

EXHIBITION OF
Jewish Art and Antiquities,

NOV. 7 to DEC. 16, 12 Noon to 10 p.m.

1903.

PREFACE.

IT was in contemplation to hold a Jewish Exhibition in this Gallery in 1905. At first it was thought that the building might be placed at the disposal of a Committee selected from leading Jewish societies, who should organise and carry out the Exhibition more or less independently of the Authorities of the Gallery.

The scheme as originally shadowed out was to hold a cosmopolitan and representative Show on much the same lines as the memorable Anglo-Jewish Exhibition held at the Albert Hall in 1887; save that it was proposed to widen the basis by including a Collection of Works by Jewish Artists, English and Foreign, and to invite the offer of exhibits from all countries.

It so happened, however, that the Gallery was not available during the Autumn of last year. Moreover, it was felt as the scheme developed that an undertaking so important and comprehensive demanded more space than this Gallery could afford, and a more central position in London than Whitechapel. It was deemed advisable, therefore, that this larger proposal should, temporarily at least, be put on one side, and that, instead, the Authorities of the Gallery should themselves organise an Exhibition of Jewish Art and Antiquities, on somewhat narrower and less ambitious lines than the original plan. It was further understood that they should have the assistance and advice of a Committee, chosen for that purpose, from members of the various Jewish societies.

Such, then, is the origin of the present Exhibition, the objects of which are briefly these:—

1. To gather together the rare, costly, and beautiful Appurtenances from the different Synagogues in London—objects which most have read or heard of, and which, of course, to many of our Visitors will be quite familiar, but which will be strange to very many others, who will be as much interested in reading in their catalogue of their varied uses and import as they will be delighted by their beauty and splendour. In addition to these Appurtenances lent by the Synagogues there will be seen many beautiful exhibits associated with domestic devotion, which have been lent by the kindness of private owners.

2. To show, for the pleasure and interest of all, but specially of Scholars and Bibliologists, a Collection of Manuscripts and Books that are only, it is true, a fraction of what might have been exhibited had space permitted; but which have been selected with a view to their great interest and rarity.

3. To illustrate by a Selection of Portraits and a remarkably interesting Series of Prints the history of the Jewish community in England since their re-admission, during the Protectorate of Cromwell.

4. To exhibit as far as space and funds would permit the Works of Jewish Artists, living and deceased. The examples shown are mainly by English Artists, but we have been so fortunate as to secure many pictures by Foreign Painters—notably by the Nestor of Dutch Art—the illustrious Jozef Israels.

The Committee take this opportunity of expressing their thanks to all who have so generously helped towards the success of the Exhibition by the loan of Objects and Pictures. Nothing could be more gratifying than the interest in the Exhibition shown by all, or the ready alacrity with which public bodies and private individuals have responded to the appeals made to them for assistance.

NOTICE.

Many of the brief explanatory notes in this catalogue have been taken from the admirable work compiled for the Anglo-Jewish Exhibition by Dr. Joseph Jacobs and Mr. Lucien Wolf.

To those gentlemen we beg to offer our best thanks for their courtesy in allowing full use to be made of their catalogue for the purposes of the present Exhibition.

ECCLESIASTICAL ART.

SYNAGOGUE.

Throughout his history, the Jew has prized nothing more highly than that portion of the Scriptures which records the earliest traditions of his race, and contains his Sacred Law; and he has marked his reverence for it by a lavish ornamentation of the Scrolls from which it is read during Divine Service. The scroll itself must be written, not printed or lithographed, nor must it be in book form, the ancient form of scroll being retained. The parchment (or leather) is attached to rollers with handles, termed "tree of life," by which the scroll is unrolled from right to left. When closed and about to be returned to the ark, it is tied securely by a band, which is often elaborately worked, and then is enclosed in a mantle to keep it free from dust. Attached to the top handles by chains is a breastplate, on which is inscribed the name of the festival, or donor, or the Ten Commandments. Then comes the pointer, by which the reader follows the text. This is invariably in the shape of a hand with outstretched finger. On the two tops of the handles are placed bells. Thus decorated, the scroll is enshrined in an ark which, in the synagogue, is generally a fine piece of joinery or ironwork, and in the home—being of smaller size—is more elaborate, sometimes even of silver studded with precious stones. And then, finally, a velvet or satin curtain is hung before the ark, on which figure suitable inscriptions and designs in bullion embroidery.

ECCLESIASTICAL ART.

DOMESTIC.

After the Law, the home is perhaps the most precious thing in the eyes of the Jew. As the former was the fountain-head of his spiritual consolation in the evil days of his outlawry, so the latter was the source of all the human comfort with which his sorrows were soothed. The domestic religious exercises prescribed by his religion afforded many opportunities for enhancing the sacred character of his home, and enabled him to illustrate both his affection for the domestic hearth, and his reverence for his faith, by numerous ritual paraphernalia, in the design and construction of which the ornamental arts were largely employed.

SABBATH REQUISITES.

The Sabbath is welcomed "as a bride" by the devout Jew. According to the Jewish proverb, "where there's light there's joy," the Sabbath Eve is ushered in by the lighting of the Lamp, the form of which is not fixed, but is often of seven burners. A cup of wine, the Kiddush Cup, or cup of sanctification, is tasted. The bread at the evening meal is of special form (Halla), and before use is covered with the Halla Cloth. The close of the Sabbath has also its own ceremonial (Habdalah), in which the Cup is used, and the senses are gratified by the sweet savour of the Spice-box.

FESTIVAL REQUISITES.

The chief Jewish festivals that are celebrated in the home, and thus require special requisites are Passover, Tabernacles, Hanuca (Feast of Dedication of the Temple), and Purim, or the Feast of Esther. The chief service of the Passover is that of the Passover Eve (Seder), when the Hagadah (the story of the Exodus) is read, with appropriate symbols. Four glasses of wine are emptied, bitter herbs are eaten, and the bread is unleavened. In the centre of the table is placed a cup for the use of the Prophet Elijah when he comes to announce the advent of the Messiah. The Feast of Tabernacles is celebrated by residence in a booth (Succa), which is built with only leaves and boughs for a roof. There is used besides the Ethrog, or citron, and the Lulab, or palm-branch, to which is attached myrtle and willow, which have all their symbolic teaching. The Feast of Dedication of the Temple, when the Lamp was miraculously kept alight for eight days, has for an appropriate symbol an eight-branched candelabrum, to which is attached a master lamp (termed "the beadle"), making nine in all; as many lamps are each evening lighted as the days of the feast that have come. Lastly, the feast that celebrates the salvation of the Jews by Esther is appropriately celebrated by reading the record of her deeds in the Megilla, or scroll of Esther, which, from ancient times, together with the Hagadah for Passover, have been richly illuminated.

For HANUCA LAMPS and KIDDUSH CUPS, see Upright Case B. For SABBATH LAMPS, see Large Central Case. For SPICE BOXES, see Upright Case E. For MEGILLA, see Flat Case No. 24.

ANTIQUITIES.

Any complete collection of Jewish antiquities would range over the whole field of historic archæology. Scattered through all the nations of the civilised world, the Jews have had points of contact with every nation that has had a history. The few specimens drawn from this wide field shown in the present Exhibition cannot profess to represent in any degree the whole field of Jewish antiquities, and only afford a glimpse of the much broader basis on which Jewish history itself rests. The collection is miscellaneous in character, and only admits of rough classification under the headings of MSS., Books, Inscriptions, Seals and Rings, Coins, and Medals.

Among the best penmen of olden medieval times, Jews take their place in the ornamentation and illumination of their books of prayer, Megillah and Hagadah, and also Bibles were illuminated. Among the first printers there were a number of Jews, and the oldest prints of the 15th and 16th centuries vie in elegance and beauty of execution with the masterpieces of non-Jewish presses. Spain and Italy boast of the first Hebrew printing establishments. Books were also printed on vellum. Woodcuts round the borders and woodcut illustrations and initials are not scarce in incunabula. Historical or family events have been recorded in medals struck for the occasion, mostly in the 18th and 19th century.

RINGS.

Jewish betrothals used to be equally formal and binding as marriages, and Betrothal Rings were made equally elaborate as Wedding Rings, which often contain the names of the wedded pair. The former in early times were used to surround a sprig of myrtle, whence their large size. At the wedding ceremony it is customary for the bridegroom to break the glass out of which the bride and he have drunk the wine of sanctification. The marriage is recorded in Hebrew in the marriage certificate (Ketubah).

For KETUBAH see Large Screen in Upper Gallery.

TEPHILLIN AND TALITH.

In literal obedience to the command "they shall be for a sign on thy hands and as frontlets between thine eyes" (Deut. vi. 8), Jews wear at times of prayer Tephillin (phylacteries), or cases including the following passages—Ex. xiii. 2-16; Deut. vi. 4-9, xi. 13-21. These are bound with intricate interlacing of the bands on the left arm and on the forehead between the eyes. Also in carrying out Numbers xv., 38, 39, garments are worn with fringes which are arranged to give the ineffable name the alphabetic value by the number of twists round the threads of the fringes.

For TALITH, or praying shawls, see Large Central Case, Nos. 1361A and 1364A.

UPPER GALLERY.

JEWISH ART.

WHETHER or not it be the fact that the precept of the Commandment against the making of any graven image or likeness of the objects of nature is responsible, out of a narrow interpretation, for the abstention of the Hebrew race from the practice of the Fine Arts, need not be considered here. It may at least be admitted that Divine ordinance, supplemented by ever-existent harrying and persecution and the consequent feeling of insecurity, is sufficient to account in considerable measure for the absence of Jewish names from the ranks of painters and sculptors of the higher class up to recent times. There have been many exceptions, no doubt. It is on record that "Meier le Brun the Jew" painted a picture on commission for Prince Edward as early as the year 1270, and it has been suggested that Lucas van Leyden (1494-1533), whose real name was Lucas Jacobsz and who based his art on that of Israel van Mecheln, belonged to the Jewish community. It is noteworthy that he excelled in engraving—a section of the graphic arts in which for many centuries Jews have been distinguished, whether in pure line engraving or in etching. Purely decorative art laid no embargo on Jewish religious susceptibility such as was imposed by the law against painting, and there is reason to suppose that many Israelite workers devoted themselves to craftsmanship. Such was Josepho de Levi of Verona (sixteenth century), who fashioned the noble bronze fire-dogs now in the South Kensington Museum; and Sir C. Purdon Clarke has pointed out that Jews took a leading part in the development of decorative glass.

As painters, then, the Jewish people, devoting themselves to the arts of music, literature, and the drama, have been little known before the nineteenth century. That they have already achieved a good deal the present exhibition testifies. In the recent past, in England, we have the names of painters of some eminence in their day. There is Solomon Hart, R.A. (1806-1881), an "historical painter," who showed his full power in essentially Jewish subjects—not merely in Bible pictures such as "The Prophet Ezekiel" or "Solomon," or even in incidents such as "The Conference between Menasseh Ben Israel and Oliver Cromwell" and "The Jews and their Proposal to Ferdinand and Isabella," but rather actualities, such as "Simchath Torah" and "The Elevation of the Law." For these are true history, not reconstructed history like the others. There is the short-lived Abraham Solomon (1824-1862), whose popular pictures "Waiting for the Verdict" and "Not Guilty," appealed so strongly to the taste of a former generation. His "Saladin in Richard's Tent" was engraved by the distinguished line engraver, Henry Lemon, examples of whose work are also to be found in the exhibition. But of infinitely greater merit as an artist was the brother, Simeon Solomon (d. 1905), who, in the opinion of many critics, had he lived and developed as he began, would have surpassed in combined poetry, imagination, and power, in character and design, his friends and fellow artists, Burne-Jones and Rossetti. Of the work of Jozef Israels, here so well represented, little need be said. He is the Jewish Rembrandt of to-day, a man who has conquered universal admiration and the applause of every school of artistic thought, and has not had to wait for his passing for his name to be inscribed on the scroll of the immortals.

To the modern section of painting and sculpture little introduction is necessary. In the main it represents the British school, but a number of examples by foreign artists have been sought out in order that some idea may be conveyed of the activity existing among Jewish artists abroad. It will be observed that every school is represented, ranging from the "Victorian" painter to the ultra-impressionist of to-day; so that in art, as in philosophy and politics, the Jew is to be found in the front ranks of the reformers and (as Burne-Jones used to say with hearty approval) of the "art-rebels." Some of the figure-painters may choose to infuse racial passion into their work by the treatment of essentially Jewish subjects, poignant in their significance and of profound sincerity; but the majority, identifying themselves entirely with their adopted country after the manner of the Jewish people, alike in feeling and in subject, show no trace of distinctive thought or differentiation of artistic sentiment.

And this, we may be sure, will be the course of future development—continual assimilation, with the single object, in this country, of advancing the honour and glory of the British school. Young men and women of ability are arising on every side who will certainly remove the reproach of the past, and the graphic arts, like the others, will before long be recognised as equal witness of the emotional and intellectual genius of the House of Israel.
