Chapter 8 - Famines and Opium

* * * * *

What can be done for these hundreds of millions of human beings who have had the misfortune to be born in China during this generation? Their own officials are not only impotent to relieve them from death by starvation, but by misgovernment and civil wars have created conditions of impoverishment difficult for the rest of the world to comprehend, and then, in order to continue their meaningless feuds, connive at debauching them with habit-forming drugs.
