FRIDAY, MORNING, MAY 4, 1869. Some weeks are we assessed the fact of the introduction take the British. House of Lords of a bill hydrod Garrant. Empowering juries to find a weeklot by a majority vote. It appears that the bill-sign rejected, having received only seven votes in its faves. Lord Carrant. urged in behalf of the measure the furnile and expense caused by the dissenting of one juror; that a second trial wag mover so satisfactory as a first one; that the mecanity of returning a unanimous verdictioners; and lastly, that the speciation of the change he proposed had been attended with good results in Bootland. In reply, Lord Lystucrary and that the present statute was one of the fundamental laws of the kingdom, that it had existed some five hundred years, had been admired by the most eminent lawyers if the country, and that no antifactory cause for a change had been shown. In impeten cases out of twenty the jury never retire, and not one in five hundred is discharged for want of agreement among the lurors. The strongest argument in favor of the present system was that by requiring neinous guilt no shadow of doubt exists in the minds of the community, escape all pun-shment by the dogged obstinacy—real or emmerated—of a single member of the cury. We say "escape," for although the aw provides that a second trial may be had, law provides teat a second trial may be had, we are yet to learn of a conviction, sen-tence and execution in a capital offense at a second trial. Delay is very generally the great object to be attained in all such

America. Every yoter is liable to jury duty, with evertain specific exceptions. It may follow that a jury will be composed of men of whom a majority are totally destitute of education, git habits of yeffection, and of the capacity for comparing evidence. A regue or two foisted on the jury will aid effectually in defeating the ends of justice. These facts obviously militate in favor of the project of abolishing the necessity of a unanimous verdiot. We are satisfied that if two-thirds, or even three-fourths, were empowered to find a verdiot, there would be fewer mistriak, and but a small proportion of culprits gould be seabled to laugh law
