Mr. Kekewich, and Mr. Wintle were for some of the old directors; Mr. Grosvenor Woods was for Mr. Burnand; Mr. Nash was for other parties. The Vice-Chancellor said the petition to wind-up the Company was heard at great length on the 19th and the 24th of March last, and although supported by the petitioner and some other shareholders, there was a very strong amount of feeling with respect to it, and great opposition was offered. He had felt himself bound to take steps to ascertain what was the real opinion of the shareholders in the company, and the result of the arguments on the petitition was, that, although he thought then, as he did now, that it would have been the wiser course to wind-up the company, he directed a meeting of the company to be held. He was afraid it had led to more expense than he had anticipated, but both he and his chief clerk had taken the greatest possible pains, and given their utmost attention to the matter. With regard to the settling of the mode in which the meeting was to be held, who should or should not attend it, and as to whether solicitors and reporters should or should not be admitted, every precaution had been taken that the meeting should be so convened as that every shareholder should have the fullest opportunity of expressing his opinion on the condition and prospect of the company. The meeting was presided over by Mr. Whinney, a gentleman in every way competent to direct its management, and nearly every one appeared to be satisfied. The meeting was perfectly fair and impartial, and the result was that a very large majority was in favour of going on with the working of the company. The proportion of voters was about eight to one, and of votes about ten to one. Nevertheless, it had been now attempted to be argued that the company should be wound-up. That argument, however, he at once stopped, for he could never act as if no such meeting had been held and as if nothing had been done since the 24th of March last. One of the principal grounds on which the proposed winding-up order was now asked for was that Mr. Macdougall had recently circulated a pamphlet with reference to the affairs of the company; but Mr. Askew, the petitioner, had also published one, and therefore that ground could not possibly prevail. The Vice-Chancellor felt that as against the large number of votes and voters in favour of a continuance of the company, this application to wind it up could not be entertained. It would be unjust to allow the petition to stand over, as suggested, and so let it hang above the head of the company. The petition must be dismissed; and the only question then would be whether it should be dismissed with, or without costs. The petition was presented in October last. It stood over from time to time, and first came directly before him in December, 1874. Was there originally a justification for presenting it? He thought now, as he did at first, that the petitioner had been misled by the parties who had introduced the scheme into this country. The petitioner appeared to have lost about £2,500 by the share he had taken in the concern, and it was surprising, if his own statements as to the company were correct, that he should have thought it worth his while to present this petition. Still his doing so was not absolutely unjustifiable, or in itself reprehensible, and it might, perhaps, have been wiser for the parties to have acceded to the prayer of the petition in the first instance. They had not done so, but had strenuously opposed it. It is now clear that the petition must be dismissed: and he thought it should be dismissed without costs. That being so, there must be no costs given to the company, as against the petitioner, the same rule would apply to the old directors, who must bear their own. Neither Mr. Macdougall nor those who sided with him could be allowed any as against the petitioner. It was true they had succeeded in their views, but they must pay for their success. Mr. Burnand, who finally agreed with them, should have appeared by their counsel also. He had not done so, and must take the consequences. The result would be that every one must bear his own costs, except Mr. Whinney, who would be allowed his out of the company's estate. The order would therefore be,—Petition dismissed, without costs; costs of the company and Mr. Whinney out of the estate; costs of the late directors to be paid by themselves; costs of Mr. Macdougall and his friends by themselves; and costs of Mr. Burnand by himself.

BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.—The following is the official return of the cheques and bills cleared in the Bankers' Clearing-house for the week ending Wednesday, June 2:—

Thursday, May 27	£13,651,000
Friday, May 28	13,138,000
Saturday, May 29	14,719,000
Monday, May 31	38,530,000
Tuesday, June 1....................	18,436,000
Wednesday, June 2	15,572,000
	£114,046,000

The total at the corresponding week of last year, which also comprised a Stock Exchange settlement, was £129,654,000.

At the Hull Bankruptcy Court an application was made to remove Mr. A. Atkinson, of Bradford, from the office of trustee of the estate of James Large, an absconding bankrupt. The fact appeared to be that the opposing party on attending the meeting for election of trustee, found on their arrival the resolution signed, &c.: but it was replied that the meeting having been held in due course, and at the time named, the appointment should not be disturbed because the representatives of some creditors arrived late. The Deputy Judge declined to disturb the appointment, and complimented the trustee upon the energy and ability he had shown in the matter.

A COUNTY COURT JUDGE ON BOOK-KEEPING.—At the Sheffield County Court on the 26th instant, the judge, Mr. Ellison, had an application made to him in the case of William Hollis, a bankrupt, that an accountant might be appointed (paid out of the estate) to assist the bankrupt in drawing up a statement of accounts, as he did not thoroughly understand them. The judge, in declining to make the order, said that if such assistance were obtained, it ought to be at the expense of the bankrupt's friends. The estate ought not to suffer by the payment of such charges. He thought it would be a very injurious practice to adopt or allow such a thing. It would, no doubt, be a beneficial thing for the accountants, but very unfair to the creditors. No very great knowledge of book-keeping was required to enable a tradesman to understand his own books.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

May 28.

(Before Mr. REGISTRAR PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE JAMES CUNLIFFE.—The bankrupt, described as a steamshipowner, commission merchant, and agent, of 83 Gracechurch-street, applied to pass his examination. His accounts disclosed debts amounting to £21,923, of which £5,748 was unsecured, with assets consisting of stock-in-trade at Goole, £50 only, The bankrupt had presented a petition for liquidation, but the creditors failed to pass any resolution, and adjudication followed. Mr. OWLES, for the trustee, did not oppose. Mr. Douglas Straight opposed for one of the creditors, and stated that the bankrupt had obtained from his client within the three months preceding the date of the failure goods of the value of between £750 and £800. Certain representations had been made to the creditor, and it was desirable that the circumstances under which possession was given of the property should be fully investigated. Mr. George Lewis, who supported the bankrupt, stated that he had a complete answer to the opposition. Mr. Registrar Pepys said he did not wish to throw any obstacle in the way, but the right to examine the bankrupt and other witnesses would not be affected by the passing of the examination. Mr. Lewis said that information had been given five months since as to the disposal of the goods. Mr. OWLES stated that the trustee was satisfied with the accounts as they stood. Some discussion followed, and eventually Mr. Registrar Pepys said he thought the bankrupt was entitled to pass, without prejudice to any application which might be made for the examination of witnesses.

May 31.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE DAWBARN.—Mr. Baker, of the firm of Lawrance, Plews, and Baker, applied to the Court to appoint a receiver to the estate of Mr. James Dawbarn, of 80 Lombard-street, also carrying on business at Norwich, and Thetford, and at Winford, in Somersetshire, as coal and iron merchant and mine owner. The affidavit stated that the liabilities were £34,000, including those on bills of exchange, about £6,000 of which would run off. There were some secured debts, but the value of the security was not at present capable of being estimated. The assets consisted of household furniture and effects, on which there is a bill of sale, a stock of coals and plant, and the usual trade effects to the value of £1,020, and book debts estimated to produce £4,000. His Honour appointed Mr. Wintle, of the firm of Johnson, Cooper, and Wintle, public accountants, receiver and manager, and made an order restraining the executions of judgments obtained by the Bristol and South Wales Bank, and also restraining the Sheriff of Middlesex, who had seized the cash-box of the firm, containing £420, and the furniture, from disposing of them without the order of the court.

IN RE RICHARD EATON.—The debtor, a mechanical engineer, of the Eaton Engineering Works, The Grove, Southwark, and also of the Chemical Works, Basford, in Nottingham, has presented his petition for liquidation, stating his liabilities, of which £464 on bills would run off, at £32,500. There were debts to the amount £4,500 fully secured, and £6,400 partly secured, leaving a total amonnt of liabilities to rank against the estate of £25,000. In addition of the engineering works, there were chemical works at Basford, in Nottinghamshire, with a considerable plant, for the manufacture of sulphuric acid. The total value of the assets had not been ascertained. His Honour, on the application of Mr. Baker, appointed Mr. Peacock Turner, public accountant, of Gracechurch-street, receiver and manager, with liberty to purchase the necessary raw material to keep the works going at Basford to avoid the rapid deterioration of the value of the plant which would otherwise ensue.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM.)

IN RE WOODS AND CO.—THE CITY UNITED CLUB.—This case was mentioned to the Court under the following circumstances:—The debtors, William, George, and Henry Woods, proprietors of the City United Club, Ludgate-circus, had presented a petition for liquidation, and a meeting of creditors had been convened for the 17th instant, at the office of Mr. A. G. Ditton, the solicitor to the proceedings. It had recently been discovered that about 800 or 900 persons were subscribers to the club, having paid their subscriptions up to January, 1876, and counsel had advised that they were entitled to the notice of the meeting. It was accordingly proposed that the place of meeting should be altered from the solicitor's office to the Guildhall Tavern, and its date postponed from the 17th to the 21st inst., and, upon the application of Mr. Cock, his Honour made the order asked for.

AVERAGE OF LIFE.—A return recently made by the Registrar-General, in compliance with an order of the House of Lords, shows the average age at death among different classes in the healthy county of Rutland on the one hand, and on the other hand in the Superintendent-Registrar's district of Liverpool, of Manchester, and of Salford, all of which three have a high death-rate. The classes distinguished in the return are (1) the gentry and professional persons and their families; (2) tradesmen, &c., and their families; and (3) labourers, mechanics, and servants, and their families. The return extends over the 13 years 1861-73. The deaths in that period in the first class, among the gentry, occurred at ages which give an average of 43·1 years in Rutland, but only 46·1 in Salford, 44·6 in Manchester, and 45·6 in Liverpool. The difference is not very great; but in the second class—the tradesmen class—the ages at death in Rutland show an average of 44·4 years, but only 29·6 in Liverpool, 28·9 in Manchester, and 29·7 in Salford. Among the third class, labourers, &c., the ages at death averaged 36 years in Rutland, but only 23·4 in Liverpool, 24·4 in Manchester, and 22·4 in Salford. It appears, then, that in the county of Rutland the tradesmen class average at death an age not greatly below that of the gentry, but the labouring class only three-fourths of that age; but in the three towns the tradesmen class average only about two thirds, and the labouring class not much more than half the age of the gentry. In the towns the average age of the labouring class at death. and also of the tradespeople class, is only about two-thirds of the same class in the county of Rutland. Another part of the return shows how many of the deaths were of children, how many of young persons, and how many of adults; and here we see how in the three towns the excessive loss of life in infancy brings down the average age at death. Taking 1873, the last year in the series, we find that in the towns no less than 8,394 of the 19,117 deaths, that is, nearly 41 per cent.—were of children under five years of age; but in the county of Rutland only 129 of the 417 deaths, or less than 31 per cent. In the towns more than 21 per cent. of the deaths were from zymotic diseases, but in Rutland less than half that ratio; and in the towns nearly 74 per cent. of the deaths from zymotic diseases were of children under five, but in Rutland only 55 per cent.

THE NORTHERN (IRELAND) LAW CLUB has passed the following resolution:—"That we are of opinion it is prejudicial to the interests of our profession that its members should act with mercantile or trade debts collecting societies, or agents, and we, therefore, recommend the discontinuance of the practice, and that instructions should be received and communications made only from or with either the principals or their attorneys,"

CHARGE OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

At the Hull Police-court, on Monday, John Wilkinson, jeweller, Great Driffield, was summoned for having obtained goods under false pretences, and also with having disposed of them otherwise than in the ordinary way of trade, within three months of his becoming a bankrupt.—Mr. Sydney, of London, appeared in support of the information, and Mr. L. White, of Driffield, for the defendant.—Mr. Sydney stated that the summons had been taken out pursuant to an order made by the London Bankruptcy Court, directing a prosecution on the part of the trustees under certain liquidation proceedings. The defendant was a jeweller, carrying on business in Great Driffield, and he filed his petition for liquidation by arrangement in the Hull County Court, on the 22nd of January last. The first meeting of creditors under the liquidation proceedings was held on the 13th February, and a resolution was then passed by a statutory majority of the creditors, and it was decided that the affairs of the bankrupt should be liquidated by arrangement. That resolution was subsequently duly registered in the Hull County Court, and at the same meeting Mr. W. C. Harvey, of Basinghall-street, London, and Mr. Morris Samper, Hatton Garden, were appointed joint trustees. The liquidation proceedings were transferred from the Hull County Court to London. A statement of affairs was produced by the debtor's attorney at the first meeting of creditors, and the debtor was submitted to an examination by the trustee. On the trustee returning to London, many of the creditors expressed great dissatisfaction with the result of the debtor's examination, and at the request of the creditors the trustees called a meeting for the purpose of considering the statement of affairs and to decide upon what course to take. On the 19th of April a meeting of creditors was held in London, and a resolution was passed directing the trustees to apply to the Court for an order to prosecute. An application was subsequently made to the Court, and an order was made directing the trustees to prosecute the debtor under the provisions of the Debtors' Act, 1869. The magistrate asked if the goods were sold in Hull?—Mr. Sydney replied that they were all sold in Hull. He understood that some question would be raised as to the jurisdiction of the court in the matter. The London Bankruptcy Court, and indeed other courts as well, invariably, prior to granting an order to prosecute, require the opinion of counsel that there is a reasonable probability that a conviction will be secured. In this instance they had taken the opinion of Mr. Besley, of London, who advised that that court had jurisdiction, inasmuch as the goods were sold in Hull.—The magistrate said it was quite clear that the court had jurisdiction.

The case was adjourned until the 9th instant, for the attendance of witnesses, bail being accepted in two sureties of £100 each.

Mr. Sydney said the deficiency amounted to £3,000, and the estate had realised £600.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

A correspondent of a contemporary writes as follows on this subject:—"It is admitted on all hands that the existing Act and the rules engrafted upon it are totally inadequate in many respects to secure to advantage the interests of the creditors generally. Take, for example, the case of a debtor who has presented a petition for liquidation by arrangement, or by a composition with his creditors. The object of the Bankruptcy Law is to secure equality amongst creditors, and this, I presume, is the meaning of affording the debtor the facility for presenting his petition for a liquidation by arrangement, in order that, when a debtor feels that he is hopelessly involved, he may, by the opportunity offered to him, extricate himself from his difficulties, and may at the same time secure equality among his creditors. The first meeting of the creditors under the liquidation is summoned, the claims and proxies are handed in to the chairman of the meeting, a composition of a few shillings in the pound is offered to the creditors and accepted by a statutory majority, and this arrangement is afterwards confirmed at a subsequent meeting. The nature of the securities held by the creditors are for the most part acceptances on bills of exchange. The debtor may be a small trader, and may have been obliged to borrow money and renew bills at a high rate of interest. This is not very hypothetical. On the other hand, some of the liabilities incurred by the debtor are invariably those of his ordinary tradesmen, whose claims are for sterling value, and their claims are placed in a very small minority compared with the liabilities on the bills. The tradesmen creditors must then be governed to a very great extent, if not altogether, by the action of the bill holders, whose exorbitant claims eat up the greater portion of the debtor's assets. Is this fair and equitable towards the smaller creditors? The bill holders are of course aware that the debtor can find friends who are willing to come forward and compound with his creditors in order to save his reputation and credit in business. Looking at the ingredients of their claims, they can perhaps well afford to accept a composition of 10s. in the pound, and are favourably inclined towards the debtor, knowing well, among other things, that he may have occasion for their services again. Who is to guarantee that consideration has passed between the debtor and his creditor in respect of the bill? The holder of the bill will not convict himself. Some means should be afforded to the creditors of testing the bona fides of the transaction, and this is the great stumbling block with which bona fide creditors have to contend. The difficulties that have to be overcome in order to arrive at the truth of the transaction are such as to deter any creditor from contending with the question. Again, the debtor is required to produce to the first meeting of his creditors a statement of his assets and liabilities issued by himself. Who is to test the veracity of the statement? He should be required to produce the statement on oath, and should also be required to answer any questions that may be put to him by any creditor at the meetings respecting every creditor's claim. A bill of exchange is a very convenient security for a creditor to hold, as it imports per se a valuable consideration, which it is very difficult to rebut. Creditors' meetings should be altogether abolished, and in place thereof the proceedings in bankruptcy and liquidation should be conducted under the supervision and control of the proper officers of the court. A receiver should be appointed in each case by the court, if necessary, and the discretion as to what is right and proper to be done under the circumstances of each case should be left to the officers of the court. Creditors may be unduly biassed in adopting a resolution, and great opportunities are placed at their disposal for improper action. The matter should be left in the hands of an impartial person."

SCARBRO' COUNTY COURT.

(Before Judge BEDWELL.)

RE HENRY HUGALL HARPER, OF SCAGGLETHORPE.—At the last Court, held on the 4th ult., an application was made on the part of Mr. Wise, of Malton, an execution creditor, for payment out of the estate of the amount of his execution and costs.—Mr. Langborne appeared for the execution creditor, and Mr. Crowther for the trustee under the liquidation. It appeared that the petition for liquidation was filed on the 1st of April last, while the execution was issued and entry made upon the debtor's premises on the 29th of March. At that time all the furniture and effects, as well as the crops and farming stock, were in the possession of the debtor's landlord under a distraint for rent. Mr. Langborne maintained that the execution creditor was entitled to be paid in full, he having had possession of the goods before the petition was filed. On the part of the trustee, Mr. Crowther argued that the execution creditor was not in possession at all, all the goods having been previously seized, and being at the time of the alleged levy in the hands of the landlord for rent.—His Honour reserved his decision at the time, but delivered it on Monday, when he said the seizure by the county court bailiff was not invalidated by reason of the landlord being in possession. It would not be invalidated by a prior execution seizure. This is laid down in Wm's Saunders, i. 257 (ed. 1871).—"If the second writ be delivered to the Sheriff after he has seized the goods under the first, the goods are bound by the second subject to the first, even without a warrant, and although the first writ be afterwards set aside." Clearly, therefore, the seizure was not invalidated by reason of the landlord being in possession as distrainor. By common law the landlord distraining takes no property in the goods seized; he only gets a lien, that is, a right to hold till he is paid; but by a statute of William and Mary he was empowered to sell; and until the sale the property in the goods remains where it was, viz. in the debtor-tenant. In fact, therefore, at the time when the county court bailiff went into possession, the actual property in the goods was in the debtor. It was clear also on the authority of Slater v. Pinder, L.R. 7 Exch. 95, that as the execution creditors had, for a debt under £50, seized the goods prior to the Act of Bankruptcy, he would have been entitled to the proceeds of sale against the trustee even if there had been an adjudication, and the adjudication had been prior to a sale by the execution creditors, and in the event which had happened, there having been no adjudication, his Honour was clearly of opinion that the execution creditor was entitled. His order was that the costs of the execution should be taxed, and that such costs and the amount of the debt were to be paid out of the money in court, so far as it would go; and if insufficient, that the balance due to him was to be paid out of the estate; and if more than sufficient, then the balance of the money in court was to be paid to the trustee; the latter to have his costs paid out of the estate.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—Messrs. Walker & Simpson, flour merchants, of No 3 Old Ropery, Liverpool, have suspended payment. The liabilities are said to amount to £33,300, and the assets are expected to realise £24,000, leaving a deficiency of £9,000. —News has been received of the suspension of a large house in Canada, which will affect the Leeds district to the extent of about £30,000.—Messrs. Peter Salomon and Co., of Billiter-street, have presented a petition for liquidation.—Two additional members of the Stock Exchange were "declared" on Tuesday morning, but the cheques of one of them—a jobber—were returned on the previous day. Five failures have consequently been announced in connection with the settlement, but the liabilities in each case are small.—On Monday a petition in liquidation was filed at the Bradford County Court by Mr. Hartley Merrall, worsted manufacturer, of Spring Head Mill, Haworth, near Bradford. The liabilities amount to £22,000. The books are in the hands of Messrs. H. W and J. Blackburn, accountants, of Bradford. The amount of assets is not yet known.—A petition for liquidation has been filed in the Manchester County Court by Edward Michelson, of No. 1 Print-street, Cannon-street, Manchester, merchant, trading under the style or firm of E. Michelson and Co.; liabilities £16,000. It was announced on Wednesday that, owing to the recent failure of the Aberdare and Plymouth Iron Companies, Mr. Edward Corry, of 8 New Broad-street, London, had been compelled to suspend payment. His books were placed in the hands of Messrs. Quilter, Ball, and Co. The Times says: Among the complications that will result from the recent heavy failures, we understand that several actions at law are likely to arise out of some large transactions in which the Aberdare Iron Company was engaged just previous to its collapse. We believe there is no secret in the matter to which we refer; in fact, it was stated by Mr. Fothergill at a meeting held not long since at Cardiff that he had placed orders in the north of England for iron to the extent of £100,000. It is well known that a great deal of that iron has been made, and bills drawn against it are now running on the company; but it has not yet been delivered, and was, in fact, awaiting shipment at the time of suspension. We understand further that the sellers declare it to be their intention now not to deliver except against cash. As regards a portion of the quantity of the iron referred to, the usual weight notes were passed to the buyers, and the latter have pawned these documents to third parties for large advances, treating them as warrants, and the ownership of the iron will therefore be contested.—A petition for liquidation was filed on Wednesday, in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court, by Joseph Erskine Bambridge, carrying on business as a common brewer and malster, at Doncaster, Yorkshire. The liabilities are stated to be about £6,000, with assets the precise value of which is not yet ascertained.

HEAVY FAILURES IN THE IRON TRADE.—The Aberdare and Plymouth Iron Companies, whose critical position was last week the common talk in the City, were announced on Monday afternoon to have failed. Messrs. Sanderson and Co., bill brokers, of 69 Lombard-street, of which firm Mr. Henry Gurney was a partner, likewise stopped on Monday, having been largely connected with the above companies. The official notice issued by Messrs. Turquand, Youngs and Co., on Monday, in reference to the above failures, was as follows:—"A further meeting of some of the principal creditors of the Aberdare and Plymouth Iron Companies was held this afternoon, when it was determined to request the parties to present a petition for liquidation of their affairs by arrangement with a view to Mr. Turquand being appointed receiver and interim manager. It is hoped that this may prevent a suspension of the works of the companies pending the adoption of other possible arrangements. In view of their large engagements with the above two companies, Messrs. Sanderson and Co., of Lombard-street, have also thought it right to present a similar petition. Apart from these liabilities, Messrs. Sanderson and Co. have stated that their assets will prove to be of undoubted character."—On Monday it was also announced that, in consequence of the embarrassment of the iron trade and of their obligations in connection with other houses which have recently failed, Messrs. Gilead A. Smith and Co., of Change-alley, were compelled to suspend their payments. The books were placed in the hands of Messrs. Harding, Whinney, and Co., accountants. The firm has been established about seven or eight years, and was largely engaged in the American iron trade. The liabilities are estimated at about £600,000, for a greater part of which securities are held by creditors, and on their realisation the assets will mainly depend. The suspension was likewise announced of Mr. James Dawbarn, of 80 Lombard-street, and of Norwich and Thetford, and elsewhere, coal and iron ore merchant and mine owner. The liabilities were stated at £34,000, with assets estimated at £25,000. A petition for liquidation by arrangement was presented to the Court of Bankruptcy, and upon the application of Mr. Baker (Lawrance and Co.) Mr. Wintle, of the firm of Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle and Co., public accountants, was appointed receiver to the estate.

AMERICA.—American advices announce the suspension of Messrs. Chandler, Hart and Co., Philadelphia, engaged in the boot and shoe trade, with liabilities of £25,000.

CANADA.—Canadian advices state that Messrs. H. Davies and Co., dry goods merchants, Montreal, have called their creditors together; liabilities believed to be large.—Canadian advices report the suspension at St. John's, N.B., of Messrs. E. Beiler and Co., musical instrument makers; Mr. R. R. Sneeden, broker; Mr. Fred. Ring, oil merchant; and Mr. T. M. Tweed, wholesale druggist—all owing to the tightness of the money market. Owing to the failure of Messrs. H. Davies and Co., Montreal, Mr. Nelson Davies had made an assignment. Liabilities £30,000; assets about £18,000.

A telegram in the Vienna Neue Freie Presse announces the suspension of Cloetta and Schwarz, of Trieste. The liabilities are estimated at about £100,000, and fall in London, Vienna, and Trieste. The firm was very largely engaged in the cotton trade, and had also embarked recently in coal speculations. A private Vienna telegram in the Allgemeine Zeitung states that Her Ribartz, vice-governor of the National Bank, has shot himself in consequence of this failure. The Berlin National Zeitung is informed of the failure of Durathi and Co., of Athens, with important liabilities. A recent number of the same journal contains official particulars of the affairs of Herzfeld and Co., woollen merchants, whose failure was reported a short time ago. The assets amount to £7,900; the liabilities to £30,300. A dividend of about 25 per cent. for unsecured debts is expected. A statement that the suspension has necessitated the confinement of one of the partners in a madhouse is confirmed.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

F. W. CROSSLEY (SOWERBY BRIDGE).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Francis Whitworth Crossley, of Sowerby Bridge, drysalter, trading as "Frank Crossley and Co.," was held at the offices of Mr. Walter Storey, solicitor, on Friday. The statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,577 19s. 2d., and assets £2,082 9s.; the surplus of assets over liabilities amounting to upwards of £500. Resolutions were passed to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and not in bankruptcy, Mr. Frederick Foster (Foster, Roberts, and Co.), accountants, being appointed trustee, and Mr. Storey entrusted with the registration of the resolutions.

J. K. EDWARDS (PLYMOUTH).—A general meeting of the creditors of John Kittow Edwards, grocer and general dealer, of St. Cleer, was held on Monday, at the offices of Mr. J. E. E. Dawe, Union-terrace, Plymouth, to receive a report from the trustee (Mr. Dawe) and to give such instructions to him as might be deemed expedient. Mr. R. H. Dawe attended as solicitor of the estate. The debtor's statement being of an unsatisfactory nature, the creditors present passed a resolution to the effect that should the committee of inspection consider it desirable that an application should be made to the court for the prosecution of the debtor, the trustee should forthwith institute such proceedings.

R. BULLOCK (SELBY).- A dividend of 3s. 4d. in the pound has been declared in the estate of Robert Bullock, farmer, of Chester Court, near Selby; and at a meeting of the creditors held in Knottingley, Mr. Alexander Atkinson, of Bradford, accountant, the trustee in the matter, was formally thanked for his efficient services in the conduct of the proceedings.

H. SMITH (LOWESTOFT).—A meeting of the creditors of H. Smith, of Crown Street, Lowestoft, Baker, was held at the Crown Hotel, Lowestoft, on Monday, 31st May, 1875, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, being appointed trustee with a committee of inspection. Messrs. W. R. Seago, of Lowestoft, and C. H. Wiltshire, of Yarmouth, are solicitors in the proceedings.

A. K. FORBES (ARBROATH).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. A. K. Forbes, flaxspinner, Hatton Mill, near Arbroath, was held in Arbroath on Tuesday, when Mr. Forbes reported that he had been unable to get the security he anticipated. He however made an offer of 6s. per £1, which the creditors present accepted, subject to the whole of the others doing likewise.

G. ROBERTS (SHEFFIELD).—At a meeting of the creditors of Mr. George Roberts, carpet merchant, of Market-place, Sheffield, held on Tuesday, it was resolved to accept a composition of 13s. in the pound. The liabilities amount to £10,416 18s. 10d., and the assets to £9,626 17s. 5d.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF LORDS, MAY 28.

FALSIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS BILL.—The Marquis of Lansdowne, in moving the second reading of this bill, said that its object was to provide that any person who should wilfully falsify accounts should be guilty of misdemeanour. In a recent case the manager of a large banking firm, being in difficulties, transferred the money of a client to his own account. A prosecution was instituted, and the case was clear, but a conviction was impossible. Similar cases had occurred before, and the present bill, which had obtained the assent of the Law Officers of the Crown and had passed the other House without amendment, would, it was hoped, prevent these offences. The bill was then read a second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JUNE 3.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY ARBITRATION BILL.

The Attorney-General moved the second reading of this Bill, which had come down from the House of Lords. He explained that in seeking to fill up the vacant post of Arbitrator the Lord Chancellor was obliged by the existing Act to choose a gentleman who either was or had been a judge, and that, as there were difficulties in complying with this condition, it was proposed by the present measure to make the qualification 15 years' standing at the Bar. It was intended, moreover, to provide for an appeal to the Full Court of Chancery, and for bringing before the same Court points in regard to which the late Arbitrator, Lord Romilly, had differed from his predecessor, Lord Westbury. With respect to an amendment which had been placed on the paper by the hon. member for Coventry (Mr. Jackson), objecting to the measure being dealt with as a private Bill, he explained that, under the rules of the House of Lords, it had been found necessary so to treat it. He was prepared to accede to the proposal made in another amendment of the same hon. member—namely, that the Bill should be referred to a Select Committee; five members to be nominated by the House and four by the Committee of Selection.

Mr. Jackson, under these circumstances, would not oppose the second reading.

Sir P. O'Brien said there was a strong objection on the part of many persons interested to any one under the status of a Judge being appointed Arbitrator.

After a few words from Mr. Stacpoole,

Mr. Raikes remarked that the appointment of a Select Committee would afford an ample opportunity of weighing all objections, and pointed out that it would be especially important to consider whether it was desirable to leave the Arbitrator to decide at his own discretion whether or not there should be an appeal.

Mr. C. Lewis thought there had been nothing more lamentable in the administration of justice in this country than the European Assurance Society Arbitration. At the end of five years, and after an expenditure of about £50,000, they had come to the conclusion that nothing whatever had been done. It was to be hoped that this scandal would not be aggravated in the future.

Mr. Meldon maintained that the policy-holders ought in justice to have a right to appeal not dependent on the discretion of the Arbitrator.

FRIENDLY SOCIETIES BILL.

The House then went into Committee on this Bill.

On Clause 14,

Sir W. Barttelot moved an amendment providing that the auditors should be "one or more approved by the Registrar," his object being to secure that in future those who audited the accounts of these societies should be fit and proper persons to discharge the duty.

Mr. Gourley opposed the amendment.

Mr. Dodson said the societies were no doubt competent to appoint efficient auditors, but unfortunately they did not always do so, and any body who had read the report of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission must see what evils had arisen even among societies of considerable standing from the inefficiency of the law. He hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would apply his mind to secure, in some way or other, an efficient and independent audit. At present auditors were too often the mere creatures of the Committee men, who practically appointed them.

Sir A. Lusk opposed the amendment as being inconsistent with the principle that the Government were not to give a guarantee.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said that no doubt the Commission found that there had been very great laxity in the matter of audit, some of the auditors appointed being exceedingly slack in performing the most ordinary and obvious duties of their office, while in other instances even men of high standing did not do more than examine into the arithmetical correctness of the accounts submitted to them, without inquiring whether the Committee had authority to incur the expenditure. Steps would be taken by which public auditors would be appointed by the authority of the Government, whose services could be obtained for the proper audit by these societies; and he trusted the appointment of those public auditors might be of use in other matters besides Friendly Societies. He hoped the general effect of that Bill would be much to improve the system of audit, because it would enforce by penalties the fulfilment of their duties by auditors and other officers of those societies. He also proposed to strengthen a later clause—Clause 32—which imposed a penalty for the falsification of accounts or balance sheets, so as to throw greater responsibility on the auditor. That was as far as he thought they could reasonably go, and he objected to the Government undertaking to approve the auditor. If there was sufficient publicity given to the proceedings and sufficient watchfulness exercised, they might hope to check the abuses which had hitherto prevailed. At all events, he was not able to accept the amendment of his hon. friend.

Mr. Anderson did not think the explanation of the Chancellor of the Exchequer met the requirements of the case. He had an amendment of his own to propose which would much strengthen the audit, and which was not open to objection. He suggested that those societies should be required to choose their auditors from the body of public accountants—say, of five years' standing.

Mr. Dodson pointed out that the Bill did not define the duties of the auditor.

Sir W. Barttelot did not think that what the right hon. gentleman proposed would be a sufficient guarantee that the audit would be satisfactory. He should be very glad to withdraw his own amendment and to allow the member for Glasgow to move his, though he thought some of the small clubs might have a difficulty in finding such a person as was described in the hon. gentleman's amendment. He would suggest the advantage of inserting a proviso that the auditors should not be members of the society.

Mr. E. Stanhope pointed out that if a society wished to defeat the law it might easily do so by asking the treasurer and secretary of another society to audit the accounts and promising to perform the same task for the other society. It was for this reason that he did not persevere with the amendment he had placed on the paper. He trusted the Committee would hesitate before it accepted the hon. member for Glasgow's amendment, as it would be hardly possible to define a "public accountant."

By permission of the Committee, Sir W. Barttelot then withdrew his amendment.

Mr. Anderson next moved an amendment to the effect that the audit should be conducted by a public accountant.

Mr. Muntz opposed the amendment, having arrived at the conclusion that the Chancellor of the Exchequer could not go further than he had done without defeating the object of the Bill as regards the audit. The Bill would effect a great deal of good, but if it was made more stringent it would do more harm than good. (Hear.)

The Chancellor of the Exchequer agreed with the remarks of the last speaker, and pointed out that there were a number of persons who were even more competent than public accountants would be to audit the accounts of these societies. He suggested the insertion in the subsection of the words "and in accordance with law," which would cast upon the auditors the duty of seeing that the items were properly allowed.

Sir G. Balfour thought the Government should make a supervising test audit in certain cases.

Mr. Dodson suggested the insertion of the words "duly vouched and in accordance with law." It was most desirable to secure, if possible, the independence of the audit.

The amendment was withdrawn.

Sir W. Barttelot moved the insertion of words to the effect that the auditors should not be members of the society.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer objected to the amendment as seeming to imply that all such societies were dishonest. As a matter of fact, the largest and most important of them managed their own affairs exceedingly well, and contained within themselves men who were perfectly competent to audit the accounts, and whose interest it was to perform that duty thoroughly.

Mr. Stansfeld remarked that all societies would do well to adopt the system of independent audit.

Lord Eslington suggested that instead of adopting the amendment in the form in which it had been moved it should be provided that at the instance of a fixed number of members the committee of any society should be compelled to obtain a perfectly independent audit of their accounts.

Mr. Cowan thought the members of any society would be better able to audit their accounts than any outsider could possibly be. In provincial towns public accountants were as a rule bankrupt attorney's clerks, and he therefore objected to the proposal to employ them in preference to the members of the societies themselves.

Mr. Hermon supported the amendment.

Sir A. Lusk hoped the Chancellor of the Exchequer would insist upon his Bill as it stood. He desired that the societies should be provided with the best possible machinery, and then left to manage their own affairs.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer opposed the amendment on the ground that if the societies were respectable and straightforward better and its would beobtained by the appointment of members as auditors than if outsiders were chosen, and that if the societies were bad it would be as easy to engage outside auditors who would play into the hands of the committee as for the committee to obtain tools among the members themselves.

Mr. W. E. Forster thought the right hon. gentleman the Chancellor of the Exchequer was right in his view. On the whole he preferred the clause as it stood in the Bill, but suggested the advisability of providing that auditors appointed by societies should be approved by the Registrar. If the appointment was left solely in the hands of the societies or their committees, they might, in the case of small societies especially, appoint as auditors the landlords of publichouses in which their meetings were held, or some persons who were not fitted for the post.

Sir H. Johnston did not think the registrar would be qualified by practical experience to select the best persons as auditors in the many localities in which societies existed.

Mr. Floyer opposed the amendment on the ground that it would interfere with the practice of appointing as auditors honorary members, which practice was common in many of the best regulated societies, and had worked beneficially.

After some further conversation the committee divided. The numbers were—

For the Amendment	29
Against................................	153
Majority	124

Mr. W. Holms moved in page 10, line 8, after the word "provide," to insert "one at least of whom (the auditors) shall be approved by the registrar or assistant registrar."

The Chancellor of the Exchequer objected to the amendment on the ground that whatever the bill appeared to do ought to be real and not a sham, and he was satisfied sending up the name to the registrar would be a sham, as it would appear to give a sanction which it really did not give.

After a few words from Mr. W. E. Forster in support of the amendment,

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said it did not follow because an Act of Parliament did not succeed in making everything perfect it therefore did no good. Under the present law noting was required except that the rules should contain a provision for periodical or annual audit. But there was no provision as to the way in which the accounts should be prepared, no penalty on the auditors for mistakes or wilful omissions, the whole thing being as loose as possible. This bill, though it did not go the length the hon. gentleman wished, went a considerable way. It provided that there should be an audit by auditors, it gave the Registrar power to regulate the way in which the accounts should be prepared, and made other improvements where all was now in confusion. What the auditor would have to do was to see whether the items posted under the various heads, such as Sick Fund, Management, Death Fund, and so on, were properly posted. Besides, a penalty was imposed on the auditor if he did not do his duty properly. Therefore, it was nonsense to say that the Bill did nothing.

Sir A. Lusk said the committee had decided this question already. (Hear.)

Mr. Cowen suggested that if the members of a society disapproved an audit by their own members the members of the society should be at liberty to appoint an additional accountant to be recognised by the Registrar or the Government.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer said if the members of a society at one of its ordinary meetings disaproved an audit by persons who were members of the society they would have the power of appointing other persons to audit the society's accounts.

Mr. W. Holms did not see why the government should shrink from throwing this responsibility on the Registrar.

Mr. Chadwick believed that if the payment of small fees for auditing the accounts of a society were made compulsory considerable damage would be done. He approved the option which the Chancellor of the Exchequer had proposed to give to societies of appointing public accountants.

The amendment was negatived.

Mr. Whitwell moved an amendment to the effect that the names and addresses of the persons proposed as auditors should be sent up to the Registrar and also put up in the lodge-room or board-room of the society three months before the period of audit.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer assented to the amendment, and it was agreed to.

Mr. Chadwick said experience had proved that every audit ought to be a continuous one. Therefore, he suggested that the auditor should be appointed at the beginning of the year, and be authorised to audit the accounts half-yearly, quarterly, or in any other mode he might think proper.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. Meldon said that when a certain number of the members of a society thought the audit had not been fairly conducted, they ought to have the power to obtain an official investigation into the affairs of the society. He, therefore, moved an amendment giving the Registrar power to appoint at his discretion an official auditor, who was to be invested by all the powers possessed by the ordinary auditor.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer pointed out that the object of the hon. member would be substantially obtained by the 23rd clause, which empowered the Registrar, on the application of a certain number of members, to cause an inquiry to be made into the affairs of the society.

The amendment was withdrawn.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

In speaking of an audit, it is of the first importance to distinguish whether or not a thorough and efficient one is meant, and also to consider how far the matters to be audited admit of exhaustive treatment, without such heavy expense as would be considered intolerable by any body of shareholders. Many accountants appear to consider that in demonstrating that they really understand book-keeping by double entry, and that they can, if left to follow their own course and take their own time, fully explore all the intricacies of a business concern,—they have shown their fitness for the highest tasks. And many shareholders, on the other hand, practically adopt the idea that they have secured all the advantages of a true audit when they have voted a sum for that purpose, which so far from sufficiently remunerating a careful and plodding inquirer, would hardly pay a man of genius for accountancy for the trouble of superficially glancing at their accounts.

There is a rudimentary kind of audit, which consists in ascertaining that some sort of voucher can be produced for every payment, and that the printed balance-sheet corresponds with balances which can be found in the ledger. Such an audit is supposed to be completed by checking the additions of the cash-book and balance-sheet, and glancing at the banker's pass-book. It was in the days when such audits were common, and were frequently performed (as well they might be) by unprofessional men, that the custom of voting a trifling pittance of ten or twenty guineas to the auditor originated. At the other end of the scale is the audit which, whilst relying on the certificates of skilled officials for the quantity and value of stocks and plant, exercises a certain supervision even over matters such as these, and includes a thorough analysis of all ledger accounts, particularly the impersonal ones. An auditor who does his work well, endeavours to watch every thing with the eye of a prudent and careful master, not flattering himself with the existence of profit until every unfavourable possibility has been gauged. We have known cases where the ill-judged parsimony of shareholders has failed to hinder an effectual audit, because the directors chose to regard the honorarium voted to the auditors as a mere fee due in respect of the responsibility assumed by them, and the personal supervision they bestowed; paying them in addition a much larger sum for the time and travelling expenses of their clerks. But the directors, we believe, would have done no such thing, had not their sense of responsibility been quickened by the fact that they themselves held enormous stakes in the concern. It is more common by far to find that the small fee paid is accepted on the footing that services of corresponding value are expected, and that any investigation of accounts, however desirable in itself, which would render the auditorship a losing affair, is to be left undone. No doubt, the most cursory examination of a balance-sheet by a trained accountant must tend to prevent gross mistakes; but the professional man little considers what is due to himself, who accepts a task (on whatever terms) without a fixed determination, cost what it may, to perform that task effectually. A resolute adherence to this principle would soon lead to important results; for auditors of any eminence would either free themselves from the most anxious and responsible of their professional duties, or they would enforce the payment of an adequate fee.

Some of the artifices against which an auditor has to be on his guard, are very difficult of detection. He has to rely on human testimony after all, and cannot hope to do more than excite a salutary terror in the breasts of evil-doers. There was once a case, for instance, of a railway company, whose officers presented a schedule showing the tonnage of unused rails in stock. The piles were some of them minutely described, the number and lengths of the rails being given. Other piles were briefly stated to consist of so many tons. The auditor's suspcions were excited; he demanded to see the man who had made out the inventory, and at length elicited that some of the piles were purely imaginary. Renewals or other expensive outlays had taken place in the past half-year which some official thought it expedient to place to a certain extent against the revenue of the next half-year; hence the creation of this imaginary asset, which it was meant should be written off before the next audit. Small blame would have attached to the auditor, in the minds of reasonable men, had he been taken in by such a contrivance as this: for the possibilities of deceit are infinite, whilst the vigilance of any man must necessarily be finite.

In the case of banks an enormous mass of details must be taken for granted, unless the expense of the audit is to be very much augmented. The auditor can, and does, compare as many pass-books as he can obtain with the balances in the ledgers, and he examines the securities, and the profit and loss account: but any one who knows what it is to count bonds and other securities by thousands, must be aware that errors are possible—at the least, coupons may be missing; and the accounts of individual depositors may be manipulated by clerks, who will know how to secrete, temporarily, the pass-books of such depositors. Worst of all, the counting of coin, and of securities takes place at a date which is foreknown by all concerned; and there is nothing to prevent a deficiency being momentarily covered by a short loan of cash, to be re-taken out of the bank till, soon after the auditor's scrutiny is over.

We need not comment on the fact that the amounts due to banks and other institutions on current bills and loans (or overdrawn balances, so common in the North) may or may not be recoverable. An auditor can never know who is insolvent or embarrassed, except by mere chance, until some visible sign of difficulty appears on the face of the accounts. The chance of detecting any rottenness in the assets is much diminished when the debtors reside in distant cities; and, again, when a Company may have entered into contracts of the most hazardous nature, in respect of which no entry can be made in a balance-sheet.

Experienced auditors have always endeavoured to limit their responsibility by using guarded language in their certificates. Let shareholders look to such language closely; and if they see fit, let them call for explanations from the auditors at their meetings. The result will generally be most wholesome.

It might naturally be thought that the directors of the Canadian Oil Works Corporation would, as far as possible, try to escape from the unenviable notoriety into which they have been dragged. To have an action brought, the issue in which was really whether the directors were knaves or fools, with the result that, owing to the failure of the jury to make up their minds on the point, the whole question may at any moment be raked up again, is a very severe shock to most men; and we cannot but admire the courage of Sir John Hay in contesting any case which might draw public attention to his connection with the ill-starred Canadian Company, especially when his conduct had to pass under the stern consideration of so inflexible a judge as Sir Richard Malins.

To judge from the Vice-Chancellor's language in delivering his judgment, Sir John Hay's mistake seems to have been somewhat of a technical character. He was solicited to become director of the company, an honour which may have been cheaply purchased by the payment of £1,000, which he was bound to make for the shares necessary to qualify him. This sum was to have been recouped him by the promoter, Mr. Prince, and an arrangement of this kind, though extremely common, is one which is absolutely certain to call forth the most terrible thunder of any judge under whose attention it may happen to be brought. As a director of the company, Sir John Hay signed certain cheques in payment of the purchase-money to Mr. Prince. Among these there was a cheque for £1,000, which was endorsed by Mr. Prince, handed to Sir John Hay, and paid subsequently into the bankers of the latter. Up to this time Sir John Hay had not paid up the £1,000 which was necessary to qualify him as a director, but on the day following the receipt of the cheque from Mr. Prince, he drew a cheque for £1,000 on his own private bankers, and paid it in to the credit of the company. Omitting mean terms, to use a mathematical expression, the result was that a cheque drawn by Sir John Hay as a director of the company, and payable out of the company's funds, was, the very next day, applied in payment of the directorial qualification. This, according to the judgment of Vice-Chancellor Malins, amounted to paying for his qualification out of the funds of the company, and the amount was ordered to be repaid. For, said the Vice-Chancellor, "Sir John Hay ought to have paid the £1,000 originally out of his own money, which he did not do." What the real difference is between paying a sum of money which is eventually repaid out of the funds of a company, and paying a sum of money for which you have previously received an equivalent, was not matter of judicial decision; but the views of the Vice-Chancellor will be doubtless attentively studied by the members of that fraternity who are vulgarly known by the ignoble appellation of "guinea-pigs." It was said that the report of one of the Food Adulteration Committees was most useful to the dishonest retail trader, as it taught him exactly the due proportions in which to mix his wares and instructed him in the art of eating and drinking the goods he received from wholesale houses, and avoiding his own. Just in the same manner, the decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins affords most useful instruction. Directors of companies have above all things to keep on good terms with their bankers, and to be careful to draw cheques for payment of their qualifications before they receive the amount which is to compensate them for their exertions, and keep them harmless in case of any loss. But it is none the less a source of congratulation, that one more loop-hole has been closed, and we can but hope that the more the ingenuity of directors is employed in evading the application of judicial dicta, the more stringent the judges will be in blocking up means of escape. Whatever may be the faults of Sir Richard Malins as a judge, he can at any rate claim one very strong merit,—that of honestly endeavouring to do justice between all contending parties; and he has, besides, a strong hatred of equivocation and financial dexterity, which, though it may not be altogether in harmony with the prevalent views of commercial morality, is yet imbued with the true spirit of equity.

The Scotch are, as we have all been accustomed to learn from our early days, a peculiar people, governed by laws and institutions peculiar to themselves, and looking upon their more southern fellow-subjects as an inferior race, made expressly as a source of profit to the canny northerners. But it is rather startling to find a Scotchman singing "wha daur meddle wi' me" to an English judge, and boldly denying the jurisdiction of so solemn an institution as our Court of Bankruptcy. Mr. Robertson, the Scotchman in question, had unwisely trusted too far an English customer, who filed a petition for liquidation. In part-payment of Mr. Robertson's account, he had received a cheque, which, unluckily for him, dealt with funds which had at the time of its presentation become the property of the trustee under the liquidation; though the bankers duly paid it. This sum the trustee called upon Mr. Robertson to refund, which the latter, who had taken due pains to prove for the balance of his claim, strongly objected to do, on the ground, mainly, that no southron court could assert any rights over a Scotchman. However, Mr. Robertson's patriotism received a severe blow. It seems to have been held that he could not, at one and the same time, run with the hare and hunt with the hounds, and that as he had come in and proved for the balance of his claim, he had waived any right to object to the jurisdiction of the court on the ground of his nationality. Moreover, he had to refund the £120 he had received. A Scotchman is as sensitive in his pocket as in his pride, and this order must have been felt very keenly. Altogether, Mr. Robertson will not be much impressed with English law, and will probably be more patriotic than ever in the future.

It is always an unfortunate thing for a man to try to help his friends, and then to find that a harsh world has misconstrued his motives; and it sometimes happens that persons who incur liability on the assurance of interested parties that it will be all right, find out that they have committed a very unlucky mistake. Without in any way venturing to question the correctness of the decision which Mr. Registrar Pepys judicially delivered in Sir Peter Tait's case, and which we report this week, we can only remark that the debtor was fortunate in escaping from his liability. The general principle to be deduced from many decisions is, that a man who applies for shares and receives no notice of allotment, is not to be considered as a contributory. But to judge from the evidence in Sir Peter Tait's case, he actually applied for the shares, and they were allotted to him; though no mention of this was found to have been entered in the books of the company. At least this is matter of reasonable inference from the fact that Sir Peter Tait, who was also a director of the company, was offered the shares, accepted them, and actually paid the deposit. This is a widely different thing from the mere application for shares. In this case the shares were formally offered, and as formally accepted. The solicitor for the company, with great prescience, seems to have assured him that he incurred no liability, and perhaps the company might be held bound to indemnify a director who so kindly took the shares for the purpose of floating the speculation; but as against the creditors of the concern, it seems rather hard that the transaction should not be held binding. Sir Peter Tait may cheerfully reflect that "all's well that ends well;" but similar good nature on his part may end in a "distinguishable" case, the upshot of which may be less gratifying.

WINDING-UP.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Ballyclare Paper Mills Company (Limited).—At a meeting of the shareholders of the Kirkcaldy and London Steam Shipping Company, it was resolved to wind-up the concern as speedily as possible.

Mr. Lewis Balfour (formerly a member of the firm of Vivanti, Annett, and Balfour, of St. Mary Axe, who suspended payment in October, 1867, with liabilities of about £300,000, and subsequently arranged a composition of 10s. in the pound with their creditors) has announced through Messrs. Baggs, Clarke, and Josolyne, the accountants, a further voluntary payment of 3s. 4d. in the pound on account of the liabilities of that firm. He entered it with £10,000 capital only nine months before its failure.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EX PARTE TILL—IN RE RATCLIFFE.—This was an appeal from a decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, and it raised an important question as to the power of creditors at a meeting under a liquidation petition, after a proposition made by the debtor has been duly put and rejected, to adjourn the meeting with a view to the renewal of the proposition at a future day. John Ratcliffe, an architect and surveyor, at Stafford, filed a liquidation petition under which the first meeting of the creditors was held on the 4th of January, 1875. The debtor offered a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, payable in 12 months. This proposition was put to the meeting, and was rejected, there not being in its favour the statutory majority—viz., a majority in number and three-fourths in value of the creditors present in person or by proxy at the meeting. A resolution to adjourn the meeting to the 18th of January was then proposed, and was carried by the proper majority—viz., a majority in value of the creditors. At the adjourned meeting, the debtor's offer was renewed, and a resolution accepting it was duly carried, and was duly confirmed at another meeting on the 30th of January. There was no record in writing of the original rejection of the debtor's offer, but the resolution to adjourn and the subsequent one in favour of the composition were reduced to writing, and signed by the creditors who supported them, and were filed with the proceedings. The resolution accepting the composition was carried in for registration, but the Registrar of the County Court at Stafford refused to register it on the ground that "the sense of the first meeting duly summoned and competent to decide the matter was taken, and was adverse to the resolution for a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, and that, therefore, it was not competent for the creditors afterwards to adjourn the meeting, or for any one again to propose that a composition which had been already rejected should be accepted." The Judge of the County Court affirmed this decision, but the Chief Judge was of opinion that, by virtue of the provisions of the 275th of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870, the Court could only have regard to a resolution which was reduced to writing and duly signed by the creditors, and that, therefore, he could take no cognisance of the original rejection of the composition. He therefore directed the resolutions accepting the composition to be registered. One of the creditors appealed. Mr. E. C. Willis and Mr. Northmore Lawrence were for the appellant; Mr. Bagley was for the debtor. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the decision of the Registrar ought not to have been reversed by the Chief Judge. He thought that rule 275 applied only to resolutions in favour of liquidation by arrangement or the acceptance of a composition. In such cases only a written resolution duly signed could be looked at. There was no express provision in the Act or the Rules as to the adjournment of a meeting, but this was said to be an inherent power. But it was not a bona-fide use of that power for a majority in value of creditors, not sufficient to carry a resolution accepting a composition, by means of a resolution for an adjournment, to turn the tables on the creditors who had rejected the resolution in favour of the composition which had been previously proposed. When the debtor's proposition had been duly voted upon and rejected, it appeared to his Lordship that the meeting was at an end, and the resolution to adjourn was a perfectly idle one, which could not be put to the vote. The Registrar was quite right in ascertaining what passed with regard to the original resolution by evidence. The chairman of the meeting ought to have made a minute of what occurred, but his omission to do so could not preclude the Court from ascertaining the facts in another way. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. The Chief Judge seemed to have thought that because a resolution in favour of liquidation or composition must be reduced into writing and signed, therefore when such resolution appeared it was conclusive, and no proof was admissible that the same resolution had been previously put and rejected. His Lordship was of opinion that though the fact that such a resolution had been passed could only be proved in the way mentioned in rule 275, yet the fact that it had been rejected could be proved by other evidence, for the rules contained no provision about it. If this were otherwise, when a resolution was passed and rejected, this might be intercepted by means of a resolution to adjourn, and this course might be repeated again and again. His Lordship was of opinion that when once the sense of the creditors had been duly taken, the whole thing was at an end. The creditors having really considered the question at the first meeting, had no power afterwards to pass a resolution for adjournment. The decision of the Registrar was right, and the appellant must have the costs of the hearing before the Chief Judge.

EX PARTE THE GENERAL SOUTH AMERICAN COMPANY (LIMITED) IN RE YGLESIAS.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Pepys, sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. Jose Antonio Yglesias and Carlos Michael Yglesias were merchants in Jeffery-square, St. Mary-axe, under the firm of J. R. Yglesias and Co. On the 29th of July, 1874, they filed a liquidation petition, and on the 31st of July Mr. William Turquand was appointed receiver and manager of their estate. On the 24th of September the creditors resolved to accept a composition of 3s. 4d. in the pound, and this resolution was duly confirmed on the 8th of October. On the 9th of March, 1874, Messrs. Madinya, of Guayaquil, in South America, had drawn upon Yglesias and Co. a bill of exchange for £2,000, payable 90 days after sight, which was accepted by them on the 13th of May. This bill became due on the 14th of August. It was dishonoured at maturity, and was protested for non-payment. Notice of the protest was given to the drawers, and payment was demanded by them. They, however, were unable to pay. They on the 15th of October, entered in some arrangement of deed with some of their creditors, but their affairs did not come under the administration of any Court. They had, on the 24th of June, sent to Yglesias and Co., as cover for their acceptance, a bill upon Paris for 52,000f. This bill came into the hands of Mr. Turquand, and was received by him at maturity. The General South American Company were the holders for value of the £2,000 bill, and they claimed to have the bill for 52,000f. applied in payment of the other, upon the principle of the well-known case of "Ex parte Waring," decided by Lord Eldon. The Registrar refused their claim, and they appealed. Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. E. Cutler were for the appellants; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Daniel Jones were for Yglesias and Co.; Mr. John Linklater was for the receiver. Lord Justice James said that the principal of "Ex parte Waring" was originally applied as between two bankrupt estates, and it had since been extended to the case of insolvent estates, whether they were being administered in Bankruptcy or in Chancery. But no Judge had ever expressed himself in favour of extending the principle to a case where, as in the present, there was only one estate in Bankruptcy, while the other parties to the bill, if they were insolvent, were not subject to any jurisdiction whatever, and could not be compelled to submit their rights to this Court. They might, if they chose, revoke the direction which they gave as to the application of the bill sent as cover for the acceptance, there being no equity as between them and the holders of the acceptance. Lord Justice Mellish concurred. If two insolvent estates were being administered by a Court, the Court could not alter the rights of any parties subsequently to the time when it had assumed the administration. Its duty was simply to take means to discover what these rights were. But when the affairs of one of the parties to a bill, though he might be insolvent, were not being administered by any Court, he still retained the ordinary rights of property. To make the order now asked for would be to deprive the drawers of the £2,000 bill of the ordinary rights of property. They were entitled to make any bargain they pleased with the acceptors, who, indeed, were now, by the resolution of their creditors in favour of the composition, placed again in a state of solvency. The decision of the Registrar was quite right, and the appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE.

June 5.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

IN RE LIVERPOOL AND AMAZON ROYAL MAIL STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—Mr. Chitty, Q.C. (with whom was Mr. Ince), for the petitioner in this case, stated that there was a prospect of the company being able to reconstruct itself, and asked for an adjournment. Mr. Romer, for a creditor, objected to this, and finally the Master of the Rolls allowed the petition to stand over until the first petition day in the sittings after Term, on an undertaking by the petitioner not to withdraw his petition without the sanction of the Court. Mr. Grosvenor Woods, Mr. E. Beaumont, and Mr. Byrne appeared for other creditors, and Mr. Angelo Lewis for the company.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

June 4.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR C. HALL.)

IN RE THE WERNPISTILL COLLIERY COMPANY (LIMITED).—This was a creditors' winding-up petition. The company was formed in December, 1873, with a capital of £100,000, in 20,000 shares of £5 each. In April last the petitioners sued and obtained judgment against the company on a dishonoured bill of exchange for £109; but the company had no property on which execution could be levied for payment of the debt. An action was subsequently brought against the company by one Shadrach Davies, the endorsee and holder of the bill. On the 27th ult. the company passed a resolution to wind-up voluntarily. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. Phear were for the petitioners. Mr. Karslake, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings, for the company, raised the objection that the petitioners were not the holders of the bill, and that Davies, the endorsee and actual holder, had neither been made a petitioner nor had been served with the petitioner; also that the wishes of the general body of creditors had not been consulted. Mr. Warmington, for a creditor, asked for a supervision order. The Vice-Chancellor said he could not consider this as a case in which the wishes of the creditors as a body ought to be consulted, or in which there ought to be a winding-up in any other way than that which the petitioners desired. They were unpaid creditors, and asked for the usual order, to which they were, under the circumstances, entitled. The only question was, whether there should be a compulsory order, or an order to wind-up under supervision. He thought there should be a compulsory order. Apparently, the petition had been perfectly well presented by the petitioners; but as it was said that the bill was in the hands of a third person, he should make the usual compulsory order; which, however, was not to be drawn up for a week, and not until the bill and an affidavit verifying the petitioners' title had been produced. If the petitioners were paid before the next petition day, then there would be an order continuing the voluntary winding-up under supervision.

IN RE THE CANADIAN OIL WORKS CORPORATION (LIMITED)—SIR JOHN DALRYMPLE HAY'S CASE.—This was an application by the official liquidator of the above company for an order that Sir John Dalrymple Hay, one of the past directors of the company, should repay to it a sum of £1,000 received by him out of the funds of the company on the 1st of December, 1871, or that he might pay a call of £25 per share on 40 shares held by him in the company. The company, as, by this time, every one knows, was formed for the purpose of purchasing from a Mr. Prince some oil wells in Canada, for a sum of £80,000, which was afterwards increased to £160,000. Sir John Dalrymple Hay was then solicited to become, and he became the chairman and a director of the company, consenting at that time to receive 40 qualification shares, for which the price was to be provided for him. A sum of £58,000 was to be paid to Mr. Prince on account of the purchase money for the Canadian property. A cheque for the full amount was at first drawn by the directors against the assets of the company; but it was afterwards split up into several smaller amounts. Among them was a cheque for £1,000, which was handed to Sir John Dalrymple Hay. It was endorsed by Mr. Longbottom, the agent of Mr. Prince in this country, and paid on the 1st of December, 1871, by Sir J. D. Hay into his own private account at his bankers'. On the 2nd of December, 1871, he paid in a cheque drawn by himself on his own bankers for £1,000 to the bankers of the company to the credit of their account as the deposit due from him in respect of his shares. The company failed, and was ordered to be wound-up. The question now argued was, whether the £1,000 paid in to the company's credit by Sir J. D. Hay on the 2nd of December, 1871, was really only a repayment by him of the sum of £1,000 drawn out the day before, or a bona-fide payment by him of £1,000 for his shares? That depended on whether at the time the cheque for the £1,000 was drawn on the 1st of December, 1871, and endorsed by Mr. Longbottom, any thing was due from the company to Mr. Prince. On the one hand, it was said that there was, and that Mr. Prince, as the true owner of the money, was perfectly at liberty to direct Mr. Longbottom to pay the £1,000 to Sir John Hay, who could no more be asked now by the company how he came by it than how he became possessed of any other money actually in his pocket. On the other hand, it was insisted that nothing was owing to Mr. Prince from the company on the 1st of December, 1871, and that, at all events, it must be assumed from the evidence in the case that Sir J. D. Hay really paid the £1,000 in respect of his shares out of the funds of the company. In the latter case, either as the owner of shares paid for by the company's money he must repay the company, or, as owner of unpaid shares, he must pay for them, and the calls in respect of them. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Montagu Cookson were for the official liquidator of the company; Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Dunning were for Sir John Dalrymple Hay. The Vice-Chancellor said the undisputed facts of the case were these:—Mr. Longbottom, as agent of Mr. Prince, came over from America to this country for the purpose of selling certain oil wells in Canada, which, it was represented, would be the sources of inexhaustible wealth. He first tried the City, and then the West-end of London. Eventually the company was formed, and Sir John D. Hay became the chairman of it. He signed its memorandum, agreed to be a director, to take shares to qualify him to act, and that those shares should be paid for—not by himself, but by Mr. Prince, the vendor of the wells. By so agreeing he accepted a bribe from the vendor, when he had duties to perform towards the purchasers of the wells. He became liable to pay in respect of the shares the sum of £1,000. He said it was paid. The other side insisted that, if paid by Sir John Hay, it was not paid out of his own money. The sum of £1,000 was, however, paid; and if Sir John D. Hay paid it out of the funds of the company, such a payment could not for a moment be sustained. It was argued that the £1,000 was really paid by Mr. Prince to Sir John D. Hay, and if it could have been shown that that sum was part of a larger sum due to Mr. Prince, and was not, therefore, a payment by Sir John D. Hay out of the funds of the company, but, as contended, a payment by him with money given to him by Mr. Prince, there might be some ground for Sir John D. Hay's contention. It had not been disputed that on the 1st of December, 1871, the sum of £1,000 was drawn out of the funds of the company, and that on the 2nd of December, the very next day, another cheque for £1,000 was paid in by Sir John D. Hay, drawn on his private account, to the credit of the company. So that the company on one day lost and on another got back the sum of £1,000. If, therefore, the £1,000 was the £1,000 of the company, it must be repaid by Sir John D. Hay. If the shares which he held were paid for, they were not paid for by him out of his own moneys, and he was indebted to the company in respect of them. If they were paid for out of the funds of the company, then he owed the company the amount so paid. So that in either view of the transaction, Sir John D. Hay owed the company £1,000. It was also argued, as already intimated, that at the time in question there was a large sum of money due from the company to Mr. Prince, and that Mr. Longbottom had authority to receive money for him. The first cheque in question was endorsed by Mr. Longbottom, and drawn to Mr. Prince's order. But in cases of this kind the Court was bound not to be blinded by the semblance of purity in a transaction which enabled a chairman and director of a company to evade the due performance of his duties. Sir John D. Hay ought to have paid the £1,000 originally out of his own money. He did not do so. Looking at the evidence in the case, it appeared to be clear that the £1,000 in question had been paid out of the funds of the company, and as no director of a company, holding shares in it, could consider those shares as paid for by him, when they had really been paid for with some one else's money—and in this instance with the money belonging to the company itself—it followed that in either respect, as the owner of shares for which he had not paid, or as the owner of shares paid for by the company, Sir John D. Hay was liable, and must be ordered to pay the £1,000.

IN RE THE BRADFORD TRAMWAYS COMPANY.—Two petitions for winding-up the above company came on for hearing, one of which had been transferred from Vice-Chancellor Malins. An order was made, and Messrs. Hargreaves and Mason were appointed official liquidators. Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Bradford appeared in support of one petition; Mr. Swanston, Q.C., and Mr. Cook of the other, and Mr. William Pearson, Q.C. and Mr. McSwinney for the company.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

June 4.

(Before MR. REGISTRAR PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE SIR PETER TAIT & CO.—This was an appeal from the decision of the inspectors, rejecting a proof for £2,090, tendered against the separate estate of Sir Peter Tait, by the official liquidator of the London, Belgian, Brazil, and River Plate Royal Mail Steamship Company (Limited) in respect of calls upon 110 shares, alleged to have been held by Sir Peter Tait in the company. Mr. G. W. Hemming was counsel for the applicant; Mr. R. V. Williams for the respondents. It appeared that the company was formed in the year 1868 for the purpose of taking over a shipping business carried on by Sir Peter Tait and Co., and purchasing from that firm a line of steam vessels. The capital of the company was to amount to £200,000, in £5,000 shares of £40 each, and the agreement with Sir Peter Tait for the purchase of the property was conditional upon 2,500 shares being allotted. At a meeting held in June, 1869, it was found that 110 shares had to be taken up before asking the public to subscribe for the remainder. Sir Peter Tait, who was also a director of the company, occupied the chair on the occasion of the meeting, and the shares were offered to him. According to the evidence, Sir Peter declined, in the first instance, to take the shares, but afterwards, upon one of the directors stating that it would be for the benefit of his firm that he should take them, he consented to do so upon an assurance by the solicitor that he incurred no liability, and he afterwards paid £110 upon the shares. It appeared, however, that no allotment of the shares had ever been made, nor did the books of the company contain any minute of the proceedings at the meeting. The question was whether, under the circumstances, the claim of the official liquidator could be supported. His Honour, having reviewed the evidence, held that there had been no acceptance of the shares by Sir Peter Tait, and dismissed the appeal, with costs.

In re Fothergill and Hankey.—Messrs. Robert Fothergill, M.P., and Ernest Thomas Hankey, described as of Abchurch-chambers, Abchurch-lane, also of Aderdare and the Plymouth Iron Works, both in the county of Glamorgan, ironmasters, colliery proprietors, and merchants, trading as "The Aberdare Iron Company," and also as "The Plymouth Iron Company," have filed the usual petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition. Upon the application of Mr. Hollams, jun., his Honour appointed Mr. Turquand, accountant, receiver and manager of the estate. The liabilities of the firm are estimated at £1,300,000; the assets, comprising the debtors' iron works, are valued at about £1,260,000.

In re the Hon. W. F. O. O'Callaghan, M.P.—This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. The bankrupt, described as of the Hôtel de Bade, Boulevard des Italiens, Paris, is M.P. for Tipperary. The case was before the court a month since, when, in consequence of the bankrupt's illness, an adjournment became necessary. Mr. T. Lumley appeared for the trustee, and Mr. Cottman for the bankrupt. It was stated that since the last meeting the bankrupt had filed the usual balance-sheet, and a proposal had been made for payment of a composition, but until the trustee had investigated certain securities given by the bankrupt to creditors it was impossible for him to say whether he accepted or rejected the offer. Under these circumstances a further adjournment was asked for by the bankrupt, and not objected to by the trustee. The statement of affairs showed unsecured debts £3,880, with secured debts about £4,000; assets, £1,106. His Honour granted an adjournment.

In re F. A. and M. Zimmerman.—The debtors, who are importers of chymicals, drugs, and chymical apparatus, of Aldersgate-street, have filed a liquidation petition, with liabilities returned at about £100,000, and assets of considerable value, including stock about £10,000. Upon the application of Mr. F. Knight, his Honour appointed Mr. Edwards, accountant, King-street, Cheapside, receiver and manager of the estate.

Ex parte Robertson—re Morton.—This was an appeal from an order of the Newcastle County Court, and involved a question as to the jurisdiction of the English Court of Bankruptcy over a Scotchman. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Finlay Knight were counsel for the appellant; and Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Colt for the respondent. The debtors, Messrs. W. and E. Morton, who were fruit and potato merchants at Newcastle-on-Tyne, had been in the habit of purchasing potatoes from Mr. Donald Robertson, a merchant, residing at Mayfield, Cupar, Fifeshire, and on the 17th of February, 1874, the debtors owed to Robertson a considerable sum of money. On that day they sent to Mr. Robertson a cheque for £120, which was presented at their bankers on the 19th, and paid. On the intervening day the debtors filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement with creditors, and on the 13th of March a first meeting was held, when a resolution was passed that the estate should be liquidated by arrangement, and trustees were appointed. The trustees subsequently applied to the County Court for an order directing Robertson to refund £120, which he had received, and also £36 12s. 9d., being the value of certain potatoes of which he had taken possession after the presentation of the petition. The application was resisted on the ground that Robertson being a Scotchman the court had no jurisdiction to deal with him, and on the further ground that the service was irregular, but the learned judge made the order. Robertson, who had proved for the balance of his debt in the County Court, appealed. After hearing the arguments of counsel, his Lordship held that the County Court had jurisdiction to make the order. The appellant received the £120 as part of the estate of the debtors. He came in under a compact for the due administration of the estate, and the court had ample jurisdiction to decide all questions. The appellant was bound to submit as much as if he lived on this side the Border. As to the alleged irregularity of the service, his Lordship thought there had been a complete waiver.

In re Alfred Bowes.—The bankrupt was a general merchant, of Queen-street, Bermondsey, and 146 New Kent-road. His balance-sheet returned debts of £22,475, of which £16,878 were due to unsecured creditors, with assets £6,692, comprising stock-in-trade, cash, bills of exchange, and other items. This was a sitting for public examination. Mr. Baker appeared for the trustee; Mr. Lumley for the bankrupt. It being stated that negotiations with creditors were pending, an adjournment was granted.

In re Albert Pelly.—The bankrupt, a merchant, of 18 Finch-lane, and Reigate, passed his examination without opposition, on a balance-sheet which showed unsecured debts of £12,117, and assets £3,739. Mr. Mackenzie appeared for the trustee; Mr. C. Hall for the bankrupt.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

House of Commons, June 7.

County Courts Bill.—The Solicitor-General, in moving the second reading of this Bill, explained that its main object was to extend the powers at present possessed by plaintiffs in actions tried in the County Courts to obtain judgments by default in undefended actions. It was said there was a very great difference of opinion as to whether a judgment by default should be obtained in cases below £5. It was considered that this doubt should be given effect to. The principal provision of the Bill was that in all cases where the debt was above £5, and where the debt was due for goods supplied in the way of trade, the plaintiff should obtain judgment by default in the same way as in an action in the Superior Courts. At the same time, every security was thrown around the defendant. It was provided that in all cases there should be personal service on the defendant, and that before the summons was issued on which judgment by default should be obtained the plaintiff should make an affidavit in proof of his debt. The provisions of the Bill were in accordance with the recommendations of the Judicature Commissioners. He hoped the Bill would be read a second time.—Mr. Chadwick called attention to the necessity of a change in the law of imprisonment by the county court judges for contempt.—Mr. Marten supported the Bill as a means of saving a great deal of expense.—Mr. Denison said that the measure proposed to give greater facilities to claimants to obtain judgment by default. He hoped there would be some safeguard against the danger of suitors "playing tricks" and deferring service of process until a day or so before, and then making affidavit that due service had been made. Mr. Wheelhouse replied that the present rules of county courts sufficiently guarded against any such danger. The Bill was then read a second time.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

June 8.

(Before the HON. JUDGE MILLER.)

IN RE JOHN HIGGINS.—The bankrupt was a grocer at Ballymena, in the county of Antrim. He had been in custody for nearly four months on a charge of endeavouring to leave the country with the intention of defrauding his creditors. His case came before the court on last court day, when an application was made to have the court direct a prosecution against the bankrupt for having fraudulently consigned large quantities of tea to his brother and other people in Liverpool. His lordship on that occasion expressed an opinion that although he was satisfied the evidence in the case justified a prosecution, he thought it would be better for the creditors to consider what course they would adopt under all the circumstances of the case. Mr. Samuel Benner, solicitor for the assignees, now stated that a meeting had since been held in Belfast, at which it was resolved by upwards of 40 creditors that proceedings should be instituted. Judge Miller said that under the 10th section of the Act certain things were required, and it was his duty to see that the whole case was properly before the creditors. On the last day he stated that the bankrupt had been arrested when about leaving the country, that he was nearly four months in prison, and that the goods in respect of which the prosecution was sought had been all recovered through the activity of the trade assignees. These matters he considered the creditors should have had fairly before them, but now they had decided upon it and were resolved to institute a prosecution which, as he before stated, the evidence in the case fully justified. Mr. Eaton (Oldham and Eaton) said that before his lordship made any order on the subject, he would ask to have counsel for the bankrupt heard. Judge Miller acceded to the request, and adjourned the case to a future day for that purpose.

BRADFORD BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. W. T. S. DANIEL, Q.C., Judge.)

RE FOSTER & HININGS: EX PARTE THE BRADFORD BANKING COMPANY.—This was a motion made on behalf of the Bradford Banking Company asking for an order directing that Mr. Henry Dickin, trustee in the estate of Foster and Hinings and in the separate estate of John Foster, to declare a dividend in the joint estate prior to the declaration of a dividend in the separate estate.—Mr. Gardner was for the motion, and Mr. Watson opposed it on behalf of the trustee. Mr. Gardner stated that the motion was made in accordance with a direction given by his Honour in his judgment on another application in the same matter on the 21st May. The application was made under the 104th section of the Act, which provided that where joint and separate estates were concerned the trustee should declare dividends in both estates together, but that the Judge of the Court could direct dividends to be declared otherwise on application of a party interested. His Honour said he should like to hear from Mr. Watson what his objections were. Mr. Watson said his contention was that the Court had no power to make such an order as was asked for, and also that there were no grounds on which the order should be made. He held that the question as to the declaring of the dividends was purely one of administration, and did not raise any question as to priority of the rights of any portion of the creditors. There was a committee of inspection in each estate, and the trustee and those committees were intending to declare the dividends together solely for the purpose of saving expense. The only ground on which the order was asked was that it would enable the banking company to make the most of its right of proof on the estates; and there was not the slightest contention that the order would benefit any body of the creditors, or that it would be more convenient or less expensive to the great body of those creditors. Mr. Watson was proceeding to point out what he considered a fallacy in his Honour's decision on the previous application, when his Honour said that if Mr. Watson objected to the decision, he had better go before the chief judge.—Mr. Watson said he intended to do so.—His Honour: Then this motion had better stand over until that appeal has been heard. Mr. Watson said he wished to consolidate the two, in order that they might be taken as one appeal. His Honour said that he was quite prepared to make the order asked for by the notice of motion, so that Mr. Watson might be able to go to the chief judge with both. The facts were as follows:—The banking company held security from Foster on his separate property, which the Court had already decided such security as enabled the bank to elect whether they would apply it to the joint debt or to the separate debt. The joint debt of Foster and Hinings owing to the bank was about £13,000, and the separate debt owing by Foster was £4,000. The bank, with the consent of the trustee, had realised the securities which it held, but they were in this difficulty that they did not know to which debt to apply the security. By the law of bankruptcy they were not bound to deduct the security from the proof on the joint estate. They could prove against that estate for the whole amount of the joint debt, or they could claim the right to appropriate the whole of the security, or so much as was necessary, if the whole was not required to the joint debt before making any appropriation to the separate debt. He had held that they were entitled to apportion the security to whatever debt it was most to their interest to appropriate it. The total amount realised by the security was not sufficient to pay the whole amount of the joint debt, but till a dividend on the joint estate was declared and the creditors knew what that dividend was, the bank could not know what would be required to be appropriated to the joint debt. The course which the bank proposed to take, and which he thought was a very reasonable one—one to which the trustee might have assented—was this: finding that they were unable to say whether they would be required to appropriate the whole of the proceeds of the security to the payment of the joint debt, and being large creditors on the separate estate as well as on the joint estate, they decided to apportion the fund which they had in hand from the security between the two debts in the proportion they bore to each other. They had £11,000 in hand; the joint debt was £13,000, and the separate debt was £4,000; and they proposed to divide the £11,000 in the proportion which £4000 bears to £13,000, and they tendered their proof of debt on that very reasonable footing. The trustee rejected the proof in toto, and asserted that the bank were not entitled to prove against the separate estate at all. In his judgment on the last occasion he had held that the trustee was wrong in his contention, and that the bank were entitled to appropriate as much of the security to the joint debt as would realise 20s. in the pound. But till they knew what the dividend on the joint estate would be they could not know how much would have thus to be appropriated. It seemed to him, therefore, to be a case in which justice required—and there would be no injustice whatever to any of the creditors—that the dividend on the joint estate should be declared, in order that the bank and other parties who might be in the same way interested in the separate estate as well as in the joint estate, might know what the bank would be entitled to prove for. The provision of the 104th section; that dividends should be declared together, assumed that the two estates would be liquidated together without difficulty, but there were cases in which that could not be done—cases where a joint estate could be liquidated in a very short time, while the liquidation of a separate estate might necessitate years of litigation. Were creditors of the joint estate, in a case of that kind, to wait all those years for that dividend? He thought, therefore, that the provision of the section that the judge could make an order on the application of any party interested was intended to meet cases of that kind. If the trustee or the committee of inspection had said that the joint estate was so situated with reference to its realisation that a dividend could not yet be conveniently declared, he might have understood the matter, but no such suggestion that the dividend could not be declared within a reasonable time was made. Mr. Watson: The notice of motion does not require it. If the motion had been that a dividend should be declared now, I should have made the suggestions your Honour speaks of. His Honour: In that case the proper course will be, as I said, to let the matter stand over till the result of the appeal against the previous judgment is known. The matter was then adjourned till the 9th July, on the understanding that in the meanwhile the appeal against the previous judgment would be made by Mr. Watson.

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT.

Re Whitworth ex parte Gibbes.—On Tuesday, at the Halifax County Court, Mr. Giffard, Judge, delivered his decision in the above case as follows:—This is an application by Messrs. Gibbes and Co., of Charlestown, in the United States of America, calling upon the Court to hold that by a notice, dated the 21st day of April, 1874, given by their agents in this country either on that or the following day to the station master at Luddenden Foot Station on the Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway, they well and effectually exercised their right as vendors to stop in transitu certain cotton which they had consigned to Messrs. Whitworth, of Luddenden Foot, who had filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement. The cotton has been since sold by consent and the proceeds have been paid into the bank to abide the decision in these proceedings. The law on this subject I consider to be well settled, but the application of the principle to the facts of the present case is not without difficulty arising from the course of dealing pursued between the different parties concerned. The Judge proceeded to detail the special facts connected with the transactions between the parties, referring particularly to the Whitworth siding, and the exceptional mode of delivery by the railways to Messrs. Whitworth. He went on to say:—On the 17th April, 1874, Messrs. Whitworth and Co. filed their petition for liquidation in this court, and a general meeting of creditors was held on the 8th May, 1874, when it was resolved that the estate should be wound up in liquidation and Mr. Blackburn was appointed trustee. On the 18th April, 1874 the company removed the truck 3166 from the Whitworth siding to their general siding. On the 21st of April, Mr. Ernest Schutt, the agent for Messrs. Gibbes wrote from Manchester to the station master at Luddenden Foot countermanding the delivery of the cotton to Messrs. Whitworth. On the 22nd the company for the first time issued their advice note to Messrs. Whitworth, requiring them to remove the cotton within forty-eight hours from the date of the despatch of the notice. The date of this notice was subsequently altered to the 24th. In the argument before me on the 27th April last, three grounds were alleged on behalf of the trustee against the validity of the stoppage in transitu by the vendors' agent in this country. First, it was contended that the bill of lading for the cotton, being limited to the port of Liverpool, coupled with the fact that it was transmitted by the consignee to their agent at that port, determined the right of the vendors against the property. Several authorities were referred to as showing that so soon as the goods reach the hands of the buyer or his agent that the right of the vendor is destroyed. To that proposition, I assent, with this reservation, that the agent must be the agent for all purposes of the buyer, and not merely an agent to transmit the goods to their ultimate destination. Where the proposition fails in this case is that Windle was not the general agent of the buyers, but simply their agent for the purpose of sending the goods to their ultimate destination. Windle does not appear to be the general agent of any one but of his own employers, the railway company. It is well settled law that the true criterion in a question of this kind is whether the goods are on their way to their destination, and if they are, it is no objection that the carrier has been selected by the buyers. Secondly, it was contended, in the last case on this point, that inasmuch as thirty-three bales out of each consignment of seventy-two had actually reached the hands of the buyer, and had been manufactured, that the delivery of that part must be taken to have been a delivery of the whole. This is often a very doubtful question, but the nature of the contract in this case is such as to make it difficult to see how the principle of a delivery of part being in law a delivery of the whole can apply here. In this case the contract was a general continuing contract, and the goods were forwarded from time to time in one vessel, as in this instance, on part of their journey. Then they were shipped the rest of their way to Europe in two vessels, which reached Liverpool at different dates, and then they were forwarded in trucks so as to suit the convenience of the carriers, or perhaps of the consignees, though there is no evidence on this point. I am of opinion, therefore, that this ground also fails. I may add there was certainly no intention to deliver part for the whole. There remains the strict ground urged on behalf of the trustee, viz., that having regard to the course of dealing between the railway company and the Messrs. Whitworth and Co., the goods had reached the hands of the consignee, either actually or constructively prior to the date of the stoppage. In my opinion this argument succeeds in part and in part fails. As I have before stated, the course of dealing between the railway company and Messrs. Whitworth was such that no construction can be put upon it other than this, that there was a mutual agreement between the parties that goods consigned to Messrs. Whitworth at Ludden Foot were wholly at their disposal, whether on the Whitworth or general siding, or in the railway yard. This is the view presented by the affidavit of Joseph Wells, and it is the only view with which the facts proved in this case are consistent. If such were not the agreement this conclusion must inevitably follow, that the railway company, without having divested themselves of the risk and responsibility which attached to them as common carriers, or even of the less onerous responsibility as warehousemen, allowed the goods consigned to Whitworth and Co. to remain indefinitely on their sidings at their risk, without making any charge or receiving any consideration for so doing. This is so improbable a state of things that I cannot adopt it, and must accept in preference the view presented by the affidavit of Joseph Wells. This mutual arrangement continued down to the 18th April, 1874, when it was, in my opinion, terminated by the act of the railway company in removing the truck of cotton No. 3166 from the Whitworth siding to their general siding. The object of the railway company in removing the cotton from the actual possession of Whitworth and Co. to their own is not far to seek. The company were aware of the insolvency of Whitworth and Co., and they wished to resume their right to receive the freight on delivery of the goods, or to retain their lien for such freight; and in order to effect this object it became necessary to terminate the previously existing state of things. That such was their intention and design by this act is corroborated by the company for the first time issuing an advice note to Whitworth and Co. on the 22nd April, of which the date was afterwards altered to the 24th. If I am right in this view, the legal consequence of the company's act in determining the previous agreement—which in my opinion they had a right to determine—was that goods which arrived subsequently to the 18th remained in possession of the company as carriers until they had divested themselves of their liability as such by the issuing of the advice note and the expiration of the time mentioned therein. It follows from this that the twenty-six bales contained in truck 11,695 and the thirteen bales contained in truck 7524, in other words the whole of the cotton which arrived by the Celtic and had not been manufactured, remained in possession of the company as carriers at least up to the 24th April, and therefore that the stoppage in transitu as to these bales was well effected by the notice of the 21st April, 1874. It follows from this view that the nineteen bales contained in truck 1260 belonged to the trustee. The only remaining question is as to the twenty bales, the other unused part of the consignment by the Republic, and which were removed by the company on the 18th April from the Whitworth to the general siding. As I have already stated, the company, in my opinion, by this act determined the previously existing agreement, and that they had right so to determine it as to goods that might thereafter arrive. But it is a different question as to the effect of this proceeding upon goods which had previously arrived at the station. The twenty bales in question, with the nineteen bales, arrived on the 14th or 15th of April, and from that date until the 17th had remained in the actual or constructive possession of Whitworth and Co. They had therefore become the absolute property of those gentlemen by a title which no act of the company could affect, except perhaps as to their own lien for freight. It follows from this that the right of the vendors had come to an end, and it was not competent for the railway company by any act of theirs to restore it. At first sight this view may seem to conflict with the case of Crawshay v. Edes, 1 B and C 181, but on examination the distinction between that and the present case becomes obvious. In that case the goods were in the carrier's possession, and he began to unload them on the consignee's premises, but on hearing that the consignee had failed and had absconded, he replaced the part he had unloaded on his barge. In that case the act was incomplete. The carrier never intended to make a partial delivery and undid what he had done. Here, so far as the company were concerned, the delivery was complete, nothing further remained to be done; and the goods had remained in the consignee's actual, or at least constructive, possession, during four days. Upon the whole case I am of opinion that the thirty-nine bales which remained unmanufactured out of the consignment by the Republic were, on the 17th April, 1874, part of the estate of the bankrupts. But that as to the thirty-nine bales which remained unmanufactured out of the consignment ex Celtic, the right of the vendors was effectually exercised, and that these thirty-nine bales are the property of Messrs. Gibbes. No order as to costs. If the same price was obtained for the several consignments, the will be, after payment of costs, an equal division of the fund.

BIRKENHEAD COUNTY COURT.

June 8.

Before Mr. WYNNE FFOULKES.

RE J. B. WOOD.—The proceedings in bankruptcy in connection with the composition of Mr. John B. Wood, of Tranmere, gentleman, and formerly a merchant in the African trade, were again before the court. Mr. Walton (instructed by Mr. Goffey) appeared for the opposing creditors, and Mr. Downham for the debtor. At the previous hearing Mr. Deputy-Registrar Mather confirmed a resolution which was passed by a majority of the creditors by means of proxies entrusted to the debtor's solicitors for that purpose. Mr. Walton's arguments were now directed against the validity of the resolution in question, and in sustainment of his position he impeached the bona-fides of the consenting creditors. The debtor's wife, he insisted, could not prove as administratrix alone, and had no power to appoint an attorney or a proxy, and therefore her proof was bad in law. The learned gentleman raised several other technical objections, and then went on to contend that the resolution was not the work of creditors in the proper sense of the term, but of persons who used their monetary claims to do a kindness to the debtor. The great majority of those for whom proxies were held were relatives of the debtor, who were actuated by a desire to release him from his difficulties; and therefore, even though the technical rules had been complied with, the resolution must fall to the ground. An agreement in such a case to pay a penny in the pound was no composition at all, but an insult to the non-relatives, who held claims to the amount of £1,842, out of a total indebtedness of £4,893. Mr. Downham, arguing contra, said that while Mr. Walton represented little over £200, he held proxies of non-relatives to the amount of £827. He admitted that without the relatives he could not have complied with the legal requirements; but he pointed out that the debtor had absolutely nothing in the shape of assets, that the debts to his relatives had been contracted in the course of his business as a merchant, and that the composition was not only bona-fide, but the only course which it was open to him to pursue. His Honour, in giving judgment, said he did not think the resolution was one for the benefit of the creditors. The assets were very small, but there was a possibility of the bankrupt acquiring more property hereafter, and it would be hard to shut out the creditors from all chance of advantage thereby. Therefore the resolution must be set aside.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

HUMPHRYS & PEARSON (HULL).—It was resolved at a meeting of creditors and shareholders of Humphrys and Pearson (Limited), the Hull Iron Shipbuilders, to voluntarily wind-up the company, and three of the directors and three creditors were appointed liquidators. It is expected the assets will realise to unsecured creditors about 10s. in the pound. The liabilities are about £50,000.

T. GRIFFIES (MANCHESTER).—The creditors of Mr. Thomas Griffies, Moseley-street, Manchester, stuff merchant, held a meeting on Friday, and accepted a composition of 2s. in the pound.

CITY AND COUNTY BANK.—A meeting of shareholders in this bank was held at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, on Tuesday. Mr. Godden, the chairman, said the question they had now to consider was the compulsory or voluntary winding up of the bank. Compulsory winding-up meant many thousand pounds expense, which would be avoided by a voluntary liquidation. In accordance with the terms of arrangement with Messrs. Brown, Janson, and Co., the creditors would secure 20s. in the pound forthwith; the call of £1 per share pending would pay everything, and he did not consider that the £3 10s. per share already paid would be found to be lost when the assets were realised. Mr. Simmonds endorsed the remarks of the chairman as to the great expense attending a compulsory liquidation. Resolutions were passed for the voluntary winding-up of the bank, and the following committee of investigation was appointed—Mr. R. S. Cook (50 shares), Mr. Holman (300 shares), Mr. Rowland (50 shares), Mr. Edwards (200 shares), and Mr. Munson (100 shares), three of their number to form a quorum. It was also decided to approve the arrangement made with Messrs. Brown, Janson, & Co., and to appoint Mr. Price (Price, Holyland, and Waterhouse) voluntary liquidator.

J. E. SIMMONS (SOUTHAMPTON).—A meeting was held in the matter of John Edward Simmons, of 44 East-street, Southampton, watchmaker, at the offices of Messrs. Barrett and Patey, 90 London Wall, E.C., on Friday, the 4th inst., when it was decided to accept a composition of ten shillings in the pound, payable by four instalments, provided such composition was secured to the satisfaction of the chairman and another creditor at or before the meeting for confirmation of the resolution.

PHŒNIX BESSEMER STEEL CO.—A largely attended meeting of the creditors of the Phœnix Bessemer Steel Company, Limited, was held on Wednesday afternoon. Mr. Smith, manager of the Barrow Steel and Hematite Company, presided. The circular issued by the firm, and already quoted, was read. The directors had had to adopt a petition for liquidation, which had been presented by a friendly creditor. A report was then read by Mr. Esau, the company's solicitor, in which he stated that the loss of £14,000 by the stoppage of Gilead Smith and Co., obliged them to suspend, Smith and Co. having in turn been embarrassed by the failure of the Aberdare Iron Co. South Wales. The statement of accounts was as follows:—Liabilities, accounts, £8,061 0s. 2d.; Gilead Smith's acceptances under discount, £14,155 18s. 2d.; mortgages and debentures, £45,205; total liabilities, £139,421 18s. 4d. The assets were—book debts, £30,023; stock and tools, £50,267; cash and sundries, £570; uncalled up capital estimated to produce £17,000; total £97,860, from which must be deducted £13,000 for secured creditors, leaving £84,860 as open assets. After some discussion, in the course of which the causes of the failure were dealt with, it was decided that the realisation of the company would be best effected by a voluntary winding-up under the supervision of the Court of Chancery.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—A petition for the liquidation of the affairs of Joseph Hallam, grocer, Sheffield, has been filed; liabilities, £2,000.—In the Manchester County Court, Mr. Joseph Greenup, builder, Elm-street, Manchester, filed a petition for liquidation. The liabilities amount to £6,000.—A petition has been filed for winding-up the Phœnix Bessemer Steel Company, Limited, near Sheffield. The company was formed three years ago, with a capital of £100,000, in £50 shares, £40 of which have been called up. The company has had extensive transactions with Messrs. Smith and Co, iron merchants, London, who recently failed, and who were indebted to them in about £12,000.—The firm of Jno. Schofield and Co., dyers, have filed their petition in the Bradford County Court. The liabilities are estimated at £20,000.—Mr. John Leslie, of Chapel-street, Lowestoft, tailor and draper, has filed a petition for liquidation, and Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, has been appointed receiver by the Court. Mr. C. H. Wiltshire, of Yarmouth, is solicitor for the debtor.

SCOTLAND.—The failure of Albert Baxter, stock broker in Dundee, with heavy liabilities, variously estimated, is announced. In consequence of the absence of Mr. Albert Baxter, sharebroker, from Dundee, no detailed statement of his affairs has been prepared; but it is understood that his liabilities are between £20,000 and £30,000, and that the greater part of them are in London. The assets will be very small.—The failure is announced of Messrs. Bruce and Company, paper makers, Woodside Paper Mills, Glasgow.

AUSTRALIA.—Melbourne advices report the suspension of Messrs. H. Smith and Co., drapers, of Ballarat, whose liabilities to new creditors amounted to £10,000; but it was stated at the meeting of creditors that, owing to some old debts which would be revived by the present suspension, the total liabilities were in consequence not expected to be under £18,000.

AMERICA.—New York advices report the failure on the Stock Exchange of Messrs. E. Washburn and Co., 62 Broadway, and Mr. Samuel M. Salomon, 40 Broad Street. Both firms were "long" of railroad stocks, and owing to the fall in value of Fries, were unable to carry them.—Messrs. Redfield and Talmadge, merchants, Port Jervis, N.Y., and Messrs. Reilly and Appley, lumber dealers, had also suspended.

Mr. W. H. Pannell (Slater and Pannell), of 1 Guildhall-chambers, one of the representatives of the Ward of Bassishaw in the Court of Common Council, has been appointed a member of the International Municipal Entertainment Committee.

UNITED LAW CLERKS' SOCIETY.—The 43rd anniversary of the formation of this society, the object of which is to assist in illness, affliction, and old age the clerks of judges, barristers, and solicitors, was celebrated on Wednesday evenings, at Willis's-rooms, by a dinner, at which the Hon. Mr. Justice Denman presided. The annual report of the committee of management states that during the past year 60 members have claimed allowance in sickness, and £502 has been paid to them. These claims are rare, except in cases of severe illness, and of the 60 cases relieved six ended fatally. Of 28 pensioners five died during the year, and four fresh claims were allowed. The superannuations amounted to £977, or more than the interest of £33,000 consols. From the first the society has paid in sick allowances £11,311, and in superannuations £9,265. The payments on account of the death of members or their wives amounted to £812 for the year and £17,260 since 1832. All these claims, amounting, with expenses, to £3,121, fall upon the principal or General Benefit Fund, and the income thereon showed a surplus for the year of £1,605, an addition to the capital which raised it to £52,284. It is invested in Government securities; the interest of £33,000 is reserved for superannuations; and £22,284 is left available to meet unusual pressure from sickness or mortality. There is a casual or benevolent fund for members and non-members, and in gifts and loans £374 has been disbursed during the year and £14,567 since the formation of the society. The savings out of the casual fund are being accumulated with the object of forming a fund out of which small pensions may be granted to the most necessitous and deserving of the widows of members. In relieving law clerks and their families the society has disbursed altogether more than £52,434.

THE JOINT-STOCK DISCOUNT COMPANY.—The City editor of the Times writes as follows:—"We have received some papers relating to the Joint-Stock Discount Company (Limited), which has been in liquidation since 1866. Among the rest is a balance-sheet for the year ending the 31st of March, 1875, which shows what the liquidators have realised and the costs of realisation. According to this about £12,000 has been obtained, three-fourths of it by the sale of securities held in the company's name, and the rest either collected from debtors or as dividends and interest. Nothing in the account appears to warrant much outlay in getting the money in; nevertheless, it costs altogether £3,827. Law charges absorbed £1,492; the liquidators got £1,250, and the accountant £500, all for selling £9,500 worth of stock, collecting a few small sums from debtors, and paying some little balances over to creditors of the company. It cannot be said that on this scale going into liquidation is a cheap process. The report to the shareholders has also one curious observation. The liquidators state that 'the third mortgage bonds of the Atlantic and Great Western Railway were fortunately realised before the late heavy fall, having been all sold at an average of over £13 per cent.' Compared with the present price of this security, that is no doubt a cheering statement; but the liquidators would have done well to state also at what date and price the bonds were bought. As late as the middle of 1873 Atlantic and Great Western 3d Mortgage Bonds were quoted at 47½, and if the liquidators then held them, why were they not then sold?"

SALE OF SERJEANTS' INN.—The London correspondent of the Manchester Guardian says:—"As the Judicature Bill has abolished the title of serjeants-at-law, the members of Serjeants' inn, in Chancery-lane, have determined to sell that property and divide the proceeds amongst themselves. The value cannot be less than £30,000 or £35,000, so that each of the six and thirty gentlemen who now wear the coif will receive a very handsome sum. A proposal to devote a portion of the fund to purposes of legal education has, I believe, been discussed and negatived. The inn is the property of the serjeants, so that those gentlemen are acting upon their strict right; but their proceeding is sure to be sharply criticised."

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

JUNE 19, 1875.

The world, or at any rate that portion of it which takes any decided interest in what is technically, though somewhat vaguely termed jurisprudence, is at present much vexed on the question of Courts of Appeal. Whether the House of Lords is still to remain the supreme tribunal, whether if so any intermediate court should be interposed, or how best we can obtain an authoritative exposition of the true state of the law, without giving too much advantage to the rich man who seeks to avail himself at every possible opportunity of the law's delay, is a problem about whose solution even the collective wisdom of parliament seems to hesitate. In connection with this, there may be mentioned a kind of fallacy which seems to pervade the arguments of all concerned, and that is, that what is termed the law on any point is something which may be ascertained and laid down as positively and exactly as a dogma of physical science. It is assumed that just as a disputed scientific point may be accurately solved by the highest authority, so may a legal point. There lies the fallacy. Scientific truth is truth which lies wholly outside the mind of its proclaimer. His individual bias, his mental crotchets may lead him astray, but they cannot in any way influence the truth of the doctrine. But legal truth rests almost entirely on the prejudices or prepossessions of the judges. As regards plain points of law, there are of course thousands of cases of every day occurrence as to which there can exist no possibility of doubt in the mind of an experienced lawyer. As regards the others, his skill is mainly shown in judging what degree of conviction his arguments will convey to the mind of a particular judge.

We are not speaking now so much of the courts of law, but of the courts of equity and bankruptcy. A disputed point in a court of law is brought before several judges, whose decision is given after due consultation with each other. But in equity and bankruptcy the matter is left to the decision of a single judge, whose opinion is absolute both as to the law and the facts, and whose judgment can only be varied by an appeal to a higher tribunal,—an expensive course which many shrink from taking. It is singular to notice how the personal feelings of a single judge may thus influence the law. Every lawyer seeks as far as possible to find some authority covering the case submitted to him, and diligently searches the voluminous pages of the various law reports for the purpose. By any decision which is found he is bound to abide, unless he chooses to persuade his client to try the fortune of an appeal. The decision of a "court of co-ordinate jurisdiction" is always respected, except in very extreme cases, and only a very strong judge will venture to disregard it. The result of this is that, as every lawyer knows, there are many doctrines of law upon which he is bound to act, which rest upon faulty reasoning and individual prejudices, and which may at any moment be swept away by the decision of a superior court. And yet to disregard these would be unsafe, or would argue in the counsel a very accurate perception of the mind of the judge before whom he proposed to lay his case.

The effect, then, of a court of appeal is evident. It can disregard and summarily overrule the decisions of any inferior court, sometimes, it may be, capriciously, but without any question as to its right to do so, and the law then remains in an altered position till some dissatisfied litigant carries the matter to the highest tribunal of all, and sets at rest for ever the manner in which every future judge is bound, whether he likes it or not, to declare the law, or to exercise every refinement of legal subtlety to distinguish one case from another, and so give fresh play to his crotchets or prejudices.

Perhaps in no instance does the administration of the law possess more uncertainty than in the case of bankruptcy. It is administered by officials of all stages of legal rank and knowledge, from the high and dignified Lords down to the humble deputy registrar of some distant county court. Its administrants are subject to a constant series of appeals, from registrar sitting as registrar, to registrar sitting as judge, or to the judge himself. The county court judges are subject to the Chief Judge, and he again is liable to a summary revision of his most careful decisions at the unsympathising hands of the Lords Justices. The consequence of this is that bankruptcy law is in a very unsettled condition, that it is constantly fluctuating, and that the multiplication of appeals renders its administration extremely costly.

We may illustrate this by a case which we report this week of Ebbs v. Boulnois, which finally settles the law as to the effect of the granting of an order of discharge to a bankrupt or liquidating debtor before the close of the bankruptcy or liquidation on any after-acquired property. Hitherto it has been held, on the authority of a decision by the chief judge, that such property is liable to the claims of the trustee till the proceedings are finally closed, and upon this assumption registrars and county court judges have been bound to act. The question coming indirectly before the Master of the Rolls, Sir George Jessel said at once that he considered this decision as erroneous, but that he was nevertheless bound to act upon it as emanating from a judge of equal authority with himself. Acting on this hint, the aggrieved plaintiff appealed to the Lords Justices, and they unhesitatingly agreed with the view taken by the Master of the Rolls. Lord Justice James, whose mental constitution is singularly opposed to that of Sir James Bacon, finally disposed of the question in an admirably lucid judgment full of clear reasoning and sound common sense, and the conclusion is in every way most satisfactory. In the mean time, however, many unlucky debtors may have suffered some injustice, and many trustees have innocently incurred a grave responsibility. Doubtless, on the authority of re Bennett's Trusts, trustees have felt themselves bound, where an order of discharge has been granted, but proceedings still kept open, to claim property which may have devolved upon the debtor, and to divide it among the creditors. They now learn, for the first time, that in so doing they have been acting wrongfully, and may be exposed to an action at the instance of the debtor, and involved in an expensive and harassing litigation. The "glorious uncertainty of the law" must henceforth possess more interest than charms in their eyes.

There is one final thought that must occur to the mind of every one who considers the point, and that is, as to the necessity of making an authoritative definition of the law more easily obtainable. At present, its position is most unsatisfactory. We disclaim any intention of saying any thing that may give pain to a judge of such professional eminence as Sir James Bacon, but the repeated reversals of his decisions which have taken place recently, lead us to suggest that in future appeals which would otherwise be heard by him, should go direct to the Lords Justices, who alone can authoritatively declare the law. Till the Chief Judge, at present, has decided on a case, the decisions of county court judges and registrars are useful only as guidance to suitors of the dispositions and opinions of those before whom they may come. But when revised or confirmed by the judge, their decisions become part of the law of the land on which every one is bound to act till their variation by the Lords Justices finally settles the law, to the general confusion of those who had followed the law as laid down by Sir James Bacon. The Chief Judge would consult his own dignity, as well as the best interests of his country, if he took steps to free himself from the awkward position in which he is placed, by allowing appeals to go straight to a higher court without passing through his hands. Rightly or wrongly, the Lords Justices seem determined to overrule his decision, and he must experience the truth of the saying about the "weaker going to the wall."

As we firmly anticipated, Mr. Brearley Wood has found that a county court judge is less lenient to liquidations which are really illusory, than a deputy registrar, and he may now sadly meditate on the uncertainty of things human, and that perverse ingenuity which leads the functionaries of the law to have regard more to the spirit than the letter of the system which they administer. Certainly, as regards liquidations, debtors have some ground of complaint. The words of the Act are very plain, that all the registrar has to do is to inquire if the resolutions have been passed in the manner prescribed by the Act. But the registrars have taken to inquiring how far the resolutions are beneficial to the creditors, and refusing to register them unless they are satisfied on that point, and the Lords Justices have upheld them in more than one case. This, so to say, equitable jurisdiction, was evoked in the case of Mr. T. S. Webb, when opposing creditors objected to the registration of a resolution, on the ground, amongst others, that the statement of affairs was insufficient. The statement in question displayed a well-known state of things. The debtor had purchased three collieries for £56,700, and proposed to sell them to a company for £172,000, a very moderate proceeding on his part, showing an unusual want of greediness after mere profit. On this purchase the company, it seemed, still owed him £100,000, and it was objected that in estimating the value of this asset as nothing, the debtor was too modest. Mr. Registrar Keene seems to have decided the point, with Solomonic wisdom. He gently reproved the debtor for his modesty, but did not consider the statement so inaccurate as to lead him to refuse his sanction to the registration, observing that if the claim was worth any thing it would be all the better as regarded the dividend. Possibly Mr. Keene's experience in bankruptcy has taught him that the value of claims against companies depends upon the validity of the claim and the ability of the company, and that Mr. Webb, as the person most deeply concerned, might after all be possessed of the best information as to the value of the claim in question.

LIQUIDATION.

It has been the fashion in some quarters to complain loudly of the operation of the Liquidation Clauses of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, as if they necessarily involved the existence of serious abuses and flagrant injustice. Two considerations might serve to abate the warmth of the opponents of these clauses. The first is, that whenever an important firm is obliged to suspend payment, as in the recent cases of Messrs. Sanderson and Co., Messrs. Fothergill and Hankey, and Messrs. Alexander Collie and Co., it is at least ten chances to one that the creditors will determine to wind-up the estate under those clauses. The second, which is the explanation of the first, may be summed up in the statement that the policy of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and particularly of the liquidation clauses of that Act, is to give the creditors absolute control over the management and realisation of assets, which, in fact, are theirs. When the conduct of the insolvents has been reprehensible, and the danger of dissipating valuable assets is at its minimum, creditors are apt to resort to bankruptcy; that is to say, some of them are so disposed, and the remainder have no adequate motive for resistance. In ordinary cases, however, the first thought of the creditor is to minimise his loss, and not to indulge feelings of vindictiveness, and he accordingly adopts the course which alone admits of the most favourable realisation of the assets of the insolvents.

We have never been able to understand upon what principle the old plan of winding-up estates under inspectorship deeds was set aside. In practice its operation hardly differed from that of the liquidation clauses, because on either plan a small consultative committee of creditors, with an accountant acting under their advice, control the liquidation. But the relative position of the parties was more truly defined, and less capable of misconstruction, when two or three leading creditors acting as inspectors, were in name, as well as in fact, possessed of full control, and the accountant was employed and could be dismissed by them. Now-a-days, the accountant is trustee, and is nominally master of the situation; and though no responsible man ever disregards the interests, or even the wishes of the creditors, who are his constituents, it is possible to create an impression that he is doing so.

The largest liquidations under the old system were quietly conducted, and in some cases no notice was taken of them by the press after the first month or two of excitement. We know of one of this character where the creditors' claims amounted to at least a million of money, and where it was certain that if the estate were thrown into bankruptcy, a loss exceeding half that sum would have had to be faced by the creditors. The assets were such as to require hundreds of thousands of pounds to be laid out upon them. They included many items, each of which was as complex, and required as much tact and management, as a tedious Chancery suit. What has been the result? The creditors have received twenty shillings in the pound, in meal or in malt, and are extremely well content with the outcome of the affair;—and a small surplus has been realised for the benefit of the debtors. We could not with propriety enter into particulars, and show what further and important public advantage arose from the fact that the estate in question was not liquidated in bankruptcy—how thousands of men were maintained in employment, and a most wasteful interruption of an important industry averted. Those who are engaged in the larger operations of commerce will not need to be told of these things, and those who are interested in comparatively unimportant transactions could hardly be induced to credit them.

One of the most important changes introduced by the liquidation clauses was, that instead of the assent of a certain majority of the creditors scheduled being necessary before the registration of an inspectorship deed, it was only those of the creditors who chose to appear in person or by proxy at the meeting, who were allowed any voice in the matter. This alteration had its convenient side, inasmuch as trustees and others unwilling to give active assistance in carrying through an arrangement, can now, by simple abstention, avoid becoming unwilling obstacles to it. But it has doubtless enabled things of an objectionable character to be done, which, under the previous system, would probably have been impracticable. Not that creditors have reason to complain of this; for their own supineness is the root of the evil. And creditors themselves, as a class, are not to be regarded as immaculate, any more than debtors. The rule which enables a majority to bind a minority is indeed essential to prevent certain persons from turning to their own account the inconvenience they might occasion to, and even the needless loss they might inflict upon, persons in the same situation as themselves.

WHOLESALE GROCERS AND ACCOUNTANTS' CHARGES.

A correspondent brings under our notice a circular issued by the "Creditors' Association of Wholesale Dealers," which Society is actuated by the firm determination "to prevent the continuance of the unreasonable charges which so materially depreciate the value of nearly every estate." To ensure this end, the Association lays down the stern inflexible rule, that "no professional men shall be engaged who will not consent to have their remuneration regulated by a scale of charges to be hereafter fixed by the Committee."

A quotation from the clauses, under the heading of "Procedure," will serve to indicate the prospective advantages held out in return for the entrance fee of £2 2s., and the annual subscription of £3 3s., which members are required to pay, viz.:—

"When composition bills or final notices of dividends are sent out, a balance-sheet, on a form approved by the committee, shall be furnished to such members as are creditors, showing in detail the receipts and expenses in all estates in which the members are interested.

"When the association undertakes the winding-up of estates, charges shall be made in accordance with the scale approved by the committee, and the amounts so received shall be credited in the accounts of the association.

"A register shall be compiled and kept at the office of the association, containing the name and particulars of each insolvent estate in which any members of the association are creditors, such register to be open for inspection of members only, and to be considered private and confidential."

By way of significant comment upon the circular, and upon the charges against accountants of touting, our correspondent attaches a letter sent by a London firm of solicitors, shadowing forth the cheerful hope of a "handsome dividend," to be obtained, "without any charge," provided Mr. So-and-So is good enough to place his proof and proxy in their hands.

FALSIFICATION OF ACCOUNTS BILL.—In the House of Commons on Friday the Lords' amendments to this bill were considered and agreed to.

WINDING-UP.—A petition for the winding-up of the Oakwell Collieries, Limited, is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Hall on the 25th inst.—A petition for the winding-up of the Sanitary Milk Company, Limited, is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the 25th inst.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the New Amicable Life Assurance Company, Limited.

BANKRUPTCY REFORM.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—Week after week I read letters and statements in your valuable paper, all bearing upon the Bankruptcy Laws and proposed alterations in the present Act. I have no hesitation in declaring myself to be a professional accountant; and as I attend, upon an average, a meeting a day, either for debtor or creditor, I fancy I can see a very short way out of all difficulties. Imprisonment for debt is done away with, and therefore I am willing to admit there is in that fact alone increased facility for persons to get into debt, and for traders to keep their books improperly, —in some cases, positively keeping no books at all, in order that no clue may be found to their mode of transacting business. If an act of parliament was passed by which all insolvents must wind-up in the Bankruptcy Court, and that composition meetings and liquidation meetings should be done away with, the stigma of bankruptcy would be attached to all those persons who could not pay 20s. in the pound. I may mention the practice that is adopted in Holland, viz. that all traders should every year, or within three months from the expiration of that year, make out a balance-sheet showing their assets and liabilities; and in default of their having kept books and documents from which such a balance sheet could be made, they would be deemed guilty of fraud on their creditors, and could be prosecuted accordingly. Whether there would be fewer failures or not, I do not pretend to say; but it would be a much more satisfactory state of things. The comptroller would be the supervisor of every estate; the creditors could, as they do now, appoint their own trustee and a committee of inspection, limiting the remuneration to any reasonable scale of charges that they think fit, both of solicitor, accountant, or any other professional trustee. If any one else has already made these suggestions, I trust that you will insert this letter for the purpose of giving the matter further ventilation. I may add a few words with regard to what would be the position of creditors. If they chose to compound with an insolvent debtor, they might do so under a private arrangement, having regard to their individual debts; but there would be no law to bind the dissenting creditors.

I am, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
W. L. C. B.

June 10th, 1875.

In the last financial year the pensions for judicial services in Great Britain amounted to £58,681 3s. 3d., and in Ireland to £17,258 18s. 3d.

A legal contemporary says:—"We have heard much of late about offences against protective statutes, committed by County Court agents and persons who call themselves, and are called and sometimes act as accountants, and also by auctioneers and estate agents. Of even greater importance is the growing tendency on the part of "official liquidators" to undertake solicitors' work. We hear of cases in which summonses have been prepared, affidavits drawn and filed, and copies taken by these gentlemen or their subordinates acting on instructions. This is likely to become a serious evil, and it behoves the officials of the Court of Chancery to arrest it at once by vigilance and, if necessary, rules and orders to meet the difficulty."

COURT OF CHANCERY.

June 11.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EBBS v. BOULNOIS.—This appeal from a decision of the Master of the Rolls involved a very important question with regard to bankruptcy or liquidation by arrangement—viz. what is the effect of the grant of an order of discharge to a bankrupt or liquidating debtor before the close of the bankruptcy or liquidation; does it release from the claims of the creditors the after-acquired property of the bankrupt or debtor. Section 15 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, provides that the property of the bankrupt divisible among his creditors shall comprise (inter alia) "All such property as may belong to or be vested in the bankrupt at the commencement of the bankruptcy, or may be acquired by or devolve on him during its continuance." By section 47, "When the whole property of the bankrupt has been realised for the benefit of his creditors, or so much thereof as can, in the joint opinion of the trustee and committee of inspection, be realised without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy, or a composition or arrangement has been effected," the trustee is to make a report to the Court, and the Court, if satisfied, is to make an order that the bankruptcy has closed. By section 48, "When a bankruptcy is closed, or at any time during its continuance, with the assent of the creditors testified by a special resolution, the bankrupt may apply to the Court for an order of discharge," which is not to be granted unless it is proved to the Court that one of certain specified conditions has been fulfilled. Section 49 provides that an order of discharge is to release the bankrupt from all debts provable in the bankruptcy, except debts incurred by fraud or breach of trust, and Crown debts. Section 125, which relates to liquidation, provides that, so far as they are applicable, all the provisions of the Act shall apply to liquidation just as to bankruptcy, with certain modifications, amongst which are these, that the close of the liquidation may be fixed and the discharge of the debtor granted by a special resolution of the creditors in general meeting, "at such times and in such manner, and upon such terms and conditions as the creditors think fit." Joseph Ebbs, the plaintiff in this suit, is a builder at Maida-hill. In June, 1871, he and his then partner filed a liquidation petition. On the 28th of June, 1871, their creditors resolved on a liquidation by arrangement, and that the discharge of the debtors should be granted forthwith. No time was fixed for the close of the liquidation, which was not closed when this suit was instituted. In July, 1871, the plaintiff commenced business again as a builder, and on the 27th of November, 1874, he entered into an agreement with the defendant, J. A. Boulnois, to sell him the lease of a piece of ground in Portsdown-road, which lease the plaintiff had acquired since he obtained his order of discharge. The object of the suit was to enforce the specific performance of this contract, the defendant having objected to complete it on the ground that, the liquidation not having been closed, the property was vested in the trustee for the benefit of the creditors. The defendant demurred to the bill on this ground. The Master of the Rolls felt himself bound to allow the demurrer by reason of a previous decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, "in re Bennett's Trust" (Law Reports, 19 Eq., 245) to the effect that, though an order of discharge is granted to a liquidating debtor, yet, if the liquidation is not closed, the debtor's after-acquired property passes to the trustee. The Master of the Rolls, in giving judgment, intimated that his own opinion differed from that of the Vice-Chancellor, though he felt it his duty to follow the decision of a Court of co-ordinate jurisdiction. The plaintiff appealed. Mr. Chitty, Q.C., and Mr. Daniel Jones, for the appellant, contended that an order of discharge would have no effect at all unless it released the after-acquired property of the debtor. Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr. Creed, in support of the demurrer, relied upon the express words of section 15. Lord

Justice James said that the point raised was a very important one, and one upon which he had formed a very clear, decided, and unhesitating opinion; an opinion which, as his Lordship understood, was in exact accordance with that of the Master of the Rolls, though it was adverse to the decision which he felt himself bound, by the authority of the case before Vice-Chancellor Bacon, to give. The Vice-Chancellor proceeded upon the ground that because the close of a liquidation and the granting of an order of discharge are distinct things, therefore all property acquired by the debtor prior to the close of the liquidation passes to the trustee. His Lordship agreed with the Vice-Chancellor's premises, but not with his conclusion. The argument on the one side was that "discharge" means discharge, and that could not be controverted; the argument on the othe side was that "continuance" means continuance, which was equally incontrovertible. No doubt, one section of the Act said that all property acquired by the debtor during the continuance of the bankruptcy was to vest in the trustee; but another section said that the debtor might, during the continuance of the bankruptcy, be discharged from all his debts, with certain exceptions, which must surely mean that he was to be a free man with respect to them. It would be a monstrous conclusion if the contention of the respondents were to prevail. If a debtor gave up to his creditors property worth half a million of money, and it happened to be detained in Court for years by the existence of such a suit as that of "Powell v. Elliot," which commenced before his Lordship was Vice-Chancellor, and was not yet concluded, so that the assets could not be realised, and for that reason the bankruptcy or liquidation must be continued,—it would be monstrous if, in such a case, the debtor must remain a pariah or an outlaw, incapable of acquiring any thing but his wearing apparel, until the bankruptcy or liquidation was closed. If he was minded to adopt the profession of a lawyer, he could not buy a library; if he wished to become an actor, he could not purchase the necessary wardrobe for the performance of his parts. Was he to be left for years in that position, while a man who had left himself with nothing but bare poles could have his bankruptcy closed almost at once, and obtain an almost immediate discharge of his after-acquired property? It would be very startling if that were the intention of the Legislature. It appeared to his Lordship that the Act had very clearly provided for this case. During the continuance of the bankruptcy the man might apply for an order of discharge, and by a discharge was meant a discharge with all its consequences. Section 15 must be read as if it had been expressly made "subject to the proviso hereinafter contained in section 48." Common sense must be applied to reconcile the two enactments. If there seemed to be two inconsistent enactments, then it must be seen whether the one could not be read as qualifying the other. His Lordship thought that, looking at all the sections together, the thing was perfectly clear, and that the decision of the Master of the Rolls was wrong. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. He agreed that the question was one of considerable importance. He had no doubt that both in bankruptcy and liquidation, the order of discharge freed the debtor from all the provable debts, with the exceptions mentioned in section 49, and that his future assets then belonged to him, and that the creditors were not entitled to have them applied in payment of their debts. His Lordship quite agreed that section 15 said in very plain terms that all property acquired by the bankrupt during the continuance of the bankruptcy was to vest in the trustee; and he also agreed that the bankruptcy continued until it was closed, and unless section 15 was modified in some way all the assets acquired by the bankrupt until the close of the bankruptcy would go to the creditors. Under section 47, the Court would have no power to order the close of the bankruptcy until all the property was realised, or so much as could be realised without needlessly protracting the bankruptcy. So that if the argument of the respondent was well founded, no bankrupt, even with the assent of all his creditors, could hold any assets he might acquire to his own use, until all his assets were realised. That would be a novel and extraordinary provision. However deserving the bankrupt might be, though all his creditors wished to set him free, and the Court thought it just to do so; though his bankruptcy had arisen only from misfortune, and his assets might take years to realise,—yet till they had all been realised it would be impossible that his future acquired property should be free. Such a construction would very much diminish the power of the creditors. Then what did Section 49 mean by saying that an order of discharge should release the bankrupt from all ordinary debts provable in the bankruptcy? He was to be in the same position as if all the creditors had actually released him. If they had done so, could they claim his future assets in payment of their debts? If the debts were to be released, did not that mean in its plain and natural sense that the man's future property was to be his own? Section 48 was really a proviso qualifying section 15. The debtor might apply for an order of discharge at any time during the continuance of the bankruptcy. If he obtained it, was it possible that it merely meant that during the continuance of the bankruptcy no action would be brought against him by the creditors? He did not want that protection, for, so long as the bankruptcy continued, the Court would restrain any such action. The order of discharge was treated by the Act as a great boon, whereas, if the respondent was right, it was no boon at all. It must have been intended that by an order of discharge the bankrupt was to be absolutely released from all his debts, and that his after-acquired property was to be released too. His Lordship was of opinion that that was the true construction of the Act.

In re the City and County Bank (Limited).—An appeal from the order recently made by Vice-Chancellor Bacon for the compulsory winding-up of this company, was opened this afternoon, but after some discussion the hearing was adjourned to Wednesday, the 23rd inst., to enable the petitioner to answer some affidavits filed by the appellants. No proceedings are to be taken meanwhile under the winding-up order.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, Lincoln's Inn.

June 11.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir C. Hall.)

In re the Air Gas Light Company (Limited).—This was a winding-up petition by a creditor and contributory of this company, which was formed in September, 1872, with a capital of £200,000, in 40,000 shares of £5 each. Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Graham Hastings were for the petitioners; Mr. W. Pearson, Q.C., Mr. Simmons, Mr. Hunter, and Mr. Byrne for various parties, supported the petition; Mr. Osborne Morgan, Q.C., Mr. W. W. Karslake, for the company, and Mr. Oswald, for shareholders, opposed. The Vice-Chancellor made the usual compulsory order.

June 12.

In re the Wernpistall Colliery Company (Limited).—This creditors' winding-up petition was again mentioned this morning, and an order was made that if the company should on or before Wednesday next pay the amount of the petitioner's debt into Court in the action which they had brought against the company, then the voluntary winding-up of the company should be continued under the supervision of the Court; but, if not, the usual order for a compulsory winding-up must be made. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C. and Mr. F. C. J. Millar were for the petitioners; Mr. Warmington for a creditor; and Mr. Karslake, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings for the company.

ROLLS' COURT, Chancery-Lane.

June 12.

(Before the Master of the Rolls.)

In re Phœnix Bessemer Steel Company (Limited).—An order was made to continue the voluntary winding-up of this company under the supervision of the Court. Mr. Fischer, Q.C. and Mr. C. C. Price appeared in support of the petition; Mr. Bush for the company; and Mr. Everitt for a mortgage creditor.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

June 11.

((Before the Hon. W. C. Spring-Rice.)

In re the Hon. W. F. O. O'Callaghan, M.P.—This case was again before the court. Mr. Finlay Knight and Mr. Percy Gye appeared on behalf of the trustee in support of a motion for a declaration that a certain memorandum in writing, dated Dec. 26, 1874, made by the bankrupt in favour of Messrs. Hummel and Co., hosiers, of Old Bond-street, was a fraudulent transfer or conveyance of property, and that such memorandum or charge was void against the trustee, and ought to be delivered up to be cancelled. Evidence in support of the motion had been taken, and the respondents did not appear. His Honour accordingly made an order as prayed.

June 12.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring-Rice, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Henry Benson.—The debtor is a manufacturer, carrying on business in Milton-street, Cripplegate, and at East Grinstead. His debts are estimated at about £12,000, and assets £3,000. Upon the application of Mr. Rooks, his Honour appointed Mr. Lovering, accountant, Gresham-street, receiver and manager, and granted an interim injunction restraining actions.

In re Simpsom and Baker.—The debtors, described as builders, of 241 Tottenham-court-road, and also carrying on business at Acton, have filed a petition for liquidation. Their debts are estimated at £20,000, and assets £28,000. Upon the application of Mr. G. W. Barnard, his Honour appointed a receiver and granted an interim injunction.

In re Edward M. De Bussche.—The bankrupt was a steamship owner, carrying on business at Ryde. This was a sitting for public examination, the proceedings having been transferred from the Hampshire County Court held at Newport. The unsecured debts are returned at £89,177, and there are further liabilities to about the same amount, with assets £19,250. Mr. Brough appeared for the trustee; Mr. Finlay Knight for the bankrupt. His Honour granted an adjournment, with the view to the completion of additional accounts required by the trustees.

In re Edward Corry.—The bankrupt, a merchant, of 8 New Broad-street, recently filed a petition for liquidation, his liabilities being estimated at about £200,000, with assets of considerable value, the precise amount not being yet ascertained. Mr. Bowen (Wansey and Bowen) renewed an application for the appointment of a receiver and manager, stating that creditors to the extent of £117,000 concurred. His Honour appointed Mr. Glegg, accountant (Quilter, Ball, & Co), receiver and manager of the property.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In Re G. H. Browning.—Mr. Congreve applied under proceedings for liquidation by arrangement instituted by the debtor, for the confirmation of the resolutions of creditors. The debtor, who was a refreshment contractor, carrying on business at various stations on the Great Western Railway, failed in February, 1873, and the business had since been carried on by the trustee for the benefit of the creditors. Dividends amounting to 10s. in the pound had already been declared, and the debtor proposed to pay to the trustee a sum sufficient for payment of the remaining 10s., the creditors agreeing to forego interest. The accounts showed liabilities of £24,511, and a surplus. Mr. Munn, for the debtors, supported the application. His Honour reserved his decision, so that he might examine the resolutions.

(Before Mr. Registrar Keene.)

In Re Thomas S. Webb.—This debtor presented his petition for liquidation in January last, describing himself as a colliery proprietor, carrying on business at 85 Gracechurch-street. At the first meeting resolutions were come to for liquidating the estate by arrangement with a trustee and committee of inspection. On Tuesday last an application was made to the learned registrar to register the resolution, but a very strong opposition was made both to the resolution and also to various large proofs of creditors. The consideration of the objections was before the Court for four days, and then the learned registrar reserved his judgment. His Honour, after briefly reviewing the facts of the case, said that the objection to registration was based upon the grounds that the statement of affairs was irregular in form, untrue, and insufficient. He could not help thinking that the statement was insufficient, but not so much so as to warrant a refusal to register. It had appeared from the evidence that the debtor, after purchasing three collieries for £56,700, had agreed to sell them to the Consolidated Collieries Company for £172,000, and in his statement had appeared a claim against this company for £100,000. This claim, however, he had estimated to be worth nothing, and upon this item the counsel for the objector had principally based his argument. He thought that in the event of this turning out to be of any value, it would be so much additional assets available for dividend. The insufficiency was not, in his opinion, material, and he should overrule the objection, and direct registration. Mr. Morley (Morley Shirreff) appeared for the debtor; and Mr. Hemming (instructed by Messrs. Miller and Wiggins) for the objecting creditors.

June 16.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Dows, Clark, & Co.—This was an application on behalf of a creditor for an order that a resolution to accept a composition should be taken off the file, and that an adjudication of bankruptcy should be made. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Bush Cooper were counsel for the applicant; Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. Anderson for the respondents. The debtors, who were manufacturers of soda-water machines, carrying on business at Compton-house, Frith-street, Soho, presented their petition for liquidation in December, 1874, and at the first meeting the debtors made an offer of a composition of 3s. in the pound, payable, as to 2s. one month after registration, and as to the remaining 1s. at 12 months. The necessary majority of the creditors accepted the proposal, and the resolution was afterwards confirmed, and duly registered; and the present application was based mainly upon the ground that the statement of the affairs of the debtors produced at the meetings did not correctly represent the particulars and the value of the assets. The greater portion of two days having been occupied in hearing the arguments of counsel, and reading the very voluminous affidavits filed on either side, Mr. Winslow, Q.C., now referred to some correspondence which had passed between the parties, and said that the debtors, being desirous of standing well with their creditors, intended to call a meeting under the 126th section for the purpose of varying the terms of the composition by increasing the amount already accepted to the extent probably of 1s. in the pound, if possible. His Honour, by consent, ordered an adjournment, either side to be at liberty to apply.

June 17.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE HOFFENBACH.—The debtor, Leopold Hoffenbach, described as a merchant, of 72 Watling-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, his debts being estimated at £10,000, of which a portion will probably run off, with assets £1,400, consisting of stock, book debts, and other items. Mr. Cordwell, for the debtor, and with the concurrence of creditors, asked that Mr. Soppett, accountant, should be appointed receiver, and for an interim restraining order. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE CORNELIUS BENNETT HARNESS.—The debtor is an importer of foreign goods, carrying on business at 33 Aldersgate-street, and at Paris, and he has also a retail business in the Strand. He presented a petition to this Court a few months ago, and at the first meeting a resolution was passed, and afterwards duly registered, for a liquidation by arrangement. The debtor had since proposed a scheme, which the creditors accepted, that he should purchase the whole of the assets (with a trifling exception) for the sum of £3,000, payable by three instalments at five, ten, and 15 months, secured by the joint bond of the debtor and his father, the debtor also paying the costs of the liquidation. The assets were estimated at £5,222. The officer in the liquidation department (Mr. Lamb), having regard to the discrepancy in the figures and other circumstances, declined to certify that the proposal was fair and reasonable, but it appeared from the statement of the trustee that considerable depreciation had occurred in the value of the assets. Mr. Bush Cooper now asked the Court to approve the arrangement. His Honour held that the resolutions were not in the nature of a scheme under the 28th section, and declined to make the order. He said that if the trustee chose to sell the property upon the terms of the resolutions, he must take the responsibility upon himself. Application refused.

LORD MAYOR'S COURT.

(Before the RECORDER and a Common Jury.)

SPRUNT v. CARR.—This was an action to recover £10 on a bill of exchange, to which the plaintiff pleaded "never indebted," and "that the bill was given on account of a fraudulent preference to a creditor." Mr. Lewis appeared for the plaintiff, and Mr. Kemp for the defendant. The defendant filed a petition for liquidation in bankruptcy, and offered 6d. in the pound. Mr. Sprunt, who was a creditor for £237 11s. 4d., dissented at the meeting of creditors. However, resolutions were passed to take the composition offered, but, happening to be informal, the registrar of the Bankruptcy Court refused to register them. A second meeting was held, at which Mr. Munns, of the firm of Lewis, Munns, and Longden, of Old Jewry, signed the resolutions on behalf of Mr. Sprunt, as a consenting creditor. Previously to this Mr. Plunkett, the defendant's solicitor, had entered into an arrangement with Mr. Munns that he would buy Sprunt's debt for £51, of which £21 was to be paid by Mr. Plunkett within a limited time, and Carr was to give three bills of exchange for £10 each, and this was one of them. Mr. Plunkett paid the £21, but he was not to be held responsible for the payment of the three bills of exchange. The £21 he paid out of the defendant's money. The Jury gave a verdict for the plaintiff on the plea of "never indebted," and for the defendent on the plea of "fraudulent preference to a creditor." This was virtually a verdict for the defendant, but the legal point will have to be argued hereafter.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

June 11.

(Before the HON. JUDGE MILLER.)

IN RE WILLIAM ARMSTRONG, OF BELFAST.—The bankrupt had been a bill discounter, and the passing of his final examination was opposed by the assignees, on the ground that a sum of £14,000 and other items had not been satisfactorily vouched. This case excited some interest, Mr. Purcell, Q.C., and Dr. Seeds. appeared for the assignees; and Mr. Carton for the bankrupt. He was examined in the matter of two steamboats which he had owned in conjunction with three other persons, but stated that he had no book of account which would show the working of the steamers; but he got £600 out of the £1,800, for which they were sold. The learned judge adjourned the case for a report from the official assignee, consequent on the bankrupt's filing an amended account, adding, "that it was a case which should be investigated to the utmost."

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. GIFFARD.)

RE HANSON, PICKLES & CO.—Mr. West, barrister, Leeds, who was instructed by Mr. G. Rhodes, appeared in support of a motion by Messrs. C. T. Rhodes and J. J. Learoyd, who were trustees under the above bankruptcy, to restrain Mr. Thomas Fleming, card maker, owner of West-grove Mill, and Wm. Holdsworth, auctioneer (Mr. Fleming's agent), from proceeding to sell certain property belonging to the estate of the bankrupt which the respondents had distrained. Mr. Judd opposed the motion. The bankrupts, six in number, recently traded as stuff manufacturers, occupying premises at West-grove Mill, Mr. Fleming being the landlord. They were adjudicated bankrupts on the 24th of March, and being in arrears with their rent, Mr. Holdsworth, acting under the instruction of Mr. Fleming, distrained on the machinery, which it transpired had then already been sold. Mr. West stated that the respondents distrained for a quarter's rent; but as the bankrupts had always paid the rent half-yearly, he contended that the distraint was contrary to law. Several witnesses, principally members of the firm of bankrupts, were called in support of the motion. On behalf of the defence Mr. Fleming was called and said that although the bankrupts did not pay their rent regularly, it was understood when they rented the premises that it was to be paid quarterly. Various points of law were argued at great length, and ultimately the case was adjourned to enable the production of further evidence.

MOTION AGAINST A LATE BANKRUPTCY TRUSTEE.—Mr. West, barrister (instructed by Mr. Rhodes), appeared in support of a motion by Mr. Jno. Alderson, the present trustee under the liquidation of the late Jacob Stead, the motion having being directed against Mr Robert Frederick Beswick, accountant, who was the late trustee of the same liquidation. The application was for an order to compel Mr. Beswick to deliver up to the present trustee all books, papers, documents, monies, and effects belonging to Stead's estate. On Stead filing his petition, Mr. Beswick was regularly appointed as trustee, but at a subsequent creditors' meeting it was thought there was strong ground for wishing that Mr. Beswick should no longer remain trustee, and a meeting representing one-fourth in value was called under rules 304 and 305, at which it was resolved to remove Mr. Beswick from the trusteeship and appoint Mr. John Alderson in his room. This meeting took place on the 26th ult. The resolution was registered, and Mr. Alderson's solicitor wrote to Mr. Beswick's solicitor, giving him notice of the change of trustees, and requesting him to inform his client to give up all books, &c , in his possession relating to the bankruptcy.—Mr. England, on behalf of Mr. Beswick, said there could be no doubt, if Mr. Alderson was duly appointed, that he was entitled to the books, papers, and other things, and Mr. Beswick had given up everything, before these proceedings were taken. Mr. West said this was only a preliminary to what would take place shortly. Mr. Beswick had not given up everything. On the 24th of May his costs, as trustee, were taxed at £10 18s. 11d., and there was Mr. Beswick's own statement showing that he had included amounts which were not allowed to him on the taxation. The Judge made the order asked for with costs.

STONEHOUSE BANKRUPTCY COURT.

Before Mr. M. FORTESCUE, Judge.

RE DAVID MCCALLUM.—Mr. Dawe for the assignees; Mr. Elliot Square for the holder of a bill of sale.—The question here was as to the validity of the bill of sale, and whether the assignee under the bill exercised his powers in time.—Mr. Dawe stated that Mr. McCallum was outfitter and loan agent, and agent for an insurance company. On the the 19th February last he applied to Mr. Jago to lend him £175 on security of his furniture and effects. This was done on that day, and a bill of sale executed. Under that bill Mr. Jago had the power at any time to claim the money with 6 per cent. interest, and to take possession within twenty-four hours if it was not paid. On the 13th April Mr. McCallum filed his petition for liquidation, and on that day Mr. J. E. E. Dawe took possession as receiver. On the same day, and after Mr. Dawe had taken possession, Mr. Jargo sent in a man under the bill of sale. The first meeting under the liquidation was held on the 7th May, and it was then resolved that the estate should be wound up in bankruptcy. The act of bankruptcy was the filing of the petition in liquidation. On the same day Mr. Dawe was appointed receiver under the bankruptcy; and on the 27th of May he was appointed trustee. The validity of the bill of sale and Mr. Jago's rights were impeached on two grounds—first, that Mr. Callum was not properly described in the bill of sale and affidavit; and secondly, that the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt at the time of the act of bankruptcy. Mr. McCallum was described in the bill of sale as an insurance agent, whereas his debts were contracted as an outfitter and loan agent, and he (Mr. Dawe) believed he was so described with intent to mislead. However, even if the bill of sale was good, under the 15th section of the Bankruptcy Act, sub-section 5, the property referred to therein was divisible among the creditors. The commencement of bankruptcy was the filing of the petition, and up to that time no action had been taken under the bill; and the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupt. The bankruptcy, he held, was a continuation of the liquidation proceedings.—Mr. Square contended that the description of the grantor as insurance agent was sufficient In point of fact, Mr. McCallum had been an insurance agent before he was an outfitter, and the outfitting business until recently had been carried on by Messrs. McCallum and Wotton. Insurance agency was McCallum's original business, and that which he had carried on longest and continuously. To describe him as an insurance agent was not, therefore, a misdescription which would invalidate the bill of sale or mislead his creditors. There was no question as to the bona-fides of the transaction, and that it came under the 96th section of the Bankruptcy Act.—His Honour pointed out that the goods had not been taken possession of until after Mr. Jago had had notice of the act of bankruptcy.—Mr. Spuare referred to the Bills of Sale Act, as providing that if bills of sale were not filed they should be null and void against assignees; and quoted Vice-Chancellor Malins as holding thereon that if registered a bill would not be so void. In another case it was held by Chief Justice Bacon that goods under such a bill of sale were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupt.—Mr. Dawe said that in another case Chief Justice Bacon recalled this.—Mr. Square rejoined that the Chief Judge had only commented on the former judgment, but had not given his reasons; and insisted on his contention under the Bills of Sale Act.—Mr. Dawe having replied, his Honour ordered the case to stand over for judgment, intimating, however, that his impression was against Mr. Square.—It was agreed that, pending the decision, the trustee should sell the goods and hold the money.

NOTTINGHAM COUNTY COURT.

(Before MR. R. WILDMAN, Judge.)

RE NIGHTINGALE, ex parte TOMLINSON.—Mr. Cranch, on behalf of the trustee, made an application to the Court that Charles Tomlinson should be ordered to deliver up to the trustee certain goods in his possession which belonged to the estate of a bankrupt, Henry Nightingale, lace manufacturer, of Nottingham. Mr. Lees, jun., appeared for Tomlinson, who acted as agent in London for the bankrupt. Charles Tomlinson said his understanding with Nightingale was that he should have a commission upon all goods sent direct from Nottingham; but at Christmas Mr. Nightingale sold some goods, but he (witness) did not get his commission. Some goods were sent to him in London after he knew the petition had been filed, and he sold those goods, holding that they had been transferred to him. Mr. Cranch produced a letter written by the trustee, Mr. Press, to Tomlinson, asking him to return any goods he had in his possession belonging to the estate; and requesting him to state if any commission was owing him, and if so, it would receive immediate attention. No reply was made to the letter, but in answer to a subsequent one, he said he had no goods belonging to Mr. Nightingale, and he had sold the goods he had to clear the debt which he said was owing him by Mr. Nightingale. The debtor, Henry Nightingale, said Tomlinson had received goods on 23rd November, to the amount of £25 18s. 10d., and on the 17th goods amounting to £7, but no account had been rendered of these things. He went with the trustee to Tomlinson's place in London, and saw some of the goods. Tomlinson took him aside, and wrote on a slip of paper, "Shall I tell him where the goods are?" and he wrote back, "You must give up every thing." He promised Tomlinson some money, but denied having given him authority to sell any thing to pay his commission. His Honour ordered Tomlinson to deliver up all the goods in his possession, and to pay £10, with the costs of the application.

DELAYS IN WINDING-UP.

"Reformer" writes as follows to a contemporary:—

"If some member of parliament were to obtain a return of the companies which have been under liquidation since the Act of 1862, showing in each case the amount of liabilities, the amount realised, and the proportion absorbed by the liquidator and solicitor as compared with the amount per pound paid to creditors, it would reveal a state of things which could not fail to impel speedy legislation to reform the present monstrous system. I believe nothing can be more disadvantageous to the general interests of a great commercial community than procrastination in winding up the estates of insolvent debtors, whether companies or individuals. That this view is held generally by all the principal mercantile men is attested by the readiness with which they accept small prompt compositions from their debtors rather than submit to the delay of the ordinary Bankruptcy proceedings, which do not average as many months as liquidation of companies does years, while the expenses are also less in proportion. The loss to the general interests of the community by protracting the state of suspense of the thousands of persons who are under liabilities to companies in liquidation is incalculable, as all persons during such circumstances abstain more or less from engaging their capital in business, in order to be prepared to pay when their exact liability is ascertained, or to evade the payment altogether if the claim be ruinous. I don't at all doubt but many cases may be quoted whereby contributions have been obtained after five or ten years from persons who were unable to pay sooner; but these few cases could never compensate for the general loss to the industry of the country by the system of procrastination. Any loss to creditors of insolvent companies by a short, sharp, and decisive course of winding-up would be a far lesser evil than that under which the country is now groaning. Better, if necessary, to pass a law that no shares should be legal unless fully paid up, and that no joint-stock company should take credit. It is, however, idle to suppose that these extremes would be necessary, for surely there can be no difficulty in discovering a radical improvement upon the present universally condemned practice."

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. John Henry Champness, 10 Basinghall-street, Public Accountant, has been appointed trustee of the estate of Mr. William Talley, Slough, solicitor, in liquidation. Mr. Talley was a candidate for the representation of Buckingham in the present parliament.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. James Waddell, of Mansion House-chambers, Queen Victoria-street, official liquidator of the Universal Disinfector Company, Limited.

Vice-Chancellor Hall has appointed Mr. J. Waddell and Mr. Hunter provisional official liquidators of the Oakwell Collieries, Limited.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

J. C. IM THURN AND CO.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. J. C. im Thurn and Co. held on Wednesday, the statement of affairs submitted by Messrs Turquand, Youngs, and Co. showed an estimated total of liabilities of £513,806, against estimated assets £431,104, of which £156,644 are available. It was agreed to accept an immediate payment of 5s. in the pound, and a deed is to be registered by which the partners covenant to realise the remainder of the estate and pay over the proceeds to the three trustees, Messrs. Kleinwort, M'Andrew, and Young, for the benefit of the creditors. Further distributions will from time to time be made as assets are realised, and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. is to be paid in addition. It is not improbable, we understand, that the ultimate realisation of the estate will show 15s. in the pound.

FORBES & CO. (DUNDEE).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Forbes, Hupeden, and Runge, import and export merchants, who carry on business in Dundee and Belfast, and whose liabilities amounted to about £35,000, was held in Belfast on Friday afternoon, when an offer was made of 7s. 6d. in the pound, to be paid in four quarterly instalments, security to be given for the last.

SMITH & DAVIDSON (GREENOCK).—At a meeting of the creditors of Smith and Davidson, grain merchants, Greenock, held on Friday, a composition of 13s. 4d. in the pound was unanimously accepted.

W. MARSDEN (SHEFFIELD).—A meeting was held on Friday at the offices of Messrs. Watson and Esam, of the creditors of Mr. William Marsden, ivory merchant, but now out of business, of Burngreave-road. Mr. Macredie read a statement of accounts, which showed unsecured creditors £8,670 19s. 6d., creditors fully secured £1,835. The assets were valued at £330. On behalf of the debtor, an offer was made of 1s. in the pound, payable in cash on 25th June. The meeting agreed to accept the composition. Mr. Macredie was appointed trustee.

I. D. WADDY (SHEFFIELD).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. I. D. Waddy, auctioneer, valuer, and estate agent, of Leyland-villa, and Bank-street, Sheffield, was held in the Cutlers' Hall, on Friday. A statement of accounts was read by Mr. E. S. Foster, showing total liabilities ranking against the estate £7,569 8s. 6d., and assets £539 15s. 2d. It was unanimously resolved to wind up the affairs by liquidation, and not in bankruptcy, Mr. E. S. Foster, being appointed trustee.

J. VERITY (LEEDS).—John Verity, of Pudsey, near Leeds, draper and outfitter, was adjudicated bankrupt on the 15th inst., Mr. Alexander Atkinson, accountant, Bradford, being appointed receiver and manager. Messrs. Terry and Robinson, of Bradford, are the solicitors acting in the bankruptcy.

JOHN TOWNEND (CLECKHEATON).—A meeting of creditors was held herein at the offices of Messrs. Lancaster and Wright, solicitors, Bradford, on Monday, the 14th inst. Liquidation was resolved upon, Mr. Atkinson, accountant, being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection, Messrs. Lancaster and Wright were entrusted with registration of the resolutions, and appointed solicitors to the trustee.

F. MILNES (SHEFFIELD).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Francis Milnes, confectioner and eating-house keeper, Castle-street, was held at the offices of Mr. Joseph Brailsford, jun., solicitor, Figtree-lane, on Friday. Mr. William Crowther was voted to the chair. Mr. Brailsford opened the proceedings by explaining that the meeting had been called on behalf of the trustee, Mr. Unwin Wing, to ascertain the feeling of the creditors with regard to certain property which the debtor had become possessed of during his liquidation. The debtor had had his discharge at the first meeting, so long ago as 1871. The liquidation proceedings, however, had not been closed, and by recent decisions there could be no question that any property coming into the possession of the debtor before the close of the proceedings became vested in the trustee. Mr. Wing said when Mr. Milnes met his creditors three or four years ago it was understood that he had some property at Upperthorpe, and that it was mortgaged above its value to Mr. Ibberson. The mortgagee got them to reserve a certain amount of dividend, as he had a right to do so. The matter stood over for a very long time. Ultimately, at a meeting of the mortgagee and the committee of inspection, it was arranged that they should sell the property through Mr. Harvey, and each party pay half the costs. It was offered for sale, but was not disposed of. A portion of it had since passed through several hands, and Mr. Ibberson, when asked for a statement of accounts, said he would relieve the trustees of any dividend, and the estate was thereupon closed three or four months ago. It seemed that this property had, since the date of the liquidation, come back to the debtor by purchase. Mr. Wing further stated that the debtor had become possessed of some property at Askham, near Retford. It consisted of seven acres of freehold. It was situated near some other property which was actually mentioned in the statement, and Mr. Milnes had come into possession of it by his brother's death. Mr. Brailsford said that by recent decisions this property, like the other at Upperthorpe, belonged to the creditors, because the debtor's liquidation was still unclosed. Mr. Harvey said if they were determined to take the property from Mr. Milnes, after the latter had been under the impression that his affairs had been fairly settled, the new creditors would also come forward and "join at the giblets." Mr. Brailsford replied that they were not entitled to do so. They could not alter the legal position of things. Mr. Vickers, Jun., said he believed they could not find more than three decisions on the real point at issue, and two were based on the first, which was given in November last. It was stated that many others in the town might be found to occupy a position similar to that in which Mr. Milnes was placed. It was unanimously resolved that Mr. Wing, as trustee, should be empowered to sell the debtor's outstanding estate to such persons and at such prices as he might deem advisable.

Swallow and Co. (Heckmondwike).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Swallow and Co., carpet and blanket manufacturers, at Ings Mill, Heckmondwike, was held on the 15th at Dewsbury. A statement of affairs was submitted, from which it appeared that the unsecured liabilities amounted to £11,253, and the assets to £3,493. The result of the meeting was that the debtors agreed to pay a composition of 7s. in the pound, payable in the following instalments:—2s. in four months, 2s. in eight months, and 3s. in fourteen months, secured to the satisfaction of a committee of five of the largest creditors.

Henry Trevor Lannigan (Redcar).—At a meeting of the creditors of Henry Trevor Lannigan, of Redcar, in the county of York, engineer, lately carrying on business in co-partnership with Sivert Hjerleid, at the East Yorkshire ironworks, North Ormesby, Middlesbrough, under the style of Hjerleid and Lanningan, the statement of affairs, prepared by Mr. John Braithwaite, showed liabilities, unsecured creditors £5,072 7s. 1d. Assets, small. The creditors resolved to wind-up the estate in liquidation, and appointed Mr. John Braithwaite trustee.

Sivert Hjerleid (Middlesbrough).—A meeting of the creditors of Sivert Hjerleid, of Coatham, in the county of York, carrying on business under the style of Hjerleid and Co., at the East Yorkshire Ironworks, North Ormesby, Middlesbrough, was held on the 17th June at the Queen Hotel, Middlesbrough. The statement of affairs prepared by Mr. John Braithwaite, the receiver and manager, was as follows: Liabilities to creditors unsecured £7,103 11s. 11d., to creditors fully secured £12,150. Assets, stock-in-trade £1,274 14s. 5d., book debts £600, furniture, fixtures, and fittings £3,203 14s. 11d. The creditors resolved to wind-up the estate in liquidation, and appointed Mr. John Braithwaite, of Middlesbrough, public accountant, trustee, with a committee of inspection, and Mr. Bambridge was entrusted with the registration of the resolutions.

FAILURES.

England.—The failure was announced on Tuesday, of Messrs. Alexander Collie and Co., of 17 Leadenhall-street, and of Manchester, with liabilities estimated at £3,000,000, a considerable portion of which will run off. The books were placed in the hands of Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, & Co. —As a result of the failure of Messrs. Alexander Collie and Co., Messrs. Rainbow, Holberton, and Co., of St. Helen's-place, Bishopsgate-street, have suspended payment, and their books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co.—The cheques of Messrs. Robert Benson and Co., of King's Arms Yard, have also been returned. The liabilities of the latter are estimated at a million sterling.—The acceptances of Messrs. Shand and Co., East India merchants, have also been returned. The liabilities will probably exceed £250,000.—Advices from Manchester state that a petition had been filed in the County Court by Mr. John Mabon, engineer and boiler maker, trading under the style of Walter Mabon and Co. The liabilities amount to about £30,000.—Two failures in the boot and shoe trade have occurred in Manchester, those of Michael Conlan, Deansgate, with liabilities £3,500, and Samuel F. Langham, High-street, with liabilities £7,160. Messrs. Young, Borthwick and Co., bill brokers, of Lombard-street, have stopped payment, with liabilities on bills bearing their guarantee of about £2,500,000, including £700,000 to £800,000 on the drafts of Messrs. Collie and Co. The failure may be considered as entirely due to that of Collie and Co., and the liquidation, of course, depends upon the extent of the dividend to be paid by that house.—The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Harding, Whinney and Co., of 8 Old Jewry. The stoppage was announced on Thursday, of Messrs. John Anderson and Co., of Philpot-lane, whose transactions were chiefly in connection with Ceylon. The liabilities amount to about £200,000, including acceptances for Messrs. Collie and Co. for £60,000. Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co., are in possession of the books of the firm.—Messrs. John Strachan and Co., East India merchants, of 121 Bishopsgate-street, have stopped, with liabilities of about £200,000. The books are in the hands of Messrs. J. Waddell and Co. The assets are not yet ascertained, and the liquidation depends mainly upon the out-turn of consignments.—Messrs. Henry Adamson and Sons, of 75 Mark-lane, ship and insurance brokers, established in 1869, have failed for between £80,000 and £100,000. The books are in the hands of Messrs. Turquand, Youngs and Co.—The circular announcing the stoppage of Mr. J. C. Fowlie, of 18 Leadenhall-street, established in 1866, has been issued, and the books are in the hands of the same firm of accountants. Liabilities about £100,000. The bills were returned on Thursday of Messrs. Octavius Phillips and Co., of 91 Great Tower-street.—Two other firms were announced on Thursday, viz., Messrs. Malcolm Hudson and Co., of 5 Crosby-square, Japan merchants, established in 1868, who express hopes that the difficulties would be but temporary, liabilities about £100,000; and Messrs. A. Gonzales & Co., of Palmerston-buildings, Old Broad-street, whose books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. R. Fletcher & Co.—The firm of J. P. Westhead & Co., of Piccadilly, Manchester, merchants, engaged in the home trade, suspended payment on Thursday, with liabilities estimated at over £200,000. The cause of the stoppage was the use of accommodation bills between Alexander Collie and Co., and Messrs. Westhead and Co., amounting to £110,000, which by the failure of the former rank against the estate of the latter. This is a more serious failure as effecting Manchester than then that of Alexandra Collie and Co., as the bulk of the losses by the stoppage fell outside Manchester; but in the case of Westhead and Co. the liabilities fall chiefly upon the manufacturers and agents of Lancashire and Yorkshire. Their books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Beloitte and Halliday, accountants.—The failure is announced of Hillel Harris, merchant, Frederick-street, Birmingham, with liabilities estimated at £15,000, Scotland.—The suspension was announced on Tuesday, of Mr. Archibald Bow, 16 Ingram-street, Glasgow, manufacturer of druggets and wool shirtings. Liabilities believed to be small.

America.—American advices report the failure of Messrs. F. F. Cole and Co., of Chicago, in the provision trade, with liabilities of £10,000. Messrs. J. H. and A. J. Sypher, planters, Louisiana, have failed, with liabilities of £28,000; assets £5,000. An old established leather manufacturing firm in Quebec had also suspended, involving two banks to the extent of £24,000.—American advices to hand on the 16th report the failure of Mr. Stephen J. Hooker, lard merchant, Chicago, with heavy liabilities.—The suspension of Messrs. Winning, Hill and Ware, an old established firm at Montreal, distillers and manufacturers of gins, cordials, &c., had also transpired. Liabilities and assets not known.—Messrs. William Trigg and Son, fancy goods, and Mr. George Groves, wholesale crockery, both of Montreal, had suspended.—Messrs. R. S. T. Davidson and Co., dry goods, London, Ont., failed.—The Hamilton Clothing House had made an assignment, owing to their being involved with Messrs. Henry Davis and Co., of Montreal. Liabilities £20,000.—Messrs. R. F. Taylor and Son, Toronto, have also made an assignment.—Messrs. Frier and Dale, Hamilton, Canada West, have also stopped.

CANADA.—Advices from Montreal report the failure of Messrs. Henry Davis and Co., of Montreal, with liabilities amounting to £270,000, of which £140,000 is unsecured. This firm has been chiefly engaged in importing woollen goods, so that a large portion of their liabilities falls on Leeds, Dewsbury, Huddersfield, and the woollen manufacturers of Germany. The holders of the £130,000 secured are chiefly bankers. This is the largest failure that has ever taken place in Canada on dry goods. Consequent on this failure, Messrs. Empey Johnson, and Co. have suspended, with liabilities of considerable extent in Manchester and Yorkshire. Messrs. Henry Davis and Co. are indebted to Messrs. Empey Johnson and Co. to the extent of £35,000. Messrs. John Armstrong and Co., St. John's N.B., are also involved with Messrs. Henry Davis and Co., and have likewise suspended.

The National Zeitung reports the suspension of Vito Israel and Co., of Trieste; liabilities about £20,000.

Mr. Robert A. McLean, accountant, notifies that he has removed from 8 Lothbury to 8 Old Jewry, the firm of Barnard, Clarke, McLean and Co. having being dissolved by mutual consent.

PROGRESS OF THE REVENUE.—Two months of the current financial year have now elapsed, and there can be little doubt, we think, that the progress so far, especially considering the moderation of the last Budget estimates, must be exceedingly satisfactory to the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The revenue in these two months has been £12,040,000, and in the corresponding period of last year it was only £11,166,000, or an increase of nearly a million, although the taxes were substantially the same in the two periods, or if any thing the differences are in favour of 1874, because the now abolished sugar duty was then in force for some weeks, and the arrears of income-tax were then at 3d. instead of, as now, at only 2d. per pound. For 1874, also, the account is brought down to the 30th of May, whereas this year it is only to the 29th, thus giving an extra day to 1874; but we do not insist upon this, as it is no doubt partly compensated by the circumstance of Easter week not having fallen this year within the two months just passed. In any case there is apparently about a million to the good in the first two months of the financial year, as compared with the last. Taking into account also, according to our usual practice, only those main branches of revenue—Customs, Excise, and Stamps—which come in most regularly, the results of the last two months appear almost equally satisfactory. The comparison is:—

	Two Months, 1875-6.	Two Months, 1874-5.	Increase in 1875-6
Customs	£3,018,000	... £3,014,000	... £4,000
Excise	4,152,000	... 3,664,000	... 488,000
Stamps	1,840,010	... 1,773,000	... 67,000
Total	9,010,000	8,451,000	559,000

As we showed in our article on the Budget, the total increase in the year which Sir Stafford Northcote has estimated for these three branches of revenue is only £676,000, so that even if the revenue is stationary for the rest of the year the Budget estimates will be made good. The real increase also is probably greater than the apparent increase above shown, in consequence of the circumstance already referred to—that something was received in April and May, 1874, from the now abolished sugar duty. But for this the Customs would show a larger increase. Comparison is no doubt being made at present with months of small return last year, in which a serious falling-off of revenue was threatened; we must not expect a corresponding increase all through the rest of the year; but, all allowances being made, the beginning is extremely favourable, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer has every prospect of possessing a much larger surplus to deal with next spring than he had in his last Budget, while an additional surplus will have accrued with which to reduce the Debt under the old sinking fund arrangement.—Economist.

PARTNER OR CREDITOR.—At the Oldham County Court, on Monday, before Mr. C. Hutton, judge, and jury, a case came on for hearing in which it was sought to decide whether John Marland, of the Grange, Hollinwood, was entitled to prove against the debtor, John Ashton, joiner and builder, and a bankrupt, for a debt of £7,000 in that bankruptcy. Mr. Addison appeared for Marland, in support of his proof as a plaintiff, and Mr. Leresche defended the debtor. From the evidence of the plaintiff, who is a colliery proprietor, it appeared that on representations made to him by a minister of a chapel of which he was the deacon, he took an interest in the commercial welfare of Ashton, who was then a young man, and just commencing business. He advanced him sums of money on various occasions with the view of helping him in his business, and received I.O.U.'s, which were subsequently exchanged for promissory notes. He continued in this course for a considerable length of time, and the debtor not succeeding in his business, was obliged to liquidate. At the time the liquidation was made he (the plaintiff) proved for £7,500. Up to that time the word "partner" had never been mentioned between them, and no agreement of any nature had been made. He had no entries made of the several amounts that were paid to Ashton. Ashton, in his evidence, stated that in April, 1873, Mr. Marland agreed to enter into partnership with him in his business, saying, at the same time, that he would provide what capital was required, for which he would be paid 5 per cent., and that Ashton should have the same percentage on the stock, and it was decided that the profits should be divided equally. In cross-examination he said that it had been arranged that Marland should be put forward as a creditor and not as a partner, if any thing wrong turned up. It was not exactly Mr. Marland who put him up to this. The jury, after an hour's deliberation, found that there had been no partnership, and gave a verdict for Marland.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the New Key, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a New Lock and Key, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,

62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

JUNE 26, 1875.

We have said so much about auditing accounts, and the strong necessity that exists for such a duty being intrusted only to the most competent persons, that we should not have returned to the subject this week, but for the fact of the discussion in Parliament relative to the Friendly Societies Act. This is a measure which, in various ways, affects the interests of accountants, whose profession must necessarily bring them into contact with many of these associations; and some of its clauses bear directly on the subject of adequate and efficient auditing. In asking that accountants might have some voice in suggesting changes and improvements in the Bankruptcy Act, we were, we consider, only acting in our undoubted right. Till the whole commercial system of the country is changed, accountants must play a considerable part in the administration of estates. But though this fact is but too evident, there are many who look with strange and narrow jealousy on the intervention of accountants in this matter, and loudly claim that none but a duly certified lawyer shall have any share in any business which is more or less remotely connected with a special department of the courts of law. Suggestions as to amendment of procedure may be made to the proper quarter, and will be duly received and considered; but they must emanate from private individuals and not from a profession. Popular prejudice is strong, and we can quite understand that the Lord Chancellor may not have cared to run counter to the fancies and feelings of the powerful and organised body of which he is the chief. But as to any comments or suggestions in respect to the Friendly Societies Act, the same objections cannot be raised. Here accountants are speaking within their province, and have a right to be heard. The great outcry that has been raised against the friendly societies, is caused mainly by the manner in which their accounts are kept. Inaccurate balance-sheets, improperly valued securities, and an inadequate table of calculations and probabilities, are as great evils as reckless management, and too profuse expenditure; and to set such right, is one of the familiar duties of every accountant.

Many difficulties and defects are undoubtedly removed by the Government Bill, and the Ministry deserve credit for the attempt they have made to grapple with them. But it is precisely on the point of auditing that the bill is at its weakest, and that permissive legislation appears at its worst. The system of providing that a thing shall be done in the right way, but that if people like they may do it in a wrong one, may be a very comfortable one for all those concerned, but is sure to prove disastrous in the long-run. Yet this hesitating style of law-making is exactly what we find in the Act. It is enacted that a central office shall be established, which shall prepare model forms of accounts and balance-sheets, which shall compile statistics and issue corrected tables of payments calculated to meet any emergencies, for the guidance of the officials of the societies. The great question of a proper audit is met by the declaration that a yearly balance-sheet shall be prepared, and transmitted to the registrar by two or more persons appointed as the rules of their society provide, whose names and addresses are to be sent to the registrar and also posted for three months in the board-room of the society. Once in every five years a valuation of assets and liabilities is to be made by a valuer appointed by the society, and transmitted to the registrar, duly signed by the valuer and stating his address and profession; or an abstract of the necessary documents may be sent to the registrar, and the valuation made by a valuer appointed by him. Power is given to the Treasury to appoint auditors and valuers for the purposes of the Act, and to determine their remuneration; but it is not obligatory on any society to employ them.

However much these provisions may be an improvement on previous legislation, it is impossible to consider them as satisfactory. The most mismanaged association, or the most insolvent assurance company, could scarcely desire more than to have its valuations made by a nominee of the company, who need not be a man possessing the slightest knowledge of accounts. This argument is usually met by declamatory chatter about insult to the common sense of the community, and especially to the working-class members thereof. But without denying that there are many friendly societies perfectly solvent, carefully managed, whose affairs are readily patent to scrutiny and investigation, and whose directors are men as honourable and competent as can be, we must again remark that audits and valuations are made not only to point out the good, but to restrain and keep in check the evil. A man who wants to insure his life for a thousand pounds can make his choice between perhaps a hundred rival establishments; a poor man's choice is more restricted. It is in the interests of the weak and feeble of the community, that we ask that the work of auditing should be intrusted only to competent hands. Let the task be done by government valuers and public auditors; or, if too much supervision is objected to, let it be provided that the certificate of a public accountant shall alone be held as complying with the terms of the Act. Strictness in the present instance will make it all the easier for the government which has the courage to place all associations on one footing, and to prescribe a real and genuine audit of all public companies. To give legislative sanction to such a delusive system as is established by the Friendly Societies Act, will be a serious hindrance to all future reform. We trust this will not be overlooked when the House of Lords comes to debate these clauses.

If, as Lord Dundreary considers, there are some things which no one can understand, there are a great many other things which every one believes that he both ought to and does understand. All Englishmen are supposed to comprehend the points of a horse by a sort of natural instinct inherent in them, and the consequence is that there is no country in which horse-copers drive a more thriving trade than in England. Englishmen, too, are a business people, they are gifted with a profound common sense which is far superior to the wild rhapsodies of theorists and visionaries, and which is somehow considered to have been the main cause of the national prosperity. A keen insight into figures is a portion of this faculty; and a question of mere account is looked upon as being too simple for more than the most superficial consideration, and requiring but the very slightest modicum of professional training for its solution. It is possibly owing to this national propensity that so many political battles rage on questions of finance, and that every now and then the world is amazed to find how greatly the most eminent authorities differ on the meaning to be deduced from the plainest possible set of figures. The famous controversy as to the extravagance of a Conservative Government which Mr. Gladstone carried on as an election cry in 1868, in which he demonstrated to the satisfaction of his party that what every body else had considered to be a saving in expenditure was in reality a very considerable increase, was a memorable instance of this. But the late discussion as to the Savings Banks Bill has afforded a still more striking example of the proverbial fallaciousness of figures, and the difficulty which the outer world has in adequately comprehending the authoritative statements of experts. The old savings banks are carried on at a slight loss, and the new savings banks, under the control of the post-office authorities, show a profit more than sufficient to cover the deficiency. In the first case, a loss was incurred in a space of little over a year of £111,460; while the post-office savings banks during the same period had made a profit of no less than £118,687. Sir Stafford Northcote proposed, therefore, to throw the two accounts into one, and to extinguish the deficiency by the gradual appropriation of the surplus—an amount which would, he calculated, increase in value every year. The measure would have been allowed to pass probably, without more than that average amount of opposition and denunciation which is so essential to the free government of our country, but for the figures contained in another return. According to this, which, in compliance with an Act of Parliament, is annually compiled and laid before the House of Commons by the Commissioners for the reduction of the National Debt, the deficit on the funds of the old societies had during the year which had elapsed from November 1873 to November 1874, increased from £4,382,231 to £4,552,421, or by the sum of £170,190.

Thereupon, the not unnatural inference was drawn that the Chancellor of the Exchequer had somehow or other blundered in his calculations, and forthwith the organs of public opinion and the Opposition generally gave tongue, and with one voice and much fervid rhetoric proclaimed the collapse of the system of finance which Sir Stafford Northcote has advocated. The Chancellor was, however, perfectly firm and impenitent. He assured his critics generally that it was all right, and that the discrepancy was in no way real; but to allay the excited feeling, he directed the Comptroller of the National Debt office to prepare a short statement, which would make the imaginary nature of the deficiency perfectly plain. This statement shows plainly where the confusion lay; and the explanation of Mr. Rivers Wilson is perfectly satisfactory. But there are, doubtless, a good many persons who, though they defer to authority, will in their hearts still remain unconvinced. The case may teach a useful lesson to directors of companies. Accounts that are kept on perfectly sound principles, and are in themselves exactly correct, may, notwithstanding, convey a wrong impression to the outside observer. It would be as well if they would not only invariably employ auditors of such high professional position, that their signature and approval would re-assure the most timid and nervous of shareholders, but if they would also sometimes append a few words of explanation, which might tend to appease even the most suspicious.

Pending any subsequent decision by the House of Lords, it may be considered as settled law that if the joint creditors of a partnership agree to take a composition, a dissenting creditor of the joint and separate estate can sue one of his debtors. The decision seems in accordance with common sense. The fact is too often overlooked, that a composition, if it is favourable to the debtor, is also favourable to the creditors, as securing to them a certain sum without the delay and uncertainty of further proceedings; and they may be held to have considered the possibility of a further sum being realised from the separate estate. As between creditors and debtors, it is clear that the former have a right to use every remedy; and it certainly seems hard, that a creditor who can claim against two separate estates, shall be barred of his rights, because the creditors of one of the estates find that it will pay them only a nominal dividend, and therefore prefer to take an immediate composition. The decision seems, with every respect to the Lord Chief Baron, entirely correct.

COMPOSITIONS.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—An important case was decided on the 10th instant by the Court of Appeal, to which the attention of your readers should be particularly directed. I refer to the case of Ex parte Till in re Ratcliffe, a report of which appears in your issue of the 12th inst:—The decision of the Lords Justices reversed that of the Chief Judge and confirmed the order of the local Court, refusing to register a resolution for accepting a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound, on the ground that the resolution by which the composition was accepted was passed at an adjourned meeting, the same proposal having been made to, and rejected by, the original meeting. The question turned in great measure upon the construction of Rule 275 of the Bankruptcy Rules of 1870, under which the court is required to have regard only to such resolutions as are reduced into writing and signed by the creditors. The resolution rejecting the 2s. 6d. at the original meeting not having been recorded by the chairman in the minutes of the meeting, the Chief Judge was of opinion no notice could be taken of it; but the Lords Justices were of a different opinion, and held that the Registrar was right in taking evidence as to the proceedings at the meeting. An important principle is laid down by their Lordships with respect to adjournments. With many practitioners it has been a question whether a meeting under the liquidation clauses can be adjourned, or if adjourned, whether by a special or ordinary resolution of creditors. As a matter of practice, I believe that adjournments are by no means uncommon, and that they are carried by ordinary resolutions of creditors. I have always considered this a mischievous practice, because it is generally resorted to under the following circumstances:—A debtor makes his creditors an offer which perhaps more than one-fourth in value of those present reject; the debtor and the friendly creditors, representing a majority in value, move and carry an adjournment, with the hope that the dissentient creditors may not turn up at the adjourned meeting, of which no notice is required to be given: and the chances are the hostile creditors are absent on the adjourned day, and the debtor carries his resolutions. This practice must now, it seems to me, necessarily be put a stop to. Lord Justice James lays it down, that when a proposal has been duly voted upon and rejected, the meeting is at an end, and a resolution to adjourn is a perfectly idle one, which cannot be put to the vote. And in this view Lord Justice Mellish concurred. But if creditors have no power to adjourn after rejection of an offer of composition, it must appear desirable that they should have power to consider the advisability of accepting an increased offer; looking, however, at the decision strictly, it seems that they have no such power. The result will, under any circumstances, I think be beneficial to creditors generally. It will compel a debtor who contemplates a composition, to make, once for all, the best offer he can to his creditors, knowing that if his offer be rejected, he will have no chance of increasing it, but will be driven into Bankruptcy or Liquidation. One point is clearly illustrated by the case under consideration, that is, the inefficiency of the chairmen elected by meetings of creditors. The chairman in this case should have made a minute of the putting of the resolution, and of its rejection; but I fear that in very few instances do chairmen keep a proper record of the proceedings at meetings of creditors. This points to the desirability of a change, the necessity of which is now being generally conceded, viz., that all these meetings should be presided over by a Registrar, or officer of the court. While commenting on the question of composition arrangements, I may perhaps be allowed to point out what seems to me a great absurdity in the present system—the holding of two statutory meetings to carry a composition. The idea was, probably, to give more power to the creditors, and more time for consideration; but the practical effect has been, in many instances, to hoodwink the creditors, and by this means, viz., a debtor summons a meeting, at which he attends, and to satisfy certain hostile creditors who may be present, offers a respectable composition—never intending to carry it out. The creditors are satisfied, and consider the matter ended. Notice of the second meeting is given, to confirm the resolution,—which notice, by the way, does not even state the effect of the resolution passed at the first meeting. At the second meeting, the debtor, and a few friendly creditors, attend: the debtor states his inability to pay the proposed composition, and a resolution for liquidation is agreed to; a friendly trustee is appointed, and the debtor's discharge is granted. This practice ought to be prevented, and the prevention might be easily effected. Let the debtor state his offer of composition before the notices of the first meeting are sent to the creditors, and let that offer be communicated to the creditors in the notice of meeting. They will then be able to consider it before the meeting, and will be in a position to finally accept or reject it at the first meeting, and the expense and delay of a second meeting would be obviated. As composition arrangements are on the increase, while the amounts of composition in the pound are rapidly decreasing, it seems most desirable that this method of arrangement should receive serious attention from those interested in securing satisfactory dividends, and I cannot help thinking that the judicious decision of the Lords Justices in re Ratcliffe will prove to be a step in the right direction.

Digitized by Google

Yours truly,
A TRUSTEE.

COURT OF ERROR IN THE EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

June 18.

(Sittings in Error from the Court of Queen's Bench, before Lord Coleridge, Mr. Justice Brett, Baron Cleasby, Mr. Justice Grove, Baron Pollock, and Baron Amphlett.)

Simpson v. Heming.—This case raised an important question of mercantile law—whether, if the joint creditors of a partnership agree to take a composition, a creditor of the joint and separate estate who has dissented can sue one of his debtors. The Court of Queen's Bench had held that he can, and the majority of this Court, it will be seen, have also so held, though the Lord Chief Baron dissented. The case arose thus:—Two partners had given a joint and several note to secure a partnership debt. The creditors of the firm agreed to take a composition of 8s. in the pound, but the resolution was come to by the joint creditors only, and the holder of the note was not a party to the resolution and had sued one of the partners separately, who set up the composition. The Court of Queen's Bench held that it was no answer, and the defendant appealed. The case was argued before a Court constituted of the Lord Chief Baron, Mr. Justice Brett, Mr. Justice Archibald, Baron Pollock, and Baron Amphlett. The Court had taken time to consider their judgment. Baron Amphlett now delivered the judgment of the majority of the Court—himself, Mr. Justice Brett, Mr. Justice Archibald, and Baron Pollock—in favour of the plaintiff, affirming the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench. It would, he said, be monstrous that a resolution of a statutory majority of the creditors should deprive a dissentient creditor of his right to go against a surety, and a similar principle applied to creditors of partners. It would be just as monstrous to deprive a dissentient creditor of the partnership who was also a separate creditor of his right to go against the separate debtor. The joint estate might, perhaps, only pay a dividend of 1s., while the separate estate might pay 20s. in the pound; and it would be most unjust if a statutory majority of the joint creditors by accepting 1s. in the pound could force the separate creditor to forego his right against the separate estate. It would be hardly possible to conceive greater injustice. In any view the creditor would have a right to elect between the two estates, and if he did not receive 20s. in the pound it would be for the Court of Bankruptcy to determine whether he could claim a dividend for the residue. Baron Pollock read the judgment of the Lord Chief Baron, dissenting from the view of the majority, and holding that the creditor was barred by the composition. It was so, said the Lord Chief Baron, with a composition at Common Law, and in his view there was nothing in the Bankruptcy Act to alter it. The composition was made binding on all the creditors present or absent, if the required majority concurred in accepting it, and that thereupon the debt was gone, and the remedy could not remain. To hold otherwise, he thought, would be to alter and to make the law, not to declare it. He, therefore, was of opinion that the composition was a bar, but, of course, as the majority of the Court thought otherwise, the appeal was dismissed, and judgment in favour of the plaintiff affirmed.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, Lincoln's Inn.

June 22.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir C. Hall.)

Taylor v. Gillott.—This case raised a question of some interest as to the operation of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, in cases where a lessee grants an underlease and subsequently becomes bankrupt. A Mr. John Pask being lessee from the executors of Mr. George Gillott, deceased, of the house No. 36 Strand, for the term of 21 years from Lady-day, 1868, at a rent of £400 per annum, on the 18th of October, 1871, agreed to grant to the plaintiff a lease of the ground floor and part of the basement of the house for the residue of his term at a rent of £200 per annum, and the plaintiff paid Pask a sum of £100 by way of premium for such agreement. The plaintiff then on the 31st of October, 1871, entered into an agreement with Messrs. B. Hembry and Co. (of which firm the plaintiff's son, Mr. A. E. Taylor was a member) to grant them a lease of the same premises for the same term, less seven days, at a rent of £250 per annum, and in pursuance of this agreement Hembry and Co. entered into and had ever since continued in possession of the premises. In the month of March, 1872, Pask was adjudicated bankrupt on the petition of G. Gillott's executors, as creditors for arrears of rent, and on the 24th of May following Pask's trustee in bankruptcy availed himself of the provisions of the 23rd section of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and with the leave of the Court, disclaimed all interest in Pask's lease. By this section it is enacted that when any property of the bankrupt acquired by the trustee under the Act consists of land of any tenure burdened with onerous covenants, the trustee, notwithstanding he has endeavoured to sell or has taken possession of the property, may, by writing, disclaim such property, and after such disclaimer the property disclaimed shall, if a lease, be deemed to have been surrendered on the same date, and shall revert to the person entitled on the determination of the interest of the bankrupt, and any person interested in the disclaimed property may apply to the Court, and the Court may order possession of the property to be given up to him, or may make such other order as to the possession as may be just, and any person injured by the operation of the section shall be deemed a creditor of the bankrupt to the extent of the injury, and may prove for the same as a creditor under the bankruptcy. As the effect of this disclaimer was to put an end to the terms by virtue of which Pask had given the plaintiffs the agreement for a lease under which they held, Gillott's executors, after some fruitless negociations with the plaintiff as to granting him a lease of the premises, brought an action of ejectment against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff then filed his bill in this suit, in order to compel Gillott's executors to grant him a lease in accordance with Pask's agreement, and to restrain the action of ejectment. The plaintiff's case was not only that the Act was not intended prejudicially to affect the equities of third parties, but also that Mr. Gillott's executors had been aware of Pask's agreement with the plaintiff, and had informed his son that Pask was not prohibited by his lease from underletting (although it turned out that he was so prohibited), and that they had moreover so acted by the acceptance of rent from the plaintiff and otherwise, as to take away any right they might otherwise have had to refuse to carry out Pask's agreement with the plaintiff, and, in fact, to bind themselves to perform that agreement in Pask's place and to grant the plaintiff a lease. The defendants, on the other hand, denied that they had represented to the plaintiff's son that Pask was not prohibited from underletting, and maintained that they had only accepted rent from the plaintiff in the character of tenant from year to year. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. Romer were for the plaintiff; Mr. Karslake, Q C., and Mr. Dumerge for the defendant, Gillott's surviving executor. Mr. Dickinson having been heard in reply. The Vice-Chancellor, after stating the facts, said that the effect of the disclaimer by Pask's trustee in bankruptcy, the underlease not having been granted in pursuance of the agreement of the 18th of October, 1871, was a question not without difficulty. But for the purpose of considering the effect of that disclaimer it was necessary to consider, first, what was the conduct of the original lessors, and, secondly, how far the contract for the underlease or the underlease itself harmonized with the contract entered into by the original lessors. It was said that if an original lessee granted an underlease on his own terms of a portion of the property originally demised to him, taking a premium, the effect of the surrender of the original lease was to leave the under tenancy subsisting as against the original lessor, who must be content with accepting whatever rent and covenants the underlessor might have been content to accept. It was unnecessary in the present case to go so far as to determine that abstract question, because the mode in which the case was presented by the plaintiff was that there was, first, an original lease, and secondly, an agreement for an underlease, and he maintained that the underlease should contain the covenants in accordance with the lease. An agreement for a further underlease to Messrs. Hembry and Co. was stated to be one of a similar kind, so that all the leases were to harmonize the one with the other, and if the case had been one of granting an underlease of the entire property, and the covenants had been the same throughout, much might have been said as to the effect of the disclaimer in keeping on foot the underlease when the original lease was gone. But to say that when a lessor who had granted a lease found himself in such a position, by reason of the bankruptcy of the lessee, as to be bound to grant an underlease with the benefit only of such rent and covenants as the underlessor might be content to take from the underlessee, was a very startling doctrine to be asserted. Now, what were the stipulations of the lease and the agreement for the underlease? His Honour then compared the stipulations of the two instruments, pointing out that there was very considerable variance between them, and in particular that the agreement for the underlease contained no provision for re-entry on breach of covenant, as in the lease. He then proceeded:—It was said that the original landlords were bound to grant this lease to the plaintiff, but he could not find anything in the Act of Parliament which could give such an effect to the operation of the disclaimer and surrender. What would have been the effect of the underlease, if actually granted, it was not necessary for him to say; he did not say it would have any different effect, but, in his opinion, it was not intended by the Legislature in such a case that a landlord, who by his original lease had agreed to bargain away his property for a certain term on certain conditions, and reserving to himself a right of re-entry for breach of those conditions, should find himself bound, by no act of his own, to be put in a position entirely different from that in which he had intended to be; he therefore could not apply the section in question as as to give that effect, and it seemed to him it had not that effect. In his judgment such an effect would be so inequitable that he could not give the plaintiff the relief he asked. He must now proceed to say something of the mode in which it was endeavoured to help out the plaintiff's case. It was said that there was an intention on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff should have an underlease; that the plaintiff had received rent from him on the footing that there was an agreement for an under-lease; that the defendant had, in fact, acted on and adopted the agreement, and that he was, therefore, bound specfically to perform it, and must be treated by this court as the party to grant the lease. He was, however, of opinion that the evidence did not come up to that, and, indeed, fell very short of making out any such case as that. With regard to the provision in the original lease against underletting, the evidence satisfied him that the plaintiff had distinct notice that Pask had no power to underlet. As to the payment of rent by the plaintiff, it seemed to him that it was not just to conclude that that rent was ever received by the defendant as for rent payable under this alleged agreement of the 18th of October. The matter was under some obscurity, but this payment of rent he could not regard under the circumstances as having been made under the agreement. He thought the true conclusion was that the agreement was not made known to the lessors in such a manner as to entitle the plaintiff to say that the acts and conduct of the original lessors were such as to give the plaintiff an equity to have the agreement carried into execution by this Court. He therefore considered that the plaintiff's case was not made out, and failed both in law, as to the effect of the Act of Parliament, and because no special case had been made out by the acts of the parties. The plaintiff having accordingly failed to establish his case, the bill must be dismissed with costs.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE.

June 21.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

IN RE PELOTAS COFFEE COMPANY (LIMITED)—KARUTH'S CASE.—This was an application by the official liquidator of the Pelotas Coffee Co. (Limited), to fix a director with qualification shares, although not registered in his name. The company was incorporated in April, 1873, with a capital of £50,000, divided into 10,000 shares of £5 each. The object of the company was to prepare from the "Pelotas berry" and vend to the public "a good, wholesome, aromatic coffee, at a retail price not exceeding 1s. per lb." It did not appear from the prospectus what the "Pelotas berry" was, the monopoly of which, according to the prospectus, had been secured by the company, but it was stated to be a sort of acorn. It was provided by the articles of association that the first directors of the company should be Sir James Randoll Mackenzie, Frank Oscar Karuth, and Julius Liebert; that the qualification of a director should be the holding of not less than 50 shares; and that the office of a director should be vacated if he ceased to hold the prescribed number of shares. Mr. Karuth consented to become a director of the company before its formation, and signed the memorandum and articles of association for 10 shares which he admitted he was liable to take; but he disputed his liability as to the remaining 40 shares, on the ground that such shares had never been applied for or allotted to him prior to the winding-up. It appeared that within three days after the publication of the prospectus in May, 1873, he gave notice in writing to the secretary of his withdrawal from the company, on the alleged ground of gross misrepresentation of the company's nature and objects, and had never acted as a director. Mr. Fischer, Q.C., and Mr. Horton Smith, for the official liquidator, contended that Mr. Karuth, having signed the articles of association, in which he was expressly named a director, must be deemed to have agreed to take the proper number of qualification shares; but the Master of the Rolls, without calling upon Mr. P. B. Abraham, who appeared for the alleged contributory, gave judgment, reviewing the authorities at some length, from the "Marquis of Abercorn's case" downwards, and stated their result to be that the mere acceptance of the office of director does not necessarily bind the person accepting it to take shares in a company, even where the articles of association provide that the holding of a certain number of shares shall be the qualification for the office; but that where a person who has accepted the office afterwards acts as a director, with knowledge that a qualification is required of him, the fact of his so acting will be regarded as an implied agreement on his part to qualify himself within a reasonable time. Here the alleged contributory had not acted as a director, and if he had, he had withdrawn himself, and repudiated the agreement before the reasonable time for acquiring a qualification had expired, and consequently, he was not a contributory, except as to the 10 shares.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

June 19.

(Before the Hon. W. C. Spring-Rice, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Pellatt.—The debtor, a wine merchant, carrying on business in Arthur-street West, under the style of M. M. Pellatt and Co., has filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement. Debts about £5,000; assets of considerable value. Upon the application of Mr. Finlay Knight, for creditors whose claims amounted to £2,000, his Honour appointed Mr. Leslie, accountant, to act as receiver. Mr. Chidley, solicitor, appeared for the debtor.

In re Isidore Leveaux.—The bankrupt, formerly engaged in the wine trade, and described as of 2 Carlton-road, Maida-vale, applied to pass his examination. His liabilities amounted to £13,325, with assets £14. Mr. T. Lumley appeared for the trustee; and Mr. F. Hughes for the petitioning creditor. His Honour allowed the bankrupt to pass.

In re Joseph Nixon.—The debtor is a wholesale hosier carrying on business in Wood-street, and his debts are returned at £15,500, and the assets comprise stock, £4,500; cash, £300; and book debts £4,000. His Honour now appointed Mr. Holah, accountant, to act as receiver under a liquidation petition filed by the debtor, and granted an interim injunction to restrain actions.

Re Jose Smith de Vasconellos.—The debtor had filed his petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition with his creditors, estimating his liabilities at £120,000. He traded as a merchant at Lombard-street, Liverpool, and Brazil. At the first meeting of the creditors, no resolution having been passed, the liquidation fell through, and a few days since an alleged creditor in Paris, claiming £69,000, had filed a petition for adjudication in bankruptcy, which is at present sub judice before Mr. Registrar Roche. Mr. Robertson Griffiths now applied, on behalf of the receiver and manager appointed under the former liquidation proceedings, for the leave of the Court to pay two of his acceptances of £500 each given in respect of a consignment of cotton sent by a house in Rio Janeiro to the debtor in Liverpool. The learned counsel stated that the cotton referred to had been sold by the manager, and it was desirable that the proceeds thereof should be applied to the retirement of the bills given by the consignors for the purchase of the cotton. The bills were made payable at the Bank of England, where the money realised by the sale of the cotton stood to the credit of Mr. Lovering, the receiver and manager appointed by the Court. His Honour stated that as the bankruptcy petition had been partly heard by Mr. Registrar Roche, he preferred that that learned registrar should be applied to upon the subject. The motion must therefore stand over for that purpose.

June 21.

(Before Mr. Registrar Hazlitt, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re W. J. Prosser.—The bankrupt was a wine merchant, carrying on business at 50 Mark-lane, formerly trading in partnership with John Prosser, under the firm of Prosser, Brothers. He now applied to pass his examination. The accounts showed debts amounting to £34,102, of which £28,527 were due to unsecured creditors, with assets consisting of stock in trade, book debts, furniture, and other items £13,142. The bankrupt had filed a petition for liquidation, but at the first meeting the creditors failed to pass any resolution, and an adjudication in this court followed. Mr. Bagley, for the trustee, did not oppose. The bankrupt passed his examination.

June 22.

(Before Mr. Registrar Roche, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re A. Gonzales.—Mr. Rawlins mentioned this case to the court upon an application for the appointment of a receiver and manager. The debtor is a merchant carrying on business in Palmerston-buildings, Old Broad-street. He has filed a petition for liquidation, with debts and liabilities £230,000, assets about £80,000. In support of the application an affidavit was produced, which showed that the business was of a very extensive character, a considerable portion of it consisting in the acceptance of bills of exchange drawn upon the debtor by firms abroad under credits opened in their favour, they being under engagement to remit "in cover," and to provide for the payment of the bills before maturity. Bills of that character amounting to £66,000 were now outstanding, and as remittances were arriving it was necessary that they should be properly applied. Mr. Registrar Roche: Is this one of the recent failures? Mr. Rawlins: Yes; the petition was filed yesterday, and the application is supported by creditors for £65,000. His Honour, being satisfied with the evidence, appointed Mr. Robert Fletcher, accountant, Moorgate-street, receiver and manager.

(Before Mr. Registrar Keene.)

In re C. E. Alforth.—The debtor, who was a timber merchant, of Gracechurch-street, recently failed for £95,000, of which secured creditors claimed £54,356. The available assets were £23,859. Mr. Munns, of the firm of Lewis, Munns, and Longden, now applied to the learned registrar to register a resolution of the creditors to liquidate the estate by arrangement and not in bankruptcy. It appeared that creditors to the amount of £11,000 had not been served, but as they did not effect the majority, and had been served with this application, and did not oppose, the learned registrar allowed the registration to go, but expressed a strong opinion that all the creditors should be served, because, although they did not effect the majority, yet it was quite possible that had they had the opportunity of attending the first meeting, they might have made out a case to induce others not to vote for the resolution; and his Honour stated that it was within his personal knowledge that creditors who had not been served, frequently came to the court, and stated that had they had notice of the meeting they should have attended and opposed the resolution. Registration ordered.

June 23.

(Before Mr Registrar Murray.)

In re P. H. Patterson.—This debtor, who is described as of 49 Redcliffe-terrace, South Kensington, and Newburgh, Fifeshire, Scotland, of no occupation, has petitioned the Court under the liquidation clauses of the Act, estimating his liabilities at £25,000. The property consists of the reversion to large landed estates in Scotland and a bond on which interest was paid, also various articles of personal property. Mr. Finlay Knight, in applying for the appointment of a receiver to the estate, said that bankruptcy proceedings had been commenced, but he believed they had been stayed to allow of the present application being made. His Honour said that, so far as he could see, no reason for the appointment was shown on the affidavit, and he must refuse the application. If it should be renewed at any time, notice must be given to the petitioner before making it.

False Prospectus Case in Scotland.—A decision was given on Wednesday in the Court of Session in an action brought by Mr. Richard Gibbs against the British Linen Banking Company for £2,500, the price of 250 shares in the Phospho-Guano Company, of which Messrs. Lawson, of Edinburgh, are managers, on the ground that the prospectus contained false and fraudulent statements. Lord Shand found that falsehood on Messrs. Lawson's part had been proved, and assoilzied the defenders with expenses. Altogether £100,000 in claims depend on this action.

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. GIFFARD, Judge.)

RE HANSON, PICKLES AND CO.—This was a case (partly reported in last week's Accountant) adjourned from the previous court day in order to enable the respondents to produce further evidence. Mr. West, barrister, of Leeds, instructed by Mr. Rhodes, appeared in support of a motion by Messrs. C. T. Rhodes and J. I. Learoyd, who are trustees under the above bankruptcy, to restrain Mr. Thomas Fleming, card maker, and owner of West Grove Mill, and Mr. William Holdsworth, auctioneer, who acted as Mr. Fleming's agent, from proceeding to sell certain property belonging to the estate of the bankrupts which the respondents had distrained. Mr. Jubb opposed the motion. John Jagger, one of the bankrupts, said he had an interview with Francis Fleming with respect to the terms upon which the room was to be let. There were 17 frames in all; they generally reckoned 96 spindles to one frame, and the amount of rent was based upon the number of spindles; some frames had 120 spindles. In answer to the judge, the witness said no arrangement was made as to the exact number of spindles they were to have in the room. They had paid for rent at various times the sum of £14, £17 10s., and £21 10s. per frame; the same being payable half-yearly. In answer to Mr. Jubb, witness said they paid in proportion to the increase or decrease of the number of spindles. Thomas Hanson said they took the premises half-yearly, and had never paid the rent quarterly, and upon this, it may be observed, hinged the whole case. In cross-examination Hanson said it was always understood that the rent should be paid in accordance with the number of spindles. When the final bargain was made Mr. Fleming, his son Francis, Jagger, and the engine man were present. Francis Fleming deposed that he called at the office of Mr. C. T. Rhodes; he could not swear as to the exact day. He had some conversation with him with reference to his father's claim for rent. He never said to him that it was agreed to pay the rent half-yearly. It appeared from Mr. Rhodes's statement that on the 1st of May, Mr. Fleming left at his office an account of his claim against the bankrupts' estate. In consequence of that Mr. Rhodes wrote to Mr. Fleming to the effect that he was in receipt of his claims for £106 16s. 7d. for three months' rent, rates, and extra coals, due to him from the estate, adding that his co-trustee was then on the continent, and on his return Mr. Fleming's claim should receive prompt attention. In the mean time it would facilitate matters very much if he would kindly furnish him with full and detailed particulars, as to the amount due for rent proper, the amount due for power, rates, &c. also his view of the terms of tenancy. Shortly afterwards Mr. Fleming called again at Mr. C. T. Rhodes' office, and declined to furnish a detailed account of his claim as required. Mr. West contended that it was a six months' agreement, and it was a rate issuing out of the furnishing of room and power. In summing up, his Honour said he could not regard the evidence as satisfactory on either side. They had the distinct oath of two of the partners that the rent was payable half-yearly. Helliwell said the plaintiff offered to allow the rent to stand over for another quarter; looking at it from that statement alone, one would certainly infer that the rent was paid quarterly, but he should not rest the question entirely upon that. Mr. C. T. Rhodes said that Francis Fleming distinctly stated that the original agreement was that the rent should be paid half-yearly; but that in consequence of some previous annoyance he had had with a former tenant (Kershaw), who it appeared was a half-yearly tenant, an alteration had been made as to the payment of rent. He regarded Mr. Rhodes as a disinterested party in the affair, and he felt bound to accept his statement, as if this conversation had not taken place (part of which Fleming admited), how came Mr. Rhodes to know any thing about the trouble Fleming had had with Kershaw. He thought the rent was no definitely fixed sum, but rather an amount to be fixed by certain calculations, and, of course, it would be easier to ascertain what the rent was for two or three months than for a longer period. It appeared upon the whole case that the balance of the evidence was in favour of the trustees, and that the rent would not be due until next August. The order allowed as prayed for. Costs of both parties to be paid out of the estate.

BRADFORD BANKRUPTCY COURT.

June 22,

(Before Mr. W. T. S. DANIEL, Q.C., Judge.)

EX PARTE BRADFORD OLD BANK RE LISTER GREENHOUGH.—His Honour gave judgment in this case, which had been argued at a previous sitting of the court, when Mr. Tindal Atkinson (instructed by Messrs. Taylor, Jeffery and Little), was for the bank, and Mr. Watson for the trustess. His Honour said: This is an application made on behalf of the Bradford Old Bank, Limited, in the matter of proceedings for liquidation of the affairs of Lister Greenhough, of Dudley Hill, Bradford, wool-top maker, for an order declaring the amount for which the bank are entitled to prove against the estate of the debtor. The petition for liquidation was filed on the 29th April, 1874, and on the 23rd June the bank tendered a proof against Greenhough's estate for £2,487 11s. 7d. This proof the trustee admitted to the extent of £1,016 18s. 1d., but rejected to the extent of £1,470 13s. 6d., insisting that the bank ought to have deducted from their claim two sums of £120 and £350 13s. 6d., together £470 13s. 6d., and that as to a sum of £1,000 the bank are not entitled to any proof in respect thereof. The facts out of which the questions arise have been agreed, by the bank and the trustee and a statement of the facts so agreed is on the file of proceedings. It appears that at the time of filing the petition for liquidation the bank held five bills of exchange, of which Foster and Hinings were drawers, amounting together to £3,560 12s. 6d. Foster and Hinings were customers of the bank, and all these bills had been discounted by the bank for Foster and Hinings, and all were duly presented and dishonoured at maturity, and all were then in the hands of the bank. Of these bill two were acceptances of the debtor Greenhough for £786 2s. and £648 16s. respectively, together £1,434 18s. Two others of the bills were acceptances of Daniel Hainsworth for £831 12s. and £571 18s. respectively—together £1,403 10s. The fifth bill was an acceptance of Benjamin Waite for £722 4s. 6d., the whole of the five bills amounting together to £3,560 12s. 6d. Besides these five bills the bank also held another bill for £295 11s., drawn by Thomas Schofield upon and accepted by the debtor Greenhough, which the bank had discounted for Schofield, and which was also duly presented and dishonoured at maturity, and of which the bank were then the holders. The affairs of Foster and Hinings and Daniel Hainsworth, as well as Lister Greenhough, are all under liquidation in this court. On the 31st March, 1874, the two bills—one for £786 2s. accepted by Greenhough, the other for £831 12s. accepted by Hainsworth—having become due and been dishonoured, Messrs. Foster and Hinings paid to the bank the sum of £120 generally on account and the bank did not specifically appropriate it to either acceptance. On the 2nd of April, 1874, the bank issued a writ against Foster and Hinings endorsed to recover £1,619 11s. 6d., principal and interest due to them on the two bills for £786 2s. and £831 12s. On the 14th of April, 1874, the bank issued another writ against Foster and Hinings endorsed to recover £1221 8s 10d., principal and interest on the two bills for £571 18s. and £648 16s., both of which had now become due and were dishonoured in the hands of the bank. And the same 14th of April the bank issued a writ against Lister Greenhough endorsed to recover the sum of £1,437 10s. 3d., the amount of his said two acceptances for £786 2s. and £648 16s. On the 17th April, 1874, Messrs. Foster and Hinings, being pressed by the bank for furthur security, deposited with them a bill of exchange for £350 13s. 6d., drawn by them upon and accepted by Isaac Tempest and Co., dated 16th April and due 19th July, 1874, accompanied by a memorandum in writing, signed by Foster and Hinings, that the said bill was to be held by the bank as a collateral security against all or any of the bills of exchange held by the bank, and bearing Foster and Hining's endorseemnt. This bill was paid by the acceptors at maturity, and the amount received by the bank generally, and without any specific appropriation towards any of the bills in their hands. This last payment was made after proof tendered by the bank to the trustee. The bank continued their pressure upon Foster and Hinings, and in order to stay execution on judgment in the actions against them they, on the 21st April, deposited with the bank a bill, dated 21st April, for £1000 drawn by them upon and accepted by the debtor Greenhough at three months, and also another bill for £800, dated the same 21st April, drawn by them upon and accepted by Hainsworth, payable four months after date, and in depositing the bills Foster and Hinings informed the bank that these bills were for goods supplied. That statement has since been ascertained to be untrue; the bills were in fact accommodation bills. The bank also continued their pressure upon the debtor Lister Greenhough, and on the 24th April he paid to the bank £250 on account generally, and without any specific direction as to the application of it. The bank in their proof, as presented to the trustee, gave credit for this payment of £250, but not for any other sum. Upon the hearing before me the counsel for the bank admitted that credit must also be given for the sums of £120 and £350 13s. 6d., but suggested that the credit should be apportioned between the two acceptances of Greenhough, amounting to £1,434 18s., and the two acceptances of Hainsworth, amounting to £1,403 10s., and this suggestion was assented to by Mr. Watson on behalf of the trustee. I think, however, upon the same principal that the acceptance of Waite for £722 4s. 6d., of which Foster and Hinings are the drawers also, should, if the bank desire it, have its proper apportionment of the two sums of £120 and £350 13s. 6d. Those sums will, therefore, be apportioned rateably between the sums of £1434 18s., £1403 10s., and £722 4s. 6d. or only between the two former sums, at the option of the bank, and the sum to be thus apportioned in respect of the £1434 18s. will be deducted from the proof. The question then remains as to the acceptance for £1,000 deposited with the bank by Foster and Hinings on the 21st April. The trustee contends that the bank are not entitled to any proof in respect of it. But no reason is stated, nor any authority cited, for such contention, and I am unable to find either reason or authority for it. The acceptance was deposited as a collateral security for the debt then due from Foster and Hinings to the bank, which amounted to £3560 12s. 6d.; and to deny the bank the right of proof upon this bill, as the acceptor has become bankrupt, would be to deprive the bank of all benefit of their security, as such proof is now the only mode in which the security can be made available. It was then contended on behalf of the trustee that the proof must be limited to the amount of the balance actually due on Greenhough's acceptances for £786 2s., £648 16s., and £295 11s., giving credit for the £470 13s. 6d. and the £250, leaving the whole of the £470 13s. 6d. as applicable exclusively to Greenhough's acceptances. It was admitted that this exclusive application could not be maintained against the will of the bank, and that the £470 13s. 6d. should be apportioned between Greenhough's acceptances and Hainsworth's acceptances, and this apportionment should also, I think, be extended to and include Waite's acceptance for £722 4s. 6d. if the bank desire it. But I think it is erroneous to limit the proof to the balance due on the three acceptances of Greenhough's, whatever that balance may be. The acceptance for £1,000 was a collateral security for the whole debt of Foster and Hinings, and not merely that portion of it which consisted of Greenhough's dishonoured acceptances; and the proof will therefore be upon the £1,000, but so regulated that the bank do not by means of their proofs against Greenhough's estate, Hainsworth's estate, and Foster and Hining's estate, and any sum they may recover from Waite in respect of his dishonoured acceptance for £722 4s. 6d., receive more than 20s. in the pound on their debt against Foster and Hinings. The proof by the bank will therefore be reduced by the proper apportionment of the sum of £470 13s. 6d. in the measure before directed. The bank will bear their own costs of this application, and the trustee will take his costs out of the estate.

LEEDS COUNTY COURT.

June 21.

(Before Mr. Serjeant TINDAL ATKINSON.)

THE RIGHTS OF SOLICITORS IN THE COUNTY COURT.—Mr. Ferns drew the attention of the judge to a paragraph in a legal paper, which stated that Mr. Fisher, judge of the Bristol County Court, had come to the conclusion that he could not in future allow cases to be conducted by agents other than certified solicitors, and that all railway and other incorporated companies must appear by solicitors. His Honour replied that that was the rule in his district, and he introduced the same into the Halifax district. Mr. Ferns said what he more especially wished to call attention to was that a firm of accountants, calling themselves Beswick and Co., conducted a large amount of business in this court. He had not an opportunity of being present on Friday when a case in which he was defending was brought before the court, but he received from them a legal document, which was headed, "From Beswick and Co., accountants, Manchester, Leeds," &c., and which ran as follows:—

In the County Court of Yorkshire holden at Leeds.—Plaint No. C. 5518, between William Beecroft, plaintiff, and William Winkworth, defendant.—Take notice that we have withdrawn the above case from court. Pro BESWICK & Co, Plaintiff's Agents, Leeds.

He submitted that that ought not to be tolerated in this court or in any other. His Honour asked if it was not a matter which should be brought before the Law Society rather than before him. The Registrar (Mr. T. Marshall) remarked that he would yield to no one in wishing to preserve intact the prerogatives of the profession, but he was bound to say that it would be quite impossible to satisfactorily conduct the business of the court if in regard to cases taken by him as registrar, and which were undefended, a rule were to be laid down that agents were not to appear. The cases heard before the registrar were in the great majority of instances for small sums, in which it would be quite impossible for the parties to bear the expense of having professional assistance. Those cases were put by tradesmen into the hands of agents—Messrs. Beswick and Co. and others—who appeared with a long list of cases, and they adduced proof where there was not an admission, brought the persons who had sold the goods, and so on, They were permitted to that extent to conduct cases; and it would be quite impossible, as he had said, to satisfactorily conduct business if any rule were to be laid down that that practice was not to be permitted, because, although the agents might not know so much as solicitors, they knew a great deal more than tradesmen and others primarily concerned, and moreover they did not at all interfere with cases where solicitors ought to be consulted. Mr. Ferns said he did not refer to the class of cases to which the Registrar had alluded. His Honour would understand that his application was against people who took upon themselves the duties of solicitors. His Honour observed that in all cases which came before him in the shape of defended causes, where parties were brought face to face, and he had to decide on the merits, he permitted no agent to interfere in any shape or way. Parties must either conduct their own cases or have the advantage of the ability, skill, and experience of a solicitor. That was his rule, and would continue to be so; but in all those cases taken by the learned registrar, the debt collector served a useful office, so long as he did not interfere with the graver duties of a solicitor. Mr. Ferns said there were graver duties interfered with by people of that class than he was at liberty to mention, but what he complained of was that these parties knew that the defendant had filed the usual defence in matters of that sort through him, and that instead of referring the plaintiff to an attorney they took upon themselves to draw up and file notices of discontinuance in this court. His Honour further remarked that it was a case not for him, but for the Law Society. The Registrar observed that in the great majority of cases the plaintiff himself could do that without consultation with an attorney. His Honour assured Mr. Ferns that whilst he sat on the bench he would watch jealously that no agent should take upon himself in the practice of the court the office of attorney. If he found any agent doing so he would then avail himself of the powers he had. He did not think, however, that any trouble would arise; but still Mr. Ferns had done quite right in calling attention to the matter. Mr. Ferns said he did not object to agents acting as debt collectors, but if they went beyond that they were infringing on the rights and privileges of solicitors. The subject then dropped.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

June 22.

(Before the Hon. Judge Miller.)

In Re John M'Elroy.—The bankrupt was a grocer in Enniskillen. The meeting was for final examination. Thomas Breen, auctioneer, and George Breen, his clerk, were examined as to the sale of the bankrupt's goods. Judge Miller said the sale of the bankrupt's property had been a scandalous affair. The scandal resulted from the trade assignee's intermeddling with the proper duty of the official assignee. The trade assignee appeared to have employed an auctioneer who was under the influence of drink, and who protracted the sale of £140 worth of goods for 14 days. This all arose through the interference of a man of influence in Belfast. The auctioneer must lodge the proceeds of the sale with the official assignee before he was allowed any fees. The case was then adjourned.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointments of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Vice-Chancellor Hall has appointed Mr. James, of James and Edwards, provisional official liquidator of the Indestructible Paint Company, Limited.

Winding-up.—Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of Acklom's Refrigerating Waggon Company, Limited; the Borough of Hackney Newspaper Company, Limited; and the Dartmoor Granite Company, Limited.—A petition for the winding-up of the Indestructible Paint Company, Limited, is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Hall on the 2nd prox.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

H. Merrell (Keighley).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Hartley Merrell, worsted spinner and stuff manufacturer, of Spring Head Mill, near Keighley, was held on Monday at the office of Messrs. Wood and Killick, solicitors, Bradford. A statement of the debtor's produced by Messrs. Blackburn, public accountants, Bradford, showed the liabilities £17,795 3s. 5d., and the assets £12,241 15s. 9d. A composition of 12s. in the pound, in three equal instalments of 4s., payable in three, six, and nine months, the last being guaranteed, was offered and accepted by the meeting, and Mr. John Blackburn was appointed the trustee to see this arrangement carried out.

Mason, Eadie, & Co. (Glasgow).—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Mason, Eadie, and Co, power-loom woollen manufacturers, held at Glasgow, the liabilities were stated at £37,738, and assets at £13,407. A composition of 6s. in the pound was offered, but a committee of investigation was appointed.

E. O. Child (Huddersfield).—A meeting of creditors was held herein at the offices of Messrs. John Sykes and Son, solicitors, Huddersfield, on Saturday the 19th inst. Liquidation was resolved upon, Mr. W. Schofield, accountant, being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

J. Turner (Sowerby Bridge).—The first general meeting of creditors in this matter was held on Monday last. An offer of 12s. in the pound was accepted, payable at 4, 7, and 10 months, Mr. S. J. Beswick, of the firm of Beswick & Co., being appointed trustee.

A. E. Westbeach (London).—The creditors of A. E. Westbeach, of Fenchurch-street (who recently suspended payment), have resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and have appointed Mr. Robert A. McLean (R. A. McLean and Co.) to be trustee, with a committee of inspection. The liabilities are £112,000, of which £34,000 are expected to rank against the estate. The assets are £27,000, consisting chiefly of estimated reversions from consignments from India, China, and Australia. Messrs. Lawrence, Plews and Co., are solicitors in the matter.

J. P. Robertson & Co.—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. J. P. Robertson and Co., yarn agents, was held on Tuesday. The statement submitted showed the liabilities to be £18,801 11s. 11d.; assets, £2,820 5s. 4d.; showing 3s. in the pound, exclusive of expenses.

E. Corry.—At a meeting on Thursday of the creditors of Mr. Edward Corry, in the metal trade, who stopped payment on the 4th inst., the balance sheet prepared by Messrs. Quilter, Ball, and Co., showed liabilities amounting to £172,770, including acceptances for the Aberdare Iron Company for £154,709. Pending a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Fothergill, Hankey and Co., it was resolved to adjourn till the 5th of August.

C. Page (London).—In the matter of Charles Page, on the 22nd inst, a meeting was held at the Bankruptcy Court, Basinghall-street, for the appointment of trustee. Mr. W. L. C. Browne, of the firm of Browne, Stanley and Co., was appointed to act with the committee of inspection. The statement of affairs filed under the liquidation proceedings, which fell through, disclosed total debts £2,196 17s. 9d., against total assets £567 8s.

E. Carnie (London).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Charles Carnie, 25 New Broad-street, merchant, was held on Thursday. The debtor had, it appeared, accepted bills amounting to about £56,500 for Alexander Collie and Co., and the assets and liabilities outside these acceptances represented only a few hundred pounds. The meeting was adjourned.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The suspension was announced on Friday of Messrs. N. Alexander, Son, and Co., 23 Great Winchester-street. The firm is of long standing, and well-known in the East India trade. The estimated liabilities are about £300,000. The books are in the hands of Messrs. J. Waddell and Co., of Mansion House-chambers, 11 Queen Victoria-street.—The failure is announced of the Medlock Smallware Company, Brook-street Mills, Manchester, consequent on that of Messrs. J. P. Westhead and Co., Manchester.—The bills have been returned of Mr. Lewis Stewart, East India agent, of St. Mary Axe, whose liabilities amount to about £100,000, including acceptances for Collie and Co. for £60,000.—The suspension is announced of Messrs. J. H. Rudall and Sons, merchants, of King William-street, with liabilities amounting to about £180,000, a large portion of which, however, is secured. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. J. Waddell and Co., accountants.—Messrs. S. and J. Graham, of Wood-street, have suspended payment. The books of the firm have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Chatteris, Nichols, and Chatteris, of Gresham-buildings, Basinghall-street. The liabilities are not serious.—In Birmingham the suspension was announced on the 18th, of a firm of jewellers and merchants, Messrs. Gompers and Marcoso, with liabilities amounting to about £20,000.—Messrs. Mather and Lee, oil and colour merchants, &c., have suspended payment. Liabilities nearly £3,000, and assets £1,000.—Messrs. Tolley and Jones, colliery proprietors, Old Bury, have filed a petition for liquidation. Their liabilities are estimated at £9,000.—At the Manchester county court, on Tuesday, an adjudication in bankruptcy was made against Mr. William Marshall, merchant and commission agent, of Brown-street, in that city. It is estimated that the liabilities will amount to nearly £100,000. Messrs. Wm. Shaw, Son and Co., woollen merchants, Huddersfield, have filed a petition in the Huddersfield County Court for the liquidation of their affairs by arrangement, and their liabilities are estimated at £30,000. The debtors' solicitor is Mr. Charles Mills, and Mr. W. Schofield, accountant. The first meeting of creditors is fixed for the 8th of July.—The failure is reported of Messrs. William Chard and Co., provision merchants, of Bristol, with liabilities for £22,000.

SCOTLAND.—Messrs. Smith and Buchanan, corn factors, 57 Oswald-street, Glasgow, have suspended payment.—The old-established firm of James Muirhead and Sons, jewellers, 90 Buchanan-street, Glasgow, have been unable to meet their engagements. The liabilities of the Messrs. Muirhead are said to amount to about £40,000.—The suspension is announced of Messrs. J. and A. Simpson, yarn and commission merchants, 49 Hutchinson-street, Glasgow. In a circular addressed to their creditors, the firm attribute their failure to several recent and heavy losses. The books are with Mr. John Wight, C.A., Glasgow.

AMERICA.—New York papers announce the suspension for the second time of Messrs. Turner Brothers, bankers, of that city. Previous to and just succeeding the panic of September, 1873, the firm had made large advances to Western railroad enterprises, which were afteward crippled, dragging down the banking-house. An extension was secured, however, and the firm had already paid 40 per cent. to its creditors up to the time of its second suspension. The general dulness throughout the country has prevented Messrs. Turner Brothers from realising on their assets except at a ruinous sacrifice. American advices report the suspension of the old-established and highly respected leather house of Messrs. O. L. Richardson and Sons, of Quebec, who are said to owe a quarter of a million, and to have offerd 50 per cent. by way of compromise. The failure of the well-known firm of Messrs. Strang and Holland Brothers, wool dealers, 142 Duane-street, had also transpired. Rumours were also afloat when the mail left of a woollen concern being in difficulties, as also that of a Providence wool house, but nothing definite had been declared.

According to the latest advices from Japan the depression of trade there has increased, and the authorities of the Deutsche bank have found it expedient to close their different establishments and retire from the country.

CREDITORS' POWER TO ADJOURN MEETINGS.

A correspondent of a legal contemporary says :—

"In Ex Parte Till, Re Ratcliffe, the Lords Justices on appeal have reversed the decision of the Chief Judge as to the power of creditors at a meeting in liquidation or composition to adjourn. It has been considered very generally that, as in bankruptcy (sect. 16, sub-sect. 7) it was competent for a majority in value of the creditors present to pass an ordinary resolution, and it was thought that Rule 93 pointed to the like conclusion, for by it less than a competent number for other matters may yet pass a resolution for adjournment, and I apprehend that it was less than a number competent to carry the debtor's proposition in Re Till that carried the resolution for adjournment. But the Lords Justices have decided that when the debtor's proposition has once been put and negatived the meeting is at an end; so that if a meeting reject a proposition, and that rejection arose from their dissatisfaction with the debtor's statement or his replies to their questions, the creditors are now precluded from adjourning the meeting, although they may desire it in order to test the accuracy or bona fides of the debtor. It is of course desirable to prevent fictitious creditors wearying bona fide creditors by numerous adjournments, but the power to do so may best be used by an application to the court to expunge the proofs of such fictitious creditors. Indeed, does it not resolve itself into this, for, assuming the adjournment be carried by the debtor's solicitor, and that his motive be simply to obtain further proxies, to take away the power of adjournment is only to narrow the creditor's rights without protecting them from the annoyance of repeated meetings, or prevent the accession and use of proxies? On an application to the court, after the present decision, a new first meeting would doubtless be directed to be held, or, if refused, a fresh petition would be filed and then—what? Why the creditors, the malcontents among the rest, are drawn from their businesses to attend the new meeting (or virtual adjournment) and to find that, instead of the former offer of, say 5s. in the pound, the extra expense of the new proceedings makes only 3s. 4d. possible, which the additional proxies enable the debtor's solicitor to carry at the creditor's expense."

Mr. Philip Triggs announces that the partnership hitherto existing under the firm of Hancock, Triggs & Co., public accountants, Bristol, having been dissolved by mutual consent, he purposes to carry on the business at 39 Broad Street, Bristol.

AUDIT OF ARMY AND NAVY ACCOUNTS.—In the House of Commons on Monday, in reply to Mr. J. Holms, Mr. W. H. Smith said,—The committee to which the hon. member for Hackney refers was appointed under the superintendence of the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, and made some progress in its inquiries. Various circumstances, however, occurred to delay it, and no report has been presented. I have had the subject under consideration, and I trust that I shall be able to suggest a satisfactory solution of the question. For that purpose I propose at my earliest leisure to resume and complete the inquiry; and the report which we shall present will, of course, be communicated to the Departments concerned and submitted to Parliament.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £530, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

TRANSLATIONS.
MR. ALFRED W. GEE,
62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,
Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

JULY 3, 1875.

We presume that those gentlemen who lately took up with so much fervour the reform of the "unreasonable charges which so materially depreciate the value of estates," and put forward a scale applicable to all cases difficult or simple, smooth or complicated, would hardly wish to include the payment of law costs out of the estate among the sums which the trustee is to pay out of the remuneration which he receives; otherwise his position will be less worth accepting than it at present is, if all judges consider that "costs out of the estate" is to be the general order on any question which a creditor may think to raise. And in the case of Hanson, Pickles & Co., which we reported last week, we cannot help thinking that the judge showed undue leniency to the creditor, in not fixing him with the payment of, at any rate, his own costs. Probably he considered that as the point raised was one of some novelty, it might be considered as a representative case, and he may also have been influenced by circumstances not fully reported. But we refer to this merely to show that there may be occasions on which a very heavy expense to the estate is caused by circumstances which no trustee can control. Here a creditor makes an unfounded claim, so the judge held; the trustee is bound, in the interest of the general body of creditors, to resist it, and the result is that the estate, though the trustee is victorious, is saddled with heavy costs.

Digitized by Google

The point which was raised is curious, and the Act seems to bear a little heavily on the landlord. If rent is due, the landlord may distrain, and pay himself the full value of his claim up to one year's rent, proving as an ordinary creditor for any excess. But if the rent is not actually due at the time, the creditor must prove for a proportionate part up to the day of adjudication, and the trustee can then exercise his discretion whether he will disclaim the lease, or treat it as a valuable asset, in which latter event the rent is paid in full. It was on this 34th section that the argument in Hanson's case turned. If the rent was payable in the ordinary manner, on the quarter-day, the distraint was perfectly correct; if, on the other hand, the rent was only payable half-yearly, no rent was actually due, and the distraint was illegal. It may be noticed, that the 34th section is rather ambiguously worded. It says simply that "a landlord, or other person to whom any rent is due from the bankrupt, may at any time, either before or after the commencement of the bankruptcy, distrain, &c.," which might almost imply that he might distrain if the rent fell due after the bankruptcy, provided that his distraint was in other respects formal. This section must, however, be interpreted by the light of the 11th section, which defines the date of the commencement of bankruptcy, and of course of the adhesion of the term bankrupt. It seems rather hard on a landlord, that if bankruptcy takes place on the Boxing day, he may obtain the payment of his claim in full by distraint; but is reduced to the rank of an ordinary creditor, if the adjudication has been made on Christmas Eve; and it might be as well to provide that the rent which has accrued during the current quarter up to the date of adjudication shall rank as a preferential claim with those enumerated in the 32nd section. It seems however, clear on the wording of the Act, that at present the date of adjudication has an essential bearing on the amount which the landlord is entitled to receive, and we think that more justice would be done by the adoption of our suggestion; otherwise landlords may be like the working men of whom Lord Robert Montagu gave so touching a description the other day, and adopt the system of "minute contracts," a plan which would rather derange the secure relations of landlord and tenant.

The letter of our correspondents I and B, raises a somewhat curious question of practice, which, in our present number at least, we can only answer tentatively. A bankrupt has absconded, leaving an estate which, on realisation, will yield a large surplus. The wife has applied for an allowance, and a gift of certain furniture, which the trustees are advised they have no right to make except to the debtor himself. We do not quite gather whether the "usual allowance to a debtor of £20 for wearing apparel and bedding" is included under the head of "allowance," but if so, we think on this point our correspondents have scarcely been correctly advised. The Act says nothing whatever about an allowance of £20 for wearing apparel. The section which bears on this point is the 15th, which defines the property of the bankrupt which will vest in the trustee, and exempts from such operation (subsection 2) "the tools (if any) of his trade, and the necessary wearing apparel and bedding of himself, his wife, and children, to a value, inclusive of tools and apparel and bedding, not exceeding twenty pounds in the whole." The trustee will therefore not only be justified in letting the wife have twenty pounds' worth of clothes and bedding, but is actually bound to leave such an amount in her possession; and should at once restore it if he has, under any misconception, removed it. The second point, as regards an allowance being made to the wife, may also be solved in a fair manner. In the first place, as the chief duty of the trustee is to declare as large a dividend as he possibly can; and as his powers of sale and realisation are as extensive as can well be,—he may, we take it, deal with the bankrupt's estate as he thinks best. He may sell such portions of it as he chooses, and leave untouched any other portions; and so long as he declares a dividend of twenty shillings in the pound, no exception can be taken to his proceedings. Under such circumstances, he is merely taking the place of the debtor. It is the duty of a man to pay his debts; and for that purpose, he will naturally realise such parts of his personal estate as can be best spared. If, instead of doing this, he chooses to run away, and have this task performed for him by a trustee in bankruptcy, he cannot complain of the trustee for doing it. On these grounds, we think that the trustee would be perfectly justified in handing over the furniture to the wife, if he has enough to pay all debts and expenses without it, arising from the sale of other portions of the estate. As regards an allowance of money, the 88th section provides that the trustee, after the necessary formalities, may make an allowance to the bankrupt for "the support of the bankrupt and his family;" and it would probably be considered that an allowance to the wife would be deemed to be an allowance to the bankrupt, so as to form a complete answer to any claim the bankrupt might make on his return. Otherwise, the wife might pledge her husband's credit to procure necessaries, and those creditors would then make their claim against the fund in the hands of the trustee, or take proceedings in bankruptcy in their turn. In the present instance, if creditors and trustee are both willing, we see no very great difficulty. The first point is quite clear; the second may be solved by the joint efforts of the trustee and committee of inspection; and the third may be submitted to the opinion of the Court. We are inclined to think that the result would be more favourable than our correspondents anticipate.

We are sorry to see by the letter of our correspondent N. that the Chancellor of the Exchequer has in a moment of weakness struck out of the "Friendly Societies Act" the provision as to publishing the names and addresses of auditors in the board-room of a society. Surely, if an audit is to be really efficacious, it must be conducted by competent men; and the reason of the publication of the names was obviously to ensure that fitting men, and those who would give satisfaction to the society, should be chosen, and that the power of members to object to the nomination would act as a useful check on the directors. At present, there is no hindrance to the appointment of any one; and in some of the shaky societies the usual results will follow, which are so familiar to every accountant. We are not referring, we may as well say, to societies which are managed in a fraudulent manner, and whose officers would naturally select an auditor whom they could easily hoodwink. But, as we have over and over again insisted, the auditor is the physician who certifies to the general health, or points out boldly the signs of disease. The result of the Act will be, that some local magnate will be appointed auditor—a good easy man, anxious to make every thing pleasant, and afraid of appearing to doubt the honour of his electors if he examines too closely into things. Auditing ought to be the vigorous shock which braces up the nerves, which corrects defects, and sets things going again. If there has been carelessness or remissness, which in their way are well-nigh as dangerous as fraud, rigid auditing is the finest of correctives. We again commend this point to the consideration of the House of Lords.

The Lords Justices have followed the example set by Vice-Chancellor Malins in the Emma Mine case, and referred the question as to what course should be taken in the winding-up of the City and County Bank to a general meeting of shareholders, thus overruling the order of Vice-Chancellor Bacon in the Court below. The objections to the order were very characteristic of our judicial system. First, it was said that the petitioner ought to have stated in his petition that he had held his shares for six months, otherwise he was guilty of the sin of insufficient allegation, and had no locus standi. Next, an advertisement in the Telegraph of the petition termed the company, "The City and County Banking Company," instead of "the City and County Bank," a circumstance which greatly shocked Lord Justice James, who, differing from the well-known doctrine of Romeo, held that no line could be drawn, and that where a public company had a registered name, that name must always be used. Lastly, the petition ought to have been heard on the 29th of May; as the Courts always loyally keep holiday on the Queen's birthday, the Vice-Chancellor had heard the petition on the day previous. The first and last objections were, however, both set aside, and their Lordships reversed the Vice-Chancellor's decision on the merits. They thought the proposed arrangement, by which Messrs. Brown, Jansen and Co. took over the business, a very good and economical one; and provided the shareholders approved of it, and did not exhibit a preference for ruin by being compulsorily wound-up, they would sanction it. Thus the interests of technical law and human finances are alike considered.

FRAUDS ON A BUILDING SOCIETY.—On Monday Thomas Isham Rose, late secretary of the Warwick Building Society, was brought up on a habeas corpus from Warwick Gaol, where he awaits trial for a similar offence, charged with embezzling three sums belonging to the society amounting to nearly £200. The prisoner entered correct sums in the depositors' books, but only half the amount, in the treasurer's accounts, and he kept duplicate books to deceive the auditors. He was committed for trial at Warwick Assizes on each case. The total defalcations are stated at about £600.

At a special meeting of the shareholders in Messrs. John Bagnall and Son's Company, held at Birmingham a committee was authorised to take legal proceedings for the recovery of £85,000 paid as promotion money on the establishment of the concern.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR.—A singular point in reference to the present Bankruptcy Law has arisen in a case in which we are concerned. A debtor absconded and an adjudication in bankruptcy followed, one of our firm being appointed trustee. The estate is equal to 20s. in the pound, with an estimated overplus about £400 to £500 in excess of all claims and expenses. The debtor's wife and five children have applied for an allowance and gift of sundry furniture, including the usual allowance to a debtor of £20 for wearing apparel and bedding. The trustee is advised that he has no power to make such an allowance, other than to the debtor himself, nor to give the debtor's wife any of the furniture. An application to the court for the same purpose would probably be met with a negative, on the ground that the registrar trustee will (after the close of the bankruptcy and release of the present trustee) possess the trust for the debtor only. We do not require to know the power of creditors to voluntarily subscribe a sum of money. The trustee and creditors would like that some provision or allowance be made to the wife and children out of the estate.

Can any of your readers suggest a legal remedy?

We are, Sir, your obedient servants,

I. & B.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—In the valuable leader contained in your last week's issue on the subject of the audit of Friendly Societies, you have fallen into a slight, but excusable error, in stating that the names and addresses are to be posted for three months in the Board Room of the Society; this provision, simple as it may appear, was, as you will observe by a perusal of the previous Tuesday's debate, upon the representation of the Officers of the two largest friendly societies, "that it would most seriously interfere with the workings of their organisation, without at the same time producing any beneficial results," struck out of the bill by the Chancellor of the Exchequer; but how such a simple arrangement could in any way act as represented, I confess I am at a loss to conceive. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, wisely I think, for his own credit, did not attempt to explain the mode in which it could work so improbable and unlikely a result.

Your obedient servant,

N.

June 29th, 1875.

COUNTY COURTS.—In the House of Commons on Monday the House went into committee pro formâ on this bill, which was ordered to be reprinted with amendments.

REVENUE.—The receipts on account of revenue from the 1st April, 1875, when there was a balance of £6,265,322 to the 26th instant, were £17,522,727, against £17,219,821 in the corresponding period of the preceding financial year, which began with a balance of £7,442,854. The net expenditure was £16,706,590, against £16,739,762, to the same date in the previous year. The Treasury balances on the 26th instant amounted to £6,300,338, and at the same date in 1874 to £7,204,660.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

June 26.

BUTCHER V. STEAD AND ANOTHER.—This appeal from the Court of Appeal in Chancery sitting in Bankruptcy, which affirmed a judgment of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy reversing a decision of the Manchester County Court Judge, raised a very important question as to what constitutes a fraudulent preference on the part of a bankrupt—namely, whether it is sufficient to constitute such a fraudulent preference that the bankrupt shall have the intention of making a fraudulent preference, or whether it is essential not only that the bankrupt shall have such an intention, but also that the creditor to whom payment is made must have notice of such intention. Mr. Herschell, Q.C., and Mr. F. North appeared for the appellant; Mr. Benjamin, Q.C., Mr. Marten, Q.C., and Mr. Jordan for the respondents. The appellant, William Butcher, is the trustee of the property of James Stenhouse Meldrum and Albert Wydler, bankrupts, who previously to their bankruptcy carried on business as calico printers, under the style of the Belfield Printing Company, and also carried on the business of dyers at the Boarshaw Dye Works. The respondents, Messrs. Stead. are cotton spinners and manufacturers of cotton cloths, and carry on business at Manchester as merchants. The bankrupts commenced to purchase cotton cloths from the respondents in May, 1868, and continued to trade with them up to November, 1873. The arrangement entered into between the bankrupts and the respondents was that the former should have the option of paying cash within 14 days from the time of delivery of any goods bought, receiving a discount of 2½ per cent. off, or of paying according to Manchester terms, or of paying after the expiration of 14 days, but before the expiration of the time allowed by Manchester terms, and receiving a rebate of interest on the sum paid for the period from the time of payment to the end of the time allowed by Manchester terms, calculated at the Bank rate on the day of payment. According to Manchester terms, all goods that are purchased before the 25th day of one month are to be paid for on the first Tuesday in the following month, but if bought after the 25th day of any month, then they are to be paid for on the first Tuesday in the next month but one. This arrangement was carried out, and the bankrupts exercised their option of paying as it suited their convenience. In September, 1873, and for some time previously, the bankrupts were in insolvent circumstances, because they owed a large sum to one Charles Souchay, who had originally sold them their works, and had advanced them money from time to time, but of this fact the respondents had no knowledge whatever. The bankrupts purchased from the respondents cotton cloth on the 30th of September, 1873, to the value of £141, and on the 9th of October following to the value of £46. In October and November, 1873, the debtors, having become aware that they were hopelessly insolvent, gave orders to their clerks to sell the stock-in-trade and other property, and with the proceeds to pay their ordinary trade creditors, but not to pay Charles Souchay and certain particular creditors, to whom they were largely indebted for advances. On the 22nd of November, 1873, the £186 13s. 9d. in question was paid by one of the debtors' clerks in pursuance of these instructions, to Messrs. Stead, the respondents, and the question was whether, under these circumstances, the latter were protected by the proviso at the end of the 92nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. The section enacts that all payments involving fraudulent preference within three months of the bankruptcy shall be void, and the proviso is as follows:—"But this section shall not affect the rights of a purchaser, payee, or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration." The Court below decided that the payment to the respondents came within the proviso, and that, therefore, the trustee in bankruptcy was not entitled to recover the sum so paid from them. Their Lordships took time to consider.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

IN RE THE WEST HARTLEPOOL IRON COMPANY.—Two petitions have been presented for the winding-up of this company—one in the Court of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, the other in the Court of Vice-Chancellor Hall. That in Vice-Chancellor Bacon's Court was presented first, but the other would, in the natural course of things, have come on for hearing first, the petition day in Vice-Chancellor Hall's Court being Friday, whereas that in Vice-Chancellor Bacon's Court is Saturday. Mr. Robinson, for the petitioner in the first petition, moved for an order to transfer the second petition to the Court of Vice-Chancellor Bacon. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. Caldecott, for the second petition, opposed. Lord Justice James said it had already been laid down as a general rule that when a suit had been instituted in one branch of the Court, a person who, knowing of the first suit, instituted another relating to the same subject matter ought to institute it in the same branch of the Court. That rule applied to this case, and the transfer must be ordered as asked for. Lord Justice Mellish concurred.

IN RE THE LONDON, BELGIUM, BRAZIL, AND RIVER PLATE ROYAL STEAMSHIP COMPANY, LIMITED.—TAIT'S CLAIM.—This was an appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Bacon. The question was as to a claim by the trustees of the estate of Sir Peter Tait and Co. to be allowed to prove in the winding-up of the above company for a sum of £1,236 17s. 4d., due to them on a balance of accounts. Whether the balance was in favour of one party or the other depended on the right of Messrs. Tait to a sum of £5,000, which they claimed in connection with a contract they had entered into to sell to the company four steamships, and a concession from the Belgian Government for the carriage of mails. The Vice-Chancellor held that Messrs. Tait and Co. were not, under the circumstances, entitled to the £5,000, and accordingly rejected the claim. The trustees appealed. Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. F. Thompson were for the appellants; Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Davey were for the liquidator. Their Lordships affirmed the decision of the Vice-Chancellor.

June 25.

IN RE THE CITY AND COUNTY BANK (LIMITED).—This was an appeal from the order made by Vice-Chancellor Bacon on the 28th of May for the winding-up of the above company compulsorily. The order was made upon the petition of a shareholder holding 10 shares of £5 each, on which £2 10s. per share has been paid. The nominal capital of the company is £500,000, but only the nominal amount of £62,260 has been subscribed, and £25,000 only paid up. The debts of the company are nearly £96,000, and the nominal value of their assets in bills, mortgages, and other similar securities about £99,000. The majority of the shareholders desire a voluntary liquidation, and to carry out an arrangement which has been provisionally entered into with Messrs. Brown, Jansen, and Co., who had acted as the bankers of the company in the Clearing-house, that the whole assets of the bank, exclusive of the good-will of the business, should be handed over to them, and that they should pay all the debts in full, accounting for any surplus. It appeared now that practically the whole of the creditors also assented to this scheme. There were several technical objections raised to the petition. One was that the petitioner had not stated in his petition that he had held his shares for six months, the 40th section of the Companies Act of 1867 providing that a shareholder who has not held his shares for that period cannot present a winding-up petition. The Lords Justices overruled this objection. Another objection was that one of the advertisements of the petition in the Daily Telegraph described the company by a wrong name, as the "City and County Banking Company, Limited," instead of the "City and County Bank, Limited." This mistake was corrected the next day. A third objection was that the advertisement in the London Gazette was not, as it ought to have been according to the rules, published seven clear days before the day appointed for the hearing. The petition was presented on the 19th of May, and was advertised in the Gazette of the 21st of May. The ordinary day for hearing petitions in Vice-Chancellor Bacon's Court is Saturday, and this advertisement would have been in proper time for Saturday, the 29th of May; but that day being observed as Her Majesty's birthday, the Court of Chancery was closed, and Vice-Chancellor Bacon's petitions were heard on the 28th of May. This day was mentioned in the advertisement as the day fixed for the hearing of the petition, but the notice was too short by one day. The Vice-Chancellor thought as every one interested was represented before him he had a discretion to dispense with the full notice, and he overruled the other objections also, and made the winding-up order. The company appealed. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. E. Chitty were for the company; Mr. Kay, Q.C., Mr. Swanston, Q.C., and Mr. Graham Hastings were for the petitioner; Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. E. Cutler for a committee of shareholders; Mr. J. Pearson, Q.C., and Mr. E. C. Willis for creditors; Mr. Waller, Q.C., and Mr. W. Latham for other creditors; and Mr. Dauney, for Brown, Jansen, and Co., supported the appeal. Lord Justice James thought that the misdescription of the company rendered the advertisement in which it occurred absolutely void. There could be no reason on earth why, when a company had a name, any other name should be used to describe it. Where could the line be drawn? The proper name ought to be used. As to the objection about the seven days, his Lordship thought that the Vice-Chancellor had a discretion to dispense with the full time, though this was a thing which ought not to be done lightly. But in this case he thought the Vice-Chancellor had exercised his discretion rightly, and that this Court ought not to interfere with what he had done. Upon the merits his Lordship thought that on the face of it the proposed arrangement with Brown, Jansen, and Co. appeared to be a highly beneficial one, and no doubt the assets would be realised by them as carefully and economically as by a liquidator appointed by the Court. The petitioner's interest was a very trifling one, and he was certainly not entitled to interfere with the wishes of the majority of the shareholders, who ought to determine what was best to be done. Under the circumstances, it would not be right to ruin the company by making a compulsory order, and to render it impossible for them to carry out the proposed arrangement. The order of the Vice-Chancellor must be discharged, with liberty to the directors to summon a general meeting of the shareholders to consider the question of a voluntary winding-up, and the sanction of the proposed arrangement. Meanwhile the petition must stand over. Lord Justice Mellish concurred.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR R. MALINS.)

RE THE EASTBOURNE COAL COMPANY, LIMITED.—In this matter a petition was presented for an order to wind-up the company. It was stated that there was enough property to pay 10s. in the pound of the company's bills. Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., was for the petitioner; Mr. T. A. Roberts, for the largest creditor, consented to the prayer of the petition. The Vice-Chancellor made an order to wind up the company compulsory.

Digitized by Google

RE THE WEST CENTRAL WAGGON COMPANY, LIMITED.—In this matter a petition had been presented by creditors of the company to the amount of £1,198, for an order to wind up the company voluntarily, under supervision. The paid up capital of the company was £47,600. Two liquidators had been appointed by the company, and the creditors wanted two others to be appointed to act with those of the company, to protect the interests of the creditors. Mr. Montague Cookson was for the petitioners; Mr. Stallard was for the company. The Vice-Chancellor made an order to continue the voluntary winding-up, under supervision, and appointed two liquidators, nominated by the creditors, to act with those selected by the company.

RE THE PETERSBURG AND VIBORG GAS COMPANY—EX PARTE EVERINGHAM.—In this case a petition for winding-up the company by the Court was presented by a contributory, and opposed by the company, but the petitioner now consented to its dismissal, with costs. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. E. Beaumont appeared for the petitioner; Mr. John Pearson, Q.C., and Mr. Brooksbank for the company; Mr. Montague Cookson for other parties opposing the petition.

RE THE SAME COMPANY—EX PARTE THE PATENT GAS COMPANY.—This petition, also by contributories, was dismissed without costs. Mr. John Pearson, Q,C., and Mr. Brooksbank appeared for the company; Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Latham were for the petitioners.

RE THE SANITARY MILK COMPANY, LIMITED.—In this matter a petition was presented for an order to wind up the company compulsorily. The nominal capital of the company was £200,000, in £1 shares, of which, however, only £1,856 shares had been taken up. The whole concern, which was really a small one, had completely failed. Mr. Freeman was for the petitioner. The Vice-Chancellor said he should not make the order asked for without looking into the case himself. He did not approve such small matters being brought into Chambers. The parties to them ought to settle their own affairs. Indeed, he disapproved entirely of these companies being commenced and carried on with so small an amount of paid up capital. Of a nominal capital, in this instance, of £200,000, only 1,856 shares had been taken. He would much like to see an Act of Parliament introduced to throw all the debts of a company on the directors of it who began their business before at least one half of the capital was paid up.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE.

June 26.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

IN RE ANGLO DANUBIAN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY—EX PARTE INTERNATIONAL FINANCIAL SOCIETY.—This was an application by the International Financial Society for leave to prove in the winding-up of the Anglo-Danubian Company for the nominal value of 18 debentures of £1,000 each, carrying 6 per cent. interest, which in June, 1865, had been issued by the directors of the company to nominees of the society at a discount of 25 per cent. Mr. Davey, Q.C., in support of the summons, referred to the articles of association, which provided that the directors might from time to time borrow on behalf of the company any sum of money not exceeding one half of the nominal capital for the time being of the company (£220,000), and might secure the repayment of or raise any money authorised to be borrowed by them by the issue on behalf of the company of debentures, promissory notes, or bills of exchange, or in such other manner as the directors deemed expedient. Mr. Hull, for the liquidators of the Anglo-Danubian Company, contended that the directors had no authority to issue debentures at a discount, in the absence of express words empowering them to do so; but the Master of the Rolls held that the words "raise any money authorised to be borrowed by them," enabled the directors to raise money by the issue of debentures to a larger nominal amount than the sum raised, and admitted the proofs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

June 25.

(Before MR. REGISTRAR PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE ALEXANDER RICHARDSON.—The bankrupt, who was formerly secretary and afterwards a director of the International Life Assurance Society, appled for an order of discharge. Adjudication had been obtained upon the petition of Mr. Frederick Maynard, the official liquidator of the Society, in respect of a debt of £2,738, due under an order of the Court of Chancery. The accounts returned liabilities of £4,461, and there were no assets. At a meeting of creditors recently held a resolution was passed to the effect that the failure to pay a dividend of 10s. in the pound had arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt could not justly be held responsible, and the creditors desired that an order of discharge should be allowed. No opposition was offered by the trustees, and his Honour granted the order.

June 26.

(Before the HON. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE ROBERT BENSON & CO.—The debtors, Messrs. Robert James Wigram, Richard Henry Glyn, Robert Henry Benson, and Constantine William Benson, are merchants carrying on business at 10 King's Arms-yard, Moorgate-street, and also at Liverpool, and at Boston, in the United States, under the firm of Robert Benson and Co. They have filed a petition for liquidation, by arrangement or composition, with liabilities estimated at £750,000. Mr. Bagley, for the petitioners, and with the concurrence of creditors, applied that Mr. Edwin Waterhouse, accountant, 13 Gresham-street, should be appointed receiver of the property. The learned counsel produced an affidavit stating that in the opinion of creditors it would conduce to their benefit if such appointment were made. It appeared that remittances were constantly being received from foreign houses who were indebted to the estate. Mr. Registrar Spring Rice. Is the application limited to the appointment of a receiver? Mr. Bagley. Yes. I am glad to be in a position to state that although the failure occurred some little time since, and the debtors at once placed themselves in the hands of their creditors, not a single writ has been served upon them. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE LEWIS STEWART.—The debtor, a merchant and East India agent, carrying on business in St. Mary Axe, has filed a petition for liquidation, with debts £76,000 (a large portion of which would appear to be fully covered), with assets about £17,000. Mr. J. W. Jones (Nicholson, Nicol, and Son), now applied, with the concurrence of creditors, that Mr. J. Smith, accountant (Harding, Whinney, and Co), should be appointed receiver. The evidence showed that the assets consisted for the most part of debts due to the petitioner from persons in India, and of shipments of goods in respect of which remittances were arriving. His Honour granted the application.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE M'ARTHUR AND CO.—The debtor in this case, William M'Arthur, who traded at Greenwich and Millwall and Cannon-street as an ironfounder and merchant, applied to the Court to register a series of resolutions by which his creditors had determined to wind up his estate under the liquidation clauses of the Act and not in bankruptcy, and appointing a committee of inspection with a trustee. From the accounts filed it appeared that the liabilities unsecured amounted to £150,370, as against assets to the amount of £3,503 8s. A claim is set down against the Iowa Pacific Railway Company for £32,017, but there is no estimated value in the accounts in respect to that claim. Messrs. Elmslie and Co. applied on the part of the debtor, but it appearing that out of 60 creditors no less than 29 had not been served with notice of the first meeting, His Honour absolutely declined to entertain the application, observing that if they had been served with notice it was quite possible that they might have attended the meeting, and influenced the other creditors to vote in a different way. Registration was accordingly refused.

In re F. R. Brett, Ireland.—This debtor, who was a merchant, carrying on business at Cannon-street, and at Middlesboro', Yorkshire, failed in May last, and the statement of affairs since filed shows total unsecured liabilities to the extent of £63,467, against assets £10,054 6s. At the first meeting the creditors agreed to a resolution accepting a composition of 3s. in the pound, payable in three instalments at one, four, and eight months from the date of registration. Mr. Jones (Lewis, Munns, and Co.) applied to his Honour to direct registration. The proof of one of the creditors had been objected to, but was now withdrawn. His Honour accordingly directed registration. Mr. Swithinbank, accountant, of Laurence Pountney-lane, City, and Newcastle-on-Tyne, is appointed the trustee to distribute the dividend.

BRADFORD BANKRUPTCY COURT.

June 22.

(Before Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, Q.C., Judge.)

Re David Booth.—This was a motion on behalf of the trustee in the estate of David Booth, of Idle, cloth manufacturer, asking for an order directing Wm. Daglish, of Leeds, to deliver up to the trustee certain title-deeds relating to twenty-six cottages at Idle which had been given to him by the debtor. Mr. Jordan, barrister, of Manchester, appeared in support of the motion, and Mr. West, barrister, of Leeds, opposed it. From the counsel's opening statement it appeared that on the 20th February, 1874, the debtor Booth, being in want of money, obtained a bill for £500 from Mr. Wm. Daglish, of Leeds, that bill being accepted by the firm of which Daglish was a member. In order to secure the debtor's meeting the bill when it became due, Booth gave to Daglish a memorandum assigning to him the deeds of twenty-six cottages at Idle in which Booth had an interest. The bill on becoming due was met by Booth, but with money obtained by discounting another bill which was accepted by Daglish and handed to Booth. After that there were other bill transactions between the parties, but the deeds were not removed from Daglish's custody. Both Booth and Daglish's firm failed, and the amount of the bills which had been drawn by Booth and accepted by Daglish had been proved against Booth's estate. Mr. Jordan contended that as Booth had fulfilled the conditions of the agreement by meeting the first bill, the trustee was entitled to the deeds, as no further equitable charge had been created. It appeared that while the estate of Daglish & Co. was in liquidation, a trustee having been appointed, Daglish had himself made a composition with his separate creditors, and no trustee had been appointed in that estate. The proceedings under the composition were not in court, and his Honour said he could not decide the matter without knowing what was the position of Daglish's affairs. The case was ordered to stand over to the 6th July.

Re David Hainsworth.—This was an issue which his Honour had directed to be tried by a jury, as it involved a question of fact arising out of an application to the Court in the liquidation proceedings of David Hainsworth, of Farsley, cloth merchant. Mr. Tindal Atkinson appeared in support of the motion, and Mr. Watson opposed. The facts of the case had been previously before the Court, and were, that Mr. Hainsworth, previous to his failure, had been used to get raw material from John Rayner, mungo merchant, of Bishopsgate-street, Leeds. Up to the time of the failure of Hainsworth, Rayner alleged that he had not the slightest idea that he was in difficulties. On the 21st April, 1874, a quantity of mungo which had been sold some time previously to Hainsworth was returned by him to Mr. Rayner. The value of this mungo was £180. Shortly after, Hainsworth failed, and some months after the failure he made an affidavit, in which he stated that when he sent back the goods he did it with the intention of preferring Rayner to his other creditors. The trustee therefore claimed the right to deduct the value of the goods returned from Rayner's proof. On behalf of Rayner, it was contended that the transaction was one in the ordinary course of trade, and this was the question which the jury were called on to decide. After the counsel had addressed the jury, and evidence had been given, his Honour summed up the case, and gave the following questions for the jury to answer: 1. Were the goods received and dealt with in good faith? 2. Were the goods received and dealt with in the ordinary course of business? 3. Were the goods received and dealt with in the ordinary course of business as between Rayner and Hainsworth? 4. Were the goods received and dealt with in the ordinary course of business as between Rayner and the other creditors? 5. Were the goods received and dealt with after Rayner had received notice of the insolvency of the debtors? To the first four of these questions the jury, after a lengthy consideration, returned answers in the negative, and to the last one an answer in the affirmative. His Honour then said that the verdict would be for the trustee. He might say that he thoroughly concurred in every one of the findings of the jury. It was only because—when he read on the previous occasion the affidavit of Rayner, and when he disbelieved it, as the jury had now disbelieved it—it was only because he was told that that gentleman was of high character in Leeds, that he had wished a jury to decide the question. He hoped the verdict that had been given would have the effect of stopping these proceedings, which seemed to have been so prevalent lately in cases of that nature.

LEEDS BANKRUPTCY COURT.

June 30th.

(Before Mr. Daniel, the Judge.)

Re James Holroyd.—Mr. Pullan appeared for Mr. J. G. Brex, who was formerly London agent for Messrs. James Holroyd and Co., woollen merchants and manufacturers, Leeds and Barnard Castle, asking leave to prove against the estate of that firm by two promissory notes for a debt which had been rejected by the trustee. In February, 1874, the debtor appointed Mr. Brex as his agent in London, and forwarded to him from time to time goods of considerable value. Mr. Holroyd then became desirous of forestalling the value of these goods, and induced Mr. Brex to allow him (the debtor) to draw on him for the value of such goods,—the arrangement being that when these bills fell due at maturity, the debtor should provide funds to meet them, and that meanwhile Brex should always retain the goods as security for such acceptances. The promissory notes now in question represented a certain bill for £1,082, which he had thus accepted for Mr. Holroyd. The bills themselves were in the hands of two banks, who had proved against the estate for them. The question now was whether the admission of Mr. Brex's promissory notes would be double proof of the same debt. The judge: What is the consideration? Mr. Pullan said the consideration was that Brex had returned, for the benefit of Holroyd's estate, the goods upon which he had held a lien or mortgage. Mr. Bond (who appeared for Mr. J. W.

Digitized by Google

Close, the trustee) said Mr. Brex was really asking to prove again for a debt already proved by the bill holders, and in fact, to prove in competition with his own creditors, as he was a party to the bills. The Judge said that he had not at present any evidence before him that any specific consideration, such as could be taken into account in bankruptcy, was given for these two promissory notes. Mr. Brex had apparently no right to the possession of the cloth except on the terms of paying the bills. The promissory notes were, in fact, mere indemnities to a surety. If this application were granted, it would be a double proof against the estate, the alleged consideration not being one entitling to proof for these promissory notes. It was not every right of action which entitled parties to prove in bankruptcy.—The application was dismissed with costs.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTS.

At the Town Hall, Nottingham, William Oliver Howitt was charged with having, while an adjudicated bankrupt, and within four months before the presentation of a petition in bankruptcy upon which he was adjudicated a bankrupt, quitted England and feloniously taking with him property to the amount of £20 or upwards, to wit, £300 or thereabouts which ought by law to be divided amongst his creditors. Mr. David Loewenstein, lacemaker, of Cotton-yard, said he had dealings for some time with the prisoner, who carried on business in Clarke's factory, Russell-street, as a lace manufacturer. On the 25th July, 1874, the prisoner called at witnesses's warehouse, and asked him to advance £130 to meet a bill then about due. The bill was for a larger sum than he asked to be advanced. Witness agreed to lend him the £130 for the purpose of meeting the acceptance. Mr. William Haskard, clerk in the service of the last witness said he was present on the 25th July, 1874, when Mr. Loewenstein agreed to lend the prisoner £130. Witness saw the money given to him during the same day. Mr. John Simpson, manager of the Equitable Loan and Discount Company Limited, carrying on business in Nottingham, said he knew the prisoner. On the 25th of July, 1874, he came to witness at his office, and a bill of exchange was discounted for him, the amount being £96 15s. Witness gave him a cheque for £91 18s. 3d., which he believed was duly paid by the bank upon which it was drawn. The cheque had been returned to him by Messrs. Moore and Robinson as paid, and he produced it. It was endorsed "W. Howard," and to the best of witness's knowledge the signature was in prisoner's handwriting. Mr. Richard Thornton Higham, cashier at Messrs. Moore and Robinson's bank, said on the 25th July, 1874, he cashed the cheque produced by Simpson. It was endorsed when paid, and the money was handed over the counter, but to whom he could not recollect. Mr. J. Place sub-manager of the Nottingham and Notts. Bank, spoke to paying £85 in notes for a cheque drawn by the prisoner on the firm of Howitt and Son. Witness believed prisoner himself presented the cheque. The prisoner and his mother had an account at the bank. Mr. R. H. Lacey said he was a clerk in the Nottingham Bankruptcy Court, and produced the proceedings in bankruptcy of the prisoner. He was adjudicated a bankrupt on the 14th August, 1874. Witness produced the order of adjuication, and also the order of court for prosecution of the prisoner. The prisoner made a statement to the effect that he received several sums of money from Loewenstein, and from Mr. J. Simpson, and the Nottingham and Notts. Banking Company. He left Nottingham on the 27th July, and went to Stockholm. He stayed at the latter place. When he left Nottingham he took the whole of the money with him, amounting altogether to about £330, which ought to have been divided amongst his creditors. He left England knowing that he was insolvent, and unable to pay his creditors, and his motive for going away was to avoid them. As soon as he knew a warrant was out against him he came to Nottingham and gave himself into the hands of the police. Mr. J. Thornton, accountant in Nottingham and trustee in the bankruptcy of the prisoner, deposed to being present on the 19th June, 1875, when the above statement was made by the prisoner. Witness attended for the purpose of examining him as to his affairs. He made the statement voluntarily, and placed his signature to it. This being the whole of the evidence, the magistrates committed him for trial at the assizes.

At the Guildhall Police-court on Wednesday, William Richardson, a cheesemonger, formerly of No. 299 Fulham-road, surrendered to his bail before Mr. Alderman Allen to answer several charges of concealing his estate from his creditors, he having been adjudicated a bankrupt. Mr. Besley, instructed by Mr. Aird, prosecuted by order of Mr. Registrar Pepys; Mr. Jones was engaged for the defendant. It appeared that defendant was indebted in the sum of £379 3s. 11d., and about Christmas last Mr. Charles Brown, a wholesale cheesemonger, pressed him for the payment of an account of £63 9s. 9d., and not getting it, took out a trader debtor summons against him, and finally made a bankrupt of him. Before those proceedings could be arranged the defendant removed the best of his furniture to No. 3 Meyrick-road, Clapham Junction, in the name of his mother-in-law, Mrs. Smith, and subsequently sold it for £18, and never accounted to the trustee for that money. A horse and cart were sold, and for the proceeds of that he had not accounted. The fixtures he stated he had left on the premises for the landlord in lieu of rent due up to Christmas. The other furniture was removed to No. 20 Spencer-street, Park-road, Battersea, and on the defendant's examination before Mr. Registrar Pepys he stated that the Sheriff of Surrey had seized it, and that Mr. Berry, of the Woodland Tavern, Woodland-street, Dalston, bought it, and permitted him to use it. The sheriff of Surrey was instructed to seize them, and the result of the sale was that he obtained £15 18s., which he had paid in to the credit of the bankruptcy. Out of the debts that were put down as likely to realise £5 2s. 3d., the trustees had only received the sum of £1. There was also a wardrobe and sausage machine, the former of which had been disposed of and not accounted for, and the latter was given to the defendant's cousin, Mr. Keen, of Wandsworth, for a debt of £8, the machine having cost from £20 to £25. There was also a policy on the defendant's life, which was worth about £8, and which had been concealed from the defendant's creditors, but it being discovered it was given up on the order of the Registrar. A great deal of evidence was gone into, but at the request of the defendant, the cross-examination of the witness was reserved, as Mr. Jones was not present. Mr. Alderman Allen then remanded the defendant.

At the Worship-street Police-court on Thursday, Henry Webb, of 44 Brushfield-street, Bishopsgate, a china and earthenware dealer, appeared to answer a charge of having failed and neglected to discover and to deliver up to trustees appointed under a petition in liquidation of his affairs certain of his property. Mr. Besley asked that the defendant be committed on two charges. In September, 1874, the defendant filed his petition under the Liquidating Debtors' Act. A receiver was at once appointed, and in October he was relieved by trustees appointed by the court. During the interval, however, there was no doubt that the defendant managed to elude the vigilance of the person put into possession of his estate, and to remove goods from his premises which were not afterwards accounted for. The defendant had carried on business at 115 High-street, Stoke Newington, as well as in Brushfield-street. His debts were scheduled at £1,740 5s. 4d., his assets in stock and book debts were returned at £712 18s. 2d., but as a fact the amount realised by the sale of stock and debts recovered did not exceed £200. In his statement the defendant had put down cash in hand as nil, but subsequently on examination before the court he admitted that at the time of his petition he had £50 cash, and then, in explanation of its disposal, said he had used it to bribe his creditors to accept a composition. Cross-examined on this, he mentioned only one name—a Mr. Oldacre—but it was not true. There was thus, said Mr. Besley, an actual discrepancy in his accounts and in his examination. There was also no doubt that there was a large deficit of stock, and there would be proof given that there were two removals of goods subsequently to the filing of the petition, and that as to neither did the defendant make account to the trustee.—The case was adjourned, the defendant being released on his own recognisances.

A BARRISTER-AUCTIONEER.—The following is from a provincial paper.—"Call to the Bar. The London papers of this week announce that Mr. George Russell Butler, of Reading, has become a Barrister-at-Law. We are requested to state that in thus gratifying the dictates of an honourable ambition, Mr. G. R. Butler, does not mean to withdraw from the active practice of his profession as an estate agent and auctioneer. In becoming a barrister he has fitted himself for a yet more thorough discharge of his business responsibilities than would be possible to one who was unacquainted with the Law of Real Property, which is one of the essential subjects in which students of an Inn of Court must pass before they can receive the certificate which alone entitles them to be called to the Bar under the recent regulations." The Law Times in commenting upon this "extraordinary announcement," says—that the statement, if true, makes the demand for a relaxation of the rule affecting solicitors irresistible. It is impossible to say that there may not be circumstances in which an auctioneer might not fairly ask to be called to the Bar. As to whether the case at Reading is one of these we offer no opinion. But compare such a case with that of Mr. Gresham, a solicitor in the City of London, who, when a student of Gray's Inn, was expelled and his fees forfeited. And why? Because he was under articles of clerkship to his father, who was and is well known, and fills a very responsible public office in the city. The advantage which the auctioneer and barrister-at-law at Reading will have over solicitors is enormous; he will be able to sell real or personal property one day and prepare a conveyance of it to the purchaser the next. He can value property in one part of England one day, and can the next appear at Westminster and conduct a cause in which his experience as an auctioneer, &c., &c., will be of advantage to him and his clients. Reading newspapers are before us, and we find what completely bears out the statements in our correspondent's letter, advertisements of sales of household furniture, including books, kitchen utensils, &c., in fact, the usual catalogue; but in the case of land, also advertised for sale, it is competent for this gentleman to prepare the conditions of sale, and, indeed, do the work of auctioneer, solicitor, and counsel. In another advertisement of this gentleman we find "rents collected, inventories and valuations of every description of property made for administration and other purposes." In another instance we find this auctioneer and barrister-at-law described as "an accountant"—whether a member of any of the accountant societies, or not, we do not know. In short, it is certain that a highly respectable auctioneer, doing a large, extensive, and varying business, in which he has been engaged without interruption up to the day of his being called, is now at liberty to practise as a barrister in court and out of court; and, at the same time, conduct his other business also —except, perhaps, when he goes circuit, or is engaged at sessions, at which, according to the etiquette of the Bar, he cannot, we believe, refuse to hold a brief, if offered, at all events if he is present in court. It is with the principle involved in the action of the Benchers, and not with this gentleman, that we are concerned. It is not the only case by any means, as the Benchers of the several Inns know, and the time has arrived when justice to solicitors demands compensation from the Inns of Court, and which can be afforded by sweeping away altogether and unjust and impolitic regulation."

[We may answer the query of our contemporary, by stating that the name of Mr. Butler does not appear in the published list of accountants.—ED. Accountant.]

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

J. B. MURRAY (GLASGOW).—At a meeting of the creditors of John Bence Murray, yarn merchant, Glasgow, a composition of 4s. in the pound was accepted on liabilities of about £13,000.

J. CHAPMAN (BRADFORD).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Chapman, dyer and finisher, Bradford, was held on Monday. The statement of affairs showed liabilities £12,564, and assets £7,934. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. Buckley was appointed trustee.

W. COOK & CO. (NEWCASTLE).—At a meeting of the creditors of William Cook, jun., and Co., of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, chemical brokers and general merchants, the statement showed liabilities amounting to £12,993, a large proportion of which consists of accommodation bills. The assets are put down at £917, and liquidation by arrangement was agreed upon.

R. C. PATCHETT (HALIFAX).—The first meeting of the creditors of this debtor, who is a wine and spirit merchant, at Crown-street, Halifax, in the county of York, and who has filed a petition for liquidation, will be held at the White Lion Hotel, Halifax, on the 12th July, at 11 a.m. Mr. C. T. Rhodes, accountant, Halifax, has been appointed receiver. Mr. F. Jubb, of Halifax, is the solicitor acting in the matter.

J. DAWBARN (LONDON).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. James Dawbarn, of Lombard-street, Thetford, Norwich, and Winford, mine owner, whose failure was recently announced, was held on Wednesday. Mr. Wintle (Johnstone, Cooper, Wintle, and Co.) presented a statement of his affairs, showing liabilities amounting to £30,000, with assets, including property held by creditors, stated at £20,000. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, and Mr. Wintle was appointed trustee to act with a committee of inspection, chosen from the general body of creditors.

SWALLOW & CO. (HECKMONDWIKE).—The second statutory meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Swallow and Co., carpet and blanket manufacturers, Heckmondwike, was held on the 29th June, at Dewsbury. The resolution of the former meeting accepting a composition of 7s. in the pound was confirmed, and the payments satisfactorily secured.

R. EARNSHAW (COLNE).—The first meeting of the creditors of Robert Earnshaw, bank manager, of Colne, who recently absconded from that district, was held at the Burnley County Court on the 29th June, before Mr. Hartley, registrar. The meeting was held in connection with the proceedings in bankruptcy. Debts amounting to £1,600 were proved. Mr. Foden, accountant, of Burnley, was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

A. HOOK.—At a meeting of creditors held in this matter, at which the debtor's statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,527 4s. 6d., assets £389 5s. 0d., it was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. Edmund Charles Chatterley, public accountant (C. Browne, Stanley, and Co.), was appointed trustee.

EDWARD SIMMS LEIGH.—At a meeting of creditors held in this matter, a statement of affairs was placed before the creditors showing liabilities £2,197 17s. 11d., with assets £695 14s. 2d.: it was resolved to proceed by liquidation, and Mr. Edmund Charles Chatterley, public accountant (C. Browne, Stanley and Co.), was appointed trustee.

J. LESLIE (LOWESTOFT).—A meeting of the creditors of John Leslie, of Lowestoft, tailor and draper, was held at the office of Mr. C. H. Wiltshire, solicitor, Yarmouth, on the 28th June, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The failure is announced of Messrs. E. Jones and Co., of 2 King William-street, with liabilities of £120,000. The assets are understood to be considerable. Their books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Andrews and Mason, of 7 and 8 Ironmonger-lane.—Messrs. Thomas Woodley and Co., tube manufacturers, of Spon Lane, South Staffordshire, have failed. Their petition for liquidation is in the Oldbury County Court. The liabilities are believed to be from £10,000 to £12,000.—The cheques have also been returned of Messrs. Kilburn, Kershaw, and Co., East India and siik brokers, of St. Mary-axe, but the extent of their liabilities has not yet transpired.—It is stated that a Bristol firm in the corn trade have announced their inability to meet their engagements, and that the liabilities are expected to range between £150,090 and £180,000.—The failure was announced on Wednesday of Messrs. Da Costa, Raalte, and Co., of 13 Leadenhall-street, merchants. The firm is understood to have failed through giving too much of its attention to Egyptian finance and other speculative business, which has not turned out well. The books are in the hands of Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co., accountants.—A petition in liquidation has been filed in the Bradford County Court by Messrs. J. & J. Glover, worsted spinners, Newe Lands Mill, Bradford. The liabilities are estimated at £8,500. The principal creditors have resolved, at a private meeting, to accept a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound.

SCOTLAND.—The failure is announced of Messrs. John Knox and Co., coalmasters, of Glasgow, with liabilities "understood to be large."—The failure is also announced of Messrs. John Anderson and Son, of Glasgow. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Spears and Jack, accountants, 138 Hope-street.—Messrs. Laing and Irvine, of Hawick and Peebles, have suspended payment. In a circular making the announcement, the suspension is attributed to the collapse of Messrs. Collie and Co. The extent of the liabilities has not yet been announced.

CANADA.—Telegraphic advices report the suspension of the Jacques Cartier Bank in Montreal. The business of this house has been chiefly with French Canadians, but the losses which have led to the suspension have been caused through its connection with several railways. The capital of the bank is £400,000, all paid up. Their liabilities in December, 1874, were £600,000, and their deposits £250,000.

AMERICA.—American advices report the liabilities of Mr. Abraham Jackson, defaulting lawyer at Boston, as about £82,000.—Mr. Charles P. Button, Burlington, Vt., had suspended owing to the depression in the oil trade, with liabilities of £12,000.—Mr. Henry Bucking, wool puller, 20 Spruce-street, New York, had also suspended, and it was stated that the Bucking Wool and Leather Co., in which he is a stockholder, would be able to carry on.—Advices from New York, received July 1st, announce the suspension of the prominent firm of Messrs. Melius Trask and Ripley, boot and shoe manufacturers, 539 Broadway. When the mail left the amount of their liabilities had not transpired, but it was expected their assets would show a surplus of nearly 100,000 dollars.

AUSTRALIA.—Australian advices report an extensive failure in the grain trade, that of Mr. Coombe, miller and grain dealer, Sydney, a firm of only recent standing, with liabilities amounting to £41,000, of which three-fourths is fully secured. —It is stated that Stubbs & Co., auctioneers, of Sydney, have failed. Their liabilities are 500,000 dols. Rumours were prevalent in commercial circles owing to mining speculations in 1873 and 1874, and a crash was feared to be likely.

Edward Blacker, late Accountant-General of the Bank of Ireland, has been committed for trial on a charge of having embezzled the sum of £2,400 in New South Wales Bonds, the property of one Peter Smith, a customer of the bank. His bail was fixed at £4,000.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointment of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. Flaxman Haydon, of the firm of Messrs. Haydon and Vivian, public accountants, 29 New City Chambers, 121 Bishopsgate-street Within, has been appointed receiver and manager of the estate of J. Beane and Company, corn and coal merchants, of Tunbridge Wells, in bankruptcy.

THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.—The monthly meeting of the Council of the Society of Accountants in England was held on Wednesday, at the offices of the Society, 2 Cowper's-court, Cornhill; present, Messrs. John Bath (Vice-President, in the chair), J. C. Bolton, E. C. Foreman, J. Beddow, F. Nicholls, E. N. Harper, G. E. Ladbury, and Alfred C. Harper (Secretary). Mr. Samuel Hall, Curzon-street, Derby, was admitted an associate of the Society.

A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Fothergill, Hankey, and Co. is called for the 21st of July.

SAVINGS BANKS FUNDS.—Mr. C. Rivers Wilson, Secretary to the National Debt Commissioners, has supplied in a public letter an explanation of the supposed discrepancy in the Commissioners' accounts of (trustee) savings banks' and friendly societies' funds. The loss in the year by the excess of interest allowed by the Commissioners over the amount received by them for interest does not correspond with the year's increase in the deficiency shown by the capital account, as compared with the amount actually due to depositors, but this is because the two accounts are of different natures. The former is simply a statement of fact, the year's income and the year's expenditure. But the capital account involves a valuation of the securities held. This valuation should be at the market price of the day; but the terminable annuities held are not marketable, and therefore can have no proper market price. It was decided many years ago to value them, for the purpose of the annual account, on the principle that they should pay 3¼ per cent. interest, about the average realized by investments in the public funds. But a considerable amount of the annuities held by the Commissioners were granted at 3½ and 3¾ per cent. interest. Such annuities, therefore, stood in the accounts at a greater value in the first instance than the sums advanced for them; and this makes so much the larger the annual drop in their nominal value as they approach their termination. Accordingly, in 1873, the Commissioners' accounts showed £25,557,004 as the value of the terminable annuities held, but in 1874 the assets of a like nature are valued at £23,901,563, a decline of £1,655,441; a valuation on the basis of cost price, instead of attributed market value; would have brought the increase of the deficiency more nearly to agreement with the excess of interest credited to trustees. The annual movement or "turnover" of the savings banks and friendly societies' funds is of very large amount; in the year 1874 it was about £8,500,000, of which over £2,800,000 was invested in new securities. But it is submitted that the amount of interest accrued to the Commissioners on their large investments and re-investments during the year tends to show that their purchases have been made in securities of sufficient real worth, for their income from this source has been fully maintained. Mr. Wilson adds that if it were worth the time and labour it could no doubt be proved in detail that the interest account and the capital account are not inconsistent, but are in exact arithmetical accordance.

COMMITTAL OF A BANKRUPT.– At the Lancaster Quarter Sessions, on the 29th June, John Collinson Williamson, 25, shoemaker, was charged with breaking and entering, at Barrow, on the 25th April, the shop of Thomas Williamson and Robert Byran Holmes, and stealing 315 pairs of boots and shoes and a large quantity of household furniture. The case was a very extraordinary one. For some time prior to December last, prisoner carried on the business of a boot and shoe dealer at Barrow, and on the 22nd of that month he filed a petition in bankruptcy. A Mr. Graham was appointed receiver by the court, on the 11th January, at a meeting of creditors, the prosecutors agreed to purchase the debtor's estate at 10s. in the pound, and to pay the expenses of liquidation. When Messrs. Williamson and Holmes purchased the estate, they instructed Mr. Graham to take charge of it for settlement, and he did so, engaging the prisoner as salesman at £3 per week. Owing to some dissatisfaction, prisoner was discharged from his situation in March, and he was given to understand that he had nothing more to do with the business. He was allowed to remain in the house and to use the furniture, but the entrance to the shop from the house was boarded up, the front door only being used for access. In April the shop was closed altogether, and the stock was catalogued. On the the 24th Mr. Graham discovered that 495 pairs of boots and shoes had been removed, and that the boarding separating the shop from the house had been removed. He also discovered that the greater portion of the furniture in the house had disappeared. It was subsequently ascertained that the prisoner had engaged a carter, named Neave, to convey three or four barrels to the Dalton and Ulverston Railway stations. These barrels were consigned from "John Taylor, of Dalton, to Thomas Jones, of Nottingham Station, till called for." In those barrels were discovered 315 of the 495 missing pairs of boots and shoes. It was further ascertained that Neave had been engaged to cart away the furniture, which was afterwards recovered. Prisoner was found guilty, and the court sentenced him to twelve months' imprisonment with hard labour.

THE MONEY-MARKET.—The Economist says:—"The bank reserve has augmented, and money is constantly falling in value. There is now over £25,000,000 of coin and bullion altogether in the bank—a larger amount than has been seen for a long time, and the reserve in the banking department is over £13,000,000; and these figures tend to give the public confidence. There are no new failures reported, and the best opinion is that we have got to the end of the worst which is going to happen 'this time.' All such opinions must be taken only for what they are worth. Extremely few people would have predicted the failures which we have seen—indeed, probably no one person could have predicted more than a few of them—and therefore we must not rely too confidently on the fact of no bad prediction as an indication of a good future. Still we may take it as a very good sign as far as it goes. The value of money will continue to tend downward, though there exist some peculiar tendencies in the bullion market, consequent on the recent change of the law in Holland and on the state of things in Germany, which may arrest its progress.

BANKERS' CLEARING HOUSE.—The following is the official return of the cheques and bills cleared in the Bankers' Clearing-house for the week ending Wednesday, June 30:—

Thursday, June 24	£11,510,000
Friday, June 25	12,921,000
Saturday, June 26	15,048,000
Monday, June 28	13,605,000
Tuesday, June 29	13,972,000
Wednesday, June 30	40,198,000
	£107,254,000

The total at the corresponding period of last year, which also comprised a Stock Exchange settlement, was £134,436,000.

EX PARTE TILL.—A correspondent of a legal contemporary writes:—"Surely the Lords Justices, in Ex parte Till Re Ratcliffe, have misconstrued the 275th rule. That rule, so far as it is necessary to be cited, is as follows:—"The resolution passed at the first general meeting (or first and second general meetings as the case may be) shall determine whether the affairs of the debtor are to be liquidated by arrangement, and not in bankruptcy, or whether any and what composition shall be accepted in satisfaction of the debts due to the creditors from the debtor, or it may reject either of such modes of arrangement. . . . Only such resolutions as are reduced into writing, and are signed by or on behalf of the statutory majority of the creditors assembled at a meeting shall be taken cognisance of by the court." The Lords Justices seem to have lost sight of the words underlined. Lord Justice Mellish in particular would appear to have based his judgment on the supposition "that neither the Act nor the rules contain any provision about the way in which the rejection of such a resolution" (a resolution relative to the acceptance of a composition) "is to be proved." But surely the latter part of the 275th rule, applies to the alternative resolution of rejecting either of the previously mentioned modes of arrangement. What other construction can possibly be put upon the rule? In the particular case, the resolution for the acceptance of a composition does not appear to have been confirmed at a duly convened subsequent meeting under rule 282, and therefore not entitled on that ground, to registration; and had that been the basis of the decision of the Lords Justices, no fault could have been found with it, but as it stands, it is to my mind inconsistent with the 275th rule, and I cannot but think the construction put upon that rule by the Chief Judge to be the right one. Z.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY ARBITRATION.—The first sitting of the committee appointed to inquire into the above matter took place on Thursday, Sir Spencer Walpole in the chair. Sir Edmund Beckett said this was a bill for making certain alterations in the Act of 1872, rendered necessary by the death of Lords Westbury and Romilly. The object of the bill of 1872 was to refer to the determination of a single arbitrator, with absolute power, all questions involved in the winding up of the European Assurance Company, and 44 other societies which had been gradually affiliated with it. The learned counsel gave a resumé of the proceedings which led to the adoption of the principle of arbitration in the cases of the European and the Albert Societies, and the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway. The costs of the Albert in Chancery amounted to £72,000, and the amount which had been recovered under the arbitration was only £2,500. The European Company, before it got into arbitration, spent something like £120,000 in Chancery upon itself and its affiliated companies, and in their case they had not even recovered £2,500, as in the case of the Albert. The present bill, the learned counsel explained, had been introduced by direction of the Lord Chancellor and Lord Justice James, with a view to remedy the inconsistencies which had taken place in the decisions of Lord Romilly and Lord Westbury on the question of novation. In addition to the want of uniformity of decision, they now had no arbitration. The supply of men was limited; for, according to the act of 1872, the Lord Chancellor was confined in his choice to persons having held judicial office. In connection with this matter, the name of Lord Selborne at once suggested itself; but he was authorised to say the noble lord had positively declined the office. Mr. Justice Keating had retired on account of ill health, and Chief Justice Erle and Mr. Justice Martin on account of old age, and it was known that Mr. Justice Byles would not serve. Under these circumstances the Lord Chancellor had brought in the bill, which provided for the appointment as arbitrator of barristers of 15 years' standing. The decision of the barrister, however, was not to be final; for power of appeal was given to the very class of judicial persons from whom arbitrators were formerly drawn, and who, as a court, could not die like individuals.—The committee then proceeded to take evidence.

RUPTURES—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.
WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of 500 Medical Men to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer, Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London. Price of a single Truss, 16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., 31s. 6d, Postage Free. Double Truss, 31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage free. An Umbilical Truss, 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage free. P.O.O. to be made payable to JOHN WHITE, Post-office, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c. for Varicose Veins, and all cases of Weakness and Swelling of the Legs, Sprains, &c. They are porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price from 4s. 6d., 7s, 6d., 10s, to 16s. each. Postage free.

CHEST EXPANDING BRACES, for both sexes. For gentlemen they are a substitute for the ordinary braces. For children they are invaluable; they prevent stooping and preserve the symmetry of the chest. Prices for children, 5s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. Adults, 10s. 6d., 15s. 6d., and 21s. each. Postage free.—JOHN WHITE, Manufacturer, 228 Piccadilly, London.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

THE ONLY AND SPECIAL

HOBBS, HART, & CO.
AT THE VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.
This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

TRANSLATIONS.

MR. ALFRED W. GEE,
BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,
62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

JULY 10, 1875.

[To SUBSCRIBERS.—Owing to press of matter, several communications are held over till next week.]

The unpleasant position of a trustee has been for a long time proverbial among lawyers. He takes upon himself an office from which he is prohibited from drawing any profit, while he is responsible to the utmost farthing, for any loss which may be incurred through his want of literal compliance with the terms of his trust. He is besieged by applications from his cestuis que trustent for advancement of portions, or for investment in more remunerative securities than the courts allow; and if he refuses to comply with these requests, or, like a wise man, goes at once to solicitor and counsel to know the exact limits within which he may act, he is looked upon as a tyrant, and accused of squandering the trust funds in law expenses. If, however, a trustee of private property is not afraid of the accusation of churlishness, and makes up his mind to follow literally his instructions, he may have the ultimate satisfaction of knowing that, if he has derived no good from his office, he has yet been free from personal loss, and when the final accounts are arranged, and a release given him, he may go home a free man, rejoicing at his escape.

A trustee in bankruptcy is, however, in a very different position. He may, by the exercise of great skill and acumen, and with the help of a fair share of luck, contrive to make as much profit out of his position, as if he had continued to devote his time to his ordinary business. But, on the other hand, he is responsible to two sets of masters, whose interests are directly antagonistic, and one of whom will scarcely look upon him with friendly eyes. He has to incur expenses which may never be repaid; he is personally responsible for the payment of claims the amount of which he can never recover; and he has, in many instances, to discover the true state of the law on any particular point, with the knowledge that a fortunate guess will bring him no special return, while a mistake in judgment may lead to his being mulcted in the penalty of very heavy costs. Our correspondent who signs himself "A Sufferer" is able to vouch practically for the accuracy of the opinion which we expressed in commenting upon the decision of the Lords Justices in Ebbs v. Boulnois, and suggests that the contingency of loss under such circumstances may well be taken into consideration in estimating the proper amount of a trustee's remuneration. Is there no way by which a trustee who is unlucky enough to become the victim of judicial error can be protected? He has divided his estate, or handed over a surplus to the debtor; and he finds that he has done wrong, and has to do what he can to recoup himself the loss incurred. But it is important to protect as far as possible trustees acting in discharge of their duty. There are many rules of law which, though doing hardship to individuals, yet find their justification in grounds of public expediency. Such is the doctrine of "innocent holders" of bills of exchange, which has protected thousands of fraudulent transactions, and has been a source of wealth to innumerable swindlers and tricksters. But to cast upon every holder of a bill of exchange, whose chief essential is its free negotiability, the duty of proving facts necessarily beyond his own knowledge, was justly thought to be more detrimental to commercial interests than the possibilities of fraud and hardship. So we say that it is to the public interest that trustees acting bonâ fide in the discharge of their duties should be protected; and that the interests of individuals, whether creditors or debtors, should be postponed to the due discharge of official functions. It is hard, that a man who has acted in conformity with reported decisions, should be mulcted in heavy penalties because of the error of the judge; and to declare that such decision should be considered as final, would be to do away with the right of appeal altogether. But this much might, we think, be enacted, and would meet fairly the justice of the case. At the present time a number of trustees are liable to actions, because the law has been changed. Law is, practically, what the judges declare. The declaration of a Court of Law is authoritative, and binds every one, unless and until it is varied upon appeal. Now, in altering the law by Act of Parliament, every respect is usually paid to vested interests, and retrospective action is as far as possible avoided. Suppose that a declaratory statute was passed, making it incumbent on holders of bills of exchange to prove in every case not only that they had given value for them, but that all intermediate holders down to the original makers of the note had given due consideration, and that the title of the original indorser or discounter was perfect, how many actions would at once arise, unless the retrospective action of the statute was clearly barred. So with regard to the results of the decision in Ebbs v. Boulnois. Virtually it is an alteration of the law, though formally it is only the correction of a wrong exposition. Let it be declared that the doctrine enounced is to apply only to the future, and that no transactions which were in conformity with the law as laid down by Sir James Bacon shall be re-opened, merely on the ground of this new decision. This will, we think, fully meet the difficulty; otherwise much serious derangement will arise. Let us suppose that the House of Lords, after consideration, reverses the decision of the Lords Justices, and restores the law to its previous condition. In that case, we might see the absurd result of men being fined and cast in damages for obedience to the law, if, in reliance on the views of the Lords Justices, they have proceeded to retrace the steps which they took on the authority of Sir James Bacon. If this be so, the worst fears of our correspondent will not appear to be in the least degree exaggerated.

The "Eupion" Gas Company has already attained some notoriety through the investigations of the police courts; and the little history told of the means by which the requirements of the Stock Exchange prior to granting a settling day were complied with, or, to speak perhaps more correctly, evaded, is full of suggestive interest to investors generally. The juggle very much resembled the well-known ruse employed to swell out theatrical pageants, by which every man on leaving the stage runs round at the back of the scene and enters again as part of continued processions. The money is originally lent by the Midland Bank to the promoters; it then appears as deposit-money paid by the shareholders; then it apparently becomes allotment money, and is finally re-transferred to the Midland Bank, in what capacity the court had to decide. According to the official liquidator, this money was the property of the shareholders; while the Bank contended it was a mere loan, which had been repaid. The Vice-Chancellor, in deciding in favour of the Bank, commented very sharply on the conduct of all persons concerned. We could wish, however, in the interests of justice, that he had come to a different conclusion in some respects. If, he said, in effect, the claim of the liquidator were to be allowed, this money would be applied in payment of debts and costs; and the surplus would have to be divided among the very persons who had concocted the fraud. But, with every deference to Sir Richard Malins, this would exactly meet the justice of the case. The bank would rank among the creditors of the company; but the dividend paid to them would depend upon the expenses of the liquidation, and the amount of the other debts, and would probably leave a large balance to be extracted from the contributories. It may be the case that the property in the money never passed out of the Midland Bank and was never meant to pass; but it might nevertheless be fairly inferred that it did. As it is, the bank has come out of the scrape with tolerable success, considering that its manager, for whose acts the bank must be held responsible, was as culpable as any of his confederates. The case, like too many others of which the Court of Chancery has to take cognizance, illustrates the fact that the most plausible schemers get assistance in carrying out their plans from quarters that ought to be above all suspicion.

People who look upon law as a highly technical science, bristling with pitfalls to the inexperienced, must be often amazed at the common-sense ordinary principles upon which many of our Appeal Judges often proceed in framing their decisions. The way in which Lord Justice James disentangled the case of Ex parte Yglesias In re Gomez from legal subtleties, and reduced it to a plain, simple examination of the intention of the parties, was a remarkable specimen of clear legal reasoning. The point was simply this:—Yglesias was in the habit of accepting bills for Gomez for a commission of 1 per cent. To meet these when they fell due, Gomez was in the habit of transmitting other bills, with the proceeds of which Yglesias met his acceptances at maturity. On the insolvency of Yglesias, he had in his possession various acceptances sent him by Gomez; and the question arose to whom they belonged. On behalf of Yglesias, it was said that they were his absolute property, and that as his creditors had released him, and accepted a composition, he was entitled to retain and apply them for his own purposes. On the other hand, it was urged that Yglesias held them as trustee for Gomez. They were sent to him for a specific purpose, namely, to meet the bills which Gomez had drawn; and though, so long as he did this, no question could be raised as to his right to negotiate them, he was bound to use them only for the purpose for which they had been entrusted to him. This view Lord Justice James upheld in an admirably clear and lucid judgment, though it turns too much on the merits of the case to form a useful precedent, or to cast much light on the troubled waters of trusteeship, other than throwing some doubt on a previous decision of Vice-Chancellor Giffard, from which it was easy to see that the superior court dissented. The principle of Yglesias' case is, that monies in the hands of a bankrupt destined for a particular purpose, revert to the original owner, unless that purpose is, or can be, fulfilled. On every ground, however, the judgment is worth special and careful study.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DEFICIENCY.—It is very doubtful if a jury would convict under the circumstances you mention. It has been held that the prisoner must negative the intent to defraud, and that such intent will be assumed where a debtor disposes of all his property. But if the accounts have been carelessly kept, the debtor will probably escape. A public examination would perhaps disclose something further, and the trustee should, for his own protection, take the opinion of the body of creditors.

IS A CRISIS AT HAND?

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—Many of our leading papers have for the last month endeavoured to show that there is no real cause for anxiety in the present state of trade; and that, notwithstanding the failures which have already taken place, trade is not in a bad state. In support of this argument, reference is constantly being made to the exports and imports of the country. I readily admit that the export and import returns should be the most reliable indications of demand and supply, but I must take exception to such returns—so far, at least, as exports are concerned—being treated as a reliable guide at present, unless (which is practically impossible) there be shown in a tabulated form the destination, cost, and realisation of the goods so exported. With a view to starting a discussion which may open the eyes of the nation to the necessity of bringing about some radical changes in our present mode of trading and financing, I purpose calling attention to some of the reasons which lead one to believe that there is much cause for anxiety—not only in the present, but also in the future of our country, if the existing course of trade is allowed to continue.

Of course, I am quite prepared to be regarded as an alarmist; but I shall I be only too glad to find that England is not to become a bye-word among trading, as she has among fighting, nations. Perhaps at no time has England been considered more wealthy than now. How much her wealth may become modified when she realises the whole of her losses under the heading of money lent to foreign states, and undertakings which were never intended to pay—has yet to be learnt; but those bad debts will have to be written off some day, and then, perhaps, English people will learn that there is some connection between high interest and low security. I will, however, confine myself to England's position as a trading, rather than as a money-lending nation.

The present crisis (for a serious crisis it will, I believe, prove to be) is what first concerns us. Those who have been at all behind the scenes during the past few years must have foreseen a portion of present events, which are only the natural consequences of the facilities I complain of.

For a long while money has been cheap (except during a short period); and for a long while also—the causes of which must be traced back to the general want of confidence arising out of the events of 1866—there was in bona-fide trade little real demand for money.

I would premise that I am not an opponent of free trade, provided it is not allowed to remain, as at present, a one-sided arrangement, neither do I object to credit, which, within proper limits, is the natural necessity and first cause of trade, as in contradistinction to the more primitive system of barter. In my humble opinion, the following are a few of the causes which have tended, and are tending, to bring about the present and coming state of affairs.

Firstly—The facilities granted by manufacturers and others to so-called merchants, who purchase goods say for 50 per cent. cash and 50 per cent. on acceptances, which are, of course, at once discounted; and immediately consign the goods for sale to India, China, or some other distant part, where a demand is supposed to exist, but where, in all probability, the markets are already glutted. Some bank most good naturedly advances 75 per cent. on the shipping documents, not at the rate of interest current in England, but at that of the place where the goods are to be sold. This rate may be taken at say 1 per cent. per month, and the loan is for a specified time, say 6 or 8 months. If the goods are sold, rebate of interest at perhaps 5 per cent. per annum is allowed, so that the bankers have a jolly time of it being, except in rare instances, fully covered. The sellers having consented to take only 50 per cent. in cash, and the bank advancing (less interest) 75 per cent. on the invoices, the " merchant " naturally gets the advantage of the margin, which enables him to extend his operations and repeat the game ad libitum. All goes on swimmingly until it becomes necessary to have remittances, when, notwithstanding all the glowing reports received from abroad, the markets are nearly sure to be against him (even if his agents act honestly towards him), and account sales arrive one after the other showing little or no margin wherewith to discharge his acceptances to the sellers, who have no alternative but to renew or force the merchant to suspend. This their own engagements will perhaps make it undesirable to do, and the renewed bills again go forward for discount, and so on, until the accumulation gets so great as to bring about the failure of one or both of the parties, when the English discount houses find themselves, as at the present time, the happy owners of unrealisable " promises to pay."

Now, sir, in a transaction of this nature there are, according to my ideas, three prime sinners:—(1) the manufacturers or sellers, who, finding no legitimate demand for their merchandise, adopt this course of converting it into cash, charging probably a proportionate increase for the risk; (2) the foreign banks, without whose aid (entailing as a rule no risk whatever on themselves) such transactions would be impossible; and (3) the merchant, who should know that in the long-run no consignment business can pay, unless in the first place the consignee's interest is by partnership identical with his own; and in the second place, he trades within the limit of his own capital, and is independent of advances by bankers. The merchant is, however, the one least to blame in the matter, for he only avails himself of facilities readily conceded to him, and to which our bankruptcy laws raise no objection whatever. The merchant is, in fact, almost in the same position as a small speculative builder who erects houses with other people's money; if things turn out well (that is, if his houses sell quickly), then he is all right, whereas if things turn out badly, his creditors are all wrong.

The remedy for this is in the hands of the sellers, who should refuse to execute orders on credit, unless certified copies of the indents are produced, or be debarred from proving for speculative transactions in the event of bankruptcy; and also by the insertion of a penal clause in the Bankruptcy Act for reckless trading.

Secondly—The ease with which trading firms can put accommodation paper into circulation. There are times when the wealthiest houses require temporary accommodation, and there should be no difficulty in obtaining it upon a true representation of the facts. At present it is obtained by a legally permitted lie.

The remedy for this would be to make it compulsory to substitute on bills of exchange for the words "value received," the actual consideration given—such as "goods sold and delivered," or "money lent," "security held," &c.; and by law treating misrepresentations in this respect as frauds.

Thirdly—The manner in which the term "free trade" has by recent bankruptcy legislation been prostituted, until it has degenerated into a simple license to swindle. When imprisonment for debt was done away with, some remedy should have been left to creditors. That remedy exists theoretically in bankruptcy; but the interpretation of our existing bankruptcy laws renders any such attempted remedy a complete comedy. Fancy a man telling his creditors that he had purposely abstained from keeping books in order to suppress the evidence necessary to convict him under the Debtors' Act, and offering them the alternative of two shillings in the pound under a composition, or nothing in the pound in bankruptcy, no explanation whatever as to the deficiency of eighteen shillings in the pound being furnished. I have seen this done, Mr. Editor; and the creditors, appreciating the soundness of the argument, took the two shillings in the pound like lambs.

A bankrupt who now goes into court with any assets is a fool. If there are none, it is ten to one against any serious opposition being offered, and he can at his leisure generally get free, say twelve months later under a scheme of settlement by paying some ridiculously small instalment. And this is the Act which was to bring about arrangements of a minimum of ten shillings in the pound!

Fourthly.—The mania for speculation (not trade or investment) which pervades all classes. And fifthly.—The strikes in some of our principal specialties, which have already so seriously compromised our prestige as to reduce us from monopolists to open, and at times unsuccessful, competitors.

Before England can hope to resume her proud position as the head of the commercial world, very serious modifications must take place in her trade usages, and these modifications will not be effected unless the laws render them compulsory.

I am, Sir, your obedient Servant,

EXPERT COMPTABLE.

RESPONSIBILITIES OF TRUSTEES.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

Dear Sir,—Your issue of the 19th ultimo contains a report of the case of "Cornelius Bennett Harness," under which, liquidation by arrangement was duly registered, and, as since proposed, a scheme duly accepted by the creditors whereby he should purchase the whole of the assets (with a trifling exception) for a sum of £3,000, payable by instalments, and secured by the joint bond of the debtor and his father, the debtor paying the costs of the liquidation; the assets being estimated upon the statement of affairs at £5,222. It also appears by the report that Mr. Lamb, of the office of the liquidation department, having regard to the discrepancy in the figures, "and other circumstances," refused to certify that the proposal was fair and reasonable; whereas, the trustee stated that considerable depreciation had occurred in the value of the assets. The Court, holding that the resolutions were not in the nature of a scheme under the 28th section, declined to make the order, and left the trustee to take the responsibility upon himself of selling the property upon the terms of the resolution. It has always appeared to me that the intention of the marvellous Act of 1869, was practically to leave the administration of an estate in the hands of the creditors. Here, notwithstanding the concurrence of a statutory majority of creditors, the court has deliberately placed an obstacle in the trustee's way, or thrown upon him the onus of personal risk (I suppose as to possible dissenting creditors) in carrying out the views of those interested. This surely is a glaring anomaly! Are not the responsibilities of a trustee sufficiently great, without further obstacles being placed in his path? If the creditors choose to direct the trustee to release the estate upon credit, and, as they appear to believe, under conditions which are advantageous to themselves, why should the evident intentions of the Act be so stultified as to render it impossible for the trustee, except at a personal risk, to give effect to their views? Similar schemes of settlement have been brought forward under bankruptcies, of which I will cite the case of "Nokes and Carlisle, bankrupts," whose statement of affairs showed large paper assets, and yet nevertheless, one of the bankrupts put forward a scheme of settlement, whereby by deed he has to pay to the trustee under the bankruptcy a sum of £4,000, distributed in annual payments over ten years. Is it, or is it not a fact, that the creditors are to have control of their own estate? If not, why should they be humbugged into the belief that they have. The terms of the Act have, in realisation, proved very disappointing. The trading community originally believed that the Act would induce men to suspend while a dividend of ten shillings in the pound was yet forthcoming. Experience, however, teaches us that judicious bankrupts follow the principle of the old Act, and take care not to come into court until the whole of their assets are dissipated. It is, perhaps, not an honest course, but it has the advantage of reducing all hostility and opposition to a minimum. The old Roman law gave creditors the right to a man's carcase if he could not pay. More modern legislation gave them the right to make him forfeit his liberty. The present legislation is far more humane. Every facility is offered to fraud; and where the law falls short in protecting reckless or dishonest trading, creditors themselves are kindly coming to the rescue. Look how goodnaturedly the warehousemen and wholesale grocers are endeavouring to give the finishing touches to the existing facilities for fraud! The day may arrive when they will realise the fact that there is such a thing as being "penny-wise-and-pound-foolish." I assert that it is perfectly feasible to frame a law which will enable trustees to administer estates at a low and yet remunerative scale; but that in order to do so, it will be necessary to show a little sympathy both to creditors, and their agents the trustees.

Yours truly,

A TRUSTEE.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

DEAR SIR,—I have read with much interest the very full report of the appeal before the Lords Justices in "Ebbs v. Boulnois," and also the report "re F. Milnes" of Sheffield, both of which are contained in your issue of the 19th June last. At the time when the trustee in the latter case held a meeting, the creditors appear to have passed a resolution which was actually in accord with the highest legal decisions then given. The directions so given would, however, appear to be now diametrically opposed to the last decision of the Lords Justices. It is possible that many trustees may have acted in accordance with the pre-existing views, and now find themselves in the happy position of having divided their estates, and being called upon to defend suits at their own expense, and with the possibility of getting a heavy verdict against them. I particularly desire to call your attention to this risk, as I believe that many trustees are to a great extent ignorant of the responsibilities of their position, and creditors appear to persistently ignore that such responsibilities must of necessity form an item of calculation in the question of remuneration. Acting under the express directions of a committee of inspection, and with perfect good faith, I have already had the luxury of paying money out of pocket for practical experience as to the explanation of the word "trustee."

Allow me to suggest that the Societies of Accountants should take some opportunity of calling the attention of the public to the fact that the trustees do not hold absolute sinecures.

Yours truly,
A SUFFERER.

To the Editor of the Acconutant.

DEAR SIR,—The report of the case "Sprunt v. Carr," contained in No. 28 of your paper, illustrates the fact that persons calling themselves "accountants" are not the only individuals who sometimes do curious things. It is interesting, as showing how hostile creditors occasionally consent to the extraction of their stings, and the utility of legal advisers in bringing about such very desirable arrangements.

Yours truly,
INNOCENT.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointment of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. Frederick William Sperring, of 26 Philpot-lane, Fenchurch-street, E.C., has been appointed Trustee of the estate of Mr. Thomas Jeffery, late of Dorking, Surrey, now of the White Horse Inn, Rupert-street, Haymarket.

Mr. Frederick William Sperring, of 26 Philpot-lane, Fenchurch-street, E.C., has been appointed Receiver and Manager of the estate of James Morrall and Son, the Grange, Grange road, Bermondsey, Surrey, calf kid leather dressers and tanners.

Vice-Chancellor Hall has appointed Mr. James, of James and Edwards, official liquidator of the Indestructible Paint Company, Limited.

THE BANKRUPTCY VOTE.

A correspondent writes:—The parliamentary proceedings of Tuesday last were not without interest to accountants practising in bankruptcy. On the motion to vote the sum of £38,635 to complete the amount required for the Bankruptcy Court, a short but somewhat interesting discussion took place. It was advocated by an eminent commercial member of the house (Sir A. Lusk) that the total abolition of the Court of Bankruptcy would be of the greatest benefit to trade, and that the establishment of a Court of Commerce would be found to be the only antidote against commercial frauds and swindles. We confess, it is taking a rather wide view of the matter to stigmatise bankruptcy proceedings as loop-holes through which swindlers, who become indebted "to the extent of millions," are enabled through the machinery of the Bankruptcy Act to creep safely out of their liabilities and obligations. Take the proceedings under the present Act as it stands, few cases are so greatly involved in fraud and deception as some may please to imagine. It must certainly be admitted that the administration is not what it ought to be; that there is existing a great want for reform, and that gross and nefarious transactions do at times become "whitewashed" through the medium of the court; but whether or not the total abolition of the court would be a wise or a necessary step, it would certainly be accompanied by the most serious consequences to the commercial classes. What, may be asked, will you put in its place? Bad it may be, and undoubtedly is; but what have you got better? In August 1874 a Commission, which on Tuesday received the happy qualification of "departmental," was appointed by the Lord Chancellor, to investigate the faulty features, and recommend alterations in the unfortunately framed Act of 1869. We have arrived at July 1875, and the public receives the terse and promising information that there is no probability of the report of this valuable and hard-working Committee being ready for presentation until after the prorogation. This, we must confess, will be scarcely re-assuring to the members of those societies by whom strenuous and timely steps were taken to be represented on the committee. It becomes obvious that the capacity of those appointed is either too weak to grapple with a prevailing nuisance, or that to rest on one's oars in the security of a fond hope that all will come right of itself is the order of the day. We cannot help expressing our gratitude to Sir A. Lusk for his observations on Tuesday night. It is generally admitted that it matters little whether the bull be taken by the horns or tail, so long as he be taken; even so to grapple with the present Bankruptcy Act, either by extinguishing it altogether, or amending it in part, matters but little, as long as a measure be framed and adopted that will be in harmony with the requirements of the day.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, WESTMINSTER.

(Sittings in Banco at Westminster, before the LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, Mr. Justice BLACKBURN, and Mr. Justice LUSH.)

LOW v. BLAKEMORE.—This case raised a short but important point, which for some years past has been much contested, whether a judgment creditor having an order to attach the debts due to his debtor is a "secured creditor" entitled to preference or protection under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, in the event of a bankruptcy. Mr. Justice Lush delivered an elaborate judgment, in which the Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Mellor, and Mr. Justice Field, who heard the case, concurred, to the effect that the judgment creditor under such circumstances is to be regarded as a "secured creditor" within the Bankruptcy Act, and they therefore decided in his favour against the receiver in Bankruptcy who claimed to be entitled to the money.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

July 1.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of APPEAL.)

EX PARTE GOMEZ—IN RE YGLESIAS.—This appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Pepys, acting as Chief Judge, involved a question of some mercantile importance. The appeal was argued in Easter term, and this morning the judgment of the court was delivered. The question in dispute arose out of the insolvency of Messrs. Jose Antoni Yglesias and Carlos Michael Yglesias, merchants, of Jeffreys-square, St. Mary-axe, trading as J. R. Yglesias and Co., who filed a liquidation petition on the 20th July, 1874, under which Mr. William Turquand was appointed receiver of their property. Ultimately their creditors resolved to accept a composition of 3s. 4d. in the pound, and that the debtors should also assign a large debt then owing to them from J. Firmat and Co., of Buenos Ayres (which was considered doubtful), on trust for the benefit of the creditors rateably. The question on the present appeal was as to the right to the proceeds of some bills of exchange which had been remitted to Yglesias and Co. by Mr. R. M. Gomez, of Malaga, to meet other bills he had drawn on Yglesias and Co., and which they had accepted for his accommodation. The proceeds of these remitted bills, amounting to £5,545, came into the hands of Mr. Turquand as receiver, and the question arose who was entitled to them. Yglesias and Co. claimed them, and they were also claimed by some of the holders of their acceptances, on the authority of the well-known case of "Ex parte Waring" (19 Ves., 345). The Registrar decided against the billholders, and in favour of Yglesias and Co.; Gomez appealed. The bill-holders did not appeal. Mr. Cohen, Q.C., and Mr. Robinson, Q C., were for the appellant; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Daniel Jones were for Yglesias and Co.; Mr. John Linklater was for the receiver. The other material facts of the case were stated in the judgment of the court, which was delivered by Lord Justice James as follows:—Gomez, a merchant abroad, was in the habit of drawing bills of exchange on Yglesias, a merchant in London, who accepted those bills for the accommodation of Gomez, in consideration of a commission of 1 per cent. Either contemporaneously with the letters announcing that the bills were so drawn, or afterwards, other bills were remitted by Gomez to Yglesias, in order to provide the latter with funds to meet the acceptances, and to keep him out of cash advances. The two letters which I am about to read show the course of proceeding between the parties. His Lordship read the two following letters:—"Malaga, 8th July, 1874. Messrs. J. R. Yglesias and Co., London. Dear Sirs,—Yours of the 1st inst. crossed by mine of yesterday, which I confirm, is in conformity. I have drawn on you for £600, £400, £1,000, at three months' date, order of Banco de Castilla, which you will please accept to my debit in No. 1 account. I enclose first of exchange for £927 14s. 8d. at 60 days' sight, on Messrs, F. Huth and Co., to my credit in the same account. I am, &c., R. M. Gomez." "Malaga, 9th July, 1874. Messrs. J. R. Yglesias and Co., London. Dear Sirs,—I confirm mine of yesterday, and have to hand your esteemed of the 2nd inst., which is in conformity. I enclose first of exchange for £100, at three months' date on Wattengall, Campbell, for my credit in account No. 1, and £28 6s at eight days' sight on Sunderland, payable there (in London) to account No. 2. Yours, &c., R. M. Gomez." The account No. 1 was the account of the accommodation acceptances and of the remittances made in respect of them. The account No. 2. was the account of all other dealings and transactions between the parties. The fact that there were these two accounts between them appears to us to be a fact of the utmost importance in the case, and, unless controlled by something else, shown by or to be inferred from the course of dealing between the parties, shows conclusively, in our opinion, that the remittances were sent exclusively for the purpose of taking up the accommodation acceptances as they became due, and were appropriated for that purpose. It is suggested that the accounts kept by Yglesias, and periodically transmitted by him to Gomez and accepted by the latter, show that the remittances were received and treated by Yglesias as his absolute property, and that he had only to give credit for them as so much cash received. We are satisfied, however, on a careful examination of the account, that it had not and was not intended to have any effect in altering the legal relations between the parties, and the rights flowing from the fact that acceptances were given by Yglesias on the one hand, and remittances sent by Gomez on the other hand to provide for those acceptances. The dates on which the debits were made on the one side, and the credits were given on the other, appear to us to be a mere accountant's manipulation of figures, for the purpose of showing how the interest account would stand on the hypothesis that every bill would be honoured when due. It is not pretended that Yglesias became the purchaser of the remittances to him, or that he took them as absolute payment and discharge of so much money. On the contrary, when any of them were dishonoured the amount and costs were placed to the debit of Gomez. It is suggested that Yglesias had full right to discount the bills the moment he received them. But that is always the case in these matters. It is never expected or understood that a banker, or a man in the position of Yglesias, is to keep the things locked up in his drawer so long as he is going on and solvent. The mode in which he is to use the remittances for the purpose of putting himself in funds is for his discretion and judgment, and the right to interfere with them only arises (like the analogous right of stoppage in transitu or resumption of vendor's lien), where there is actual or imminent insolvency patent. We start then with this, that Yglesias was liable as surety for Gomez on a large amount of acceptances, and, on the other hand, he had the remittances to meet or provide pro tanto for those acceptances. In that state of things Yglesias failed, and at the time of his failure there were in his hands remaining in specie a large amount of Gomez's remittances which had been so specifically appropriated. It appears to us that, in accordance with principle and a whole current of authorities in Equity, (whatever might be the legal right of property in the bills, which it is not necessary to consider) Gomez had a right to take out of the hands of Yglesias those remittances, subject to any lien of the latter in respect of the liability he has incurred. Now, with respect to the latter, he has made a statutory composition of 3s. 4d. in the pound, and it is not suggested that that composition is not, as between Yglesias and the billholders, a valid and effectual discharge, so that all he has paid and all he is liable to pay for Gomez is the amount represented by that composition, and Gomez continues liable on his draughts for the remaining 16s. 8d. in the pound. It is stated

Digitized by Google

(and if this is not admitted there must be an inquiry on this point) that crediting Yglesias in account with only the 3s. 4d. in the pound, the balance is not in his favour, leaving the above-mentioned remittances wholly free, and it is not suggested that if Gomez had actually paid or taken up the acceptances, paying the remaining 16s. 8d. in the pound, he would not be entitled to have the remittances given up to him, if we assume, as we have held, that they were specifically appropriated. It is, however, suggested that Gomez himself is in some sense insolvent, that he has not paid, and is not able to pay, the acceptances to the billholders. That cannot, in our opinion, give any right or equity to Yglesias, who, as between him and Gomez, is only entitled to reimbursement and indemnity, and he has been fully reimbursed, and is fully indemnified, no matter by what means that indemnity has been obtained or his liability discharged. Gomez is, in our judgment, entitled, whether he is rich or poor, solvent or insolvent, to have back his remittances, to enable him, it may be, to make a like favourable composition in his turn with his creditors. It is not suggested that the right of Gomez has been intercepted by the right of any trustee, or assignee, or other like person, under any thing in the nature of bankruptcy or cessio bonorum, or the like, under the laws of his country. The view of the case which we have taken renders it unnecessary to dispose of another point which might have been of great importance in this case. It appears that of the remittances as much as £2,636 were sent with letters announcing draughts for acceptance, which were not accepted, they having arrived after the stoppage. We think that there is very great ground for saying that the language and reasonings of all the learned lords who advised their House in the case of "Shepherd v. Harrison" ("Law Reports, 5 House of Lords," 116) would apply to this case; that, from the course of dealing between the parties, there would be implied that, which would not, according to mercantile courtesy and usage, be said in so many words—namely, "I send you the remittances on the faith that you will accept the draughts." That would, no doubt, appear to be inconsistent with the decision of Vice-Chancellor Giffard in "Trimingham v. Maud" ("Law Report," 7 Eq. 201). But it is to be observed that that decision was pronounced some years before the case in the House of Lords, and further that, as a matter of fact, the Vice-Chancellor came to the conclusion that there was only one general account, and that the remittances were made on that general account. It is not necessary for any present purpose critically to examine that decision, but we are not sure that we can reconcile the premises, and the conclusion in the judgment. Something has been said about the rights of the billholders under the doctrine of "Ex parte Waring." It appears that some billholders did apply by their own summons, and had an adverse decision, which has not been appealed from, and is now past appeal. There being nothing to show that Gomez's property has been, or is, the subject of judicial liquidation, or that he has obtained the benefit of a legal composition or discharge, there are not two estates within the meaning of "Ex parte Waring" or "Powles v. Hargreaves," and no means, therefore, of applying the doctrine of those cases. The result, therefore, will be that the order of the Registrar will be discharged, and the money in question ordered to be paid to Gomez. Yglesias to pay the costs before the Registrar. No costs of the appeal. Some discussion then ensued with regard to the assignment made by Yglesias and Co. of Firmat and Co.'s debt, the result of which, it was said, would be that, if any thing was ultimately realised for the creditors of Yglesias and Co. from that source, the latter would be entitled to an indemnity from Gomez beyond the amount of the composition of 3s. 4d. in the pound. It is not yet ascertained what will be realised from Firmat and Co.'s debt. In the result, the Court said that they could only decide at present that the application of Yglesias and Co. to have the whole fund paid to them must be refused. The fund must remain at present, with liberty to Gomez to apply. The receiver would retain his costs out of the fund, and this amount must be made good by Yglesias and Co.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

July 1.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR R. MALINS.)

IN RE THE EUPION FUEL AND GAS COMPANY, LIMITED.—This matter came on upon a motion by the official liquidator of the above named company for an order that the Midland Banking Company, Limited (hereinafter called the Midland Bank) might, within four days after the service of the order, pay to the official liquidator of the Eupion Company the sum of £35,000 in their hands, received by them for and on behalf of the Eupion Company. It appeared from the evidence of the official liquidator that the Eupion Company was formed on the 7th of March, 1874, with a nominal capital of £50,000 in 50,000 shares of one pound each, of which one-half was to be paid on application, and one-half on allotment. The object of the company was the purchase of some patents for making gas and fuel for £40,000, of which £15,000 was to be advanced on fully paid-up shares, and £25,000 in cash. A Mr. Aspinall and Mr. Whyte were two of the directors of the company. The company was advertised and the public invited to subscribe for the 35,000 shares which had to be allotted, but no subscriptions came in. Mr. Aspinall and Mr. Whyte, acting by a Mr. Muir, a promoter of the company, and by the then manager of the Midland Bank, arranged with that bank that sufficient moneys should be lent by the bank to Mr. Aspinall and Mr. Muir to enable them to have the whole of the shares allotted, and to procure a settlement and quotation of the shares from the committee of the Stock Exchange. The agreement was carried out by the Midland Bank thus:—They lent Mr. Muir and Mr. Aspinall, upon bills of Mr. Muir accepted by Mr. Aspinall, £17,500, with which Mr. Muir and Mr. Aspinall were to pay, or cause to be paid, sums into the bankers of the Eupion Company, viz. the National Provincial Bank of England, in the names of applicants for 35,000 shares in the company; and as soon as the money was paid into the bankers of the company, it was to be paid out and deposited with the Midland Bank. The Midland Bank accordingly, through their manager, made several payments of money to Mr. Muir between the 19th of March, 1874, and the 23rd of June, 1874, secured by acceptances of Mr. Aspinall. The payments were made by cheques drawn by the Midland Bank, through their manager, on the London and County Bank, in favour of a "number," but for the account of Mr. Muir and Mr. Aspinall. The cheques so drawn were then cashed, and the proceeds paid by Mr. Muir and Mr. Aspinal into the bankers of the Eupion Company. Those bankers were at the same time supplied with the letters of application of several persons who had gone through the form of applying for shares in the Eupion Company, at the solicitation of Mr. Muir and Mr. Aspinall, in order that the cheques might be distributed between those persons in the banking account, and treated as a deposit of 10s. per share on the shares applied for. After those moneys had been so paid in they were drawn out from the National Provincial Bank of England by means of cheques signed by Mr. Aspinall and Mr. Whyte, who were then directors of the Eupion Company. Those cheques were in favour of the Midland Bank, and of these dates—viz., £2,500 on the 20th March, £2,500 on the 21st of March, £2,500 on the 23rd of March, and £4,000 on the 24th of March, 1874. In exchange for the cheques so handed over to the Midland Bank, they issued deposit receipts to the Eupion Company to the full amount of the respective cheques. On the 23rd of March, and subsequently, when so requested, on the 25th of March, 1874, Mr. Aspinall gave the manager of the Midland Bank a charge, by way of security for the moneys advanced on the deposits—or rather the moneys paid in as above-mentioned to the deposit account. Mr. Aspinall and Mr. Whyte subsequently drew cheques against the deposit account at the Midland Bank. The deposit receipts with the endorsements on them were now in the possession of the Midland Bank; but except as appeared by the endorsements (which, on behalf of the official liquidator of the Eupion Company, it was said Mr. Aspinall and Mr. Whyte had no authority to make), there was no evidence of any part of the £35,000 so received by the Midland Bank, as aforesaid, from the Eupion Company, having ever been repaid. The manager of the Midland Bank during the transactions in question by his affidavit entered into a detailed account of the circumstances of the case so far as he was concerned, but the above statements are sufficient, having regard to the judgment infra, to explain the general nature of this application. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Montague Cookson, Q.C., were for the official liquidator of the Eupion Company. Mr. Cotton, Q.C., and Mr. F. C. J. Millar contended that it was not £35,000, but £17,500 only, for which, if any thing, the official liquidator should have asked, though in fact there was nothing owing from the Midland Bank to the Eupion Company. It was supposed because the £35,000 had been paid in to the bankers of the Eupion Company that the money was therefore theirs, and, logically, the whole was asked for. But this case was identical with that suggested in "Gray v. Lewis" ("Law Reports 8, Chancery Appeals 1,052"), where it was thus put:—" You, the bank, have got moneys in your hands, moneys paid into your bank to our account, and for which, therefore, you are liable to us. They are moneys had and received by you to our use, and you are debtors to that amount. True it is, you say that you have in your own books discharged yourself of £230,000 of those moneys which you have so received by applying them in payment of certain bills of exchange under an authority signed by some of our directors, but that authority is perfectly idle. It was entirely ultra vires, and you knew it to be so." On similar grounds to those, and because the true ownership of the £35,000 was in the Midland Bank still, the motion in this case should, under all the circumstances of it, be refused, and with costs. The Vice-Chancellor said that on this motion by the official liquidator of the Eupion Company, it was obvious that the order asked for could not be made unless the Court was perfectly satisfied that the money in question belonged to that company. If it did, of course it would form part of the assets of the company. From what he had heard and seen of this company, it was plain to him that it had been a fraud from beginning to end. The application was a nominal one only for 50,000 shares of £1 each; and, although the chief clerk had fixed on the list of shareholders persons who held all the 50,000 shares, not one penny had ever really been paid in respect of them. It was usual in cases of companies to pay a deposit on any application for shares, and to make a further payment on allotment, but on neither occasion, in this instance, was any thing paid. Then came the transaction immediately in question, with reference to which he had said in the course of the argument, and he again repeated, that it was discreditable and disgraceful to all the parties concerned in it. This company, with all its shares nominally applied for, but wholly unpaid, found it necessary to get some quotation for the shares on the Stock Exchange, and for that purpose to obtain certificates that its shares had been applied and paid for. The manager of the Midland Bank lent himself to the transaction, and being a person who could, presumably, draw any amount of cheques upon his bank, drew several in March, 1874, for some thousands of pounds. The cheques were all printed with "and Co." on the face of them, so that they must necessarily pass though a banker's hands. They were drawn to "numbers," without any name, and were signed by the manager of the Midland Bank. But it did not suit the purpose of the parties that the cheques should pass through a banker's hands, and accordingly the words "and Co." were struck out, and "cash" substituted for them. The cheques were then taken to the London and County Bank and cashed, and the proceeds paid into the National Provincial Bank of England, who were the bankers of the Eupion Company. The money so paid was about £35,000 or £40,000, in round numbers. It was not all paid in one sum, but by several cheques of different amounts, and not one of the cheques was really paid in by any allottee of the shares. No sooner was the money paid in to the National Provincial Bank of England than it was again drawn out by two of the directors of the Eupion Company. On the Monday the money got into the National Provincial Bank of England; on the Tuesday it was drawn out by cheques in favour of the Midland Bank, and on the Wednesday it was paid into that bank. Then there was an arrangement between the manager of that bank and Mr. Muir. The manager undertook to discount draughts of Mr. Muir's not exceeding in the whole £10,000; and on the manager being assured of the safety of the transaction, so far as the Eupion Company was concerned, the money, apparently that of the Eupion Company, was improperly dealt with by the parties who had paid it into the Midland Bank. The whole thing was a mere sham. It was, as already observed, impossible to make the order on this motion, unless the money was undoubtedly the property of the Eupion Company. But suppose the liquidator got this money: the debts of the Eupion Company (exclusive of one claimed by the Midland Bank themselves, were only about £1,300. The money would have to be applied, first, in paying the expenses of the winding-up of that company, then in the discharge of its debts, and the surplus would have to be distributed among the very persons who had been guilty of all the fraud in this case; who had said they had taken shares, which they never did take, and for which, therefore, though they said they had paid, they never did pay. It was an unfortunate thing for the Midland Bank that they should have had such a manager, and it was impossible to say that his conduct was proper, or that what he had done was valid. The transaction was a disgraceful sham, and nothing either more or less. It was clear upon the whole case that the property in the £35,000 never passed out of the Midland Bank, in whom the right to it still remained, and the motion must, therefore, be refused; but as the Midland Bank were responsible for the acts of their manager, the motion must be refused, without costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

July 2.

(Before Mr. Registrar Pepys, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Gilead A. Smith and Co.—The debtors are merchants, carrying on business at 23 Change-alley, Cornhill, and at New York. Their debts and liabilities are estimated at £530,900, with assets of doubtful value. Mr. Linklater now applied for leave to file a petition for liquidation under the 125th and 126th sections, signed by three only of the partners in the firm. It appeared that the fourth partner was at New York, engaged in the business of the firm, but he had forwarded a power of attorney to this country authorising his co-partners to act for him. His Honour granted the application.

In re Alexander Collie and Co.—The debtors, Messrs. Alexander and William Collie, were described as merchants, of Leadenhall-street, and Manchester, and their liabilities were estimated at £3,400,000. Mr. Hollams, jun., now applied that a receiver and manager should be appointed. It appeared that the suspension occurred on the 15th ult., and the debtors had since presented a petition for liquidation by arrangement or composition. Goods of considerable value were stored at Manchester in warehouses belonging to the firm, and, in order to avoid loss, it was necessary to sell portions of them from time to time. The nomination of the proposed receiver and manager (Mr. Young, of the firm of Turquand and Co.) was approved by creditors for about £1,500,000, and it seemed that various matters were continually arising in reference to the estate which required immediate attention. His Honour said the desired order would be made.

July 3.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE J. AND E. LAND.—Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Pitt Taylor appeared in support of an application for the approval by the court of a composition accepted by creditors. The debtors, who were gun manufacturers, carrying on business in Cockspur-street, had filed a petition for liquidation, and at the first meeting the creditors resolved to liquidate by arrangement. The liabilities amounted to between £11,000 and £12,000, with assets £5,000, subject to reduction on realisation. At a meeting of creditors recently held under the 28th section, the creditors agreed to accept a composition of 6s. in the pound, payable by instalments. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE WILLIAM M'ARTHUR.—This was an appeal from an order of Mr. Registrar Keene, refusing to register a resolution of creditors in favour of liquidation by arrangement. Mr. Brough appeared for the appellant. The debtor was an iron merchant, carrying on a very extensive business at 122 Cannon-street and elsewhere, and he had also traded as the Caledonian Iron Foundry Company. At an adjourned first meeting, creditors to the amount of £104,923 passed unanimously a resolution for liquidation by arrangement, and appointed a trustee, but upon the matter being brought before Mr. Registrar Keene, he declined to register the resolution, on the ground that 29 creditors, whose debts amounted in the aggregate to £18,100, were not served with notice of the meeting. Subsequent investigation showed, however, that the actual total of the omitted creditors was £1,100 only. His Honour referred the matter back to the Registrar, to be dealt with by him upon the fresh evidence which had been adduced.

July 5.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE WINTER, RE SOFTLEY.—This was an appeal from an order of the Newcastle-on-Tyne County Court, by which it was declared that an iron steam vessel, No. 111, formerly belonging to the debtor, was a security to Messrs. Hodgkin, the bankers, for advances, and that that firm was entitled to complete and launch the vessel, and sell the engines. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Doria were counsel for the appellant; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Gainsford Bruce for the respondent; Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. F. H. Colt represented other interests. The debtor, who was a shipbuilder carrying on business at South Shields, had a banking account with Messrs. Hodgkin and Co., who had been in the habit of discounting bills for him in the usual way of bankers and their customers, and they had also allowed him a considerable overdraught, partly covered by bills and partly unsecured. The amount of the overdraught fluctuated very materially during the several months commencing in February and ending in October, 1874. In August the debtor, who then owed Messrs. Hodgkin about £7,500, offered to give security upon two vessels then being built, but the bankers at that time declined to accept the security, stating, however, that circumstances might arise which would render it desirable for them to have it; and the debtor agreed in that case to furnish the security. On the 7th of October the bankers told the debtor that he must lodge the builders' certificate of the vessel No. 111 with Mr. Scott, their manager, and on the 8th he did so, the vessel being then in an unfinished state and unregistered. On the 12th of the same month the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, with debts returned at £43,000, and assets £11,000, and the trustee sought to impeach the transaction on the ground that it constituted a fraudulent preference and also an act of bankruptcy. The County Court having allowed the bankers to retain their security as to the vessel No. 111, the trustee appealed. His Lordship, in giving judgment, said it was proved that in August, 1874, an offer was made by the debtor to give security to the bankers upon a particular vessel, but they refused it, stating, however, that circumstances might arise which would induce them to call upon him for further security. This they had a right to do, and there was nothing to show any dishonest intention on their part. The promise to find security was distinct, and the bankers afterwards made large advances to the debtor to enable him to carry on his business. The transaction was not with a view to prefer the bankers over the other creditors, but only in performance of an obligation. The appeal must be dismissed.

IN RE GILEAD SMITH AND CO. LIABILITIES £530,900.—The debtors in this case, J. Dennis, Robert Lyon Burnett, and H. Eagle Smith, trading under the style of Gilead Smith and Co., merchants, of 23 Change-alley, Cornhill, have filed a petition for the liquidation of their affairs, and Mr. Linklater now moved the court for the appointment of a receiver to the estate. The application was made on an affidavit by the debtors stating that their liabilities were estimated at £530,900, and that the joint assets consisted of good book debts and railway iron and other bonds of large but fluctuating value included as security by certain creditors, and as to the realisation of which it was desirable that some arrangement should be made. The first meeting is appointed to take place on the 22nd of July. The affidavit further stated that the debtors had large transactions with the firm of Fothergill and Hankey, trading under the style of the Aberdare Company, and that their trustee had seized Warwick-House, Paddington, the property of the debtors, with the furniture, fixtures, works of art, plate, &c., under an assignment to the Aberdare Company in respect of bills of exchange of the debtors amounting to about £10,000, and that as the assignment was only executed immediately preceding the filing of the liquidation petition, important questions would arise between the parties as to the rights of Fothergill and Hankey. On these grounds his Honour granted the application, and appointed Mr. F. Whinney, of the firm of Harding, Whinney, and Co., public accountants, receiver, with power to get in and receive the property of the debtors.

July 6.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE RICHARDSON AND CO.—This was an application to register resolutions to liquidate the separate estate of Messrs. T. H. and J. Richardson by arrangement and not in bankruptcy. The resolutions with respect to the joint estate were registered last week, but it was objected that a creditor for £5,000 had not been served in one case, and for a still larger amount in the other. Mr. Brough, on the part of the debtors, endeavoured to show that they really had notice, being creditors of the joint estate, and it was stated in that notice that the meeting of the separate creditors would be afterwards held. His Honour, however, declined to register, but gave leave to apply to the Court for a fresh meeting.

IN RE A. E. WESTBEECH.—The debtor is described as a general merchant, of 38 Fenchurch-street, also of Brighton, carrying on business as the Celestial Works of Art Company, failed in May last, the debts being stated at £34,056, against assets £27,578. At the first meeting resolutions were come to liquidating the estate by arrangement, with a trustee and committee of inspection. Upon the application of Messrs. Lawrence, Plews and Co., his Honour directed registration.

A correspondent points out an error in our reports of creditors' meetings published last week. It was there stated that a meeting of the creditors of John Chapman, dyer, Bradford, had been held, the name of the debtor being John Schofield, dyer, of Bradford. We gladly insert correction of the paragraph, which was copied from a Scotch daily paper.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

J. VERITY (BRADFORD).—A first meeting of the creditors of John Verity, woollen draper and outfitter, Pudsey, was held on the 6th inst., at the County Court, Bradford. A statement of affairs, prepared by Mr. Alexander Atkinson, accountant, was submitted, and showed that the liabilities were as follow:—Unsecured creditors, £1,281 2s. 6d.; creditors for rent, £11 10s.; liabilities on bills discounted, £335 16s. 11d.; total, £1,628 9s. 5d. The assets were £505 6s.; subject to the bankrupt's statutory allowance, and also the usual risks in realisation. Several of the claims will have to be investigated, the bankrupt having about sixteen months ago effected a composition with his creditors of 10s. in the pound, and given bills to secure to some of the creditors 20s. Mr. Alexander Atkinson was appointed trustee with a committee of inspection, Messrs. Terry and Robinson being appointed solicitors to the trustee.

RICHARD LONG (LIVERPOOL).—At the statutory meeting of the creditors of Richard Long, described as of Tempest-chambers, Tempest-hey, Liverpool, carrying on business as an engineer and metal broker, under the style of Richard Long and Co., and as an oil merchant under the style of the Lancashire Lubricating Oil Company, held on Saturday, at the offices of Messrs. Francis Almond and Collins, solicitors, Harrington-street, Liverpool, it was unanimously resolved to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable in two equal instalments at one and two months' date respectively, such composition to be secured to the satisfaction of the receiver, Mr. T. Theodore Rogers, accountant, 16 Lord-street, Liverpool. The statement of affairs showed £1,492 7s. 2d. liabilities, against £583 4s. 6d assets.

J. F. SWIFT (LIVERPOOL).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. James Frederick Swift, of St. Anne-street, Liverpool, wholesale grocer and drysalter, was held on Monday, at the offices of Messrs. Barrell and Rodway, solicitors, Liverpool. The statement of affairs submitted by the receiver, Mr. T. Theodore Rogers, public accountant, Liverpool, showed liabilities £1,869 6s. 7d. against assets £856 9s. 7d. An offer of a composition of 8s. in the pound, payable in three instalments, at two, four and six months' date, the last to be secured, was unanimously accepted, and Mr. Rogers was appointed trustee.

J. & A. SIMPSON (GLASGOW).—At a meeting, on the 2nd inst. of the creditors of J. and A. Simpson, yarn and commission merchants, Glasgow, a statement of the bankrupts' affairs was submitted, showing liabilities to the amount of about £28,000, and assets of about £15,000. An offer was made of 10s. in the pound, payable at three, six and nine months, with security for the last instalment. The creditors present seemed to be favourable to the acceptance of the offer.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—The failure was announced on Tuesday of Messrs. John Ranking and Co., a firm of the highest repute, established nearly 100 years. Their liabilities are estimated at £150,000.—A petition has been filed in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court in the affairs of Mr. Thomas Hampton, managing director of the Phœnix Bessemer Steel Company, which suspended payment a fortnight ago. His liabilities are stated to be about £20,500. The amount of assets is not stated.—A petition has been presented in the Leeds County Court for the liquidation of the affairs of Messrs. W. Coutts and Co., twine manufacturers, Globe Mills, Hunslet. The liabilities are put down at £12,000. The assets are understood to be very considerable, and a favourable dividend may therefore be expected. Mr. W. H. Hewson, 1 East Parade, is the solicitor, and Mr. John Routh, accountant, Royal Insurance Buildings, Park-row, has been appointed receiver.—A petition in liquidation has been filed in the Bradford County Court by Messrs. John Willis and Son, brassfounders, &c. Millergate, Bradford. The liabilities are estimated at £25,000; assets not known. Mr. H. J. Blackburn has been appointed receiver in the estate, and Messrs. Wood and Killick are the solicitors.

SCOTLAND.—The firm of W. R. Morison and Co., spinners, Dundee, issued a circular on Saturday suspending payment. Their failure is due to the fact that the senior partner, Mr. Patrick Anderson, who carried on business on his own account as a merchant, had accepted a number of bills for Messrs. Alexander Collie and Co. It is understood that the acceptances involved a sum of between £60,000 and £80,000. On Saturday the Royal Bank of Scotland, as proprietors of the firm's mills, applied for sequestration for rent, which was granted. The liabilities are heavy, but lie out of Dundee.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.—The failure of Messrs. E. D. Jewett and Co., St. John, N.B., is stated to be the heaviest ever known in New Brunswick. The liabilities are estimated at £1,200,000.

AUSTRALIA.—Advices from Sydney, N.S.W., report several mercantile suspensions, including that of Messrs. R. F. Stubbs and Co., auctioneers, with liabilities amounting to £100,000; Messrs. T. and J. Skinner, liabilities £37,000; and Mr. Coombe, miller and grain dealer, liabilities £41,000.

The National Zeitung reports the failure of Musil and Co., of Prague, with liabilities about £100,000, and that of Heymann and Steuer, of Breslau, with liabilities about £28,500.

The Allgemeine Zeitung says that the Vienna Bourse has been much disturbed by the failure of Gerson and Lippmann, proprietors of the Suranyer sugar manufactory, the largest in Austro-Hungary. The immediate cause of suspension was the failure of Moritz Weiner, reported some time ago, with whom Gerson and Lippmann had extensive transactions. The existing liabilities are estimated at about £300,000.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JULY 5.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE ACT (1873) AMENDMENT (No. 2) BILL.—On clause 9 (the London Court of Bankruptcy not to be transferred to the High Court of Justice), Mr. Herschell moved, page 5, line 38, to leave out the words, "from time to time." As the clause stood, it provided that the office of Chief Judge in Bankruptcy should be filled by such Judge of the Exchequer Division as might from time to time be required to act by the Lord Chancellor. That gave the Lord Chancellor power to set aside a Judge who might be displeasing to him and appoint another in his stead. That he held to be a very objectionable provision. (Hear, hear.) Sir G. Bowyer agreed with the hon. and learned member that this was a very objectionable power to give to the Lord Chancellor. It ran through the Act of 1873 and was a perceptible feature in this Bill, that enormous powers should be given to the Lord Chancellor. Mr. Hopwood and Mr. Jackson supported the amendment. Mr. Gregory hoped the Government would obviate further discussion by intimating their readiness to abandon the clause. Mr. O. Morgan urged the Attorney-General to stick to the clause. The Attorney-General had no objection to the omission of the words "from time to time." The amendment was then agreed to. On the motion of Mr. O. Morgan the words "of the Exchequer division" were struck out of the clause, and the words "or with the consent of such one of the Judges appointed prior to the passing of the last-mentioned Act" inserted after "1869" on the motion of Mr. Herschell. Some consequential amendments were also made, and the clause as amended was agreed to, after a protest from Sir H. James against leaving the Court of Bankruptcy, which needed, he said, probably more to have some check placed upon it than any other, out of the operation of the Judicature Act.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JULY 6.

CIVIL SERVICE ESTIMATES.—On the vote to complete the sum of £51,535 for the Court of Bankruptcy, Sir A. Lusk said this money was thrown away. What was the use of the Bankruptcy Court? In his opinion it was worse than useless. Persons who committed monstrous frauds and swindles in London, managed to get through the Court with the greatest ease with the aid of a clever solicitor. Mr. Gregory was very much disposed to agree with the hon. baronet. He had done his best to get rid of the separate jurisdiction for bankruptcy. After a few words from Mr. Whitwell, the vote was agreed to. On the vote to complete £399,658 for salaries and expenses of county courts, Sir A. Lusk asked for some explanation as to the travelling expenses of the County Court Judges. Mr. W. H. Smith said the County Court Judges were allowed 3d. per mile when they travelled by rail, 2s. per mile when they travelled by road, and 21s. per night when absent from home. The vote was agreed to.

Before the Master of the Rolls has been heard a singular case, in which a man named Hall had twice been supposed to be dead, but had on each occasion been found alive. A third report of his death having been proved true, an application was made for the payment of some money to which certain persons would be entitled on his decease, and this was granted.

WINDING-UP.—Vice-Chancellor Malins has made an order for the compulsory winding-up of the Peat, Coal, and Charcoal Company, which was incorporated in 1873.—Petitions to wind up the Anglo-German Tunnelling Company, Limited, the Passenger General Register Company, Limited, and the South Cleveland Iron Works, Limited, have been presented to the Court of Chancery.—A petition to wind-up the International Patent Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, has been presented to the Court of Chancery.—A petition to wind-up the Anglo-American Mint Company has been presented to the Court of Chancery.—A petition for the winding-up of the British, Colonial and Foreign Property Insurance Corporation, Limited, is to be heard on the 16th inst.

RUPTURES—BY ROYAL LETTERS PATENT.
WHITE'S MOC-MAIN LEVER TRUSS is allowed by upwards of 500 Medical Men to be the most effective invention in the curative treatment of Hernia. The use of a steel spring, so hurtful in its effects, is here avoided, a soft bandage being worn round the body, while the requisite resisting power is supplied by the MOC-MAIN PAD and PATENT LEVER, fitting with so much ease and closeness that it cannot be detected and may be worn during sleep. A descriptive circular may be had, and the Truss (which cannot fail to fit), forwarded by post, on the circumference of the body two inches below the hips being sent to the manufacturer, Mr. JOHN WHITE, 228, Piccadilly, London. Price of a single Truss, 16s., 21s., 26s. 6d., 31s. 6d, Postage Free. Double Truss, 31s. 6d., 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage free. An Umbilical Truss, 42s., and 52s. 6d. Postage free. P.O.O. to be made payable to JOHN WHITE, Post-office, Piccadilly.

NEW PATENT ELASTIC STOCKINGS, KNEE CAPS, &c. for Varicose Veins, and all cases of Weakness and Swelling of the Legs, Sprains, &c. They are porous, light in texture, and inexpensive, and are drawn on like an ordinary stocking. Price from 4s. 6d., 7s, 6d., 10s, to 16s. each. Postage free.

CHEST EXPANDING BRACES, for both sexes. For gentlemen they are a substitute for the ordinary braces. For children they are invaluable; they prevent stooping and preserve the symmetry of the chest. Prices for children, 5s. 6d. and 7s. 6d. Adults, 10s. 6d., 15s. 6d., and 21s. each. Postage free.—JOHN WHITE, Manufacturer, 228 Piccadilly, London.

EPPS'S COCOA.—"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavoured beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—See article in the Civil Service Gazette.

THE ONLY AND SPECIAL
Was awarded for "Feuerfeste Eisone Schranke und Kunstchlosser Fortschritts," to

HOBBS, HART, & CO.,
AT THE VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.
This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.
"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.
N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of a Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

PROSPECTUS.

The great want of a Shoe for Horses and other draught animals (so as to obtain a firm and solid foothold upon Asphalte and other smooth or slippery pavements, and to obviate roughing or sharpening in frosty weather; to reduce the jar or concussion the limbs are subjected to by the hoof striking the ground; to allow the hoof to expand and develop; to reduce the labour of the animals by diminishing the weight of the present unnatural and unwieldy iron shoe, and to add to their comfort), has long been felt by the community at large, but more especially by those who employ large numbers of horses, and also by "The Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

Such a Shoe has been Invented and Patented by Mr. Yates, and is made from buffalo or other hides, rendered impervious to moisture under Patented Process. They are as durable as the iron shoe, one-third the weight, cheaper, and are neat and easily applied, and their application adds greatly to the comfort of the animal.

They are made from a material as nearly approaching the nature of the hoof as possible, and therefore are the most natural substance from which to form a shoe. They will maintain the integrity of the hoof in its natural form, and allow its freedom and development. They also assist in retaining a firm and solid foothold, and aid in the impulsive efforts required in the performance of work and movements, and will thus be invaluable in preserving the health of the animal shod with them.

This Company has been formed for purchasing and working the patent rights, titles, and interests for Great Britain, Ireland, and the Channel Islands, of this Shoe, and for manufacturing and vending the same.

It is the intention of this Company to fit up works sufficient to manufacture these shoes, and to establish offices or stores in our principal cities for the sale of the same, where they will be able to supply sets much cheaper than iron shoes, and which can be readily applied by any smith or farrier.

Forms of application for shares may be obtained by applying to the Bankers of the Company, or to the Secretary.

The Accountant.
JULY 17, 1875.

The power of committal for contempt of court is one which, at the present time, requires to be very carefully exercised, though it is undoubtedly one of the very strongest means of enforcing obedience which any court can possess. As used by the Court of Chancery, it is comparatively harmless. Actual imprisonment is seldom inflicted, unless the neglect to obey an order has been very clear and wilful; and a becoming expression of contrition is usually visited by a mere order to pay the costs of the motion. A motion to commit for contempt of court is, in fact, very often one of those convenient little engines for putting costs into the pockets of solicitors, and fees into the hands of counsel, in which the law delights. Generally, the result of a motion for committal is gratifying to all concerned. The lawyers earn a little money, which is naturally pleasing to them; the judge has the power of vindicating the authority of the law, and the delight of tempering justice with mercy; and the unfortunate individual whose conduct has set the terrors of the law in motion is happy, because he has to pay in purse and not in person, and is relieved from the dread of the vague power which he has, ignorantly or carelessly, provoked.

Except when used as a means of checking journalistic comment,—certainly a recent and somewhat abused development—committal for contempt is very useful. A court must have the means of punishing wilful disobedience to its directions, or its authority will be hourly set at nought. A case which we report from the Liverpool County Court, and a letter which we print, may serve to show the limits to which the power is confined. In the first case, a debtor makes default in accounting for moneys he has received, and a motion is made for his committal. Upon his expressing penitence, and paying over the money, he is discharged; but default will result in committal. In the case stated by our correspondent, W.C.H., a motion was made to commit an auctioneer, who had been employed by the trustee to sell part of an estate, and who, though ordered by the court to give a full account of the proceeds, had neglected to do so. The Chief Judge held, however, that the power to commit did not exist in this instance, as the auctioneer was not a "fraudulent trustee." The power is clear in the first case, and needs no proof. A bankrupt is absolutely in the power of the court, and is bound to render the very strictest accounts that may be required. And not only the bankrupt himself, but "any treasurer, or other officer, or any banker, attorney, or agent of a bankrupt," is liable to be committed unless he delivers up to the trustee any property of the debtor in his possession. But the auctioneer must, we suppose, be considered as a mere delegate of the trustee, and not in any way responsible to the court. The Court of Chancery has exercised the power of committal in the case of a receiver; but then a receiver is, if not an officer of the court, nevertheless, directly answerable to the court for the correctness of his accounts. In the case of the auctioneer, this question arises:—If the Court of Bankruptcy has no power to enforce the execution of its orders, what power has it to issue these orders at all? In the Liverpool case, every thing was plain-sailing. The debtor is ordered to do a certain act: he neglects to do so, and he is thereupon committed to prison; though he is allowed a short time within which to purge his contempt. It seems to follow, that where there is a power to order any body to do something, there must be a co-existent power to punish him if he refuses to obey. Otherwise, the order is simply another specimen of the precatory legislation which has come so much into fashion.

In the mean time, the unlucky trustee has to lament the working of the Act. He may be ordered to bring in his accounts; he is liable to declare a dividend; and is subject to various penalties if he does not do so. Whether the default of the undaunted auctioneer will serve him as an excuse, yet remains to be seen. In case he is unable to recover the money, he may be protected by the now established law that a trustee is not responsible for the wilful default of those whom he has trusted, if his own conduct has been correct. But as regards the auctioneer (we assume, of course, that the facts stated are correct), it seems to us that the position is somewhat anomalous. To formally order a man to do an act, and then to be unable to take any action in case of his refusal, is rather undignified for any court.

The West Hartlepool Iron Works case requires a passing notice, only with regard to the rule as to making an order for compulsory winding-up, instead of a voluntary liquidation under supervision. The 91st section of the Act provides that the court may have regard to the wishes of the creditors, "as proved to it by any sufficient evidence." This leaves it to the discretion of the court, not only to decide whether the evidence is sufficient, but whether the compulsory or voluntary liquidation would be the most expedient, and does not, as it was apparently argued, make it obligatory on the court to decide according to the wishes of the majority of shareholders or contributories, though this course has been generally adopted. The case of the Langley Mill Company, which is reported in the 12th volume of the Authorized Law Reports, contains a discussion of the general principles on which the court proceeds.

INGENIOUS BANKRUPTS.—Two brothers named Hall, of Eccleshill, who recently filed a petition for the liquidation of their affairs, are now charged with fraudulent practices. According to the prosecution, when it seemed desirable to account for certain deficiencies, the brothers hit upon the simple process of sticking the figure 1 before various items of payments. Two sums of £100 and £150 were explained away in a highly original fashion. These amounts, the debtors alleged, they had lost in the Royal Park at Halifax, by playing at pitch and toss on the 18th of June, 1874. Thomas, it was said, took the money of the firm with the consent of his brother, and in the hope of getting out of their difficulties, he staked the money in various sums, and, alas! lost every farthing. The local paper does not record the admiration of the justices at this enterprising and novel attempt to solve the problem of "How to get out of difficulties," but only their hard-hearted incredulity.

The Lord Chancellor has issued an order for the closing of the county courts on the next Bank holiday, August 2.

A reward of £200 is offered for the apprehension of Mr. William Kershaw, who has absconded. He is a partner in the firm of Kilburn, Kershaw, and Co., in the silk trade, who recently failed, and the charge—made, it is understood, by the directors of a leading joint-stock bank—is that of obtaining money by false pretences.

Petitions to wind up the Nassau Phosphate Company (Limited) and the South Phœnix Tin and Copper Mining Company (Limited) have been presented to the Court of Chancery and the Vice-Warden of the Stannaries respectively.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Brentwood Brick and Coal Company (Limited).—Petitions to wind up the following companies have been presented to the Court of Chancery:—The British Seaweed Company (Limited), the Kew and Richmond Tramways Company (Limited), the West London Tramways Company (Limited), and the Anglo-Mexican Mint Company.—Petitions are to be heard in the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the Volunteer Co-operative and General Equipment Company (Limited), and the Liguria Gold Mining Company.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

W. C. H.—A solicitor must be employed and a writ issued. The power to commit is very doubtful.

J. G. B.—The Companies' Act expressly provides for the payment of debts pari passu, though the 32nd sec. of the Bankruptcy Act classes assessed taxes, property tax and rates together as preferential. We should say, therefore, that there is no priority.

Correspondence.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

DEAR SIR,—Will you allow me to inquire through the medium of your columns what redress the trustee has when he intrusts the assets of an estate to an auctioneer to realise. I employed an auctioneer to realise a jeweller's estate, and he has appropriated over £300 of the proceeds. Considerably more than a month has been occupied in obtaining an order from the London Bankruptcy Court for payment; and upon an application made this morning to the Chief Judge to commit the auctioneer, by reason of his having disobeyed the order of the Court to pay to the trustee the sum of £300 odd made on the 7th day of June, the Chief Judge decided that he had no power to commit, as an auctioneer was not a fraudulent trustee.

Yours truly,
W. C. H.

July 12, 1875.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

DEAR SIR,—I shall be glad if you can inform me, or elicit through the columns of the Accountant, in the case of the winding-up of a public company voluntarily, and there are not sufficient assets to pay the creditors in full, whether Queen's taxes and rates have to be paid as preferential creditors. There is a decision that servants' wages do not rank preferentially, and I therefore conclude that rates and taxes follow the same rule. The surveyor of taxes says that the Queen's taxes are different to say poor rates. I shall be glad to have your opinion of this.

Yours truly,
J. G. B.

CONTEMPT OF COURT BY A LAWYER.—At the Bury (Lancashire) County Court, on Friday, Mr. Robert Crossland, one of the oldest lawyers in the town, and a member of the local municipal body, was ordered into the custody of the bailiff for persisting in speaking, after the judge, Mr. Crompton Hutton, had given judgment in a case in which Mr. Crossland was defendant, the verdict having been found against him. On being asked if he would retract his statement, "that he had a right to speak, and would speak," Mr. Crossland refused, and the judge thereupon fined him £5, or in default seven days' imprisonment for contempt of court. Mr. Crossland declined to pay the fine, and the warrant of commitment was consequently made out, and a bailiff conveyed him to Lancaster Castle.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

July 10.

THE CLEVELAND IRONWORKS COMPANY.—THE BRITISH NATIONAL INSURANCE CORPORATION.—The voluntary winding-up of these limited companies was ordered to continue under the supervision of the Court. Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C., Mr. Cracknall, Mr. F. W. Bush, Mr. Robinson, Q.C., Mr. H. A. Giffard, Mr. Yate Lee, and Mr. Bryce were the counsel engaged.

THE WESTERN OF CANADA OIL, LAND, AND WORKS COMPANY.—This was an adjourned summons on the part of the liquidator, seeking to place the Hon. John Carling, the Hon. Aquila Walsh, and Mr. Jacob Hespeler, the Canadian directors of this company, on the list of contributories for 30 £100 shares apiece, as shares on which nothing had been paid. It appeared from the evidence of these gentlemen, who, as the Master of the Rolls observed during the hearing, appeared to have acted in good faith, though they entirely misapprehended the position and duties of a director in relation to the company of which he is the agent and trustee, that in January, 1872, they were invited by one John Walker, the promoter of the company, to become its directors in Canada. Walker told them that he would transfer to them some fully paid-up shares, if they would consent to act as directors, for the purpose of qualifying them; and they stated that they would be willing to act as directors upon his informing them that a sufficient number of fully paid-up shares to qualify them as directors had been allotted to them. The company was registered, and the first act of the Canadian directors was to adopt on behalf of the company an agreement, dated the 18th of December, 1871, between Walker and one Hartley, as trustee for the company, by which Walker, for himself and other vendors, contracted to sell to Hartley, as such trustee, certain lands, oil-wells, plant, &c., at the price of £150,000 in cash and £250,000 in 2,500 fully paid-up £100 shares; and this price was actually paid without further inquiry by the directors, as trustees of the company, for a property for which, it was stated in Court, the liquidator has not been able to realize a single farthing. The agreement for the issue of the 2,500 paid-up shares to Walker as fully paid-up shares having been filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, pursuant to section 25 of the Companies' Act, 1867, Walker, in fulfilment of the bargain, caused 30 of such shares to be allotted to each of the above-named gentlemen, which shares were the subject of the present application. Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C., and Mr. Whitehorne appeared for the liquidator; and Mr. Chitty, Q.C., and Mr. Dumergue for Messrs. Carling, Walsh, and Hespeler. The Master of the Rolls, after stating the facts of the case, said it was impossible to regard the shares in question as paid-up. He was of opinion that the company had the right to say that the purchase-money was enhanced by the amount of the shares allotted to the respondents, and ought to be diminished to that extent. If the respondents had received cash instead of shares he should have ordered them to repay it; and, as it was, he should fix them with the shares as shares on which nothing had been paid, and order them to pay the costs of the summons.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES BACON.)

July 10.

IN RE THE WEST HARTLEPOOL IRON COMPANY.—This matter was brought before the Court on two petitions for winding-up, one presented by Messrs. Forwood Brothers, creditors for £4,600, the other by contributories. The company was registered in June, 1874, with the object of taking and carrying on Messrs. Richardson's ironworks. It stopped payment in April last, having lost in less than a year £55,000. After the presentation of the first petition resolutions had been passed to wind the company up voluntarily, and three creditors appointed liquidators. Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Robinson, Q.C., now asked for a compulsory winding-up. Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. A. T. Watson, for the company, and Mr. Caldecott (Mr. W. Pearson, Q.C., with him) asked that the voluntary winding-up might be continued under the supervision of the Court. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Housley, for creditors to the amount of £140,000, also asked for a supervision order. They urged that, as a majority in value of creditors, under section 91 of the Companies' Act, 1862, they were entitled to have the assets distributed in the mode they thought most beneficial. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. W. Druce, for shareholders, and Mr. Swanston, Q.C., for the trustee in liquidation of Messrs. Richardson, supported the same view. The Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that under the circumstances the petitioning creditors, who were undisputed creditors to a large amount, were entitled to a compulsory order. He had not sufficient evidence of the wishes of the creditors to satisfy him, as he must be satisfied, under section 91 of the Companies' Act, that the majority of creditors wished for a supervision order.

RE THE VAL ANTIGORIA GOLD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.—In this case a voluntary winding-up recently resolved on by the company was ordered to be continued subject to the supervision of the Court, on a petition of a contributory and creditor.

IN RE THE PASSENGERS GENERAL REGISTER COMPANY.—A similar order for supervision was made in the matter of this company.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

July 8.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE FOTHERGILL AND HANKEY.—This was an application on behalf of the Anglo-Peruvian Bank, Limited, that Mr. Turquand, the receiver and manager, should be directed to deliver up to Mr. Bailey Hawkins, on behalf of the bank, 500 tons of iron rails, purchased by the applicant, and now lying at the Aberdare Iron Works, Cardiff. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. Kekewich appeared for the bank; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. F. W. Hollams for the receiver and manager. The debtors, Messrs. Richard Fothergill, M.P., and E. T. Hankey, were iron masters and merchants, trading as the Aberdare Iron Company and the Plymouth Iron Company. The firm suspended payment on the 31st of May last, and on the 10th of June a petition was presented for liquidation by arrangement or composition. Under this petition Mr. Turquand was appointed receiver and manager, and the first meeting has been fixed for the 21st of the present month. It appeared that on the 24th of April, 1873, Mr. N. B. Calder, the shipping agent of the Aberdare Iron Company, issued a warrant for 500 tons of iron rails lying at the Aberdare Iron Works, and in February, 1875, the applicant purchased the rails in question from the General South American Company, at the rate of £6 per ton, and sent a cheque for £3,000, being the amount of the purchase money, to the company. On the 27th of May the applicant, who had bought the rails for shipment to South America, to be used in a railway in course of construction in Peru, sent the warrant to Mr. Hawkins, duly endorsed, with instructions to obtain possession of the rails. Lighters went alongside the wharf on which the rails were lying, and delivery was demanded, but Mr. Calder, it appeared, refused to allow them to be removed, stating that he had had no authority to deliver them from the Aberdare Iron Company. The receiver and manager had since taken possession of the rails, and he stated that he was advised questions might hereafter arise between a trustee appointed by the creditors and the applicant with reference to the ownership of the property. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., contended that, as no question of reputed ownership could arise, the applicant was entitled to the rails. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., said there might be ulterior questions, and he could not consent to the proposed order. Mr. Registrar Brougham said he could only decide the rights of the parties under the Bankruptcy Act. At present there had not been any appointment of trustee. Mr. Winslow said that a trustee was often not appointed for some months. His Honour asked whether the applicant would be willing to give an indemnity, and, receiving a reply in the negative, said in that case he must decline to make any order until after the appointment of a trustee.

IN RE W. THOMAS TIMEWELL.—The debtor, W. T. Timewell, has petitioned the court, under the liquidation clauses of the Act, describing himself as a builder, of Acre-lane, Brixton, also of the Saw Mills, Shepherd's-lane, Brixton. The liabilities are estimated at £40,000. The assets are at present unestimated, and it was stated that the whole of the property was mortgaged. Rents were coming due, and it was necessary, in the interest of the creditors, that a receiver should be appointed to receive them. Upon the application of Mr. S. Chapman his Honour appointed Mr. J. W. Kealy, accountant, Moorgate-street, receiver of the estate, and granted an interim injunction against suing creditors.

July 9.

(Before Mr. REGISTRAR PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE HENRY ADAMSON AND SONS.—The debtors, Messrs. Henry Adamson, jun., and John Saunders Adamson, shipowners and ship and insurance brokers, carrying on business at 75 Mark-lane, under the firm of Henry Adamson and Sons, have filed a petition for liquidation. Their liabilities are returned at £100,000, with assets consisting mainly of shares in ships of uncertain value. Mr. Hollams, jun., solicitor for the petitioners, and with the concurrence of creditors for £50,000, asked that Mr. John Young should be appointed receiver and manager. The evidence showed that the vessels of which the debtors were part owners were expected shortly to arrive in this country, and for the purpose of protecting their interests it was necessary the appointment should be made. The transactions of the debtors had been of considerable magnitude. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE FITZJAMES STUART MACGREGOR.—The bankrupt is a retired commander in the Navy, and his debts amounted to £4,400. He is 60 years of age, and he has a pension of £400 per year. Upon the application of Mr. Bagley for the registrar trustee, and after hearing Mr. F. Knight for the petitioning creditor, and Mr. Doria for the bankrupt, his Honour made an order setting aside £120 per year out of the bankrupt's pension for the benefit of the creditors.

July 10.

(Before the Hon. W. C. SPRING-RICE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE W. F. O. O'CALLAGHAN, M.P.—This was an adjourned sitting for public examination. The bankrupt, the Hon. William Frederick Ormonde O'Callaghan, M.P. for Tipperary, was described as of 31 Old Burlington-street, and of the Hotel de Bade, Boulevard des Italiens, Paris. He had filed a petition for liquidation, but at the first meeting no resolution was passed, and the proceedings fell to the ground. At the meeting for choice, 17 creditors proved their debts, and a trustee was appointed. A proposal had since been made with a view to the annulment of the adjudication. Mr. T. Lumley, for the trustee, said the bankrupt had filed his accounts, which were considered to be satisfactory, and he did not further oppose the passing of the examination upon the understanding that the bankrupt continued to assist the trustee. A difficulty arose in consequence of the bankrupt's absence. Mr. A. Leslie said that he appeared for opposing creditors, and he desired to examine the bankrupt. Mr. Registrar Spring-Rice intimated that if the bankrupt did not appear it was impossible that he could pass his examination. Mr. A. Cottman, for the bankrupt, said that if a short adjournment were allowed he would undertake to file an affidavit showing the cause of his client's absence. An adjournment was ordered accordingly.

July 12.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

IN RE J. C. IM THURM AND CO.—This was an application to register the resolutions of creditors. The debtors were merchants carrying on a very extensive business in the City, and at the time of the stoppage their liabilities were estimated at about £3,000,000 sterling. That amount has, however, since been reduced to such an extent by payment of bills and otherwise, that the aggregate of the debts likely to rank against the estate will not very much exceed £500,000; the assets are returned at £431,000, subject to realisation. At the first meeting of creditors, resolutions were passed, almost unanimously, to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable forthwith, Mr. John Young being appointed trustee to collect and distribute the property which remains outstanding, and the resolutions were confirmed at the second meeting. Upon the application of Mr. Nicoll (Messrs. Nicholson, Nicoll, and Co.), and in the absence of opposition, his Honour allowed the resolutions to be registered.

July 13.

(Before Mr. Registrar KEENE.)

APPOINTMENT OF A NEW TRUSTEE.—An application was made for the appointment of a new trustee to the estate of Jacob Hibberd in the place of the gentleman appointed by the creditors four years ago. The debtor, who was a builder, carrying on business at Steeles-terrace, and Wychcombe, Haverstock-hill, failed in 1871 for £78,000, but the statements filed disclose a very large estate, as, in addition to fully secured creditors to the amount of £75,520, there are also assets of £24,601 10s., as against debts of £5,520. Mr. Thomas Maynard was appointed trustee by the creditors some four years ago, but at a meeting convened on the 14th June last, it was agreed that Mr. E. C. Chatterley (C. Browne, Stanley and Co.), accountant, 25 Old Jewry, should be appointed trustee in his stead. Upon the application of Mr. Bagley, Mr. Registrar Keene registered the resolutions. Mr. Lawrence, on behalf of Mr. Thomas Maynard, opposed the application.

ASSIZE INTELLIGENCE.

HOME CIRCUIT.—CHELMSFORD.

July 14.

(Before MR. JUSTICE BRETT.)

FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.—Mr. John Stebbing, an extensive farmer and grazier, surrendered to answer an indictment under the Bankruptcy Act, the offences imputed to him being that he had committed perjury in his examination before the County Court after having been adjudicated a bankrupt, and that he had embezzled and secreted a considerable portion of his estate, with intent to cheat and defraud his creditors.—This case, which has created a good deal of interest in the county, occupied a considerable time; the main facts that were proved were that, when the defendant was examined touching his estate, he made several false statements with regard to his possession of considerable sums of money. The case for the prosecution appeared to rest a good deal upon statements, made by the defendant himself to the witnesses, which were tantamount to admissions that he had kept back a considerable portion of his estate from his creditors. He was found guilty, and sentenced to twelve months imprisonment.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JULY 9.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY ARBITRATION BILL.—On the order for the consideration of the amendments to this Bill, Mr. C. Lewis moved that the Bill be re-committed. The question involved in this Bill affected thousands of persons and hundreds of thousands of pounds. The Legislature had declared that there ought to be a speedy and effectual mode of disposing of this litigation, and accordingly provided for the appointment of persons of the highest judicial standing. It was now proposed to intrust this judicial power to a barrister of 15 years' standing, with a power of appeal, it was true, but then the appeal would be from one tribunal of absolutely unfettered discretion to another which was equally unfettered. He thought the Bill ought to be referred back to the Committee for their reconsideration on those points; or, failing that, amendments should be introduced upon giving the usual three days' notice. Mr. Stacpoole seconded the amendment. Mr. Walpole, as chairman of the committee which sat on this subject, wished to say that the Lord Chancellor had tried to get a person of similar position to Lord Westbury and Lord Romilly, and failed, and it was on that account that the provision to which the hon. gentleman had objected was inserted. Even now, if the Lord Chancellor should find such a person, the Bill would allow of his appointment. The Bill did not admit of a general appeal, but only of an appeal when one arbitrator differed from another, or when the same arbitrator differed from himself. What was wanted was that one uniform system should be established. (Hear.) Sir G. Bowyer said the right hon. gentleman must have been under a misapprehension on one point. The Bill did not allow the Lord Chancellor to appoint any but a barrister of 15 years' standing, for the words were, "the Lord Chancellor may appoint a barrister of 15 years' standing." Mr. Goschen pointed out that the very words which the hon. baronet had read showed that the Lord Chancellor retained the power of appointing an ex-Chancellor or ex-Judge, though he was allowed to appoint a barrister of 15 years' standing. He entirely agreed with the view taken by the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Walpole), and hoped the House would support it. Mr. Jackson believed that great care and attention had been bestowed by the Committee on this most difficult question. He must say he did not like the notion of an appeal in the case of an arbitration; but he would not ask the House to reconsider a decision which had been come to by a committee composed of some of the most eminent members, who had retained for the tribunal the discretionary powers on the faith of which it was originally constituted. Mr. Raikes expressed a hope that the hon. member would not press his amendment against a decision arrived at by the Committee after very careful consideration. After a few words from Sir P. O'Brien and Mr. Meldon, Mr. Lewis withdrew his amendment. The Bill as amended was considered, and, the Standing Orders being suspended, was read a third time and passed.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Present the Lord Chancellor, Lord Chelmsford, Lord Hatherley, Lord Penzance, Lord O'Hagan, and Lord Selborne.

BUTCHER v. STEAD AND ANOTHER.—This appeal from the Court of Appeal in Chancery sitting in Bankruptcy, which affirmed a judgment of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy reversing a decision of the Manchester County Court Judge, raised a very important question as to what constitutes a fraudulent preference on the part of a bankrupt—namely, whether it is sufficient to constitute such a fraudulent preference that the bankrupt shall have the intention of making a fraudulent preference, or whether it is essential not only that the bankrupt shall have such intention, but also that the creditor to whom payment is made must have notice of such intention. Mr. Herschell, Q.C., and Mr. F. North appeared for the appellant; Mr. Benjamin, Q.C., Mr. Marten, Q.C., and Mr. Jordan for the respondents. The appellant, William Butcher, is the trustee of the property of James Stenhouse Meldrum and Albert Wydler, bankrupts, who previously to their bankruptcy carried on business as calico printers under the style of the Belfield Printing Company, and also carried on the business of dyers at the Boarshaw Dye Works. The respondents, Messrs. Stead, are cotton-spinners and manufacturers of cotton cloths, and carry on business at Manchester as merchants. The bankrupts commenced to purchase cotton cloths from the respondents in May, 1868, and continued to trade with them up to November, 1873. The arrangement entered into between the bankrupts and the respondents was that the former should have the option of paying cash within 14 days from the time of delivery of any goods bought, receiving a discount of 2½ per cent. off, or of paying according to Manchester terms, or of paying after the expiration of 14 days, but before the expiration of the time allowed by Manchester terms, and receiving a rebate of interest on the sum paid for the period from the time of payment to the end of the time allowed by Manchester terms, calculated at the Bank rate on the day of payment. According to Manchester terms, all goods that are purchased before the 25th day of one month are to be paid for on the first Tuesday in the following month, but if bought after the 25th day of any month, then they are to be paid for on the first Tuesday in the next month but one. This arrangement was carried out, and the bankrupts exercised their option of paying as it suited their convenience. In September, 1873, and for some time previously, the bankrupts were in insolvent circumstances, because they owed a large sum to one Charles Souchay, who had originally sold them their works, and had advanced them money from time to time; but of this fact the respondents had no knowledge whatever. The bankrupts purchased from the respondents cotton cloth on 30th of September, 1873, to the value of £144, and on the 9th of October following to the value of £46. In October and November, 1873, the debtors, having become aware that thep were hopelessly insolvent, gave orders to their clerks to sell their stock in trade and other property, and with the proceeds pay their ordinary trade creditors, but not to pay Charles Souchay and certain particular creditors, to whom they were largely indebted for advances. On the 22nd of November, 1873, the £186 13s. 9d. in question was paid by one of the debtors' clerks, in pursuance of these instructions, to Messrs. Stead, the respondents, and the question was whether, under these circumstances, the latter were protected by the proviso at the end of the 92nd section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869. The section enacts that all payments involving fraudulent preference within three months of the bankruptcy shall be void, and the proviso is as follows:—"but this section shall not affect the rights of a purchaser, payee, or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration." The Court below decided that the payment to the respondents came within the proviso, and that, therefore, the trustee in bankruptcy was not entitled to recover the sum so paid from them. The case was argued on the 26th of June last, when their Lordships took time to consider. The Lord Chancellor said that there was in this case within the meaning of the 92nd section of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869 a payment made by a person unable to pay his debts as they became due from his own moneys in favour of a creditor with the view of giving that creditor a preference over other creditors, and that if there was nothing more in the case, inasmuch as the person making the payment became bankrupt within three months, the payment ought to be deemed fraudulent and void as against the trustee of the bankrupt. If the goods had been supplied for ready money, and if the money had been taken in exchange for the goods, it might well be that the exchange of goods for ready money would have negatived the inference of a fraudulent preference. But the goods were here supplied upon credit, and although the bankrupt by obtaining credit on the pretence of carrying on business might if that pretence were false and if a jury should not be satisfied that he had no intent to defraud have made himself liable to punishment for a misdemeanour, the subsequent payment for the goods so supplied on credit might not the less be a preference of a particular creditor, which would be deemed fraudulent and void. The only question appeared to be whether, the transaction being a fraudulent preference as far as the bankrupt was concerned, was by the last words of the 92nd section protected quoad the respondent, the recipient of the payment, who, as was admitted, had no knowledge of the fraudulent preference which was intended. There was no doubt that the 92nd section of the Act of 1869 introduced a considerable change into the law on this subject. Before the Act of 1869, payments by way of fraudulent preference were held to be void, but were not forbidden by any express enactment, and the Act of 1869, possibly because the administration of bankruptcy was for the future to be taken in great part away from the court and placed in the hands of trustees, appeared in the case of fraudulent preferences and many other similar cases to have endeavoured to reduce into definite propositions the law that hitherto had to be derived from a comparison of decided cases. The Act, however, did not profess to express the existing law without making considerable changes in it. In the case of fraudulent preference, for example, in place of raising an inquiry whether it was done in contemplation of bankruptcy, the Act provided certain definite tests—namely, that the bankrupt should have been at the time unable to pay his debts as they became due from his own moneys, and that he should become bankrupt within three months from the date of payment. The Act appeared to have left the question of pressure as it stood under the old law, and, indeed, the use of the word preference, implying an act of the free will, would of itself make it necessary to consider whether the pressure had or had not been used. The section, however, contained at the end of it a provision which introduced a new ingredient into the consideration of fraudulent preferences. Before the Act of 1869, if a payment were made of a debt without pressure and in contemplation of bankruptcy, it was a fraudulent preference, even although the person receiving the payment did not know he was being fraudulently preferred. The 92nd section of the Act, however, now ended with the provision that it should not affect the rights of "a purchaser, payee, or incumbrancer in good faith and for valuable consideration." In his opinion the word "payee" was to be read as meaning "person receiving payment as a creditor," whose primâ facie rights undoubtedly were to keep the money which he so received if he received the money without notice of any fraudulent preference. He thought it was the intention of the Legislature, in defining for the first time the law as to fraudulent preference, and changing the old rules as to contemplation of bankruptcy into a rule which exposed the payment to be impeached for a period as long as three months, to accompany and temper this enactment by a provision of great convenience in mercantile dealings, and giving a protection where it was obviously much required to those who in good faith took money that ought to be paid to them without notice that the person paying was doing any thing injurious to his other creditors. In his opinion, therefore, the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Chancery ought to be affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, with costs. Lord Hatherley and Lord O'Hagan concurred. Lord Selborne doubted the soundness of their lordships' judgment, which he was afraid would open the door to much fraud on the part of insolvent debtors. The judgment of the Court below was affirmed, and the appeal dismissed, with costs.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

July 10.

(Before the Hon. Judge MILLER.)

IN RE JOHN WESLEY SMITH.—The bankrupt, who came up for final examination, carried on business as a stockbroker in Belfast. Mr. Bernard Cracroft, a member of the London Stock Exchange, was the London agent of the bankrupt, and with whom he had extensive transactions, in respect of which Mr. Cracroft claimed several thousand pounds. The bankrupt set up a defence that the transactions were betting transactions, and he was not, consequently, liable for them. It will be remembered that the issue was tried before Judge Miller and a special jury, and lasted several days, when the jury found that the dealings were not of a gambling character, and that Mr. Cracroft acted bona fide as a stockbroker. Mr. Smith was accordingly, at the instance of Mr. Cracroft, adjudicated a bankrupt. Mr. Fitzgibbon, Q.C. (with whom was Dr. Seeds, instructed by Messrs. Macrory and Co.), opposed the passing of the final examination, and contended that the bankrupt had not sufficiently complied with a requisition for accounting, especially with regard to a sum of £72,000. Mr. Smith, the bankrupt, was examined, and stated that the books which contained the entries were destroyed by his brother without his knowledge. He could not, therefore, furnish a better account than he had done. Mr. Carton (instructed by Mr. Thompson) said that it was evident the bankrupt had furnished the best account it was in his power to give, and asked his lordship to bear in mind that Mr. Cracroft had admitted that the bankrupt had been merely a dupe in the hands of Rogers and his brother at Belfast. He, therefore, asked his lordship to pass the final examination. Judge Miller said that Mr. Cracroft's position on the London Stock Exchange had been seriously affected by his connection with Mr. Smith. He was accordingly entitled to the fullest investigation, and the proceedings in the court might materially assist Mr. Cracroft in re-establishing his position. Mr. Carton observed that according to the rules of the Stock Exchange, he believed the only thing that would re-establish the position of a broker would be the re-payment in full of the amount of a deficiency. Judge Miller said, according to his reading of the rules, a composition of 6s. 8d. would be sufficient, if they were satisfied the transactions in which the broker was engaged were bonâ fide, and so far Mr. Cracroft had the verdict of a jury with him. Mr. Carton said the bankrupt could give no further information at present, and he would leave the matter entirely in the hands of his lordship. Judge Miller said the case was one of considerable importance, and he would, therefore, consider his judgment on the question of passing the final examination.

BIRKENHEAD COUNTY COURT.

Before Mr. W. FOULKES.

RE JAMES EDWARD GALE. — The bankrupt was formerly manager of the Lancashire Assurance Company, and resided at Egerton-park, Rock Ferry. Mr. Sheen was appointed receiver, and shortly afterwards the sheriff entered into possession. On the 14th December a petition against the debtor was filed by David Forbes and John Wilson Paton, and at that time the police held a warrant for his arrest on a charge of embezzlement. The matter was several times before the court, up to the 6th January, when the first petition was dismissed. In the mean time the sheriff, who had acted at the suit of Mr. Redfern, a creditor, gave up possession to the receiver, who was subsequently named trustee. Mr. Lupton, barrister, now argued that the restraining order of the court, as against his client, was ultra vires, and the appointment of receiver of no effect. Mr. James, arguing contra, contended that there was evidence enough to satisfy the court of the acts of trading, and to establish the first petition, which was simply dismissed as not being needed. He further contended that there had been a continuity of possession since the appointment of a trustee; that up to the discharge of the receiver the property had been vested in him; and that the dismissal of the first petition did not take place until after the adjudication on the second. His Honour held that the execution creditor was entitled, on the ground that the goods seized by him were then the debtor's, and that no act of bankruptcy had been committed at the time.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before MR. COLLIER, Judge)

IN RE CHARLES W. COLLARD. — This was a motion for the committal of the debtor, a cooper in Kent-square. The business was carried on under the firm of Thomas Lester and Co., by Mr. Collard and his sister, the widow of the late Mr. Lester. They filed a joint petition for liquidation some few months ago, with debts £1,081, and estimated assets £642. Mr. Bolland was chosen trustee, and subsequently the debtors made several proposals of composition to the creditors, but they all fell through, and the estate had to be realised by public auction, and realised, exclusive of book debts, £360. Pending the negotiations for a compromise, the debtor Collard received several debts due to his estate, which he had failed to account for to the trustee, and the present motion was for his committal. Mr. Kennedy, instructed by Mr. Bellringer, appeared for Mr. Bolland, and the debtor appeared in person. His Honour expressed his opinion that there were two courses open—either to send the debtor for trial or to commit, but as the debtor had admitted his offence and expressed his desire to make reparation, he would adjourn the motion for a week. The case accordingly was ordered to stand over for the debtor to restore to the trustee the sums collected.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

The select committee appointed by the House of Commons to inquire into the merits of the above bill sat on Friday morning, the Right Hon. Spencer Walpole in the chair. Sir Edmund Beckett, Q.C., Mr. Littler, Q.C., and Mr. Lanyon were counsel for the promoters; Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., and two other learned gentlemen for the petitioners; and Mr. Hume Williams for others who opposed any alteration in the clauses of the bill. The committee having heard the evidence of Mr. Reilly, the assessor, and Mr. Mercer, the solicitor, under the arbitration, formally pronounced the preamble of the bill proved. A long discussion then ensued between the committee and Sir Edmund Beckett upon the question of principle, after which the hon. members deliberated in private for over three hours. On the re-admission of the public, the chairman said the committee had passed a series of resolutions, on which they were desirous that the clauses of the biil should be founded, remarking that it would involve very little alteration of the measure as it stood. The resolutions were as follows :—

"1. That in dealing with cases upon which orders or determinations have been made by previous arbitrators under the act of 1872, the arbitrator appointed under this act shall have the same powers, and be subject to the same conditions, as those imposed upon arbitrators under the act of 1872.

"2. That no appeal be allowed in cases upon which an order or determination has been made by a previous arbitrator, except when such arbitrator shall expressly certify in writing that by reason of the differences existing in previous decisions on matters of principle relating to cases of novation or liability of contributories, it is desirable that an appeal should be brought.

"3. That in proceeding with such appeal, the court of appeal may have regard to the powers and jurisdiction of the arbitrator under the act of 1872.

"4. That it is inexpedient, whilst any arbitration is in progress, to vary the principles upon which the arbitrator may proceed, by arresting section 8 of the act of 1872.

"5. That an appeal shall be from any order or determination of the arbitrator made after the passing of this act upon matters of principle only, except by a certificate from the arbitrator that an appeal may properly be brought.

"6. That the arbitrator may, if he think fit, state any questions arising upon matters of principle arising in arbitration in the form of a special case for the opinion of the court of appeal in Chancery, but not otherwise.

"7. That all appeals under the act be heard by at least two judges."

COUNTY COURT AGENTS.

The Law Times says:—"In our last issue we reported a discussion at the Leeds County Court, between the learned judge and a practitioner in his honour's court upon the subject of County Court agents. We disagree with the view which the learned judge took of the question, and still more do we disapprove of the opinion expressed by the learned registrar (Mr. Marshall), a well-known member of the Council of the Incorporated Law Society. The question resolves itself into this, to what extent, if any, should County Court judges recognise debt collectors? In the case before us certain persons, calling themselves accountants, but who it may be have no legitimate claim to such a name, and who are probably debt collectors and nothing more, acted for a plaintiff in a County Court case by issuing the plaint, and the defendant by his solicitor (if he had employed an agent instead it seems that neither judge or registrar would have objected), having given notice pursuant to sect. 2 of 30 and 31 Vict. c. 142, of his intention to resist the action, these debt collectors actually sent to the solicitor for the defendant a formal written notice concluding thus: 'Take notice that we have withdrawn the above case from the court,' and signed, 'Plaintiff's Agents.' There can be no two opinions about this being a contempt of court, at which, however, the registrar is disposed to wink, for the reason, as we fear, that it is found to save time and trouble to the County Court officials, if agents are allowed to act for suitors in small cases and undefended actions. We are sorry to say that many County Court registrars have of late shown a decided disposition in this direction, and it is the duty of the judges of County Courts to check the growth of such a contravention of Acts of Parliament. To debt collectors endeavouring to obtain payment of moneys due to persons who employ them, we cannot with propriety, and we do not, object, and a debt collector may go the length of threatening that if payment be not made, the creditor will either issue process or instruct a solicitor to do so, but he (the debt collector) cannot lawfully threaten to issue process himself as paid agent of the creditor, without offending against those laws which protect the rights of the profession. Many County Court registrars habitually allow debt-collecting firms to issue, almost daily, batches of County Court summonses, notwithstanding that it involves an infraction of professional rights. Let suitors act for themselves as much as they like, and the more they do so in small matters the better the profession will like it; and that it should give extra trouble to registrars of County Courts we much regret, but it cannot be avoided except by such persons seeking the assistance of professional men, who are ever ready to recognise the necessity of regulating their charges according to the nature and extent of the services required of them. In the case before us, the learned judge twice asked if the complaint was not one which the Law Society ought to deal with. Mr. Marshall does not seem to have replied to this inquiry. We venture to say that the Law Society cannot be expected to deal in any way with such questions; at all events one thing is perfectly certain, and that is that they never do so. It is for County Court judges to dispose of these matters in a summary and judicial manner, and if they will only adopt some uniform action, with a view of arresting an evil already checked, they will not be long troubled with it. It is now in its infancy, and can be easily nipped in the bud. In the 2nd section of the Act above referred to, the word 'agent' appears as a person by whom such a notice as that in question may be given, but it is clear that it is only meant to apply to unpaid agents, such as a member of the suitor's family or some friend; it is out of all reason to suppose that it was intended to include debt collectors, for, among other difficulties, this would involve a part repeal, by a sidewind, of important protective provisions in the Attorneys' Acts of 1843 and 1860, especially sects. 2 and 36 of the Act of 1843, and sect. 26 of the Act of 1860. The 36th section of the first Act gives this question its quietus. It makes it a contempt of any County Conrt for any person other than a solicitor (who must be certificated at the time of acting as such) to commence, or defend, or carry on any proceedings in such a court, except such person be plaintiff or defendant. Any person offending against this law cannot even recover disbursements paid by him or her, and the offence 'shall and may be punished accordingly.' The word shall is omitted from a similar provision in sect. 26 of the Act of 1860. It seems doubtful whether the penalty of £50, as provided by sect. 26 of the Act of 1860, attaches to such an offence; but, reading the two Acts together, we incline to the opinion that it does so. The 35th section of the Act of 1843 provides a similar punishment in the case of persons other than solicitors and suitors themselves issuing process in the Superior Courts, and there is just this to be said, if a debt collector went to work to issue a writ for some creditor whose debt he was trying to get in, one of two things must happen, either he must be caught by the clerk in the writ office of the court in which he proposed to proceed, or, having issued the writ without detection, he could hardly hope afterwards to escape fine, and perhaps imprisonment; he would be very severely dealt with by any judge or court before whom a knowledge of his offence was brought; and yet we are told that the operation of the very next section, having exactly the same object in view, except that the former applies to superior and the latter to inferior courts, is not to have its full force and effect. For debt collectors to issue process in County Courts must not, we are told, be complained of by the profession, especially as it suits the convenience of registrars in certain cases, and perhaps because some judges court popularity of a general rather than a professional nature. In conclusion, Mr. Ferns, of Leeds, has drawn attention to a flagrant breach of an Act of Parliament, and instead of being supported by his professional brother (the registrar of the court), that officer seeks to palliate such offence, and the learned judge blandly asks if it is not a question for the Incorporated Law Society. We refer his Honour and other County Court judges to the 36th section of the Attorneys' Act 1843. It is, we know, also an offence under the Stamp Act for a debt collector to issue such a notice as that in this case, and a penalty of £50 attaches, but the contempt of court ought not to be overlooked."

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointment of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr Frederick William Sperring, public accountant, 26 Philpot lane, Fenchurch-street, E.C., has been appointed trustee of the estate of Frederick Glitsentein, trading as Glitsentein and Co., wine merchants, of 3 Muscovy-street, Tower-hill.

Mr. John Henry Champness, of 10 Basinghall-street, public accountant, has, on the application of Messrs. Tanqueray, Willaume and Hanbury, New Broad-street, solicitors, been appointed by the Court of Chancery, receiver and manager in the suit of Alabaster and Gillman.

Vice-Chancellor Hall has appointed Mr. James Waddell official liquidator of the Oakwell Collieries, Limited.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. William Brooks, of 11 Old Jewry-chambers, official liquidator of the New Amicable Life Assurance Company, Limited.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

W. MARSHALL & CO. (MANCHESTER).—At the first meeting under the bankruptcy of Messrs. W. Marshall and Co., merchants and commission agents, Manchester, the debts were stated to amount to £24,000. The bankrupts produced no statement, and were ordered to file one within fourteen days.

W. MABON & CO. (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Walter Mabon and Co., engineers and boilermakers, of Adwick and Gorton, near Manchester, was held on Friday, when the liabilities were stated at £26,817, and assets at £16,517. It was decided to liquidate the estate.

J. WILSON & SONS (HAWICK).—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. John Wilson and Sons, of Hawick, a composition of 12s. in the pound was accepted.

S. & J. GRAHAM (LONDON).—A meeting of the creditors of John Graham, trading as S. & J. Graham, who lately failed, was held on Friday. The balance-sheet showed that there was due to trade creditors £10,886, and the liabilities on accommodation acceptances for Wilson and Armstrong, Collie and Co., &c., amount to £60,720, while the assets are estimated at £22,943. It was elicited that in 1873 the firm was insolvent to the extent of about £6,000, and had received on account of the accommodation bills lately dishonoured, £23,592. A proposition was made to pay 5s. in the pound, in four, eight, and twelve months, but this was opposed by a large majority, and liquidation in bankruptcy was finally resolved on.

W. SHAW, SON, & CO. (HUDDERSFIELD).—On Friday afternoon the first meeting of creditors of Wm. Shaw, Son, and Company, woollen cloth merchants, Wood-street, Huddersfield, was held at the Queen's Hotel, Huddersfield. Mr. W. Schofield, accountant, the receiver, read the statement of accounts, which was as follows:—Liabilities—Unsecured creditors, £23,512 6s. 10½d.; rent, rates, and taxes, £76 16s. 0d.; liabilities on bills discounted £3,059 17s. 1d., of which it is expected will rank against the estate for dividend, £1,000; total, £24,589 2s. 10½d. Assets—Stock in warehouse, £4,604 11s. 3d.; book debts, £20,628 8s. 2d., estimated to produce, £4 376 6s.; cash in hand, £143 3s. 4d.; bills of exchange, £6,312 11s. 9d., estimated to produce, £100; furniture, &c. £150; Mr. H. Shaw's expenses to Montreal, on account of failure of Woodhouse, Davis, and Co. £45; surplus of Mr, Shaw's private estate £700; total £10,119 0s. 7d. On behalf of the debtors a composition of 6s. 8d. in the pound, payable at six, twelve, and eighteen months was offered, the last instalment to be secured together with the produce of the dividend of 2s. in the pound which the creditors of Woodhouse, Davis, and Co. had agreed to accept, and which is not taken into account in the debtors' statement. The creditors refused this, and asked for 8s. in the pound, which the debtors said they could not pay, and the creditors then resolved that the estate should be wound-up in liquidation, with Mr. W. Schofield as trustee, and a committee of inspection.

J. P. WESTHEAD & CO. (MANCHESTER).—The solicitors of Messrs. J. P. Westhead and Co. have issued a circular, in which they inform the creditors that after a careful examination of the affairs of the firm, and of its individual partners, by Messrs. Delloitte and Halliday, of Manchester, public accountants, the assets are found to be sufficient not only to pay all liabilities in full, but also to show a very large surplus. The circular adds: "It is impossible for the senior partner at his time of life actively to direct a large business, and under the advice of his friends and with concurrence of his partners he has therefore decided to transfer the assets and business of the firm to a company to be formed with limited liability. Steps are now being taken for this purpose, and every effort compatible with prudence will be made to have matters placed on a satisfactory basis with the least possible delay. It is necessary, however, that some indulgence should be extended to the firm whilst they are making these efforts, and as the company when formed will in the ordinary course call up its capital by instalments, the payment of liabilities must necessarily extend over a period, and whether a company be formed or not some time would necessarily be required for realisation. It is proposed to pay the creditors in full by four equal instalments at three, six, nine, and twelve months from 1st August next. Under these circumstances it is considered unnecessary to hold a meeting of creditors or to issue a balance-sheet."

TOLLEY AND JONES (WEST BROMWICH).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Tolley and Jones, colliery proprietors and coal masters, West Bromwich, was held at Birmingham on the 13th inst. The liabilities amounted to £6,977 3s. 10d., and the assets to £2,549 2s., from which had to be deducted creditors to be paid in full, leaving net assets at £2,132 2s. 8d.

CHEDGZOY (BRISTOL).—Mr. W. C. Harvey (Gamble and Harvey), one of the trustees in this estate, has issued a report pointing out the unsatisfactory statements made by the debtor in regard to his liabilities and as to false entries in the books, and stating that these will form the subject of an inquiry by the Court.

R. C. PATCHETT (HALIFAX).—At the meeting of the creditors of Richard Crabtree Patchett, wine and spirit merchant, Halifax, held at the White Lion Hotel, Halifax, on the 12th inst., it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement and not in bankruptcy. The statement of affairs produced, which had been prepared by Mr. C. T. Rhodes, accountant, Halifax, showed the total liabilities to be £2,299 16s. 11d., and the assets £1,823 8s. 5d., less £819 6s. 3d. claims payable in full. Mr. C. T. Rhodes, the receiver, was continued as trustee, with Mr. C. W. Cheesman, of Hull, brewer and distiller, Mr. Jubb, solicitor, Halifax, being intrusted with the registration of the resolutions. The debtor made no offer of composition.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—Mr. Oldershaw, chymist, druggist, and drysalter, Blackburn-road, Accrington, has filed a petition in the Blackburn County Court for liquidation by arrangement. His liabilities amount to £3,800, and the assets consist of stock-in-trade and book debts. —With reference to the recent suspension of Messrs. John Ranking and Co., of 11 St. Helen's-place, it was announced on Saturday that Mr. Robert Corkling, of Manchester, merchant, trading in Egypt as Robert Corkling and Co., had presented a petition for liquidation. The liabilities are small, with the exception of his indebtedness to Messrs. Ranking and Co., which amounts to £120,000, or thereabouts. The assets are unascertained. The suspension of Messrs. Ranking and Co. was occasioned by the failure of Mr. Corkling to carry out his engagement with them.—A petition in liquidation has been filed in the Bradford Court by Messrs. John Willis and Son, brassfounders, machine makers, &c., of Miller's-gate, Bradford. The liabilities are estimated at £25,000.—The failure of Messrs. Lowes and Webster, tobacco and snuff manufacturers, Liverpool, is announced with £3,500 liabilities, and a petition for liquidation, &c. has been filed. Messrs. Barrell and Rodway, Liverpool, are the solicitors acting in the matter, and Mr. T. Theodore Rogers, Liverpool, is the accountant.

SCOTLAND.—The suspension is announced of Mr. G. Farquhar, produce broker, 76 Wilson-street. The books of the firm are in the hands of Messrs M'Farlane and Hutton. —Messrs. Gardner and M'Gregor, shirt and umbrella manufacturers, 76 Ingram-street, Glasgow, have suspended payment. The liabilities are estimated at £25,000.

AMERICA.—New York advices announce the suspension of Mr. Henry Brannhold, 56 Lewis-street, New York, manufacturer of fancy and coloured paper, with liabilities of £12,000. —The Conneant (O.) Paper Company had stopped; liabilities £10,000.—Mr. C. R. Stinde, St. Louis, in the boot and shoe trade, has suspended, with liabilities of £36,000.—Messrs. William Moland and Son, provision and produce merchants, Philadelphia, have failed; liabilities, £8,000.

The National Zeitung states that further difficulties have occurred in the Austrian sugar trade.—The considerable firm of Urbauck, Machatschek, and Waagner, of Prague, has called its creditors together.—The liabilities are about £150,000. Payment in full, with 6 per cent. interest, by instalments extending over a period of five years, is offered. The financial stringency in Norway appears also to have brought about a commercial crisis in that country.—The journal already quoted is advised from Drontheim of the failure of three large firms, viz. Kampstrüp and Co., in the herring trade, with liabilities exceeding the assets by about £20,000; Wilhelmsen and Co. in the leather trade; and Anton Nilsen, merchant. A number of smaller firms have likewise suspended payment.

THE NATIONAL DEBT.—A return obtained by Mr. Goschen "showing in respect of each year since 1865 inclusive the increase of the deficiency in the assets of the National Debt Commissioners, in respect of their liabilities to friendly societies," has just been issued as a Parliamentary paper. It shows that on the 20th of November, 1866, the deficiency was £844,505. In 1866 there was an increase in the deficiency of £35,945, but in 1867 there was a decrease of £8,053. In each succeeding year there has been an increase of deficiency as follows:—In 1868, £44,358; in 1869, £41,823; in 1870, £57,200; in 1871, £35,755; in 1872, £50,822; in 1873, £44,117; in 1874, £42,492. The deficiency in 1874 was £1,188,964, the total increase of deficiency since 1865 being £344,459.

NEW COMPANIES.

THE CARDINHAM VALE SILVER LEAD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED. —This company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring and working the extensive Cardinham Vale property, situated about four miles from the Bodmin-road station, in the county of Cornwall. The capital is £30,000, in 6,000 shares of £5 each; of which only 5s. per share is to be paid on application, 5s. on allotment, and the balance, if required, at intervals of not less than three months. To meet the wishes of those investors who prefer paying in full, the directors will issue fully paid-up shares, not exceeding one-half of the capital now offered for subscription, such shares to have priority in the allotment, and to be issued at a discount of 5 per cent. The London offices of the company (the prospectus of which will be found in our advertisement columns) are at Cornhill Chambers, Cornhill; and the Co-operative Credit Bank, 11 Queen Victoria Street, E.C., has been empowered to receive deposits on their behalf.

THE WARRINGTON BOTTLING COMPANY.—This company, which is not strictly speaking a new undertaking, has been formed for the purpose of purchasing the bottling business at present carried on at Warrington by the Messrs. Walker and Shaw, and for uniting with it the manufacture of aerated waters, one of the most profitable industries of its kind. The capital required is £10,000, divided into the popular price of £1 shares. As a similar concern in the same town is now paying a dividend of 40 per cent., the present company seems to have an unusually favourable prospect.

THE SAFETY LIGHTING COMPANY, LIMITED.—There has been of late more attention paid to artificial lighting than the subject has received for a very long time, and the above company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring Mr. Aronson's patented improvements in the construction of gas and oil burners. The principle of the invention consists in allowing the gallery which holds the chimney to be lifted up and down without removing the glass, thus permitting the usual cleaning and attention without running the risk of breakage or upsetting. The capital of the company has been fixed at £10,000, in £5 shares. The London offices are at 33 Poultry, E.C., and the Co-operative Credit Bank, 11 Queen Victoria-street, E.C., has been empowered to receive deposits on behalf of the company.

THE CARDINHAM VALE SILVER LEAD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Incorporated under "The Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867," by which the Liability of Members is limited to the amount of their Shares.

The above is entirely unlike the ordinary Mining Investments offered to the public, inasmuch as there will be no loss of time in searching for Lodes and exploring the Setts, the Mine being taken as a going concern, with valuable deposits of Ore laid open requiring only suitable machinery to make it marketable. It is believed that there is no Mine that can be worked cheaper than the Cardinham Vale, no steam machinery will be required to develop the Mine, as there is an ample supply of water at all seasons of the year available for working the machinery necessary for its development, and crushing and preparing the Ores for market. The Proprietor of the property has agreed to take nine-tenths of his interest in Shares, a proof of his estimate of the value of the Mines, and the profits to be derived therefrom.

CAPITAL:—£30,000, in 6,000 Shares of £5 each.

Deposit 5s. per Share on Application, and 5s. on Allotment, and remainder in sums not exceeding 2s. 6d. per Share at intervals of not less than three months if required. To meet the wishes of those Investors who prefer paying in full, the Directors will issue fully paid-up Shares not exceeding one-half of the Capital now offered for subscription, such Shares will have priority in the Allotment, and will be issued at a discount of 5 per cent.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring, working, and effectually developing the "Cardinham Vale" Silver Lead Mines, a valuable property, situated in the Parish of Cardinham, in the County of Cornwall, and about four miles from the Bodmin-road Station on the Cornwall Railway.

The Sett is very extensive, comprising an area of upwards of 180 Acres, and has the great advantage of a permanent Stream Water for the working of the Mines, crushing and dressing the Ores, &c.

The property is held on lease for 21 years from 29th September, 1871, at a minimum rent of £20 per annum, and a royalty of one-fifteenth; the rent, however, merges in the royalties when they exceed that amount.

There are several Lodes intersecting the Sett, in one of which an Adit level has been driven for a distance of upwards of 120 fathoms, and two Winzes sunk therein to the depth of 15 feet each.

This Lode is about 4 feet wide, and in geological appearance is thought not to be surpassed by the best of our British Dividend Lead Mines at the same stage of operation.

To afford evidence of the great results realised by British Lead Mining, when properly conducted, a tabular statement of a few Mines is subjoined, from the Reports contained in different Mining Papers.

DIVIDENDS PAID BY BRITISH LEAD MINING COMPANIES.

NAME.	OUTLAY.	DIVIDENDS.
Cargoll	17,470	16,112
East Rose	6,400	370,000
East Darren	9,600	70,000
Foxdale	70,000	226,000
Great Laxey	60,000	257,000
Green Hurth	1,920	10,240
Goginan	90,000	290,000
Herodsfoot	8,700	63,744
Lisburne	7,500	225,800
Minerva	45,000	573,750
Roman Gravels	90,000	49,000
South Darren	19,870	6,750
Tankerville	7,200	40,800
Van	63,500	191,625
West Chiverton	31,500	147,500

"LEAD EQUAL TO 6CWT. TO THE TON OF LODE STUFF."
"SILVER 40OZ. 16DWT. 16GRS. TO THE TON OF ORE."

Digitized by Google

Winzes are being sunk on the course of a Lode which produces Ore of the richest quality in remunerative quantities, and as depth is attained the yield increases, which facts are confirmed in the accompanying Reports. The purchase-money for the entire Property is fixed at £10,000, the Vendor's confidence in the undertaking being such that he has consented to take £9,000 of the purchase-money in paid-up Shares, and £1,000 in cash.

A contract has been entered into between Charles William Baylis, of Worcester, of the one part, and William Sharp, on behalf of the Company, of the other part, dated the 19th day of May, 1875, which can be seen at the offices of the solicitors of the Company.

The Directors have instructed Captain Bray to give every facility to intending Investors for inspecting this Property, that they may satisfy themselves of its very great present value and future prospects.

ADVANTAGES OF THE MINE.—WATER-POWER, CARRIAGE.

There is an ample supply of water at all seasons of the year for working the most powerful machinery necessary for the development of the mines, crushing and dressing the Ores.

It is believed to be impossible for any Mine to be worked cheaper than the Cardinham Vale.

No Steam Machinery, therefore, will be required to develop this Mine. This is at all times a matter of great importance; but in the present state of the coal trade and labour market, the value of water as a motive power cannot be over-estimated; in fact the saving of cost of coal alone would pay a good dividend on the capital of the Company. The Mine is also situated most favourably for the carriage of Ores and materials, being within a short distance from the Railway Station.

Owing to a great demand for Lead, and the exceptional character of the property, the Directors believe they are placing before the public a safe and valuable investment, one that in a short period will declare large Dividends. They recommend a careful perusal of the accompanying Reports.

Applications for Shares should be made on the accompanying Form, which must be forwarded, together with a deposit of 5s. per Share, to the Bankers of the Company, or to the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company, where Prospectuses and Forms of application may be obtained, and specimens of the Ore be seen, together with copies of the Reports and Documents referred to in this Prospectus.

REPORTS.

REPORT OF CAPTAIN HARRIS.

I have carefully examined the Cardinham Vale Silver Lead Mine Sett, and find several large and masterly Lodes crossing it, which present a beautiful appearance.

The Main Lode runs about 30in. East of North and West of South; on this Lode an Adit Level has been driven for about 120 fathoms, it commenced and continued in Silver Lead. Two Winzes have also been sunk therein in valuable deposits of Ore. I did not see the bottom of the Winzes, the water being quick would not admit of my doing so, but I am told there is a Lode in the Winzes about 4 feet wide, which contain about 1 ton of Silver Lead per fathom, and from indications of the Ore that came from the Winzes I think it must be correct; the Lode here shows a decided improvement in going down. The Lode standing in the back of the Adit contains sufficient Ore to let on tribute, and I am informed men have offered to work it at 10s. in the £.

There is ample water to work the Machinery necessary for a practical development, and it is my opinion that by the erection of such Machinery a paying Mine would be opened up at once. I therefore urge that a water wheel of say 84 feet diameter, and 6 or 8 feet abreast, be erected at once to pump out the water, and thereby lay open the deposits of Ore at a deeper level.

H. B. HARRIS.

CAMBORNE, CORNWALL,
November, 1874.

REPORT OF CAPTAIN BRAY.

The Sett, which is very extensive, is situated in the parish of Cardinham, in the County of Cornwall.

An Adit has been driven North in the course of the Lodes about 130 fathoms, and two Winzes sunk about 3 fathoms each where the Lode is about 4 feet wide, containing large blocks of Silver Lead, and in the outside Winze there is a leader of pure Silver Lead several inches wide lying against the foot wall of the Lode, but the water in the Winze is too much to keep out. I had great difficulty to get at the bottom of the Winze, but I managed to send up several cwts. of the Ore, which is of a beautiful nature, it being imbedded in friable spar.

The Lode throughout the Adit presents a most beautiful appearance, and in many places is nearly 4 feet wide, containing Lead in paying quantities; men in fact have offered to work it at 10s. in the £, which speaks for itself; and should the yield increase in the next 10 fathoms sinking as it is going down in the Winzes, the output will be such as to place the Mine on a par with our best Dividend Mines.

A permanent stream of water runs close to the Adit, of sufficient power to work water-wheels, and the Mine is in every way situated for the most economical working.

The Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the Bottling Business carried on by Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, at Warrington, in the County of Lancaster, with the buildings and land upon which the said business is carried on, and for the purpose of adding to the business the Manufacturing and Bottling of Aerated Waters, in addition to the Bottling of Beer, Porter, Cider, Perry, or other Liquors or Waters, and dealing therein in the ordinary way of Trade.

The buildings are of modern erection, and very suitable for the business.

The premises contain an area of 2,380 square yards, and are held for the residue of a term of 999 years from the 25th March, 1867, subject to a yearly ground rent of £12 8s. and the lessees' covenants affecting the same. A provisional agreement dated the 21st day of June, 1875, has been entered into between Mr. Moses Walker, as the owner of the leasehold premises of the first part, Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, as the owners of the business, goodwill, plant, and stock-in-trade, of the second part, and John Cook Hubbert as a Trustee for and on behalf of the Company of the third part, whereby Mr. Moses Walker agrees to sell to the Company the leasehold premises for the sum of £1,500, which is to be paid to him in cash. Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, agree to sell to the Company the goodwill of the business for the sum of £300, which is to be paid to Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, in equal shares, and is to be taken by them in Three Hundred £1 shares in the Company, which are to be deemed fully paid-up shares, and the plant and stock-in-trade at the amount of a valuation thereof, to be made by two valuers, one to be named by the said Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, and the other by the Company, or an umpire to be named by such two valuers, and which amount is to be paid in cash.

Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, Joseph Entwistle, William Walker, and John Shaw, will be the first Directors, and Mr. Moses Walker, under whose management the business has hitherto been principally conducted, will continue the management thereof, as Managing Director, for a period of two years certain, at the annual salary of £208 exclusive of travelling or other expenses incurred in or about the Company's business, and also exclusive of any remuneration which may be voted to him as one of the Board of Directors by the Shareholders.

The sale of Bottled Beer, Ale, Porter, and Aerated Waters, has for some years steadily increased, and there is every prospect that the Company will do a large business, and that with careful management a large dividend may be realised. It is not anticipated that more than 15s. per share will be at any time called up.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the provisional Agreement of the 21st day of June, 1875, may be seen at the Offices of the Company.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained at the offices of the Company, or from their Bankers or Secretary.

For Forms of Application apply at the Offices as above.

This Company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and introducing to the public improved arrangements of apparatus for lighting by gas, oil, or otherwise. The Company has arranged for the purchase of the valuable patent of Mr. Joseph Norman Aronson, dated 21st August, 1874 (No. 2878), for improvements in lamps or lighting apparatus.

In lighting gas, gaseliers, pedestals, bracket or oil lamps as usually constructed, much trouble, inconvenience, annoyance, and expense, result from the manner in which the chimneys, globes, and shades, are retained in their positions.

They are held by immoveable holders, so that in lighting not only do the glasses frequently break, but dirt accumulates in the chimneys and globes, thereby offering serious obstruction to the passage of the light in the direction in which it is most wanted.

Besides these objections pertaining to gas lighting, there is in the case of oil lamps as ordinarily constructed a further and very prominent drawback, which arises from the impossibility of getting at the burner, or in filling the lamps with oil without first removing the chimney, globe and shade, which removals entail not only much loss of time and trouble, but also constant breakages.

Now all these objections, both for gas and oil, are removed by this invention, which gives easy and complete access to the burner by raising the moveable gallery, carrier, or support; and this applies equally to the filling of the lamp without the inconvenience which exists in other lamps now in general use.

The invention is also applicable, at a very small cost, to all lamps.

Considering the immense business now doing in burners of ordinary construction, and the large profits realised, a highly remunerative return is anticipated to the investors in this Company.

The consideration to be paid to Mr. Aronson for all his rights for the whole of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, the Channel Islands, and Isle of Man, in respect of this valuable invention is £3,000—namely, £2,500 in fully paid-up shares, and £500 in cash, payable out of subscriptions for shares after £500 has been set aside for working the Company. The purchase includes improvements, extensions, and substitutions. The contract is dated the 30th October, 1874, and the names of the parties to the Contract are Joseph Norman Aronson and Samuel Starkey Ellis. Since the incorporation of the Company the above contract has been ratified and adopted by the Company, and a Contract entered into dated the 16th day of November, 1874. The names of the parties to the last-named Contract are the said Joseph Norman Aronson and the "Safety Lighting Company, Limited."

The Accountant.

JULY 24, 1875.

The close of the legal year, which may be considered to last from November to August, is being noted for even more unpleasant consequences than usual to companies and their concomitant promoters, directors, and aiders and abettors generally. The Canadian Oil Wells Company has appeared, at the instance of Sir John Hay, before the Lords Justices; and that unlucky director has not only failed to get the relief he anticipated, but has had to pay very heavy sums in costs, charges, and expenses for the pleasure of hearing his conduct unsparingly denounced by Lord Justice James. Vice-Chancellor Malins is not always very reticent when an "inequitable" case comes before him; but if he chastised with whips, the Lords Justices chastised with scorpions; and there are few persons who will be disposed to waste much pity on Sir John Hay, who has illustrated again the folly of "washing dirty linen in public," and will probably agree with his adversary very quickly in any future difficulty, rather than again run the risk of affording Sir W. M. James an opportunity of wielding the epigrammatic scourge of the late Sir J. Knight Bruce. It is, difficult, however, to avoid pitying Mr. Crickmer, who has got himself into a sad scrape over a little financial speculation in the Caribbean Islands. We can never be surprised at any company whatever making an appearance, however wild and improbable may be its raison d'être; but certainly to form a company to work "deposits of guano and other such-like things," in a distant island, where no guano and very little else exists, by virtue of an imaginary concession granted by a nation which has no rights at all to dispose of, is sufficiently startling to the most constant readers of financial journals. Among other things wanting was, it seems, capital; and this poor Mr. Crickmer advanced, and was rewarded by having certain paid-up shares transferred into his name. A company which is formed for the purpose of raising wealth which does not exist, from an island which belongs to some one else, is naturally not long-lived; and the "Caribbean Company" was very shortly compulsorily wound-up, and money was wanted for this purpose. Now it is a settled principle that bonus shares, on which nothing has been paid, are liable to contribute when a call has been made. On the authority of this doctrine, Mr. Crickmer's case was decided. The shares handed to him were bonus shares, indeed no capital had been really subscribed, and so he was liable to pay the amount of the call upon them. He has the satisfaction of the Vice-Chancellor's opinion that he is an innocent sufferer, and is a sort of oasis of virtue in a dreary desert of fraud. At the same time, Sir Richard Malins thinks that he ought to have known better. The whole case reads almost like a cunningly devised satire upon the company mania; but the lessons of caution it inculcates will not, we hope, be easily lost sight of.

The Friendly Societies Bill may yet be amended by the addition of proper provisions for securing an efficient audit, as it will probably undergo further discussion in the House of Commons with reference to an important alteration inserted by the House of Lords. It will be remembered that it was originally provided that three pounds should be the sum allowed for the funeral of an infant. Thereupon arose one of those edifying controversies, which so much raise the general opinion of our national sobriety of argument and practical ideas. It was objected by the managers of several societies, that the amount fixed was too low, and that six pounds was in reality only a reasonable limit. Acting upon their advice, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, with that peculiar desire to satisfy every body which is so marked a feature of the ministerial policy, gave way, and six pounds was accordingly substituted. Thereupon arose an outcry that this was offering a premium to infanticide; and quite a lively discussion arose whether the so-called working-classes were in the habit of systematically destroying their offspring or not; but the Chancellor of the Exchequer remained firm. In the Lords, however, the clause was again altered, and three pounds is now the limit, subject to a possible disagreement between the two Houses in the matter. The best solution of the matter would, we think, be found in an application, or rather extension, of a common practice of insurance offices. It has already dawned upon many people that in restricting the sum payable on the death of a child, the Government is not "affixing a stigma" upon the working-classes, but is in fact conferring on them a privilege not appertaining to their wealthier fellow-countrymen. The power of profiting by a child's death is given to the working-classes alone. But to meet the wishes of those who insist that the higher sum is requisite, and to obviate the objections of those who wish to do away with the faintest suspicion of gain by a child's death, the duty might be thrown on the societies of themselves settling the undertaker's account. Every insurance office reserves to itself the power of reinstating premises destroyed, instead of paying the cost, and does so in all cases where the loss is attended with circumstances of suspicion. Let power be given to the societies, if they think fit, to examine and pay the funeral expenses, and so make certain that no unfair advantage has been taken. If, in addition to this duty, they will also endeavour to cut down the undertaker's claim to the lowest possible limits, they will do a good action. And while our legislators are squabbling over the precise amount of confidence to be placed in the honesty of the humbler members of their constituencies, perhaps some one will again raise the question of a proper and efficient audit. The first point is, after all, one of sentiment; the other goes directly to the root of the usefulness of the measure.

The case of "Butcher v. Stead," which we reported last week, settles a very important question with regard to the doctrine of fraudulent preference, and it has been decided by the highest tribunal in the land that valuable consideration and bona-fides are still entitled to the very highest place. The point itself is simple. A payment admitted to be fraudulent on the part of the bankrupt is made within three months of his bankruptcy, to a creditor who has no knowledge of the fraudulent preference which was intended. Is this void, or is the creditor to be deemed a "payee in good faith, and for valuable consideration?" The answer was not quite unanimous, the majority of the judges holding that the transaction was protected, and Lord Selborne, who was a dissentient, thinking that the decision would "open the door to much fraud on the part of insolvent debtors."

Legally speaking, the reasoning of the Lord Chancellor seems conclusive. He pointed out that before the Act of 1869 such a transaction was void, but that the saving clause appeared for the first time in the 92nd section of the Act. From this he inferred that it was intended that these transactions should be protected, and indeed it is otherwise scarcely possible to attach any meaning to the word "payee." Lord Selborne, too, appears to have considered the propriety of the judgment more on moral than technical grounds, and his well-known views would naturally lead him to consider the ethical rather than the legal aspects of the question. At present, therefore, there must be collusion between debtor and creditor, or at any rate a certain amount of guilty knowledge on the part of the latter, to make the transaction void; though, having regard to the positive enactment of the first part of the section, it would probably be obligatory on the creditor who wished to avail himself of the qualifying clause to give some more stringent proof of his good faith than is necessary in the case of an innocent holder. And, after all, the power of cross-examination is a wonderful engine in breaking down false statements. The decision seems legally right, and may not be objectionable from a commercial point of view.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

EX PARTE COOPER—IN RE ZUCCO.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Pepys, as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. Messrs. Nicholas De Sylla Zucco and John Kessissoglu, were merchants and insurance brokers in Adam's-court, Old Broad-street. On the 25th of March, 1875, they filed a liquidation petition, under which Mr. Arthur Cooper was appointed trustee of their property. The debtors had been engaged to a large extent in the fruit trade with Greece. On the 19th of December last Mr. Edward Webb, a fruit broker in Philpot-lane, who had been in the habit of acting as broker for the debtors, made advances to them to the extent of £2,000, by accepting some bills of exchange drawn by them. He stated that he made these advances on the faith of an agreement by Zucco to deposit with him as security the bills of lading of some currants, which the debtors had shipped at Catacola, and which bills of lading they expected shortly to receive. As a matter of fact the bills of lading were, in February last, pledged by the debtors to Mr. John Balli, jun., of Gresham-house. Mr. Webb alleged that this pledge to Mr. Balli was made by the debtors by way of fraudulent preference, and wished that the trustee should take proceedings to recover the currants from Balli. The trustee, however, declined to do so, it appearing that if Mr. Webb could substantiate his claim, it would exhaust the whole value of the currants. Mr. Webb applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for an order that the trustee should pay or account to the estate of the debtors for £1,500, the value of the currants, or that the trustee should take possession of the currants, or take steps to compel the delivery of them, or the payment of their value to him, and asked for a declaration that Webb was entitled to the security which he claimed upon the currants, and for an order for payment to him accordingly. The Registrar dismissed this application with costs, but gave leave to Webb to use the name of the trustee in any proceedings he might be advised to take, either against Balli or against the debtors, to enforce delivery of the currants, or payment of the proceeds thereof to him, upon Webb indemnifying the trustee against the costs of such proceedings. From that part of the order which gave this leave to Webb, the trustee appealed. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. F. W. Hollams argued for the appellant; Mr. Lanyon supported the Registrar's order. Lord Justice James said that this part of the order must have been made by a slip, the Registrar probably thinking that it could do no harm to any one. But the trustee of the estate was a trustee for the creditors generally, not for Mr. Webb. Mr. Webb might, if he could, come to some arrangement with the trustee to give up part of his claim for the benefit of the estate. Lord Justice Mellish said that a trustee in bankruptcy ought not to make an application to set aside a transaction on the ground that it was fraudulent preference, or to allow such an application to be made in his name, except for the purpose of benefitting the estate and having the property equally distributed among the creditors. He ought not to make such an application, or allow it to be made in his name for the purpose of benefitting one creditor only. That part of the Registrar's order which was appealed from must be discharged.

Ex Parte Oliphant in Re Stiff.—This was an application by Mr. Henry William Oliphant, formerly editor and manager of the Weekly Dispatch newspaper, to be paid the sum of £208, for salary due to him, out of a sum of £1,5000 arising from the sale of the newspaper. The application was refused by Mr. Registrar Murray, acting as Chief Judge, and Mr. Oliphant appealed. The newspaper was the property of Messrs. George Stiff and Alfred Flower, and in December, 1871, Mr. Oliphant was appointed editor and manager, and he held the appointment until January, 1875. Messrs. Stiff and Flower became involved in pecuniary difficulties, and in January, 1873, Mr. R. J. Wood, who held a mortgage over the property, took possession of the newspaper and the plant, and thenceforth carried on the business, Mr. Oliphant continuing to act as editor and manager. On the 21st of August, 1873, Messrs. Stiff and Flower were adjudicated bankrupts. On the 8th of January, 1875, the newspaper was sold to Mr. Ashton Dilke for £11,000. Of this sum £9,500 went to pay what was due to the mortgagee, and the balance, £1,500, was paid to the trustee of the bankrupts' estate. Mr. Oliphant's services not being required by Mr. Dilke, he claimed to be paid a year's salary, at the rate of £4 a week, out of the bankrupts' estate. He deposed that it is the custom, when a newspaper is sold, to give the editor a year's salary in lieu of notice. He also stated that when he was discharged by Mr. Dilke, he asked the trustee who was to pay him his year's salary in lieu of notice, and the trustee replied, "I will settle with you. Send in your account, and it shall be examined." The trustee resisted the claim, on the ground that Mr. Oliphant was the servant of the mortgagee, not of the bankrupts. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Northmore Lawrence argued for the appellant; Mr. Robinson, Q.C., and Mr. W. Renshaw supported the Registrar's decision. Lord Justice James said that beyond all question Mr. Oliphant was the servant of the mortgagee, and might have demanded compensation from him for being dismissed without notice. He was induced not to apply to the mortgagee by the trustee saying to him, "I will settle with you." That being so, he was entitled to compensation out of the bankrupts' estate. Having regard to all the circumstances, his Lordship thought that six months' salary would be a reasonable compensation. There would be an order on the trustee to pay him (Mr. Oliphant) £104, and also his costs of the hearing before the Registrar and of the appeal. Lord Justice Mellish concurred, observing that the mortgagee in possession would have been entitled to charge in his account against the bankrupts' estate any compensation he had had to pay to the editor. He could not carry on the paper without an editor, and he could not obtain an editor except on the terms of compensating him for dismissal without notice.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, Lincoln's Inn.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. Malins.)

July 16.

In re the Sanitary Milk Company.—In this matter a petition was presented for an order to wind-up the company. Mr. Freeman was for the petitioner. The Vice-Chancellor made an order to wind-up the company compulsorily.

In re the Lisbon Steam Tramways Company.—In this matter two petitions were presented for orders to wind-up the company. Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., for one of the petitioners, said their order was asked for solely with a view to the reconstruction of the company. Mr. Bristowe, Q.C., was for the Portuguese Government and for other parties who opposed the petitions; Mr. Glasse, Q.C., Mr. J. Pearson, Q.C., Mr. Karslake, Q.C., Mr. Macnaghten, and Mr. Cooke were also engaged in the case. The Vice-Chancellor made one order on both the petitions to wind-up the company compulsorily, and directed that the costs of the winding-up should include the costs of a cross-examination of witnesses which had been taken by a special examiner in the course of the proceedings.

In re the Ifton Rhyn Collieries.—In this matter a petition, which had been presented for an order to wind-up the company, came on to be heard upon a question of costs. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. F. C. J. Millar were for the petition; Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., was for the company. The Vice-Chancellor, after some little discussion, made an order for the withdrawal of the petition, giving no costs to either side.

Re Mitchell's Trusts.—This was a singular case. By the marriage settlement of Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell, executed in 1839, Mr. Mitchell, in order to make a provision for his wife in case she should survive him, covenanted with their trustees that he would at his own cost effectually grant and assure to her during her life, in case she should happen to survive him, an annuity or clear yearly rentcharge of £500, free from all deductions, to be paid to her quarterly; and it was agreed between the parties that in case Mr. Mitchell, his heirs, executors, or administrators, should at any time thereafter be desirous of purchasing an annuity of £500 upon Government security, or of securing the same to the satisfaction of the trustees of the settlement upon a sufficient sum or sums of money to be from time to time invested with their approval, then and in such case the annuity to be so purchased or secured should be accepted by Mrs. Mitchell in lieu and satisfaction of the rentcharge covenanted to be granted, or of any rentcharge which might have been granted in pursuance of the settlement. In 1843 Mr. Mitchell became a bankrupt. The trustees of the settlement proved in the bankruptcy against Mr. Mitchell's separate estate for the value of the annuity—viz. the sum of £3,110 15s. 10d.—and eventually received the whole of that amount. In November, 1843, Mr. Mitchell obtained his certificate of conformity. In April, 1864, he was again adjudged a bankrupt. He died in November, 1874. The trustees of the settlement had from time to time invested the money received by them under the bankruptcy, and the annuity money was now represented by a sum of £5,541 Consolidated £3 per Cent. Annuities, and a sum of £2,625 14s. 7d. cash. On Mr. Mitchell's death the trustees received conflicting notices of claims to the money, made by Mrs. Mitchell on the one hand, and the assignees under the first bankruptcy on the other. The trustees accordingly paid the money into court under the Trustees' Relief Act, and Mrs. Mitchell now presented a petition praying the transfer and payment of the funds out of court to her absolutely. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Woodroffe, for the petitioner, contended that the sums now representing the £3,110 15s. 10d. were the produce of it and the investment of it, and subject to the same trusts as it was; that as it was paid to the trustees as the value of the annuity, and as and for damages for the breach of the covenant to grant or secure the same, the covenant and all liability under it were thereby extinguished; that no subsequent purchase of any annuity could be a satisfaction of the covenant; that the money was paid to the trustees for her in lieu of the annuity; and, as she was originally the sole person beneficially interested in it, she was now absolutely entitled to all the moneys in court, which represented it. Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Horace Davey, Q.C., for the assignees in the bankruptcy, insisted that they had a right, under the settlement, to call on Mrs. Mitchell, and she was now bound, to accept a Government annuity of £500 a year, to be purchased with a sufficient part of the trust funds, and that, subject to the due securing and payment to her of an annuity for her life of that amount, the whole of the residue and surplus of the funds belonged to and ought to be transferred to them, to enable them to satisfy some still outstanding claims against Mr. Mitchell's joint estate. Mr. C. Browne was for the trustees of the settlement. The Vice-Chancellor said that the case was a very curious one, but in his opinion the rights of the parties were as clear as possible. Mr. Mitchell had by his marriage settlement covenanted, as was often done, that if his wife survived him he would secure for her an annuity of £500 a year, by way of rentcharge; but he also provided, though not in a way to alter the rights of the parties under the settlement, that he or his executors might purchase a Government annuity of the same amount, if they thought fit, for Mrs. Mitchell. That was intended to be done as a mere matter of convenience, and to enable the trustees to discharge themselves from the continued liability to pay the annuity or rentcharge; but it did not at all affect Mrs. Mitchell's rights. Mr. Mitchell was a bankrupt in 1843. The claim for the annuity was then a contingent debt, due to the trustees of the settlement. They went in and proved against Mr. Mitchell's separate estate for the value of the annuity, estimated at £3,110 15s. 10d. If Mr. Mitchell's separate estate had only paid 3,110 pence, the trustees must have accepted that amount as a satisfaction of their claim, and must have spent it in discharging their duty, by purchasing an annuity, payable to Mrs. Mitchell on her husband's death. As it turned out, however, the estate paid 20s. in the pound, and the money which the trustees then recevied was substituted for the annuity. The result of the proof by the trustees against the separate estate was to clear it from all further claim on their part, and to put them in a position to discharge themselves from all demands by Mrs. Mitchell in respect of the annuity. The trustees took for her the value of it, whatever that might be. It was absolutely hers. Had the Act which enabled married women to dispose of their reversionary interest in personal property, and which the Vice-Chancellor introduced in Parliament in 1857, been then in force, she might have dealt with her interest in the money, and even have given it to her husband. But, at all events, the money was hers. The trustees, in the exercise of their discretion, thought proper not to lay it out in the purchase of any annuity, but to keep it and invest it. It was most fortunate for Mrs. Mitchell, as the events had proved, that they did so, for it was now represented by sums amounting to something between £7,000 and £8,000. The assignees under the bankruptcy had nothing whatever to do with it. They, as debtors to Mr. Mitchell's trustees, paid the £3,110 15s. 10d. to them, and the assignees could not possibly come now and claim the surplus of the fund, as they alleged. The case was one which, perhaps, had never before happened, and was certainly remarkable in its incidents. The money which now formed the accumulated fund must be transferred and paid to the petitioner, and the costs of all parties to the petition must be taxed as between solicitor and client, and paid out of the fund.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR R. MALINS.)

July 17.

RE THE CARIBBEAN COMPANY (LIMITED).—CRICKMER'S CASE.—This case came to be heard on an application by the official liquidator of the above-named company for an order directing a call of 1s per share to be made on 669 fully-paid-up shares held by Mr. Crickmer in the company. The case was a representative one, and of very considerable importance. The facts are briefly, that the company was formed for the purchase of guano, and other such like things, in the Caribbean Islands in 1871; that by the memorandum of association the capital, which was intended to have been larger, was ultimately fixed at £25,000, in 2,500 shares of £10 each; that the articles of association declared that all the shares should be allotted as fully-paid-up shares; that seven gentlemen subscribed the memorandum of association for one share each; that a resolution was passed on the 2nd of March, 1871, by which 2,493 (say 2,500) fully-paid-up shares were allotted to a Mr. Edward Oliver " in consideration of his promoting an assignment to the company of the concessions and rights granted to Captain Jemmett of the Deposits of Phosphate Guano on the several islands or quays in the Caribbean Sea, in accordance with an agreement between Mr. Oliver and a Mr. Carmichael;" that it afterwards appeared that the concession which was to have been obtained from the American Government was not wanted, as the territory in question was British, and not the property of the United States; that the company did commence trading, hired some ships and otherwise incurred debts; that Mr. Carmichael applied to Mr. Crickmer to lend the company £2,000, which he accordingly consented to do; and then became a mortgagee of the company, and also a transferee from Mr. Carmichael of 669 fully-paid-up shares in it, as a part security for his loan; that the company had since been ordered to be wound-up; and that Mr. Crickmer was placed on the list of its contributories. Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Grosvenor Woods appeared for the official liquidator of the company; Mr. Waller, Q.C., and Mr. Bunting were for Mr. Crickmer. The Vice-Chancellor said this case raised a very important question, and one on which there had never yet been any definite decision. It was almost inconceivable that any persons could have been found to combine for the purpose of forming a company under such circumstances as existed in this case; but for all that there had been discovered some who thought they could so construct a company that none of its shareholders should be liable for a single 6d. on their shares. The company was registered on the 9th of February, 1871, having been formed under a memorandum and articles of association, dated in March, 1871, for the purpose of acquiring from any person or persons or Governments, mediately or immediately, and being a member or members of the company or not, and either by purchase or otherwise, rights and powers to work guano, phosphate of lime, and other deposits or minerals in the Caribbean Islands, in the West Indies, and elsewhere. The capital consisted of £25,000, in 2,500 shares of £10 each. Nothing could be more distinct in its provision than that memorandum. The sixth clause of the articles of association, executed on the same day as the memorandum, provided that all the shares in the company should be treated as fully-paid-up shares. Now, then, if there was one thing clearly settled it was this—that every person who signed the memorandum of association of a company for a definite number of shares was liable for the full amount of those shares, and must pay for them. Here seven persons signed for one share each, being some of the 2,500 shares; and every one of those persons, therefore, who signed for his single share, was intended by the 6th clause of the articles to be exempted from all liability in respect of the shares. The effect of that was that here was a company whose memorandum of association said its capital was £25,000, to be produced by 2,500 shares, while its articles at the same time declared that not a shilling was to be paid on any one of those shares. Now, if such a thing as that was allowable, it could only be said that persons dealing with such a company would have but themselves to blame if they were deceived in their expectations. It was said that there was the register of the company to show the public the nature of its constitution. But to suppose that a body of men, seven in number, could associate themselves together, call themselves traders, and while they by one document pretended to provide for the capital of the concern, and by another declared that there should be no capital at all—if they could do that, and doing so, render themselves liable, as these persons had done, for large sums of money, inducing the public to enter into engagements with them—if they could do all that, and then say "Oh, the principle of our company was—and if you had looked at the register you would have seen it was—that we had no capital," would be to put a very strange interpretation upon the Companies' Acts. Could it possibly be permitted that a company should so frame its instruments of incorporation as by one to say it had capital and by another that it had not? What were the unfortunate public to do in such a case? It was all very well to say the public could see the register or apply to the officers of the company for information; but there was some limit to that sort of consideration. However, the question did not rest entirely on the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor; for in the case of the Raglan Hall Colliery Company ("Law Reports," 5 Chancery, 346), Lord Justice Giffard, after referring to the 7th, 11th, and 23rd sections of the Companies' Act, 1862, said:—"Taking those sections together, a person, who subscribes the memorandum of association is to be held to have agreed to be a shareholder for the number of shares in respect of which he subscribes it, to take them and to pay a proper consideration for them. The 12th section provides that the memorandum of association can only be altered in certain particulars, and in a particular way. If, therefore, the memorandum and the articles are inconsistent, the articles must give way; but there is not any inconsistency between a memorandum which is general in its terms, and articles which state that the payment for the shares is to be made in a particular way, according to the terms of a contract referred to in the articles; nor do I see that payment in kind, according to a subsequent contract with the company, is inconsistent with such a memorandum. If there be a contract of such a nature that on bill filed by the company it could not be set aside, a payment for shares in kind according to that contract is legal." That all supposed "payment" in some way. The same view of the law was referred to by Lord Selborne in the case of the Pen'Alt Silver Lead Mining Company, Fothergill's Case ("Law Reports," 8 Chancery, 270), and approved by him. It would seem, therefore, that parties could not execute two instruments wholly inconsistent and at variance with each other; and that if the case was, as here it was, one of a discrepancy between the memorandum and the articles of a company, the memorandum must prevail, and the articles must give way. To think, then, that persons could associate themselves together as a company, and to a certain extent secretly arrange that they would not pay a penny for the shares they had taken in the company, and that such a course of conduct would be sanctioned by this court, was very wrong and impossible. There must, as already observed, be some sort of limit to the responsibility which it was said the public itself lay under to protect itself, because it was not to be supposed in the ordinary dealings of life that any company would be established under limited or any other liability whose members should be wholly free from any obligation to pay for these shares. The Vice-Chancellor then referred minutely to some of the cases which had been cited in the arguments, contrasting them with the one now before him, and continued by observing that he could not, in commenting on the conduct of the parties in this case, stop short of saying that any one who engaged in the promotion of such a company as this—and he should add that Mr. Waller's client had nothing to do with that—was engaged in a deliberate fraud upon the public. The register in this instance was strongly calculated to deceive any one who looked at it. At the same time, the whole thing was most extraordinary. To see that all the 2,500 shares should have been at first allotted to one man, who, throughout, was for the 2,500 shares as many times described and named in the register, to find that the columns for the calls on the shares were all vacant, and that for the sum total mentioned as paid on each share it was £10,—to find all that and to know that it was all utterly false, was indeed astonishing. Every one taking part in the formation of the company must have known the true nature of the transaction. The cases cited really did not govern this one. He thought there was a distinct variance between the memorandum of association, and the articles of this company, designedly arranged for the deception and defrauding of the public, and that if the application in this case had been made against an original promoter of the company, instead of a transferee of shares, he would have long ago terminated any discussion as to it. It was most extraordinary altogether, and but for the fact that such an attempt had been made to defraud the public, it would have been said that such a thing was impossible. An order had been made to wind-up the company. Mr. Crickmer and other innocent sufferers were to be pitied under the circumstances. Mr. Crickmer, however, who was himself a stockbroker, and dealing with Mr. Carmichael, also a stock broker, might have been reasonably supposed capable, and indeed bound, to look after his own interest, and to take some pains to ascertain the real fact of the case. If he had looked at the mortgage deed, he would have seen that all the shares were merely bonus shares, and even if he had then on such notice as that merely advanced his £2,000 he would have incurred no further risk. But he was foolish enough, in addition to his other want of prudence, to take 669 of this company's shares, with notice that, although they were said to be fully paid-up, they were not, in fact, paid for. He took the shares as transferee of them before the winding-up order was made, and, in equity, he was liable for them. Fortunately, however, as it happened, so much would not be wanted in the winding-up as was at first supposed, and he would have to pay only a small amount. The order would now, therefore, be made against him, as asked, subject, however, to that consideration, and to the possibility of this decision being reviewed elsewhere. There was no case exactly like this. Of course, if there had been, it would have been followed on this occasion. Since this application was before the Court, and adjourned till now, there had been a case of "the Malaga Lead Company"—Frimstone's case—at the Rolls. There a Mr. Frimstone, who was a shareholder in the company, took first mortgage debenture bonds, and some bonus shares in respect of them were allotted to him as fully paid-up shares, and were standing in his name at the date of the winding-up order. The liquidator of that company applied to put Mr. Frimstone's name on the list of contributories for the bonus shares, as shares on which nothing had been paid. The Master of the Rolls held that the contract referred to in section 25 of the Companies' Act of 1867, was one signed by the shareholder relating to the issue of the particular shares; that the requirements of that section had not been complied with, and that Mr. Frimstone must be on the list of contributories for the shares in question, as shares on which nothing had been paid. Now, the 25th section of that Act provided that—"Every share in any company shall be deemed and taken to have been issued and to be held subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash, unless the same shall have been otherwise determined, by a contract duly made in writing and filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies at or before the issue of such shares." Upon that section he would make an observation which the facts of this case for the first time called forth, and it was this, the section spoke of a contract. By that was meant an honest and bona-fide contract, valid and effectual in law, not one that was void and illegal. Here was a contract essentially dishonest, fraudulent, and invalid. The contract relied upon here was said to be contained in the articles of the company. But that was no contract. It was void at law. It was not within the section, and that alone might have been conclusive on the subject. As in the case of the Malaga Lead Company, the shares were considered as shares on which nothing had been paid; so here these shares must be regarded in the same light. The result would be that there must be an order made for the payment of the 1s. call, but the order need not be enforced for a month. The costs of the official liquidator must come out of the estate, but there would be no costs to Mr. Crickmer, who, however, would pay none.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR C. HALL.)

IN RE THE ANGLO-ITALIAN PULP AND PAPER MAKING COMPANY, LIMITED.—This was a shareholder's petition for winding-up this company, which was formed in October, 1871, its objects being the erection of a paper mill at Nizza Sicilia, near Messina, in Sicily, and the carrying on thereat the business of paper manufacturers. The company had, however, turned out a complete failure. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C.. and Mr. W. C. Renshaw appeared for the petitioners; Mr. B. B. Rogers for the company. The Vice-Chancellor made the usual compulsory order.

IN RE THE ANGLO-MEXICAN MINT COMPANY.—This was a winding-up petition of a somewhat unusual character. The company was formed in August, 1825, for the purpose, among other things, of coining precious metals within the Republic of Mexico, under a contract with the Government, the provisions regulating the company being contained in a deed of settlement. Each shareholder held, as his sole evidence of ownership, scrip certificates for the amount of his shares, the certificates simply stating that the "bearer" was entitled to the specified number of shares. The whole of the capital of the company, amounting to £200,000, was fully paid-up. In January, 1845, the company was provisionally registered under the old Joint-Stock Companies Act (7 and 8 Vic.. c. 110), but was never completely registered. It proved very successful, large dividends being paid twice in every year from the year 1836. The profits arose principally from the coinage of precious metals at the Mints of Guanaxuato and Zacatecas under contracts with the Mexican Government. In September, 1873, the Mexican Government annulled the contracts, and took possession of the mints. The business of the company having thus come to an end, its assets in Mexico were realised, and out of the sums so realised the directors repaid to the shareholders the whole of the capital of £200,000, except a sum of £345, the title to which had not been clearly ascertained in consequence of the loss of some of the scrip certificates. The remaining assets of the company consisted of a leasehold house, No. 4 Finsbury-place, south, used by them as an office, of cash and securities in England to the value of about £21,000, and a sum of £1,300 about to be transmitted to this country from Mexico. The existing debts of the company were practically nil. This petition for a winding-up was presented by two shareholders and directors, on the ground that the affairs of the company could not be fully and completely liquidated or a final distribution of its assets made without the aid of the court, and in particular that without such aid there would be great difficulty in disposing of the company's leasehold house. Mr. Kekewich, for the petitioners, submitted that the case was a proper one for a winding-up order, which would be a great advantage to the shareholders. Mr. Hornell appeared for the three other directors of the company, and consented to the petition. Mr. Langley, for three shareholders, opposed the petition, on the ground that the directors had already distributed part of the assets, and there was no reason why they should not distribute the remainder without having recourse to the expensive machinery of a winding-up under an order of the court; also that a meeting of the shareholders should first be called, under section 91 of the Companies Act, 1862, to ascertain their views. The Vice-Chancellor said it appeared to him that the distribution of the assets would be best effected by adopting the course proposed. He did not see any necessity for summoning a meeting. The petition was a bonâ-fide one, and he would therefore make the order.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE H. S. NEUMARK.—This bankrupt came up on his public examination upon accounts filed showing liabilities £3812 18s. 6d., and assets, consisting of book debts, £2192 15s. 5d., estimated to realise £862 15s. 11d. The trustee applied for an adjournment, he having required the bankrupt to file goods, cash, and deficiency accounts; which had not been filed. He stated that the bankrupt's cash book did not contain all the receipts; several creditors having proved for cash advanced, of which no entry appeared in the books; that the cash book had never been cast up, or balanced; that several transactions of goods purchased were also omitted in the bankrupt's books; and that the total amount of purchases during the six months preceding the bankruptcy amounted to £2,567 5s. 11d, and the sales during the same period £3443 4s. 10d. He said the creditors were desirous of investigating the matter, and wished to know something further of the bankrupt's transactions. The bankrupt, in reply to questions put by the trustee, could not say if certain items appeared in his books or not; that he could not furnish the required accounts, being without funds. He did not keep his own books. His Honour considered the accounts before him, and unless they were shown to be inaccurate the bankrupt would pass. The court could not go into books, but merely dealt with accounts as filed. The trustee had the power at any time to call upon the bankrupt for explanations, and every information as to his estate, and transactions. The bankrupt passed.

(Before Mr. Registrar ROCHE, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE A S. DE VASCONCELLOS—IN RE J. S. DE VASCONCELLOS.—A first meeting was held under the bankruptcy of these debtors, who were merchants, carrying on business at 39 Lombard-street, City, and 24 Brown's Buildings, Liverpool, and at Ceara, Brazil. Mr. Plunkett appeared for the bankrupts; Mr. M. Abrahams for the petitioning creditor. A statement of affairs presented by the bankrupts, returns the following figures:—Unsecured debts, £11,609; partially secured debts (less the estimated value of securities), £2,649; and liabilities on bills discounted, £85,173; against assets—surplus from securities in the hands of creditors, £430; and contra on liabilities on bills, £61,219. Debts to a considerable amount having been proved, Mr. George A. Cape, accountant, was appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection, consisting of Mr. E. Heidelberg and Mr. J. F. Lovering.

(Before Mr. REGISTRAR PEPYS, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE JOHN GRAHAM.—The debtor is a warehouseman, carrying on business at 5 Wood-street, Cheapside, under the firm of S. and J. Graham. The trade debts are returned at £10,886, with liabilities on acceptances £61,260, and assets £22,942, consisting of stock-in-trade, lease of premises, book debts, and other items. Upon the application of Mr. Phelps, Mr. Registrar Pepys appointed Mr. Chatteris, accountant, to act as receiver under a petition for adjudication filed against the debtor.

IN RE F. H. O'DONNELL.—This case was brought before the Court upon a report under the 84th section. The bankrupt attributed his position to expenses connected with two contested Parliamentary elections for the borough of Galway in the year 1874, and costs of defending a petition against his return as M.P. for that borough. The petitioning creditor was Mr. Pierce Joyce, jun., a gentleman residing at Merview, Galway, at whose instance the bankrupt was unseated and ordered to pay the costs of the petition and trial. It would appear that on the 20th of April last the bankrupt presented a petition, under the arrangement clauses of the Irish Bankruptcy Act, praying that his person and property might be protected from process, and that such proposal as he might be able to make to his creditors for the future payment or compromise of his debts should be executed under the direction of the Court; and he obtained the usual protection order. The bankrupt, it appeared, resided in Dublin, but when in London he occupied apartments in Palsgrave-place, Strand. On the 8th of May a petition was presented in this court against him, and on the 1st of June adjudication was made. The bankrupt, in his affidavit, stated that the debt of £721, claimed by Mr. Joyce, was the amount of the taxed costs of the election petition. He had no property in England of any kind, except a few literary and scientific works, but on filing his petition for arrangement he deposited with the official assignee of the Dublin Bankruptcy Court the sum of £80. He believed, with the assistance of his friends, he would be able to make an offer of such a fair and reasonable character as would receive the sanction of the Court. Mr. Bagley, for the bankrupt, now asked that the adjudication in this court should be annulled. Mr. Finlay Knight, for the petitioning creditor, opposed the application. Mr. Aldridge appeared for the registrar trustee. Mr. Registrar Pepys said the official assignee represented to him that there would be no assets under the adjudication in this court, and it appeared that a valid petition was pending in Dublin. It would be inconvenient to continue the proceedings in London, and the order of adjudication would be annulled.

(Before Mr. Registrar MURRAY, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE SHAND & Co.—The debtors, Messrs. Charles Shand, Alexander Shand, and Ralph Abram Robinson, are merchants, carrying on business at 23 Rood-lane and at Liverpool, and they also trade at Madras and Ceylon under the firm of C. Shand and Co. Their liabilities are estimated at £683,000 in the aggregate, a large portion of which is running off; with assets consisting of cotton and other East India produce, remittances, and real estate in Madras and Ceylon, of which the value cannot yet be ascertained. Mr. Simpson applied, under a petition for liquidation now presented by the debtors, that Mr. Bishop, accountant (Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co.), should be appointed receiver. It appeared that the debtors had made large shipments of goods to India and Ceylon, and remittances by bills of exchange or otherwise were being received in England by each mail. Creditors to a large amount concurred. His Honour granted the application.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

July 19th.

EX-PARTE COOPER—RE BAILLIE.—This matter had been referred to the Chief Judge by Mr. Registrar Pepys, and raised the simple but somewhat important point whether the assignee of a debt could be a petitioning creditor without joining the assignor as a petitioner. The petitioning creditor in this case sought to obtain an adjudication on the ground that the debtor was indebted to him in the sum of £5,000, as the assignee of a debt of that amount, for money lent by another person to the debtor, and which debt was assigned to the petitioning creditor on the 20th of February last. Upon the petition being presented, the objection was raised that the assignor had not joined in the petition. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., now mentioned the case to the Court, and contended that the debt, being in equity due to the petitioning creditor, it was unnecessary, under Section 6, that the assignor should join in the petition. Sir J. Bacon held that the assignee was in equity the person to whom the debt was due, and that he might sue either with or without the assignor. The petition might be received.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE WILSON AND ARMSTRONG.—The debtors, Messrs. George Wilson and Walter Armstrong, are woollen warehousemen, carrying on business at 69 Aldermanbury, also trading at Hawick, Roxburghshire, in co-partnership with Charles John Wilson and George Murray Wilson. They have filed a petition for liquidation, with debts returned at £500,000, and assets of uncertain value, but amounting to a very considerable sum. Mr. Phelps now asked that a receiver and manager should be appointed. The affidavits showed that the firm carried on an extensive business, having transactions not only here, but also in Scotland and on the Continent. Remittances to a considerable amount from customers indebted to the firm were constantly arriving in London, with correspondence respecting goods already supplied, or agreed to be supplied, to purchasers. At the premises in Aldermanbury goods of great value were warehoused, and it was very important, in the interest of creditors, that some responsible person should be appointed receiver and manager. Mr. Registrar Hazlitt appointed Mr. Henry Chatteris, accountant, to the office.

RE JOSEPH NICHOLSON.—The debtor, a wholesale manufacturing cabinetmaker and upholsterer, at High-street, Shoreditch, trading as G. and J. Nicholson and Co., has presented his petition for liquidation, estimating his liabilities at about £18,000, against assets £6,000. Mr. Robertson Griffiths now moved, upon affidavits and upon the nomination of creditors whose debts represented £5,000, for the appointment of a receiver and manager to the estate. His Honour, after hearing Mr. Hinckes (Roscoe and Co.) in opposition thereto, and having satisfied himself of the necessity thereof, appointed Mr. Lovering to those offices.

IN RE DAN GOW.—Mr. Phelps applied for the appointment of a receiver and manager to the estate of this debtor, who is a manufacturer, carrying on business at 47 Friday-street, Cheapside, and Finsbury-street, who has petitioned the Court, estimating his liabilities at £13,000, against assets £10,000, consisting of book debts, stock-in-trade, &c. His Honour appointed Mr. Charles Chatteris, public accountant, Gresham-buildings, receiver and manager of the estate.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

(Before the Hon. Judge MILLER.)

IN RE WALLACE AND MAGIL AND IN RE HUGH WARD.—The bankrupts in this case had traded extensively in Belfast in the linen trade. Their cases had been argued before the court during term, and Judge Miller now delivered a lengthened judgment upon all the facts which had been brought before him. His lordship said the notice had been served by the trader's assignee upon the official assignee that applications would be made on their behalf for certificates of conformity. The facts of each case were somewhat analogous. The nature of a certificate of conformity was declared by the 57th section of the Bankruptcy Amendment Act of 1872—namely, that the judge of this court shall certify that the bankrupt had made a full discovery of his estate and effects, and in all things conformed, and that so far as the court could judge there did not appear any reason to question the truth and fulness of the discovery; and further as in the schedule therein referred to, that having regard to the conformity of the bankrupt, and to his conduct as a trader before, as well as after his bankruptcy, the court did not there and then find the bankrupt entitled to his certificate. A certificate as thus defined was a very solemn instrument, which the judge was required to give under his hand. The effect of a certificate was declared by the 58th section of the same Act. "A release of the bankrupt from any cause of action whatever which occurred before he became bankrupt." On the other hand, the consequences to a bankrupt if he should not obtain his certificate of conformity were, by the 60th section of the same amendment Act, declared to be, "That his property shall remain for three years liable to satisfy all such causes of action, and at the end of three years, the balances unpaid which arose from such causes of action may be enforced as a judgment against any property which he may acquire in the manner as therein pointed out." Under the Act of 1857, so soon as the bankrupt passed his final examination he was entitled of right to obtain his certificate, unless objection were lodged against it. That, however, had been altered by the 56th Section of the Act of 1872, which made the passing of the final examination a condition precedent to applying for a certificate of conformity. Before such a certificate could be granted it was provided that a dividend of not less than 10s. in the pound should be paid, and the court should be satisfied the failure to pay the same had arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt could not justly be held responsible. The act specified the various grounds which would justify the withholding the certificate. If, for instance, a prosecution under the penal clauses of the Act had been directed, and his not making a full discovery of his estate and effects, the effect of the Amendment Act, 1872, as regarded the granting of a certificate, was that it absolved altogether the necessity of filing objections to the granting of the certificate. In reference to the case of Hugh Ward, the official assignee had reported that the assets realised enabled the assignees to pay a dividend of 10s. in the pound, and that a further dividend would be paid when the residue of the debts were disposed of. He had passed the final examination, and the only question was whether a certificate of conformity could be granted to him? He (Judge Miller) was clearly of opinion that he should grant him his certificate of conformity. In reference to the case of Wallace, Magill and Company a question of some importance arose. From the report of the official assignee it appeared that the joint estate of the bankrupts had only paid a dividend of 2s. in the pound, and that any further dividend would not exceed 2d. in the pound. In addition to that, the incurred liabilities against the joint estate amounted altogether to £59,011 14s. 11d., of which no less than £43,262 was incurred by means of the acceptance of the bankrupt for the accommodation of others without their receiving any consideration for them, and that of that sum of £43,262 no less a sum than £27,020 was the amount of the acceptances given by the bankrupts for the accommodation of one firm in Belfast—namely, Messrs. Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk. The official assignee had reported that were it not for these accommodation liabilities the estate would have paid a much larger dividend, and putting that matter out of consideration altogether the estate would not have paid 10s. in the pound. Nothing could be more unfavourable than that report. There was, however, a redeeming feature when it was reported that the separate estate of each bankrupt per se was perfectly solvent. He had judicial knowledge of the fact that the firm of Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk, for whom the bankrupt accepted bills to the amount of £27,020, held the position of leading and most extensive brokers in Belfast, and obtained from the local banks of Belfast credit of such extensive character as might well have testified to any manufacturer in Belfast or its neighbourhood, the soundness of their transactions and position as brokers. He had further judicial knowledge of the fact that the firm of Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk stopped payment prior to the commencement of the present bankruptcy matter, and yet, through their position and influence in Belfast, had been enabled to carry an arrangement in court, and thereby oblige their creditors to accept an almost nominal dividend. Having regard to the circumstances of the failure of Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk, the traders in the present case had been hurriedly forced into bankruptcy: he (Judge Miller) should not draw too hard a line in dealing with the case, and he declined to grant the certificate until he heard more of the case of Lowry, Valentine, and Kirk, and, therefore, he allowed the matter to stand over.

WINDING-UP.—A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the British Guardian Life Assurance Company (Limited).

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. COLLIER, Judge.)

IN RE ROBERT HOPKINS.—This was an application for an order of discharge. The bankrupt was a brush manufacturer in St. George's-crescent. His statement of accounts disclosed liabilities £5,136, and assets £1,199. The latter have not yielded 10s. in the pound, but the creditors, notwithstanding the absence of such a precedent to the grant of a discharge, passed a resolution to the effect that in their opinion the failure to pay a dividend of 10s. in the pound had arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt was not responsible, and that they desired he should be allowed his discharge. His honour now gave effect to the resolution, and granted the discharge. Mr. Phipps appeared for Mr. Bolland, the trustee, and Mr. George Hime (from Messrs. T. and T. Martin) for the bankrupt.

IN RE JOHN WHITFIELD.—The public examination of this bankrupt, a cartowner, in Boundary-place, was, at the instance of Mr. Bolland, the trustee, further adjourned to the 23rd inst. for a cash account. Mr. W. Lowe afterwards moved the court for payment of a bill of costs, incurred under the following circumstances:—Early in April last, Whitfield, being threatened with an execution upon his effects, and also anticipating seizure thereof by a bill of sale creditor, presented a petition for the liquidation of his affairs by arrangement, and for the protection of the estate: the court appointed Mr. Bolland receiver. The first meeting of creditors was held on the 30th April, when liquidation was determined upon and a trustee appointed. On the resolutions, however, being presented for registration, objection was taken thereto by Mr. Nordon, on the ground that the debtor had refused to submit himself for examination until the resolutions were passed and the meeting was virtually over. The registrar upheld the objection, and declined to register, whereupon a creditor obtained an adjudication against the debtor, under which Mr. Bolland was chosen trustee, and the estate realised. The present motion was for payment of the costs of the liquidation petition, and the narrow issue was whether, under the circumstances detailed, the bankruptcy took place whilst the proceedings in liquidation were pending. Mr. Lowe submitted that they were pending, inasmuch as the receiver appointed under the liquidation was undischarged on the presentation of the petition in bankruptcy, and if they were alive and pending for one purpose they were alive for all purposes. Further, it was the foundation of the bankruptcy proceedings, and those proceedings had vitality, and related back to the presentation of the liquidation petition. There was no distinction between a liquidation which became abortive through the registrar's refusal to register and one where the creditors refused to pass any resolution, as in both cases it generally arose from the default of the debtor. Assuming no resolution was passed in consequence of the non-attendance of the debtor or any other cause, and bankruptcy ensued, the liquidation would be considered pending, and that being so, he (Mr. Lowe) failed to see the difference between that and the present case, where the registrar refused to register because the debtor did not submit himself for examination. His Honour said he would look to the authorities cited, and consider his judgment.

IN RE JOSEPH S. EDGAR.—This was a renewed motion for an order to compel Mr. Bolland, the trustee of the property of the debtor, formerly a wine merchant, carrying on business under the firm of "R. P. Stainton and Co.," to certify that the debtor was entitled to his discharge. It appeared that two years ago, when the liquidation was determined upon, it was resolved that the debtor should have his discharge on the committee of inspection and trustee certifying that he had made a full disclosure of his estate. The debtor had filed voluminous accounts upon which he had been examined, but with this result, that in the opinion of the committee and trustee it was premature to certify for a discharge. Notwithstanding this determination, the court was now asked by Mr. Benson, for the debtor, to ignore their views and force on the grant of a discharge. His Honour, after hearing Mr. Bellringer, who took exception to the jurisdiction of the court to interfere with the wishes of the creditors, said he agreed with Mr. Bellringer, in the absence of any authority on the point, that in liquidation cases the question of discharge was left entirely to the creditors, and the court had no right to interfere. The motion, therefore, must be dismissed with costs.

DERBY COUNTY COURT.

(Before W. F. Woodforde, Esq., Judge.)

In re S. Trueman, of Cotmanhay.—Mr. Hextall, as agent for Mr. A. Parsons, of Nottingham, applied to his Honour to make absolute a restraining order against Joseph Carrier and John Woodward, who had sent in an execution under a judgment obtained in the Belper County Court. He said the action was commenced in November, to recover £22 13s. 5d. It was called on for hearing on the 11th of December, when by order of the Court it was referred to the arbitration of Mr. W. M. Ingle, the registrar. On January 16th, Trueman filed his petition, and in the list of creditors the names of the execution creditors appeared, and they had official notice of the proceedings. On the 4th of February the meeting was held, and the creditors then present resolved that the estate should be wound-up in liquidation, and appointed Mr. Charles Marshall, of St. James's-street, Nottingham, trustee. Carrier and Woodward were not present, neither were they represented. On the 10th of May the award was made in favour of the plaintiffs, and on the 17th June the debtor was surprised by the bailiffs entering into possession and seizing his furniture. Mr. Hextall said the debt was provable under the liquidation, and that the plaintiffs had been very hasty, if not guilty of a contempt of court, in proceeding as they had done. Mr. Briggs, who appeared for the plaintiffs, contended that as the judgment had been given since the completion of the liquidation proceedings, as the debtor had attended before the arbitrator, and had never intimated having gone into liquidation, this became a debt subsequent to the liquidation, and the execution creditors were entitled to their claim. His Honour said that the action commenced in November, which was before the filing of the petition, and therefore was a debt which should be proved. The restraining order must be made absolute, with costs, against Messrs. Carrier and Woodward.

MANCHESTER COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. Registrar Kay.)

Re George Rideal.—An application was made to the court in this case by Mr. Best, solicitor, on behalf of several creditors who had proved debts against the estate of the debtor, Mr. George Rideal, an attorney practising at Manchester and at Congleton, under the firm of "Rideal and Shaw," for an order to enforce in a summary manner the provisions of a composition made by Mr. Rideal with his creditors in the month of November, 1874. Under former Bankruptcy and Arrangement Acts, no remedy was provided for creditors in the event of their debtor failing to perform his undertaking to pay a composition, and it frequently happened that the creditors who had been induced by the promise of a composition to leave an estate in their debtor's hands, found themselves ultimately left to the unsatisfactory proceeding of making the debtor bankrupt when it was found that the promised composition was not forthcoming, and that the debtor's estate had vanished. This state of things was altered by the 126th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, which enables creditors seeking to obtain payment of a composition to apply to the court in a summary and inexpensive way for an order to enforce such payment, with an alternative of imprisonment for contempt in case of non-performance by the debtor. In the present case Mr. Best stated that a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound had been offered by the debtor to his creditors and accepted by them, payable by instalments, two of which instalments had fallen due, and, the debtor having neglected to pay the same, his creditors now sought to enforce the composition by obtaining an order for payment thereof, and for the debtor's committal in case of his disobeying such order. The Court, upon these facts, made the desired order for payment of the instalments, together with costs of the application, within seven days.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

S. C. Abraham (Aberdare).—The first general meeting herein was held at the office of Simons and Plews, solicitors, Merthyr Tydvil, on Wednesday, the 14th inst.; Mr. E. T. Peirson, public accountant, of Coventry, was voted to the chair. The debtor offered 2s. 6d. in the pound, which was not, however, accepted, as it was the wish of the creditors to contest a certain bill of sale, and also to investigate the transactions with debtor's brother, and to make inquiries as to the marriage settlement. Liquidation by arrangement was resolved upon, with Mr. Edward Thomas Peirson, public accountant, Coventry, as trustee, and a committee of inspection.

A. & M. Zimmerman.—At the statutory meeting of the creditors of Messrs. A. and M. Zimmerman, whose failure was announced on the 4th ult., the statement of affairs showed liabilities £49,773, against assets £21,004. It was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, Mr. W. Edwards being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

L. Stewart.—A meeting was held on the 15th inst. of the creditors of Mr. Lewis Stewart, in the East India trade, when a balance sheet, prepared by Messrs. Harding, Whinney, and Co., the accountants, showed liabilities amounting to £32,821, against assets worth £11,368. It was agreed to accept a composition of 5s. in the pound, payable by instalments extending over twelve months.

R. Benson & Co.—At a meeting of creditors of Messrs. Robert Benson and Co., American merchants, the liabilities were stated at £133,000, and assets at £48,000. It was decided to adjourn till the 4th of August, when a full statement of the affairs of the firm will be submitted.

Glover & Co. (Bradford).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. J. & J. Glover and Co., worsted spinners, Newlands Mills, Bradford, was held on the 14th inst. The liabilities are estimated at £8,228, and the assets at £2,812. A composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable in two instalments, was offered and accepted, and Mr. Buckley was appointed trustee.

H. George (Yarmouth).—A first meeting of creditors under the bankruptcy of Henry George, of Great Yarmouth, twine spinner and smack owner, was held at the office of the registrar of the county court, Great Yarmouth, on July 19th, when Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall-quay-chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, was elected trustee. Messrs. Worship and Rising are solicitors in the proceedings.

T. Syms (Manchester).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. Thomas Syms, Manchester, hotel proprietor, was held on the 18th inst. The statement of affairs submitted showed liabilities £7712 15s. 8d.; and assets, subject to realisation, £2263 4s. 2d. After a long discussion, it was resolved to wind-up the estate in bankruptcy.

RAINBOW, HOLBERTON & CO.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Rainbow, Holberton, and Co., of 15A St. Helen's place, a statement of affairs prepared by Messrs. Turquand, Youngs, and Co., showed the total debts to be £61,515, with assets £6,336. The liabilities on account of A. Collie and Co. amounted to £53,170. Resolutions were passed to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and Mr. John Weise, of 16 Token-house-yard, E.C., was appointed trustee, with Messrs. Phelps and Sedgwick as solicitors to the estate.

R. DAVIES (LIVERPOOL).—At the statutory meeting of the creditors of Mr. Richard Davies, of 288 Park-road, Liverpool, grocer and provision merchant, held on Wednesday last, at the offices of Messrs. Barrell and Rodway, solicitors, Liverpool, liquidation by arrangement was unanimously resolved upon, and Mr. T. Theodore Rogers, public accountant, Liverpool, was appointed the trustee.

S. A. GERAIRGIAN (MANCHESTER).—A meeting of the creditors of Stephen Agoss Gerairgian, commission agent, Water-street, Liverpool, and Cooper-street, Manchester, has been held in the lattter city, and the offer by the debtor of a composition of a shilling in the pound was accepted.

FOTHERGILL, HANKEY, & CO.—A meeting has been held of the creditors of Messrs. Fothergill, Hankey, and Co., of the Plymouth and Aberdare Iron Works. The liabilities were stated at £867,892, and the available assets, after deducting rents, &c., at only £69,000. The works are nominally valued as a going concern at £1,315,600, charged with mortgages and an annuity amounting to £317,000. The meeting was adjourned for a month in order to allow certain negotiations to be carried out.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—Messrs. Lambert Brothers, and Scott, coal merchants, of Lower Thames-street and Gracechurch-street, stopped payment on Thursday, the 15th instant, with liabilities estimated at £200,000. A favourable liquidation is expected. The books are in the hands of Messrs. J. J. Saffery and Co., Old Jewry Chambers.—The suspension is announced of Messrs. Heald, Mathwin, and Co., shipbrokers, of Billiter-street, and Constantinople. The liabilities are believed to be considerable, and the cause of failure, losses sustained in shipping and coal. The books are in the hands of Messrs. J. J. Saffery and Co., of Old Jewry Chambers.—Messrs. Jos. Heald and Co., of Newcastle, one of the best-known and oldest established firms of merchants and shipbrokers in Newcastle, have suspended payment. It is stated that the principal cause of this is the stoppage of Messrs. Lambert Brothers, and Scott, shipowners, colliery owners, &c., of London, Messrs. Heald and Co. being creditors to the extent of £20,000. Messrs. Heald and Co. carried on a very extensive business not only in Newcastle, but in London and on the continent. The liabilities are estimated at from £40,000 to £60,000.

SCOTLAND.—Messrs. Paton Cook and Co., manufacturers, 85 Queen-street, Glasgow, and at Glengarrock, Ayrshire, have suspended payment. The liabilities of the firm are estimated at £60,000.

AMERICA.—American advices report the failure of Messrs. Tyler, Frost, and Co., wholesale grocers, New Haven, Conn., with liabilities of £40,000; and of Messrs. W. H. Bradley and Co., carriage manufacturers, liabilities, £45,000.—New York advices report the failure of the South Carolina Bank and Trust Company. The State deposits are about £40,000. —Messrs. Osgood and Lord, Athol, Mass., in the dry goods trade, had suspended; liabilities heavy.—Canadian advices report the failure of Messrs. M. Francis and Sons, wholesale shoe merchants, St. John, N.B., with liabilities close on £20,000; they offer 50 per cent. Messrs. E. D. Jewett and Co. had submitted a statement showing their total liabilities to amount to about £214,000, with assets estimated at £327,000. It is expected that they will shortly resume business.—The liabilities of Mr. John Armstrong are put down at £20,000.—The liabilities of Coates and Co., auctioneers, Toronto, are £30,000.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointment of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

Mr. J. C. Bolton (Bolton and Son), of 26 Great St. Helen's, E.C., has been appointed trustee of the estate of William H. Miller, of 159 Highbury New Park, export wine merchant.

John Pattinson, of the firm of Harry Brett, Milford, Pattinson & Co., of 150 Leadenhall-street, E.C., and 12 Vigo-street, Regent-street, W., public accountant, has been appointed trustee of the estate of John Lees Armit, of 19 Belgrave-road, Abbey-road, in the county of Middlesex, gentleman, a bankrupt. Mr. W. J. Foster, of 21 Birchin-lane, is solicitor to the trustee.

John Pattinson, of the firm of Harry Brett, Milford, Pattinson & Co., of 150 Leadenhall-street, E.C., and 12 Vigo-street, Regent-street, W., public accountant, has been appointed trustee of the estate of Edward Radcliffe, of 31 Place de la Madeleine, in the Republic of France, and late of 2 Howard-street, Strand, in the county of Middlesex, of no trade or occupation, a bankrupt. Mr. H. M. Sydney, of 9 Upper John street, Golden-square, is solicitor to the trustee.

Messrs. Alexander and William Collie, merchants, of London and Manchester, who recently failed with liabilities estimated at three millions sterling, have been charged at the Guildhall with having obtained upwards of £200,000 from the London and Westminster Bank by false pretences. It is alleged that the defendants circulated from £1,500,000 to £1,750,000 worth of bills as trade bills, when, in fact, they were only accommodation bills, and that by discounting some of these the bank lost between £200,000 and £300,000. After the opening statement the case was adjourned. The Court consented to accept heavy bail; but as the prosecution was not satisfied with the sureties offered the defendants were removed in custody.

THE FRIENDLY SOCIETIES BILL.—At a meeting of the Congress of Friendly Societies at Storey's-gate, on Monday, the members discussed the amendments of Lord Aberdare. They objected especially to that relating to the insurance of children. They have circulated statistics among the members of both Houses to show that the mortality among children insured under three years of age was far below what it was in other parts of the country where these insurances did not exist. They object to Lord Aberdare's amendment, that the auditors to be appointed by the Societies should be approved by the registrars of Friendly Societies, and they state that this was contrary to the opinion not only of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, but of the members of the House of Commons generally, who considered it unwise to interfere more than was necessary with societies numbering about 8,000,000 members, with an invested capital of about £11,000,000; and they consider that there are no grounds for interference with the general arrangements of the societies. They intend strenuously to oppose the Lords' amendments.

The Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring the Bottling Business carried on by Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, at Warrington, in the County of Lancaster, with the buildings and land upon which the said business is carried on, and for the purpose of adding to the business the Manufacturing and Bottling of Aerated Waters, in addition to the Bottling of Beer, Porter, Cider, Perry, or other Liquors or Waters, and dealing therein in the ordinary way of Trade.

The buildings are of modern erection, and very suitable for the business.

The premises contain an area of 2,380 square yards, and are held for the residue of a term of 999 years from the 25th March, 1867, subject to a yearly ground rent of £12 8s. and the lessees' covenants affecting the same. A provisional agreement dated the 21st day of June, 1875, has been entered into between Mr. Moses Walker, as the owner of the leasehold premises of the first part, Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, as the owners of the business, goodwill, plant, and stock-in-trade, of the second part, and John Cook Hubbert as a Trustee for and on behalf of the Company of the third part, whereby Mr. Moses Walker agrees to sell to the Company the leasehold premises for the sum of £1,500, which is to be paid to him in cash. Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, agree to sell to the Company the goodwill of the business for the sum of £300, which is to be paid to Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, in equal shares, and is to be taken by them in Three Hundred £1 shares in the Company, which are to be deemed fully paid-up shares, and the plant and stock-in-trade at the amount of a valuation thereof, to be made by two valuers, one to be named by the said Henry Walker, Moses Walker, William Walker, and John Shaw, and the other by the Company, or an umpire to be named by such two valuers, and which amount is to be paid in cash.

Messrs. Henry Walker, Moses Walker, Joseph Entwistle, William Walker, and John Shaw, will be the first Directors, and Mr. Moses Walker, under whose management the business has hitherto been principally conducted, will continue the management thereof, as Managing Director, for a period of two years certain, at the annual salary of £208 exclusive of travelling or other expenses incurred in or about the Company's business, and also exclusive of any remuneration which may be voted to him as one of the Board of Directors by the Shareholders.

The sale of Bottled Beer, Ale, Porter, and Aerated Waters, has for some years steadily increased, and there is every prospect that the Company will do a large business, and that with careful management a large dividend may be realised. It is not anticipated that more than 15s. per share will be at any time called up.

Copies of the Memorandum and Articles of Association, and of the provisional Agreement of the 21st day of June, 1875, may be seen at the Offices of the Company.

Prospectuses and Forms of Application for Shares may be obtained at the offices of the Company, or from their Bankers or Secretary.

THE CARDINHAM VALE SILVER LEAD MINING COMPANY, LIMITED.

Incorporated under "The Companies Acts, 1862 and 1867," by which the Liability of Members is limited to the amount of their Shares.

The above is entirely unlike the ordinary Mining Investments offered to the public, inasmuch as there will be no loss of time in searching for Lodes and exploring the Setts, the Mine being taken as a going concern, with valuable deposits of Ore laid open requiring only suitable machinery to make it marketable. It is believed that there is no Mine that can be worked cheaper than the Cardinham Vale, no steam machinery will be required to develop the Mine, as there is an ample supply of water at all seasons of the year available for working the machinery necessary for its development, and crushing and preparing the Ores for market. The Proprietor of the property has agreed to take nine-tenths of his interest in Shares, a proof of his estimate of the value of the Mines, and the profits to be derived therefrom.

CAPITAL:—£30,000, in 6,000 Shares of £5 each.

Deposit 5s. per Share on Application, and 5s. on Allotment, and remainder in sums not exceeding 2s. 6d. per Share at intervals of not less than three months if required. To meet the wishes of those Investors who prefer paying in full, the Directors will issue fully paid-up Shares not exceeding one-half of the Capital now offered for subscription, such Shares will have priority in the Allotment, and will be issued at a discount of 5 per cent.

PROSPECTUS.

This Company has been formed for the purpose of acquiring, working, and effectually developing the "Cardinham Vale" Silver Lead Mines, a valuable property, situated in the Parish of Cardinham, in the County of Cornwall, and about four miles from the Bodmin-road Station on the Cornwall Railway.

The Sett is very extensive, comprising an area of upwards of 180 Acres, and has the great advantage of a permanent Stream Water for the working of the Mines, crushing and dressing the Ores, &c.

The property is held on lease for 21 years from 29th September, 1871, at a minimum rent of £20 per annum, and a royalty of one-fifteenth; the rent, however, merges in the royalties when they exceed that amount.

There are several Lodes intersecting the Sett, in one of which an Adit level has been driven for a distance of upwards of 120 fathoms, and two Winzes sunk therein to the depth of 15 feet each.

This Lode is about 4 feet wide, and in geological appearance is thought not to be surpassed by the best of our British Dividend Lead Mines at the same stage of operation.

To afford evidence of the great results realised by British Lead Mining, when properly conducted, a tabular statement of a few Mines is subjoined, from the Reports contained in different Mining Papers.

DIVIDENDS PAID BY BRITISH LEAD MINING COMPANIES.

NAME.	OUTLAY.	DIVIDENDS.	NAME.	OUTLAY.	DIVIDENDS.
Cargoll	17,470	16,112	Lisburne	7,500	225,800
East Rose	6,400	370,000	Minerva	45,000	573,750
East Darren	9,600	70,000	Roman Gravels	90,000	49,000
Foxdale	70,000	226,000	South Darren	19,870	6,750
Great Laxey	60,000	257,000	Tankerville	7,200	40,800

Goginan	90,000	290,000	West Chiverton	31,500	147,500
Herodsfoot	8,700	63,744

"LEAD EQUAL TO 6CWT. TO THE TON OF LODE STUFF."
"SILVER 40oz. 16DWT. 16GRS. TO THE TON OF ORE."

Winzes are being sunk on the course of a Lode which produces Ore of the richest quality in remunerative quantities, and as depth is attained the yield increases, which facts are confirmed in the accompanying Reports. The purchase-money for the entire Property is fixed at £10,000, the Vendor's confidence in the undertaking being such that he has consented to take £9,000 of the purchase-money in paid-up Shares, and £1,000 in cash.

A contract has been entered into between Charles William Baylis, of Worcester, of the one part, and William Sharp, on behalf of the Company, of the other part, dated the 19th day of May, 1875, which can be seen at the offices of the solicitors of the Company.

The Directors have instructed Captain Bray to give every facility to intending Investors for inspecting this Property, that they may satisfy themselves of its very great present value and future prospects.

ADVANTAGES OF THE MINE.—WATER-POWER, CARRIAGE.

There is an ample supply of water at all seasons of the year for working the most powerful machinery necessary for the development of the mines, crushing and dressing the Ores.

It is believed to be impossible for any Mine to be worked cheaper than the Cardinham Vale.

No Steam Machinery, therefore, will be required to develop this Mine. This is at all times a matter of great importance; but in the present state of the coal trade and labour market, the value of water as a motive power cannot be over-estimated; in fact the saving of cost of coal alone would pay a good dividend on the capital of the Company. The Mine is also situated most favourably for the carriage of Ores and materials, being within a short distance from the Railway Station.

Owing to a great demand for Lead, and the exceptional character of the property, the Directors believe they are placing before the public a safe and valuable investment, one that in a short period will declare large Dividends. They recommend a careful perusal of the accompanying Reports.

Applications for Shares should be made on the accompanying Form, which must be forwarded, together with a deposit of 5s. per Share, to the Bankers of the Company, or to the Secretary, at the Offices of the Company, where Prospectuses and Forms of application may be obtained, and specimens of the Ore be seen, together with copies of the Reports and Documents referred to in this Prospectus.

REPORTS.

REPORT OF CAPTAIN HARRIS.

I have carefully examined the Cardinham Vale Silver Lead Mine Sett, and find several large and masterly Lodes crossing it, which present a beautiful appearance.

The Main Lode runs about 30in. East of North and West of South; on this Lode an Adit Level has been driven for about 120 fathoms, it commenced and continued in Silver Lead. Two Winzes have also been sunk therein in valuable deposits of Ore. I did not see the bottom of the Winzes, the water being quick would not admit of my doing so, but I am told there is a Lode in the Winzes about 4 feet wide, which contain about 1 ton of Silver Lead per fathom, and from indications of the Ore that came from the Winzes I think it must be correct; the Lode here shows a decided improvement in going down. The Lode standing in the back of the Adit contains sufficient Ore to let on tribute, and I am informed men have offered to work it at 10s. in the £.

There is ample water to work the Machinery necessary for a practical development, and it is my opinion that by the erection of such Machinery a paying Mine would be opened up at once. I therefore urge that a water wheel of say 34 feet diameter, and 6 or 8 feet abreast, be erected at once to pump out the water, and thereby lay open the deposits of Ore at a deeper level.

H. B. HARRIS.

Camborne, Cornwall,
November, 1874.

REPORT OF CAPTAIN BRAY.

The Sett, which is very extensive, is situated in the parish of Cardinham, in the County of Cornwall.

An Adit has been driven North in the course of the Lodes about 130 fathoms, and two Winzes sunk about 3 fathoms each where the Lode is about 4 feet wide, containing large blocks of Silver Lead, and in the outside Winze there is a leader of pure Silver Lead several inches wide lying against the foot wall of the Lode, but the water in the Winze is too much to keep out. I had great difficulty to get at the bottom of the Winze, but I managed to send up several cwts. of the Ore, which is of a beautiful nature, it being imbedded in friable spar.

The Lode throughout the Adit presents a most beautiful appearance, and in many places is nearly 4 feet wide, containing Lead in paying quantities; men in fact have offered to work it at 10s. in the £, which speaks for itself; and should the yield increase in the next 10 fathoms sinking as it is going down in the Winzes, the output will be such as to place the Mine on a par with our best Dividend Mines.

A permanent stream of water runs close to the Adit, of sufficient power to work water-wheels, and the Mine is in every way situated for the most economical working.

PROSPECTUS.

The great want of a Shoe for Horses and other draught animals (so as to obtain a firm and solid foothold upon Asphalte and other smooth or slippery pavements, and to obviate roughing or sharpening in frosty weather; to reduce the jar or concussion the limbs are subjected to by the hoof striking the ground; to allow the hoof to expand and develop; to reduce the labour of the animals by diminishing the weight of the present unnatural and unwieldy iron shoe, and to add to their comfort), has long been felt by the community at large, but more especially by those who employ large numbers of horses, and also by "The Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

Such a Shoe has been Invented and Patented by Mr. Yates, and is made from buffalo or other hides, rendered impervious to moisture under Patented Process. They are as durable as the iron shoe, one-third the weight, cheaper, and are neat and easily applied, and their application adds greatly to the comfort of the animal.

They are made from a material as nearly approaching the nature of the hoof as possible, and therefore are the most natural substance from which to form a shoe. They will maintain the integrity of the hoof in its natural form, and allow its freedom and development. They also assist in retaining a firm and solid foothold, and aid in the impulsive efforts required in the performance of work and movements, and will thus be invaluable in preserving the health of the animal shod with them.

This Company has been formed for purchasing and working the patent rights, titles, and interests for Great Britain, Ireland, and the Channel Islands, of this Shoe, and for manufacturing and vending the same.

It is the intention of this Company to fit up works sufficient to manufacture these shoes, and to establish offices or stores in our principal cities for the sale of the same, where they will be able to supply sets much cheaper than iron shoes, and which can be readily applied by any smith or farrier.

Forms of application for shares may be obtained by applying to the Bankers of the Company, or to the Secretary.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

JULY 31, 1875.

Those, otherwise estimable members of society, who object to too close an investigation into their business transactions, will read with malignant joy the report of a case, of which we give a report, in which Mr. Perry, the well-known proprietor of the Gazette, was mulcted in heavy damages for having failed to give adequate information to one of his subscribers. Every one knows the terrible establishment in which human frailty is so carefully recorded, where the clerks move quietly about, ever and anon whispering such sentences as "not to be trusted," "nothing known to his discredit," or handing to the inquirer slips of paper filled with gloomy records of bankruptcy or failure. That such an institution as this should be prosperous, is a sad commentary on our boasted prosperity. There have, we believe, been many cases of individual hardship arising through its action, and more than one novelist has described the piteous condition of a distressed hero who has had recourse to a bill of sale, and, unfortunately dealing for the necessaries of life with tradesmen who belong to the clientèle of Mr. Perry, has suffered a corresponding diminution of credit, and gradually sunk into the uttermost misery. But on the general principle that what is worth doing at all is worth doing well, it must be admitted that the accuracy of the information furnished is most essential to its utility; and it is difficult to imagine which is in the worse plight, owing to his reliance on false confidences, the trader who might have done business with a firm and who has not, owing to unpleasant reports as to its solvency, or the trader who has been over-confiding, and thus lost his money. In the present instance proper inquiries do not seem to have been made. A "retired bookseller," for the insignificant fee of six postage stamps, seeks information firstly from the clerk of certain "eminent" timber merchants, and secondly of a gentleman who, it seems, combines, somewhat peculiarly, the functions of a "glazier and butler." Possibly a less apparently parsimonious way of doing business might have proved more remunerative; for Mr. Perry's fate greatly confirms the truth of the adage "Penny wise and pound foolish," and leads to the belief that such cheap information is not worth much. But the story certainly opens up glimpses of a strange and novel state of society. The condition of a bookseller who, having retired from business, enjoys the friendship of a butler, and a timber merchant's clerk, and is yet willing to undertake confidential inquiries for six postage stamps, is as remarkable as the disinterestedness of his friends, who apparently charged nothing for their information.

Digitized by Google

The Anglo-Bengalee Company derived much profit from charging two guineas to every client for inquiries, and keeping a man at a pound a week to make them. But it is certainly much more remunerative to charge a subscriber three guineas a year for sixpennyworth of information. Possibly the "retired bookseller" would do well to follow the example of the happily defunct tribe of "tipsters," and exercise his powers of investigation for the benefit of his fellow-creatures in consideration of postage stamps, making known this desire through the medium of the public press. The case reads a useful lesson to all concerned.

The case of Ex parte Wear—re Lindsay, as reported, seems plainly in accordance with the Act. A bill of sale executed nearly four months before the filing of a petition for liquidation is out of the wording of the 92nd section, even if we do not take the law as recently laid down by the highest authority, and hold that fraudulent preference must be fraudulent to the knowledge of the favoured creditor. It must be noticed, too, that to somewhat complicate the decision of a Court on this point, the conveyance or assignment must be a spontaneous act. If the debtor is influenced by pressure, there is no fraudulent preference. It is difficult to draw the line, but we agree in this instance with the decision of the Chief Judge. A transaction is to be protected after three months, and even in the case of fraud can scarcely be opened unless some very strong case is shown for so doing.

THE SOCIETY OF ACCOUNTANTS IN ENGLAND.—The monthly meeting of the Council of the Society of Accountants in England was held on Wednesday, at the offices of the society, 2 Cowper's-court, Cornhill; present Messrs. John Bath (V.P., in the chair), J. H. Tilly, F. Nicholls, E. N. Harper, and Alfred C. Harper (secretary). Mr. B. B. Rowlands, Severn-square, Newtown; Mr. George J. Knight, 17 Dickinson-street, Manchester, and 24 Bridge-street, Runcorn; Mr. James R. Grant, Bank of Scotland, Aberdeen, were admitted as Associates of the Society. Mr. Herbert E. Harper, 2 Cowper's-court, Cornhill, was admitted as a Student of the Society. A discussion followed upon the small allowance to Accountants when subpœnaed as witnesses, and the Council invite suggestions from all accountants on this matter; communications to be addressed to the secretary.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

DEAR SIR,—A great divergence of opinion appears to exist whether or not a liquidating debtor can demand his discharge, provided his estate has paid a dividend of 10s. in the pound. The Bankruptcy Act is certainly not very clear upon this point. Sec. 125, par. 9, says:—"The provisions of this Act with respect to the close of the bankruptcy, discharge of the bankrupt, &c. &c. shall not apply in the case of a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation by arrangement," but makes no mention about a debtor being entitled to his discharge under any circumstances. I cannot think the framers of the Act ever intended to place a liquidating debtor in a worse position than a bankrupt, but if no proviso exists; it unquestionably does so, by rendering it possible for any creditor, who bears a malicious feeling towards the debtor, to prevent the granting of the discharge, by resolution, by hunting up proxies, as it is well-known that as a rule creditors will not personally attend meetings convened for such purposes, hence such a person would have almost entire control over it.

Perhaps some of your numerous readers will express their opinions upon this.

I am, Sir,
Yours truly,
ALPHA.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

July 27.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES.)

IN RE THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY'S ARBITRATION.—Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., applied to the Court for an order that five appeals from decisions of the arbitrator in this matter with regard to questions of "novation" might be set down, and he also asked that two of them might be heard before the Long Vacation. Lord Justice James said that if the Legislature chose to take a whole Session in passing an Act, that was no reason why this Court should be asked to hear the cases now. He thought that as there had been so much difference of opinion with regard to the question of novation, the appeals ought to be heard by the Full Court. Indeed, his Lordship added, the Bill as approved by him when he was arbitrator so provided. Mr. Higgins pointed out that the Act as ultimately passed only required that the Court should consist of at least two Judges. He also urged the very great importance of the cases. Lord Justice James still thought that the cases ought to be heard by the Full Court, and desired that the matter should be mentioned to the Lord Chancellor. If he was willing to sit before the Vacation, the Lords Justices would be ready to sit with him on any day he might appoint. Lord Justice Mellish added that if the Lord Chancellor thought that the Lords Justices should sit alone to hear those appeals, they would do so. Leave was then given to set down the appeals, and the matter is to be mentioned again after application has been made to the Lord Chancellor.

EX PARTE PRICE—IN RE LANKESTER.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Spring-Rice as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. The question involved is one of considerable importance in the winding-up of insurance companies. Dr. Lankester, the late coroner for Middlesex, was the holder of four policies on his own life in the European Assurance Society, for sums amounting altogether to £1,049. In November, 1865, he borrowed £140 from the society on the security of the policies. In March, 1872, he filed a liquidation petition, and on the 1st of May, 1872, his creditors agreed to accept a composition, and appointed a trustee, who was to receive his whole income and to apply a certain part of it in paying the debts of the creditors rateably. On the 12th of January, 1872, the European Society was ordered to be wound up, and its affairs were afterwards referred to arbitration by a special Act of Parliament passed in July, 1872. Under the arbitration proceedings Dr. Lankester's policies were valued at £446 8s., and dividends amounting to £66 19s. have been declared on this sum, being at the rate of 3s. in the pound. Dr. Lankester died last year, and his estate will be able to pay a dividend of 10s. in the pound. The liquidators of the European sought to prove against Dr. Lankester's estate under the composition arrangement for £140 and interest, and the trustee claimed a right to set off against this demand the £446 8s. at which the policies have been valued. The Registrar allowed this set off, and the liquidators appealed. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. John Linklater were heard on behalf of the appellants. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. Finlay Knight, in support of the Registrar's decision, relied upon the mutual credit clause, sec. 39, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869; sec. 95 of the Companies Act, 1862; and the case of "Ex parte Cooper" ("Law Reports," 2 Chan. App., 578). Lord Justice James said that there was no right of set-off under the Winding-up Act, except that which would be allowed in the ordinary case of an action at law. No set off could be allowed in the winding-up as against Dr. Lankester's estate, and there could be no set-off in its favour in the Court of Bankruptcy. Under sec. 39 of the Bankruptcy Act an account would have to be taken of what was due from the one party to the other in respect of mutual debts or dealings. But, in truth, nothing ever became due upon the policies. A value was, indeed, put upon the policies in the winding-up, and dividends were declared upon that value; but that could not have the effect of creating a debt due upon the policy which did not exist before. Each party must therefore prove against the other for what was due to him, and when the amount of dividend on each side was ascertained, the sums so ascertained could be set-off against each other. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. If the company had not been wound-up it was quite clear that there could have been no set-off, for in that case there would have been in no sense a debt due upon the policy. All that the trustee could have done would have been to sell the policy, or to surrender it for its value. Did, then, the winding-up make any difference? Of course, the full nominal amount of the policy could not be set-off; that would be absurd. And the value put on it was not a sum due upon it. It was merely a value assessed for the purpose of regulating the proof in the winding-up. There could be no right of set-off.

IN RE THE CITY AND COUNTY BANK.—This case, which was before their Lordships on the 25th of June upon appeal from an order made by Vice-Chancellor Bacon on the 28th of May, for the compulsory winding-up of this company, was then directed to stand over in order that the company should have the opportunity of calling a meeting of the shareholders, for the purpose of taking the opinion of the shareholders as to the advisability of a voluntary winding-up. It appeared that no less than four petitions had been presented for winding-up the company, the insolvency of which was hardly in dispute —two at the Rolls, one before Vice-Chancellor Malins, and one before Vice-Chancellor Bacon. In consequence of the closing of the courts on Saturday, the 29th of May, on which day the birthday of Her Majesty was officially celebrated, the petition before Vice-Chancellor Bacon came on to be heard before those which had been presented in the other branches of the court. The winding-up order was strenuously opposed on that occasion on the ground of the smallness of the petitioner's interest—ten £5 shares—in the company, want of proper advertisement of the petition, and more especially the pendency of a beneficial arrangement with the firm of Brown, Jansen, & Co., the principal creditors, whereby they agreed to discharge all the debts and liabilities of the company on having the assets transferred to them and the affairs of the company placed under voluntary liquidation. Notwithstanding these various grounds of objection, Vice-Chancellor Bacon, on the 28th of May, made the usual compulsory order for winding-up. An appeal from this order was at once presented, and their lordships, on the 25th of June, being of opinion that the arrangement with Brown, Jansen, and Co. was a beneficial one, discharged the Vice-Chancellor's order, and directed the petition to stand over, with liberty to the directors to summon a general meeting. A meeting was accordingly held on the 16th ult., at the Cannon-street Hotel, at which resolutions were passed for winding-up voluntarily, for confirming the agreement between the bank and Brown, Jansen, and Co. for payment by that firm of the debts and liabilities of the bank, and for a transfer to them of the assets of the bank, and authorising the liquidator under the voluntary winding-up to carry out and complete the arrangement. The matter was again brought before their lordships, and after considerable discussion, in which Mr. Kay, Q.C., Mr. H. M. Jackson, Q.C., Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C., Mr. Waller, Q.C., Mr. Swanston, Q.C., Mr. Little, Q.C., Mr. Graham Hastings, Q.C., Mr. E. Cutler, Mr. Romer, Mr. E. C. Willis, Mr. Dauney, Mr. E. Chitty, Mr. W. Latham, and Mr. Whitehorne took part, Lord Justice James said he was of opinion that the proper thing to do was to make no order upon all these petitions, after the undertaking which had been given on behalf of Messrs. Brown, Jansen, and Co. by their counsel, to pay all the debts, &c. of the bank, whether included in the schedule to the agreement or not, upon the consent of the directors that this variation of the agreement should not prejudice their liability under the guarantee. What was the position of affairs? It was beyond dispute that the bank had become insolvent, or at least could not pay its debts. In this state of things, Brown, Jansen, and Co., by far the largest creditors of the bank, had come forward and made this arrangement with the directors and shareholders. Being in effect in possession of the assets of the bank, they undertook to pay all other creditors but themselves, looking to the assets for their own repayment. This arrangement was really an enormous advantage for every shareholder and every creditor. The creditors would all be paid, and the shareholders would be released from the exigency of a winding-up order. It was in every respect a proper agreement, and manifestly for the benefit of all parties interested, and there would be no difficulty in the way of carrying it out forthwith. There could be no necessity for making an order for winding-up voluntarily under supervision of the Court. Incalculable litigation might be the result of such an order, and in the event of any creditor not receiving payment, it would be at once open to him to apply to the court for a supervision order, notwithstanding what had occurred. But further litigation ought not to be encouraged simply because of the possible risk that the undertaking might not be carried out. There would be no order upon the petition (for winding-up), except to adopt the undertaking given on behalf of Messrs. Brown, Jansen, and Co.; and having regard to the small amount of interest, and their not being satisfied that the petitions had been presented bona fide, or with any other object than to intercept the proposed arrangement, there would be no order as to cost as to any of the petitions. His lordship's ruling as to costs elicited a perfect storm of protest from the counsel on behalf of the several petitioners. Mr. Roxburgh, Q.C, Mr. Kay, Q.C., and others pointed out that the winding-up petitions, so far from being designed to intercept the arrangement with Brown, Janson, and Co., were all presented before that arrangement was either made or in contemplation; that no notice of the arrangement was given to the petitioners; that the agreement itself provided for payment of the costs of the petitioners; and that in the case of creditors, if they had issued writs for the amount of their debts, they could not have been deprived of their costs. In the result their Lordships gave the petitioners their costs—and set of costs to the contributories and one to the creditors, both here and in the Court of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, and no separate costs to the committee of investigation (appearing by Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. E. Cutler).

EX PARTE COKER—IN RE BLAKE.—This was an appeal from a decision of Mr. Registrar Roche, acting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. In October, 1871, Mr. E. H. W. Swete, a medical practitioner at Leamington, entered into an agreement with Mr. R. H. Blake, who had been for some years practising at Leamington as a physician and surgeon, to purchase a share of his business, and to carry it on in partnership with him. Swete paid a premium of £1,500 for a half share of the business. Differences afterwards arose between the parties, and in August, 1873, Mr. Swete filed a bill in Chancery, by which he alleged that he had been induced to enter into the partnership agreement by the fraudulent misrepresentations of Mr. Blake, and prayed that the agreement might be cancelled; that the defendant might be ordered to repay the £1,500 with interest; and that an account might be taken of all moneys received and paid by the plaintiff under the agreement; and that the defendant might be ordered to make good to the plaintiff what should appear to be due to him. The defendant put in an answer denying the truth of the charges made against him. Before the suit came to a hearing the defendant filed a liquidation petition, under which Mr. Frederick Coker was appointed trustee of his property. In January last an order was made to revive the suit against him. On the 15th of June the trustee applied to the Court of Bankruptcy for an order to restrain the plaintiff from taking any further proceedings in the suit. The Registrar refused the application, and the trustee appealed. By his notice of appeal he only asked that the proceedings in the suit might be restrained as against him. Mr. Romer, for the appellant, argued that the debtor's interest was now entirely vested in the trustee, and that the suit was, in truth, merely a money demand, which could be more properly dealt with in the Court of Bankruptcy. Mr. O. L. Clare, for the plaintiff in the suit, urged that, as the claim made by the suit was in respect of a debt contracted by fraud, the proceedings in the liquidation would not discharge the debtor from it. The plaintiff was, therefore, still entitled to enforce his right against the debtor personally, and the suit ought to go on for that purpose. The trustee would be a mere formal, but still a necessary, party. Mr. Romer replied. Lord Justice James said that, having regard to the nature of the suit, in which, if the plaintiff succeeded, he would be entitled to a personal remedy against the debtor, the Registrar's order was right. The trustee need not defend the suit. He need do nothing at all, but leave it to the debtor to fight it. Whatever amount might be found to be due to the plaintiff, of course, he would be entitled to prove for it in the liquidation, and the debtor would also remain personally liable for it. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. He thought that the Court of Bankruptcy ought not to restrain the proceedings in any suit or action against a bankrupt or liquidating debtor in any case where the bankruptcy or liquidation would not be a bar to the claim made in the suit or action. If, as was the case here, the bankrupt or debtor would remain personally liable, nothwithstanding his discharge in the bankruptcy or liquidation, then the proceedings ought not to be restrained.

IN RE THE CARIBBEAN COMPANY, LIMITED.—CRICKMER'S CASE.—This was an appeal from a decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins. The company was formed in February, 1871. The memorandum stated the objects of the company to be the working of guano and phosphate deposits in the islands of the Caribbean Sea. The capital was to be £25,000, in 2,500 shares of £10 each. The sixth clause of the articles of association provided that "the sum of £10 per share on 2,500 original shares in the company shall be considered as fully paid-up." The memorandum of association was signed by seven persons for one share each; the remaining 2,493 shares were allotted to a Mr. Edward Oliver, as fully paid-up, "in consideration of his procuring an assignment to the company of some concessions of deposits of guano in the Islands in the Caribbean Sea, in accordance with the agreement between Oliver and a Mr. J. E. Carmichael." This arrangement or agreement was not registered with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies, and the only notice to the public of the shares being allotted as fully paid-up was by means of the sixth clause of the articles of association. A number of Oliver's shares were afterwards transferred to Mr. John Ebenezer Crickmer, a stockbroker, who took the shares, as the Court held upon the evidence, with full notice of all the circumstances. The company having been ordered to be wound-up, the question arose whether Mr. Crickmer was liable, as a contributory, to pay the full amount of £10 per share. The Vice-Chancellor decided that he was so liable. Mr. Crickmer appealed. Mr. Waller, Q.C., and Mr. Bunting, for the appellant, argued that by means of the registration of the memorandum and articles of association, there had been a sufficient registration of "a contract duly made in writing," that the shares should be deemed to be fully paid-up, so as to satisfy the requirements of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. Mr. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Grosvenor Woods, for the official liquidator, were not called on. Lord Justice James said that the appeal was a perfectly idle one. The registration of articles inconsistent with the memorandum of association was not the registration of a contract in writing within the meaning of Section 25. The contract ought to show what shares were issued as fully paid, and for what consideration. Lord Justice Mellish was entirely of the same opinion. The meaning of the articles was rather obscure, but it seemed to him that the directors had power to make presents of all the shares. The meaning of the Act of Parliament was that the contract, by virtue of which the shares were to be issued as fully paid-up—that is, a contract between the company and some person external to the company—was the contract which was to be registered. It did not mean a mere agreement between the shareholders that the shares should be issued as fully paid-up. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

BANKRUPTCY BUSINESS.—Lord Justice James announced that there will be another sitting of this Court in Bankruptcy on Thursday next, the 5th of August. Their Lordships, he said, intend, if possible, to dispose of all the bankrupt appeals before the Long Vacation. At this time of the year parties were in the habit of presenting appeals simply for the purpose of delay, and their Lordships will endeavour to defeat that object.

ROLLS' COURT, CHANCERY-LANE.

July 22.

(Before the MASTER of the ROLLS.)

IN RE BLAEN CÆLAN COMPANY (LIMITED)—RHODES'S CASE.—The question in this case was whether Mr. Rhodes was liable to contribute in respect of 65 shares in the above-named company, which is being wound-up by the Court. The circumstances of the case were peculiar. The company was formed to buy the property of another company which was being wound-up voluntarily, and Mr. Rhodes, as a member of the latter company, had the right, of which he declined to avail himself, to an allotment of paid-up shares of the Blaen Cælan Company as his share of the purchase-money. The managing director of the Blaen Cælan Company, however, in exercise, as he deposed in Court, of his general authority to act for the company, registered 65 shares in the name of Mr. Rhodes as paid-up shares, and sent to him the certificate, in which he was described as the registered proprietor. Mr. Rhodes, presumably, believing that no liability attached to shares which were described as paid-up, did not return the certificate to the company's office, but retained it in his own possession; and the winding-up order having been made, the liquidator applied to place Mr. Rhodes's name on the list of contributories for the shares in question as shares on which nothing had been paid, on the ground that he was the registered proprietor of the shares, and no agreement that they should be payable otherwise than in cash had been filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies before they were issued, as proved to be the case. The Master of the Rolls said it was a hard case, but the register was conclusive. Mr. Rhodes knew that his name was on the register, and had not applied to have the register rectified before the winding-up order. No doubt he did not do so because he thought the shares were paid-up, but the law said they were not paid-up; consequently, he must be placed on the list of contributories for the full amount of the shares. I suppose, his Honour added, the time will arrive when laymen will learn to leave these shares in limited companies alone.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR C. HALL).

IN RE THE INTERNATIONAL PULP AND PAPER COMPANY (LIMITED).—This was a creditor's petition for winding-up the company. Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. F. C. J. Millar appeared for the petitioner; Mr. Warington for another creditor; Mr. Macnaghten for shareholders; Mr. Caldecott for the company. The Vice-Chancellor made the usual compulsory order, but directed that it should not be drawn up if the petitioner's debt were paid within ten days.

IN RE THE COMMON ROAD CONVEYANCE COMPANY (LIMITED).—The company was formed in December, 1870, and in 1871 obtained, under the Tramways Act, 1870, a provisional order from the Board of Trade for the construction of a tramway from Watford to London. In accordance with the Act, and under the rules of the Board of Trade, the company deposited in Court a sum of £1,939 10s. 5d. The company failed to construct their tramway, and on the 26th of February last was ordered to be wound up, and a liquidator was appointed. A petition was now presented by the liquidator for the transfer out of Court to him of the fund representing the deposit, as being part of the assets of the company properly payable to him. Mr. Davey, Q.C., and Mr. Crossley, for the petitioner, referred to the Board of Trade rule 26, under the Tramways Act, 1870, which provides that in case of the failure of the promoters of a railway to complete their undertaking, the deposit fund shall, after satisfaction of compensation to road authorities, be either forfeited to the Crown or, "in the discretion of the Court, if the promoters are a company, and such company is insolvent or has been ordered to be wound-up, shall wholly or in part be paid or transferred to the liquidator or liquidators of the company, or be otherwise applied as part of the assets of the company, for the benefit of the reditors thereof." Mr. Dickinson, Q.C., and Mr. Hanson, for parties who had advanced the the sum deposited by the company, submitted that the money, if paid to the liquidator, should be treated as applicable to the payment of their debt. Mr. Rigby, for the Attorney-General, submitted that it had not been satisfactorily proved that any debts remained due from the company, and that this money if paid out might in reality go to the promoters of the company, through whose reckless mismanagement the company had been ruined, and that such destination of the money was contrary to the intention of the Board of Trade rule, which was to discourage reckless speculation. The Vice-Chancellor said that the rule vested a discretion in the Court to order payment of the deposit to the liquidator. Whether that discretion was exercised or not, it was clear that the debt of Mr. Dickinson's clients was a debt which he could not treat as being of such a nature that he ought not to make the order asked for. From the materials before him there was every reason to believe that there were other claims beside this which should be provided for. The money must therefore be paid out.

July 26.

(Before Vice-Chancellor SIR R. MALINS.)

IN RE THE SOUTH WALES ATLANTIC STEAMSHIP COMPANY.—This was a petition for the winding-up of the company, which was formed in January, 1871, for the purpose of establishing a regular line of steamships between Cardiff and other parts of South Wales and New York and other American ports. The capital was to be £108,000, in 256 equal shares of £425 each, and the shares subscribed for, amounting to £83,000, were all fully paid-up. The company, amongst the promoters of which were the Marquis of Bute, Sir William Armstrong, and Mr. Talbot, M.P., was unsuccessful, and the petition for winding-up was presented by a firm of solicitors at Cardiff, who were also the solicitors of Lord Bute, their claim against the company amounting to £477. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., and Mr. Grosvenor Woods, appeared for the petitioners; and Mr. W. Pearson, Q.C., and Mr. B. B. Rogers, on the part of contributories, opposed on the ground that as the company consisted of more than twenty members and was unregistered the court had no jurisdiction. Mr. H. Davey, Q.C., on behalf of the committee of management of the company, supported the petition, and stated that a large majority of contributories and the Clydesdale Bank, who were the largest creditors, desired that a winding-up order should be made. The Vice-Chancellor said most unquestionably an illegal company could not be wound-up at the instance of its own members, and he held that those who dealt with such a concern had thrown upon them the burden of ascertaining whether it was or was not legally constituted. The petitioners in this case were parties to the formation of the company, and he could not entertain a doubt that on that account an order to wind-up the company could not be made upon their petition. It was impossible for those who had been guilty of an illegal act to invoke the assistance of an Act of Parliament which declared their conduct to be illegal; and therefore, though with much regret, he felt constrained to dismiss the petition with costs.

J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Chester were for the petitioner. Mr. Williamson, for the company, opposed the petition on the ground that the petitioner was not really a creditor of, but indebted to the company, and said that the company would prefer continuing a voluntary winding-up, which was now going on under the supervision of the Court. Mr. T. A. Roberts, Mr. Boome, and Mr. Lucas were for other parties. The Vice-Chancellor made an order to continue the voluntary winding-up under supervision, and referred it to Chambers to appoint an official liquidator in the place of a Mr. Mack, with liberty to Mr Mack to propose himself.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE ALFRED BOWES.—The bankrupt was a general merchant, carrying on business at Bermondsey and in the New Kent-road. His debts were returned at £22,745, with assets £6,692. At a meeting recently held under the 28th section of the Act, the creditors passed a resolution accepting a composition of 4s. in the pound, payable by three instalments extending over a period of eight months, with security; and the resolution provided for the annulment of the adjudication. Upon the application of the trustee, his Honour confirmed the resolution.

July 23.

(Before Sir J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE JONES—RE JONES.—This was an appeal from the Liverpool County Court, and involved a question of some nicety in regard to the rights of execution creditors in cases of composition. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Finlay Knight were counsel for the appellant; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. F. O. Crump for the respondent. It appeared that on the 8th of May, Messrs. Sabel recovered a judgment against the debtor, a trader, for £55 10s., and on the 10th execution was issued upon the judgment and lodged with the sheriff. On the same day the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, and on the 13th execution was levied by the sheriff upon his goods. A receiver was then appointed, and an injunction obtained restraining further proceedings under the execution, and at the first meeting the creditors passed a resolution, which was afterwards confirmed, accepting a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable by instalments. The County Court afterwards made an order dissolving the injunction. The debtor appealed. His Lordship said that no doubt the Act of Parliament had given trouble in its interpretation, but there was one plain distinguishing feature—that liquidation and composition were totally distinct from each other. Liquidation gave the creditors the whole of the debtor's property, but in cases of composition the creditors took the means which the law afforded to enforce payment of that composition, and they had no recourse to the debtor's estate. The present case came to this—that, the goods being bound by the lodging of the writ, the creditors had chosen to accept a composition, and they now asked the execution creditors to give up the right which they had acquired. The other creditors looked to the debtor for payment, without reference to the property seized. The execution creditors, having lodged the writ, were entitled to the benefit of it. The order of the County Court was right, and the appeal must be dismissed.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE JOHN RANKING AND CO.—The debtors, Messrs. Harvey Ranking and Augustus Ranking, merchants, trading at 11 St. Helen's place, as John Ranking and Co., have filed a petition for liquidation by arrangement. Their liabilities are estimated at £110,000, after deducting the value of the securities held by creditors, with assets, consisting of merchandise, book debts, and securities, and also of real estate in England and Egypt, and elsewhere, valued at £70,000. Mr. Baker (Lawrance and Co.) now asked that Mr. Robert Fletcher, accountant, should be appointed receiver and manager. It appeared that a preliminary meeting had been held, at which the creditors expressed a strong opinion that the assets should be forthwith placed under control. His Honour granted the application.

IN RE J. C. FOWLIE.—This was another heavy failure. The debtor, described as a merchant, of 18 Leadenhall-street, has filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities amounting to £140,000, and assets, consisting of furniture, £1,100; cash-book debts and claims, £50,000 and upwards; and property in Ceylon estimated at £10,000. Mr. Lucas appeared for the debtor. Mr. Registrar Hazlitt refused an application for an interim injunction staying further proceedings under a debtor's summons issued at the suit of one of the creditors, it being contrary to the practice of the Court to interfere with any steps which creditors may take under section 7 of the Act.

July 26.

(Before MR. REGISTRAR HAZLITT.)

IN RE SIR WILLIAM RUSSELL, BART.—The bankrupt, whose affairs have frequently occupied the attention of the Court, was formerly one of the members of parliament for Norwich, and had carried on business as a general merchant at 3, Salters'-hall-court, Cannon-street. He was allowed, after some opposition, to pass his public examination on a statement of affairs disclosing debts to the amount of £64,781, assets £750.

(Before SIR J. BACON, Chief Judge.)

EX PARTE WEAR—RE LINDSAY.—This was an appeal from an order of the Newcastle County Court, and involved the validity of a bill of sale granted by Mr. Lindsay, a shipbuilder at Newcastle, to the appellant. Mr. Winslow, Q.C., and Mr. Bagley appeared in support of the appeal; Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Doria for the trustee. The bankrupt, it appeared, had two shipbuilding yards, one at a place called Mushroom, and another at St. Peter's-on-Tyne. For some time previously to the stoppage, he had been in difficulties, and had made application to various persons for assistance, and, among others, to the appellant, an iron merchant. In the beginning of July, 1874, the bankrupt was indebted to the appellant in the sum of £600, and about the same time he was repairing two ships, the Gitana and the Clarissa, for the appellant. At that time the bankrupt applied to the appellant for an advance of £200 on account of the repairs of the ships, and the appellant gave him the money. On the 12th of July the bankrupt called upon the appellant and said he wanted £1,000 to meet certain liabilities then falling due, and at the same time promised that, if the appellant would make the advance, he would give him a bill of sale over his stock and plant as a shipbuilder, whenever the appellant required. Upon that promise the appellant advanced the money, and he afterwards lent other sums, making an aggregte of £1,593. On the 13th of August the appellant required the bankrupt to give him the security he had promised, and upon the faith of which he had made the advances, and thereupon solicitors were instructed to prepare a bill of sale over the bankrupt's stock and plant at St. Peter's, and the deed was duly executed and registered. On the 19th of August the appellant took possession of the property, and on the 10th of December the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, and he was afterwards adjudicated a bankrupt. The trustee claimed the property on the ground that the bill of sale constituted a fraudulent preference, and he alleged that the advances were really made on account of the repairs of the two vessels. The County Court decided that the bankrupt executed the bill of sale with a view to prefer the appellant over the other creditors, and declared that the deed was fraudulent and void against the trustee. Mr. Wear appealed. The case having been fully argued, his Lordship held that the execution of the bill of sale was, under the circumstances, a perfectly honest and straightforward transaction, and reversed the decision of the Court below.

EX PARTE STAFF—RE STAFF.—This was an appeal from an order of the Oxford County Court, refusing to register a resolution for a liquidation by arrangement. The debtor, Henry John Staff, a brewer, carrying on business at Oxford, had presented a petition under the 125th and 126th sections, and at the first meeting he produced a statement of affairs which showed debts amounting to £540 14s. 2d., and assets £52 8s. 2d. The creditors passed a resolution for liquidation by araangement and granted the debtor a discharge, but upon the matter being brought before the Registrar he declined to register the resolution, on the ground mainly that there were practically no assets for distribution. The debtor appealed. Mr. Finlay Knight appeared for the appellant; Mr. Smart for the respondent. His Lordship thought the machinery of the Court of Bankruptcy ought not to be employed in such a case. The resolution was an abuse of the process of the Court, and the Registrar was quite right in refusing to register it. The appeal must be dismissed.

IN RE LAMBERT BROTHERS AND SCOTT.—Messrs. Francis Devereux Lambert, jun., and Richard John Lambert, shipowners and ship and insurance brokers, coal factors and merchants, carrying on business at 85 Gracechurch-street, the Coal Exchange, and Rochester, have filed a petition for liquidation. They trade under the style of Lambert Brothers and Scott, and they have also a business at Deptford jointly with Mr. Charles Hart, and at Port Said, Egypt, as the Port Said and Suez Coal Company. Their liabilities are returned at £380,000. a considerable portion of which is upon bills, and the amount likely to rank against the estate will not exceed £180,000, with assets, consisting of shares in ships and collieries, coals in store, book debts, and various other items, and comprising also property at Alexandra subject to liens, of the total estimated value of about £127,000. Mr. Finlay Knight, for the petitioners, and with the concurrence of creditors for £160,000, asked that Mr. Saffery, accountant, should be appointed receiver and manager of the property. It appeared that in consequence of the great extent and nature of the business, the debtors and the creditors desired the appointment to be made, as numerous contracts were pending which must either be abandoned or continued for the benfiet of the estate. His Honour granted the application.

(Before Mr. Registrar BROUGHAM, sitting as Chief Judge.)

IN RE ALEXANDER AND WILLIAM COLLIE.—Mr. Hollams, jun., on behalf of Mr. John Young, the receiver and manager under this petition for liquidation, applied for leave to proceed to a sale of the mansion, 12 Kensington-park-gardens, recently occupied by Mr. Alexander Collie. The affidavits showed that the house was of a very exceptional character, and had been built by Sir Matthew Digby Wyatt. A meeting of creditors was held yesterday, when the proposed sale was discussed, and an adjournment was taken until Tuesday, so that an application might be made to this court for leave to proceed to a sale, as any delay would seriously affect the value of the property. Considerable expense had already been incurred in advertising the house and furniture. Mr. Registrar Brougham said the course adopted had been irregular. It was the duty of the receiver and manager to protect the property of the debtors in the interest of the creditors, but it was no part of his duty to realise it. The Court had no power, even in bankruptcy, to make an order for a sale unless the property was considered to be of a perishable nature. If the receiver and manager proceeded to a sale, he must do so on his own responsibility. Mr. Hollams—then your honour dismisses the application? Mr. Registrar Brougham—I make no order upon it.

IN RE H. A. AND G. RUDALL.—The debtors, Messrs. Henry Alexander Rudall and George Rudall, merchants, carrying on business in King William-street, under the firm of J. H. Rudall and Son, have filed a petition for liquidation, with liabilities estimated at £60,000, and assets about the same amount, subject to realisation. Upon the application of Mr. Brough, for the petitioners and creditors, his Honour appointed Mr. James Waddell, accountant, receiver and manager of the estate.

IN RE JOHN STRACHAN.—The debtor is an East India merchant, of the New City-chambers, Bishopsgate-street Within. Upon the application of Mr. Robertson Griffiths for the debtor and several creditors, his Honour appointed Mr. James Waddell, accountant, receiver under a petition for liquidation filed by the debtor. The debts in this case are estimated at £127,000, with assets, consisting principally of consignments, of which the value is not yet known.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

HOUSE OF COMMONS, JULY 26.

EUROPEAN ARBITRATION ACT.—Mr. Stacpoole wished to know whether Mr. Reilly, the Parliamentary draughtsmen, had been appointed Arbitrator under the European Arbitration Act, 1875; and if application was made to any ex-Chancellor, Judge, or any other person having the qualification required by the Arbitration Act, 1872, to accept the office before appointing Mr. Reilly; and, if so, to whom. The Attorney-General, in answer to the question of the hon. member, I have to state that Mr. Reilly has been appointed Arbitrator under the European Assurance Society Arbitration Act, 1875. I am unable to state whether application was made to any ex-Chancellor, Judge, or other person having the qualification required by the Act of 1872 to accept the office before Mr. Reilly was appointed. The power to appoint an arbitrator was placed by the Act of the present Session in the hands of the Lord Chancellor, who is alone responsible for the appointment he has made.

CHARGE OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

At the Worship-street Police Court Henry Webb, a china and earthenware dealer, of Brushfield-street, Spitalfields, appeared on his bail for further examination on a charge of having neglected to deliver up to trustees appointed under his bankruptcy all his property. Mr. Besley and Mr. Grain appeared for the prosecution, and Mr. Montague Williams defended. The evidence against the defendant, which has been taken at great length, showed that he had carried on business in Brushfield-street and High-street, Stoke Newington, until in September, 1874, he filed a petition under the Liquidating Debtors Act, 1869. The principal facts relied upon by the prosecution were admissions by the defendant in his examination before the Bankruptcy Court. In his petition he had put down "cash in hand" as nil, but subsequently, before the Court, admitted that he was possessed at the time of £50, which he had since spent in "bribing his creditors to accept a composition." At his first examination the defendant said he had surrendered to his trustees all his property, books, and papers, and had not, either then or at the time of filing his petition, any goods deposited any where or at any place except his business premises. Subsequently he admitted that after his bankruptcy he had sold goods to a man named Payne for £14, but had said nothing about it to his trustees, and having received the money, had spent it on himself and family. Also he admitted that after the receiver was appointed he, carrying on the business, and supposed to hand over all receipts to the person in possession, had received about £30 in cash, and had paid it away in settlement of some business matters. Further, that he had sold goods to a Mr. Boyden for over £9, and received the money, but had not accounted for it to the trustees. The defendant had in his statement set down that he had no accommodation bills out, but subsequently the Midland Banking Company put in a proof for £500, all upon bills accepted by the defendant, and principally drawn by a Mr. Bettamy, a china and glass dealer, of Stoke-upon-Trent, and himself in liquidation. After a lengthy hearing the prosecution asked for a further adjournment, to enable them to put in some formal papers, and a remand was taken, the defendant being admitted to bail as before.

SUMMER ASSIZES.

MIDLAND CIRCUIT, LINCOLN.

July 24.

LLOYD v. PERRY.—This was a peculiar action, and was brought by the plaintiff, who is a timber merchant at Great Grimsby, against the proprietor of the Weekly Bankrupt Gazette for not supplying information in pursuance of his promise contained in a prospectus or advertisement in the Gazette. Mr. Digby Seymour, Q.C., and Mr. Lawrence were for the plaintiff; Mr. Waddy, Q.C., and Mr. Wilberforce for the defendant. The plaintiff sent a check for three guineas to the defendant in consequence of a conversation with Mr. Revill, the defendant's agent, who produced the advertisement. Among other things, the advertisement stated that the defendant supplied "every species of information calculated to protect merchants," and also supplied "important confidential information." The plaintiff wrote to the defendant to make inquiries about Edward Cotterill and Co., timber merchants, Derby, and Mr. Revill wrote to the defendant to ask him to make inquiries of Messrs. Roe, eminent timber merchants at Derby. The plaintiff received for answer a document from the defendant headed "without responsibility or guarantee." The document stated—"E. C. and Co. are recently established. C. has been foreman to a builder, and the Co. are said to consist of several respectable and trustworthy people." The plaintiff had received an order from Cotterill for £421 worth of timber, and had supplied £28 worth, but hesitated to send more until inquiry. Upon the receipt of the above document the plaintiff supplied all the timber, and took Cotterill's bills for the amount. In January Cotterill's affairs came into liquidation, and subsequently he was sentenced to six months' imprisonment as a fraudulent bankrupt. His assets were £300, and his liabilities £2,000. There was no company nor any partner whatever, and Cotterill had not been foreman to a builder, but had been a working sawyer. The plaintiff had not applied to Messrs. Roe, of Derby. At the close of the plaintiff's case, Mr. Waddy, Q.C., took several objections upon the pleadings, and submitted there was no case. His lordship ruled that there was. The defendant's case was that there was no guarantee that the information was correct, that he did not say the firm consisted of several respectable persons, but only that it was "said to consist," and that the defendant had made inquiries and sent the best information in his power. Mr. Perry, the defendant, stated that his office received and answered as many as 200,000 inquiries in a year. He had received information from a Mr. Peile, a retired bookseller in Derby, in January, 1874, as to the position of Cotterill, and sent his letter to the plaintiff on the strength of that information, and did not inquire of Mr. Roe, according to his agent's (Mr. Revill's) advice. Mr. Peile had made inquiries in the middle of last year with respect to Cotterill and Co. on receipt of 6d. in postage stamps from the defendant. He inquired of a Mr. Ride, a clerk to Messrs. Sutton, who were lately eminent timber merchants in Derby, and of a glazier and butler, and who wrote to the defendant what the defendant afterwards communicated to the plaintiff. His lordship said it was clear that three guineas were paid by the subscribers not only for the paper called the Gazette, but also for the additional information to be supplied upon inquiry. The question for the jury was whether a contract was made that defendant would furnish to subscribers of three guineas important information, and did the defendant comply with that contract. If he did not, what were the damages? Then, apart from the question of contract, was the defendant guilty of negligence in the execution of the duty he had taken upon himself? The jury found that the contract had been made, that the information supplied was untrue, that there had been negligence, and found as damages £250.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY, DUBLIN.

July 20th.

(Before the Hon. Judge MILLER.)

IN RE GEORGE MEARES.—Bankrupt was a wholesale stay maker on Crampton Quay. It will be remembered that bankrupt and his clerk, Alfred Francis O'Hely, were committed to prison for being concerned in a singular fraud practised on the court, in connection with the signing of certain documents. O'Hely was to-day brought up in custody for further examination. Mr. M. T. O'Brien, on behalf of O'Hely, said that his client had nothing to add to his depositions, that he was no party whatever to the personation, and that his wife and five children were now in the workhouse. Judge Miller said that O'Hely had lived next door to the bankrupt, in a house belonging to bankrupt's mother, and must have been well-acquainted with her appearance, and that he had made an affidavit stating that she was the party who signed the bills. Under these circumstances, it was idle for him to allege that he was not in collusion with the bankrupt, and if he had no further information to give, he should go back to prison, where he would keep him till he got at the bottom of the whole transaction.

RE JEREMIAH GERALD QUILLINAN.—Bankrupt was a trader in Cork. Mr. Carton, for the official assignee, opposed the passing of the final examination. Counsel stated that bankrupt had been only six months in the trade, during which time he purchased goods to the amount of £1675, which he sold subsequently for £1965, and yet alleged he had sustained a loss of £700. He submitted that the explanation was not satisfactory. Mr. Larkin, for bankrupt, contended that his client had made the fullest disclosure, and was, therefore, entitled to pass his final examination. Of course, the question of certificate would be for future consideration. Judge Miller said that under the present aspect of the case, he could not pass the final examination, and adjourned the sitting.

It is notified that the partnership heretofore subsisting between John Richardson, Charles Fletcher Richardson, and Charles Robinson Trevor, public accountants, of Manchester, under the style or firm of Richardsons and Trevor, has been by effluxion of time and mutual consent dissolved, as from the 24th day of June, 1875, and that the business will henceforth be carried on by Mr. Charles Robinson Trevor alone.

Mr. M. H. Chaytor, chairman of the Alliance Bank, speaking at the general meeting of shareholders, referred to the recent alleged frauds, and said that the directors had made up their minds to pass every guilty man through the Court of Bankruptcy. The plague-spot now resting upon the commercial community must be stamped out, and he was sure that the shareholders would approve of this being done.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

A. COLLIE & Co.—A meeting of the creditors of this company was held on Wednesday afternoon at the City Terminus Hotel; Mr. Smith (Travers, Smith, and Co.) in the chair. The chairman in opening the proceedings called upon Mr. Young (Turquand, Young, and Co.) to read a statement with regard to the affairs of the Company. Circumstances, he added, had not been entirely favourable to the full examination of the accounts. Mr. Young submitted the following statement:—

After some comments from Mr. Young, and others present, it was agreed to adjourn the meeting till Tuesday, and then to place the affairs in the Court of Bankruptcy.

J. W. SMITH (BINGLEY).—A meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Wilson Smith, commission woolcomber, of Bingley, was held on Saturday at the offices of Messrs. Rawson, George, and Wade, solicitors, Bradford. A statement of the debtor's affairs, prepared by Mr. Henry Dickin, the receiver, showed the total liabilities £10,872, and assets £962, and allowed to the joint creditors of Messrs. Jonas Foster and Co., £1,583. It was resolved to wind-up the estate in liquidation, Mr Dickin being appointed trustee. Mr. Smith received his discharge, the meeting expressing great sympathy with him.

HAY, INGRAM, AND CO.—At the adjourned meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Hay, Ingram, and Co., at the offices of Messrs. Lawrance, Plews, and Co., it was resolved to liquidate by arrangement, Mr. Waddell being appointed trustee, with a committee of creditors. The liabilities are £107,979 7s. 3d., with assets of £21,190 11s. 3d.

W. WILSON (HAWICK).—A statement of the affairs of Mr. Walter Wilson, Hawick, shows assets £44,355 16s. 1d.; liabilities, £47,843 4s. 7d.; claims which will not be paid in full by proper debtors, £31,429 17s. 8d.; total deficiency £34,917 6s. 2d. In this case it is believed an amicable arrangement will be arrived at and work continued.

LAING AND IRVINE (HAWICK).—A statement of the affairs of Messrs. Laing and Irvine, Hawick, shows liabilities (business) £99,685; ditto (adventures), £73,048; assets, £76,615. Total deficiency, £96,118. A composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound has been declined by a minority of the creditors, who persisted in the resolution to sequestrate the estate,

J. WILSON AND SON (HAWICK).—A statement of the affairs of Messrs. John Wilson and Son, Hawick, shows assets, £62,549 4s. 2d.; debts £65,918 10s. 10d.; claims which will not be paid in full by proper debtors, £32,923 5s. 9d.; total deficiency, £36,347 12s. 5d. It is believed that the offer of 12s. in the pound will be accepted by the creditors.

R. BENSON AND CO.—At a meeting of creditors of Messrs. Robert Benson and Co., American merchants, the liabilities were stated at £133,000 and assets at £48,000. It was decided to adjourn till the 4th of August, when a full statement of the affairs of the firm will be submitted.

C. DEW.—At an adjourned meeting of creditors held in this matter on the 21st inst., the debtors statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,200, assets £1,090 12s. 1d. It was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and Mr. Edmund Charles Chatterley (C. Browne, Stanley, and Co.), was appointed trustee.

J. P. WESTHEAD AND CO.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. J. P. Westhead and Co. the liabilities were stated at £317,900, and assets at £301,727, apart from the private estates, valued at £90,100. An offer to pay in full, by instalments extending over twelve months, with 4 per cent. interest, was accepted. The business is to be continued by a company, with a capital of £400,000.

T. HAMPTON (SHEFFIELD).—A meeting was held at Sheffield on Wednesday of the creditors of Mr. Thomas Hampton, one of the founders, and until recently the managing director of the Phœnix Bessemer Company, which is in course of liquidation. The total liabilities were stated at a little over £20,000. The meeting resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, and Mr. Hampton was granted his discharge, and sympathy was expressed with him in the losses he had sustained.

PATON, COOK AND CO. (GLASGOW).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Paton, Cook and Co., 85 Queen Street, was held on the 27th. An offer of 16s. 8d. in the pound was accepted, payable in 3, 6, 9 and 12 months, with security for last instalment.

A petition has been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding up of Hester and Company, Limited, and the Cadogan Advance Company, Limited.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—Messrs. Schulze and Mohr, a firm in the East Indian trade, suspended payment on the 24th instant, with liabilities estimated at about £300,000, most of which fall on Continental houses, but most of the creditors are said to be secured. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Cooper Brothers and Co.—A petition was filed in the Huddersfield County Court on Friday, July 23rd, by Henry Roebuck, yarn spinner, of East-parade, Huddersfield, for the liquidation of his affairs with liabilities at £3,000. Messrs. Scholes and Son, of Newsbury, are the solicitors, and Mr. Wm. Schofield, accountant, Huddersfield, has been appointed the receiver.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA.—Advices received lately from Halifax, N.S., announce the following failures, viz.:—Messrs. Robertson, M'Leod, and Co., wholesale dry goods merchants, with liabilities of £56,000. Mr. Samuel Sweet, with liabilities of £55,000, owing, it is said, to stagnation in the plaster trade. Messrs. Martin and Co., Mr. Robert Conroy, and Messrs. Raymond and Darkee, of Yarmouth, Halifax, also failed. Messrs. J. W. Warner and Son, bankers and brokers, Montreal, suspended.

AMERICA.—The failure of Messrs. Duncan, Sherman, and Co., of New York, was announced in England on Wednesday morning, the losses here are expected to be very small, the liabilities, which are estimated at from £1,000,000 to £1,200,000, being chiefly due to firms in the United States.

The Allgemeine Zeitung reports the failure of Herr Hyra, the proprietor of a number of steam mills and of considerable mining works in Bohemia. His liabilities amount to £150,000, against assets estimated at £206,800, and it is proposed to pay in full by instalments extending over three years.

CHARGE OF FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.—Nicholas D. Corandrea, a Greek, but a naturalised British subject, who until recently carried on business in Manchester as a shipper, with a branch house in London, was charged at Manchester on the 26th, with having defrauded his creditors of £17,000 worth of property. In October last year the prisoner left England, and in January of this year he was made bankrupt. Previous to the bankruptcy it is said the prisoner was in the habit of sending goods to his brother at Constantinople. Last week he was apprehended in Paris. The case was adjourned.

Messrs. Alexander and William Collie again appeared at the Guildhall on Wednesday, on the charge of having obtained about £200,000 from the London and Westminster Bank by false pretences. Mr. Percy Sanderson, a member of a late firm of bill brokers, was the principal witness, and he was examined at considerable length by Sir Henry James, for the prosecution, respecting the bills of the defendants. The case was adjourned for a week.

THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION. — Mr. Francis Savage Reilly, barrister, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor to be Arbitrator under the European Assurance Arbitration Act of the present year. Mr. Reilly is the son of the late Mr. James Miles Reilly, barrister, of Cloan-Eaven, Downshire, by the daughter of the first Viscount Bangor, and was born in 1828. He was educated at Trinity College, Dublin, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's-inn in Easter Term, 1851, and he is an Equity draughtsman and conveyancer. He has acted as assessor in the Albert and European arbitrations, and has edited the reports of the decisions of Lords Westbury, Cairns and Romilly therein. Mr. Reilly has also had a large experience in Parliamentary draughting, especially of Government Bills, and he was a member of the Digest Commission, and of the Lord Chancellor's Committee for the Revision of the Statutes. He has also acted as referee for the Board of Trade under the Metropolitan Gas Company's Acts.—Solicitor's Journal.

APPOINTMENTS.

[The Editor will be glad to receive early notice of appointment of Liquidators and Auditors for insertion in this column.]

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. Frederick William Sperring, Public Accountant, 26 Philpot lane, Fenchurch-street, E.C., Provisional Liquidator of the Ballyclare Paper Mills (Ireland) Limited.

Mr. Henry T. Vivian, of the firm of Messrs. Haydon and Vivian, Public Accountants, 29 New City Chambers, 121 Bishopsgate-street within, has been appointed by the Lord Chancellor, Receiver of the Estate of Samuel Brent, of Rotherhithe.

Mr. Edward J. Barrett (of the firm of Barrett and Patey), Public Accountant, 90 London Wall, E.C., has been appointed Trustee of the Estate of Daniel Austin, builder, No. 1 Warlock-road, St. Peter's park, Paddington, in liquidation.

Mr. H. H. Patey (of the firm of Barrett and Patey), Public Accountant, 90 London Wall, E.C., has been appointed Trustee of the Estate of Charles Wilmott, stationer and bookseller, No. 34 Praed-street, Paddington, in liquidation.

Mr. J. J. Saffery (Messrs. J. J. Saffery and Company), of Old Jewry Chambers, has been appointed Receiver and Manager of the Estate of Messrs. Lambert Brothers, and Scott, of 85 Gracechurch-street, of the Coal Exchange, and of Rochester and Deptford, ship owners, ship and insurance brokers, coal merchants and factors, and also trading at Port Said, in Egypt, under the title of the Port Said and Suez Coal Company, who suspended payment on the 15th instant, with liabilities amounting to £380,000.

The Master of the Rolls has appointed Mr. J. Waddell liquidator of the British National Insurance Corporation, Limited.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has appointed Mr. Edward Gustavus Clarke (of Messrs. Barnard, Clarke, and Co.), provisional, official liquidator of the Ely Paper Company, Limited.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has made an order appointing Mr. Frederick Whinney (of the firm of Harding, Whinney and Co.) official liquidator of the Lisbon Steam Tramways Company, Limited.

BRADFORD BANKRUPTCY COURT.—At a sitting of the Bradford Bankruptcy Court on the 6th instant, before Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, Q.C., judge, two motions in connection with the liquidation of Thomas and William Hall, Victoria Mills, Eccleshill, were heard. The first motion was made on behalf of Wilkinson Hall, asking for an order directing the trustee in the estate of T. and W. Hall to reverse his decision and to compel him to admit a proof on the estate for the sum of £200, and the other was a cross motion on behalf of the trustee asking for an order directing Wilkinson Hall to refund the sum of £105 16s. 6d. to the trustee, being a sum of money paid to him by the debtors on the eve of their bankruptcy which was not due to him, and which payment was therefore a fraudulent preference and consequently void. Mr. Watson was for Wilkinson Hall, and Mr. Killick was for Mr. A. B. Kemp, the trustee. It appeared that until about two years ago Wilkinson Hall was a member of the firm. At that time a dissolution took place, and it was alleged on behalf of Wilkinson that the sum of £300 to which he was entitled was lent to the firm at 5 per cent. interest, and that certain sums had been paid to him on account of the debt. The £105 16s. 6d. which was paid on the 8th October, 1874, was part of this lent money.—His Honour, after examining the books of the firm, held that the case was one for a jury, and directed an issue accordingly, at the same time ordering that Wilkinson Hall should pay into court the sum of £50 to abide the event.

Trading at a Loss.—An Indian merchant writes to the Pall Mall Gazette :—"I am the junior partner in an old-established firm of merchants trading with the East Indies, and in the days of old John Company Bahador—peace be with his ashes—our name was as well known and stood as high as it does at this moment. We have never pretended to rank among the chiefest magnates in the business, our capital is not reckoned by the million, nor, perhaps, would many hundred thousand fairly represent the money at our back; but we were steady through the black days of 1866, and even the Bombay panic, serious as it was, barely fluttered our pulses at home. We fancied we had detected premonitory symptoms of both catastrophes, and had strengthed ourselves in good time. In fact, we are an old-fashioned sort of people, consoling ourselves for that reproach by a secret flattering belief that in our moderate way we combine the straightforwardness and caution of the old school with the readiness of the new. At any rate, we prospered, some of our partners retired with a competence, but without weakening the concern; I myself brought in a fair amount of capital, and we gradually extended our operations. Well, it may be said, 'You've had bad times lately, you've lost money, like other people, and you'll be wiser next time.' But that's not quite it, either. To begin with, we haven't absolutely lost money; but I'm telling no secret when I say that for the past three years we have done very little more than pay our way, and that my income would have been larger if I had had my money in Consols, quite apart from any payment for my labour. I confess that what puzzled me a little was that while I was cutting down my expenses, seeing how narrow the margin of profit had become, and endeavouring to avoid all doubtful transactions, men, neither older nor better informed than myself in comparatively new firms were living at a rate that I could not begin to emulate. But what puzzled me still more was that although I knew by careful and personal examination that we traded as close both here and in India as any one, although our bills were always sought after, and, having some capital, we were in no hurry to realize, and could afford to be content with a moderate percentage, we were, nevertheless, constantly undersold at prices with which we could not pretend to compete except at a dead loss. I have positively known certain classes of goods consigned by houses here sold in Bombay at less than the wholesale price by contract in the city where they were manufactured—and this not as a single instance. There is no money to be made at that game unless it be other people's. Indeed, it required the greatest care on our part to avoid being ruined altogether by such systematic flooding of an already glutted market. When the end or the beginning of the end came, as it has come within the last few weeks, the whole thing became clear enough. These benefactors of their species who sold cheaper than anybody else could buy, sinking freight, interest, and commission, had really little or nothing at stake in the matter, and could well afford to sacrifice profits so long as they could 'float' their paper. More than one Board of Directors have found out by this time that the lucrative part of that business is not done by the banks, Indeed, if the four rules of arithmetic can be relied upon to give absolute results, they have not finished their lesson yet. Meantime, steady-going folk like ourselves have been the sufferers for the credulity of some of 'the ablest men of business in the city of London.' I can assure you, Sir, it is no satisfaction whatever to me for the bankrupt competition that I have had to undergo that the shareholders in joint-stock banks should be mulcted in a few millions, and have to make inroads on the fair proportions of their reserves, because thier managers would bolster up firms which they could easily have discovered were trading year after year at a heavy loss. I should only be very glad if on the next occasion they would keep their cash in their vaults. The mischief of the collapse, now that it has commenced, is that the extreme of confidence has been followed by an excess of distrust. The one is as bad as the other. How soon we shall return to a healthy state of things is more than any one can say.

A Doctor of Medicine's Debts.—At a meeting of the creditors of a doctor of medicine, held at the Cannon-street hotel, on Monday last, Mr. Sydney Smith, accountant, submitted a statement of affairs, showing liabilities £46,930 9s. 4d., assets £6844. The creditors resolved to liquidate by arrangement, and Mr. Sydney Smith was appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection.

The Committee on Public Accounts.—The Committee on Public Accounts in their second report express regret that their hope of being enabled to inform the House of a settlement of the questions respecting various irregularities in the Post Office and Telegraph services has only been in part realised. The report also dwells at some length on the questions at issue between the Irish Church Commissioners and the Comptroller and Auditor-General. The Committee are of opinion that it was an omission in the Irish Church Act that the Commissioners were not required to make reports to Parliament at stated intervals. Had this been done, the Committee think it is probable that the "misunderstandings and somewhat heated controversies which have unfortunately arisen between the Comptroller and Auditor-General and the Commission would have been in great part if not altogether obviated." The Committee examine in detail the chief points at issue between the Comptroller and Auditor-General and the Commission, and conclude by trusting that every care will be used to realise, at all events, the amount of surplus estimated by the Commissioners—viz. £5,180,000. They also hope that "if their recommendation of reports to be made by the Commissioners be adopted, a future report will, together with other important information which may be looked for, point out the reason of several compensations and heads of expenditure generally having proved in excess of the amounts anticipated by those most competent to form an opinion."

The European Assurance Arbitration.—On Monday the Royal assent was given to the Bill amending the European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts. Under the new Act Mr. F. S. Reilly, of Lincoln's-inn, barrister-at-law, has been appointed arbitrator in the place of Lord Justice James, who had accepted the office temporarily. We may now expect that the litigating part of the arbitration, which has been stayed for the past seven months, will again proceed. One of the chief provisions of the Act is to admit an appeal to the Court of Appeal in Chancery from any determination of the arbitrator. As originally brought in the Bill allowed an appeal from any of the decisions of the previous arbitrators; but this provision was amended in Committee, and is now limited in the following way :—"As regards any determination or order given or made before the passing of this Act, an Appeal shall not lie therefrom unless the arbitrator expressly certifies in writing that by reason of differences between previous decisions on matters of principle relating to cases of novation or of liability of contributories, it is desirable that an appeal be brought." It is to be observed that those who wish to appeal from any decision of Lord Westbury or Lord Romilly should be speedy in giving notice, as three weeks only are alllowed from the passing of the Act, unless the arbitrator is pleased to extend the time. With regard to future decisions, an appeal is not to "lie," except on a matter of principle, unless the arbitrator certifies that an appeal may properly be brought. With the exception as to appeals being allowed, the unlimited powers that are given to the arbitrator by the Act of 1872 are continued. It was originally proposed by the Bill to withdraw these powers, and direct the arbitrator to settle and determine matters in accordance with the legal and equitable rights of the litigants. But the Act, as passed, enacts that the Court of Appeal may have regard to the power and authority vested in the arbitrator by the Act of 1872 to settle matters "on such terms and in such manner in all respects, as he in his absolute and unfettered discretion thinks most fit, equitable, and expedient, and as fully and effectually as could be done by Act of Parliament."

Touting Solicitors.—The following is from a legal contemporary:—A firm of solicitors in forwarding to us a circular letter, addressed by another firm of solicitors, to creditors of an insolvent client, observe as follows:—The system of touting for proxies and proofs in bankruptcy matters is becoming so serious, and is of itself so highly objectionable and improper, that we send you a copy of a circular sent to one of our clients, and which we trust you will copy in your next publication, and make such condemnatory observations as it seems to you just and proper. We trust that your powerful censure and the publicity given to the matter will be the means of checking a system that is unfair and unprofessional. The circular is in the following form:—"In consequence of several creditors having adopted legal proceedings against Mr. —— of this town, to recover accounts which he is unable to pay, he has, in order to obviate his estate being wound-up under a petition in bankruptcy which has been filed against him, been compelled to file a petition for liquidation of his affairs by arrangement or composition with his creditors. You will receive from us, through the court, a form to prove your debt, and of proxy to vote in the appointment of trustee at the first meeting of creditors, to be held on the —— which please have completed and return to us, with any bills of exchange given you by the debtor, with as little delay as possible. Should you not be able to attend personally, please to complete the proxy at the foot of your proof in the names of ——" (we feel strongly that here the words "your solicitors" should have appeared, but instead of this we find the names of the solicitors issuing the notice), "and we will represent you at the meeting." This is a matter to which we have on more than one occasion referred, and the more we deliberate upon it the more we appreciate the difficulties that present themselves. It cannot be objected that a solicitor commits a breach of etiquette if he, acting on the instruction of his client, threatened with bankruptcy, puts a liquidation petition on the file, and communicates with the creditors. The very nature of the business often requires that this should be done in the interests of the client, while professional usage imperatively requires that such a solicitor should (where he knows that a certain creditor is usually professionally represented by a certain other solicitor), send the notice also to, or otherwise communicate with, the solicitor to such a creditor. Frequently these applications for proxies are made by persons styling themselves accountants, and we think it far better that, where really necessary in the interests of a client, these circulars should be issued by solicitors, provided always that the solicitors of creditors are, as far as possible, consulted on behalf of their clients; any breach of this rule would deserve and receive from us the strongest condemnation.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The Accountant is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the Accountant at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the Accountant has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The Accountant thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of Cases for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

AUGUST 7, 1875.

The law of imprisonment for debt has undergone such rapid modifications, and is exposed to so much declamation, that it may be looked upon as destined to speedy and entire extinction. As it at present exists the power may be abused, but it is impossible to deny that its retention is beneficial. The case of Mr. Smallbones, which has been so frequently brought before the House of Commons, and is principally remarkable for the ignorance of law displayed by judge, solicitors, and counsel alike, is one in which the martyr to judicial error can scarcely receive much sympathy. Mr. Smallbones was a trustee, who set up a claim to the property which he was appointed to protect; and on being forced by the judgment of a County Court to abandon his prey, failed to pay the costs his misbehaviour had caused. His imprisonment was illegal, as extending for too long a period, but the judge might have attained the same end by repeated committals. The power is, of course, one which can be assailed by that profusion of rhetoric which so takes the popular fancy. The poor man who rots in a dungeon because he cannot raise a pound, while the rich man, whose fraudulent bankruptcy has ruined thousands, goes scot free, has figured many times in the columns of sensational journals. But the difference between the two is trifling. The bankrupt goes free because he has given up all his property to his creditors for the payment of his debts; the poor man is sent to prison because, having the means of payment, he persistently keeps his creditors out of their money. A rich bankrupt who pursued an analogous course, would find that the law for the rich and the law for the poor were not so widely different in their application as popular rhetoric might induce him to suppose.

Imprisonment for debt has received another blow from the recent decision of the Lords Justices in the case of "Cobham v. Dalton," though it must be considered as valid law, and is supported by reasoning of undeniable cogency. A trustee is ordered by a Court of Equity to pay over certain trust moneys. He fails to do this, and files a petition in bankruptcy, or is, at any rate, adjudicated bankrupt, at whose suit it is not stated, though this might have had some bearing on the decision. The day after adjudication he is arrested by order of the Master of the Rolls, for contempt of court in not obeying the direction to pay over the money. The sections of the Debtors' and Bankruptcy Acts which were referred to as to the legality of this arrest were few in number. First, it was said that under the Debtors' Act the power of committal survives only in certain cases, one of which is "default by a trustee ordered to pay by a court of equity any sum in his possession," and it is clear that Mr. Dalton came within this section. But then the Bankruptcy Act declares that no creditor shall have any remedy against his debtor other than provided in that Act, in which imprisonment is not included. Therefore it seems to have been held, that as this sum in respect of which default was made was an amount for which proof might be tendered in the bankruptcy proceedings, the imprisonment was illegal, as being a resort to a remedy which was not included in the Act. But this seems open to question. The imprisonment is a punishment for the contempt shown to the orders of the Court of Chancery. It is a remedy for the non-payment of the debt to this extent only, that the trustee, in order to get out of prison, might use efforts to get the money. Then arises a further difficulty. The cestuis que trustent might prove as creditors certainly; but they would, so long as the bankruptcy proceedings were pending, be entitled merely to their dividends in common with the other creditors, and for the debtor to apply a portion of his assets in payment of their claim in full, would be contrary to every principle of bankruptcy practice. We cannot help thinking that it would have been better if the power of a Court of Equity to commit had been more boldly dealt with. We agree with the reasoning of the Lords Justices, if the committal is regarded as a process of the Court set in motion by a creditor to procure payment of his debt, but we have always understood that the power of committal was one intrusted to Courts of Equity in order to enforce obedience to their commands, and as punishment for contempt. But it would have been better, possibly, if committal for non-payment of money were limited to those cases in which the default is wilful, as is the rule now in the County Courts. To commit for non-payment of money which the debtor has not got, is in reality punishing debt as crime. Nor do we see how Lord Justice Mellish's remarks as to the state of the law meet this hardship. So long, he said, in effect, as the bankruptcy proceedings are pending, the debtor's person is free. But when the bankruptcy is closed, and the unfortunate victim is let loose stripped of all his assets, he may then be lawfully imprisoned for non-payment of this trust money. It may be expedient to visit breaches of trust with a severe punishment, but if at any time a defaulting trustee deserves pity, it is at the time when justice imprisons him for failing to pay claims, the means of paying which she has just absolutely deprived him of.

The decision of the Lords Justices in the case of the late Dr. Lankester and the European Assurance Company leads to a curiously complicated state of things. Dr. Lankester, who was one of the many victims of that ruinous concern, had borrowed a sum of £140 on the security of his policies, an amount, it is needless to say, far below their surrender value, and consequently still more below their worth to a purchaser who did not consider the unstable position of the company. Under the Arbitration proceedings these policies were valued at £446, on which a dividend of three shillings in the pound has been declared. Dr. Lankester's affairs are in liquidation, and the European Society's liquidator has sought to prove for the full amount of £140 and interest, against which his trustee claimed to set off the value of the policies. This, however, was not allowed. The £446 was, so the Lords Justices seem to have held, a value denoting not the money value of Dr. Lankester's claim, but the proportion which he might receive compared with his fellow-sufferers, whose claims might be denoted by proprtionately similar figures. Under these circumstances the liquidator is to receive ten shillings in the pound from Dr. Lankester's estate on the debt of £149, and pay three shillings in the pound on the debt of £446, and a further dividend, if any is ever declared. A little calculation will show that the European Society will thus receive a balance of £8 1s. 0d. We presume that this was really fought as a representative case, as the costs involved will probably swallow up both dividends, and the decision is doubtless justifiable on technical grounds of equity. But it is a case of extreme hardship. The value of Dr. Lankester's policy to the company must have been considerable. Had misfortune suddenly struck him down, and prevented any further payment of premiums, they would have been large gainers, and the surrender-value left undoubtedly a large margin beyond the loan. We hear of many cases in which policies lapse through misfortune. In those instances, would a loan by the company on the security of those policies be vigorously exacted, or would it be mercifully concluded that t might be set off against the surrender-value?

The decision seems to say not. We do not question its accuracy, or its propriety. But we would finally direct the attention of law reformers to the point of expense:—a company which wrings money with difficulty from impoverished shareholders, to hand over a modicum of it to its ruined and despairing clients, contests the right to three sovereigns with the trustee of a bankrupt professional man. It will, doubtless, be a great comfort to shareholders, claimants, and creditors to think that though they have paid the amount over and over again, twenty or a hundred-fold, they have elicited the correct state of the law, even though its result be one of regret rather than of rejoicing to all who may have occasion to incur liabilities.

A correspondent last week called our attention to a difficulty arising under the Bankruptcy Act as to the discharge of liquidating debtors. The 9th paragraph of the 125th section of the Act, as he pointed out, declares that the provisions previously given as to the discharge of a debtor "shall not apply in the case of a debtor whose affairs are under liquidation by arrangement, but the close of the liquidation may be fixed and the discharge of the debtor granted by a special resolution of the creditors in general meeting." From these words our correspondent argues that an evil disposed creditor, by canvassing for the proxies of careless or ignorant creditors, may at any time prevent the obtaining of a statutory majority in favour of the order of discharge. Strictly speaking, this is well-founded, but we think that a sufficient remedy may be found in the Act itself. If the time of discharge, (according to rule 82) is not settled when the resolution for liquidation is originally passed, the trustee may summon a meeting for the purpose of considering the question, or the committee of inspection, or the debtor, with the concurrence of three-fourths in value of the creditors who have proved, may require the trustee to summon a meeting for that purpose. At this meeting full discussion would take place, and it is scarcely probable that creditors who would not take the trouble to attend would give a special proxy to a creditor to object to any discharge being granted for that meeting. But if this happened, the Court has full power in case of injustice or delay to the debtor to proceed in bankruptcy, when the discharge is granted as a matter of course. And in such a case, the Court would interfere on behalf of the debtor, and if it thought that the creditors were acting with undue severity, would probably protect any future earnings, just as if the order of discharge had been granted. Our readers who have access to legal reports may study with advantage a case of "Ex parte Tinker," which is given in the 43rd volume of the Law Journal Bankruptcy Reports, p. 147. We should be glad to know from our correspondent "Alpha," if he has merely sought an opinion upon a purely hypothetical case, or whether the point has actually occurred within his personal experience.

The great question of "novation" is about to receive a fresh consideration. Lord Cairns was inclined to view the acts of a policy-holder somewhat strictly, Lord Westbury extended his rights against his original company, and Lord Romilly characteristically veered about from one opinion to the other. Under these circumstances the European Arbitration which is to be henceforth practically brought under the guidance of the Court of Chancery, is to open the case again. Mr. Reilly has selected certain representative cases on which the Lord Chancellor and the Lords Justices are to decide, and he will then exercise his judicial functions of applying the rules which those high authorities are to lay down to the various cases to which they may be applicable, with, it is to be trusted, a fitting amount of discrimination. Mr. Hort's case, the first one selected, seems fairly representative of a well-known class. He was transferred to the European without being consulted, and paid his premiums to them till they failed. The result must await the sittings of the Court in November. The point is really on whom lies the onus of proof. Is the fact of paying premiums to the new society, evidence of an intention to release the old one from liability, or must the policy-holder definitely declare his intention to do so? At this point judicial authority is divided, though Lord Cairns, who is most favourable to the companies, will probably incline to his former opinion. But we hope that the point will at last be settled beyond dispute.

On Thursday the directors of the Bank of England reduced their rate from 3 per cent., to which it was lowered on the 8th of the present month, to 2½ per cent., a movement that was almost generally expected on account of the ease in the rates outside.

COURT OF APPEAL IN CHANCERY.

(Before the LORD CHANCELLOR and the LORDS JUSTICES.)

IN RE THE EUROPEAN ASSURANCE SOCIETY.—IN RE THE ROYAL NAVAL AND MILITARY AND EAST INDIA LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY (HORT AND GRAIN'S CASES).—IN RE THE WELLINGTON REVERSIONARY ANNUITY AND LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY (CONQUEST'S CASE).—IN RE THE ANGLO-AUSTRALIAN AND UNIVERSAL FAMILY LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY (PRATT AND HANNAN'S CASES).—These cases were specially appointed for hearing this day before the full Court of Appeal, upon special cases submitted by Mr. F. S. Reilly, the newly-appointed arbitrator in this liquidation, for the opinion of the court, under the provisions of the European Assurance Society Arbitration Act, 1875. The cases raised in somewhat different circumstances the great question whether there had been a "novation of contract" on the part of policy-holders whose original offices had become "amalgamated," or transmuted into the European Assurance Society. This question, as it may be remembered, has received perfectly different solutions from the late Lord Romilly and his eminent predecessor in the arbitration, Lord Westbury. Difficulties having arisen in the conduct of the administrative business of the arbitration from this cardinal difference of opinion upon a question of such essential and primary importance, a short Act has been passed in the course of the present Session by which jurisdiction is given to the Court of Appeal in Chancery to entertain appeals from any decision or order of the Arbitrator, who is also empowered to state any question arising on a matter of principle in the arbitration in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal in Chancery. The first of the cases now submitted to the court was that of the Rev. C. Josiah Hort, Chaplain of Her Majesty's Forces at Portsmouth, in whose favour Lord Westbury, in April, 1873, had decided that there had been no novation as between himself and the European Society (the absorbing office), that his original right continued in all its integrity, and that in respect of that original right he was entitled to prove as a creditor against the Royal Naval and Military Society, with whom Mr. Hort had effected policies upon his own life in 1855 and 1857. Upon his first appointment as Arbitrator after the death of Lord Westbury, in the summer of 1873, Lord Romilly announced his attention of following in the lines laid down by his predecessor. But, in course of time, his Lordship appears to have modified his views, and in one of these cases of novation which came before him, he, in effect, overruled the decision of Lord Westbury upon an almost identical case, and went so far as to criticise, and express his dissent from, the principles laid down by Lord Westbury as the basis of his decision. In this state of things, certain representative cases had been selected by Mr. Reilly for the decision of the Court of Appeal in Chancery. It may be added, that the decisions of the present Lord Chancellor upon this question of novation, when acting as Arbitrator in the affairs of the Albert Assurance Company, had not been altogether adopted by Lord Westbury, and that the views taken by these eminent Arbitrators were, to say the least, not easily reconcilable. The first case in the paper was Hort's case, and, as their Lordships postponed their judgments, it will be sufficient to state that in 1855 and 1857, the Rev. C. J. Hort effected policies upon his own life for £200 and £300 respectively in the Royal Naval Society. In August, 1866, negotiations for the transfer of the business and liabilities of the Royal Naval to the European Assurance Society were entered into by the directors. Mr. Hort and the other policy-holders of the Royal Naval received circulars, informing them that arrangements had been made with the European Society for undertaking the obligation of their policies (upon which the terms and conditions would be unaltered), and that the European Society would in future be the substitute of the Royal Naval Society. He was also informed that, although by the covenants contained in the deed of transfer his claims were fully guaranteed, he might, for greater security, have an endorsement upon his policies to that effect, or have a policy guaranteeing the existing policy, or a new policy of the European Society. Mr. Hort sent his policies to the European Society, and they were returned to him with endorsements, sealed with the seal of the Society and signed and countersigned, to the effect that its funds and property were liable for the sums assured by the policies, provided all future premiums were paid to it. Mr. Hort continued to pay his premiums at 17 Waterloo-place, the place of business of the Royal Naval Society, and where, according to the circulars, "the Royal Naval, &c. Department" of the European Society would be conducted. The receipts for the premiums presented—if the term may be allowed—a series of dissolving views, in which, while the Royal Naval, &c. gradually, and by almost imperceptible changes, faded away and melted out of sight, the European assumed shape and prominence, until at last "European Assurance Society, Chief Office No. 17 Waterloo-place," figured boldly alone as the head and front of the premium receipts and notices. Mr. Higgins, Q.C. (Mr. Romer with him), appeared for the official liquidator of the Royal Naval Society, on the present appeal from Lord Westbury's decision in favour of Mr. Hort's claim to be admitted to prove as a creditor against that company. Mr. Ince, Q.C. (Mr. F. C. J. Millar with him), for Mr. Hort, supported the decision of Lord Westbury. At the conclusion of the arguments, it being then 3 o'clock, the Lord Chancellor said that their Lordships had been anxious to dispose of these cases before the Long Vacation, but, as this was the only day available for their hearing, and the other cases, although to some extent similar in principle, arose in somewhat different circumstances, and could not be fully discussed within the time now at their Lordships' disposal, they thought it better to adjourn the hearing of the other cases until the sittings of the Court in November, and not to decide Hort's case while the others remained unheard.

IN RE THE WEST HARTLEPOOL IRON COMPANY.—This was an appeal from an order of Vice-Chancellor Bacon making an order for a compulsory winding-up of this company. The company was registered in June, 1874, for the purpose of taking and carrying on Messrs. Richardson's ironworks, but it stopped payment in April last, when it was resolved to wind-up voluntarily. A petition having been presented for a compulsory winding-up, it was sought, on behalf of the company and creditors to a large amount, to have the voluntary winding-up continued under the supervision of the court, as the best mode of realising and distributing the assets. The Vice-Chancellor not being satisfied that the majority of creditors wished for a supervision order, was of opinion that the petitioning creditors were entitled to a compulsory order. From this order the present appeal was brought. Mr. De Gex, Q.C., Mr. Little, Q.C., Mr. Swanston, Q.C., Mr. Jackson, Q.C., Mr. William Pearson, Q.C., Mr. Houseley, Mr. A. T. Watson, Mr. Caldecott, and Mr. W. Druce appeared for contributories and creditors who desired a supervision order rather than a compulsory winding-up; Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Robinson, Q.C., for parties desiring a compulsory winding-up. Lord Justice Mellish said that although a creditor who could not get paid, was entitled ex debito justitiæ to a winding-up order, yet if there had been a resolution passed for voluntary winding-up before any order made on the creditor's petition, then it became the duty of the court to have regard to the wishes of the creditors as to a voluntary or compulsory winding-up. In his opinion there was sufficient evidence that the majority did wish for a voluntary winding-up. A very large number of them had actually signed a petition to that effect, and a very considerable number of those who did not sign the petition had appeared by separate counsel and supported the same view. It appeared that, as the majority of the creditors thought it would be better that the company should be wound-up under supervision, and as no injustice would be done to the particular creditors who petitioned for a compulsory order, there was no reason why the wishes of the majority should not be attended to. The order of the Vice-Chancellor would, therefore, be discharged.

Cobham v. Dalton.—This appeal from an order made by the Master of the Rolls on Saturday raised a question of considerable importance with regard to the power of arrest for debt under the Debtors Act, 1869. On the 6th of June an order was made upon the defendant to this suit for payment of a sum of £94 14s., trust money received by him and not accounted for. The order directed that he should make the payment by the 30th of June. He failed to do so, and on the 15th July he was adjudicated a bankrupt. On the 16th of July an attachment was issued against him by the Court of Chancery for contempt in disobeying the order. On the 30th July he was at the Court of Bankruptcy, in Portugal-street, to attend his public examination, and after he left the court he went into a publichouse in Chancery-lane to obtain some refreshment before returning to his home, and while there he was arrested under the attachment. He applied to the Master of the Rolls for his release, which his Honour declined to order, being of opinion that the bankruptcy proceedings did not protect him from arrest. The defendant appealed. Sec. 4 of the Debtors Act, 1869, abolishes imprisonment for debt, with certain exceptions, one of which is "default by a trustee or person acting in a fiduciary capacity, and ordered to pay by a Court of Equity any sum in his possession or under his control." Sec. 12 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, provides, "Where a debtor shall be adjudicated a bankrupt, no creditors to whom the bankrupt is indebted in respect of any debt provable in the bankruptcy shall have any remedy against the property or person of the bankrupt in respect of such debt, except in manner directed by this Act." And by section 49 an order of discharge is not to release the bankrupt from any debt incurred by breach of trust. Mr. E. C. Willis, for the appellant, contended that sec. 12 gave the bankrupt freedom from arrest, at least until he had obtained his order of discharge in the bankruptcy, or the bankruptcy had been closed. At any rate, the appellant had been improperly arrested when he was on his way home from the Bankruptcy Court. Mr. Dyne, for the plaintiff in the suit, argued that the Bankruptcy Act and the Debtor's Act ought to be read together, and that the Legislature had thus in effect directed that for a debt of this kind the bankrupt should be liable to arrest, notwithstanding the bankruptcy proceedings. Lord Justice James thought the appellant was entitled to be discharged from custody. The words of the Bankruptcy Act did not give the power to arrest him. The Act said that after the adjudication no creditor for any debt provable in the bankruptcy should have any remedy against the person of the bankrupt except in manner directed by the Act. The Act contained no direction on this point. This section appeared to have been intended as a substitute for the protection order which was given under the former Acts. When the bankrupt had obtained his order of discharge or the bankruptcy was closed, the special right of this particular creditor against any further assets which the bankrupt might acquire would accrue, while the other creditors would have lost all remedy against the bankrupt's estate, and this creditor, in order to enforce his right, would then be able to proceed with his attachment. This might, perhaps, be the reason for the provisions of the Act; but, whether that were so or not, his Lordship could not find that the Act had directed any manner in which process against the person of the bankrupt could be enforced. His Lordship also thought the appellant was entitled to his release on the other ground raised. The attachment must, therefore, be discharged. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. Section 12 was expressed in very plain terms. It was quite clear that this debt was one provable in the bankruptcy, though it was one from which the order of discharge would not release the bankrupt. It would require very strong reasons to induce the Court to depart from the plain words of the section. But his Lordship was not at all certain that this was not the intention of the legislature. The bankrupt's property was to be divided equally among his creditors, and this particular creditor was not to have any preference until after the order of discharge. Arrest for debt under the Debtors Act, as, indeed, before that Act, was not by way of punishment, but as a means of compelling payment of the debt. If the man paid the debt when he was in prison, he would be entitled to his release. Therefore it seemed to his Lordship that there was nothing unreasonable in saying that, as long as the debtor's property remained equally liable to all his creditors, this particular creditor was not to use his own special remedy. But as soon as the order of discharge had been obtained, the creditor might enforce his remedy against the after-acquired property or against the person of the debtor. In some respects this was for the benefit of the creditor. He could prove his debt in the bankruptcy and get his share of the existing property of the bankrupt, including his property acquired after the adjudication, and then, when the order of discharge had been obtained, he could enforce his debt against the after-acquired property of the debtor and also against his person as a means of compelling payment.

(Before the Lords Justices of Appeal).

In re Hester and Company, Limited.—This was an appeal from an order of Vice-Chancellor Bacon, made on Saturday last, directing the compulsory winding-up of this company. The company was formed in May, 1873, for the purpose of purchasing and carrying on the business of J. C. Hester and Co., tea merchants, of Great Tower-street, E.C., and of the Anglo-Indian Tea Company, Limited, with a capital of 12,500 shares of £10 each, all of which had been called up. On the 13th of July last, at an extraordinary general meeting of the company, resolutions were passed for voluntarily winding-up the company, and adopting a provisional agreement with a company to be formed under the name of "The Tea Company, Limited," for the purpose of taking over the business and liabilities of the company. A resolution was also passed that if any member should express his dissent from the arrangement within seven days, and require the voluntary liquidator to purchase his interest, the liquidator should raise the money for buying up the interest of such dissentient member by a sale of shares in the proposed new company. The petitioner, who was the holder of 50 paid up shares, objected to the proposed arrangement as being, if not ultra vires, at least impeachable and calculated to diminish his security by shifting the liability from one set of directors to another, while by the proposed conversion of the paid-up £10 shares into £15 shares, with £5 remaining to be called up, the shareholders joining the new company would, in effect, be compelled to subscribe £5 per share additional capital. He had accordingly filed a petition for a compulsory winding-up, and his petition was supported by nine shareholders, representing an aggregate of about 700 shares. On the other hand, the petition was opposed by 111 holders of 4,173 shares, and also, as it was stated, by all the creditors of the company. From the compulsory order for winding-up made by Vice-Chancellor Bacon the company now appealed. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. H. B. Buckley appeared for the company in support of the appeal; Mr. Romer (Mr. Jackson, Q.C., with him) appeared for a large majority of the shareholders who also supported the appeal; Mr. Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Caldecott appeared for the petitioner in support of the compulsory order, and were aided by Mr. George Henderson, representing the holders of 664 shares, and by Mr. Locock Webb, Q.C., and Mr. Brooksbank, for two holders of 40 shares. After considerable discussion, their Lordships discharged the order of the Vice-Chancellor upon the undertaking of the voluntary liquidator not to part with the assets of the company until the value of the shares of the petitioner and the other dissentient shareholders should have been paid to them, such value to be ascertained by arbitration under Section 162 of the Companies Act, 1862, unless the parties agreed upon the amount.

VICE-CHANCELLORS' COURTS, LINCOLN'S INN.

July 31.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir R. MALINS.)

IN RE THE CADOGAN ADVANCE COMPANY, LIMITED.—The Vice-Chancellor made an order in this matter to continue the voluntary winding-up of the company, under the supervision of the court. Mr. Hadley was the counsel engaged in this case.

IN RE THE ELY PAPER COMPANY, LIMITED.—The Vice-Chancellor made an order in this matter to wind-up the company compulsorily, and to continue the interim liquidator. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., Mr. Ince, Q.C., Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Everett, and Mr. Romer were the counsel engaged in the case.

IN RE THE CAPE BRETON COMPANY, LIMITED.—EX PARTE RAILWAY SHARE TRUST COMPANY, LIMITED; IN RE THE CAPE BRETON COMPANY, LIMITED,—EX PARTE WEGG.—The Vice-Chancellor made an order in the first of these matters to wind-up the company compulsory, and that the costs of the second matter should be costs in the winding-up, and to continue the official liquidator. Mr. Glasse, Q.C., Mr. J. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Macnaghten were the counsel engaged in this case.

(Before Vice-Chancellor Sir JAMES BACON.)

IN RE THE HACKNEY MASONIC PUBLIC HALL COMPANY.—This was a creditor's petition for a winding-up order. It was arranged that an order should be made, which was not to be drawn up for six weeks, to give the company an opportunity to pay off the debt in the meantime. Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Dauney appeared for the petitioner; Mr. Romer for the Company.

IN RE HESTER AND CO., LIMITED.—This was a petition by paid-up shareholders, which prayed for a compulsory winding-up order. Special resolutions had been passed at a meeting of shareholders, and confirmed at a subsequent meeting, to wind the company up and sell the business to a proposed company, to be called "The Tea Company." It was provided by the resolutions that holders of £10 fully paid shares in the existing company should be entitled to three £5 fully paid-up shares in the proposed company for each share, and that dissentient shareholders should sell their shares to the liquidator and receive the price from the purchase-money of the corresponding shares in the new company which the liquidator was to sell. This resolution was made as in pursuance of section 161 of the Companies Act, 1862, which empowers a company in a voluntary liquidation to sell its business to another company for shares in the purchasing company, to be distributed among shareholders in the selling company pro ratâ; dissentient shareholders having a right to stop the sale or be paid the value of their shares. It was contended, on the part of the petitioners, that the resolution was invalid by reason that the dissentient shareholders were only given the price the new shares would fetch when sold by the liquidators, and not the value of their shares assessed in the manner provided by the Act (section 162). Also that the sale of the business was not to an existing company, but only to one which it was intended to form. They also contended that the resolution was void for want of formalities, both because insufficient notice of the meeting had been given, and the interval between the meeting at which the resolutions were passed and that at which they were confirmed was not 14 clear days. Mr. Kay, Q.C., and Mr. Caldecot appeared for the petitioners; Mr. Locock Webb, Q C., and Mr. Brooksbank and Mr. George Henderson for other dissentient shareholders who supported his view: Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Buckley, for the company, opposed, and were supported by Mr. Jackson, Q.C., and Mr. Romer, on behalf of shareholders and the liquidator. At the bar, Mr. Kay, Q.C,, suggested that if the resolution so far as it provided for a voluntary winding-up could be supported, instead of a compulsory order, the Court should make a supervision order only. The Vice-Chancellor held that the resolution went beyond the powers given by the Act of Parliament. It proposed, instead of providing a dissentient shareholder with the price of his shares in money, and selling the assets to a company, to make an arrangement for a possible sale to a company that might be formed, and to give him the price new shares might realise—to give him, in fact, a mere chance of receiving something. Certain formalities as to the mode of passing the resolution had been alleged on one side and not denied. These would invalidate the proceedings. That the company had lost large sums of money and could not continue to carry on its business was agreed on all sides. He, therefore, made a compulsory order. The Court then rose for the vacation.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

July 30.

(Before Mr. Registrar HAZLITT.)

IN RE JOHN ANDERSON AND CO.—LIABILITIES £273,000.—The debtors, John Anderson, John Duncan, and George Gray Anderson, have presented a petition for liquidation, describing themselves as merchants carrying on business at 17 Philpot-lane, and Colombo, Ceylon, trading under the above style. The liabilities are estimated at £273,000, and the amount of the assets is at present unascertained. Mr. Parker (Parker and Clarke) now applied for the appointment of a receiver to the debtors' estate. There were consignments continually arriving, and it was important, in the interest of creditors, that the estate should be protected. Creditors to the extent of about £50,000 supported the appointment of Mr. John Bishop (Turquand, Young, & Co.) to the office.—His Honour granted the application.

July 31,

(Before Mr Registrar MURRAY.)

IN RE THE HON. F. O. O'CALLAGHAN, M.P.—This was an adjourned meeting for public examination. The bankrupt is member of Parliament for Tipperary. His unsecured debts were returned at about £3,900, and assets £1,100. He now failed to appear, and no reason for his absence being assigned, his Honour ordered the usual memorandum to be entered. Mr. Theodore Lumley appeared for the trustee.

IN RE ALFRED WHITE.—The bankrupt, who had traded at 17 Mincing-lane, in partnership with Henry White, as merchants, was allowed, after some opposition, to pass his public examination on a statement of affairs, disclosing liabilities to the extent of £10,967, and assets £4,007. Mr. Beddall appeared for the trustee; Mr. T. Plews for the bankrupt.

In re Lambert Brothers and Scott.—Upon the application of Mr. Finlay Knight, his Honour continued, until further order, an interim injunction staying proceedings instituted by the Crow Orchard Colliery Company, Limited, against the debtors, who have presented a petition for liquidation, describing themselves as of 85 Gracechurch-street, also of the Coal Exchange, of Rochester, and Deptford, shipowners, ship and insurance brokers, coal factors, and merchants, also trading at Port Said, in Egypt, under the title of the Port Said and Suez Coal Company. The liabilities are estimated at £380,000, of which about £180,000 are expected to run off; the assets are computed at £127,000, subject to certain liens thereon. Messrs. Stocken and Jupp are the solicitors to the proceedings.

August 4.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re Minoggio.—A point of some nicety and importance arose in this case. The bankrupt formerly carried on business as a goldsmith at 12 Charles-street, Middlesex Hospital, and on the 4th of May, W. A. Bendelow, a creditor, recovered judgment against him for £30 15s. 3d., and £4 costs. On the 4th of June the bankrupt committed an act of bankruptcy by failing to comply with the terms of a debtor's summons, issued under Section 7 of the Act, at the suit of other creditors. Before any petition was presented, and without any notice of an act of bankruptcy, Mr. Bendelow levied an execution upon the goods of the bankrupt for £20 3s. 3d., being the amount due to him upon the judgment, after deducting a payment made on account. On the 15th of June a petition for adjudication was filed against the bankrupt, and on the 23d an interim injunction was granted, and afterwards continued, restraining a sale. On the 3d of July the court adjudicated upon the petition, and on the 20th a trustee was appointed under the bankruptcy. Mr. Bagley, for Mr. Bendelow, the creditor, now appeared in support of an application to dissolve the injunction. He contended that a creditor for a sum under £50 having levied upon the goods of his debtor without notice of any act of bankruptcy, was entitled to the benefit of his execution, notwithstanding the fact that bankruptcy had ensued before a sale could be effected. Mr. Sydney, for the trustee, urged, on the other hand, that the adjudication when made had relation back to the date of the act of bankruptcy, and that the execution in this case having been levied subsequently, the title of the trustee must prevail, although the creditor had not any notice of the act of bankruptcy. Mr. Registrar Murray held that the creditor having levied an execution for a sum under £50, without notice of any prior act of bankruptcy, became a secured creditor under section 12 of the Act, and was entitled to realise his security. The act of bankruptcy committed in this case was a secret act, and available to those creditors only who took out the debtor's summons. The execution creditor being, therefore, entitled to the goods, the injunction would be dissolved, with costs.

In re Da Costa Raalte and Co.—A petition for liquidation has been filed by the debtors, who are described as merchants, of Leadenhall-street and Manchester, and having also an interest in the house of Behrends Brothers and Co., of Alexandria. The liabilities are estimated at £600,000 in the aggregate, with assets consisting of Egyptian securities, payable to bearer, returned at £50,000, stock-in-trade at Manchester, bills receivable, and other items, of which the value is not yet ascertained. Mr. Rawlins, for the petitioners, and with the concurrence of creditors for £110,000, asked that Mr. William Turquand, accountant, should be appointed receiver and manager. Mr. Brough, for creditors amounting to £40,000, supported the application. Mr. Registrar Murray appointed Mr. Turquand as receiver, but intimated that some further evidence would be requisite as to the necessity for a manager before making the further appointment.

BRADFORD BANKRUPTCY COURT.

(Before Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, Q.C., Judge.)

Re David Hainsworth—Ex parte Rayner.—In this case there were cross-motions arising out of one that had previously been heard by the Court. In that instance an issue had been left by the judge to be tried by a jury, as to whether certain goods which had been returned by Hainsworth, of Farsley, the debtor, shortly before his bankruptcy, to John Rayner, of Leeds, of whom he had previously bought them, was a bona fide transaction, or whether it was a fraudulent preference on the part of the bankrupt. The jury found in favour of the trustee on all the questions put to them by the judge, the effect being that in their opinion the transaction was a fraudulent preference. Mr. Watson now appeared for the trustee, and Mr. E. Tindal Atkinson, barrister, for Rayner. The first motion was made by Mr. Watson, who asked the Court for an order confirming the jury's decision. In the other motion, Mr. Atkinson applied for an order directing a new trial, or for an order reversing the decision of the jury, on several grounds, the general effect of which was that the verdict of the jury was against the weight of evidence. Mr. Atkinson contended that there had not been the slightest evidence adduced at the trial before the jury to show that Rayner, at the time he received the goods back, had any notion that Hainsworth was insolvent, and held that under the 92nd section of the Act such knowledge of the insolvency of the debtor at the time the transaction took place was necessary in order to prove mala fides on the part of Rayner. After a somewhat lengthy discussion, his Honour said he thought the finding of the jury was right, and satisfied the Act of Parliament. He would, however, give his reasons for that decision on a future day.

Re David Hainsworth—Ex parte Tomlinson and Guerney.—This was a motion on behalf of the trustee in the estate of David Hainsworth, of Farsley, asking for an order directing Messrs. Tomlinson & Guerney, mungo and waste dealers, of Leeds, to deliver up to the trustee five sheets of mungo which the debtor had handed over to them shortly before the bankruptcy, on the ground that such handing over of the goods by the bankrupt was a fraudulent preference.—Mr. Watson again appeared for the trustee, and Mr. Walker, of Leeds, for Messrs. Tomlinson & Guerney. The circumstances were of a similar character to those in Rayner's case; the debtor had had dealings with the defendant, and towards the time when he failed, he owed them money. A short time before the bankruptcy he sent back a quantity of the goods which he had received from the defendants, and the trustee now urged that this transaction, as in the previous case, was a fraudulent preference, and therefore null and void. After the case had been argued, his Honour said he would take time to consider his decision.

Re David Booth, ex parte J. and H. Booth.—This was a motion on behalf of J. W. Close, of Leeds, the trustee in the estate of David Booth, cloth manufacturer, Idle, asking for an order of the court directing the production of accounts showing the amount received for waste sold by Booth's two sons, from August, 1872, up to the beginning of 1875; also to say what sums were due to the two sons for wages, and for the paying of the balance between these two accounts. Mr. West, barrister, appeared in support of the motion, and Mr. Watson opposed. The facts were shortly as follow, as stated by Mr. West on behalf of the trustee:—David Booth was a cloth manufacturer, and in the early part of this year he filed a petition for the liquidation of his affairs, and resolutions were duly passed for the liquidation. The bankrupt had two sons—Henry Booth and James Booth—who left school in 1867, and were at that time respectively about the ages of fourteen and sixteen years. From 1867 to August 1872 they assisted their father in his business, and received from him a gratuity for pocket money of a shilling a week. He (Mr. West) might therefore take it that they were at that time living with and maintained by their father. In August, 1872, the two sons asked for some definite sum as wages or salary, and according to their account, there was an arrangement made that they should have the whole of the proceeds from the sale of the waste produced at the mill. It would be seen that the waste so produced was worth £6 per week. The two sons received the proceeds from the sale of the waste for two years and six months, and they received as nearly as possible £800. If that was so, and prior to that date they were receiving nothing at all, then the question was how far that was a voluntary gift, or how far it was for good consideration. The only estimate of their services was, as the eldest son said, 30s. a week. He had very fairly put himself and his brother on the same basis as the other people in the mill. He (Mr. West) said nothing at present as to their being maintained by their father, but they did not cease to live with him at the time of the arrangement referred to. He put the case that this arrangement was either a voluntary settlement under the 91st section of the Act, or it was a voluntary gift prejudicing the creditors. If they themselves stated the value of their joint services at £150 a year, it would be seen that they were getting exactly double their own estimate, and, therefore, so far as their father received no consideration, the arrangement must be set aside. There was not only the question of valuable consideration; but there was the fact that one of them was aware in September, 1872, of the position of his father. He had, he said, an opportunity of examining his father's books, and he saw from the examination that the business was being carried on at a loss of from £50 to £80 per week. Mr. West proceeded to read the affidavits of Booth and his two sons in support of his statement. Mr. Watson contended that the Act only referred to settlements made two years before the bankruptcy. In this case the bankrupt made the arrangement in question two and a half years before the bankruptcy, and he thought it was not very likely that a debtor who intended to defraud his creditors would make a settlement more than two years before the bankruptcy. His Honour: This was a voluntary arrangement between the father and his two sons which he could put an end to at any time. Mr. Watson: Certainly. His Honour: The question is whether or not what they received was excessive, so as to give evidence of an intention to defraud the creditors. Mr. Watson submitted that if the parties had bonâ fide entered into an arrangement like that without any intention to defraud the creditors, then it was not for that court to inquire into or adjust the matter. That would be doing the business of the debtor which he ought to have done for himself. These young men ought not to suffer because they happened to be debtor' sons. Suppose they had been two strangers, and had made a bargain with the debtor two and a half years before his bankruptcy by which they had got very much the better of him, they would not have been asked for the money. He submitted, however, that in this case there was sufficient evidence to show that this was not an unprofitable bargain. The two sons had attended the market on their father's behalf, and had brought to bear on his general business a large amount of business talent. It was not, however, necessary for him to show that the sons were paid exactly what they were worth, for before the trustee could expect judgment in his favour he must show that there had been an intention to defraud.—His Honour reserved judgment, remarking that the point was one which he believed had never before arisen in bankruptcy proceedings.

LEEDS COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. W. T. S. Daniel, Q.C., Judge.)

Re Thomas Mason Robinson.—This was an application on behalf of Mr. W. H. Burrell, the trustee of the estate of Thomas Mason Robinson, now in liquidation, that Anthony Robinson, of Leeds, grocer, might be ordered to deliver up to him as such trustee certain goods specified in the schedule to the notice of motion, as having been unlawfully delivered to him by the debtor, and to pay the costs incidental to the application. Mr. Walker supported the motion when the case was argued three weeks ago, and Mr. J. W. Middleton opposed it.—His Honour now delivered an elaborate judgment. The motion was opposed on two grounds, first that the court had no jurisdiction, the petition and the proceedings under it being void ab initio; and second, upon the merits. The facts relied upon in support of the objection on the ground of want of jurisdiction were as follows:—On the 24th January, 1874, the debtor filed a petition for liquidation, and on the 11th February the first meeting of his creditors was held. At that meeting he proposed to his creditors to accept a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable by three instalments at three, six, and nine months from the date of filing the petition, the first instalment to be 3s. 6d., and the other two 2s. each. The first and second instalments were to be secured by the debtor's acceptance, and the last instalment by the bill of the debtor on and accepted by the respondent, Anthony Robinson. These resolutions were confirmed and registered, and the bills and acceptances for the various instalments given. The first instalment was duly paid, but the second the debtor was unable to pay, and on the 29th July he filed a second petition, signed the previous day, the second instalment having become due on the 27th July. It was stated upon the hearing of the motion that none of the original creditors disputed the propriety of the second petition or the proceedings under it, and they had since received the third instalment from the respondent as surety by acceptances. He inferred that the creditors who did not attend the meeting on the 14th August might have objected to the registration of the resolutions passed at that meeting, and either have sued the debtor for his original debts, giving credit for the instalments received, or have made the debtor a bankrupt. It was contended that when a composition had been duly made and was in force against a debtor, he was disqualified from presenting another petition for liquidation, so that any proceedings under such a petition must be void. Two decisions were cited in support, and his Honour, having commented upon these, considered that the principle to be extracted from these two decisions was that there was not any mere technical objection to a debtor presenting a second petition for liquidation; but if he did, and resolutions were passed under the second petition which prejudicially affected the interests of creditors under the first petition, and if any of such creditors objected, the resolutions ought not to be registered; if no creditors objected to the resolutions under the second petition, they might be registered, and if registered, he was of opinion that for all purposes of jurisdiction they would stand good against third parties. That was the case here, and he therefore thought the first objection failed. As to the facts, the respondent in his affidavit stated that prior to the first meeting of the creditors the debtor had many interviews with him to induce him to guarantee the payment of the last instalment, but he positively refused any such guarantee. Subsequently he was pressed so much that he promised the guarantee on the condition that he first received cloth as full security, and that he had authority to sell the cloth for the purpose of recouping himself for any moneys he might be called upon to pay under the guarantee. Respondent refused to execute the deed of composition and to sign the bills of exchange for the last instalment until the cloth had been deposited with Messrs. Howden and Wade, his nominees. The cloth so deposited by the debtor was stated by him to be worth £789 12s., and the aggregate amount of the last instalment proved to be £829 13s. 9d. All the bills of exchange given for the last instalment were duly met. The facts, as thus candidly stated by the respondent, continued his Honour, in his judgment amounted to an admission that the transaction of the deposit of the cloth in question with him by the debtor was fraudulent and void as against the creditors, upon three distinct grounds —(1) that it was a fraud upon the agreement for composition; (2) that it was an act of bankruptcy within the second subsection of section 6 of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, as being a fraudulent transfer and delivery in England by the debtor of part of his estate; (3) that it was void at common law under the statute of Elizabeth as having the necessary effect of defeating and delaying the creditors. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that as between him and the debtor the transaction in question was not voluntary, but founded upon valuable consideration, namely, the liability he had come under for the benefit of the debtor to pay the third instalment, and that he expressly stipulated for the transfer of these goods to him by the debtor as the condition upon which he agreed to become surety, sign the acceptances, and execute the composition deed. But this contention rested upon the foundation that the debtor was then the owner of the goods and had full power of disposition over them, and that foundation obviously failed, because at the time the debtor had commenced an act of bankruptcy available for liquidation by his creditors, and had thereby incapacitated himself from dealing with the property to their prejudice without their consent. All this was known to the respondent, and the obligation was thus, from the very nature of the transaction, thrown upon him of obtaining the sanction of the creditors to it. This was not done, nor attempted to be done. The communication was perhaps not purposely withheld, but rather perhaps through ignorance, and the respondent did not consider it necessary. But no man could justify or claim the benefit of a wrong done to another by alleging his ignorance that the law declared it a wrong. It must have been obvious to the respondent as a man of business and ordinary intelligence that the transaction he was entering into with the debtor was one which, if communicated to the creditors, they would not have assented to. Upon the whole, his Honour was of opinion upon the facts stated in the respondent's affidavit, that the transaction between him and the debtor was void as against the trustee upon each and every one of the three grounds he had mentioned. He added, that he had entered at greater length into his reasons for the decision than he should have thought it necessary to do had he not observed from this and other cases which had come before him judicially that a notion seemed to have been entertained by some men of business in Leeds that in compositions under the arrangement clauses of the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, it was competent for a person who voluntarily came forward in the interest of the debtor to guarantee one or more of the instalments of a proposed composition, to protect himself against liability upon his guarantee by a private arrangement with the debtor that the whole, or what, as in this case, might be considered a sufficient part of the debtor's property, should be assigned or made over to the surety, so as to be realised by him for his own benefit, to an amount sufficient, or as far as it would extend, to repay whatever sum he might be called upon to pay under his guarantee. All such arrangements were in his opinion void unless fully communicated to the creditors, freely assented to by those who might attend the meeting in person or by proxy, and approved of by the court, so as to bind dissentient and absent creditors. It was hardly possible to suppose that any meeting of creditors, unless influenced by the motive of favouring the debtor at the expense of themselves or of proxies and those whose interests they represented, would ever sanction such a suicidal arrangement; but if a meeting could be packed for the purpose by creditors willing to befriend the debtor, he was of opinion it would be ultra vires and void as against dissentient and absent creditors, and the registrar would be justified in refusing to register such resolutions. If brought before the court for approval, the court would be bound to reject them unless the express assent of every creditor were obtained. If, however, he was wrong in the views he took upon this matter, it was a satisfaction to know he could be set right again, but the practice, however general it might have become in Leeds or elsewhere, was in his opinion at direct variance with the principle upon which the proper administration of insolvent debtors' estates was secured by the Bankruptcy Act of 1869, and was bad in law. The only question that remained was as to the form of the order. Some of the goods having been sold, if the parties could agree as to the sum realised by such sale, the order could be made at once for the delivery of the parts remaining in specie, and the payment of the sum representing the parts sold. If no such agreement could be come to, he must refer the matter to the Registrar, with certain directions, which he specified. The costs of this application, up to and including the order, to be borne by the respondent, but other costs to be reserved.

YORK COUNTY COURT.

July 23.

In Re Matthews.—In the matter of Charles Matthews, innkeeper, of Harrogate, Mr. V. Blackburn (instructed by Mr. Bateson, Harrogate, and Mr. Crumbie, York), applied for an order as to the disposal of a quantity of goods, now in the possession of the trustee appointed to wind-up the affairs of the bankrupt, who filed a petition on the 19th of May last. It seems that when the bankrupt's effects were about to be sold, Messrs. Milling, wholesale drapers and furnishers, of Leeds, claimed possession of the bankrupt's furniture, on the ground that it was lent by them to Mr. Matthews. The trustee, however, did not give up the furniture, but, at the first meeting of creditors, applied to the registrar of the York County Court for an order to sell. The question was referred to his Honour, and at the last court the matter was adjourned until to-day. Mr. Blackburn stated that the bankrupt was formerly the station-master at Harrogate, but he resigned this position, and became the proprietor of the North-Eastern Hotel at that place. The hotel required furnishing, and Mr. Matthews accordingly went to Messrs. Milling at Leeds, where he had certain transactions with a Mr. Wilson and Mr. Porter, the managers. Goods were forwarded to Matthews, during December last, to the extent of £900, but in May, Matthews became a bankrupt, and his effects were placed in the hands of a trustee. Immediately afterwards Messrs. Milling urged a prior claim, and consequently the furniture was not sold. The bankrupt's affidavit stated that when he purchased the furniture in question he was treated as an ordinary customer, and no mention whatever was made of a hiring agreement. He agreed with Mr. Porter that his payments should be made by instalments on certain dates, but the money not being forthcoming Mr. Porter, in February, wrote to him for securities, and produced a lending agreement, with which, however, nothing was done. In April Mr. David Milling called on him (Mr. Matthews) with an agreement, which stated that Messrs. Milling were to be the owners of the furniture until it was paid for, and that $7\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest was to be charged. At first Mr. Matthews refused to sign the agreement, but ultimately was induced to do so, when securities were spoken of.—Further corroboration having been given, Mr. West (instructed by Mr. Pullen, of Leeds) who represented Messrs. Milling, read Mr. J. H. Porter's affidavit, which contradicted the bankrupt's statement, with reference to the agreement. Mr. Matthews was not treated as an ordinary customer, but as an extraordinary one by the arranging of the hiring agreement. He had received £150 on account in January, but as the bankrupt could not find satisfactory securities, the hiring system was proposed. Mr. Wilson, one of Messrs. Milling's managers, stated in his affidavit that he informed the bankrupt the goods were being lent him, whilst Mr. Howitt, of the firm of Howitt and Co., furnishers, of London, stated that this custom was now very prevalent.—Mr. Blackburn contended that the hiring agreement was an afterthought, and that the goods were supplied in the ordinary way of business, whilst Mr. West held that the agreement was consented to from the first. After a lengthy legal argument his Honour gave the following decision:—Declared that the goods in question were in the order and disposition, &c. of the bankrupt at the time of his making the assignment on the 13th May, 1875, that being an act of bankruptcy, to which there is relation back. That the respondents be at liberty to go in under the bankruptcy to prove for damages on their debts. The respondents to pay the costs of the trustee of this motion, including the costs of the affidavits of Drake and Powell. Ordered that the trustee do not part with any of the goods in question on the motion until after Monday week.

THE EXPENSES OF RECEIVERS.

EX PARTE GORDON RE GOMERSALL.—This was an appeal heard by the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy from an order made on the 15th of April, 1875, by the Judge of the County Court at Dewsbury. John Gomersall and James France Gomersall, who carried on the business of woollen cloth manufacturers at Dewsbury, in co-partnership, under the name of "Gomersall Bros.," filed a petition for liquidation on the 3rd Sept., 1874, and on the same day Joseph Dobson Good, accountant, was, at their instance, appointed receiver and manager of their estate. The debtors occupied and worked two large cloth mills, and were the owners of valuable plant and machinery therein, and also of very considerable stock in trade both in the raw and unfinished state. Of all this property the receiver took possession, and employed the debtors at a salary of £15 per week to assist him in carrying on the business until the appointment of the trustee mentioned below. The debtors employed the receiver to assist them in preparing their statement of affairs, which was submitted to the first meeting of their creditors held on the 22nd Sept. By the statement filed by the debtors their estate was valued at £28,000, their liabilities were estimated at £63,000 and their assets at £24,000. In order to enable him to prepare a proper statement the receiver had had valuations made, without any authority from the court, or any consultation with the creditors, of all the property of the debtors at an expense of nearly £300. At this meeting a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound was proposed and accepted subject to certain guarantees being given, which, however, were not forthcoming, and ultimately the proceedings fell through. On the 3rd October, a bankruptcy petition was presented against the debtors, and an adjudication followed on the 5th. The first meeting under the bankruptcy was held on the 23rd October, when John Gordon was appointed trustee with a committee of inspection. The receiver, in passing his accounts, claimed to be allowed the £300 for the valuations taken by him, and £120 for wages paid to the debtors whilst he was carrying on the business. The trustee by the direction of the committee of inspection refused to allow these two items on the ground that a receiver and manager had no right, without the sanction of the court or of the creditors, to make a large allowance to the debtors between a liquidation and bankruptcy, or to incur the expense of valuations before the first meeting of creditors under a liquidation petition. On the 15th April, 1875, the County Court Judge, upon the application of the receiver, made an order that the costs of the valuations made for the receiver in order to enable him to prepare the debtors' statement of affairs for the first meeting of creditors should be allowed with costs, subject to all such costs being taxed. The same day the judge made another order, allowing the £120 paid by the receiver to the debtors as wages. Against both these orders the trustee, by the direction of the committee of inspection, appealed. The two appeals came on together. Mr. De Gex, Q.C. and Mr. Finlay Knight, who appeared for the appellant, referred to the Bankruptcy Rules 260, 261, 262, and submitted that upon general principles the large sum charged by the receiver for valuations ought not to be allowed. The 262nd rule did not apply to the receiver, because he was not appointed by the creditors; but, even if he were, this duty was only to investigate the debtors' affairs and not to prepare an account. Russell v. Minet, 5 DE G.M. & G. 373.— If a receiver appointed by the court were to be at liberty to make valuations of a debtor's estate, and take similar steps with respect to the debtor's affairs without the previous sanction of the court, it would be laying down a rule of practice which might lead to very serious abuse. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. E. C. Willis, who appeared for the receiver, were not called upon. The Chief Judge: The receiver has only such power as the court will delegate to him in the first instance, or sanction the exercise of by him afterwards. I think that much too narrow a construction has been placed upon the rules in the course of the argument adopted by the counsel of the appellant. The 260th rule provides for the appointment of a receiver and manager, with power to take immediate possession of the debtor's effects, and rule 261 provides that any receiver or manager so appointed shall enter upon and act in the performance of his office at such time, and in such manner, and to such extent as the court may from time to time direct. Now, although that rule speaks of the future, I am not at all sure that the proper construction of it is not that the direction of the court may be given after a thing is done, provided that the court is satisfied that it is well and properly done, as the court may, in the first instance, unquestionably direct it to be done. Then when you come to the 262nd rule, the duties of a receiver named by the creditors are very distinctly pointed out. It was not at all necessary to point those duties out in the rule relating to the appointment of a receiver by the court, because, as the power was to proceed from the court in the first instance, it is left with the court to regulate the proceedings of the receiver. Where the creditors take the matter in hand under the 262nd rule, there the nature of the duties of the receiver, which are to be discharged in favour of the creditors, is more distinctly pointed out; but even then the trader is required to state in his petition the estimated amount of the debts owing by him to his creditors; "and where no receiver or manager has been appointed by the court, a majority in value of such creditors may, at any time prior to the passing of the special, or extraordinary resolution, as the case may be, nominate and appoint a receiver or manager of the trade, effects, or business of the debtor, or any part thereof, according to the form in the schedule; and where any such receiver or manager has been so appointed, he shall investigate the state of the debtor's affairs, and report thereon to the general meeting of the creditors; and if any receiver or manager has been appointed by the court, the nominee of the creditors shall be forthwith substituted in his place, and the court shall order accordingly." Such are the provisions in the rules, and I should be narrowing their interpretation if I were to make them apply only where a receiver is appointed by the creditors. The duties to be exercised are so clearly pointed out that no one can doubt what the court in its discretion would direct the receiver appointed by it to do. The receiver is to investigate the state of the debtor's affairs, not to examine into his accounts, but to investigate the state of the debtor's affairs, and to report thereon to the general meeting of the creditors. That is his duty. He must make himself acquainted with the nature of the debtor's property in order to arrive at the state of his affairs. In this case it is stated that the debtor's property consisted of freehold and leasehold estates, goods manufactured, and in the possession of the manufacturers, and plant of very considerable value. It was, therefore, the duty of the receiver, whether appointed by the court, or by the creditors, supposing that he properly discharged his duty, when the meeting of the creditors took place to present himself there, and to say, "I have been appointed receiver; I have investigated the state of the debtor's affairs, and I have ascertained what is the value of the assets in respect of which he is about to submit a proposition for a composition. It is right that you should know what his means are, which are available to satisfy his debts, and proceedings were taken in order that the interests of the creditors should be conserved." Yet, because it is not in these rules stated in terms that a receiver appointed by the court shall discharge the same duties as a receiver appointed by the creditors, I am now asked to say that the receiver who has been appointed by the court, who has discharged his duties, as I must assume, to the satisfaction of the court, and has the sanction of the court for what he has done as well in respect of this valuation as any thing else, and who is thought to be entitled to remuneration subject to taxation by the proper officer of the court, than which no order can be more consistent with the proper administration in bankruptcy, should not be so entitled; and it is said that by so doing I am laying down a general rule that may be abused, and which would give power to any receiver appointed by the court to make what valuations he pleased. I make no such rule, nor did the learned judge below; but he, having the means of deciding and the power of exercising his discretion, was of opinion that in the interests of the creditors the valuations ought to have been made, and that as a matter of justice the receiver who simply discharged his duty should be remunerated for all that he had done in that respect, subject, as I have said, to taxation. If only upon the question whether it is a proper exercise of the discretion of the court below, I should have hesitated to say that I would interfere with that discretion, for the learned judge must know the facts of the case far better than I can. What I have said is for the purpose of guarding myself against it being supposed that I have laid down any rule, by virtue of which a receiver may be at liberty to make charges, which otherwise he would have no right whatever to make. In my opinion there is no ground whatever for this appeal, and it must, therefore, be dismissed with costs. The second appeal was then heard. Mr. De Gex, Q.C. and Mr. Finlay Knight, for the appellant, submitted that it was ultra vires for the receiver to make an allowance to the debtors for wages or to employ them in carrying on the business. It was for the trustee, who is entitled, and not for the receiver, to appoint the bankrupt to superintend the management of the estate, and to make him an allowance for his services. The Bankruptcy Act 1869, ss. 26, 38. Mr. Winslow, Q.C. and Mr. Brough, for the debtors, were not called upon. The Chief Judge being of opinion that the appeal was frivolous and without substance, dismissed it with costs.

Railway Earnings.—The returns made to the Board of Trade show that the net receipts of the railways of the United Kingdom in the year 1874 amounted to £26,643,003, being 4·37 per cent. on the paid-up capital. The returns for the 14 years 1860-74 (omitting 1868 on account of imperfection in that year's returns) show a material improvement in the last six years. In the three years 1862, 1863, and 1867 the net profits were below 4 per cent. on the paid-up capital; in 1861 and 1866 they exceeded 4, but were below 4·10 per cent.; in 1860 and 1865 they exceeded 4·10, but were below 4·20 per cent.; in 1864 and 1869 they exceeded 4·20, but were below 4·30 per cent.; in 1870 they reached 4·41 per cent.; in 1871, 4·66 per cent.; and in 1872, as much as 4·74 per cent.; 1873 shows a decline to 4·59 per cent., and 1874 a further decline to 4·37 per cent.

LEGAL AUDITORS.

We extract from a legal contemporary the following report of rather an edifying squabble which took place at the annual general meeting of the Incorporated Law Society:—

"Mr. Macarthur moved that the auditors' report be referred back to the auditors for reconsideration and amendment. Upon the face of it there were many inaccuracies and inattention to particulars required in such accounts, which he was sorry to see in the accounts of a society which ought to be a model of correctness and exactness. The sheet was headed 'The Auditors' 49th Account,' but it did not say of what. Perhaps they would refer him to the face of the document. There he found 'The Incorporated Law Society,' which was not the name given to the society in its charter. Even if the first page were accepted, the document proved that the auditors did not know their own name. He noticed in the report up to the 31st December there was omitted a very important division and distinction of accounts into capital and income. For years previously that was the form of the accounts; this year it was omitted. The account was sent out with capital and income jumbled together, and those who knew any thing of the accounts of societies must know that this is the first indication of a failing or fraudulent society. (Laughter.) Another question was why, starting in the usual manner with their receipts on the left hand side, and their payments on the right, when they came to give a statement of their assets and liabilities they should change sides, and put what ought to be on the credit side on the debit side, and what ought to be on the debit side on the credit side. They might answer that it came to the same thing if it was understood they had done it that way, but still it was an incorrect way of doing it. What should be on the debit side was on the credit side, and having exhausted that vagary they put the statement of capital on the proper side. He admitted that the figures, put on either side, would come to the same, but it should not have been done as it had been done when there was no motive whatever for doing it. (Time.) The sheet showed 'Arrears of subscriptions of members to 31st December, 1874, estimated at £1059.' What was the meaning of estimated? He had been told there was a large amount of arrears, and that the £1,059 was the sum estimated as being likely to be recovered. He objected very strongly to such items as furniture purchased for the last twenty-five years, and books in the library, appearing as part of the capital, without any reduction having been made for deterioration, and hoped the accounts would be referred back to the auditors for reconsideration and amendment.

"The Chairman would take this opportunity of stating that Mr. Macarthur had been offered an inspection of the society's books, and it would be much more convenient if that were done in the next room instead of bringing it on at the meeting, where it was impossible to appreciate it.

"Mr. Kimber very much regretted that a great many of the remarks they had just heard were in a great measure justified. He was much surprised that the society, consisting, as it did, of the élite of the solicitors' branch of the profession, should make up their accounts very much in the manner of the accounts of those companies who desire to conceal the true position of their affairs. (Laughter.) He was perfectly justified in this observation, and would simply refer to one or two of the items. In the list of expenses the house expenses, including gas, were put down at £420 5s. 3d.; coals £116 5s., servants' liveries £87 9s. 6d., and then comes an item, sundry bills. Adding these items together, and deducting from them what was carried out, they had a sum of £200 unexplained. This was a very convenient way of making up a balance sheet, and no man who had had the slightest experience of the way in which balance sheets were now and then got up would hesitate to explain it to himself. This list of payments condemned the Council. (Cheers.)

"Mr. Clabon said that having had the honour to hold the post of chairman of the finance committee, he would ask them whether they wished the auditors to write 'Incorporated Law Society of the United Kingdom not being barristers,' &c. upon their report, in preference to the shorter title they had adopted? He invited Mr. Macarthur to meet the finance committee, and he, as its chairman, would be happy to meet him, and if there were any point in respect of which Mr. Macarthur could satisfy him that the account could be improved in any respect, he would do his best to get the council to alter it. It was admitted that the account was honest. All that was said was that there were some errors in it. He would venture to say that, if the meeting sent the accounts back to the auditors, the auditors must simply send it back again as it was.

"The resolution that the auditor's report be received and approved, was then put and carried unanimously."

"BANKRUPTCY LAW ABSURDITIES."

Under the above title, the Pall Mall Gazette discourses in the following lively fashion on the Bankruptcy Law. As a specimen of light reading, and of the mode in which a writer of good imaginative powers can make bricks with the smallest possible quantity of straw, it is eminently worth perusal:—

"The law fortifies the bankrupt against his creditors by permitting him to select his own accountant and solicitor to declare his suspension and to 'prepare,' as it is called, after any interval which may meet the convenience or policy of the parties, 'a statement of affairs,' to be laid before what is called by custom and courtesy and fiction 'a meeting of the creditors.' This is a position manifestly at variance with common sense and decency. The resolution to suspend payment can only be taken by any rational man as the result of a careful scrutiny of his means and obligations, and a careful marshalling of all the facts and expectations. The motion, therefore, that the eminent A.B. is to be called in by the bankrupt, to spend several weeks in preparing (at the expense of the creditors) a statement which the bankrupt has already prepared in the most exhaustive fashion, is in the highest degree ridiculous and mischievous. The eminent A.B. enters upon his task deeply indebted to the bankrupt for exercising in his favour a valuable piece of patronage—a piece of patronage rendered doubly delicious by being at the expense of others—and these 'others,' persons who will have the unalloyed pleasure of subtracting from their minute dividends the cost of the professional skill directed to prove that, microscopic as those dividends are, they still ought to be received with joy and thanksgiving. While the 'statement is being prepared,' the eminent A. B. is not idle in the interests of his patron and client—the bankrupt. He goes about among the creditors, and speaks in his professional, confidential, and friendly capacity of the favourable prospects of the estate if the meeting can go off quietly, still more if a few Christian words of sympathy can be bestowed on the unfortunate victim of circumstances wholly beyond his control and on his interesting wife and amiable family. If at all an expert in his vocation, he plays off one creditor against another. His lively imagination and his natural zeal for a prolonged liquidation enable him to exalt neutral answers into promises of strong support, and the case is either very bad indeed or very badly managed if the meeting of creditors does not end in leaving the whole affair—assets, liabilities, dividend, and bankrupt's allowance—to the eminent A. B. and his patron and client, the debtor, under the guise of a private winding-up. And so practically the whole thing disappears into the pigeon holes and pocket of the eminent A. B., and rapidly becomes one of those mythical mysteries to inquire into which is at once both profane and useless, a mystery also supported very much on the principles so successfully practised long ago by the prudent silversmiths who devoted their lives to plating and praising the sacred embodiment of the Goddess Diana as revealed at Ephesus."

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

House of Commons, July 26.

The Friendly Societies Bill.—On the consideration of the Lords' amendments to this Bill, a number of verbal amendments were agreed to. The Chancellor of the Exchequer moved to disagree with the Lords' amendment reducing the amount for which the lives of children under five years of age might be insured for from £6 to £3. The Bill provided securities to keep in check any tendency towards culpable neglect of young children, and the Government had evidence before them that the £3 would not in all cases cover bonâ-fide medical and funeral expenses. The opinion of a large majority of members of this House on this point had been overruled by a very small majority of the House of Lords. Government would be cautious how they entered into any other convention on the subject. When the House saw the correspondence, he thought they would come to the conclusion that the Government had taken the only course open to them in withholding their consent from the bill.

House of Lords, August 3.

Friendly Societies Bill.—On the order for the consideration of the Commons' Amendments to the Lords' Amendments in this bill, Earl Beauchamp moved that the Lords should not insist on their amendment reducing the insurance for children in Burial Club from £6 to £3. Lord Stanley of Alderley thought the Lords should adhere to their amendment. The motion was agreed to, and their lordships did not insist on their amendment.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

N. Alexander, Son, and Co.—The creditors of Messrs. N. Alexander, Son, and Co. held a meeting on the 30th July, at which a statement of the firm's affairs was presented; the liabilities being £240,535, and the assets £34,254. Some singular revelations were made at the meeting in regard to the connection of the firm with Collie and Co.

J. Baxter (Blairgowrie).—On the 3rd inst. a meeting was held in the office of Messrs. W. and D. Myles, accountants, of the creditors of Mr. John Baxter of Ashbank and Ashgrove Works, Blairgowrie. A statement of affairs was submitted, showing liabilities to the extent of £30,600, and assets to about £10,900; and an apparent dividend of 6s. 10d. in the pound. No offer of composition was made, as it had been anticipated that the estate would have turned out better. A committee was appointed to make an investigation, and to report to a future meeting.

A. Collie & Co.—On Monday, the adjourned meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Alexander Collie and Company was held at the City Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street, and, as on the previous occasion, Mr. Smith (of the firm of Travers, Smith, and Co., solicitors to the London and Westminster Bank) presided. There was a very small attendance. Mr. Hollams (solicitor to Messrs. Collie) said the meeting was pro forma, as he stated would be the case last Wednesday, and they did not propose to put forward any resolution, as it would have no legal effect if they were to do so. The chairman then briefly remarked that the proceedings for private liquidation were at an end. Proceedings, however, would be taken with the view of making these debtors bankrupt.

W. H. TURNER (PUDSEY).—The first meeting under this bankruptcy was held at the County Court, Bradford, on the 3rd inst. Mr. Alexander Atkinson, of Bradford, public accountant, was appointed trustee, with Messrs. Terry and Robinson as solicitors to the trustee.

SHAND & CO.—At a meeting, on Thursday, of the creditors of Messrs. Shand and Co., in the East India trade, who failed on the 17th ult., the liabilities were stated at £341,980, and assets at only £38,368, thus showing a deficiency of £303,612. The accommodation bills in connection with Collie and Co. amount to about £207,000, and the creditors generally assented to the estate being wound-up in bankruptcy.

E. CORRY.—At an adjourned meeting, on Thursday, of the creditors of Mr. Edward Corry, in the metal trade, whose acceptances for Messrs. Fothergill, Hankey, and Co., amount to £154,709, a resolution was passed to the effect that if the debtor, who offered 4s. in the pound, can make arrangements by the 1st September to pay a composition of 5s. either wholly in cash or partly by approved instalments, ranging over a very limited period, with security, it should be accepted, but that otherwise the estate should be administered in bankruptcy.

FAILURES.

ENGLAND.—A petition was filed on the 30th inst., in the Sheffield Bankruptcy Court, in behalf of Mr. Charles W. Machen, iron and steel merchant, Sheffield, whose liabilities are estimated at £5,000, with assets not yet ascertained. The failure is reported of Mr. Telo S. Hare, in the cotton trade, with liabilities amounting to £170,000, the whole of which, however is covered excepting about £20,000. The losses consist of differences on arrival contracts. The Bombay house represented by Mr. Hare is stated to be unaffected by his suspension.—The bills have been returned of Messrs. W. Walker and Co., ship builders, &c., of Poplar. Their liabilities are estimated at about £50,000.

AMERICA.—Messrs. George H. Lane and Co., Boston, had suspended.—Messrs. E. Nulting and Co., of Indianopolis, stove manufacturers, had failed, with liabilities of £40,000; as also Mr. Joshua Getshell, of Exeter, New Hampshire, general dealer; liabilities £14,000.

The Allgemeine Zeitung states that Franz Hyra, of Pilsen, one of the largest employers of labour in Bohemia, has called his creditors together. The liabilities are estimated to amount to about £150,000, and the assets to £206,800. The firm is, therefore, solvent, and payment in full by instalments extending over three years is offered.

"MEDAL FOR PROGRESS,"

HOBBS, HART, & CO.
AT THE VIENNA UNIVERSAL EXHIBITION.
This Medal is only given to Exhibitors whose New Inventions testify marked Progress.
"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"
Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.
N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.
The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

PROSPECTUS.

The great want of a Shoe for Horses and other draught animals (so as to obtain a firm and solid foothold upon Asphalte and other smooth or slippery pavements, and to obviate roughing or sharpening in frosty weather; to reduce the jar or concussion the limbs are subjected to by the hoof striking the ground; to allow the hoof to expand and develop; to reduce the labour of the animals by diminishing the weight of the present unnatural and unwieldy iron shoe, and to add to their comfort), has long been felt by the community at large, but more especially by those who employ large numbers of horses, and also by "The Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

Such a Shoe has been Invented and Patented by Mr. Yates, and is made from buffalo or other hides, rendered impervious to moisture under Patented Process. They are as durable as the iron shoe, one-third the weight, cheaper, and are neat and easily applied, and their application adds greatly to the comfort of the animal.

They are made from a material as nearly approaching the nature of the hoof as possible, and therefore are the most natural substance from which to form a shoe. They will maintain the integrity of the hoof in its natural form, and allow its freedom and development. They also assist in retaining a firm and solid foothold, and aid in the impulsive efforts required in the performance of work and movements, and will thus be invaluable in preserving the health of the animal shod with them.

This Company has been formed for purchasing and working the patent rights, titles, and interests for Great Britain, Ireland, and the Channel Islands, of this Shoe, and for manufacturing and vending the same.

It is the intention of this Company to fit up works sufficient to manufacture these shoes, and to establish offices or stores in our principal cities for the sale of the same, where they will be able to supply sets much cheaper than iron shoes, and which can be readily applied by any smith or farrier.

Forms of application for shares may be obtained by applying to the Bankers of the Company, or to the Secretary.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

AUGUST 14, 1875.

The world in general, which, by a cheerful legal fiction, is supposed to be acquainted with the whole of the law of the realm both statute and common, will find some difficulty in coming to a correct opinion on the state of the law with reference to imprisonment for debt. In "Cobham v. Dalton," on which we commented last week, the Lords Justices distinctly laid down that a debtor who was in prison under an attachment by order of the Court of Chancery for non-payment of money, was entitled to his release if he had been adjudicated a bankrupt, and was protected from any further proceedings till he had obtained his discharge. In that case, their Lordships apparently considered that imprisonment was an unpleasantly severe remedy, put in action by a creditor for the purpose of obtaining payment of his debt, and disregarded the failure to obey the express directions of the Court of Chancery. The point has, however, arisen again, and the great principle which was to serve as a beacon to all future debtors and creditors alike, has been somewhat shaken by the decision in Deere's case, which we report this week. Mr. Deere was ordered to pay money which he had received in his capacity as an attorney. This he failed to do, and a rule for attachment being obtained, he was committed to prison. Previously to this Deere had become bankrupt, and on the authority of "Dalton v. Cobham," he claimed to be released. The Lords Justices, however, held that the only power they had to order his release was under the 18th section of the Bankruptcy Act, which gives a discretionary power to the Court to restrain legal process against the debtor; and that they ought not to interfere with the process of another tribunal.

It is not easy to distinguish the two cases from each other, except that in the first instance the Lords Justices sat to review the decision of the Master of the Rolls, and in the second instance to review a decision of the Court of Bankruptcy. But the circumstances of the two cases are so similar, and the reasoning of the Judges in one of them so applicable to the other, that the distinction is a matter of the most extreme refinement. Both prisoners made default in payment, under circumstances mentioned in the 4th section of the Debtors Act, and between which no difference is made; both became bankrupt after the order was made, and before attachment issued; and both were imprisoned in obedience to the mandate of a Court of competent jurisdiction,—Mr. Dalton by the Court of Chancery, and Mr. Deere by the Court of Exchequer. Yet Mr. Dalton is discharged from custody because his arrest is illegal, while

Mr. Deere is detained in prison because, though apparently his arrest is illegal, the Court of Bankruptcy will not exercise a discretionary power of ordering his discharge. We can understand the Lords Justices ordering the discharge of a prisoner committed by the Master of the Rolls, on the ground that the committal was not justified by the facts, and hesitating to question the propriety of a judgment of a Common Law Court, though they might be less particular in the case of a judge whose decisions they may have constantly to consider. But Mr. Dalton's discharge was ordered, not because his committal was not warranted by his default, but because his arrest was not warranted by any direction in the Bankruptcy or Debtors' Acts. Surely, if this was so, Mr. Deere's arrest was equally wrong. However this conflict of opinion may be settled, the last of the long vacations must press hardly upon Mr. Deere, who may consider himself as born under an unlucky star, and while considering the old aphorism, may also reflect on the inconsistencies of the courts of which he is an officer.

"Dat veniam corvis, vexat censurâ columbas,"

The case of Mr. Thomas Mason Robinson, in which we reported, last week, a long and elaborate judgment of Mr. Daniel, is typical of what happens under a great many liquidations. Mr. Daniel intimated that it was probable that his views would be considered by a higher Court; and with every respect to the opinion of one who is admitted to be one of the soundest and most accurate of our County Court Judges, we should be glad to see a decided rule laid down, especially as Mr. Daniel made various observations in giving judgment, which are of great importance. The point may be very simply stated. Robinson filed a petition for liquidation, and at the first meeting of creditors a composition was accepted, payable in three instalments, the payment of the last being guaranteed by a third party, Mr. Anthony Robinson. Previous to giving this guarantee, Anthony Robinson obtained certain goods from the debtor which he held as security, with the understanding that he was at full liberty to sell these, if necessary, and recoup himself any moneys he might be called upon to pay under the guarantee. The first instalment was paid; but just after the second became due, the debtor filed a fresh petition for liquidation, and Anthony Robinson was called upon to pay the third instalment, which he did. The trustee under the second liquidation claimed the goods from Anthony Robinson, and this claim the Judge decided to be well-founded. It was, he said, necessary to communicate the whole of the terms to the creditors, and obtain their assent to the arrangement. Till the composition had been accepted, the goods were not the debtor's to pledge; and, unless the express permission of every creditor was obtained, it was the duty of the registrar to refuse to register the resolution, as being ultra vires. Without pushing the doctrine laid down to its extreme limits, which, we must candidly say, in our humble judgment, Mr. Daniel seems to do, we agree with the rule that creditors ought to be informed of the transaction. There may be many considerations which would make such proceedings both advantageous and valid. Composition is either an act of mercy to the debtor, or it is considered as a means of saving the sums which would otherwise be swallowed up in expenses; and a smaller dividend which is speedy and secure, is often preferable to the chances of one which looms larger through the remote distance. So that if a surety chooses to guarantee payment of the whole or any portion of the composition, and trust to the assets for repayment if necessary, he is merely doing what the creditors decline to do for themselves, namely, running the risk of having to liquidate the estate for himself. But the whole matter is, after all, a question of the correctness of the accounts. If a large surplus is shown or deduced, friendly creditors can have no right, in reliance on private arrangements, to force a composition upon dissentients who only want to make the best of their loss. If a large deficiency is shown, or the assets are of doubtful value, the surety who guarantees a sum certain in amount, looking to those assets for payment, will find his offer accepted. While we do not hold with Mr. Daniel's sweeping censure on the plan, we quite agree with his views as to the propriety of the most thorough frankness and openness in stating the nature of the arrangement to the creditors.

Receivers are often a race of persons who, like officials generally, have a strong tendency to enlarge the scope of their proper functions. A receiver, whose duty is simply to receive rents and duly account for them to the Court of Chancery, not unfrequently gets into trouble because he has taken too large a view of his duties, and exercised the power of a manager. Chief Judge Bacon has recently had an opportunity of considering this point in the case of "Ex parte Gordon—Re Gomersall," and both judgment and arguments were chronicled in our columns of last week. The crimes of Mr. Joseph Dobson Good, an accountant of Dewsbury, who was appointed receiver and manager of Messrs. Gomersall's estate, were not of a very heinous nature. He had employed the debtors at a salary, to assist him in carrying on the business, without seeking the sanction of either Court or creditors; and he had paid certain sums of money to valuers. Possibly, as a receiver, pure and simple, he had no right to do this, and ought to have contented himself with simply collecting such debts as he could, but both as a matter of law, and a matter of fact, he was amply justified in his proceedings. He was appointed receiver and manager, and consequently his authority was as great as that of the ordinary manager of a concern. And it must be noticed that the rules as to the duties of receiver obviously use the term as synonymous with that of manager; "receiver or manager" may be either read as "receiver and manager," in obedience to a well-known rule of judicial construction, or the last designation may be considered as extending the definition laid down by the first. And further, the Chief Judge explained very clearly the construction to be placed on the rules. It had been argued that nothing was said as to the duties of a receiver appointed by the Court, though there were sufficiently clear directions as to what had to be done by a receiver appointed by the creditors. This somewhat fine-drawn argument was overruled as summarily as it deserved. The creditors may nominate a receiver, if the Court has not done so; and it was certain that if the creditors had nominated Mr. Good, nothing could have been said of his proceedings. If the debtors had been obstinate and refused to acknowledge his authority, the Court would have confirmed him in his post, and no question could then have arisen. What the Chief Judge held was, that there was really no distinction between the various modes of nomination as regards the duties of the office, and this construction is most certainly the sound one.

Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the British Guardian Life Assurance Company, Limited, and British, Colonial, and Foreign Property Insurance Corporation, Limited.

CREDITORS AND THEIR GRIEVANCES.

To the Editor of the Accountant.

SIR,—It is not very long since a rather sensational letter, signed "Unfortunate Creditors," appeared in the columns of a prominent daily paper. In justice to the class of business men which your Journal so ably represents, I think it would not be out of place if you were to give publicity to the proceedings at a meeting of creditors which was held a few days ago in the City. Every creditor had in the first place received due and proper notice of the day and hour of meeting. The estate, although certainly not a very large one, was of sufficient importance to several creditors on the list to call for personal attendance; yet what was the result? Three solicitors, armed with their respective bundles of proxies, were the sole constituents of the "meeting," and as they were "friendly," there was, consequently, neither opposition nor discussion, and it may be presumed no more formality than was necessary to engender a lucrative amount of litigation. It appears most ridiculous and absurd for the public to raise an outcry about the manner in which liquidations, compositions, or arrangements are carried out, when no one individual will trouble himself to look after his own affairs; and it would, perhaps, not be out of the way to suggest that future epistolary contributions to the press should bear signatures of an applicable nature. In instances similar to the one I have quoted above, and which tallies, doubtless, with very many other cases, I would suggest to complaining "unfortunate" Creditors the advisability, for consistency sake, of qualifying themselves in a slightly more accurate manner; and I have not the least doubt that an analytic test would tend greatly to diminish the list of the self-named "Unfortunate," and to swell the list of "Indifferent" Creditors to no inconsiderable extent.

Yours,
X.

WINDING-UP.—A petition for the winding-up of the Wedgwood Coal and Iron Company, Limited, is to be heard before Vice-Chancellor Malins on the first petition day in Michaelmas Term.

THE MIDSUMMER BALANCE-SHEET.—The account of the public income and expenditure of the United Kingdom in the year ending the 30th of June, 1875, shows that the income received from taxes—viz., Customs and Excise Duties, stamps, and land, house, and Income-tax—amounted to £64,032,000; from the Post Office, £5,888,000; telegraph service, £1,032,000; Crown lands, £385,000; miscellaneous, £4,091,013—making the total income £75,516,013. The expenditure comprised £27,113,227 for interest on the National Debt; £15,044,649 for the Army, including the Purchase Commission; £125,000 Ashantee Expedition Vote of credit; £10,860,404 for the Navy; £13,383,002 for Civil Services; £2,660,510 Customs and Inland Revenue Departments (cost of collection); £2,957,575 Post-Office; £951,000 packet service; £1,198,065 telegraph service—making a total expenditure of £74,293,432, or £1,222,581 less than the income. A sum of £600,000 was also raised in the year for expenditure on fortifications and localisation of the military forces. This sum, however, was a charge upon the year's income, but was raised by the creation of annuities amounting to £68,595, terminating in 1885, and which will appear from year to year among the items of expenditure.

COURT OF CHANCERY.

(Before the LORDS JUSTICES of Appeal.)

IN RE DEERE.—This was a case of some importance with regard to the power of the Court of Bankruptcy to discharge from custody a person who has been committed to prison by one of the Courts of Common Law for non-payment of money which he had received while acting in the character of attorney and solicitor. This is one of the debts which is excepted from the general abolition of imprisonment for debt, which was effected by the Debtors' Act, 1869. On the 11th of November, 1874, an order was made by Baron Amphlett that Mr. J. M. Deere, an attorney, should forthwith pay to Mr. T. Forgham a sum of £48 12s. which Deere had received from him while acting in the capacity of attorney. The money was not paid, and the order was afterwards made a rule of Court. On the 13th of February, 1875, Deere was adjudicated a bankrupt. In Easter Term, 1875, a rule nisi for an attachment was obtained against him for non-compliance with the order, and this rule was, before the end of the Term, made absolute by the Court of Exchequer. On the 24th of July Deere was arrested and lodged in the Surrey county gaol. He applied to Baron Cleasby at Chambers to order his discharge, but the learned Judge refused to interfere with an order made by the Full Court. Mr. Deere then applied to the Court of Bankruptcy. His application was refused by Mr. Registrar Murray, acting as Chief Judge, and from this refusal Mr. Deere now appealed. Mr. E. C. Willis and Mr. R. G. Glenn, for the appellant, contended that the Court of Bankruptcy had power, under Section 13 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, to order his release from custody. The attachment was really in the nature of a civil process to enforce payment of the debt, and in a case of that kind a bankrupt was, according to the decision of this Court in "Cobham v. Dalton," not liable to arrest during the pendency of the bankruptcy. Mr. Moulton, for the creditor, contended that the attachment order was made by the Court of Exchequer in the exercise of a quasi-criminal jurisdiction over its own officer. The payment of the money would not entitle the bankrupt to his release as a matter of course, as in the case of a writ of ca. sa., but he would have to make an application to a Judge in Chambers. At any rate, this Court had a discretion under Section 13, and would leave the question to be decided by the Court of Exchequer. Mr. E. C. Willis was heard in reply. Lord Justice James was of opinion that this being the case of an attachment issued by a Court of competent jurisdiction against its own officer, the Court of Bankruptcy, in the exercise of the discretion given to it by Section 13, ought not to interfere with the process of the other Court. There was nothing to prevent the appellant from suing out a writ of habeas corpus. Under the circumstances, this Court ought not to go into the merits of the case. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. If the Court of Bankruptcy had any jurisdiction in the matter it was under Section 13, and the exercise of that jurisdiction was discretionary. It was not right that this Court should decide the question whether the attachment was merely for the purpose of enforcing payment of the money, or whether it was also by way of punishment. This question ought to be decided by the Court which made the order.

EX PARTE JONES—IN RE JONES.—This was an appeal from a recent decision of the Chief Judge in Bankruptcy. It involved a question of some nicety in regard to the rights of execution creditors in cases of composition. On the 8th of May, Messrs. Sabel recovered a judgment against the debtor, a trader, for £55 10s., and on the 10th execution was issued upon the judgment and lodged with the Sheriff. On the same day, at an earlier hour, the debtor had filed a petition for liquidation, and on the 13th execution was levied by the Sheriff upon his goods. A receiver was then appointed, and an injunction obtained restraining further proceedings under the execution, and at the first meeting, on the 26th of May, the creditors passed a resolution, which was afterwards confirmed, accepting a composition of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable by instalments. After the registration of the resolution the execution creditors obtained an order from the Judge of the Liverpool County Court dissolving the injunction, thus leaving them at liberty to proceed with their execution. On appeal by the debtor to the Chief Judge this decision was affirmed. The debtor appealed. Mr. Little, Q.C., and Mr. Finlay Knight were heard in support of the appeal; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. F. O. Crump, for the execution creditors, were not called on. Lord Justice James was of opinion that the decision of the Chief Judge was quite right. In order to take away any legal right there must be found express words or plain indication in the Act. By the law of the land the respondents had obtained a security upon the goods of the debtor. If the proceedings under the petition had resulted in a bankruptcy or a liquidation by arrangement, no doubt this right would have been lost, because the goods would have ceased to be those of the debtor, and would have become the goods of the trustee. But in the case of a composition, the goods never ceased to be the goods of the debtor, as against whom there was a binding security upon them. It was said that the other creditors had power under the Act to make the respondents accept the composition for their debt, and therefore they had also a right to affect their security for the debt. That would be monstrously unjust. Then it was said that it was a mere matter of words; that bankruptcy, liquidation and composition were really the same thing, and that in bankruptcy or liquidation this security would have been destroyed. But that only resulted from the power which the creditors would have had to compel the respondents to take their rateable share of the assets; it did not follow that they could destroy the security and make the respondents accept what they thought it fair to take from the debtor. The decision of the Chief Judge was right, and the appeal must be dismissed with costs. Lord Justice Mellish was of the same opinion. There were no words in the Act to take away the security which the respondents had obtained against the debtor. In bankruptcy or liquidation it would have been taken away by the relation back of the title of the trustee. There was no such relation back in a case of composition. Section 126 of the Act said that the provisions of the composition should be binding on all the creditors whose names and addresses and the amount of whose debts were shown in the debtor's statement. But that could not mean that it should be binding so as to destroy any security which a creditor might have. In bankruptcy or liquidation any security obtained before the act of bankruptcy would remain untouched. In the case of composition there was nothing to distinguish between a security obtained before the filing of the petition and one obtained between the filing of the petition and the first meeting of the creditors. In the present case, at the time the first meeting was held, the goods were bound, as against the debtor, and there was nothing in the Act to affect the right so acquired.

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.—At Worship-street police-court on Wednesday, August 4th, Henry Webb, a china and glass dealer, of Brushfield-street, Norton Folgate, who has been several times before the court on a charge of neglecting to deliver up the whole of his estate to the trustees of his liquidation for the benefit of his creditors, appeared for further examination. Mr. Besley was for the prosecution; Mr. Montagu Williams for the defence. The case was reported in the Accountant of July 31st, and the depositions being now concluded, the defendant was fully committed for trial to the Old Bailey. Bail was allowed—two sureties of £40 each, and the defendant himself in £80.

EUROPEAN ASSURANCE ARBITRATION.

(Before Mr. F. S. Reilly.)

This was the first sitting under the new Act relating to this arbitration. On taking his seat the learned Arbitrator said:—"Mr. Higgins, in taking this seat, in succession to eminent Judges, I rely much on the assistance of my brethren at the Bar. It is also a satisfaction to me to know that a part of the new arrangements made by the Legislature—one without which, indeed, I should not be placed here—is that the parties and myself will have the benefit of appeal."

Nash, Middlemist, and Muriel's Case.—This was a question as to whether Messrs. Nash, Middlemist, and Muriel are liable to a call as contributories to a company called "The English Widows Fund and General Life Assurance Association." The point in dispute related to the constitution and state of the company, and to the peculiar circumstances attending its amalgamation with the British Nation Life Assurance Association. Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Romer appeared for the joint official liquidator; Mr. De Gex, Q.C., and Mr. Horton Smith for Messrs. Nash, Middlemist, and Muriel. The Arbitrator reserved judgment.

Charles Taylor's Case.—The question for consideration was whether the executors of the late Mr. Charles Kemp Taylor, of Stockport, ought to be placed on the list of contributories to the European Assurance Society. Miss Ann Bowden held 200 shares in the Society, and on her marriage with Mr. Taylor, in 1861, no marriage settlement was executed. After Mr. Taylor's death in 1864, both the widow and the executors claimed the shares. Ultimately, in August, 1865, the executors waived their claim to the shares, and also gave up to Mrs. Taylor a dividend that they had received in January, 1865. Subsequently the Society paid all dividends to Mrs. Taylor. Now that the Society is being wound-up, the official liquidator seeks to place the executors on the list of contributories, either jointly with or instead of Mrs. Taylor. Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Romer appeared for the joint official liquidator; Mr. Ilbert for the executors.

Lake's Case.—Mr. Warmington applied on behalf of the trustees in bankruptcy of Mr. Henry Lake, formerly the general manager of the European Assurance Society, to be paid the sum of £350, in respect of services rendered in the liquidation of the British Nation Fire Insurance Company. The joint official liquidator contended that Mr. Lake was fully paid for all his services by the very large stipend he received from the European Assurance Society, with which the British Nation Fire Insurance Company had become amalgamated. Mr. Napier Higgins, Q.C., and Mr. Romer appeared for the European Assurance Society. In this case, also, judgment was reserved.

August 10.

(Before Mr. F. S. Reilly.)

The Munster Bank.—Mr. Higgins, Q.C. (with him Mr. Romer) applied to have a sum of money paid by the European Society to the Munster Bank refunded to the former. The question raised was whether certain payments made after the presentation of the petition, on which an order was made to wind-up the European Society, were invalid, and whether the money was liable to be returned or not. In this case he asked that the sum of £532 10s., paid to the bank on the 3rd July, 1871, by the society, should be directed to be repaid to the joint official liquidator, on the ground that that amount was paid during the pendency of the petition to wind-up the society, and therefore void under the Companies' Acts. The claim of the bank on the policy was admitted by the society on the 3rd of February, 1871. The amount, however, remained unpaid; and on the 6th of June the holder of the policy commenced an action in Ireland against the society. On the 10th of June a petition was presented by Mr. Greenhough to wind-up the society. On the 13th and 14th of the same month the usual statutory notices were inserted; on the 12th of January, 1872, the actual order was made. Nevertheless, on the 3rd of July, 1871, a cheque for £532 10s. was handed over to Messrs. Thomas and Hollams, the legal representatives of the bank, on receiving which they handed over to the society the original policy on the life of the assured. He contended, therefore, that at the time of receiving the cheque in question Messrs. Thomas and Hollams were well aware of the presentation of the petition, and so likewise were the Munster Bank; and as a consequence, he urged, that the payment in question having been made after the commencement of the proceedings for winding-up the society, was a void disposition of the funds of the society under the 153d section of the Companies' Act, 1862, and the sum ought to be refunded by the Munster Bank to the society. He illustrated his contention by observing that the payment referred to had no more force in law than would such a payment if made now from the assets of the society. Mr. Martin, Q.C. M.P., for the bank, submitted that the bank received the money in a bonâ-fide dealing with the society, and without receiving notice of the presentation of the petition; that the bank, upon the faith of the payment, gave the person assured under the policy credit; that if any body was to be applied to for payment, that person must be the assured rather than the bank. Then, as regarded the policy itself, that was one taken out in the associated companies, not the European Society proper, and there was nothing to show that the latter could not pay the money as executive trustees for the British Nation, considering the manner in which the directors carried on the business; that, in short, the money was paid in the ordinary course of business, and the fact of the payment must be recognised and sanctioned as the satisfaction of a debt, without in any way contravening the 153d section of the Companies' Acts, and the amount ought not therefore to be refunded. Mr. Martin further urged that the bank were persons claiming as mortgagees or as the assignees of the assured, and were mere outside creditors paid in the ordinary course of business. He denied that statutory advertisements had been held in the arbitration to fix the party affected with knowledge of the pendency of a petition to wind-up, and quoted in support of his contention extracts from the judgment of Lord Westbury, who had declared that he would not take away from persons what they had honestly received, and in the case of his (Mr. Martin's) clients he asserted that they had received the money without a suspicion or any notion that the directors had not full power to pay, and it was clear the directors were carrying on the business of the society in a legitimate manner, and had full power to do so. With regard to costs of resisting the present application, it certainly was not a case for costs to be given against the bank, in the event of the decision going against them; but as it was a representative case, the costs ought to come out of the estate of the arbitration.—Mr. Higgins, Q.C., in reply, contended that under the 153rd section of the Companies' Act every payment of money to a creditor after the presentation of a petition to wind-up a company was void. The money was liable to be recovered back if an order be made to wind-up a company on petition, unless there be something special in the case which might induce the Court to say that under all the circumstances it would be inequitable to apply the section in question to that particular case.—His Honour deferred judgment.

Wade and Forshaw's Case.—In this case application was made that Edward Wade and John Forshaw, of Preston, should be ordered to repay to the liquidators the sum of £156, which was paid to them by the society on the 21st June, 1871, during the pendency of the petition to wind-up. This claim was resisted, on the ground that at the time when John Forshaw received the cheque for the money neither he nor Wade had any notice or knowledge whatever that the petition had been presented, or that any proceedings were in progress or contemplation for the winding-up of the society, nor of the advertisements.—The Joint Official Liquidator contended that the publication of the advertisements operated as constructive notice to them of the pendency of the petition, whether in fact they were or were not aware of it. That the payment in question was made under circumstances which made it a void disposition of the property of the society, or else was an undue preference to a particular creditor under the 164th section of the Companies' Act.

Goodall and Longfield's Case.—This was a similar case to the one preceding. Application was made that Charles Goodall and Joseph Longfield, of Leeds, be ordered to repay £208 13s. 2d. to the liquidators, which was paid to them on the 5th July, 1871, during the pendency of the petition to wind-up. They had received the money as trustees under a marriage settlement, and had handed it over to the beneficiare under the will of the assured. They urged that they were not liable to refund, because it was a bonâ-fide transaction, and was completed six months before the date of the order to wind-up; that if there was a right to recover, steps ought to be taken against the widow, the person to whom it was paid in pursuance of the trusts of the settlement referred to.

There were other cases of a like character, where similar applications were made for a refund of money; after hearing the arguments in which his Honour said he should reserve his judgment.

The sittings were then adjourned sine die.

COURT OF BANKRUPTCY.

August 7.

(Before Mr. Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge.)

In re W. Walker & Co.—The debtors, William Walker, Christopher Crouch, and B. Magnus Lindwall, trading in co-partnership as shipbuilders and engineers, under the firm of W. Walker and Co., have presented a petition for liquidation, their liabilities being estimated at about £130,000, and assets £70,000. Upon the application of Mr. Finlay Knight, his Honour appointed Mr. Coker, accountant, Cheapside, receiver and manager of the estate. An interim injunction, staying further proceedings in several actions, was also granted.

August 10.

(Before Mr Registrar Murray.)

In re Kilburn and Kershaw.—The bankrupts, Messrs. Henry Ward Kilburn and William Kershaw, were silk and piece goods brokers, carrying on business at 28 St. Mary-axe. At a first meeting of creditors now held debts to a considerable amount were proved, and Mr. W. Turquand, accountant, was appointed trustee, to act with a committee of inspection consisting of Messrs. Arthur L. Beart, 41 Lothbury, and Andrew de Metz, 25 Throgmorton-street. A statement of affairs returns debts of £201,476, of which £67,567 is due to unsecured creditors, with assets £6,577. Messrs. Amory, Travers & Co., solicitors, and Messrs. Ashurst, Morris, & Co. took part in the proceedings.

August 11.

Mr. Registrar Murray, sitting as Chief Judge, disposed of a list of petitions and debtors' summonses.

(Before Mr. Registrar Hazlitt.)

In Re Henry Adamson and Sons.—This case was brought under notice upon an application to register a resolution of creditors. The debtors, Messrs. Henry Adamson, jun., and John Saunders Adamson, were shipowners, and ship and insurance brokers, carrying on business at 75 Mark-lane, under the style of Henry Adamson and Sons. They recently filed a petition for liquidation, and at the first meeting of creditors a resolution was passed appointing Mr. John Young, accountant, trustee, and for a liquidation by arrangement. The joint debts and liabilities form a total of £94,298, with assets £12,917; the separate estates show a surplus, which will be available to the joint creditors. Messrs. Hollams, Son, and Coward supported the application. It appeared that through an inadvertence, creditors to the amount of £1,513 had not received notice of the first meeting, but none of them opposed the registration, and the necessary majority was not affected by the omission. Mr. Registrar Hazlitt allowed the resolution to be registered.

BRISTOL COUNTY COURT.

(Before R. A. Fisher, Esq., Judge.)

Re Thomas Davies of Merthyr Tydvil, deceased.—An application was made to the court on the 19th ult., by Mr. Norris, counsel on behalf of the Comptroller in Bankruptcy, for an order directing Mr. John Parsons of Bristol, the trustee under this bankruptcy, to carry back to the credit of the estate the sum of £15, which he had paid to the members of the committee of inspection as a remuneration for their services, and which the comptroller had disallowed in the trustee's accounts as an improper payment. His Honour now delivered judgment, in the course of which he fully reviewed the arguments of the learned counsel, and the bearing of the Act of 1869 upon the question at issue. It appears that the trustee, in making the payment, had relied on a resolution of creditors by which the amount was voted to the committee; but Mr. Norris, on behalf of the comptroller, contended that it was not within the power of a majority of creditors to pass a resolution dealing with the property of the bankrupt, except as permitted by the Act of Parliament. The judge took this view of the matter, and decided that as section 14 of the Act declared that the bankrupt's property should be divisible amongst his creditors in proportion to the debts proved by them under the bankruptcy, it was not competent for the creditors to deal with that property in any other manner unless expressly provided. By the same section power was given to the creditors, upon appointing a trustee, to determine what remuneration he should receive for his services, but with regard to the appointment of the committee of inspection the section was silent as to remuneration, thereby indicating the intention of the legislature that they should not receive any payment for their services, but that the office should be purely honorary. In fact, the position of a member of a committee of inspection was somewhat analogous to that of a trade or creditors' assignee under former Bankruptcy Acts, who was never allowed to derive any remuneration for performing the duties pertaining to that office. His Honour also pointed out that an ordinary trustee of property has no claim or title to payment for personal services. Under these circumstances, his Honour was of opinion that the trustee could not resist the application of the comptroller, he should therefore direct him to credit the estate with the amount; but as there was no mala fides on the part of the trustee, he should order the costs of the comptroller to be paid out of the estate. Judgment accordingly.

Court of Chancery.—According to a Parliamentary paper just issued, the receipts from dividends by the Court of Chancery and from other sources amounted in the year ended the 31st of March last to £242,613 6s. 8d., and a "deficiency" of £50,143 15s. 2d., making £292,157 1s. 10d. In the preceding year the amount was £289,362 7s. 9d. The net deficiency in the two years was £4,957 15s. 6d.

LIVERPOOL COUNTY COURT.

Aug. 7.

(Before Mr. Collier, Judge.)

In re Augustus Tappenbeck & Co.—This was a motion of importance in a commercial point of view. Augustus Tappenbeck traded at Para, in partnership with Messrs. Schramm and Christiansen, under the style of Augustus Chistiansen and Co., and in Liverpool with Mr. Christiansen under the style of Augustus Tappenbeck and Co. The Para firm made shipments to the Liverpool firm, and to provide funds therefor drew bills on the Liverpool firm and sold them at Para, advising the Liverpool firm of such drafts. The bills of lading of goods shipped were made out to the order of the Liverpool firm, who insured on their own account and paid freight. From time to time, as goods were shipped, statements were sent by the Para firm to the Liverpool firm, debiting the latter with amounts of invoices, and crediting them with drafts, or parts of drafts, to an amount equal to the amount of the invoices, and in this way purporting to appropriate certain invoices to certain drafts. Both the Liverpool and the Para firms, about twelve months ago, became insolvent and are now in liquidation, and the question before the court was whether shipments which had been received by the Liverpool firm before failure, and subsequently by their trustee in the liquidation, and which had realised £10,133 7s. 3d., were applicable to the discharge of the outstanding drafts, amounting to £11,180 15s. 9d., or whether the proceeds of such shipments should be treated as part of the general assets of the Liverpool firm. The question, in fact, was whether there had been a specific appropriation of these shipments against the drafts. Some months ago the trustee applied to the court for directions as to the application of the proceeds of the shipments, but in the absence of several of the parties interested it declined to give any directions, and the motion now made was on behalf of the liquidators of the Para firm, that the proceeds of the shipments be applied in payment of the drafts, and thereby to reduce the amount of their liabilities. It may be mentioned that of the drafts, amounting to £11,180 15s. 9d., some had been paid before the Para firm stopped, others by being placed to the credit of holders who were indebted to the firm, and of those which were not discharged in any way some were accepted by the Liverpool firm, and others had not been so accepted. Mr. W. F. Robinson, Q.C., with whom was Mr. Aspland (instructed by Mr. George Rogerson), appeared for the Para firm, and Mr. Herschell, Q.C., and Mr. Walton (instructed by Messrs. Hull, Stone, and Fletcher) for Mr. Banner, the trustee of the Liverpool firm. The arguments of the learned counsel occupied the greater portion of the day, the main contention on the one side being that there had been an appropriation of property for a specific purpose, namely to meet the drafts; and on the other side it was argued that the shipments in question, on being drawn against, became the property of the Liverpool firm, and the course of business between the two firms was such as to negative the assumption that there had been any specific appropriation of any particular shipments. Numerous authorities on the point were cited, and the learned judge, at the conclusion of the arguments, said he should reserve his judgment.

HALIFAX COUNTY COURT.

(Before Mr. Giffard, Judge.)

Action as to a Life Policy.—The judge had fixed to-day for a special sitting, to afford Mr. Robert S. Beswick (of Beswick and Co., accountants,) and Mr. William Powell, bill broker, of Leeds, an opportunity to show cause why an action commenced against them to recover possession of a life policy for £500 should not be heard before a jury. Mr. Beswick was, until recently, trustee under the bankruptcy of one Jacob Stead, and as such trustee he became possessed, on behalf of the estate, of a policy for £500 on Stead's life. This, it is alleged, he sold to Powell, a relation of his, for £48, with the object of benefitting himself and Powell, and not for the good of the creditors. Stead afterwards died; Mr. Beswick was removed from the trusteeship, and the present proceedings were commenced by his successor, the present trustee. Mr. T. E. West and Mr. T. Atkinson, barristers (instructed by Mr. Rhodes, of Halifax), now represented the trustee; Mr. Shaw, barrister (instructed by Mr. Charles Whiteley, of Leeds), appeared for Mr. Powell; and Mr. Lawrence Gane, barrister (instructed by Mr. Pullan, of Leeds), was counsel for Mr. Beswick. —Mr. Gane stated that when Mr. Beswick was examined on the 1st July before Mr. Registrar Rankin, he appeared without counsel, and a number of questions were put to him by Mr. West,—questions which the learned counsel shaped, and to which, of course, the witness had to give a brief and somewhat direct answer. Supposing he had had a legal representative, some of the questions might have been objected to in the first place; and in the second place, had he had more time, and not been hurried on from question to question, he would have given in many respects answers which, whilst being perfectly truthful, would have put a different complexion on the case than that occasioned by his replies to the skilfully-framed questions of Mr. West. He was taken over all the transactions without his papers, and had to rely on his memory to a great extent, and reports got into the newspapers; it appeared in one case at very great length; in another case it was briefer, but was decidedly incorrect. The case being a Halifax case, and the parties Halifax men, it had been the topic of conversation, and Mr. Beswick had been unfairly represented. For more than four weeks there had been before the public, in the various newspapers which circulated widely in the district, a one-sided statement of affairs, and without imputing bias to any man, he submitted it was perfectly impossible in a local case like this, where there had been considerable local feeling, for men to have their minds entirely unprejudiced. In one instance the newspaper report was headed "Extraordinary Disclosures;" in another "Singular Application," both very attractive sensational titles, which went to show the feeling on the matter. Under the circumstances, it was very improper the case should be tried by a Halifax jury. Without asking his Honour to change the venue, he might say they preferred to have the case tried by his Honour, as it was impossible the gentlemen who would compose the jury would be altogether unbiassed.—Mr. Shaw, on behalf of his client, said he did not deny the plaintiff had a right to take this course; but there was undoubtedly no concurrence to a trial by jury on the part of his client. But he relied on the sole ground that the case could be tried quite as well by his Honour as by any jury. It therefore rested with his Honour as to whether he required a jury to try it.—Mr. West replied, contending that what took place before the registrar had nothing to do with the case. As to Mr. Beswick not having his books and papers with him, the question was put to him, and he said, "They belong to Beswick and Co.; I am not a partner, and I have no power to bring them." Then as to the newspaper reports, what had appeared there was the statement of Mr. Beswick himself—the case as it was then shaped by him—and if any one had been prejudiced it was in favour of his side. True, Mr. Beswick was unrepresented by counsel, but the registrar was present, and any one who knew him would know that he was not the man to allow any unfair question to be asked. With regard to its being a Halifax question, could it be said that out of 70,000 people a jury of five would not be better than a jury of five out of the larger population of Leeds, especially considering that one of the parties to the case belonged to Leeds. If they wished to change the venue to Leeds it would be worse than hearing it at Halifax. He admitted there was not the consent of all parties to the trial by jury; but he submitted that it was a proper case for his Honour to exercise his discretion and require it to be heard by a jury; because it was a question of fraud arising out of circumstances, and the best tribunal in such cases was a jury. The Judge: I am disposed to have it tried by a jury.—After some further discussion on the point, his Honour decided in favour of the case being tried by a jury. A long conversation then ensued as to the issue to be tried, and it was agreed that the learned counsel should settle that among themselves, and submit it to the registrar for approval.

"AN ACCOUNTANT" CONSPIRING TO DEFRAUD CREDITORS.

At the Summer Assizes, York, on Saturday, July 31st, before Mr. Justice Field, James Hedley, 45, George Harper, 38, John Henry Bennison, 38, and Frederick Hodgson, 31, all on bail, were indicted for unlawfully conspiring together falsely and fraudulently to obtain certain monies, or securities for money, or divers goods, the property of the creditors of the said Frederick Hodgson, at Middlesbrough, within six months last past. Mr. Maule, Q.C. and Mr. Skidmore prosecuted; Mr. Foster and Mr. Whitaker defended Hedley, Harper, and Bennison. The indictments contained seven counts, for various offences under the Bankruptcy Act. Mr. Maule, Q.C., said the defendants were charged by means of a large body of evidence. After sifting the matter, he had concluded that it would be scarcely worth while pushing the case against Frederick Hodgson, and his learned counsel would be in a position to ask for his acquittal. If the judge would consent to this course, he (Mr. Maule) would proceed with the case, against the other three defendants. The judge said he fully approved of the course that was suggested, and Hodgson was acquitted. Mr. Maule then detailed the circumstances of the case which was reported in the Accountant of November, 1874. The defendants, he said, were connected with Middlesbrough. Hedley was an auctioneer, Bennison was "an accountant," and Harper was a collector of Queen's taxes. An agreement was drawn up between Hedley and Hodgson, purporting to convey to Hedley all the fixtures at the Ship Inn, in which, at the end of 1873, or the beginning of 1874, Hedley became interested, first as part owner and latterly as entire owner. Frederick Hodgson ultimately became a tenant of the Ship Inn. On entering upon the property, he purchased from Hedley and one Imeson, who at the time had a joint interest in it, the fixtures of the house, giving some £184 in payment by means of several acceptances of three or four bills, which covered other matters besides that of the fixtures. In March and during April there was a bill for £80 running, accepted by Hodgson in favour of Hedley, but at the end of April Hodgson gave up his tenancy. In May he became insolvent, and filed a petition under the Bankruptcy Act for liquidation with his creditors. Hedley was one of the latter, and was expected to take his chance with the other creditors. Hedley subsequently admitted that he had a bill of Hodgson's for £80, and also a collateral security of £80 for the same sum. On the 17th June Mr. Bennison instructed his clerk, named Gibson, to prepare the agreement in question to secure the fixtures at the Ship Inn to Hedley, against the creditors of Hodgson's estate. It was stamped by Hedley, and Hodgson signed it. It was dated 27th April, 1874. The 18th, the day following that on which the agreement was completed, was fixed for the examination of the witnesses in Hodgson's bankruptcy at Stockton. Had Hedley gone into the bankruptcy court as creditor, he might have taken up £5 or £6, instead of £80; but by being a signee of a substantial security of the fixtures, he got something to cover the whole of his debt, as the fixtures were valued at much more than £80, which was the amount of a bill drawn September 8th, to run for six months, it therefore coming to maturity on March 18th, 1874. This, submitted the learned counsel, was a fraud upon the creditors of the estate, as the fixtures which should have gone to meet Hodgson's liability, and become the property of the trustee, were intended to be transferred to Hedley. The evidence was similar to that previously reported, and the jury, after a few moments' consultation, found each prisoner guilty. The Judge said the three prisoners had been found guilty on evidence that left no doubt whatever in the matter, of a very serious crime, which they had carried out with a degree of persistency which he had seldom seen. The punishment must be severe. The prisoners would be sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment each, with hard labour.

The Middlesbrough Gazette, referring to the case, says:—"The prosecution has devolved on Mr. John Braithwaite, accountant, the trustee appointed to administer Frederick Hodgson's estate—a duty which ought to have devolved on a State prosecutor. The case was beset by numerous difficulties. To begin with, Mr. Braithwaite had only suspicion and John Gibson's statement to rely on. According to Gibson's own showing, we are doing him no wrong in saying that that statement was a very slender reed indeed on which to rely. Many allurements were held out to induce him to draw back; and if he had yielded to the strong temptations, the case must necessarily have collapsed. Again, had Mr. Braithwaite been disinclined to incur the necessary cost of the prosecution, and undergo the great amount of labour necessary in getting up the evidence, the culprits would have escaped scot free, and justice become a laughing stock. It is one of the blots on English jurisprudence, that the State only prosecutes great criminals like the Tichborne Claimant. In this case, the Treasury ought to reimburse Mr. Braithwaite for the heavy outlay he must have incurred by the two trials at York Assizes."

ALLEGED FRAUDULENT BANKRUPTCY.

At the Birmingham Police Court, on the 9th inst., William Dunn (40), brassfounder, of Lorne Cottage, Tenby-street, North, was charged on remand with contravening the Debtors Act by not disclosing all his real and personal property to the trustee of his estate, and removing goods with intent to defraud his creditors. Mr. Rowlands appeared for the prosecution; and Mr. Parry defended the prisoner. Mr. Rowlands, after mentioning the offences with which the prisoner was charged, stated that on the 27th May last prisoner filed a petition in the Birmingham County Court for the liquidation of his affairs by arrangement. Mr. Brown, accountant, of Bennett's Hill, was then appointed receiver to the estate. The first meeting of the creditors was held on the 14th of June, and at that meeting prisoner presented a statement of his affairs. It appeared that his total liabilities amounted to £329 10s. 4d., and his assets to £132 7s. The latter consisted of stock at his premises, 73 Northwood-street, which was valued at £119 12s. 6d., and furniture, at his residence, in Tenby-street, valued at £12 14s. 6d. He carried on the business of a brassfounder in the former street. Mr. Brown, who was elected trustee, caused certain premises in Lower Loveday-street to be watched, and it subsequently transpired that the debtor had secreted a quantity of goods there, and later on it was also ascertained that he had stowed goods away on premises in the neighbourhood of Hockley. The goods had been recovered by the trustee, but had not yet been sold. They amounted in value to between £50 and £60. Defendant, it appeared, had removed those goods a few days previous to the filing of his petition, and had not accounted for them to his creditors. Evidence having been given in support of this statement, prisoner was committed to take his trial at the Quarter Sessions, bail being accepted in two sureties of £100 each.

EUROPEAN SOCIETY ARBITRATION ACT.

An Act (as amended in committee) for amending the European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts, 1872 and 1873:

Whereas by the European Society Arbitration Act, 1872 (in this Act called the Arbitration Act of 1872) provision is made for effecting a settlement of the affairs of the European Assurance Society and of other companies by arbitration:

And whereas Richard Baron Westbury, the first arbitrator, proceeded in the arbitration, and after his death John Baron Romilly, the second arbitrator, further proceeded therein, and is now deceased:

And whereas in some cases of great importance, as affecting the liquidations of the companies subject to the arbitration, the second arbitrator differed in opinion from and varied the determinations and orders of the first arbitrator, and difficulty has ensued therefrom in the conduct of the administrative business of the arbitration:

And whereas the Arbitration Act of 1872 enacts to the effect that no order of the arbitrator shall be subject to review or appeal in any court of law or equity or elsewhere, and it is expedient that provision for an appeal in certain cases be now made:

And whereas it is expedient that the closing of the several liquidations under the arbitration be expedited and facilitated, and that for that purpose provision be made for the absolute barring of claim and the final disposal of assets:

And whereas the Arbitration Act of 1872 enacts to the effect that if any arbitrator dies, resigns, or becomes incapable of acting, or unwilling to act, an arbitrator shall be appointed in his place by the Lord Chancellor, being a person filling or having filled the office of a Judge in one of the Superior Courts of law or equity in the United Kingdom, or being a member of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council:

And whereas it is expedient that power be given for the appointment of a person not so qualified:

And whereas for the purposes aforesaid and for divers consequent and other purposes it is expedient that the provisions of the Arbitration Act of 1872 be in various respects enlarged or modified:

And whereas the objects aforesaid cannot be effected without the authority of Parliament:

May it therefore please your Majesty, that it may be enacted, and be it enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords, spiritual and temporal, and Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

1. This Act may be cited as the European Assurance Society Arbitration Act 1875.

The European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts 1872 and 1873, and this Act may be cited together as the European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts 1872, 1873, and 1875, and are in this Act referred to together, as the Arbitration Acts.

2. This Act as far as may be shall be read and have effect as one Act with the European Assurance Society Arbitration Acts 1872 and 1873.

In this Act the arbitrator means the arbitrator for the time being under the Arbitration Acts.

3. The Court of Appeal in Chancery shall have jurisdiction and power to entertain an appeal from any determination or order of the arbitrator given or made before or after the passing of this Act and (subject to the provisions of this Act) to hear and determine the same as if it was brought in the course of the appellate jurisdiction of that court under the Companies Act 1862, save that it shall be heard and determined by no less than two judges of that court.

An appeal shall lie from any determination or order of the arbitrator accordingly subject to the following provisions:

(1.) As regards any determination or order given or made before the passing of this Act an appeal shall not lie therefrom unless the arbitrator expressly certifies in writing that by reason of differences between previous decisions on matters of principle relating to cases of novation or of liability of contributories it is desirable that an appeal be brought.

(2.) As regards any determination or order given or made after the passing of this Act an appeal shall not lie therefrom except on a matter of principle unless the arbitrator expressly certifies in writing that an appeal may properly be brought.

(3.) An appeal shall not be heard in any case unless notice thereof in writing is given to the party respondent as regards any determination or order given or made before the passing of this Act within three weeks after the passing of this Act and as regards any determination or order given or made after the passing of this Act within three weeks after the same is given or made unless in either case such time is extended by the arbitrator before or after the expiration of such time.

4. Every appeal shall be on a special case unless in any instance the Court of Appeal in Chancery otherwise directs, and the special case shall be approved and certified by the arbitrator, and his determination on the settlement of the case shall be final.

5. The rules and practice for the time being applicable to appeal under the Companies Act 1862, shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, and to any rules or orders of the Court of Appeal in Chancery to the contrary, extend and apply to appeals under this Act.

6. No appeal shall lie from a determination or order of the Court of Appeal in Chancery under this Act.

7. Where under a determination or order of the arbitrator given or made before the passing of this Act any payment has been made out of the assets of any company in respect of the claim of any creditor, then notwithstanding any thing in this Act the creditor shall not be required under any decision of the Court of Appeal in Chancery to repay the money so paid or any part thereof, but any money payable to the creditor out of the assets of any other company in respect of the same claim shall to the extent of the first-mentioned payment be retained against him.

8. Where any question of principle is brought before the arbitrator or Court of Appeal for decision the arbitrator and Court of Appeal may if he or they think fit on application made for that purpose allow any class or classes of persons having a direct pecuniary interest in such decision to be heard separately.

9. Where goods or chattels are taken or intended to be taken in execution under process issued under the Arbitration Acts and a claim is made thereto or to the proceeds or value thereof by any person other than the person against whom process was issued the arbitrator shall have in respect thereof the like powers authorities and jurisdiction for adjustment of claims and for protection and relief of the sheriff or other officer and otherwise as the Court of Chancery would have on a bill of interpleader or bill in the nature thereof duly filed in that court by competent parties and the like powers authorities and jurisdiction as a superior court of law or a judge thereof would have in case the process had been issued out of a superior court of law and may direct in what court an issue directed shall be prepared and tried and the same may be tried accordingly.

10. Sect. 9 of the Arbitration Act of 1872 (conferring on the arbitrator all the powers, authorities, and jurisdiction vested in or exercisable by the Court of Chancery or a judge thereof in court or at chambers in the liquidation of any of the companies scheduled thereto pending at the passing of that Act) is hereby extended so as to confer on the arbitrator, for the purposes of the liquidation of any of the companies subject to the arbitration, all powers, authorities, and jurisdiction vested in or exerciseable by the Court of Chancery or a judge thereof in court or at chambers by or under any statute passed or to be passed before or after the passing of the several Arbitration Acts or otherwise.

11. The arbitrator may, if he thinks fit, by order, appoint a day on which claims arising on policies or otherwise in the arbitration, and not brought in and proved, shall be barred, and the same shall by virtue of that order and this Act be absolutely barred accordingly.

12. The arbitrator may, if he thinks fit, cause to be paid into the Court of Chancery any sums left unreceived by the parties entitled thereto by a day appointed by the arbitrator, including sums of the following kinds (that is to say):

(a) Dividends allotted and directed to be paid.

(b) Premiums received in the Court of Chancery on the terms of being returned in certain events.

(c) Sums received from contributories for calls and directed to be returned to them.

(d) Sums received from contributories for calls and not required for discharge of claims, but too small in aggregate amount to be divided among and returned to the contributories.

13. Where any sums are so paid into the Court of Chancery there shall be filed in the court, under the direction of the arbitrator, a list distinguishing the sums paid in and the names, addresses, and description of the several persons entitled thereto, as far as the same have been ascertained in the arbitration.

The list shall be conclusive evidence of the title of those persons to those several sums.

The court shall from time to time, on application at chambers, cause those several sums (subject to payment of any proper costs or expenses) to be paid out to the persons entitled thereto, according to the list, or to their respective representatives or assigns.

14. The arbitrator may, if and as far as the provisions of this Act authorising payment into the Court of Chancery are not applicable, or are for any reason not applied, deal with and dispose of sums left unreceived as aforesaid, and may deal with and dispose of other undistributed assets or sums in such manner as with respect to those several classes of sums or assets he considers most equitable and expedient.

15. Any vacancy in the office of arbitrator happening after the passing of this Act may (notwithstanding anything in sect. 26 of the Arbitration Act of 1872) be filled by the appointment by the Lord Chancellor of a barrister of fifteen years' standing or upwards, and all the provisions of the Arbitration Acts relating to the arbitrator shall extend to any person so appointed subject to the following exceptions and qualifications:

(1.) He may, if he thinks fit, state any question arising on a matter of principle in the arbitration in the form of a special case for the opinion of the Court of Appeal in Chancery.

(2.) The question in a special case so stated by him may be heard and determined by any two or more of the judges of the Court of Appeal in Chancery.

(3.) His final award shall be made not later than the 31st Dec., 1876, or within such extended time (if any) as the Lord Chancellor, or one of the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery, by writing under his hand from time to time thinks fit to allow.

(4.) The provision of the Arbitration Act 1872 relating to remuneration shall not apply to him, and his remuneration shall be such as the Lord Chancellor from time to time approves.

16. In proceedings before the Court of Appeal in Chancery under this Act, the court may have regard to the power and authority vested in the arbitrator under sect. 8 of the Arbitration Act of 1872.

17. On the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873 coming into operation, all jurisdiction and powers of the Court of Appeal in Chancery under this Act shall be transferred to and vested in Her Majesty's Court of Appeal, established by the Supreme Court of Judicature Act 1873, as amended by any subsequent Act, and for the purposes of this Act there shall be substituted for the Lords Justices of the Court of Appeal in Chancery such judges of Her Majesty's Court of Appeal as the Lord Chancellor from time to time thinks fit by writing under his hand to designate in that behalf.

18. All costs, charges, and expenses preliminary to and of and incidental to the preparing of applying for obtaining and passing of this Act (including the costs, charges, and expenses of Caroline Brooke and Samuel Patterson Evans, being certain of the petitioners against the Bill for this Act) shall be paid out of such money, subject to the arbitration as the arbitrator directs.

PARLIAMENTARY INTELLIGENCE.

House of Lords, August 11.

Legal Practitioners' Bill.—On the motion of the Earl of Donoughmore, their Lordships went into Committee on this Bill, the object of which is to give solicitors and attorneys in England greater facilities for the recovery of their costs. The Bill does not apply to Ireland or Scotland. It passed through Committee, and was reported without amendment.

House of Commons, August 11.

Serjeants-at-Law.—Sir. C. Dilke asked whether, under the new Judicature Act, the existence of the degree of Serjeant-at-Law would serve any public purpose; and whether the Government had considered to whom, in the event of the Serjeants'-inn ceasing to be maintained, the title and property belonged. The Attorney-General.—In answer to the hon. baronet, I have to state that, by the Judicature Act of 1873, it is provided that it shall not be necessary for a Judge of the Supreme Court to possess the qualification of being a Serjeant-at-Law, and that the new Judicature Act which has just passed in no way affects the position of a Serjeant-at-Law. Under these circumstances, the question "whether the existence of the degree of Serjeant-at-Law will serve any public purpose" is one upon which the hon. baronet is quite as qualified to form an opinion as I am. With reference to his second question, I can only state that, so far as I am aware, the Government have not considered "to whom, in the event of Serjeants'-inn ceasing to be maintained, the title and property belong."

Messrs. Spain and Andrewes, accountants, 1 Gresham-buildings, Basinghall-street, have issued the following:—"We beg to inform you that we have admitted as a partner in our firm Mr. William Augustine Spain (brother of our Senior), who for some time past has had an interest in our business. The future style of our firm will be Spain, Andrewes and Spain."

SUMMER ASSIZES—DERBY,

(Before Mr. Waddy, Q.C.)

James Langstaffe Mountain (on bail), described as an accountant, carrying on business in North Church-street, Sheffield, was indicted for having obtained on the 7th May, from Benjamin Hall, at Eckington, by means of a false pretence, £5 and a pair of boots worth 15s., with intent to defraud. Mr. Buszard prosecuted, and Mr. Barker defended. Mr. Buszard, in opening the case, said the false pretence alleged against the prisoner was, that he represented that he was authorised by a Mr. Bingham to demand from the prosecutor the payment of a sum of money owing by Hall to Mr. Bingham, and in the event of the money not being paid, to take possession of Hall's goods. Hall was a boot and shoe dealer at Eckington, and he had become indebted to Mr. G. C. Bingham, a boot and shoe manufacturer, carrying on business at Nottingham, to a considerable sum for goods supplied. Mr. Bingham thought it would be desirable to have some security for the money, and with a view of obtaining that security, he called in the assistance of the prisoner, who was carrying on business at Sheffield as an accountant. The prisoner was formerly a lawyer's clerk; and now acted as a kind of half attorney, half accountant. It would be much better if, when persons wanted legal work, they went to a properly qualified lawyer, and then they would not place themselves at the mercy of unscrupulous men, who would take every advantage they could of their client. However, Mr. Bingham consulted the prisoner, and by his advice, and with the consent of Hall, a bill of sale was drawn up on the goods of the latter for the sum of £133, although the debt owing was only £83. The bill of sale was executed on the 26th April, and at that time Mr. Bingham distinctly told the prisoner that he did not wish it to be put into effect, as he only had it executed for his own security, and that no steps were to be taken without his express instructions. The bill of sale was left with the prisoner to register, and Mr. Bingham gave no instructions for it to be put in force. On the 7th May, the prisoner, accompanied by Mr. Pierson, a solicitor, and a bailiff named Holmes, produced to Hall a notice, which was to the effect that he (the prisoner) was authorised by Mr. Bingham to take and keep possession of Hall's household furniture and effects, secured to Mr. Bingham under a bill of sale. Hall said he was sure Mr. Bingham would not give such authority, but the prisoner insisted on his right to enforce a bill of sale, and the result was, that Hall was induced to give him £5 and a pair of boots worth 15s. The prisoner said that would satisfy him for the present, and he would withdraw the bailiff from possession. On the following day Mr. Bingham heard what had transpired, and telegraphed to the prisoner asking for an explanation, but he received no reply. A few days afterwards he wrote to the prisoner, who replied that he had acted according to general instructions given him by Mr. Bingham. A few days afterwards the prisoner sent to Mr. Bingham a bill of costs, amounting to £18 17s. 6d., for taking possession at Hall's on the 7th May, but in that account he allowed £5 15s. for money received, which reduced the amount to £13 2s. 6d. Evidence having been given in support of this statement, the jury, after a long deliberation, returned a verdict of guilty, and the prisoner was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Petitions have been presented to the Court of Chancery for the winding-up of the British Guardian Life Assurance Company, Limited, and British, Colonial, and Foreign Property Insurance Corporation, Limited.

Court of Bankruptcy.—The total receipts from dividends on Stock, &c. by the Court of Bankruptcy in the year ended March 31st last was £113,272 19s. 5d., and deficiency £21,735 15s. 6d., making £135,008 14s. 11d.

CREDITORS' MEETINGS.

Wilson and Armstrong.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Wilson and Armstrong, woollen merchants, of Aldermanbury, on Tuesday, the statement of affairs presented showed £251,538 liabilities, against £57,090 assets. This, however, does not include the assets and liabilities of the firm at Hawick, it being contended that the two are distinct. It was resolved to adjourn for six months, during which the question as to the real connection between the London and Hawick firms will, it is believed, be legally decided. Meanwhile the estate in Scotland has been sequestrated. The liabilities in connection with Collie and Co. amount to £60,000. During the discussion it was stated that the capital of the firm in April 1864, amounted to £100,000, the bulk of which has been lost in speculative operations in the shares of various companies.

E. Corry.—At an adjourned meeting of the creditors of Mr. Edward Corry, in the metal trade, it was resolved to accept a composition of 4s. in the pound, payable in a month from the 23rd instant.

J. O. Rackham (Yarmouth).—A meeting of the creditors of John Onesimus Rackham, of Great Yarmouth, late fishing boat owner, was held at the office of Mr. F. W. Ferrier, solicitor, Yarmouth, on August 10th, when it was resolved to accept a composition of 2s. 6d. in the pound. Mr. Lovewell Blake, of Hall Quay Chambers, Great Yarmouth, public accountant, being appointed trustee.

J. Baxter (Blaergowrie).—A second meeting of the creditors of Mr. John Baxter, Ashbank and Ashgrove Works, Blairgowrie, was held in the chambers of Messrs. Myles, accountants, Dundee, on Tuesday. It was unanimously resolved to apply for sequestration of the bankrupt's estates.

Digby, Gandy and Co.—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Digby, Gandy and Co., wine merchants, of Liverpool, was held on the 10th instant. The statement of affairs showed liabilities £1,776 1s. 6d., and assets £217 9s. 6d. No offer of composition being made, liquidation by arrangement, was resolved upon, Mr. Sheen (Sheen and Broadbent) being appointed trustee, with a committee of inspection. Messrs. Culshaw and Roberts were intrusted with the registration of the resolutions. Messrs. Adleshaw and Rodway represented the creditors.

R. Corkling and Co. (Manchester).—A meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Robert Corkling and Co., of Manchester and Alexandria, whose suspension was announced on the 12th ult., was held on Monday in London, when it was resolved to liquidate the estate by arrangement, Mr. Arthur Cooper, of the firm of Cooper, Brothers, and Co., and Mr. John Adamson, of Manchester, being appointed trustees. The statement of affairs showed liabilities £149,000, against assets estimated at £41,000.

Strachan and Co.—At a meeting of the creditors of Messrs. Strachan and Co., held on Monday, at the offices of Messrs. J. Waddell and Co., Mr. Lyne in the chair, a statement of the affairs was submitted by the receiver (Mr. J. Waddell), showing liabilities to rank £96,938 1s. 11d., and open assets £5,711 10s. 3d. The liabilities were mainly on acceptances to Messrs. Collie and Co. The general feeling was that the estate should be liquidated in bankruptcy.

FAILURES.

England.—The acceptances were returned on Wednesday of Messrs. Shaw and Thomson, iron merchants, of 150 Leadenhall-street, and at Glasgow. The firm was reconstituted in 1864, when Mr. Henry Moore retired. Mr. Shaw is one of the Sheriffs for London and Middlesex. The liabilities amount to £250,000, the greater part of which is covered by good securities. The claims which will be ultimately proved will amount to about £100,000, against which there are assets of £50,000, of which a considerable portion is cash in hand.

Digitized by Google

The difficulties are attributable to the failure of other firms within the last few months, and to the recent unprecedented depression in the iron trade. The books have been placed in the hands of Messrs. Cooper Brothers and Co.

Scotland.—Messrs. D. Black and Co., shawl manufacturers and printers, 113 Virginia-place, Glasgow, have suspended payment. Their liabilities are reported to amount to £10,000.

America.—American advices announce the failure of Messrs. Baldwin and Stone, an extensive commission house in Chicago and Milwaukee.—Messrs. Keating, Lane, and Co., wholesale clothiers, Boston, had suspended; liabilities £34,000.—The Scofield Rolling Mill, Atlanta, Ga., was in difficulties.—Messrs. Sweeney, M'Luney, and Co., glass manufacturers, Wheeling, Va., had suspended, with liabilities of £31,000.—Messrs. Rooney, Dolan and Co., in the dry goods trade, Montreal, had suspended, with liabilities of £20,000.—The old-established mercantile firm of Messrs. George P. Mitchell and Sons, Halifax, N.S., were in difficulties; liabilities £36,000.—The Tobacco Exchange Banking Co., Louisville, has closed its doors.—Messrs. Campbell and Cassels, of Toronto, agents of Duncan, Sherman, and Co., New York, had suspended payment.—Messrs. John Mason and Co., sugar merchants, Philadelphia, had failed with liabilities of £40,000.—Messrs. J. B. Ford and Co., publishers of Mr. Beecher's works, had called a meeting of their creditors.—The Commercial Warehouse Co., William-street and Exchange-place, New York, had stopped. Liabilities £300,000; assets (not available) about £800,000. Messrs. Leishman, Wilkinson, and Co., of Montreal, have made an assignment.

Australia.—Advices from Melbourne report the failure of Messrs. M'Ewen and Co., general merchants, with heavy liabilities, but it is not expected to affect this side.

The Levant Herald announces that the long-established shipping firm of Heald, Mathwin, Todd and Co., of Galata, have been obliged to suspend payment owing to the recent failure of two large English firms.

Mr. Edward Hart (Hart Brothers, Tibbets, and Co., 37 Moorgate-street, E.C.), the official liquidator of the Royal Victoria Palace Theatre Syndicate, has, with the sanction of the Court, declared a first dividend of 7s. 6d. in the pound, payable at the above offices on or after the 17th inst.

A case which came up on appeal before the Calcutta High Court the other day is an amusing illustration of the extraordinary ideas of law and justice which are still to be found among some of the subordinate judicial officers in the Provinces. A native gentleman asked a number of friends to a dinner party. His guests accepted the invitation; but when the day came they for some reason best known to themselves did not attend, nor did they send any apologies. Thereupon the host promptly sued them for the price of the food which he had provided for the banquet, and which, through their want of courtesy, had been wasted. The Moonsiff who heard the case thought the cause of action a good one, and gave the insulted host a decree for the amount claimed. The High Court, it need hardly be said, took a more rational, if less sentimental, view of the matter. The Moonsiff's decision was reversed, the presiding judge remarking with grim humour that if the law laid down by the lower court were correct, then "the risk of accepting invitations would be very serious indeed."

New Act on the National Debt.—The act to amend the law with respect to the reduction of the National Debt and the charge for the National Debt in the Consolidated Fund has been printed. The principal provisions have reference to a new Sinking Fund and to the old Sinking Fund. Towards the new fund there is to be a permanent annual charge for the National Debt on the Consolidated Fund: during the financial year ending the 31st of March next, £27,400,000; for the year 1877, £27,700,000; and for every subsequent year £28,000,000. The annual charges payable out of the permanent charge are set forth, and any surplus is to be paid to the new Sinking Fund to reduce the debt. As to the old Sinking Fund, annual accounts are to be published of the income and expenditure, and the surplus is to be paid in reduction of the debt. The National Debt Commissioners are to keep the accounts of the old and the new Sinking Funds.

A Year's Failures.—The number of bankruptcies in England and of compositions with creditors and liquidations by arrangement conducted under the provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, was 7,919 in the year 1874; 7,489 in 1873; 6,835 in 1872; 6,280 in 1871; only 5,002 in 1870, the first year under the new Act. The total liabilities were £17,456,429 in 1870, but there were in that year some very heavy bankruptcies, in four of which the aggregate liabilities exceeded £3,300,000; in 1871 the liabilities were £14,158,859; in 1872, £14,287,418; in 1873, £19,184,812; in 1874, £20,136,670, showing a large increase of bad debts in the last two years. In the last five years the number of bankruptcies declined from 1,351 in 1870 to 930 in 1874, but the compositions increased from 1,616 to 2,549, and the liquidations by arrangement from 2,035 to 4,440. The assets in the failures of 1874 were but £5,431,848, to meet liabilities exceeding 20 millions, or half a million less of assets than in 1873 to meet liabilities which showed an increase of nearly a million sterling. The assets in the 930 bankruptcies of 1874 were estimated at no more than £485,445, the liabilities being £3,788,639. The number of bankruptcies with small assets tells upon the ratio of the cost of realisation to the amount of assets. In 1874 there were 670 bankruptcies closed; in 118 no assets whatever were realised, and in 223 more the assets averaged but about £77 in each case, and were absorbed in costs. In the other 329 cases dividends were paid, but only two-thirds of the assets realised were left for dividend after payment of costs and expenses. In the 552 cases in which there were assets, there were 116 in which the assets averaged less than £24. There were only 10 in which the assets exceeded £2,000. Of the whole 329 bankruptcies in which a dividend was paid there were only 56, or 17 per cent., in which it exceeded 7s. 6d. The inferiority of the class of estates wound-up in bankruptcy is attributed to the facilities offered to debtors for compositions with creditors or liquidations by arrangement under the Bankruptcy Act. The liquidations by arrangement advanced in number in 1874 to 4,440, but the gross value of the assets was only £3,461,893, or nearly £600,000 less than in the preceding year; the gross amount of the debts was £11,131,915, an increase of £100,000. The compositions increased to 2,549; the liabilities to £5,216,116, or £1,100,000 more than in the preceding year; the assets or gross amount of composition to £1,484,510, an increase of a quarter of a million. The number of compositions in which the rate paid exceeded 7s. 6d. in the pound has fallen from 34·77 per cent. of the total number in 1870 to 16·05 per cent. in 1874. In this last year, in one-fifth of the cases the composition did not exceed 1s. in the pound. In the whole above number of failures in 1874 the estimated assets were not quite equal to 27 per cent. of the liabilities; in the liquidation by arrangement 31 per cent., in the compositions above 28 per cent., in the bankruptcies less than 13 per cent. There were but 82 discharges granted to bankrupts in 1874, and that was nine more than in the preceding year. Of the 82 discharges, four only, as against ten in 1873, were granted on the ground that the bankrupts had or might have paid 10s. in the pound, the remainder, 78, having been granted on special resolutions of creditors that the bankruptcy or the failure to pay 10s. in the pound had arisen from circumstances for which the bankrupt could not justly be held responsible.—Times.

The Lord Chancellor's Salary.—From a Parliamentary paper just printed it appears that the Lord Chancellor's salary from the Court of Chancery is £6,000 a year. His lordship has £4,000 in addition as Speaker of the House of Lords.

Mr. George Thomas Rait, public accountant, 70 and 71 Bishopsgate-street Within, announces that he has taken into partnership Mr. George Henry Kearton, who has been for many years in the office of Messrs. Robert Benson and Co.

Scrivenery and Printing.—In the year ending March 31st last the sum of £15,278 15s. 10d. was expended by the Court of Chancery in "scrivenery" (copying) and printing.

Appeals in Bankruptcy.—Last year 120 appeals were presented to the Chancery Appeal Court, in which judgment was affirmed in 55, and 10 were pending at the end of the year. To the Judge there were 111, and in 44 judgment was affirmed. At the end of the year 15 were pending.

A meeting of the shareholders and depositors in the City and County Bank, Limited, now in liquidation, was held on Tuesday, at the London Tavern. There was a considerable attendance, and a resolution was unanimously passed to establish a new concern to be called the Mutual Bank, with the view of conserving the business created by the City and County Banking Company in the course of the past three years. The capital proposed is £200,000.

The Hull Incorporated Chamber of Commerce and Shipping has passed the following resolution with reference to Limited Liability Companies' balance-sheets, viz.:—"That it is highly desirable that every company incorporated under the Limited Liability Acts be required annually to file with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a copy of its profit and loss account and balance-sheet for the preceding year, together with a statement of the principle on which its assets have been valued; such statements to be signed by the chairman or deputy-chairman and the secretary, under penalties similar to those provided by the Regulation of Railways Act, 1868; and that the Executive Council be and is hereby requested to bring this matter before the Board of Trade."

The New County Courts Act.—The statute to amend the Acts relating to the County Courts, which received the Royal assent on the 2nd inst., was issued on Monday. It contains 14 sections and two schedules, effecting some important alterations. In any action in a County Court the plaintiff may at his option cause to be issued a summons, or, on filing an affidavit in the form given, a summons to be personally served, and if the defendant does not appear within 16 days after notice and give notice in writing of his intention to defend, the plaintiff may, after 16 days and within two months of the service, have judgment entered up for the amount of his claim and costs. Either of the parties to an action or any other proceeding may obtain of the Registrar of the Court summonses to witnesses, and there are provisions as to summonses, and the Judge may do certain things within or without his circuit. Under this Act "assessors" may be appointed on the application of either party. An appeal may be made within eight days, without stating a special case. The Treasury may direct the remuneration to be given to officers under the Act. The Judges are to form new rules, to be submitted to the Lord Chancellor. The appointment of a high bailiff of a County Court as Registrar of a County Court shall vacate the office of high bailiff held by such appointee. No appeal from a decree of the High Court of Admiralty to be made on appeal from the County Court where such appeal affirms the judgment of the County Court, except by express permission of the Court of Admiralty. Where an Admiralty cause has been heard in the County Court with the assistance of nautical assessors, the Elder Brethren to be summoned in the hearing of the appeal. There are plain directions on the demands to be made, with instructions as to the way in which the parties are to proceed. The Act will come into operation on the 2nd of November next.

Mr. Alexander Collie failed to surrender to his bail on Monday, on the charge of defrauding the London and Westminster Bank. A warrant was at once granted for his apprehension, and the recognisances of his sureties were ordered to be estreated. Mr. Serjeant Parry appeared in court to charge Mr. A. Collie with obtaining, from the Union Bank of Scotland, £150,000 by false pretences, in relation to which a warrant had already been issued. In the absence of one defendant, Sir H. James would not proceed with the charge of conspiracy, and Mr. Wm. Collie was admitted to bail nominally to appear in a month.

"FIRE-PROOF SAFES; AND LOCKS AND ENDLESS CHANGE LOCKS AND KEYS,"

Invented especially for Safes and Strong-Room Doors, to frustrate the use of False Keys.

N.B.—The continued security and secrecy of a Lock, fixed on a Safe or Strong-Room Door, depends on the fact that there are no false duplicate keys of that Lock in existence. The object of a Lock is twofold—security against burglars, and secrecy against prying curiosity. A new change in this Lock may at any time be obtained in five minutes by simply filing away the thickness of a hair from one or more of the steps of the Key. The Lock, by a simple movement of the Regulator, is thus made to adapt itself to the NEW KEY, after which no other Key will open the Lock.

The Lock and Key may thus be easily altered into what would be virtually a NEW LOCK and KEY, as often as may be desired, without the aid of Lockmaker or of any second person, thus frustrating the use of fraudulent copies of the original Key (see the Safe Robbery in Dublin of £630, vide "Times," 12th September, 1875). This Lock affords effectual protection from duplicate or "Master" Keys secretly made in manufactories; very extensive robberies (in one case 13 Safes in one vault) having been effected by this means.

ACCOUNTANTS' CHARGES.

THE COMMITTEE appointed at the Meeting of Public Accountants, held at the Guildhall Tavern, on Wednesday, May 12th, 1875, beg to report:—

"That having been appointed to confer with the several Societies of Accountants in England, in order to arrive at some satisfactory Scale of Charges and remuneration to Accountants in relation to Liquidation, Composition, and Bankruptcy, and having communicated with the several Societies, and duly considered the question, they are of opinion that the difficulties of drawing up a fixed scale of charges which shall be applicable to all circumstances, appear to be greater than can at the present time be overcome."

ALFRED C. HARPER,

Secretary to Committee.

TRANSLATIONS.
MR. ALFRED W. GEE,
BRITISH AND FOREIGN ADVERTISING AGENT,
62 GRACECHURCH STREET, LONDON, E.C.,

Begs to announce that in compliance with a wish expressed by some of the subscribers to the Accountant, he has made arrangements for the translation of legal and commercial documents, correspondence, &c., into the Principal European Languages. Members of the Profession are therefore respectfully informed that arrangements can be made for efficient and speedy translations into, or from, the French, German, Italian, Spanish, and Dutch Languages on Moderate Terms.

The Accountant.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

The ACCOUNTANT is printed and published in time for Friday evening's mail; price 6d. per copy, or 28s. per annum (including postage), the reduced terms for payment in advance being: annual subscription 24s. (post free); half-yearly ditto, 13s. (post free). Cheques and Post-office orders to be made payable to Mr. Alfred W. Gee, 62 Gracechurch-street, E.C., to whom applications for advertisement space, and letters relating to the general business of the paper, should also be addressed. Literary communications should be directed to the Editor of the ACCOUNTANT at the same address, and in order to ensure insertion in the current number, correspondents are respectfully requested to forward their copy as early in the week as possible.

TO ADVERTISERS.

The Proprietor desires to call the attention of Advertisers to the special advantages offered by the paper as an Advertising medium. Starting with a good guaranteed circulation, and with the entire concurrence and hearty support of the leading members of the profession, the ACCOUNTANT has achieved a large measure of success in a wide field hitherto unoccupied by any professional organ. The ACCOUNTANT thus secures to Advertisers an excellent circulation of an exclusive character; and is particularly valuable as a medium for the announcements of members of the profession, as to Estates and Declaration of Dividends, and the appointment of Trustees and Receivers; for Publishers, Printers, Law Stationers, Auctioneers, and Estate Agents; for the Advertisements of Insurance and Public Companies; and for Notices as to Investments, Vacant Partnerships, &c. Advertisements intended for insertion in the current number, should reach the office on Thursday; late announcements can, however, be received up to 12 o'clock (noon) on Friday.

N.B.—Copies may be obtained at Messrs. W. H. Smith and Sons, Strand, at their numerous Railway Bookstalls, and at the Shops of the leading City and West-End Newsvendors.

TO SUBSCRIBERS.

In consequence of numerous applications from subscribers, the proprietor has made arrangements for the supply of CASES for holding and preserving the Accountant, which may be obtained at the office on the following terms:—In green cloth (well got up), with elastics, and "The Accountant" in gold letters on front, 3s. each; same in leather, 4s. 6d. each. Subscribers' names in gold lettering, 1s. extra. Post Office Orders payable to ALFRED W. GEE, 62 Gracechurch-street, London, E.C.

The Accountant.

AUGUST 21, 1875.

It has been often with a feeling of cynical amusement that we have reproduced some of the choice flowers of rhetoric which have from time to time been heaped on the unhappy fraternity of accountants. Our legal contemporaries occasionally fill up a stray corner by a sufficient measure of abuse; and one of the most gifted of our novelists has constructed a work of fiction in which the villains are represented by a firm of accountants, whose cold-blooded conspiracy to destroy an unfortunate debtor would not discredit a typical attorney in a transpontine melodrama. In the case of the popular lady writer, we can only commend the skill with which she has worked up a variety of episodes, more or less founded on real experience, into a dramatic and exciting work of fiction, and we console ourselves by calling to mind that the hero of one of her earliest and best books is a member of the profession which she held up to odium in Mortomley's Estate. Nor are we much concerned with professional jealousy, as evinced by legal journals. We have a strong feeling of reverence for ancient institutions, and we can sympathise with those trusty guardians who fight so boldly for every outwork of their professional domain, even though they are driven, in the conduct of their defence, to imitate the example of Scott's rustic heroine, who zealously threw dirty water over the assailants. But we have a right, and indeed a bounden duty, to protest when such language is used as Mr. Justice Quain gave vent to at Bristol,—language which is not only wholly unwarranted, so far as appears by the report in the particular case, but which argues a want of that accurate judgment and dispassionate superiority to prejudice which are popularly supposed to be indispensable to the maintenance of the dignity of the judicial bench. We refer to the case of the Queen against James Winge, which was tried at the Bristol Assizes, before Mr. Justice Quain, and of which we give a report in another page.

James Winge was prosecuted by order of the judge of the Bristol County Court, for fraudulent conduct under the Bankruptcy Act. Of his guilt there was no doubt, and his offence was of a kind which frequently prevails, and is very often scarcely possible to detect. It was a petty fraud; but the smallness of the amount can scarcely be held to condone the irregularity of the transaction, though possibly the celebrated plea of "It was only a very little one" may have weighed, however illogically, with both judge and jury. Winge had sold his furniture and stock-in-trade just previous to filing his petition, taking a bill which would not fall due till after the petition was filed in payment; and he endeavoured to conceal this transaction. His guilt was undeniable, but the judge in passing sentence took the opportunity of denouncing accountants, whom, as usual, he confused with debt collectors and other members of the fraternity which all accountants repudiate, and whom he denounced as an "ignorant set of men." So fervid, in fact, was his zeal, that he disallowed the costs of the prosecution, oblivious apparently that he was thereby casting a slight upon the judge of the County Court, as well as endeavouring to punish an unlucky trustee for the sin of belonging to a profession whose duties and responsibilities he did not understand. Possibly, under the new system of judicature, common law judges may learn what their equity brethren have long known.

It is difficult to understand why the costs were disallowed. Either Winge deserved prosecution, or he did not. The verdict of the jury settled this question once for all, and a crime does not depend for its magnitude on pecuniary value. If a man steals a watch, the judge will not take into consideration the fineness of the metal, the complication of the mechanism, or the reputation of the maker, in passing sentence, or in refusing or allowing the costs of the prosecution. We suppose, therefore, that the action of the judge was influenced by the costs of the "examination before the Registrar, the magistrates, and the trial." These might be good grounds for a rigorous taxation by the proper official, but can be none for refusing costs altogether. The trustee, accountant though he was, had a plain duty to perform. He detected a fraud, and he brought it to the notice of the judge. The prosecution was directed by judicial authority, and the trustee had no more to do with it than the jury. From the moment legal proceedings were commenced, the matter was put into "the hands of solicitors—a respectable body, subject to the control of the court." It was their extravagance, then, which so shocked the judge; or do his remarks refer to the costs of the bankruptcy proceedings? and did his indignation at the thought of expenses, with which he had no right to interfere, so overpower the calm logic of the judicial mind as to induce him to refuse costs which were justly and fairly claimed, because he considered that other proceedings were expensively conducted? With a public prosecutor, this absurdity would never have happened. He would have taken up the conduct of the matter as soon as the County Court Judge's fiat was pronounced, and the world would have been spared a fresh instance of the power which prejudice exercises over the most perfectly regulated and logical minds.

We are almost ashamed to repeat anew the arguments we have urged so frequently, that our readers must look upon them as mere truisms, which govern this vexed question of the functions of accountants in bankruptcy. Undoubtedly, the Act has called into development a class of men whose study it is to carry into effect its provisions. In the sensation articles of journals striving to attract popular attention, and in the more ponderous paragraphs of legal dulness, dying but not surrendering, it is the habit, engendered by ignorance and malice, to represent accountants as called into being by the Act. That it expands their sphere of work, we quite admit, and the reason why accountants are so frequently chosen trustees is simply because they are usually the fittest persons for the post. There is no restriction in the Act as to the trustee,—he may be chosen from any section of society, whether professional or commercial, whether a creditor or an utter outsider. If, as the Law Times, through a dull haze of verbiage, seems to imply, solicitors ought to be alone made eligible, there might be some grounds for complaint. At present, the creditors can do what they like; if it is found that as a rule an accountant fills the post of trustee, the obvious inference is, not that all accountants are rogues who live by the pillage of bankrupt estates, but that the majority of business men think an accountant the best man that can be selected, and that reform should be advanced in the direction of extending rather than curtailing their power. And leaving for an instant the law journals to themselves, let us seriously ask our lay contemporaries what they propose to themselves by joining in the silly shouts of interested denunciation. Experience shows that a layman is useless as a trustee, even if one can be found who is willing to fill the office; and though we frankly concede that accountants are not always popular with the debtors whose affairs they administer—we doubt if Mr. Winge entertains much kindly feeling towards his trustee—yet some people have been known to be dissatisfied with their solicitors, and indeed that "respectable body of men" is not wholly in good report among the world at large.
