back to the time of the take-out of the policy. Here is an ill man, who puts in a claim and gets a letter back saying, "You owe us $290.40 because you got ill one year ago, and we paid your claim, and we have decided to cancel your policy from before the time that you had this first illness."

Well, Mr. Kaczynsky was a little upset, as you might think. He contacted the insurance company and was not able to get anywhere, and I understand that he wrote the superintendent of the insurance but we will come to that later. Finally, he came to see me and brought his original policy with him. Now, I want to look into the ground on which they looked into his policy. I must stress here that they predated the cancellation, and this is against the provisions of The Insurance Act.

I will detail that later, but they may not predate a cancellation. There is nothing in The Insurance Act which allows them to do this. They are breaking the law to start with even if everything else in the letter was true which it is not.

I have Mr. Kaczinsky's original application here. Question 7(a) which they refer to says, and I quote: "Have you consulted a doctor for any reason in the last five years?" Mr. Kaczinsky answered yes. It goes on to say, and the insurance agent filled it out with information from Mr. Kaczinsky that the ailment was a sore back, and that Mr. Kaczinsky was confined to hospital for two weeks and was treated by a Dr. Szymansky.

There was a complete and accurate disclosure. I said, "What about this Dr. Starkman that they refer to in their letter? It says here that in October 1963, that you consulted Dr. Starkman," and Mr. Kaczinsky said that he did not understand it. Well, we looked into it and it turned out that he had seen Dr. Starkman. His doctor in the hospital, Dr. Szymansky, wanted another opinion about this back ailment and called in Dr. Starkman, a specialist, to give another opinion about the sore back that was disclosed on the application. This was the flimsy technicality that Allstate used to cancel his policy.

The statement in Allstate's letter that there is not, and I quote, "any reference to the condition for which medical treatment was sought elsewhere in the application" is just not true. It is spelled out. He was examined and was in hospital for a sore back and Allstate just literally lied in this letter. Ultimately they admitted that and we will come to that. Well, I thought that perhaps Kaczinsky was wrong, and that his doctor was wrong. So I contacted Dr. Starkman. I thought that perhaps Allstate had investigated and Starkman had seen this man for some other reason.

Well, I happen to know Dr. Starkman, so I phoned him up and asked what did he see Kaczinsky for. He said that he saw him for a sore back. His family doctor had him in hospital and asked for a consultation, so he saw him for that reason. There was full and accurate disclosure in the application. Well, Mr. Kaczinsky wrote to Allstate and I have a copy of his letter here. On March 29 he wrote:

> Dear sirs:
> In reply to your letter of February 27, I inform you that to the question No. 7(a) on the application form which asks specifically and I quote: "To your best knowledge and belief have you consulted a doctor for any reason in the last five years," I gave the answer yes. I informed my agent, Mr. Jim Carter, on July 18, 1965, about my illness and gave him the names of doctors that attended me during that illness.
> Mr. Carter wrote down the name of Dr. Szymansky only because that doctor was the first of the named doctors whom I used. He thought probably that in case of necessity, Dr. Szymansky can give additional information concerning my illness and also the names of the remaining doctors. I also indicated my place of work and how the employees there are insured through the group insurance plan. I hope that you will reconsider your decision and will not harm me by invalidating my policy.
> Yours sincerely,

I was appalled by the circumstances in this case, because this is worse than most of the insurance cases that I get. I laid the facts before the superintendent of insurance, and because of the seriousness of this case, I am going to read the entire correspondence so you can see the role of the superintendent of insurance in this particular, unfair, improper case.

I wrote to the superintendent of insurance on October 14, 1967, as I had been campaigning at that time in preparation for the forthcoming election and as I had come to Kaczinsky's door and he told me about his problems. I wrote at that time because this is when I first became aware of it. It is addressed to Mr. J. Silver, Office of the Superintendent of Insurance, 123 Edward Street, Toronto, Ontario:

Dear Mr. Silver:

In 1965, this man, a Mr. C. Kaczinsky purchased an Allstate insurance policy. He received a letter at that time saying, "It is guaranteed renewable to age 65, and only you can cancel regardless of any change in your health." In reply to question 7(a) on his application, he had truthfully said that he had consulted a doctor in 1963 and has been treated in hospital for a back ailment and gave the name of his family doctor at that time.

On February 27, 1967, after Mr. Kaczinsky developed a stomach ulcer on a trip to Poland, the Allstate company cancelled his "non cancellable policy" on the grounds that he had not mentioned that his family doctor had called in a consultant at the time of his back ailment. They further demanded return of the payment made to him on a unrelated claim.

I have made three separate requests to Allstate for information about this case with no reply. I am further informed that there are a number of other similar cases and complaints and I would request an investigation of this firm and consideration given to cancellation of their licence.

Yours truly, Morton Shulman.

Well, I may say my requests to Allstate had been verbal ones and each time they said they would phone me back but they had not up to that point.

On October 27, 1967, I received a letter from Mr. M. B. Dawson, of the superintendent of insurance. It reads as follows:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I have now heard from the insurance company regarding the cancellation of Mr. Kaczinsky's policy. The company states that the policy was cancelled on the basis of a non-disclosure of a pre-existing condition, even though this policy was issued on a guaranteed renewable basis, the company states that in their policy there is a two-year limit placed on termination, due to mis-statements or non-disclosures. Mr. Kaczinsky's policy was actually cancelled after 19 months. The company regrets the delay in answering your telephone calls, but the file had to be drawn from the storage warehouse.

Apparently your press release and letter of October 14 were written before they had an opportunity to discuss the matter with you. Yours very truly, M. B. Dawson.

I wrote again to Mr. Silver the following day at the superintendent of insurance.

Dear Mr. Silver: Re: Allstate Insurance.

I have received a reply to my letter of October 14 from your Mr. M. B. Dawson. Unfortunately, the information which he has sent me is absolutely false, inasmuch as the pre-existing condition was a back problem which was disclosed in the application. In the light of this further incident, I once again request an investigation of Allstate and consideration given to cancellation of their licence. (Signed, Morton Shulman.)

Well, a couple of weeks went by and this time I got a letter from Mr. Sexton, the deputy superintendent of insurance. This is dated November 9, 1967, and reads as follows:

Dear Dr. Shulman:

I wish to acknowledge yours of October 28 addressed to Mr. Silver. I have been unable to find anything false in the information disclosed in Mr. Dawson's letter of October 27. He states that the policy was cancelled on the basis of non-disclosure of pre-existing conditions. As far as I can determine the pre-existing condition does not relate to a back problem. It is based on other medical information which I am not at liberty to disclose because information given to me is privileged under the Act. As you know it is not necessary for either party to disclose grounds of cancellation under the existing statutory condition of the policy. Mr. Kaczinsky could obtain the information from the company though, if he contacted them.

While we are most concerned about the conduct of any insurer, I think you will agree that unless there was evidence of continuing incompetency or unethical practice, cancellation of Allstate's licence would be unjustified.

The fact that the policy was voided from the inception date has been discussed with the insurance company. It is their position that their action was justified in view of the time limit clause in the policy. However, they have now agreed to forego their request for payment of $290.40 as set out in their cancellation letter of February 27, 1967.

Yours very truly, S. J. Sexton.

If their personal view was that, they still cancelled the policy form the beginning, they should have been prepared to give the premium back, but they did decide that he did not have to pay them money. On November 13, 1967, I wrote to Mr. Sexton again:

> Dear Mr. Sexton: Re: Allstate Insurance.
> Thank you for your letter of November 9. I wish to draw to your attention a letter of February 27 from the Allstate Company to Mr. Kaczinsky in which they state flatly that the policy is being cancelled because of consultation on October 30, 1963, with Dr. Starkman. I have interviewed Dr Starkman, and he has informed me that Mr. Kaczinsky was referred to him because of a low back pain.
> In the light of this information I would appreciate your reappraisal of this case.

And let me stress again, Mr. Chairman, I have that original letter right here, and it states very flatly why this policy is being cancelled. Let me just quote them exactly—"This policy is being cancelled because of a consultation with Dr. Starkman."

On December 15, 1967, a little over a month later, I received another letter from Mr. Sexton. This letter I am sure the Minister will find very interesting.

> Dear Dr. Shulman: Re The Allstate Insurance Company.
> I have again reviewed this complaint with Allstate Insurance Company. They confirm that their decision to cancel a contract was not based on Mr. Kaczinsky's back problem which as you point out was disclosed. Apparently their concern arose out of later disclosures which indicated medical conditions and factors which predated the application. Perhaps the company's letter of February 27 was somewhat misleading in that it does make reference to the consultation with Dr. Starkman, but it does not finally void the contract on that basis.
> You might like to discuss the subject further with Mr. Ron Walker, who is a senior officer with the Allstate Insurance Company and familiar with the problem. He has advised us that he will be pleased to explain their position to you.
> Yours truly, S J. Sexton.

Let me say this was the end of the correspondence with the superintendent of insurance. His final word to me as far as my request for a hearing on the Allstate situation in general and this particular was, I think: "Go to Allstate and they will explain it all to you."

It does appear strange that the superintendent of insurance will admit that an insurance company has sent out a misleading letter in cancelling a policy and yet still refuses to take any action. But I went to see Mr. Walker. I thought if he is the man who is in charge, this is the man I should see. I always thought the superintendent was. I had a most illuminating interview. He explained that their letter of February 27, 1967 was all a mistake. Mr. Kaczinsky's cancellation had nothing to do with Dr. Starkman at all. But it occurred because of two other reasons. I am sure the Minister will find these reasons interesting.

First, he said, Kaczinsky had not disclosed the fact that the company where he worked, de Havilland, had an Aetna group policy on all its employees. Well, let us look back at the original application which I have and which, incidentally, was filled out by the insurance agent. It was signed by Kaczinsky, and question 6 asks, "Have you any group, individual or family hospital and surgical medical expense or disability income plan in force?" and the answer below it is "Yes".

Further down, Ontario hospital and PSI is mentioned and when Kaczinsky was asked by the agent he answered "yes" truthfully, that de Havilland had a group plan, whose name he did not know. There was no reason for Kaczinsky to know the name Aetna and he showed the agent his PSI and his Ontario hospital card, and Allstate was really reaching pretty far to use that story.

I felt, what in the world difference does it make whether or not he had a group policy at work anyway. I cannot imagine anything more irrelevant.

The second new reason for cancellation is even more implausible. If it were not sad, it would be amusing. On an unsigned claim form which Mr. Walker of Allstate told me he had received in the mail there appears a question—This is presumably from Kaczinsky and I see no reason to doubt it, although it is not signed by anyone. The question is: "When were symptoms first noted?" and the answer is July 8, 1966. Well, that is all right because the policy was taken in July, 1965, so a year later I presume you are allowed to have symptoms.

Then there follows the question, "Has disease caused previous trouble?" And the answer printed below it is "Lilibet". I wondered what in the world that meant, and Mr. Walker translated this for me as meaning a little bit.

I asked Mr. Kaczinski what that meant and he said it meant he had occasional gas. Then on the form, this unsigned form, appears the question—and this is following the question, "Has disease caused previous trouble?"—"If so, when?" And the answer, on which Allstate based its cancellation, is "one to two years". This had been in force now a year and a half and he says he had had "Lilibet", call it a little bit or occasional gas from one or two years before.

Gentlemen, if the presence of gas is reason for cancellation of a health insurance policy, there will not be a Conservative member in this House eligible for such a policy.

I have found in my brief membership in this House that the government enforces some laws some of the time. So here is one more example. I wish to quote from The Insurance Act, section 232, subsection 6:

> The insurer may terminate this contract any time by giving written notice of termination to the insured and by refunding concurrently with the giving of notice, the amount of premium paid in excess of the pro rata of premium for the expired time."

That is the law. Quite clearly, Allstate did not carry out this provision of The Insurance Act. In fact, quite unlawfully they attempted to backdate their cancellation by 19 months. What is most shocking is that the superintendent of insurance was aware of and condoned this heartless act.

Now it is obvious that until we have a superintendent of insurance who enforces The Insurance Act and protects the public these crooked practices will continue, and they are crooked. Surely it is the function of the superintendent of insurance and that of the Minister to protect the public and not to protect a dishonest insurance company.

I am going to give you another case, Mr. Chairman, and in this case I think the insurance company behaved legally. I am going to show you how the insurance company behaved legally but so blatantly immorally in order to prevent paying a legitimate claim.

The second case I wish to discuss today involves a resident of Scarborough, Mr. G. Drescher, 22 Almar Avenue, and the British Pacific Insurance Company. And let me say, if you are going to buy health insurance, or for that matter any kind of insurance, the first place not to buy it is Allstate and the second place not to buy it is British Pacific. They run very neck and neck.

On April 23, 1961, Mr. Drescher took out a policy with British Pacific to protect himself and his family against financial loss; I am quoting the policy now:

> From accidental bodily injuries sustained while driving or riding within an automobile.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, this is a fairly cheap type of insurance because there are very few people statistically in our population who actually suffer accidentally bodily injury sustained while driving or riding within an automobile.

This is the type of insurance that should not really be allowed because it is sold on the basis of the fact that it is cheaper than other health insurances and agents come by and say, "Look, you only have to pay a tiny fraction of the premium to cover everything and this will cover really the important accident." But most people, unfortunately, when they get ill or they have an accident, those 99 per cent of the people do not have it as a result of a car accident. This type of insurance covers so very few things. One would think that the odd person who does buy this policy and who does happen to have an accident in a car and as a result is injured, would get paid—fat chance.

The policy said that if Mr. Drescher was injured or any member of his family while driving or riding within an automobile he would receive $200 per month until he was able to return to work. Well, the policy was great for five years. No complaints whatsoever, the insurance company certainly carried out their part of the deal. They collected the premiums every month. There were no claims and no one had any complaints.

But unfortunately, after holding the policy for five years and paying the premiums for five years, Mr. Drescher had the misfortune of being involved in a car accident.

On June 11, 1966, while stopped at a red light, he was struck from the rear and he suffered a whiplash injury so severe that he has not worked since. He has had to undergo an operation and he has been in constant pain.

The British Pacific Insurance Company refused to pay the claim because Mr. Drescher went out of his house to see his doctor. I will read their letter of refusal. I have it here.

Dated December 13, 1966

Dear Mrs. Drescher:

Re policy number 827160560.

We thank you for your letter of December 3, 1966. We were sorry to learn that Mr. Drescher had to undergo an operation.

> Unfortunately, we are unable to make any payment under this particular contract and we would refer you to part three of your policy which states as follows: "If such injury as described in the honouring clause and hereinafter accepted shall immediately after accident wholly and continuously disable and prevent a member of the family from performing each and every duty pertaining to any business or occupation, or if such member of the family is not employed and such injury shall prevent his attendance at school or his engagement in any outdoor capacity, [the next sentence is underlined] and in either case is necessarily confined within doors, the company will pay for any one accident in indemnity of one day or more at the rate of $200 per month with payments to continue so long as such disability and confinement continues."

Then the classic line, I am still quoting from the letter:

> Your husband was not, of course, totally disabled and necessarily confined within doors immediately after the accident.
> We are very sorry but we must abide by the terms laid down by the contract.
> We trust that Mr. Drescher will soon be back on his feet again.
> Yours very truly,
> British Pacific Life Insurance Company.

Well, Mr. Drescher had made two errors. First of all, the accident being in a car, unfortunately he was not immediately within his home and it says right within the policy, I will read it again:

> You must be confined within your home, totally disabled, necessarily confined indoors immediately after the accident.

Also, he went outside of his house to vist his doctor to receive treatment. This policy, I understand, will cover you provided your car is inside the house at the time of the accident and you are not taken out for any medical attention. It seems almost unbelievable that a man completely disabled from work, should lose his insurance due to going out for necessary medical services.

As a result of his inability to collect from his insurance, Mr. Drescher ultimately had to apply for public welfare. He has not worked a day since; he has not been able to. He has been in and out of hospital. He has had operations. He is still disabled today and because British Pacific have legally weaseled out of their responsibility, a man who thought he had provided for this type of eventuality, this type of disaster, is desperate and has been forced to the wall.

Surely, it is not in the public interest to allow insurance companies to get away with this type of unscrupulous chicanery. Now I have other cases here but they are really repetitious and they spell out the same type of problem. So I am going to stop at this moment, Mr. Chairman, I am going to invite comment from the Minister, on two things:

(a) First of all, in these specific injustices, will he for goodness sake interfere and see that something is done for these people?

(b) Will he properly instruct the superintendent of insurance as to what his duties are and for goodness sake, if the present legislation is not sufficient to control these rapacious, that is the only word to use, these rapacious insurance companies, bring in legislation that will make them act like decent citizens of this province.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I address myself to the question of the office of the superintendent of insurance. The office involves a responsible individual and an important operation of the department, and with reference to some observations which the hon. member made a little earlier I would have to say, and must say at once, that at no time does the superintendent have a position with respect to one side of the contract as against the other. He should have a position in that office as, if I could use the phrase, an honest broker with respect to complaints which come in.

Now there are such things as complaints which, on our own investigation, are not valid. That is quite possible. There are also complaints against underwriters which probably are valid.

Now in this area, it has been my observation that the superintendent and his office have been able to perform a useful service to the public and I am sorry and I regret that the incidents you have cited have existed.

Now with respect to these three cases which you cite, I would like to have a look at the policies myself. I will do that. I will discuss them with the superintendent personally and we will go from there. Some of the evidence that has been alleged here today would have the appearance of being pretty unsatisfactory, and I do not mean against the hon. member, I mean that in the situation; it could be unsatisfactory.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to pursue this just briefly because two or three years ago I raised a specific case which was very neat and tidy. It was the case of a lad who sought the reason why his policy had been cancelled and he could not get it. He ultimately appealed to the superintendent of insurance and got nowhere and then he appealed to me, so I interceded with the superintendent of insurance, who took some action. He contacted the company and the company told him why it had been cancelled and he, within the limits of the law, quite correctly called me back and said, "I cannot tell you why because the law does not permit me to say so, they don't have to give reasons, but I will tell you this, that I think they were justified."

Then two weeks later, because of the general investigation—by far too many people to suit the insurance company—they wrote to the man and said they had reconsidered, they would not cancel the insurance policy and they invited him to renew. Well, he told them where to go, he was not going to renew with them if there were no other insurance company. That experience raised a question which I have asked in this House before; what is the function of the superintendent of insurance? To protect the insurance company against the public, or the public against the insurance company?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I said his position is to be an honest broker.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just a minute. The Minister says it is to be an honest broker, I want to delve into the role a bit more in the context of the question I put to the Minister. What is the function of the superintendent of insurance? The Minister says it is just an honest broker. But in the process of exercising his role as an honest broker, is he protecting the insurance company against the subscriber, the premium holder, or is he protecting the premium holder against the insurance company? Now, the Kaczinsky case is a classic in this category. As the hon. member for High Park has indicated, that company acted illegally; they violated the law. Now what is the role of the honest broker when he is given factual evidence of a company violating the law? Does he just say—that is their business?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I have said that I will look at these three cases—I have taken the particulars, I will look at them, I want to look at the application myself, I want to look at the policy and the terms, and I will give it my personal attention.

Mr. MacDonald: I appreciate the Minister looking at it but I hope he will forgive me for not being immediately satisfied. We have raised this kind of thing year after year after year and nothing has happened.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I do not think it has been raised to me.

Mr. MacDonald: I have raised it with other Ministers and many of us have raised the question as to what is the role of the superintendent. And the Minister took refuge in saying that it is an honest broker, but when the honest broker discovers that there is illegal or immoral action on the part of a company, what then is the role of the superintendent of insurance or the Minister? And I want to suggest to you—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I will tell the member before he goes on, the role is to see if it is a dishonest and illegal conduct, to see that it is done.

Mr. MacDonald: What does the Minister mean, see that it is done?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just what I said.

Mr. MacDonald: Does the Minister mean seeing it is stopped in terms of saying to the company—"Thou shalt not do this any more?"

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That it is unacceptable.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, again, forgive me, but this is unsatisfactory, because this is going on, day in and day out. There is not a member in this House who will not tell you that Allstate has a reputation which has been documented here, everybody knows it. Everybody knows they are playing this sort of game all the time.

Now, what in effect the Minister is saying is, in the rare occasions when somebody happens to go to a man who acts in the role of an ombudsman like the hon. member for High Park even though he gets hooted and hollered down by Tories on the other side—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, keep this thing in a reasonable—

Mr. MacDonald: Just a minute, a man has the persistence to drive it through and has the persistence to write five letters to the superintendent of insurances' office, instead of getting sloughed off with the superintendent's office, accepting the explanations which, upon exploration did not just hold up—but nothing happens. I repeat, what is the function of the superintendent of insurance—to protect the insurance company? Up until now, that is the history.

The superintendent of insurance is there to protect the insurance companies. He is not playing the role, as I suggest to the Minister he should be playing, of a consumer protection bureau on the insurance side. He should be protecting the consumer. And I would say to the Minister that he should be so tough, that if there is one and, at most a second or a third case of this kind of conduct —and I am as certain as I am standing here that there are hundreds of such cases in the instance of Allstate, hundreds of such cases, not one or two, thousands indeed, and I am not exaggerating because anywhere you go in the insurance industry you will get this kind of a story—there is only one way to cope with it.

If you want to deal with a person who is acting illegally in exploiting the consumer, or is acting immorally in exploiting the consumer, you do not rap them slightly over the knuckles and say, "Don't do that again", you cancel their licence. Otherwise, they are going to be doing it tomorrow, and their record indicates this is the way they operate.

Now, I am being rather vigorous about this because I think the hon. member for High Park has done a very important service. Many of us in this House, in the Liberal and Conservative parties and the New Democratic Party, in my experience of 15 years, have been bringing up cases like this, and I say to the Minister, as I sit down, it is the function of the superintendent of insurance to pursue these issues, not as an honest broker who gives up when he gets sloughed off with an easy answer from an insurance company, but to pursue it with the vigour that the hon. member for High Park pursued it, until he explodes all the answers that were given.

Even when the insurance company comes up with more phoney answers, and when he finds that kind of a thing going on, let them know in advance that when it is found out, their policy is cancelled. In this way you will protect the consumers of this province from the exploitation that goes on day and day out under this jurisdiction.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Does the member mean their licences?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, cancel their licences. If I said policy I meant their licence, I am sorry.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I would like to add one further comment to what the member for High Park and the leader of this party has said. I think what is wrong, what the Minister cannot now simply slough off, is that there is something basically wrong with the reporting system of these cancellations.

It is quite ridiculous, year in and year out, for members to stand up and recite instance after instance and to have the Minister give the usual reply that he will look into the matter and deal with the particular topic at some future time. I am sure this Minister will do so. But what we tried to get, as a very minimum a year ago—and I am sure on other occasions as well, but this comes to mind—was an amendment when the revision of the automobile insurance provisions in The Insurance Act were coming through and, indeed, when other provisions were coming through this Legislature, an amendment to provide that, on any cancellation or failure to renew a policy, notice of that cancellation would be given not only to the insured person but would be given to the superintendent of insurance, so that he would know what policies—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is the member talking about any kind of policy now?

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, we dealt last year with the automobile policies and we also moved this same amendment at the time for fire insurance policies, which are the two major areas of concern. Now, the government would not support it, why I do not know. They said they would give it serious consideration. I remember distinctly the Attorney General saying that he, himself, seemed to favour the idea and we were lulled into a sense of security that he was going to bring it in as part of the bill in a proposed amendment. He did not do so.

What has to be done is a very minimum step. It is for the Minister to amend those statutes to provide, in the very first instance, that notice of cancellation of a policy, or failure to renew—which is the equivalent of a cancellation—will go to the superintendent of insurance as well as to the insured person. That, at least, will act upon the company so that they will know that the superintendent of insurance, in whatever his role is—and I share the concern of the leader of this party that the role has never been clearly defined—will have received notice of the cancellation.

And as he studies the notices and as he sees the origin of the notices, he can give consideration as to what further initiative is required on his part by way of explanation. Indeed, he might even institute a spot-checking method by which he could enquire as to the reason for cancellation of one out of every ten, or whatever the appropriate random sample might be. But we have not been able to even get that minor agreement of the government to that kind of a procedural change. All we can get is, year after year, members standing up, reading these letters, considerable time being spent by the members in order to follow them through, and then having the Minister give the same answer.

Now I would like the Minister to say whether or not he would give consideration to that kind of an amendment to the statutes which his department administers.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: To be quite frank with you, I personally would have no objection to a study of this sort, even if it were on a test period basis. But I would not want to take something on that involved some millions of items, or anything of that sort.

In the words of the hon. member for Riverdale, it is something that I have no objection to taking under consideration and, in fact, I would be glad to do that to see for my own information just what are the movements and trends in that area.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, I would like to address a few remarks to this matter of the superintendent of insurance in view of the fact that there are a good many insurance companies in my area. It is gratifying to note none have been mentioned among all the flagrant charges of the loquacious member for High Park. But I am not here to associate myself with those charges, nor am I here to defend insurance companies, but there is a point which I would like to make which I think is very relevant.

A great deal of this criticism may be justified and, again, a great deal of it may not be. However, one of the basic policies of this party had been, during their last campaign, that large rate increases should be justified by someone. We have had great increases of 23 per cent, 18 per cent, 15 per cent. There has been a public outcry. Insurance companies say they lose money. There have been charges that they do lose, other charges say they are not losing money, they are making a lot of money.

I believe—and I had it drawn to my attention—that under the present Act as it now stands there is ample provision, and specifically under section 75, so that the superintendent of insurance could have, as it says here, any licensed insurer carrying on business in the province of Ontario, prepare and file when required with the superintendent or with such statistical agency as he designates, a record of its automobile insurance premiums, its losses, expenses and its costs in Ontario.

It is my understanding that in spite of the fact that this section has been on the statute book for over 25 years, it has never been used by the superintendent of insurance. I may be wrong on that. If I am, I will be corrected. I believe a lot of the problems could be eliminated with the insurance business if the superintendent of insurance—now that there is a new one appointed, I hope that he will pursue this thought—would simply ask the insurance companies to comply with his demands under this section. I think the air would be cleared, and I have had it said to me by members of the insurance business that they would be glad to justify their charges and justify their rate increases.

Consequently, I think that any reputable insurance company would be glad to have the air cleared by the use of this and other relevant sections by the superintendent of insurance.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would like to point out in answer to the hon. member that within the last 12 months there has been a reduction in automobile insurance rates in Ontario. I will not go into the question of the comparative study and figures available between this jurisdiction and other states in other parts of Canada and in the United States, where the attractiveness of the rates here are demonstrated.

With respect to the section of the Act and the analysis of the company's revenue and expenses and the ultimate premium factor which the hon. member was referring to, this goes on and does exist to my knowledge. This was part of the matter that I was referring to yesterday, if not the day before, in the Mayerson actuarial study, where his interim report deals with the basis of rate making. This, of course, leads into an analysis of the green book, but beyond the green book into the question of the actual figures from the companies themselves. This matter is something that interests me and with the appointment of the new superintendent of insurance will be actively pursued.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, if someone else has anything to say about insurance companies I will yield the floor because I want to bring up a different topic.

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Mr. Chairman, if I might, I wonder if I might direct a question to the Minister pursuant to the remarks made by the hon. member for High Park?

I was taken, in his discussion of the case of the British Pacific Insurance Company, his relating to the House of the wording of that particular section. I do not want to get into the merits of that particular situation but as I recall there was a question of total disability and confinement within the residence. When it has to come to one's mind that if as a result of an accident the person was confined within the hospital, one then does not fall within the purview of that section of the policy that he is confined within his residence at that time.

This is so blatant—I think the hon. member for High Park used the phrase blatant. If a company, for example, is going to sell insurance that envisages total disability, it might well lead to confinement in the hospital. Then it takes the position that then you are not confined within your residence and we do not have to pay for you, that this is not—

An hon. member: It is fraud. It is a disgrace.

Mr. Bullbrook: I was not going to go quite that far as to say it was fraud, but I wonder, Mr. Chairman, is there any obligation on the superintendent of insurance in connection with an initial perusal of the actual wording of these contracts? I could stand here—as I am sure any member of the legal profession could who has done any work in ligitation—and talk to you, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, about many cases that I have had with similar types of companies and them attempting time after time to extricate themselves from a responsibility. Does the honest broker not have a responsibility to look at the wording of that contract to begin with? Does he have a responsibility to say, "It would appear to me that you can unduly extricate yourself from a responsibility that you might have to a policyholder"?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am not sure that there is any absolute responsibility on the superintendent, but there is a practice in law, I believe, where he can disapprove of a form of wording in the policy. From what came out in the debate this afternoon about the British Pacific policy, I think it was, I would like to have a look at this policy and perhaps we shall pursue it. Some of these things are so narrow that they are just not realistic; this is what we are all talking about.

Mr. Bullbrook: Would the Minister agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that this just is not a question of privacy of contract between two people, really? There should be some intrusion by government in connection with the wording of the contract.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a couple of observations about this problem that the average person has in entering into a contract. He pays the contract price which is demanded in insurance, whether it is on an automobile or on the house or whatever it may be. Then, when he makes a claim he finds that that contract is cancelled by the other side unilaterally. This, it seems to me, is one of the weaknesses in the whole insurance system in this province and elsewhere.

If I insure my home I expect that during the period of three years, or whatever it may be, that gives me coverage, and no matter what happens in the meantime—if the house burns or if there are claims against the policy—I have in good faith entered into that policy and unless I am caught by the courts in arson or something of that nature, then that contract should be valid.

I have here on my desk several cases. I am not going to quote them all, but here is one where a small apartment block in the city of Hamilton was insured for $24,000 and the furniture for $4,000. There was a claim in respect of the furniture for $45. Somebody had been smoking and the furniture caught fire. A claim of $45. Immediately after the payment of that $45 claim the insurance company imposed a $50 deductible clause on fire from tobacco products. Then just before the termination of the contract, the contract was cancelled, and a small refund made.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What company was this?

Mr. Young: This is the Glen Falls Insurance Company.

In another similar case involving ten small furnished apartments, of one to two rooms, the building was insured for $25,000, the furniture for $3,000. There were three claims during the period: April 13, 1966, a claim for $155; May 15, a claim for $70; August 14, 1967, that over a year later, a claim for $79.50. These were claims for a fire which affected mainly furniture. That was a total of $304.50. The original policy was $211.95 so that the insurance company was out a few dollars here. But after the first fire, the deductible clause was imposed so that the $50 deductible was in effect, and then at the termination, or just before the termination of the contract, it was cancelled, after the final fire in August 14, 1967.

The agent who dealt with this said the policy was cancelled because of the frequency of claims, not because of the total amount of claims, and the policies were cancelled not only on the furniture but on the buildings themselves. I do not know what the state of these buildings is. I suspect they are older buildings and they may be high in the scale of fire hazards; I do not know. The fact is they are buildings which the city has allowed to stand, buildings which have not been condemned by any authority of government, buildings upon which the owner entered upon contracts in good faith and paid his assessment for that contract Yet before the contract is terminated, because of him getting the very protection that he paid for, he first of all gets a deductible clause and then he gets a cancellation.

I think here is something that the Minister and this government ought to look into very carefully because a fire insurance contract, or a life insurance contract, whatever it may be, sickness and accident, any insurance contract should be a contract and unless, as I say, there is felony, unless there is some criminal act on which a company could void a contract of this kind, proving that the person on the one side is cheating on the contract, the contract itself should be allowed to run its course at least before a cancellation takes place.

If, at that point, the company decides that renewal is not in order, then there is something between the two participants to negotiate, but the other problem comes as soon as one company cancels a contract. Then the other companies say "no insurance either" and so a house, an apartment building, a section of the city, may be without this kind of protection even though those houses are allowed to stand there by the government, by the public authority, and not condemned in any way. Yet the company itself says, "Because of our experience of having several claims in this area, because of the kind of buildings, the wooden buildings or whatever they may be, in the area, we are not offering insurance". Somewhere here there must be a breakthrough.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What you are talking about has something to do with what I think you might describe as fire insurance in depressed areas, and this matter I undertook to look into a year ago. Let me say that in the first six months of 1968, nine cases were referred to an insurance agents' association committee where a complaint had been made to the effect that a person in a depressed area was having difficulty obtaining fire insurance. Now I think we are talking about the same thing.

All of these were given instructions with respect to the removal of fire hazards and were otherwise advised as to how their properties might be rehabilitated to the point where they would become insurable.

Three cases involved properties which had no insurable value, since any value was in the land, and the owners were told that an appraisal would be necessary before this insurance could be made available.

Five of the cases submitted were rooming houses or speculative business investments.

As a statement of principle, my information is that an insurance market is available for any property which meets reasonable insurance underwriting requirements. I do not think that that is necessarily unreasonable. I think it is reasonable, and this availability of market was the subject of our discussion a year ago.

Mr. Young: This, in effect, Mr. Chairman, gives the insurance industry the determination as to whether or not the buildings should stay. Now there may be some sense in them having the power to say whether or not this is a risk or is not a risk, and yet somehow that gap has to be filled. If the insurance company says this building is not insurable, then it seems a public authority at that point ought to move in and say that renovation should take place.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think we had better make it clear here that I know of no principle or legislation in this country, anywhere in Canada, that forces one party to a contract to enter into that contract. There are a number of risks that we all could mention where there is no insurance available because of the nature of the risk. I do not know of any absolute rule where everything in life is insurable.

Mr. Young: I am not saying that, Mr. Chairman. The thing that I am saying is that in this gray area, surely if an insurance company says that these buildings are not insurable, that should then, of course, be a concern for the public authority, and at that point something ought to be done. How that liaison can be worked out I am not sure. Perhaps the Minister has some ideas here.

Certainly if a building is so far gone that it is not insurable then it should be the concern of a public authority, and it may well be that if the public authority is not willing to move at that point then the citizens will have to take things into their own hands and perhaps make a change in governments, I do not know. But in any case, I think there is a problem here and it may be that I should advise the people who have written me here to get in touch with the Minister or with his department, to see what might be done in these particular cases.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, on the subject of fire insurance, I am glad my colleague from Yorkview has brought this up because we have now dealt with automobile insurance, health insurance, and I am delighted we have now come to fire insurance. There is quite a different problem in relation to fire insurance but one that is apparently perfectly legal and again, to my mind, an injustice—not as grave an injustice as the ones related earlier, but an injustice. To illustrate again, because I find it easier to explain these things if I have a specific case to illustrate the problem—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Why do you not come to the principle?

Mr. Shulman: I will come to the principle, Mr. Chairman, but I find that the members opposite find it a little easier to accept a principle if there are specifics to back it up. So I would like to give the Minister, through you, sir, the specifics of one or perhaps more cases so that he will understand the problem which persons have who take out fire insurance. Let me say to begin with that fire insurance is very similar to health insurance; it is great as long as you do not have a fire. I have never had a complaint yet from anyone who had a policy who had not had a fire, they never found anything but the greatest of courtesy from the fire insurance companies.

However, it does not work quite as well if you have a fire. I have a letter here from a Mrs. Marion Thomson. She lives at 134 Crescent Road, Toronto 5, and she sent me this letter a few weeks ago—March 6, 1968, and it spells the problem out very well so I will read it:

Toronto 5.

Dear Dr. Shulman:

Pursuant to my letter responding to your recent advertisement re automobile insurance claims, I should like to mention there is need also for examining in respect to fire insurance coverages.

I have been carrying $15,000 worth of insurance on my house for the past 15 years. This was much less than was advisable but indeed the most I could manage. I had a fire here about three months ago causing some $7,000 damage to the dwelling itself. The Wellington Fire Insurance Company advised me they would reckon their liability on a pro rata basis and, therefore, would only cover $5,000 of my loss unless taking into account a deduction for depreciation.

When one pays for $15,000 of insurance, one expects to be protected for $15,000 of damage. Under such circumstances, one does carry the risk of total loss in the event of damage over and above the amount to which one is covered. Surely this sort of dealing is unfair. I cannot see where one can be so informed in advance that this is the basis upon which insurance coverage is set. It certainly was never brought to my attention prior to the fire loss.

Yours very truly,

Mrs. Thomson.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You have got a bad case there.

Mr. Shulman: I find it interesting that the Minister of Correctional Services finds this a bad case. He is right, it is a bad case because the whole principle is bad.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member mind if I asked a couple of questions on this?

Mr. Shulman: By all means.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I was listening with a great deal of interest to this whole debate, and there is a great deal with which we should concern ourselves—some of the matters which have been brought up have been familiar to most of us for some years.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Why do you not do something about it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, this is another matter. Let us stick to the point. In the first place, the hon. member for Yorkview started out to talk about contents insurance and then wound up talking, for some reason or other, without—

Mr. Shulman: Is the Minister asking me questions?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, I am going to relate this. I am trying to point out that you can confuse this so badly that you really spoil a good case sometimes. He started to talk about fire insurance on furniture and that the person had three claims and for some reason or other we got involved in the building insurance.

Mr. Young: The insurance on the building was also cancelled.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course, there could be a reason. I am not saying in that case. But there could be a reason where the fire insurance companies found out that there was bad housekeeping. A person may keep the kind of a house where they are asking for a fire by leaving a lot of rubbish around and so on. Let me get to the hon. member's case. It is possible to get your insurance a lot cheaper if you do not insure up to a certain level, I think it is 80 per cent for replacement insurance.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Correct, 80 per cent!

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If you insure for 80 per cent of its actual value, then you get replacement cost, and you are not a co-insurer yourself. The company will pay the full claim and will pay the replacement value, if I recall it—because I have not sold an insurance policy since Pike's Peak was a pimple. You offer this to the applicant and say, "Now, you can get it cheaper if you want to just insure for a specific amount."

Now, obviously if I have a residence which is worth $50,000 and I can get $15,000 of insurance on it without insuring the other $35,000, I can get that a lot cheaper. But which part has been burned down? The part that was uninsured or the part that was insured?

And obviously if I buy only $15,000 of insurance and exepect that the part I have insured is the part where the damage has been, it is unfair to the insurers obviously. So the insurers give you the opportunity to choose and say, "If you pay a higher premium, take 80 per cent of the total value, then we will consider the whole place insured and we will pay you 100 per cent, not only of the claim, but 100 per cent replacement value."

So the hon. member did not bring out a good case there, and it is unfair in this instance to the insurance companies to bring that out as bad practice, unless he wants to argue that the applicant did not get this opportunity. I cannot understand that because an insurance agent obviously would want to sell more insurance if he could, because he gets a higher commission on a higher premium.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Well, what is the Minister's question?

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the Minister interrupted me, saying he wanted to ask a question and he has given an interesting speech, but I guess he forgot the question. Does he have a question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The question was, has the member gone to the trouble of finding out whether the lady in fact was aware of the terms of her insurance and that she could have gotten complete coverage had she paid a slightly higher premium?

Mr. Shulman: Well now, if the Minister had been willing to wait a few minutes, he would have found all this out. Yes, of course, she was not aware and the public is not aware. If we may just compare fire insurance to life insurance where it becomes very obvious; it is just as though you were to take out a life insurance policy for $15,000 and then you die and the wife goes to collect the $15,000 and they say, "Oh, no, his life was worth more than $15,000, his life was worth $50,000, therefore we are going to pay only a proportionate amount."

Or take auto insurance: Suppose you have an automobile insurance policy and you take out a policy for $2,000 and your car has $1,000 damage. They say, "Well, we are going to pay you only half of that because the car is worth $4,000." The whole logic is wrong. But the basic point—getting away from the Minister's question, if it was a question—is that the public believes wrongly, unfortunately, that when they take a certain amount of insurance, be it fire insurance or car insurance, or life insurance, that they have insurance up to that amount of damage, and this appears to me to be a reasonable belief.

It may not be reasonable to an insurance salesman, obviously it is not to the Minister of Correctional Services, but it appears to me, as a non-insurance salesman and as a non-lawyer, a reasonable expectation that if I have $5,000 worth of insurance on my home and there is $5,000 damage or more, I will collect $5,000.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Even though the insurance man offered her the choice.

Mr. Shulman: It is not in the policy.

Hon Mr. Grossman: It is in the policy. As I just explained to the hon. member.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Correctional Services will have plenty of opportunity to make his speech. Will you please try and keep order on the front benches if possible, until I am through and then I am sure the Minister will have a great deal to say.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hope the hon. member does not say I am walking out on him, but I was giving him the courtesy of my attention for about two and a half hours because I was interested in what he had to say —but if he gets insulting because I want to engage in a discussion—

Mr. C. C. Pilkey (Oshawa): Oh, do not be so thin-skinned!

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I feel this is the second time I have reached the Minister this session and I am rather pleased. Come back, do not go away mad.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am not mad. I am just too busy.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. Minister did not bow to the chair as he left, I think it should be drawn to your attention. To carry on, the point here is that the basis upon which fire insurance is sold is wrong, because the public are not technicians in this field; they are not technicians in any field, and when they buy $X of insurance, they believe, and it is a normal belief, that they should have $X of coverage.

Now, when someone has a house that is worth $25,000 and they buy $10,000 worth of insurance, they think, "Well, it is not likely there will be more than $10,000 damage. If there is, I will have to cover it because I do not want to spend a tremendous amount of money for insurance" and this is the basis on which this type of insurance should be sold, the same as every other type of insurance.

I am aware this is not the basis on which it is sold, everyone in this House is aware now that this is not the basis on which fire insurance is sold, but this is the wrong basis. And may I suggest to the Minister and through him to the superintendent of insurance, and through the superintendent of insurance to the fire insurance companies, that at least on non-commercial risks, private individuals who cannot be expected to have this technical knowledge, this is not the basis on which the policy should be sold.

There should be a new look taken at fire insurance so if you buy $5,000 worth of insurance, you have $5,000 worth of coverage, because otherwise the public, not being technically minded is going to continue to be disappointed in insurance, it is going to continue to have this particular type of tragedy occur, where they suddenly find to their great shock and disappointment that they do not have the coverage which they believed they did have.

Now, there is no illegality here; it is purely and simply a concept of insurance which the insurance companies hold and which is not understood by the public and it is a concept which is never going to be understood by the public. So let me suggest again, perhaps, a change of concept. Raise the rates if you have to, set your rates at a fair level, but put it so that when someone buys a policy for that number of dollars, he has that amount of coverage.

Mr. MacDonald: I have two brief items, Mr. Chairman, that I want to raise. One, with regard to the Minister's indication in his introductory statement of a number of research studies that were being done. One is mentioned as follows, "actuarial studies being made into the matter of automobile insurance". I wonder if the Minister could give us a somewhat clearer picture of exactly what that study is?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This is the Mayerson study that I discussed twice here in these estimates.

It is a joint effort with all the provinces, and there is an interim report from which I quoted several paragraphs yesterday. The final report is expected this fall.

Mr. MacDonald: The other point, Mr. Chairman, that I wanted to deal with is that I am sure that the Minister does not wish to perpetuate false statements with regard to the other jurisdiction and the continuing argument on car insurance. I replied to him when he made some comments in his introduction, and our friend from Humber (Mr. Ben) intervened. I replied at that time without the authorities from Saskatchewan.

I want to put two brief comments on the record, and I hope we can end, once and for all, any repetition in this House from a Minister of the Crown, or from any Opposition member on the Liberal side of the House, the argument that the Saskatchewan car insurance is being subsidized out of the public treasury. It simply is not a fact, and each time that it is repeated, Mr. Chairman, you are regurgitating the ghost writings from the insurance companies.

Now let me put two comments on the record. I am not arguing from this point forward. I am simply quoting and the record is there. The first will be of particular interest to our Liberal friend from Humber.

This is the Regina Leader-Post, October 11, 1960. I am certain the date is—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: No. I am sorry, it is a photostatic copy and the date is blurred, but I am sure it is October 11, 1966. In any case it is a comment by the Minister in charge. I quote:

> Charges by an Ontario insurance federation president that Saskatchewan government auto insurance was "the cruelest hoax ever perpetrated in a province" were described as insulting and blatantly misleading.
> The Hon. Dave Boldt, Minister in charge of Saskatchewan government insurance office, said John E. Lowes of Peterborough, the president, used distorted facts, misleading to the public.
> Mr. Boldt said this was despite the fact that information on the auto insurance scheme was available to any individual and in fact had been offered to Mr. Lowes earlier this year.
> Mr. Lowes has said that even with government support, and paying no taxes, the scheme still ran a deficit and he alleged that money from penalty premiums on operators' licences for previously convicted drivers went as unreported income. "Mr. Lowes must know," said Mr. Boldt, "that the provincial Treasury has never financially supported the automobile accident insurance fund." The Minister said Mr. Lowes must also know that both the SGIO—that is the Saskatchewan government insurance office—and the fund pay all applicable premium taxes as well as grants in lieu of taxes to all municipal bodies. "I am amazed that Mr. Lowes had the audacity to obviously misinterpret facts, and misinform the public. Mr. Lowes' remarks are an insult to the government of this province," Mr. Bodlt continued.

That is not a New Democrat speaking, that is the Minister in charge in the department in the Liberal government in Saskatchewan—and they are flaming free enterprisers!

Mr. Pilkey: Kind of explodes the myth.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Tell us about the 40 per cent of employees that were card carrying CCF members.

Mr. Pilkey: Do not get off the subject.

Mr. MacDonald: You cannot deal with the point we have nailed down, so you move off to another canard.

Mr. Chairman, the second quotation that I wanted to put on the record is from the 1966 annual report of the Saskatchewan government insurance office. It is from page 5, entitled The Automobile Accident Insurance Act.

> This Act, administered by the Saskatchewan government insurance office on behalf of the provincial government, provides a comprehensive automobile accident insurance plan for the protection of the public in this province. Premiums paid by motorists create a fund from which benefits are paid in the event of death, injuries and damages sustained in automobile accidents. Any surplus overpayment is used to increase benefits, reduce premiums or absorb deficits in periods of high accident frequencies.
> The surplus is not transferable to the general operations of the Saskatchewan government insurance office, nor is any surplus credited to the provincial government. Since inception of the Act in 1946, the fund has been self-supporting, without contribution from either the Saskatchewan government insurance office or the Treasury of the province.

I trust that if you wish to renew the argument, at least next time—I say to the member for London South—it will be a new canard, not the old one that has been laid low.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss Prudential Finance under this vote, and certain aspects that have to do with insurance. I am going to refer to the superintendent of insurance now, and his role and the role of this government in relation to the plight of certain individuals who have been involved in automobile accidents in this province and who carried insurance with the wrong companies.

I am referring specifically to Mr. and Mrs. William Craig, 26 Kenneth Avenue, Toronto. They bought a policy some years ago with the North American General Insurance Company. I have the original policy here. Back in November of 1965, Mrs. Craig ran into the rear of another car, and may I say that at the time that this accident occurred—November, 1965—the North American General Insurance had no connection whatsoever with the Prudential empire. There were certain damages to the automobile of the other person. There were certain physical damages to the driver of the other car.

The Craigs thought at that time they had adequate insurance; their coverage was $200,000 for personal damages and $50 deductible on the collision, so they were very well covered, certainly better covered than the average person in this province. So they did not worry about it. They got in touch with the North American Insurance Company and they said, fine we will send an appraiser out and fix everything up for you, and the Craigs forgot about it. This was in November 1965.

In January 1966, a couple of months later, North American General Insurance control was sold to the Prudential Finance Corporation, which should not have really affected the Craigs because what did they care about what happened to the control of that company? Unfortunately on December 5, 1966, Prudential Finance went bankrupt and North American followed it, and now begins the most incredible series of events.

Today, the Craigs are informed that the insurance that they had back in 1965 was no good. "You are not covered for that accident you had. North American never got around to settling it. There is a suit against you now for $15,000 by the persons in the other car." The Clarkson Company, for some reason with which I am not clear, supplied a lawyer to the Craigs to fight this case in court. This lawyer came up to them a couple of weeks ago and he said, "You cannot win this case, you know, because it was your fault, you had no coverage. You may have thought you had an insurance policy, but you did not have an insurance policy because a few months later your company was bought out by Prudential and a year after that Prudential went bankrupt, therefore, your coverage is no good. Therefore, you better pay the $15,000. If you pay it now, we can arrange for you to pay it off on a monthly basis, instead of having to lose your home and have it all taken from you in one shot."

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is just one point, and I am sure the hon. member would want the record to be clear—the bankruptcy was not the reason for the legal opinion as to the liability. I gather from what you are saying that the bankruptcy led into the legal opinion about liability, but it had nothing to do with it. The legal liability was on the facts of the accident.

Mr. Martel: Oh, take a pill!

Mr. Shulman: There is no question about liability. The Minister is perfectly right. Mrs. Craig ran into the back of another car; she was responsible for the accident. This is not the point of issue, and on that basis, leaving the insurance aside for the moment, her lawyer advised her, "You are going to have to pay", and she said, "What about my insurance?" because she thought she had insurance. She did have insurance. The lawyer tells her, "Too bad there is no money for that." Mr. Craig is an assembler, not a wealthy man; he is an assembler and earns $125 a week. He has managed to save over the years enough money to buy his own home, and nothing more. He owns that home and has no other savings—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): He should have read the book "How to Make a Million."

Mr. Shulman: He should not have lived in the province where we have such awful laws and where you stand and defend them. I am ashamed of you.

Mr. Martel: This is coming from all over. The Tories do not like to hear this stuff.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, let us just consider this situation. When we discuss the investors who lost money in Prudential we have the Ministers of the Crown getting up and saying that they were greedy, they wanted an extra half of one per cent of interest. Therefore we cannot step in and do anything for them. But what crime did the Craigs commit? What did they do wrong? They thought that they protected themselves, and they bought their insurance. What did they do wrong? Why should they be penalized and suffer? Surely if there was ever a case of injustice this is it. Now I say, through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister; for goodness sake, surely government in this enlightened country should have enough sense of duty—

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): There is more to the story.

Mr. Shulman: There is no more to the story. I invite the Minister to contribute if there is more to the story, because I laid these facts in front of him some weeks ago.

Mr. Pilkey: He is living in the dark ages.

Mr. Shulman: The Minister is aware of these facts. I will invite him to contribute anything to the debate—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I got some of the facts for you—

Mr. Shulman: Fine, yes, the Minister and I agree on the facts. Now that we do agree on the facts, I say to the Minister through you, sir, inasmuch as we agree on the facts, and I am glad that the Minister said that for the benefit of some of his backbenchers who were doubting the fact, inasmuch as we agree on the facts, and this is the situation, surely it is a function of government to intervene now to save these people from this financial catastrophe? Why should they lose their home when they did not do anything wrong? I submit to you, sir, and everyone in the House that it should be the proper function of government, even if it is a Conservative government with all of your prejudices and all of your obstinacy, in a case of obvious injustice to step in and do something about it.

Surely there is some government fund from which you can appropriate this money and if there is not surely you can bring in a bill which will allow this particular claim to be paid and that of a few other people who are in the same mess through no fault of their own? These people are absolutely innocent. There are two or three others that I am aware of and I believe that one of them was brought up by the member for York Centre. They have done nothing wrong and obeyed every law and tried to be prudent. Why should they be forced into bankruptcy through no fault of their own, or worse, forced to leave this country? I ask him, through you, sir, please, please, of everything else I have said to you today, I feel that this is the greatest injustice. Please intervene in this case and do something.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have something to say about this situation. There is just one question about the facts. I do not think that it is relative, but I think that the record should be straight—the original policy to the Craigs, I think, was with the Wentworth Company, and arising from the subsequent running off the Wentworth business into North American General, or was it the other way around?

Mr. Shulman: This policy is North American.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It was the other way around. Well, it started with the Wentworth and ended up with North American. These circumstances relate around Wentworth Insurance Company, which is an Ontario corporation, and any reference to the distinguishing difference between North American General in the same corporate context was that North American General was a federal company and operated directly under a federal Act. In September of 1966, because of difficulties the Wentworth Insurance company was experiencing, it was agreed to run off its business.

Renewals would be taken up by its associate, the North American General, which was a federal company and acting under the federal superintendent of insurance.

It was given a discontinuing licence at the end of September, 1966. Early in December of the same year, the liquidator of Prudential Finance Company, the controlling shareholder, came to the conclusion that Wentworth was in an insolvent position and applied for a winding-up order pursuant to the provisions of the winding up Act of the revised statutes of Canada of 1952.

It shortly became apparent that there was conflict between the distribution provisions of the winding up Act, and those of The Ontario Insurance Act. Because the bulk of the assets were in the form of a deposit with the Minister, and it was contended by the superintendent, that is, the Ontario superintendent, that these assets could only be distributed according to the priorities set out in the provincial Act.

These provisions gave claimants under policies a preference, whereas under the federal Act, policyholders' claims for earned premium ranked equally with loss claimants, and were required to be paid on a pro rata basis.

The liquidator of the company, Wentworth, made a reference to the local master of the Supreme Court of Ontario, and there was a finding in favour of the priorities set out under the Ontario Act. This finding was appealed to a judge of a Supreme Court of Ontario who affirmed the master's finding.

It was again appealed and the court of appeal for Ontario ruled that The Ontario Insurance Act was inapplicable and the federal Act was paramount, therefore winding up that the provisions of the federal Act would govern. Therefore all claimants were entitled to be paid on an equal basis. The judgment in this matter by the court of appeal of Ontario was delivered on May 8, 1968.

At the present time, leave for appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada has been sought and there is good reason to believe that it will be granted, because I think that this case has got to go on to the Supreme Court for adjudication before the matter can quite frankly be either negotiated with the federal authorities or the bankruptcy law reviewed with respect to the subject matter.

Now, if this leave for appeal has been granted, and I am informed that it is, the case will finally be determined this fall. In the meantime, it is not possible to liquidate or make any payment out of the money in his possession.

He must wait until the issue is settled by the Supreme Court.

To date there have been approximately 400 automobile claims recorded by the liquidator and which are reserved on a gross basis of some $337,000. In addition there are about 160 miscellaneous claims amounting to $85,000.

It is difficult to advise how much money will be available to claimants after expenses of liquidation are paid. It is likely that it will be substantially less than 100 per cent, particularly if the judgment of the court of appeal is affirmed.

I understand that the liquidator has managed to reach agreement with a considerable number of claimants who will await the outcome of the appeal.

Now those are the facts of the case. This is where the matter is.

The issue is a constitutional one, as to the priorities between the winding up Act of Canada and The Insurance Act of Ontario.

There is one other aspect to this and it has to do with the question of the proceeds of the re-insurance which exists in the case, and whether or not that re-insurance goes into the general fund available to all creditors or whether the re-insurance, by its very nature, is tied to each of the insurance policies and so available to the individual policies. These are quite important points that are at issue, and we are interested in seeing that the greatest satisfaction from our point of view. Our argument must be in support of the Ontario law. But if we are successful in that, it will be helpful to the claimants as well.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, obviously we are talking about two different things. The hon. Minister is talking about going to the court of appeal, and to the Supreme Court. What good is that to the Craigs? What I am asking him to do is show a little humanity and appropriate enough money—it is not a large sum that is involved here—to cover these immediate, absolute essentials. If you win these court cases again you finally find you can get this money back, well and good. But in the meanwhile are these lives to be ruined? This is not a matter of legal argument as to whether The Ontario Act is to rule or the Canadian Act is to rule.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is relevant.

Mr. Shulman: It is relevant but not important. The important thing here is you are either going to do something for these people or you are not. Then by all means go ahead and have your long legal—

Mr. White: If we started discretionary payments of the public funds at the discretion of the government, you would be after us morning, noon and night.

Mr. J. Renwick: Oh, do not be crazy.

Mr. Shulman: If the member for London South wishes the floor I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park has the floor. Order please!

Vote 703.

Mr. Shulman: The matter is really a very simple one. It cannot wait because in the meanwhile people are going to be ruined. Now what I am asking the Minister, and I guess I did not make myself clear enough, is to take enough money to settle these immediate problems. I should think all the claims together would not amount to $50,000 or $60,000. And then if you are right in your legal interpretation ultimately you will get that money back. But in the meanwhile have some humanity and that is what this a matter of, not some dry legal statistics. It is a matter of humanity.

Yes, I want a discretionary payment. Yes, because if you do not, you are going to ruin lives, and yes, I think that is more important than all the questions in this House.

Mr. White: Yes, and if we did that it would open the flood gates in a way that is not possible in any modern jurisdiction in the world.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, in the annual report of the department, we read about the superintendent of insurance division. It keeps a guardian eye on the many billions of dollars people of this province have entrusted to insurance companies, loan and trust corporations, investment contract companies and prepaid hospital and medical plans.

The situation regarding insurance companies and the operations of the department of insurance are quite different from those of the Ontario securities commission. The responsibility of the securities commission is basically plain and true disclosure, but this one refers to keeping a guardian eye. The people referred to by the hon. member for High Park do have a basic reason and a sound reason for looking to the department for assistance in this case, because the department has specifically the responsibility for keeping a guardian eye on these companies.

They can, I think, rightfully assume that this guardian eye entails watching that there are resources to pay the claims which they make. They pay their premiums. They have entrusted their billions of dollars in one way or another to the department to keep this guardian eye. The department has, over the years, increased its staff many times to cope with the increased number of companies and the volume of business being done, and I do not think this situation is the same as that of the securities commission in its responsibilities.

The department specifically says it has the responsibility of keeping a guardian eye. I think it is important that we not only have the government give consideration in this case to taking care of the intermediate needs of the claimants on these insurance companies under the circumstances, until the case is clarified as to whether there are funds to pay out these moneys, but I also think the department should report to this House what procedures it is taking to ensure that the companies have the funds necessary to pay claims.

I think we should have some explanation now as to what procedures are being followed by the department of insurance to see that there are not more Wentworth insurance companies. It was the first, perhaps, but we want to know if there are steps being taken constantly to watch over the financial position and the resources of the companies.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In connection with the inspection of this company by this branch, sufficient assets to meet the requirements of the company and the claims under the outstanding policies were available and inspected in detail and vouched for. Subsequently, there is only one word that can be used—one of the officials of the company stole the assets improperly and this contributed and led to the—

Mr. MacDonald: How do you steal "properly"?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is a good question. But these matters are currently before the courts and I am sure the hon. member knows as much or more than I do about some of the ways people in the financial world were deceived, reputable companies and so on. I just simply leave this because this is not the time or the place to go into the matter. The charges are outstanding but the assets were there, under the current inspection, to meet the requirements of the policy holders. The situation was all right until certain assets disappeared and were not available, and they were improperly taken.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the issue was raised yesterday about the matter of fidelity insurance, or insurance to cover stealing from organizations. Is this a requirement of the department that the insurance companies do carry insurance against such events, when officials steal?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, there was fidelity insurance in the case of Wentworth and the claim has been submitted, I understand, by the liquidator to the underwriter.

Mr. Deacon: In that event, Mr. Chairman, would not the government then be quite safe, in view of the ability to recover from the fidelity insurance bond and perhaps in addition they can make a full recovery through winning the case in the Supreme Court?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just to keep the records clear, if the defalcation is partially covered.

Mr. Deacon: It is partially covered. The requirements of the department are that they have insurance to fully cover. I thought I understood from your answer that there was fidelity insurance to fully cover claims.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not necessarily in all of the instances.

Mr. Deacon: I think, Mr. Chairman, that it is very unwise of the department to claim to keep a guardian eye unless it sees that these situations are covered. They are not very difficult to cover. It would not be difficult to set amounts and standards of insurance in these events that would fully protect the policy holders against defalcation. I would feel that in the case of the investment industry these should be the requirements that the department should insist on to safeguard the interest of the public. These people are suffering a great hardship as a result of the claims that they are having to pay, and that they thought they were protected against.

The government is in a position where it can see any payments they make being recovered through the insurance that is outstanding or perhaps being successful in the Supreme Court. I think there should be action taken at least to partially alleviate their burden and I would ask the Minister to give consideration to doing this.

I would also ask the Minister to tell us in some detail of how they are checking the financial resources of the insurance companies. Are they doing merely a check of the annual report or is there more frequent inspection or a questionnaire being submitted?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: All Ontario insurance, loan and trust companies and corporations are subject to annual inspection by examiners of the office of the superintendent of insurance and the office of the registrar of loan and trust corporations. These examinations may and do take place at any time without prior notice. In addition, these companies make returns during the year to the department and further inspections may be and are made on the basis of examination of these returns or any other information coming to the attention of the department. The fact of the matter is that no system of inspection can completely eliminate all possibility of loss, especially losses arising out of misappropriation of assets. But the record of the office of superintendent in preventing losses to Ontario policy holders compares most favourably with that of other jurisdictions.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I agree that our records compare favourably but I do not think that we are proud of any defalcation or any failure of any insurance companies, nor is the insurance industry proud. I am sure that the insurance industry could develop, in co-operation with the Minister, a system whereby much more frequent than annual questionnaires are submitted. They do not need to be in greater detail than those that I am sure the insurance companies have available for their own internal records. In this way, when an inspector goes in from the department to look over the company's position, he has a very recent report of the company's position to refer to, and if there is a major change he has a basis on which to question what developments within the company have occurred and why there would be such a discrepancy between the most recent questionnaire the company might have answered and what the auditor or inspector happens to find.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think this would not cover the situation where misappropriation of assets took place.

Mr. Deacon: I think, Mr. Chairman, my comments in that regard will be well covered if there is adequate insurance insisted upon by the department to cover misappropriation of funds, and the Minister has not given an answer to me in that regard. What steps are taken by the department to ensure that there is sufficient insurance coverage against misappropriation of funds? How does the department measure whether the coverage is adequate? What standards of coverage does it request?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The situation was that in the Prudential group there was fidelity insurance which, according to the standards of the day, was sufficient and adequate to meet the potential risks that might be contemplated. The fact was that when the whole Prudential empire went the fidelity policy of course was not adequate because all of the companies, or a number of them, went into receivership. As far as I am concerned that situation will not repeat itself today.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the Minister still is not answering my question about what standards the department is requiring now in insurance coverage in such circumstances.

What are you doing today to ensure that no repetition of Wentworth could occur?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Maintaining and requiring individual policies with respect to each company which is licensed by the department.

Mr. Deacon: Do you have a schedule of insurance coverage that you require so that there is a definite assurance on your part—you are quite fully assured that this coverage is adequate?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That situation would vary according to each licensed company which is under inspection.

Mr. Deacon: In other words, the department negotiates with each company.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I did not say negotiate; I said the department's requirements would differ from each licensed company.

Mr. Deacon: Do you have a schedule of such requirements so each company knows what is required of them?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The company is notified of the requirements against their situation on their balance sheet.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 703; the member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Just to pick up the thread of the argument from the member for York Centre, what are the criteria that are used to determine what the requirements for a particular company may be? There must be some criteria.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The size of the company, the amount of insurance at risk, and the requirements that might be made upon it.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, Mr. Chairman, are these reduced to writing somewhere within the department?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Against what?

Mr. J. Renwick: Are these reduced to writing somewhere within the department, or is it done off the seat of your pants?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, it is not done off the seat of your pants or of ours.

Mr. J. Renwick: How is it done?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We try to do it in a business-like way, because the inspection staff of the branch are in constant communication with these people and particularly at the time when these requirements are being established. What they were doing two or three years ago I have no knowledge of, but I am satisfied that they are applying a better test of judgment to the current situation than before.

Mr. J. Renwick: I only picked it up because the Minister is getting more unresponsive as the afternoon wears on to the enquiries that have been made.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have been pretty responsive, have I not? I thought I was being friendly to the hon. member for Riverdale—co-operative.

Mr. J. Renwick: I am not questioning your friendliness, I am just questioning your responsiveness to the questions which have been put to you. I am concerned that the Minister has not been clear about the case put by the member for High Park and the other case put by the member for York Centre about the North American Insurance Company, and the positions specifically of the Craigs. Has the department, in fact, considered the claim and the position of the Craigs and come to some decision about it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This situation was referred to me by the member for High Park and I got the information and it was not convenient for me to step over to see him one day. But my deputy did and the member for High Park said, I will sure be bringing this up in the House; which was fair comment and which he did. What has not been said, and which is one of the facts of this file, is that the Craigs cannot be said to have been co-operative, either in the hearing of the case, the bringing of it to trial or in the relationship with the underwriters who were subsequently replaced by the liquidator or the trustee in bankruptcy. Their co-operation obviously left a good deal to be desired.

Mr. Shulman: They did not want to pay the money and lose their home.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, the general co-operation left a lot to be desired, that is all I am saying.

We, from our point of view, are in touch with the liquidator and also with respect to the action at Ottawa with the proceeds of the re-insurance and the allocation of the available assets for distribution. We are trying to move this as quickly as possible but no determination has been made by the government with respect to the subject raised by the member for Riverdale and prior by the member for High Park.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, going back to the Wentworth situation, was there any policy set down by the department as to fiduciary bonds placed on directors for defalcation? May I ask that question please?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The insurance that I was talking about, sir, covered the whole Prudential group.

Mr. De Monte: No, I mean was there any fiduciary bond on the director that absconded with the funds in the Wentworth disasters?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes.

Mr. De Monte: May I ask you how much it was?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would have to get that information for you.

Mr. De Monte: The other point is, Mr. Chairman, is there any policy by the department now about placing fiduciary bonds on directors of insurance companies and if there is, what percentage of the capital, or what amount of bond is required by the department?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That was answered a few moments ago. The answer is yes, that in the individual cases the requirements of the company and obligations and the nature of the assets would lead to the nature of the coverage required; a major change from the Prudential situation, where a single policy covered all the groups in that corporate structure. Individual policies are now required.

Mr. De Monte: May I ask this question, Mr. Chairman, is it the policy of the department now to request fiduciary bonds on all directors of insurance companies for defalcation? I am just trying to find out whether it is a policy, or whether it is a helter skelter idea that is—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The policy is in favour of the company against defalcation by any representative of management or officials.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Perhaps in order to satisfy this question of the standard adopted by the department in this regard of fiduciary coverage now, would the Minister gives us three or four examples of the insurance that is insisted upon and required by the fiduciary bonds to protect policy holders against defalcation? I think that if we had some examples it might help us to see just how this works now.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would be glad to discuss it with the hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I would like to revert to the Craigs briefly. Is the Minister willing to undertake that he would arrange with the superintendent of insurance to have the specific instances of persons in the same position as the Craig family considered and studied by this superintendent of insurance with a view to making a recommendation to the Minister as to whether there was any merit in the government considering special compensation for them?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Well, I see no reason why we should not have the benefit of the superintendent's views; I would be glad to secure it.

Mr. Shulman: I would just like to make one suggestion in this matter. The position might not be unfavourably compared to that of someone who had not carried insurance at all, because although they had paid for it apparently they did not have it. I wonder if the Minister would give some consideration, considering all the circumstances in this case, to having the motor vehicle unsatisfied judgment fund pay this claim? This would appear to me to be a fair and equitable and honest way out of this very unhappy situation and I would be most happy if the Minister would give some consideration to this.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: As I told the member for High Park yesterday that particular administration does not come within my personal jurisdiction.

Mr. Shulman: I am aware of that, but under the circumstances of the occasion, would the Minister consult with this colleague in the Cabinet on this particular matter because it is a very sad case?

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: A year ago, in the consideration of the estimates of this department, the Minister told us that a study of the rates of insurance companies was being conducted by Mr. Mayerson. Has he completed that study?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have referred three times during the current estimates to the Mayerson study. I discussed it about ten minutes ago today. I will repeat it for the benefit of the hon. member. The Mayerson study is on behalf of all the provinces. I conveyed an interim report of his earlier findings and we hope that the final consideration and report will be available by the end of the year.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would like to speak briefly about the concern I have with the automobile insurance coverage which is going to come into effect on January 1, 1969. Let me assume for the moment that it will come into effect on that date across the country, and that therefore we will have in the province of Ontario, the Saskatchewan scheme of insurance operated through the private insurance industry. My concern is not with the effect of that scheme; my concern is that after this number of years we are about to introduce into Ontario what was a very real innovation in automobile insurance about 25 years ago. It is no longer adequate, and all the studies which are made in Canada and the United States bearing on compensation for traffic victims bear out that that scheme is not adequate.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he give consideration to having an independent study instituted immediately, not for the purpose of delaying the plan which they have to introduce, including the non-fault aspect of auto insurance, on January 1, 1969, but with a view to getting ahead of the problem of compensation of victims of auto accidents. I make the following points in connection with the non-fault coverage, which is going to be introduced in the province of Ontario on January 1, 1969, in order to simply illustrate its deficiencies. First of all, it is going to be optional. Thus the accident insurance feature of the insurance policy, which has become known as the "non-fault" portion of the policy, is not an essential requirement of the standard automobile policy but optional.

That is the first serious flaw in the scheme. I know that with all the negotiations that have gone on with the superintendents across the country, it is not going to be changed now. I am talking about a study now with some forethought to what changes are going to have to be made in the future. That is the first serious criticism of it.

Second, it does not cover any pedestrian who is run down by an automobile driver who is insured and carrying that non-fault coverage. So that if a pedestrian is hit by an automobile where the driver has taken out the non-fault coverage, the pedestrian is not entitled to the benefits of that coverage. That is my understanding of it, to the extent of my knowledge of it.

The third criticism which I have is that while it covers medical expenses and provides a death benefit, it is what many people have referred to as a personal injury lottery. In other words, you get so many dollars for such-and-such a dismemberment of portions of your anatomy. The criterion is simply which portion of the anatomy do you happen to lose, and if it is a total dismemberment, you get "X" dollars. There is no criterion of judgment exercised as to the value of that particular limb to the person. It has no relation whatsoever to his income-earning capacity. It is just a categorical system where you assess so many dollars as the value of the particular limb. In my view it is a very rough-and-ready and inadequate method of providing for accident insurance coverage on a non-fault basis.

The next point of criticism that I have again relates to this question that it has no relation whatsoever to the actual loss to the individual, insofar as the income payments are concerned. They are specific identifiable payments payable over a two-year period, and they have no relationship whatsoever to the income-earning ability of the individual who has been injured. Second, the amounts, being fixed as they are with the policy at very specific limits, have no relationship whatsoever to the needs of the family of the person who is injured, if it happens to be the breadwinner of the family, and it is certainly not sufficient on any basis to meet the needs of a family.

Most of us carry insurance not for the minor nuisance of the minor accident in which we may be involved, but we carry insurance to cover ourselves during a period of long-term injury. This particular method of compensating for loss of income, limited as to time and amount, is totally inadequate to provide a loss of income compensation for anyone who suffers a long-term injury.

The next criticism that I have of it, Mr. Chairman, is that the person, in order to draw the compensation for loss of income, must be in the language of the insurance industry, totally disabled, which means in substance, unable to do anything. There is no method by which his income can be supplemented should he be only partially disabled, and again I have referred to the two-year time limit at which point the compensation for loss of income is cut off entirely.

My point is very simple. You are committed to the scheme that will come in on January 1, 1969. It is my view that you should now institute a study having regard, sir, to the findings of the Keeton O'Connel report in the United States on basic protection of traffic victims, having regard to the Osgoode Hall study of the compensation of victims of traffic accidents. On the basis of those statistical studies, and on the basis of the proposals put forward by Professor Keeton O'Connel in the United States, you should start now to fashion a more adequate compensation scheme for victims of traffic accidents.

I would add only one footnote, that when Professor Linden's name is used in connection with the Osgoode Hall study of compensation for traffic victims, it should be remembered that that study takes no view of the insurance industry at all. It puts forward no claim to any adjustment in the system; it was purely to establish the facts—the very facts of compensation retailed on many occasions in this House. That Professor Linden nevertheless must be distinguished from the professor who is counsel on occasion for the All-Canada insurance federation. It is the professor Linden in that role who talks about this term "doctrinaire socialism" as being the position of the New Democratic Party.

Our position is that we have gone long enough fighting for the Saskatchewan scheme. It is coming into force in the province of Ontario. We believe that it is not adequate simply because the pay-out is 67 cents on the premium dollar instead of 86 cents on the premium. But we now want the government, with foresight and with intelligence, to start a study on the basis of the up-to-date information, to fashion a more adequate compensation scheme for victims of traffic accidents and to protect persons who are the owners or drivers of motor vehicles.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Does the hon. Minister want to reply?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I have a few comments. One is that it is my understanding that a combination on various amounts of coverage will be available, contrary to what the hon. member for Riverdale has said, which will lead into the area of taking into account one's own family needs and so on. Much of the material that has been mentioned by the hon. member is before the department at the moment.

There are many different views to take into consideration and I can only assure the House that this is a matter of importance in the minds of the department and that it is a continuing, internal study of the matters involved so that we can adduce and bring forward the most up-to-date and meaningful type of coverage that will meet the needs of society.

Mr. J. Renwick: Specifically, and as the member for Downsview interjected on the very salient point of the optional nature of this feature, is the government going to persist in maintaining it as an optional feature? Or are they prepared to bow to all the weight of evidence in the question of compensation for traffic victims that it should be a compulsory part of the standard automobile insurance policy?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is under consideration.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, why do we have to consider it any longer? Is not the report of the select committee of substantial significance in the government's mind?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On the uniformity basis.

Mr. Singer: No, but Saskatchewan, some years ago, decided that they wanted their own peculiar system of insurance. We have heard many arguments that it is a vastly superior system to any other system. That was their choice and that is their opinion. And surely, if it is the best opinion here in Ontario, that by making this a compulsory part of the standard policy of insurance, there is some sense in Ontario going ahead with it.

Granted that you should co-operate with the other provinces as fully as possible perhaps in determining the exact wording and so on. But what bothers me, Mr. Chairman, is the very careful study that we did here in that select committee and it was an unusually good select committee. It was chaired by the then Provincial Treasurer, the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan) and it had, on it, two estimable gentlemen, one of whom is now the Minister of Highways (Mr.

Gomme), the other of whom is now the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett).

It was a unanimous report, and one would have hoped, in view of the character of that report, and the careful nature of the study that was embarked upon, it was not just something that came up overnight, sir. That committee sat for three years. It travelled extensively to get views in all parts of the country. It sought the opinion, and I think most importantly, sought the opinion of the All-Canada insurance group who said, "Yes, let it be compulsory."

As a matter of fact, it was the draft prepared really by the All-Canada insurance group that forms the integral part of our report. It sought the opinion of a very important committee of the benchers of the law society of Upper Canada, and they came in. I think it was Mr. Robinette, if my memory serves me correctly, who came up and made the presentation on behalf of this group of the benchers of the law society. So I ask the question that I have asked over the many years since 1963, who stands in the way of the unanimous report of the committee and it was not just a sort of fly-by-night committee.

It was an important committee that deliberated long and carefully. The insurance group is not opposed—or so they say publicly. The representative group of the leaders of the bar were not opposed to it. Who is opposed to it? I just cannot understand, Mr. Chairman, why we have not had it, in view of what appeared to be then, and still appears to be, the unanimity of opinion from the usual sources that are consulted in matters of this sort.

Why has it been resisted? When it became the responsibility of the Minister of Transport, I had great difficulty, Mr. Chairman, in following the reasoning of the present Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) as to why he resisted it. He ordered another couple of studies, and those were done and there was nothing in those studies that seemed to produce any different results, except for the study of the civil servants. Surely, when we get into a matter of this sort, do we accept only the opinions of the civil servants, or should we not pay more attention to the unanimous opinion of an important select committee, to the opinion of the insurance industry and to the opinion of lawyers?

Now that seems to be the only adverse approach to the whole matter. So what I would like to find out, Mr. Chairman, what I have been trying desperately to find out is —who really is opposed to it? Is it in the minds of government? Is the Premier opposed to it? Is this Minister opposed to it? Why do you apparently discard out of hand, and have since 1963, the opinion of three very important government members?

Why do you discard the opinion of the insurance industry? Why do you discard the opinion of this leading group of lawyers? I think we should get some explanation since we have apparently moved to the point where at least we have decided that this has value on a voluntary basis. Certainly, the committee wanted it on a compulsory basis. Why should we not have it on a compulsory basis?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: The committee of supply reports progress and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Tomorrow, we will continue with the estimates of this department.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6:00 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JULY 11, 1968

The House met at 2 o'clock, p.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: This afternoon I am sure we are pleased to see visitors in the House and, in the east gallery, we have, students from Oakville-Trafalgar high school, hosting a group of students from the Yukon who, I understand, have been entertained and looked after royally by the young people from the Oakville-Trafalgar school. In the west gallery we have a group of COSTI New Canadians from Toronto.

I am sure we are very pleased to have these young people with us.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the annual report of the Ontario water resources commission, 1967.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence from the standing committee on education and university affairs, presented the committee's fourth report which was read as follows and adopted:

Your committee begs to report the following bill without amendment: Bill 172, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs) moves that, commencing Monday next, July 15, this House will meet each day Monday to Friday inclusive, at 10:00 a.m., will adjourn for the luncheon interval at 12:30 p.m. and resume at 2:00 p.m.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, there is one point on which I would like clarification. My understanding, in discussions with the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), was that the Friday hours would not change; in other words, they would run from 9:30 to 2:00. As I understand this motion, it is Monday to Friday inclusive, starting at 10:00 and running until—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: My understanding of it is that tomorrow, being Friday, we will maintain the old hours from 9:30 a.m. until 2:00; but Friday a week hence we would commence at 10:00 a.m.

However, the Prime Minister will be available in a little while and we can, if the hon. member would like to, add the extra half hour—

Mr. MacDonald: My question is not with regard to the extra half hour, but whether the Friday hours will end at 2:00 o'clock. As this motion is put, it is on the same pattern as other days and presumably goes on until 11:00 at night.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think we can deal with that and make the amendment in ample time to meet the situation a week from tomorrow. In the meantime, I suggest we just hold it as it is. The hon. member has noted his reservation.

Mr. MacDonald: I note the reservation, but there was some discussion at some point that we might try to conclude the session by a marathon running through Friday and Saturday to which, personally, if that is what is in the mind of the government, I voice my objection now.

This motion has been rather skilfully framed to leave an open door on the Friday, to run without interruption until we drop in the trenches, so to speak, Friday or Saturday. I voice an objection to it, and, if the House leader is not clear as to what it is, I think we should have clarification, Mr. Speaker, before it is put to the House and voted on.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I was not at that meeting, but the motion is in accordance with my understanding of what the arrangement was. If not, we will have ample time—and the member has noted his reservation—to correct the situation for Friday, one week from tomorrow. I will speak to the matter in any event.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Is it against the hon. Minister's religion to have a meeting on Sunday?

Mr. Speaker: It would appear that there is no ambiguity or haziness about the motion, which is as follows:

That, commencing Monday July 15, 1968, this House will meet each day, Monday to Friday inclusive, at 10:00 a.m. There will be a break for lunch at 12:30 o'clock, p.m., and we will resume at 2:00 o'clock, p.m.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

Hon. Mr. Welch moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill can be described in three points.

First, it increases the amount of the monthly advance which members can draw on their annual indemnity, and it also provides for the drawing of the annual allowance for expenses on a monthly basis to be actually one-twelfth of the expenses.

Secondly, it permits members to draw their annual mileage allowance in monthly instalments.

Thirdly, it increases the allowance for members for committee work done when the House is not sitting, from $35 to $60 per day for the chairman, and from $30 to $50 a day for the other members of the committees.

The present travelling allowance, for committee members, of $20 a day is replaced with the actual travelling expenses, or 10 cents a mile if the travel is done in a private automobile. So that the allowance of $60 per day for the chairman, and $50 a day for the other members of the committees, as well as actual disbursements for meals, accommodation, and gratuities, will be paid for each day on which members of committee sit, are absent from home and engaged on committee work, or in which they spend travelling to and from committee meetings.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): May I ask the Minister a question? Inasmuch as the details of the bill were reported in the newspaper yesterday, I would like to ask the Minister if he would give us the details before the press in future?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, if there is any suggestion in the member's question that there was an advance release by the government to the papers, I would like to correct it. I am just as surprised as he is that some of the contents of this bill appeared in print prior to my introduction today.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Correctional Services.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wish to announce the establishment at the Whitby jail of a screening and custodial unit for adult female offenders. The ten-bed unit will provide a controlled, maximum-security setting for the assessment and treatment of female offenders who are either unwilling or unable to function in a relatively open setting.

The utilization of existing facilities at Whitby for these purposes is an example of the increased flexibility within the recently integrated correctional system. Since my department assumed full responsibility for all jails in the province, professional staff from the Mercer reformatory complex have been conducting preliminary screening of some female prisoners at the Metropolitan Toronto jail. The new unit is being set up in preparation for the opening late this year near Brampton, of the Vanier institution for women, which will provide a "cottage-type" setting. The Vanier institution, which will replace the Mercer reformatory, will have no maximum security facilities.

Assessment and treatment services for women placed in the Whitby unit will be provided by professional staff from the Vanier complex. The aim of the staff will be to encourage inmates to work for admission to the programme at the Vanier institution. Transfer to these facilities will be arranged when deemed appropriate by the professional personnel.

I should state that experts in the correctional field agree that some inmates among institutional populations are unable to cope with the degree of responsibility and freedom implicit in the type of open-setting rehabilitation programme planned for Vanier institution. This small group can disrupt such programmes to the detriment of the majority of responsive individuals. On the other hand, some of the most difficult inmates tend to respond well to treatment in a maximum security setting.

I should also add, Mr. Speaker, that the Whitby jail is one of the newer jails with more modern facilities, having been built in 1958.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise on a point of order, if I may. It is unfortunate that on two occasions I was not in the House when somewhat I deem to be grossly inaccurate statements were made with references to speeches I was alleged to have made in this House.

Now we have Hansard in the House. It works on a tape recording system, and I always recognized it as being a principle accepted by this House that you are not to use unedited statements of Hansard as being the official version; that the official version; of Hansard is that which is finally printed by the printing company and distributed to the members.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, getting close to 2:00 o'clock, I was approached by the hon. member for High Park, and he showed me an article from the Telegram of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. I believe the member is going to mention something which he and I discussed in my office this morning, and I think this is not the time—it should not be mentioned until later this afternoon.

Mr. Sargent: Let us hear what he has to say.

Mr. Ben: No, I am not going to discuss anything.

The hon. member for High Park handed me an article dated Wednesday, July 10, and drew my attention to a statement in there which said: "George Ben, Liberal MPP for Humber, challenged him to repeat outside the Legislature—"

Mr. Speaker: Order: This is the exact point which—

Mr. Ben: It is not the exact point.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member yield me the floor? This is the exact point, and I have arranged for the member for High Park and the member for Humber to join the chairman of the committee of the whole House, and myself, and to hear the tapes as to what exactly was said. I think that both the members would be on much sounder ground in discussing the matter in this House if they waited until after that event and tomorrow morning there should be every opportunity for the matter to be discussed with both members having knowledge of what was said.

Now that was what I thought both members understood this morning or at noon. If they do not, and the member still wishes to proceed with the matter, that is quite in order, but I think it would be much wiser for all of us if we waited until we heard what the tape does say about what transpired at that time.

Mr. Ben: I am sorry, I am not interested in what the tape says because I am not dealing with the tape, Mr. Speaker, and I ask your indulgence to hear me out. The hon. member asked me if I had made the statement which I just finished reading to this House. Now this statement deals with insurance company profits, and I had not recalled making such a statement. I told the hon. member that I did not recall making such a statement and that he ought to look in Hansard and whatever Hansard said I said, I said.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I find out subsequently in reading Hansard, which I said you should not be reading—that is the unexpurgated edition—that the hon. member was in fact referring to a statement which appeared in the Telegram of July 9, or the previous day, which, in fact, properly quoted me as saying that I did challenge the hon. member to repeat his comments outside the Legislature where he would have no protection against legal action.

That statement was made in this House. As a matter of fact, it engendered a lot of comment both from the government side and from the party to the left. As a matter of fact, the hon. leader of the NDP got up and asked me if I was protecting or defending the insurance companies—that statement was made.

Now as far as the other one is concerned, Mr. Speaker, that is something you discussed—whether in fact I had made any statement about the insurance company—

Mr. Speaker: The member is quite right.

Mr. Ben: I am prepared to let that bide, listening to the tape, but what I am distressed about, Mr. Speaker, is the degeneration of the morals of this House when it comes to making statements.

During the war, there were many people here who were commissioned officers and everybody said you became an officer and a gentleman by virtue of the Queen's commission. Many were not gentlemen but the fact is that most of them acted like gentlemen because it was expected of them. Now here we are referred to as hon. gentlemen, or hon. members. Perhaps there are some in this House that do not fit that particular appellation.

The fact is that they are obliged to try to act like gentlemen. There have been too many half-truths in this House; this House has been degenerating into a bunch of rabble. When I talk about half-truths, a good example is the one that I spoke of the other day where a statement was made that so much was taken in in premiums, and only so much was paid out in claims, leaving the implication that the difference was in profit; those are half-truths.

That is like saying, "I counted three legs on that dog that just went around the corner." And then, when you catch the dog, you say, "Look, there are four legs on this dog, how dare you say this dog only had three legs?" The man says, "I did not say he only had three legs, I said I only counted three and if I only want to count the three, that is my business." That is the way the party to our left operates, those are the kind of things they come out with.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: I think it is time that an end was put to this kind of nonsense. There has been a statement made that certain parties ought to be called before the bar—especially Mr. Bassett. I did not know he drank, but if they want to bring him before the bar that is their business.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I ask the—

Mr. Ben: In fact it may be that a lot of other members ought to be hauled up before the bar—the so-called bar—and we might have a better House, and there might be more truth spoken in this place.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, if I may say a word, I have expressed in some detail—

Mr. Speaker: The member did not raise a point of order, he was raising a point of personal privilege that he had been misquoted and, therefore, that point is not a point of order for debate. If the hon. member for High Park has a point of order or a point of personal privilege I will be glad to hear it.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I understood him to say a point of order, sir. If I heard wrong, I would like a question of privilege.

There are two matters referred to here, one which I raised yesterday and I have sent a letter to you, which I presume you have, setting out in detail the complaints which I had about the reporting in the Telegram. I think I should leave that to your consideration and to be discussed at a later time as you have suggested.

Regarding the other matter referred to by the member for Humber, unfortunately the member was not in the House when I read the articles which I had referred to, I believe it was yesterday, from The Financial Post and Telegram which I referred to the night before as to the profits of the insurance companies. I read those articles in full, in the House.

You suggested, sir, I believe, or the Chairman suggested, that the member read Hansard to see if the matter was correct. I presume the member has not as yet had a chance to do that and I would like to state that there were no half-truths given in that statement. I quoted exactly both The Financial Post and the Telegram as to the profits made by those companies.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, and I make it a point of order because you already informed this House earlier this session that there is not such a creature in the rules as a point of privilege, that you have to rise on a point of order. All right then, I am wrong, but I read from Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member place his problem before the House?

Mr. Ben: All right. I will read from Hansard of July 10:

> Mr. Shulman: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of personal privilege. One of the important privileges of this House is the right to a fair reporting.
> Yesterday, I rose in the House in connection with the Toronto Telegram of Tuesday, July 9 and a particular quote which I referred to at this time was: "Dr. Shulman did not reply to a challenge from George Ben, Liberal, Toronto Humber, a lawyer, to repeat some of his comments outside the Legislature where he would have no protection against legal action."
> I protested yesterday in committee that this interchange had never occurred and the member for Humber had never made such a request, and I added however, if any member wished me to repeat my speech outside the House I would be pleased to do so.

This is the statement that was made in Hansard yesterday.

I say I was not here when the hon. member made the statement the day before yesterday. But I did, in fact, make the statement he says I did not make, that is, challenging him to make statements outside the House.

Mr. Speaker: Well, perhaps the member will desist.

Mr. Ben: Now if everything does not turn out. Not all of the interjections are marked, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Now we are getting back into the matter where I thought we had an arrangement existing between the two members and myself and the Chairman of the committee of the whole House that we would get sorted out, I hope this afternoon. I have listened to the tape and there will be no question in anybody's mind when the tape is heard by these members and the matter can then be dealt with afterwards.

The member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) has a question.

Mr. Ben: Sorry, I have another point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I have taken the position that one ought not intentionally or otherwise to mislead the House. The other day, when I was speaking on air ambulances, I suggested that the radio stations in Metro Toronto which do operate helicopters for traffic reports ought to convert these helicopters to air ambulances or at least convert them to take litters. Now, in making such a statement I implied that no helicopters were so equipped.

I have been informed that CKEY, which owns their own helicopters, in fact, has converted their helicopters to carry litters in order to be able to co-operate with the Hospital for Sick Children which is constructing a heliport on the top of its building.

I wanted to make that correction because implication was there that none of these ambulances were in existence when, in fact, they are.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Riverdale has a question from yesterday.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. If, as is expected, a vacancy occurs in the aldermanic representation of ward 3 in the city of Toronto, is there any way under The Municipal Act in which a by-election may be held in that ward to fill such vacancy? If not, will the Minister introduce legislation immediately to enable a by-election to be held?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is no provision in The Municipal Act which would permit a by-election to be held where a vacancy in the office of alderman or councillor occurs. Such a vacancy would be filled by appointment, by the council, under section 150, subsection 3, of The Municipal Act as the Act now stands. This would also be the situation under section 150, subsection 3, as amended by section 7 of Bill 155 which has had third reading.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister would answer the second part of the question.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would say this. I am aware of what I read in the paper. I have not had any representations or resolutions from the Toronto city council or, for that matter, from any other municipality in the province, to suggest that there should be by-elections to fill these kind of vacancies; nor have I heard from either of the principal municipal associations—the Ontario municipal association, or the association of Ontario mayors and reeves. Now if, as and when we receive requests from the city of Toronto, or the other municipalities, or from the association, they will always receive the courteous attention which my department generally gives those resolutions.

Mr. D. A. Evans (Simcoe Centre): All part of the friendly service.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister has answered.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Minister's answer was "no".

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I had a question that was submitted to the hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We have now passed that order. The Prime Minister not being present, we—

Mr. Sargent: The House leader is here!

Mr. Speaker: The question is addressed to the Prime Minister. It is not to be asked unless he is in his place. We have already passed to another order of business. The member is out of order.

Mr. Sargent: You are very presumptuous! Mr. Speaker, the House leader has the right to answer this question and I would like to put it to him.

Mr. Speaker: The member is out of order.

Mr. Sargent: I bet you are too, sir.

Mr. Speaker: If the member wishes to challenge my ruling it can be put to the House.

Mr. Sargent: What good would that do? You have control.

Mr. Speaker: That is what the Speaker is for, to have control of the House.

Mr. Sargent: Maybe we can change it some time.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 5th order, committee of the whole House, Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Sections 1 and 2 agreed to.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: I presume the member for Riverdale is suggesting the Chairman was going a little too fast?

On section 3:

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Just getting the book out, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman does not mind waiting for a moment.

Sections 3 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): I have an amendment to section 7, and it is moved by myself, seconded by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Pilkey) that subsections 1 (c), (d) and (e), and subsections 3 (a) and (b) of section 7 of Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act, be amended by changing the figure $125," wherever it occurs, to "$300," and the figure "$275" to $450"; and by adding to subsections 1 (d) and (e) the following words, "or as long as the child is attending an educational institution," so that the amended sections shall read as follows:

1. (c) Where the widow or invalided husband is the sole dependant, a monthly payment of $300.

Subsection (c) Where the dependants are a widow or an invalided husband and one or more children, a monthly payment of $300, with an additional payment of $50 to be increased upon the death of the widow or the invalid husband to $60 for each child under 16 years, or as long as the child is attending an educational institution.

Subsection (e) Where the dependants are children, a monthly payment of $60 for each child under the age of 16 years, or as long as the child is attending an educational institution.

3. (a) Where the widow or an invalid husband is a sole dependant, $300.

(b) Where the dependants are a widow or an invalid husband and one or more children $300 for the widow or the invalid husband, with a further payment of $50 to be increased on the death of the widow or the invalid husband to $60 for each child not exceeding in whole $450, or;

(c) Where the dependants are children, $60 for each child, not exceeding in the whole $450.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the member who has presented this motion that the motion has the effect of increasing an amount of money and is therefore out of order?

A motion cannot be accepted to increase the amounts set forth in the Act; not from a private member.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether we can agree with that proposition in regard to the workmen's compensation board benefits or not, and I think we should have a ruling.

I understand that the workmen's compensation board is a creature of this Legislature and that being a creature of the Legislature, then we have the right to make amendments and to make propositions in regard to benefits. I understand that the chairman of the compensation board is given his position under an order-in-council to the Lieutenant-Governor which sets out at his pleasure.

Mr. Chairman: Is the member speaking to the Chairman's suggestion that the motion was out of order?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: I am informed by the Clerk that the motion now is in order because it is not a vote controlling the expenditure of public moneys. So the motion is in order.

The Chairman apologizes to the committee.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, If I may speak to the motion.

The purpose behind the motion, Mr. Chairman, is a straight matter of keeping in step with the increasing cost of living. Under the changes in The Compensation Act, the widow will receive $125 a month to live on. Now, I do not have to elaborate in any great detail to any member of this House that you cannot live on $125 a month, and the purpose of the increase to $300 is to be more realistic to provide proper compensation in cases where the chief wage-earner in the family has died as the result of an industrial accident. The argument is advocated at times that this would put a greater load on the employer who has to pay for this compensation. To this I would like to say that in my mind, and I think, in the minds of a lot of people who have attended industrial accident prevention association meetings—they have come back from these meetings convinced that the employers can do a lot more within their plants to cut down the accidents. I think that, if anything, besides providing proper compensation for the widow, this will also force the employers to take strong action within their particular factories or plants, to cut down the accident rate.

The idea of providing compensation for a child who is attending an educational institution again, of course, is common sense, that as long as the child is going to school or university he has no parent or no wage-earner at home; he has absolutely no source of income, and no one to support him And again we feel that the board should provide this compensation to the child in the same way as a parent. If the father were there, then naturally he would be able to provide support for the child to continue his education, and we expect the compensation board to do the same thing.

Raising the level of the final figure from $275 to $450 again, this is in keeping with the present cost of living, and the various social agencies in Toronto and other places in the province will tell you, Mr. Chairman, that $125 or even $275 is not an adequate amount for a family to exist, particularly if they have a home, have mortgage payments to meet, and have to provide all the necessities of life. So this is the whole purpose behind this particular amendment, to bring it in line with the existing cost of living.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, we, of course, intend to support this amendment when it comes before the House. It is our experience as individual members that many of the payments which come under the workmen's compensation board are inordinately small. We recognize of course, the responsibility that any changes in payment make to the rates of the premiums. The part of the amendment that I believe has some special application, as well as providing financial relief as has been indicated, is the continuing support for children beyond the age of 16 years who are still in school.

I think that we are aware of the circumstances where young people, doing well in school, have been forced by family financial difficulty, to withdraw and undertake employment well before they should have been faced with this important decision. I think that in many cases the community steps in and provides this assistance to permit the young person to continue, particularly if he is doing well in his academic studies. We should be moving away from this kind of community responsibility, fine as it is. The wording of the statute itself should require the board to continue payments for as long as the young person is continuing to be gainfully employed, as it were, in his continuing education.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a couple of comments on the amendment, but before I do, and with your permission I would like to make a brief comment, without wanting an amendment, on section 6, even though it has been adopted. I would urge the Minister again to look at this question of the employer having the opportunity to make the request for review. I just make that comment before I talk on the amendment, on section seven.

I would like to say that I support the amendment on the same basis as my colleague from Brantford, because I believe that survivors should be maintained in the station of life to which they are accustomed. Here we have an employee who really pays the supreme sacrifice with the forfeiture of his life, and then we ask the surviving spouse and family to reduce their standard of living, after he has lost his life. I say that the payments to the surviving dependants of a workman, should have the same relationship to his earnings. Obviously with $125, and a maximum of $275 a month, this person who survives, and her dependants, could very well be looking for public assistance or charity to maintain the same standard of living to which they were accustomed while the man was working. In addition to that, the child under the age of 16 is the only person covered as a dependant. After the child becomes 16 years of age, or older, he is no longer recovered under the Act, and my colleague's amendment says that as long as the child is attending an educational institution, or school. Now, I would like to point out in this regard that the province of Ontario would not be blazing out any new trails in this regard.

British Columbia, Quebec, New Brunswick and the Yukon already have that type of legislation, which goes on to say that they will continue payments where the child attends school. So I urge upon this Legislature and the Minister—

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could point out something for the hon. member, because I am sure that he would want this information. If he would look at section 37(2) of the present Act, it says:

> Where, in the opinion of the board, the furnishing of further or better education to a child appears advisable, the board in its discretion may, on application, extend the period to which compensation shall be paid in respect of the child, for such additional period as is spent by the child in furthering or bettering of its education.

Mr. Pilkey: I appreciate what the Minister has said, but this is not as a matter of right. It becomes a discretionary power with the board. Now, Mr. Chairman, I submit that this should be a matter of right. If the child is attending an educational institution or school, the payments should continue, and I do not think that anybody should have jurisdiction over that in a discretionary manner. This is the reason why I support the amendment. I appreciate what the Minister said with regard to section 37, but I do feel that this section should be changed, and in view of that, I support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would like to lend my support to the amendment as proposed by the member for Brantford. I think that it is a forward step, and certainly puts this section of the Act onto a more realistic footing. However, I do not think that simply because the individual is attending school, this consideration should be given. I think that it should apply only in the case of a successful attendance, so that they are not simply occupiers of a place in the school. I would prefer to have the member include some suggestion whereby the individual is obtaining some kind of value from his education.

However, I am still disturbed by the fact that the amendment limits the financial benefits to three children. The widow who may have more than three children is being penalized, and I do not think that she should be. There should be no limit to the number of children for which the widow can obtain benefits. I heartily endorse the legislation, and I think that the amendment is a forward step.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, it was pointed out quite clearly by the parties of the Opposion as to the miserable amount allowed under this section of the Act, and it is very clear that the amounts set out have been allowed or arrived at by looking at the amounts allowed under welfare programmes. I want to submit as others have, that we have an altogether different situation in applying income to people in this field of compensation through injury or death in industry, than we have in the other fields. Admittedly, as far as we are concerned, the allowances under the family social benefits are too low, but nevertheless, they are there.

When we look at the difference between the two cases, people arrive at their position who need benefit under the social and family benefits for various reasons, over lengthy periods. But in the case of the loss of a husband through an accident in an industrial plant, it is a different situation. You have in this case, a family who have perhaps built the home that they desired, and taken out a mortgage, which entails substantial payments, and they have established a standard of living and a social life. They are preparing to send their children through higher areas of education by funding moneys, and are using the credit unions to establish and keep up their standards of living. And at one fell swoop, within minutes, the widow is told that her husband has been killed in an industrial accident.

She is then immediately reduced in income to the amount provided by the Act, and a sort of dislocation occurs that would be hard for the average person to imagine. So we think that in this area, in regard to workmen's compensation, the widow should be given an income that will provide something at least close to the standard which she has been used to.

Let us look at the difference in allowable benefits. If we take the recommendations of the Metropolitan Toronto social planning council, for a widow at home they recommend she should have nothing less than $130 a month, plus $12 a month for the dental costs, and different kinds of nursing she may need, outside the specific medical coverages—and they are not included—which we submit come to something like $21.70 a month. In this regard the workmen's compensation board provide a flat $125 a month, and the social and family benefits provide $105 now as a total.

Under the social and family benefits, if we go to the extreme of the widow with four children over 16 years, the maximum is $211 plus $95 for rent, and $10 allowance for an insurance policy if they have an insurance policy in force to keep up those payments. Of course, that is reduced if the children are under the age of 16; and in that area of four children depending, for example, if they are under nine years of age then the allowance is a maximum of $159 with the same amount for shelter, plus the $10 if they have an insurance policy in force. They do not give $10 to take out an insurance policy, only to carry the payments.

If we look at the Metro Toronto social planning council recommendation for a widow with four children, a girl aged six, a girl aged 15, a boy aged 10 and a boy aged 13, they recommend as their minimum $411 plus $44 for those necessities in the health lines that are not covered by the Ontario hospital services commission or OMSIP. Then again you have to add the $21.70 a month to that figure. If we look at the allowance under the workmen's compensation for the same situation, it is $325 a month; and for the family and social benefits under this government's programme, $283 a month.

So I think that the amendment is reasonable; it does not come up to my expectations. I know you have to be responsible in making straightforward amendments to an Act of this nature, and you have to beg for some considerations through the reasonableness of that amendment.

In my own feeling I would think that it should be a flat $5,000 a year minimum for any widow whose husband has been taken through an industrial accident, and then graded on up from there. That would then say they could establish a decent standard of living and not reduce their standards below what would be considered a fair level.

Mr. Chairman: Any further debate before the Minister? The member for High Park.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): I would like to ask a question of the Minister. I received a letter yesterday from a widow who enquired of the compensation board when she would be receiving a larger allowance. And she received a letter back stating that she would not be eligible for the larger allowance because her husband had not worked for the company for more than 12 months. I do not see anything in the Act to say that this is so. Is that an error on the part of some individual?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I am not familiar with that.

Mr. Chairman: I must point out to the member, and to the Minister, that the question posed by the member for High Park may be quite valid in requiring an answer, but I respectfully suggest that it has nothing to do with the amendment to this bill that is before us.

Mr. Shulman: Well, I do not want to disagree with you, sir, but if this raise only applies to some widows I suggest it has something to do with this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the member should phrase his question in a little different manner, because specifically as he put it, it has nothing to do with this section.

Mr. Shulman: Then let me rephrase the question. Does this raise apply to all widows of persons who have died under compensation, or are there exceptions who are not to receive this raise?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Will that make any difference in the way you vote?

Mr. Shulman: It will make a little difference in the way you act, I hope.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister. I believe the question is not properly expressed.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, where a widow is entitled to a pension under The Workmen's Compensation Act, we have made the increased pension applicable to those who are presently receiving pensions and to the future cases as well. I see no reason for the kind of situation that you envisage. If you care to give me that letter I will look into it and deal with it.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister have any comments on the motion before the House?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes. If there are no other members speaking first.

Mr. Chairman: There is not. The Minister may reply.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the amendment presently before us, which has the effect of increasing the widows' allowances above the provisions in this bill of $125 a month to the larger figure and also making some additional provisions in the reference to children. Under the McGillivray report the recommendations are that increased pensions should apply to those instances where widows become eligible for these allowances in future. The government has taken the position that these allowances and as we have incorporated them in the bill should apply to all widows' cases, whether they are receiving widows' allowances at the present or not. The estimated cost of the overall benefits that are proposed under the Act for future cases amounts to just over 7 per cent above the present charges. But when we make the widows' and children's benefits applicable—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): How much is that in dollars and cents?

Hon. Mr. Bales: One per cent in workmen's compensation charges amounts to about $1 million.

When we make it retroactive—in other words apply it to those presently receiving widows' and children's allowances, it adds another 5 per cent, so that the total increase we estimate for the future will be about a 12 per cent increase. And all of this is paid for by the employers, not by the employees themselves.

But I think we have to bear these matters carefully in mind: The allowances as we have now provided under the bill become the highest in this country. This is not itself the sole criterion, but I think it is a good basis on which such pensions and allowances can be judged.

We have to also bear in mind that these are not necessarily expected to be the widows' sole income. In a great many cases there are insurance policies through union agreements and personal and company arrangements. We would like to see the widows receive as large an amount as is reasonably possible and this is our intent under this Act. We have increased the widows' allowance from $75 to $125 a month, which is, I believe, a very substantial increase. Over the years, the allowances have been increased very substantially and this is another large increase.

In reference to the education of children, the section that I referred to earlier, section 37, subsection 2, covers this. I may say that the procedure under that section at the present time is that a statement is obtained from the school where the student over 16 is attending and sets out the course taken. That is the basis on which the board continues the allowances to that student so long as they are in school.

There is very little in the way of supervision, though we believe, and we want to know and the board wants to know, that the student is actually at school and taking a course helpful in future training.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, we believe that the level the allowances have been increased to under the bill before us are sound and that the employers can reasonably pay the costs involved. We believe that the amendment should not be supported.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, if I might just ask you a further question leading from the Minister's remarks. Does the continuing assistance for students go on indefinitely as long as they are properly at school in recognized courses?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes. They are usually in high school at that point, and the allowances continue as long as they are taking some reasonable course and the allowances can go on if they change to another school. Then there is another application.

Mr. Nixon: Or to university?

Mr. J. Renwick: I have one question to the Minister. The Minister stated that it is not intended necessarily to be the sole income of the widow. It is a very interesting statement, but does the Minister have any statistical information as to the number of widows who will benefit by the minor increase which the government is prepared to grant, who do not have any other form of outside income? Otherwise I do not think that the Minister should make that kind of general statement because most workmen's widows, in the kind of accidents which are compensable, do not have outside incomes so far as I know unless the Minister can give us statistical information about it.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give you actual figures here today but in many cases, we have found that the widow is in receipt of insurance or other benefits on the death of her husband. It may not be a continuing income in the form of an annuity but, in many cases, though not all by any means, there is insurance and frequently it is provided through arrangements by the employer or through the workman himself.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Brantford—and I might say the seconder is not required in committee—the member for Brantford moves that subsection 1, subsections (c), (d) and (e) and subsections 3 (a) and (b) of section 7 of Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act, be amended by changing the figure $125 wherever it occurs to $300, and the figure $275 to $450 and by adding to subsections 1 (d) and (e), the following words: "As long as the child is attending an educational institution". And there follows a recitation of how the Act would read with these amendments.

Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye"; those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of the motion of the member for Brantford will please rise.

All those opposed to the motion, will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 38, the "nays" 47.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I do not believe we can let this go by without objecting to the inefficient way the government undertakes votes in this House. It is an inefficient method of taking a vote.

Mr. Chairman, the bells have been ringing for 40 minutes on a straightforward, routine committee vote. I have no idea what difficulties you had in assembling your members, but it—

Interjection by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: I am on a point of order and I would like to complete it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to complete my point of order. Now, Mr. Chairman, during some of the looser comments of a few moments ago—

Mr. Chairman: May I respectfully point out that the point of order raised by the leader of the Opposition was out of order in committee. It cannot be dealt with by this committee—the method of summonsing the members for a vote. We are dealing only with this particular bill.

Mr. Nixon: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that surely, as a member of this House, I can express my objections to the inefficient way the House leader is conducting government affairs?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I have a brief comment to make on this point of order.

When we were debating—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. May I say to the member for York South that the Chairman did rule that the leader of the Opposition was out of order. He continued to make his point—

Mr. MacDonald: In meetings among the party leaders, when we were discussing how we were going to handle this, I sought a 20-minute maximum—

An hon. member: Bully for you!

Mr. MacDonald: —and the leader of the Liberal Party opposed it and wanted it flexible. We are the victim of a decision of both of the old parties.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, you are allowing discussion here.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please! I suggested to both members that the points of order raised were out of order. I say to the Minister that any further discussion on that particular point is out of order as well.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): The government is out of order, too.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is most unfair. I have attended this House every day for many months and we have two members of the NDP who come in here, at the cost to the taxpayer of $22,000, just for this vote. It ill behooves the leader of the party to criticize us for this.

I waited for at least four months for these two members to come in here. They will probably be gone again after the vote.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

The leader of the Opposition, the leader of the New Democratic Party and the Minister of Correctional Services have each spoken out of order and there will be no further discussion on that patricular point.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on a point of personal privilege.

I cannot permit the statement of the member for York South to remain unclarified. I do not feel that the rules of this House should be inflexible, the way the member for York South likes them. I believe that the government should be acting in an appropriate, efficient way to conduct the business of the House, which it is not.

On section 8:

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move an amendment—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman says to the committee members that as soon as they are through fooling around we will get back to the business of the House. I put it up to you.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I would like to move an amendment: that section 8 of Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act, be amended by changing the figure "75" to "85", to that the amended section shall read:

> Where temporary total disability results from the injury, the compensation shall be a weekly payment of 85 per cent of the workman's average weekly earning and payable as long as the disability lasts.

It is moved by myself and seconded by the hon. member for Brantford.

I want to point out in this section that, when the Act was first introduced back in January of 1915, the percentage was 55 per cent. Five years later it was amended to 66⅔ per cent, and that percentage was maintained in all Canadian provinces for approximately 25 years.

There was a suggestion then that it be raised. There was some opposition at the time on the grounds that if it was raised beyond the 66⅔ per cent there would be a lot of malingering of employees and there would be a possibility of some fraud. In any event, at that time the compensation percentage of benefit levels was changed to 75 per cent.

I might point out to this House that the question of malingering and fraud just did not come about. Most people, injured workmen, really want to work. They are not looking for anything in terms of welfare or charity. They want to continue as a wage earner, but it is impossible because of their injury and disability.

So, therefore, it is my opinion that we should be making an attempt to get the benefit level with the employee's earnings. Again, I raise this question of the level. At 75 per cent the level does not give the injured employee and his family the same standard of living that he enjoyed prior to the injury.

I recognize there would be no income tax or unemployment insurance or transportation costs to and from work, and I submit, Mr. Chairman, that 85 per cent would be relatively close to 100 per cent, after deductions, on the question of the net pay of the employee. That is why I present the motion in the form that has taken place. It is in this regard that this House ought to support this kind of a motion.

Again, I want to say that we ought to be maintaining the economic standard of living, or the station they are accustomed to, in life as a wage earner. This is really a denial of that—by keeping the percentage rate at the present 75 per cent. I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that really this is a penalty on the majority of the wage earners in this province who do have an injury and have to accept compensation benefits.

I urge the House to accept this amendment and put those disabled workers in relationship to their earnings prior to the time the injury took place.

Mr. Gisborn: Just a brief comment.

I support the amendment, of course, and one of the standing arguments by industry, and Mr. Justice McGillivray, in regard to increasing the percentage payment, was that the amount they receive is tax-free. But they forget to mention the fact that the employee has to pick up the full amount of any welfare benefit costs he may have in the industry.

In one industry in Hamilton, that amounts to about $300 a year. The contract, of course, calls for the employer to pay an amount of that benefit while the employee is working, but when he is off, he has to pay the whole amount, which would cost him $25 a month.

Now, he has to keep it up. He cannot allow sick benefits, such as Ontario hospital insurance and his medical coverage and his pension plan and his weekly indemnity, to go behind. So it is not a basic argument to say that he does save his income tax on it; he has to make up the difference and in that plant it is $300.

I would like to ask the Minister a question aside from the amendment, if we are keeping in line with his own amendment. He has changed the section requiring the amount to be based over the average earnings over a 12-month period. Now he has changed it to be calculated on the weekly average earnings.

I would ask him if he would explain how this could be calculated in regards to incentive pay? In many industries they have the basic earnings and they have the incentive rate that will fluctuate almost every week. Will they strike an average of the incentive on the particular week on which they are basing it, and over so many weeks? On what basis will they ascertain that he is being paid what would be considered an average wage, if the week that he was injured in and on which the calculation is made is a low week.

There are many weeks when there are changes in operations—where he would be only making his basic rate, rather than the increment on a job classification rate, or his tonnage rate.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, we in this party will support the amendment. We think it is a forward step.

There is one area that I would like the Minister to clear up and that concerns his explanation to section 8. That is, the basing of the pension, or the basing of the payments, on an average earnings over 12 months being now removed.

Will this take into consideration the earnings of an individual including overtime, or just the basic amount of the 40-hour week? If you do include overtime and some of the other things that the previous member has mentioned, it could have a sizable effect as to the amount of the compensation that the individual could possibly receive.

Mr. Chairman: Any further comments? The member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Chairman, the problem that the injured person has to contend with occurs when he is recovering from the injury, through some method that is not clear to me. The workmen's compensation board decides to cut the individual's grant or payment by way of dollars—and I guess, percentage too—and giving him a portion of money as partial compensation for the injury. In other words, the man does not become as well after he was hurt as he was before the accident. And they decided then not to give him the 66⅔ per cent that he was receiving—or with this bill, if it is passed, 75 per cent. I hope the amendment carries to give him the 85 per cent.

The problem that the individual has to contend with—I realize the Minister of Labour smiled at me, and I do not think he has any right even to consider that as being something that is not a good and fair request of this government, because industry pays the shot and I know how they pay it and I know why they pay it and the workmen are entitled to it. What happened in this case, Mr. Chairman, is that the man is injured. He gets 66—or let us say this bill passes—he gets 75 per cent of his wages, and through some peculiar method the workmen's compensation board cuts that man's income or payment because they feel he has partially recovered. That man cannot live. In one particular case I speak of, a man got his income cut back to $27 per week; he has a family with four children and there is no possible way of this man getting a job because he is permanently injured. In my opinion he ought to get the 75 per cent; he was injured on the job. That man should be maintained by that industry until he can go back to work as well as he was before, or that pension should continue.

This bill does not do that. If they continue to pay the 75 per cent—and I would like through you, Mr. Chairman, to ask this Minister if this section means what it says, that as long as he continues to be off of the job, he will get the 75 per cent. At least if he gets that, it is a step in the right direction. I would like that question answered, and if that bill is not broad enough to do that, it does not cover the problem at all.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Niagara Falls raises a point; as a matter of fact, it is a very valid point concerning one of the very serious omissions in this amendment to the Act. I would hope, along with the hon. member for Niagara, that this did cover those people who had a partial disability and where their benefit level has been reduced to 50 or 25 per cent. I must agree with him that if an employee is okayed for light work and then finds his benefit reduced to 50 or 25 per cent, this puts him at a real disadvantage because obviously the employer does not want him back either.

Mr. Bukator: And he does not get the light work.

Mr. Pilkey: Pardon?

Mr. Bukator: And he does not get the light work.

Mr. Pilkey: That is right, because there is no light work in the industry. So he is at a real disadvantage. I would echo the member's sentiments and I would wonder if this section is going to be applicable or are they going to continue the partial disability as they have in the past; is this section going to cover that situation?

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the Minister could reply at this time.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of matters I would like to deal with and if there is no other member going to speak on this matter I will deal with them all at this time.

First of all, in the matter of the percentage payments, this section has been provided to reduce the calculation period from 12 months to a much shorter period. It is taken now over a period of four weeks so that the—

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): It does not say that.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I realize that, but it is drafted on this basis so that the period can be made flexible. We have reduced it from 12 months so that we take into account, over a shorter period of time, that the worker's earnings may be at a higher level. Certainly it includes his overtime. It includes his incentive payments whatever they are, which might bring it up to a total income of $7,000 in the year. This section does not deal with partial disability but with total disability for a temporary period. It is not on the basis of partial disability, but rather total disability for a temporary period of time.

The other point that I would draw to your attention is that this is 75 per cent of his wages. And this is free of income tax. Under this arrangement his compensation is free of income tax, and he is free of certain normal expenses that all of us would encounter going to and from work and other matters. It works out very close to his total income on that basis, in a great many cases. But I would stress that this is on temporary total disability not partial disability.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could get some information. When a pension is reduced or a payment is being reduced to 50 per cent, am I to believe that this practice is going to be discontinued, that there will be no reduction to 50 per cent, as is the case at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, that is under partial disability. We are dealing here on the basis of temporary disability and not partial disability for a protracted period of time.

Mr. Chairman: In other words, as I understand it, the hon. Minister's reply indicates that section 8 deals with temporary total disability and there is no reference in this section for partial disability.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Chairman, just to get an answer to my question: I have in mind a case of temporary total disability; the man recovers partially; then is his payment graduated down because of his partial recovery?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, if he were partially disabled permanently—then he would be rated permanently and he would receive compensation at a definite rate, once it was established. But this section is on the basis that he is temporarily injured and cannot work, so he receives temporary total disability for a period of time.

Mr. Bukator: Then nothing has changed except the percentage of 66⅔ per cent to 75 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Bales: It has been 75 per cent. What we have done in this amendment is to reduce the calculation period from 12 months to a period of four weeks, so that a man earning a higher rate of pay than he was a year ago will receive a correspondingly higher amount.

Mr. Bukator: In other words this law falls, in my opinion, very short of the mark, because nothing has changed. People in partial disability are not getting what they are entitled to. This is the point that I was trying to make.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oshawa moves that section 8 of Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act, be amended by changing the figure 75 to 85, so that the amended section shall read:

> Temporary disability resulted from injury, the compensation shall be a weekly payment of 85 per cent of the workman's average weekly earnings, and is payable as long as the disability lasts.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Those opposed to the motion will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 35; the "nays" are 49.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost.

Section 8 agreed to.

On section 9:

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Chairman: On section 9?

Mr. Pilkey: No, not on that.

I just want to make a point that I have one other amendment on section 11 and I would suggest that maybe we could expedite things if everybody stays.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member for Oshawa is making a point for information or otherwise, I would suggest that if, in fact, the NDP does not want a recorded vote then they do not have to rise to have the members come in. But to suggest that the same vote be taken when we look across and see so many empty seats I feel is really unreasonable.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We can see a lot of empty seats on the other side.

Mr. Nixon: We are prepared to vote our members. If you do not want to vote, do not stand up.

Mr. Pilkey: I just asked—to the hon. leader of the Opposition—I just meant that they stay. I mean there is no use everybody going out and then coming back in.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Shall section 9 stand as part of the bill?

Section 9 agreed to.

On section 10:

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment moved by myself that subsection 1 of section 10, of Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act, should be amended to read as follows:

> Where a permanent disability results from the injury, the impairment of earning capacity of the workman shall be estimated from the nature and degree of the injury and the compensation shall be a weekly, or other periodical payment, during the lifetime of the workman for such other period as the board may fix, of a sum proportionate to such impairment not exceeding in any case the like proportion of 85 per cent of the average current weekly earnings in the industry or occupation, or during the previous 12 months, or such lesser period as he has been employed, whichever is the greater.

The purpose behind this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is to provide compensation, or adequate compensation, for individuals who have been injured in industrial accidents 10 or 15 years ago, and, as an example, they are getting compensation at 75 per cent of what they were earning at that particular time. As a result, you have people who are incapable of working and getting compensation of roughly $20, $30 or $40, which is certainly not adequate for present day cost of living. The purpose of this particular amendment is to bring these people in line with the earnings in the industry and in line with the current cost of living.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion on the amendments? The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, we in this party will support the amendment. We would have liked to have seen it follow the same suggestion that the Minister made when he amended section 8 by changing from a 12-month period to a four-week period, and we think that in this case the previous 12 months of the second last line would have been better had it been changed to a four-week period, but we will support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister have any comments?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the amendment they are making, but I think it is made under the wrong section.

Mr. Sargent: Section 10.

Hon. Mr. Bales: But under the provisions of the section the pensions are computed in the future. Now under the section the present pension payments are remaining the same, we are not changing those. It will apply to future accident cases and provide increased payments based on increased earnings from $6,000 to $7,000, but we are not making this provision retroactive or changing compensation that has already been established. We are dealing here with very large sums of money which come from the payments from the employers, and we are increasing benefits for the workmen themselves by shortening the waiting period. For this and other reasons, we do not believe that the amendment should be adopted.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like an explanation from the Minister in regards to the explanatory note referring to this section. The explanatory note at the bottom of page 6 says, "The amendment provides that compensation for permanent disability is payable whether or not there is any lay-off from the work due to the injury."

Now that seems to be the difference. Do I take it that this calculation will be made as spelled out in the section, the whole section, where the employee was injured, but at no time did he lose time from work, though the injury left him with a permanent disability of some degree, whereby he would be entitled, because of the impairment, to a pension? Is that the intent of the change in this section?

Hon. Mr. Bales: If a person is permanently disabled, even though he may not be away from work for a period of time, compensation is payable under this section.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the motion please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

I declare the motion lost.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the motion will please rise.

Those opposed to the motion will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 35; the "nays" are 49.

Mr. Chairman: The motion lost, and section 10 forms part of the bill. The Minister has an amendment to section 11.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, I am moving an amendment to section 11 and, coupled with it, is an amendment to section 23. The reason for this is to clarify the sections so that it states clearly, under the bill, those sections that are retroactive and those that are not. I believe you have a copy of the amendment and I would read it in reference to section 11. I move that subsection 2 of section 11 be struck out.

Mr. Chairman: It is moved that subsection 2 of section 11 be struck out.

Motion agreed to.

Shall section 11 as amended form part of the bill?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Pilkey: Is this where I speak if I want to make an amendment on section 11?

Mr. Chairman: Subsection 2 has now been deleted.

Mr. Pilkey: Right. Well, I want to make it on subsection 1.

Mr. Chairman: All right, the motion will be in order.

Mr. Pilkey: Moved by myself that subsection 1 of section 11 of Bill 150, An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act, be amended by deleting all of the words after "remunerated" in the third line, so that the amended subsection shall read:

> Average earnings shall be computed in such a manner as is best calculated to give the rate per week or month at which the workman was remunerated.

Mr. Chairman, the precise reasoning for fixing a maximum in this area is not really clear to me, and I believe that the remarks made by the Minister when he said in a reply to the hon. member for Hamilton East that overtime and incentives would be calculated in terms of the benefit level. What they are determining as the benefit level, really, is meaningless to many workers in this province.

If we have a maximum of $7,000 for the level to make this calculation, and I submit to you that the overtime incentives do not mean too much, there are many workers in this province that are earning in excess of $7,000 per year, and what this really means is that a worker, as an illustration, earning $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 a year, can get a maximum benefit of $5,250 per year.

I want to suggest that this again is a curtailment of that employee's or that worker's income to the extent that it retards his standard of living, and that this is a serious attempt to limit his compensation. It is wrong, and does create a severe inequity.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

The Chairman would like to point out to the member that the motion in its present form does not indicate the intention. In other words, it is meaningless. If I may just read it to the member: "Average earnings shall be computed in such a manner as is best calculated to give the rate per week or month at which the workman was remunerated."

Mr. Pilkey: Right.

Mr. Chairman: What does that mean?

Mr. Pilkey: Beg pardon?

Mr. Chairman: What does that mean?

Mr. Pilkey: Well, it means there is no limit, that we have now eliminated the $7,000 level. He is paid at the rate that he was remunerated at the time of the disability. In other words, if he was remunerated at a salary of $8,000 to $10,000, you would make the calculation on that basis; not $7,000.

Mr. Chairman: Yes. But it does not so indicate. It does not so indicate.

Mr. B. Newman: The first paragraph should be changed if the member—

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps we could straighten out with the member what his intention is?

Mr. Pilkey: Well, I thought it was very clear. By not having any limit—

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, it is an exact copy of the wording of the bill, leaving out the proviso for a maximum payment. It is just an exact word-for-word copy of the bill, taking out that portion that says "but" not "so", in any case.

Mr. Chairman: If I might point out, the wording is: "In a manner as is best calculated to give"; I mean all you have to do is take the previous week's earnings.

This gives you nothing; but it is entirely up to the member.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, in the first paragraph of the bill as presented to us, on the second last line you have, "in lieu of $7,000". I think the change should be in that case, rather than in the subparagraph 1.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, speaking to your ruling, it says in the bill at present "average earnings shall be computed in such a manner as is best calculated to give the rate per week or month at which the workman was remunerated that—"

It goes on then to say "but" not "so". Now, quite obviously, one should be able to stop at the point of exclusion in any paragraph.

Mr. MacDonald: If your point is valid, Mr. Chairman, the Minister's amendment is meaningless, because I suggest that what we have deleted has no reference to what we are leaving. All it does is to eliminate the maximum.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman is satisfied if the member introducing the new motion is satisfied. It just does not seem to make any sense to us here.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if you really think it is meaningless, you had better take it up with the Minister because it is his amendment that we are leaving.

Mr. Chairman: No, I put it up to the member who is making the motion to be satisfied. We will debate the motion then. In the bill itself, it does stipulate the amount at which the calculation will be determined to a maximum of a certain amount of money. This tells you nothing.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the maximum was referred to twice, so we would support the removal of the maximum, but it appears, in the preamble to section 11, and the numbering here is a bit confusing for me, but there are two paragraphs listed in brackets, one which, I think, works out in the long run, but the change from $6,000 to $7,000 really does appear twice, where the amendment removes it only once.

Mr. Pilkey: In this subsection, I have got the numeral one there twice; so that I am talking about both the sections. You see where I have one twice?

Mr. Nixon: Yes, but the actual change in wording refers only to the one.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman is quite satisfied to accept the motion as it is, if the member is satisfied.

Mr. Pilkey: Subsection 11 (1)—the first (1)—really, is only explaining as to how 11 (1) will read.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has proposed an amendment which has, in effect, removed the ceiling. I think that is his intention.

Mr. Pilkey: Right!

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the motion? Any further comment on the motion? The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment.

I think the Minister has caught the drift that the intent of the amendment is to remove the ceiling in regard to the calculation of the amount of money being paid. At the present time with the ceiling at $7,000, it is certainly discriminatory.

What we are doing in the province is establishing two classes of workmen. We have one workman whose salary would, on a yearly basis, reach the $7,000 mark and, if he got his 75 per cent, then he would be getting $5,220 a year. But if the other workman's salary exceeded that amount, he then has a reduced percentage of income. Some of them could be reduced to 50 per cent—in a very easy calculation—of what they were making.

In heavy industry today the bargaining unit rates run up as high as $14,000 a year and certainly the industrial workers, as in any other segment of our society, have established certain standards of living. To be injured in a plant and have your wages cut by legislation is a burden that should not be suffered by the workman. I do not think there is any need for us to establish a different class of citizen in the province in regard to this kind of payment.

I am not sure whether the fees paid by industry, based on the $100 of payroll is paid strictly in that sense—on every $100 of payroll. If that is the case, then certainly the fund is being boosted because of the rates in that particular industry. I am under some apprehension that that fact is taken into account on the payroll—I am not sure, the Minister may advise me as to that. Nevertheless, it would be very easy to change the calculation on the fee necessary to be paid by the industry to cover the amount of money necessary to pay each workman his 75 per cent calculated on his weekly or yearly remuneration.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. Mr. Chairman, speaking in support of this amendment I would say, from my observations, that the majority of workers earning in excess of $7,000 are doing work of a hazardous nature. Many—not the majority, but many—workers earning in excess of $7,000 are actually doing work of a hazardous nature, particularly in heavy construction. It seems ludicrous to expect that they would have to suffer some additional cutback in earnings because their work is more hazardous, and because they are more prone to injury.

Generally speaking, a workman lives up to his earnings. The home that he purchases today is, generally speaking, in a range that would require him to have more than $5,000 a year in average earnings in order to make his payments. I can see no reason why it is necessary to set a limit of any kind.

Workmen's compensation should be based on compensating a workman for injury incurred in doing the job that he was supposed to do. He should be compensated in relation to the earnings that he would normally have received.

Mr. Chairman: Any further discussion? The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, just a few comments on section 11. We will support the amendment, by the way.

It is our thinking that compensation should always be based on earnings and there should be no limit as to what the base should be. In today's industrial society, and especially over the last six or eight months, we have seen the demands for wage parity with our brethren in the United States. As a result, we find that $3 an hour is not an uncommon wage, or will not be an uncommon wage, to be receiving in industry. At $3 an hour you would find the individual, without any overtime, making well in excess of $6,000 a year, so that the figure of $7,000 as being the maxmum in today's industrial society is not realistic at all.

I cannot see why an individual who receives some type of compensable injury should have his compensation based on a maximum when his earnings may be in excess of the maximum amount set by the government.

Mr. Chairman: Would the Minister like to comment before the motion?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, in working out anything in reference to compensation we must be able to calculate the basis on which the charges can be made. Here we have a maximum raise from $6,000 to $7,000. Over the years the figure has gradually been raised. It started initially at $2,000. Fixing the figure at $7,000 is largely in line with what Mr. Justice McGillivray recommended in the report. More than that, it is substantially above the average earnings of the claimants under The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Certainly there are workers, covered by workmen's compensation, whose salaries may be substantially above the $7,000, but this is well above the average. You will also find that many of those who are in the higher categories have accident insurance as well, so that there is additional compensation and protection for them.

More than that, here we are dealing not only with a matter of compensation. In addition to that, there are the medical payments, which are frequently very substantial, and they are over and above moneys that may be actually paid to that person for his own livelihood in the way of compensation.

Mr. B. Newman: It would be covered under OMSIP or some medical plan. Anyway, they would pay nothing, would they?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Not necessarily, but the workmen's compensation board pay the medical payments on this and pay very high payments as well.

Again we come back to that same point, that this money—the compensation portion—is free of income tax charges, which is substantial.

Mr. Chairman, I oppose the amendment and I would urge the government and the members to oppose it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with the vote, will the Minister explain again the reasons for the deletion of the second part of this subsection 2?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

When I moved that amendment, I explained that there would be an amendment to section 23, which I will bring in. That deals specifically with certain sections which apply to present claimants and others which provide benefits after August 1. In order words, it is a way of clarifying the original bill.

I think that when you see section 23—and I could read it now, if it would be of any assistance—but the two sections go together, to clarify the situation.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the "nays" have it. I declare the motion lost.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13:

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, on section 13.

I notice that in the explanation of this section, it says: "provision is made for the repair or replacement of clothing worn, or damaged, by reason of wearing an artificial member."

Could I ask the Minister, when an employee is injured on the job and a lot of his clothes have to be cut away, is there no provisions under The Workmen's Compensation Act to give remuneration in respect of the clothes he was wearing at the time?

Hon. Mr. Bales: This section applies over a longer period of time, where, by reason of an artificial limb, clothing might wear out.

If his clothing is damaged at the time of the accident, I assume that this is looked after as well. That is an isolated case.

Sections 13 to 17, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 18:

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, regarding section 18.

Will the Minister advise how he intends to implement section 18, where it says: "and may require the employer to establish one or more safety committees at the plant level."

Would the Minister indicate why this is not a definite order for the plant to establish a safety committee?

Hon. Mr. Bales: This section applies in cases where an industry is paying additional charges because of a higher rate or frequency of accidents than is normal for that type of industry. I think that the member will appreciate that this is the kind of situation wherein the board must assess the situation. If it would be helpful in their view and in the view of its safety officers to establish a committee, then it will be done. But I think that to impose it unilaterally in all instances would not necessarily be the most helpful approach, and this is a step that we dealt with quite extensively in the standing committee, and it is a new and, I think, very wise approach. We should, however, leave some flexibility in the matter.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, suppose the employer decides that despite the fact that after your investigation you have come to the conclusion that a safety committee would be useful in that particular plant, but the employer decides he is not going to do anything about it, are you in a position to take any action against the employer?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Yes. The committee can be established under these circumstances under the provision of the bill. If the board feels that it would be helpful and advisable, then there will be a committee.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: I do not see how the Minister can say that it would not be beneficial to make it compulsory upon industry to establish safety committees, when it has never been tried yet in the province. We have evidence through British Columbia legislation, and we have well documented evidence in the 1950 Roach report on workmen's compensation, in which one of the firmest recommendations was mandatory safety committees to be so established as to have equal representation. Further, he suggested, to establish as the requirements of the committee, that certain numbers of meetings should be held. The minutes of the meetings should be sent to the Minister of Labour or his agent to ascertain that the safety committees were functioning in a manner so as to reduce injuries in the plants.

Now, the wording here does not mean anything, and I for one certainly think that the time has come, if we are going to give more than lip service to our efforts to reduce accidents in the industries, that we will have to establish a relationship between management and labour. We just cannot go along with the business approach that it is their sole responsibility to regulate the safety programme in their plants.

I have had a lot of experience in this field. It does not work because it builds a block between the employees, the unionists, and the people designated as safety officers in the industry. I think that it is about time that we made some effort to persuade industry, either by mandatory legislation or some stronger legislation—rather than the words used by the Minister that "we do not think that it would be beneficial because we have not tried it. We have to try something. Let us move in the direction of establishing effective safety committees and make them work well, supply meeting minutes, and have so many meetings a month. We must find out what is going on in the plants, because I have had experience of dealing with safety committees in the union hall, where the employees say that it is just a farce. They go to these meetings and they are paid to attend them on company time, they raise all kinds of problems with the foreman, and the first thing you know he is off the subject of safety and hazard on a particular job and into the realm of safety shoes, and safety glasses, and punching in on time, and watching that you do not trip across the tracks when you are going into the plant, and so on.

If we are going to talk about reducing accidents we have to make it madatory that safety committees be established and that they have a specific function. The Department of Labour should know what goes on, particularly in most of the heavy industry.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: I think that the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) would appreciate an amendment like this, substituting "must" for "may," because we have had a substantial amount of discussion in the House on companies like Dravo, and McIsaac, who refuse to get involved in any type of safety, and where they do not have safety teams, and so on. I believe that if we had safety committees where the problems could be aired, it would reduce a high fatality rate in the mining construction industry as such, today. I would ask the Minister to consider the substitution of the word "must" for "may," to prevent the injuries that are occurring in the mining and construction industries today.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): I feel that I must be a little stronger, because I do not believe that the present safety committees operate efficiently. My former employer was extremely safety-conscious and we had a good committee. We set down a lot of rules and regulations that were extremely effective, except that on certain occasions, such as major breakdown in the plant, the safety rules went out the window. If we followed the safety rules, it slowed us down in maintenance operations, and the company attitude was that if we could bypass a safety rule, and gain an hour, well, we would forget the safety rule.

I believe that if we are going to have committees at work, then they should be supervised by the department, who would lay down specific guidelines that would have to be followed, and that no matter what excuse the company had or what excuse a man had, the rules must be followed each and every time. Something else that has bothered me, and everyone else who has worked in a plant, is: Who decides what a situation involving safety is? The company comes along and says it is safe to work there. The man says it is not. Who decides? It usually ends up with the company saying that it is safe, and if you do not do it, you are automatically suspended. Now, without specific guidelines from the department, or someone with authority, this means that the man will work in an unsafe area or on an unsafe job many times when he knows it is unsafe because he has no choice. He either does that job or he does not work. And I cannot stress too much that this department has an obligation to the worker in this country and in this province; he has an obligation to set down specific guidelines and make those guidelines concrete so that they cannot be passed by or forgotten about by the company. Put them into rules and regulations that must be obeyed.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I want to say first of all that, as I said in the committee, this is a step in the right direction. And I want to commend the Minister for at least going this far. Obviously, I do not think he has gone far enough in terms of setting up safety committees but at least it is a step forward. I recall that during the Hogg's hollow incident, this government set up a Royal commission under Mr. McAndrew, I believe, and he said at that time that there needs to be a more effective co-ordination for accident-prevention work. And then Mr. Justice Roach, as my colleague from Hamilton East pointed out, went on to say, "My first criticism of the present system is that it does not provide any means which will ensure the act of participation of labour in the work of accident prevention." Mr. Roach said that; and this was some time ago; and now we finally see the Minister bringing in this type of recommendation.

As I said, it does not go far enough because in my opinion there needs to be a full participation at all times in this area of accident prevention, not only where you have incidents of accident upon accident before we take this kind of action; it should be implemented from the very beginning because, as we prevent accidents, obviously there is a greater relief on the burden on the compensation fund. And I think this is what we are all looking for, not on the basis of really providing 85 per cent and raising the levels and all of those things. The real crux of this problem is the question of accident prevention, and as we prevent accidents then we get at the crux of the problem. And I say that this section is, in my opinion, more important than any other section.

Now, as you recall, and I say this to the Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, during the debate that we had in committee, a Mr. Perry got up. I do not know what his position is but I suggest that he has something to do with the mining industry and probably has a lot to say in the mining industry here in the province of Ontario. And, as you recall, he opposed this resolution.

I want to suggest to the members of this House that the reason that Mr. Perry opposed this resolution, even though it does not go as far as I think it should, was because they want sole jurisdiction in this area of safety so that they can work employees regardless of the safety provisions in his industry. And this is why he opposed it.

I suggested in this House, during the labour estimates on the question of safety, that the employers in this province will oppose the question of accident-prevention and, as a matter of fact, will take a strike on this issue before they will do anything about it. Because they want to have sole jurisdiction in determining how employees are going to work, whether it is safe or unsafe in those plants. And so this is important. If the employers in this province are not going to take the bull by the horns and alleviate this type of situation, then government is going to have to take the action necessary to provide the safety for the employees in this province.

And I want to say, as the hon. member for Timiskaming pointed out, that employers in this province will discharge an employee who refuses to work in an unsafe condition. And let me tell you what happens in that case. Assuming that I work in industry, and I say, "Look at that, it is not a safe condition." I say that to my supervisor. Now he says, "Look, as far as we are concerned, that is a safe condition, you go ahead and work." And I refuse to work.

Then I am penalized to the extent that I am discharged for refusing to obey the orders of the supervisor. And what happens is that this corporation, because it jealously guards this area, will take you all of the way, right to the arbitrator. When it gets to be a question of credibility on whether my word is as good as the foreman's, I find myself invariably discharged.

And so we have employees that have no redress, except going through all of the grievance procedures inflicted by the agreements. But if we had committees set up in the plant that had equal employer-employee number, then, at least, I think the employees would have someone to appeal to there, at the plant level. They could at least take their case up with that committee. In addition to that, the committee could make periodic surveys of complaints and areas that they think are unsafe so that these questions can be brought up in joint discussion with the management and the employees of that plant. So this is very important, this question of safety committees, as far as I am concerned, and I am sure as far as this party is concerned. We have to have a joint effort between the employee and management because this is the only way, in my opinion, that we are going to get at the crux of the problem—the problem that of accident prevention.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, please forgive me if I get up and say, "I told you so!" But those members who sat here two years ago may recall that on that occasion I had, shall we say, a difference of opinion with some members of the party, and it had to do with industrial safety. On that occasion, I was so bold as to suggest that the unions were abdicating their responsibility in matters of industrial safety by refusing the suggestion that every shop steward ought to be a safety inspector. As a matter of fact, the NDPs at the time, particularly the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis), asked whether I was speaking for the party or whether my colleague, the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Braithwaite), was speaking for the party. I suggested at that time that every shop steward should be a safety inspector, and that his job would be to make reports daily on the safety features of the plant, and send one copy to the employer, one copy to the province of Ontario, and one copy—where construction is involved—to the local municipality, keeping one copy for himself.

Mr. Young: The trouble is he has no power.

Mr. Ben: Well, he is the safety inspector. Now he does this every day. That would then throw the burden on the employer because he is a qualified and a recognized safety inspector, even though he is also the shop steward, and he has stated in writing that there is a dangerous situation on that job. The onus would then be on the employer to prove that it was not, and if anybody would have to set up a committee, it would be him, because the burden would be on him, on the employer.

And I think, under those circumstances, you would find that employers would not hesitate very long in setting up these so-called safety committees. But, as I pointed out at that time, presently, if an accident occurs, the unions can always blame either the employer, or the government, or the municipality. They do not want the shop stewards to be safety inspectors because then the onus would be thrown on them.

So, in the meantime, people continue to be hurt and killed in industrial accidents because, I suggest to you, the unions have been avoiding their responsibilities. They should have been fighting for years to have the shop stewards appointed safety inspectors on these jobs.

Mr. Young: How can they be responsible when they have no power?

Mr. Ben: Well, just a moment, Mr. Chairman, there is an interjection there from the hon. member for Yorkview, who said the inspectors hold no power. If they are safety inspectors, then they must be vested with the power of a safety inspector, or else they should not be called a safety inspector. So why talk that kind of nonsense?

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the hon. member for Humber a question. This would be all well and good. It is a wonderful thing to talk about, but what about all of the plants that are not yet organized? What about the plants which do not have shop stewards? What about the shop steward who puts in such a report, indicating that there are hazardous conditions and then conditions are made so intolerable for him that he is unable then to put in such a report again? I ask him those three things.

Mr. Ben: Well, first of all, I think, at one time in this House, I said that a sign of a paranoiac is the fact that you cannot distinguish between a possible and a probable. The member who just rose is talking about hazards. Life is a hazard; every plant has hazards in it; every job entails a risk, but is it a danger to the man or is it a safe place to work in? For instance, if you work in a plant where an overhead crane is continuously moving from one end of the building to the other, it is a risky place to work because you could possibly be struck by a crane which was not properly operated, but on the other hand, it is not a dangerous place to work in. It is a risky place to work in if the crane is in the wrong hands.

There are not many plants which do not have shop stewards in them, but the fact is that even the members over there have to admit that practically 99 and forty-one one-hundredths per cent of the construction field is unionized. Mr. Chairman, you have not a building going up in this city at the present time—a commercial building—that is not being put up by union labour.

You go to any large plants who employ over 30 or 40 people where any risk is involved, they are almost completely unionized.

About the only field that is not unionized at the present time is that of the white-collar worker, or in the white-collar area. I would say you have only about a handful of firms of any size where any risk is involved that are not unionized.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, let me just for a moment talk about this question of plant safety, in-plant safety, and a steward taking the authority.

I have been a steward—I do not know of any position I have not held in the trade union movement—but, as a steward, let me tell you that we are really powerless. What is needed is some recognition of the company in this area of safety.

What is the steward going to do? Is he going to bring it to someone's attention? They are just not going to do anything about it anyway, because it is not recognized in the collective bargaining agreement.

I am suggesting to you, Mr. Chairman, that had we pressed this point in 1967 with the General Motors Corporation they would have taken a strike on it before they would have been broken down in this area. Every employer jealously guards that area of safety as their sole jurisdiction and they will fight it. And what we need is this type of legislation that is presently being brought in, and as I said, it does not go far enough.

But what is the steward going to do? First of all, is he going to go through the grievance procedure—which takes months—that this is an unsafe condition and in the meantime someone is injured? Is this what the hon. member is suggesting?

Mr. Ben: Not through grievance, but through a complaint to The Department of Labour here in Toronto that there is an unsafe condition in the plant. What has it got to do with grievance procedure?

Mr. Chairman: May I ask what grievances have to do with this particular section of the bill?

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, now he suggests we send letters all over the place while somebody is working in an unsafe condition.

I do not know how long that is going to take, with letters flying all over the place. We need some immediate action when the problem is brought up, and the way we are going to do it is through a joint committee.

There must be some recognition by the employers in this province that there are unsafe conditions in their establishments. That is what we have to have.

Sure, we do this—what the hon. member points out. I suppose in my local union, in local 222, we have a great file of letters we have sent to The Department of Labour indicating unsafe conditions. By the same token, his field representatives have been in that plant, and I suppose they have been in every plant, but there are times when there are immediate situations that we need to get on to, and we cannot afford delays.

What are we going to do, wait until someone is killed or seriously injured before we take some action? I am suggesting to you, Mr. Chairman, this is the direction that we have to go in.

The unions have not abrogated their position in terms of safety—as a matter of fact, I do not know of an organization that is more safety conscious than the unions. The hon. member knows Jerry Gallagher has shut down many jobs in the province of Ontario in regard to safety; he just closes them down. He has been criticized front and centre for closing those jobs down, but he does it anyway.

Is that the action that is necessary? Does the trade union movement in the province of Ontario have to shut every job down because of unsafe conditions? Is this what he is advocating?

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the Minister, that this is not the way to attack it. This is not the way to attack them. Let us get the proper representation, so that there is equal representation and accident prevention is strictly enforced. Then we will be eliminating some of these strike situations that prevail.

Let me say this, that if the industrial unions in this province started to close the plants down because of unsafe conditions, then there would be strikes in this province every day of the week.

Mr. Ben: Is it not a fact that a safety inspector can issue a stop work order—is that a fact or is it not?

Mr. Pilkey: Why does the member not direct the question to the Minister?

Mr. Ben: The member for Oshawa is the one who is misleading the House, not him. Can a safety inspector issue a stop work order?

Mr. Pilkey: I suspect that he—

Mr. Ben: The member does not know. So what is he talking about, if he does not know? I will ask someone who does, then.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, ask the Minister.

Mr. Ben: I will ask the hon. Minister.

Can a safety inspector issue a stop work order if he deems the circumstances to be dangerous?

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, I think we are getting somewhat off the point in reference to this matter. We are dealing with workmen's compensation and for the last while we have been dealing with industrial safety matters. I appreciate it is all in reference to safety generally, but the point we must bear in mind is that the employer is ultimately responsible for safety and for the operations within his plant.

There has been a good deal done in the last while in reference to safety matters and the workmen's compensation board devotes a good deal of money to the establishment of safety committees and other matters to improve the safety record. To cite one particular case, the construction safety association has established an advisory committee in the last few months, and brought the employees into that committee.

This is a gradual process that we are encouraging, and I think we are going to make far greater progress in this field rather than legislating that we must bring in a safety committee in every situation. We are trying to use flexibility and common sense in this field and I think we are making progress.

The industrial accident prevention association has, in the last three months, established another type of committee where they bring the employee representatives into their groups and work out ways and means of greater co-operation in this field.

Section 18 is to provide arrangements whereby the board can establish a safety committee in a plant that has more than the normal frequency of accidents for that particular type of industry. It is not a voluntary arrangement. The board can tell the employer it has to be done.

I think that this legislation—this section—is making good progress in this field and I think it is wise to leave it at that point, at the present time. But I would also tell the members that my department, and certainly the workmen's compensation board, are very cognizant of the dangers and the difficulties, and we are trying to do all we can to improve the safety situation. Therefore I recommend that the amendment should not be supported.

Mr. Chairman: Section 18?

Mr. Ben: Is it, or is it not, a fact that a safety inspector can issue a stop work order if he considers the situation dangerous?

Hon. Mr. Bales: We are trying to confine the remarks mainly to The Workmen's Compensation Act, but under The Industrial Safety Act, we have inspectors and they can issue a stop work order in certain circumstances.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on this, because I think that this section of the Act is probably one of the more important sections. We were to pay heed and be extremely safety conscious, all of us, then more than likely a lot of the problems that arise as a result of industrial accidents would not be there in the first place.

I think both industry and labour are extremely conscious of the need to emphasize and to press for safety and safety procedures. Indicative of that is the fact that the various members in the House representing labour have shown how concerned they were in their own areas—in the mining field and industrial occupations.

We have an industrial accident prevention association that has been doing a good job. Mind you, in any job that is done there is always room for improvement and I would sincerely think that the industrial accident prevention association is always forward to improving their own status, as well as the safety of the individual that is involved.

I do not think anyone concerned or anyone could possibly say that either labour or management is abdicating their responsibility for safety. I think they are all concerned. Maybe not concerned as to the extent that they should be in some instances, but I do not think that management wants to see their employees hurt. Likewise, I do not think that labour wishes to see either their own employees or management hurt as a result of unsafe practices. They both want to eliminate as many of the unsafe practices as they possibly can. In fact, I would say they want to eliminate all of the unsafe practices.

However, the explanatory note, Mr. Chairman, on the side here simply mentions the board is authorized to require. Now by that explanatory note, you would draw the conclusion that an employer must establish safety committees at the plant level. But that is not what the actual amendment says. It says, "May require the employer to establish one or more safety committees at the plant level."

So your explanatory note, in my estimation, is not correct. It is misleading. I think we have to get to the point not where we may require, but must require. We have to use compulsion when it comes to safety. We have got to sell and sell safety at all times, both from management level and labour level.

Mr. Chairman: Section 18?

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I could speak for hours on this because I believe industrial safety is something very close to my heart.

Mr. Chairman: As the Minister has pointed out, the discussion for quite some time has been centering around labour standards, industrial safety and so on, and I have to point out to the committee that this section 18, which is an amendment to The Workmen's Compensation Act, deals only with the matter of the board being authorized to establish a safety committee.

Now I think we have had considerable and extensive discussion around the whole matter of safety and I think that any further discussion should be centered upon the actual section 18 of the bill.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, if you had given me one more second, I would have said that I can speak for many hours on it but, however, I am going to limit it to urging the Minister, through you, sir, to step up the speed, accelerate the programme so that what he started out to do is done a little quicker, a little faster and it becomes more efficient a little sooner.

Mr. Chairman: Section 18? The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I agree with you; we should stick to this section and its application but we get disturbed when we have this kind of a section before us where the intent is to reduce injuries in a plant. It is all set out—the supposition of the Minister —that where injury frequency goes above the average, then they are going to take some action rather than giving us some straightforward idea as to what the department is trying to do, that is, to reduce accidents in the industry and, therefore, to reduce the cost of workmen's compensation.

Saying that, I would just ask the Minister one question and if he does not feel it is related to the section, fine. We will get at it some other time. But what does the Minister think about the request of the trade union movement, the federation of labour, and the Roach report and two other commission reports in the past few years, that accident prevention should be taken over by workmen's compensation and be a function of the board rather than this industry-management clique, the IAPA?

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister wish to reply to the question directed to him?

Sections 18 to 20, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, on section 21, the present section 115 of the Act which section 21 amends, reads:

> Every employer within three days after the happening of an accident to a workman in his employment by which the workman is disabled from earning full wages or that necessitates medical aid, shall notify the board in writing of the happening of the accident; the nature of it; the time of its occurrence; the name and address of the workman; the place where the accident happened; and the name and address of the physician or surgeon, if any, by whom the workman was or is attended for the injury.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this section is highly important and any failure or breakdown in that section is what has caused a great deal of concern in regard to the establishment of claims—for instance, its failure of quick action by the employer in reporting the accident, failure of any reason by the employee to know his rights and to get the accident reported and, of course, the doctor's report.

Now I just point that out because that is an important section. What the amendment purports to do is, and I read the explanatory note:

An employer is required to notify the board within three days after the employer learns of the accident.

Now the words added are "learns of the happening of the accident". Prior to that it was, "three days after the happening of the accident".

My first question to the Minister is, what brought about this change? Why now provide that the employer does not have to report it until he learns of it? I would think this would leave a great many loopholes for the employer to excuse himself for long delays in getting his report into the board.

Mr. Ben: How can it be otherwise?

Mr. Gisborn: Well, let me get finished and I will tell you. Certainly where an employee is working on a job and the job is of such a nature that it is covered by workmen's compensation, the employer, or his agent, his supervisor or his foreman, is in charge—and certainly no man should go off shift without that supervisor, that foreman or the agent knowing whether he has been injured or not. We just cannot leave it simply to say that the employer has to learn of the accident. The employer might be down south on his vacation for three months.

If you talk about the employer as the management of the plant, it has to be his agent. Now it was perfectly all right the way it was before but we still had problems with it. Now you have extended it by removing the phrase that every employer within three days after the happening of an accident to a workman in his employment, he has to report it. You say that after he learns of the accident he has to report it.

Why the change? Why this addition and why the loopholes that are left in there?

Mr. Chairman: The Minister.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, I think it is obvious that there are times when an employer does not learn of an accident, and the section simply provides that it is three days from the time that management learns of the accident. You will note that we have also increased the penalty. So, we are taking full steps to see that there is no inordinate delay.

But there have been situations where the employer honestly did not know of an accident before the three days elapse. I think, in those instances, it is improper to penalize him, so this section simply provides that if he learns on the first day he must report it as the present arrangement, but if it is three days after he learns of that accident, then the board must be notified within three days.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister if there is any place under the Act for the interpretation of the term employer? Is there any place where it says the employer is the foreman? Is the foreman of the plant considered the employer in regards to this section of the Act?

Hon. Mr. Bales: The definition of an employer is very extensive. I have it in the original Act and I am sure the hon. member has, but I would take it to be those in control of the operation.

Section 21 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Jackson: I have a question for the Minister concerning this. I must first of all say that I think it is a step forward. But take the case of a person who is granted compensation for silicosis in Ontario on a cost sharing basis with, as an example, Manitoba. If Manitoba decided at a later date that his compensation will not be paid from that province, will the Ontario board pick up the difference and make sure that he gets the compensation that he is entitled to? Or will the Ontario board say that because Manitoba is liable for 25 per cent of his compensable disability, they should pay it and Ontario will refuse to pay it? I would just like the Minister to comment on that.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, this section permits the board to enter into agreements with other jurisdictions in reference to these things. Before they would enter into any agreement, the terms and conditions and circumstances would all be ironed out. We would be satisfied as to the arrangements.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I would just like the Minister's assurance that, in this case, if Manitoba decided against further payment on a compensable situation, that Ontario would pick up the difference and make sure this man would be compensated—as he is entitled to be.

Hon. Mr. Bales: I think you are picking out an isolated case or situation here, but certainly I will take careful note of the suggestion you have made and will look into it with the board.

Mr. B. Newman: I would like to lend my support to the amendment as presented here by the Minister, because I have had several cases where individuals have suffered with silicosis, but not in our province. They had a most difficult time; in fact, they still cannot get satisfaction.

Maybe, by the passing of this, with arrangements made between provinces, cases such as the ones I have mentioned would no longer be problems whatsoever and the individuals would receive satisfaction from workmen's compensation.

Section 22 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister has an amendment to section 23.

Hon. Mr. Bales: Mr. Chairman, I move that section 23 be struck out and that the following be substituted therefor:

> This Act comes into force on the first day of August, 1968, and sections 1, 2, 5 and 8; subsection 1 of section 10; and section 11, 19 and 21, apply only in respect of accidents happening on or after that day, and sections 4, 6 and 9 and subsection 2 of section 10; and sections 12, 13 and 22, apply in respect of accidents happening before or after that day.

Motion agreed to.

Section 23, as amended, agreed to.

Section 24 agreed to.

Bill 150 reported.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Chairman, does that very lengthy debate on compensation now discharge the order of the special debate on compensation?

Hon Mr. Rowntree moves the committee of the whole House rise and report one bill with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to

The House resumed, Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report one bill with certain amendments and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 13th order, House in committee of supply, Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS

On vote 703:

Mr. Chairman: The member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I think that the question of automobile insurance has created a great deal of irritation in terms of costs, the unfairness, and other insurance practices.

In addition, to that, sir, the rates have risen substantially the last few years, and the amount of money, or the percentages of the premiums, paid out is not adequate. Major accidents—a number of major automobile accidents—go unreimbursed, and we find cancellations and renewal practices being arbitrary. So that—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I must correct that statement. Under the facility, which exists in Ontario, there is no cancellation of automobile insurance policies in mid-term.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, the—

Hon Mr. Rowntree: You must be aware of that.

Mr. Pilkey: The question of renewing them is another thing.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Oh, is it?

Mr. Pilkey: The point that I really want to make, in any event, is the question of costs —as far as automobile insurance is concerned, here in the province of Ontario.

As I said, there are many citizens of this province who are becoming more and more irritated because of costs that they think are unwarranted. In my opinion, this is a fact.

Let me say this, that unless this government takes hold of this situation and puts automobile insurance costs in their proper perspective, that the trade union movement in this province is going to make automobile insurance premiums a collective bargaining item. The employers are going to pay the cost of the premiums, you make no mistake about that. This is the direction—

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Irresponsibility!

Mr. Pilkey: It may be irresponsible, but they are not going to carry this burden any longer, the question of automobile insurance and the high cost. It may be ridiculous, but that is the direction we are going. Unless this government takes some action in this area, This is the direction that the whole movement is going.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is the direction of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Pilkey: It is not the direction that the party is going, it is the direction that the trade union movement is going, unless the government takes some action in terms of providing insurance at reasonable cost, and eliminating the unfairness of many insurance practices.

I do not throw this out as a threat, I just think that the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What else is it?

Mr. Pilkey: You can take it as you want it. You will think it is a threat; I am just relating a fact.

Mr. Bullbrook: It is a promise!

Mr. Pilkey: No, no, it is not a threat. I am relating a fact on what is going to happen. I am relating a fact.

I suspect that it will be more than a million before long if the government does not take some action. If there was a properly government sponsored automobile insurance programme in the province of Ontario we could reduce the cost and take care of those situations where people in an automobile accident have found themselves treated unfairly. We find many inequities in the present insurance programme under private enterprise.

I suspected that there would be some comments when I raised this question, because, obviously, most of the members in the two old-line parties want to perpetuate free enterprise in this area of auto insurance, regardless of costs to the citizens in the province. Not that they do not have any compassion for the citizens of this province, but they are beholden to the auto insurance companies.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: Yes, it hurts a little, does it not?

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Where does your money come from?

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): Just like Saskatchewan.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pilkey: But it is a fact. I do not know how to urge this government more to attempt and to institute a government automobile insurance programme that would reflect the true cost and guarantee the people of this province what should be their right, in terms of automobile accidents and other cost items, in relation to automobile insurance.

Mr. Chairman: May I remind the members that there was a very extensive discussion on auto insurance, and we moved to fire insurance and other types of insurance yesterday?

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Has there been a discussion of loan companies, Mr. Chairman? I am sure that this has not been discussed. I deem that one of the causes of the high interest rate in the province and country today is the negligence of this government in its drafting of legislation, and particularly The Loan and Trust Act.

There have been no failures among trust companies for the simple reason that they had acted as trust companies.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What kind of trust companies?

Mr. Ben: I am sorry. The trust companies had not gone into bankruptcy because they acted as trust companies. It was when they started acting as banks that they ran into difficulties, and we had the situation last year where we had to pass emergency legislation to keep some of these loan companies, that called themselves trust companies, stabilized. Now, banking comes under federal legislation. But this province, because it wants to usurp that peculiar sphere of financial activity, drafted The Loan and Trust Act, which enabled trust companies to borrow funds, and put in a provision that the trust company could waive the requirement which made it mandatory on the part of the depositors to serve notice before they could get back their deposits.

Naturally, the trust companies seized upon this to enable them to become bankers, because as long as they had to receive notice before they could be compelled to pay back a loan, they could not, in the true sense of the word, act as banks. But when the trust companies could say to people, "Look you loan your money or deposit with us, and we will waive the provision which requires you to serve notice upon us," then they became banks that paid higher interest.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They have always had that power.

Mr. Ben: They did not always have the power. If my memory serves me correctly, section 73 is the weakness in The Loan and Trust Act. If you took the power of waiving notice, then they could act as banks, because this is what loan and trust companies are acting as now—banks! They just call themselves loan companies. Now, I will give the section, and I raised it last year. There is one little section in there, and this is what has caused the high interest rates, the loan and trust companies have gone into the banking business, and tried to draw savings away from the regularly established banks. So they offer higher interest.

The banks have to meet this higher interest, and then the loan and trust companies raise their interest for their depositors and away we go in an escalation of interest rates. Now it is fine for a depositor to get high interest rates on his deposits, except the banks get this money and loan it out to other people and they charge a still higher interest rate. The inequity in this is that those who have put it in the bank and draw these interest rates, but those who have not, have to go to the banks and borrow at usurious rates. So although I do not begrudge the depositors getting their interest, I do begrudge those who do not have it, having to pay such high interest rates to get it. This was brought about by this government permitting trust companies to go into the banking business, and that is what they are. They are banks. A rose by any other name smells as sweet, and these trust companies, by any other name, are carrying on a banking business, and do not say that they are not.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You are over emphasizing; and that is an over-simplification.

Mr. Ben: That is not an over-simplification. You wanted to grab a certain jurisdiction, so you permitted this to go on, and this is what has been responsible for these high interest rates.

Another thing that has been responsible for high interest rates, is your permitting the trust companies in this province to continuously merge and amalgamate. I was incensed when the president of the Canada Permanent Trust Company took in the last company, I do not know who it was, Eastern Chartered or somebody, saying that it was good business to get rid of the little ones.

But the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation has always led the rest of the field in increasing interest rates on mortgage loans. Their rates are usually a half a per cent higher than the companies here. They are always leading the way in increasing the loans. I do not know if they ever led the way in decreasing the interest rates, but they always seem to be leading the way in increasing the interest rates.

Why can they do that? It is because they are one of the most powerful ones. Next to the Royal Trust, they are the largest trust and mortgage companies in the country. The government should have stepped in long ago to prevent these continuous mergers and amalgamations that are swallowing the little fellows and, as a matter of fact, the Canada Permanent Trust and Mortgage Company did become the Canada Permanent Trust and Mortgage Company after they absorbed about half a dozen other small companies.

I say this to this government, Mr. Chairman, that if they continue to permit these huge trust companies to buy up the little companies, the interest rates will go still higher. You are wiping out the competition and increasing the interest rates. They are running cartels and monopolies and you should have stopped that long ago—but you have been remiss and negligent in that respect. That is why the little man cannot go and borrow money at decent interest rates now to build homes.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I might say to the Minister that I do not agree with the analysis of the role of the trust company that the member for Humber has put forward, but there are a few aspects of it that I would like to question the Minister about. I note that apart from the usual sort of annual increment, the estimate is the same this year as it was last year. I am concerned as to whether or not the Minister is now satisfied that the office of the superintendent of insurance and of the registrar of loan and trust companies has the staff and the facilities, both in numbers and in quality, which are required for him to discharge his obligations not only under The Insurance Act, but under The Loan and Trust Companies Act?

The obligations imposed under that Act are quite onerous. The last time we discussed this matter, in the sad circumstances of British Mortgage and Trust and again of York Trust, the department, in fact, was not able to carry out the kind of inspection which the statute appears to envisage. Indeed they were quite a long way behind in issuing, for example, the annual report of loan and trust companies.

I would like to know whether the Minister can give us assurance and some indication of the size of the staff under this vote; the quality and number of them; the date of the last annual report of the registrar under The Loan and Trust Companies Act; when we can expect to have the report for 1967; and such other matters as will relate to the specific question as to its competence to carry out the role which it is required to carry out, particularly in the area of loan and trust companies?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: During the past year, the salary item was increased by some $59,000. There has been a reorganization of staff. There is an increase of five in personnel over last year and we are currently awaiting an analysis of the department by our own organization and methods department. When that is received, it will be honoured and whatever recommendations they make will be implemented.

I think the reorganization of the department has come a long way during the past year, based on its experience prior to the formation of the new department.

There have been a good deal—I will not say negotiations—but of discussions with the federal government and particularly in some of the areas where there is overlapping or similar jurisdiction with respect to inspection. We are trying to work toward a standardization, both of our legislation and the requirements under our legislation, and of our inspection staff with the federal government.

I think that the point the hon. member has—for instance, the inspection of the various companies having to do with their admission to the Canada deposit insurance corporation—was a worthwhile matter.

I reported on that the other day when I said that all of the companies under the Ontario jurisdiction and over which we had jurisdiction, and which had been directed into the Canada scheme, had been accepted—I think I should just enlarge upon the word "accepted" a little bit—they were always "accepted," but there was a final acceptance required to complete the transaction, and that has been accomplished. I think that alone establishes that the companies which were under our jurisdiction are operating in accordance not only with our own requirements, but in accordance with the standards set by the federal superintendent and the federal CDIC, the deposit corporation.

I think this whole—I do not like the word exercise—but this whole situation during the past year has led to a general clean-up of the whole situation and in a positive way. We are still awaiting that report from organization and methods. As soon as it comes along, it will be implemented.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister tell us when they would anticipate that the report for last year would be available from the registrar of loan and trust companies?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It has presently been sent to the printers for submission of proofs —probably within a six-week period.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, there is one other area under loan and trust corporations that I would like to explore with the Minister. I certainly got the impression that the passage of The Deposit Insurance Act last year was, in a sense, a negotiation of a transfer of jurisdiction from the provincial government to the federal government over the trust companies. I am interested to know whether or not there are discussions taking place between either, on the level of the department or on other levels, about the ultimate transfer of jurisdiction over the trust companies to the federal level, so that there will be some uniform administration of the financial institutions of the country, or whether it is intended for Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I know what the hon. member is talking about and there is this question of joint or overlapping jurisdictions over trust companies. Let me simply repeat that there is no question about a constitutional jurisdiction of the provinces with respect to that particular phase of a trust company operation, meaning the aspect of its fiduciary role to the public, the supervision of estates and trusts, and that sort of thing.

With respect to—and again I do not like this word banking—their conduct in accepting deposits, being quasi-banks. It was in recognition of where we thought the responsibility should lie that we directed them into the Canada deposit corporation and you will remember last year, I think, our position was very clear as to where we thought deposit insurance should rest and be operated.

Against that background there still remains the point that the hon. member is raising about a final straightening out between the federal government and the provinces as to just where this banking responsibility should ultimately and properly lie.

I have had to rely on this explanation on other occasions in my estimates. I make no apology for it because it is a fact. During the past six months, let us say, up to last November and December of 1967, I had some very active discussions with the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Sharp, about this general area, and about the ways and means of getting to the nub of the problem both from a constitutional side as well as from the operating side.

I am sure you can understand that it has not been in the cards to have any more of those negotiations recently, but as soon as the situation in Ottawa settles down, this is certainly one item that will come up. But first, there is the matter of consumer protection that must be discussed with the federal government to get this under way on an all-Canada basis, or however you want to put it —but this similarly applies to the point raised by the hon. member with respect to financial institutions, so that we know exactly where we stand. It is an important matter.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I have one last comment—I do not expect the Minister to answer it—I have been concerned—and the member for Humber mentioned this—that a number of the trust companies that do business are, for practical purposes, controlled also by other financial institutions, and there is beginning to be a web of effective control in some instances, a web, certainly of influence in other instances, which link the traditional relationship between banks and trust companies, as well as finance companies which have purchased interests in trust companies.

The web of interlocking interests, or related interests, is becoming quite extensive, and I would ask first of all that the superintendent, the registrar, for the purpose of the estimates next year, look into this matter of the interlocking interest. Now, I am not suggesting necessarily, that it is either good or bad. I think the first step in any such interest is that the registrar, as representative of the public interest, knows what the factual situation is about the interlocking interest.

I would specifically ask, and I trust next year I will recall this comment to raise the matter at that time, that we do have perhaps included as part of your report or as an appendix or as a separate study, just the extent of the interlocking web of the financial institutions in the country, particularly in view of the entrance of finance companies into the field of substantial holdings of securities of certain of the trust companies.

I think it well merits study, and I think, on the basis of the study when we have the accurate financial information, one can then begin to assess it in relation to the public interest as to whether it is a good thing or a bad thing.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would say to the hon. member on that point that there is a limitation under the federal authority restricting banks to a 10 per cent ownership of trust companies, and it is effective. I think it is one year hence, or 12 or 14 months—but in any event in the immediate future—in prohibiting individuals from serving both on the boards of banks and the boards of trust companies. I think that probably is going to be the basis of what you are talking about.

Mr. J. Renwick: It does become quite a web when you consider, for example, that Traders Finance Corporation, so far as I know, holds a substantial interest—I think a 20 per cent interest—in the Guaranty Trust Company.

I think that is just one instance of the inter-relationship which does develop amongst these financial institutions which militates against the kind of competitive financial operation that, perhaps, is more in the public interest than a controlled one.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The report commenced by our Ontario securities commission, with respect to insider trading, disclosed the type of information that the hon. member raises at the moment.

Vote 703 agreed to.

On vote 704:

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I have a few comments that I wish to make that fall within the area of consumer protection.

I think that most would agree that, of all of the votes that we have to take, to the average individual—to the average housewife—the area of consumer protection is one of the most important. It is also one of the most neglected economic groups in this country and in this province in particular. Everyone in the province is a consumer, and the notice that is taken by the government of the affairs of consumers leaves a lot to be desired.

Today the consumer faces many vast problems as he goes about trying to make purchases. The restrictive trade practices by producers. The hundreds of millions of dollars that are spent on advertising which, generally speaking, is more confusing than enlightening. The fancy packages which effectively hide the nature of the goods that are contained therein, rather than bringing to the attention of the consumer what is actually contained in the package. It makes purchasing very much more difficult.

I would say that, in theory, the consumer is given a very important and vital position to fill. In the economy of the textbook, it is the consumer who has the choices to make, the choice to determine whether or not the goods and services that are being produced are adequate, and whether or not they are properly presented to the public. It is really the consumer who determines which firms will succeed and which will fail. And in this textbook theory, the decisions of the consumer are reflected very much by the goods which are purchased on the market.

Competition between consumers for the goods available, to a large extent determines the price, theoretically. But of both the goods and the services that are available in the province, the prices of those goods which are in great demand, of course, will naturally bid upwards and the prices of those for which the demand is somewhat lesser will fall.

In this theory, producers are encouraged to produce goods which people want and are discouraged from producing unpopular goods. And the resulting shifts in this production bring the economy into an equilibrium, in which the amount of any of the commodity produced is equal to the amount desired at the market price—which is called, I suppose, the law of supply and demand.

In this abstract world of pure economic competition, there is really no meaning to be attached to the term "consumer protection." The consumer is assumed to know enough about the choices available to him on the market to plan and to make his purchases in a rational manner. This knowledge would, or should, prevent him from being victimized by unscrupulous sellers, and it is assumed that the producers and the sellers will meekly submit to having their goods sold at market prices, and in consumer-directed amounts.

I would say to the Minister that, in discussing consumer protection, it is a very difficult thing to draw the line between federal and provincial boundaries. I recognize that some of the comments that I may make will fall within the jurisdiction or the legal jurisdiction of the federal government, but the entire area of consumer protection has such effect on the consumer of Ontario that we must very seriously consider them.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I would say that we would welcome your comments with respect to these matters, whether they are federal or provincial, because of the interprovincial conference that we had a couple of weeks ago, and with the forthcoming meeting with the federal government. I think it is important that we in this Leigslature just set out the situation as we see it. To me, this is a pretty important part of my estimates.

Mr. Deans: Thank you. I certainly do appreciate those comments. I feel that this is a very enlightened position to take. I had hoped that you would look at it from this angle.

I would say that, in this sort of abtract world that I am talking about for the moment, the producers are not permitted to form monopolies or combines, and are not able to gang up on the consumer and to come together in such a way as to deprive the consumer of his economic bargaining position. The consumer and the producer in this world approach each other as equals, the consumer having sufficient knowledge of the goods and the services to keep him from being hoodwinked, and the seller refraining from attempting to hoodwink him.

As I say, in an abstract way this would work well if everyone was painfully honest and above board. The unfortunate part is really that it is just theory. It does not seem to work in practice. It has not worked enough.

The present Canadian economy has very little resemblance to this theory. The production of most commodities is dominated by a few large corporations which are able to exert tremendous influence on the market. The complex plant and machinery and the large capital funds required severely limit the ability of any new producer to enter the market. Therefore it becomes an area, particularly in the food industry, and you could say the beer industry, I suppose, where the present producer has a very tight corner on the market, and he can then influence things by having this distinct advantage. The only real competition then that will exist is the competition of advertising. The competition of trying to sell the goods not on their actual intrinsic quality, not to bring out the worth of the goods, but rather to sell them on an image, to put them on the market and to establish for the consumer, a wonderful bright image of what is in the box and appeal to his emotions rather than to tell him what is actually in them, and appeal to his good common sense.

With those few remarks about the theory and the practice of this, I would say that the presence of only a few producers in most industries has tended to make producers wary of price competition. They fear that the price cutting will only lead to retaliation by other large firms and a consequential price war would collectively harm all of the producers. While it is very difficult at any one time to determine that prices are fixed by any one other than the producer, I think that anyone with any knowledge of the market would reailze that it is too much of a coincidence that every product arrives on the market at almost the same price.

I think we would agree that, as I said, the competition has been brought down to a level of advertising and sales gimmicks and really nothing in the realm of a profit competition—competing with a product that is either a superior product, or making available a product at a lesser cost in order to bring into the area of that particular consumer need, the people who must purchase it.

This situation has left the consumer in an unenviable position and in this sort of pseudo-competitive market each individual is pitted against large, impersonal corporations which have spent thousands of dollars in advertising. They spent this money to appeal to his emotions as I said. They have come out with meaningless phrases and nice fancy wrappings but underneath there is very little opportunity for rational choosing.

It leaves the consumer under a sort of double handicap, that when he enters the market he is deficient in bargaining strength as an individual, and he is deficient in knowledge because the packaging does not indicate the product. What I am going to suggest are areas where we might, I hope, alter this situation and bring about a more rational approach to purchasing and a more rational approach to protection of the consumer. I was intrigued by the heading in this little booklet, "In the Public Interest". I think that that is what I will talk about.

"In the Public Interest", that is what I am concerned about at the moment and I think that, as a responsible legislative body, deeply concerned with the welfare of the citizens of this province, we have to take very strong action. We can no longer allow the market to fluctuate in the manner that it has, and leave the competition to be of the false and fancy kinds as opposed to the real deep competition that must necessarily be there, if the law of supply and demand is to work to any effect.

The field of packaging and labelling—this is one of the areas of grave concern. I have heard more complaints, and I am sure the Minister has too, about the area of packaging and labelling of products than perhaps any other single area. The complaints are quite often of several major kinds. They fall into three or perhaps four major categories and the first problem seems to be the large package with the small content—the package that arrives on the market in the giant, huge, superb, stupendous size and inside, we get a half full box of whatever it happens to be you are trying to buy.

Now, I recognize, and I am sure you do, too, through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, that in many industries it is not the fault of the industry that the package is so large. In the filling process, of course, it takes that size of a box and, as it says, the product settles. Of course, there is some room left.

But I think that we must do whatever we can to ensure that the size of the package relates at least in some way to what is contained therein. We have got to try and ensure that when someone goes into a store and buys a box of soap that is half filled with soap, a further quarter filled with a dish towel and the last quarter with air—that that situation was beyond the control of the manufacturer.

As I said, it is not always the case of trying to mislead the public in those cases. There are some areas where it cannot be avoided.

Another problem that arises is the tendency of manufacturers to continue even yet to put out packages in various sizes instead of standardizing the size of the package in some way or other so that each and every product on the market will be contained in a package that cleaarly announces the size. We will no longer have the large and the medium and the small. Because the large, medium and small really mean nothing when the giant comes to the market.

We do not really need the two-pound, three-ounce size indicating the large, while the four-pound, seven-ounce size is the giant size. It makes it very difficult for a consumer to shop realistically and intelligently when we have this kind of packaging and this kind of marking of sizes. It would be much more intelligent if they were to arrive from each manufacturer in a standard size of box that indicates that if it is large, it represents four pounds, for example; if it is giant, it represents eight pounds—and no matter what you buy, that is what it represents, no matter whose product it happens to be.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if it might, since it is 6 o'clock, and I have considerably more to say, be in order to adjourn the debate at this stage?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, before we rise, could I ask the House leader if he would inform us as to what the procedure will be in the next couple of days? I do this because of the government Whip inferring to me today that there was the possibility of us going into Budget debate on Monday for a day and dispensing with the hour between 1:00 and 2:00 o'clock tomorrow.

Could the House leader give us some direction so we can do some planning? We are in agreement with it if that is the case, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I think I could. I will try to confirm that with you this evening.

But in any event and while we have been asked this question: Following the estimates of my department we will deal with the matter of government insurance. Then comes The Department of Public Works, the Treasury, Civil Service, Mines, and then Municipal Affairs.

With respect to the order paper and the Budget debate, I will speak to those points later this evening.

It being 6:00 o'clock p.m., the House took recess.

The House resumed at 8:00 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL AFFAIRS

On vote 704:

Mr. Chairman: I think perhaps before we proceed with vote 704, we should agree to take the director of consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau as one section, then separate the registration and examination branch and cemeteries branch. Would this be agreeable to the committee?

We will proceed then with the director of consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Yes, thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Just prior to the supper hour I had been discussing the matter of packaging and of labelling packages and determining suitable sizes prominently displayed in order that any consumer trying to purchase would have at least a 50/50 chance of coming out with something bearing a reasonable relationship as between the amount spent and the amount received. At that time, by way of illustration, I was about to use an article that I took out of one of the local newspapers earlier this year and to read a small piece out of it. It says:

> New package shapes and labels making ever more blatant claims crowd the supermarket shelves. There are no longer small, medium and large sizes. These are considered dirty words. Only "jumbo," "giant," "mammoth" and "colossal" now exist. And rather than raise prices—

I feel this is quite important:

> —rather than raise prices, manufacturers indulge in the sneaky trick of putting less of the product in the same size carton, in the well-founded hope that one housewife in 10,000 will notice the difference.

You would wonder about it but as you read further you can see what they are talking about. It says:

> Certainly the net weight or content number is printed somewhere on the package. But who can remember what it was last week? Not many people. When the net weight of a cereal drops from one pound, two ounces to 14 ounces without change of package size, who would be aware of it? Who counts the number of sheets in a toilet roll? Who notices there is less tea in a tea bag?

And they go on to tell that the decrease in the content covers a wide range of food items from cat food to candy bars, and non-food items such as shoe polish and disposable vacuum cleaner bags and patent medicines and so on. But I think the message is fairly clear that the industry has found another way to maintain the price level, make it appear that they are holding the line, while in actual fact deriving greater profit.

Now I suppose it is legal, but it certainly does not do much to bring out the confidence of the consumer. It certainly is very difficult for an average consumer to go around and determine whether or not the product she is buying today has the same amount of content as the product she bought last week or the week before.

Another article that caught my eye not too many weeks ago was one I feel was of great concern. It is the matter of labelling, showing very clearly on the package, no matter what the product is, the ingredients of the product. I am sure that everyone here—and I am not going to read it—but I am sure that everyone here read in the Toronto Daily Star the article about the nurse who found when she tried Ultrabrite that she was allergic to one of the ingredients and the great trouble she had finding out from the Colgate-Palmolive Company what the ingredient was. I think it is of some major significance that the company refused—even after having been told that she was allergic to something in their product, being told by her that she was a nurse and that she wanted to know what it was she was allergic to so she could determine what course of action to take to remedy it—they refused to do so. There should be no product on the market for human consumption that is not clearly labelled, with the ingredients stamped in such a fashion that there can be no doubt.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): What about Coca-Cola?

Mr. Dean: Let me say to the hon. member for Humber that I thought by saying any product for human consumption that might include Coca-Cola. I drink it.

I think any product for human consumption should have the ingredients marked plainly on it. I do not know if the member for Humber is in agreement or in disagreement, it is hard to tell.

I feel that if we were to take this action it would certainly help to fill out a gap that is left there. There is no way for a consumer to determine contents if they are not clearly indicated.

Now, it has been suggested, and I think that there is good merit in it, that these requirements should be extended to cover goods purchased from wholesalers in bulk and packaged by retailers; and should include appropriate non-food items as well, such as clothes and cloths and yarn—an indication of some kind of the calibre and quality of the product that you are purchasing.

I listened this morning with some considerable interest to an open-line type programme, and on this programme there was a gentleman from the carpet industry. I am sure that 95 per cent of the people purchasing carpets in this province could not tell you if they were getting a bargain or not. They have no idea. They do not know if they are paying too much or too little. They do not know what is in the carpet; there is no way to tell. It just says made up with certain fibres, and it does not mean anything. Even Dupont 501, if that is the right number, does not mean anything to the average person, but they assume that it means something and they buy it.

In the field of advertising there is much that could be said about it, and I know that the Minister would agree with that—that a lot of the advertising that has gone on is, if not completely false, at least bordering on the false. The packages that one sees with the great chunks of meat displayed on the front.

I have yet another article—I hate to keep referring to things out of newsprint but it is sometimes the only way to get to the point. One of the things that we find in this article—and it is out of Canadian Transport of July 5, 1968—tells about the new products on the market concerning rice and noodles. There are all kinds of them; many, many of them.

It gives you an indication of how much the consumer is paying for this relatively low-cost food. It tells of how we have this beef-flavoured Rice-a-roni—without beef, beef-flavoured. We have Uncle Ben's beef-flavoured rice. And it says that the leading ingredient of Uncle Ben's beef-flavour is beef fat. It is not really beef. It says that Betty Crocker now offers noodles Romanoff. This is noodles with a little cheese and some sour cream salad, and for this you pay $1.36 a pound—

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): If you buy it that is.

Mr. Deans: Certainly, anyone who purchases and pays this kind of price—but the thing that I want to point out is this—it is the packaging of it that is disturbing me. When one picks up the beef Stroganoff, or the noodles Romanoff—it is a very colourful package, with great enormous chunks of meat. It is a very colourful package, with cheese just oozing all over the picture; and then you buy it. And what do you get? You get a box of noodles and a package of cheese about half an inch square that does not in any way compare with the picture on the package. Surely this is false advertising?

My friend from—wherever he may be from, I have a little difficulty remembering—from Carleton East, cluck clucks over there as if it is not that terrible. The fact of the matter is it is terrible. It is terrible that the advertising in these packages should be so outrageous—the fact that they do not in any way resemble the product inside.

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence (Carleton East): Do you?

Mr. Deans: Do I what?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: Do you resemble the product?

Mr. Deans: Which product do you have in mind, through you, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. A. B. R. Lawrence: The one you sold to the electorate last year.

Mr. Deans: Oh, I think definitely, definitely!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Deans: So, in the matter of advertising, I think it is necessary, in the establishment of the consumer bureau, that it looks into the affairs of the consumer.

We will assume for the moment that the consumer is not able to determine what is inside the package. Surely it must become a regulation that what is inside is depicted on the picture—or at least, what is not inside is not depicted on the picture.

Another problem about advertising is clearly shown by the following article. It shows the power of advertising. It is about the Reader's Digest, and it shows what can be done by one company to stop anyone from speaking out.

There was a gentleman, a Mr. Baker, who wrote a book; it was called "The Permissible Lie." It was a book showing the problems of advertising and the problems of the consumer, and he was about to have it published by Funk and Wagnall, one of the fairly large publishing companies.

But Reader's Digest bought Funk and Wagnall, and they said that they would no longer publish the book because the people this man was writing about purchased advertising in the Reader's Digest. They did not think that it was in the best interest of the Reader's Digest to publish the articles, and the facts that this man had dug up, and so therefore he had to go and find some other means of publishing his book. This is how far the advertising media reaches in. It reaches right in to the very souls of people.

It says, and I read again, "in recent years the advertising industry has grown to mammoth proportions," and no one can deny that. It points out that in 1961 there was an amount spent of $282 million in advertising through advertising agencies, and in the past five years this has more than doubled. Advertising is paid for by the consumer in the form of higher prices, although the advertising industry claims that advertising in fact aids in lowering costs by promoting larger production.

I think it is apparent to most people that most advertising—particularly that done by large consumer goods producing corporations —is done to persuade customers to shift from one brand of the same goods to another. It is not done to try to tell people that they are selling a better product. It is done just to appeal to their senses—to appeal, not to the common sense, but to appeal to their imagination. And the problem with advertising, and it is a sort of vicious circle, is, as one firm increases its expenditures in advertising in an effort to lure the public from another firm, of course the other firm then spends increasingly more, and so on all the way down the line. It always falls back on the consumer to pay the cost.

Now if the advertising was done in a fashion that would enable the people to see exactly what was for sale, it might not be such a bad thing. But in actual fact it is not, as I said before.

We would suggest that some measures ought to be taken in the advertising field and the provincial government could make these suggestions to the federal government. I suggest that a ban be placed on advertising directed particularly at young children, for a start. I think that television advertising that tells the small child to run to mummy and get her to go out and buy such and such a product is going a little far. I think that when you imply that every child on the block has a certain toy and "you ought to have it," it is going a little far. I think that we ought to ban advertising directed particularly at young children.

A ban on the meaningless comparatives, where they compare things which really cannot be compared. There are certain things—and whether or not we ban the advertising of alcohol and the like is something that I am not particularly sure of—but there are certain products where we are going to do either one of two things. We are either going to allow complete advertising, or we are going to ban advertising altogether.

Another matter is not to allow advertising to refer to "independent scientific tests", because they are meaningless. You sit and watch television and you find, consistently, advertisements coming on showing you how one gasoline with a certain additive will go further than another—a gasoline with an additive will go further than a gasoline without an additive. But how much, and what is the difference in cost? They do not tell you. They do not tell you whether it is going to even out in the long run and you are going to go further with this gasoline at a cheaper cost.

It is not fraudulent perhaps, but certainly bordering on that, because there is no indication that you are buying a superior product if you buy it.

It should be compulsory in advertising to mention the grade of the product and the sizes available, and there ought to be a compulsory mentioning of prices in advertisements by retail establishments.

In the field of sales gimmicks I think we could quite easily do without free gifts—trading stamps are on the way out, if they are not completely gone. I think that we all know the free gift is not free. There is really nothing free and, as I said before, if they put a dish towel into your dish-washing soap you pretty quickly find out that you are paying for it anyway, because you are getting less soap; you certainly do not get it free.

In addition to these things, there are other matters that ought to be taken into consideration in strengthening the legislation in the consumer protection field.

One is the need for an ombudsman in this province—a person who will represent the consumer at all levels. A person who, when a consumer feels he is being gypped, or if the government finds he is, will take action on their behalf and will constantly be working on behalf of the consumer. A person to whom the consumer can come with his problems and have representation made to the government.

I am not talking about the type of ombudsmen that sit in here, 117 of us, because it becomes a very difficult chore.

As my colleague says, not exactly like the insurance superintendent either.

I think that this shows what is really wrong—that, generally speaking, the consumer associations are just a bunch of women. And I say "just", not to be derogatory, but they are a bunch of ordinary people who get together to discuss the problems that they have personally faced. But they have no way of making forcible, continuous representation and there is no way of getting some action against the people who are cheating. It is necessary that we have someone in the government, in The Department of Consumer Affairs, doing just this continuously.

There is a need for standard forms in all things. We have standard forms in the insurance field, to some degree, and I believe that we need a standard form. It was said that this standard form ought to have a complete disclosure of the cost of borrowing, if borrowing is being done. Clear statements of default, repossession and security provisions, prepayment privileges—and that is a very important thing. There are quite a number of people who, over the course of the years, save up the money to pay off the product, only to find that they cannot save a nickel by doing so.

Penalties and consequences to the vendors and credit grantor for inaccurate disclosure of borrowing costs, which we are getting to. The cooling-off period that we have introduced in this province is just not quite enough. It is almost, but not quite, because in the provisions of the Act, there has been no provision made for the possibility that a door-to-door salesman can take the purchaser away from his home to an office to sign the contract.

This is one area where they have found a loophole in the Act in British Columbia and it was altered, and I think we ought to alter it here. But, if a door-to-door salesman sells you a product, even though you have the two days, and even though all of the other provisions are made, you can be taken from your home, or invited from your home, into an office to sign the final contract. They then do not have to comply with the regulations of the Act. So it is very necessary that this be looked into and taken care of.

I would ask the Minister, at this stage, whether or not dance lessons are covered in the provisions of the Act as it presently is constituted? I cannot see any way that they are, but maybe they are. If they are, I would like to know and, also, whether or not sales under $50 are covered. I am not sure about that. As I read the Act I was not able to put my finger on that portion. If they are covered, this good. If not, then they ought to be.

The final matter that I would like to deal with is one which, perhaps, at the moment, is not within the jurisdiction of this particular Minister, but is one that I have come into very close contact with. It is the matter of purchasing automobiles—used automobiles—and a very fine little brochure was put out by the Minister—"Used Cars." It is very colourful and very nice reading.

It talks about, in one part, selecting the car. Now the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) has introduced legislation making it mandatory for the automobile being sold to be in safe mechanical condition. It is in the interests of the consumer that the consumer affairs division of your department, through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, should be the department which administers that portion of that particular Act. After all, the person purchasing the car is a consumer, and many of the new mechanical fitness requirements are just not being complied with.

I say "many" and I am sure, quite frankly, most of the used car dealers go through the formality of ticking off the various sections of the form—the headlights, the tailpipe. They tick them off, they do not really check them, because they go along in the hope that nothing will happen for 30 days. And, generally speaking, nothing does, but when it does happen, then the consumer is faced with the cost of going into court and attempting to recover his damages and his losses, and this should not be. It is very necessary that the legislation that is presently within the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport—that the taking care of it, the administration of it, be under The Department of Consumer Affairs.

Whether or not the things that I have suggested will be of any assistance to you is something that you have to decide. Many of them are old, and most of them have been hashed out before but a lot of them are not covered at the present time and they ought to be. It is very important.

There is no one more important in this province, or in this country, than the woman who buys in the grocery store and the man who goes out and buys an automobile—a used car—because most people do. I would say that anything that can be done to strengthen the legislation should be done, regardless of whether or not it means stepping on a few toes that otherwise you might not like to step on.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to enter the debate on vote 704 as the Liberal critic for consumer affairs.

I would first of all commend the Minister on the presentation of the report on his department which, as has been referred to earlier, covered the period from November 24, 1966, to December 31, 1967. The information adverted to by my colleague from York Centre (Mr. Deacon) may not at present be in the most useful form, but it is certainly an encouraging start. The Minister and his department are to be commended for placing this much information before the House at the present time.

The consumer protection division is the largest, by budget, of the various votes in the department. As hon. members are aware this division has three branches:

1. The consumer protection bureau, the function of which is to educate and counsel the public; to receive complaints; and to enforce legislation to protect consumers.

2. The registration and examination branch, which is further divided into several sections.

3. The cemeteries branch. This latter my colleague for Waterloo North (Mr. Good) will deal with in due course.

Mr. Chairman, I shall spend some of my time, first of all, in commenting on the first areas which the Chairman has suggested we discuss at this time, namely, that of the director of consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau. In the 1967-1968 estimates, this same vote, in its entirety, received $866,000. With the new responsibilities of the cemeteries branch deducted from the present budget, a net balance of some $1,102,550 remains. In the vast amounts spent by this government, an amount of an extra $150,000 is easily lost. However, in this department, this amount is possibly a valid step along the long road of consumer assistance in Ontario. We are told that a journey of 1,000 miles begins with but a single step. Here we have what amounts to a second step in the journey.

A major responsibility for this department is to ensure that the consumers of Ontario can gain the maximum value for the full range of goods and services that they purchase and use. This is an important mandate, and one which can be of special use to the many groups of low-income-handicapped consumers, who are referred to as "the troubled consumers". For those who are trapped in the web of poverty, we must ensure that they gain the maximum use of their income, and yet we are aware, at the same time, that these are the people who are the least likely to do just this.

Time and time again we see that the poor pay more for goods of poorer quality than does the average Canadian housewife. It is the low-income consumer who uses high-cost credit without protection. It is the low-income consumer who lives in the urban ghetto without the benefit of comparative shopping sources. It is the low-income consumer who is taken in by the unscrupulous seller, and who falls prey to unethical advertising. And, it is the low-income consumer who gets caught in this jungle of exploitation and fraud.

As a Yale Law Journal study states: "In reality, the poor buy different goods and services at different stores for different prices, and this has a profound effect on their standard of living, compounding, preserving, and deepening their poverty." The study goes on to show that it is often less expensive to help a family to save a given amount, through proper consumer behaviour, than to help them to achieve an equal increase in income.

Secondly, many of the people not reached by the present anti-poverty programmes could definitely be helped by a strongly developed consumer programme.

Thirdly, the benefits of increased income may well be dissipated through poor spending habits.

Therefore, anti-poverty habits must not only aim at raising income, but also at increasing the amount and quality of goods which that income can provide. In a society so oriented to the consumption of consumer goods, where so much emphasis is placed on the possession of things, and where there is such a high degree of stimulation, the consumer is faced with a bewildering tantalizing need to grasp the nearest shiny object. This is a problem of special severity for the family on limited income. The Canadian living in poverty is placed at a great psychological disadvantage in our modern market place. He has $10,000-worth of desire, $5,000-worth of needs, and perhaps $2000-worth of income.

This inequality leads to strange and unfortunate situations. Cases where, for example, half the people on relief in an area near Bathurst, New Brunswick, owe the credit company, with an average interest rate of 24 per cent.

The difficulties of the market place are not just confined to those stuck in this trap of poverty. There are the young married couples, who have very extensive needs, but are just at the first level of their earning power. They often overextend their resources, and get caught in the very serious spiral of debt.

There are immigrants, newly come to Canada, who must rebuild their household in a strange land. Language difficulties and unfamiliarity with Canadian practices cause confusion in purchasing and, at times, can lead them into unhappy situations of being sold useless products at high prices.

There are millions of teen-agers who are just entering the market place and are susceptible to many of its exotic appeals. These and many others use their income unwisely, and are also troubled consumers who need assistance and benefit from our economy.

Under conditions such as this, there must be programmes designed to secure better use of the consumer dollar, and better protection for the consumer. Efforts to develop employable skills, to create jobs and increase income will all be negated if the increased income only leads to more extensive exploitation of the poor, through ignorance, deception, and fraud.

The ambitions of a young couple, the new Canadians and the teen-age consumer can be frustrated because of faulty purchases and high debt.

Government activity at the federal and provincial levels can be most useful in two major areas to aid the low-income consumer.

First of all, information and education must be provided. In this way the consumer must be able to know more about products—to know where to buy and how to buy; to know what to buy; to develop better shopping habits; and to learn better consumer skills. This will involve counselling and neighbourhood improvement clinics, and will require work with the groups already in the field.

Mr. Ralph Hyman explained it this way in the Globe and Mail of May 2, 1968:

> It is recognized that legislation can go only so far in curbing the high-pressure sales pitch, the fraudulent pledge, the concealed interest charge, the phony used-car deal and activities in all other areas where the unscrupulous and the corner-cutters prey on the ignorant and the gullible. Government leaders, civil servants, union officials and executives of various public organizations feel that without consumer education—starting in the schools and embracing all forms of communication—the battle against the exploiters cannot succeed.

In December of 1966, the governments of the three prairie provinces established a Royal commission on living costs; known from its chairman, her honour Judge Mary Batten, as the Batten commission. The report of this commission was made public in March of this year, and some comments made about the responsibility of the individual are worthy of note.

The report tells us that, no matter what governments do to protect consumers, the fundamental responsibility rests squarely on all of us as consumers to take advantage of what is available to us, to exercise our rights to complain, and to know when to fail to buy if the consumers are not satisfied. It calls on government to describe what is known as a "science of consumer conduct". Consumer education in high schools and adult courses is called for, and I would like to have the Minister's views, eventually, on his plans for such continuing efforts in Ontario.

The report further calls for a common Canadian consumer's handbook with definitions; tables of comparison; characteristics; regulations; and sources of information. Again, the Minister's views on the possibility of issuing such a book in some kind of a loose-leaf binder would be interesting.

The commission also calls for the instigation of curbs on promotional activity in the gaming and sweepstaking devices of supermarkets. And I would ask the Minister to advise us as to his views on the seriousness of these gimmicks, the costs that they might add to the final bills, and what he intends to do about them?

My colleague from Wentworth had mentioned the matter of trading stamps, and this, of course, is still with us. I trust that the Minister has come to some conclusions on this subject as another year has gone by, but I would call upon him to move to cancel out these drains on the consumers' dollars.

In the city of Kitchener we have a very active branch of the consumers' association of Canada. This is the group which my friend has referred to as "just a bunch of women". A recent study has shown that there are three main areas of local complaint by consumers and I suggest to this House that they are probably echoed across this province.

The first is that of the contest and the give-away deals, to which I have just referred. The second complaint is the blocked cash register windows in the supermarket.

As we are all aware, cashiers can make errors and the variance of perhaps 20 per cent either way is suggested as a possible result of an accumulation of these errors. If the windows are blocked, of course, who will know the details? Merchandise is usually placed on top of and around the cash register. Various price lists and changes and amendments are stapled and stuck all over it. Complaints certainly have not brought changes, so we can only presume that, if there are errors, they might well be in favour of the storekeepers.

The third complaint which is current in our area is that of the "bait-and-switch" gimmick. The cheap carpeting, or the bargain meat, is advertised and the eager consumer is conned into buying something better.

Of course, carpeting which would not be good enough in your home, or meat which would not be good enough for your family, is available at those prices, as advertised. It was available before the selling job is done and the individual is conned into something better and more expensive. The individual eventually winds up paying more than he can afford, or more than he would have paid at the beginning.

The complaints continue to pour in. Unethical advertising. Poor quality of items. Short or odd weights. Loss leader sales, or other gimmicks.

In these areas I suggest that the government has a clear responsibility to move in and to protect consumers, namely by education. Indeed, this process will probably have far greater long-term benefits than will the passage of punitive legislation which is virtually impossible to enforce.

Mr. Chairman, second to the area of education is that of law reform and development. And, I would first commend to the Minister the report on The Consumer Act, Ontario, made by the commercial laws subsection of the Ontario branch of the Canadian bar association in April of this year.

There are many sections referred to in this report for amendment and clarification. The report goes on for some 15 pages or so, with appendices as well dealing with improvements to the legislation. I am quite sure the Minister and the members of his department, especially the director of consumer protection, have seen this. I trust he has taken it to heart and that he is working now to bring in and develop legislation which will eventually amend and clarify the legislation with which we have begun this department. I hope that the Minister will comment on how he sees the implementation of whichever of these suggestions are useful to him.

This commercial law subsection has obviously spent much time in developing and documenting and thinking about changes to the Act that will make the enforcement of the present legislation and the improvement of the legislation useful to the people of Ontario. Of course, as we are aware, many of the statutes which we pass in this House are taken as being useful models for other jurisdictions. Mainly for other provinces in Canada.

So we have, not only a responsibility to develop the best legislation we can for our citizens, but we also have an understanding that whatever we do here may well be copied—may no doubt be improved upon, but may basically be useful to other jurisdictions and therefore to the development of consumer protection for all Canadian citizens.

In this case, I suggest to the Minister that the blurb, or the thought, constantly used, that Ontario leads the way, which we often see in various publications, can be an effective and good way—in that which we are leading. Surely the citizens of Ontario deserve no better than to have consumer protection placed as a top priority item by the government of Ontario. If you can by amendment to our Act, improve legislation, then also we can develop a healthier attitude for consumer protection in Ontario? If we can, by these methods, do something which will be useful, not only for our citizens, but for those of other provinces, then I suggest that we will have spent these long hot summer days to good advantage.

There must, of course, be far more stringent and effective enforcement of the laws dealing with the matter of fraud, misrepresentation and restraint of trade. I encourage the Minister to comment on his relationship with the new federal Department of Corporate and Consumer Affairs. I would hope that he might be able to advise us as to some of the plans which the director of consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau have in co-operating with this federal department and in developing studies which will be useful in setting standards for the entire nation.

One comment which I would make concerning the present Act would be to refer to section 18. In that section we are told that, because of the definition of credit in section 1, subsection (d) and the definition of "itinerate seller" in section 1, subsection (h), the two-day cooling-off period only applies if the credit portion is separately charged.

I would hope that the Minister would be able to amplify this point of view and inform the House as to whether this comparison of definition in these two subsections does in fact bring that result.

To avoid the Act, the door-to-door vendor simply puts on an exorbitant price on the pots and pans, or the aluminum windows, or whatever else it may be, and then he lets the consumer pay it off over a period of time without charging interest.

Further, there is, of course, no effective sanction for false or misleading advertising under the Act, except for a cessation order. This is surely meaningless to the fly-by-night operator. In this area Ontario could really lead the way. Even a continuing business can avoid penalties by placing slightly differing forms of advertisment.

This is not adequate. The intent to mislead or deceive should be punishable, as it is under the federal trade commission regulations in the United States.

I trust that the Minister will comment on his plans to improve our present legislation and I would like to know whether members of his department, whose salaries this portion of the vote covers, will be involved in these studies.

Several of the members of this House attended a conference on "The Consumer and the Law" held at Osgoode Hall this spring. In my opinion, one of the most useful papers was that given by Mr. Aubrey Golden, a Toronto barrister, and this was entitled "The Consumer and Inadequate Law." I would like to place on the record of this House some of Mr. Golden's conclusions, which I think would be useful. He writes as follows:

> Apart from individual rights to enforce warranties and conditions, some statutory rule should be invoked which will ensure fair and honest dealing in the marketplace. Here the onus should be placed upon the vendor, not to unfairly exploit the purchaser, but his merchandise or services. Rules should be enacted to insure that there is no concealed fraud in retail merchandising. The rules should go further than they do at present, however.
> Now, they tend to remove the concealment, but not necessarily the fraud. Discriminatory pricing in low-income areas, welfare payday increase in prices, bait selling, slack filling of packages, misleading or confusing packaging or point of sale advertising and the sale of grossly substandard or unfit merchandise should be banned. We need rules against unconscionable transactions in the sale of personal property and not just in the extension of credit.
> To administer such legislation, I would suggest broader powers in our existing agency. The consumer protection bureau would require the power to institute civil and criminal proceedings against those who offend against the rules. On the civil side, the powers would include requesting injunctive relief, instituting actions on behalf of individual consumers or groups of them, recovering statutory punitive damages, applying for forfeiture of corporate charters habitually used to carry out fraudulent practices and to recover costs.
> The bureau would carry out research and educational functions on consumer problems and encourage the adoption of voluntary codes of ethics in various groups of businesses.

I would like to have the Minister's comments on Mr. Golden's proposals.

With respect to the general development of the director of consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau, this ends the comments which I would make in this area, but I will then, of course, speak on the registration and examination branch.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, we have heard a great deal tonight about the problem of the advertising and packaging in connection with the merchandising of goods.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. member proceeds, I would like to direct a question to the Chair. At the beginning of the estimates it was my understanding that the two Opposition parties and the government would deliver what I call lead-off speeches.

The present material is extremely interesting, but I think it is more in the nature of Budget debate and already one has indicated his reservation of doing a second lead-off speech within this same vote.

All of this is very well, but I think it might be helpful to the rest of us in the House, who have some responsibility to deal with these matters, to give us some indication of just where exactly we stand and what is going on.

Already we are commencing in the second lead-off address—the third lead-off address on this department from the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, this is what you call anticipation of some kind, where the Minister jumps to conclusions. I had no intention of doing anything in the nature of a lead-off. I have a couple of items that I want to put before the Minister for his enlightenment, and I am sure that he will have some advice to offer.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Put your question then.

Mr. Young: I just want to point out to the Minister one little item which occurred on March 20, 1968, a rather amusing thing, in which I am sure the Minister will be interested.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Is the member trying to entertain us?

Mr. Young: Well okay!

This is an illustration of the kind of advertising we are getting today in the daily press. This was in the one newspaper. Loblaws advertised this way: "Special, 15 cents off giant size package of Tide, 83 cents." Then, A and P, in the same paper, advertises 15 cents off giant size Tide detergent, 79 cents. Power advertisement—11 cents off, same thing, 79 cents. And then Steinbergs advertise—and this is very interesting—they say they are going to give us 15 cents off, 69 cents. But then the advertiser writing the thing must have had a little qualm of conscience, for in a circle in here, 15 cents off, 69 cents, he says, "save 8 cents."

Now what that means, I do not know, but they are going to give us 15 cents off and then truthfully he says you will save 8 cents. These are the different prices on the same day in the same newspaper.

Now, the second thing I would like to ask the Minister in this connection, is in regard to—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I would like to repeat my observation about the lead-off speeches.

Mr. Chairman: I think the Minister is quite correct. It has been my understanding that in the consideration of the estimates of each department that a sort of arrangement or agreement or informal agreement of some kind had been arrived at some time ago, in fact, that each of the Opposition parties would be having a lead-off speaker.

I do not know that there was a time limit placed on that particular lead-off speaker's remarks, but this was my understanding and I think that for the most part during the estimates we have adhered to that. Each party, the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party would each have a lead-off speaker for each department, and then the actual discussion of the votes within the estimates took place after the lead-off speaker.

I must to some degree concur with the Minister that we have had two rather lengthy perhaps Budget speeches on this particular department. Perhaps the members will all recall, if they will, that we should get into the estimates and debate the votes.

The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I did think this was a little item in which the Minister would be very interested. But I do want to ask the Minister in connection with this whole matter of consumer protection, whether or not the setting back of speedometers in motor cars is an offence in the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am not going to answer your questions on your lead-off speeches until you are all through.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Chairman, this will have some real bearing on what I have to say. I did want to elicit from the Minister some information. Now, if he does not reply to me, then I have to give him a more lengthy dissertation than if I had the answer.

I bring to the Minister's attention then—

Mr. Chairman: I believe it is the Minister's prerogative to answer each individual question as it is placed before him or to answer all at once.

Mr. Young: I bring to the Minister's attention then a difficulty which is faced in the matter of consumers buying second-hand cars, and I quote to him a case which I think has come to his attention, or certainly to the attention of his department, the case of Robert Whitehouse, RR 2, Colborne, Ontario.

Mr. Whitehouse bought a second-hand car with 39,000 miles on the speedometer. He came to me some time afterwards and I asked him to put this thing in writing—which he did. He said he bought the car on January 23 with the mileage as was, and he was told that this was the actual mileage. And then—

An hon. member: What make?

Mr. Young: Pontiac, 1963, sedan, colour white. It had four wheels and a steering wheel, but not much more.

But he bought the car and later he put it through the safety lane and it could not pass the safety test. In 1,000 miles of driving, it burned four quarts of oil, transmission was slipping after 100 miles; and he goes on to elucidate what was wrong.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Young: This is the point though, the gentleman was told that the mileage was 39,444 miles; this was on the speedometer, the actual mileage. Relying on that, he felt he could safely buy the car; and he bought it. Then he checked to find out who had owned the car previously. He got the man's name; he telephoned him, and then got a signed statement from him that when he had sold the car 11 days before Mr. Whitehouse had bought it, the mileage was 65,000. In other words, the speedometer had been turned back by this amount.

Now, during this period, when I brought this to the attention of the Minister's department, and I say this in all fairness they did a very good job in checking on this matter. They found out that the car had passed through four or five different ownerships during that period, and had finally come to this gentleman in the 11 days.

There was no knowing who had set this speedometer back, but the fact is that Mr. Whitehouse bought the car in good faith, relying on the speedometer and it had been set back by this amount. The result was that he had a lemon rather than a fair car which he had hoped he would get.

Now, is there no way, Mr. Minister, by which protection can be afforded people of this kind? Certainly, with the passage of a car through various dealers and agencies, auction sales and what not—I can understand the difficulty here—but there must be some way that the consumer can be protected.

I asked the Minister at the beginning whether or not the speedometer can be set back legally in the province of Ontario. I had the impression that it could not, but other information may be available and may be true. But, if it is legal to set the speedometer back in the province of Ontario, then it seems to me the time is here for a device to be worked out, legally, in the statutes of this province, so that every time a car changes hands the mileage is registered so that in a case like this we can pinpoint exactly who set the speedometer back, and who in that way cheated the ultimate buyer of the car.

This is the matter that I wanted the Minister to comment on at this time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of points that have been raised in connection with the operation of the consumer protection branch, and I will try to deal with them as best I can, although they have been pretty much jumbled up as I hear. There has been a good deal of overlapping which is all right.

As I indicated to the hon. member of the New Democratic Party for Wentworth when he opened this discussion earlier, there were aspects through the federal and the provincial jurisdiction in this whole field which require some careful consideration and some working out without relying on technicalities of jurisdiction. If we do that, I do not think we are going to accomplish the purpose or the objectives for which this department was first established.

Accordingly, I would like to just comment briefly on the fact that consumer protection is sometimes used as a catch-all phrase having to do with the day-to-day purchases of the household. That is far from the case. The fact is that consumer protection involves the whole range of purchases and of business dealings which involves all of us as citizens, all of us as members of the family, and certainly with great emphasis on those who have not had the benefit of education and schooling, if I could put it that way, or indeed of some experience in life having to do with debt counselling or debt management, as the case may be.

All of these things are mixed up in this great field and it is probably therein that lies the challenge for those of us who are concerned about trying to find some solutions to these problems.

Another aspect of this situation is that the vast preponderance of people, of business people and citizens, are decent, responsible and reputable people. The minority of business people are irresponsible and are the ones who take advantage of those who enter the marketplace in ignorance, if I could put it that way. The tragedy, of course, of the results there is that we have to then discipline the many for the sins of the few. And whether or not education will be of any assistance in that area I am not sure yet.

We do not know that education with respect to consumers themselves can go a long way to informing them as to what their rights are in the marketplace, by proper disclosure and putting the facts on the table. I think the only way business can be done intelligently is if the facts are on the table so, when the information is disclosed, the cost of credit and the effective rate of credit if you are borrowing money or if you are buying on time, or the credit charges with respect to goods being bought on time, are properly disclosed.

Proper representations with respect to the commodities in question—these things will then put the consumer and the buyer in the position of being, I hope in the long run, in a good position to make that final decision himself which is the decision of whether to buy or make a deal with (a) or with (b) or with some other vendor or lendor as the case may be. I think it is important that we not attempt to say that there is going to be a big brother over every citizen in the country, advising him with respect to the details of every financial transaction or of every purchase that he is going to make.

We can see that full, true and plain disclosure is made with respect to the transaction question; inform him of what his rights are, and his responsibility; and then put him in a position whereby he can make an intelligent and informed decision as to what is in the best interests of himself or indeed of his family.

It is against that background that I now would like to turn to the question of the provinces and the federal government in this field. Once again, we are faced with a situation whereby the jurisdiction in some areas is open to question on several counts. Firstly, and this is not technical discussion about the matter, but to put the factors before the House; there could be a question on constitutional grounds. But probably the question that is more important is within what jurisdiction the job can best be handled.

This is the aspect which I think offers the greatest appeal to the provinces in their deliberations in this field. And, frankly, I think from our recent discussions with the federal government and representatives of the new Department of Corporate and Consumer Affairs, that they are taking this view too.

The importance of the federal-provincial conference on consumer protection, which I expect will be held in September or October, looms rather large, because if the approach is going to be on the basis that I am suggesting to the House, there is a very high degree of hope that we are going to be able to put something together.

Then, regardless of where jurisdiction falls, some working arrangement can be established between the provinces and the federal government, so that the needs of the people can be met and serviced through the advice of the respective governments, and the protection bureaus and that sort of thing.

I do not think it is going to be good enough in this field for someone to come to our consumer protection bureau and be told that it is not our jurisdiction, and they had better go down the street to some federal department or something of that sort.

I will speak for myself and those in my department, and in this branch, that this will not be good enough for me or for them. None of us think that any success will be achieved in this field if we do not have a much better arrangement than that.

For instance, there is a good question as to whether price in the type of economy in which we find ourselves in Canada today, with the geographic and economic factors which affect us all, a good case can be made for the fact that no effective price control or marketing scheme can be imposed on anything less than a national level. Having in mind the number of producers and distributors of goods and commodities, and services, which are on a much broader basis than a single province, I think that, as I say, a good case can be made for this proposition. A good case can also be made for it in the name of commonsense.

I am just chatting away without notes, in response to the points that have been raised. For instance I will point out some situations which are no doubt well known to us. I do not do them by way of being technical about these matters, but just to raise them.

For instance, packaging and weights, and measures are already covered and defined in The British North America Act as being within the federal jurisdiction. There is federal legislation on the subject. Whether that is going to be good enough to meet the needs and problems of the people, which have been discussed here this afternoon and tonight, I do not know.

This is another area. We have all got to get into this; maybe the effort has to be a joint federal-provincial effort. But this is the reason that the consumer protection conference with the federal government has got to be held at the earliest possible time. The last indication that I had was that it would be in either late September or early October.

We felt that, because all the provinces have gone ahead in this field, particularly with respect to the costs of credit and the disclosure of the cost of credit—and you will remember the select committee of this House, the report of which formed the basis of the consideration of this new department—we felt that it would be advantageous for the provinces to get together. In discussion they talked over their own desire for this type of meeting and we proceeded with it about six or eight weeks ago.

The result of that meeting, to which we invited the federal authorities, and which they attended, resulted in some advance work being arranged for this federal-provincial conference. This had to do with study committees.

Firstly, and subject to mutual concern, such areas as direct sales, the cooling-off period, and in this field, the breadth of coverage of direct sellers, licencing and bonding of salesmen, and sales contracts. Saskatchewan will provide the chairman for that, and New Brunswick, two individuals to be on that committee.

Then the question of uniformity in connection with the consumer credit contract, and what type of statutory terms and conditions should exist and the desirability of uniformity of this type of contract, again, regardless of whether it is federal or provincial jurisdiction, in all the provinces. Manitoba will chair this committee, and Ontario and Nova Scotia be represented on it.

The question of warranties is a rather important factor in this field. Warranties, and disclaimer clauses, which cut off clauses leading into assignments and holders in due course, and matters getting into the legal aspect of the situation, and the law of contracts. This is a very important situation, and British Columbia was prepared to take on the chairmanship of this committee with representation from other provinces.

We are now getting into the heart and guts of this whole subject when I give you the various factors which are involved in this field. I will go on and give you the other committees, in a moment, but first I think that I should point out that the desirability and constructive nature of the conference which we held some six weeks ago. This is demonstrated by the desire of all those concerned in co-operation with the federal authorities, not only to get the study groups on these vital matters established, with a view to having a report available at the federal-provincial conference, but to make the conference a worthwhile effort. We are looking forward to it.

The fourth committee has to do with prepayment privileges; default and forfeiture provisions; repossession rights; relief against acceleration; and forfeiture. This involves some rather interesting rules, and I will simply cite them to you.

There is what is called the rule of "78s" and that is against the sum of the balances. The protection of the credit grantor and the borrower on default; whether to seize or to sue; what rights should ensue to enforce the rights arising from default.

Consumers' equity in goods being financed is a mighty important aspect of the matter. Is the money paid on account to be forfeited, or is it to be retained and applied to the credit of the debtor? Advertising and the truthful representation of borrowing costs; product description were matters that were raised by some of the members earlier. Prices and specials and all other relevant matters are tied together under this broad heading of advertising under a committee which Ontario will chair.

The sixth group has to do with federal-provincial liaison in jurisdictional matters. The chairman of that committee is to be supplied by the federal department, who will explore, review, and co-ordinate in areas of mutual endeavour—and there are some overlapping jurisdictions.

Conflict of law and conflict of jurisdictions are not just trite phrases used to take up the time of the members. The fact is that you get into transactions which are lawful for banks, on the one hand, for your federal jurisdiction to enter into, and other credit grantors, which would have a provincial jurisdiction. The nature of the conflict that exists there, and the problems of getting these situations correlated, so that there is some uniformity to the whole deal, so that the public—and after all it is the public in the final analysis who we are concerned with—can understand clearly and not be subject to sets or hidden information and so on.

Of course, this field involves banks and small loan companies and other credit grantors, and promissory notes, sales-finance contracts, and other relative matters and concerns. Now, these study committees will proceed at once to research and exchange information and material in their specific areas of assignments. There will be complete written reports to be distributed by each study committee to each of the governments involved.

There we are, in a nutshell. We think there should also be, related to these study groups, a central clearing house of practices and information which is being arranged through the federal authorities.

That generally is a broad outline of what has transpired right up to this moment. Quite apart from the legislation, particularly with relationship to the disclosure of the cost of credit, which various of the provinces have already enacted to date.

Information and education was raised here today and there can be no doubt that this matter is going to require—and we discussed this on the first opening of the debate on these estimates—an advanced and effective means of communicating what rights and obligations exist to people who are in the category of being consumers. That category means almost everybody, to be quite frank about it.

What success we will have in the schools, encouraging some course on the curriculum having to do with business in the domestic field; business in family life; what banking knowledge you should have and how to borrow money—I suppose this would be in the general area of the field that should be covered. But certainly newlyweds, and I suppose everybody today in our society, is liable to be projected into marriage on a happy and desirable basis without this type of education or knowledge.

Already, however, one of the boards of education in Metropolitan Toronto has interested itself in this field and is now considering implementing a course in this field of the business side of married life—what all young people should know about business, and things like that.

This, of course, takes us directly into the area of the new community colleges and whether or not there is desirable opportunity in the mainstream of education within the province.

Within my own knowledge, I remember the difficulties a few years ago of encouraging the local school boards to interest themselves in driving motor vehicles. It seemed at that age, when they had the children—the young people in there available to them—that that was a desirable place and time to do this, and they offered this instruction. I am sure the hon. members will be aware of the great resistance which existed at that time.

However, whether this can be done in The Department of Education, discussions are currently under way with that department and our own staff to see what can be developed.

In other words, this whole area is not being left idle by any means, and I must say it is an exciting opportunity to try and find the right method and the right vehicle to bring this information to the future adult citizens of our province. Frankly, far better that they get it at the beginning of their career than to end up in a mess financially or in trouble with regret and with other things that could happen without it.

Having all this in mind, there are and I, too, will have to speak generally, but there are some amendments to The Consumer Protection Act which were enacted and which answer the questions that were raised tonight. To clear up the obligations and the loophole dealing with itinerate sellers, the current amendment to the Act takes care of that situation.

But in the total broad picture against this background that we are discussing, and I hope I am hitting the subject on the point because this is what I would like to do, there are those areas of The Used Car Dealers Act, The Real Estate and Mortgage Brokers Act, The Collection Agencies Act and there are some amendments to The Credit Unions Act. These pieces of legislation come under the branch of the department, and we are trying to correlate the type of change that we feel we could recommend against the past year's experience with the new department.

I must be quite frank with you and tell you we were ready to make certain recommendations and get our legislation advanced when the McRuer report came along. But there are certain things in all of those Acts that must be changed having to do with consumers rights or the rights of business people which are affected by this legislation.

Accordingly, until this could be researched and the further discussions held with some of the industries involved and with whom we must deal, we withdrew from our effort to advance the amendment to this session. Having in mind that they are probably—in all probability and without committing myself or indicating that I have any knowledge that anybody else does not have—but the odds are there might be a session this fall in which we would then shoot for that session with respect to the amendment to this legislation which would enable us to further redraft and amend, having in mind certain of those recommendations of the McRuer committee. I do not think I would want to come before the House without having those things taken care of.

Some specific reference was made to the question of odometers and I would like to answer that. Of course, an odometer is an instrument that has a recording device which is related to the operation of the vehicle over the road and which gives an indication of the mileage which the vehicle has travelled. Not the speedometer, it is the odometer.

The case that the hon. member for Yorkview described—the Whitehouse case I think, he recited the facts quite accurately. The car had gone 65,000 miles whereas the odometer read something like 39,000. The vehicle had been transferred among three or four motor dealers and, of course, the wholesaling there, inventory which is apparently general practice in that industry if they think a group of vehicles do not move, they will sell wholesale to another dealer and so on. By the time the vehicle got into the hands of the ultimate purchaser—consumer—I think consumer is the word we are using tonight—it was in pretty poor shape and he had a proper beef.

To answer your question directly, there is no law other than a lawsuit based on fraud, at the moment, to deal with the Whitehouse matter. There is, however, available the facility of the consumer protection bureau which has been fairly successful in bringing pressure to bear, and I think the word is persuasion and it worked here. I think the final seller recognized his—what I think were really his legal obligations and his moral obligations and got it squared away.

It is not the kind of a situation any of us like to see perpetuated or repeated, because it means there is something under the table and that is the opposite of what I think all of us here are trying to achieve. We want a deal on the table. If the truth were told, the fact of the matter is—and I would like to record this—I understand and I know the hon. member's interest in safety and in the effect that he thinks a sealed odometer would have with respect to the public.

I would like to add just a couple of comments, without derogating from his position at all, because I think his position is important to this debate and is important to the case. But the fact is that I do not think that an odometer is any test by which a prudent purchaser should rely in making.

It is only one of many factors, and I could imagine a vehicle at 65,000 or 75,000 on its record being a better vehicle than one that has only got 10,000 miles and has been abused and knocked about, and so on. But as the hon. member points out, that information on the odometer is a factor that should be disclosed to him in its truthful state. I think this is maybe what we are saying.

Well, the practical problem, and it is not being ignored, is how to word a clause that will describe this odometer unit and which will make it a requirement to have it on the vehicle, having in mind a small technical feature of the odometer itself. The odometer that you and I think about usually is the reading on it showing the actual mileage on the meter. But the odometer itself involves another major item which is geared in some fashion to the working parts of the motor car, and is then connected to the reading meter by a set of linkage—whether it is by a chain link or whatever it is or how it gets up there and conveys the reading.

There are really three basic parts—the reading meter on the dashboard, the basic unit connected to the running gear, and the linkage which connects those two parts together. The problem is how do you describe something like that, having in mind that they are three separate units within the one?

When I point out the difficulties, I do it in just that spirit, I am not saying it is impossible, but it is not just the easiest thing to settle, and it is not the easiest to produce, even though it has been talked about for some time. It is not the easiest thing to produce an answer for overnight, but that is being worked on.

There has been so much said I have just forgotten what was said on this point, but we are talking about legislation and I want to be very frank and say to the House that the only authority that my department would have in this field would have to do with used car vehicles, even though used car dealers probably include almost, if not all, new car dealers. But our control is effective on our department through used motor vehicle dealers.

Any control or direct control at the moment on new car dealers, including new car warranties, would be through another department of the government. I do not remember whether somebody commented on that, but I think it must be obvious that it is a good question whether those two factors should not be united together and I would have to concede that.

Now, the last item that I think I would like to deal with had to do with a reference by the hon. member for Kitchener in his remarks when he referred to a report of the commercial law division of the Ontario section of the Canadian bar association.

I, too, received a copy of that report about a week ago and arrangements are already under way to meet with the spokesman for the section and to sit down and go over the recommendations which they have taken so much trouble to submit to us. I think that would conclude the comments that I would like to make.

Mr. Chairman: There are about five or six members up all at the same time. I think the leader of the New Democratic Party was first.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, the Minister a few moments ago was critical of the Opposition speakers giving a second lead-off speech. I must congratulate him. He has just given a lead-off answer that exceeds the lead-off speeches and covered as far ranging an area as they did.

I do not say this critically, I think consumer protection is an area that is a unit in itself, and I think if we are going to deal with it, I do not think we could have avoided the kind of thing that has happened.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have tried to deal with this matter.

Mr. MacDonald: You have tried to deal with it, but my criticism would be that you have wandered generally and not dealt with a lot of the specifics which I am most interested in—specifics that were raised by the hon. member for Kitchener and the hon. member for Wentworth.

My chief concern with this legislation, Mr. Chairman, legislation on consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau, is that surely it is far-ranging, it is very far-ranging. The Minister has given us some glimpses of his own concept of the difficulties in implementing it and ironing out the division of jurisdiction between the province and the federal government, and he has indicated by implication that here is one of the main areas which has inhibited them doing an effective job.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: On that I should like to comment and maybe this would be the point. There is no doubt that the operation of the consumer protection bureau itself is in two phases, two parts.

The first is the various sections which are located at Edward Street, as are the physical premises of the bureau itself, and as of about last—something in the general area of—October the volume of enquiries which were being handled by the bureau reached some 1,500. They faded off somewhat from that down to an area of, I believe, something in the order of 1,150 a month or 1,200. I am not trying to interfere, but maybe I did not elucidate as far as I should have.

There are some areas in the province where debt counselling is a very active situation, or there is a need, and we have, as of the moment, made arrangements in two areas—one in Brantford and one in London—whereby the local debt counselling operation on a volunteer basis would be subsidized by the department up to a limit of $5,000. There are two agreements which are currently in force on that basis.

What the arrangements would be in some occasion, I mean some other period, I do not know, but I would think that those two areas and agreements which we have negotiated would probably form the pattern and the base for this type of thing, which I think there is ample room for, and they can do a service on a local basis that I do not think a centralized body can do.

If I have left anything out it has not been deliberate and I would be glad to answer.

Mr. MacDonald: What I am trying to say, Mr. Chairman, is that I do not want to go into specifics so much as to say that the Minister has not really grappled with the areas that still have yet to be effectively tackled in consumer protection. Many of these were listed, whether it be advertising or packaging or one or another kind of deception. I would say that this kind of legislation—I am sure this is generally, if not unanimously agreed—was a step in the right direction, and I would say to the Minister that he has assembled a group of people who are doing as effective a job as is possible with the instruments that they have in their hands. But the point is—the instruments are almost wholly ineffective.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I cannot accept that.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me finish. I think they are almost wholly ineffective. What you have at the moment is a toothless tiger in terms of really coming to grips with the problems that the consumer has to face. I do not want to range over all of the areas that have been raised by the lead-off spokesmen for both of the parties. I do not know whether the Minister is going to deal with them; he was not particularly taking down notes, but there were at least six or eight in each of those so called lead-off speeches.

Let me give you a couple, to show you the kind of problem that disturbs me and leads me to ask a general question of the Minister.

What is the Minister going to do to amend the Act to give his consumer protection bureau real power to do something about a situation other than to lament. We have lots of lamentations. The consumers' association and the general public—"Action Line," and all of the various media outlets have been lamenting for years. We have passed the stage for lamenting.

If I can draw a parallel—I regard the superintendent of insurance as being in consumer protection. This is another branch of consumer protection.

My criticism, as I indicated to the Minister when we were talking about this yesterday, was in his concept of the superintendent of insurance being the honest broker. This is hopelessly inadequate. If the superintendent of insurance is not going to be a man who is going to look at the contracts; make certain that the contracts are not drawn up in a deceptive fashion; and relentlessly chase down suggestions that an insurance company is legally, or morally, mistreating one of their policy holders—then the superintendent of insurance is another toothless tiger in terms of protecting consumers in that area.

Now, let me give you a couple of examples. I do not know why you want to have two cooks stirring the broth. If you have a superintendent of insurance who is supposed to be supervising the field, I would suggest that he is the appropriate person to be given the necessary powers not to act as an honest broker, but to act as somebody who is going to genuinely protect the consumer. When you have done that then you would have answered the question that I raised with regard to this superintendent of insurance.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is not a correct interpretation of what I said.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister is getting very exercised.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No I just want you to remember that I sit and listen to you talk all day.

Mr. MacDonald: Well if it is of therapeutic value to the Minister to interrupt, I am enjoying it. Maybe he needs some therapy at this point. It is the end of a long session.

However, let me get to the two points that I wanted to draw by way of illustrating my general criticism.

To show you how far-ranging is the field of the consumer protection bureau—I do not know whether the Minister is aware of the fact that it has moved into, but come to a dead-end, on the question of security deposits. A very interesting thing has emerged. One would assume under law—though this is a very questionable proposition—that if a person puts down $100 or $150 that he has some claim on it. But under law, strictly speaking, so we are advised by the solicitor to the law reform commission, if perchance the apartment building is sold, the new owner has no obligation at all to repay. And you get into a wild goose-chase in terms of trying to find out whether or not the person who has paid this security deposit is going to have any possibility of reclaiming it.

For example, there is one that is now very current and very well known. I can assure you it is well known in my office, and I know it is well known in the consumer protection bureau; that is the West Toronto Towers apartment at 103 and 105 West Lodge Avenue. These buildings were originally owned by a member of the urban development institute which presumably had drawn up a code whereby they are all going to respect security deposits. The man who has bought it is also a member of the UDI, but he is absolutely refusing to accept obligation for the security deposits that were paid to the previous owner.

My office has been working with some of the people, and I think we have gotten two of them reclaimed. Let us give credit where credit is due—the consumer protection bureau has gotten three or four security deposits reclaimed from this new owner. But this new owner now just hangs up the phone in your ear if you call. He says, in effect; "You prove that I have got these deposits." Well, the matter is going to go into the court. It will be interesting to see what happens, but the fact of the matter is that there are some 20 former West Toronto Towers tenants who are standing more or less helpless. This was the field which your own bureau came to the conclusion that it was a legitimate area for them to move into. They cannot act effectively.

An hon. member: Well they have now!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Large number of situations. I do not want to interrupt your speech but the law reform commission is doing a study on The Landlord and Tenant Act, and this matter of securities and the subsequent holder of the leases, in due course, and that sort of thing has some legal implications. Their own protection bureau has submitted a brief indicating their experience with this situation, and asking that this be considered by the law reform commission when it is reporting on The Landlord and Tenant Act. It is a step. The director did not stop.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister has confirmed the point I am trying to make—that, in all of these areas, whether it be packaging, whether it be advertising, whether it be security deposit—go down the list of which there are 100, 200 or 300—there is not effective power. That is why they are at this stage—pretty much of a toothless tiger. The hon. Minister may say that you have got to wait for a study to come back for the law reform commission before you can grant them the necessary power to move in the instance of security deposit, but what are you doing for example to grant them some power to do something in the instance of advertising? And why do you have this kind of advertising that my colleague from Yorkview has documented? Surely that is deceptive. Your reply was that, at the moment, as in the incidence of odometers, the only thing you can do is to take action by way of suing for fraud. Well this is the same kind of situation and attitude that the government took before we moved into the whole used car racketeering that was going on. The government's standard attitude until then was: "You have an obligation if you got the raw end of a deal, you must take it into court." But the government finally recognized that there was a legitimate area for the government to move in to make certain that people would be protected so that they would not have to throw good money after bad to pursue some court action.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In all fairness now, I am sure you are familiar with the legislation that you are criticizing. Now what do you think of section 31?

Mr. MacDonald: What about it? Just offhand.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Now that is a pretty good statement.

Mr. MacDonald: I do not recall it.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. I am only pulling your leg.

But there is a section 31 under the heading of false advertising where, in the opinion of the registrar, any seller who is making false, misleading or deceptive statements, any advertisement, circular or pramphlet, or a similar material, the registrar may order the immediate cessation of the use of such material. Any such order is subject to review and appeal in the same manner as an order respecting registrations and so on.

Now using section 31, the bureau has had a high degree of success in dealing with complaints which it has received on the subject matter you mentioned.

Mr. MacDonald: Well the Minister assures me of action, but in how many cases? Let me pursue this. In how many cases, for example, during the last year since the bureau has gotten into operation, have you taken action and had "a high degree" of success?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Of the complaints they received, they made orders involving 35.

Mr. MacDonald: And these have all been prosecuted successfully?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. They were complied with.

Mr. MacDonald: You made orders and they complied with the orders.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: In other words the persuasion aspect is well worth it and there was no need to proceed any further.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, fine!

Let me give the Minister another example. Here is a case of a man who sent in a letter to our office in the first instance over being rooked—let me put it in the vernacular—rooked in the purchase of a piece of furniture from the National Furniture Manufacturing Co. in this city. When the matter was drawn to the attention of the consumer protection bureau, it looked into the matter and a reply came back to me. I am not going to mention the name, nor am I am going to mention the official. For the moment, let us keep this on an anonymous basis. But in it was this interesting paragraph: "Should Mr. M. [the man who was rooked in the purchase] elect to obtain credit . . ."—I am sorry, I should have indicated that the merchant refused to do anything about it, but then said he would grant a credit, but only on the purchase of further goods at his same place of business.

Now let me quote:

> Should Mr. M. elect to obtain credit by the purchase of another suite, we would recommend that he do so very cautiously. Perhaps he should arrange it be set up by a party unknown to the store, agree on a rigid selling price, and then introduce the subject of credit of $36.75.

Again I do not say this critically of the people in your consumer proteection bureau, but, Mr. Chairman, there is something wrong when the consumer protection bureau comes to the conclusion that this man is acting so fraudently that it advises a consumer to stage a purchase, in order to make certain that they are going to get that money or get that furniture at such and such a price so that the credit will not be eaten up with inflated prices.

I am trying to illustrate to the Minister the ineffective areas of operation. I come back to my basic question—as far as the general public is concerned, what they say of the consumer protection bureau is good; it is a good start; it is a step in the right direction, but so far, in all too many of the main areas of lamentation down through the years, they have not the power to really do an effective job. Therefore what I am interested in is to hear from the Minister—I trust at next session and no later—a series of amendments that are going to zero in on those particular areas where they have not been able to do an effective job. I think, so far, they have done the very best they can with the ineffective weapons the Minister has given them.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Chairman, I listened the other night as the Minister made his presentation and, after all the comments that have gone on in the House—particularly by northern members, I had hoped to hear that possibly the Minister would have by now ordered a study which would indicate why northerners are being rooked left, right and centre. I say this—and I will back it up with a couple of illustrations, some of which I have used as questions to the Minister; the very fact that shoe companies will ship to British Columbia and not to the north prepaid, and we pick up the tab in the north, and the transportation is supposedly to blame.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member is talking about the rubbers and rubber boots going, for example, to northern Ontario and to British Columbia and there were various factors that were different.

I think it is important in all fairness that you put down that the contract was made with Quebec manufacturers and that the deal was made in Quebec and the shipment was from Quebec to Vancouver and you are comparing that with some other situations on a sale from Quebec and the eastern townships to northern Ontario.

Mr. Martel: This is one example, Mr. Chairman, but it does not come to the point I am driving at. In here transportation is to blame. I am advised by the same shoe people that this is happening in all of the shoe industry.

However, we can take and make beer in the north, when there is not a strike, and ship it south and it gets here and sells cheaper in Toronto than it does right in the town it is produced in, so transportation cannot have that large a bearing on cost.

The point I am trying to drive at, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is pretty unusual.

Mr. Martel: I can also show this transportation disparity in dealing with commodities such as bacon, which, when the residents in the north started to picket the stores, was selling for 50 cents a pound dearer in northern Ontario.

What I am hoping for, out of all of this that we from the north have raised on the disparity and the cost of living there as compared to the south—why there is such a delay in implementing a study which will, once and for all, try to bring about a better cost of living for the residents of northern Ontario.

The second point I would like to talk briefly about again deals with the gas companies. Three aspects—and I will deal with them very briefly—about which I ask the Minister if he will do something in this area as well.

The commercial and unbranded dealers, which now represent 33 per cent of the consumption of gas in Ontario, get their gas for four or six or seven cents a gallon cheaper. I believe, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, that, because of this disparity, the gas companies must increase the cost to offset what is lost.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Just so the record may be clear and we will all understand, the member is talking about petroleum products —gasoline, not natural gas?

Mr. Martel: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The second portion I would just like to mention is the tire, battery and accessory game that is being played. I have been advised that there is a 15 per cent kickback to the petroleum companies if they will force some of their dealers to sell certain brands and only certain brands.

In attempting to track some of this down, I wrote the Minister of Corporate and Consumer Affairs about one specific case and one specific memorandum which was presented to the Minister in August of 1967. Now, they sent me everything, Mr. Chairman, except this one memorandum that I wanted. I do not want to name the man involved at the present, I will give it to the Minister if he is willing to go along with what I will ask him to go along with, but—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The member is now speaking about the federal department, not the Ontario department?

Mr. Martel: Yes, the federal department. I am trying to get a memorandum which they refused to give up. They say it is interdepartmental.

However, the man involved in this maintains that he knows, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that here is price-fixing in the gas industry. Now, the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Department sent me everything—the B.C. study—sent me more studies than you can shake a stick at—except the one that I wanted, the one that was presented last August, where, apparently, an employee of one of the major oil companies made a statement to them.

I am asking the Minister if he thinks what I have been presenting for some months now on the gas industry is wrong. If he would attempt to get this memorandum—and perhaps he would get me a copy at the same time—we could have this shadow that hangs over the gas companies cleared up once and for all.

At the present time I am firmly convinced we in Ontario are getting rooked and rooked properly, and I would ask the Minister to take this into consideration, along with the study on northern Ontario costs.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would be glad to discuss it with the hon. member, and I understand the member will identify to me the document which he could not get from the federal authority, having to do with the fact that it probably has a bearing on his.

Mr. Martel: And what about the prices in the north, would the Minister consider a study to look into this whole matter?

Hon. Mr. Rowntre: Yes, I have a survey and study with respect to gasoline prices—that is, retail gasoline prices—as they exist in northern Ontario in relation to the similar current prices in southern Ontario.

Mr. Martel: Just one more question. I do not want to push this too much, but I am just wondering if the Minister would have a study into the overall cost of living in northern Ontario as compared to southern Ontario and why there is such a disparity?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think I had better complete one thing at a time.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, earlier in the debates the Minister had made mention of the fact that education is probably the most important aspect as far as consumer protection is concerned. He likewise mentioned that he is consulting with The Department of Education with the hope of probably having some type of programme at the junior college level or the community college level.

May I say to the hon. Minister that that is a little too late. The education should really be given in the lower levels of a secondary school, or maybe even in the senior levels of elementary school. It is those who do not get the education who really need the protection. Those who are better educated can fairly well take care of themselves as far as consumer protection is concerned. But the individual who does not complete much more than a grade eight or a grade ten is the one who generally thinks he knows and finds himself trapped.

Likewise in his comments, the Minister mentioned a debt counselling service and he made mention of two centres in which the department planned on subsidizing a programme. My own community, the city of Windsor, has attempted to set up a debt counselling service—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We are doing it now.

Mr. B. Newman: You are in there now, and you will be assisting them financially? I am very pleased to hear that, it certainly will perform a much needed service in the community.

There have been various service clubs and family counselling services that were sincerely and conscientiously interested in this and I know they will be more than pleased to know of this.

Now I would like to mention one specific thing and that is unwanted advertising. In my own community, as in all communities, there is a chamber of commerce that has a better business protective bureau. Not too long ago—in fact, it would be a little less than two months ago that approximately 50 different concerns in the area made complaints to the chamber of commerce concerning advertising invoices that they had received for promotion from a concern, an Edmonton concern, known as Atomic Productions. This company controlled distribution of invoices from Veterans' Hospital Journal, Police Safety Guide, Union Truckers Directory and White Cane Carrier. Invoices were presented to concerns in the community.

These concerns knew nothing about this whatsoever and a lot of the concerns, rather than do anything, just mailed a cheque to the Edmonton firm and said nothing about it.

Is there any way that this can be controlled, Mr. Chairman, so that we will not be confronted with this type of nuisance plaguing the businessmen in the community?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Has this been brought to the attention of the bureau? I think if you were to give us particulars of it and the situations involved, we believe we could do something about it.

Mr. B. Newman: I will be more than pleased, Mr. Chairman. I thought surely it was. It was in my own community that I thought more than likely some members of your department would have heard of the thing, especially when the chamber of commerce made mention of it.

I will bring it to your department's attention. I am very pleased that they are interested. In fact, I will send this clipping over.

I would like to, likewise, bring up a few other topics and that is, does the department check on some of the prizes that are being awarded by various types of contests? I am specifically thinking of these gasoline station—the gas dealers' prizes; they give certain types of awards. Is there no control over that as to whether these prizes are actually given?

I know I made mention in my Throne speech, Mr. Chairman, of the award being given by a commercial organization in my community and yet, when I sent a letter to that person who was supposed to have won an award, there was no such person. So I am just wondering whether there is any check made on the various types of prizes that are given by business concerns in communities throughout the province of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have not done any checking along that line. The question of some of these prizes and coupons and what not have come under the investigation and comment of the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart). I would add this comment, that I know of two people in the community where I live who claim that they have benefited and paid off from matching coupons with gas—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, there was one of those. I thought you might have recorded that.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, is it the responsibility of this bureau, Mr. Chairman, to see whether this is a legitimate operation or not? Is it a responsibility of the consumer protection bureau?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I would think it is possibly a matter for the police or the Attorney General, because if it turns out that it were improper it would be a fraud.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to ask the Minister if the packaging of frozen foods, would that come under this department at all or would that be federal?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, frozen foods and sale of meat deals by the quarter, hind or whole carcasses comes under The Department of Agriculture and Food with whom our officials collaborate and co-operate.

Mr. B. Newman: Does the department study any of these food freezer deals that are—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We certainly do.

Mr. B. Newman: You do.

I will turn some over to the Minister then. The comment I would like to make is on the frozen food, Mr. Chairman. Maybe there should be some dating as to when frozen foods are packaged so that an individual who goes into a store knows he is buying foods that have not been pre-packaged not months but possibly years ago. He should know that the foods have at least been packaged recently. There are several other comments I would like to make later, Mr. Chairman, but I will allow others to speak.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: With respect to the question of freezer plants, under recent amendment to the legislation this session we can now register those in that particular business and we think this is going to give us the teeth that will enable us to eliminate this type of operation.

I think one other type of improvement that will be of assistance has to do with the itemizing of the type of the number of units in one of those package food deals so that the consumer would be able to enumerate and do his own pricing and see whether or not he is getting a good deal.

At the moment, they simply talk about a $189 package plan for 10 days or something of that sort which gives really no information at all.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister wait for complaints as far as the food freezer groups are concerned, or do you check to see that their advertising is legitimate or not?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We check the advertising and we act on complaint.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I was curious whether an automobile which you feed a gallon of gas containing "platformate" really does travel all the way to Banff. I do not know if it goes through the jurisdiction of this Minister, but actually I rise, Mr. Chairman, arising out of what the hon. Minister said about odometers.

You may recall that last year I asked that you amend The Used Car Dealers Act to provide that record be kept of all repairs. I suggested every automobile now manufactured should have within it a log book because I understand the difficulty the Minister expressed about keeping control of odometers and how they function and the repairs on them.

I also agree with the hon. Minister that the least accurate way to check on the worth of an automobile is to check the odometer, because there is no indication of how well a car was looked after, how it was serviced. That is why I suggested that it be mandatory that each automobile be issued with a log book in which the owner would have to register the miles, and every mechanic who serviced the automobile would have to record repairs or services rendered to that automobile and the mileage at which it was rendered.

Now, if this log book was kept up to date it would not matter what happened to the odometer because the record would be in the log book that certain repairs were affected upon the automobile at certain miles. In fact, you would be having a safety check of that automobile approximately every 3,000 miles.

I know, Mr. Chairman, as the Minister stated, new automobiles do not come in his jurisdiction, but I do not think there is much to prevent the hon. Minister from speaking to the colleague in the Cabinet who is charged with that. I do not think there is any rule in Cabinet that you cannot have these discussions, and I would strongly recommend through you, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, that he get after his brother in the Cabinet, whoever he may be, charged with the responsibility of viewing new cars and see that, in the future, log books are issued with each new automobile and some rules and regulations are made which would provide a penalty for their improper use.

Another matter I would like to bring up, Mr. Chairman, is that of promissory notes. I am aware, as is the Minister, that banking, bills of exchange and promissory notes fall within the jurisdiction of the federal government under The British North America Act, and I seek ways of getting around this stumbling block, just as many people who deal in these things get around being bound by the warranties and conditional sale agreements.

One of the big nefarious acts that occurs almost every day is this business of people suing on promissory notes which were taken as collateral in conditional sale agreements. They do not sue as holder of a conditional sale agreement, but as the holder in due course of a promissory note. They are no more holders in due course for value without notice, than any of the members here is the king on the moon.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have seen situations where the note passes in due course, but the equities, or the balance, do not flow with it.

Mr. Ben: I am talking of situations where—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: So the maker of the note has lost his right of set-off and so on.

Mr. Ben: Precisely!

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It is hoped that at this conference and against the work of one of the committees, we will come up with some corrective legislation to block that situation once and for all. It is unholy.

Mr. Ben: I appreciate that the Minister informs the House that there will be discussion on it. However, I would like to offer some suggestions as to how this province could take the initiative. We cannot legislate in matters pertaining to bills of exchange and promissory notes in banking. But we can legislate in reference to conditional sale agreements and our chattel mortgages. We can pass legislation which would make it unlawful to take as collateral to a conditional sales agreement, a promissory note.

After all, in a conditional sales agreement, there is already a covenant to pay. There is also a covenant to pay in a chattel mortgage. Therefore, we could also pass legislation to make it illegal to take as collateral, security to a chattel mortgage, a promissory note. To carry it further, I would suggest that we pass legislation to make it illegal to sever a promissory note from a conditional sale agreement.

We would not be passing on promissory notes, but on chattel mortgages. This way we could stop the people who buy promissory notes, and in fact sometimes buy the conditional sale agreement, and the promissory note. But when the buyer of an article or chattel refuses to continue payments because there was a breach of warranty, the person holding the promisory note, which is usually a finance company, will sue.

They will not sue on the conditional sale agreement, they will not even recognize that it exists. They sue on the promissory note, and claim to be holders in due course without knowledge of the warranty.

I have suggested and I am waiting to go to trial on some actions where I am claiming that the person who took the conditional sale agreement and sold it to the finance company is, in essence, an agent for the subsequent holder the promissory note. Therefore, the holder of the promissory note is not a holder in due course without knowledge, because he took through his agent, but this is getting into some legal arguments.

I still sugest that we should pass an amendment to The Conditional Sales and Chattel Mortgages Acts to make it a law for anyone obtaining one of those two instruments to take as collateral security a promissory note, and that way we could avoid a lot of the difficulties where people are sued as makers of notes and they cannot raise the warranty under which the note was given. May I have your comments on that.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, I would be glad to have a look at the proposition that you have advanced.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Chairman, recently I had the opportunity to visit the Minister's department concerning a problem on a hearing aid sales contract. I must say, sir, that I appreciate the service that your staff gave me and cleared this problem up. But it has recently come to my attention that the hearing aid manufacturers are concerned with what they term "the bad apples" in the industry. I would like to know what steps are being taken to regulate these salesmen, because, quite frankly, I believe that it is detrimental to the industry and to those people in need of hearing aids, namely our senior citizens.

Some years ago, on the select committee on aging, we heard both from the people who need hearing aids, and the industry. The industry admitted that they neglected to act quickly enough, and that this has proven a great detriment to them. I would like to know what steps are being taken to bring about the successful conclusion to the problem?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The department has had meetings with the association representing the hearing aid distributors, and under the recent amendments to The Consumers' Protection Act, we now have the power to register those selling hearing aids, and with it the right to withdraw registration. We think that this will supply us with the strength that we need.

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, will this mean people just working for the industry, or will it mean the salesman who just buys and sells again. Will everyone selling hearing aids be included?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: They register the company, and they in turn must control the seller.

Mr. Worton: But in this case I think it is the man who worked for the industry and was let go because he was not the proper type of salesman that they wished to have. He dealt in used sets, and I must certainly say that your people went through great difficulties to clear up this problem. They did a good job, but I do not think it has completely stopped this from going on.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: If that situation occurred today, the man who went out on his own would have to register, or be subject to the restrictions of the bureau.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kent.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Under this vote, I would like to ask in regard to the food council in The Department of Agriculture and Food. We have, in this province, companies packaging agricultural products and food which the people buy. The standards of packaging are very different, one packaged in ounces, and the other in pounds. The branch has been in operation for one year and a half. What progress have you made in bringing about some standards for product packaging for the consumer in the province?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: You referred to food. I remind you that I said earlier that the question of food distribution, packaging, and supervision come under The Department of Agriculture and Food.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Brantford.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): This is regarding your consumer protection bureau. This is the case where a small businessman is denied protection. In other words, from what I gather from his letter, he has talked to a Mr. Paul Jones in the bureau. I presume that you know the gentleman. I quote from the letter:

> Having been advised by yourself at that time that, because of the ways that the laws are written, I could not be considered a consumer, and, therefore, could not look to your department for assistance or advice.

Could the Minister advise just where your protection stops.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think that you had better indicate and identify the subject matter for me. What is the date of the letter, and the period of time?

Mr. Makarchuk: It is a recent letter, July 8, 1968.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Yes, and what is the general subject matter of it.

Mr. Makarchuk: This small businessman bought some kind of vending equipment, I think. I am not sure what kind of equipment it was, but it was a case of misrepresentation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: This should be treated as a matter of vendor and purchaser. I think that the man that you are talking about was buying a resale, in business, in the course of the marketplace of the wholesale trade, and not as a consumer as we are talking today. We are talking about a consumer who is buying soup or cabbages for his own immediate consumption.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Chairman, am I to take from that then that a small businessman who buys a piece of equipment, as in this case, does not have any recourse whatsoever to the consumer protection bureau if the—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Not if he is buying it for resale.

Mr. Makarchuk: No, this was not a case for resale. The equipment was purchased, Mr. Minister, for use in his own particular business, in this case it was a car wash. He was going to instal the equipment in the car wash. Anyway, he points out in his letter:

> I have been advised by the Ontario Hydro that the equipment in question does not carry the proper electrical approval markings and is not listed in the records of the Ontario Hydro, and also, according to Hydro regulations, it may not be legally offered for sale or use in Ontario.

He continues the letter, and says:

> There are a great many people in the same position that I find myself in, many of whom have already been forced to pay for these pieces of equipment. If a situation like this does not warrant an investigation by your department, then I would ask the purpose of your being there.

Now, I think the gentleman has a good reason. In his case, he bought the equipment. It was not bought for resale, it was for terminal usage, it was going to be used in his establishment; but when he got the equipment he found out that it was useless. Then, when he went to the consumer protection bureau he was told that they cannot do anything about it because he is a small businessman and, therefore, is not in their terms a consumer.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The extreme of the proposition that the hon. member has put is that we would, in the government, be supervising the sale and purchase involving every transaction there is. Now I would like to read to you what is exempted from The Consumers' Protection Act and has been for some considerable time.

The provisions of the Act do not apply to a person who buys goods or services for purposes of resale in the ordinary course of trade—now that is not applicable; or for use in the further production of goods or services. In other words, if he is buying as is the case of your friend, for use in the production of other goods and services, then he is on his own and it is the type of business transaction that is not a consumer-protection deal.

Mr. Makarchuk: From that, Mr. Chairman, am I correct in presuming that the small businessman could be preyed upon without the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs saying anything about it?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, not at all. I think that small businessmen equally with large businessmen have to have an eye out for themselves as well. And if I had been answering the letter, and I am sure if you had, we would have probably made some inquiries on his behalf even though technically he was not within our terms of reference.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Chairman, I am sure the Minister will be pleased that I have a 300-page manuscript here on many of the subjects which we have discussed tonight, a copy of one of next year's best-sellers, and I do not wish to go into it in great detail at this time.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Shulman: It might hurt the sales, but there is one matter which I would like to refer to under this particular vote. This is the sale of used cars carrying certificates of mechanical fitness. This is a subject on which I have some little knowledge because of some experience which I had in a previous occupation.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think I should point out to the hon. member that certificates of mechanical fitness of motor vehicles, including used cars, come under The Department of Transport, not under this department.

Mr. Shulman: Well, is this not a part of consumer protection, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, it is regarded as a safety item.

Mr. Shulman: In that case, Mr. Chairman, I shall save all of this for Monday for my Budget speech. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further under the consumer protection section of this vote?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, before you leave the vote, I have noticed, Mr. Chairman, and I thought the Minister undoubtedly has noticed, that Fraser Robertson is continuing his dialogue with the Minister; I was hoping sometime during the course of his estimates perhaps he would like to comment on Fraser Robertson's column of yesterday or of Tuesday. The point that I would like to ask the Minister to consider simply is a suggestion or a recommendation for the department to take under its purview the whole area of tenant protection.

I do not think it is too much of an extension of the use of the word "consumer" to include the tenant in the apartment or the tenant in rented accommodation, which is rented for his living purposes. I do not want to go into it at great length but my purpose in making the recommendation is that I am quite certain that so long as it is involved with The Attorney General's Department, and the ancient traditions of the law and the archaic principles that are surrounding it, it is not going to be brought up to date quickly and efficiently.

I am quite certain that the study which the law reform commission is doing will be of great benefit in removing a large number of the archaic provisions relating to tenant accommodation. But I think it will still be dealt with in the framework of the law, rather than in the framework of the protection of the tenant in our society.

I am not suggesting for a moment that the landlord also does not require protection in some areas. But by and large the landlord can manage the protection for himself one way or another, and the market will respond to provide him with the protection in terms of the rent which is charged for the accommodation.

The leader of this party raised tonight the question of security deposits and I know that the consumer protection branch has been involved in security deposits in a peripheral way and has been helpful in some instances.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I have an answer to your leader's question; maybe you will permit me to give it. We have handled some 460 instances, requests for assistance dealing with security deposits on apartment rentals. Through moral suasion, as we were saying, my people have been reasonably successful.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, I would like the department to consider extending its activity in this field to matters such as working on the commercial aspects of a standard form of apartment lease. It seems to me that departments such as yours can make very valuable contributions away entirely from the traditional legal framework in which it has been considered. I would think that your department could make very effective recommendations about the abolition of the right of distress of the landlord, an assessment of the extent to which the landlord is using the right of distress.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Maybe we will be transferring the remainder of that other department over to this new department.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): If you want the fellow on your other hand—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We were not talking about that one.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, he was talking about legal departments.

Mr. Singer: Well, the Attorney General has and he has; and you are all going to do it at the same time. Maybe somebody will do it.

Mr. J. Renwick: I would think that the Attorney General has ample to occupy himself without getting involved in the protection of tenants. The fact is that he has been so occupied that they have not spent any time on the basic questions about the need to protect the tenant in the large metropolitan areas. Other items which I think that the department could very well study are these clauses which outlaw or restrict the tenant's right to purchase milk and bread and other commodities within an apartment. I think there is this whole field of the charges which landlords make for subletting to study, and the difficulties which a tenant gets into when he is forced to move for one reason or another because maybe his job has changed and he is moving to another location. He has the problems which are involved in financing the move as well as the payment for the new accommodation. There are many such areas as these, including the kind of unreasonable clauses that the member for Downsview dealt with earlier, which in my view are not going to be adequately dealt with speedily and efficiently if left entirely in the purview of the Attorney General's department. I do not think the Attorney General's department is oriented to consider the position of the tenant as a consumer and he is consuming in the sense that he is renting accommodation and using it for his living purposes.

I know the department can well afford to be expanded when you compare the number of dollars involved in the estimate of this important department with other departments. There is certainly no sense that this department is going to gobble up all the others. I think if one examines the estimates of the important departments of government, it has about the smallest number of dollars for the purposes for which it is being used.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: $3.2 million.

Mr. J. Renwick: Yes, and I think that there is a wide area of the expansion of the work of the department and I recommend that between now and next year this department interest itself in the way it has begun to be interested in this whole area of what is a modern, up-to-date attitude toward the protection of the tenant; what the tenant's rights should be in our society, and what his department can do to ensure their protection.

For example, without labouring the point unduly, nothing you do about security deposits—apart from abolishing them entirely—is ever going to solve the problem if it is left on a purely contractual basis. I think there has to be some branch of government where the initiative will be taken to ensure the prompt and quick return of the security deposit in the settlement of that kind of problem.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, this is the point I have just been making, if the member for Humber would—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Riverdale was speaking about tenants and suggests that—

Mr. J. Renwick: That is right. Rental protection should be afforded through the consumers' protection bureau.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The member is on a point of order?

Mr. J. Renwick: Perhaps the member for Humber could read my remarks in Hansard when they appear and that will be a correct record of what I have said.

I would like to refer to a comment that the member for Humber made earlier this evening and that is on this question of the misuse of the promissory note. In dealing with it one cannot lose sight of the fact that a promissory note is a very important commercial instrument, and we must not destroy the value of that instrument in this particular field.

But rather than the mechanical way in which the member for Humber wanted to treat it, and that is whether it is detached from the contract, or some such other mechanical way, it would seem to me that this province could again, as part of the work of solving some of these problems which have an application all across Canada, very readily prohibit the use of the promissory note on the purchase of consumer goods in the way in which consumer goods are defined within The Consumers' Protection Act.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Or insist on the equities.

Mr. J. Renwick: Or insist on the equities following the promissory note, one or the other.

I happen to think that, for practical purposes, you could prohibit the use and still not interfere with the finance company which ultimately would end up with financing that contract, using that contract itself in turn as collateral for borrowings from banks or other institutions. I think that the credit companies would adapt themselves very, very quickly, because everyone knows that it is not the fact that there is a promissory note which maintains the credit market.

The fact of the matter is that the credit market is maintained mainly because most people honour in good faith the obligations which they assume. I think that the loss ratio of the finance companies over the last 20 years in Canada shows that the reserve which they have to make for losses is negligible in terms of the volume of business which they do. I am quite certain in my own mind that a very simple prohibition by this province of the use of the promissory note as an ancillary document in the purchase of consumer goods within the ambit of this department would solve a great many of the problems.

It would certainly solve the dance studio problem very quickly, in my view, and it would solve many other problems without—and I just simply reiterate it—in any way affecting the use by the finance companies of those contracts with the banks and with other financing institutions for the purpose of borrowing money to maintain the flow of funds through the credit market.

Mr. Ben: That is exactly what I said, if you had been listening.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I think those are the only two remarks, and I would appreciate a brief comment from the Minister on them.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The type of contract, instalment contract, whereby the equities are lost as a result of the assignment of the promissory note, creates a very serious and unfair and inequitable position for anybody to be in. I would like to record—the opposition always like to do the recording—I would like to record a situation with the House that I think was unconscionable and which came to our attention some three or four months ago.

It involved the same type of circumstances, an instalment contract to which was attached a promissory note, but in the main body of the contract which set out so many months to pay re cost of financing and so on, it gave a condition in favour of the vendor of the goods that should he ever assign the promissory note that the assignee of the note, the subsequent holder in due course, would have the right to call the note at his pleasure. This was being used.

I have actually seen the printed forms embodying this unholy, unconscionable document, whereby the situation that we have discussed—the hon. member for Humber and the hon. member for Riverdale—whereby the subsequent legal holder in due course would be able to deal with the note, but not have to honour the equities.

In the case I am describing, he had the right to make the note due and payable at once, and in some cases did so. So there are people who require somebody to look over their shoulder. I might say that it was a major Canadian institution, one of the largest of the Canadian financial institutions, that was using this form. They are not now using it and it has been withdrawn, in some attempt to restore their otherwise good reputation.

I am hopeful that that item will be the first of the major legal items dealt with by the committee.

Mr. Ben: I would like to, before this item closes off, deal with something that has not been dealt with. The hon. member just repeated the words that I repeated previously. Unfortunately he was not listening or he would not have got up and made the speech. At any rate I want—

Mr. Nixon: You will read it in Hansard.

Mr. Ben: He can check in Hansard. I want to deal with real estate and business brokers, an item which has not been dealt with. First of all, you know you are talking about consumers' protection. I think one of—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: What item is that?

Mr. Ben: Vote 704 we are dealing with.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: We have dealt with the consumer protection bureau and are now up to the registration and examination branch. Very well.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anybody else that wants to speak on the consumer protection bureau before—

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I have one concerning the purchase of auto vehicles by individuals under the age of 16. I think there should be some protection given to prevent the purchase of an automobile, a motorcycle, or such vehicles—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: That is The Department of Transport, Mr. Chairman, nothing to do with our department.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, do you not think, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister should be interested enough to—if not handle it himself —to relay it to his colleagues so that an individual of any age should not be allowed to buy an auto vehicle, and in that way eliminate some of the problems of delinquency that may arise as a result of a youngster purchasing the vehicle.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I will be glad to pass that along.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask of the Minister, has he received many complaints concerning chinchilla breeding, because I have noticed in a press release that this apparently is one phase of enterprise in which there are quite a few complaints and where an individual has the idea that he can breed chinchillas in a garage or in a basement, in practically any place in the home. This is not the case whatsoever. In fact, the comment is—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer to the question is yes. There are about 20 inquiries.

Mr. B. Newman: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: The answer to the question which you had in the early part of your speech was: there have been about 20 inquiries.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, is the Minister following through with this? Is he looking after the problem?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am not personally, but the branch is endeavouring to do so.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not attempting to be funny whatsoever. I do not intend that you would be looking after any of the problems. I think that you have sufficient staff that you can delegate the problems to them.

I would like to ask the Minister is he is considering placing a requirement that manufacturers put a life expectancy on certain types of appliances. I know this is one of the things that is being given serious consideration in the United States. Say, a washing machine good for 1,000 operating hours or a toaster good for 2,000 or 3,000 operating hours.

I think a consumer, in purchasing certain appliances, should know that the appliance should be able to last a certain length of time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Do you not mean a guarantee?

Mr. B. Newman: The guarantee does not necessarily cover this, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Or a warranty?

Mr. B. Newman: There is a lot of difference between a guarantee and a warranty. But an individual purchasing an article like this should know that they are going to get x number of years service out of it under normal use. I think this is a place—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: How would you ever enforce that kind of a covenant?

Mr. B. Newman: I do not know, Mr. Chairman. That is not my responsibility, that is your responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. How do you guarantee the number of hours an electric light bulb will give, for example?

Mr. B. Newman: I am not talking about electric light bulbs.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I am trying to point out to you the never-never land that we are into. It is a very difficult situation trying to establish these proper businesses and the kind of relationships that should exist.

I am sure that everyone in this House will have a different standard of what they think should exist. We are willing and we are committed and dedicated to try to find these answers. But, quite frankly, I think you are getting—and I say it in a friendly way—I think you are getting into an area about the hours of use that—I gather the hon. member did not want to use the word guarantee or warranty—the equivalent, which is worse—the equivalent of a guarantee or warranty for so many hours of use. I do not know how you would ever enforce it. I have no idea myself.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, this is being given consideration in the United States and I would say, through you, Mr. Chairman, you will give it consideration too.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: But without any results.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I want to get back to the books. There are two things I want to deal with in reference to this particular item.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: There is no finality on that matter. It is still in the testing stage and has been for some time.

Mr. Chairman: We were dealing with the director of consumer protection and the consumer protection bureau.

Mr. Ben: We are still under—

Mr. Chairman: We have not passed these two things in the vote.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, there are two aspects I wish to discuss pertaining to real estate and business brokers.

One of them is the fact that they have a real clique running in the metropolitan area.

Mr. Chairman: This does not come under the—

Mr. Ben: Registration and examination—

Mr. Chairman: This does not come under the consumer protection bureau, and we have not reached registration and examination yet.

Mr. Ben: With all due respect to you, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with vote 704.

Mr. Chairman: With all due respect to the member it was agreed by the committee that we would deal with the first two sections and the last two separately when the committee sat this evening.

Mr. MacDonald: When you were away.

Mr. Chairman: We will come to registration and examination as soon as we finish with the consumer protection bureau.

Mr. Ben: Fine. Now one consumer we have neglected to protect is the one that consumes real property, houses. He is the one we have really failed on the job.

I, too, am going to express the nub of it, like the hon. member for Riverdale, who you let go on for a considerable length of time.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Could we get to the vote?

Mr. Ben: Now, just a second. You permitted the member for Riverdale to stretch a point saying, "Why is this not covered under consumers' protection?"—

Mr. J. Renwick: I did not say "why."

Mr. Ben: —and it should be. I am saying that the purchaser of real property should also be covered under consumers' protection.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No. It is a good thing we did not live a couple of hundred years ago, the hon. member here would probably be chastizing the hon. member for Riverdale with a whip and lash.

Let us get down to the real meat of these estimates and—

Mr. Ben: I asked the hon. Chairman—I pointed out that it was out of order. He said, "No"; so on the basis of his ruling, I am proceeding.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

The member for Riverdale did rise and he pointed out, in the Chairman's recollection, several items that he thought should come under the consumer protection bureau. He mentioned, in his remarks, the matter of protecting tenants in rentals and, in the general area of his remarks, I thought that they were in order. But for the member for Humber now to start to dwell on real estate, I think is out of order.

Mr. Ben: I think the person who buys real estate ought to be protected by the consumer protection bureau. That is my contention.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if you want to raise an issue I am prepared to raise it.

Mr. Chairman: Well, may I say to the—

Mr. Ben: It is my submission that people who buy real estate ought to be protected by the consumer protection bureau. I wish to—

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the member—order, please! The Chairman has made no rulings; there was no point of order raised.

Order, please! The Chairman made no ruling. He permitted the member for Riverdale to pursue his remarks. The member did not rise on a point of order. He spoke to me by way of an interjection. I replied to him by way of an interjection while the member was still in possession of the floor.

Mr. Ben: Do you want to listen to the tape again?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I can get you off the hook.

Security deposits are now under the consumer protection bureau. They have been looking into them. It is not a question of whether they are, or not—they are now.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman has not made any rulings on any matter raised so far by the member for Humber. The Chairman has no desire to engage in any controversy with the member.

If the member wants to try to make a point that he thinks should come under this branch it is perfectly all right. I have tried to be as consistent as possible under the circumstances.

Mr. Ben: I am pointing out to the hon. Chairman that he has recognized members of the Tory benches who did not even rise. One sent him a note, which is a disgraceful situation.

An hon. member: What?

Mr. Ben: Yes, that is right. An hon. member for the Conservative Party, the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Apps), sent him a note saying he wanted to speak. He did not even catch the Speaker's eye. The Chairman recognized him when everybody on this side had risen. This is the way it is run here.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: How did he address the Chairman?

Mr. Ben: He sent him a note saying he wanted to speak, now will the Chairman deny that?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Then he tells us we have to catch his eye and those people over there cannot catch his eye.

Mr. Chairman: May I say to the member for Humber—

Mr. L. M. Reilly (Eglinton): The hon. Chairman has been very fair to all members of this House.

Mr. Chairman: May I say to the member for Humber, I have not tried to restrict the member from entering any debate.

If he will recall earlier in the session there was a difficulty the Chairman encountered by not properly recognizing the members at this end of the House. I have been adopting the practice of turning my back, more or less, on the government side of the House in order that I recognize these members in proper turn.

I did receive a note and I remember the incident about which the member for Humber speaks. The Liberal members and two or three of the NDP members had been monopolizing the floor all evening. One Conservative member sent me a note and said, "Will you please look over this way?" I looked over that way and I recognized the one little Conservative member for the whole evening.

If the member for Humber wants to suggest to the Chairman that this is not playing cricket—as he put it in a note he sent to me—I say it is pretty small potatoes.

The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, under this vote, I would like to ask the Minister about beavers.

In the Wall Street Journal, I believe it was June 10 or 11—I am referring to the last speaker's point about chinchillas—they find that the chinchilla swindle is now passé and the latest swindle is the beaver swindle. Apparently it is becoming a very big business in the United States to persuade people that anyone can raise beavers in their bathtub. I wanted to ask the Minister if this particular problem has now arisen in this province? If so, what is he doing about beaver problems?

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: It has been indicated that the reason for no enquiries about beavers is that the current standard of bathtub in this area is too small!

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further under the consumer protection bureau?

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: As a matter of fact, that whole question of a pair of animals to breed goes back to—I remember when I was 13 or 14 years of age—the mid 20's and how my father and mother were encouraged to invest in that type of thing.

Mr. Singer: Did they have bigger bathtubs then?

An hon. member: Somebody gave them the pill!

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): You are not that old.

Mr. Chairman: Is there anything further under director of consumer protection, or the consumer protection bureau? Those items will carry. We will now pass to the registration and examination branch.

The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to get down to the situation in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. In the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto they have a real clique running here, a monopoly or cartel, which is called the Toronto real estate board. And you could be a real estate broker; you can qualify as such under every criterion set forth by the statutes of this province and regulations thereunder. Still you may be barred from being a member of the Toronto real estate board if somebody does not like the way you part your hair, or the accent with which you speak.

Now you may suggest that it is an organization and the organization is free to accept who it chooses, and if it wishes to blackball somebody that is his business, but that is not quite the situation. Because the Toronto real estate board in this city has the monopoly on the service called multiple listing service which is a system whereby a photograph is taken of the property which is offered for sale, and any prospective purchasers can be shown the photograph.

I repeat, the Toronto real estate board has the exclusive rights to use this service. Therefore, anyone who does not belong to the Toronto real estate board cannot use that service, and the essence is a second class citizen among the real estate business brokers.

I think this is an iniquity and something should be done about it. If the Toronto real estate board wants to run a little social club, that is their affair, but the rights to have exclusive jurisdiction over multiple listings ought to be taken away from them, and any real estate broker who passes the qualifications set forth by the department of the Minister through The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act ought to have a right to the multiple listing service.

That is my one point. There are a number of real estate brokers who are just about starving to death because they cannot break in to this clique.

The second item I want to speak about is the way that this clique has been able to raise the fees charged—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Chairman, I think we should deal with this as we progress. It is my understanding there is the Toronto real estate board and there is the Ontario board and so on. Now the real estate boards are an association of people in a particular area or district. They control the entry into their own organization.

I think I should say this to the hon. member that it is not a requirement that you belong to the real estate board to be a broker or registered with the department. There are about 20 per cent of the brokers in Ontario who are not members of a real estate board.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, I am quite aware of that. I think I pointed that out to the Minister. What I was also pointing out was that the Toronto real estate board has the exclusive right to use the multiple listing service, a scheme of selling real estate through means of advertising the property by means of a photograph, and what I said is—

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I thought you did not understand that there are 20 per cent who do not belong who could also set up their own listing services if they so wanted.

Mr. Ben: The multiple listing service is a patented scheme.

An hon. member: They can set up their own in opposition.

Mr. Ben: They have the exclusive right to that multiple listing service.

Mr. Shulman: It is their own private scheme.

Mr. Ben: It is their scheme. Nobody else can use it.

Mr. Shulman: But someone else can set up a similar scheme.

Mr. Ben: He cannot set up a similar scheme because the scheme is patented.

Mr. Shulman: Oh no!

Mr. Ben: It is copyrighted.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Oh, no! Why does nobody else use it then? Why do they not let the other real estate brokers use it? If they try to use it they find themselves subject to prosecution?

Another point I wish to make, is the way this clique has been able to manipulate the fees charged for dealing in real estate.

I point out to you that they are able to manipulate the fee, although there are some private brokers who are still charging less than the members of the Toronto real estate board. They have to because they do not have the multiple listing service.

Real estate has just about doubled in value in the last 10 or 15 years. Notwithstanding the fact that since the fees charged are based on a percentage of the sale price, and that, therefore, the fees have doubled, the real estate and business broker, still raise their rates. For instance, originally on an exclusive listing it was 4 per cent, and now, in what was called a photo-co-op, and is now called a multiple listing, it was 5 per cent. They increased the tariff being charged to 5 per cent for an exclusive and 6 per cent for a multiple listing.

This I point out to you is why real estate rates have been rising. In other words there is a double charge on the buyer of homes, because, as I say, the cost of real estate has doubled in the last ten years, therefore, the amount that the salesmen are receiving on the sale of homes doubled, plus another 20 per cent added on top.

I say that this ought not to continue, that this organization should be able to have the buyers of real estate in this city—the people who are buying homes—by the throat. It is no good for the Minister to get up and say, "Well, let them start their own multiple listing service." I say to you, they cannot. They cannot use that form. It is copyrighted. There is an exclusive on it.

Mr. Chairman: The registration and examination branch.

The member for Kitchener is on his feet; if he wants to yield the floor to the member for Downsview.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I had several questions to ask of the hon. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: I think in view of the hour I will move the committee rise and report.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree: No, I have got all next week.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to a certain resolution and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to a certain resolution, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not certain that it will be convenient for me to continue tomorrow with these estimates. If I am not able to make the necessary arrangements, we would like to proceed with The Department of Public Works tomorrow.

Hon. Mr. Rowntree moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, JULY 12, 1968

The House met at 9:30 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Due to the continued spread of the cottony maple scale disease in Essex county, and especially in the township of Colchester South, will the hon. Minister consider the request of the Essex county council to take steps to assist in controlling this disease?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Essex-Kent: May I take this question as notice; I hope to have a full reply for him later this morning, and if not on Monday.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): I have a question for the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Is the Minister in a position to affirm or deny the report that appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of Thursday, July 11, that Metro Toronto will be expanded by the addition of the townships of Vaughan, Markham and Pickering?

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am really not in a position to confirm or deny the report.

Of course I cannot speak for what studies the Metropolitan corporation may have been making, but insofar as studies we are making are concerned there is no direct, particular study of this situation.

I would point out to the House, as the member is aware we have had two or three meetings with the council of the county of York, and have met with the other six municipalities of York; and as a government we are very much aware of the problem of Pickering. I think I would have to say that any suggestion we might have or any particular studies which we might undertake will have to wait until such time as a specific goals plan is determined, arising out of the Metropolitan Toronto and region transportation study. When there is a decision by the government as to which goals plan or variation thereof is most appropriate, then I think we would be in a position to take a look at the situation which is described in the press reports of yesterday.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when I was not in the House I was asked two questions.

One was from the leader of the New Democratic Party, the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald):

"Has the government reached any conclusion on the request of the Ottawa city council for the power to establish a rental review board?" This matter is still under consideration.

The second question was from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent). I will not read it because it is very long. I would simply say that on August 18, 1966, the government appointed Mr. Justice Rand as the Royal commissioner to deal with certain—

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The member has a point of order?

Mr. Ben: I do not believe the hon. member for Grey-Bruce put the question, because in the absence of the Prime Minister he was not permitted by you to put the question. So I can hardly understand the hon. Prime Minister rising to answer a question and saying he is not going to read the question because it is too long. In essence, he is answering a question which was not asked and which we do not know about and saying it is too long.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I quite understand that the hon. members on the other side really do not know what questions the member for Grey-Bruce asks. I am well aware of that.

However, I will hold my answer until the member for Grey-Bruce returns to the House. He may then put his question and I will answer it.

Mr. Speaker: I think that is a satisfactory solution on all sides of the House.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I just want to clarify a point that came under some discussion yesterday during the Prime Minister's absence.

Was the motion that was introduced containing the words "–from Monday to Friday inclusive" with regard to hours, designed to alter the hours on Friday, in particular to extend them beyond 2:00 o'clock?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, it made Friday similar to any other day.

Mr. MacDonald: But only on the commencement hours?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will sit, a week from today, at 10:00 o'clock in the morning and continue until 12:30, then from 2:00 until 6:00 and will resume at 8:00.

Mr. MacDonald: It is just as I anticipated yesterday and that is why I sought clarification of it, because my understanding, when we had the meeting of the leaders, was we were not going to change Friday's hours.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Well, if you cannot take the heat, get out of the kitchen.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, we can take it; the member was not here to take it yesterday, he has come back rested up.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I think there is probably some desire on the part of all members of the House to wind up this session of the Legislature, and I am prepared to make the necessary hours available to accomplish that end.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I rise to protest because we have had discussions among the leaders and we had fixed Wednesday, two weeks this past Wednesday, as the target date. As I suspected yesterday—and my capacity for suspicion is sometimes suspected on that side, but now it has been justified—the slick little motion of yesterday was to open the door to something on which there had been no agreement.

An hon. member: It was not too slick.

Mr. MacDonald: My recollection was that there had been agreement that the Friday period would remain the same. Now the door has been opened for what I described yesterday as a "marathon session throughout the weekend." I indicated our opposition to it yesterday—if this is what is intended I repeat it now. We were in effect deceived by the introduction of the motion yesterday.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh, nonsense!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There is no desire on my part to deceive anyone. I might say, if we are going to get into this kind of a wrangle, which I do not particularly enjoy. if you recall I could get no acceptance from anyone on any target date. So I am simply making the hours available to conduct the business of the House.

There was no agreement, Mr. Speaker, because—

Mr. MacDonald: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, there was an agreement that we would aim at two weeks Wednesday, and specific in it was no agreement at all to alter our hours on Friday, at least as far as I am concerned. The proposition of starting at 10:00 in the morning and then entertaining the idea of marathon sessions throughout the weekend is just sheer lunacy in the conduct of the public business of the province.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to discuss the possibility of this matter arising this morning with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon), and he suggested that if the point arose I could say on his behalf, which I now do, that we are prepared to accept whatever hours are necessary to finish the business of the House.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): The NDP was outflanked again.

Mr. MacDonald: We have not been outflanked, we have been deceived.

Mr. Speaker: Order!

May I have the attention of the member for York South? Before the member for York South came in the Prime Minister gave a reply to a question, which unfortunately had not yet been placed. Is the hon. member seised of the reply?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not seised of it as yet but I expect I shall get the information in due course.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not really want to allow this point to go by on this note.

I do not think in the conduct of this House and its affairs we will ever be unreasonable, but neither do I think that we can make any agreements, because frankly from the government side of the House we simply do not control the amount of speaking that will be done by the Opposition. Therefore, we must have some flexibility in discharging our duties in operating the House.

We have made agreements and had discussions, and I would hope we would be able to continue to do this. I would not want to leave this discussion with the hon. leader of the New Democratic Party feeling that he had been deceived. I do not feel that this was the case. Before we make any decision as to sitting on the weekend I will, of course consult him, I can assure him of that.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day?

Clerk of the House: The 15th order, the House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS

Hon. T. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Chairman, I would like in this, one of the few times in the session that I am on my feet, to compliment you on your handling of your duties in this session. You have shown great patience as far as I can determine.

I would like to compliment my staff too, before I give my few remarks. They are a very dedicated group, and under reorganization have adapted very well to their job, as is expected.

I would also like to compliment the civil service as a whole. We have a lot to do with other civil servants in other departments. In this past 17 years I have come to recognize the dedication and work that they contribute to government.

I usually speak off the cuff in my opening remarks in the estimates, and I am sorry to inflict on the House a little longer speech this year due to the fact that we have had so many changes. I will be about 15 or 16 minutes this year, so rest assured that it is not going to be too long but I am going to stick rather closely to my notes.

I am pleased once again to present the estimates of The Department of Public Works to this House. This is the 10th consecutive year in which I have had this privilege. As I look back over those years I find some satisfaction, as Minister of this department, in having participated in the tremendous growth of the province and, I hope, contributing something to its development.

Most members are familiar with the purpose and role of my department. It is essentially a service department, providing accommodation and other necessary facilities for the government and for the other departments. This means that my department must, of necessity, work very closely with those it serves. We try to do this by becoming acquainted with their programmes and needs. This information then becomes the basis for the construction, accommodation and maintenance programmes of my department.

To cope with these many and varied tasks more effectively, I informed the House last year that we were reorganizing the department. During the past year this has advanced very well. I will not at this time review in depth the many important changes that have been made. But it is of interest to record some of our achievements.

The creation of the buildings management branch will be of interest to all members, I am sure. This is the branch responsible for the maintenance, repair, operation and management of our many properties right across the province. This is a big task and to accomplish it we have divided the province into five regions, with a further subdivision into 17 district offices. The regional managers have been appointed recently and have commenced their new duties. We are now proceeding with appointments at the district level. We hope that the creation of this branch will improve our programme of planned maintenance and provide our field representatives with the necessary authority to deal with local problems and requirements.

We have also made changes that will affect our capital construction programme. Primarily, this will be accomplished through the newly created design and construction branch. This branch is responsible for carrying out the architectural and engineering design as well as the construction of our major capital building projects.

Alongside construction we think of safety: safety in our major capital projects and safety also in our routine maintenance work. To achieve this we have created a safety branch to promote safety on our construction projects and in our many buildings.

In addition, seeking to strengthen management in the department, we have created a management systems branch and an internal audit branch. The former will satisfy management's needs for designing and developing systems and procedures and be responsible for data processing in the department. The internal audit branch will supply management with a skilled and impartial appraisal of its operations.

Another matter of interest is the creation of the common services branch in the department. I believe that all of you are familiar with the statement made by the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) last November, regarding common services. The intent is to concentrate in one area a number of government services now being carried out at various locations in Toronto. We hope, in this way, to achieve greater efficiency and eliminate duplication of some of the services that occurred in past years. The common services branch, then, will be responsible for mail and messenger services, mass mailing, stationery and office supplies and offset printing and duplicating services, for various departments located in and around Queen's Park. The branch will be fully operational on completion of the new facilities now under construction immediately south of the Whitney block.

Administration of justice: A special projects task force associated with the takeover of the administration of justice programme, has been working in our department since January 15, 1968. A preliminary survey and valuation of the premises involved is just being completed and the task force is currently preparing to get down to the specifics of each building and commence negotiations with the municipality or county concerned. This will involve the department in acquiring title and negotiating rental agreements with respect to numerous county jails and court houses, registry offices and various municipally-owned buildings.

Originally, it was felt that this programme could be completed within two years, but it is now considered that the size and complexity of the operation will necessitate a longer completion period. The problems encountered are varied and complex. There appear to be very few parallel situations existing between municipalities; however, after a good deal of consideration, a clear set of formulae and procedures have been adopted and we are striving to make the programme as equitable as possible, right across the province.

Central supply division: I believe that one of the most important developments in my department over the past year, has been the creation of a completely new division: the supply division. It is charged with carrying out the government's centralized purchasing and supply policy, as it was announced by the Provincial Treasurer of Ontario, September 1, 1967.

Our concept incorporates the establishment of a central purchasing authority to co-ordinate the operations of a partially decentralized purchasing organization. Thus, rather than undertake the entire purchasing requirements of the government, the central authority will provide functional guidance to each department, and will advise on such matters as the development of purchasing specialists, specification writing, market studies, supplier evaluation, value analysis, and stores management.

It will also supervise adherence to the government's overall purchasing policy. Initially, the central authority will purchase selected items for multi-departmental use, wherever significant mass purchasing economies can be realized.

Now, something that I know is of great interest to many of the hon. members, Queen's Park office developments: For the past few years, many of you, I hope, have noticed that my department has been steadily increasing the standards of accommodation in the legislative building.

It has been my hope and goal for many years to see, someday, that the usage of this building be dedicated solely to the legislative function. To this end, I am pleased to advise this House that the master plan for this goal is under final study and review.

Briefly, this plan envisages that the whole of the north wing, with the exception, of course, of the legislative library, be converted to suitable office accommodation for the members of the House. Elsewhere, adequate and improved facilities for the government offices and other party leaders and staff are planned. Our present facilities for Hansard and the page boys, will also be improved.

The members' dining room will be relocated and brought up to an acceptable standard. Committee rooms, lounge areas, and all services and facilities relative to the legislative function will receive the fullest consideration.

I am sure that you all will agree that such a programme is desirable and necessary and I say that our plan will be implemented as quickly as the re-allocation of space can be made and the necessary funds provided for this plan.

I would add that for some time I have been aware of the congestion of automobiles and the traffic hazards in front of this building, and we are already making certain changes to the parking facilities and traffic patterns there.

Basically, traffic flow in front of the building has become one way; that is, from east to west. Parking in front has been re-arranged and is angular on the south side of the drive to coincide with the one-way flow of traffic.

Our long range plan is that no parking will be permitted in front of the building and the present parking facilities on the north side of the building will be restricted to members of the Legislature only. These proposals are, of course, being made with the complete agreement of those city officials concerned with traffic in this area.

The Whitney block has, for quite a number of years, housed the main administrative offices of The Departments of Mines, Social and Family Services, Health, Lands and Forests, Agriculture and Food, Public Works and Transport.

The Departments of Health, and Social and Family Services have been moved to the Hepburn block, and it is planned that The Department of Agriculture and Food will be moved to leased accommodation at 1200 Bay Street later this fall.

The Department of Transport and Public Works will be moving to the Ferguson block later on this summer, which will allow The Departments of Lands and Forests and Mines to expand and consolidate in the Whitney block.

Because the Whitney block is over 40 years old and is out of date by today's standards, we had hoped to modernize all six floors this year.

Extensive refurbishing to the third and fifth floors and part of the fourth is presently underway. Again, it is a budget matter that does not permit us to implement our total plans for the Whitney block this fiscal year.

Phase 1 of the Queen's Park office extension is virtually completed. The Department of Health has moved into about 66,000 sq. ft. of space in the Hepburn block and the Department of Social and Family Services has been allocated about 80,000 sq. ft. The Ferguson block is to be occupied at the end of the summer by my own department —84,000 sq. ft.—and The Department of Transport—88,000 sq. ft. At the same time, the Macdonald block will house the office of the Registrar General, a Queen's printer outlet, and certain offices of The Departments of Transport, Social and Family Services, and Tourism and Information. The block will also contain a number of common committee rooms, a cafeteria, an Ontario savings bank, and a health centre.

Phase 1A of the office extension is under construction at the northeast corner of Grosvenor Street and Queen's Park Crescent. It is basically an underground parking lot which will provide space for about 400 cars; however, it also contains a unique supermarket-type of stationery and office supplies depot. Employees from the government departments will be able to pick the stationery stores they want from shelves and wheel them through a checkpoint in carts.

The garage will be connected by an underground tunnel, with the Parliament buildings, Frost building, Queen's Park office extension, and the University subway line at College for "out-of-the-weather" pedestrian traffic. Grosvenor Street traffic is currently restricted in order to permit construction of the final portion of the connecting tunnel. The ground level above the structure will be pleasingly treated with walkways, grassed areas and shrubs, to tie in with a master landscaping plan being developed for the whole of the Queen's Park area. The whole parking garage area should be completed by the summer of next year.

As you are aware, on February 8, 1968, the Treasurer of Ontario announced that the government had postponed five major building projects, scheduled to start this year, to hold the line on capital construction investment. The Queen's Park office extension programme —phase 2, at an estimated cost of $24,000,000, was one of the projects postponed.

The future development of any capital city, along with the functioning of the public service, can be markedly improved by the application of orderly and intelligent criteria concerning the location of government agencies and their employees. These criteria must be broad enough to encompass not only the immediate future needs of the department concerned, but also the interest of the government as a whole, the city and surrounding regions, the general public, civil servants, the economy, other levels of government, and so on.

Accordingly, my department, after working closely with federal and municipal officials and consulting planning boards across the continent, has recommended an overall locational pattern for the government's Toronto offices. Alternatives such as centralization, suburbanization, dispersal and consolidation were carefully assessed in the light of three basic criteria:

1. The accessibility requirements of each office.

2. Office space economics.

3. The indirect influences that our offices have upon the community and the region.

The government's head office space requirements were projected to 1980 and we have now developed a general accommodation plan for the Queen's Park area to that year.

In view of the shortage of capital funds, we have explored alternate methods of financing the construction of government premises and have concluded that, in certain circumstances, general-purpose buildings and smaller special-purpose buildings of acceptable quality can be provided on an economic basis through leasing and leaseback arrangements. Factors considered include cost of capital, construction cost, urgency of requirement, building quality, operating flexibility, and so on.

The department will continue to become more and more involved in governmental planning activities as its planning branch takes shape during the next year.

In our opinion, the Ontario government pavilion at Expo '67 was an outstanding tribute to the progressiveness and enthusiastic participation of the people of this province.

Its original architecture and contemporary exhibits attracted a grand total of 5.5 million visitors. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) announced earlier this year, our pavilion has been turned over to the city of Montreal and we have, of course, relinquished any responsibility for its maintenance and repair.

We recovered about $2 million worth of furniture, equipment and displays from the pavilion, most of which will be used within the government. The sculpture by Snow, "Walking Women", has been donated to the Ontario art gallery and is presently on display there. The kitchen equipment and dining room furniture has been installed at the Ontario government building at the CNE, for the permanent kitchen and dining room. Picnic tables and summer furniture were given to The Department of Health for use in various hospitals.

We are confident that the contribution of the province of Ontario to Expo '67 will only be exceeded by our participation in Expo '70 at Osaka, Japan. We have already been involved in the selection of the site for the 1970 pavilion and have completed negotiations with the Japanese firm which is to construct the building.

Quite a number of changes have been made in the 1967-68 estimates format in developing this year's estimates. Because of the reorganization of the department, five new votes have been added:

1805—water control branch; 1806—administration of justice; 1807—purchasing and supply division; 1811—water control branch; 1812—administration of justice. This is last year under capital expenditure, of course.

Also, the newly created internal audit branch has been added to vote 1801; the management systems branch to vote 1803; and the safety branch to vote 1804.

In order to make the estimates more descriptive, the common services branch in vote 1803 has been presented in five sections and the purchasing branch has been presented in two sections.

In order to make the vote structure more compatible with the department's programme and activity set-up, the 1968-69 capital and ordinary expenditure framework was redistributed somewhat, relative to the 1967-68 set-up.

The capital expenditure estimate rose from $52,053,000 to $55,077,000. The administration of justice programme accounts for $1,800,000 of this increase, and the construction of buildings accounts for $1,500,000.

Of the $11,156,000 increase, in the ordinary expenditure estimate, $5,660,000 is for "new programmes", most of which is for the administration of justice. Expansion and extension of existing programmes amounted to $5,036,300—two-thirds of which is for rental payments on leased premises.

This year's capital works programme is described in greater detail than it was last year, since we have included the "estimated project cost" and the "contract price" for all work under construction.

This blue book is actually made up about the end of February and we have since had some approvals from Treasury board which have been placed on your desks this morning, but I indicate to you very clearly that this is only for the preparation of sketch plans and cost estimates. It does not mean that the buildings are going to be built; Treasury board is, I might say, keeping a little closer tab on us, and for more accurate estimates this is the way we are doing it this year. So, there are a number of projects that are there for preparation of sketch plans and cost estimates only.

This is a brief review of my department's operations for the year and I will be pleased to provide more detail on our various programmes, as the questions come up.

Mr. H. MacKenzie (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Chairman, as one who has worked as an engineer in the construction industry for many years, it was indeed a pleasure when the leader of our party suggested that I concern myself with The Department of Public Works; the department which provides buildings and office space for other departments, along with a bit of civil engineering work on dams, docks, water flow, and so on.

I listened carefully to the Minister's report to the House, and found it most interesting and would like to congratulate him for approaching it with the respect his department deserves.

The annual report this year by the department contains, like former reports, a good deal of very useful information and very quickly gives one an insight into the magnitude of the work handled by this department. And when I speak of the report, I think of the small report that comes out each year. The blue book outlining the capital works programme is, of course, a relatively new yearly report, only going back about seven years, also issued by the department, and one which sets forth in some detail all the projects in the different stages which the department is dealing with.

The blue book for this year goes a little further than past editions by showing, for the jobs under construction, the estimate of cost, the contract price, and the amount allowed for each in the 1968-1969 budget. Unfortunately, the one issued for 1966-1967 is much different than this edition, and quite different than the one for 1967-1968 in the content and format. Consequently, it is most difficult to follow the projects through the various stages and carefully assess them.

In general terms, it appears to me that the Minister is doing a relatively good job with his department, and particularly if the performance of the department is measured by what we see in and around the legislative building and by the quality of the buildings that are being erected under the guiding hand of the department. I have taken the trouble to look over, in some detail, the new buildings across the road. There is no doubt in my mind that they are quality buildings which reflect the broad knowledge of building materials and their application, and a thoroughly sensible approach to space requirements, and are as well, aesthetically pleasing. They are buildings which will last for many years to come.

But even though the buildings are superb and the operation of maintenance and caretaking is to a good standard, there are a few other points which should be given some consideration.

In reading through the debates of the past few years, and in discussions with members of our party, the favourite topic of immediate criticism always seems to be the facilities, or lack of them, for the members right here in this legislative building. In further talks with members of all parties who have been here for many years, I am informed we now have facilities suitable for a king, when compared to those of a few years ago. Thus, the question arises as to whether or not the members are justified in asking for, and expecting to get, better facilities.

A comparison of today and a few years back, with regard to the duties and business of the members of the legislative assembly, is quite helpful in making an assessment. Without going into a multitude of statistics, just two or three significant points give a pretty good insight.

The Minister himself mentioned several weeks ago that the first session of the Legislature he attended—which was in the early 1950s—was for a period of five weeks, and only a few years ago it was quite usual for the session to be over by Easter time. This year, it appears the House may be in session for something like seven months.

The other significant points, of course, are the complexity of government, with the extremely involved legislation and the magnitude of the Budget. Both of these items by their very nature, make heavier demands on the members. Further, the involvement of the people in this province with government is now greater than at any time in our history, and will continue to grow, due to advancing social legislation, welfare, licensing, permits, and so on. There is probably not a member here who is not continually confronted with a backlog of requests by constituents for a multitude of different things.

Mr. Chairman, I seriously question whether there is a member of this Legislature who does not feel that, due to the heavier demands occurring, and the requirements for higher efficiencies, that the facilities and amenities for members should not be very substantially upgraded. I would even go further and suggest it will not be possible to maintain the quality of the members and the quality of service to constituents and the province if they are not upgraded, in the light of the very substantial increase in the length of sessions and the greater complexity and involvement of this legislation.

It is fundamental, Mr. Chairman, that the quality of the members of this Legislature must be maintained, since neither this government, nor any other democratic government, can possibly continue to bring in progressive and much-needed legislation without the constructive criticism and new ideas of a resourceful, capable Opposition.

The next point, Mr. Chairman, I would like to mention, is the extent of the information provided for members and the different formats in which it is provided.

The public accounts of the province is an excellent publication and gives a good deal of very exact information as to whom moneys were paid and, in many cases, for what. I think it would be possible, with the accounts and the other information available, to trace various projects and items through and arrive at a sensible evaluation. Unfortunately, the public accounts book presently available is dated March, 1967, and we are now dealing with estimates to March, 1969.

The annual report of The Department of Public Works gives a good insight into the various types of projects the department is handling and is surely an excellent book for quickly getting acquainted with the department. However, it is not possible—in any way I have yet found—to use the information in a comparative way in order to carefully assess the operation of the department.

The third publication available on the department is their blue book on capital works, which outlines in the 1967-1968 issue, the work completed, work under construction, work approved for construction, work approved for working drawings, and work approved for preliminary plans. The format and information in the 1967-1968 blue book is much better than in previous years, since the previous ones did not show anything more than the names of the projects and what departments they were for. This 1967-1968 one showed, not only the projects and the departments they were for, but also the cost if completed, or if not, the estimated amount which would be spent on it in the ensuing year.

The new 1968-1969 blue book on capital works is, in some respects, a further improvement over last year's, in that for projects under construction the report shows the estimated cost, in most cases the contract price, and also the amount included in this year's budget for each project. However, the section "approved for construction" has been eliminated, and the other two sections, "approved for working drawings" and "approved for preliminary plans" do not show much more than the names of the projects. I wonder, Mr. Chairman, if these changes mean that the government does not have a planned building programme—that they do not in fact know where they are going with the building programme?

In any case, so far as the blue book on capital works is a useful document, it could be of real value with a few improvements. The book would be far more useful if the estimated or actual costs, the gross number of square and cubic feet, the land cost, and the estimated or actual costs for services and work external to the building were all shown. With this information it would be possible, as the record continued to grow through the years, to have available a clear picture of building costs and data, all of which would be invaluable for projections of requirements, and for ensuring that the projects were in the realm of reasonableness.

The fourth and last source of information on the department is, of course, the estimates with which we are now dealing. As estimates they are useful and indicate what the Minister and his department believe the needs will be, for the ensuing year, to fulfill their responsibilities. I would believe they are based on an accurate and honest approach, from what I know of the Minister.

From these four sources of information—the public accounts, the report of the department, the blue book of the department, and the estimates—it is most difficult to get a good measure of the department. Exactly what the money is being spent for and what the people of Ontario are getting for it is very obscure. The result of this lack of co-ordinated information can only result in, either a lack of interest, or a multitude of unnecessary questions, and a lack of good constructive criticism which might be helpful to the Minister and his department.

At the rate that the expenditures of the department have been growing in the past few years, I should think, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister would do all he can to promote good, constructive criticism in the Legislature. With regard to the operation of the department, Mr. Chairman, in talks with different members, and also reading past debates on the estimates of the department, I find that many people have different ideas on how the department should be run, and what it should be doing. Not too many seem to have an accurate and detailed knowledge of its operation, or the principles programmes are based on.

Some think that the government should be renting office space from the lowest bidder, while others think that the government should build all the space required, since space is usually rented, they say, from favourite sons, and at premium rates.

Still others favour a substantial provincial building in each municipality, housing all the various branches of the provincial government. A few others believe that it should not be firm, but that provincial buildings, office space, hospitals, reformatories, and so on, should be programmed for depressed areas, that is use building construction to control the economic level.

The last thought that I hear on this matter is that there should be less offices in Toronto and more in outlying municipalities.

After long and hard thought on these approaches, I am convinced that any one approach will not fit all needs, but that different ones are needed for different situations. I am also aware that the public works is looked upon as a service department for the other departments, and as such has little to say about phasing the building construction to alleviate economic depression.

The resulting social adversities if I may quote from the Minister's statement last year, and I quote from page 3197 of Hansard of May 9, 1967:

> Actually we do not set priorities from our own department. Each department brings forth their own priorities, what they consider their top priority in a building, and this in turn is assessed by The Provincial Treasurer's Department. So we, in no way set the priorities in the department, but only after it has been considered by the government as to which building should be gone ahead with.

There is no evidence to indicate any consideration is given by this government to phasing construction to assist the economic position of an area. Unquestionably the government has reasons for not phasing construction, to some extent, to the economic requirements, but surely it is a subject worthy of debate, since the federal Liberal government has for years been successfully using their Public Works Department to help maintain a suitable level of economic activity across Canada.

I might say that the value of the work is probably secondary, since by far the major benefit is the activity of the private sector of the economy, due to the profits generated by the planned government projects.

At the present time there is evidence of recession in the building industry. Unquestionably, the recession was, to some extent, quite necessary and planned to bring competition back into full play, and to upgrade efficiencies. However, as I say, there is real evidence of a recession occurring in the building industry. Already in many areas, percentage markups have fallen. Some contractors are taking jobs below their estimated cost in order to hold their organizations together.

With this situation occurring, I seriously wonder about the project that this government has shelved, and whether or not it has firm plans to phase them back in? Whether the phasing-in relates to their needs as the regulators of this province, or to the economic needs of the province and its people? Maybe, Mr. Chairman, we can pursue this matter a little further in the question period.

Just one further subject remains. On May 27, 1968, we heard the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) outline a proposal for bringing together a committee to study the national building code or a modified form of it, building materials and others, with a view to making the national building code, or a modified form of it, mandatory in all municipalities in Ontario.

This proposed study of building codes and materials has resulted, I believe, from the federally-sponsored programme of building equipment, accessories, and materials, better know in its abbreviated form as the BEAM programme, which has the prime objective of increasing production and efficiency in the building industry by five different approaches, which are as follows, in brief form:

Number one: By the establishment of a better system of distribution of literature and information. Presently in the building industry, the information on products and materials is provided in hundreds of different ways. But a suitable category system for the ready location of information on specific items is non-existent. All the designers and builders continually come face to face with the frustration and time-consuming process of locating precise information on products.

Number two: By the adoption of modular co-ordination in building materials. Never before has there been a concerted effort to get manufacturers to supply building materials with dimensions of the same multiple. Different brick manufacturers have standardized on different normal dimensions, and concrete block makers are on a different standard, and so it goes on, with window manufacturers, door and frame manufacturers, and partition manufacturers, and so on through the industry.

Commencing January or February of 1969, the federal Department of Public Works is going to insist that their buildings are fabricated from modular sized components, in the hope that this will give enough incentive to bring order to the chaotic conditions existing.

Number three: By encouraging greater industrialization of the building process, that is more mechanization, mass production, and more organization, and in general, more real speed up to the building process.

Number four: By encouraging improvement in manufacture and assembly of materials. As many in the Legislature are probably aware, Mr. Chairman, many building projects fall far short of desired qualities, and the manufacturing process of many approaches the custom method of fabrication and production as opposed to the automatic, or semi-automatic production line basis. A partial answer to this problem is the fabrication of systems.

Number five: Some approaches to try to get uniform codes and regulations adopted for building, safety, heating, plumbing, electrical processes. This federal programme, Mr. Chairman, on building equipment, accessories and materials, known as BEAM, while being promoted by the federal Department of Industry, is, in fact, fully endorsed, adopted, and being implemented by the federal Department of Public Works. They are the ones who have recognized a great necessity for increased efficiency in the building industry.

If we are to meet the challenge of our population growth over the next 25 years, they are the ones who are giving the building industry the incentive to move in a more efficient direction.

Mr. Chairman, when the Minister of Municipal Affairs announced on May 27, 1968, that he was going to appoint a committee to study building codes, regulations and building materials, I found it difficult to comprehend why a department that normally concerns itself with the regulation of municipalities and would undertake such a study when The Department of Public Works under this Minister has probably the most capable and closely knit group of professional specialists in the province on codes, regulations, and building materials. There is quite adequately demonstrated in the provincial buildings we see around this city, and this same group of professional specialists is daily dealing with the other top specialists in this province.

The BEAM programme is a worthy one, Mr. Chairman, and it is quite necessary that its objective be reached if building construction is to keep up with population growth and the Treasury is not to be overloaded in the process. The extra weight of the provincial Department of Public Works, spending this year, along about $50 million on building construction and services, could have a very substantial effect on the rate at which the objectives of the BEAM programme is reached.

With respect, Mr. Chairman, I recommend the BEAM programme to the Minister, and I hope as the days go by that he will get his department into it.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the hon. member from Ottawa Centre for his remarks. He certainly has found more to say about this department than I think I can find myself at this particular time.

Before I continue, Mr. Chairman, I would like to pose two questions to the Minister, and I would like him to take note and give me an answer at the appropriate time later on in the estimates. I attended the annual warden's banquet, for Wentworth county last year, prior to the last election, and the hon. Minister was in attendance at the head table. He had the honour of introducing the guest speaker, who was the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch). The hon. Minister made one remark—and I would like to know just what he meant by it. He informed the group that he wanted to dispel any idea that there would be a cut-back or an unusual delay in the construction of the Wentworth county detention centre. I would like him to explain the validity of the other statement he made when, introducing the hon. Provincial Secretary, he introduced him as the next Prime Minister of the province of Ontario. Those two questions I would like him to answer later on.

Now, Mr. Chairman in making my opening remarks regarding the estimate of The Department of Public Works, I do not intend to be very long. There are two reasons. One is to co-operate in winding up this long drawn out session with reasonable dispatch, and secondly and in the main, because there seems to be very little area for direct criticism of the Minister of Public Works in his supervision of the carrying of the construction and maintenance of public provincial buildings. I adopt this attitude, Mr. Chairman, because of the replies from, and the position taken by, the Minister to the many questions and suggestions made by the Opposition during the passing of the estimates for The Department of Public Works for the previous sessions of 1966 and 1967. In the Minister's own admittance, he cannot establish priorities. He cannot deal with the social and economic significance of his department. One infers that we have to confine our questions only to how the work is done and not to the why and wherefore, and the ffect it has upon the province.

Prior to 1966, Mr. Chairman, the estimates of The Department of Public Works were passed through this House in short order, in contrast to most all other departments with questions mainly in the direction of the cost, and the timing and the political implications of projects and whereabouts they were going to be built and this sort of thing, rather than in general as well as specific consideration of the significance of the social and economic effects of the human resources of this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, because of the apparent breezy and lethargic passing of the estimates in previous years, the then member for Woodbine, Ken Bryden, took upon himself during the estimates in April, 1966, to inform this House as to what we in the New Democratic Party would expect the function of The Department of Public Works to be. I suggest, Mr. Chairman that the almost 1.5 hours of criticism and suggestions at that time are just as valid today, and if members want to bring themselves up to date, I just refer them to Hansard No. 77 on page 2348, 1966.

The member for Woodbine at that time suggested that the hon. Minister of Public Works, as a Minister of the Crown, had a a responsibility to report to the House on government policy with respect to public works, decisions of the Cabinet and the Treasury on long-term planning, on priorities, on location, and so on, so that the direction of the expenditures could be made to effect our economy in the best possible way. All we seem to have in this regard is the announcement a few months ago from the Provincial Treasurer, of the postponement of five building projects with an estimated cost of $39 million, a cut-back in spending for the 1968-69 fiscal year of about $12 million, and a further deferment of 20 projects with a cost of about $4.5 million.

I will ask the Minister to elaborate somewhat on those other 20 projects. But in light of this we find in the estimates—in all these lengthy pages explaining the reasons for the cut-back—we find that we have increased the total by $14,180,000. The ordinary expenditure is up $11,156,000, and the capital up $3,024,000. While introducing his estimates for 1966-1967, the Minister stated his concern at the increased building costs being 20-30 per cent higher than they were in 1964, and that he expected a further increase of some 10 per cent in the coming year. At that time, in the Minister's words, we were experiencing unparalleled prosperity and full employment. The Minister stated that this was reflected in the number of bids placed on the projects saying that in previous years the department would receive from eight to 20 bids per project. But in 1964, on five tender calls they had no bids whatsoever. On 262 tender calls in the same year, on 40 per cent of them, there was only one bid. This seemed to bother the Minister because he said, "We are keeping a very close eye on the situation to see how it develops." I hope he will explain just exactly what he meant and what his concern was at that particular time.

Now if I remember correctly the Opposition, at that time, urged the government to cut back on these non-essential projects. This policy, in keeping with what the Minister said, would tend to take the pressure off the private sector in the area of cost, the availability of materials and construction labour. At the present time in Ontario we are experiencing higher unemployment rates than in many years, an increase from 3.4 per cent in February, to 3.8 per cent in March and the trend is continuing. In Hamilton about 30 per cent of the 6,000 organized construction tradesmen are without work—about 1,800.

A story in the Globe and Mail of March 26, 1968, says:

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY FORESEES CUTBACK; ALLIED PROFESSIONS WILL WAIT ON PRIME MINISTER

One of the first delegations Canada's new Prime Minister will find in his waiting room will be from the construction industry. The leaders are worried about the danger of severe cut-backs and increased unemployment they see in about six to 12 months.

Now Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote from a statement by Mr. William A. Purdy, the president of the Canadian construction association, on behalf of the organization of architects and engineers. This was used by the Hamilton building trades council to express to myself and others their concern about the unemployment situation in the construction industry, and I quote:

An emergency situation is facing the construction industry. Architects are reporting layoffs of more than one-third of their salaried staffs while the engineering professions are similarly hit. The construction industry already working far below capacity will bear the brunt in about six months, with a direct effect on the construction labour force.

A lag factor is common in the construction industry because of the length of time required to design even the smallest of projects.

The situation is compounded for larger projects. The effect of halting the design and planning process will have a disastrous impact on the construction industry for some months hence.

Further Mr. Chairman, I obtained from The Department of Manpower and Immigration, the unemployment figures in the construction trade for 1967 and 1968, and the note was that these enclosed figures do not necessarily represent total unemployment figures in the construction industry. They were assembled as a means of applying them to the need for winter works programmes and the seasonal employment. But it shows some figures and it should draw our concern to the need for emphasis on construction in this province.

If we take September, 1967, the structural steel workers, their figures show 557 unemployed; and in April of this year, 624. In sheet metal and boiler making, 520 last year in September—that is the declining month—and they were 624 in April of this year, when it should be increasing. In the electrical trade, 1,231 in September last year; 1,986 in April of this year. Welders, last year, 2,346. There has been a slight improvement in that area, it was only 298 in April of this year. But, in the painters, there is an increase from 439 to 983 in April of this year. Plasterers are up over 200. Cement finishers—108 registered last September; 353 registered in April of this year. Equipment operators—587 registered in September, 1967 and there were 1,866 registered in April of this year.

Again, with carpenters—1,654 last September; 3,226 registered in April of this year. Masons, who are up 100 per cent—448 to 850. Plumbers and steamfitters—977 in September of 1967; 1,081 registered now. So it does show that there is room for concern.

Of importance also is what is happening in Ontario in regards to the provinces—to Canada as a whole in regards to the construction industry and its employment levels.

I have here the business trends article from the Financial Times of Canada, July 1, 1968. It shows on a chart the construction contract awards from January to June 1967 and in 1968. We see in residential there is an increase of 18.9 per cent. In business, an increase of 14.8 per cent. Institutional, an increase of 16.1 per cent. Industrial, a decrease of 11.3 per cent. In engineering, an increase of 4.4 per cent. For an average total increase of 10.7 per cent across Canada. But that only gives the total of construction investment of $2,586,200,000 in 1968 and it is only up slightly from 1967, very slightly, across Canada.

The important thing is that on a provincial, or area basis rather, the Atlantic provinces, increase is 57.9; Quebec, 22.3; prairie provinces, 6.4; British Columbia, 38.6.

This all sounds very good and it should make us feel good on a national basis. But the disturbing thing is that out of that total of $2,586.2 million of investment in construction contract awards, Ontario accounts for $1,113.6 million of that total. It shows that Ontario has decreased the contract awards up to June of this year by 3.1 per cent and it is worth considering by this government, in regards to their construction programmes in this province.

In face of these forecast warnings of unemployment for thousands of Ontario construction workers, the hon. Provincial Treasurer with the support of his colleague, the Minister of Public Works, has announced the postponement of five major building projects scheduled to start this year.

This is simply ridiculous, Mr. Chairman. Penny wise and pound foolish, to be sure. Cut-backs in such needed areas as the $7 million for Osgoode Hall in Toronto—and I understand this has been needed for many years—delay in the construction of the detention centres across the province, is unexplainable, in face of the need to replace the obsolete and unfit jails which still exist.

The $3.5 million second stage of the Ontario Hospital development at Penetanguishene—and I must say, Mr. Chairman, to stall the development of a badly-needed mental hospital facility in this province is nothing less than stupidity.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer expressed his pleasure that several municipalities had stabilized their capital expenditures programmes and it is a safe bet to say, Mr. Chairman, that it is not because they wanted to. It was because they could not find the money to carry out the very much needed programmes in their particular areas. I am sure, we all agree, we wish no decline in the private sector projects that will improve the productivity of our economy such as manufacturing plants, the transit and housing.

On the other hand, if we are concerned with so-called inflationary pressures, surely there must be some way to encourage the slowdown in the construction of luxury apartment buildings, office facilities and the sky-high bank buildings and—yes, again—in over-expanding industrial facilities. Many of the industrial plants have programmes going that are over-expansion, where others cannot get off the ground.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): How would you suggest that that be done?

Mr. Gisborn: I would think there should be a greater degree of co-operation between the government and the industry as to the needs. Persuasion—I think there can be a great deal of that.

Mr. Singer: Direction?

Mr. Gisborn: I think that if the time comes, direction should be given, certainly.

Mr. Singer: Is that party policy?

Mr. Gisborn: What is wrong with that? What is wrong with direction?

I think this, Mr. Chairman, is the wrong time to be constructing government buildings for office space. We have raised our opposition to this great complex going on—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What about Trudeau? He is giving direction these days.

Mr. Gisborn: —great complex going on across road in the last couple of years.

The vacancy rate for office buildings in Toronto, in December of 1967, was 13 per cent. With funds for capital costs scarce, this work should have very low priority.

In the long run, one might have to agree it may be cheaper to build and own our own buildings, rather than rent all over the city. But the main point is, we must not, at this time, slowdown on the socio-economic project expenditures that contribute to increasing the productivity of our human resources. This is where we are making a sad mistake. We need many decent nursing homes across the province.

The Minister is well aware of the situation in Hamilton as I related it to this House early in the session. The health officials in Hamilton reported that the nursing homes were in intolerable shape and they needed renovations, new buildings, to take care of the old people in the way we wish them to be taken care of. We need facilities for the chronically ill, and the convalescent.

Surely these projects will take the burden off the high cost of active hospital beds and save a great deal of money for the government and the taxpayers. I do not think that can be denied. One only has to find the high cost of hospital care and the number of people that have to be confined in active beds to know that the sensible thing is to look at this very seriously and develop facilities to put these people into lower-cost, well-kept, and well-serviced facilities.

We need buildings to look after the mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed people. We need to provide facilities for education at all levels, and do away with the portable and make-shift classrooms that we have across the province. We need rehabilitation and training centres, so we can empty our prisons, particularly of younger persons. We need regional welfare rehabilitation centres for chronic welfare and disabled persons. This would be increasing the productivity of our human resources, and this certainly is no time to cut back.

We must continue to meet our ever-increasing need for hydro and nuclear development. I know we heard something about that during the other estimates, but it does not seem to be going ahead in a way that will keep us in tune with our industrial needs. We just have a slight power failure and are in a panic across the province.

We need to develop an integrated transportation system. Of course, to reiterate the whole need for making it feasible for industry to locate in areas other than the golden horseshoe, especially the need for more industries in the north and the eastern sections of the province, we have to develop and integrate these problems to reduce the rail costs, and the ancillary costs of getting goods from one part of the country to the other.

It seems to me we are making a very grave mistake cutting back on capital expenditures, Mr. Chairman, those that were committed by the Provincial Treasurer.

Total construction investment for 1967, and this is from The Department of Trade and Industry in Canada, the total construction investment for 1967 was $3,160 million. Their projected outlook for 1968 is $3,389 million. This is not enough if we are going to find the needed jobs in this province.

The departments of the Ontario government and institutional services investment take about 30 per cent of that total, so I think that any reduction here, we would have to agree, would hurt the overall picture of declining construction investment of the previous years. Now is the time for the government to move in and take up the slack in regard to construction and building in this province so that we can provide for the many needed institutional facilities for the human betterment of the people of this province.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in conclusion, there is just one other item I would like to mention, and that is the miserable and despicable attention as far as salaries go that the cleaners in this building receive. Our members raised this in the last two years, and after strong opposition to the treatment they were getting, we find that in January, 1967, they were given an increase from $2,400 a year to $2,425 a year, at the rate of $1.69 per hour. At that time, based on that rate, they got an increase of 10 cents per shift.

Now, there are two things. The Minister at that time answered and said this really comes under the area of the civil service association because they do the negotiating on a cyclical basis and it would be up for revision as their turn came. I think the Minister has some responsibility in this regard.

He did say that we were in keeping with the average in the industry and we do not want to go higher than what is being paid for this particular kind of work. But $1.69 an hour! They only work five hours, I understand, in this building, the female clean-up at least, and that gives them $8.45 a shift.

Certainly it would be realistic to give them $2 an hour—give them a ten dollar bill for coming down here. They have to pay the same kind of transportation, they have the same costs as any one else going from home to their job and back, but to bring them down here for a miserable sum of $8.45 is just ridiculous.

Then how about our programme of equal treatment—how about the discriminatory part of this as far as male and female are concerned, both doing what I understand are relatively equal work, both use mops? I watched them, and their work is equal, but there is a difference of $2.06 an hour for male cleaners, and $1.69 for the female cleaners. What is the explanation? What is your attitude towards our approach to equal pay for equal work?

I ask the Minister to use his influence with the civil service negotiating team to take a more realistic look at this—particularly because of the fact they only work a half shift, as you might call it. Then even with the miserable size of the rate they are getting, I understand at this time of the year—we are now into July, the middle of the year—they have not received any increase for this year. I understand they are still in negotiations and it will be paid, I take it, back to January 1, 1968.

I am not sure whether this applies to them or not. With the approach of this government to their employees I doubt if they will get full retroactivity, but why do they have to wait a half a year to get negotiations cleared up for a group in the lowest wage brackets? I would ask the Minister to use his influence with the department and get that speeded up and try to get them a little more money.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister want to reply to any of the comments before we deal with the vote?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, briefly. I would like to reply to the member for Ottawa Centre. It is rather interesting to hear an engineer's approach to The Department of Public Works estimates for a change. Certainly I do not have too much to reply to him at this time, but I mentioned in my own remarks that we are making rather extensive changes as far as the members' space is concerned. It is a whole new ballgame around these buildings this last two or three years, and decisions that were made seven or eight years ago, as far as the members' facilities are concerned, are now inadequate.

I am the first one to admit it. But with a large part of the Attorney General's branch moving out of here in the not too distant future, it will give us a little more flexibility.

He complains a bit about the annual report in the blue book and our estimates of this year and the very calendar itself. We just cannot do it any other way. You cannot close the books until a month or so after the end of the one year, and the blue book is as accurate as we can get it for the coming year. Actually we are three or four months into the new year already, so I do not know of any way that we can improve on that.

He also mentioned the BEAM programme that is being directed or getting encouragement from the federal government. We are quite interested in it ourselves. This has been very bothersome, as he mentioned. Different people have different standards for bricks and cement blocks. It makes it difficult in the planning of the building. Once you start off with certain measurements, you have to continue that through the building, you cannot change halfway through, and this four-inch module they are coming to will be good.

But it is like any other programme, you just cannot wave the magic wand and have it changed or you would put a great many of the manufacturers in difficulty. Even many of the carpenters and that type of person who are working as a one or two-man organization and would find it difficult to change if they had been dealing in certain measurements over the years.

So we are in complete agreement that there should be some changes here, but we also say that it should be done very gradually. We are designing one building—I am not sure which one it is on this four-inch module to get experience for our own staff on it and just to find out how it works out. I think it is good.

It was mentioned also about standardizing the building code and why it should be in The Department of Municipal Affairs. It is a combination of the two. I know we are very interested, but The Department of Municipal Affairs is dealing with 900-odd municipalities and are looking over the shoulders as far as their bylaws are concerned, and the building bylaws are all controlled.

This is part of the problem. Many of them have different applications of their local building bylaws. I hesitate to use a small community, but it is difficult to enforce a building bylaw that is standard in the city of Toronto. I will use the community where I live as an example. I would not want to have the same standard of building bylaw there as we have in the city of Toronto; it is just an impossible situation. But certainly it is an area where there could be a great deal of improvement.

Getting around to the member for Hamilton East, I did mention something about the detention centre at the wardens' banquet. I have not changed my opinion, that detention centre will be gone ahead with and we have purchased a site or taken over negotiations. Just when it will be done is not too definite at this point, but certainly it will be gone ahead with. I was a bit under the weather at the time some of these announcements were made on the cut-backs and maybe was not involved as much as I would like to have been at that time.

There was considerable mention about cut-back in construction projects and about the industry as a whole being slowed up a little. I think he is quite right in this; maybe not quite as extensive as he indicated, because he certainly covered the waterfront from the Atlantic provinces to British Columbia. Certainly I do not believe the construction industry itself expected to keep up the pace that was going on in 1965-1966 and 1967 with the centennial projects in practically every municipality in the province and the Dominion of Canada.

It is serious in some areas but certainly the government, as a whole, is keeping all these things in mind. The cut-backs that were made as far as certain of our projects will be kept in mind. But the very shortage of money has dictated that some of our projects should be slowed up; they have not been cut out, but they are on that shelf of public works that is always talked about. I might say that backlog or shelf of public works is in better shape today than it has been at any time since I have been Minister.

We have always discussed this backlog or shelf of public works and actually the cupboard was bare as far as I was concerned for many years, but we do have about $200 million worth of projects that either could be tendered at any time or any time within the next year if the times indicate that they should be gone ahead with.

I notice the member for Hamilton East is complaining about the cut-backs on one hand and yet, at the same time—with our Queen's Park extension—is indicating that we should not be going ahead with these large office projects at this time. So it is just a little hard to know where he stands on these matters.

Mr. Gisborn: The hon. Minister does not get the point of priorities we are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, it is now just about ten years ago since the planning started on the Queen's Park extension. I often think sitting here—and I think most people would agree, I do more listening than talking—if by chance at any time the other parties came into power, they would certainly have a Minister of hindsight in their government. Because this is their most important area; I find they have opinions on their hindsight.

The member was mentioning about salaries and certainly, as he mentioned, this comes under the civil service. Those negotiations are carried on at that level.

I do not know that I have anything else to add. The member for Hamilton East did cover many areas that are really not The Department of Public Works' responsibility, and I would like to indicate where they should go, but certainly many of his comments I do not believe should have been directed at myself particularly as Minister.

Mr. Gisborn: That is what I mean; we do not even need a Minister.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I will not argue that point.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, before we get to the vote, I would like through you to ask the Minister two or three things with regard to the new projects in particular and relate it to the blue book. There are two or three things I would like to ask him on this.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the member would mind keeping them until the capital votes for the new projects are listed in detail? Or is there some particular reason he would like to bring them up at this time?

Mr. MacKenzie: No, the only reason, Mr. Chairman, would be that it might be helpful to understand how to approach it when we do get to the capital works, but if you would sooner wait, all right.

Mr. Chairman: If the member just wants some clarification, perhaps he could direct a question, but it would be proper and appropriate to discuss any specific projects under the proper capital vote relative to it.

Mr. MacKenzie: Then I wanted to pursue a little bit further the BEAM programme with regard to this department and The Department of Municipal Affairs. Where would be the right point to—

Mr. Chairman: What programme was that?

Mr. MacKenzie: The BEAM programme as it relates to this department and The Department of Municipal Affairs. I wanted to discuss that as a point I brought up myself in my own—

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the Minister would suggest where this programme should be discussed?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Now.

Mr. Chairman: The member can discuss the BEAM programme at the present time, under vote 1801.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I brought up the matter of the BEAM programme and talked about municipal affairs and the part it is playing in this business of building codes, standardized building codes, building materials and this sort of thing. The Minister did mention it, and I listened carefully I thought, but I still do not think I got an answer on it. I still do not understand why, when we start talking about building codes and building materials, a Minister who deals with the regulation of municipalities would take this under his wing when here we have a department and a Minister. There is no question about it, there just is not a more capable professional group in the province. There is no group in the province who knows more about building codes, building materials and that sort of thing, and yet we see that, sir, we have this big professional group drawing thousands and thousands of dollars in salaries, and dealing every day with the top professional men in the province on building materials and design and building codes. Why, when we have this type of department, does this go to municipal affairs? The Minister, who has no choice, has to go out and get somebody off the street to start such a department. Now, Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the Minister and I am not satisfied that he gave us an answer to this.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, I would say there are two different sections, I mean as far as the BEAM section—as we determined this four-inch module. Certainly we are taking the lead there but, as I mentioned earlier, we are not going to bring this in and say it has to be effective the first of September of 1968. This is not just the practical thing to do, and I think you as an engineer would understand that maybe as well as anyone. As far as the building codes are concerned, the Department of Municipal Affairs is more or less the father of all the municipalities and approve or disapprove of local bylaws. We are assisting—they did not have to go out on the street to look up a few people to help them out—and giving them all the assistance we can as far as assistance on the building code is concerned. But it needs someone to direct it and the Minister of Municipal Affairs is much better acquainted with all the local municipalities than our department.

Mr. MacKenzie: I understand, then, Mr. Chairman, the the Minister of Municipal Affairs is more or less guiding this national building code and these sort of things, and also building materials. But do I understand also that it is actually The Department of Public Works personnel who are involved in the assessment of this and who are basically the group? I would like to think that is the case; I would like to think that the Prime Minister did not tell a Minister who knows nothing about building and building codes, to do this.

Hon. Mr. Connell: We have professional help and we are giving that as needed, as I understand it. I can tell you no more than that.

Mr. MacKenzie: Just one more thing, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the capital works project which was further approved for sketch plans and estimates that were on our desks this morning. This listing—I would assume, Mr. Chairman, that those should fall into the last section of the blue book approved for preliminary plans.

Hon. Mr. Connell: As I mentioned, this book was produced—well not on February 28, but we have to have a date to work from. And these projects have since been—the Treasury board has given us the privilege of going ahead, as I emphasize again, with the preparation of sketch plans and estimates, so it is not necessarily saying these buildings will be gone ahead with, but it helps; it is a little better system that we think we have going, and it keeps Treasury board better informed in establishing our priorities.

Mr. MacKenzie: Well, then, Mr. Chairman, if I understand the Minister correctly, what he is saying is that this list we got this morning should go into the back part of the blue book. He says that in the beginning here, that they are undertaking the preparation of sketch plans and cost estimates. I understand from this then, that cost estimates must occur in this phase. Then, of course, I would ask why, in the next section following where we approve our working drawings in our blue book, do we not have the estimated cost of the projects listed in the blue book. Now I do not want to pursue this, Mr. Chairman, if you think it should come under capital works, but because the list was put on our desks this morning, it might be a good place.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I am not sure that I follow the hon. member on his last statement but, as I say again—and I have learned this lesson rather bitterly over the years, of announcing a project and what it is going to cost; at least someone puts a cost figure on it over the years and we usually get stuck with it. I think you are all very familiar with this, that somebody sticks a figure on it and we seem to get stuck with it. And this is one of the areas that we are trying not only to improve for ourselves but for Treasury board and the government as a whole, and we are trying to come up with more accurate estimates rather than having someone in some other department tell us what a building is going to cost just because someone has thought about the building.

Mr. MacKenzie: I appreciate what the Minister is saying, Mr. Chairman, but the point I really make is this—we will approach it in another way, and maybe I will get the point across. We have under the section under construction, projects where the contract has actually been let, and under this section we are given the estimated cost. Now, what value is the estimated cost at that point when the contractor is already let, except if you want to say that somebody was wrong, their estimate was wrong by 10 or 20 per cent? An estimate is of no value once a contract is let, other than to prove that somebody is wrong: It is of no value. But when you start talking about capital projects, and where you are going, and how much you are going to have higher up, or what your proposed plans are, it seems to me, that you should have an estimated cost some place under "approved for working drawings". If you have "approved for working drawings", surely by that point you must have some idea of what the capital cost is for the project. Surely we do not have to wait until the contract is let and then we are told what the estimate is.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, for our own benefit we want to know the estimated cost. We put this in here, but the contract price is not—you cannot compare that to the estimated cost because there are usually furnishings to go into that; we are talking about the contract price here as the contract for the building itself; it does not include the architect's fees, it does not include the furnishings; it maybe does not include the cost of the land, and this type of thing. But the estimated project cost there, I think in most cases, includes all these others. It is there for your information. They have been asking over the years to get as much information in here as we can and this is our method of doing it.

Mr. L. A. Braithwaite (Etobicoke): I would just follow up, Mr. Chairman, on the list that we have here on our desks this morning. There are just a couple of short questions I would like to ask the Minister, through you. I see under The Department of the Attorney General that we have a court house and registry office for London, and we have a magistrates' court for Toronto. I wonder if the Minister could tell us—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Hon. Mr. Connell: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to question the member because he, like myself, is not on his feet too much. But the capital does come at the end, and I would think we should start to get back—

Mr. Braithwaite: Well I just—

Hon. Mr. Connell: I know, but these are the two preliminary speakers and I think we have got to get back to the estimates as they are presented.

Mr Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would tell us what are the other 20 projects that have been postponed, as mentioned in the announcement, rather than the five that were mentioned.

Mr. Chairman: When we are dealing with the capital vote surely we can deal with the projects or with the appropriate section, which is the capital votes for real estate branch; or whatever public building there might be.

Is that correct, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Connell: It is correct. I think I could give him the five main buildings at this time. One is our office extension, as I mentioned; the other covers renovations to Osgoode Hall and the Penetang hospital; there are five main ones and I can get the list of the other many smaller projects. I will get that list by the time we get to the capital projects.

On vote 1801:

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I am intrigued by the final section of 1801, the planning branch, salaries, $18,000; travelling expenses, $500; maintenance, $500. I wonder if the Minister would tell us what this means. It looks as though it is one person in that branch? What does it do? What does it consist of?

Hon. Mr. Connell: This is a tentative amount; we still have not got a man on staff but we keep that open for when we do get a man to take that particular position.

Mr. Young: What is the position; what does it call for?

Hon. Mr. Connell: It is the director of the planning branch, one of the new branches that we have established.

Mr. Young: Is it a co-ordinated function, then?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Basically yes.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1801—the member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: I want to explore briefly the role of The Public Works Department from the policy level and just what the limitations of the Minister are.

I was rather curious about one of his own interjections which rather undercuts the basic argument that he has been making. His argument has been that he, in effect, is the expediter, he is the service department, he does what the Cabinet decides. If there are buildings to be built, he builds them; if there is land to be bought he buys it; if there are expropriations to be done, he does the expropriation. But when he referred to his comments at the wardens' banquet, he said that unfortunately he was a little under the weather at that time or he might have had something to say about the priorities. In other words he could, and as the man involved—

Hon. Mr. Connell: I was referring to the cut-backs at that time.

Mr. MacDonald: I agree, the cut-backs or priorities—take both of them in the same point because they are part of the same parcel. I do not think The Department of Public Works can be excluded from this overall decision. I am curious, therefore, as to what is the government policy involving that of Public Works on what has been done for this year. Unfortunately, I have had to slip out of the House briefly and conceivably

I have missed an answer to this, but I would refer it to this business of the much-heralded cut-backs which the Provincial Treasurer unveiled, of the $39 million in major projects and another $4.5 million.

On the straight policy level it was interesting, when you examined it, to discover that there was only $12 million going to be spent this year—I am sorry, $12 million to be saved in expenditures this year, of the $42 million or $43 million odd involved in the project. Now, even the government itself—for example, the Provincial Treasurer at the conference of Provincial Treasurers in Ottawa last November—put in a cautionary word on our actions to cope with inflation. He said, in effect: "It is possible as we move into 1968 that there will be a slow down in the economy and we will have to reverse our whole approach and give the economy a bit of a pick-up.

By the Minister's own testimony, there are serious situations across this province in terms of unemployment and, as my colleague has put it, in terms of far from a full exploitation of use of our human resources.

My question to the Minister—or to the Prime Minister, who is with us at the moment—is, has the government changed its mind? Is the evidence of wide-spread unemployment in certain areas and not a full use of the construction industry, is this not sufficient to reverse the policy as the Provincial Treasurer has indicated at the federal-provincial conferences last November, so that you can pick up the slack, and not only pick up the slack, but get into meeting desperate needs that have been postponed because of inflationary problems and the difficulty in getting the necessary capital?

What is the government's position at the moment? Are we right back where the Provincial Treasurer was in January, in a highly inflationary period and we must pursue our course, or has he reconsidered in terms of his own second thoughts?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I would suggest that he ask the Provincial Treasurer what he is thinking. I cannot anticipate what the Provincial Treasurer is thinking as of this morning, but we are here presenting these estimates as they were tabled here a few months ago. I do not believe it is as serious as you would indicate that some of the construction industry is slack. We do notice much better prices coming in on anything that we have tendered recently. The contractors seem to be getting their pencils a little sharper. But you have asked me so many questions I am not sure which one you wanted answered.

Mr. MacDonald: All of them.

Hon. Mr. Connell: You mentioned about it only amounting to $12 million of this year's. Well, that is $12 million less that we need this year, and if you start building a $24 million project, such as our second phase of the Queen's Park set up, this covers about a three or four year period. If you start a project like this it keeps our budget pretty well used up over a second or third or four year period.

Certainly today, as these estimates are presented, if the Provincial Treasurer has any different opinion or the economics people, we are not aware of it. This was a decision that was made by the government a few months ago to cut back a number of our projects. We are not changing horses in mid-stream, but, as I mentioned earlier, we have about $200 million worth of works on the shelf, and if things did become serious in the opinion of the government we are ready there to bring them out.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, fair enough, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. Connell: I might say, that over the years this is something that the Opposition, and the government themselves, have always indicated; that we should have a backlog of these things at our hands. It is certainly much more valuable than deciding to build a number of projects if things happen to be tough next month or the month later. You decide to build a building, it takes two years to plan it under the most desirable conditions.

At the present, we are in a very strong position if there is any slacking off to go ahead with some other projects, but if unemployment is high in Hamilton, you do not build a building in Ottawa to help the employment out—I will use that as an example. I think some of you indicate that you should snap a building any place you get the urge. If you have a building planned for Toronto you cannot just transfer that to the city of Hamilton or Port Arthur, it is not that easy. I would not consider myself a responsible Minister if we just put a building up for the sake of putting a building up. We put it up where we feel it is needed.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, the Minister is obviously on fairly sound ground when he says: Do you ask the questions of him, ask the questions of the Provincial Treasurer. What I was trying to find out is whether word has trickled through to him indicating that there may have been some revision of approach by the government. There might have been, for example, a pick-up on those 20 projects of only $4.5 million, because, quite frankly, those 20 projects quite likely are pretty vital in terms of a lot of little communities across the province of Ontario.

The other point that I think should not be ignored is that it is not simply a case of cutting off the expenditures for this year, you have already expended a fair amount. It is interesting, in the Provincial Treasurer's statement in which he noted that working drawings for these projects either have been completed or are in an advanced stage. Somewhere else in this statement, I just cannot spot it for the moment. They indicate that you, in effect, have bought the steel. I think it is for the second Queen's Park complex here, and you have stored it.

Well this is not an economic way of approach. You buy the steel and you store it. You have capital invested and sitting there, in effect, idle because you have decided to extend the timetable of your programme. There is an economic loss in that, I think the government should take a look at.

There is a final point on the policy level—I do not want to take a great length of time on it, but the hon. member for Downsview interjected and said, "Were we, in effect, suggesting some direction in terms of overall planning?" I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that governments have to quit their hypocritical approach. Either they are going to tackle seriously, the problem of inflation and plan the use of our resources, or else they are going to quit this argument that this involves direction—and presumably, they are opposed to direction.

For example, surely it is plain common sense, that in the over all direction of an economy you should look at not only the public sector, but also the private sector. If you have to cut back because of shortage of capital, because of inflationary pressures, the proposition that the public sector should be the only sector that should suffer the cut-back, and that the private sector should go on their merry way as they please, putting projects that have far less social value in the community, is not common sense.

In the over all direction of an economy, which is the responsibility of the government—increasingly governments of all complexions are accepting that responsibility—you have to take a look at the situation, and it will involve some measure of direction. Do not let us suggest, for example, from the hon. member for Downsview that that is not done. It is done in a ruthless, ham-fisted fashion.

When Mr. Sharp, as Finance Minister, suddenly cuts back on capital, what in effect he does, is to say to a lot of little people who need to build and their needs are great: "You cannot get the capital because we have frozen you out". But for the big corporation that happens to have in a sock sufficient reserves so that they can meet 50 to 75 per cent of their requirements for continued development, they can go to the bank, and with that 50 to 75 per cent, they will get the remaining amount.

So, in effect you have got direction, but it is a ham-fisted kind of direction which, in effect, gives the larger controlling interest in the private sector a completely free hand while the little people in the private sector are squeezed out by this kind of approach.

My plea is that when we get into an inflationary period, or if we get into a period in which capital shortage is such that interest rates have to be looked at, it is a legitimate proposition that the government should look at the over all needs of the economy and not just enforce all of their cut-back in the public sector. That simply means that you get less needed, lower priority building in the private sector, while desperate needs on the public sector have to sit on the shelf. The Minister says he has got $200 million on the shelf that he can move on as soon the government sees fit to revise its programme.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am interested in the hon. Minister's comment that he has $200 million worth of projects on the shelf. I wonder if he could give to the members of the House a list of these projects because that amount of money gives us a projection for the next three years, into 1972. Let us see what the priorities are, what is involved in this $200 million shelf of projects he has in the province. That is one of the points we have been trying to get across for the past five or six years. We want some idea what this government intends to do in a projected five-year programme in the province. It is not long enough when we get into the golden horseshoe or the Metro Toronto area. That kind of projection has to be made for five, 10 or 15 years but when he tells us he has $200 million worth of projects on the shelf to play around with, that would give us a projection until 1972. Tell us, what are they? Can we have a list of them so that we too could look at them and see whether they are in the direction of the priorities and the human betterment programmes we are talking about?

Hon. Mr. Connell: They are basically in the blue book—and here we are getting off this vote again—but they are basically in the blue book. The member for York North used the words "trickling down from the Provincial Treasurer". This list I put out this morning is some indication that we have not bogged down completely, that always these are new projects that have been approved in principle.

As far as the list is concerned, I have not a list but they were dealt out as the member for Hamilton East asked. If you look over that blue book a great portion of this shelf of public works is in there. It is not all ready to go but there is a great deal that would be ready within a number of weeks or months.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister with regard to his opening remarks—he intimated that Ontario would have an Ontario pavilion at the world fair in Japan in 1970. He also stated that he had engaged a firm in Japan to construct this building. Could you enlighten us, will this building compare with the Ontario pavilion that you had at Montreal last year and what it is estimated to cost? I am not objecting whatsoever, Mr. Chairman, to Ontario having a building there. I think it is a step in the right direction.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Here again, we are off this vote completely but in answer to the member's question, this building is only in the planning stages. It is estimated that it will be roughly a $2-million building. I think that is the total amount and here again, we are in an area of—

Mr. Chairman: The member for Downsview.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, on the subject of vote 1801, sub vote 4, the Minister has an item about grants in aid and remedial works —it looks like drainage and conservation work. He has not got a very large sum of money there, only $100,000, but there is an ARDA programme and there is a conservation authorities programme and so on. How many people do we have doing the same thing? If it is being done reasonably by the conservation authorities—the municipalities are doing some—if The Department of Agriculture and Food has some, why do we need this kind of thing in The Public Works Department?

Hon. Mr. Connell: We do not have as much in this area as we did a few years ago. Two or three of these areas were switched over to The Department of Municipal Affairs but we have always had the grants to municipal drainage. This is where—

Mr. Singer: No, I was not talking about that. I was talking about the $100,000.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I thought you mentioned both. The municipal drainage is for those very small projects, where maybe only one or two farms are involved—that type of thing. The others, I think, were basically—most of the money has been spent over the years up in the Essex-Kent area on small drainage projects and the government has seen fit to leave it with this department. I would not know where else it might be. Usually that money is spent with the co-operation of the federal government. We usually work it out on a 50-50 basis for most of these projects. I do not know whether you are interested in the expenditures during the last ten years or not, but $678,000 has been spent during the last ten years and—

Mr. Singer: How many years?

Hon. Mr. Connell: The last ten, I believe; so that is $67,800 a year. I think there is one project imminent in Essex, up in that general area.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, if you are doing something in the consituency of my colleagues from Essex, it is most commendable but what puzzles me is, how you fellows sort out who is responsible for what. As we go through these estimates, vote by vote, you see that each Minister seems to overlap some of the business of the other Ministers. It would seem to me that if we have a particular Minister who is responsible for conservation and that sort of thing and/or in Municipal Affairs, and Agriculture and Food gets into it through ARDA, why do we need yet another Minister and yet another group of civil servants to be concerned substantially with the same sort of thing? A little later, when we come to this legal branch of yours, I am going to make exactly the same point.

I think the government is being inefficient when they assign substantially the same kind of responsibility to three, four or five Ministers, all of whom exercise a different kind of discretion, all of whom have a different group of civil servants doing the same thing. It is bound to be inefficient, no matter how worthy the work is. As I say, for the work that you are going to do in Essex, I know that my colleague is going to say, "Good for you, it high time you did it," but it is inefficient because you have several departments dealing with exactly the same thing, and it is bound to be more expensive, it is bound ot be less useful because you split the authority.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I would like to indicate that the member for Downsview never gets out of the city of Toronto, but there are many different types of drainage. The drainage that we are referring to in this vote is involved with the shoreline or where the federal government is involved or where there has been areas of flooding, say, by extreme storms or something like this that causes flooding and damage. This is a little separate area to what some of our other drainage projects are concerned with, but usually, in anything to do with the shoreline or where shipping is involved, the federal government has been most co-operative in coming in with their 50 per cent. These projects we either approve or the federal government has come along and usually approved of their 50 per cent.

Mr. MacDonald: Is there 50 per cent included?

Hon. Mr. Connell: No.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Connell: The question I wanted to get an answer for is this: Where it is international waters that are concerned, we get help from the federal government but the work itself is administered by our own government rather than by the federal government.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the question by the hon. member for York South, and the answer from the Minister, puzzle me. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, we were discussing the vote for EMO, that it seemed a little hard to understand why, if there was a cutback in EMO, the figure in the book had gone up very substantially. And the Attorney General said, "Well, this year, I did not prepare the figures, but I am told we are doing it on a gross budgeting basis, and the figure that you see for EMO is a figure which includes the federal grant". Now, the member for York South said, "Does this $100,000 include the federal figure?" and you said "No". How are we supposed to tell who is doing gross budgeting and who is doing net budgeting and why cannot all the departments budget on one system that we can follow through? Is this a gross figure or a net figure?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I would say this is Treasury board's responsibility; we are directed by the Treasury board in setting up our estimates, and certainly this figure, as indicated here, averages $67,000 over a year. We have to estimate this figure on this type of drainage work; it is not the same as building a building where you know the square-foot cost. It is acting on drainage-type work and I think any of my rural friends would agree with me that is rather difficult to estimate these things. This $100,000 is only an estimate and there are two main projects, the one in Essex and the other one in Kent.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I cannot get an answer. The Minister is avoiding the two specific points I put. Let us deal with them one at a time.

The Minister says, and this is not dealing with the merit, I just want to figure out how the estimates are presented to us. The Minister says the $100,000 figure here will be matched approximately by the federal government, so, in fact, the projects will cost about $200,000. Am I correct in that understanding?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I told you it is only an estimate.

Mr. Singer: All right. I am not trying to pin you down to the last dollar. But whatever you have here, or whatever you are going to spend is approximately going to be matched by the federal government. That is what you said.

Hon. Mr. Connell: If they approve of it.

Mr. Singer: All right. But that is your intention. Now, let us go back to the Attorney General's (Mr. Wishart's) estimates—

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Did we not spend enough time?

Mr. Singer: Well, we did, but I am trying to figure out some consistency, or hoping that that you will bring some consistency to setting up this book, because when we got into the Attorney General's estimates and tried to figure out the size of the EMO vote of this year, compared to last year, the Attorney General said, "it looks like the figure has gone up, but in fact it has gone down. And it has gone down, even though the book says it has gone up, because we are doing a different kind of budgeting."

The Treasury Department has directed us to put in gross budgeting. So even though it says we are going to spend $1,600,000 this year as compared to $400,000 last year, we are spending less than we did last year. All right.

Now we move onto the next department and this Minister says, we are back to net budgeting. My question Mr. Chairman, is very simple. Why, if the Attorney General is told by The Treasury Department, or whoever determines the set-up for these estimates, that he has to put his figures in on a gross basis, why is the Minister putting them in on a net basis? Is it not reasonable that we can expect that when you look from one set of estimates to the other, they be set up on the same basis in the estimate book?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, let me return to the earlier point—about why we have a division of departmental responsibilities in dealing with the whole question of soil erosion and diking and things of this nature. This Minister's contention was that this dealt with international waters, which brought in the federal government. But many of our other conservation projects, which deal with the same thing—our ARDA projects—have grants from the federal government.

So, the case is not strong just because it happens to be a phase of work in which the federal government is sharing. It is being done in other departments with the federal government sharing. I do not want to belabour this point, but I think there is some merit in the suggestion—even though there may be different kinds of drainage, different kinds of erosion—that should not be divided up into a half dozen different departments so that we have pockets of it here, there and the next place.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1801 agreed to?

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): On outlets, and so forth, of waterways, I see that, as the Minister has stated, he is involved in these. But who is actually the custodian of these outlets that you share in on a number of occasions with the federal government?

We would say this is a rough creek, or something, an unnatural water course, and back from the lake for so many hundred feet. There is an outlet—who actually is responsible in the first instance, who actually has the official right to start any proceedings to remedy situations, to alleviate flooding and so forth?

What I am getting at, partly, is the point that in some of these areas where private land-owners that own adjoining property start filling in river banks and they fill in a little more, and then after a period of two years we end up having a river that was 150 feet wide only 40 feet wide. Then when a large ice-break-up in the spring comes, we have no place for the ice to go. And I am wondering just what control of these outlets we actually have?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Your original question, I believe, was who initiates the action? It is usually the local municipality involved that initiates the action. Most of this area, where it is involved with the shorelines, these things are changing year by year and I cannot name them to you offhand, but there are many areas where we have had to go back five years later, ten years later, and maybe carry out the same, almost an identical programme.

Mr. Ruston: Well, I seem to have a problem in finding out who actually is the owner of the property in these river beds. This is what I am—

Hon. Mr. Connell: I think I am correct in saying that the federal government certainly try to back off as many of these as they can with their responsibility, and yet if there is a good programme they have cooperated very well with the local municipality and ourselves in contributing to whatever is necessary.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, this item 4, purchase of lands, I wonder why the purchase of lands is under ordinary expenditure and not under capital. How much is involved in this $100,000 for the actual purchase of land?

Hon. Mr. Connell: What vote are you on?

Mr. MacKenzie: Vote 1801, item 4.

Hon. Mr. Connell: There are sometimes small pieces of property that are involved in these remedial works, and it seems to me we do have to purchase some of this land for the project.

Mr. MacKenzie: I appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, but the question was: Why is it not under capital expenditure, and how much of this $100,000 goes towards the purchase of land?

Hon. Mr. Connell: There is very little and really we have seen fit to keep the municipal drainage remedial works separate when we are dealing with the federal government. We do not feel that it goes into our capital—

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am going to persist in this. I would like to know why this department and The Attorney General's Department apparently has a different system of budgeting. Why do you do it apparently on a net figure and his department on a gross figure?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I cannot tell you anything about the Attorney General's branch and budgeting, and I do not think it refers here, but we are on gross budgeting all the way through in our department.

Mr. Singer: Well, if you are on gross budgeting then I can properly understand what you said earlier, because you said the $100,000 figure propably represents a $200,000 expenditure because another $100,000 comes from the federal government. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Connell: That is correct.

Mr. Singer: Well then, you are not on gross budgeting you are on net, because you have only got the $100,000 figure here on page 106.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): We spent only $90,000. That would be the net amount. The $100,000 would be the gross amount for the province. If it was matched by the federal government by another $100,000 that means that if this province spends $90,000 there would be $180,000 spent, that is the net budget amount. But the gross amount is $100,000 provincial and $100,000 from the federal. It would be $200,000. I think he has made himself perfectly clear.

Mr. Singer: The assist from the Minister is not very helpful at all. The obvious thing is Mr. Chairman, that it may well be—

Hon. Mr. Randall: It obviously just said what you want to know.

Mr. Singer: Whoever prepares these books and I suspect it is somebody who is hidden back in some back office—probably has not gotten around to the 20th department. The Attorney General comes first in the alphabet; maybe change that system first. But it would be helpful to us Mr. Chairman, if all the departments budgeted on the same basis, and obviously they do not.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): When are you going away for the weekend?

Mr. Singer: Oh soon!

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Maybe we had better start meeting on Sunday if we are going to continue this nit-picking.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have disturbed the Minister of Corrective Institutions or whatever he calls himself, but I would think that it is only reasonable and fair since you want to make an issue of it. Let us make and issue of it. I would think it is reasonable and fair that when we get these estimates they are all prepared on the same basis, and that if one Minister brings them in one way we can anticipate reasonably that the next Minister is going to bring them in in the same fashion. The way this is, they are designed to confuse.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I can answer Mr. Chairman. I think confusion arise in the types of programmes we have. In some programmes one is able to estimate the participation of the federal government, and then budget on a net basis. In another type of programme we make our expenditures on a gross basis and then get what we can on a sharing basis from the federal government.

For instance, I do not want to get back into the estimates of the Department of Health, but if you check there you will find that the federal government owes us on one basis some rather considerable amounts of money for hospital construction which they say they cannot pay because they have not budgeted for it. It is not in their budget. But under a cost-sharing programme, we have a claim that may be paid next year, or the year after, or the year after that. In that case, of course, our budgeting would have to be on a gross basis. You can understand, because we have to meet the expenditure from our funds and claim back what we can claim.

I have listened to this disussion, but this really is not the basis of the difference between budgeting on a net. If you have a fixed programme subject to iron-clad agreement of which there are some between ourselves and the federal government, then you know precisely what you are going to receive from the federal government. On other programmes we go ahead with our programmes—and I think this might be true of this programme here—and then we claim back, so that sum will then come into our revenue figures rather than be shown as a deduction from the amount budgeted. I think that this probably is the case as far as the Attorney General is concerned. He is budgeting gross and then what we get from the federal government is their contribution to the programme and will appear in our revenue figures. Now really this is why there can be two different ways of achieving the same result. It is simply a matter of practicality.

Mr. Singer: Well, this is the first year that I do not know that it is worth pushing this point any further. This is the first year that the Attorney General got into the system of gross budgeting, and it is the first year to my knowledge that the gross budgeting figures have been reflected, so that when you come to the total expenditures—and the total amount of the budget, the $3,734,759,000—it is really hard to determine whether that is the figure or it is not the figure.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, it really is not. We can sit here and nit-pick forever, but if you go to the Provincial Treasurer's budget statement you will find listed there from where the revenue of this government comes. That is where you will find it; it is all there.

Mr. Singer: Well, I continue to make my plea for consistency so that we can look at the figures and hopefully they will mean the same thing.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we have had a satisfactory explanation as to why this little item should be tucked in this department, when there are three or four other departments that do apparently the same kind of work. Would it not be logical where other departments have very large budgets for this kind of work, that the modest figure of $100,000 be given to them if this kind of work is important?

Vote 1801 agreed to.

On vote 1802:

Mr. Singer: No, Mr. Chairman, the echo group is not going to push these estimates through before we have a reasonable opportunity—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I am certain you are happy.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1802?

Mr. Singer: Yes, on vote 1802, and with due apology to the noisy member for London South (Mr. White), I am glad to see he is back again. What were we opening in eastern Ontario yesterday?

An hon. member: Oh, he was meeting the presidential candidate.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Oh, yes, the Thousand Islands bridge.

Mr. Singer: On 1802, the real estate branch. We are all very humorous today. Is this branch run only for government operation? The large figure, the $7.75 million figure that you have there? Is this only for leased premises in regard to the operation of government, or do you supply services out of this branch to other people who are interested in acquiring real estate? Is there again the whole idea of co-ordination? Do you just limit this to government operations, or are your facilities available to other departments?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I still do not understand the second part of your question. I mean, you leave the second part in mid-air. You are practically in the first part, but do not know what we are comparing it to.

Mr. Singer: Well, The Department of Highways wants to have some quarters. Can they get them on their own? Do they have to come to you? Does it come through this branch? Highways wants to acquire some more land for building a new road. Does it come through this real estate branch, or does it come through you?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Leasing arrangements we look after. If they want to buy property, they have their own property section for purchasing land.

Mr. Singer: Well, why do we not have a central real estate branch that looks after all real estate for the province? I would think, Mr. Chairman, that there must be, since there is an expenditure of $8 million. There must be some considerable knowledge and ability in this department in public works. Why should we have competing departments and additional civil servants and add to the waste and the strength of the civil service in setting up competition in various departments to do exactly the same thing? Would it not be more efficient and reasonable and logical if all real estate activities of the government of Ontario were gathered under the one head?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I am given to understand that a few years ago that it wall all in The Department of Highways when it was recognized that Public Works should maybe handle all the purchasing and leasing outside of The Department of Highways section. Other than that, I have no comments to make. You have made an observation, I do not think that it is my position to comment on it.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, under this vote, I notice last year offices built for the provincial police across this province and that your department has advertised for someone to build these offices, and then you lease them back from them. I noticed in your workbook last year that you had one at Danko, and one up in the north, and we see across the province, other provincial police offices being built. Are you continuing the leasing of offices for the Ontario Provincial Police? How much has this increased this year?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes. I would say that basically we are following a policy of leasing OPP buildings. I think that we have 75 to 80 per cent of the requirements leased, and this works out very well. That is for detachment buildings and so on. We build the headquarters.

Mr. Spence: I would like to ask the Minister: Why do you lease in one area and construct in others? It seems unusual and this has been asked of me a number of times. Maybe you can clear this up for me?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Are you just speaking of OPP?

Mr. Spence: Yes. Provincial police detachment offices.

Hon. Mr. Connell: As I mentioned earlier, if it is a detachment building, we lease; if it is a headquarters we build our own. There has been a backlog in need for updating OPP buildings, and we find that this is one way of getting on with it. The OPP finds itself faced with this need for flexibility due to the change in traffic flow. This is not available in building a building in one place. The highway patterns change and the highways change, so leasing has worked out better in this instance. Now, I do not know if that answers the question. I have a policy statement as far as building versus leasing in all areas, but you asked for OPP.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Chairman, is the one in the Guelph area, for instance, leased? Or is it owned by The Department of Public Works?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, we own that building.

Mr. Spence: Is the one in the Ridgetown area owned or leased?

Hon. Mr. Connell: It is leased.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would tell us out of this item of $7,780,000, exactly how many different spaces are leased? In other words, take a building with four floors, we would count that as one space. In the province of Ontario, how many spaces do we actually lease?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Individual buildings?

Mr. MacKenzie: Well, no. You may rent space in a building, but not the whole building. Another building you may rent all the floors, and this would be another "space". How many different units do you rent in total across the province? How many leases have you?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I could give the list, but it would take the next 20 minutes, and—

Mr. MacKenzie: I am just interested in the total number.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Approximately 500 locations.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1802?

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, does the department attempt to get premises that are air conditioned, or are the views on air conditioning lax? I know that there has been a problem in the past in that the government has attempted to be fair in that if one building is not air conditioned, then none of the others are either that are provided for anyone in the public service. Has the Minister views on this very important matter of air conditioned premises?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I do not know if I should say that we have softened up on the matter, but certainly in the new buildings we are erecting, we are basically installing air conditioning. On leasing, it seems to be if we can get it, we do. We are leaning towards air conditioning wherever possible much more than a few years ago, although certainly, it adds a great deal to the cost of the buildings. It is a very expensive item, whether building or leasing, and from a personal point of view, I still question for the few days that it is needed, if it worth the cost. But the government is leaning much more to air conditioning in both leasing and where we provide our own facilities.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I raised this point because I do not think that it is a matter of softening up in the approach that we are looking for. It is a matter of trying to provide conditions that are conducive to the best production. I am sure that in the private sector where they are having to justify dollars constantly to the stockholders that they would not be putting in air conditioning to the extent that they are unless it was producing results that would please the stockholders.

I therefore, suggest to the Minister that this is good economy. We do not find that people are as disinterested due to the heat and oppression even though it may be for only a few days in the year. I know that in the experience of the business with which I was associated for some time, it made a tremendous difference to the production in the hot part of the summer. It certainly justified the 30 to 50 per cent increase in per square foot cost that resulted in going to air conditioned premises.

I hope that the Minister will aggressively pursue this approach from an economic point of view, rather than regarding it as a matter of softening up.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I think that the member is probably right. There are many people who are not enthused and find it difficult working in air conditioned buildings, but certainly it is the present trend, and I just happen to have a few personal opinions on it. But I do not let them interfere with my thinking on this line, and we will review as the member suggested.

Mr. Deacon: I would like to remind the Minister that there are new systems produced by engineering such as that in the Adelaide-Richmond centre, where it does not add to the expense. Their heating or air conditioning is by the use of heat pumps. This would result in savings in maintenance for our buildings.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that this department is responsible for the provision of student housing. In the Kirkland Lake area, where we have a new campus of the Ontario college of applied arts and technology, I understand that they have acquired a building from the Lakeshore mines on behalf of The Department of Education to use as student housing.

This building was acquired two years ago, and I would like to know how much longer it is going to sit empty, or is there some plan for its use?

Hon. Mr. Connell: The member is quite right. We did purchase the building for the Kirkland Lake campus. I think basically, sir, that student housing is under the student housing corporation, and so, therefore, I have no responsibilities at this time for that particular building.

Mr. Jackson: I can understand the Minister's point, but, the renovations for this building for use as student housing will be done by The Department of Public Works, is this not so?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I am given to understand that the board of governors is looking into this. I am not sure whether that is correct. I am not aware of any request for us to renovate the building any further.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, The Minister tells us that the department has 500 leases, or 500 spaces, and there were a couple more questions attached to that. I was wondering exactly how many square feet are involved at the present time that the department is renting? And after he gives us the number of square feet, would he tell us what the department is paying per square foot per year for the space, and would he give us representative figures for air conditioned space, non-air conditioned space, space in the city of Toronto and space in a place like Kirkland Lake, or anything which represents figures as they are representative?

Hon. Mr. Connell: That is a very involved question. I know we have all that information, but I just could not give it to you off hand. I will get that information for you very accurately and very shortly.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1802?

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if I may ask the Minister, at what stage in the leasing process does he find it economically feasible to construct in a given community rather than lease? I ask that question because of my interest in consolidating government offices in major centres.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, there again, that is a difficult question just to answer at a figure. It depends on the area and the conditions and maybe just to—

Mr. B. Newman: Let us take major centres then, Mr. Chairman, maybe this will narrow it down.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I will just read this short note into the record so as to indicate how we approach building versus leasing.

The department's method of operation in this regard is to analyze each building proposal individually in terms of cost to the government, suitability, technical functioning and economic lifetime of the building considered, aesthetics, and community integration, and the impact of the transaction on the economy. Only then is it possible for us to decide in favour of buying or leasing, and we lease—

1. When we are faced with space requirements too urgent to be met by new construction, or where we are short of the necessary capital to make the construction expenditure.

2. When cost is of relatively great importance, vis-à-vis the meeting of our town design and construction standards, which are in certain instances, exceptionally high.

3. Where a permanent government building is unwarranted since the users require mobility in terms of location of flexibility, in terms of type of accommodation.

4. We are currently planning lease-back transactions in order to provide needed accommodations on government-owned land which could be redeveloped and we build—

(1) Buildings which are obviously required by the government on a permanent basis where our requirements can be fairly accurately foreseen and are reasonably constant.

(2) Buildings on which our design specialists have to have the expertise to do the best job, and where it is important for us to control the construction details through specifications.

(3) Public buildings where economic considerations may be of secondary importance.

(4) Special purpose buildings in out-of-the-way locations where the leased buildings market is limited.

Now, that is basically what we follow here in Public Works as to the determination of leasing vs. building.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Minister, do you have any long-range plans on consolidation of the government buildings in major communities, not in the smaller—I am referring to the big metro areas—like Windsor, London, Kitchener, Hamilton, Toronto, Ottawa and so forth.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Not specifically. We have not become too enthused about provincial buildings as such. Naturally here in Toronto, as I indicated in my opening comments, we are trying to centralize in Queen's Park to quite an extent—for the various reasons I gave at that time. In Kenora we are having buildings built for us on a lease-back basis where we are concentrating four of five of the departments. But basically—and I have explained this for many years in the Legislature—we are not enthused about provincial buildings as such. I think it is good because we are leasing—the city, or town, whatever it is, is getting full taxes on it. Where we own the building, why, this is immediately cut down, and it is difficult to pick out an area. For example, the OPP; it is such a good theory to have all the buildings concentrated in one but naturally the OPP want them out on the highways; The Highways Department want theirs in some other area; The Department of Transport need a building where traffic is not congested; so as I say, it is the greatest theory in the world to put everyone in one building until you get working at it, and then you find it is most impractical.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, certain types of government operations lend themselves to being centrally located, so would it not be financially advantageous to centralize buildings in those areas in which it would be to the citizens' advantage to be able to go to a central location and find various government offices, rather than have, in a community, to go to half a dozen different locations?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Here again, there are so many areas that you can argue this point every way. But if you build a building downtown in, say, Windsor—which I imagine you are referring to—you need it downtown in the high-cost area. And if your requirements are only for three floors, this is not economical in downtown Windsor, I would think. You would need seven or eight or may 15, so I go back to my statement of a few minutes ago. We look into all these areas but basically we are not enthused about putting all the government buildings under one roof, or buildings for our own purposes.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, is not that contrary to your Queen's Park complex then?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Here we have a different situation where you are not dealing with —we certainly have not brought the OPP up here, we certainly have not. The Highways are up on 401, but we are dealing with a different type of requirement here altogether in the city of Toronto, I suppose this maybe is not any different, but with so many people coming in and wanting to visit government offices, I think, from outside, it is best to have them located in this close network.

Mr. B. Newman: Might I ask of the Minister then, being specific, what plans he has for the area that is presently owned by the department in the city of Windsor where at one time there had been prosposed a provincial public building? Do you plan on having that remain as a park, or donating it to the city, or what?

Hon. Mr. Connell: We have no plans in mind of changing the present arrangements.

Mr. B. Newman: Leave it as it is?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Braithwaite: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could tell us, on these leases, is there any particular policy that government has with reference to short-term or cancellation in the event that the buildings being built are completed and the lease has not run out?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I do not know that I understand the member's question completely. Would you mind repeating the question? I did not—

Mr. Braithwaite: Basically, take for example one of the buildings we have leased here in Toronto. If one of these complexes is completed in June, 1968 and their lease does not run out until perhaps June, 1969, do you have as a standard policy a clause in your leases allowing you to cancel on short notice?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I do not think it is presenting any problem. Our requirements are always large and we either negotiate with the owner, or there is always some other department that is ready to move in there. We would not be in the practice of terminating leases in advance of their expiration date.

Mr. Braithwaite: This problem has never come up then?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I am not aware of it.

Vote 1802 agreed to.

On vote 1803:

Mr. Chairman: There are a number of items in this we might consider in succession. Accounts branch?

Mr. Gisborn: Where would one get some idea of, or the exact figures on, the assets of the province in regard to public buildings? Has the Minister got them in the statistical reports that he is working from, or is there any place where one could find what are the assets of this province in regard to the buildings it owns?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Certainly I do not know that I have the total here. We have under our control about 5,500 buildings of one description and another. If the member wants any totals in that respect, I would have to ask him to give me a day or so to get the totals in detail. This is what I understand the member's question is about.

Mr. Gisborn: What I am trying to gather from the Minister is, what kind of records are kept in regard to the quantative assets of the province and the monetary assets under his department, those buildings that belong to the government and are used for government buildings? Have we got the records in such a way that we could have an accounting of the assets of the public buildings, both in quantative and monetary senses and depreciation values? Do we know what buildings we should be starting to think about dispensing with because they are no longer useful? What kind of accounting records have we in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I understand. If you look on page 6 of the public accounts they are pretty well listed there as far as the latter part of the question, when a building should be torn down. I think those decisions are now made.

After many years we have just torn down the Brigden building on University Avenue, but it usually does not present any problem when we should tear down buildings. Our problem is to get new ones.

I think on page 6 it pretty well gives the figures there of the total assets. If the member wants it in any more detail I would be pleased to get it for him, but not right at this moment.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister could advise me; I understood from the Provincial Treasurer's office that the record was kept in The Department of Public Works as to the various assets, both real estate-wise and furniture-wise, and that there was a record kept of depreciation and all that is in this public accounts section. Is that not the case?

Hon. Mr. Connell: We have all that, but if you want details on it I cannot provide them at this moment. But we will provide totals or any particular details of it.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, would it be available for us if we wanted to look at these? I can understand this would be a very bulky affair, but it would be available for people to look at if they wanted to see the breakdown of assets and their condition as recorded in the accounts? Are they available for people to look at?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Every door is open in The Department of Public Works.

Mr. Chairman: Accounts branch, carried. Administration, carried. Duplicating and print shop, carried. Stationery and office supplies, carried. Post office?

Mr. Deacon: I would just like to say that I think the figure for the post office is a very modest figure for the work these people do. They seem to do a pretty good job for us.

Mr. Chairman: Communication services?

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would explain just what this entails in his department, communication services?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, it is all communication systems, whether it is the leasing of lines; we look after all the telephone communications for all departments and the leasing of private lines and toll charges, anything in connection with the telephone service we are responsible for.

Mr. Gisborn: I would ask the Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, what is the number of staff applied to this particular department and what are their qualifications as employees in this occupation? Are they in the electronic field? And does the department do some of its own technical work in buildings and in the department?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I understand we have a staff of 62 in that department. They vary from telephone operators to the technical type of person that the member indicates, those people who are installing lines and this type of thing. They cover the waterfront.

Mr. Gisborn: Then I take it there are electronic technicians in this department. They do some of the work that might previously have been done by Bell Telephone employees?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, with increasing frequency in recent months, when one attempts to get a line out of Queen's Park, you find that all lines are busy, even though you may have a system in which there are five office lines to go out or in. I assume this means that the switchboard complex is just overloaded. Is this a general problem and what, if any, action does the Minister feel needs to be taken to cope with it?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, this is an old chestnut, too. I was warned very strongly against making the lines too public to the members.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not talking about them, I am talking about the general proposition of wanting to get a line out of Queen's Park locally.

Hon. Mr. Connell: This is exactly what I am talking about.

Mr. MacDonald: No, no, locally—not to other centres. I am sorry, I am not talking about the private lines to other centres in the province, I am referring to a line out, through the switchboard, to make a call in the city of Toronto. You find that you just cannot get a line out.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I am told the equipment is being expanded right now to help take care of that.

Mr. Chairman: Legal branch?

Mr. Gisborn: No, Mr. Chairman. We digressed from my questioning. How many employees are there in the department of communications who are termed as electronic technicians?

Hon. Mr. Connell: The member uses the term "electronic". I do not think we have a heading under "electronic". But electrical people—there are 62 in communications. We do not have it broken down at this point as to what they are. There again I can get that for the member. There are 17 technicians, electrical technicians as they are termed.

Mr. Gisborn: Could the Minister tell me if they are taking over work recently that was previously done by Bell Telephone employees?

Hon. Mr. Connell: We do not touch Bell Telephone work.

Mr. Gisborn: What do they do then?

Hon. Mr. Connell: These are internal systems. I am frank to admit I do not understand a lot of this electronic equipment, but there are systems which are inter-communications between offices and things that are separate from the Bell Telephone itself.

Mr. Chairman: Communication services, carried. Legal branch, carried. Management systems branch, carried. Purchasing branch?

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, under this purchasing branch, a central purchasing agency is going to be set up. Will this come under this department?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Spence: And will everything be bought through this purchasing agency, say, for every branch of the government?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Not everything. Just in those areas where it cannot conveniently be handled, but where it is to the advantage of the government to handle it at any rate. It is those common items that every department uses.

I do not think we are going to get into, possibly, the purchase of automobiles or salt on highways or something like that. But where all or a great number of departments are using these things, we will be the central purchasing agency. We cannot be too definite. We have certain guidelines that we are working toward, but we have not had enough experience in it yet to give complete details on just how this is going to work.

I am sure a year from now we will be much better acquainted where we can get the most advantages out of it.

Mr. Spence: Is it being set up at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes.

Mr. Spence: And it will be in operation in a year?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, it is partly in operation now, but it will be much more effective a year from now, than it is today.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1803 agreed to.

On vote 1804:

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, in connection with building maintenance and housekeeping, could the Minister tell us if this includes renovations, the amount he is doing to put this building in order?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, it includes renovations to government buildings that we own, but not necessarily leased premises.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that we have been sitting in the Legislature in the summer months, would it be possible to do something about the air conditioning, and include that in this item?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, it is always possible to do something about it and we are studying it and coming up with certain figures. But we have not provided for it in this year's budget.

Mr. Deacon: I did not catch the last bit, Mr. Chairman, the last statement of the Minister.

Hon. Mr. Connell: We have not provided for it in this year's budget.

Mr. Deacon: But there are plans going forward?

Hon. Mr. Connell: We are just to the extent or finding out the cost of it and I understand that, for the members' information, that we could have an air changer which would be somewhat of an improvement on what we have now that would cost in the neighbourhood of $65,000 to $70,000. But if we were thinking in terms of air conditioning this whole building, we would estimate it at $2 million and it could conceivably be considerably more.

An hon. member: Better to shorten the session.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister if, in his plans, he has included gymnasium facilities, health facilities for members so that after having sat in here for "X" number of hours we could possibly get into some room where we could have a duplicate Vic Tanny set up?

Hon. Mr. Connell: It is being considered here. I would not necessarily say in this building, but we have thoughts along that line, although it is not in the budget.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are two points. I am aware of the difficulties that the Minister—or perhaps more particularly his deputy—has in coping with all of the pressures within this building. I know that you have a long-term programme and that, as the Minister indicated earlier, with a department moving out there will be some greater flexibility.

I have just one plea as far as our group is concerned. We appreciate the progress that has been made but I think both other parties have a caucus room. We do not. This year we have attempted to operate through one of the committee rooms. This is a very difficult procedure because the committee rooms are often occupied otherwise. In fact, on more than one occasion we found that when we went to book or had booked it, it had been booked twice. It is generally an unsatisfactory situation. I think that each party should have a caucus room where they can meet, on a planned or short notice basis, where they can meet delegations. I would make this specific plea—that in any changes between now and the next session, I hope a facility relatively close to where we are—I do not want one over in the East block. I know we need exercise but we have no desire to walk that far—might become available.

A second point that I would raise with the Minister. The Minister has talked of "up to 1980", in terms of reshaping this building, or did I misconstrue that in relation to—

Hon. Mr. Connell: That is our policy in the general Queen's Park area, not specifically this building.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, coming back specifically to this building and the reshaping of it, for purposes of meeting the needs of the Legislature. In other words, that would be the primary emphasis.

I know that the House committee is going to be given plans and they have talked of plans that have been drawn up with Public Works and were going to be presented to the committee or to the government. Is the Minister in a position to indicate in any more detail exactly what this involves?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes. The Speaker has spoken to me a number of times about this and due to the imminence of my estimates coming up for the last four weeks, this meeting with the group has been postponed, but we are ready at any moment. In fact, I think it has been suggested that either this afternoon or next week, sir, we would be glad to meet and present our plans that we have and we are quite open to suggestions from the members as to their needs. We are leaving ourselves in a very flexible position for suggestions from all sides of the House. I forget what your other question—the caucus room—we are quite conscious of that fact. I think over the years I have tried to be fair with not only our government members, but the Opposition, and certainly in the new set-up—I do not know exactly what we are going to have yet—we are going to try to look after the interests of the members on all sides of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have one final point and it is in the category of trivia, but it is exasperating. Who in heaven's name, is responsible for the elevators in these buildings? I recall years ago seeing in Reader's Digest, back in the days before sputniks when everybody in the North American continent thought that Soviet Russia was incompetent, engineering-wise, and one of their smart quips was about somebody who visited Russia and discovered that they had printed in batches of a million or more, signs reading "Elevator Not In Operation". I am wondering if it were done here whether you would run through half of that stock by now.

Seriously, I am curious as to why, so frequently, the elevators—this one out here particularly—is not operating efficiently, or is not operating at all. Is it looked after by the company that manufactures it? Is it looked after by The Department of Public Works? Or by whom?

Hon. Mr. Connell: We do it with our staff and we hear many criticisms. I might suggest to the member that he record during the next six months every time the elevators in this building are out of operation. I would ask him to do that. We have made studies—we always have one or two of the members complaining—and it is amazing how little they are out of operation; although we hear it so often.

So I would suggest to each of the members, or particularly the member for York South, just make a note of these. We are not going to improve the service today, but I wish you would keep note of it for the next six months or—

Mr. Gisborn: How many times each day—

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well you keep it and I will be glad to check it out but I would like to be informed. I cannot stand in front of the elevator myself keeping track of it. But we hear these reports so often and I would just like you to back it up with a few facts and figures.

Mr. MacDonald: Well I am not certain that I am going to take the challenge of the Minister. I think there are other things that I shall spend my time and have my staff spend their time on rather than keeping a record of it but it is certainly the general impression around this building that the frequency with which those elevators go out of operation is far too great to be justified. I have a suspicion you got a lemon in the original purchase. However, I have drawn it to the attention of the Minister. I accept no obligation for continuing commitment. There are other things I am going to put my attention to.

Hon. Mr. Connell: We will provide you with the records of the last year. We will let you determine whether you think you are right or not. This is an old story with me. I hear it every time I step out into the halls about the elevators and yet, when you check it out either someone does not provide me with the right—

Mr. MacDonald: Perhaps we are all living—

Hon. Mr. Connell: Certainly I have not run into any difficulty with the elevators outside of the odd one every—

Mr. MacDonald: I look forward to the Minister walking down—

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I am telling you since I have been in the hospital I head for the stairs every time anyway, whether it is up or down.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would like to congratulate the Minister on the beautiful new walk that has been constructed in the park in front of this building.

I brought this to his attention the last number of years and I have not stubbed my toe since the session started, and I also wish to congratulate the Minister on the beautiful flower beds that he has replaced along the sidewalks. It adds, I think, to the beauty of this beautiful building, and he is to be commended.

I just have one little complaint. Sitting here in the Legislature since February, I notice when guests sit in the east gallery and walk down those steps on each side of the gallery they are very careful; it looks to me as if they are frightened they might fall. I would like to see the department repair them so they would walk down in confidence and I think they would look at members on that side of the House a lot more instead of watching the stairs. It would add to their visit to the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I might suggest you have an engineer on your side there. The architects have long since given up and there is always an area of disagreement between architects and engineers, so if the engineer you have in your party will come up with his suggestion on a way to do it, we will be glad to try to improve the safety of the steps.

Mr. MacDonald: At a fee!

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, there might be a conflict of interest there.

Mr. MacKenzie: I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that after 1971 there is no question about this happening. But I would also like to ask, Mr. Chairman—in vote 1804 it has listed repairs $4.3 million, housekeeping maintenance, operational maintenance. I am at a loss to understand this figure. I do not know how you arrive at something like this. Does this include repairs on space you lease, space you own, is it for mechanical equipment, is it for repairing floors which have gone bad? How do you get up to $4.3 million for repairs?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, with 5,500 buildings, or at least 5,000 buildings, anyway, in addition to those under the administration of justice—but this is just for repairs to our own buildings; and this is across the whole province. It is a rather difficult estimate to arrive at, but we are putting much more responsibility out in the field to our district supervisors. I have not the details here as to what these are but they are estimates that have been sent in by the various divisions.

Mr. MacKenzie: Do I understand, Mr. Chairman, that under this item for repairs we have not only repairs to equipment? Do we also have alterations to buildings? The member has been asking about our own legislative building and what is going to happen here. I get the impression that this item, "repairs," includes alterations, putting up partitions and this sort of thing. Is this included in item 4? Alterations, as well as fixing things which have broken or gone bad?

Hon. Mr Connell: Yes, alterations under $50,000 are the ones in this particular vote. The larger repair projects are listed under capital.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister why tenders were asked for some repairs at the Windsor teachers' college? It seemed to me kind of strange why repairs would be needed to the gymnasium when the facility was so new. Maybe the Minister can give me the answer later, Mr. Chairman, so we do not hold up the proceedings of the House. But I can recall, in my first comments in the House on the teachers' college, they were very critical of the balcony being set at an angle so that when an individual was sitting in the back row of seats, he could not see the gymnasium floor at all. Whoever designed that balcony certainly was not thinking of engineering at the time the designing was done.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I do not have that information.

Mr. B. Newman: The Minister can give it to me later.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman: I have a comment in view of the question by the member for Ottawa Centre; perhaps if the Minister had at another time, and could give us later on, comparative figures on a per-square-foot basis of what the repairs and cleaning costs and items like that are, it would have more meaning to it. Of course, we could then compare it to other building operation experience. I think the department has been doing a good job in their maintenance, but to have this down on a square-foot basis would certainly give us a basis of judgment in the matter.

Hon. Mr. Connell: We will attempt to give the member those figures. I might just add at this point that on our new projects we are showing quite an extensive saving in going to contract cleaning and this is going to be so in our new complex; in the Frost building there is contract cleaning. I think we are estimating it working out to about a 50 per cent saving in new buildings on the cleaning operations by contract cleaning rather than by own own forces.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Minister would just briefly explain how the safety branch functions, and also how many bodies are included in the salary of $49,000.

Mr. Chairman: Is the member speaking on 1805, water control branch?

Mr. Gisborn: No, Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise a question under 1804, safety branch.

Hon. Mr. Connell: We have eight employees in the safety branch. Is that the member's basic question?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, and just briefly, what kind of a programme are they producing and for what part of the department are they producing the programme?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, it is not only our building programmes but in fire prevention, too, and we have an educational programme as far as safe driving is concerned, a construction safety programme, and the safety research and educational programme, the motor vehicle and equipment safety programme and the building safety programme, so it is basically those five areas we are operating in. I just might add in the construction end that I think we have an excellent record there. I could be corrected on these figures, but I think the national average in the construction is 61 lost manhours per million hours of work. Ours averages out at about 36, so I think we have a rather good average in our safety branch and we are concentrating more than ever on our safety work during this year.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I was just wondering, on items 3 and 4, we have in both instances, maintenance. No. 3 does not amount to very much but why this difference here? What is No. 3 for?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I am informed that in vote 1804 it is maintenance for office supplies and—was it vote 1803 the member was asking about?

Mr. MacKenzie: I wonder why it is there at all and why it does not go into item 4, but I think the Minister has answered the question already.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, it is.

Mr. Chairman: It is my understanding that vote 1803 has been carried. Is there anything further on vote 1804?

Votes 1804 and 1805 agreed to.

On vote 1806:

Mr. J. E. Bullbrook (Sarnia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman, might I first say that my remarks in connection with this vote really are not a criticism of The Department of Public Works, but rather a comment, or perhaps a criticism of the policy attitude to the responsibility as exemplified by the Treasury board itself? I do wish the Prime Minister was here, because I was going to invite him, although he does not usually intrude to comment during the estimates of his Ministers, to make a comment in connection with the policy that I am going to elaborate upon. Now, the Minister, I am sure, has inferred what I am going to talk about.

Yesterday, early, the mayor of the city of Sarnia and a delegation, had the opportunity, and a most enjoyable one, to meet the Minister of Public Works, and Mr. Jamieson, the chief of operations, in connection with the take-over function of The Department of Public Works regarding the administration of justice. The problem that we face, and which I think faces the Minister, is perhaps a complete difference of opinion, at least mine, with that of the government. I think that it should be recorded that we commend the government most heartily in connection with the concept of relief to the municipalities with respect to the administration of justice, and that is their attempt in the future to relieve the municipalities in capital and current expenditures relative to the administration of justice.

Our problem in the city of Sarnia, really, and a problem that, I think, affects other municipalities, especially the city of Hamilton, as a result of the discussion that we had yesterday, is relative to the equity position that urban municipalities have acquired with respect to shared accommodation facilities. Now, as I understand it—and I would appreciate it if the Minister would correct me if I am wrong—let me first say, Mr. Chairman, that when the announcement was first made, I understood, perhaps, obviously wrongly, that there was going to be a reflection not only of the future benefit to the municipalities, but to the municipalities that were progressive relative to their progressive attitude in the past. This is what I understood.

I thought frankly that there were going to be complete take-overs, and that the buildings themselves in the future would be vested in the province, and that the equity positions of both the county and the cities themselves, depending on how they approached the problem of providing facilities, would be looked to.

But formulae have been established, one of which is that in connection with shared accommodation facilities—that is where you do have the administration of justice facilities combined with municipal facilities, usually county municipal facilities—that the intention of the government is to exhaust existing debenture, and to pay at a rate of one dollar per square foot to the county concerned.

Now, I do not want to get into the question of whether this is a realistic sum, or anything of that nature, but the problem as you know is that there is a statutory requirement on every municipality—or there was—to either jointly with the county or with themselves to provide these administration of justice facilities.

Now, the situation is that we bore for many years, as did the courts, the legal profession, the public and everyone else in the Sarnia area, with completely inadequate facilities. So, of their own volition, some ten years ago, they met and took that progressive attitude, and I think that the Minister would agree with me, that the results were a most attractive and utilitarian complex in that city.

Over the past eight years, they have participated jointly in the dissipation of a considerable portion of the debenture indebted, I think that it was to the tune, in our participation in the city of Sarnia, of over $700,000 so far. The equity increase, I believe, borders on the amount of $300,000.

The problem is that under statute, the passing of title is in the county. What we find in effect is this. The province must deal with the county, and there is nothing to be done about that. What we are disturbed very much about is this. The equity position of the citizens of the city of Sarnia, might not be protected in the future. This is the essence of the terminal position that I arrived at with the Minister yesterday.

The Minister could not, of course, make any commitment in connection with this, and I did not expect that he could. However, I did expect, and frankly he was most complimentary to the city of Sarnia in connection with their brief, and I felt somewhat sympathetic to the city of Sarnia, I guess generally sympathetic to urban municipalities in this position. But I do feel that he is really tremendously restricted, because it is a matter of government policy that Public Works is really the vehicle for the take-over as I understand it.

The main burden of my remarks is not towards The Department of Public Works, but it must be through this vote. The main burden of my remarks has to reflect to the Treasury board, and that is this. We have to have some degree of understanding, or consideration, for the equity position gained by urban municipalities in these jointly owned facilities. I am sure that members on both sides of the House appreciate this, at least the urban representatives, with municipalities who have a considerable equity position.

Really, you are rationalizing when you are saying that we are going to relieve the municipalities, and we commended you on that. But if the hon. Provincial Treasurer was correct, I believe that it was on April 22, when he said that we want to be fair and equitable with respect to all municipalities, then we have to look at the fact that citizens of Sarnia, eight years ago—at least the culmination of their attitude eight years ago—provided up-to-date, beautiful, and utilitarian, and adequate facilities for the administration of justice that is now available to the province.

The people of London did not, and I use London not because of the fact that the Prime Minister represents that area, but because it has become known province-wide as a facility second to none in dilapidation and inadequacy. There is no doubt about it.

Basically the answer, and it is somewhat fair, that what you get is that the people of the city of London chose to spend their money on other capital works. They chose to put in streets, and build high schools, and other things.

But I ask you to consider this, and I ask that this record of what I say you convey to the Treasury board. Those assets continue to belong and benefit that municipality throughout. This does not apply with the equity position of urban municipalities in connection with these facilities that are being taken over. The city of Sarnia has, I think, taken a reasonable position, and I hope that the Minister would agree with that.

They said in effect, that we cannot expect you to give back every cent that we spent. We have the use of the facility. But we feel that if you debenture a matter over 20 years, you do not expect that facility to have a life expectancy of 20 years. As a matter of fact, one would hope that the facilities for the administration of justice in the city of Sarnia would have a life expectancy of 60 or 70 years.

So I put it to you that we have paid at an accelerated rate for that facility that will benefit our city, too, for years to come. But the concern centres around what the position of the government will be in connection with these shared accommodation facilities when the debentures are paid off. Then you will have these magnificent structures, such as the one in our community, fully paid for, vested in the county. What if when the government then says, "We feel that in all justice that we should now take this over, we feel frankly that we have the capital to do so." I want to digress for a moment, Mr. Chairman. I believe that when the recommendation was adopted in this connection back in September—I have said this before and I do not need to unduly burden you—there was a degree of political expediency when this was announced in September.

I believe the government really intended to take over these capital facilities and pay for them. Then they found that they had bitten off more than they could chew. But that is complete digression.

But if in 12 years when the debenture is paid off in Sarnia, if the position of the government then is, "We feel now that at the then depreciated value, we will pay the county of Lambton," the people of the city of Sarnia do not get one red cent.

We came yesterday to the Minister and to Mr. Jamieson, and as I said, had a most wonderful hearing as one always does with the Minister of Public Works. But I do feel his hands are tied.

What we basically said is that we would like to take a position that we have approximately a quarter of a million dollars in that building that we have put in through our progressive attitude and our progressive thought, and that we have not one title of equity in it because of statute. What we in Sarnia would like to be assured of is this—our people have spent their money, if there is going to be any return of capital in connection with those facilities in the future, Mr. Chairman, we would like to have the Minister of Public Works in a position to say to the people of Sarnia: "Yes, we are going to assure you that you get your pro rata share back."

As you know, the urban share was based on population, and we have paid more than the county people have. So this is really the burden of my remarks.

I want to attempt to extricate the Minister of Public Works, from a position that I really feel that he feels is somewhat unrealistic.

I recognize that he had mentioned to me yesterday, and as I said before, probably rightly so to a degree, the people of London chose to do otherwise. But as I say, sir, in response to that thought, the people of London still own their own facilities, they still own their sewers and their sidewalks. The people of Sarnia, as I say, do not own anything in that building. And so I would ask the Minister of Public Works to use his good offices to assist not only the people of Sarnia but the people of other urban municipalities in this province, who really in justice, are entitled to a continuing equity position in the event that there is any capital payment in the future by the province for these facilities.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned that we had this meeting yesterday, and went into it. I will not repeat the things that went on at the meeting. The hon. member puts it very well. But I would say basically that he might assume several things. The government was thinking back to September 1, but it was basically to take over the costs and not the facilities. I will read only one short paragraph that I think sets it out in very short terms:

> In arriving at a formula, the government has kept foremost the fundamental purpose of the programme itself, which is to shift the financial burden of administration of justice cost from the property tax revenue base of the municipalities to the more general revenue sources of the provincial government.

Mr. Bullbrook: If I might, Mr. Chairman, the last thing I want to do as a result of this debate is to create any difficulty with the department.

I suggest that was really a secondary position in connection with government policy. However, the last thing I want to do, as I say, sir, is in any way to adversely affect the position of the city of Sarnia in this connection. I speak particularly about the problem in Sarnia, and about the general problem itself. And, really, all we are wanting to do, I say, Mr. Chairman—as I think you recognize, and I am sure this would be the same position for the people in Hamilton—all we are saying, in effect, is that if the time ever comes that the province of Ontario says to the county of Wentworth, "We are now going to pay you for that capital facility and take it over," in effect it belongs to the people of the city of Hamilton and I feel their administration would want to say, "Well, we would like to have our equity participation back."

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1806, the member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister what is the situation in the case of the Hamilton magistrate's court? I understand they have a long-term lease with terminal powers for their facilities. Will the government now just take over that lease as is, or do they have to sign a new agreement, new lease, new rentage?

Hon. Mr. Connell: It will be the same agreement. The lease will be assigned.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, under this vote, the administration of justice, I would like to ask the Minister if he has given any consideration to the renting of facilities to provide a juvenile detention centre in my own community. My community, the largest community in the province of Ontaro, does not have such a facility. I know it was the responsibility of the community to provide it in years gone by. But now, with the assumption of the administration of justice by the provincial government, this type of facility is lacking and we do not necessarily ask for a new facility—something to be constructed; that might be quite elaborate; but providing the community with some type of facility so that juveniles would not have to be transported either to the city of London or to be put in the county jail.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I wonder—I understand that the Attorney General's branch has asked us to look into this and we are presently checking into the possibilities of it.

Mr. B. Newman: You are looking into it? Right, thank you.

Mr. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, regarding the same particular problem: Could the Minister indicate what provisions will be made in Brantford for providing facilities for juvenile delinquents? As I understand it, you have taken over the new city hall or part of the city hall, which was built as a magistrate's court but it does not have any facilities in it for juvenile offenders.

Hon. Mr. Connell: There has been no request and so therefore we have not done anything along that line yet. But I reiterate here, as I said earlier, that we have just scratched the surface, as far as getting into the details of this administration of justice programme is concerned. We thought we could do it in two years but it is going to take considerably longer. In the meantime, all costs have been assumed as of January 1, 1968, so it is a question of additional bookkeeping in many places. But we are getting around to these different sections, either as we can or as we are requested from the local municipality.

Vote 1806 agreed to.

On vote 1807:

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, would this be the place to ask a question of the Minister in regard to the hon. Treasurer's decision to establish a central purchasing authority? What I want to raise with the Minister is that on page 7 of the Provincial Treasurer's statement of Wednesday, September 27, 1967, in regards to the new purchasing authority, it says: "The authority will be charged with establishment and control of rigid procedures over the letting of contracts for public forks." Now, I think this calls for an explanation by the Minister of Public Works. Is there any significance in this statement, in regards to this new purchasing authority, in regards to this department?

Mr. Chairman: Might I ask the hon. member what statement he is referring to? Who made the statement?

Mr. Gisborn: The statement was made by the hon. Treasurer of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: It is a statement by The Treasury Department as to policy. Is the hon. Minister in any position to discuss the policy of The Treasury Department?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, I do not know what you mean by "significant." There have been rather complete studies of how to set up this central supply agency, certainly, I am not too familiar with the Provincial Treasurer's statement, but it certainly would not have anything to do with the letting of contracts for building a building but it might be for the calling of tenders for maybe specific equipment, this type of thing. Our concept incorporates the establishment of a central purchasing authority but rejects the idea of a fully centralized operation too, I might add.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, I have read the whole brief. But if I were the Minister of Public Works and there was a reference to my department such as this I would immediately have made enquiries of the hon. Treasurer as to just what he meant so that I could tell somebody just what he meant by the authority's rigid controls.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I do not think it is referring to the department, as such, as Public Works, but it is referring to public works, not The Department of Public Works, but to public works of all kinds.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, contracts for public works.

Mr. Chairman: Not necessarily through The Department of Public Works and Buildings. I would think the question should properly be directed to the Provincial Treasurer.

Votes 1807 to 1809, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 1810:

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, in regard to the large contracts that have taken place in the Queen's Park complex, such as the one that is over there now, are they public tenders, or are they invitation tenders?

Hon. Mr. Connell: All tenders are public unless—some of the smaller ones are by invitation but the larger ones are open and public.

Mr. Worton: Would this be the lowest tender that was accepted over there or would it be—I am speaking of the one just across the road, sir?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Of the Queen's Park office extension?

Mr. Worton: Yes; Ellis Don.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Oh yes, that is the new one.

Mr. Worton: Would it be the lowest tender accepted there and what was the tender price?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, that was the low tender—about $3 million.

Mr. Worton: Could we have the figures between the lowest and the highest?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I have not got them right now, but we can get that figure for you. It was the lowest tender.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1810 agreed to?

The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: I do not know just where we are now, but under capital disbursements I raised the question asking the Minister if he would inform us what the other 20 projects were that had been postponed. Now if they are in the capital works book under planning he could just maybe briefly tell me that is the case and give us a rundown on them. He did say we would wait until we got to capital disbursements.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I do not know whether you want me to take the time of the House to read all these in. I have the complete list here if you would like to look at the list, or do you want me to read them into the record?

Mr. Gisborn: You do whatever you wish. If you want to send the list over, all right.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Did you say to send it over?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes. That is fine.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Yes, well I will send it over to you.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1810—the member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to refer to the piece of property owned by the provincial government in the city of Windsor on which at one time a provincial public building had been planned. Now I know that the plans have been dropped for the construction of the building and the Minister has given the reason why. Now today the economy of the community is fairly good. However, now that the site is owned by the province of Ontario would it not be good, Mr. Chairman, to have some plans made and held in abeyance and at the time the autonomy may have reverses or economic activity may slow up in the community, such a project could be implemented as a little boost to the economy of the community.

Hon. Mr. Connell: This has come up every year for ten years, I guess, Mr. Chairman. I remember the announcement of a provincial building was made back in 1954, and I have explained this many times. I would maybe reverse the procedure a bit this year. I would suggest to the hon. member from the Windsor area that he list those departments that should move into that provincial building, and we will give him the square feet requirements. We are flexible, but at this point we have nothing to indicate that a provincial building is needed on that site. It is a very desirable site, and the city of Windsor wants it retained as a park. But if you can prove to me in requests or requirements that are needed up there, we would certainly be glad to look at it.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Minister, I am not asking you to construct the building, but I am asking you to have plans ready for the day when that building will assist the economy of the area, and at the same time will provide the public service. Now I have been provided with by your department last year, a series of offices that you do occupy in the city of Windsor today and the total rentals for them alone is a little over $50,000 a year. Now if a building constructed were to last 20 years and if you only took the rentals involved, there would be $1 million in rentals at today's rate of rentals that you would have had to have paid out for the accommodations that you are now occupying in the community. Surely, sir, that in itself would probably be one good reason why a facility may be needed in the future and my only thought is have the plans ready when things in the community are not as they could be, or are, today, and this could be an assist in overcoming potential problems in the future.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1810—the member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I was out of the House for a few moments and maybe it was raised on another vote, but I would like to know if it is a fact that there has been some discussion on the question of air conditioning in this chamber. If there has not been I want to talk about it for a moment.

Hon. Mr. Connell: It has been discussed.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. MacKenzie: In the capital works, Mr. Chairman, I am having some trouble in arriving at the same figures shown in the estimate as to what we have in our blue book.

I arrive, out of the estimates, at something like $52 million capital estimates; there is $47,500,000 under this vote; there is $187,000 under vote 1809; there is $2 million under vote 1808; but the capital works blue book only shows $40 million. If you add up all the figures there under 1968-69 construction; and I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, where the discrepancy is in these figures. Why does the capital works project book show everything to add up to the same amount as the estimates?

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, there is always, as I mentioned earlier, architects' fees in there and many of the smaller projects that are not listed here in detail. I have indicated that these are the larger buildings that are listed in the blue book. There are many smaller projects that are not listed and anything under $50,000—I do not believe—is listed in here, so it is easy to arrive at a discrepancy.

Mr. MacKenzie: When you speak of under $50,000, that—as I understood it—was in another vote, where we had four and one-third million dollars. We have said that anything under $50,000 in capital works went into that and I think at the same time we discussed the air conditioning of this chamber and this building, and I could not see how it could be discussed at that point because it was over $50,000. I think you mentioned a figure something like $2 million.

The point I make, Mr. Chairman, is that in the information that we are getting here between the capital works and the estimates and the other information, there is just no way that you can pin down exactly what this department is doing in its entirety and compare it with things that you know from past experience and make an assessment on it. I think, Mr. Chairman, that there is a real moral obligation on the part of this Minister to provide us with sufficient information that we can piece together the story and make a judgment of it and certainly to make it available to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, this is a relatively small matter that I believe might come within this vote and it is the matter of the accommodations available for the guards who look after the parking facilities at the front of the building. During the course of this last winter I had occasion to come into the building a number of times when the snow was blowing and it was icy and very cold, and I wonder if under the public works it might be possible to construct a booth perhaps at each end of the parking facility in order that these people could be out of the cold. They are standing out there —it is very cold in front of this building—on many winter days, and I think it would be an excellent idea if we were to construct two sentry box-type booths perhaps, or some other type of parking booth, in order to keep them out of this chill.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, the member might have a slight point. Actually we would like to see those fellows out in front keep moving, and thereby keep warm and keep the traffic controlled as they should. They are able to step in on occasion. In fact, I have been able to gauge the weather pretty well what it was like outside by where the attendants happen to be; in fact we used to have a kind of standing joke between two or three of us about the weather. I do not think it would add anything to the dignity of the buildings to have a couple of these—whatever we call them—houses out in front, and I do not think the member has a good point. The members might be complaining to others, but they have not been complaining to the Minister of Public Works about the condition out there. They are provided with very protective clothing.

Mr. Deans: I do not agree with you at all. If you are interested in finding what the weather is like, put a thermometer outside. You say it does not add to the dignity of the building, but I suggest to you that in most areas where guards are on duty, they have sentry boxes, and they are there for a very good reason. The reason is so that when it is pouring rain, or when it is icy and windy, or when it is snowing heavily, they can stand inside out of the weather for a few moments every once in a while to get warm. Now I do not see why two sentry boxes located strategically at the front of this building would do anything to detract from the appearance of the place, and I do believe perhaps it would add to the appearance. They were there all last year during the centennial year, they did nothing at all to detract. I do believe that they would add to the comfort of the people that are doing the job to help them do the job very well. I am sure it would not detract in any way from the calibre of work that they are presently doing.

Hon. Mr. Connell: Well, apparently there is a difference of opinion here as to the needs. As I mentioned earlier, the cars will be taken away from the front, there will be no parking in front. I cannot name a date, but this problem will disappear to a large extent at that time.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on vote 1810? The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. MacKenzie: With regard to the buildings the department does have under design, one of my colleagues mentioned about heat pumps and this sort of thing a short while back, Mr. Chairman. I am wondering if the department has any projects under design where they are using these newer systems of electric heating for the perimeter, and where they are pumping the heat from the centre core of the building for heating the outside perimeter during the winter time. In other words, Mr. Chairman, what I am asking is: Is the department pursuing these later mechanical and electrical designs for buildings as advocated by Ontario Hydro? Are you doing some fundamental development in research there, and if so would you give us the details?

Hon. Mr. Connell: I understand in the forensic science building there is a modified type of this heat pump that you refer to being planned in that particular building. Actually, our people are basically pretty much up to date. In fact a jump ahead of some of the others.

Mr. MacKenzie: Mr. Chairman, I know of two or three buildings. In fact, Ontario Hydro have issued information on them with regard to the extent to which they have gone. I have not yet heard of any Public Works buildings which come quite up to it, although your professional men may be working on it.

I would like to recommend to the Minister that with his construction that he does have that there are many areas where he may be able to lead the way and help contribute to the knowledge of the private sector of the industry.

Votes 1810 to 1812, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates for The Department of Public Works.

Hon. Mr. Connell: I might just, as the members have been very kind in passing these votes in such a short time, say thank you.

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves that the committee of supply rise and report progress and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that they have come to certain resolutions, and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 3rd order, resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. W. Newman (Ontario South): Mr. Speaker, getting up to speak for just a very few minutes on the Budget, I would like to point out one or two things I have noticed and observed as a junior member of this Legislature.

I would like to quote a few paragraphs from an editorial which appeared in The Financial Post issue of July 6, 1968. The editorial deals with the need for parliamentary reform in the federal Parliament and I would like to quote the first paragraph which reads as follows:

> Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau has good reason to put priority on the reform of House of Commons rules. In his haste to dissolve Parliament last April, he effectively scrubbed every improvement in the rules made during the past four years. The floor is now hideously open to gabble, wrangle and yap.

The editorial indicates that the improvements which have now been scrapped vastly speeded up the process of legislation. It suggests that Canada should promptly adopt some of the British parliamentary rules, either outright or in changed form. Under these rules the British Parliament is able to set up its business well in advance. The work load on the full House is decreased by delegating much of it to committees and MPs, and Ministers are freed from attending debates in the House when they are not needed.

The editorial concludes with this paragraph, and I quote:

> New measures to control the committee of the whole, which at present can carry on talkfests ad infinitum, are perhaps the most urgent matter. If, as Trudeau implies, future sittings are going to be limited to a number of months in the year, Parliament cannot afford to let any MP speak as long or as often as he likes.

As a newcomer to this House, I have been most surprised and disillusioned by the seemingly endless and pointless debates which have taken place in this chamber. I realize that this is the first session of a new Parliament, and that there are over 40 new members anxious to get their views on the record and their names in the newspapers. In addition, our debates may have tended to be more partisan than normal because of the leadership convention and, more recently, the federal general election. And, furthermore, the government has presented a very heavy programme of legislation, some of which as you well know is still before us.

In spite of these special circumstances, I think most members would agree that we could have moved along much more quickly without, in any way, shirking or neglecting our responsibilities. In the words of the editorial, there has been too much gabble, wrangle and yap.

I am no authority on parliamentary procedure and because of this, I hesitate to raise this subject. Yet, I feel very strongly that one of our most urgent and important tasks is procedural reform. This reform should be designed to improve the efficiency of the Legislature and, at the same time, to reduce the length of our sessions.

I believe this can be done without prejudice to the increasingly important role which this Legislature is called upon to perform. As a first requirement, I must mention briefly the need for improved research and secretarial facilities for the private members of all parties. I commend the government for the progress which has been made in this area in the recent past, and feel certain that it will continue to receive the highest priority.

It is widely accepted, I believe, that the private member simply does not have the time, the energy or the money to get any serious research done on his own. The Progressive Conservative Party's student research assistant programme, begun this session, has been of value to several of our members. This is, however, a purely voluntary programme and is limited accordingly. If we are to effectively balance the great influence of the civil service on government policy, it seems essential to provide the private members of all parties with adequate sources of fresh and informed thinking on the issues which confront us.

I believe that most members would agree that a great deal of our time has been wasted in the lengthy question periods. Many questions have been presented to Ministers which could have been answered by letter or by telephone without taking up the time of the House. I appreciate the value of the question period and the importance of continuing this procedure. At the same time, this right has undoubtedly been abused during the present session and corrective action is required. I suggest that the most effective method of improving the situation is to place a time limit on the question period, as was done in the federal Parliament in Ottawa.

Insofar as the estimates are concerned, I would like to mention some of the methods by which the allocation of time might be more effectively controlled.

If the members of all departments are to be dealt with in committee of the whole House, then surely it is time for our parties to agree upon a time limit for the estimates of all departments, as has been done in the past in Ottawa and Westminster. Within this overall period, time could be allotted to the expenditures of the various departments in relation to the sums involved if the opposition parties desired it. On the other hand, it might be advisable to have the committee of the whole House deal only with those estimates in excess of a certain amount leaving the others to be examined by the appropriate standing committees.

Or, as I believe the leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Nixon), proposed earlier this session, a standing committee might be appointed to examine all of the estimates and to report its findings to the House in the normal manner.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that there are advantages and disadvantages to each of these methods, and I am not competent to suggest which alternative should be adopted. I simply wish at this time to point out the need for reform of our present system. This session, for example, we spent 34 hours debating the estimates of The Department of Health involving the expenditure of approximately $400 million. We spent only 20 hours on the estimates of The Department of Education and University Affairs, which together involve expenditures in excess of $1.1 billion. I think it is also very significant that to date —that is, up until yesterday—some 49 per cent of the Legislature's time has been spent in discussing departmental estimates. This figure of course, will increase each day as we proceed along.

Agreement upon a new procedure to deal with the "business of supply" is I believe one of the most urgent requirements. I would think that both Opposition parties would welcome such an agreement, particularly the socialist party which places such great emphasis on proper planning procedures.

Finally, we might also consider eliminating the adjournment for dinner. By this measure alone, the length of our sessions could be reduced by about 20 to 25 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the intent of my remarks, I have tried to be brief and non-partisan. The need for procedural reform is obvious, I believe, to all members and I would hope that the appropriate measures may be agreed upon and adopted by this House in the very near future, so that we will not be sitting here in the hot August days ahead.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, may I pay tribute to you, sir, on the fair way in which you have managed the affairs of this House. It was my privilege to come into the Legislature in 1955, at the same time as you did, sir, and I think your job has been made more difficult by the numbers of Opposition which have increased over the years; but I do wish to pay tribute to the way in which you treat us all as fairly as possible.

I rise to take part in a Budget debate that has been interrupted for many weeks by other important functions of this Legislature —namely the passing into law of new measures designed to serve the people of Ontario, and the equally important examination of the estimates of the various government departments. There have also been other important democratic activities, notably the daily question period, which is continually evolving as an instrument of purposeful enquiry under your guidance, Mr. Speaker; and the votes of non-confidence which the official Opposition and the NDP have each made the occasion for useful debate.

But for the most part of the time we have been talking about money—the people's money. In the end, everything that people expect the government to do for them, or to assist them in doing for themselves, must be paid for, and taxation is the way in which the populace foots the bill. At the moment people are bitten four times; once at the municipal tax level, once at the provincial income tax level, once at the federal income tax level, and once at the retail purchasing level for most of the things they consume. In some cases, the taxes, such as the federal tax on building materials, are less visible than others, but the end result of all this taxation is that people only have a certain amount of the money they earn left to do as they like with. They have traded the freedom of disposing of part of their assets as they wish, in return for protection and services of many kinds.

This is the way of life they have chosen. Some want more services from government than others, and this sometimes shows itself in the cry of constituents that educational services are more than they, at first sight, desire. This reaction is something that may be expected to increase when education bills begin to be presented separately. This feeling that the local burden is now too great will certainly result, in the long haul at any rate, in the divorce of education costs from the local property tax base. When that happens, it will be the most recent of a long chain of events which are taking away personal relationship and local accountability, and yet as we all know, it is inevitable. We cannot stop this tide.

I am not alone—and indeed the Liberal Party is not alone—in spending many hours thinking about how, with all these rapid changes taking place, the people can still retain an effective voice in the business of government at all levels. One of the difficulties is that the contribution that people can make varies both in quality and in kind.

I think we are all agreed, Mr. Speaker, to begin with, that we have to do something about retaining the interest of those who, like the school trustees, will be needed in ever fewer numbers as direct participants in the democratic process. There will be fewer and fewer holders of office as such, and so one of the things we have to do is to give a new kind of respectability to different forms of service, which may not be so permanent, but which may be better adapted to the new conditions.

We have to take a new look at the role of the ad hoc group, formed in response to a particular local situation or challenge, often broadly based and involving people with different party affiliations or none. Such groups, I imagine, will form more spontaneously in the future than in the past, among those who previously were very conscious of their community role, among professional men and among specialists.

I doubt, however, whether such groupings will be lasting. Once their purposes have been achieved, they will, I think, dissolve. I do not think there is any serious danger of our getting the general equivalent of Quebec's Estates-General, which is the modern version of pre-war dictatorship's approach to government. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the history of the corporate state movement is such that all its possibilities have been completely destroyed by the distortions which ruthless men have imposed on this idea.

Now, what I have in mind is a much more informal and human approach. I look back to my days as mayor of Guelph and recall the easy relationships that existed between the people and the local administration; and today I see that more and more services are moving away from immediate local decision, to approval at a distance—welfare payments for instance—and I ask myself the simple question of how to keep local administration meaningful, so that good people will continue to find in this type of community activity something for their own personal and social satisfaction. And since office as such will be rare, I look to these new forms of organization to satisfy the laudable desire of public-spirited citizens to be of service.

Here at Queen's Park we must be ready to receive delegations and groups in such a way as to make their journey here as meaningful as possible, and I want to suggest that, cutting across party lines, we might come up with a formula or, if you like a model day, which could be varied according to a group's particular purposes and interests. The idea, however, of this master programme would be to ensure that every possible dialogue that would be meaningful would take place between interested members, interested departmental officials, members of the government (including, of course, the Minister concerned), and the visitors.

I think, too, that as a courtesy, the visitors should be escorted into the gallery when the Legislature is sitting, if only for a few minutes, and that Mr. Speaker should take it upon himself, as he does so admirably at present when we have visitors from our schools, to note the presence of the visitors, so that Hansard provides a permanent record of the fact that they took time out to brief us, and thereby performed a valuable democratic function. This may seem a small thing, Mr. Speaker, but it will come to be increasingly prized as a record of participation. How very many people have come into this building, have helped us and departed without record!

When I think of all the opportunities we have let slip in this regard in the past, I realize how very remiss we all have been in not confirming for posterity the fact that this or that group of people played its part.

I expect that as the centre of activity moves more and more into this building, or revolves around the remote locations that select committees, Royal commissions and enquiries of all kinds establish for their hearings, Hansard and minutes of proceedings and of evidence will come to be regarded as the proof of participation in democracy for an increasing number of those who would, in former times, have sought elective office at the local level. While it will take time for the adaptation, I think that in the long run, professional people and specialists will come to be satisfied with this new kind of service.

But there remains the greater problem of how to prevent public apathy among those whose present interest is only marginal, and this, Mr. Speaker, is again a problem common to all parties. I am now convinced—and it has taken me some time to come to this—that as meaningful, formal government moves away from the people in the physical sense, say to the level of the county and eventually, the region, that we have to counterbalance this trend by taking political organization to the people in ever smaller units.

I find, Mr. Speaker, that people are confused by the apparent break in the continuity of the party system below the provincial level. "Ah, yes," they say, "I understand federal and provincial parties and what they stand for, but then I am confronted with a totally new set of labels at the municipal or local level." And so my second point is that I think we are going to have to see some realignment of people and ideas, so that in fact it becomes possible to speak of a Liberal policy or a Conservative policy, or an NDP policy, for housing, for welfare, for urban growth, for pollution, that has the same consistent character right the way down from the federal level to the local level—except that when the federal people talk of "environmental pollution", the municipal people are pinning this down to a specific programme for cleaning up a certain river that people in that locality were born beside.

Wherever population density warrants it, I think that we should revitalize the ward system—and again I am talking about all parties doing this, not just the Liberal Party. I want to see town meetings, and block meetings even in the high-rise districts, taking place in the local school, with real experts and the key people, the MP and the MPP, locally elected and appointed officials face-to-face with small numbers of electors, so that a real exchange can take place. People must not feel that government is too big for them, or we are all lost. We have to set up this feedback system now, and we have to keep it going.

Ten years ago, this would have been a hard job, but today, fortunately, the hypnotic effect of television is fading away, and TV is taking its place as a potentially useful tool for information and education, even as its escape function grows less important. We can get people to watch TV as the drama of real political activity unfolds in real time. And we can get them to break away, to do the one thing that TV cannot do, which is to work in reverse, and bring opinion and sentiments, mood and emotion, back to us, the elected representatives of the people.

Mr. Speaker, there are two other factors that we are going to have to develop. The idea of the ombudsman has got to come. I think that there will be many here who share my view that the elected member should have first chance at serving his constituents, but you and I know that, with the best will in the world he cannot do everything. He cannot correct every abuse. I see the ombudsman as a second line of defence enjoyed by the citizens against the inroads of big government—but I say this: his elected representative is, and must continue to be, his first line of defence.

What used to be known as fence-mending is now beginning to be recognized as sound strategy not only for the individual member but for the whole process of government. Fence-mending is the true antidote to remoteness, and if we all do our job here, all this talk of alienation on the part of the electors will be just that—talk without substance and fear without founadtion.

And the other factor that will hold the people against the threat of big government is local pride and civic pride and regional pride and finally provincial pride. We can relate these basic emotions one to another. We know they will be stronger the closer we come to home. But by skilful use of new chances for community participation, such as these ad hoc groups will afford, we can extend the pride that comes so naturally to us at the local level, until the county centre is no longer remote, but a natural outgrowth from our own firmly-rooted beginnings, and understood as such by everybody.

These coming years are going to be difficult ones. They are going to make calls upon people and there are going to be nervous stresses and strains because of the pace of change. Some people are going to be uprooted, and they are going to make a loud clamour. But change will not be halted. We all know that the larger units are coming, and we all know that none of us knows enough about the consequences upon people. It looks to me, Mr. Speaker, as though the young people will take it all in their stride. But my concern is to make sure that more mature people do not begin to withdraw their services simply because they cannot find a niche along the old lines of elective office.

Mr. Speaker, we are all entering upon these changes together, and we have only a limited number of ideas between us. That is why I want to make my Budget speech contribution a plea for understanding, mutual co-operation and a meaningful reception technique for Queen's Park—all in the interest of making democracy work better in this new age.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. R. G. Hodgson), moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): On Monday, Mr. Speaker, we will return to the order paper to deal among other things with the consideration of the liquor control board report, and the report of the workmen's compensation board, and other matters on the order paper. Should we finish that, we will go to the Budget debate, and should we finish that, we will go to estimates.

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves the adjournment of the House.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, last night when we adjourned, the House leader (Mr. Rowntree), informed us that we would be going into the Budget debate on Monday. Now, why has he changed —reverting to the order paper—these two orders?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, it is the wish of the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), that the order shall be followed as I have outlined it.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): We meet at 10:00 o'clock Monday, am I right?

Mr. Speaker: That is correct.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 2:00 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JULY 15, 1968

The House met at 10:00 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL ACT

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Executive Council Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker the Act simply changes the names of the Ministers and The Executive Council Act to conform with the changes we have made in the names of the departments.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY RETIREMENT ALLOWANCES ACT

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer) moves first reading of bill intituled, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Retirement Allowances Act.

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Speaker, under sections 1 and 2, the period of contribution for members and Ministers to be eligable for an allowance is reduced from 10 to five years.

Under section 3 at present, only widows or persons receiving or entitled to an allowance at time of death are entitled to a widow's allowance. The amendment extends this to widows of former and present contributors under 55 not receiving an allowance and gives the widow the same elections as the member would have had.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): The government should do the same for the widows under The Workmen's Compensation Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Provincial Secretary has a statement.

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, this would appear to be an opportune time to mention and commend a few recent and valuable contributions to the writings of Canada's history.

As all members of the House will know, Canadian history, as many of us have studied it, has revolved mainly around the concerns of the English and the French, both on this continent and on that of Europe, and neglected have been the histories of many other nationalities who migrated from their homelands to seek a better and a freer life in this land. Obviously their histories are part of our history—of Canada's history.

It should, therefore, be a source of satisfaction to all of us when scholars of other ethnic origins, equally proud of both their ancestry and of the contributions made by members of their race to the Canadian nation, choose to chronicle the histories of their people in Canada.

Three such histories newly published have just come to the attention of our department, "Slovaks in Canada", "History and Integration of Poles in Canada" and "Lithuanians Canada".

I am sure all members in the House will join with me in expressing appreciation to their authors and publishers for such important essential and permanent contribtuions to the history of our land's evolution.

"Slovaks in Canada", as its title suggests, is a comprehensive account of Slovak migrations to Canada, of the trials and successes the Slovak people have experienced here, and of their important contributions to our land.

Its author is Slovakian-born Dr. J. M. Kirschbaum, a former diplomat who has achieved great distinction in Canada as an editor, author, scholar and university professor of Slavic—Slovak studies. Its sponsor is the Canadian ethnic press association of Ontario.

The "History and Integration of Poles in Canada" stretches back to 1752 as it traces the broad spectrum of Polish particiaption in the Canadian community.

This book's author is William Boleslaus Makowski, a Polish war hero and scholar who immigrated to Canada after the second world war, received his MA from the University of Montreal and who is now engaged in teaching at Lakeport secondary school in my hometown of St. Catharines.

This thorough and highly readable history was published by the Canadian Polish congress of the Niagara peninsula.

The third historical contribution is entitled: "Lithuanians in Canada" and was co-authored by Father Gaida and a number of others—including Messrs. S. Kairys, J. Kardelis, J. Puzinas, A. Rinkunas and J. Sungails.

In describing the multitude of ways in which Lithuanians, and Canadians of Lithuanian stock, have contributed to our country's development, this book includes a host of excellent illustrations and a great number of thumb-nail sketches of prominent Lithuanian Canadians.

It is one, Mr. Speaker, in a series of similar histories being published under the general title: "Canada Ethnics." The series—the result of collaboration between the Canadian centennial commission and the Canada ethnic press federation—is designed to produce ethnic histories which are both scholarly and readable, useful to the general reader as well as to researchers.

If I have taken it upon myself to bring these publications to your attention today, it is because the portfolio I have the honour to hold encompasses citizenship. In administering it, I have become increasingly conscious—as I feel all Canadians should—of how people of diverse origins have contributed to the moulding of this splendid country, Canada.

In the warm after-glow of our centennial year, Mr. Speaker, we are all experiencing a deepening interest in Canada's past—and the varied pasts of its people of many origins.

For this reason, the histories I have described, and others like them, will undoubtedly prove of increasingly greater value to all Canadians in the years ahead.

Thanks to their authors' thoroughness and historical perspective, their writings are also a reminder that the freedom and democracy cherished here have been, and still are, denied to many other lands.

Let me quote from Dr. Kirschbaum's definitive study of the Slovaks in Canada:

> Slovaks in Canada belong to those ethnic groups which, under the leadership of the "founding races," became the building races of Canada. In proportion to their number, they contributed their share in the development of Canadian agriculture, mining industry and professional life, and during the past two decades have devoted their attention to culture, the arts, and education. They had to suffer and to fight, but they also largely used the benefits of freedom, the high standards and the economic and cultural opportunities which Canada generously offers to everyone who is willing to work hard, systematically and with a purpose in mind.

Such words, Mr. Speaker, increase our pride, I am sure, in our country and our gratitude to Canadians of Slovak and various other origins, for their contribution to it.

I would like to add that the fact that the authors of these histories have chosen to live among us, enriching our land by their academic and social achievements, is a compliment to all of us.

I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to have this occasion to pay tribute to these authors and to the various organizations which have sponsored or assisted in the publication of these works.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): May I ask the Provincial Secretary a question on that statement?

For the purpose of elucidating, I first want to associate this group with these histories. I think it gives a breadth and a depth and a dimension to our history which perhaps we have not had before. I was wondering—does the Provincial Secretary's Department pay any grants for histories of this nature?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, there are no direct grants from this department.

The Canadian ethnic press association of Ontario was the sponsor of the Slovak book, and, as I mentioned, the Lithuanian book was supported by the centennial commission as were a number of such publications last year.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Trade and Development.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Mr. Speaker, last week I received a question from the hon. member for Peterborough which I said I would answer, Question 781. He asked: "Could the Minister indicate how many centres originally rejected for designation of the equalization of industrial opportunity programmes have now been accepted under this programme?"

The answer is: The limited designations under the equalization of industrial opportunity programme is granted to the following municipalities: Brockville—approval for 100 jobs; Cornwall—approval for 150 jobs, and Orillia—approval for 80 jobs. In all three of these municipalities there had been a sufficient deterioration in the employment position to warrant a review of the original application.

Mr. Pitman: I would like to ask the Minister a supplementary question. Is it going to be the policy from now on to approve a community for a certain number of jobs? I do not think that was the nature of the original designation. I think it was a straight blanket designation and I notice in the Minister's reply that he mentions a certain number of jobs which the committee will be approved for.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Well, in the case of—let us use Orillia—the Moffatt company moved a plant out of there—about 45 jobs—down to Weston, and a toolmaker moved to Beaverton. They took 80 jobs out of the area, and they felt that they should have been designated. We said we would designate them and they got the 80 jobs back. They are on the borderline and, as I pointed out, when we put in the EIO programme we wanted to be as flexible as possible without departing too broadly from the concepts of the programme. We felt in some areas where it was a borderline case, we would say: "Okay, you are designated; you fill those jobs and then you are off until we look at the programme next June."

Mr. Speaker: Is there a question on this? The member for Windsor-Walkerville was on his feet earlier.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Premier. Is the Premier prepared to direct the various Ministers who are responsible for assistance cheques in the province to send such cheques at an earlier date this month, following the example of the hon. John C. Munro, Minister of National Health and Welfare, due to the possibility of a postal strike in the near future.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We have already sent out some cheques in advance of the date in light of the possibility of a postal strike. We have also made other arrangements to ensure that we are able to conduct the business of the province. The shortness of the time between reception of the question and right now has not permitted me to get the detail of what we have done. But I would be very happy to furnish this information to the House because we have rather an elaborate programme set up based on our experience in the last postal strike.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I have a question of the Provincial Secretary.

During the current strike in the brewing industry, wherein two breweries are still producing beer, would the Minister inform the House what the price is of 24 bottles sold at retail to a member of the public at Sudbury by Doran's Brewery Limited, and at Formosa by the Formosa Springs Brewery Limited?

If there is a variation in the prices aforesaid, then for what reason does it exist in a government monopoly?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am unable to answer the member's questions this morning. I will take it as notice and will attempt to get that information for him tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Will the Minister extend the jurisdictional area on the ban on the use of DDT recently announced by the federal government to include all sales in Ontario?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member for Wentworth, the government of Canada has full jurisdiction over registration and sale of DDT in Canada.

I am aware of the recent ban on the use of DDT in our national parks. We in Ontario took similar action in our provincial parks as early as 1966.

Mr. Deans: Could I ask a supplemental question?

What I am interested in finding out is whether or not you have yet completed the studies that I asked about sometime earlier in the session and whether the answers to them have varified or denied the need to ban the sale and use of DDT in this province?

Mr. Speaker: Well that question appears to be quite different from the original one. If the Minister is not able to accept it, perhaps he would let the member have the information privately.

The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Trade and Development.

What are the department's plans for the renovations of the building purchased in Kirkland Lake for student housing? Will it be completed and ready for occupancy in time for the 1968-1969 school term?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice and get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet I think there was a question asked last week by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), about a question he placed with reference to housing for Indians.

I answered that on July 2. Your office has been asking for the information, so I just wanted to go on record as saying the question was answered on July 2.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

In the matter of the questions, I would like to address an enquiry to you since the House is now meeting at 10 o'clock. Two questions have been asked this morning which have been taken as notice. It leads one to suspect that in changing the hours of sitting of the House that the Premier and House leader did not consider this matter of dealing with questions. I put mine in as promptly after 9:00 o'clock as I could.

Mr. Speaker: Before 9:00 o'clock!

Mr. Sopha: Before 9:00 o'clock, thank you. Yes, I put it in immediately on arrival thinking it would afford an adequate opportunity for the Provincial Secretary to determine why a case of beer cost $4.72 in Sudbury and $4.46 in Formosa. Apparently it did not afford an adequate period of time.

Now in view of the early hour of sitting perhaps some accommodation could be made with regard to the questions. As a suggestion, it might be that 2:00 o'clock—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Order!

Mr. Sopha: I do not know the answer to the second part.

Mr. Speaker: The member is speaking to the matter of questions and not to a particular question; and he might confine himself to that.

Mr. Sopha: I was making a suggestion before the rude interruptions by the Minister of Mines (Mr. A. F. Lawrence), that perhaps 2:00 o'clock might be—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if the member would deal with the question he was posing to me and not bring in a question which has been asked and dealt with, he would not be interrupted either by a member or by the Speaker.

Mr. Sopha: The Minister of Mines; and it was a rude interruption.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Maybe it was a rude question.

Mr. Speaker: Order! Will the member please proceed with his remarks.

Mr. Sopha: May I make that suggestion that perhaps at 2:00 o'clock—if we were to ask the questions at the opening of the House—at that time it would afford an adequate opportunity for the Ministry to ascertain the answer.

Mr. Speaker: I will be most pleased to discuss the matter with the House leader.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that would be a solution. The whole problem of dealing with questions I do not think is affected by the fact that we may be sitting now. We have been sitting Friday mornings at 9:30 and the Friday morning questions come even earlier than these at 10:00 o'clock.

The procedure that we have been following through the whole session is that if it is a long involved question then the Minister would ask for it to be put on the notice paper and might take some weeks or even longer to get answers. If it is something that is coming from his department or from his officials then he takes it as notice and answers it as soon as he has the information, which is the next day.

So that just because these were taken as notice today does not mean that that answer will be any later than this time tomorrow morning, because we do not want to stack these questions up on the order paper. We would like to be able to answer all of them as soon as they are asked, but it simply is not always possible.

Therefore, I can assure the House that we will do our best to have the answers as rapidly as possible and will not cause any unnecessary delay, nor do we have any desire to withhold any of these answers unduly.

Mr. Sopha: I hope I get the answers before the strike is over.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before the orders of the day, once again in my capacity as Registrar General, may I advise the members of the House that the records of the Registrar General will show that on July 13 last the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Wells) and his wife Audrey became the proud parents of an infant daughter to be known as Beverley Gail Wells.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Provincial Secretary whether this is a private service to Cabinet Ministers, that we can expect to be extended to all members of the Legislature?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to announce any changes in the family of the member for York South.

Mr. Speaker: May I advise the members who are participants in the French classes that tonight will be the last French class for this session and it will be a test probably. The staff have asked that I request all possible to be there and they will endeavour to have you back in time for the evening session. I am informed that the instructors and staff will discuss with members the continuation of the classes and what can or should be done during the recess with respect to keeping the members fluent in French. So would those members who are taking French please do their best to turn out tonight?

Orders of the day.

THE TERRITORIAL DIVISION ACT

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs) moves second reading of Bill 169, An Act to amend The Territorial Division Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE MUNICIPAL TAX ASSISTANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves second reading of Bill 170, An Act to amend The Municipal Tax Assistance Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE DRAINAGE ACT, 1962-1963

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves second reading of Bill 171, An Act to amend The Drainage Act, 1962-1963.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF RED LAKE

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves second reading of Bill 173, An Act respecting the township of Red Lake.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF CHARLOTTENBURGH

Hon. Mr. McKeough moves second reading of Bill 174, An Act respecting the township of Charlottenburgh.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Minister if these bills are the usual ones that are brought in session by session to correct actions taken by the municipalities that did not at the time conform with the requirements?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is correct.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I make the additional comment that the dereliction from close attendance to the regulations then is twofold; in the first place, the clerk and members of the council did not know that they had to get the approval of the municipal board and secondly, apparently they did not know the regulations regarding private bills.

So the government then has to repair two deficiencies. If that is so, then may one ask what steps the government is taking to bring to the attention of the appropriate people the necessity for compliance with the law of the land?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, Mr. Speaker, they realized, I think a month or two months ago, that they would have to go by way of a private bill. We continually keep informed to the best of our ability and the best of the ability of the local municipalities to receive such information, we continually pass on to them our concern that they do all things in a legal and correct manner, but with 900 and some odd municipalities sometimes they slip up.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY ACT

Hon. R. S. Welch (Provincial Secretary) moves second reading of Bill 176, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 3rd order, resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the Chair and the House resolve itself into committee of ways and means.

Mr. Speaker: Is the member for Thunder Bay prepared?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): When rising to speak to the Budget debate, the first thing that I would like to mention is the lack of secondary industries in the north. I would like to relate to the House the adverse effect that the lack of industrial development is having on the population trends in the northern part of the province.

From the 1966 census covering the populations for the five-year period from 1961 to 1966, the population of Ontario increased over the five-year period by 11.6 per cent, the city of Fort William increased by 6.6 per cent, Port Arthur 6.8 per cent, Timmins .1 per cent. North Bay showed a drop of .6 per cent. They had a decrease in population of 146 over the five-year period.

Sudbury had an increase of 6 per cent, Kenora had an increase of 3.6 per cent, while Metropolitan Toronto had an increase of 16.2 per cent.

As I mentioned before, the overall increase in population in the five-year period for the province as a whole was 11.6 per cent. Hamilton was 13.8 per cent, London was 14.4 per cent, Windsor was 9.5 per cent, and Peterborough 19.1 per cent. So you can see that the population growth for the five-year period from 1961 to 1966 showed Ontario ahead by 11.6 per cent, Metro Toronto by 16.2 per cent, the widwest by 14.2 per cent, Niagara by 10.2 per cent, eastern Ontario 8.7 per cent, northwestern Ontario 3.2 per cent and Northeastern Ontario 2.1 per cent.

Now, surely this is proof that northern Ontario is lagging far behind the rest of the province when one considers that the Lakehead cities, Port Arthur and Fort William, which enjoyed the largest population increase of any centre in northern Ontario, was still over 40 per cent behind the provincial average. Their increase was less than half the growth registered in Hamilton, Toronto, London and Peterborough.

Now many of our northern towns actually had a drop in population, a trend which will continue unless this government takes immediate action.

When one takes a look at wages, a comparison of weekly wages and salaries, according to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, show that the average weekly wage across the province was $110.08 as of March of 1968. Toronto was $111.52, Hamilton was $113.67, Peterborough was $112.90 and Windsor was $121.27—while the Lakehead was $103.06 and Timmins $100.79. The provincial average increased by 6 per cent in 1968 over 1967, while the Lakehead's increase was only 2.6 per cent.

Recently the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) talked about how Canada should have a billion dollar development fund which would be used to help overcome some of the basic regional inequalities which have haunted confederation since 1867. While this was typical Robarts talk instead of Robarts action, it at least underlines a crucial, important proposition. If he were to take just a small portion of that billion dollars and earmark it for a regional development programme, that would really bring growth to the north. He would be making a far more concrete contribution to the unity within his own province.

Now I do not hold with northern Ontario separatism. Self-defeating as it would be in Quebec, it would be hopelessly so up in northern Ontario. I believe our future is with Ontario—an Ontario that cares about us. I want to see the north fully integrated into the life and future of this province. I want us in the north drawing benefits from this close association, just as we have already contributed so much by way of our resources, our people and the great potential of our land. But I know that this can only be done by assigning to regional development and particularly development in the north the very highest of priorities.

Now, I would like to quote, Mr. Speaker, and it is quite apt that I should be speaking about northern Ontario at a time when the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Jessiman) happens to occupy the chair. I think he will be particularly interested in the quote I am going to make from the June 19 edition of the News Chronicle. It mentions: "New Mine Cannot Still Northwest Propaganda" and it deals with the opening of the Griffith mine.

> The official dedication of the Griffith mine of the Steel Company of Canada in the Bruce Lake area Monday was an event of real importance to north-western Ontario. The launching of a $62 million project that will employ about 350 men on a full-time basis, and carry an annual payroll of more than $2 million is an important addition to the economic sinews of this great area.
> The formation of a model and thriving community of from 2,500 to 4,000 persons at Ear Falls provides what could be a new stepping stone for further permanent and profitable advances into north-western Ontario's wilderness areas.
> In his speech at the luncheon, Premier Robarts opened by citing the case of a visitor who asked how government can possibly do anything effective about the further development of the rich natural resources of Ontario which we politicians so frequently talk about. Later on in his speech, when stressing the contribution of the operation of the new mine and pelletizing plant would make it to the area's economy, Mr. Robarts said: "At Queen's Park we are frequently told that the government is neglecting the people and the resources of northern Ontario. I am sure it was such propaganda which caused the visitor to whom I referred earlier, to question the ability of a government to participate effectively in the development of our natural resources.

Since when did legitimate complaints by residents of any part of the province about slow industrial growth deserve to be labelled as propaganda? Does Premier Robarts think he has vindicated himself in the eyes of north-western Ontario because a very welcome iron mining and pelletizing operation has come into production?

Of course, the Ontario government played some part in the development of this mining operation. It provided the original geological survey information which led to the staking of the property in 1953 by Lorne and Jack Dempster and Alex Mosher, who were working for an exploration company and it also provided an access road. How much less could it do?

Are the people of the northern part of the province supposed to be humbly grateful because they have not beeen ignored entirely? The fundamental facts are that the millions of tons of ore have been there since the beginning of time, the government did not put them there. Hardy prospectors staked the claims and farsighted, venturesome corporation executives, using imagination and a lot of private capital, brought the project through to completion.

When one is duck-hunting one goes where the ducks are; when people need huge supplies of iron ore to feed steel mills, they start looking where big iron ore deposits are indicated. The role of the government in all of this is very small indeed.

The Premier's speech tended to blur the issue. The "propaganda" that has been coming from north-western Ontario has been chiefly centered around the lack of assistance to develop secondary industries in which the employment quotient is much higher than in primary area industries. If these complaints were nothing but "propaganda," why then did Mr. Robarts try to silence them with a forgivable loan plan to encourage secondary industry, and announce it at a meeting here just before last autumn's provincial election?

The announcement was too little and too late. It included the whole province, except those parts that had already been recognized as designated areas by the federal government, and was belatedly unfurled after almost 800 industries had settled in areas where prior incentives had been offered. Too much cream had been scooped off to permit the forgivable loan plan to be very nourishing for north-western Ontario. It has produced almost negligible results.

The Griffith mine is certainly a welcome addition to north-western Ontario's economy, but credit for it belongs mainly to providence for putting the ore there and to provide enterprise for finding it and getting it out, not the government.

If Premier Robarts thinks such fine developments in the field of primary industry > are going to answer the propaganda of the people of north-western Ontario for more action to induce secondary industries to establish in north-western Ontario, then he is mistaken. The defeat of two of his Cabinet Ministers in the north at the last election should convince him of this.

Now I feel that the second century holds great promise for northern Ontario if we can unlock the treasure chest of our rich natural resources and speed industrial growth. But this will not be accomplished without an overall plan for development and positive action of government. The day of piecemeal and patchwork policies for the north-west is past. Only an integrated approach will provide the physical and economic condition for growth and the conditions of life necessary to attract and retain a growing population.

In the Legislature I have already outlined some of the policies which I think the Ontario government should make part of a package for north-western development. They include the following seven points:

Commencement of a second natural gas pipeline with an all-Canadian route through northern Ontario this summer in order to insure both northern and southern Ontario of adequate supplies of this fuel, and to insure that we retain full control over this important transportation link between western and eastern Canada.

Development of an overall transportation policy for the northwest to insure that rail, air and road services are integrated and adequate for industrial and tourist growth.

Improvement of communications so that no northern community is without telephone, radio and TV services, and to facilitate the extension of these services to more areas.

Policies for increasing the yield from our forests, and establishing more forest-based industries.

A Crown corporation to join in exploration for new mines, more processing of minerals at home and a better financial deal for mining municipalities.

Improvements in health, education and other services to provide quality of opportunity for our northern citizens.

Assistance in the development of our vast potential for recreation and tourism.

Now, when one looks at the surveys that have already been taken of the potential of the north and the problems that are inherent due to the great distances, I had occasion recently to read an article by Mr. Norman Simpson of Acres Limited and T. W. Kierans, a mining engineer, who is now with Churchill Falls Corporation. Some of the observations that he made regarding the possibilities and the potential in the north I think are well worth relating to this House.

Today we are embarking on a new age where science and technology can open up rich, but inhospitable areas and make them hospitable and productive. World populations are growing at record rates, and northern Ontario is a vast empty space crying for development. Geographically, economically, politically and militarily we are situated in the heart of world power. There are many regions in our north, each with its own characteristics and wide divergencies in climate, landscape and economic riches.

The degree of isolation between regions is much greater than in the south and is the result of great distances, the terrain, lack of access of transportation and a small, sparsely distributed population.

Most of these problems can be overcome. Economically, there is every reason for the potential of northern Ontario to be realized. The research know-how is available. When will we start to use it? We have a social and moral obligation to bring northern Ontario into productive circulation. Canada is a resource-base nation which could support many times its present population.

The very extensive part of the Canadian Shield, north and west of the Great Lakes and James Bay, is generally recognized to have similar and closely related social and economic problems, as well as resources, industrial and municipal development problems.

The co-ordination of comprehensive regional planning of this area of northern Ontario is vital to all its residents, to all of Ontario and to all of Canada.

When we realize the extent of the movement of our population towards the large urban centres in the south, it becomes apparent that there is a danger of losing our distinctive northern character and identity by assimilation with large centres of population south of the border.

Because of the scarcity of well planned urban centres across the north we have a division between eastern and western provinces which is not being bridged, as it should be, to provide a continuous and strong line of east-west development.

If we fail to decentralize our development we will only aggravate further, the problem of land, water and air pollution in southern Ontario. We will soon begin to pay dearly for the misuse of arable land for heavy industry, transportation corridors, transmission and pipelines. We are guilty of mismanagement and acting in an irresponsible way when we fail to use the large northern areas of our province for the purpose for which they are best suited.

We must plan large urban areas in the north which are well located and suitable for industrial development in the area. They must be designed to be more attractive, functionally, economically, socially and culturally than large centres in the south. The most advanced technology must be used, and they must be designed and located in such a manner that we will make the best possible use of a permanent industrial base and regional influences.

The cost will be large, but so is the cost of our present unplanned northern development. The emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act cost Canadians over $130 million in the last 20 years. Make-work projects such as roads which do not fit into an overall plan for northern development are costly and wasteful. When these are added to the waste of human and other resources in the south, the situation is intolerable.

Now, what has this year's Budget done for the people of northern Ontario? This government has increased taxes on the average family by $125, but left corporations untouched. They have refused assistance to deserving public service agencies, and are giving $1.8 million to the horse racing industry. They did little to assist municipalities with their financial problems, but gave our cost of living another boost. They have increased licence fees on the enjoyment of our natural resources and raised our hospital and health insurance premiums. Times are changing in Ontario, and it is time that the Budget changed with them.

We in the Legislature representing northern Ontario are not here begging for a handout. We are not down here with cap in hand asking for charity. To have the north represented as an area dependent for its existence on the bounty of the south is completely erroneous, and much damage has been done by the spread of such a false view. Without the mining and forest industries and all that they mean, southern Ontario's prosperity would soon be shown to be an empty façade.

One out of every three dollars earned by Canada in foreign exchange comes from mining, and the same holds true for the forest products industry. Who supplies a goodly portion of the traffic on the St. Lawrence Seaway? The mining and forest industries.

The north has supported southern enterprise for far too long. We in northern Ontario want our share of the economic pie. What about a smelter in Timmins? A steel plant at the lakehead? Both would attract secondary industries. What about a meaningful integrated forest management policy that would utilize to a much greater extent our forest potential? What about a complete review of our transportation and communication facilities in the north? Isolation and distances are no longer valid excuses for inaction in our advanced technological age.

Comprehensive studies must be made to evaluate the potential near existing population centres such as Geraldton, Nipigon, Beardmore, and Blind River before they become ghost towns, their life line cut for want of an economic base.

I invite, once again, members of all parties representing northern ridings to join with me in working out proposals for an imaginative programme to end the years of neglect. The time for pious platitudes and empty promises has passed. Now is the time for decisive action by governments, both at Queen's Park and Ottawa, and openly I extend an invitation to all members representing ridings in northern Ontario to join with me in bringing the message down here to Queen's Park for a kind of programme that will be meaningful and helpful to the people of northern Ontario and that is an open invitation.

Mr. R. T. Potter (Quinte): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity today to speak on the Budget, and as a new member, with my perception still unblunted by exposure to House proceedings, I would like to give my impression of the performance of this Legislature for the past five months.

Also, at the risk of being considered naive and perhaps an upstart, I would like to make a few suggestions for changes that I feel are badly needed.

I believe that the present session will probably be remembered as one of the most boring and least productive sessions regarding time that this House has ever witnessed. The time allotted to discuss the estimates has been used by far too many members as a means of appealing to the local press and electorate, with a complete disregard for the actual estimates under discussion.

The conduct of one particular member of this Legislature has been an embarrassment to the whole House and what is worse, a great impediment to the successful conclusions of the business of the House.

Sifting through the verbiage of Hansard we find a great deal of criticism of all government departments. By far the largest part of the criticism is unfounded, but there still remains—

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore) That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): The hon. member is not serious, is he?

Mr. Potter: If the unofficial Opposition would contain themselves for a few minutes perhaps they would let me carry on.

There still remains some of the constructive nature that I think must be carefully examined. Changes must be considered if we, as members of this Legislature, are to serve the electorate efficiently. To avoid adding to the already too many hours of speech making that we are forced to listen to, I will summarize the conclusions that I have reached during this, my first session in the House of Commons.

I think most of us will agree that a new approach should be taken to the rules and regulations of the House, and another such session of superfluous debate, particularly during the estimates, will not be allowed by the House leader.

Upon reviewing the discussions of the estimates of the departments, I would like to make several suggestions for consideration.

In The Department of Health, I would again suggest that we endeavour to provide better medical facilities in a more economical manner, and I refer to my remarks made in Hansard during my maiden speech, in order not to belabour the point any further this morning. I will merely say that I hope very shortly we will be considering convalescent wings to be attached to all of our active treatment hospitals. I hope that we will see better and more chronically ill facilities provided in the province. I hope that we will find, before long, that we are able to cover, under Ontario hospital services insurances, care in nursing homes and in chronically ill homes.

I believe that we must become more concerned with the training of medical personnel, and I think that we must employ every possible means to ensure an increased flow of properly trained doctors throughout the province. We have heard complaints during the debates on the estimates on the shortage of doctors in the northern part of the province. It is practically impossible to induce people to go there when work is available in other parts in the south.

Two weeks ago, I checked with the assistant dean at the University of Toronto, and he assured me that at the present time our six-year course in medicine is now broken down into two years pre-medical training and four years medicine. And for the pre-medical course this year, first year pre-medical course, they accepted 135 applicants out of 400 students that graduated from grade 13.

After they finish their two years pre-medical training, they must again apply to get into the four-year medical course. And this year they accepted 175 applicants out of 1,000 applications. So, it is perfectly obvious that we have to increase our facilities for training personnel before we are going to have enough doctors to supply the province.

With regard to The Department of Social and Family Services, again I would like to refer to my remarks at the time of the estimates. I think the department should take an entirely new look at the whole problem of assistance. I believe that we must develop a system of rehabilitation of the individual rather than offering more financial aid.

I think we can do this by developing a tremendous public works programme, and it is not hard to look around and see how this can be developed to put these people to work. In this area, I believe our government should be urging the federal government to bring their income tax legislation up to date. In other words, I would suggest to our new Prime Minister: "Let us put pragmatism into practice."

At the time the income tax was first instituted, the plan was to tax that amount of income that was not necessary to provide the basic essentials of life. And that was when the $1,000 exemption was established. I think in this day and age, it is time that the $1,000 exemption was raised to a realistic level so that people are prepared to work and provide their own facilities instead of being given a "hand-out". As far as the group of individuals who are unable to work is concerned, I think our social and family services should provide a pension which will allow them to live with a little dignity and respect.

In The Department of Transport, I feel that there should be a re-assessment of the unsatisfied judgment fund. Once again, I say, let us replace this with a compulsory automobile insurance of probably $100,000 basic coverage. By this step, we could reduce our budget by approximately $2 million; the $982,000 which is the estimated cost of running the plan, and the $1 million or so which is paid out over and above the amount collected by the participants. Also, in this department, I would hope to see a much more concerted effort to remove dangerous and mechanically unsound vehicles from the highways.

We have heard resolutions concerning the standard building code throughout the province. And after viewing recently constructed homes and apartments in various parts of the province, I believe it is self-evident that a standard building code is not only a must but is long overdue.

During the estimates, much was said about the air and water pollution problem. Here again, I believe the department cannot be too stringent in enforcing the regulations. Indeed, I believe the regulations could be tightened up. And, if we are to accomplish our goal, we must be very definite and very strictly enforce existing legislations. It is not good enough to say this to a municipality, that you will build a first-stage treatment plant which will remove 65 per cent of the sewage because you cannot afford any more.

I suggest it is just as effective to suggest that a man being shot by a hundred bullets, and missed by 65 of them, is in good condition. The results of the 35 per cent pollution of our water can be just as fatal. And, Mr. Speaker, the 35 per cent that has been left in many cases is the amount of pollution that caused our waterways to get in this condition in the first place, before the area expanded. And so I would suggest to the hon. Minister, "Let us get cracking on our pollution problem."

Lastly, there has been criticism of The Attorney General's Department and the police in general. For some years now, I have been anticipating the day when policemen will be formally trained before they are put out on a beat. I understand that plans are now being made and considered for basic training for policemen to be carried on and provided by the college of applied arts and technology. If they receive basic training at these schools, then subsequent advanced training in various specialties of police work could be carried on at the special police colleges.

These then, Mr. Speaker, are a few changes that I, as a new member of the Legislature, have felt should be given some consideration. I believe that such changes would make Ontario even a better place to stand. Thank you.

Mr. Lawlor: Mr. Speaker, may I say right off that I shall spare you, as the session has gone on some length. I feel that while I had taken some time to prepare a talk in the Budget which would be a Budget talk, in other words directly connected with the economic affairs of this province, with particular reference to the incidence and range of poverty in Ontario, I think I shall place that matter over for future usage. The poverty will not get any better while I am waiting and it will expedite matters somewhat.

I would like to make a statement or two as to the general tenure and the feeling of the House, being a new member, as we come toward the close of the session. Far from the position taken by the previous member who spoke, I feel that this has been a most fruitful and invigorating session; the give and take across the House has been of high quality; the witticism has been intense; and the amount of work we have actually accomplished has been of some considerable value. I do not think I am prejudiced, being a lawyer, by saying that I would myself consider that perhaps the most important matters that have come before us are the problems with respect to the administration of justice, the taking over of the problems of this realm and, secondly, the reformation of certain of our most fundamental courts, the family and magistrates' courts which have the greatest impact on the lives of our people.

We can look forward to goodly things in this regard; perhaps the session has been, and I do not doubt, weak in economic affairs again. But then the Tory government is always weak in economic affairs and it is rather to be expected that the adjectival phase of our endeavours is bringing forward great éclat. But in these other realms there is a great deal to be both anticipated and hoped for. "Hope lies eternal in the human breast; man never is but always to be blessed." Such is the case in the Legislature of Ontario.

However, there is the prospect of our future, too, either in the new session or within the terms of this one, the touching of the mountain of work that is being imposed upon us, which does cut a little into one's Budget speech, you know. I am talking about the hearings that are going on throughout the week in a massive way with the Smith committee and the numerous briefs that are coming before us—some of them four or five in a single day. I notice six of them coming up tomorrow, one being the International Nickel brief, which in itself could consume several days of solid argumentation, but I suppose these things must be borne.

The last thing I would like to say is that, if one is a bear for work in this Legislature, the Legislature will certainly reward that person. There is an avalanche of possibilities and the necessity to handle numerous important affairs. It is with grace and delight that I say that I have been given a considerable role. I have been delighted in doing it and I hope it continues. As our knowledge and efficiency and incisivness and way of presenting argument increases and grows — we become more at home in this assembly, and are, therefore, able to penetrate through in a better way, despite the thickness of the skulls, the possibilities, for one's own personal feelings of accomplishment in this assembly which is rather diminished by the reception that one often received by the absence of members on too great a scale, if I may say so, on the other side of the fence over there. And there was a question of—I can only construe it as indifference or ignorance with respect to our affairs. They simply do not want to know.

In any case, it serves their purpose as well, in most instances, not to be here. I said that at the beginning of this session, I say it again and have noticed it throughout. I think it is high time that something was said by the press of this province, touching this particular aspect of our affairs.

But apart from these few brief remarks, I shall save the economic portion to the next session.

Mr. Reilly moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 15th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): My statement this morning will be rather brief, Mr. Chairman.

On this, the second occasion on which it has been my privilege to present the estimates of The Treasury Department, I can report major progress on the reorganization designed to meet the growing challenge of maintaining simultaneous growth and stability in the economy of Ontario. These changes are reflected in the estimates before you.

I will not discuss at length Ontario's economic position, since this was done in the budget speech. However, let me refer briefly to the province's economic goals to provide perspective for the reorganization.

One of the more important targets set for the period 1967-1970 was a 5.5 per cent annual increase in our gross provincial product. Since 1963, our annual average has exceeded this target, at 5.8 per cent per annum, but the actual rate of growth has been uneven. Last year, in constant dollars, it was 3.7 per cent, reflecting a period of consolidation after too-rapid expansion.

By fostering optimum use of the province's resources, we hope to smooth out the growth rate and thereby avoid the problems of uneven development. At the same time, we want not only to maintain, but increase our annual growth beyond our original target. To do so, work must be done in a number of interrelated fields.

Hon. members will be aware of some of the important government programmes which require economic and fiscal research and planning, with the considerable statistical back-up which this activity entails. These include:

(a) The provincial economic development programme, the significance of which was stressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) a year ago, and which involves a review of all existing programmes and policies assessed within the framework of a province-wide economic policy;

(b) The regional development programme, whose success will depend upon the extensive analysis of socio-economic trends now being pinpointed to an exhaustive degree;

(c) Federal-provincial tax sharing arrangements which require detailed research toward co-ordination of federal-provincial fiscal policy and establishment of adequate mechanism for joint priority-setting;

(d) Other important aspects of federal-provincial relations by which this government can contribute to a dynamic and contemporary federalism;

(e) The reform of our tax system involving, not only the essential restructuring of our provinvial and municipal sources of revenue, but also the integration of changes at these levels with any reforms undertaken at the federal level, to develop equitability in the total tax burden our citizens must bear and to ensure adequate resources for each jurisdiction to meet its responsibilities.

The reorganization of Treasury Department is designed to weld together these closely related activities, thereby enabling us to apply a sophisticated approach to the development of fiscal and economic policy.

Our considerations in the federal-provincial field are becoming increasingly complex. Both the Prime Minister and I have discussed, from time to time, the critical problem of balancing taxation resources and expenditure responsibilities among our senior governments in order to achieve a viable federalism. The need for priority considerations, new revenue allocations and even re-examination of constitutional responsibilities grows more acute under the pressures of urbanization and technological advance.

A new and disturbing dimension to this problem is being raised by public discussion on the establishment of more direct lines between Ottawa and the municipalities in such critical areas as transportation and housing. There are a number of indications that the municipalities, recognizing the strictures on our provincial budget, are looking toward the federal government for financial assistance. It is clear, too, in the policies which the federal government has been proposing at recent federal-provincial meetings that Ottawa is anxious to enhance its relationship with the municipalities, notwithstanding the fact that, constitutionally, the municipalities are the creatures of the province.

This interesting twist to federal-provincial relationships, I suggest, results entirely from the deficiencies of federal-provincial tax sharing arrangements. The requirements of the municipalities can be met only by the provinces as a result of more equitable sharing of federal-provincial tax resources. The evident interest by Ottawa in dealing directly with municipalities in areas of financial assistance would indicate the ability of the federal government to channel this assistance through the provincial governments in the form of further abatement of personal and corporation income taxes. This is a position that has long been advanced by Ontario.

The temptation to jump constitutional boundaries in reaching for temporary solutions to long-term problems is understandable. Its attendant hazards, however, are costly duplications of machinery, personnel, research and other programme components, in addition to the creation of further confusion and frustration over the delineration of governmental responsibilities.

Ontario's efforts will continue to concentrate on the development of co-ordinating machinery required for a harmonious and effective federalism. Our reorganization of Treasury Department relates precisely to this objective.

The legislation which I have submitted to this House to create a Department of Treasury and Economics will enable us to concentrate our efforts on this broad and enlightened approach toward economic and social growth.

Within this proposed new department, identified in these estimates under the block heading of finance and economics, are the policy planning division, economic and statistical services division, finance division and government accounts division.

The policy planning division is comprised of five branches. Its general office provides an economic policy adviser, who is available for consultation with all economists in government and with the Ontario economic council, and who maintains close liaison with the economic council of Canada.

Main function of the taxation and fiscal policy branch is the development of mechanisms for co-ordinating and applying economic and fiscal policies. Its responsibilities include recommendations for the annual Budget statement and papers, reform of the tax system and continuing research and analysis of all aspects of intergovernmental relations bearing on Ontario's economic and fiscal capacity. In the development of co-ordinated federal-provincial fiscal policy, it has already begun the task of placing the provincial Budget in a national-accounts framework which the Smith committee recommends "to permit the economic analyses necessary for effective development of fiscal policy".

This branch will undertake the preparatory work for the government's proposed white paper on tax reform, develop Ontario's position on tax-sharing agreements and examine implications of tax structure reform at the federal level.

The economic planning branch is responsible for aggregate analysis of the Ontario economy for the Prime Minister's development programme. Its tasks include forecasting, establishing targets, identifying problem areas and analyzing major developments in significant sectors of the economy. It will have close contact with economic research in other departments and will work closely with the taxation and fiscal policy and regional development branches.

The regional development branch is moving ahead rapidly on the three-stage programme of design for development. Assisted by the 10 regional development councils and advisory boards, as well as extensive research support from our universities, it will be developing specific, detailed plans for the province and for each region in 1969. The special study of the Niagara escarpment, which the Prime Minister announced in March 1967 and for which this branch is responsible, will be completed this year.

The federal-provincial affairs secretariat provided major support during the past fiscal year for three key developments highlighting Ontario's contribution toward a second-century federalism: the confederation of tomorrow conference, the federal-provincial conference of Prime Ministers and premiers, and co-ordination of the task forces investigating implementation in Ontario of the recommendations of the first volume of the report of the Royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. The secretariat will be heavily involved in proposing positive suggestions for the structure and operation of Canadian federalism.

The economic and statistical services division is supplying basic economic data, statistical series, current economic indicators and analytical models to the policy planning division and to other government departments.

Its economic analysis branch will carry out quantitative analysis and provide a current economic intelligence service. It is preparing the first input-output table for the Ontario economy, as well as an econometric programme designed to formulate, estimate and test econometric models. The demographic section will assess the economic and social impact of changing factors in our human resources.

The Ontario statistical centre will continue its work of co-ordinating administrative statistics for the use of all government researchers. It is working towards a general purpose information system, consistent with the data requirements of research organizations.

The systems and programming branch has been formed to improve the flow and quality of information in the department, by analyzing, designing, and overseeing the implementation of computer-based systems.

To help implement the fiscal policy decisions, the finance division and government accounts division have been integrated into the finance and economics area.

As hon. members are aware, the finance division is responsible for supervision and administration of the public debt, the management of sinking funds and the administration of the capital aid corporations. Its finance management branch co-ordinates cash flow and supervises all investment practices.

In addition to its traditional functions, the government accounts division is now responsible for the creation of new financial management information systems within the context of programme budgeting. It has instituted a government accounting methods branch, which will supply accounting expertise, research and a training ground for accounting officers in all government departments.

An annual saving of $275,000 is anticipated from the establishment of a computer services centre which appears in these estimates for the first time. It replaces the former financial systems computing centre of The Treasury Department and the Ontario computer centre which previously was in The Department of Economics and Development. The computer services centre reports to a board of five deputy Ministers representing the five departments which share this facility.

Thus, in the finance and economics area, or what will become the new Department of Treasury and Economics, are assembled the economic and fiscal planners, the essential statistical and economic analysts on which this planning must be based, and the accounting and investment management experts who will assist in the formulation of government policies.

In my June 5 statement on the legislation proposing to create two departments out of the present Treasury Department, I outlined the concerns for both efficiency and individual rights in the administration of taxation statutes which prompted the government's decision to create a new Department of Revenue.

I do not intend to review the existing departmental structure of our revenue area, since few major changes have taken place in its organization. However, there has been further refinement and more progress on which I will touch briefly.

With the modernization of systems in revenue branches and the greater utilization of the computer, it has been possible to eliminate certain administrative procedures and transfer staff from routine duties to more productive functions. The result has been better supervision, more effective controls and improved management reporting. Even though the volume of work has been increasing quite sharply, it has not been necessary to make comparable increases in staff.

I am pleased to report that the administrative division has added only three (staff) members to provide services to some two hundred additional people who joined Treasury with the office of the chief economist. This division also supplies administrative services to the treasury board secretariat, Ontario racing commission, pension commission and computer services centre.

The legal services branch provides advice to all components of Treasury Department, including boards and commissions reporting to the Treasurer. This requires a particular expertise, ranging, for example, from the highly technical advice needed by the revenue division to the drafting of legislation for the pension commission. The responsibilities of this branch will increase with the legislative and administrative consequences of anticipated tax reforms.

Deposits in the Ontario savings office reached an all-time high in the past year. On March 31, 1968, they were $85.5 million, an increase of $7.5 million over deposits on the same date last year. The savings office attempts to remain reasonably competitive with the chartered banks. Its rate of interest to depositors was raised to 5 per cent per annum on April 1. Premises are being renovated: Of the 21 branches, 11 have been modernized or are in process of renovation, eight are considered satisfactory for the present, and the remaining two will receive consideration when new leases are negotiated.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): What about the one in this building?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That may be one of the eight to which I made reference.

I anticipate that the hon. members have more than a sporting interest in the vote on the Ontario racing commission. I will be pleased to provide a comprehensive statement on the proposed distribution of funds when this vote comes before the committee.

The committee is aware that the pension committee of Ontario has provided significant leadership to other jurisdictions in developing programmes similar to the one this province has pioneered. It promotes a high degree of uniformity in pension legislation and maximum co-ordination among pension authorities in other provinces. In the fourth annual report of the commission, tabled on May 8, members were informed that it has approved close to 10,000 plans covering almost 800,000 employees in Ontario.

Turning to the Treasury board secretariat, I want to report on the continuing development of programme budgeting, or the planning, programming and budgeting (PPB) system, as it is known in professional circles. This move has been under way for close to two years and, as I have indicated previously, will involve very substantial changes in administrative procedures.

The aim of programme budgeting is to provide essential support for the decision-making process which, with growing demands and restricted resources, becomes an ever-more complex but vital task. We must delegate more day-to-day decision to managers of programmes but we must ensure that Ministers and the executive council are always in control of any developing situations. As time goes on, we expect to provide the Legislature with expenditure data more closely resembling commercial cost accounting practices.

To do this, however, we have to design and establish a programme structure and a financial information system which is new to parliamentary government and unique to Ontario's needs. We cannot borrow a set of procedures from another jurisdiction even if it was available. As it is, we are among the leaders in the field. Even the federal governments in Ottawa and Washington, who started considerably before Ontario, have not by any means completed the change-over.

We are working with the federal government and our sister provinces to develop common standards and uniform terminology for appropriate intergovernmental planning and communication in this field. Indeed at a recent meeting of the federal-provincial continuing committee on fiscal and economic matters, Ontario was invited to chair a sub-committee on programme budgeting for this purpose. Similarly, one of our officials is presently on leave of absence to work on programme budgeting for an agency of the United Nations in Geneva.

Establishment of a programme review branch in the programme and estimates division of the secretariat is associated with the development of programme budgeting. Intially, it will design and co-ordinate the many facets of management orientation and administrative procedures. An orientation seminar for senior officers was held June 7 and 8. We have now started a systematic training programme of key personnel and we expect that next year some modest change will be evident in the format of the estimates presented to this House.

The system will provide all departments with better tools to review and re-evaluate periodically their complete programme against their basic objectives. Cost-benefit studies of alternative courses of action can be submitted for examination by Treasury board. It will be the ongoing responsibility of the programme review branch to guide departments in the techniques of cost-benefit studies and to review submissions for Treasury board. During these reviews we expect to deal with the more fundamental aspects of programmes and their constituent activities.

While the PPB system is perhaps the most dramatic undertaking of the government in the area of management improvement, it is by no means the only one. The estimates provide for establishment of a management science branch in the advisory services division, which will make available to all government areas the valuable tools of operations research. This embodies the use of mathematical and scientific methods to assist management decision-making. Because specialists with skills and experience in this field are scarce, there is good reason for providing a central service upon which all departments may draw.

The other units or branches in the Treasury board secretariat continue to provide improved service both to the board and to departments and agencies. The organization and methods services branch has completed 85 major studies since its inception in 1961, and the ADP standards branch has completed 16 data processiing feasibility studies since its establishment in late 1965. More important, however, is the service-wide co-ordination of data processing which this latter branch provides to inhibit proliferation of ineffective and uneconomic computer installations and to promote use of shared facilities. The government now has five functionally-oriented computer centres, each of which services a number of departments or agencies.

The staff relations branch, which represents the government in negotiations, grievance procedures and other relations with employee associations, will expand to a staff of six including secretarial personnel. The workload of this branch has grown considerably as a result of increased collective bargaining activities within the public service, as well as outside the public service but in areas in which the government must ensure a co-ordinated approach.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, the Treasury board supervises and reviews all matters involving finance and administration for the executive council. It is served by a secretariat which is organizationally independent of all other departments, placing it in a position to advise the board with objectivity and to serve the operating departments with impartiality. With the growing size of our budgets and the increasing scope of government services, this task becomes increasingly complex. The estimates of the secretariat reflect the government's determination to meet the challenge. We are intensifying our efforts to co-ordinate all departmental programmes and to provide modern management concepts and techniques throughout the public service.

During the 1967-68 year, Treasury board met 82 times and I want to express my appreciation to the members who served during this period. These include my illustrious predecessor, the hon. member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. Allan), the hon. Attorney General and Minister of Justice (Mr. Wishart), the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) and the former Minister of Municipal Affairs. The present membership of the board consists of the hon. Ministers of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), Transport (Mr. Haskett), Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld), Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Welch) and the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Guindon).

Finally, Mr. Chairman, let me deal with the gross ordinary expenditure for 1968-69, which is forecast at $281 million. This consists of $49 million in departmental expenses and $232 million for expenditure related to public debt. This is an increase of $52 million over last year's estimate, of which $11 million is for departmental expenses and $41 million for public debt expenditure.

The departmental expenses figure, I know the hon. members are aware, includes expenditures made on behalf of the government as a whole. These are contributions to the public service superannuation fund, the legislative assembly retirement allowances account, the Canada pension plan and the employee group insurance plan, which amount to approximately $20 million. This leaves a figure of $29 million in the gross ordinary expenditure actually incurred in the operation of Treasury department.

In dealing with these estimates, Mr. Chairman, may I ask the indulgence of yourself and the hon. members in making one change in the sequence to avoid delay and inconvenience. I would be grateful if vote 2311, on the computer services centre, and any discussion on capital disbursements could be considered after vote 2306 and before we move into vote 2307 on the estimates for general administration of revenue.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the estimates of The Treasury Department of course, are perhaps as important as any that will be before us. The Provincial Treasurer, in his capacity in this department and associated with the Treasury board, has I would say, an expanding role of responsibility in influencing the policy of the government and the way in which our public funds are spent in these programmes.

Naturally, we have provided excellent facilities for him to carry on his work. The Frost building is one of the finest I would say, that has been built in the new complex. I have been interested to talk to some experts in this field and there are a variety of opinions, but it seems to me it is a very fine addition to the Queen's Park building complex. As a matter of fact, I have been waiting for the government to officially open it and have the former Premier down to preside.

He is, of course, very much in evidence these days and many of —

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): We did that.

Mr. Nixon: Did you have an opening? You did not ask us. Well, well, that is fine. I am glad to know that everything over there is even that official.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Well they have their own checking order.

Mr. Nixon: Oh yes, that is right. We may have to open it again when we change its name, but there are three or four specific items that I would like to draw to your attention, Mr. Chairman, before we deal with the votes specifically. Obviously the first one has to do with some of the recommendations made by the Royal commission on taxation. They were somewhat critical of the Minister's attempts to put before the Legislature and the people of Ontario, a proper, meaningful accounting of our fiscal business.

There are, as we all know, three main publications in which these matters are dealt with. The public accounts, which is put before us in a fairly large volume, is at least 18 months out of date when we consider it. Dealing with this one first—I wish I had the quote before me, unfortunately I do not just at this moment. The Royal commission said that they were quite surprised that, even though the volume was large, it did not contain the information that one would ordinarily expect. It did not contain the accounts of the government as a whole and the various agencies for which the government is solely responsible as far as their fiscal transactions are concerned. Included in this would be the hospital services commission, the Hydro commission and some others.

Obviously, if we were to undertake the accounting procedures recommended by the Royal commission, we would not have one volume of public accounts, but probably three. Nevertheless, the recommendation they make is that all of these accounts be brought together in an orderly fashion, probably indexed a little differently than they are so that people who are interested in these matters and somewhat expert—it is not designed, of course, to be used by the man in the street to examine the affairs of government, although it should be available to him—that we could improve on this considerably.

But the public accounts is the most useful volume we have. There are two other sources of information—the second one being the budget of the Minister, which is debated under another order of business. I have already discussed it in this House.

The third is the statement that is made under the direction of the Provincial Treasurer late in the fall which contained the information that he and his department had at that time as to the accounts in the previous fiscal year ending the March before the statement. Now, as I understand it, this method of making available to the Legislature and the people of Ontario the accounts of the province has remained remarkably unchanged for many years.

I admire the Treasurer's attempts to improve these estimates and I will deal with them a bit later. But in these estimates there have been sums over the past year amounting, I suppose, to something in excess of $10 million for improving the machinery that we use to keep our accounts. I refer specifically to the computers and the experts who use them in the business of government.

It would seem to me that if these computers are going to be put at the service of the Legislature and the people, that we could now move away from these three standard sources of fiscal information to a more up-to-date accounting of our business in the province. It might even be a monthly balance based on the budget that is brought down as it has been for time immemorial. In this way, we as members of the Legislature and anyone else in business or in other jurisdictions, would be able to see the state of our cash flow. We would be able to see how the policy of this government tends to increase public spending at certain periods in the year and cut it off at other periods in an effort to exert as useful a pressure as possible on the economy.

I would say very definitely that while the computer is obviously a tool that we must use in this province and are using to a greater and greater degree, it has so far not been put to the use of the Legislature in keeping us informed as to the state of the business for which the Provincial Treasurer is responsible.

Well, the Royal commission then said that it was remarkable that our accounts were so incomplete and, further, that it was relatively difficult to turn up information that they felt they needed in order to make the assessment they had been asked to perform by this House and by the order-in-council that constituted the investigation. I should not attempt to directly quote from the report of the commissioners, but they even felt to a certain degree that accounts were misleading, particularly in the way they deal with ordinary and capital expenditures.

The Minister knows that the recommendation would lead the Provincial Treasurer to move away from this sort of division in our accounts, and they have a very cogent argument indeed for putting all of the business of the government on the same footing and dealing with it on a national accounts basis.

I was very glad to hear the Provincial Treasurer indicate that we are moving in that direction and it would make much more realistic the budget that is presented to this House year by year.

I know that the Provincial Treasurer would have read very carefully the recommendations associated with the accounting procedures of the province. I wanted to begin my remarks with these because I have always felt considerably mystified myself even in going over the simplified presentation that the Minister brings out in the fall of the year. There are a number of pages there that I have always intended to sit down with the Provincial Treasurer and get his explanation, perhaps with some assistance from his advisors, because there seem to be relatively small items that appear in that book which are difficult to justify without having some professional background by way of assistance.

Now, the second point that I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Chairman, is the fact that the committee on confederation—and particularly the federal-provincial fiscal matters—still resides under the jurisdiction of the Provincial Treasurer. I feel quite strongly that, while a good many of the experts in this committee might very well be employed by the Provincial Treasurer, these committees should come under the direct jurisdiction of the Premier.

The policies that arise from their investigations are certainly of the highest importance and the Provincial Treasurer, of course, dwelt on the most important one of these very briefly this morning. And he stated again, as he and his colleague, the Premier, have stated on so many previous occasions, that the government of Canada must move to provide a larger share of the personal income tax for the provinces. Now, I would point out to the Provincial Treasurer that this is hardly good enough any more, that he is, of course, going to take a position as publicly as possible and with as much huffing and puffing as possible, to frighten the government of Canada into at least coming a bit closer to meeting the demands that the leaders of this government recognize as far as our fiscal requirements are concerned.

And yet he followed the recent election campaign as carefully, I am sure, as I did and I hope he was impressed with the attitude taken by the government of Canada that reflected, in some small measure, a statement made by the Premier of Ontario at one of the conferences this year, that tremendous pressures were needed to develop true equality of economic opportunity in Canada. The Premier made mention of a fund of a billion dollars that he felt should be made available for this very purpose, particularly as it might reflect in the development of the Maritime provinces. It was never clear where the Premier felt this money should come from, but knowing him as I do, I would expect he would think that it would come from the federal Treasury.

And yet his attitude is a good one and is reflected, in my view, by the statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada during the recent campaign. And I hope we will not think that Trudeau's statements having to do with economic equality of opportunity were election window-dressing, because I believe that these economic equality procedures are going to be put into effect in the next three years and it will mean that we, in Ontario, will be paying the largest share of the cash required.

It is very difficult to balance this altruistic attitude stated by the Premier in the February conference with reference to the billion-dollar fund—at least his idea was stated there, the billion dollars was stated some weeks afterwards in an informal press conference, I believe, in this building—it is very difficult to balance that attitude with the continuing pressure that is exerted by this government for a larger share of federal revenues.

I think the two are mutually exclusive and that we here have a tremendous responsibility as citizens of Canada not to lead our citizens in Ontario into a feeling that we are being milked in order to improve the situation elsewhere in our nation. If the government of Canada is going to carry on these programmes, and in my view they are going to be accelerated rather than slowed down, then the heaviest responsibility as taxpayers is going to rest right here on the economy and the citizens of Ontario to meet these requirements.

In my view, Ontario is prepared to accept these responsibilities. How will this affect us when we approach the government of Canada in the round of fiscal negotiations which are going to be needed this year? I have heard rumours that the negotiations may have to be postponed. But, Mr. Chairman, you are aware that the present fiscal agreement runs out at the end of this year and it will be necessary for the Premier and his advisors from Ontario to meet with his colleagues from the other provinces around the table in Ottawa to negotiate a new agreement. And how he and his advisors can, on the one hand piously hope for a federal fund in excess of a billion dollars in order to accomplish economic equality of opportunity, and at the same time exert all of the pressure—and it is tremendous pressure he has at his disposal—to have a bigger share for Ontario, remains a mystery to me.

So I would think that before this House rises, there should be a statement by the Premier—although it could come from the Provincial Treasurer—that is much more meaningful than the repetition of what we have heard this morning, that once again Ontario must have a bigger share of the federal income. It is essential, in my view, that we know exactly what is going to be our position at the bargaining table in Ottawa, whether we are going to fight tooth and nail for more money for Ontario without raising our own taxes or, in fact, we are going to support the programme that has been stated by the government of Canada, upon which the Liberal Party was elected, to continue its responsibilities in that jurisdiction.

There has to be a rationalization of a provincial approach in this so that our own people will understand it, and so that in fact we can take a meaningful role, and not an obstructionist's role in the negotiations that must come about within the next few months.

Well, Mr. Chairman, there are just one or two other things I want to say about this matter.

At the present time, by agreement, we get 28 percentage points abatement from the federal jurisdiction in payment, I suppose, or in rent payment, for our own rights to the personal income tax field. We know the history of this agreement. It is not necessary for me to say anything more about it other than to emphasize again that we, of course, in this House have the responsibility to deal with legislation that will change that percentage rate unilaterally on our own if the government decides to do so.

The province of Quebec has already taken this difficult course in order to finance their own requirements. It is hoped that Ontario need not do this, but everybody in this House knows about our expanding requirements. We have heard speeches from all sides calling for new programmes and expanded programmes that are going to cost money. These must be balanced with our responsibilities as Canadian citizens which, in my view, come ahead of our responsibilities as citizens of Ontario.

It is essential that we take a meaningful role in the programmes that the government of Canada put forward in the equality of opportunity programme.

Now this is not to say that there are not areas in our own province that need the assistance of the government of Ontario in providing equality of economic opportunity. The Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) was discussing this morning in an answer to a question, those communities which have not yet been able to come under his EIO, equalization of industrial opportunity, programme. The responsibility within the borders of this province lies with this administration. We have a programme announced during the recent election campaign—a programme that can be expanded to meet our own needs, but as the richest province in Canada, we must realize what responsibilities we have under national citizenship as well.

Now there is a third point that I want to raise that is associated with some of the complaints, I suppose put forward by the Royal commission, and that is that in our public accounts, our dealings with the government of Canada are not made clear. The Provincial Treasurer has indicated that this book of estimates is based on gross expenditures. So if federal funds are sent to the government of Ontario for use in paying these bills, they are included in this estimate, and therefore subject to the vote of the Legislature. I have no objection to that. As a matter of fact, I think it is a good thing. In other words if the programme is one that we are responsible for here, even though the government of Canada pays a share of its cost, then we should still have the right to vote these funds in order that there be some unification in control.

But if that is so, then in each one of these votes it is surely reasonable, for the information of all concerned, that the funds available from the federal level be specifically set out here, so that we know in the estimates that we are expected to vote them. They are sums which do not come from our own Treasury except indirectly. They are transfer payments, and there is not sufficient knowledge of the involvement of the government of Canada in our provincial responsibilities.

Mr. Sopha: In the same way as the government requires municipalities to show provincial funds.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, that is right. There is something to be said for credit being given where it is due, but I believe that is a small point. You know when we get our tax bills municipally the government of Ontario requires a statement to be made as to how much these taxes are reduced by direct provincial grants.

That is a part of the problem and a part of the concern that I feel for the statement of these facts in our own estimates. But beyond that, if we are going to have any reasonable understanding of the sharing of responsibility, particularly the cost responsibility, then these figures should appear here. The Royal commission indicated that the funds that are made available for hospitalization do not appear on any provincial accounts except the accounts of the OHSC itself, which are not generally available. These payments should appear in our own account book, whether the public accounts or the estimates; I feel in both places.

Mr. Chairman, the fourth point that I would like to mention in my remarks on these estimates has to do with the capital aid corporations.

The Royal commission was somewhat critical—as a matter of fact mystified—as to why the government should have taken this means to, in fact, make grants to universities, and to other sources of the systems. I suppose the municipalities and school boards would be included, but they are not critical in any way as to saying that it is not workable, or that it does not show the figures that are involved, but the indications are that it is a remarkably complex means of making these grants available.

I believe myself that the capital aid corporation method is tied up with the accounting that is necessary to make use of our share of Canada pension plan premiums. This is another matter that has never been made abundantly, or carefully, clear by the Provincial Treasurer. It was only in response to my questions that it was indicated what our share of these premiums would be as they come back from the federal office associated with the Canada pension plan, and are made available to Ontario for reinvestment.

Naturally the Provincial Treasurer answered my questions when they were asked, but it is not clear just why these funds, which are channelled often through the capital aid corporations, have to be accounted for in this specific way. I believe it is cumbersome. I believe it tends to obscure the source of the funds. There is nothing purposeful in this on the part of the government, other than we have not moved fast enough to come into the computer age of accounting. When we have machines that can give us instantaneous balances on most of these accounts it is no longer necessary to wait a year and a half to find a specific position that we are, as taxpayers in the province, enjoying or subject to as we find we move into increasing areas of public debt.

I believe that there is much needed reform which could bring us up to date and into the 20th century—into the computer era—as far as information is concerned. We eventually have an opportunity to examine the accounts carefully, but by then they really are very much ancient history. I think that if we are going to be considered, as we should be under this particular vote, as directors in a three-billion-dollar corporation, then we should be in a position to have more up-to-date and more precise and clearer information that has been available in the past.

The last point I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, is one that I put forward in my budget comments earlier in this session, and therefore I will make it very brief.

The last objective review we have had of the business procedures of the province was undertaken, under Walter Gordon's chairmanship I believe, reporting in 1958. It has been 10 years now, during which time we have not had an objective assessment of the efficiency and business procedures of the government of Ontario.

Now I would put to you, Mr. Chairman, that it is time for another such assessment. The Provincial Treasurer spends much of his effort in assuring us that we are up to date and in fact leading the federal jurisdiction of Canada and the United States in moving towards better methods of accounting. It is my position that we are still sadly behind what could be done in a relatively smaller jurisdiction of this type. We have got to move away from the division of ordinary and capital statements. Surely a new approach in this can give us the information that we should have if we are going to accept our responsibilities as legislators and even as taxpayers and citizens of Ontario.

So I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, that since we have had ten years since the last objective assessment of the business procedures of the government—it is time for another one. A procedure, or a commission if you wish, which would examine it very carefully. It could make some recommendations on accounting and so on, but these of course would be some of the less important responsibilities that they would have. These matters are of continuing concern. We have had a Royal commission giving us expert advice on reforming our tax system. We are in a position now where we must approach the government of Canada and they must approach us in developing a new agreement which I hope will take us through the next five years; we are at a turning point in our accounting and our fiscal practices, and this is the time when we should have available the expert advice that this government seems fearful to ask for. The information is there; I would say that the attitude that has been expressed by the Provincial Treasurer and some of his other colleagues on the Treasury benches, "to trust us," is not acceptable any longer. We feel that you are falling behind in methods of accounting; we feel that you are obscuring the fiscal relationships among the three levels of government, and in this way I think we can, in this Legislature, do much to clarify the situation.

Mr. Chairman, I would say that my colleague from Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) will be commenting on some of these matters during the course of the estimates; I feel that in my closing remarks, I should deal with one matter specifically, although it will be dealt with again in the votes—I refer to the racing commission. We in this House have passed legislation just a few weeks ago, which has changed the situation in this province and it has been brought to our attention, by the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator), who opposed the legislation, that Sunday racing would improve the financial situation, as far as thoroughbred racing is concerned at least. I believe that it will have improved financial situation across the board, and yet in the estimates that the Provincial Treasurer is presenting to us today there is an increased sum for the support of the breed organizations.

I come from a part of the country where a good many farmers take part in the development of this sort of livestock, particularly the standard bred livestock. And, in the past, I have always risen in my place to say that particularly for standard breeding that there is a place for government subsidies to improve the breed and to improve the situation here. I have now come to the conclusion that with the changes that have come about in legislation that the government of Ontario should get out of the business of subsidizing the horse-racing efforts in the province. When we come to the vote, we will have an appropriate amendment. An amendment of this type has been before the House in years gone by.

But I would say that here is one specific area where government policy has not kept up with the times; there seems to be an effort to move as quickly as they can to stay in the same place; there seems to be a knuckling under to pressures that have been exerted on the government from those who are deeply involved in the business. Now I am involved with many of the small breeders of race horses, both standard bred and thoroughbred; I believe that there are other means whereby the government can provide assistance to these people without providing the large outflow of public funds that is asked for in these estimates.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Riverdale (Mr. J. Renwick) had remarks prepared for some two or three weeks for the lead-off of the Provincial Treasury estimates. Before we moved into morning sessions, he had another commitment for this morning; we were assured last week that this day would be devoted to the Budget debate and on Friday the government threw in LCBO and the workmen's compensation board, so that the day was going to be full. For that reason, the hon. member for Riverdale did not change his morning commitment; he will be here this afternoon.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going "to scream from the rooftops," but I protest in the strongest possible terms this disorderly handling of the business of the province. If it suits the government—

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to rise on a point of order. In an effort to contribute to the point that the hon. member for York South has just made, I considered beginning my remarks in the same way, as precisely the same thing applies to us. And yet, in inquiring very carefully, I was told that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), who moved the adjournment on Friday, included in his omnibus of predictions for today, that we would be dealing with estimates.

I have some objection to the ordering of the business of the House myself, and yet I believe it is our responsibility, in Opposition, to be prepared, particularly as we come down to the last few days, or perhaps the last two weeks of our business, to deal with the matters that are available for discussion. In my view, we must make every effort to have our people here, or to have substitutions so that I wanted to comment on what the member for York South has said, and I do not want to criticize him in any way, but I would say that I would join with him in saying that for these last few days we would appreciate it on this side, if we could know specifically the orders of business that are available to us. But we are prepared to continue with any order that the government brings forward.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, with respect, that was not a point of order—that was an interruption in violation of the rules of the House. If the hon. member wanted to say that, let him say it in his time and not pre-empt my time on the floor of the House when he feels that he has not covered the point.

Mr. Sopha: He filled in, he made a very able speech.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Chairman, the point I want to make is that I think that the proposition of moving into morning, afternoon and evening sessions in the concluding weeks of the session is, at best, a poor way to deal with the business of the House. But it becomes an impossible way if the government decides that we are going to deal with LCBO and workmen's compensation board first, and then, for its own good reasons, it decides not to do that, and does not tell us until the decision is made and announced here. We would have had our spokesman for the estimates here; he would have been here today if there had been any indication that these estimates were going to be given top priority.

The fact of the matter, I repeat, is top priority was given LCBO and the workmen's compensation board and, secondly, Budget. We went into Budget, and because so many Budget speakers were not here, we washed out the Budget debate after we had some two people from this group. So, it is not that we are not here; we are here, but it just happens that other people are not in the House. Well, Mr. Chairman, I leave the matter there, but I protest this disorderly and inadequate way of dealing with the business of the House in this mad scramble towards the end of the session.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Perhaps I should speak to a point of order if that is what it is.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not a point of order. I am speaking.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I will raise the point of order as the comments have been made on the conduct of the business of the House. I called and I was prepared to call the workmen's compensation and the liquor report debates some considerable time ago, but there were objections then at it being dealt with at that time.

Mr. MacDonald: That is irrelevant. They were called for today.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: It is not the least bit irrelevant.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, it is!

Mr. MacDonald: It was scheduled for today.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: And I would not be at all surprised if they would not be called before this day is over. But certainly, I was told there were 20 or 30 Budget debaters waiting and I thought we would probably spend the whole day on that. I wanted to clean up those first things on the order paper and I asked the Minister of Health to put before the House on Friday, the order of business as it was. Perhaps he mentioned the workmen's compensation and liquor reports because they happened to be first on the order paper. But that is not the list in which the order of business appears on the order paper.

They appear even before second readings, or before committee of the whole House, or before committee of supply. But, the House has known that these estimates were going to follow the estimates of The Department of Public Works, that has been known for at least a month, and I would suggest to you that once the estimates of The Department of Public Works are complete, you must expect to go on at any time.

I cannot give you a fixed date, at two o'clock next Thursday afternoon or anything like that. When the estimates of Public Works wound up on Friday, in my humble opinion it would be completely natural for you to expect these estimates to be called next because these listings were given to the House weeks ago.

Having said that, I would only say the real problem the government gets into is trying to accommodate everyone in the conduct of the business of the House. The easy way would be just to draw up a list and say, "This is it." You are here or you are not here, this is what we are going to do. But there is some attempt made to accommodate ourselves to those who are not here or who will be here. Perhaps this is the error we should correct in ordering the business from this side of the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Prime Minister if he would draw up a list and stick to it, we would have no objection. If the Prime Minister had said on Friday what he has said this morning—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I have ordered estimates before.

Mr. MacDonald: You are right. I appreciate you doing that, too, but if the Prime Minister had said on Friday that there was going to be estimates today, we would have been prepared. We have been prepared for two or three weeks but we were told that this was going to be Budget all day and the Prime Minister himself said there were 20 people on the list and he thought it was going to be all day. It was in addition said that we are going to throw in LCBO and WCB ahead of the Budget, so it was a legitimate conclusion that if a person had another commitment he did not need to be here this morning.

However, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to argue this any further, other than the general principle of handling the business of the House.

Mr. Sopha: You recognize a filibuster when you see it?

Mr. MacDonald: This is not a filibuster.

Mr. Sopha: Certainly it is.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South has the floor.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Exactly, we are into estimates because your Budget speakers are not here.

Mr. Nixon: Nonsense, we had two speakers in a row the last time the Budget was called; you had none.

Mr. MacDonald: That is right and we had two in a row in this morning.

Mr. Sopha: You are wasting the time of the people of Ontario—

Mr. Nixon: Is it a plot?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member for Sudbury is not here for a week and then when he comes he wastes time and he criticizes others of doing it.

Mr. Sopha: I want to raise a point of order, if reference has been made to that. I should like to draw to your attention—

Mr. MacDonald: Is this another point of order?

Mr. Sopha: May I raise a point of order?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please? The member for York South is replying to a point of order raised by the Prime Minister. The member for York South has not finished with his comments in connection with the point of order.

Mr. Sopha: Well, they are interminable.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman will decide.

Mr. MacDonald: Coming from the hon. member for Sudbury, that is really laughable.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member for York South has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I have the floor. Perhaps I can talk him down if you cannot. Thank you, very much. I would say, Mr. Chairman, on this point that I hope when the hon. member for Riverdale is here that you will be somewhat flexible in letting him comment on later items because of the switch in the arrangements this morning.

Now there are two or three points which have been raised in the course of the general debate. I am not going to attempt to deal off the cuff with many things that might be dealt with. I will leave the considered remarks, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sopha: I want to raise a point of order.

Mr. Chairman: I think perhaps the member for York South has addressed himself to the chair in connection with the point of order and if he has done so, then perhaps the member for Sudbury could speak to the point of order.

An hon. member: If he has one.

Mr. Sopha: My point of order is that since reference has been made to me and a very—

Mr. Chairman: This is a new point of order.

Mr. Sopha: —laconic absence in which I was involved, I want to draw to your attention, as a matter of order of the House, the flagrant breach of the rules by two members of that party in being absent from this House for eight weeks consecutively and continuously. Eight weeks.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, that is not a point of order here.

Mr. Sopha: The members—

Mr. MacDonald: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Sopha: The member for Scarborough West (Mr. Lewis) and the member for Beaches-Woodbine (Mr. Brown).

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: Let the records show that the hon. member for Scarborough East is not here and somebody is pinch hitting for him. The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) has not been here for a number of days. The hon. Minister of Social and Family Services (Mr. Yaremko) has not been here for some days, so if you want this sort of a game to be played—

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Mr. MacDonald: What I object to, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Sopha: One of them was engaged in the breakthrough in Quebec.

Mr. MacDonald: What I object to, Mr. Chairman, is the suggestion of a filibuster regarding the conduct of this House from a member who has not been here for a week, and if anybody speaks interminably in this House it is certainly he.

Mr. Sopha: That is not correct.

Mr. Chairman: Order! I think perhaps the matter of who is here or who has been here is perhaps irrelevant to the matters before the committee. We are dealing with the estimates of the Provincial Treasurer and I think any references to who was here when, or who is here is irrelevant.

I think we should proceed with the estimates before us and for this purpose, the Chairman is calling vote 2301, under the estimates of The Treasury Department.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I have not completed my introductory remarks on behalf of my colleague for Riverdale.

Mr. Chairman: Well, the member for York South may proceed.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you.

Mr. Sopha: Did the great breakthrough in Quebec occur?

Mr. MacDonald: It was like Newfoundland. Mr. Chairman, there are two or three points on which I would like to comment briefly. I was interested in the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition with regard to our agreements with Ottawa and whether or not we can have it both ways, in terms of urging the federal government to accept its responsibilities for tackling the problem of economic desparity in this country, and at the same time, providing a fuller flow of moneys for those responsibilities which are very pressing to the people of the province of Ontario and fall under provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman: Would the member for York South permit the Chairman to just take a minute or two?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman did call vote 2301 and the member for York South is, I believe, delivering an address which would normally have been the lead-off speaker's address. At the same time he has suggested that we would permit, perhaps, some flexibility when the critic for the New Democratic Party, the member for Riverdale, is in the House this afternoon. Personally, the Chairman can see no real objection to permitting the member for Riverdale to proceed with the remarks he would otherwise have made, although it seems to me that the member for York South should not now take his place and that, perhaps, we should proceed with vote 2301.

Mr. Sopha: You are letting the filibuster succeed.

Mr. MacDonald: If the House wants to have it all ways, Mr. Chairman, okay. I will sit down and we will let the hon. member for Riverdale have his say this afternoon. But I wanted to comment on two or three points and if I do not do it now, I will do it later. So it is six of one and half a dozen of the other.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I really think perhaps it would be better if the member for York South does make his comments in the appropriate votes. He will not be restricted and perhaps we could proceed with vote 2301. When the member for Riverdale is in the House, he can proceed with the remarks that he would otherwise have made.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Maybe, Mr. Chairman, I will not take too long if you permit me to make one or two comments on the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I am also prompted to say to you, sir, that it is not a question of who is here at the moment. It is who is all there. This has been very confusing, this little quarrel about whose marbles we are playing with, I might say. So maybe we could just comment briefly on some of those things the leader of the Opposition proposed, although I see he is not in his seat.

An hon. member: He will be back in a minute.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, with respect to those matters relating to public accounts, Budget, abridged statement and so on, I think I can recall having said on one or more occasions in the House that we have moved towards improving the information that we provide to the Legislature. And indeed, I seem to recall that the hon. leader of the Opposition admitted that we had done this to some extent. I would have to say that we cannot accomplish this overnight.

The matter of grossing the expenditures was a recommendation of the public accounts committee which was concurred in some time ago, but we did begin this year, in the Budget, to dispense with the ordinary capital distinction that has been referred to and we attempted to replace it by budgetary or non-budgetary expenditure detail leading, of course, to the national accounts basis that the hon. leader of the Opposition has referred to. I might say for the benefit of the committee and the benefit of the hon. leader of the Opposition it is our intention to continue to do this. We hope to continue to improve the general format of submitting the financial information to the Legislature and that I think is reasonable and desirable.

The regular comment that you could expect from the leader of the Opposition regarding Ontario's frequent, continuing submissions to the federal government for a greater share of the progressive tax fields, I think, is a matter of some oversimplification. I can assure you that the government of the province of Ontario will continue to press this point at Ottawa. It is not altogether a matter of the total amounts involved—there is an absolute amount of revenue involved at all levels of government, but we are simply concerned about how we get our share and we think that the more effective, efficient means of sharing these revenues is through the abatement process—we rather think it is cumbersome.

It involves a very large duplication of personnel and machinery in the expenditure programmes at the federal level and, indeed, the provincial-municipal level when everybody is trying to expand the taxpayer's dollar. I make that rather simple and sharp observation in the matter of the competition for who shall spend the taxpayer's dollar in which, and in whose, constitutional jurisdiction.

Mr. Sopha: There is no difficulty in that. Who raises it is the problem.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, who raises it and where do they raise it from—let me add that to the observation of the hon. member for Sudbury. Ontario has always been prepared to be a participant in any equalization formula. Indeed we stand, as we have always done, as the jurisdiction on which the equalization formula is based. The Prime Minister has said repeatedly that Ontario must be prepared to provide its full share to the resolution of the disparate situation that exists in the various provinces, but I think the time has arrived, and I have no hesitation in saying this, for us to take another look at the extent to which the revenues of Ontario may well be needed to provide for the development of Ontario, and take it in that whole context when we sit down to discuss these matters with our provincial counterparts in the other nine provinces and, indeed, with the federal authorities.

I say rather forcefully, if I may, that these things need to be reviewed. We had some evidence of it in a Budget address from the hon. member for Thunder Bay this morning.

We have these responsibilities to Ontario and indeed to Canada and the time has come, I think, when further review may make it possible for us to improve the format in providing for the relief of the disparate situations in Canada and, at the same time, to make provision for the necessary continuing development and growth of our province.

Now, the reference of the leader of the Opposition to the word "obstructionist" did not, I think, come over too effectively, I think it was a bit of a misrepresentation. I say to you again, and with much emphasis, that Ontario believes in relieving economic disparities, we believe in equalization, and it has been said repeatedly, but we need better than unilateral consultation before we are going to be able to accomplish it effectively for the good of Canada and for the good of Ontario; and this is a point we made at the last meeting of provincial Finance Ministers, with the former Minister of Finance of Canada, that we needed this better consultative process. We made some headway at that time, at least in terms of budgetary requirements.

We are always ready to negotiate, but there is a very, very prime question associated with this and that is: who spends the money, on what priorities, by what process of joint federal-provincial decision-making, and this is again back to my recent observation that until we can sit around and discuss these matters at three levels, municipal, provincial and federal, and move away from making these determinations in isolation, I do not think we are going to solve the problems that beset us in Ontario and in Canada.

Now, the leader of the Opposition questioned the purpose of the various corporations that deal with Canada pension plan funds, which will amount this year to approximately $400 million. And there are two, of course—the Ontario universities capital aid corporation and the Ontario education capital aid corporation.

Firstly, I would tell him that all the money originating in Ontario that goes to Ottawa into the Canada pension plan comes back to us. In order to secure this, we are obliged to issue a bond or debenture each time we draw money from that fund as it accumulates. As far as the Ontario education capital aid corporation is concerned, we in turn take securities from the boards to whom we advance the money, so it is a matter of proper recording of the funds that are coming in on the one hand and providing us with some security against the funds that we advance on the other.

At the moment, I cannot think of a better way of dealing with these funds that rightfully belong and are a result actually of a very strenuous effort on the part of our Prime Minister to insure that all these funds came back to Ontario for reinvestment in Ontario. There was a time in 1963—and I think all hon. members will recall—that if it had not been for his strenuous efforts, these moneys would not now be available to us, and I leave it to every member of the Legislature to say how useful they have been in Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: Does the Provincial Treasurer disagree with the Royal commission on taxation?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, I do not either agree or disagree with them on that score. I think at the moment we are handling these funds as efficiently as we know how. And they have been very useful.

Mr. Nixon: Well, that is my point, that may not be good enough.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is always room for improvement, I agree with the hon. leader of the Opposition, and while he was out I indicated that we would continue our attempts to improve. I am sure that is what he wanted me to say.

Now, I think for all practical purposes, that sums up my comments on the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: Is the Provincial Treasurer able to tell me, before I make a comment, what the figure was the Premier used in denoting the number of shared-cost programmes that are in operation between the government of Ontario and the federal government?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The shared-coost programmes?

Mr. Sopha: Yes, what is the number? The Premier gave the number here one day. Was it 70-some?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: They come and go—at the moment I do recall listing them for purposes of our own research here, but I cannot recall the exact number.

Mr. Sopha: Well, the number that seems to stick in my mind is 70-some programmes. Now, I must say that the way the leader of the Opposition put his criticisms was much more simple and comprehensible to me than the Provincial Treasurer's reply. I set the criticism of the leader of the Opposition against the statement made by the Smith committee in volume 2 of the report, towards the end of the volume, between pages 400 and 500, it can be found, and they put it very didactically and very emphatically. To paraphrase accurately, I think they say that there is no axiom of greater validity than the one that governments should raise their own revenue. The revenue they intend to spend should be raised by the governments that are going to spend it. When I read that, it struck me as being a very forceful presentation of the matter.

Of course, having listened to the Provincial Treasurer in the last 10 minutes or so, one can see that the Treasurer of Ontario does not believe in that principle in the axiomatic fashion that the Smith committee approached it. Now, that statement, of course, by the Smith committee must be seen—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. If we are going to try to keep this business going properly, the agreement we made some considerable time ago was that there would be an opening statement by the Minister followed by one statement from each of the Opposition parties and we would then proceed to the votes. But what we seem to be doing now is having an additional member of the official Opposition commenting upon the Provincial Treasurer's reply to the comments of the official speaker for the party.

Mr. Sopha: What is wrong with that?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Because it is contrary to the procedure of this House. That is the point of order I put before you.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I take it that we are speaking in relation to vote 2301. And my point is—vote 2301 has been called.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Well, Mr. Chairman, if vote 2301 has been called and if these remarks are relevant to vote 2301 then, of course, the member is in order. But if he is in effect re-arguing his leader's position—

Mr. Sopha: I am not doing that at all.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: —in the light of what the Provincial Treasurer may have said arising out of the introductory remarks before any votes were called, then he is out of order.

Mr. Sopha: Well, how do you carry on a debate unless you answer what is said on the other side, Mr. Chairman? How do you do that? And I want to make the additional observation in the light of the Premier's obvious attempt to stifle debate on the public affairs of this province, he has—

Mr. MacDonald: That is what the member was doing a few moments ago.

Mr. Sopha: He has been doing that since the session began, been attempting that.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: And he talks about filibustering.

Mr. Sopha: I make this additional point—he has a ready ally, you notice, in the leader of the New Democratic Party, in carrying on that programme.

Mr. MacDonald: The member is engaging in filibustering.

Mr. Stokes: We agree with everybody who is right.

Mr. Sopha: Then I ask for your ruling, that I contend that under the first main office vote that all matters that relate to the general policy of the department are relevant. In the light of that, I say that the relations of the government with the government at Ottawa are matters that pertain to the policy of the department, and I contend—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Mr. Sopha: Just wait until I have finished, please.

Mr. Chairman: Well, the Prime Minister has risen on a point of order. I understand that the member for Sudbury is replying to the point of order, and he was slightly off the beam, but he got back on.

Mr. MacDonald: And he asked you for a ruling, Mr. Chairman. But before you get to your ruling, may I draw to your attention that vote 2306 in these estimates is the policy planning division, and I would suggest that many of the issues that relate to policy might most appropriately be dealt with there. However, I shall accept your ruling.

Mr. Chairman: I would say to the member for York South, to deal with last things first, that he is quite correct.

Vote 2301 does in fact deal with general administration, not departmental policy. Getting back to the point of order raised by the Prime Minister, if the committee will recall, the member for York South suggested that their lead-off speaker was not present, there ensued an argument which was in some degree irrelevant to the consideration of the votes. However, the Prime Minister suggested that vote 2301 had been called, and the Chairman would inform the committee that he did, in fact, call vote 2301. But the Provincial Treasurer proceeded to reply to the introductory remarks of the leader of the Opposition, so that the issue has become somewhat confused. It would seem to me that the member for Riverdale has—

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe we should adjourn for lunch.

Mr. Chairman: I am just talking—trying to talk—long enough for the clock to get to 12:30. I think it is close enough.

It being 12:30 of the clock, the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, JULY 15, 1968

The House resumed at 2:00 o'clock p.m.

Mr. Chairman: Before we proceed with the estimates, I must point out to the committee that there are some members who have dispensed with the wearing of their jackets. This matter was raised in committee some two weeks, or something less, ago. At that time, the Chairman pointed out that the practice in the House had been that it was not considered proper dress to appear in the chambers without jackets.

Now there is no actual ruling, setting forth what constitutes proper dress. In the opinion of the Chairman, it is a matter of the place at which the consideration is before the assembly, what is proper and what is not proper. But I must again point out to the committee, and all of the members on the committee, that it has not been considered proper to appear in the chambers without jackets.

In fact, I would remind the members that permission was asked of Mr. Speaker some two or three years ago for the removal of jackets, and this permission was not granted in view of the fact that Mr. Speaker at that time deemed that the members were not properly dressed at that time.

So, until such time as there is some clarification, or permission has been granted, to the committee or the House, I would ask the members to observe the traditions of the House and to appear in their seats with their jackets being worn. The member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): I would like to say a word on this. I think that the time is here for us to face up to the fact that situations are changing; that after all certain uniforms are appropriate for certain activities but there is no reason why custom and usage of the past should hold here.

Last week, we saw an occasion where one of the members of this House was able to remove his trousers, and to wear a bit of clothing which had short legs in whatever it may have been, shorts we call them.

Now, I see no reason why, if that is allowable, we should not be able to remove our jackets and have short sleeves in place of the short trousers. Certainly, our arms I think are as psychedelic, and as photogenic as the gams of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Deacon). And so I see no reason, if it is allowed for that kind of attire to be worn in this House, why this kind of attire should not be allowed here as well.

I realize that custom and usage have a certain place, but certainly comfort also has a certain place, and efficiency has a place in the whole situation. I suppose this comes down to the custom of the aristocracy perhaps wearing a certain kind of uniform; the working people wearing shirts, and never the twain shall meet.

I think in this kind of an institution the twain should meet and that we should be allowed to dress in a more comfortable fashion than we have dressed heretofore in this establishment. Perhaps we should now have a ruling as to whether or not the short sleeves should be allowed on arms as well as legs.

Mr. Chairman: May I just say to the member for Yorkview that the Chairman has been making certain inquiries of various people as to what might be considered proper. I think in this day and age that the matter of wearing shorts, and by that I do not mean camping shorts, or such type of shorts but shorts with the proper jacket and tie is considered proper dress.

But I have not been able to determine from anyone that they would consider, in any place of such importance as the Legislature of Ontario, that it would be considered proper to appear without your jackets. And there are arguments pro and con, and the Chairman holds no position one way or the other, it would seem to me that it is not a matter of setting a rule as to what must or cannot be worn at one time or another, but that any rule or any practice or tradition of this House, perhaps may be altered, or decided upon, with the consent of the House. So if the member would just wait a moment, as far as the Chairman is concerned, I would suggest to the committee that we determine the feeling of the committee as to what would constitute a proper dress and whether or not it would be acceptable generally for members to appear in their places without their jackets.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Chairman, on this particular matter, as being one of those involved in this fairly early, and having a fair amount to say in this Legislature, I found last week that I was soaked through after having made one of my relatively brief addresses to you, sir. I think in my opinion, that comfort should take precedence over tradition, and I do not believe this House, regardless of the feelings of other people, can decide what an individual member shall wear so long as he is decently clothed.

I submit to you, sir, that I am decently clothed and from this moment on, when it is hot, I am going to take off my jacket, regardless of what the majority of the House feels.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, may I add a word on this matter? Quite frankly, I personally am not going to get too excited on one side or the other—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: I cannot get too excited one side or the other but plain common sense suggests to me that, having been hidebound by Victorian traditions of dress, we need not remain hidebound to them. And I am becoming greatly intrigued at the inconsistencies that emerge when somebody wears—and I do not say this critically, let me make this emphatically clear—shorts or short pants or whatever you want to call them, and this is okay, but not wearing a coat is not okay. I am a little bit puzzled at the distinction that is being made.

You just said, Mr. Chairman, for example, that wearing a tie is necessary because this is the tradition. Well, it is now becoming a tradition that a turtle-neck sweater is in. I was rather intrigued last week to notice that one member on the government side of the House came in with his tie open to here and the top three buttons of his shirt undone.

Now that presumably was in violation of the rules of the House because if you wear a tie presumably it should be worn in the Victorian traditional fashion where you have yourself strangled, so to speak. If the dignity of this House depends on whether we have coats on or not, then the dignity of this House is even more precariously based than sometimes I think it is.

I have often seen people who have gone to the mother of Parliaments in Britain and come away shocked at the indignity of feet up on the desk or something of this nature—shocked at the indignity! Well, I suggest to you that the mother of Parliaments has had far more experience than some of the fastidious, reacting people who go and get shocked at the superficialities of conduct. The basic dignity of conduct in this House is going to be completely unrelated to whether or not you have a coat on and let us not be bound by a Victorian tradition of dress which surely, "coats on" in this kind of weather, is.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): Now that summer is here, why do you not take off your long underwear?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Are these slurs on Queen Victoria?

Mr. Chairman: Well before the Chairman makes a decision as to what course he will take in this interesting little discussion, are there any other members wishing to add anything to it?

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Chairman, I want to make several points with respect to this. We have observed in recent years how the NDP have encouraged lawlessness outside of this chamber, and now, in a less serious manner, we see how they are contemptuous not only of custom, but of the rules that have pertained here over the years. I observe with particular interest the assertion of the member for High Park that he will not only not abide by your ruling if it does not suit his purpose, but that he will not be governed either by the example of his leader or by the wishes of the majority in this chamber.

Now, sir, I have been told by well travelled friends that the southern Legislatures in the United States are extremely informal, and that in the state Legislature in Georgia, for instance, the legislators sit around in their shirt sleeves, smoking cigars. That has been a source of some contempt so far as our Canadian citizens have been concerned, and I have no doubt that the humorous editorials and the newspapers directed against more conventional members would have had a different point of view had circumstances been a little different. I mean by that, that the Globe and Mail, for instance, thought it was very jolly that the Tories kept their coats on, and saw fit to criticize my colleagues and me had we taken them off. Of course, they would have been chastising us, no doubt, for not having the self-discipline or the fortitude or the courage to keep our coats on. So it is just one of those issues that you cannot win.

I myself am going to suggest a compromise here. I am going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in the less formal atmosphere of the House in committee we be permitted to remove our jackets and I would suggest that in the more formal atmosphere of the House proper, when Mr. Speaker is in his chair and the mace on the table, we assume a more formal garb.

While I am on my feet, sir, I would like to know why we cannot occasionally open these windows and draperies and let the very nice fresh breeze that is coming off the lake into this chamber. I made this protest a couple of years ago.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): We cannot do it because Public Works says it will take all the fresh air right out.

Mr. White: Well, that is where Public Works and I disagree. But anyway I made the complaint a couple of years ago, and it was opened a crack and that crack was sort of enjoyable, but I would just like to see it tried once again before I go to my great reward.

Mr. Chairman: Any other member? The member for Welland has been attempting to speak.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Sir, I can recall when I was first elected to this Legislature, a lady could not come in this Legislature unless her head was covered —she had to have some wearing apparel on. Now that has been changed. I agree with the hon. member for London South that when in committee of the whole we dispose of our coats and that when the Speaker is in the chair we should be a little more formal. Actually there is nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Chairman: May I just say I do not want to restrict any member from adding something to this, but we could discuss it the entire afternoon. If any member has something further to add I would be pleased to listen to him.

The member for Oshawa.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): I just wanted to make a very brief comment. I want to say this to the members of the House—that I suspect very strongly when history is really written about this 28th Legislature and its actions and activities, its results will not be determined on the basis of our dress. It will be determined on what kind of action we take as legislators, and so I would suggest very strongly that we adopt the member for London South's suggestion and when we are in committee we go along with the question of just wearing our shirts.

As I say, maybe this will result in us making more meaningful progress and decisions as far as the Legislature is concerned. I hope that it would, because really this is what we are elected for. This is why we have been elected by our constituents—to make some determination and some progress in terms of legislation for the people of this province, and if taking off our coats results in that, then I think that we should do so.

Maybe it will not, but let us try it, and at least we will have given ourselves a little comfort. I know that when you work in an industrial plant and you are working under these kind of conditions, you get down to the least amount of clothes, even not wearing a shirt, and if you are producing as much as when the weather was cooler, I do not think the management worries too much about how you are dressed.

As long as those automobiles are going off the end of the assembly lines, and they are getting their production quota, they are not really too concerned as to how you dress. So we should not be too concerned here if we are making legislative progress—if we can—as far as the people of this province are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Randall: If the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) quits at 4:30 you have made your point.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Brantford has been on his feet before.

Mr. M. Makarchuk (Brantford): Mr. Chairman, just a brief comment. July 15 is not really known for any sort of historical context but perhaps it will go down in history now as the day the Ontario Legislature went topless.

Mr. Chairman: The leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) could have assisted us in this if he had had the foresight to air condition the chamber. I know the Premier's feelings about this, however, and I would therefore suggest that our dress should not be determined by the order of the business but by the temperature and the humidity. I would certainly hope that if some of our members find it is too uncomfortable to remain with their coats on, you will not discipline them and that any of us who feel that it is unnecessarily uncomfortable would be free to shed our coats in order that we could proceed with the business.

I agree with the leader of the NDP who said a moment ago that he is not going to make a big thing of it. I can see that it is quite a problem for you, Mr. Chairman, since there is no particular rule for you to enforce, nor really a precedent set. Surely the precedent of good sense, at least, is one that would permit us to shed our coats if the heat is uncomfortable, whether we are in committee or whether Mr. Speaker is in the chair.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, before you make your ruling, I would like to make a comment. Frankly, it does not matter to me whether we sit here in our jackets or not. I think I might be a little concerned if say, in January or February, when we were sitting here and we had various young people in the gallery from our educational institutions and somebody, just to be smart, chose to come in and sit around in their shirt sleeves. I think this would be against the good sense and common sense that the leader of the Opposition has mentioned.

The only point I make is that I feel we must have some rule of the majority in this House if we are to behave like civilized human beings. In other words, I am perfectly prepared to abide by the majority decision of this assembly, but I am a little disturbed if we are to get to a position where any of us, as individuals, are going to say: "Well, we do not care what the majority thinks, we are going to do it otherwise."

In relation to individual behaviour, I can only see this is going to cause those who are charged with the conduct of the business from the chair a great deal of difficulty as to how they are to proceed. I do not think that attitude will in any way enhance the total efficiency of the assembly. If we, as a body of elected people, decide on a course of action and the majority of us decide upon it, I think we must accept the fact that we will accept the position of the majority and, as I say, personally I have no objections to sitting here with my jacket on. That may be because of my peculiar physical conformity underneath the jacket; that may be why I want to keep my jacket on, I do not know. But in any event, I think that when you sense the feeling of the House as perhaps you can now, you might make your ruling and, I at least, I and the group I have the honour to head, will accept it.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, might I just say as one who spoke originally on this subject, in reply to what the Prime Minister has said, that those of us in this group had no intention of defying the laws of temperature. We were thinking, in terms of heat only, that during the winter session there is no reason why jackets should be doffed but when it comes to certain degrees of temperature such as exist at the present time, then we feel that there should be a right for the members to be a little more comfortable.

Mr. Chairman: I would just say that since the assembly is in committee at the present time, and as Chairman of the committee, I do not intend to make any ruling nor to accept any vote which will be binding upon Mr. Speaker while the House is in session.

However, if it is agreeable to the members of the committee, I believe that the proper thing to do would be to have a standing vote because Mr. Chairman is sometimes called upon to express an opinion as to whether the "ayes" or the "nays" have it and I am not at all sure my judgment in that respect would be completely accurate or acceptable. So I would put it to the committee this way, that those members who are in favour of permission being granted to remove the jackets while in committee will please rise.

Those who are opposed to the removal of jackets while in committee, will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, those in favour are 41, those opposed 12.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman, therefore, declares that it will be permissible to remove jackets while the House is in committee of the whole, or committee of supply. Now, if we may get to the estimates.

ESTIMATE, THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY

On vote 2301.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I had a point of order referable to the observations made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) about the relevance and propriety of the remarks in respect of the relations with the federal government in fiscal and taxation matters, and you were still considering that point of order.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman admits that he forgets it completely and perhaps the member would repeat the point of order.

Mr. Sopha: Oh fine; may I just proceed with my remarks then on the first vote?

Mr. Chairman: On that point of order, do you wish me to determine and rule on your point of order?

Mr. Sopha: Well I would just as soon forget it and proceed.

Mr. Chairman: Well, let us all forget it and proceed with vote 2301.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to get up again, but I thought you had ruled on it, that matters of policy in relation to the federal government come under vote 2306?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: No, the Chairman said that.

Mr. MacDonald: The first vote deals exclusively with administration?

Mr. Chairman: Exactly, the Chairman has so ruled.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, in this matter of relations with the federal government, is a continuation of the matter raised by the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) and replied to by the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) appropriate under 2306?

Mr. Chairman, Yes, vote 2306.

Mr. Sopha: Fine, thank you.

Vote 2301 agreed to.

On vote 2302:

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Chairman, there are some comments that I would like to make in respect of the development of finance and economics, and some which I have for the Provincial Treasurer. Now, in referring to the Provincial Treasurer's speech, he was, of course, telling us on March 12 that the provincial economy was not reaching the performance which he had planned for. In that speech, we were informed that there were problems on over-all productivity and inflation of costs and prices, and that generally the unemployment picture was not what the Provincial Treasurer had hoped that it would be. But by the time that we get an article that I will refer the House to as in the Globe and Mail of July 6, we find that according to Mr. Terrence Wills, there have been tremendous changes in the operation of the provincial economy.

The statistics which he refers to in that article, and I will not burden the House with any more than referring to it, state that the entire picture had changed. I am wondering, because of that approach, and because the estimates, Mr. Wills said, showed that the pace of the economy had definitely quickened, what the Provincial Treasurer would say to the article that appeared in Time magazine and was entitled, "The Perils of Underestimation."

It would appear to me that the provincial government, with the staff of economists that it now has, and with the machinery available to it, should be making a better job of estimating the economy of the province. This article in Time last week, refers to the difficulties that the American economy has faced, with the forecasting and the errors in forecasting, and the shortfalls in the methods and the information arrived at. It would appear to me that we find that Wall Street, in its development of the economy, and the stock exchanges are reaching far earlier peaks than we had been led to believe.

The airline industry is far better organized in trying to service the millions of passenger miles each year, than we had presumed that it would be, and to a lesser degree, whether a person is trying to drive a car on an expressway, or whether he is lining up to tee off a golf game, he finds that he has got to wait.

The full situation of the economy is such that persons who should have been able to make estimates as to where the economy was going, have failed to do so. Now, Mr. Chairman, I feel that we have the same problem with the estimation of population trends and we are told that we are so off the mark that even the manufacturers of "the pill," that we hear so much about, have underestimated the demand for their product.

Now, surely we can be better off than we are at the present time. We have a large number of economists in this department, I presume, coming generally under the control of the decision makers whose salaries we are paying in vote 2302. But it seems to me that we should be going further than we have been, looking at the total operation and methodology of The Treasury Department, I think that we should be coming to the conclusion that the systems that we have used in the past are no longer adequate for the present.

I think surely that in the months that have passed since the re-organization of the department, we should, as citizens of the province and members of the Legislature, be asking what the result of the re-organization has been.

The "guesstimates" that the Provincial Treasurer has made in his Budget, as shown against the results four months later are as far off the mark as they ever have been, and surely the talent of those for whom we are paying the salaries in these votes should have some responsibility in keeping us on the track. Now, perhaps they have not yet found their feet in their new surroundings that they face; or they are not using to good advantage the new tools of forecasting, extrapolition and prediction which should be available to them. Finally of course, perhaps the figures which they are producing have not been believed. I would like the Provincial Treasurer's comment on how he sees the province resolving this problem of underestimation?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Chairman, the hon. member was not in his seat this morning when I made what I felt was a sensible attempt to do this. I might make one more reference that is repetitious, to paragraph four of the remarks that I made in introducing the estimates of the department when I said that one of the more important targets set for the period 1963 to 1970 was a 5.5 per cent annual increase in our gross provincial product—and I say now that we expressed in real terms. Since 1963, our annual average has exceeded this target of 5.8 which was a little better than forecast, but last year the actual rate of growth fell below; in other words, the growth rate has not been as even as we would have liked to see. In real terms, it dropped to 3.7 a year ago.

Now, actually I say to the hon. member that that is the purpose for the reorganization of the department. I draw to his attention that this became effective in December 15 last, in structural terms, although the statutory change has only recently been accomplished. I think that it is fair to say that by the time the abridged report of the Budget is available in November, we will find that our Budget forecasts for the year ending March 31, 1968 are in fact very close and precise.

As a matter of fact, we forecast in the Budget statement, an 8 per cent increase for 1968 in gross provincial product, 4 per cent real, and 4 per cent price. It would now appear that we were on the conservative side, and that the total increase will be more on the order of 8.5 per cent, 5 per cent real, and 3.5 per cent price, or to some extent inflationary.

I would just simply point out to the hon. member that this is the reason for the structural changes in the department, and to you Mr. Chairman, it is a little too much to expect that a structural change that was only made effective December 15, and for which statutory provisions have only been made in the last few weeks to produce the total precision that that hon. member is making reference to. This would be instant provision overnight from a situation that has only really been introduced.

On the other hand, I hope that he will be reassured when I tell him that we are hopeful now that the restructuring of the department, the relationship to the economic and the financial policy side associated with a department that will pursue revenue policy and the revenue matters associated with statutory requirements in terms of Smith's recommendations, will indeed produce the happy situation that he is commenting upon. And I can assure you, Mr. Chairman, this is the aim of the Provincial Treasurer, the government, and The Department of Treasury.

Vote 2302 agreed to.

On vote 2303:

Mr. Breithaupt: On vote 2303, I would appreciate receiving from the Provincial Treasurer some information. We note that in the four branches under this vote, a number of rather substantial salaries are paid, in each of the separate segments of the vote. I would like to know how many qualified economists are on the staff of the economically statistical services division, and if the Minister wishes, or has other information, perhaps he could tell me at this time how many are directly referable to the other divisions of the department—if he does not wish to give me that information all at once.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, under this vote the reference to staff would involve a complement of 69 persons.

Votes 2303 to 2305, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 2306:

Mr. MacDonald: Are we taking these in sections, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Does the Provincial Treasurer feel it would be perhaps better to take these under the departmental headings or just in one total vote?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I suggest that is up to yourself, Mr. Chairman; the policy planning division covers a wide number of general subjects I would propose, and it could be dealt with item by item as you see fit.

Mr. Chairman: Well, what about item for item as appearing in the vote? Perhaps it might be better under the titles on page 144. Would this be agreeable?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Page 144?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, the headings on page 144?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is fine with me.

Mr. Chairman: All right. You agree with general office under vote 2306, policy planning division, general office. The leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Well I wanted to make a comment about this. While I stepped out of the House earlier today, the Treasurer, in what has been reported to me as something of a lapse in his usual good humour, was quite critical of the fact that I was not present to hear his reply.

Believe me, I wish that I could have been, because of the way the business was being conducted at the time. If you remember, Mr. Chairman, the hon. leader of the NDP was on his feet, and it was my expectation that we could count on him for a few minutes as we usually can. While I hated to miss his remarks as well, it was necessary that I be absent for a few moments. But I must say that I was not pleased at the way the Provincial Treasurer's response was reported to me, if you want to know the truth.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the hon. leader of the Opposition would accept my remarks as those of regret that he was not here. I wanted him to hear what I had to say.

Mr. Nixon: That is certainly not the way it was reported, because surely you can follow in your own mind if you are reasonable, and I know that you are. It was the time when I did absent myself very briefly. And I would say that I am very sorry that I did not hear the Provincial Treasurer's reply. I have asked the page to go and get the transcript of what was said so that I will not have to ask the questions again. And I hope that the answers are there.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will endeavour to be my amiable self.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, so will I. So we are talking about the general office of the sixth vote.

Mr. Chairman: General office, the top of page 144.

Mr. Nixon: Right! Now I wonder if the Minister could comment a little more fully than perhaps he already has as to how the computers that are used in the planning in his department, under the general office, can be used as well to put before the Legislature and the taxpayers of the province, a more up-to-date view of what the Provincial Treasurer has been doing and is about to do.

I have said before that I do not feel the three basic documents that he puts before us are sufficient in this day and age to keep the Legislature informed, either as to what has been accomplished or under this vote what he plans for the immediate future. Can he tell us if he has planned then to use the computers—and we have a very extensive installation indeed—to keep the Legislature informed on a more timely basis?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, yes, I think perhaps that is a fair question. To tell you categorically how we would use the computers and associated data processing measures is something which is a little beyond me. But I would say this to you, Mr. Chairman, and I said it this morning when you were obliged to be out of the House. It is the intention—and I think I have given some evidence of that to the House in previous observations—it is our intention to improve the format of the estimates. We have already given evidence of improvement in the format of the Budget, with the supplementary Budget papers, in considerably more detail than ever before.

Mr. Nixon: We have had those three years now.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I indicated to the House that we were pursuing the matter of continuing the refinement of the process to present the Budget on a national account basis. I indicated that to the House this morning. But I would go further and say that we have already started consideration of improvement in the format of the abridged report. The hon. member said this morning that he would like to sit down with me some day and go over that and learn.

I suggest that I would like to follow his second suggestion when he comes and have somebody there who can help us both. I will be quite frank about that, Mr. Chairman. And we do hope to make that a more revealing document for the House and indeed for the public. I think they are entitled to it.

Mr. Chairman: Might I just point out that the Provincial Treasurer has requested during his opening remarks that we deal with vote 2311 after we passed 2306; 2311 has to do with the computer services centre, data processing, and so on. So we will deal with that specifically in 2311 immediately after 2306 is completed. Anything further under general office on 2306?

The next department is taxation and fiscal policy branch. The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, on that sub-branch, I would be interested in hearing from the Provincial Treasurer his comments with respect to the planning which we presume occurred before the last Budget was brought before the people of Ontario. It seems that with revenues of some two and a half billion dollars, we still have a deficit of well over $252 million—or some $700,000 per day. And in the decisions made with respect to taxation, it would appear from the taxes imposed by the Provincial Treasurer that the content of the document generally was most regressive, with its having strong punitive effect on the lower and lowest income groups.

Now, as hon. members are well aware, these regressive taxes have the unhappy function of removing the purchasing power and the decision-making power from those with the lowest incomes to a far greater degree than they do from those whose incomes are somewhat higher. And this Budget seemed to me to be a very strong document which allowed these regressive taxes to go virtually unpunished and unchanged except to be increased. I am wondering if the Minister can give us some knowledge as to the individual studies that were presumably performed by this branch, to decide as to the choice of these taxes.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I should say to the hon. member and to the committee that over a period of weeks, I guess months, prior to the presentation of the Budget, that most, if not all, alternatives were considered but to recite in detail would be difficult. We met in Budget committee as frequently as it was possible, and we reached, I think, the only conclusion we could have reached at the time. That was simply what was stated in the Budget address which the hon. member, of course, I am sure has read. The conclusion is that the revenue sources open to a provincial jurisdiction—and in this instance the province of Ontario—are very restrictive.

I do not want to be criticized for getting back into the area of progressive tax fields and the extent to which they should be shared, but I have to say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the Legislature, that the use of the progressive tax fields in sufficient terms are partly denied to the province. We must rely on these narrow-based revenue sources such as specific taxes on gasoline and the sales tax which, of course, still remains at the 5 per cent rate and is a regressive tax.

We are very much aware of the regressiveness of the sales tax, Mr. Chairman. This is why we do not treat lightly the possibility of added revenue from this source. It is acknowledged to be a regressive tax, but as I say, there are very few revenue sources at the command of the provincial government any more.

Now I do not know whether I have dealt with that in the specific detail that the hon. member would have wished. Maybe I have generalized, but I assure you we examine these things exhaustively. I would like to hope that, however imperfect we are over here, we do not impose taxes on the public lightly. This was not done without a great deal of study and foresight and the conclusions we reached were based on the very difficult task of obtaining revenues. Indeed, we did not obtain sufficient revenues from the taxes we imposed. The revenue fields available to us are not sufficient to produce the revenue, and that this jurisdiction—this growing jurisdiction—imposes on the government. It is for this reason that we will have to keep up our pressure, if you like, and our efforts with the federal government—but not in the cap-in-hand sense that has been referred to from time to time. We do not go down there cap-in-hand. We go down there and simply say to the federal government that we can no longer deal with these situations in isolation.

We are supported, first of all, by the findings of the tax structure committee, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member knows we are supported by the Ontario committee on taxation and the economic council of Ontario. We have been supported by so many authoritative people in that we need more room in the progressive tax field, that I must say it is a little difficult to understand the attitude of the hon. leader of the Opposition. And I say that in fairness, Mr. Chairman, I say that in fairness. When you examine the situation, as the Provincial Treasurer, and indeed The Treasury Department must do, you come face to face with these conclusions. You cannot escape them. They are inescapable. So I just want to repeat for the benefit of the leader of the Opposition, I will welcome his questions.

It is not a cap-in-hand trip to Ottawa. It is an attempt to get the federal government to be a partner of three levels of government; to sit down and examine these things, both on the taxation side and on the expenditure control side, and bring some sensible rationality to the whole picture. That is what we do when we go to Ottawa, but we do not succeed.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, this is surely the time that the Provincial Treasurer is approaching what I asked for this morning. That is the sort of a statement of policy that will inform the House and the province, before he and the Premier and the others go down to Ottawa with whatever attitude they have, which I assume is a reasonable one.

Now he has been critical of me calling it a "cap-in-hand" attitude. In fact, you go down there and say what you want. You can call it a demand, or whatever you want, but if, in fact, you do not get what you want, what alternatives have you? You have got only one if you need more money. Is that so?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. Three alternatives.

Mr. Nixon: Not if you are limited to a decision for more money.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The first one would be to reduce expenditures.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member asked me. The first one would be to reduce expenditures, and that is difficult to do in a province that is developing like Ontario, and I am back to the comments of the hon. member for Thunder Bay this morning.

The second would be to increase taxes, and we went as far as I thought it was prudent to do on that basis in March.

The third is to borrow the difference. Borrow the difference and run the risk, if you like, of either not being able to reduce our capital debt, or the alternative risk of increasing our capital debt. Now there is not a happy set of circumstances for anyone, and this again, I emphasize, is basically what we ask Ottawa to reckon with and to sit down and discuss with us—that is all.

Mr. Nixon: Now I think it would be very useful if it were made abundantly clear across the province that the point the Provincial Treasurer makes is well understood. That is, he feels, and a good many people who advise him, like our own Royal commission, and the tax structure committee agree, that the federal government should abate more of federal moneys that they collect, to this jurisdiction and the other provinces, but the thing that has to be made very clear, is what the alternatives are. In case federal policy does not permit that, for reasons that are their responsibility; that we are, in fact, cap-in-hand, because if they turn us down, then we have got to come back from there and look after our own affairs.

This is really one of the principles of taxation that our own Royal commission sets out, that in general, and wherever possible, and all of those other qualifying phrases, the jurisdiction that spends the money should have the responsibility for raising it. The big qualification as I see it, is that in order for our nation to proceed as we would expect it, there has to be a range of joint programmes.

Someone this morning, mentioned there might even be as many as 70, but in fact there are only about six or seven important joint programmes, and this spectrum or list of joint programmes actually changes. This is what makes Canada what it is. This is what does bring about equality of opportunity, whether it is for jobs, or whether it is for medical care, but I do not think the Provincial Treasurer, and certainly the Premier, has ever given the proper impression to the people of this province that the responsibility is ours. If cap-in-hand is not the proper phrase, then I ask you to think up another one, because you go down there and ask for something, and they either give it to you, or they do not, you have no power to extract it from them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well I just want to say this to the hon. leader of the Opposition: I think we send him most of the principal statements that we make, and if he cannot read what is said down there by the Prime Minister and his predecessor in office, and what I have been obliged to say myself, then I just wonder why he would make these comments today. Our picture has been put in very broad general terms.

Mr. Nixon: That you have got to have more federal money?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This has been one of the basic proposals that have been made to the federal government.

Mr. Nixon: You made it again this morning.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Exactly, and I make it again now.

Mr. Nixon: You did not emphasize the alternatives, and you have got to make those clear to the people of the province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The people of the province have been made very much aware of this. The theory of spending and raising money is fine, Mr. Chairman, provided the fields of expenditure are properly distributed, and this is our main concern. The fields are not properly distributed. With the progressive field on the one hand, and the regressive tax fields on the other this is the basic problem, this is what we have been trying to say.

Mr. Nixon: You do not deny that you can raise income tax if you choose to do it on your own initiative?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is not a matter that we can raise the income tax on our own initiative, but I suggest to you we are going to make our case first, one way or the other, rather than impose something more than 100 per cent of income taxation on the people of this province, and that is what it would be.

Mr. Nixon: I think you must make it abundantly clear to the people, that these are the alternatives, because you come across, and the Premier as well, simply as saying we have got to have more federal money. If that is not forthcoming, it is the alternatives that I think people should be aware of as they watch you people deal with the government in Ottawa.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are two completely different issues that I want to raise, the first is the one that is now being debated, and which I was going to make a few comments on before lunch, but withheld until the appropriate estimate came up.

Some of what the Provincial Treasurer has just said, I would agree with wholeheartedly. We in the province of Ontario, in my view, and indeed in all provinces, have got to have more revenues if we are going to be left constitutionally with the range of responsibilities that are there now. Now that may be changed in the continuing constitutional conference at Ottawa, we do not know. But as long as we are fixed with the responsibilities that we now have, the provinces must have more revenue. Now it has come to the point that the leader of the Opposition is zeroing in on, namely, where do we raise that revenue? The line of Mr. Sharp was: "If you do not get any here, go home and raise it yourself." And this is, in effect, what the leader of the Opposition is pushing. I assume this is still the federal line: "Go home and raise it yourself"?

Now there is an old theory that I listened to from Dr. Corry and other professors at Queen's 30 years ago, about "the jurisdiction that spends the money, should raise the money." But in a federal structure, I must say that that principle has been violated more often than it has been observed and in my view, there is validity in it being violated. Partly for the reason that the Provincial Treasurer said, namely, that the federal government has got a stranglehold on progressive taxes and has left the regressive taxes at the provincial level.

So if you say to the province, you do not get it in Ottawa after your cap-in-hand session, go home and raise it yourself. That means you build to even higher heights, the regressive tax structure we have got in the province of Ontario or across the whole of this country.

The second point is that if we are going to have unity in this country, it seems to me that for a variety of reasons, all of which I do not need to detail, that the revenue has got to be raised at the federal level. If you are going to have corporate taxes that begin to have great variations from province to province and personal income taxes that have great variations from province to province, I suggest the full consequences of that to Canadian unity, that much talked about objective, are going to be serious. Therefore, I think there are limitations on the proposition that Ottawa can say: "If you do not get what you want at Ottawa go home and raise it yourself."

In short, on this issue I am inclined to be pretty completely on the government's side.

Now just in case you think that something might have gone wrong, and your exuberance gets a little out of hand, I will draw to the attention of the government that there are certain areas where you can raise money in the province of Ontario, such as resources taxes, and if you raise them in the province of Ontario you would get 100 per cent of every dollar you raise but you have never been willing to do it. So, the money goes off to Ottawa and you only get a proportion of it back and your lament becomes a little bit weak.

In other words, if you really need revenue, raise it in the province of Ontario and when you raise it from those corporations it becomes a deductible item as an expense when they calculate their corporate income tax to the federal government in Ottawa. In short, you will get 100 per cent of the dollar. I am talking of the tax dollar. I am talking in a very parochial way now in terms of meeting Ontario's needs on the basis of the Provincial Treasurer's rather persistent plea.

So it will be interesting to see whether the Ottawa line will continue to be: "If you cannot get it here, go home and raise it yourself." If it is, to a considerable degree I hope this government will buck it. Because I am convinced that this nation is going to get into increasing difficulties if provinces meet their constitutional requirements by raising revenues which create an even greater disparity in tax structures from province to province all across this nation. That is not the way to build a united Canada or a just society.

Now let me go on to my second point, Mr. Chairman, unless there is further debate that you wish on this one? Perhaps we should deal with it in a tidy way.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, before we leave the point, I think we have to bear in mind that before we meet again as the Legislature there is a good chance that this government will meet with the government at Ottawa on the points we are talking about now. I would like the Provincial Treasurer to give us a report—and not just on our preparations for that meeting. This tax structure committee has recommended very realistic co-operation which has not been forthcoming, I would say, in the broad sense or even in the particular sense, in the past. What chances are there for that tax structure committee to have, let us say, a more positive effect on the conferences that will be coming up this fall or next year? Is this committee still meeting? Will its recommendations continue to influence all of the provincial jurisdictions equally? It is representative of all provincial jurisdictions and the government of Canada. What processes are already working for the solution of the problem that really has been at the nub of the debate under this point?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Actually, the continuing committee meets regularly. As a matter of fact, I think they are scheduled to meet again in about a week or ten days' time. The continuing committee made up of advisors to the federal and provincial governments conduct a series of on-going meetings.

With respect to bringing the recommendations or the information—and that may be a better world—of the tax structure committee more forcibly to the government of Canada, I simply would not know how to do it. It was delineated in the most clear fashion. The hon. leader of the Opposition knows the tax structure committee forecast a continuing trend towards a rise in the revenues at the federal level and a similar decline in the revenues at the provincial levels. Conversely, the expenditure programmes of the provinces were going to increase at a faster rate than that of the federal government.

It was pretty sharply delineated. I really do not know what more could be done to put a factual position before the federal government than was done in that report of the tax structure committee. If that was not enough, it was thoroughly well supported and endorsed, if you wish, by the economic council of Canada, underscored again by Smith and underscored by almost any person that you want to read who comments on the problem.

As the hon. member for York South said, this matter of being told to go back and raise your own revenue—and this is exactly what the former Minister of Finance told the provinces to do—poses real difficulties because, at the same time, he told us that the government of Canada, when they were on an austerity programme, were going to put an end to all the open-end shared-cost programmes in one and the same breath.

So, in all frankness, Mr. Chairman, I say to the House it is difficult to know how to go to Ottawa. Unless, hopefully, there is a bigger, broader, better ear down there now than there has been before, I would be at some loss to know how to go about presenting Ontario's picture. Frankly, Ontario presents a picture that, in varying degrees, you can relate to all the provinces. It is a matter of degree. Certainly Ontario has been called and recognized, for a long time, as the wealthy province and I guess this is true.

I would like to suggest to the committee, Mr. Chairman, if I may, a good strong, viable, healthy Ontario is good for Canada —and I hope the government at Ottawa knows that. It is good for Ontario and it is good for the rest of Canada. If they are going to continue to equalize on Ontario, they cannot ignore us totally. We need a strong, viable Ontario to help all Canada equalize their disparities. I hope we find more good listeners down there than we have had in the past because, in all frankness, I do say to you Mr. Chairman, Ontario has problems too with growth, and areas of disparities and undeveloped portions of the province that need to be developed. I would simply say I hope those people down there are prepared to listen a little more.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, before we leave this area of problems in relation with Ottawa on fiscal agreements—may I ask the Provincial Treasurer, I have heard it said that it is likely, because of the time element, that the present two-year programme will be extended for a certain period. Normally it ran on a five year basis and this year we are on a shorter two year basis.

One of the reasons is partly because of the shortage of time, but also because of the highly desirable objective of implementing tax reform before we get into a new fiscal arrangement. Now, in the province of Ontario, assuming we are working on the timetable of our select committee of the Legislature, reporting in September, so that the next session of this Legislature can consider tax reform at the provincial level, and assuming now that the government at Ottawa has a majority, they are going to move forward on the Carter commission—either doing or not doing what the Carter commission recommended. Presumably in a year or so we can implement tax reform and be in a position to have fiscal agreements which will be based on a more equitable tax structure. May I ask of the Provincial Treasurer, is this the thinking of the government?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to think there may be certain areas of discussion that could wait. I think the matter of tax sharing must be given some early consideration because as I see it, Mr. Chairman, I would say to the House, the implementation of, let us say, some, probably most or all of the recommendations of the Smith committee are really based on this three-way premise that I referred to before. Without going into Smith, chapter and verse, I have grave doubts myself as to how you could implement Smith's recommendations to be meaningful, to change the tax base to benefit the municipalities, without the three-way participation to which I have made reference. I do not think we could do it. Again—back to the regressive nature of our own revenue. What have we got out of the absolute amount of money to share? If we give it here, we have to take it there. I mean, this is fine, and we have already moved to do some of these things and I think we can perhaps move to do more. But to go very far with Smith without the participation of Ottawa in a meaningful sense, I think all would agree would be very difficult.

So we would hope we can get on with this tax-sharing, or this sharing of tax fields, very quickly, and I do not know that it would need to impede anything that requires to be done. If they are intermediate steps toward a final stage of what might be called an overall plan that could hopefully be worked out, I do not think we would lose any ground. Neither, do I think, would Ottawa. But we have to have this attitude that I have made reference to in Ottawa before we can give effect to anything very meaningful. That would be my opinion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I go on now to the second point that I wanted to raise and it has to do with highway revenue. I return to a further chapter in a long serial that I have had with this government, and more particularly with the Provincial Treasurer, and that is to exactly what the government policy is with regard to highway revenue.

Now, the last time we discussed this, during the estimates of the Provincial Treasurer, I informed the House that this secret report which the government had been sitting on for some five years is, from this point forward, not going to be secret, because I have a copy of it. It is right here, and I intend to use it. As I have indicated in the House, the reason why the government has sat on the report for so long was a little bit mystifying, because if I may just briefly recap, back in 1957 or 1958, the select committee of this Legislature recommended unanimously that we should move toward a weight-distance tax to raise more revenue from the big trucks that travel on our highways and which, allegedly, were not paying their fair share of the almost double cost that is required to build a highway that can stand the pounding of the big trucks.

And the government got into a process of studying; they completed a report about 1963 or 1964—at least so the annual meeting of the ATA was informed last fall, a meeting at which the leader of the Opposition and the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree) and myself were present as panel guests as spokesmen for each of our parties.

Now, what becomes evident, at least if I may be forgiven for a moment in guessing, is the reason for the government's hiding of this report for so long—it is obvious that the government is violating many of the basic conclusions that emerged in that report. The government is operating on the rather superficial conclusion that was arrived at from the Smith report, which did a little bit of studying of the study that had been done by The Department of Transport and then came up with its conclusions. That was that the province is not raising adequate revenue from the highway users—indeed, if I may quote just briefly from a comment made by the Provincial Treasurer following his Budget, I believe, it is quoted by the ATA in their regular bulletin for the date of March 18. The Provincial Treasurer was quoted as saying:

> At present, automobiles and other vehicles are taxed too lightly in relation to the total costs which they entail for the people of Ontario. Apart from building, maintaining and policing our roads and streets, there are the social costs of pollution and congestion. In addition to these factors, we must always try to ensure that any changes we introduce improve the equity and efficiency of our overall tax structure.

In other words, what the Provincial Treasurer is doing is loading on to highway users, a certain proportion of the social costs of congestion and pollution and is also, in his rather oblique reference to the efficiency of the tax system, saying that this is just as good a way to raise a dollar in taxes as anywhere else—"We can get it rather readily, so that is where we are going to get it".

Now, let us get down to the basics of policy: The Smith committee repeats the conclusion of the study of The Department of Transport that was completed in 1963 or 1964, namely that highway users should be obligated to carry in the range of 68 to 75 per cent of the cost of highway construction, it being argued that the remainder of the cost might legitimately be carried from the public Treasury because of the economic values that flow from highway construction.

And these we are all extremely familiar with as we watch industrial development along the building of a modern highway like 400 or 401. All right, 68 to 75 per cent. I put these on the record earlier so I am not going to take the time of the House to go back into detail again. The fact of the matter is that this government has been running 90 to 100 per cent or beyond of highway expenditures in the taxes that you raise from highway users, so you are violating the basic principle that was accepted and recommended in the highway study and repeated by the Smith committee.

Now, I must digress for a moment, Mr. Chairman, to deal with a rather puzzling set of figures that have been introduced to confuse this picture. The Smith committee suggests that highway expenditures, projected over a number of years, are going to be in the range of $550 million a year. In fact, they are now in the range of $350 to $375 million a year, or at least other studies suggest that this is likely to be the range. And we are a little bit curious as to why you have this extra $200 million in there which goes far to justifying this higher imposition of taxes on highway users.

Now, I do not profess to know where that calculation comes from the Smith committee. I must say in some areas of the study I suspect they were a little bit superficial, and I suspect that all they did was to regurgitate the studies that had been done by The Department of Transport and that there was no real study in depth in this area, though they pronounced themselves in pretty definitive terms. But the automotive transport association, in its bulletin as of March 18, notes two or three areas where this figure has been built up.

They point out, for example, that the committee has included in Department of Highways expenditures for the next number of years, commuter rail projects, and they argue that it is not valid to charge highway users for the building of alternative kinds of travel, namely, commuter rail services, when highway users cannot use them, at least they cannot use them with their cars. So that this is not an appropriate figure to be put in a calculation of highway expenditures over the coming year.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: You can rationalize that both ways.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, if you are talking about highway users tax, it is pretty difficult to rationalize that the man who is driving the car should be paying for the building of the commuter rail.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Then he will be able to use the highways.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: May I make a point? The whole premise of the commuter rail service known as the GO transit was to conserve capital by taking "X" number of automobiles off certain freeways to have more capital to expend elsewhere. So, as I say, you can rationalize that situation both ways. Maybe the motor vehicle user should pay for some of that, because if there is a good capital saving—and I am convinced there is—they make it possible to do what has to be done in other areas where rail transportation will not work.

Mr. MacDonald: I agree that there is a capital saving; I do not think that there is any argument there at all. But whether or not you should charge the highway user for the capital saving that is made to build an alternative kind of transportation which he is not going to use, I suggest, at the moment, that it is not central to my argument, and that it is a little bit questionable.

However, let me go on to the second point. This strikes me as being just a bit indefensible, if it is accurate. The contend that in arriving at this figure of $550 million, that what they have done is to include the provincial government's expenditure on municipal roads, but not to include the revenues on the municipal level to balance it. Now, that is kind of cooking the books to arrive at what may be a desired objective; that, I think, is a little indefensible, if, in fact, it is the case and it is bluntly asserted to by the ATA. I think that it is about time that the Provincial Treasurer should comment on whether this is the case.

However, I would like to get back to the basic point. The alleged $550 million a year is a questionable one. The $350 million to $375 million seems to me to be a more realistic one, and at that level, it simply means that the highway users of the province of Ontario, with the new taxes that the Provincial Treasurer is putting on, will be paying approximately 106 per cent of the expenditures on highways.

Now, if that is the case, the contention of the Provincial Treasurer that those who are using the highways are not paying their fair share is really completely fallacious. It is absolutely wrong. They are more than paying their fair share. I can quite understand why the government kept this report hidden. This report pulls the underpinnings out from under the policy which had been implemented, and further increases in gasoline tax and all the other charges are not justified.

Now, let me be very frank with you. It also pulls the pins out, at least for the time being, on a policy which we have been supporting, namely the idea of a weight-distance tax on the big trucks. We were predicating the policy on the study that was done ten years ago, and I said many times to the ATA meeting, and I say it again here, we were going to continue to stick with that conclusion of a carefully conducted committee chaired by the Premier of this province, when or before he got into the Cabinet, and until we had alternate studies we were not going to throw out of the window the studies of the select committee report.

I will admit that we have got to reasses the whole basis of our policy and, more important, our whole validity of a weight-distance tax in the province of Ontario. But before we examine it, I think that it is about time that the Provincial Treasurer should level with the people of the province of Ontario, and level with this Legislature.

The basis of your policy is repudiated by the studies that have been taken in the government. Now, whether or not that is the reason you kept the studies, I do not know, but that is all water over the dam now.

What I would like to know from the Provincial Treasurer is what is the basis of your policy on highway revenue? Do you really believe that for whatever reason, congestion, pollution, paying for commuter services or anything else, that it is legitimate to go out and soak the highway user for 106 per cent of the expenditures put into the construction of highways in this province? Do you think that that is an equitable way of raising operating revenues? When we get some clarification of that I think that we can move forward to related considerations.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman. Firstly, the figure of 106 per cent, supported by the advice I can obtain, is in my opinion, wrong. It is true that the incidence of the increase in the gas tax imposed in March brought the comparative situation closer to 100 per cent. It had ranged in the past number of years in my memory, between 90 and 100; in that range. As far as the secrecy of the report is concerned, I told the hon. member when he brought this matter up before that I knew nothing of such a report until you brought it up and a copy was made available to me some time ago.

Now, in view of that, it makes it very difficult for me to comment, and I do not propose to. But if there was any suppression —and I do not know that government's failing to disclose reports is suppression, as there are many reports prepared for government that are not disclosed—I think that it is the government's prerogative under certain circumstances to decide what they do with reports.

But the information is out now, and because you share one point of view does not mean that I or the government must share another, so on that score then, I disagree with anybody who purports to say that only between 68 and 75 per cent of the costs of roads should be borne by those who use them. I do not think that that is a high enough proportion.

Not only do I say that with respect to the capital costs, the cost of maintenance and reconstruction, but with all those things that are associated with the use of the highways of the province of Ontario. I guess that it is fair to say, Mr. Chairman, that we are not on all fours in that respect. I disagree with the hon. member. I think that the user should bear a larger proportion of the cost of provision for road transportation facilities than 68 to 75 per cent that he would seem to support, from the reports.

Now, in this matter of the weight-distance tax, I could go into some facts associated with that, though it suffices to say that upon examination we found that it was very difficult to administer. There is only one province in Canada which uses it, as I understand, and that is Manitoba. Whether they are satisfied with its suitability or not, I cannot say, but nine other provinces feel that it is not an acceptable way to raise road-user revenues.

You make mention of the $550 million required. I do not know whether you are talking about an average over a period of years—and I presume that you are—but there are just as many advisors, very authoritative advisors who will tell you that after a short period of time, the expenses will be substantially higher than that. So they must be averaging today's and yesterday's cost programmes with tomorrow to arrive at that average.

I am prepared to admit to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the House that gasoline tax, and associated road-user revenue taxes are maybe straining the upper limits. However, I can say that at present the rates of taxation with the revenue that will be produced will be a very short lived situation.

Very recently we have all come to have some knowledge of the requirements of the transportation facilities in the urban municipalities of the province with Metro and down the line. The capital requirements to even start today and, on a staged basis over a period of, say, 20 years, to provide, and to pull a figure, out of the hat, 70 to 80 per cent of optimum, will create such capital demands for that purpose alone that I suggest that it should be the concern of everyone of us.

Whether we are moving too fast in terms of reaching optimum or maximum limits in this field, I do not know. Certainly the revenues at the present limitations will, in my opinion, not keep up with the demand for facilities in the urban municipalities alone, to say nothing of the rural areas that may expand and become urban as time goes on.

So it may appear that the motor vehicle user is paying a high price, and it is probably appropriate to say that we are right back to the fact that to some extent, where else would you go? Where would you seek the revenue, where would you get it? Would you increase the sales tax? That is even more regressive, in my opinion.

So I am back to this philosophy that we started off on, it must come from somewhere. Mr. Chairman, those are the only comments I can make.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I say with regard to the report itself, and I assure the Provincial Treasurer this will be my last comment on this report, I am more interested in getting into the substance in that report and its implication in terms of policy.

When the Minister says that the government has a right to withhold the report I would say that certain circumstances, it is quite likely, quite possible that the government may have an area of public policy that should be looked into, and that the report might be considered an interdepartmental or a Cabinet report. But this, is not in that category.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I do not know—

Mr. MacDonald: The government abuses this business of spending public moneys on reports which it uses for their own purposes and does not make them available to the Opposition, so that they, on the full details of the study, can come to the conclusion as to the wisdom or lack thereof of government conclusions and policy. I think we and the public are entitled to the benefits of the report.

Particularly so in this instance, because I remind the Provincial Teasurer that this, in effect, was a continuing study as a result of the government's hesitation in implementing the select committee report of 1958. Now, if you took six years to study it surely we were entitled to know the results of that study, and the public were entitled to know and it should not be withheld.

My second comment is that I am a little astounded at the Provincial Treasurer confessing to us that he did not know the existence of this report. Sometimes, I do not know how in heaven's name this government operates. I mean the whole issue of highway revenue was an important enough one that we had a select committee headed by John Robarts—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That was before my time.

Mr. MacDonald: Before your time and you had continuing studies that went on for six years. It will be interesting to know how money was spent on that study.

I suspect it must have been a good many tens, if not hundreds of thousands, of dollars and therefore, you had a set of recommendations and detailed analysis on the whole question of highway revenue. Yet the man who is responsible for highway revenue does not even know the report existed in the government. Does the right hand know what the left hand is doing in this government? This is administrative chaos that is almost beyond belief. However, I said this was going to my last comment on this report and I leave it there.

Now let me go on to the substance and I am going to—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Thank you for that anyway.

Mr. MacDonald: Enough of that, did you say?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I said, thank you for that anyway.

Mr. MacDonald: Well do not provoke me because—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, I have no intention of provoking you.

Mr. MacDonald: —because sometimes I can go back on my own word if I am sufficiently provoked.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): He withdraws the thanks.

Mr. MacDonald: On the question of the weight-distance tax, the Provincial Treasurer makes a very valid point that it may be that the problems of levying and administering a weight-distance tax make it inefficient from the point of view of administrative costs and that there may be rough and ready ways of raising the same revenue. There may be inequities in the rough and ready way, but the inequities are relatively small overall.

In other words, I am not completely wedded to the idea of a weight-distance tax. What I would like sometime in the future, if not today, is to get some reaction from this government on the kind of figures—and I concede that these may be a little out of date—that we were presented with in 1957 and 1958, from New York and California and elsewhere. Namely that the cost of a modern highway is almost doubled because of what you must put in that highway to be able to sustain the pounding of the big trucks.

In other words, if you just had relatively light cars running on it, your road bed could be so much shallower, your curves in the road could be that much sharper. For big trucks you have to have—well it was contended then that it increased the cost of the highway by 52 per cent and this was for 4 per cent of the traffic. Obviously, these figures are away out of date. They are 10 or 15 years old.

But what is the up-to-date calculation? Has The Department of Highways—or has The Department of Revenue which is doing studies—have they any conclusion on what is the cost of a modern highway—the added cost that must be put into it because of the big trucks! If you want to come to any final and fair and equitable conclusion as to whether the big trucks are carrying their fair share, we have got to have an up-to-date figure in Ontario terms.

Now I suggest to the Minister, sometime during the next year that we should have that. As an alternative way to the weight-distance tax I repeat that I think there are certain categories which may be designated. If one comes to the conclusion they are not paying their fair share within those weight categories, you can charge a certain amount. That, in effect, was recommended by the select committee in 1957-1958 as an interim, rough and ready implementation of the basic objective which was unanimously accepted. Now, on the general proposition of the overall costs and how you raise the money for their capitalization and how you tie it in with economic policy and how you tie it in with such social policies as those arising from congestion and pollution and other things—I am not going to pursue that any more today.

But I would suggest to the Provincial Treasurer that having now discovered the existence of this report, that if his staff is doing studies on the equity of our tax structure, Mr. Chairman, here is an area that should be brought up to date. There are certain salient features in it that bear reexamination and prior to next year we should have an up-to-date picture on it so that we can come to some policy conclusions. Preferably, the government do so in advance so that we will know exactly what we are arguing for or against.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on the taxation and fiscal policy branch?

The economic planning branch? The member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister in connection with this department — this section of his department—as to what the philosophy is in the economic planning branch? Is this a matter of simply surveying the province and its economic life and writing reports on it? Is it designed to look into the future a bit and help to direct the economy in some way along the line of the Canadian economic council or just what is the philosophy upon which this branch operates?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I refer the hon. member to page 6 of my opening statement this morning. I will put it on the record again for the benefit of the hon. member. The economic planning branch is responsible for aggregate analysis of the Ontario economy for the Prime Minister's development programme. Its tasks included forecasting, establishing targets, identifying problem areas and analyzing major developments in significant sectors of the economy.

It will have close contact with economic research in other departments and will work closely with the taxation and fiscal policy and regional development branches.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, that rules out the idea of any kind of economic planning, looking toward the future in any real sense, for this particular branch.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh no—well what the hon. member is referring to, I think, is in a much broader context than that. I suggest that probably the whole vote we are talking about now has a relationship to what you are talking about, sir. I am just dealing with the economic planning branch which is charged with responsibilities of a somewhat more precise nature in the framework of the whole policy-planning structure.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on the economic planning branch? The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Briefly, I would just allude to my earlier comments with respect to this article on the perils of under-estimation. It would seem to me that this branch would have a strong function in attempting to resolve the problems to which this article refers and to which I have earlier referred. Certainly we are well aware that industry has misread the demand for electronic equipment, for xerography, synthetics and plastics.

Similarly, it is quite apparent the government has underestimated, not so much the demand, but the need for improved expressways, bridges, air pollution controls, airport facilities and all of the roads and devices that will make congested city traffic move more rapidly. I would like to hear from the Minister if there are any specific current studies going on with respect to attempting to resolve this underestimation problem? Just any specific items?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the answer is there are studies. There have been studies in the past, as I recall it, in various departments — The Department of Highways obviously. In the years that I was closely identified with it, it has done some very specific studies. But there is a study of a much broader nature being undertaken at the moment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: The economic planning branch carried?

The federal-provincial affairs secretariat carried?

The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I wish to comment only on the work of the economic planning branch. We have come to the conclusion—or at least, result—that our net increase in debt from 1961 to 1967 has gone from the sum of $526 to the sum of $677 per person and that we are even out-pacing the province of Quebec in our rate of spending.

Now it seems to me that the development of this secretariat must be to attempt to resolve problems of spending both between and among the provinces and with the federal government.

In our present situation, the deficit is increasing and it would appear to me that some of the attitudes expressed by the Provincial Treasurer concerning the requirement for increased funds from Ottawa are to a point leaning upon the federal government. One wonders whether the provincial government can be able to assure the members of this House and the people of the province that we are using our own internal resources to the extent that we should be.

Our complaint is that the federal government should be prepared to bail us out of some of our problems and to give back to certain areas of tax. We almost, on occasion, use this weapon of being bailed out as a form of attempting a certain embarrassment on the federal authorities.

I am wondering if the Minister would comment as to how he sees the federal-provincial affairs secretariat attempting to resolve in any specific way the conflict for sources of funds between the provinces and the federal government.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I doubt very much, Mr. Chairman, if that is really the area of responsibility that has been assigned to the federal-provincial affairs secretariat. The problem more properly, I think, rests with the Provincial Treasurer himself, and one of the members already heard me expound at some length on the attitude of the Provincial Treasurer and indeed the government in this respect.

It is true that the debt of the province has been rising. I think that is quite natural in a developing jursidiction. At the same time, we have been able to hold our net debt within fairly consistent limitations over a protracted period of time. As a matter of fact, this was commented on rather faithfully in a journal that I read not too long ago. It commented upon it in rather praiseworthy terms, but I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the hon. member, that we are trying to keep an eye to the future. You heard me mention a few moments ago the extent to which I anticipated the rising capital costs of providing transportation facilities for our urban municipalities, and the extent to which we see that obligation increasing in very, very rapid terms.

This is only one of the similar situations in a jurisdiction that is growing as fast as Ontario, so that I really do not want to thresh that straw all over again, Mr. Chairman. The only thing I can do is repeat what I said to the hon. leader of the Opposition, and the hon. leader of the NDP, about all that I could resort to at the moment in terms of the philosophy of the Provincial Treasurer and the government.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on the federal-provincial affairs secretariat?

Regional development branch. The member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, I notice that this particular branch takes up about $1.5 million of the Provincial Treasurer's Budget, and in view of the total Budget of $281 million I am at a loss to know whether this is really sufficient for the important item which is encompassed by this particular vote.

It seems to me that a good part of what the Provincial Treasurer has been saying about the need for tax reform, relates, at least in part, to this problem of reorganizing our municipal institutions across the province. I think he would agree that there are two problems here. One is certainly in relationship to the federal government, at the top, and also a new relationship and a new division of taxation sources and taxation resources —let us put it that way—with the municipality.

I would like very much to discuss for a moment, this problem of regional development in the knowledge that it is really not the Provincial Treasurer's responsibility of what has gone on before, but I read very carefully the speeches of the Prime Minister, his 1966 statement on design for development and his recent one on the blueprint for development. I am afraid that although we keep getting the same words, no greater meaing seems to emanate from these words. I wonder if there is not some structural impassé here. This is what I would like to prod a bit, in relation to what the Provincial Treasurer's plans are in this area; to discover exactly where we seem to be going. Now, as I say, the words sound right, and I think I am reading the latest emanation from the Prime Minister, which was just approximately a month ago when he said:

> Our regional development programme cannot be a passive philosophy, it must be active; it must be dynamic; it must be alive and responsive to the changes in our economic, social and technological light, which dictate and provide the opportunities open to us to enjoy in the years ahead. We must be aware of the kind and shape of our development; we must possess information about the forces which are dictating change in our communities.

I suppose the Provincial Treasurer would say that the latest work being done by the various development councils indicates a concern in this area. "We must make plans." This is where I am afraid I find myself at a loss. We must make plans which serve and complement these changes, adapt them to our resources, and modify them not only to the needs and desires of the people of Ontario, but to what is practical for immediate action and what must await further and economic growth.

Now he goes on to point out in that same speech, of the existence—and he had done so before—of the organization, and he mentioned we have two choices: "Helter-skelter, ad hoc development, which consumes valuable land and resources, parches our throats for a lack of water, engulfs us in pollution and strangles in a maze of hastily constructed roadways. Or we can have orderly planning which will enhance and enrich the daily life of every resident of this area. The government of Ontario has rejected the ad hoc approach and is doing its utmost to ensure orderly growth."

Well, Mr. Chairman, I say I cannot as yet see where this planning and this growth is taking place.

I notice that the Prime Minister states that after these reports—and we have reports, and we have had reports, reports and reports on various municipal areas and various aspects of the provincial economy—these reports, I take it, go through this Cabinet committee? I think he calls it the Cabinet committee on policy development, which includes a goodly number, I would imagine, of the gentlemen who occupy the front benches with the Provincial Treasurer.

May I just ask a simple question before I go on? How often does this Cabinet committee meet? What does it do? Is it essentially a policy committee? Or does it carry out some form of administrative activity as a committee of the Cabinet?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, it meets at the call of the Prime Minister, who is the Chairman. I would think it meets quarterly. It is a policy committee. Policy directions that reviews, I suppose, the progress that is made by the branch and the regions as components of the programme from time to time, and lends its policy approval to any changes that may develop in the format. There have been some, but it is strictly a policy committee.

Mr. Pitman: The very fact that the Minister indicates that they lend their support to changes that are taking place within various departments means then, it is partly administrative too?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, as the administrative procedures would be associated with implementation of the policy, I think that is inescapable. Yes.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could go on to ask, if this committee meets every three months, is it actually reviewing the activities on each of the regional development areas? Is it actually looking at the plans of each of these various departments that are concerned with planning, regional planning? Or is it developing any kind of a provincial development policy? Is it an ad hoc meeting-by-meeting approach? A kind of an ambulance service? A kind of a holding of the fort? Or is it really a committee which is developing what can be called a provincial development policy?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Intra-provincial development policy would be the responsibility of the Cabinet. The terms of reference that were assigned to the committee are as follows:

(a) The overall long term and short term goals of governmental activity in relation to the economy of the province.

(b) In the general outline of budgetary policy priorities and expenditure programmes levelled at taxation.

(c) Intergovernmental fiscal relations.

(d) New significant programme proposals.

(e) The co-ordination of government policy with respect to the regional development of the province—land use, conservation, and all matters bearing on natural resources.

(f) the co-ordination of employment and manpower policy.

I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, these are what I would think would be regarded as appropriate terms of reference for a policy committee.

Mr. Pitman: Well, I think that is being very helpful. I thank the Provincial Treasurer. I wonder if I could ask more about the advisory committee on regional development? I take it these are top civil servants who are passing on to the Cabinet, I would suspect, more or less the agenda every three months that they would then consider. Is it top civil servants? And how often does it meet?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, the administrative committee, if that is what we have called it, the departmental committee, meets regularly once a month, or more frequently if, in the opinion of the chairman, it is required. Now, it is the administrative matters that are considered at that level.

Back to your previous question, in association with that latter one, if I may. When the ten regional development plans are submitted, the committee must meet frequently to prepare policy. Meanwhile, The Treasury Department and the administrative staff which you made reference to latterly, is co-ordinating all the time—if that is a good way to put it—

Mr. Pitman: One of the things I find rather interesting is that all these ten plans will come before the advisory committee and then will come through the advisory committee and through the Cabinet committee.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Where policy decisions are required, yes.

Mr. Pitman: And from this you expect to have a provincial development plan which will then be initiated. Mr. Chairman, in a sense the planning is already going on, and I am wondering to what extent both the Cabinet committee and the departmental advisory committee are actually taking hold of what is going on. I am sure the Minister is well aware of the fact that, in a sense, I think the Minister of Education has already cooked the books so far as the kind of administrative unit that you will have. I see the Minister of Correctional Institutions is shaking his head—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is just not the hon. member's kind of language. Cooking the books, it is not like him.

Mr. Pitman: Well, perhaps I might rephrase it. He has already drawn up the provincial policy in such a way that it would be very difficult to change from essentially a county system. In fact, I used the Minister of Education as an extremely malleable Cabinet Minister who is willing to withdraw amendments and allow amendments, but he suddenly dug his heels and held on because this was obviously where we are going to stop.

An hon. member: Government policy.

Mr. Pitman: This was the truth. I am sure the Minister would also admit that the Minister of Trade and Development is, day by day, creating and planning this province's development and its future. We may agree or we may disagree with the priorities which he has exerted, and I am wondering to what extent this Cabinet committee and the advisory committee are actually carrying on a holding action, day by day, until we find out where we are going. Because it would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that no decision has been made as to whether we want to develop; what kind of an urban society we want to develop; will it be satellite cities; or growth centres?

Yet I would say that many of the departmental Ministers occupying the front benches with the Provincial Treasurer are making the decisions for him in the sense that the money is being placed in certain areas without any particular decision being made as to what the future is going to be. In a way, I would suggest to the hon. Minister that The Department of Municipal Affairs is carrying on a planning action right now and it is doing it very effectively. I think the community planning branch has gone into certain areas and has set up a kind of a regional official plan for an area which could be as large as a county.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, regarding his reference to The Department of Municipal Affairs, in terms of planning may I say that the regional development branch and the planning people of The Department of Municipal Affairs meet every week with closest liaison possible.

Mr. Pitman: I am delighted to hear that because I always had a feeling that they were going in two opposite directions in some cases—you sort of did not talk about regional development over at The Department of Municipal Affairs, you might get thrown out the door onto Bay Street. But you could talk about it over in The Department of Trade and Development and over at the Minister's office. I am so glad to hear that there is some inter-relationship here.

But I do suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we on this side would like to see at least some kind of a provisional provincial plan so at least we know where this thing is going. And I think as well as that, we need some guidelines for the development councils who are trying to carry out these studies. I do not think they really know what the province is up to, what it really wants. I would suggest more guidelines and a more provisional approach or goal; I think the setting of goals is a part of the planning procedure, and I would just leave that with the Minister on this particular vote.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I find it impossible to quarrel with the hon. member and I guess it is fair to say that because I can say to him, quite honestly, that is what we are doing. We are now in possession, I guess, of all the inventory material that we have worked rather painstakingly for a year or more to obtain; we are now, for all practical purposes, in possession of that. The next step will be—and I hope it is not a long drawn-out affair—an evaluation of all the data, and the data ranges over a very, very broad field.

I think probably I may have some detail on it here, but the hon. member would know the nature of the data that we have been inventorying with respect to the different regions of the province. Now that evaluation process is underway, and I think, really, what I am relating to him, Mr. Chairman is an explanation of implementation of a plan that you, in fact, are espousing.

I am quite prepared to say, without being critical, that there have been some ad hoc elements in this programme. And we are trying, by inventory process and data accumulation and all that is associated with it, to bring it together, to formulate a provincial plan and then, to some extent, to assign to the regional councils a programme which is in keeping with what we have discovered about each individual region.

Mr. Chairman, then I think we are starting and are on the right track. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that I am expressing what the hon. member was thinking about—because I think I am, to some extent. I might say that I had not intended to put this on the record but when we were in Europe a couple of weeks ago we found that there is nothing in the way of what you might call a new problem. Problems are similiar by characteristics wherever you go, and it was interesting to pick up the London Times in two different issues and read comments which might have been taken from Hansard in this House or any one of our daily papers.

But, indeed, they encouraged us to believe that while we are maybe taking a little longer, we are getting on track with this thing, hopefully. One of the comments that we noticed, and it is abbreviated near the central agency, must provide economic and physical plans that the local authorities are to have a framework within which to work. This we read in the London Times as well as the problems associated with regional development in England. So I simply say this is what we have been endeavouring to do over recent months; to put ourselves in that position. And I can say to the Chairman, and the hon. member, that we are getting very close to considering policies with respect to effective implementation of appropriate programmes, if that is the way you put it.

Mr. Pitman: I am wondering, Mr. Chairman, if I could ask one or two questions. Is there any hope of increasing the municipal responsibility at the lowest level because now I realize municipal councils do appoint representatives on the regional council? I think that as the plan comes closer to some kind of reality, there is going to be a desire and a need to have a very close relationship between the municipal councils who are, in fact, responsible, they are democratically elected. In fact, it might even be rather a worthwhile suggestion that perhaps the members of this House could be added to some of these regional councils at some point along the way, and members of the other House at the national level. But I think, perhaps, a little bit more democratic emphasis at the lowest levels in order to get a more effective play-back and in order that this is not a hothouse kind of development plan.

Finally, I would like to ask if there is any timetable which the Minister could present to the House as to when the provincial plan might be presented to the House?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: We are shooting at 1969, Mr. Chairman. There is a rather substantial process of evaluation to be completed yet. These inventory studies that I made reference to are just nicely in the hands of the committee. We are shooting at this for 1969. I am prompted to make another observation to the hon. member. I do not know whether it is a sensible one or not, and I have already expressed myself this way.

One of the problems with the regional councils, Mr. Chairman, is that they are sandwiched between two elected bodies. It becomes apparent that they are dedicated people; there is no question about it; they work hard and they work zealously and they have done a great deal of good work; but they encounter the criticisms of the local jurisdiction on the one hand and on the other they have to account to some extent to the provincial jurisdiction. Now, we recognize these problems. Just what can be done to smooth them out, I do not know. They are there, and we recognize it, and I am sure the hon. member does.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I would like to enquire a bit further and ask the Minister about the data that is being assembled now, ready for some resolution within the next year or so. Is it his intention, that out of this data, will come a land-use plan for the province of Ontario, will come the general boundaries perhaps for new regional municipal governments? We have the suggestion of the Smith report in this respect, boundaries which may not be as good as they might be according to some experts. But I would think that if this thing works out, that the economic councils, the regional councils as we know them now, might well go out of business. Their function and the power of the present municipalities could be incorporated into new municipal governments on a regional basis. Would this be the kind of thing that the Minister sees emerging here?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, no, I would hardly think that the regional development programme on the one hand and the matter of regional government on the other are that closely related. There may be areas where there could well be a course of consultation, but this was not the purpose for the establishment of regional development councils or the regional development programme in the first instance. As far as I am aware, Mr. Chairman, there is a rather substantial difference between regional government as it is contemplated or proposed and regional development although, as I say, they may come together once in a while. But I do not think they are closely related.

The evaluation stage that we made reference to, which is just nearing completion now —and I do have some detail that may be of interest to the hon. member for Peterborough —is we are tracing the trends and growth of population in primary, secondary and tertiary activities and other relevant factors, examining township by township, where possible, and in other terms where data are not available, with specific reference to the period 1951 to 1981. On the basis of the first two stages, specific detail plans for the province and for each region will be initiated in 1969. So, I did say early next year—and this seems to confirm it here. We are on schedule with the programme. The inventory of the departmental programmes and policies was completed early this year.

A pilot study to evaluate economic trends in the midwestern Ontario region was completed early in the year. It will be finished late this year or early next year. And for the northwestern region, the evaluation process will involve a detailed study under the ARDA and FRED arrangements. Of course, I have already mentioned that the Niagara escarpment study is nearing completion. There is much more detail on it here, but this is the type of work we are doing in conjunction, I might say, with the universities—which have been assigned some specific research projects associated with this.

Mr. Sopha: Which universities?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well now, the University of Western Ontario, I guess, has one of the major research projects—the development of a regional data bank. It is quite an assignment for the University of Western Ontario. As a matter of fact, I am just informed that all 14 universities have been given an assignment of one kind or another related to the information we are trying to accumulate.

Mr. Sopha: May I ask the Minister, to what extent does this branch seek our scholars, academic people who are carrying on research into various aspects of our economy, our natural resources, and the geography of our province, and so on? Is there any effort made to seek them out and to assist them in their programmes of study?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, we have an advisory committee with the universities for the very purpose to which the hon. member for Sudbury has made reference. We have a committee that deals with the universities on this very matter—that is, searching out the student talent and so on that the member made reference to.

Mr. Sopha: Could the Minister give me an idea of how much money is available for this activity?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I think I can. The member may have to allow me a moment or two, but I think we can try and break it down. The amount, Mr. Chairman, is $150,000 per year at the present time.

Mr. Sopha: How does one go about getting it? By contacting the Minister? How does one go about applying for assistance? By direct contact with the Minister?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They can contact either the university or the regional development branch. Either way.

Mr. Sopha: If one does not have any success with the branch, may one approach the Minister?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, the Minister is very approachable, yes. That does not guarantee success—but he may be approached.

Mr. Sopha: I see. Now, I understand there was a migration from The Department of Economics and Development as it then was, to The Department of the Treasury of certain economists. May I ask whether that migration included persons in the applied economics branch of the office of the chief economist of the Ontario Department of Economics and Development? And are they now to be found in this department?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I believe I explained earlier that in December last the major proportion of what was then the chief economist's branch in The Department of Economics and Development moved to The Department of the Treasury. But a fair number of staff were left. As I recall, the applied economics branch was left there. Not all the staff was removed, but something in the order of 69 employees came with the chief economist from the one department to the other.

Mr. Sopha: If that is so I want first to comment about that reference the Minister made to the study of the ARDA programme. I had not heard it called that before. That study, I suppose you refer to, is the one announced by the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Stewart), and it will spend, if memory serves me correctly, about $140,000 in northwestern Ontario. I should say in passing that that will enable it to just about count all the cows and perhaps some of the bulls in northwestern Ontario. By the time it has that done, the $140,000 will just about be used up.

I might say as modestly as I can, Mr. Chairman, that I have done considerable study of this area. I had hoped to have something to say about it in depth before the session ended, but really it is pointless to fight the heat of high summer, and I am relieved to have convinced myself to allow that to wait until fall.

The indictment that I want to make about lack of study of the northern part of our province is a serious one. Firstly, I should like to say, upon reflection, I am committed to the belief that this method, adopted by this branch is wrong. That is the method of arbitrarily dividing the province into neat packaged areas, and studying the areas as separate, or disparate, if you like, regions.

Reality tells one the facts of life of living in Ontario—tells one beyond peradventure, that one must consider the economic base of Ontario. What does the wealth of Ontario consist of? That leads naturally to the next subject of enquiry which must be, of course, what is the optimum utilisation of this wealth on behalf of its people?

Looked at in that way, it has nothing to do with nice, neat geographic areas, which have been defined in the regional development branch. Rather, one becomes obsessed with the notion—are our mining resources, for example, being used in the best interests of our people? Of course, they are not confined to any one geograhpic region. They are to be found in what is called northeastern Ontario, northwestern Ontario, some of them in southwestern Ontario, and so on. The attitude of this branch is best revealed in the publication: "Northeastern Region Ontario, Economic Survey, 1966." They managed in that survey—which was little more than counting telephone calls—to get some conclusions about the northeastern part of Ontario, where I have the honour to be born, in the place which was the forerunner of mining development in Ontario, Cobalt. When one considers how mining activity then spread out from Cobalt and Cobalt exported experts in mining to all parts of Ontario, and Canada, and indeed the world, and when one contemplates the tremendous wealth in mineral resources that has been produced in northeastern Ontario, then one must indeed be surprised that this—what was then called the applied economics branch of the department of the chief economist—could get its conclusions about northeastern Ontario on one page. It is not necessary to read the whole page. All one has to do is to read the first and last paragraphs to get the complete sense of distillation of the efforts of this branch in respect of that important area.

On the first page of the study, they refer to northeastern Ontario—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, may I say, in agreement with the hon. member, that we have stopped that type of study to which he is making reference for some of the reasons that he has enunciated. We recognize that report in 1966, and this is 1968.

Mr. Sopha: That is not ancient history.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, but it might save you a lot of breath.

Mr. Sopha: It is not ancient history.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sopha: I am delighted to hear that, but I have not heard of any sequels to this report. I pay particular attention to developments in this area.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, we are not writing reports like that any more.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I am glad to hear it. But I would still like to put into the record a few words of the report, because they are a revelation. I quote: "The northwestern region of Ontario, the treasure chest of Canada, comprises the six districts of Algoma, Cochrane, Manitoulin, Nipissing, Sudbury, and Timiskaming".

That is the first sentence, to which I say "Amen". "The treasure chest of Canada", and yet the indictment of this government, in all its 25 years of office, must be its total failure to utilize that treasure chest in the establishment of industry in that region of northeastern Ontario, where productive use is made of the raw materials. Almost a total absence, of course, of any form of secondary industry, in the utilization of the rich ores that we have produced.

To be specific, why ought there not to be, in northeastern Ontario, sir, a wire drawing plant? This is a fairly simple operation I am told, when one considers the tremendous amounts of copper wire that such enterprises as the Bell Telephone Company uses? What an indictment of 25 years in office that there is not even that type of industry in northern Ontario. The many variegated forms of industry that could use the products of our forests. We have to travel the area to observe, in an almost cursory examination, the absence of that type of secondary industry related to the great wealth of forest products that we have.

It is not necessary to elaborate the obvious in this regard, but I can say to the Minister, that one becomes aware, in recent years, of deep stirrings of anxiety in the people who live north of the French River that our heritage is not being used. Every time that they meet, in the multiplicity of associations—mayors and reeves, development councils, chambers of commerce—and I remember the northwestern one, wringing their hands in anguish to express their attitude toward that failure to establish industry. Why not a steel mill at the Lakehead, I ask perennially? Why should that steel mill, that is going next to Nanticoke and is in great danger of polluting Lake Erie even further, not to be established on the shores of Lake Superior at the Lakehead?

Well, the anxiety that I referred to, of course, was reflected in the fact that when this government sought the test of public confidence, October 17 last, the only two Cabinet Ministers who were repudiated came from that part of the province. That could not have been other than an epitaph on their failure to protest here in this House, the failure of the government to embark upon the proper utilization of the great wealth we possess in the northern areas of the province. Until this government recognizes that the real wealth of Ontario, apart from its people who are the first wealth, is in its natural resources, and the future of the province will depend upon an intelligent development of them, by and for Canadians, then the outlook must remain hopeless.

That great east-west bridge north of the French that stretches from Manitoba to the Quebec border, will be what it has been throughout the ages; a place where men who are hewers of wood and drawers of water reside, and they obligingly, under the aegis of this government, help foreigners carry away the resources to create jobs elsewhere. The attitude of this branch is summed up in the last sentence of its conclusion on page 138 of this report, which I am glad to hear the Minister say has gone out of print. I hope copies in a few years will not be able to be found, they will become collectors' items. But here is what it says:

> It is anticipated that intensive development of these resources, both in the field and factory, will continue, and that the tourist industry will expand as the region is opened up with the building of new roads.

Now that about sums it up. The tourist industry! In other words, we are going to continue to do what we have done in the past, we are going to help others cart the resources away and we are going to turn what remains into a little Switzerland. It will be a little Switzerland, where the verdure of forest and the soft and sibilant flowing of waters will not disturb the summer evening. Then we can sell this to whoever will come to see it. Well, the pity of it is—the real tragedy of it is and, incidentally, the tragedy, as I pointed out, and I am going to illustrate at a later time, if the Lord preserves me—the tragedy of it as that in three of the—

Mr. MacDonald: Another of our interminable speeches from the member who interrupts others.

Mr. Sopha: Well that is very interesting. The last time I had something to say about this, my friend said much the same thing, and then the next day I went up to the Lakehead and made the same speech in the Lakehead. Well, I had better ask the member—is he for the present use of our resources? Let us hear from him, is he for that?

Mr. MacDonald: My colleague put it on the record this morning.

Mr. Sopha: Is the member for that? Or is he against it?

Mr. MacDonald: I am against it.

Mr. Sopha: Well, why does the member interrupt someone else?

Mr. MacDonald: Because the member is talking in terms of—

Mr. Sopha: I have raised this on many occasions before. Apart from that interjection, the tragedy of it is, of course, that in three of the districts of northern Ontario and I wish the people of this province were aware of this fact. In three of the districts—Rainy River, Manitoulin and Timiskaming—there you have one in the far west, one in the centre, one in the far east of the area, the population is declining.

More people are leaving those areas than are coming or indeed, there is net migration over and above the natural increase, that is taking place.

Now, that fact alone, such as it is, is testimony of the 25 years of neglect of this government in the proper and intelligent rational development of the north and its resources. The sad truth is, of course, that this government, notwithstanding its studies, like this about which the Minister is so embarrassed that he is discontinuing it—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I was not embarrassed.

Mr. Sopha: Well, you tell me you are discontinuing it. You must be embarrassed about it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I say we can always improve.

Mr. Sopha: I am embarrassed about that study myself. That it is a study about my province. As I say, it counts telephone poles and little else.

But the truth is that as the economy of the north declines out of the failure to use our resources, the megalopolis that stretches from the Niagara peninsula across the north shore of Lake Ontario eventually will encompass Barrie. It grows apace.

Let me just make this final comment. One of the sequelae, one of the fallouts of this growth of megalopolis, gives some validity to the persistent complaints of my friend from Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), and that is, as the city gets bigger its demands upon the rest of the province become more emphatic and more tenacious. To satisfy the needs of the megalopolis, and I am one of those who does not deny them anything, it means that the other parts of the province have to sacrifice what might rightfully, in a rational planning programme, be theirs.

Now that, of course, is illustrated in the silly statement that the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) is prone to make in various parts of the province when he talks about road building or the expenditure on roads being a reflection of so much per capita.

He goes to one area and he says: "You get so much per capita spent here," and he goes to another, seeking to prove by odious comparisons in dollar and cents terms that they are not hard done by, quite oblivious to the fact, of course, that in order to ascertain the real nature of the situation he would have to look at what those roads are used for in the total economic picture.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, our complaint has been a perennial one here. I do not dwell on the many particular aspects of it, but as long as I am privileged to be a member of this House I will continue to draw attention to the failure to use our natural resources at home. Already there are rumours—the Minister of Mines will no doubt enlighten us in due course—but one hears rumours that the Texas Gulf Sulphur Company has all but decided to establish its smelter in some other province instead of—

An hon. member: Never!

Mr. Sopha: Oh yes! One hears rumours that the decision has been made, that it is to establish elsewhere. But we shall wait hearing from the Minister of Mines.

The real point is that time runs against us because every ton of ore that is taken out of the ground in northern Ontario and shipped elsewhere to provide jobs means that in its irreplaceability we are failing here at home; our people are being failed by the government in the best use of our resources for the development of our own province, our own country for the establishment of a much bigger population. Indeed, in the carrying out of our moral responsibility in sharing the wealth which a merciful providence has endowed upon us with less fortunate people in the world.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on the regional development branch?

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word about regional development councils because we have one which covers my particular riding and through the two counties of Victoria and Haliburton that is centered in Peterborough. Many of my councils find themselves 60 to 70 miles from the centre of where the meetings are held.

It seems to me that if you are going to have local participation by the municipal council, you are going to have to devise a way for these councils to be put on the same footing as the council which can walk in the door. One way you might do that is simply by having mileage allowances through grants to these municipalities to allow them to participate.

We have the bureaucratic group of regional development studies that are being made by the local regional foresters and district highway engineers and what have you, but we still have not got a real good system of cataloguing the resources of a particular area to do a job for those people. I do not believe that you are going to find that Toronto-made policies are going to solve the difficulties for these people. You are going to have to have those local people tell you what they think is the right and proper policy, and then you are going to have to work it out with them, a just policy that will be applicable.

If you ask local people what is the main need, in my particular area they will tell you it is highways. Our population is dropping off, as the member for Sudbury has mentioned, and many of his ideas and suggestions I can sympathize with because I live in a very similar area.

It seems to me, that in this province where you have tourist development, you have local population drops. For a period in time I think one goes hand in hand with the other. Also, you have the problem of education costs and things of this nature going along with that sort of situation, because the grant system of The Department of Education does not seem to fit in with tourist areas.

So we have great problems and we look for the regional development councils to help us with them. I do think that under this new Minister responsible for this, that we should expect a real shakeup in effort in the next year or two.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, just one item that was referred to by the hon. member for Sudbury. I thought possibly the Minister may give us more information on it, and that is the location of the smelter of the Texas Gulf group. Would the hon. Minister have any information on that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Chairman, absolutely no information whatsoever by this Minister.

Mr. Chairman: I think it was suggested that perhaps the Minister of Mines might be questioned when his estimates come forward.

Mr. Trotter: Well, it is true. I think it may be more appropriate that the hon. Minister of Mines could answer it, but when we are dealing with this particular item of regional development, I think it is highly important that the Treasury would be concerned with it, because as much as the hon. member for Victoria-Haliburton may say, that we are going to develop these various regions, we have to ask the local people what they want. But when we think of a location of the smelter by a large firm, these decisions are really made outside this province.

This is a problem we are going to have to face up to, and it is quite possible that we will lose the smelter over no control of our own, or a lack of pressure brought by the province of Ontario. If we are going to have regional planning, much as we want to consult local people, and much as their opinion is important, I feel that unless the powerful men in the province, such as the Treasurer of the province of Ontario, bring the full weight of the government out of the province and into the boardrooms of these large firms, whether or not they are located in this province, or in Canada, or beyond our borders, we are going to lose out on a number of these large items.

The location of this particular smelter that was mentioned is of utmost importance to the province of Ontario as a whole, particularly in the mining industry, and I would hope that the hon. Treasurer of the province looked into it, because we do not know if the final decision has been made. The odds are that it is going to Quebec, and if this is going to happen, it is certainly a very heavy loss, and I hope that the Treasurer will look into this matter and see to it if there is still some hope the province will get it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, certainly I did hear some passing reference to the rumour in the House a matter of a week or two or three ago, but I can repeat what I said, I have no knowledge, absolutely none. I cannot help but agree with the observations of the hon. members and it is highly desirable to retain it here and I am averse to see it go outside of this jurisdiction, there is no question of that. I would like to think that the government is going to do something positive, to consider investigating the rumour. I do not know, but I would like to be one that would say that the matter would be very carefully looked into.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, is this not a particular item for regional planning which is of utmost importance? Not only the Minister of Mines, but particularly the Provincial Treasurer and the Premier of this province should be highly informed, because we can talk and theorize until we are blue in the face about regional planning, but when you get down to a specific item like the location of a smelter that is going to mean untold millions of dollars to a particular area in which it is located, it is of extremely vital importance.

This is the whole basis of regional planning, and it is obvious from the answers and the remarks by the Provincial Treasurer that he is not familiar in detail with this situation. I think it is a number one item, particularly for the mining industry, and particularly to the economy of the province of Ontario, but a lot of our talk and theorizing of regional planning is just wasted and I feel, on this item, that the government seems to be wasting its time.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would not allow a statement such as that to go somewhat unchallenged. We feel we are not wasting our time. We feel, as I explained when I was debating the subject with the hon. member for Peterborough, that we have very gainfully employed our time with respect to the matter. I simply rose earlier to re-affirm that I had knowledge of the rumour he is making reference to and I commented on that thing specifically, but I would like very much to believe—and if I have not made this case to the House then I have been remiss, because I have attempted to make this the case—that we are staging a new approach to an old programme here that, I hope, would envisage the very things the hon. member has made reference to. So I just simply will not permit it to be said in unchallenged fashion, that we are wasting our time. Mr. Chairman, I live with this programme day by day, as do the people in the department that I administer, and I say to you I know we are not wasting our time. You can only imply that we are wasting our time. I say, sir, we are not.

Mr. Trotter: You do not know anything about it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I say, we are not. That was my earlier response and I make one more reference to this rumour. I said, and categorically denied, any knowledge of the rumour. Now that is not to deal with the other side of the coin. I am dealing with it now, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Trotter: You can learn more from the Financial Post than you can learn from this government.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I want to keep cool. Maybe I will have to take my coat off. I want to keep cool. It is not quite good enough, Mr. Chairman, for every observation that comes from the other side of the House, to imply that we are wasting our time. I assure you we are not. It is less than objective, but it comes readily from the mouth of the hon. member for Parkdale.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the member for Parkdale was—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Everything is gloom doom. You must live in a world of gloom.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member for Parkdale, Mr. Chairman, was putting before the House and the Minister, the hope that the development in the north would come about, and I was glad to hear the Provincial Treasurer agree. At the same time, he was not able to give us any more information, but there is a development that has been decided, and that is in the Nanticoke area on the north shore of Lake Erie, associated with Ontario Hydro and the Steel Company of Canada. There is a large area with land set aside, the options have been taken up, and there will be a new steel mill development there.

I was interested in listening to the presentation by the hon. Minister of Highways, sir, about the plan for new roads in that whole area. They did not seem to be related to the steel mill, and when the question was put to the group presenting the plan, asking if, in fact, they had amended their views of the long range plan with regard to the decision that had been taken that the steel mill would be built, I was surprised to hear that they had not been amended nor changed in any way.

Now here is something that is about to happen. There is no guessing about it. The land is delineated. The Ontario government is involved in Hydro to an extensive degree and I would suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that that development is going to change the community, made up of three or four counties, in that general area, and I want to know specifically what the design for development is going to do to assist the planning areas along the north shore of Lake Erie, and in the Haldimand-Norfolk region particularly, with what is eventually going to be a new city associated with modern industry.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am conscious of this development. I am equally knowledgeable that the Lake Erie regional council together with the Niagara development council has entertained discussion. We know what is going on with respect to roads. Let me draw a little parallel if I may. There is a pretty well advanced transportation study plan in the areas surrounding St. Thomas. Certain road projections were considered south of London for St. Thomas, sometime before Ford of Canada decided to establish at Talbotville—and that road patterning was changed, not changed to render any less effective the proposals that were embodied in the original plan, but they were changed to encompass the needs of Ford at the same time, and that has all been done.

Again, I think I can assure the House that without any doubt the road patterns of the areas that will be affected by the new steel plant will be revised, notwithstanding that there is a plan. They will be amended to take care of the added traffic density that will develop and the number of people that will commute back and forth. It goes without saying that these situations will be provided for, and I am confident that they will.

I can tell you that both the Lake Erie and the Niagara regional development councils are now involved in this matter and they will be submitting their advice to the central committee. We are working together on these matters. But our whole general approach to this now is to the extent that these regional matters, as far as smelters, plants and so on, will be encompassed at least and the expressed needs of the area will be delineated on a basis of the data research and accumulation programme that is nearing completion. That is the purpose of it in any case, Mr. Chairman. I like to be optimistic enough to think that it is going to go a long way to help.

Now, one more thing. I would say to the hon. member for Sudbury that we are not married to the present regional boundaries. I can assure you, at least, I am not. They were convenient for administrative purposes at the time. They are still reasonably convenient but they may not represent good boundaries. We can and certainly will give some thought to adjusting these boundaries to make them more effective and more useful for not only administrative but development purposes. We are not wedded to them at all. They are convenient. The change may well be the result of the studies that are underway.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, to return to the point I made a moment ago. The best the Minister can give us is that he is sure that the road plan will be amended. He is sure that the Lake Erie region and the Niagara region councils will be giving advice to the central committee. Now the Minister is surely aware that the land has already been bought; that the hydro station is under construction for the steel plant there; that already the cement mixing apparatus has been established; and there is a lot of competition to buy surrounding land for further extension. If the Minister is going to tell us in this House that he is still waiting for advice from the two regional councils that have some jurisdiction here, then I would submit to you that he might as well advocate his authority because if there is going to be any planning it has to be done—well, it should have been done, so that this new centre would be established and be serviced as far as the housing is concerned, that is going to be needed for the people who will be employed there and all of the facilities for an entirely new community. If you have not done anything now, it is too late.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Can we not leave some of that to the local authorities?

Mr. Nixon: Certainly, I would leave some to the local authority, but if there is any point in having a central authority, you should at least be aware of what is going on.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox.

Mr. N. Whitney (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Chairman, under this regional development you know it has been my understanding that the federal government created something of this kind a few years ago. They called it "depressed areas", and they gave grants to certain areas to help establish industry and one thing and another. Now back in 1963, my Liberal opponent referred to these as repressed areas and I could not possibly conceive, nor could any of my people, that many people of my riding were being repressed, but nevertheless, that was the argument he used. Now, since the federal government was into it in those days, what have they been doing in recent months? I would say that our new approach, calling them "designated areas", and trying to approach the problem on a practical basis, is a proper answer, but they have had the depressed areas and repressed areas, and what have they accomplished? They got an industry up in Owen Sound maybe, or some other place, but who is repressed and who is depressed? I do not know. These designated areas will come on, and they will flourish and the Minister is doing a good job in this deal.

Mr Chairman: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the Treasurer about the branch not being "married", in his phrase, to these artificial lines and I merely want to say to him that, what I was expressing, and putting so badly, was that I see it purely in relation to the industry and the utilization of our resources, quite apart from where they are located. Therefore, I can see, with great clarity, the necessity for the establishment of that smelter near Timmins.

I am saying that what the member for Cochrane South would be saying if he were here today, because it was an act of Providence that that great ore body was found at the very same time as the gold mines were closing down. That was an extremely fortuitous happening. Now we have had four or five years—I disremember the year the ore body was found, I think it was 1964, it might have been 1963—all that time to persuade this company, this American giant, to locate its smelter somewhere in Ontario and preferably at Timmins. Now it was vital —I hope you will permit this allusion—to the political health of Mr. J. Wilfrid Spooner, that it be located at Timmins.

I am told that the Premier came into the area and confused it, so that the people of Timmins thought it was going to be at Kirkland Lake, and they defeated J. Wilfrid Spooner. Now that is a nice neat explanation, but I am told that is how vital it is to them, that it be there. It is not enough to dig the ore out of ground; but, in order to maintain the employment levels and the viability of that town, which has existed for almost 60 years, it must have the employment opportunities consistent in number with those that the gold mines furnished, and only the smelter can do that now. Which leads me to say that one of our less inviting qualities, as Canadians, is our timidity.

I was glad for the public life of Canada, when the summer soldier of the Liberal Party departed—that is Walter Gordon. I am glad he is replaced in Ottawa by Eric Kierans, who is a man who sees things in this light.

I would but hope that in the government of Ontario there was the voice that would speak to our American friends—investors, those who own our resources—with a good deal more forcefulness than we have heretofore displayed. I have said before, and it bears repeating, that one of the things that confuses Americans about us is, that when they try to find out what we stand for, they are absolutely dismayed and confused when they find we do not stand for anything. We lack policies and resolution and the forcefulness in putting forward our own interest than perhaps the Yankee trader is accustomed to encounter elsewhere in the world.

Now, if it will not depart in the heresy too far, I would be willing, had I but the opportunity and power to speak pretty strongly to that Texas Gulf Sulphur Company, I would go this far: I would say, brethren, it is up to you to show the government of Ontario. You have to show us for compelling, rational, economic reasons that you should locate your smelter elsewhere. Otherwise, we shall expect you to build it in the vicinity of the ore body.

I do not think a word of prayer of that nature, with the board of directors of Texas Gulf Sulphur would, in any way, interfere with the democratic concept. I do not think it would be a case of leaning on them too heavily, or imposing a burden that they ought not to be called upon to bear. I would think that position would be a legitimate posture for the government of Ontario to adopt, but I dislike it intensely, I can hardly express how much I revile the concept, when so much is said about the working of democracy in public, in forums such as this, that far reaching economic decisions can be made in board rooms in New York City beyond the operation of democracy.

Democracy does not go into those board-rooms, and the idea I find repulsive is, that the lives of our people in Ontario, in the Timmins area, can be affected by a decision of such far-reaching and pervasive importance as the one that I speak of, that will be made by the head office of that company on either Wall Street or some other part of the United States.

Now that, to me, is not consistent with democratic government. I see nothing wrong, in those circumstances, for the power over here in the executive council to be used in a rational fashion, to put the point of view of the people of Ontario, and particularly, the interests of those who live in the vicinity of that ore body. Especially when it is in the public interest of the whole province, as well as that deposit of population at Timmins, that the community be maintained as a viable and progressive community, as it has always existed from its earliest beginnings around the year 1911.

What are we expected to do? Are we expected to sit idly by? Governments, are they to remain speechless and see a community disappear? Well that is not consistent with the interests of the people of Ontario, much less with those that are so intimately affected by decisions such as this. Now I am very optimistic, and I hope these words that are coming from the Opposition, expressed by my friend from Parkdale and myself, as well as members of the New Democratic Party, go at least modestly to the extent of inspiring some vertebrae, some spine, into the government.

The government could approach that company in the conscious knowledge of support from Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, to the extent that the government would say: "We are very concerned about the future development of this ore body." First and last, under the constitution of this country, there would be an Act, as it was decreed in 1867, that the natural resources of this province belong to the people of Ontario and they are under the jurisdiction of the government of Ontario. Unless somebody gets up and wants to argue, and can point out to me, for compelling and persuasive reasons, I see nothing wrong with very definite government action and a demonstration of attitude to that company that is based upon insistence that the development of those ores in their first stages, the smelting stages, take place in close continuity to the ore body. It will be a heartbreaking thing let me tell you, and I will be very saddened if, after this House rises in a week or so, during the summer, some announcement is forthcoming from that company, or from the Minister of Mines, or someone else, that in spite of the efforts of the government, the smelter is going to be located elsewhere or across the border in the province of Quebec.

What has been happening, I say to my friend from Parkdale, is that in the initial stages of development of the ore body, they have been taking the concentrates, milled some of them, I believe, at Kam Kotia mines close to Timimns, and they have been taking the concentrates over to their smelter at Noranda and have been processing them there. Had this government finished that road from Timmins to Sudbury—consistent with the pleas I have made here over the years—it might have been that, in the first stages of development, the concentrates would have come to Sudbury. Had they had a road to carry them on, they might have carried them to Sudbury.

But we had no road to bring them, and the route by rail was from Timmins to Noranda. I do not want to sound terribly parochial. First and foremost I am a Canadian—but goodness gracious there comes a point where one must protest on behalf of the people of one's own province. They should have some priority from the point of view of the development of our province, and its continued health and prosperity. We have some right for the utilization of the assets that our bountiful Providence has put in the ground for the benefit of our own people. That is what I am speaking of. Having grown up in a town that became a ghost town, I feel terrified at the prospect of Timmins or Kirkland Lake following that same path of decay that occurred to the town of Cobalt and, indeed, has occurred to other towns in Ontario for want of some form of programme to create alternative economic opportunities.

Now I get the impression that a mould of the chief economist from The Department of Trade and Development is too recent for the Provincial Treasurer to be acquainted with what is going on in this branch. I am very surprised that the chief economist, sitting in front of the Provincial Treasurer, to assist him, cannot tell him immediately what the stage of negotiations are with Texas Gulf Sulphur, because I would think if there was one person in the province who would know about these things, it would be the chief economist.

I do not know if the chief economist speaks to the Provincial Treasurer very much. Mr. Lavoie of the Toronto Daily Star, was, I thought, very unfair with the chief economist, at one stage of this session, when he called him a mandarin. I do not know what that word means, but he said that he was one of the mandarins around here. I hope that is not a term of opprobrium. He meant it in the sense that Arnold Toynbee uses it, I suppose. But he said that the chief economist whispered in the ear of the Premier, and a result of that whisper a new policy was born. So one reaches the conclusion that if he gets laryngitis, the government will fall.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This is absolutely and totally out of order—interminable, repetitious, 30 minutes' diatribe over an unfounded rumour about which you shall hear more when the Minister of Mines deals with his estimates.

Mr. Sopha: Quit name calling!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not necessarily.

Mr. MacDonald: There was one aspect of the great debate that the member for Sudbury has indulged in that I heartily agree with. That is that this government should sit down with Texas Gulf and find out what is happening. But I say to the hon. member for Sudbury, that when they do that, and use the word insistence, that that is the direction of industry. I wish he would sit down with the hon. member for Downsview, who baits us for engaging in direction of industry. You are talking out of two sides of your mouth once again—the Liberal Party. If you are in favour of the direction of industry, direct them.

Mr. Nixon: That is just a red herring.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not a red herring.

Mr. Nixon: Where was the hon. member for York South when we told the government that they should do something about the sugar beet plant that was directed from outside this nation, and that this government allowed us to lose? The member for York South is just crying in the wilderness. He does not know what he is talking about—not a thing.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): And where were you when the pipeline went south?

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Nixon: Yes, when we were talking about the pipeline, of course, the hon. member for York South had two places to put that as well.

Mr. MacDonald: I sat in this House and was discussing yesterday the problem of the economic development and the direction of industry and I was subjected to a beating from the hon. member for Downsview. But that is direction of industry. Are you in favour of it? Well, when are they in favour of it? And when are they opposed to it?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order, order!

Mr. Sopha: Can you tell me why the member for York South is so hateful today? Is it because it is hot?

Vote 2306 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: We will now go to vote 2311, I believe, we agreed on this earlier. Computer services centre.

Vote 2311 agreed to.

On vote 2307:

Mr. Breithaupt: I note this afternoon that under vote 2302, subsection 4, we have given $152,000 to the finance and economics area for publications, reports and special studies. Under vote 2306, we have given another $203,000 for special publications, studies and reports, and under the policy planning division, a total of $332,000 in vote 2306. Now, we have again a special studies total of $25,000. Could the Minister enlighten us as to what remains to be studied after this other almost $500,000 has been spent?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: This amount is put aside for continuing studies. Research to be commissioned for the use of the computer in the auditing field would be an example. It is an amount that we have to provide for the continuing reasearch of a branch of this kind.

Vote 2307 agreed to.

On vote 2308:

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, on vote 2308, there is an item which intrigues me and that is the library. At the end of that vote, there are salaries of $41,000, and maintenance of $6,000. What type of library is this? I note that there are three people listed in the phonebook with respect to the library. What are the details on the use of that library?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The amount shown there is the expense for the library. It is shown in the revenue branch, but it is actually serving both sides of the department. It is a substantial library with many documents and books dealing with economic matters. It is also one of the services that will be shared jointly by The Economics and Finance Department, and one part of The Revenue Department.

Vote 2308 agreed to.

On vote 2309:

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, on vote 2309, the legal services branch. I would like some information from the Minister as to the persons involved. I am informed that there is a director, a secretary, and two solicitors. If so, the sum of $132,000 for salaries seems a little exorbitant.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Do you want the total complement in this area? This is 17 in this legal services branch.

Votes 2309 and 2310, inclusive, agreed to.

On vote 2312:

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, with your permission, I would like to make a short statement, with the concurrence of the House, of course, on this vote before we start to debate it, as it may help to set the situation somewhat into perspective. I doubt that it will be totally acceptable, but if it is agreeable to the leader of the Opposition, I would like to try.

Provisions in the 1968 budget and estimates for horse racing in Ontario constitutes a self-help programme for this sports industry and its fans.

The government has increased the race tracks tax from 6 per cent to 7 per cent to raise an estimated additional $2.5 million during the current fiscal year.

A large portion of this increase is requested, under vote 2312, for the Ontario racing commission to provide increases in purses at both thoroughbred and standardbred tracks across the province.

In effect, the government is providing the means whereby racing supporters will pay for the higher purses out of the betting pool to preserve and improve the keen competition they enjoy at the tracks. At the same time, the racing industry will continue to make its normal net contribution to the general revenues of the government.

The result is that some of the financial difficulties of the sport can be resolved without placing any burden on other taxpayers. The total amount requested for the Ontario racing commission is $2,182,000, or about 85 per cent of the increased return from the higher tax.

Of this total, $382,000 is allocated to the commission for its operational expenses in supervising racing and administering the grant programme, which takes up the remaining $1.8 million. The sum of $25,000 will be used for research into swamp fever and other diseases which afflict racing stock.

An amount of $250,000 will be set aside for breeders' awards during 1968, pending a decision of the federal government on the establishment of national breeders' awards, or a national stake race programme, or both.

The hon. members will recall last year that, after several talks with the hon. J. J. Greene, Minister of Agriculture, I had anticipated that one or more programmes of this nature would be undertaken by the federal authorities to promote high quality racing stock. Because of the dissolution of the House of Commons, the amendments to the Criminal Code involving racing have not been considered and this has prevented the adoption of a federal programme. I have every reason to believe that it is still under consideration and that it will be undertaken in due course. However, if a national programme is not established this year, Ontario will continue its own breeders' awards to encourage the supply of good horses.

This leaves $1,525,000 for the improvement of purses and this money will be distributed to the various racing associations in the same proportion as they produced funds for the parimutuel pool in 1967. In turn, the various tracks will receive purse supplements according to the percentage of funds they contributed to the pool.

The thoroughbred association provided 40.4 per cent of the mutuel funds in 1967 and will be entitled to 40.4 per cent of the money allocated to purses under this vote, or $616,100. Of the tracks involved, Woodbine contributed 43.2 per cent of the thoroughbred pool and will receive the same percentage, or $266,155.20 of the purse grants. Greenwood's percentage is 32.12 per cent, or $197,891.32. Fort Erie rates 24.66 per cent, or $151,930.26, and so on.

The standardbred tracks raised 59.6 per cent of the total pool and will receive the remaining $908,900 of the grants for purses. The breakdown by tracks will be:

Greenwood 32.6 per cent, $296,301; Windsor 30.5 per cent, $277,215; Mohawk 14.0 per cent, $127,246; London 8.6 per cent, $78,165; Garden City 7.1 per cent, $64,532; Ottawa 4.9 per cent, $44,536; B circuit tracks 2.2 per cent, $19,996; small tracks (less than 7 days) 0.1 per cent, $909.

A number of conditions have been established concerning the use of the purse grants. The most important is that the racing associations are not to pay, from their 9 per cent take of the betting pool, a smaller percentage toward purses than they paid over the 1967 racing season. This will ensure that the funds provided by this vote will be available to the horse owners.

The purse supplements will be provided from the date the funds become available to the end of the racing season. They will not apply to stake races.

As I indicated previously, the $250,000 for breeders' awards may not be required if the federal government undertakes a programme of its own in this area. Until this question is settled, the amounts of $19,996 for B circuit tracks and an amount, $909, for small tracks will be set aside. Later, these sums or larger amounts, depending on the exact requirement for breeders' awards, will be apportioned to the tracks concerned to assist them in improving their facilities.

From this outline, three significant points are established:

1. The funds for these purse supplements and other assistance to the racing industry will come from the increased tax on racing fans and not from the general public;

2. The formula for distribution guarantees that the purse grants will go to horse owners and not to the track owners or operators;

3. The sport will continue to provide a significant net contribution to the revenues of the government.

Our revenue estimates for 1968-1969 forecast a rise of $3 million gross from race tracks tax, the total increasing from $14.5 million to $17.5 million. Of the increase, $2.5 million will accrue from the higher rate of tax and the remainder from an anticipated increment in wagering. This will more than offset the additional assistance being provided to the industry, as well as the costs of supervision and administration.

To sum up, these changes will enable the racing industry to cure its own ills from revenues which it generates within itself, without reducing the net contribution from this sport to the general revenues of the government and without imposing any burden on the taxpayers of the province.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, the day after the legislation to permit Sunday racing was proclaimed, the jockey club stock went up 50 cents. Since then, I understand it has improved by $1.10 per share. Those people who are knowledgeable in these matters must feel that the legislation has improved the financial position of this organization, the jockey club, which has the main responsibility for operating the racing facilities in this province.

I can tell you that the improvement of their financial position was not the reason I supported that particular bill, but for reasons that I explained at the time. My point is this: We, in Ontario, hear a Treasurer who is trying to justify the increase in the race tax from 6 to 7 per cent, when it is well known that jurisdictions similar to our own are able to keep a healthy racing industry with a tax of 9 per cent, and accruing much more to the general revenues of those jurisdictions than we have here.

For the Minister to indicate that this is "a self-help" programme when, in fact, we are asked to raise the assistance for the breeders and the racing industry from $300,000 as it was last year, to $1.8 million as it is this year, is surely an unreasonable suggestion on his part. I have already indicated to you, Mr. Chairman, in my remarks at the opening of these particular estimates, my association is with those people who are at the grass roots of the racing industry, particularly the standardbred breeders who often do this in association with their other farm work. But, having observed these people and knowing them personally, I know that they do it, not as a means of making a living, as primarily one would expect from the position that has been put forward in this House previously, but as really a labour of love and one of the greatest hobbies that there is.

I hope it will continue to be profitable for them, and I hope that, besides having an opportunity to work with horses and take part in all the excitement of attending the races, they will be associated with a winner. But I cannot agree with the Provincial Treasurer's position that we, as taxpayers in this province, and particularly as members of the Legislature, should use up public funds to this extent to foster this particular industry. The person who receives the largest share of the breeders' awards is an expatriate by his own decision. E. P. Taylor, as you know, has been one of the greatest horse breeders of all times as far as Ontario is concerned. For improving the situation of the breeds here and the racing business, we owe him much credit—there is no doubt about that. But the fact remains—and it was brought out in the answer on the order paper to the question put there by the member for York South —that this particular gentleman is by far the largest recipient of the grants that are included in item 5. There are many others associated in that list who surely have no need for these tremendous funds coming from the public Treasury.

In years gone by we have put forward amendments which, if adopted, would have put the government in the position where these funds were spread out more evenly among all the horse breeders taking part in this particular business, and particularly those involved with standardbred horses. But it appears that the government is not going to change their policy in this regard. The Provincial Treasurer has been fit to give us a statement on this particular item which would generally indicate that we are able to provide $1.8 million instead of $300,000 at no expense to the taxpayer.

Now this, of course, is ridiculous. We are raising the tax from 6 to 7 per cent, and that is where the loss accrues as far as the taxpayers are concerned. There have been at least five occasions in the debate so far in this lengthy session when hon. members have pointed out to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the Speaker on other occasions, where the funds could be used for great humanitarian purposes, or to improve programmes that are to the general benefit of the whole community, and not just one part—albeit this particular part being one in which many of us have a great interest.

So, I would say, Mr. Chairman, that the government's policy is inadequate in this regard. It needlessly favours one particular sport. It increases the amounts of public funds that could better be used in other projects. There is much to be said for the racing industry being on its own. We, through legislation, have given them an opportunity to expand their racing days, if they see fit, through Sunday racing. This may, in fact, improve their net handle at the various tracks. I have approved of the government policy in some respects in years gone by, when the Provincial Treasurer indicated that he wanted to see that the small racetracks, particularly the county fairs, would have specific racing days with betting privileges.

Surely, this is a great thing, where the small farmers, the ones that I know and am concerned with, would have a chance to take their stock out and compete for purses that would certainly make it worthwhile. This is not sufficiently pushed as far as I can see; it appears that the government is still hamstrung with that archaic procedure about charters and racing days, over which they have said in the past they have little or no control. For the Provincial Treasurer to indicate that it rests with the federal government to make a decision which may, in fact, result in not using these funds, is inadmissible here. We are concerned with the voting of our own funds. I believe we would be remiss in our duty if we were to allow item 5 to go through, allowing $1.8 million to be used for this particular purpose. I think some of the research that it has been indicated the funds will be used for will be worthwhile. But, as you know, Mr. Chairman, we do vote a considerable sum of money to the Ontario Agricultural College and the University of Guelph, and the Veterinary College for research in animal diseases. This would be the more appropriate place, surely, for the research that the Minister is referring to.

For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I move that item 5 of vote 2312 be reduced from $1.8 million to $1.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, we will support this motion; we started making this motion some years ago. At that time, Liberals and Conservatives opposed it; we are glad to have won the Liberals to support of this motion at this time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Listen, I discussed this first in the House in 1960 too; we are getting closer together all the time.

Mr. MacDonald: When most of your colleagues were opposed to it.

Mr. Sopha: Why do you not fight them?

Mr. MacDonald: I am fighting them.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Do not let it bother you so much these days.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South has the floor.

Mr. MacDonald: One of the aspects that I would like to speak to now, Mr. Chairman, is the proposition that tax revenues or subsidies from the public Treasury are not the answer to the ills of the jockey club. I have referred earlier, in this session, to the writings of Martin Goldfarb. For those who may not be aware of it, let me briefly identify this man once again. Apparently until last November, 1967, Martin Goldfarb had never been to a horse race in his life. But he was a sociologist who was a consultant in the communications field. Vickers and Benson, an advertising agency, hired him to do a study of the horse-racing industry. The study apparently so impressed the jockey club that the jockey club has switched their advertising account to Vickers and Benson.

That, in itself, Mr. Chairman, I think is a rather interesting point. In a moment, I want to give some quotations, but while I am dealing with this I would draw your attention to the fact that one of the magazines from which I am going to make the quotation, in a lengthy interview with Martin Goldfarb, was Canadian Horse, the February, 1968 edition.

Canadian Horse, I note for the edification of the House, is published by the Rexwood Publications Limited, P.O. Box 127, Rexdale. The two top officers are president G. C. Hendrie and vice-president John J. Mooney, both of whom are associated with the jockey club.

In other words, I think what is rather interesting—before I get into the substance of Martin Goldfarb's remarks—is that they are apparently so valid that he has been hired by the jockey club to work on their behalf. And the interviews with him are published in a magazine which is, in effect, an auxiliary of the jockey club because the two top officers of the publishing house are also top officers of the jockey club itself.

Now, with that little bit of background, Mr. Chairman, let me give you a few quotations, first from the Globe and Mail, on January 23, 1968. These are quotations from remarks made by Martin Goldfarb to the national association of Canadian racetracks. The first one:

> Tax relief is not a solution to the problems facing racetracks.

The second one:

> Tracks must adjust to the changing times. Most tracks live in the past. They should get into the present and live for the future.

The third one:

> What we have right now is race lovers, most of the tracks have lost touch with the real world.

The fourth one:

> The present thought is to get a few thousand more—

That is, racetrack adherents or fans.

> They lose them as they die off.

He is referring to the age level of the people who go to the racetracks.

Now, the substance of those comments is documented more fully in this extensive interview to be found in the February issue of the Canadian Horse. It goes on with the reporter asking questions and Mr. Goldfarb replying to them. I want to dip into a few of his replies and give you about four or five of them in uninterrupted sequence. He was asked first about young people, whether or not they were interested in horses and whether they were interested in horse racing. And Goldfarb said:

> Well, if they are interested in horses, why aren't they interested in racing? Why haven't you developed a climate, a communications climate to predispose young people to be interested in racing? What have you done over the past years is identify racing inadvertently with a segment of society that isn't respected. As a result, parents have kept their children out of racing.
> If you had worked at developing a climate for young people to come to the races because they like horses and are interested in training horses and seeing what happens to a horse when he is prepared for a race, you might have developed a different relationship with the community. As it is, your relationship with the community is one of almost alienation.

It is an alien relationship with the general community; it is not a comfortable relationship with the church; it is not a comfortable relationship with other people; it is not even comfortable with the government.

To which I am sure the Provincial Treasurer will have to agree. A little later, if I may dip into his replies:

Let's study the market, the potential, the problems of reaching the market, and then begin to develop a programme to do it.

And the reporter:

Does it surprise you that racing has not done this until now?

Mr. Goldfarb: Definitely it surprises me, because the people involved are very successful businessmen who make these market surveys daily in their other operations. They couldn't succeed if they didn't.

And a little later:

You are not getting at the middle-class.

His point is that the middle-class is the group of people from which there is going to be a growing body of people who would be interested in racing, but they are not getting at the middle-class:

You are not getting the guy who will take an afternoon off and play golf and if you are ever going to be successful in any kind of recreational activity, you must attract the middle-class.

A little later:

One of the problems is that you don't consider it is a business and they treat it as a gentleman's sport. Then maybe they expect more for themselves than an average businessman would expect if he was part of the marketplace.

And now, Mr. Chairman, let me uninterruptedly just give you four or five questions and answers here which I think get right to the heart of the whole problem:

Reporter: They expect more of racing because they aren't making money out of it, is that what you mean?

Goldfarb: Well now, they treat it as a little toy of their own, rather than as a business and a marketplace that has to succeed.

Reporter: One of the problems I believe racing has had is that we have been so involved with the owners and trainers and management, with each of these segments, we forget about the public. Everything is, how will this affect the owners, how will this affect management, but very few times are there any signs of anyone asking how will this affect the public.

Goldfarb: Well, you mentioned the men who are in this and said most of them are losing money. Some of them are complaining about losing money. Well, nobody told them to go into a business to lose money and if racing is going to succeed in the entertainment world today, it has got to stop being the toy of the few people. It has got to start being a business. Professional sport is not amateur sport; people are not in it out of the goodness of their heart, they are in it because they make entertainment dollars.

Reporter: Many owners are in racing because they love the sport and they are willing to lose some money just to be a part of it.

Goldfarb: Then they must stop complaining about losing money. No one told them to go in there in the first place.

Reporter: I don't think that is quite fair to the owners. They realize they couldn't make money and they are willing to lose a certain amount but not the great amounts they have been losing in recent years.

Goldfarb: That is a lousy marketing policy. You must treat racing as a business, it's got to market its product against all the competition and I don't expect to be in anything to lose money. If they take that attitude, then they are not really interested in what the public wants. They are only interested in surviving and to keep their nice little game comfortable.

Reporter: And you feel that is what they have been doing, ignoring the public?

Goldfarb: Well, they might be afraid that if they took the public into account, the game is going to change so drastically that it would leave them behind and it would'nt be this nice little closed group any more. But the game is going to have to change if it is going to survive and so are the owners.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I think I have quoted enough to make the point. This is an industry that is living in the past. It professes to be an entertainment but it refuses to operate like any entertainment industry, or any normal business, indeed the very businessmen who would apply the normal principles to the business do not apply it in this toying with the game of racing.

Now, in light of all that, Mr. Chairman, there is no justification for dipping into the public Treasury to support an industry that is living in the 19th century. There is no reason for dipping into the public Treasury to pour $14,000 into the coffers of E. P. Taylor. Sure, it is true that E. P. Taylor may be doing something for the industry, but he does it because he loves it, he likes to be engaged in it.

And if he is losing money, that is his business. It is not our business to bail him out, particularly at a time when the Provincial Treasurer is greatly disturbed about priorities and the government's capacity to meet the needs in other areas. In fact, one final quotation from an editorial source, the Globe and Mail, back on December 16 before the government had indicated an increase in the government's take from 6 to 7 per cent to finance the grant increase from $300,000 to $1.8 million:

> Surely the jockey club's efforts should be directed at increasing attendance, not dipping into the government for the bettor's share.
> In effect, the government gets 6 per cent of the money bet in return for granting the club the monopoly on a racetrack gambling in Metropolitan Toronto and Fort Erie.
> What is more, the government has already reduced its take from 14 per cent in 1951 as today's 6 per cent; while taxes are going up for everybody else, the electorate might more reasonably expect the government to raise rather than to lower betting taxes.

In short, Mr. Chairman, I think, for the good of the jockey club and the racing industry, which simply has to modernize, as it has been warned by the man they have hired to give it advice on PR; for the good of the public Treasury; and for the good of the priorities of a government that is having difficulty directing money to meet the needs in other areas, I think this should be reduced to $1.

We certainly will support it and hope we can persuade some of those in the government back benchers who have been opposed to this for years, but have lapsed into silence as the government rationalizes its position and its action because of the influence of rather powerful figures in the community behind the things.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: This policy of the government, I say to you, sir, is completely wrong. One gets the impression today that all one has to do is disagree with the Provincial Treasurer, if you make so bold as to disagree with him, is to present evidence of an appropriate problem. I shall not forget when I am next speaking in northeastern Ontario that the Provincial Treasurer, when one pleads for justice for that area, he calls it a diatribe. But in respect of this vote—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What is a diatribe?

Mr. Sopha: I shall not forget, I shall inform the people. You were up there and you know the reception you met with in North Bay.

An hon. member: They do not like him in North Bay.

Mr. Sopha: They do not like him in North Bay in spades.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: One man.

Mr. Sopha: And a Tory at that.

Mr. MacDonald: He was not very parliamentary, but he got to the point.

Mr. Sopha: I have something to say about this, sir. When the racing commission came before the standing committee on government commissions, what I had to say at that time invited a certain measure of disagreement from the sports fraternity of our daily newspapers and indeed the electronic media also. But I never did see in the past that, notwithstanding the attitudes towards some of the facts I put before the committee, they ever met any of the arguments. I said for example, that the jockey club had demonstrated, beyond dispute, that its business sense was certainly open to question. And I put it just as simply as this to you, Mr. Chairman, that if Mr. Taylor and those on the directorate of the jockey club with him—Mr. Hendrie and Mr. Smythe and Mr. Ritoplin to name a few of them—choose to build a track at Garden City near St. Catharines, which is a hopeless failure, then should that business decision, made without consultation with the government of Ontario, be rescued by the Provincial Treasurer?

I was interested to note that, when the Provincial Treasurer read the figures, Garden City, if my memory does not play me tricks, provides 7.7 per cent of the revenue of the trotting horses compared to Greenwood's 40 per cent. That latter figure may not be correct, I will be indebted to the Provincial Treasurer to correct it. That, sir, that establishment of the track at Garden City was—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Thirty-two per cent.

Mr. Sopha: Thirty-two per cent. Thank you very much. As against 7.7 per cent. The establishment of that track at Garden City was a momumental disaster for the health of the jockey club. Whereas they had to provide racing dates for it, the expense does not justify its continued operation. But, caught by their own decision, they must continue within the foreseeable future, I suppose, to encounter losses by the operation of that track. Now is it, therefore, just that the government of Ontario should come to the rescue of that business decision? Well that establishes precedent and one is curious to know how far the government would be willing to go along the new path that it has charted in that regard.

It is wrong, sir, for the government to be a partner in the horse racing business. I think that it is, at least ethically, wrong for the government to be a partner in the gambling business. Liquor is—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think on a point of order it should be pointed out again, as it was when I made the opening statement on this vote to the House, that I reiterated not one copper to the jockey club. Not one cent to a track owner. Not when you say "directed money to bail out Garden City racetrack" or words to that effect. None of this money goes to Garden City racetrack.

Mr. Sopha: Thoroughbred racing is the horse racing monopoly in the life of this province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes but none of this money is—

Mr. Sopha: Thoroughbred racing is the jockey club.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, but—

Mr. Sopha: They are equal parts of the equation.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, but none of the money that is being set up to assist the thoroughbred horse owners or the standardbred horse owners, finds itself in the hands of the jockey club or any other track owner. We emphasized that point, I would like to emphasize it again, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: On the one hand thoroughbred racing is a complete monopoly. Standardbred racing is a virtual monopoly, not total. There is competition from London, Ottawa and Windsor and the rest of the tracks are operated by the jockey club and I dare say that in the tracks operated by the jockey club—Greenwood, Mohawk and Garden City—it provides the lion's share of the standardbred contribution to the Treasury. Well, you challenge me. Let us have the figures of the tax from those three.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: In total terms you may be right, but I would draw to your attention that Greenwood is 32.6 per cent, Windsor is 30.5 per cent—and the jockey club has nothing to do with Windsor—Mohawk, 14 per cent.

Mr. Sopha: Garden City 7 per cent?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Garden City 7 per cent. 51 per cent total yes. All right now that is a pretty close breakdown is it not, a really close split; really 50/50, you might say.

Mr. Sopha: And totally in the thoroughbred; totally operated by the jockey club and the thoroughbred side. Now, the proposition I make is that the allocation of $1.8 million puts the government in the position of partner in the horse racing business and I say that is wrong. The government has no right, no ethical right, no rational basis, on which to embark in this form of financial involvement in that industry.

Now if those who are engaged in horse racing, having established the precedent, are entitled to share in this $1.8 million, then what is wrong with next year, or the year after, the director of Maple Leaf Gardens coming to the Provincial Treasurer and saying, "You have a financial interest in our operations because the Treasurer gets a percentage of each ticket sold for entrance to the Maple Leaf Gardens." What is wrong with them coming and saying: "People are not coming to see the Leafs any more, we would like a subsidy from you. You gave a subsidy to the horse racing business, how can you turn a deaf ear to hockey?" And then soccer—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There is no parallel.

Mr. Sopha: Well certainly there is a parallel. The government has a financial interest, I dare say, in all forms of professional sport in this province. But if you really want to go out, fine. You have an interest in professional golf, insofar as the revenue that it derives from the sale of spirituous beverage during a tournament at a golf club is concerned, so the Treasurer has opened the door for claims to be advanced to the Treasury on behalf of all forms of professional sport.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He has not.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes, it is not nonsense at all.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: How do we differentiate?

Mr. Sopha: My friend here has asked a pertinent question. How does he differentiate? My leader mentioned other jurisdictions. The leading ones of course, take 9 per cent, they are New York and Florida. I am not certain about California which is another big jurisdiction. In none of them is there any form of subsidy to the sport. Ontario again leads the universe in a very improvident, and a very foolish way, of having come to the rescue of those who cannot really manage their own affairs. Now that company, the jockey club—I do not hesitate from saying it is the chief beneficiary from this munificence of the Provincial Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not so.

Mr. Sopha: Oh, yes it is the chief beneficiary. It went through a rapid period of expansion. It was determined by the board of directors, again without reference to the Treasury, or to the government of Ontario, that they would engage in a massive refurbishing and building programme which they remodelled and rebuilt their major tracks, as they did with Greenwood, for example.

Then the heavy investments at Woodbine, the complete refurbishment of Fort Erie, the establishment of Mohawk as a new track, the one at Garden City and that corporation became a terribly debt burden. It had, if I am correct—somebody will correct me if I am not—in addition to a large number of common shares, the jockey club had at least three issues of preference shares. Jockey Club A, Jockey Club B, and Jockey Second Preferred. In addition to that it has more than one series of bonds and debentures imposing a tremendous debt burden and demands upon income But of course that was a decision made in the confines of the boardroom and without reference to the government.

So, I ask aloud, rhetorically, that, having ordered its affairs in that way, what right has it got to turn to the provincial government, through whatever avenue that it uses, to say to the government. You derive taxation out of this, therefore you ought to put something back into it. And in putting it back in, as I say to the Treasurer as one who has been to the track perhaps more often than he has, by subsidizing the purses, as it is intended to do at these various tracks. Then to that extent he is relieving the jockey club from its contribution to the purses? One of the sorest points of course, between the horseman and the jockey club, is the division of the amount of the take from the paramutuel handle that the jockey club has had to put back into the purses.

Now, along comes the Provincial Treasurer to give a large assist to them. Well, Mr. Chairman, I could not do otherwise but vote—besides being a loyal member of my party and supporting what my leader indicates our policy to be—against this.

There are too many other attractive, valid and responsible demands that are made upon the public Treasury in other areas to justify this government which is beginning to cry the blues throughout the province about lack of revenue to meet its responsibilities. Morally, legally, legislatively, in no way, has this government the right to extract $1.8 million from the Treasury of this province and direct it in this way. That is completely wrong and it is unjustifiable and I notice that the Treassurer really has not sought to support it. He has not advanced arguments to support it. The Premier, all the while of course, remains completely silent about it.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I want to make a few brief comments on this, because I can recall back in one of my first addresses in the House, I spoke at some length on physical fitness. I noted at that time that there was approximately $26,000 being provided to the youth of the province for fitness, back in the year 1960 and at that time $60,000 to horseflesh. To me it sounded kind of odd that we seemed to have placed a higher priority on the horseflesh than we did on our own natural human resource, youth.

We contributed one-third of one per cent per capita to improvement in physical activity and the physical well-being of our students and our citizenry at that time, whereas we contributed approximately three times that amount to horseflesh. In the intervening years, the grants and assistance to physical fitness by way of The Department of Labour have increased from $26,000 to $140,000. That is an increase of approximately 5.5 times from a one-third of 1 cent per capita grant, to approximately a 2 cent per capita grant.

But when we look at the horseflesh picture, we find something peculiar, strange, odd and unusual. From approximately $60,000 given to horseflesh, we have multiplied that figure 30-fold, and now we contribute $1.8 million. Mr. Chairman, I think it is outrageous that we today would pay so much attention to improving the breed of horses solely for the racing public. Let me tell you, were you to have dogs race, the public would still go there and bet if they wanted to bet, so whether the horses are of the–

Mr. Sopha: Do not give him that idea, he will be subsidizing that now.

Mr. B. Newman: If the horses were of the poorest quality, the inveterate gambler would still go to the track and wager his two dollars.

Mr. Sopha: You and I can run faster than a lot of them.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the Minister to reconsider his vote here, and withdraw that $1.8 million. If he does not wish to withdraw it, then at least consider the amateurs and have that $1.8 million donated so that we could have a better physically-fit youngster in our province. It is really a shame, Mr. Chairman, to be donating so much to horses and neglecting the humans.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, just before we call the motion to reduce these estimates to the sum of $1–a couple of years ago, I believe the horse racing industry commissioned the firm of Woods Gordon and Company to undertake a study of their problems. I would be sure that every member of the Opposition got a copy of that report.

This report set out and supported the facts and figures–no we did not believe it–that the loss experience accruing to owners and breeders was $5.9 million. Their proposal at that time was, that we consider reducing the 6 per cent tax on parimutuel wagering to 3 per cent and take the difference to assist the horseman. The remaining 3 per cent which in this particular instance, if he were dealing with that figure today, would amount to $7.5 million. This was the proposal.

Mr. MacDonald: Did you go for that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, we did not go for that one, that is for sure.

Mr. MacDonald: But you were softened up by it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, they did not soften us up very much. Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member want to hear from me or does he not? I listened to him and I did not agree with him very much. If he wants to hear from me maybe he would do me the courtesy.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: He may be. All I heard about was a guy named Goldfarb, as a matter of fact.

Mr. Sopha: I do not think Goldfarb exists.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Frankly, I have some doubts about it myself. Mythical characters!

However, subsequent to that, and I say in all frankness to the House that the chairman of the board of the jockey club of Ontario advanced a similar proposition that if we did not follow the recommendations of Woods Gordon, that at least we would reduce the 6 per cent take, and enable him to increase the track take. This was his proposition.

Of course, under the federal criminal code, 9 per cent is the maximum take-out that the tracks are allowed. Nevertheless, this was proposed for pursual. Obviously, as the hon. member for Sudbury will know, we have not gone for that proposition, because that would have played directly into the hands of the track owners, the jockey club.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, it does not. And I insist, Mr. Chairman, that it does not, because the jockey club has been directed to supervise this matter to the extent that there can be no reduction of purses with this money. This money must all be added. Now the purses were negotiated by the Ontario harness horsemen's association a year ago. They are fixed for this racing season, as I understand, and they negotiate from time to time with the jockey club for a percentage of the parimutuel wagering to be manifested in terms of the purses. I think I am correct in this and the hon. member for Sudbury will correct me if not. So that is established and I think it is established at an average of something between 46 and 47 per cent agreed to, negotiated.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I am sure he could, but I still think I am—

Mr. Sopha: He loses money on it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I still think I am close enough to accuracy. You will have to ask him that sometime, but I do want to pursue this and I want the facts before the House and before the vote, the absolute facts, Mr. Chairman. It is conditional—and I repeat for the umpteenth time—that this form of assistance, which will be manifested in terms of added purses, all go to the horsemen and none to the track. This is the condition. The racing commission will be asked to ensure that the tracks get none of it so that they can, in effect, take some of this back and deal with their purses and so on. This is not to be, Mr. Chairman.

I do not know how much closer we could come to resolving the problem that I think confronted the industry. I am not trying to be facetious when I say this either, but if there is one thing you need to conduct races, it is horses. There can be no doubt in my mind—and I am indebted to the Ontario harness horsemen's association, the horsemen's benevolent protective association for the advice. All the groups that represent the horse owners of this province tell me that there is a falling off in the production of good blood line stock for racing purposes, that unless there is something done to enrich the purses in the manner that we are prescribing, stables will leave our tracks and go to the United States where it is more lucrative to race and indeed, they recite to me the names of stables which have already taken their entire string of horses across the border.

Now it may not be of much concern to the members of the Legislature. We have a place for the revenue that accrues to racing. We use it. We find a place for it. It amounts now to about $15 million a year. We think it will increase.

This programme of ours helps to ensure that the industry itself can stay on a reasonable footing, that they can breed horses, that they can race them and be as reasonably assured, as you can be, in a gambling business that at least the purse potential is there. So that at least they have the potential for an earning to enable them to continue a reasonably satisfactory operation.

So again I just simply suggest to the House that in moving that these estimates be reduced to the sum of $1 it may very well endanger the continuing revenue that this province has been accustomed to employing for the good of its people. And in doing this, I re-emphasize once more, the people that go to the races are paying for this. We are not imposing one copper of tax on the public, not one penny, and even when this entire programme is implemented we will have something more to add to the public purse. We are not spending it all. We are keeping some of it.

Mr. Sopha: Specious and spurious!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I might say one more thing and when I am through we can debate this all you like. There is a small but a very important little segment of our community that enjoys breeding and racing horses.

Mr. Sopha: The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) enjoys it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Minister of Public Works is one, and I suggest that many of these people who are not as affluent as the Minister of Public Works are finding that it is a costly business. If it is too costly and they get out of the business—no horses, Mr. Chairman, no races. It is as simple as that.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The leader of the Opposition moves that item 5 of vote 2312 be reduced to $1.

Those in favour of the motion will please say "aye".

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of motion will please rise.

All those opposed will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 28, the "nays" 38.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost. Item 5 is carried.

It being 6:00 of the clock p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

The House resumed at 8:00 o'clock, p.m.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY
(Concluded)

On vote 2312:

Mr. Chairman: Ontario racing commission, is there anything further on this?

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I ask the Provincial Treasurer whether the impost levied on a per diem basis against the tracks meets the cost of administration?

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): For all practical purposes, a very close item. I cannot tell you down to the last few dollars but very closely now, with the result of the distribution of the added revenue, yes, it takes care of not only the cost of the racing commission but also the administrative processes in The Treasury Department. For all practical purposes, it is now covered.

Mr. Sopha: The impost has nothing to do with the 7 per cent tax; it is a per diem rate. I argued for a long time here until it was finally raised. I just do not remember the figures—it was doubled after I had argued the matter for several years—because usually, well, there is a five-year time lag around here until a suggestion is adopted.

But eventually it was doubled. And in this respect I now adopt the argument of the Provincial Treasurer as being for the first time valid. He seemed to emphasize, you will recall, Mr. Chairman, that this did not cost the people of Ontario a cent. All the charges for this grant, he said—this gift to the racing fraternity—will be borne out of the 7 per cent tax. Well, if that argument is valid it is specially valid at the racetracks for whom the services are provided by the commission solely and for the benefit of the track and for no one elses in the province.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, am I right in assuming that, when a motion to reduce the estimates is lost, that the vote is carried?

Mr. Sopha: No, you are wrong, as usual.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am asking the Chairman, I am not asking the member for Sudbury.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the members of the committee that the motion was for the reduction of item 5 only. Item 5 was carried; the remainder of the vote was still debatable.

Mr. Sopha: Well, as I say, as usual the Provincial Treasurer is wrong.

The argument is valid; if the services are not provided for anybody else in Ontario then no one but the racing fraternity should bear the cost of the administration expenses of the racing commission.

And I should like to ask the Provincial Treasurer on what basis—in the light of his argument before supper—he can justify imposing a charge upon the consolidated revenue fund for the provision of a service for the racing fraternity only.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I understood the hon. member's question. Prior to the proposal that has been concurred in, item 5, I guess it is fair to say that all the administrative costs were borne by the public purse, as a result of the—

Mr. Sopha: They were not. There was a daily impost levied.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, a major portion of them. There will be additional revenue accrue from the implementation of what I have proposed under item 5 now, of $208,000, to apply against expenditures which are on the order of $300,000, so we are coming close—

Mr. Sopha: Here comes the seven years' itch as a catalyst.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The member for London South.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): We have now passed item 5, which is the fifth item and last item of vote 2312, and I suggest, sir, that the vote carried the Ontario racing commission. And I suggest further that the debate must now be confined to vote 2313.

Mr. Chairman: With great respect to the member for London South I would refer him to page 71 of Lewis's Rules and Procedures.

Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, with very great respect, our practice here has been modified by usage in the last several years since that text was written and the clerk, who is not here at the moment, has full details about these precedents. They are not to be found in writing but I assure you that I say with very great confidence that this item having passed, the vote is passed and we are now into vote 2313.

Mr. Chairman: With great respect to the member for London South the item alone subject to motion, the motion being defeated, that item is carried. The remainder of the vote may still be debated.

Mr. Sopha: I remember very fondly Kenneth Bryden tonight, Mr. Chairman. I know how he must have felt on many occasions. Could I ascertain the daily impost levied by the racing commission on the tracks?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): We have not passed the previous—

Mr. Chairman: If I may say to the Prime Minister—

Mr. Sopha: Under discussion, we did not agree to take them in order.

Mr. Chairman: Do we have a Chairman? I might respectfully say to the Prime Minister we were not dealing with the vote item by item. The debate was ranging over the entire vote and the leader of the Opposition chose to introduce a motion respecting only item 5. We have not finished the vote, sir.

Mr. Sopha: That makes three of them that are wrong. They have struck out.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will be around though, we will be around.

Vote 2312 agreed to.

On vote 2313:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I was asking what the impost was? If I could just have that figure—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2312 has been carried, the Provincial Treasurer may provide the information to the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: He was about to do so.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The impost for thoroughbred tracks is $200 per day. Standardbred tracks, $150 per day for extended meetings and $25 for circuit B tracks.

Mr. Sopha: Well, are you considering doubling it so it will not be a charge on the public purse?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, we will consider it.

Mr. Sopha: Thanks.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2313. The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, I wonder if the Minister could tell us if there has been a change in the make-up of personnel of the pension committee from last year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the two additions to the pension commission were the hon. member for Halton West (Mr. Kerr) and Mr. Paul A. Kates, an insurance executive in the city of Toronto.

Mr. Sopha: How much did they make last year?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Depends on how often they worked.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): How often do they work is the more pertinent question.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, Mr. Chairman, I think we should have a brief explanation of the function of the committee in the past year. I notice that there has been a slight increase of $7,000 in the allowable estimate but one would think after this commission being in operation for, what is it now, going on five years that there should be a reduction in their responsibilities and their expenditures. Is there any reasoning for maintaining the similar estimates that we have passed every year, and an increase this year, because of the settling down of the plan and it being well established now and in operation for some time? It seems logical that there should be a decrease by now.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, there is no reason to believe that there will be any material decrease in the volume of work that is assigned to the pension commission as the numbers of pensions in the province continue to rise, as they very likely will in a growing jurisdiction, and the number of plans continue to increase.

I indicated to the House, earlier in the day, that there are some 8,000 plans and 800,000 members under the supervision of the pension commission. As that arises, the supervisory work is bound to increase. The hon. member will recall that we dealt with some amending legislation to The Pensions Act in this session. These matters will continue to present themselves from time to time. I see no basic reason why the responsibilities of this commission should get any less. As a matter of fact I will be surprised if their supervisory responsibliities do not continue to increase.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I am unaware as to whether or not there is a report from this commission. Is there a report that is tabled for the use of the members, to scrutinize their activities? I do not agree with the hon. Provincial Treasurer that their responsibilities and functions should be increasing. When the plan was established, they had to look after the registration of the many thousands of plans that were in effect across the province, and all of the detailed work that was involved at that time, with quite a lot of ramifications. I would think that after the original registrations were made and the plan was ironed out, that there would be a decrease in the need for the cost and their functions.

Is there an annual report tabled as to the function of the commission?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I tabled in this House some weeks ago, the report of the pension commission, which set out the extent and the area of the work that is performed by this commission. I would just say, very briefly, that it is possible now for the commission to concentrate on a more thorough examination than they did in the early stages which were formative and creative. Now they are more involved in the supervisory and the examination role than they were at that time, so I would just simply assure you, through the Chairman, that their work is not diminishing, nor is it likely to diminish, as far as I can see. I might say that, in support of the amount that is being requested on the vote, however, there is an estimated $96,000 that is recovered from registration fees and the sale of pamphlets. That is a fairly sizable contribution of the cost of the branch, when it is related to the estimates under discussion.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, the Provincial Treasurer reported to the Legislature that approximately 800,000 members of pension plans in the province of Ontario are now covered by the commission's jurisdiction. I would like to suggest to the Provincial Treasurer that the time has come for him to consider the establishment of a public scheme for the re-insurance of these private pension plans. So that, in the event of the failure of a company, or an employer providing contributions into a plan which is registered by the commission, there will be a fund available for the employees who have been in the employ of that particular firm or employer for a number of years and whose age is approaching retirement.

Of course, considerable examination and study would have to be given to where the cut-off would be set as to age and service—minimum years of service, and minimum age. But this fund would provide a paid-up deferred vested benefit for employees of a firm that is going out of business, or is suddenly relocated in another community, as we have had examples of in recent years with the movement of the Perfect Circle Company and the shutdown of the Studebaker plant in Hamilton.

I can give the Provincial Treasurer a large number of such examples, where employees with long service were suddenly separated from their employment. Suddenly their contributions to the pension plan were cut off. Suddenly they could no longer look forward to having a full pension, when they reach eligible retirement age under that particular plan.

I know that the pension commission's regulations provide for the transference of already accrued benefits to the commission, or through the commission to other plans. But in the case of many older employees, the Provincial Treasurer well knows how difficult it is for them to find new jobs where the pension benefits are on the same scale, or where there are any pension benefits at all. It is these employees who, through no fault of their own, are suddenly left unprotected, insofar as that future service that they might have had under a plan terminated as a result of a company's collapse.

I suggest to the Provincial Treasurer that now that the commission has succeeded in registering the plans covering such a large proportion of the work force in Ontario, it would now be appropriate for the commission to undertake such a re-insurance funding of the unpaid liabilities of the registered pension plans.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it would not cost a great deal to do this. It would mean a small premium, or a small tax, by the employer or the employee, and where the plan was one of joint contribution, by each party, into a central fund operated by the pension commission. Much in the same manner, Mr. Chairman, as The National Housing Act has a fund to insure mortgage lenders against loss.

The Ontario re-insurance scheme receiving this small tax per employee into its fund would then be able to buy for the employees I have been talking about—those employees who could not obtain re-employment, those employees who would face a number of years prior to reaching eligible retiring age without any pension contribution, without any accrual of benefits—the fund would be able to buy for them over that period until they had reached eligible retirement age a benefit in line with what they would have received had the plan been continued. The pension commission itself would take over the plan as though the firm or employer had continued to carry it out.

I think it is a feasible proposition now that it has reached this level of registration. I think it is one that is well within the economic means of the contributors to the pension funds to support.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): The only comment I wanted to make in this regard is that as the numbers grow—and it would appear to me that—obviously I have not the statistics —that this question of private pension plans through employers, whether it is a contributory plan or a non-contributory plan, has grown by leaps and bounds in the last fifteen years.

And because of the greater number that will be included in these private pension plans in the future. I think that there is more and more awareness by people, employees and people, that there needs to be some protection for them in their declining years. So they have become more conscious of the need for employee-employer pension plans, private pension plans—as I say, whether they are contributory or non-contributory.

But the statistics that I read were that in the United States only one in eight would finally reach a position of maturity, so that they could receive a pension plan that would give them some measure of economic stability and security in their declining years. As we reach this position then I want to echo the sentiments of the member for Windsor West. We should recognize and become cognizant of the fact that this government should now be in a position to guarantee that these people who are making an effort to have a pension in their declining years, that is available to them at that time.

Obviously it is necessary to have a pension. These plants move out, or move to other locations, and these people will not be covered fully by a pension plan. I think there needs to be greater awareness now, by the government, than has ever taken place in the past, because of the increase in the number of participants in private pension plans.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, it will be recalled that an amendment to The Pensions Act that was introduced and has since been given third reading and probably —I am not sure about this—Royal assent. The Legislature was directed to this end, in that we have now assured by legislation that the winding-up process that used to constitute an abuse in some circumstances, can no longer take place.

As to the merits or demerits of what has been proposed by the hon. members who have just spoken, I must say I do not feel competent to comment. I think that it is fair enough if I say that we will refer this to the commission and ask their advice on the matter.

I must confess I do not feel competent to say anything more than that. On the other hand, I would say that even a very, very small percentage of what is involved, going into an insurance fund, could develop over a period of years into a very substantial amount of money.

It could very well develop that it would be more than required, because the full purpose of the original legislation, plus its amendments, has been to ensure that these plans are financially sound. Now there is always the possibility that one will not be, but I would say that those instances would be few and far between, because of the legislative processes that we have undertaken.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, the present activities of the commission are aimed at assuring the solvency of the plan, but they can do nothing towards guaranteeing the continuation of the plan beyond the time when the contributions may stop going in. It is in that period—from the date of termination of the plan to the date at which an employee member of the plan reaches eligible retirement age—that we would like to see some insurance of the benefit that he would have expected to accrue during that period of time, be paid for by a re-insurance fund of this sort.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2313, the member for Kitchener.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): I note under vote 2305 that there is a pension funds branch in the government accounts division, and for that branch we have substantial amount in salaries and also certain payments.

I am wondering if the Provincial Treasurer can inform us as to the difference in operations—as I presume there will be some—between the pension commission of Ontario per se, and the pension funds branch, wherein do they have separate responsibilities, and what are those responsibilities?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, the pension commission supervises all pension plans in the province. The other organization acts in a supervisory capacity over the civil service—public service superannuation fund and like funds. There is a rather sharp distinction between the responsibilities and functions of the two.

Mr. Breithaupt: The pension commission then have a supervisory function over the provincial government as well, or do they spend the majority of their time supervising other pension schemes?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would think that they would spend the majority of their time supervising private pension plans, but their statute gives them supervisory powers over the pension and superannuation plans and funds for the government as well. They have to conform to The Pensions Act.

Vote 2313 agreed to.

On vote 2314:

Mr. Chairman: The Treasury board secretariat; the member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: May we ask the Provincial Treasurer, most courteously, who is on the Treasury board now?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I mentioned that in my statement this morning, Mr. Chairman, but I will be happy to do it again. There is the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), the Minister of Tourism and Information (Mr. Auld), the Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett), the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett), the Provincial Secretary and Minister of Citizenship (Mr. Welch), and the hon. Minister Without Portfolio (Mr. Guindon), and the Provincial Treasurer of course.

Mr. Sopha: Who is chairman? The Provincial Treasurer?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is statutory that the Provincial Treasurer be the chairman of the Treasury board of Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: We are completely in the dark, of course, as to how it operates. We just have no knowledge of how this operates. I do not suppose we could go to a meeting of it anyway, even if we wrote a letter. It would be most unlikely.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: But one wonders about the extent of the supervisory function carried on by this board and I cite but one example: That report of the Ontario council for the arts that cost the taxpayers of the province $16,000.

Now, how would they be able to expend that amount of money for that report without some inhibition being exercised by the Treasury board? Would there be any surveillance over what seems to me—now I may be a minority of one in the province—a very gross waste of public funds?

That council could have reported to us—they could have mimeographed the report for perhaps $500 and sent it along to us, instead of the very elaborate sophisticated and psychedelic document that they in fact sent, Mr. Chairman.

I really got the impression that that czar—I think some of the newspapers have called him that—Milton Carman, who used to sit up here in the junior Valhalla, was somewhat laughing at the Legislature and the public generally in publishing that thing.

The one statement that I thought very flagrant was that we are like the modern Medici. He had never read the history of the Medici; I think they had a number of murderers, arsonists, various other charlatans and mountebanks and poison was their specialty.

I would like to ask seriously how that expenditure of $16,000 for that document could get by the Treasury board?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I am obliged to concur to some extent with the remarks of the hon. member regarding the cost of that report, but those matters do not come to the Treasury board. As I recounted in the opening general remarks I made, the Treasury board sat on 82 different occasions during the year. We approved in the first instance the estimate of each department of government and then, of course, in turn the various branches of the government. This would be approved under the estimates of The Department of Education.

Now, when it gets down to every mechanical transaction or every decision that they make, once their funds are voted, I suggest we would probably be meeting 365 rather than 82 days a year. Notwithstanding that, I say I concur to some extent with the member's observation. It is simply a matter of time and the limitations of time as to how far down in the approval of day to day expenses you can go. As I say, the total vote—the items within a vote—have to be approved by the Treasury board. Anything above and beyond that, during the course of the year, requires a Treasury board order. And for that, they are obliged to come to the board for approval. But what is done within the voted amounts I just simply suggest is difficult, if not impossible, to supervise as closely as we might wish to do.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, as a matter of principle and practice, do you really, on any occasion, intervene after a vote has been made in any department or the arts council, to supervise how they might spend their money? I mean, once the vote is made, have they not surely the jurisdiction to spend the money?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, they have.

Mr. Sopha: I would hope not.

Mr. MacDonald: Once we have voted the money, surely they are a responsible body and if you do not think they are doing it right, you fire them. I just wanted to get clear, in my own mind, the establishment of the principle. My understanding would be that the Treasury board would not come into the picture if the arts council decided they wanted to spend $16,000 of their $1 million vote, or whatever it is, on their report. Presumably they have the right to do that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: That is what I just finished saying.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, and then you said if you were to sit on all of these, you would be sitting 300 times a year. I want to get the principle established. It is really not your jurisdiction to sit on it—once the vote has been—except that next year, when you come to consider the estimate, presumably you may save something to say about whether or not the money has been spent as wisely as you think it should be. Well now, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say to both the Treasurer and the member for Sudbury, that before you get too excited about it and before it comes up next year, do not be too taken aback if the document wins prizes in North America and Europe for being the best annual report of an arts council in the year.

Mr. Sopha: I would not doubt that at all. That display of feminine pulchritude alone will probably—on page 5 of the report—I cannot determine whether that is Mr. Carman looking at the nude or someone else.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We take our jackets off, but we cannot have a modern report!

Mr. Sopha: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We can take our jackets off, but we cannot have a modern report.

Mr. MacDonald: But furthermore, if you had a mimeographed report for $500 I think there would be criticism, and rightly so, if the arts council put out such a crummy document.

Mr. Sopha: I would say that. The only point that I would mention is that it goes too far. This is too flashy and too elaborate. In a province that out of one side of its mouth cries penury, and in respect of many legitimate programmes it puts on the poor mouth, and if the Premier is not doing it here he is doing it somewhere else in the province—pleading that he had not got enough money to meet every legitimate programme—I think that in the light of that, this expenditure is unjustified.

Vote 2313 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: That completes the estimates for The Department of the Treasury.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report that it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply reports that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Clerk of the House: The 4th order; consideration of the reports of the liquor control board of Ontario and the liquor licence board of Ontario.

REPORTS, LIQUOR CONTROL BOARD OF ONTARIO, LIQUOR LICENCE BOARD OF ONTARIO

Mr. Speaker: Before the debate proceeds, I do think there should be some consideration given to a decision of this House in committee, of which I have been advised, with respect to the customs of dress, that we have observed. Not necessarily the traditional customs, but reasonable customs which this House should be able to change, with reasonable view to those who visit us here, and also to enable us to conduct our work in a modicum of comfort as well as due form.

I have no particular views on the matter, but my recollection of what took place this afternoon is that when the House was in committee the members would follow the new custom of doffing jackets and when the House was sitting as this Legislature the jackets would be worn as in the past. Until there is some other decision by the House I would ask the members to observe that particular order.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I wonder, if you would mind putting the same straw vote to the House as was put to the committee by the Chairman and find out whether the House, under these conditions, might not be willing to extend common sense into our House meetings as well as our committee meetings?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I put a question to you and I would much prefer to hear your answer, and whether you are prepared to do that.

Mr. Speaker: I have already made my views known with respect to the matter and I would feel that the agreement which was reached, and of which I am aware, by the members this afternoon should at least be observed for the rest of this day's sitting, if not for any longer time.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. MacDonald: The question I put to you might be seriously entertained. Would you be willing to put the question to the whole House as was done by the Chairman to the committee?

Mr. Speaker: I would be quite pleased to do that after I ascertain that the members mean what they say and what they do in this House—and it is obvious that they do not, because there was an agreement, or a motion or a view, taken this afternoon and it was upon the urgings of the member for York South.

That was my understanding of it as it was conveyed to me; and as I listened to it, because I came into the House to listen to it, I would think that at least for today's sitting we would abide by that and if the member wishes to raise it tomorrow at the commencement of the session I shall be in the chair, and I will be glad to entertain the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Why postpone it till tomorrow?

Mr. Speaker: For the simple reason that I think the members at least should abide, for the day of the sitting, by a resolution or a vote that has been taken on that day.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: The member for High Park—

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): If the hon. member wants some ruling as to whether or not we put on our jackets to remain in the House, I would ask him to make his approach to you, sir, and you make the decision.

Mr. Speaker: I have indicated that my view is that during this evening sitting—it may be uncomfortable but the members can, I hope, survive; they have in the past—the jackets will be worn in accordance with the customs and traditions of the House and in accordance with the consensus which was taken this afternoon in committee and the agreement as I understood and heard it. As I say I came into the House when the House was in committee and it was decided shirtsleeves in committee were proper if the members wish.

I would say to the leader of the New Democratic Party that personally I have no objection whatsoever, either as Speaker or as a member of this House, to the members being comfortable and not having their jackets on, but I do feel if such a rule were to be enforced here that it would only be reasonable to suggest that all the members should wear a white shirt or some shirt which would allow this particular body to look reasonably well dressed.

Some hon. members: Oh, come on!

An hon. member: You were here this afternoon.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Who cares about this nonsense. Why do you not grow up?

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Those are only my own personal feelings.

As I say, it is quite in order for the House to decide how it wishes to conduct its business. I presume that the House will wish to take that opportunity and I would be most pleased to entertain the matter in the morning.

An hon. member: How are we after midnight?

Mr. Speaker: In view of what happened this afternoon particularly, it is my opinion that we should finish today's sitting on the basis of what has already been decided. Now the member for Hamilton East has asked for a ruling as to whether jackets should be on or not. I think that I have made it perfectly plain: In my opinion, for this evening's session we should be wearing our jackets.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, do you think you could indicate where in the rules one must wait until tomorrow to decide on a matter that is put before the House today—irrespective of when an earlier decision was made?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The member for Hamilton East has the floor.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I am about to make my decision as to your ruling. I think that at this point it has got past the stage of comfort or discomfort, as was the occasion this afternoon. As a result of your failure, sir, to give me any indication that there is a ruling under legislation or strict tradition, I will leave the chamber at this point, and if I return I will put the jacket on; but I hope that we can have some sensible approach to this problem before long.

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The leader of the Opposition.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to carefully peruse the report, or rather reports, of these two boards since the last time the order was before the House and I am very glad of an opportunity at this time to put some views before you, sir, as to the liquor licence board and the liquor control board and their function as explained in the reports that were tabled six weeks ago.

Since our last session there have been some minor changes in the regulations that have been made by the liquor control board of Ontario and particularly, and in this regard I would like to register a protest as to the attitude the government takes in making announcements of this type.

I believe the change that drew most attention was the one that permitted the sale of liquor and beer and wine in the province of Ontario on Sunday, under certain restricted practices. Although this was a subject for discussion at the session a year ago, it fell to his honour, the chairman of the commission, to make the announcement.

I well remember receiving a call from one irate constituent who said, "Who does that judge think he is deciding that we can now drink on Sunday?" It occurred to me that the responsible Minister and the government as a whole might better have made such an announcement.

It is the judge's responsibility surely to apply the regulations as they are understood but obviously it should be understood as well by the citizens of the province that changes in policy must be announced by the administration and not from the changes of opinion that the judge, His Honour Judge Robb, may have from time to time.

So surely, if we are going to deal with what has been a difficult problem over the years, the government must assume the responsibility for making the announcements themselves rather than shoving it off on his honour to bear what brunt there may be and any criticism—because surely these policy changes are simply communicated to him and the announcement comes through his office?

But he has a difficult enough role, Mr. Speaker, in my view, in applying the regulations which, to some extent, are archaic and are not well received by a good percentage of our population. When changes of this type take place, it surely is the place of the hon. Minister, the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch), who reports to the House for these matters, to announce such changes.

Now there are one or two areas of continuing concern that arise from time to time. We are informed by the reports that the monopoly on the liquor traffic in the province of Ontario will bring in a profit of approaching $150 million during this particular year. Having a monopoly of the business, of course, carries with it heavy responsibiliites for service.

There have been considerable criticisms of the way the liquor control board and the administration itself have handled the strike that is still continuing. There has been no announcement of a settlement with the brewery workers in the past few hours that I am aware of, although it has been brought to our attention that such a settlement is expected any moment.

I know that there are a good many beer drinkers in this province who devoutly hope that it is so, as the hot weather continues. Those of our colleagues who can still get into some of the higher-priced establishments that have laid in a supply to do them through a lengthy strike are not suffering from any deprivation in this regard, but the need to provide service is still there. In my view, the administration has not acted in a fair way during this protracted strike in laying down some of the regulations which have prevented the operators of licensed premises from having access to the purchase of beer from those outlets which are still functioning. This was discussed previously, I know, and we are hopeful that the problem will become academic in the next few hours. Perhaps the Minister in charge, Madam Speaker, will be able to enlighten us on that a bit further.

There has been some considerable discussion for the past few years as to the regulations which are passing into more and more disuse in the province of Ontario as the attitudes of our people change. One of them is the prohibition of those of our citizens under 21 years of age having the right to buy and consume alcoholic beverages.

As we meet with the people in the province who have come to Ontario since the war from other countries, particularly European jurisdictions, where family customs are considerably different from our own; as we talk with those people whose backgrounds are well established in our province, we realize that the custom and the regulation to restrict the consumption of beer and wine, and even alcohol, to those over age 21 is falling more and more into disuse. It is very difficult to apply a law or regulation of this type and it is only by very, very rigid policing of our public facilities that we are able to maintain even a semblance of order in that regard.

But when we realize that the regulation applies in the privacy of the home, where the decisions of the parents should be of primary importance, we realize how unworkable a regulation of this type actually is. We are told, from researches that have been carried out by student organizations—and they probably approach a considerable degree of precision and accuracy—that 75 per cent of our young people between the ages of 18 and 21 in fact have broken the law. If they do not do it on a regular basis, at least they have done it experimentally.

I do not see anything particularly wrong with that myself, but the law still stands that anyone under 21 who has a drink of any type is breaking the law. I think it is necessary that some considerable investigation go into this.

We know that the jurisdiction immediately to the south of us, New York state, does not have a regulation of this type. Perhaps there is something to be learned from the experience in New York state, where the problems of alcoholic consumption, I suppose, are somewhat similar to our own.

Surely there is some reason to do some examination into the possible change of this regulation? I personally feel that it is breached, on many occasions, in the privacy of the home and at least this particular area should be left to the responsibility of the family's concern.

During the past year there have been a number of local option votes. I am sure that the report of the commission would give the number that have been taken. I just forget the detail at this moment but, Madam Speaker —if that is the correct address, perhaps you would correct me if it is not—you realize that we still have a number of townships in the province which have not had a local option vote for many years. As a matter of fact, since the vote probably at the end of the 19th century in which, by virtue of a 66 per cent majority, the townships voted to outlaw the sale of alcoholic beverages within their boundaries.

I happen to live in such a township myself and I have heard the complaints of many of our people who have had to travel some considerable distance in order to avail themselves of the product that is sold by the government monopoly, or even to go into a licensed premises. As a matter of fact, some of them have come upon rather embarrassing circumstances indeed. In the incident of which I have particular knowledge, there is a nine-mile drive involved for these people who want to go to a place where alcohol and beer is legally sold and, on more than one occasion, on their return to their own homes through the dry township they have encountered the law and been found guilty of a serious offence.

I am not saying for a moment that a wet vote in this particular township would solve all the problems. As a matter of fact there are many, who are reasonable thinkers indeed, who feel that this would simply compound the problem. And yet we are faced with the fact that in a good many of these dry areas there are outlets available to members of private clubs—usually those who have access to some of the richer types of clubs; golf clubs, country clubs, hunt clubs, things of this type. Whereas the general citizen must come under the strict jurisdiction of the regulation and the will of the majority of the members of the township, expressed some time in the late 1800s.

There is always, of course, the right to establish a petition that can be put before the council. Yet there is no doubt in my mind that those people most directly concerned with the problem, the Ontario temperance federation itself, are having some second thoughts as to the need to have these patches of dry regulations across the province.

We have seen that a number of the votes have failed—notably the one in the home city of my hon. friend and colleague for Grey-Bruce. It may well be that this is another area for careful re-examination as we find the province more and more blanketed by the decision that proper control under the liquor control board of Ontario is better than a complete dry situation with all of the difficulties that this involves.

When I refer to the net profit that the province realizes from the liquor monopoly and the liquor trade in Ontario, to which should be added the profits which come from the sales tax, we can see that we make a substantial gain for the consolidated revenue fund. When we were to compare this, of course, with the expense of the consumption of alcohol in our province, we realize that, of course, we are losing money.

We need only listen to the comments made during the estimates of The Department of Family and Social Services, the comments made by the hon. Minister for Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), and others, to realize that the expense the community pays for the liquor traffic and the liquor trade far exceeds the profit. And yet we get the impression that the province, and the liquor control board, which simply applies the policy of this administration, is endeavouring to increase sales all they possibly can.

This is a matter associated with advertising. It is a matter associated with the attitude of the government itself. My own feeling is that we might gain considerably if we had a more efficient method of teaching our young people in the schools the actual effects of alcohol on the human system; what the pitfalls and traps are for the young person who is in a position of making an individual decision and choice at a particularly tender age.

The decision, I suppose, whether to be a total abstainer or a social drinker, or some other category that comes in this spectrum of opinion and practice, is made before the age of 20, notwithstanding the regulations of the province of Ontario.

It is in this connection that I say again, as I have on other occasions in this House, that the funds and initiative that we spend on proper education of the young—not necessarily to frighten them away from the use of alcoholic beverage but to ensure that their decision is taken based on the knowledge of what is involved in its use—would be the very best approach that an enlightened jurisdiction can and should take.

I believe this attitude would contain the best answer to the problem of alcohol and alcoholism as we find it in our own jurisdiction and elsewhere. In many respects, the attitude of the Ontario temperance federation has outstripped the government in this regard. Their emphasis is on education for young people, and through their various organizations I feel they are doing a good job in this.

I am not at all satisfied, however, that our schools are accepting the responsibility that they should accept. I want to emphasize, so that my comments will not be misconstrued, that such a course should not be of the type that would frighten young and impressionable minds away from the use of alcoholic beverages. The facts are what we must present to the young people, and it is our responsibility so to do. This is what we should be doing beyond all else.

There are many of our regulations, and even our customs, that are applied by the liquor control board, and are a part of the policy of this government, that are archaic. They are laughed at by many citizens of the province, and they are certainly ready for change and enlightenment.

I feel that all changes of this type must be accompanied by a suitable and modern and effective programme of instruction in our schools, and I would urge this not only on the hon. Minister, the Provincial Secretary, who is responsible for these matters, but on my hon. friend, the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) who has heard me on this subject before.

This has got to be the answer. There are many problems that we face in which we turn to education as the answer, but in this case, surely it is the best answer—the only effective one that meets the modern requirements. We must move away from the kind of unreasonable and misunderstood regulations that have been applied across this province.

I would say that I have a very high regard and a great respect for the chairman of the board and certainly the other commissioners of the liquor control board of Ontario. I have heard them explaining their responsibilities before the standing committee and, over the years of my responsibility here, my impression of them has gained year by year. But I would say that my impression of the government's responsibility has deteriorated. They are unprepared to accept for themselves the announcement of these changes and regulations, and it is just an indication that they are prepared to slough off this responsibility—at least in the minds of the public—on to someone else who should not necessarily have to bear it.

I feel that the government has not been effective in setting up, through The Department of Education, an effective programme of education. I believe that they have been guilty of allowing the regulations to come into disrepute, largely because they are difficult and, in some case, impossible to enforce.

Now, we have come through a difficult strike. I hope the Minister responsible will be able to give us some of the details of the possible settlement that has been worked on for the past few days and, according to news releases, is about to culminate in a settlement. These matters are a grave and continuing concern to those people who have to work during the heat of the July season. The matters, of course, are more important, I suppose, than the strike itself. I have already indicated that the monopoly position that the government enjoys carries with it heavy responsibilities to service the needs of our people.

I can only end on a note of criticism, that I feel that the government has failed to come to grips with these problems. I hesitate to suggest again that there should be some objective assessment of the regulations that the liquor control board has to apply. I feel that we in this House would support a government that was prepared to move into a liberalization of these regulations. It may well be that a select committee of the House could examine the matter. The problems of alcoholism have been growing by leaps and bounds, and we are not the only jurisdiction that is faced with those problems.

We have already had an opportunity to discuss the alcoholism and drug addiction research foundation in the amounts of money that we vote in order to pay for the work that they are carrying out but, even under those circumstances, I feel that we, in this province, are prepared for a new approach; that the government has been fearful in taking these steps; and I would look forward to the comments made by the Provincial Secretary in reference to some of the matters that I have raised this evening.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this report. I would like briefly to speak, as a person from a dry area, on the disservice the government is doing the people in the resort business by not acknowledging the need to be geared to the times insofar as American tourist trade is concerned. We spend millions of dollars in tourism to get them over here. We get them up to the peninsula. They go to the resort areas and they cannot get the amenities they take for granted in their home areas in the States. And they kind of, Mr. Speaker, look down their noses at us as not being too intelligent, not having the basic rights that other people have.

In this age of speed, we have these pockets of dry and wet throughout our area. You can be in a wet area in one moment and in two or three minutes in a dry area. There is no plan, no uniformity, no basis for it, because—

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Nobody is going thirsty.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think the government, Madam Speaker, is actually trying to make the people believe that they are not in favour of the bubbly stuff. In fact, I think everybody knows that I take a drink, I think maybe they know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) takes a drink, and I do not hold that against anyone, but the fact—

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Is that true?

Mr. Sargent: They are trying to put across to the public that they are guarding their interests. That is completely subterfuge, I would say, and it is complete hypocrisy. In every area of our lives, this is in front of us. No function is held in any level of this country, federally, provincially, municipally, or in the business world, without ample supply of this. I think that it is part of our lives. And as my leader has said, it is overdone. It has caused great havoc in alcoholism, but it is here, there is nothing we can do about it.

And we do not have freedom of opportunity. I publish a magazine for the motel industry—and it is a multi-billion dollar industry—and if you, and if the government, the Prime Minister, knew the thoughts of the people in our industry about your hypocrisy. It is a wonder how you ever get elected, believe me. I never met a man who has ever voted Conservative, but they seem to get elected all the time.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I have met one or two. I do not know what happens.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: I think the function—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: The hon. member would know the answer to that question.

Mr. Sargent: Hon. members of the government are a disappearing breed, believe me. They are on the way out fast. They did not come in here very cocky the next day after the election. They hung their heads and snuck into the chamber.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: We know the power of the Prime Minister's image now. He could not even get a—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): What election is the hon. member talking about?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Madam Speaker, the form of hypocrisy we have that is rampant in this government is particularly evident in this area we are discussing tonight—advertising.

We have American channels pumping in here—all the TV advertising, pouring the bottle out, showing the bottle, the product. We have newspapers in the United States carrying large advertisements depicting the product, but Mr. Robarts, the Prime Minister, seems to think it is saving our morals by not showing the product.

So you have to have a good imagination to read these advertisements, believe me. This is part of the planned way to protect the public.

Mr. Nixon: He is the original man of distinction.

Mr. Sopha: My children have no difficulty; they all sing the Carling song.

Mr. Sargent: The Prime Minister sits there and grins. He thinks he has that knowing look. "Oh well, we know a lot more than he does." He probably does. He knows I am never going to get a licence up there.

Mr. Sopha: I think the hon. member is wrong. I do not think he drinks.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Now we get to the truth.

Mr. Sargent: I think it is. Oh, you are not getting through with this, sir, not a bit. I think you got through pretty well on the Talisman deal; you got through there big.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Yes, very subtle.

There is no doubt in our mind, Madam Speaker, that the Prime Minister personally intervened and broke the law here. The fact that an executive of Labatts who has a controlling interest in the Talisman—the law says clearly that he can have, indirectly or directly, no part of a licence; but this man, a brewery executive, has. This is one law very pointedly broken.

And the way you covered this thing up before the House last time was a great masterpiece. You should have made the man who wrote that piece—well, you could have made him a Liberal senator, but you should have a senate in Ontario for guys like that.

But there is no doubt in our minds—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: He does not really know what he is saying.

Mr. Sargent: —that the laws of the liquor control board are manipulated in favour of the government.

The club licences that we have across this province are a complete dodge of the law. The people of an area vote it dry, it should be dry. But if you have a connection in the government, you can get a licence to sell under a club licence. And this is completely evading the principle of local option.

The Prime Minister knows this, but it is the way he got around it to help his friends in Talisman. The people up there, as we now know, voted about 300 to 13 against it, and a few months later they received their licence, a club licence.

I will not flog that again, because that is a dead horse—people know that pretty well. The Prime Minister used his influence to help his friends.

I would say that the function of government is the allocation of resources and giving people what they want, and believe me, the people of Ontario wanted change in the policy in this department.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: If the hon. member's area did not vote for it, then what is the worry?

Mr. Sargent: We have a case for selling beer in grocery stores. I think it is a good point, because the average person that does their shopping on weekends likes to buy beer as a commodity.

The parallel here, when you stay in Quebec, was that the government some time ago wanted to make concessions to the small independent grocery stores. So they gave them the right—not supermarkets—but they gave the small independents the right to sell beer. This was an economic plus for the small grocery store.

It is a matter of record that Steinberg's—I do not think Steinberg's are the largest supermarket chain in Quebec—carry beer. And the policy is still in effect down there; the small corner store can sell beer. And I do not think that there is any more alcoholism or more drunks in Quebec than there are in the province of Ontario.

But basically, I have had a lot of letters over the last few days commending the standpoint of selling beer to grocery stores. I do not know whether it is the policy of my leader, or the policy of the party or not, but I am getting a good cross-section of public opinion that a lot of people do see merit in the idea.

I do not know whether revenue, or lack of revenue, is motivation enough or not for selling it in these outlets. Maybe there is one reason there, but what I am opposed to is the concentration of power in the hands of the brewers in this country today—the concentration to make the product and the concentration to distribute. I think there is a great need for someone to test this—to start another brewery in this country and to see if they can get an application through, or a right or charter for it.

I asked the Provincial Secretary the other day, and he named out the steps that one would have to go through. I think he said, in effect, Mr. Speaker, that the odds are about one thousand to one you would not get it.

I know the Minister did not say it, but he gave us the steps down the line.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): The chances are about as good as an eight-horse parley.

Mr. Sargent: But, somewhere along the line, the needs of the people should be reflected in this one area of great revenue and great monopoly. I think that it is time that the government came up with a new policy in line with the suggestions that my leader gave. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, this is a subject which lies rather close to my heart, if not to other parts of my anatomy, and of which I can speak with an intimate and, indeed, an experiential knowledge of the subject. In other words, I feel that I am somewhat of an authority on this particular subject.

And leading off in this regard I would like to quote a few verses from G. K. Chesterton called "Wine and Water."

> Old Noah, he had an ostrich farm, and fowls on the largest scale
> And he ate his egg with a ladle in an egg cup as big as a pail
> And the soup he took was elephant soup
> And the fish he took was whale
> But they were small to the cellar he took when he set out to sail
> And Noah, he often said to his wife when he sat down to dine
> I don't care where the water goes if it doesn't get into the wine.
> But Noah, he sinned, and we have sinned, on tipsy feet he trod.
> And the great big black teetotaller was sent to us for a rod,

And you can't buy beer at K.C.R. or Babloor or Sutton pod,
For the curse of water has come again because of the wrath of God,
And water is on the bishop's board and the higher thinker's shrine
But I don't care where the water goes if it doesn't get into the wine.

I think I shall end with the few things I have to say this evening with another quotation from G. K. Chesterton. But to launch into the issue, mine will be a rambling collection and collation of various absurdities under our present liquor control laws.

I shall launch the range of absurdities this year. I shall, throughout the life that I spend here, cumulatively gather them into little bouquets. I may repeat them from year to year, but then, again, preserving the House from that sort of thing simply add to the list, yearly.

There are two matters which come to mind immediately under this vote. One of them is one which a former colleague of mine, Ken Bryden, spoke of here at considerable length I think in last year's estimates, that is the company union operated in the LCBO and the lqiuor licence establishments. This is in the strictest sense an internal job run by store managers. I will not dwell upon it at length, as the debate last year contains pages of incisive comment in this regard, but it seems to be in accord with the whole handling of liquor in this province that you should have this "company union of the bosses," as they call them, operating here under The Crown Agencies Act, severed from the normal bargaining procedures, and having as their representatives not a democratically elected representative at all, but store managers.

On future occasions I think I shall go into some length again and hammer away at that particular point in order to try to have that particular union absorbed into a wider and more representative group than we have at the present time. Everyone knows how the liquor stores of this province are populated on the eve of elections by minions of the party, and I suppose to keep this particular patronage alive it is a good thing to have the finger right on the pulse and be able to run the show any way you like. Well, the job of an Opposition is to at least seek to raise their voice and forfend against that sort of thing.

The second thing is the business of the—and I will not go into it at any length—the negotiations that are in effect going on at the moment on this beer situation. What I do want to make mention of, arising out of it, and on which a concentrated attack must be made in the very near future, is the Brewers' Warehousing Company Limited.

I do not think it is a virtual monopoly, I think it is a real, standing, thorough-going monopolistic practice. Nowhere in the civilized world do the breweries get a greater profit margin than in Ontario. Why? Because they control the distribution and not only the manufacturing. And they control it with the blessing of the government itself. As one of the hon. members said, it would be an interesting thing to see one try to get started. I understand that some years ago Pabst Blue Ribbon tried to come in here from the United States and they did manage to get a few cases into the stores but the price at which they had to sell their beer was non-competitive. I understand there was a 40-cent-a-case handling charge imposed upon them by the brewers retail people who are, of course, the three major brewery companies in this province, who control and mastermind the whole operation.

Now, the thing has been to some extent investigated under the restrictive trade practices commission, on which there is a report. I would think it was high time some citizen having feeling for the people of this province might launch before that unfair practices committee a further appeal for further investigation into the matter of the disappearance of breweries. The consolidation of this particular kind of power has gone on apace and is getting ever worse, so that the brewery profits are completely out of line and maintained by the present government as we will see, perhaps, a little later in this debate to your invidious satisfaction and directed into the maintenance of your party's funds.

I would think that perhaps the best way to get off the ground in this matter is to quote another few verses from Ron Evans, writing in the Telegram of 1965. His headnote reads "A cooking demonstration at the Yorkdale Plaza Book Fair ran afoul of the liquor control board regulations and prompted the Telegram's resident gourmet Ron Evans to turn poetic: "Oh Canada, We Stand on Guard for Thee; or How They Fixed the Fondeau".

They sing about Queenston Heights,
Stoney Creek and other brave sites,
But hark now to a cooking tale
Of a saucy struggle in Yorkdale.
Oh, just this week in old TO
They borrowed a plaza some books to show,
New novels and plays and history books,
Books for kiddies and books for cooks,

And just to add a little fun
They thought they'd show some cooking done;
They guessed the simplest thing to do
Would be a pot of Swiss fondeau.
Now fondeau is a dish divine,
Cheese and brandy and dry white wine;
You take some bread and swish it around,
The tastiest treat you have ever found;
This must have that alcohol
Or it is no good at all.
And so the book folk thought it prudent
To ask the liquor board about doing it.
Oh, said the board when they heard it,
You can't do that without a permit.
Fine, said the book folk, give us one.
Can't, said the board, there ain't none.
We don't give permits for cooking classes,
Just for stuff that comes in glasses.
But don't you dare proceed permitless
Or we'll close you down relentless.
The book folk argued, coaxed and pleaded,
But their pleas went all unheeded.
Said one boardman very haughty,
This way of selling books is naughty.
But, said the book folk, fighting time,
Wine in cooking can't be a crime.
That is a matter of opinion,
Said the sturdy public minion;
Well, last night each Yorkdale shopper
Had fondeau but most improper,
The stuff which all good chefs dismay,
The wine they used—ugh, consommé.
Now cheer the board and let them know
We're all aware of how much we owe;
Ah, righteous chaps in guardian roles,
They spoiled the sauce but they saved our souls.

And arising out of that I thought I would bring into the House today certain articles purchased at sturdy, stolid, staid and genteel old Eaton's store, where they will not sell cigarettes. This stuff contains alcohol; it is called Bab-ah-Rhum, made somewhere, I think, in Europe. I assure you, you would not have to eat too much of it to feel delectable, you know. And also there is another item sold at Eaton's store here; crêpe suzette, from the United States, it contains a goodly quantity of the stuff. I cannot understand how it can be permitted that these things be sold in our stores at all under the present regulations of the board.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): You cannot get much of a jag on that stuff!

Mr. Lawlor: You cannot? Well some gentlemen over there in their present state of health would probably have to be lifted out of the House. If hon. members wish to test it, it is here for their testing, and also for the chairman of the board.

It arises out of the same thing, the same absurdity in connection with our liquor laws. There are candies on the market. I remember a court case not so long ago in which the client claimed—and take it with a dash of bitters if you want—that he had eaten so many of these candies that his ability was impaired and therefore he may have broken the law technically but eating candies is not usually considered in that category. Nor am I asking that the control board do anything about it, for heaven's sake. To the contrary, I think the absurdity lies the other way round.

The next thing that I would like to make mention of is that the people have been under the misapprehension for almost 20 years in this province that you may not have more than one glass of liquor of any kind on the table, particularly beer, at the one time when you are drinking. Now, that is not true. There is nothing in the regulations requiring this. Nevertheless, most of the emporiums in the city of Toronto will not put two glasses in front of you. They resist doing so and the reason is because of their fear of having their licences cancelled. Judge Robb has indicated that his private opinion is—nothing to do with the law of course—that he would rather they did not, you know. And so powerful and so much of the Moses is this man in our law; that rather than offend his tender sensibilities on these matters, they will not give the second glass, and many of them will not attempt to, in effect, defy his personal wish by putting a second glass in front of you and that is the condition of arbitrariness and the condition of dictatorship really that operates within the laws of the province today, in this regard.

The same thing applies all the way through and McRuer has something to say about these things as you will see a little later on, and it is to the arbitrary, the total refusal of the board to give reasons as to their judgments, the suppression of information. There is no method whereby this particular tribunal, which is of a quasi-judicial nature may be required to make public what its decisions are, and to follow a consistent policy under the rule of law. That day must come to an end. We must know why liquor licences are refused and why they are accepted and until that day comes, hon. members cannot help but be under a cloud over there; it is to the instrumentalities that they use, the surreptitious devices at their disposal, the ability to play coy with a number of citizens of this province to gain their own benefaction over against a rule of law and open disclosure and a way of doing things that is above board. This they are not doing. The practice of office parties deserves a certain amount of attention.

But before we come to that there is mention in an article by Richard Needham. Incidentally, Needham has a contest on at the present moment. I have not seen anything published, as yet, but somebody is going to win a first prize or grand prize, someone who sends him the single most absurd restriction or regulation under our present liquor laws. He says he has a desk full of these and that in due course he will start publishing the absurdities. Meanwhile they, of course, mount.

One instance here—and I would ask hon. members to guess who said it—the Ontario attitude towards liquor was shown in July 1966, when Soviet Deputy Premier Dimitri Polianski visited Toronto. The Ontario government put on a reception for this distinguished Russian which was attended by MPPs of all three political parties. The liquor was served but when, according to the Star, the photographers began unlimbering the cameras the politicians hid their drinks.

Somebody explained to Mr. Polianski, "One of our strange Canadian customs is that we all drink but we do not want anybody to know." I would ask hon. members, in one guess, who was that man who said this? Of course, it was the Premier of this province, who was telling the Russian on this occasion of what the strange myths and habits are in this part of the world.

In the business of these parties I think it it fair to say on the whole, that whether or not we are personally overdrinking or even slightly intoxicant, when we attend on places where any liquor or alcoholic beverage is being served, we have under our present laws, almost invariably—I will even go so far as to say unquestionably—either committed or participated in an offence under the Act. The reason for that is that you may be a found-in in an establishment which has permitted drunkenness on the premises and there is an egregious case—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: I think any of us could be charged at any time, right in this House.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: The hon. member, too.

Mr. Sopha: Would we not look good down before the magistrate?

Mr. Lawlor: Perhaps some consideration might be given to making some minor alterations in the law. I mean after all it mounts. If this kind of law—and this is McRuer's objection—is held in disrespect and all of us joke about it and in going along with it we bring all law into disrespect. How can you expect people to abide by a host of other regulations and laws if we, ourselves, think these are absurdities and yet will not do a thing to alter them?

In the case which I was mentioning, a drunk happened to walk into a party as the police were waiting at the door. He had no connection with the party—at Park Towers a year or so ago—and the police remained outside the door. The people whose apartment it was did not know this person at all; nevertheless, 19 people, many distinguished visitors both from Australia and the United States were taken into custody and charged.

Subsequently the case was dismissed but the fact is that they were charged with permitting drunkenness on the premises, and ipso facto were liable to a conviction and anybody found therein—whether they knew this person or not—would likewise be subject to a fine.

Now what kind of a law is that? One of the other matters under this head is the business of drinking under 21. All kinds of absurd situations arise under this head, some of which are set out again in a Needham column of another date:

> Mr. Davies recites a recent incident to show the inanity of our liquor laws.
> Recently I was at a wedding where the groom was 20 and the bride 18. Both were drinking all night at the reception, but never once were they questioned. Several of the groom's friends, however, who were not 21, were forced to ask an adult to go up and get the drink for them. The bartender had refused to serve them.

The same thing in this column, that at another reception which the Premier of Ontario attended in Quebec City, at Laval University, all the young people present were under 21. Nevertheless, they were giving toasts and later, after lunch, were all led by Premier Lesage in a toast to unified Canada.

Here is a situation where a man, say 22 years of age, gives to his wife, who happens to be 19 years of age, a drink in their apartment. That man is breaking the law and he could very well be charged and fined and his reputation severely damaged. That sort of thing again has to be altered in this province.

The business of transporting liquor and whether bottles can be sealed or unsealed. As you probably know, you cannot carry an open case of beer along the street. Whether the bottles are open or not does not matter. As far as liquor is concerned the bottle can be taken—and apparently the weight of the law is that it must be taken—directly from one residence of yours to another.

You could, of course, stop off at your hotel room if you have one but you must be certain to have booked the hotel room in advance or that hotel is not yet your place of residence. You can take a bottle of unsealed liquor up to your cottage because you are moving from one place of residence but you must not take a detour with that bottle or you again can be charged and be subject to penalties.

The thing goes on in this particular vein and one could go on at enormous length. Take the case of homemade wine.

> If you like homemade wine you are in for a sticky time no matter what is inside the bottle. You may serve your homemade wine only in your own home. There is no way that a bottle of homemade wine can legally leave your house. The previous rules about taking liquor to summer cottage or camping ground do not apply to homemade wine. When you serve homemade wine you may serve it only to your own immediate family—

And this business of gifts arises and I think I will advert to it just for a moment. This is a Haggart column of around Christmas time of 1966. He has two columns. One is called "A complete guide to Ontario drinking." The first is private drinking and the other is public. On the private, he says:

> You cannot therefore go to a BYOL party —that is "bring your own liquor" party— with a part bottle of liquor nor with a case of beer that has been opened. Nor does it matter that all the bottles of beer are still closed. It is only possible to go to a BYOL party at all—I assume everyone knows what that means—under one set of circumstances. You must take a sealed bottle of liquor, or an unopened case of beer and make a gift of it to your host, providing of course that the party is at his house, since once again the only legal place he can have liquor is in his own residence. It would be illegal to take your own liquor to someone else's house and drink it yourself. It is illegal to give your liquor to one of the guests, it is illegal to put your liquor into a common pool and let everyone share it as they please.

He goes on like that.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawlor: Somebody should. We are going to pile it up and make this thing stick in their craw and change the law. It is high time that the government did something about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Lawlor: As far as our beverage—

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): The afternoon that the hon. member decides to do some speaking, I will speak to him.

Mr. Lawlor: The drinking conditions in Ontario—I have another interesting document in front of me. It says that in these times of rising prices it came as no surprise that the federal-provincial government levied an additional tax on liquor and beer. While the new tax has affected the majority of people it was generally agreed that these were the areas which would almost painlessly provide the sorely-needed revenues.

What the taxpayer did not expect—and which to our knowledge resulted in no public outcry—was that the price of draught beer would be decontrolled and likely increased to 20 cents. They go on—"they" I say, and I will tell you who "they" are in a minute—they go on to say that, despite the fact that the beer has been decontrolled, the conditions of beverage rooms throughout the province and particularly in the areas out where I live are deplorable and nothing is being done about it and that they are simply being gobbled up in profit. And the group that is sending this around and is complaining so bitterly is the local Progressive Conservative association with whom I have to, on occasions, contend. I give them every compliment, I hope their thoughts in these matters will reach the government of which they are supposed to be a voice.

Mr. Sopha: The only Progressive Conservatives around.

Mr. Lawlor: There are many other things one could say about the signs and the advertising. There cannot be a name like "Harry's Bar" in this province, it is too much of a seductive type of thing. You have to use the word "lounge," you know, under these signs, "Lounge under The Liquor Licence Act." Very small wording on the regulations says that the type may be only five inches high for any of these signs so that they will not catch the eye of the passerby and be led into the ways of temptation; whereas the Ontario retail stores may have the words "Liquor Store" one foot high. Of course, this is special pleading on the part of the government. If there is going to be any seduction done they are going to have to do it on the grounds of the Ontario retail stores and then put up a sign large enough to let them know that is the place to stay away from. Everybody takes exception to the utilizing of clubs in this province as a subterfuge to gain certain ends and get around the law as it is otherwise applied; but to those who are better heeled than most of the population—and the Legions of this province are placed in a bad position as to the gallonage that they are given, and as to the fact that they have difficulty in obtaining liquor. Because it is extremely difficult if not impossible, the imposition upon them of all kinds of terms and restrictions as to the serving of meals, and so on, passes the understanding—particularly for a group of veterans and men who ought to be treated with a greater degree of leniency and understanding.

In winding up this particular portion of what I have to say, I want to quote from McRuer. He is talking here, in volume 2, about The Liquor Licence Act, and he says:

> This Act gives powers to a constable or other police officers to arrest without a warrant—and this is the same wording as The Liquor Control Act:

> —"any person whom he finds committing an offence against this Act or the regulations." An examination of the regulations demonstrates how frivolous the Legislature has been in conferring powers of arrest and detention applied to these offences.
> Most of the regulations relate to the control and sale of liquor on licensed premises. The premises are well known and the licensee is known. It is hard to justify the power of arrest without a warrant for any of the offences created under The Liquor Licence Act. Some of these offences make nonsense of the law. For instance, a failure to supply suitable covering for the table in the dining room, or inadequate supply of flatware. A curious provision of the Act gives a constable power to arrest a licensee without a warrant if he permits "any constable or other police officer while on duty to consume any liquor on the licensed premises." However, the constable consuming the liquor is not guilty of any offence.

The second part of my little talk this evening, Mr. Speaker, is concerned with matters of perhaps more pith and moment, and may bring about a rising of the hackles if not the temperature of the blood, and on this evening when we cannot take off our coats, I hate to do that to the Opposition.

However, I am very much concerned with one aspect of liquor control regulations, and that is the curious business of how you people list and delist various kinds of liquor, because arising out of this curious procedure of listings and delistings of special and regular boards, a curious incident occurred in this province not so many years ago. The curious incident, as hon. members have guessed—which I cannot help but bring to the attention this evening, since nothing has been done about it particularly—is the Melcher's case, with the bagman episode, etc. The tie-in of the utilization of the liquor control board and the licensing provisions of this province with politcal patronage. When that matter broke in this Legislature it was argued it was sub judice. I would think there would be no question that sub judice at this time is not in effect. The last time the liquor thing came up I checked at Osgoode Hall. The case has not been set down for trial, that was on June 6. I did not get an opportunity to check it today, but I understand from the grapevine that this is still the condition. The case was started in 1963. It has gone on into 1968, it has advanced not very much further, although there have been a few "admissions" and what-not, made on the record which give signs of a tiny bit of life, a struggle in the darkness, so to speak, to keep this thing from actually getting into court.

I am surprised that we have not settled it, you know, in order to sweep it under the rug, and have certain evidence which has been mooted about. Evidence, there is enough kicking around to make it interesting as to certain cases of beer—not of bottles, of cases—just being handed out to certain individuals on a selected list which Ron Haggart has—no, I think it is West in this case; no, Scott Young has mentioned it in his columns on several occasions, which has never been challenged, as far as I know. These allegations stand and are outstanding at the present time, and they remain outstanding, and it is high time they got cleaned up.

We were fobbed off on that occasion by the hon. Prime Minister saying, "Well, I am going to set up a review, I am going to set up a committee to review the electoral practice, etc." As we all know that was sheer camouflage. Nothing ever came of that committee. That committee is as dormant today as it was then. I wish you would get down to it and would set up a committee and go to work on the thing. We would not raise our voices so strenuously, and you would eliminate these iniquitous practices which undermine not only the commercial life of this province, but are always there as a blandishment touching politics, which brings hon. members opposite and all of us into disrepute under this heading. And so this case is outstanding. And what I have done here—and I will not thrash away at you in this particular regard, I shall mention it, newspaper after newspaper in the past year or two years that I could read you—I have them all in front of me—the columns from these newspapers; the Port Arthur, what is it called, News Chronicle, the Kitchener-Waterloo Record, the Windsor Star, the Toronto Telegram, the Globe and Mail.

The Globe and Mail, let me just mention to you, March 26, 1966, the lead editorial saying:

> There must be an enquiry. Mr. Robarts cannot be excused for his delay in ordering an enquiry. The fact that a writ has been issued in a civil case ought not to have inhibited him, for the two hearings need not have conflicted when the good sense of the government was involved. But had the pleas that the case was sub judice ever held any validity, it had laws all worn away; the writ was issued for September 6, 1963; today, two-and-a-half years later, the case is not even set down for trial.

And it goes on:

> There is no doubt what action should be taken. There must be a judicial enquiry into the whole affair. It should have been ordered in 1963 when the charges first came to the attention of the government. Premier John Robarts did not jump into the matter then; now he has been pushed.

And I think, under the circumstances, he needs very much to be pushed; nothing has been clarified in this matter. The whole business of pay-offs, bagmen, over against the kind of evidence that has been registered in the court; the letters that passed between Sarto Marchand, and Mr. McDowell; the mention of specific names of people; the mention of Harry Price about a business of a pay-off; an envelope with moneys in return for registration of certain rye and a certain cognac, which rye was registered at a subsequent time; the fobbing off of the matter by the statement of the Premier at a subsequent date, which, as I say, none of these newspapers—friend or foe, so far as you folk are concerned—would condone this activity. This shoving things under the rug and using your overwhelming power in this House to blanket debate and to cut off the protestations of people over here who think that matters of this kind, when they come to public knowledge, which they so seldom do, the tip of the iceberg ought to be reviewed in public. We know what is going on as far as special privileges and special interests in the liquor business is concerned.

Mr. J. H. White (London South): The hon. member is not serious, is he?

Mr. Lawlor: Dead serious!

Mr. White: He is pulling our legs.

Mr. Lawlor: The hon. member wishes I was not quite so serious.

When their own newspaper, when the Telegram says:

> Now that the names have been made public, the government is duty-bound to probe the influence-peddling allegations without waiting for the lawsuit to be heard.

And they go on, paper after paper, all over this province, in similar vein.

I think that it is high time, and I hope that other people would join here with their voices raised in this regard tonight, in order to give this thing a final testng and to bring it to a head, once and for all, since the court case is obviously in the doldrums.

Mr. G. Ben: (Humber): The hon. member might say that the case of Melchers is aging.

Mr. Lawlor: Well, it improves by aging, you know. The quality of the thing—the bouquet—changes as we go along. We will still be talking about it next year.

With that in mind, I shall leave the matters to more able hands than myself, and finish with a verse or two of G. K. Chesterton, just in the way of rounding out the scope of the thing. I hope it takes nothing from the bitterness or acrimony, or acumen, or whatever it may be, of my remarks. He says:

Feast on wine or fast on water and your honour shall stand sure
God's almighty son and daughter
He the valiant, she the pure
If an angel out of heaven brings you other things to drink
Thank him for his kind attention
Go and pour them down the sink.
Before all the windy waters
Rained like tempest down
When good drink has been dishonoured by the tipplers of the town
When red wine has brought red ruin
And the death stance of our times
Heaven sent us Coca Cola as a torment for our crimes.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Dovercourt.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I notice my friend from Lakeshore brought out certain hilarious aspects of our liquor licencing laws, but there is one, Mr. Speaker, that seems to be more redundant than all the rest. That is, that a person who is drinking in a licenced establishment cannot look outside, because the windows must be covered so that nobody can see him taking a drink.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. De Monte: I think, Mr. Speaker, that when we consider the liquor laws, we might consider why these laws—the sole purpose of the laws—is to restrict drinking. But it has also been proven, Mr. Speaker, that restrictive practices do not mean less drunkenness and that the present laws, in effect, fly in the face of reality, and of what the public would like.

I think the question of drunkenness is a question of education—the question of drinking is a question of education. I think that if we can train our young people to consider the drinking of liquor in its true aspect, then we would have solved, Mr. Speaker, the concern of many people, the prohibitionists, about restricting the hours of drinking; the practice of drinking; where you can and cannot drink; and how you should drink.

If we could only educate, as they do in Europe, Mr. Speaker. In France, in England, in Italy, a person is taught to respect liquor in any shape or form. He is taught that liquor is part of living; that liquor is part of having your supper; and that it should not be abused, as food should not be abused, as any endeavour in our society should not be abused.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the practice of the beer parlours, as we see them in Quebec, in England and Italy and at Expo—people thought it was just part of going to Expo, going out for a drink, and that this aspect of your life should not be abused. There is no doubt, Mr. Speaker, and I think it has been brought out in this House, that in Quebec there were two-thirds less drinking offences last year than we had in Ontario. I think that that speaks well of Quebec and speaks well of the people of Quebec's attitude toward drinking.

I think that perhaps we might even, Mr. Speaker, look at the continental attitude towards drinking—the fact that it is something to be treated with respect, and that the training that liquor should be treated with respect should start at an early age.

Another aspect of the situation of the liquor laws in our province, Mr. Speaker, is the liquor licence board. Many members of this House, and myself, in particular, Mr. Speaker, would like to know the policy of the liquor licence board. We would like to know why one person is granted a licence and another person is not granted a licence. Is it because this particular person has a different colour of eyes than this other person? It is because he knows somebody, and therefore obtains a licence? Is is because, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. De Monte: Certainly we do not know why. The board has never told us why. They have never told us and it is a fact, Mr. Speaker, when you keep the information behind the door, suspicions are raised. There may be no grounds for the suspicion, and yet again there may be.

It is my respectful submission that if they put it out into the open, there will be no suspicion.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. De Monte: Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Justice McRuer makes certain suggestions in his report on civil rights? Why is it that the members opposite have not done anything about it?

Why is it that one person goes before the board and is refused, and the other person, Mr. Speaker, is not refused? There must be a reason and we, as members of this House, and the public of Ontario, have a right to know why they have been refused.

You know, Mr. Speaker, the whole point is this—in some cases, a liquor licence is licence to make money and there is no reason why every citizen of Ontario should not have a right to apply for a licence, if he is an honourable man, and obtain a licence. The restrictive practices in handing out of liquor licences is an ancient method, Mr. Speaker. With the greatest of respect to my friend, the member for London South, it is in some cases a question of patronage in many political parties—not only this one, but many political parties all over the world. And the sooner, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. White: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, now that my names has been mentioned, sir.

I have been a member here for nine years and, on my word of honour, I have never known patronage to enter into any licence in the London area. As a matter of fact, there are all kinds of licencees there, some of whom are going broke because licences are so easily obtainable. The member is living in the 1930s.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Speaker, I do not doubt the word of the member for London South, but the point is, it does not matter.

Mr. White: The point is, the member does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. De Monte: It does not matter whether people go broke, whether people make a lot of money—the rights to a licence should be there. A refusal of a right to a licence should be explained and there should be reasons given therefor.

I am not questioning, Mr. Speaker, whether —I said in some cases that the liquor licence is a licence to make money and in some cases it is. But the point is that everyone should have a right to obtain a licence.

Mr. White: And so they have.

Mr. Lawlor: That is not true.

Mr. De Monte: And with the greatest of respect, Mr. Speaker, if we did not take this restrictive attitude towards liquor—towards the distribution of liquor, towards drinking—we would possibly be able to cut down and at the same time educate the people as to the proper methods of taking a drink.

Now, what I would like to ask the hon. Minister, through you, Mr. Speaker, is, has the Minister attempted to correlate the availability of liquor and its direct effect on alcoholism? Has there been any correlation? Has there been any research done on the psychological aspect of alcoholism? Does a man become an alcoholic because alcohol is available, or does a man become an alcoholic because he has a psychological basis for it? I think this is an important aspect, Mr. Speaker, of the availability of liquor, of liquor licences. I think we must take a good look at the psychological aspect of alcoholism. We tend too greatly to concentrate on the idea that because it is available, therefore we are going to have alcoholics. We must look at the whole aspect of an alcoholic, his psychological makeup. Why he does it. Why he becomes a charge on the public. Is it because liquor is available, or is it merely because he has that peculiar psychological trait that the minute he takes his first drink he might become an alcoholic?

Thereby, Mr. Speaker, do we forbid? Do we limit? Do we place a fence around the availability of liquor? Liquor has been part of the culture of western civilization since the beginning of time. Christ, who changed the water into wine—

Mr. Lawlor: Tories change wine into water.

Mr. De Monte: I think the moralistic aspect of liquor is its misuse—not its availability—its misuse, for whatever reason, psychologically or because it is available.

I would point a question at the hon. Minister and ask him if he has done any research on this aspect of alcoholism, or whether he contemplates any research in that regard?

Now, one aspect that I should have mentioned earlier, Mr. Speaker. I think Mr. Justice McRuer sets it out in his report but he says there should be hearings for each case of refusal or revocation of a licence. I think here, Mr. Speaker, he is referring to all commissions, not specifically the liquor licence commission. But it seems only fair, it seems a question of justice—simple justice —and a simple civil right that when a person is refused there should be a reason given. And if there is no valid reason put forward, as to why this person should not have a licence, he should be automatically granted a licence. I think this is merely a principle of natural justice, and it should become a tenet of the awesome power that all boards and commissions possess, but particularly this board.

I heard a man say the other day, "Who is the liquor licence board? The liquor licence board is Mr. Robb." I think the member for Lakeshore pretty well summarized the case when he said they will not serve an extra glass of beer simply because Judge Robb does not like it. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, this is a flagrant example of arbitrary rule by a commission.

Mr. Sopha: I doubt that.

Mr. De Monte: Well the member can doubt it and I can say it.

Mr. Lawlor: I can document it for the member.

Mr. Sopha: The member for Lakeshore was talking through his hat.

Mr. Ben: Like the member for London South.

Mr. De Monte: I am wondering how many members of this House have made a tour of the beer parlours in this city.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Not this last week.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): We do not get out of here in time.

Mr. De Monte: The whole point, Mr. Speaker, I am referring to beer parlours generally, not drinking emporiums specifically. I am struck, Mr. Speaker, by the deplorable conditions under which some people are allowed to drink and by the horrible condition of some of the pubs in this city. The floors are dirty; their walls have not been painted for heaven knows how long; there is a waiter standing over you, Mr. Speaker, as you drink your drink; he is afraid to put the drink down but he will not leave until you drink the first one so he can smack another one down.

And this, Mr. Speaker, is what I suggest is wrong with our laws. You go to a beer parlour and drink. That is why you go to a beer parlour. You do not go there to meet your friends and have a sandwich, have a sing-song, to play darts, to play shuffleboard. You go there to drink, and that is the attitude that causes the drunkenness. And I think our laws foster this type of attitude. You cannot sing, you cannot—some people laugh and say you cannot sing—well, you are right, you cannot.

Mr. Ben: Drunk or sober, we cannot sing.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): That is wrong.

Mr. De Monte: What is wrong?

An hon. member: If you enjoy it, it is bad for you.

Mr. De Monte: The point is, Mr. Speaker, that if our laws were reasonable, if our laws recognized that people do drink, that if you could give them conditions under which they do not desire to drink excessively, then you are stopping drunkenness. You are stopping alcoholism. You stop excessive drinking.

And I think this is important, that we have to consider our laws in the light of modern-day ideas of what drinking should be like. We should train our young people to realize that it is a dangerous thing if you do not handle it carefully, like over-eating is if you do not handle it carefully; and that it is just part of a social whole that you take part in in order to enjoy yourself.

I think, with respect, Mr. Speaker, that the laws of our province tend to cause excessive drinking, and the sooner we change and accept, perhaps, the continental aspect, that we will be doing a great service for the people of Ontario.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I think there is too big a fuss about liquor to begin with. The trend seems to be that if you cannot beat them, join them.

Now according to an article by Val Sears, a staff writer for the Toronto Daily Star, liquor is the fifth largest source of revenue for the province of Ontario. As a matter of fact, according to the report that we are discussing here, last fiscal year the province took in $154,273,836 in revenue from the liquor industry.

In addition to that, Ottawa got its cut of $158,449,135.

The consumption of liquor has jumped 35 per cent per capita between 1960 and 1966. There are 100,000 alcoholics in the province of Ontario, 1,600 people are likely to be killed in traffic accidents in Ontario this year, and in nearly half of these accidents, alcohol will be a factor. More than 500 people will die of liver cirrhosis in 1968. Alcoholic workers will lose nearly 1,000,000 man hours or $2 million at $2 per hour and, in Ontario, 300,000 lives are going to be blighted by alcohol this year.

Everybody is concerned about making drink more readily available. A report by the Ontario alcoholism and drug addiction research foundation says that the average Canadian now drinks the equivalent of 450 bottles of beer or 27 bottles of whisky a year. Now that is a pretty good consumption. He now takes three drinks for every one he imbibed in 1937, and evidently, in some people's opinion, liquor is still too hard to come by.

Now prior to 1960, advertising of alcoholic beverages was banned in Ontario. Ostensibly because so much advertising from the United States and Quebec was pouring into Ontario, Leslie Frost changed the law to permit certain advertising. So to me there seems to be a little coincidence that between 1960 and 1966, the last fiscal year, consumption rose by 35 per cent.

What makes the whole thing a little ricidulous is a statement by Mr. Sheppard—Harry Sheppard of the liquor control board—on advertising, that the hon. member for Sudbury spoke of. Hon. members know—how does it go, kegs or cans or bottles? Well the LCBO stopped it and here is why they stopped it. Mr. Sheppard said:

> The criteria we operate on is that the ad should be in good taste and that it should be designed to persuade the public to prefer one brand over another but not increase consumption.

Now that is his quote. On that basis, they said that the Carling ad was supposed to be in bad taste. I think the truth of the matter was that that particular ad was ploughing all the other breweries under when it came to sales.

Anyway the Star wrote an editorial as a result of these articles by Val Sears. It was captioned "Time For A New Look At Alcohol" and frankly I think it must have been written by someone under the influence. Let us consider some of the statements:

> Whether we like it or not, the drinking of alcoholic beverages has become socially acceptable in modern society.

Another quote:

> An effective public policy should be based on recognition of this fact. It should seek to impress young people with the dangers of excessive drinking, and it should also encourage them, if they must drink, to learn to do so in a moderate and civilized manner, preferably in a home environment.

Now point one: Because people do a certain thing, does that make it socially acceptable? Is it in fact socially acceptable or something that people feel they are forced to do in order to be socially acceptable themselves? In other words, are we all admiring the king's invisible clothes because everyone is afraid to say that the king is wearing no clothes at all?

Another point. It is a fact that we accept that people are going to be killed in automobile accidents—either as drivers, passengers or pedestrians. Does that mean that killing people or having people killed by automobiles or in automobile accidents is socially acceptable in modern society? If it is socially acceptable, we punish people for breaking automobile manslaughter?

Further, people are continuously breaking the traffic bylaws, especially the parking bylaws. You can in all honesty say that it is socially acceptable to break traffic bylaws, especially the parking regulations. Parking bylaws are more often broken from necessity than from desire yet, even though it is socially acceptable, we punsh people for breaking these laws. The question is why?

Regarding that quote: "If they must learn to drink—" Who says that they must learn to drink? No one says that our young people must learn to drink. We say that people are going to drink and therefore we should change our laws to make it easier for them to do so. But can it be taken for granted, as we take for granted that night will follow day, that people are going to drink?

What good reason can one offer for people drinking except that it keeps many people employed—in the brewing industry, bottle industry, packaging, advertising, selling, delivering, serving, inspection and those involved in the apprehension, prosecution and incarceration of those people that do not do it according to the law—and it raises $152 million a year taxation?

I wonder how many people would be prepared to put all the LCBO employees out of work, while letting the grocery stores handle it for the small additional income that they would get. I wonder just how prepared they would be to do that—even the party to our left there.

They are the ones that try to preserve a man's job but I could just see what would happen if tomorrow they said from now on grocery stores sell beer. There would be a riot in the ranks of the union labour and the NDP.

Mr. Gisborn: That comes from the hon. member's side.

Mr. Ben: In the article by Val Sears he states that about 85 per cent of the population are not abstainers. That is, 85 per cent of the population—not adults, but of the population, are not abstainers. He also states that nearly every adult in Ontario drinks.

So let us analyze that statement just to see how ridiculous it is. If he states that nearly every adult drinks and that only 15 per cent are abstainers, about 85 per cent of the population are not abstainers, then the abstainers must be among our young.

According to the 1961 census Metropolitan Toronto had a population of 1,824,481. If 15 per cent are abstainers then we have 273,672 abstainers. Of the 1,824,481 people who make up Metro Toronto 378,809 are between the ages of 0 and 9 inclusive. If we take from this number the 273,672 who are abstainers, then 105,137 or 27.7 per cent of those between the ages of 0 and 9 inclusive are not abstainers.

Of Metro's population, 527,722 are between the ages of 0 and 14 inclusive. Take away from this the 273,672 who are abstainers in Metro Toronto and this means that 254,050 or 48 per cent of those between the ages of 0 and 14 inclusive are not abstainers.

The conclusion? The Star is preparing to make a mint accepting liquor adveristing. If we are to pursue Mr. Sears' article further, consider this. The Star editorial had this to say:

> More people are drinking at an earlier age than in previous generations. The inevitable result has been more drunken driving by teenagers and more criminal offences involving liquor.

According to the 1961 census there were in Metro Toronto 276,830 children between the ages of 10 and 19 inclusive. Since, according to Mr. Sears, 273,672 were not abstainers all the children between 10 and 19 inclusive except 3,158—and they were probably in jail or training school—are not abstainers, they are drinkers.

Now the Star editorial referred to a "more realistic approach to the problem" which the home and school federation survey may help to prepare the way for and some of these approaches are; the age at which the young people are allowed to drink, which in Ontario is fixed at 21. This rule, the Star states, is open to question on two counts.

> Firstly the law is virtually unenforceable, at least to youngsters in their late teens, and like all unenforceable statutes, it tends to bring the whole law into contempt.

Now, I agree with the Star's contention about bringing the whole law into contempt. But when is the Star going to take up arms against other unenforceable, and unenforced offences such as speeding, parking, jay-walking, false advertising, and others?

> Secondly, the high age limit makes the introduction of young people to liquor in a home setting illegal, at least in theory.

That is a quote from the Star. Well, according to Sears' statistics, every young person seems to be drinking without any difficulty whatsoever.

The Star ends its editorial by stating that in Italian and Jewish homes where liquor is made available to youngsters quite early, but under family supervision, and on family occasions, there is little drunkenness or alcoholism.

That may be. But I suggest that it is because the Jewish child is taught to invest his money at 10 per cent and not to spend it on liquor, and the Italian just cannot afford to get drunk when he has such a large family to support. So what is the point?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What a theory that is!

Mr. Ben: So what is the point of this? Well, I think that all the people who talk about liberalizing the liquor laws are themselves probably a bunch of inebriated hypocrites, inebriated either on alcohol, or self-importance.

Alcohol has never been a necessity of life. No one has ever established that man cannot exist without alcohol while millions—even if it is only the three million in Canada—have proven that one can exist without alcohol.

Since the indiscriminate use of alcohol has produced all the evil that has been attributed to it, why not ban it, and all references to it? We can even force the American radio stations and publications to delete all references to alcohol in books coming over the border.

Nonsense? Of course it is!

I still maintain that a way to cut down on the evils of alcohol is not to make it easier for everyone to get, but to stop encouraging its use. From 1960, when advertising was permitted in Ontario, to 1966, the consumption of alcohol increased by 35 per cent. No one could convince me that all this advertising did was to persuade people to buy one brand rather than another, and not encourage people to drink. If that was all advertising did, then General Motors, Ford, Chrysler, Lever Brothers, Imperial Tobacco, and other companies would have stopped making so many brands, and stopped advertising long ago. I say that it is not the law that is an ass, but the people who pass it. Those are comments I made about the Star editorial.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: It is an editorial, Mr. Speaker, from the Telegram.

Mr. Sopha: No heckling please!

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, there was an editorial some time ago in the Telegram which was captioned "Drinks at the CNE." It had this to say:

> Toronto controller, Fred Beavis, has proposed that beer and liquor should be sold at the Canadian national exhibition. Such a move is not only long overdue, but would help to attract interest in a fair that unfortunately is not keeping abreast of the times. In this day and age, beer, wine and liquor served with meals have come to be accepted as part of our way of life. Alcoholic beverages with meals are no longer a novelty. Most people now want drinks when they are eating, and if they are not available, the business of the future will in probability be taken elsewhere. In its effort to acquire a fresh and exciting image, the CNE should learn from the experience of Expo '67, even in the matter of having drinks available on the grounds. As Mr. Beavis has noted, cocktail bars abound at Expo, and most pavilions that have restaurants serve beer, wine, and liquor with meals, including Ontario's pavilion.
> Mr. Beavis, who recently toured the fair with Mayor Dennison and Controller Campbell, was impressed by the absence of drunks. The fact that drinks could be had with meals obviously had a lot to do with it (apart from the fact that it cost 50 cents for a bottle of beer, of course). The CNE, of course, is an entirely different type of fair from Expo. The world's fair is attracting a lot of Europeans and Americans too, who have long taken it for granted that food and alcoholic drinks go together. In some provinces of Canada, this practice began only recently.
> The Telegram is not advocating that wide-open drinking be permitted at the CNE, but we can see no harm in beer, wine and liquor being available to patrons in restaurants.

That is the end of the editorial, Mr. Speaker. At that time I was doing some editorials on a radio station, and I had this to say about their editorial.

> Last week de Gaulle made a hurried exit by air from Canada and it is a pity that he did not take the editorial board of the Toronto Telegram with him, for where de Gaulle was trying to destroy this country from without, the Telegram are doing it from within. Last Thursday I dealt with a Tely editorial on open gambling, captioned, "The Law is an Ass," and suggested that it was the Telegram which was the ass. The same day, having read its editorial, "Drinks at the CNE," I came to the conclusion I was too kind to them.
> The article, needless to say, supported the sale of alcoholic beverages at the Canadian national exhibition. Of course, the editorial makes it a point to stress that they are not advocating open drinking, not our puritan Telegram, just to beer, wine and liquor being available to patrons in restaurants. You see, according to the Telegram, "Most people now want drinks when they are eating".
> Well, I think it is time that the editors of the Telegram got out of their panelled executive dining room and came down to earth. I am sure it would do them no harm to walk down Yonge Street at noon hour and rub shoulders with the common man and woman. They would find that a majority, an overwhelming majority, or, to use their expression, "most of the people," do not dash to the nearest bar, tavern or licensed establishment for their lunch but to places like Eaton's, Simpson's, Woolworth's or Kresge's or to one of the many small restaurants downtown, few of which have licences to serve liquor. Furthermore, in many of the licensed eating places the more timid are induced to have liquor by the simple, sweet, but subtle question, "What would you like from the bar, sir?"
> The editors of the Telegram, however, prefer to judge the habits of the citizens of Toronto by smelling the breath of their reporters. The Telegram states that permitting liquor to be sold at the Ex would not only be a move long-overdue, but would help to attract interest in a fair that unfortunately is not keeping up with the times. How in heaven's name would liquor attract people to the Ex when there are so many bars downtown that you can't slip on a banana peel without falling into one? Would the Telegram have us believe that people will leave their homes and ride with their children on crowded streetcars, or inch forward in traffic trying to find a place to park their car just so that they can have a drink at the Ex? What rubbish.
> What keeps Torontonians away from the exhibition is that there is nothing on exhibit except cars a year old in design, electric appliances which one can see at the corner store, imported has-been actors with acts so old that they make the late, late shows on television look like world premieres, and > a deplorable lack of a place to sit and rest when one gets tired of it all.

> But on the other hand, the Telegram may have a point. The people can always drown their sorrows in having been fools enough to have gone there in the first place.

I regret extremely that I have not got an editorial from the Globe and Mail to pass some comments on, but you know that the fact remains that fuss is still being made about liquor as if it was in itself oxygen, and a necessity of life. My colleague from Dovercourt has talked about statistics. Well, the statistics are there. Russia, where liquor is easily available, had a fantastic alcoholism problem, and they have had to get strict. Czechoslovakia, itself, and I use that as being the country of my birth, has a liquor and alcoholism problem. In Sweden, I recall when I was there, I was surprised to see that port sat on a cafeteria table, where the steam table is, that it was served as we serve orange juice. I finally found someone who could speak English, and asked what was the drinking age. He answered that it was 16 years. I said, "Well those people there are not 16." These were 15- and 14-year-olds grabbing a glass of port the way I grab a glass of tomato or grapefruit juice. He said: "Well, they are not too fussy about how old they are."

I also saw people lying stupified on the streets and I went to the police stations and asked about the problem, and they have a fantastic drinking problem in Sweden. Their alcoholism rate has jumped sky high. In Sweden now, if you have a reading of .5 on a breathalyzer, you automatically go to jail. They just pick you up and let you stay in jail overnight to sober up, and let you go. That is what liquor does. Now—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Ben: I was overseas. You might say that I got as drunk as a lord, and as sober as a judge, although I could not see the difference to tell you the truth. The fact is I can take it or leave it. I do not consider liquor a necessity of life and I just look in bewilderment at people who just cannot seem to live without the stuff. I should think that we should concern ourselves with trying to convince people that you can live without alcohol. and in fact, I think that there are some 450 million Moslems in the world who, by their religion eschew drink. They never touch it and they seem to survive.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On a point of order please. I think that this is about as appropriate a place to rise and object to a statement made by the hon. member because of what he has just said. As a member of the Jewish faith I take exception to a statement that he made earlier and I am sure that, being the member that he is and knowing him as I do, he would not mean it the way that it sounds, but it certainly did not sound good. He made some suggestion that perhaps the people of the Jewish faith teach their children not to drink because they find that they would rather have their children learn to invest their money at 10 per cent. Perhaps, he said, this was the reason. There are some libellous connotations to this, and I know the hon. member would not mean it that way. I suggest to him that perhaps the latter statement he has just made might have been better employed in referring to the people of my faith. Why did he not just say that for some reason or other, Jews do not drink as much as other people do, the same as he has referred to Moslems and himself, rather than suggest that it was the monetary consideration, which is really unworthy of the hon. member, and I think he should withdraw it.

Mr. Ben: I think the hon. Minister is demeaning his own race. If his race is not big enough to take a statement like I made and take it in the spirit in which it was offered then all I can suggest is that the hon. Minister is not a member of it, because I have always found them to be big enough to accept levity.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared—

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I will not apologize because I did not make any demeaning statement.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On a point of order, I am prepared to have the hon. member—as a matter of fact that is the reason I got up on my feet—prepared for the hon. member to tell us the spirit in which he made the statement, and that is precisely the point I was making.

Mr. Ben: I will not deign to answer an insult like that. It is an insult and it belittles —I have lost respect for the hon. Minister, he is over-sensitive and he is insulting his co-religionists.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, it ill-behooves the hon. member to say I am over-sensitive on this. I come from a race of people who have been charged with all sorts of heinous crimes because they are alleged to have an interest in money and the hon. member knows that. He should not have said what he did. I thought the hon. member would have been big enough to get up and say, "I am sorry that I made the statement. I did not really mean it, perhaps, the way it sounded," and that is what he should have said, and I still plead with him to get up and do the honourable thing in this case.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us see if he is big enough to retract it.

Mr. Ben: Not on your life, Mr. Speaker. This insulting individual over there, the Minister of Correctional Services, knows well, full well, that I have so many friends in the Jewish community and that I tell jokes in a dialect. Now, I will not even endure such a slur. If anyone should apologize, it is he.

Mr. MacDonald: Be big enough!

Mr. Ben: Be big enough. Do not be ridiculous. The member is asinine. He is a childish as the Minister is, and I am insulted by his remarks. I say shame to him. Good grief! I pointed out that in those two groups that I mentioned there does not seem to be the alcoholism. I did say they did not drink as much as any other group. I just said there seems to be less alcoholism.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is less.

Mr. Ben: All right.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): I hope he is not speaking for the Liberal Party.

Mr. Ben: I will let the Jewish community judge me on what I have done in the past.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is what I was hoping to do, and I am surprised that the hon. member said what he did. But I am not going to let it be known that I was sitting here listening to the statement he made and let it pass, because I would not want anyone to think I would sit here and let it pass.

Mr. Ben: Well, the Minister did sit there and let it pass for about five minutes.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well, I was waiting for the opportunity, for the hon. member to sit down. But then he answered his own question and referred to some reason why he did not drink so much. I was hoping he would give the same reason for other people.

Mr. Ben: I only apologize if I do something wrong.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Ben: Well, if they want to express anti-Semitism, let them. For me being demeaning like that—catering to a particular group—shows there is prejudice and I will not show it.

I say "shame" to him, I have never been so insulted in my life.

Mr. Speaker, this is a democratic House, but since the House leader ordered me to sit down, I will sit down.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker feels that if certain feelings of certain members of the House have been deeply or at all hurt as a result of this sort of thing, then I would think that the member might very well reconsider his statement.

Mr. Ben: Oh, let that man get up and say he sincerely feels that I insulted him and his race.

Interjections by many hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I want to make it quite clear that I said earlier—and if the hon. member will check Hansard—that I was surprised that these remarks came from the hon. member because I know his feelings. I said I gave him the opportunity to withdraw them because I know he would not want the wrong impression to go out, that he felt this way. Now, this is precisely what the hon. member is objecting to, and this is precisely the reason why I got up.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join myself, as a member of the Jewish race, with the remarks made by the Minister of Correctional Services, I think there has been an unfortunate comment made here. I know the member for Humber very well. I know him not to be anti-Semitic. Let me say this, I think the comment which slipped out was misconstrued, and I would like to suggest, knowing him as well as we do and knowing his temper as well as we do, that we let it pass and go on to something else.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, thank you very much. I think this matter has gone far enough. The member, I think we all agree—I would not wish to put words in his mouth unnecessarily—but I think we all agree, did not intend the implication that has been attributed to it, and I think we can drop the matter there.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I grew up on Kensington Avenue which is what these two hon. members cannot say. I spent the greater part of my life in a Jewish community. I want the Jewish community to judge me, not these two.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that we go on with the debate at this stage.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, I have heard some remarks about Judge Robb long before I came into this House, and since I have been here I have heard many people actually insult and pick on this man where he could not defend himself. I personally feel that Judge Robb himself is a gentleman of a type that I would like to meet daily.

He does an excellent job. He is a man in a high office, a very humble individual who is trying to do a good job for us. For this I respect him. If he is not doing the job he ought to for this province, I blame the regulations and the statutes. I am not going to tell you that I have a wreath over my head—

Mr. White: Do not spoil it now, it was so nice.

Mr. Bukator: Well, sir, I would like to repeat that the statutes and the regulations are wrong. If they were to close the breweries and the liquor stores tomorrow morning, it would offend me not because I touch the stuff very little. I do not suppose I have drunk a bottle of liquor in 25 years. I like a little wine, especially if it is made in the banana belt where the hon. Minister and I come from. A little wine now and then, especially if it comes from the Niagara peninsula.

Mr. Nixon: For the stomach's sake.

Mr. Bukator: It is a Canadian wine, a domestic wine that we have a lot of respect for. But what I wanted to say to you, Mr. Speaker, and through you to this House, and especially to the Minister, is that the day of the local option is a thing of the past. It served a purpose and I do not think it does any more. Let me cite two instances:

The hon. member for Grey-Bruce—they did have a vote in Owen Sound and lost that vote by a fraction of one per cent; 60 per cent of the vote was needed to carry on a local option and they had 59 and a fraction of one per cent and lost an opportunity to give that city and the people of that city an opportunity to drink beer and whisky if they wanted.

Having said that for Owen Sound, let me tell you of the position I find myself in. I live in the little village of Chippewa, between the township of Willoughby and the city of Niagara Falls—a village of some 700 acres where we are very readily accessible to whisky and beer in the city of Niagara Falls and within the township. But again this village does not have it and have never had a local option vote. If annexation of the village of Chippewa would have come about when the city applied to take it in, it would have automatically been a part of the city of Niagara Falls—a population of over 50,000—and then the restaurants and the hotels could have had—the Minister shakes his head as though that is not so—but if that village was taken into the city and became a part of the city, they could have liquor and beer in their outlets. If that is not so, then the regulation and the statute is wrong also in that area.

I find it rather odd to think of a city on one side and a township on the other with a village in between not having the opportunity to go to their local restaurants, but having to jump in their car and drive to the city of Niagara Falls if they want to drink with their meal. This, in my opinion, does not make sense.

An hon. member: Niagara Falls, New York.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, as a matter of fact, the city of Niagara Falls, New York have been doing quite well since we have had this strike, but I am not going to dwell on that too long. The point I would like to make this day, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that it falls on the ears of the right people, the day of the local option is finished. They ought to do away with it. Now if they do not, they should put this in a very democratic way of doing business, 51 per cent of the vote ought to carry. At least, that change ought to be made and, in most cases, if that kind of vote would have been taken in the cities that have lost their vote, it would have carried. So the majority vote would have done the job for us.

As one who realizes that many people want this with their meals and want it in their homes—and I think they are entitled to it—I cannot find, under any stretch of the imagination, how a city like Owen Sound could be treated the way they were recently. And the only way they can come by it? I guess it is three or four years before they can have another vote. Three years! Well, it is well established now, they cannot have a vote for three years.

Now is it not odd, Mr. Speaker, through you again to the people who will hear, that a very small amendment to the statute would make it possible for cities like Owen Sound and many others to have what they get anyhow with a certain amount of inconvenience? I say to this hon. Minister, to prove that he is earning his keep—I have not seen too much activity on his part except the routine work that they have to do—he could use a little imagination and, in this particular instance, as one who does not use it—broaden it and make it convenient for the people who want it to happen. We are living with an antiquated type of statute and regulation and it ought not to exist in this modern age.

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I will follow the same line as the members for Niagara Falls and Grey-Bruce.

One wonders at the liquor licence board and government of the province of Ontario. We have a bill of rights in Ontario. We talk about human rights and equal rights—equality of opportunity to all persons. The liquor licence board of Ontario uses discriminatory practices under its regulations.

The Liquor Licence Act provides that in local option areas, for other than clubs, there must be a vote of several questions which are set out in the Act. In the township in my riding, Welland South, such a question was put to the electors and remained dry. The voter had rejected the sale of liquor or alcoholic beverages in that municipality but yet the liquor licence board of Ontario, with all its power, can issue licences to provide clubs against the decision of the voters of that township.

I believe that, if you are going to provide regulations for the sale of alcoholic beverages in Ontario, all those concerned must be treated on an equal basis—that the law should not be so ambiguous or serve a dual purpose, that this board can issue a licence in a dry municipality. We have in Ontario many tourist establishments that contribute to the bringing in of the tourist dollars to this province. Many of these tourist establishments have liquor on the premises for the guests under special banquet licence, yet all can be issued in a dry municipality.

It is time that the Liquor Licence Board of Ontario revised its regulations so that the tourist establishments may be treated on the same basis as private clubs and liquor can be served with their meals.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I have got a few comments to make. I might say first that our party has no official positions on the liquor question of this province. Anything I suggest will be my own feelings, from my own observations and I think, from listening to the comments from the benches of the Liberal Party, that they have no firm liquor policies either.

It is obvious from what we know about the liquor policy in this province that the Conservative government has a liquor policy—a pretty firm one—and certainly, individuals must find fault with many parts of their policy.

Now just a few brief things I have observed that have become indignant concerns to people of the province. That is many of the ways they have to obtain their liquor—the silliness about having to sign your name and address to purchase beer and liquor. I have talked to employees in the liquor stores as to why they think this is necessary and they tell me it is an important function and that it is necessary, absolutely necessary, to keep proper accounting. If they are short cash in the evening they have to go back through these forms and they can tell exactly where the mistake was made.

Certainly, other provinces of this country are just as interested in proper accounting procedures, but you do not have to sign your name and address to obtain your liquor. I think it is about time we grew up in this province and did away with that silly requirement of signing your name and address when you want to purchase your drink.

Sunday drinking, again. The new regulations that came in not long ago to allow Sunday drinking in a dining room between 1:30 and 5:30 in the afternoon, where you have to obtain a meal.

Obtaining the meal is one thing, but you run into many occasions where—and I have had this happen to myself and it has been raised by other people in my area as well. They will have guests drop in; they want to take them out for dinner; they have already had their own dinner and they will take them to an establishment where they can get a drink with their dinner. But they cannot have a drink if they do not eat also, They cannot sit down with their guests. In most cases you do not get a very good welcome from the establishment if you fill a chair, just sitting there and talking to your guests.

I think that is one area where we could take a reasonable look and do away with this nonsense of everyone in a party having to eat. If they are in the same party, as long as one or two have a meal, anyone should be able to accompany them and also have a drink.

There is the broad question of the monopoly of the breweries in this province and the distribution system. I am not going to get into that, because I am not of the legalistic mind to deal with them properly, but certainly, in a so-called free-enterprise system, one wonders what we mean by "free-enterprise" when we have the monopoly we have in this province of the breweries and distributing system.

Now, the distributing system. One could likely put up a perfect argument that it is the most efficient and most economical and one might not be able to deny it. But being efficient and economical depends on who receives the benefit from a system that is efficient and economical. I do not think the public receives the benefit of the savings of that system.

It has been mentioned by many of the kind of restrictive procedures involved in obtaining a licence and I was surprised to hear the member for London South say that there are so many licences being issued in his area that some of the establishments are going broke or losing money. This is hard to understand. I would have to see some substantiation for that case before I could swallow it, because if you read in the paper, the turnover of an establishment, a liquor establishment, you just wonder what justifies the price.

I have watched in Hamilton, ever since we had the taverns opened many years ago. Some of the establishments of that time were old houses, renovated at the time they were allowed to open up and sell beer as a public house. They had two or three rooms upstairs and added two more to give them the proper number of rooms. But when you see the amount of money that they turn over for, it just floors you. Then you have to add up, when someone says they are not making any money. I know several in the city, $175,000 to turn over the business—never mind the property, that is just the business—and then someone tells you they are not making money.

Last summer we had quite an outcry over the freeing of the pricing and quantity of serving in the draft beer field. Again, I wondered what kind of restrictive trade practices and combine practices regulations we had. I do not know who could initiate it, but immediately that decision was made by the board to free the price of draft beer and the quantity, the hotel owners—both in Toronto and Hamilton, being specific—called a meeting to decide on what price they were going to charge and how much beer they were going to serve in the glass, as a strict reversal of the so-called free-enterprise system.

I understand there was a group in Toronto that applied for an injunction against this taking place and I have not heard what happened to the application, but it must have failed. Nevertheless, it does make you wonder who has control of this kind of a thing.

One of the members in the Liberal Party mentioned his being in favour of the sale of beer in the grocery stores. I do not know, there are very few so-called grocery stores any more.

I am in favour of some relaxation of the system, but I would think, if that came about, you would find that you would have the same thing happen in supermarkets as we have now in the warehousing distribution centres. They would monopolize it. The supermarkets would set up their special stores, and there would not be much difference in going in to the special stores established by the supermarkets that you have at the present time.

I myself would be in favour of a relaxation of this monopoly of taverns and liquor outlets. I have been told that in Hamilton—and I have never had any way of substantiating it—but I have been told more than once that about six people have the controlling interest in all of the liquor outlets in Hamilton—the cocktail lounges and the taverns. That is not good, and I think that we have to start thinking about some changes.

My own personal feeling is an in-between of the English system and the American system of community pubs. I think that the sooner we get away from the type of tavern we have now, the better it is going to be for everybody. In cleanliness—a proper place to drink, and develop a more community drinking style habit.

Surely we should be able to allow two or three people to get together with enough money to establish a good corner-community pub, and see that it is run properly and kept clean, so that the people can get to a glass of beer without jumping in their cars and driving two or three miles, as you have to do in some ridings in Hamilton. If you look at the mountain portion of Hamilton, up until three or four years ago, before they extended the boundaries, there was not one pub on the mountain. You could not get a glass of beer in a tavern on the mountain in the city. Now they have expanded the boundaries where they have now two. In my own riding—an average riding—there are only three taverns. People have to drive as far as four miles from one end of the riding to the other to get a glass of beer.

I think, too, that we could take the emphasis off the sale of liquor in this province by replacing the income we have from the sale by a tax on the advertising. A matching tax per dollar for advertisements to take place of the reduction in revenue in taking emphasis off the sale of liquor to the extent that we have in this province.

I want to pose one question with the Provincial Secretary, and I would like an answer. I believe I am right to say that regarding the bottled beers and the canned beers the price is still set by the board—it is not the free-price as we have in the draught beer—and we sell 24 bottles for $4.79 with 50 cents rebate on the bottles which brings the net cost to $4.29 for your beer.

Now we have beer in cans—and I cannot understand why we have to pay $5.20 for the same amount of beer because it is in cans. People do not have the problem of taking them back, but they have to pay the difference of $4.29 and $5.20 for 24 bottles of canned beer. I would like to know the reason for the price set on canned beer. I think if it was equalized it would do something in all areas.

I understand the glass factories that make the bottles are going full blast—they are expanding. I have talked to employees and they say that the making of beer bottles is a small part of their production now. They are not too worried about it. But we are worried about the tin-plate production in this country.

We have not reached the kind of a market yet that we can use with all our production capacity, and I think that we could increase the sale of beer in cans if we equalized the price. I would ask the Minister to just comment on this question.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Halton East has the floor.

Mr. J. W. Snow (Halton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks I would like to make this evening when the House is engaged in a discussion into the operation of the LCBO and the liquor licence board. My main remark is, one place that I feel we have an inequality of opportunity in Ontario, and this is in liquor licensing.

In my riding we have four branches of the Royal Canadian legion, and each one of these branches has a large investment in real estate and equipment. All have new modern facilities, including their club rooms, dining rooms, banquet halls and so on. Each of these branches has a large membership of men who fought for the freedom that this country enjoys, and yet this organization cannot enjoy the privilege of having a drink in their establishment, although golf clubs, curling clubs and many other organizations are able to have liquor licences for their members.

I have no real criticism with the liquor licence board, I believe they are working within the statutes of the province of Ontario as set out by this legislation, but I do feel in this case that perhaps the time has come when consideration should be given to some change in these statutes whereby branches of the Canadian legion can enjoy the privilege of having bars in their premises. Any legion branch which can come up with the proper facilities and which meets the fire standards and all the rest of the standards set up by the LCBO should, I feel, be able to receive a licence.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, it strikes me that in listening to the several hours of debate that this discourse proceeds upon the basis laid down by the ancient scribe when he said that only the devil can properly rebuke sin, the good do not know about it.

Now I wanted to take the opportunity as is my obligation here, in a very real sense I am paid to complain, and to complain about what I conceive to be injustices to the people that I represent. Tomorrow when the Provincial Secretary answers the question I will have no opportunity to make any comments, but he will tell us tomorrow that there exists a 26-cent differential in the price of beer in northern Ontario and southern Ontario.

I made the mistake of asking the liquor board today, early this morning, what the price was at retail to the customer purchasing 24 bottles of beer. That was a mistake. You never ask the supplier the price. You should ask the purchaser. I knew the figures were wrong, and I telephoned a trencherman in Sudbury.

The liquor board had told me that a case of beer in Sudbury costs $4.72. It does not. It costs $5.05. The liquor board told me that a case of beer in Formosa costs $4.46. It does not. It costs $4.79. Those are the correct figures—$5.05 and $4.79. Now I ask, sir, what is the justification in a government monopoly in discriminating in price on the basis of where the people in this province live?

It is to be noted, of course, in respect of that discrimination that the Premier promised an explanation of it two or two and a half months ago. He informed me, through you, that he had requested an explanation and would let me have it in due course. Well, two or two and a half months have gone and the explanation must be a very involved one.

I can put the principle in the sale of the commodity in very simple terms. If it is a matter of transportation cost that justifies that discrimination then I would say that what ought to be done is that the transportation costs over the whole province ought to be moulded in to the price of the product, and then the product sold at a uniform price whether the purchaser lives in Atikokan or Richmond Hill.

It is to be noted that Cornwall, Windsor and Sudbury area all about 250 miles from Toronto, and the price of beer in Cornwall and Windsor is exactly the same as it is in Toronto. Yet in Sudbury there is a discriminatory price of 29 cents a case paid.

I would like to hear from the Provincial Secretary what representations in respect to this injustice have been made to him by the Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Brunelle) and the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart). Or am I the only representative of northern Ontario who draws these wrongs to the attention of the House?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: I am not encompassing the merchants of Threadneedle Street in this, but they got in on the fringes, and I do not recall having ever heard a bark from them about this. But I say that the whole problem—and I raised it when beer was flowing freely through the province and could be had everywhere—is etched in even more severe lines during the current drought when we have only two breweries, Dorans, with several branches in northern Ontario, one in Timmins, one in Sudbury and one at the Lakehead, and the Formosa Spring brewery, which I think is a single unitary enterprise at the village of Formosa.

Those were the only oases in the whole province making some effort to assuage the drought in their immediate areas. I am told that people from Toronto drive up to Formosa and avail themselves of the limited supply. I would ask, sir, where is the justice that the results of that journey can avail the product at $4.79 a case, but a drive from Sturgeon Falls into Sudbury—if you are fortunate enough to get a case of beer—means you pay a premium of 26 cents a case more?

On the other hand, in the liquor side we see total consistency. Indeed the Provincial Secretary, when I asked this question much earlier in the session, referred to a section of The Liquor Control Act which says that the price of whisky, or spirits, shall be uniform throughout the province.

Well, if that is a justifiable posture to take, then surely it is just as sound for the fellow "spiritual" beverage, beer which, drank in quantities, can produce the same result as the imbibing of whisky. Now, I hope that having pointed to this several times, that government policy will be reviewed in respect of this. The necessary step should be taken to make the price uniform, no matter where it is purchased. I very deeply resent, as do most of my fellow citizens north of the French River resent, being discriminated against, as citizens of the province, on the basis of where you live. That is wrong, and it is wrong in respect of a government monopoly.

One could expect that to be the result of the activities of private enterprise, but it is unforgiveable when it is an operation involving the sale of a product that is under the complete control of the Province of Ontario. If you have any doubts as to the completeness of this control, it is so complete that several years ago, when the federal government was so unwise as to lay a charge against Canadian Breweries, and after months of testimony before Chief Justice McRuer, the charge was dismissed against them—the charge being one of operating a combine—on the simple grounds that none of the breweries in the province fixed the prices. The defendants successfully pleaded, and their argument was accepted, that the price is fixed by the government whose decision in that regard is completely final, and there is no flexibility in pricing in the brewing industry at all.

Well, the argument then must lead to its obvious conclusion and the government must put a surcease to this form of discrimination, and make this product available throughout the province at the same price. I hope that my words will have some effect.

There is one other matter that I wished to bring to your attention, and that is to say, sir, that it is clear to me that the government, being in the liquor business in a big way, cannot be in this business of such monumental proportion, in the sale of a product and, at the same time, be for temperance. The two positions are too inconsistent to be adopted by the same posture at the same time.

Now, in respect of temperance, let me interpolate this. When the epitaph of John Diefenbaker is finally written, one of the things that will be remembered about him is that he tried to do something to make the tea party fashionable.

You will recall that when he adorned the office of Prime Minister of Canada, one of the customs that he put on the office was the serving of tea and coffee instead of spirits. Of course, that was a great break with tradition because, it is true to say and you know it, Mr. Speaker, in our society the culture syndrome is very much related to the serving of alcoholic beverages. In our sociology and mixing of people, alcohol has a place of preeminence that is far and beyond the importance that ought to be attributed to it.

Well, I will say this, in respect of the older generation, and the many people who show the very deleterious and degrading effects of the excessive consumption of alcohol, perhaps we have to admit that, in respect to them, we have failed, and we accept our failure. But, as the leader of the Opposition says, that with each new generation, there is hope and prospect for change. It is with that generation that we ought to be exhibiting our tremendous effort, to try to bring about some change in that cultural syndrome of the acceptance, and sophistication and prestige of alcohol.

I have said before—to give an illustration—that the problem of impaired driving, to take one important manifestation that causes a tremendous amount of suffering and pain for so many people, will never be broken until it becomes socially unacceptable conduct. Until the impaired driver is met with the same social response as the person who breaks and enters, or indecently assaults or various other crimes that are socially abhorred, he will never disappear.

This impaired driver, in many sectors of society, is treated with acceptance. And, of course, a great many people, in viewing his misfortune in the passage through the court, the conviction and loss of licence, sit there and think: "There, but for the grace of God, go I." It has not drawn to itself the social stigmata that any breach of the criminal code—I say, sir, as one lawyer to another—ought to draw from a society that like to think of itself as, and indeed is, generally law abiding.

Now the other thing, Mr. Speaker, you have heard me say this before, but I firmly believe that it canot be emphasized too much, that this government, which I say cannot be for temperance, ought to have a better regard for the victim of the sale of its product. I, too, use the word hypocrisy, and I think it a quite legitimate one. There is something very dichotomously paradoxical about a government that engages in the wholesale sale of spirituous beverage, makes a tremendous profit —something approaching $150 million a year, $1 out of $12 of the revenues of the province —and then on the other hand, pursues the person who drinks it to excess, and harries that person before the magistrate and into the jails.

I hope next year, Mr. Speaker, that so much having been said about this—and I put the figures on the record to show the number of people who are convicted in this province of intoxication—I hope that next year, perhaps, the blazing light of progress will dawn, and this province will take some step to eliminate this revolving door of the magistrate's court where the drunk is pursued into the court and punishment is inflicted upon a man who is in fact sick; and if he is unable to pay the fine, he is carried away to a place of incarceration.

I could not do better, and I want to put on the records—somebody outside the province may follow this debate, and you would be surprised the number of people that read Hansard judging from the mail that I get—I want to read into the record, this article of Professor J. D. Morton, a man of high reputation, a professor of law at Osgoode Hall and a very thoughtful person in matters of law. Indeed, his interests go beyond that, into the field of sociology and the workings of our society, and I am going to read this article into the records without stopping. It was published in the Globe and Mail. I am sorry I have not got the date but it was fairly recently. It is entitled "Law and Drunks":

> A few days ago the Globe and Mail printed a transcript of a part of the day's proceedings in a Toronto magistrate's court. The message was clear. Here we had yet another example of reactionary behaviour on the part of a magistrate—in this case the refusal of Magistrate S. Tupper Bigelow, Q.C., to allow those sentenced for drunkenness time to pay a fine in lieu of going to jail.
> Questions have been asked in the Ontario Legislature and Doctor Morton Shulman, NDP, High Park, is reported to have asked whether Attorney General, Arthur Wishart, proposed to have the magistrate removed apparently because of a remark attributed to the magistrate: "I do not give time to pay on any offence under The Liquor Control Act."

Lest there be others so ill-informed as to put the blame on the magistrate for the foolishness of the Ontario Legislature, the philosophy of The Liquor Control Act should be briefly considered. Despite half-hearted attempts to change the Act it is still punitive in philosophy and apparently rests on the basis that those likely to get drunk in a public place can be frightened out of such behaviour.

The threat lies in the risk of fine or imprisonment—a notoriously ineffective threat when directed against those who do not fear the immediate unpleasant consequences of drunkenness. When Magistrate Bigelow sent the convicted men to jail he was acting on the only possible interpretation of the spirit of the legislation, to give time to pay a small fine would greatly diminish the punitive force of a fine. The only point of a $10 fine for a drunk is to take his last $10. The legislation is cruel and absurd and should be amended without further delay.

Tentative movements for reform have been directed to the substitution of detoxification centres for jails. To a drunk, a jail is a jail. A drunk does not want to be detoxified. He wants to be retoxified. The only point in interfering with drunks who are not disorderly is to protect the public from immediate offence and to secure the drunk from danger. This is accomplished by police action. The police arrest drunks and the function of the magistrate's court should properly be to validate such arrests.

No one should be arrested without an opportunity to question or complain to a judicial officer at the earliest reasonable time. This does not mean that he should be fined where there would be a few more distasteful sources of revenue nor that he should be sent to jail. Jail is said to have a revolving door policy for drunks. Why not put the revolving door on the magistrate's court, leaving chronic drunkenness, like mental disorder, to be dealt with by social agencies other than the criminal process?

The Liquor Control Act should be amended to provide that upon conviction for drunkenness in a public place the magistrate, whether it be the first or 100th offence, shall discharge the accused without imposing any penalty or making any order. Police interference with drunks would be justified and public places would be kept decent and safe without this ritualistic infliction of needless punishment.

Now it is strange to say, I referred to the Minister of Lands and Forests and his position in the Cabinet. And in the absence of any protest about the other matter that I raised—on the contrary when one points to the words of the Minister of Correctional Services, we have a Cabinet Minister who will stand in the House and will say that he in effect agrees with the sentiment of Professor Morton. Indeed, he has told me across the floor of the House, it is in the record, that he agrees with the propositions that I make about this needless, senseless, ridiculous system of hailing drunks into court.

Now both sit in the Cabinet. Who better can be the champion of some change of approach than the Minister of Correctional Services? He is given responsibility for the care and custody of these 56,000 people convicted—that portion of the 56,000 who were convicted in 1966 in Ontario, who come under his purview. One can hope and pray that the Minister of Correctional Services will have the necessary influence on his Cabinet colleagues and we can see some change.

It ought to be added, to see this thing in its total picture, that the arresting of drunks is highly discriminatory. It is only the poor drunks who are hailed into magistrate's court. The police only go to the areas of the city, town or village where people of lower incomes congregate. I have said, and no one has ever challenged it, that if the police wanted to station themselves outside the best golf clubs and other places of expensive retreat, they could get the high class drunk. There would be no problem with them, of course, in giving them time to pay—they can fork out the money in cash. But that is not the policy pursued.

I suspect that if a man in a higher economic order is apprehended by a policeman in an intoxicated condition the policeman would exercise his discretion by helping him to his home, might even drive him there. But that is not so when they go down into the areas that suffer from blight, especially when they go down into those areas in northern Ontario and they come on the Indian drunk, he has not got a chance.

He has not got a chance at all. I have seen it with bitter experience. He is immediately picked up and even the Indian women are hailed into the magistrate's court. That is a shameful practice. It is truly shameful and I would like the government to tell me—I think it a valid challenge for information—the dollars and cents cost of processing a drunk through the magistrate's court. I would like to know how much of the policeman's time, the Crown attorney's time and the magistrate's is spent on putting the drunk in a place of incarceration?

I suspect that the total cost of dealing with a drunk is far more than the profit that is derived from the sale of the beverage to that person, when profit is so important to this government.

How important is it? Well, I can rely upon the words of Leslie Frost, which I shall never forget and which he uttered where the present Prime Minister sits. He stood in his place there and he spoke about the elasticity of the curve of supply and demand of the sale of liquor. If I wanted to search I would find those words in Hansard. He said:

> We have to be careful because we are so dependent on the revenue from liquor that we must not raise the price through taxes so high that we would cut back on the demand.

That was a very frank admission by a man accustomed to making frank admissions. In other words, in that sentence he acknowledged the dependence of this government upon the sale of liquor in this province. As I say, one dollar out of 12 of provincial money. Such a government, such a policy, cannot be consistent with temperance. We have to accept that this government will not be for temperance and can never be.

That takes us back to where the very debate began with the leader of the Opposition, that we cannot expect temperance with the older generation, the most that we can hope for is that we change the cultural syndrome and the configurations of liquor in our society so that the next generation does not treat it with the same degree of prestige and sophistication that their elders do.

That really is what the member for Humber and the member for Dovercourt were saying, and they are in a sense strangers to this society—coming from a different cultural background—and they cannot understand why it is that in North America liquor is given such a place of prominence.

It is given that place of prominence nightly on the television and the intent and the purpose of that advertising is nothing less than to make it respectable. To me, the advertising on television is far more interesting than the programmes. I can read my paper when the programme is on but I put it down when the advertising comes on because it is worth more study.

The liquor advertising is especially interesting because I see the same theme run through it—that drinking is respectable; it is the thing to do; you cannot be in the inner group unless you drink; that in order to be with it, avoid being a square, you have to be an imbiber of ethyl alcohol, a potable alcohol. It is hopeless for me to hope, they will change. I am not powerful enough to make them change. I would be guilty of an opiate miasma if I thought they were going to change. They are not going to change because these interests are too powerful.

And they finally brought this liquor board—when the present Minister of Correctional Services was the chairman of it—they brought it into submission. At that time, it got permission to advertise the wares on the television. Well, finally, look at the manifestations of that power that was granted to them.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I must rise on a point of order. It is just the contrary. When I was chairman of the liquor control board of Ontario, I stopped one of the breweries from advertising on a Buffalo station because it was being beamed into this province. And I did not bring in any regulations that would loosen up the television advertising. The hon. member is wrong.

Mr. Sopha: Forgive me. I was wrong. My memory told me it was when he was chairman. It must have been when his successor was chairman. But certainly, it is of recent origin. I point to the sequel, I have not time to argue it. I will leave it in this fashion on the record because the liquor control board of Ontario granted the breweries the privilege of advertising on television.

Vancouver, British Columbia cannot have an NHL franchise. Now how do you like that? But that is true, it is arguable, it is supportable. We cannot have another national hockey league team in Canada because of the direct chain of cause and effect from that privilege granted by the government of this province. I note that there is sort of a willing acceptance of the veracity of that, of the validity of it.

Well, as I say, I cannot change that, cannot hope to change it. But I can plead with the leader of the Opposition that that well-spent money that is granted to the alcoholism and drug addiction research foundation finds its way in the propaganda—used in its best sense—that infiltrates into the schools, into the minds of our young people; so that as they grow up they appreciate that you can live the full life and develop the personality to its utmost potential without dependence upon what can be, and is, a nefarious and a deleterious substance, if improperly used.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I want to say, first of all, that as a member from the southern section of this province, I am not talking from a parochial view, in regard to the remarks that the member for Sudbury made. And I could not concur more on the question of uniformity, in terms of cost of beer in the province of Ontario. I really do think that there should be a uniform price and, as the member points out, let us take the costs right across the province and have one uniform price determined on the basis of the cost. I do not think there should be any discrimination in terms of cost of beer, particularly when it is of such a monopolistic nature in this province, and the price is determined from that point of view. So I could not concur more with his remarks.

But I do want to say, also, that along the lines of the member for Halton East, I understand that the Royal Canadian legion has made a number of presentations to this government. They have presented briefs and, I understand, very recently there was a meeting that did take place. I do not know all the government members that were involved but I know the Provincial Secretary was involved in that meeting, very recently, within the last six weeks I believe. The legion has made representation to this government on the basis of having a liquor licence installed in their buildings. I want to say that, in my opinion, if these buildings conform to The Department of Health standards, then I think they ought to be given a licence to serve liquor.

I have some suspicion, and I would hope it was just a suspicion in this regard, that the hotel operators are opposing the application. I hope that was only a suspicion, but it appears to me that someone with influence on this government is holding up the question of providing a liquor licence into the legion halls in this province.

The member for London South, earlier tonight, pointed out, when someone was speaking on this question, that licences are readily available, that as a matter of fact, some which had licences in London were going out of business, they were so plentiful. This is what the member for London South said. Now, if these licences are so plentiful, why are the legion branches in this province being denied the licence? Why do they have to get a special licence on a Saturday night for their members and their wives? They have to get a special licence to serve liquor on that evening. It is a very temporary licence.

I want to say that maybe I have some conflict of interest here because I am a member of the Royal Canadian legion and have been since the war. I think it is a good organization, where comradeship and fraternalism abound. The organization, over and above the question of providing a social service within the organization, is active in sports, in minor sports particularly. If there is any profit from these things it is ploughed back into a useful activity, as far as the legion branches are concerned across this province. They participate on a full scale basis on track and field events, as many of the members of this House know. I am of the opinion that this government ought to be giving them the consideration that is necessary. You cannot keep talking to them as they appear for your consideration for a licence, you cannot keep saying to them—"Well, we have got it under consideration, we recognize that there is a need for it, and that you should have it."—but then you continue to sit on their applications.

I think the government has considerable influence on the liquor control board of Ontario, and if they wanted to, they could place their influence to provide the necessary licences. I think that this is one of the service clubs in this province that are deserving of their request for a liquor licence through their application, and I would urge upon this government to honour that request and make sure that their organization find themselves in the position that they have the same rights and the same privileges of many other organizations across this province.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, without repeating the substance of my colleague's remarks—

Mr. Speaker: The member for Dufferin-Simcoe had my eye.

Mr. A. W. Downer (Dufferin-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I was going to move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. Downer moves the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow I would like the House committee of the whole to deal with the bills that are there. There will be some second readings.

If any of the bills that are called for second reading are such that you need more time to study them, we will not deal with them. I think they are all pretty simple, and I think most of the members understand the principles involved.

Following that we will deal with the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs. Then we still have to deal with the consideration of the report of the workmen's compensation board of Ontario, that is on the list. We will see how we get along with what I suggested first and that will then be the next order of business called.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Municipal Affairs before we resume the LCBO and WCB?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, JULY 16, 1968

The House met at 10:00 o'clock, a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Later this morning we are to have some guests in the east gallery from Woburn collegiate, who are hosting the Young Voyageur Group from Saskatchewan. This is the exchange of students about which we have all heard so much, and I am sure that when these young people come they will be welcome, and I hope, will enjoy the proceedings, despite the warmth of the chamber.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. Speaker: Last week the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) rising on a point of privilege appealed to Mr. Speaker and to the leader of the government with respect to a certain newspaper report. In company with the member for High Park and the member for Humber (Mr. Ben) I listened to the taped recording of the proceedings of the House on the occasion giving rise to the report. It was quite evident from this recording what actually was said on this occasion.

Yesterday I received a letter from the member for High Park in which he stated that in view of correspondence received by him from the newspaper in question he wished to withdraw his request that the publisher of the newspaper which published the report in question be called before the Bar of the House.

In order, however, that the mistaken view of the member for High Park as to the procedure to be followed in this House under such circumstances may be corrected and as guidance for the members in the future, I wish to clarify such procedure.

The procedure to bring an offender before the Bar of the House is one which has not been used in this Legislature for a very long time. In fact, in the only instance of which I can find record, the offender presented himself before the Bar of the House voluntarily, so that the procedure to force his attendance was not required. However, the procedure for such is as follows:

If the offence complained of is an article published in a newspaper, the member raising the matter stands in his place on a matter of privilege, informs the House through the Speaker of the particulars of his complaint, and either sends it to the table to be read, or else reads it himself before sending it to the table, in which case the reading at the table is usually dispensed with.

He then moves a motion to declare the article a breach of one of the privileges of the House. This motion is debatable and if defeated ends the matter. If, however, the motion is adopted, the mover may then move a second motion to call the offender before the Bar of the House.

It is interesting to note that in the House of Commons in the United Kingdom, for some time past, the second motion is not moved; the House has contented itself with recording by its vote, that a breach of privilege has occurred but has not proceeded to the punitive action of calling the offender before the Bar of the House.

It should be noted that if the member declines to move the first motion, that is declaring the article a breach of privilege, that ends the matter and the House proceeds to the orders of the day without reaching any decision on the alleged offence. Furthermore, such motions must have a seconder and if there is no seconder the matter is dropped.

Now last evening I sensed that perhaps the House had wished to change its view of the afternoon with respect to dress in the House. I would point out that so far as I am concerned the sense or view of the House is that which governs the House both with respect to its rules, and with respect to its procedures. I have taken the liberty, as the members will notice, of placing the gallery attendants in more comfortable wear, and the page boys as far as possible. The House attendants by this afternoon, I hope, will be more comfortable, and also our police who are on duty.

Therefore the members may wish to change their views with respect to the order of dress for the remainder of this session. I think it should be for the remainder of this session so that the matter may be dealt with between sessions along with many other things which we wish to deal with concerning the affairs of this House, and we will then have a free hand to do so.

Therefore, unless someone now wishes to speak to this particular matter, I would be glad by a standing vote to ascertain the views of the members with respect to dress when the Legislature is sitting as a Legislature and not in committee. I do not know whether the leader of the government would wish to speak on this matter.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would simply like to say that I will support the relaxation in dress here. I do not really see much difference between the House sitting in committee and the House sitting as a House as far as dress is concerned. There are certain differences of course in the procedure. And I would say this, too, that if we are to look forward to sitting during the hot weather, which perhaps we and our successors must look forward to doing, then it seems to me that the answer to this whole problem is to change the environment in the chamber. And I can assure the hon. members that I have not any idea how difficult this might be; this is an old building and this is a very large chamber, and I am not a mechanic, I could not tell you. But in any event I can assure the members that between now and the next time that this particular situation might arise, I will ask the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) and his people to see if some arrangements cannot be made so that we would be sufficiently comfortable that the question would not arise. Therefore I will support the relaxation of dress, Mr. Speaker, in this particular method in which you are dealing with the situation.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): I intend to do likewise; I believe that the dress should depend upon the heat and the humidity in the chamber, and not upon the particular order of business.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I said my piece last night. I think common sense, with the prospect of 90 degrees outside and 100-plus inside, would lead us to a full relaxation for at least the rest of this session.

Mr. Speaker: Then perhaps those members who are in favour of the order of dress for the House when sitting as a Legislature, being the same as when sitting in committee —that a jacket is not required—and that the relaxation be for the remainder of this session, would perhaps please rise so that the Clerk of the House may ascertain the views of the members. I do not think you will need to count. I shall not call for the opposite opinion because the overwhelming number of members are in favour. Now, may I again say today what I said last evening, when the matter was raised, that I would hope that for the purpose of a reasonable-appearing chamber during the rest of this session, when we do have the visitors and tourists from other areas here, that members will endeavour to wear a type of shirt that will not make this look like Sunnyside rather than the House of Parliament of the province of Ontario?

On behalf of the Clerk of the House, and the clerks at the table and the Speaker, I would like to have some suggestions as to how the atmosphere for these legal people and the Speaker could likewise be relaxed. But I must say that for the life of us we have not been able to come up with an appropriate dress, though I would welcome a good suggestion.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not permit them to disrobe!

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) asked me yesterday about what we were doing as far as the postal strike was concerned, at least that was the burden of his question.

We have sent out cheques; various cheques that go out from the government. These were dispatched some days ago in anticipation of the strike, although we hoped along with everyone else in the country, that it would not occur. We have made arrangements within the government itself for certain emergency actions so that our own governmental functions would not be disrupted. All departments and commissions of the government has been notified of specific centres along nine designated mail routes throughout the province where the government's interdepartmental correspondence will be delivered and picked up daily by a special courier service.

The mail radiates out of Toronto to and from nine destinations: Windsor, Brantford, Cornwall, Ottawa, Fort Erie, Owen Sound, Sudbury, Timmins and the Lakehead, and there are government offices in as many as eight communities along each of these routes. We will use trucks; we will use cars; we will use our own aircraft. They will be operated primarily by the provincial police, The Department of Highways and The Department of Lands and Forests, and this entire service will be operated by the legislative post office here at Queen's Park.

We have experience in this, because we set up a similar form of organization during a postal strike in July, 1965, and at that time we found we were able to operate for the period of strike without any real interruption in the interdepartmental function of the government.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Trade and Development has the answer to a question previously asked.

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): The question was: "What are the department's plans for the renovation of the building purchased in Kirkland Lake for student housing? Will it be completed and ready for occupancy in time for the 1968-1969 school term?"

The answer: The Ontario student housing corporation was contacted by the superintendent of properties, Mr. W. K. Newell, of the northern college of applied arts and technology, concerning the reconversion of an existing building in Kirkland Lake for a student residence on March 15, 1968.

Representatives of the Ontario student housing corporation met with the president, Mr. O. E. Wallie, and Mr. W. K. Newall, superintendent of properties of the college, in Timmins on April 16, 1968. They were advised that The Department of Public Works had originally purchased this particular structure in Kirkland Lake and that it had been given to the college for use as a possible residence. The present structure would require extensive renovations in order to meet the requirements for federal financing from central mortgage and housing corporation. The corporation suggested that if the cost of renovations were not economically feasible, they would undertake, subject to the approval of The Department of Education, as required by regulations, to provide new student accommodation on the Kirkland Lake campus.

On April 29, 1968 the corporation advised Mr. W. K. Newell in writing of the procedures in obtaining approval from The Department of Education to allow this corporation to enter into negotiations with the northern college of applied arts and technology to undertake, either the renovation of the present structure or, alternatively, the development of new student accommodation on the Kirkland Lake campus.

The corporation, as of this date, has not been advised by the college to proceed with the development of the student accommodation.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart).

Has the chief of police the right to summon a magistrate to his office to discuss a judgment with which he disagrees, as reported in the case of Police Chief Mackie, and Magistrate Renicks, in the Toronto Daily Star of July 13?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: No, Mr. Speaker, the chief of police has no right to summon a magistrate to his office. In the particular case which gave rise to this—I believe I have a copy of it here—it was an invitation, it was not a summons.

Believe me there is a difference, and the word used in the report I have is he was invited. Now if he had refused the invitation, that would be the end of the matter, but in the particular circumstances I am told that there was some misunderstanding. The parties got together and discussed it on a mutual basis, and that was the end of the matter, and such a discussion could not be interpreted as being in any way wrong.

On the other hand, a direct answer to the question is "no."

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Reform Institutions.

I would like to add one word: Will the Minister investigate why only one guard was on cell duty at the Milton county jail when three prisoners beat up a fellow prisoner, as was reported during the trial of these three prisoners?

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Correctional Services, I am pleased to advise the hon. member that—

Mr. Speaker: Might I point out that the bill changing the name of the Minister has not yet been passed? The department is now The Department of Correctional Services, but the executive council amendment bill is still before the House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I am glad to be advised of that, Mr. Speaker. I had better change my letterheads back.

Mr. Speaker, upon receiving this question this morning in my office, I immediately caused an investigation to begin. I will advise the hon. members as soon as we have a report of same.

Mr. Deans: Could I ask a supplementary question?

Would the Minister read the report of the magistrate?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, it is our intention to get a transcript of the evidence.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Windsor West.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Minister of Education and University Affairs.

Has the Minister replied in the affirmative to the request of the St. Clair college faculty association for faculty representation on the college board of governors?

Does the Minister's answer apply to all such requests to faculty representation on the board of governors of any college of applied arts and sciences?

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of University Affairs): Definitely. I have had a request from the faculty association of the college.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I wonder, on a point of order, if you would permit a request—since there was not time for a question to be put at 9 o'clock this morning to somebody in the government, preferably the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond)—for a statement, perhaps later today, on the threatened outbreak of diphtheria in London. The news of the death of the one little girl who was rushed to the hospital, I think, makes this a matter of great public concern.

I was hoping to put this request in the presence of the Minister of Health who has left the House.

Mr. Speaker: I will be glad to see that it is conveyed to the Minister because I am sure that everyone is concerned about the recurrence of an epidemic or a disease which everyone thought was pretty well stamped out in our province. I will be pleased to pass that along to the Minister and suggest that perhaps he might report to the House.

The Provincial Secretary.

Hon. R S. Welch (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I wanted to reply to the question of the hon. member for Sudbury which was posed yesterday in connection with certain pricing of beer. He asked yesterday if I would inform the House what the price is of 24 bottles of beer sold at retail to a member of the public at Sudbury by Doran's Brewery Limited. The answer to this is $5.05; and at the Formosa brewery by the Formosa Springs Brewery Limited which would be $4.79.

His second question had to do with the reasons for the difference and I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that on March 14 I replied to a similar question by the hon. member and on that occasion I had the following to say:

> Mr. Speaker, in answering this question I would like to draw the hon member's attention to section 30, subsection two of The Liquor Control Board Act and advise him that I have been informed by the liquor control board of Ontario that since its inception in 1927, they have provided for the compensation for this additional freight charge to northern Ontario points.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the cost of operation at Doran's in the far northern cities is considerably higher than that of the southern Ontario breweries. I am told it is necessary to purchase their raw materials and containers in southern Ontario and transport the same to their respective plants as outlined.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): May I ask a supplementary question? Does the Minister consider that the circumstances in respect of Cornwall would be exactly the same in respect of Sudbury? Yet the price in Cornwall is the same as Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Doran's?

Mr. Sopha: Presumably. If you bought a case of Doran's in Toronto it would be $4.79.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Is that the case? Can you buy a case of Doran's?

Mr. Sopha: If you order it.

An hon. member: Which case?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Aside from the academic point, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has missed the whole point of the question.

I listened to this debate last evening with respect to the differences in transportation costs. The point is that a case of beer from a southern Ontario brewery being shipped, of course, is beer which is manufactured here in southern Ontario. We are talking about a freight differential with respect to the supplies which Doran's has to obtain in order to manufacture their beer in northern Ontario. So it is not just the cost of transporting the finished product. I would point out to the hon. member that there is also the transportation of the raw materials which have to be acquired before there is a finished product, which, of course, is part of the reason for the differential as I have already explained.

Mr. Sopha: You will be telling us we have no water with which to make beer.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The hon. member for Sudbury has reminded us about that many times in this House.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the permission of the House to revert to the presentation of reports.

I beg leave to present to the House the report of the civil service commission for 1967.

Mr. Speaker: Before we get into the serious business of the House I think I should draw to the attention of the members how dangerous it is for them, if they have a son of legislative-page-age, to bring him down to the House. Earlier this season we ran short of pages and the member for Halton West (Mr. Kerr) brought his son down. He is now on duty. The member for Thunder Bay (Mr. Stokes) did likewise; we ran short of pages yesterday and today we have his son working for us here.

So I just point it out to the members that it is a dangerous practice to bring the young men down here when we are running into the shortage of pages. But I am very grateful to these young men for coming in and helping out at this tail-end of the session when the boys want to be on their holidays.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Before the orders of the day, while I was out answering the telephone I understand the member for York South had posed a question concerning a most unfortunate fatality. A child in the London area died of virulent diphtheria. The child was aged five and was said to have been immunized in Alberta two years ago, but still became ill last Friday. She was admitted to hospital on Sunday and unfortunately died in spite of an emergency surgical procedure which it was hoped would help tide her over the very difficult period of her infection. Since she had been swimming in the pool and many others were exposed to the possibility of the disease they were contacted and have been and will be called in as a precautionary measure and will be given a booster dose of immunizing toxoid.

We find it very difficult to understand why, at this present time, anyone should contract diphtheria at all when a very useful and successful procedure is available for immunization. We try our best to emphasize through educational means the necessity for having every infant immunized as soon after the child is born as is possible. The experience in Ontario has been and continues to be an excellent one indeed, but the fact that one child dies, no matter from where such came, causes us a very great deal of concern.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to table the answers to questions No. 9, 43 and 60. (See appendix, page 5722.)

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Clerk of the House: The 6th order, committee of the whole House, Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

THE SECONDARY SCHOOLS AND BOARDS OF EDUCATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 44, An Act to amend The Secondary Schools and Boards of Education Act.

On section 1:

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Chairman, I have three amendments. I am having copies made available to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) and the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Pitman).

The first is a fairly lengthy amendment, and perhaps if they have their copies, they might follow with me. Actually it relates to section 92. I move that section 92 be amended by adding thereto the following subsection; 10(a), notwithstanding subsection 10, where the equalized residential and farm assessment of the property rateable for separate school purposes in a school division in a territorial district is less than five per cent of the equalized residential and farm assessment of all the rateable property in the school division.

And where equalized farm and residential assessment of the property rateable for public school purposes in a municipality, expressed as a percentage of the total residential and farm assessment of all such property in the school division, differs by 15 or more percentage points from the population of the municipality expressed as a percentage of the total population of all the municipalities comprising the school division, the clerks of the district municipality shall proportion the number of members determined under clause (b) of subsection 6, as nearly as is practicable and in the proportion which the population of the municipality or combined municipalities bears to the total population of all the municipalities comprising the school division. The right of appeal, as provided in subsection 11 shall be based upon population rather than equalized farm and residential assessment, which subsection shall apply mutatis mutandis.

Mr. Chairman, the explanatory note, while it is a very lengthy section, explains the purpose of the amendment. I move that subsection 20 of section 92 be struck out and the following substituted therefor. Where, (a) it is determined under subsection 5, or 19, that the number of members to be elected by the separate school supporters of the county, district or municipality, of the school division exceeds four; or (b) the area of the school division is in excess of 2500 square miles, the county district, or municipality to be represented by each such member shall be determined in accordance with subsection 9, 10, and 11, which subsections apply mutatis mutandis, except that in subsections 10 and 11, equalized farm and residential assessment for the separate school supporters shall be used in the determination.

The third amendment relates to section 98. I move that section 98 be amended by striking out "superintendent" where it occurs in subsections one and two and substituting in each instance "director".

Mr. Chairman: Then shall the motion for the amendments carry?

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could just speak to this first amendment? I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether it is in his mind that at some point in the future there might be some reassessment of the whole question of representation? I know that the Minister is aware that in many areas there has been some concern that in some cases the equalized residential and farm assessment is not an acceptable way of determining the number of representatives on the school board.

Although I do not think that the injustice is as serious as this amendment is trying to correct, in some cases—particularly in view of the fact that there is going to be continuing urbanization in Ontario on the one hand, and at the same time with the increase in the tourist accommodation and summer accommodation across the province—we might very well find the situation as you have beginning in Haliburton county, Victoria-Haliburton, and in Peterborough county where the non-permanent residential assessment distorts the reality, as the minister well knows.

In the area that I represent something like 69 per cent of the population and 72 per cent of the total assessment is represented by less than 50 per cent of the members on the board. I do not want to rehash this question at all, but I would like to have some indication from the Minister as to whether—when these larger units have been in operation for some time—there is a door opened by the particular amendment to reassess the whole basis of representation on the school boards?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that there is anything inherent in this amendment to either close or open a door. I think that it will be determined by our experience. If we find that adjustments need to be made and improvements to be seen to, then we do not need to relate back to the amendment, we will just make them. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Chairman: Shall the motion for the amendments carry.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Is this all under section 1, which is in fact the whole bill?

Mr. Chairman: Section 1.

Mr. Good: Is this the whole bill that you are talking about?

Mr. Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Good: Well, I would like to move an amendment that subsection 99, clause 1, be amended with the deletion of the words from "effective" on the third line, to "thereafter" on the fourth line, and by the addition to subsection (b), of the words "or defined as a school division in its own right." Thus the whole clause of subsection 99, section 1 will read as follows:

"With the approval of the Lieutenant Governor in council, and in accordance with the regulations (a) two or more adjoining school divisions may be combined to form one, and the board of the combined school divisions shall be a divisional board of education and (b) one or more municipalities may be detached from a school division and attached to an adjoining school division or defined as a school division in its own right."

This I think is an important amendment that should be included. It would relieve the Minister of the straight and constringent confines in which he has to move inside the bill and give him the flexibility that could be used at his discretion. In effect it would give all areas of the province equal opportunity immediately, rather than in 1971, to be molded and drafted into the proper kind of school division which would be best suited for the educational needs of that particular area.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise to support this amendment. It is important that in any well-run organization or operation of any type for the chief executive to be given guide lines but not to be tied down by predetermined and perhaps unwise limitations that do not give him the discretions necessary for the achievement of the objective. In this bill we have the objective of equalizing the opportunity for education throughout the province. But the province is very different in character. In some areas the population is scattered and by centralizing and bringing in larger districts, you may not in fact improve the educational standard whatsoever.

As a matter of fact there is a case before the courts in the Parry Sound area in which many of the residents claim that the standard of education has got worse, and yet the taxes have doubled because they have lost many of the advantages of a local interest, and their children's education has not changed. They are still going to the local school under the same conditions but the taxes have doubled.

These predetermined changes that we institute here at Queen's Park have not given them the advantages that they looked for. In cases such as this, the Minister should have the discretion to make the change himself without coming back to this Legislature. It seems to me the mark of any good executive—as this Minister is—to have the strength of character and ability to decide when exceptions and changes in boundary should be made, and not be seeking the strict limitation and hiding behind regulations.

One of the problems of the government today is that we hide behind limitations and we are afraid to make decisions to achieve the end objective ourselves—and so often people complain that their problem is the bureaucracy.

Hon. Mr. Davis: This very amendment means we do it by regulation. That is what is so fictitious.

Mr. Deacon: It seems to me to be very easy for the Minister to agree to a clause change here which gives him the right to—

Hon. Mr. Davis: We still have to do it by regulation.

Mr. Deacon: —divide or to bring together school divisions to achieve the objective and not be afraid of his own Act and his ability to put the objectives of that Act into effect. I strongly urge that this amendment be supported by all members who want to have the objectives of this Act achieved and these frustrating limiting factors not included in the Act as they have been.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, it has been interesting to watch the Minister's reaction even during the presentation of this amendment, since the idea was put before him as strongly as we know how in the standing committee—that in fact it is his responsibility as Minister not only to ask for the power to change the inflexible county boundaries where he sees fit, but that he should be prepared to make these changes not after a two-year wait and not by returning to the Legislature, but simply to ask for in this legislation the flexibility that will permit him to stake out the areas of school jurisdiction which are going to work and to shed the inflexibility that has been built into the bill by the wording of this subsection 99 that is presently being discussed.

Admittedly, during the discussions in committee the Minister has moved to some extent towards building in the kind of flexibility that we on this side feel is necessary if the bill is going to be modern and workable and meet emerging situations. I cannot for the life of me understand the hon. Minister's reasoning if he thinks he is going to convince those across the province who can put strong arguments to him for small but important changes away from the county boundaries by saying, "It is not permitted, the Legislature would not permit me to do this." In other words, he should have the power that would be contained—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nixon: I wonder if—thanks very much—that would be contained in the bill if this amendment were to pass. Now the argument as to whether it is done by the Minister sending a message by passenger pigeon or doing it by regulation is not of great importance; the point is, he does not have to return to the Legislature after a two-year wait to make such reasonable changes as the Minister is aware will be needed in the near future. He wants this flexibility so he can say to those petitioners from across the province: "There is nothing I can do, the Legislature would not give me the power," when in fact it is his responsibility to ask for the power and to wield it in the efforts to get away from the main thing that is wrong with the bill as it is before us now, that is, the inflexibility of the old county boundaries.

I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that while the department, under the Minister, has moved to some considerable extent to decrease the inflexibility—he has taken to himself to put two county groups together—still the Minister does not have the power to take a section from one school division and put it over with another. This, of course, is what we are—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have, right here.

Mr. Nixon: But not to divide one county.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, there is a great distinction.

Mr. Nixon: All right, this is something that should be available to him. It should be available to him. There is not that great a distinction, and I cannot understand why the Minister is not prepared to accept this at this time.

The waiting period of two years is really an unuseable provision. If the change is required this month, or next year or two years from now, it makes no difference. The Minister should have the power to make that change. The amendment has been carefully worded by the hon. member for Waterloo North and I believe it is one that the House should consider. I would ask that the Minister consider it. It would give him the kind of bill that would make a much more workable reform in the education system.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is essentially the same amendment which the New Democratic Party placed before the committee.

We, too, felt that in certain cases it would be wise to give the Minister the power to amend the legislation or, at least, to create two or more school divisions within a single county unit, where educational needs indicated this would be an advantage. We have, I think, spoken against the inflexibility of this piece of legislation in this particular area.

I think the whole thing is, that, really, the Minister of Education is being, you might say, the forward thrust of the government's decision, or lack of decision, in relation to the whole question of regional government. I think the Minister has to hold on to the county, not because it is educationally viable, but because the government has not decided what they want to do about regional government and so, therefore, we will hang on to the county as the building block; we cannot allow the educational department to divide the county because this would undermine the viability of this unit as a governmental base.

It seems to me that this is unfortunate. First, because I think this is not a particularly useful gauge of effectiveness at the regional government level, but most important of all, because I think that educational needs are being placed second to some kind of vague decision which the government has made in relation to the governmental structure in other areas, in the future.

I think that the Minister must agree that there are two or three counties in this province where, certainly, the educational advantages would not be increased by including the entire county in the jurisdiction; because I think there are too many students; I think it does not give proper representation; it does not provide the feeling of oneness that you need, I think, in an educational jurisdiction where the people feel that they are a part of a single unit which has meaning for them.

As I have mentioned on other occasions, the Hall-Dennis report suggests that once you get over 20,000 students, you are not really gaining anything by having a larger unit. Indeed, you start to lose effectiveness because of the feeling of disorientation on the part of those people who are living in the area.

Now, I know what the Minister's problem is, that if we do go lower than the county for representation, it will open the door and all kinds of counties coming and saying, "We must have the opportunity to divide this city from that particular part of the county." But I think all of us in this Legislature can say that the game is up and the schools boards across the province realize the game is up. In fact, I stand in utter awe of this government and particularly this Minister's planning. Nothing could have been more beautifully done, I hate to use the term "Machiavellian" because that has a kind of connotation I do not want to include—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Pitman: But the timing was really, I think, unique. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) brings it down in November and all hell breaks loose, Mr. Chairman. You expected to see thousands of school board officials here, ready to burn the Parliament buildings down—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, the leader of the Opposition was trying to get them—

Mr. Pitman: I will come to that, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): That is the difference between good government and chaos.

Mr. Pitman: But the point is, the Minister in his inimitable way, used the old Roman precept of "divide and rule," and one by one, the boards came down, and they sat in his office, and the Minister smoked at them, and convinced them that this was really the best thing—

Mr. Nixon: Smoked at them?

Mr. Pitman: Well, this is Stephen Leacock's phrase. You know, this is the highest level of education—

Mr. Nixon: Those cigars are going to knock him out.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It was not pot.

Mr. Pitman: So week by week the opposition began to soften, and to dissipate, so when the leader of the Opposition sent out all his invitations to all the 1,700 school boards to come to the committee on education, we only received a handful of them. But I must say that the sieve of the Minister did provide us with the few who really had a very strong case.

Now, this is why I return to this piece of legislation, this amendment. I do think that the Minister is, in a sense, being conned by the entire government into accepting the county unit, and I suggest that in the debates that will emerge, I am sure, under The Department of Municipal Affairs—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member does not know the Minister of Education.

Mr. Pitman: Well I am sure that the member does not know the Minister of Education as well as the Minister of Correctional Services.

However, to be serious about this, I think that we in this group must support this amendment. I think that it would provide essentially better education for those counties where the number of students, and where the size of the jurisdiction, and where educational necessities demand that there should be some division within a county unit.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I do not want to repeat any of the substance of this amendment, but there is just one aspect of it that rather puzzles me. The Prime Minister made a point in his initial announcement, last fall, of saying that the choice of a county for the larger school administrative unit did not mean that counties were going to be the ultimate units for regional government. I repeat, he took the initiative to counter the argument that we were strait-jacketing ourselves into counties for regional government purposes. Now, it would seem to me that if the government really is not intending to make the counties become a strait-jacket and the centre for regional government in the future, that the Minister would welcome a kind of flexibility, as in this amendment, to cope with at least a few instances where there is pretty solid evidence that the county is not a desirable unit. And yet, the Minister manifested, this morning, an edginess, a touchiness, almost a jitteriness, with regard to the presentation of the case on this side of the House. He would enjoy some flexibility—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Never!

Mr. MacDonald: He is manifesting that edginess again Mr. Chairman, proving my point.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do you call that edginess?

Mr. MacDonald: No, it is jitteriness. Edginess goes only so far. But when the Minister, who normally is calm, bounces up and down in his seat in the fashion he has that is jitteriness, not just edginess.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have not been up yet, except to move the amendments.

Mr. MacDonald: My point is simply that if the government is not committed to counties as the boundaries for regional government, I would think the Minister would welcome this flexibility, yet he has shunned it. He has refused to accept it, and he has been interjecting to try to undercut the case that the Opposition is presenting.

Mr. Chairman: Section 1 carried. The member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Yes, I am a little bit puzzled, as is the leader of the New Democratic Party.

So many well-regulated and well-constructed boards of education have come before the committee and have informed this Minister—because he was there—that they are doing a very good job with the boards that they have, and that, in many counties of the province, two boards within that county would do an excellent job for you. This has been brought very forcibly to you by people who are doing a good job with primary and secondary education. And yet the flexibility that we speak of is not there.

I think, without a doubt, that this Minister would like that flexibility. He is carrying the ball for someone, and I am sure it must be the Cabinet. You have decided on county boundaries. You are not going to go beyond, and you must stay within, and you cannot split the counties and something is radically wrong.

You were informed on many occasions by boards of education, that are doing an excellent job for us in this province, that this can be done and that counties ought to be split. There are municipalities such as Port Colborne, for instance. The city is going to have only one individual on the board of education. This is unbelievable. They ought to have representation. We always talk about representation at the grass roots and there it was, and you are taking it from them.

You say you will try it for a couple of years. This is quite a gimmick this government has been using this last couple of sessions, I have noticed: "Well, let us try it for a while; we will pass it now and see what happens and then we will change it." That is par for the course. I have heard it so often that I began to believe that maybe this is the proper approach.

But, where the proof of the pudding is in the eating, it is working well and the county ought to be split. You have it right close to Toronto here, and you have it in the peninsula. I believe that that section ought to be amended to allow two boards to operate in each county—not each county, but counties where it is working now. You are disrupting a good organization. You did it before—you took 1,600 boards of education, and you brought it into bigger groups and I thought that was good. But the pendulum has swung just a little too far. You have taken the wrong step. You are disrupting organizations that are doing a good job and this bill ought not to pass.

Mr. Chairman, I thought I would give you that, for what it is worth on a hot day. I know that no matter what we say in this House this day, nothing will be changed. It never is with this Minister, whether it be him or his Cabinet, they are both wrong in this instance.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, speaking again to this amendment, without rehashing the whole debate that we have had for some weeks, I should indicate to the member for Niagara Falls that, while I understand his point of view as it is reflected by some boards within his area, I might point out to him that there is no consensus, and the same applies to the member for Waterloo.

He says that this is desirable in his particular area, isolating once again one of the counties. And I point out to him—perhaps it is just as well the member for Kitchener is not here, or some of those who have conflicting points of view. Because, Mr. Chairman, once again, there have been representations made from communities within Waterloo county suggesting that the one board is the answer.

This also applies, with great respect, to the great area to the north of Metro Toronto, where, once again there is no consensus as to whether there should be one or two boards. I think it is simply a matter of this. I have no objection—

Mr. Nixon: You should be able to make changes.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, with great respect, I have listened to the leader of the Opposition for years—

Mr. Nixon: —and your interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I am not interjecting. The interjections, I enjoy them.

But I have listened for years to the position he has taken here, and the desirability of involving the Legislature in educational decisions, and the education committee, that the Minister does not take the members of the Opposition into his confidence in dealing with these major educational problems.

Here is one that, perhaps, we will have to alter two or three years from now. I am saying that surely this is really accepting the wishes of the leader of the Opposition that we do involve the members of this House in basic decisions of this kind. The member for—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —York Centre. No, it is true. It is actually correct; read Hansard. I reread the statements made by the leader of the Opposition, the member for York South, and now the member for Peterborough. I reread them regularly to see just how consistent their approach is from year to year. I do not want to get into it today, but, quite frankly, it is not always consistent.

Mr. Nixon: You are misleading the House.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And the member for York Centre is concerned about the decision-making process. For him to think that I am the chief executive officer—I am not sure that this is really appropriate terminology for the Minister, but I am very flattered that he has this confidence.

But I should point out to him that this amendment means that, if it is not done in legislation, it is done by regulation. And, with great respect, the mechanics are really quite comparable and the problems are still the same. So that I say, with respect to him, that I know his point of view about his problems in his own area, and I must say that once again it is not unanimous—that we can deal with the situations if they arise.

I think the point is very simply this. I say this to the member for Peterborough—this is not related to regional government per se. We have said—I have said—the county boundaries are not in themselves perfection. This we know. But I listened to the debate on second reading; I listened to the discussion in the education committee; and, with great respect, while there was some discussion on this amendment to substantiate this, on the desirability of dividing a county, it was always on the basis of using the total county with the division within it, once again using the county boundary. There has been no constructive suggestion as to how we depart from that at this stage of the development of educational jurisdictions. I have not heard it.

This amendment gives the right to detach, which is in here now. It gives the right to divide a county, still using county boundaries. So I say, with respect, to the member for Peterborough, that really he is creating something of a fiction when he tries to relate this legislation to what may, or may not, happen in the field of municipal reorganization. I do not think he can predetermine—I cannot. But in the field of education, we think this is a good operating base.

I am delighted with the confidence expressed by the member for Waterloo in this amendment. I would only point out to him —and I make this point particularly to the member for Peterborough—there has been a very specific desire on the part of the trustee organizations that we have this period of two years to gain experience, to have a degree of stability, to see just what the problems are. And they have made this request, that there be no changes or alterations for this two-year period of time. It was not my time limitation, it was their suggestion and I think, Mr. Chairman, knowing what is going to happen in the next few months, it is a very wise suggestion to make. This reorganization is not going to be easy and I think this will give us some time to find by experience what other changes may be necessary.

I appreciate once again, Mr. Chairman, the great confidence in the members of the Opposition, but I think that the way the bill stands now is a more practical and effective way of dealing with it. And I would say that, while we appreciate the amendment, I really cannot be persuaded to support it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. Section 1 occupies, I believe, 29 pages of the bill. There is one other point that I wanted to raise, and I am afraid that you might rule, just in case this amendment does not succeed, that the question would be out of order. I wonder if you would advise me on that.

Mr. Chairman: Is the leader of the Opposition referring to another subsection?

Mr. Nixon: It is actually subsection 25, on page 24. It will be a brief question. Section 1 is the whole thing.

Mr. Chairman: Under normal circumstances we do not have a bill of this type where there are 30-odd pages and only one section.

Mr. Pitman: On that point of order, would it be possible to go through the subsections one by one?

I think this bill is of such importance, and I think that this amendment would go through areas which had nothing to do with this particular amendment. It would really make it impossible for us to make any comment or indulge in any debate on a number of these subsections, which are extremely important.

Mr. Chairman: I think probably this could be done, although I would want the concurrence of the committee, that we deal with section 1 subsection by subsection. Do we have that concurrence?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want full discussion, but I should point out that this bill—and the member for Peterborough was there, a very faithful attender—was discussed, I think, in very substantial detail at the education committee. These matters were discussed point by point. And, as I recall, with the exception of the amendment which was moved by the member for Peterborough at the committee and one or two others, these sections all passed unanimously within the committee except for these three points.

I have no objection, but I am just wondering what useful purpose can be served, other than an opportunity for some of us to say a few more words on this subject.

Mr. Chairman: In consideration of the remarks of the Minister, I wonder if it would be agreeable to consider the amendment that the leader of the Opposition has to the other subsection before we put this—are they just comments?

Mr. Nixon: Just questions.

Mr. Chairman: Well I see no reason why the leader of the Opposition cannot direct the questions before we put this amendment before us.

Mr. Nixon: Well, very briefly, in subsection 25 it sets the day and hour of the polling for the new boards. There has been a continuing complaint from some areas that this school election will not coincide with the municipal election, and I guess it is impossible to make them jibe. Yet the hon. Minister indicated at the committee in the last meeting that he would have his officials undertake some sort of a research to see if changes in this bill and its companion bill dealing with separate schools—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, as I recall my undertaking at the education committee, I indicated to the representatives from the London separate school board that we would discuss with them the problem of elections which we did. We came up, and I think they recognize this, with the answer, because it involves more than the city of London; it involves several municipalities around.

It is impossible to reconcile the election dates and this is the difficulty. We recognize this. We know there are some complaints, but we have canvassed this very thoroughly over the past number of months and we have selected the dates where the bulk of the municipalities—I think some 60 plus per cent—have selected the first Monday in December as their election date; and I think for the first year, too, there is just no other easy answer to it, quite frankly. I cannot help the Opposition any further.

Mr. Nixon: The main complaint really had to do with Hamilton, where the date for the election, I understand, would perhaps end up on certain years three days away from the date of the election for the school board, and this seemed to be a rather awkward situation indeed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No. It could not be in Hamilton because it is a defined city.

Mr. Nixon: It could not, you say?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I do not think that is where the complaint is coming from.

Mr. Pitman: There are one or two questions that do relate to this section, if we are taking the entire section from 81 to 100.

The Minister will remember at the committee that I posed the problem of the transfer review in this piece of legislation, viewing this as the appropriate place to protect teachers who would be mainly concerned with enlarging units and the possibility that their future might be changed as a result of these large units.

At that time, as the Minister remembers, I withdrew the amendment, but I wondered if this might be the appropriate place to ask whether he has received any reply from the communication which he made to the Ontario teachers federation and to the trustees in relation to future meetings which might take place on this matter—which is bothering a number of the teachers across the province.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I believe the communications went out the latter part of last week or perhaps the beginning of this week, and I do not think there has been any reply yet.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask on one or two other areas at the end. I think it was section 97. I think on that section I posed an amendment which was later withdrawn as well, in relation to the continuing role which teachers might play. I think one of the most interesting aspects of this development that has taken place, particularly over the last few months, is the co-operation which the ISOC committees have received from the Ontario teachers federation.

As the Minister knows, the Ontario teachers federation has created sub-committees dealing with all the areas which the Minister had suggested the ISOC committees should concern themselves with, and have, I think, begun a dialogue of some real value. It was at the education committee that I suggested that possibly in this legislation there might be provision for a continuing dialogue. I also made the suggestion that an advisory committee which would include teachers, administrators and those of the board might be included in this legislation which would allow this continuing effort to create discussion between trustees and teachers. This is particularly necessary in the larger units where, as I mentioned before, you could very well have a feeling on the part of both teachers and parents and trustees that they really cannot get at what are the major issues before the divisional board.

I think, particularly in view of the Hall-Dennis report there might be a place for these committees to be erected at the school level. But I am wondering if the Minister has considered this matter of providing within this legislation for this kind of effect as a result of these larger units, or whether he would consider this perhaps as an appropriate amendment to The Schools Administration Act for the entire province rather than just for those that are dealt with by this legislation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, as I recall my views at the committee with respect to the latter—and I repeat them here again today—if it is wise to legislate something like this, and I question whether it is wise, but if it is it should be done in The Schools Administration Act; because if it is logical in the divisional court areas, it is also logical in those areas that are not covered under this legislation. My own view is, and I have discussed this with the OTF and I think, as I understand their discussions with me, they are not pressing it.

It is something, I think, that for the first year or two at least should be done by mutual desire on the part of the trustees and the teachers to set up some form of dialogue between the groups concerned. I personally have said to the trustees, and I shall be repeating this: I think there is great validity in involving the teachers in broad policy discussion, certainly as it relates to academic development, and I think the majority of trustees share this point of view; but I think it is premature to try to formalize any such arrangement at this point in this particular bill.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Good's motion will please say "aye."

Mr. Pitman: May I just ask one more question on this—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Of course.

Mr. Pitman: —which I think is somewhat disconcerting me? Over the past number of weeks I have received some indication that at least some educational places are becoming concerned about the old question of the appointment of the superintendent of education becoming now the director of education.

This is in section 97 on page 25, and I think that at the committee I suggested that possibly in that section it might be added that they should be appointed after there has been an advertisement across the province. It should not necessarily be from appointment within because I think that the directors of these larger units will perhaps be the key persons in the kind of educational system that we will find in each academy. Now I am sorry, I am not sure exactly what happened with that.

Mr. Chairman: Is the member speaking to the subsection appearing on page 28?

Mr. Pitman: 971.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, as I recall once again the discussion on this point, it was felt, that if such an amendment or policy was appropriate, it should once again be done in The Schools Administration Act, not in Bill 44, because once again it relates to the total educational community.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Good's motion will please say "aye."

Those opposed will please say "nay".

In my opinion the "nays" have it.

Call in the members.

Mr. Chairman: Those in favour of Mr. Good's motion will please rise.

Those opposed to Mr. Good's motion will please rise.

Clerk of the House: Mr. Chairman, the "ayes" are 29; and the "nays" 45.

Mr. Chairman: I declare the motion lost, and section 1 will carry.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the Minister on the day that this bill becomes the law of the land how it is expected that the International Nickel Company will pay its share of school taxes under this bill?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I do not know that this question is in order and I am not sure I can give an answer. I do not propose to get into this debate because we had some discussion of this issue, on second reading as I recall.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, indeed, and subsequent to that I wrote to both the Minister of Education and the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough). This may not be in order but it is a matter of great anxiety in the city of Sudbury, and they will expect a report from someone on how that company is to pay its fair share of the school taxes under the present legislation.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I think the answer may be provided at some other point than in dealing with this bill in committee.

Mr. Sopha: I can see that I am not going to get an answer.

Mr. Chairman: Shall section 2 form part of the bill? The member is out of order.

On section 6:

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on section 6 which is really the very large section parallel to Bill 44 which was just carried. I should say to the Minister that the complaint I got about the date of the election came from a person associated with separate school boards. My informant indicated that the Hamilton area, where the board moves out into Wentworth county, does not have the same area of jurisdiction. Since there are not the designated cities in the same manner as Bill 44, there would be serious lack of uniformity for election dates. The Minister said previously, in committee I believe, that in most jurisdictions the elections would fall on the same day, twice in every six years. I just forget the way the permutations worked out but I believe in the case of Hamilton, the elections will be held frequently in the same year, but only three days apart. If we are concerned with having interest in an election for the separate school board under this particular bill, then I think we should do what we can to have the election fall on the same day so that the general community interest in the democratic process will reveal itself in concern for the separate school election. I do not know whether the Minister is aware of the problem, but I would welcome his comments.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, the question of the situation in Hamilton has not been specifically brought to my attention, but it was in London—which is a comparable situation—in Middlesex, where the city of London and Middlesex are probably going to be combined, you have different days for election in the areas surrounding the city. It does not apply to Bill 44 because they are both designated cities, and under this bill, of course, they are not. It is a problem that, quite frankly, I do not have the answer to at this moment. All I can say is that we recognize some of the difficulties in it, and perhaps can find some solution. But we do not see any for this current year, and we are anxious, as the separate schools are, to move ahead with the legislation so that the elections will be held this fall.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Under section 76, in subsections 2, 5 and 6; and section 77 in subsections 2, 3 and 4; and section 79, subsections 1, 2 and 3. The suggestion is that it is quite unnecessary to put the word "separate" in the section describing the schools because they would like to be known as Roman Catholic school boards and not separate school boards, as a Roman Catholic school board is a separate school board under The Separate Schools Act. They feel that they would like to read this or have this word "separate" deleted. Would the Minister give his views on this matter? I have had objections from separate school boards saying that they are Roman Catholic school boards, and as such, they are under The Separate School Boards Act.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I am not in a position to give a qualified legal opinion on the necessity of having the term in there, and I think that we will just look at it very hurriedly, that there must be this reference to the separate school as it relates to The Separate Schools Act, which gives this system, shall we say, its legal authority in this province. We have not had any specific representations, although the question of terminology has been mentioned in discussions from time to time. I should point out that this legislation was reviewed very carefully by the separate school trustees' organization for the province of Ontario, and to the best of my knowledge they did not raise this objection. I think that probably they recognized that this is necessary in the legislation.

Mr. Deacon: I would thank the Minister, Mr. Chairman, for these comments. These did come from three different separate school bodies to me, and I am sorry that they did not reflect their views to the Minister earlier. In connection with the superintendent of separate schools under section 87, one and two, this section makes it mandatory here, that the superintendent of separate schools be the chief education officer and chief executive officer of the board. The note in Bill 44 is not mandatory, but permissive. What is the reason for this difference?

Hon. Mr. Davis: We discussed this very briefly with the education committee and it is mandatory, and under The Schools Administration Act. The principles will be exactly the same in the public school system as in the separate school system.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: The reason I bring this up is that the school boards are concerned that having it mandatory to appoint the education officer as chief education officer means that they are not necessarily getting the better of the two types available to be the chief executive officer. They feel in some circumstances, particularly at this time when there has been no history or experience of having a superintendent of separate schools, that they have not got this background of experience. In some cases, a business administrator might be the better person for the role. In any event, they feel that the business of selection would be more flexible and they would be more able to get the best man for chief executive officer. That is why I have had some representation that this be permissive and not mandatory.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, once again, this was discussed at the education committee and the trustees council made representation to this on the basis of making it permissive. This was dealing with The Schools Administration Act, and is exactly the same principle. I think it was pointed out then, and expressed by several members of the committee—not all supporters of this government—that this was perhaps the only ultimate solution. This being the case, let us move ahead with it. I think that it is contained in the recommendations of the Hall-Dennis report, which goes even a step further in recommending that they be the chief executive officer and the secretary-treasurer of the board.

We have not gone that far, and thus have left it open for them to appoint a secretary-treasurer who need not be the chief executive officer of the board. The trustees council also made representation to the education committee that the way to resolve this in the future is to formulate an administrative council, where you will get your business administrators and academics preparing joint recommendations to the board, for the policy decisions. We have indicated to the trustees council that we are quite prepared to study this and respond to it as far as future legislation is concerned. This was raised and, as I recall the discussion of that committee, I do not think there were any people who did not support the amendments to The Schools Administration Act, which are really on all fours with this.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I would concur with the hon. Minister. I think that almost everyone would agree that the ultimate solution is the one that is mandatory here. But the point raised was that perhaps in the interim it might be wiser to be permissive and to provide time for adjustment.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East. Is this on the same point?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Not on the same point.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough, I believe, wanted to speak on the same thing. As long as the member for Hamilton East is on the same point, it is all right.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, all I wanted to do was to indicate the feeling of this group that we wish to keep this matter mandatory. It is desperately important that the chief educational officer be a person who is qualified as an educationist and that there be one person reporting to the board who is responsible for the educational policy in that division. We would oppose with great vigour any attempt to undermine or create a two-headed situation in any board. Now, that particular point was brought up by my friend from York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I did not suggest that there should be a two-headed situation here. My suggestion was that the board that felt that at this time, with a limited availability of qualified educational people, they should have a choice.

Mr. Pitman: Well the Minister has got lots of them, they are all over there!

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, my question is with regard to subsection 20 of section 84. Where are we now? The hon. leader of the Opposition raised a question regarding the timing of elections, is that the section we are dealing with?

Mr. Chairman: Paragraph 20 of subsection 84 on page 20?

Mr. Gisborn: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: Very good, will the member direct his question then?

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I have also been asked, through you to the Minister, to get a clarification of the timing of elections. When I checked subsection 20 of section 84, I thought that it was very clear as far as the Hamilton and Wentworth county situation was concerned. They will have an election in Hamilton this year which will combine the election for the separate school system, is that the case?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is the case.

THE SCHOOLS ADMINISTRATION ACT

House in committee on Bill 172, An Act to amend The Schools Administration Act.

Sections 1 to 12, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would like to make some comments on section 13. This is the section that permits the employer to make a contribution toward fringe benefits, and the fringe benefits listed are group life accident, hospital and medical insurance. Now, such fringe benefits are actually wages or salaries. Even though some employers make no contribution, the legislation as presented here would permit them to make up to 66⅔ per cent of the cost of these fringe benefits, so that the employee would only be paying actually one-third. Since fringe benefits actually can be considered as wages or salaries, I think that this should be negotiable, the employee should have an opportunity to negotiate with a board to see if he could get even 100 per cent of his fringe benefits paid for by the board.

An employee working for any one of the auto industries in my own community finds that his employer pays not only the fringe benefits that we have listed here, but also a Green Shield prescription plan. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the employee of a board of education should have a similar opportunity to negotiate with his employer for a complete takeover by the employer of the cost of these fringe benetfis.

Mr. Chairman: Section 13? Is there any comment from the Minister? All right, the member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): I would like to agree with what the member for Windsor-Walkerville has said. I believe that matters of working conditions and of remuneration, whether it be in salary or in fringe benefits, should be left to negotiation. I cannot see any reason why we should take the position that those in the public service should receive any less than those working in the private sector of the economy. I think the practice now in the majority of industrial complexes is to pay considerably more than two-thirds.

I do not believe that we should put ourselves in the position of legislating the maximum amount that can be paid. It should be left to negotiation. I would like to hear the Minister's comments on why this particular section remains there. It is in many pieces of legislation and this is only one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is not a question of remaining. This amendment brings it into line with the provisions, as I recall it, of The Municipal Act, where this is the same amount as is there. We are now allowing the boards to do the same things with respect to the teaching profession as are available to the employees of municipalities. This section makes it consistent with The Municipal Act.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, if we use that supposition, then up until the time The Municipal Act is changed to permit municipalities to take over the complete cost of fringe benefits, or to negotiate with the employee for the takeover of the complete cost of fringe benefits, The Department of Education and the Minister of Education will not move. I think he should show some leadership by withdrawing a thing like this or changing it to permit the employer to assume the complete cost of fringe benefits by negotiation.

Section 13 agreed to.

Sections 14 to 19, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 20:

Mr. Deacon: On section 20, Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand the reasoning here.

Do these school boards that are now purchasing education for some of their pupils now receive grants for education and books they are purchasing? Are these books not purchased by the schools that are educating the children?

I do not understand the equity in this, or the inequity.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, it is not very easy to explain, but the grant regulations provide for payment of grants on books —textbooks and library books—and under the existing grant regulations there have been occasions where the board that is providing the educational service has been getting grants for the textbooks and the library books and also receiving a fee from the board of the place from which the student originates.

All this amendment does is to provide for an equitable distribution of the grant, because if you are paying a fee, then you should be receiving whatever moneys are available under the general legislative grants. It is a question, really, of one board in some instances getting a double portion of grant, while the other board—in many cases the board where the student resides, though he is taking his education elsewhere—is not receiving its fair share. This will enable us to do away with this inequity.

Section 20 agreed to.

On section 21:

Mr. Sopha: On section 21, Mr. Chairman, I want to direct the Minister's attention to the phrase a little below the middle of the section, where it says, "shall be caused to be levied on the whole of the assessment for real property and business assessment for public, secondary and separate school purposes, as the case may be."

That, of course, is related to the first part of the section, "the council of every local municipality shall," and so on, "upon the whole of the assessment." Now, the Minister well knows that he has had delegations from the interim school boards; the Premier has heard from the chamber of commerce; other organizations have made representations to the government in relation to the problem inherent in those words.

Presumably, without a change, on January 1 next year, when the rates begin to be levied in the town of Copper Cliff and in the township of Falconbridge, the assessors of those two municipalities, presumably—we must expect, following the practice of the past—are not going to put the smelter and the refinery on the roll. And accordingly, the rates will not be levied on those two installations, which relates to an anomaly in the whole province of Ontario—that two large surface installations, the smelter and the refinery at International Nickel and the smelter at Falconbridge Nickel Mines, are not on the rolls ratable for school purposes.

The Minister has had these representations. I plead with him to tell the people of Sudbury, who are going to be in this new large school area, what is the attitude of his department, at least. He cannot speak for The Department of Municipal Affairs, but he is part of the composite executive council. Perhaps we can hear what is going to happen on January 1 next year. It is a simple question.

Are the smelters and refineries going to be responsible for paying their fair and equitable proportion of school taxes? Or are they going to continue to escape? That is a very fair question. It is a very relevant question. It is a very important question to the people of Sudbury and surrounding area.

My friend, the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers) would agree with me. My friend, the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), I am sure, would agree that this question has to be answered. Is the International Nickel Company, as is the Ford Motor Company, as is Canadian General Electric in Peterborough, as are many others—Massey-Harris in Brantford, and industries all over the province who are liable for school taxation, is the International Nickel Company to become liable for paying the school rates like any other industry in the province? Or is it to continue to escape that liability?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, I recognize the hon. member would like to have an answer today. At this minute, I am not in a position to answer this particular question.

I agree that it is important; it is relevant in the total scheme of things. Whether it is relevant with respect to this particular section or not, I am not prepared to argue. I will just say to the hon. member I would think, before the end of the session, there will be an opportunity in debates and one or two other areas to raise this issue at a more appropriate time.

I am not in a position to help him in his quest for an answer here this morning.

Mr. Sopha: I am not going to let it pass without an additional brief comment, in order to put it in the total picture. I repeat that the government itself, in respect of homes for the aged, in respect of district welfare, The Department of Municipal Affairs insisted that the smelter be on the roll for those purposes. Then I ask rhetorically—I see I am not going to get an answer—why is the government not consistent? Having done that in welfare, in the care of the aged, why does the government not pursue the same policy and come in there and say, "The smelter and the refinery will go on the roll for educational purposes?"

That inconsistency is simply not understood, and the interim school board has come to the Minister—I know because they told me—and they have said that to the Minister; they asked for that consistency. The chamber of commerce keeps writing to the Premier; they write in courteous tones. The replies of the Premier, with which I am furnished, get ever more snappish as time goes along.

But the problem still remains, and it has got to be solved. Inco has got to pay their share of school taxes like anyone else in the province.

ESTIMATES, THE DEPARTMENT OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, in introducing the estimates of my department, I propose to concentrate on a subject of major importance —the role of our municipalities in a changing world.

A comprehensive outline of the activities of each of the branches in my department has already been made available to you through the annual report of The Department of Municipal Affairs. I see no need, therefore, to engage in such a review at this time. I look forward, of course, to answering any questions and discussing fully the detailed operation of my department. I do wish to make one point, however. In the short time I have been Minister of Municipal Affairs, I have been impressed with the complexity of the tasks which members of my staff must face on a daily basis. In a very real way, the competence with which my staff has discharged its responsibilities reflects the excellent leadership provided by my predecessor in this office, Mr. Wilfrid Spooner.

It is appropriate at this time, Mr. Chairman, that I express the appreciation of the government and the department for the nearly six years of leadership which Mr. Spooner gave to the municipalities and to the people of Ontario. I also want to add my personal appreciation for the assistance he has given me.

Today then, I wish to concentrate my attention upon some of the dramatic social and economic changes occurring in Ontario, and the effect of these changes upon our municipal institutions. The most obvious and far-reaching change taking place in Ontario is the phenomenon of urbanization. While analysis of population trends vary somewhat among the experts, all studies show that our rate of rapid urbanization will continue in the foreseeable future. For example, the population projections for Ontario given in the fourth annual report of the economic council of Canada indicate that, by 1980, 70 per cent of our people will be living in cities with a population of over 100,000. Even more startling, the total urban population of Ontario will almost double between now and 1980.

While exact forecasts vary as to the timing and distribution of urbanization, there is general agreement that the rate will continue to rise. This means that the vast majority of the people of Ontario will live in a totally urban environment. This situation differs completely from any prevailing in the past in Canada. As such, urbanization presents us with a challenge so fundamental that it will affect the quality and way of life of every citizen in this province.

All members are aware of the growing pressures occasioned by this urbanization. In particular, our political institutions, including municipalities, are subject to increasing stress as a result of urban growth.

I would like to outline some of these stresses as they appear at the municipal level, and indicate a few of the positive steps being taken by the government and in particular my department to meet the local government needs of today and tomorrow.

Generally speaking, local government in Ontario may be divided into two kinds of authorities—the single-purpose form as exemplified by our many boards and commissions, and the multi-purpose or municipal form. I shall concentrate, Mr. Chairman, on the municipal form of local government since this is the form for which my department bears direct responsibilities.

There are two other important reasons for concentrating on the municipal form of local government.

First, the municipality as a multi-purpose unit is the most important type of local government in Ontario. Municipal government has been delegated a broad area of responsibility by the province. Almost all functions carried out by our municipalities are directly influenced by the increasing urbanization I referred to earlier.

Second, the effectiveness of most single-purpose local authorities is greatly influenced by the quality of the municipalities with which they work. Because it is a multi-purpose unit, municipal government is the local authority in the best position to perform the essential function of coordinating and integrating the various activities of special purpose units. This may be achieved in at least two ways; for example, special purpose bodies depend on municipalities for part of their financial support, and all physical development plans of local boards must conform to the overall development plans prepared by the municipalities. Urbanization has focused increasing attention upon the municipality as a key to coherent planned local government programmes.

The present municipal system in Ontario is characterized by a large number of relatively small units. In 1967, for example, the average population of an Ontario municipality was only 1,775—and 270 of these had a population of less than 1,000. Fully one-third of all municipalities spend less than $100,000 annually on municipal programmes. These characteristics—small size and limited fiscal resources—have placed considerable stress upon our municipal system. The system was designed to meet the needs of a rural society such as existed in Ontario during the 19th century. Many of the assumptions on which this system was based are no longer true.

Perhaps the most significant of these invalid assumptions are: One—that we think of rural and urban areas as separate and different in their service needs. Two—that the political, social and economic "community" is very small, local and self-contained. Three—that property taxes provide a sufficient source of funds for local government programmes. These assumptions, Madam Chairman, no longer have their original validity, but they continue to be reflected in our system of municipal government.

Earlier, I mentioned the many pressures upon municipal government resulting from the accelerating urbanization of our province.

These pressures show themselves in many ways, including the following:

The lack of fiscal resources at the municipal level to meet the demand for a growing number of local services and the demand for a higher quality in existing services;

As our economy becomes more complex with urbanization, we have had to recognize the need to engage in some form of physical and economic planning. However, the area required for meaningful economic and physical planning tends to be much larger than existing municipal areas;

Municipal imbalance in population and financial resources has increased with the shift of people and resources from rural to urban areas;

Urban growth has had a serious effect on the physical environment leading, for example, to problems of air and water pollution, and loss of land for agricultural and recreational uses;

A trend has developed towards the creation of new single-purpose units for local government. Larger school units, health units, and conservation areas all tend to increase the fragmentation of local government and weaken the key role of the municipality.

Out of the stresses of change has come an increasing awareness of the need to restructure our system of municipal government. There have been several suggestions for reform in the following important studies:

The report of the select committee on The Municipal and Related Acts; The report of the Ontario committee on taxation; The reports of local government reviews in the Ottawa-Carleton, Peel-Halton, Niagara and Lakehead areas; The report of the Royal commission on Metropolitan Toronto; A study made by the Ontario association of counties; Various special studies undertaken by this government; and other studies and proposals such as the economic council of Canada review.

The local government studies and reports for the Ottawa-Carleton area, the counties of Peel and Halton, the Niagara area and the Lakehead area have all been tabled in the House. In all cases, many changes were recommended which would lead to major reform in the local governments of the areas studied.

In addition to the four reports already received, four additional reviews are under way: the district of Muskoka, the county of Waterloo, the Hamilton-Burlington-Wentworth area, and the Brant county area.

The substantial area covered by all these reviews should not be minimized. The eight reviews cover approximately 40 per cent of the population of Ontario outside Metropolitan Toronto.

These reviews have taught us many lessons. Most significant in the four reports received is the wide divergence in recommendations. This indicates to us that there is no simple "blanket" solution to the problems of urbanization—each area has to be dealt with on its own merits. The inclusion of the district of Muskoka as a review area is a demonstration of the fact that urban growth pressures do not affect only highly populated cities, but radiate out into every section of this province. Above all, it must be emphasized that these studies are not an end in themselves, but part of a continuing process of determining our best course toward better municipal government.

A principal method the government has used in meeting the pressures of urbanization has been the creation of metropolitan or regional municipalities. Both the Metropolitan Toronto and Ottawa-Carleton systems of government have been discussed in detail at various times in this House. In general they present a modified application of the county system in an urbanized context.

The Ottawa-Carleton regional municipality represents a significant advance in the concept of regional or metropolitan organization. This is true on two counts: The strong functions assigned to the regional level, and the fact that the area contains a significant rural component—comprising 92 per cent of the total area.

As I have said on other occasions, the one most important responsibility of our municipalities is the major determination of the quality of the environment in which we live. All our responses to the pressures of urban growth are aimed at making it possible for municipalities to discharge this responsibility. The growing appreciation that an adequate planning area must be big enough to make economic as well as physical planning possible is an important factor in our move towards new forms of municipal government. The emergence of the joint planning board as an instrument of larger area planning is an example of this trend. I should also note the allocation of strong planning functions to the regional levels in the Ottawa-Carleton legislation.

In addition, I would like to mention two programmes which indicate our awareness for larger area planning. One of these is the regional development programme which is a responsibility of my friend, the Hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton). If nothing else, this programme has convinced all of us that economic planning cannot be divorced from physical planning. The second of these programmes is the Metropolitan Toronto and Region Transportation Study, or MTARTS. During the last few months, members have heard a great deal about this exciting excursion into planning for the 21st century. All I wish to add at this time is that MTARTS has shown us that we have both the will and skill to undertake sound planning for urbanized Ontario so that we can control the impact of urban growth upon our physical environment.

I have attempted, Madam Chairman, in these few minutes to emphasize the fact that the most important factor influencing local government in Ontario is urban growth, and to show some of the responses we are making to aid our municipalities in meeting this challenge.

Madam Chairman, we in the government are well aware of these pressures. We know that changes must be made to meet these changing needs. But we must act with care. The reason is simple. Our actions will be a major factor in determining the face of Ontario for several generations to come. We must be sure that what we do will result in municipal government strong enough to cope with the forces of change now occurring, yet flexible enough to meet challenges which are not yet apparent. To do this we are evaluating policy alternatives in detail to arrive at what John Stuart Mill called; "The best possible truth of the moment."

Having said this, and taking into account the many conflicting views and approaches to the reform of loyal government, I wish to make absolutely clear my strong feeling that the pace of reform must quicken. Accordingly, specific proposals will be brought before this House at the appropriate time and you will be asked to make far-reaching decisions on the future of local government in this province.

In this spirit then, Madam Chairman, I beg leave to present the estimates of my department to the hon. members of this House.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Madam Chairman, in view of the hour and the fact that my comments will take a little more longer than the normal time, I would appreciate the House permitting me to move adjournment of the House at this time.

Hon. H. L. Rowntree (Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs): Start with your remarks now. We will be back at 2 of the clock.

Mr. Deacon: In view of that, I shall commence. I would like to say that I, too, would pay tribute to some of the work that the past Minister, Mr. Spooner, and the present Minister have been doing in The Department of Municipal Affairs in endeavouring to improve the efficiency and performance of local government. They have been studying many of the problems that arise from small units of government established in a different era, and under different conditions. But, as the member for Wellington South (Mr. Worton) stated in a Friday morning Budget debate, one of the real problems in this age of big government is maintaining the interest, and using the abilities and the expertise of the man in the street. It is difficult to retain these under these very large units where it is not feasible to have as many representatives. We, therefore, have to develop new roles where these men and women can participate usefully, and can add their ideas, and can involve their communities closely in government. Certainly in municipal government, in local government, we have the greatest opportunity to do this.

The role of the provincial government is surely one of setting out perimeters, not detailed decisions. We need to set out the desirable objectives and set the services and the conditions under which these goals can be achieved. We need to get the detailed work, the detailed thinking, don by those people right on the spot who are aware of the problems, meeting the problems every day, rather than those down here in Queen's Park who are not facing these situation and often overlook some very basic ingredients that make for happy solutions in local areas.

Approval in principle should provide the framework in which decisions can be carried out rather than be a subsequent bottleneck. Today we are still approving things after the local groups have made their decisions and set out their opinions, even though these basic decisions that they have made in detail are within the principles that we desire.

It is similar in context to Dr. Livingstone being sent out to Africa to look for Victoria Falls. Our experts in Queen's Park are sent out to look at a situation in the hinterland and they decide what the government here is going to do. Certainly they work in concert and some cooperation with the local people but the department is still operating in the colonial age insofar as the method by which it is approaching the problems in the various regions.

They get a request from a region to help solve a problem, but instead of going into the region and saying: "Look! You folks know what the problem is, you have the expertise among you with all your experience. We can tell you that what we want here is a certain framework which will not adversely affect the area around you, the regions that are neighbouring to you. We will give you these broad perimeters to work within. We will give you someone to help coordinate your work because we recognize the fact that it is difficult to choose a chairman from among your number who is not politically in a position where he cannot work to greatest advantage. So we will work with you by chairing your meetings, bringing to you resources and materials that will help your research be broader and in greater depth, but we basically want you to come up with a solution. Knowing all the facts, knowing the background, you develop the solution."

In the case of the Hardy report developed at the Lakehead, the department sent an expert into the area who did consult with local folks but on more than one occasion he was critical of the ability of local people to grasp all the implications of his proposals. This is natural. People do not like to have their proposal imposed upon them. They want to have a feeling it is their development, their ideas, and they sometimes know far better than we do what is best for them.

The Lakehead municipalities in effect asked for assistance but they did not ask for the decision of Queen's Park as to what the final decision would be. They wanted leadership, they did not want dictatorship. The "imposed from above and from outside" pattern of decision, is characteristic of the Hardy report, and we should not again have this type of study produced by the department.

The Minister must take a diametrically opposed position. Start from the grass roots, build up cadres in the local areas to work with his field of officers; teams of local experts and representatives who know not only the terrain and the people, but also their specialties inside out, be it water tables or movement of commuters between home and place of employment, or anticipated problems of air and water pollution that are likely to arise with the advance of industrialization and urbanization.

The Minister may point out such examples of short-sightedness by local municipalities, as Neebing township who in an earlier referendum did not have the benefit of prior educational campaign and just about legislated themselves out of the 20th century by refusing the money necessary for the provisions of a water supply adequate for their projected growth.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the member would find this an oportune point at which to break his remarks.

Mr. Deacon: I so move.

It being 12.30 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

APPENDIX

(See page 5703)

9. Mr. Sargent—Enquiry of the Ministry—(a) Will the Minister advise how many juveniles are in Ontario penal institutions; (b) in how many cases did the court have pre-sentence recommendations from social workers, probation officers, psychiatrists, etc.; (c) what facilities, if any, are there for segregation of these juveniles from adult inmates?

Answer by the Minister of Correctional Services:

(a) On the date of the order, February 23rd, two juveniles, both 15 years of age, were being held on court orders in two county jails.

(b) I am advised that the juvenile and family court judges and magistrates of the province of Ontario, prior to ordering a juvenile to be admitted at a training school, examine carefully the social background of each juvenile to be so admitted. In most cases, such social history would be made by a probation officer. Wherever there are indications arising from the evidence of the trial that a juvenile requires psychiatric examination, such examination is arranged on the direction of the judge or magistrate before a decision is made.

In every case where a juvenile is a ward of the children's aid society, a detailed social report and recommendation are presented to the court by the society.

In the calendar year 1967, there were 4,380 pre-sentence reports prepared for the juvenile courts by the Ontario probation service.

(c) When a juvenile over the age of 14, of which there are very few as noted above, is admitted to jail on a court order, the jail authorities immediately advise the department. The situation is discussed fully and arrangements are made to provide segregation within the jail as complete as facilities will permit. Every effort is made to ensure that no juvenile is allowed to mingle with older offenders.

43. Mr. Bullbrook—Enquiry of the Ministry—(a) What is the significance for Ontario Hydro of the announced merger of the Peterborough design staff of Canadian General Electric and the Sheridan Park design staff of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited; (b) does this news mean that Ontario Hydro will now have only one design organization to look to in the atomic energy field—the agency of the federal government; (c) will the Minister now consider the question of the retention by Ontario Hydro of independent consultants to offer a third opinion on technological developments in the nuclear power field; (d) has the Minister noted the comment of Globe and Mail reporter John Picton on page B1 of the March 22nd business section to the effect that this merger will offer "stronger opposition to foreign designers who may bid on nuclear contracts in Canada"?

Answer by the Minister of Energy and Resources Management:

(a) Ontario Hydro regards the announced merger of the Peterborough nuclear plant design staff of C.G.E. and the Sheridan Park design staff of A.E.C.L. as a constructive step toward more effective utilization of the available specialized nuclear plant design capability in Canada. Ontario Hydro also welcomes the increased participation of other companies.

(b) No.

(c) Ontario Hydro has under continuing review the question of employment of independent consultants. Timing is, of course, important in the pioneer stages of the development of nuclear power. Initially the main emphasis has had to be on the development of the programme under the auspices of A.E.C.L. and Ontario Hydro. But as this programme expands, greater opportunities for participation by other business enterprises may be expected.

(d) Yes.

60. Mr. Spence—Enquiry of the Ministry—Would the Minister of Municipal Affairs inform us (a) how many American cottages or homes are assessed in the amount of $2,000, or less, in the province of Ontario; (b) how many cottages or homes, other than American-owned, are assessed at $2,000, or less, in the province of Ontario?

Answer by the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

This information is available at the municipal level only, and in each municipality the number would have to be determined directly from the assessment roll.

The municipalities are not required to correlate and publish such figures and there has never been necessity for them to notify The Department of Municipal Affairs in this regard.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, before adjournment for lunch I made some comment about the problem of leaving responsibility and decisions entirely with local municipalities. I mentioned the fact that possibly the situation in the township of Neebing, where the local voters almost voted themselves out of the 20th century by refusing moneys necessary for the provision of a water supply, was good reason to say that Queen's Park knows better.

I submit that where local people are made aware of all the facts—where there is a campaign to see that they are well informed as to the alternatives—then they should be given the right to make the decisions, even though those decisions be wrong.

A very basic aspect of this new experiment, that has proved so successful in Arizona with the Indians, has been that they have been given the right to make their own decisions and control their own destinies. They have been given the information, had all factors put in front of them and then they decide. Somebody does not, from on high, take over the role of a colonial office and tell them what is right and wrong.

The department needs to take municipalities into their confidence and work out with the municipalities the best standard and the best plan and details for their reorganization, so that they can control land and make decisions for their own future.

Recently, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon) had the following comment to make in the Lakehead:

> When distance is added to possible alienation and apathy, then we have the makings of government by administrative decree. When the tax bills come from some remote centre—

he was referring to the Thunder Bay district as proposed in the report—

> —how do we retain local interest and initiative? Haven't we relegated people in such areas to being a mere colony of the province?

A very basic and understandable desire of all people is to be able to make their own decisions and they are quite prepared to accept the responsibility for their own actions when they are wrong. The department too often says: "We know better than you do, what is best for you."

The department must change this attitude of doing the planning and making the decisions on behalf of areas of this province. Its role must be one of co-ordination and developing, in concert with the local representatives, plans for long-term development of these regions.

Many point out all the time the inefficiencies and parochial attitudes and shortsightedness of small units, but the department should place before the local representatives and the public, the facts and figures in readily understandable form. It will be surprised at the remarkably sound results that the department, in concert with local authorities, will be able to achieve.

The Hardy report and all reports developed in the same manner is government by direct-distance-dialing—the old one-one-two punch. People will not buy it. They do not want to be colonials. They want to be part of the decision-making, not ciphers. I say that the most serious criticism I can level at The Department of Municipal Affairs today is in this context—that the Minister regards people as recipients of the largesse of the province—his largesse, rather than as partners in municipal enterprise.

The Minister is wrong. If this were private business he would still be wrong. The most successful businesses today are those which operate on a franchise, rather than a branch plant principle. In the retail field, it is IGA, Becker's Milk, Canadian Tire that are the interesting operations to watch. They are the ones that are growing.

The big chains running branch stores are not even in the running when it comes to growth and why? Because the franchise operation has something else going for it—local initiative, personal initiative on the part of the manager and his staff and the owner and his staff in the case of franchise operation. So it would be with the regional government, if it were to grow from these basic roots.

In a franchise operation the role of head office is the training of management and staff, co-ordination of buying and advertising, and formulation of general policy. A parallel role awaits The Department of Municipal Affairs—and a parallel opportunity awaits the municipalities.

I would like to say something about the role of the provincial Department of Municipal Affairs in the light of the publicity given to the fears of the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) as expressed during his estimates yesterday and as reported in today's Globe and Mail.

"Keep Hands Off Municipal Affairs, Federal Government Is Warned by Ontario," as the headline says.

The Treasurer has said we would not move until the Smith and Carter reports have been studied and joint federal-provincial tax sharing talks are held. But in fact, the reaction to the premature picking out of one rather absurd item, the basic shelter exemption, from the overall context of the Smith report, weakens this argument considerably. In fact, this provision and that of the takeover of cost of administration of justice were seized upon out of context as election gimmicks and now the Provincial Treasurer is embarrassed.

A surprising number of electors are of the opinion that for a government to give out money in this fashion is to betray a lack of sophistication that does not fit well with its complex fiscal responsibilities in today's world.

Most thoughtful people sensed that the Smith committee must have been nodding when it came up with this idea. When you look at it, the basic shelter exemption payment has most of the qualities of a classic Social Credit handout. It turns every high-rise into a mythical joint-stock company, in the middle of a south sea bubble, and this can only result in rent increases all around. It is just as much "faith" money as anything that Major Douglas ever dreamed up.

Had this proposal come within the purview of R. B. Bennett in 1935 he would have damned it as one more scheme which would result in inflation of the currency. And now history repeats itself fully with the Provincial Treasurer's cry heard yesterday, as from the ghost of Aberhart himself, "on to Ottawa".

If local initiative is preserved, the threat of federal intrusion into the municipal field, which the Provincial Treasurer so much feared, will not materialize. I would certainly welcome new thoughts and new ideas martialled to help out the housing crisis; I think all of us would. And I know, for example, with the project BEAM, which my colleague from Ottawa Centre (Mr. MacKenzie) mentioned during the Public Works debate, a large-scale extension of modular construction will be initiated by the federal authorities.

This standardization of window sizes, doors, partitions, and so on, can surely not be regarded as an infringement upon provincial sovereignty. Yet it is precisely in such areas that the federal government will move to aid housing, a field in which this government has conspicuously failed to show results.

There was a private member's motion introduced—a resolution introduced to make the national building code a mandatory code within this province. All sorts of excuses were put up but, basically, this is a very important ingredient of easing the problem of building houses to a standard. Soaring land values, high construction costs and high local taxation for services, particularly education, has made owning a home the prerogative of the rich man and a distant hope of the middle-income man.

For the lower-to-average income man, a home of his own is now no more than a mirage. He is told that he must settle for less, for the neurotic possibilities of the high-rise or for the involuntary intimacy of row housing. A row house is still a row house even if you call it a town house. And a tenement is still a tenement by any other name.

Therefore, anything the federal government can do to break the bottleneck, the housing shortage, will be welcomed by the people of Ontario. They are not so concerned about the niceties of The BNA Act as they are with getting a roof over their heads, a home of their own.

I suspect that if either the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) or the Provincial Treasurer attempt to make an issue out of this, he will be making a big mistake, because I sense that the people are not with the Robarts government in this. They want action and they want formulas that provide the real possibility of a home within their natural lifetime.

If Mr. Hellyer is able by a massive infusion of brain power to distill the wisdom that will break the bottleneck and stop this land cost spiral, I say more power to him, and The BNA Act be damned or amended as the case may be.

Neither the Minister of Municipal Affairs nor the Provincial Treasurer will be able to play Hans at the dyke with the municipalities unless, while blocking the flow of possible aid from Ottawa, they also come up with solutions to urban problems. If they try to block Ottawa in its search for solutions, even as they also fail themselves, then the dam will burst and the dyke that is The BNA Act will crumble before the pressure of the people themselves. It is useful so long as it is useful, and not a moment longer.

In this regard, one of the major problems and stumbling blocks to municipal agreements in housing subdivisions is the fear of a repetition of the problem faced by Pickering township. Where they agree to a lot of housing, they do not have the business and commercial assessment to go along with it to share the costs, the spiralling costs of education and, as a result, they are strangled.

What is needed here is some form of subsidy over a 10-year period, perhaps on a declining basis, which will give them time to adjust to a proper balance of assessment.

Men of goodwill have the means to revise their country's constitution and have plenty of time for this major task. And, sir, this talk about rigid constitutional barriers and Ottawa staying out of our hair here is just a red herring.

During the lunch hour, we were able to take advantage of the hiatus so kindly provided by the hon. House leader to check with Ottawa on what might have provoked the Provincial Treasurer to wrath yesterday. And apparently it was the remarks of Mr. Hellyer at the University of Waterloo, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of July 10. Here is what the Daily Star reported—or reported Mr. Hellyer as having said:

> The federal government has a responsibility to take the initiative in the formation of long-range plans. The federal government has this responsibility as opposed to the responsibility for urban development and growth. We are calling together provincial and municipal authorities, bankers, trade unions, and academics, plus those directly concerned with the important problems of urbanization facing Canadians. We hope that policy can be ironed out.

It is clear that what is causing the hang-up in the Provincial Treasurer's mind is Mr. Hellyer's use of the word "responsibility." Since this was not used in a legal sense, Mr. Hellyer said that the word "interest" or "concern" might well be substituted for it.

If this is done, then I say there is no problem to men of goodwill, even under the present BNA Act. It is under our present constitution that the task force on urban problems is working now. It is under our present constitution that we shall see the federal white paper on urbanization and housing in September, and it is under the present constitution that we shall see new federal legislation in the fall.

Evidently, it is this legislation that the Provincial Treasurer and the Minister of Municipal Affairs fear, rather than the constitutional jurisdictional challenge which is hypothetical in the extreme.

It is quite clear that the pressure for constitutional reform must come from the people themselves, and people without a roof over their heads are notoriously more ready for change than those who are settled.

One last point I want to make: We are, in this area, facing a tremendous problem due to the explosion of population in the Metro Toronto area. The government is looking at, and considering abdicating, its responsibilities to Metro Toronto for providing services, educational assistance and transportation requirements for those lying outside this immediate municipality of Metropolitan Toronto by absorbing the outlying municipalities into Toronto. This is a short-term easy solution. What they are going to end up with is a Metro Toronto which is in size more than half the whole province. And what is left for our 21st century planning that the Minister talks about? We will have a city state here and maybe that is the best answer. If it is Markham and Vaughan and Pickering now they are considering, what will it be another 25 years from now?

We must find another solution for providing the services, in providing the assistance in the way of education assistance and providing transportation, other than shirking it off to Metro Toronto.

We must set up regions, whether they be present county in size or adjusted, which can provide the financing for the internal services. We must provide through the Ontario water resources commission in co-operation with this department, services that will fit with the department's long-range plans for development, for housing. And we must provide the other amenities that are needed to enable developers to bring on to the market a substantially greater supply of housing lots than the demand at the present time.

Only then, when we face this problem of supply and demand this problem that the province has to deal with—problems of servicing, including garbage—and not leave it with the municipalities to fight among themselves, until we face these problems squarely as the responsibility of the province and solve them; and the province is going to abdicate its position now in a way that will mean the end of a strong and viable Ontario in the 21st century.

I call upon this Minister through his department to give leadership to this government in solving our problems of housing and the explosion of population in a way that sets out major perimeters and creates the circumstances under which private enterprise can do the job which it can do, but not while it is hobbled.

And then we shall not see situations such as Pickering where municipalities are crippled if they answer the social needs of the people for housing, but where municipalities are quite prepared to go forward, even with Ontario housing or others, with any projects they want because they can see they can afford to do it.

I call upon this Department of Municipal Affairs under its Minister, to take a new look at its role—which is now one of initialling hundreds of plans in areas that already have master plans and the plans conform to those master plans and be certified they conform. Instead of doing a lot of this insignificant meaningless paper work it should get down to the real job that the province should be doing. That is, creating the perimeters, the atmosphere in which individuals can carry out effectively through their own local governments.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs, I can only say that I am a bit bewildered at the stand just taken by the hon. member of the official Opposition in this field.

It looks as if the spokesman for that party wants to sit on both sides of the fence at once. He wants to have provincial guidance at the same time that he wants to have individual responsibilities at the municipal level, and I will have something to say about that later on.

An hon. member: Get off it!

Mr. Young: It is a different story or tune than we have heard in recent years from this party in this field.

An hon. member: Right!

Mr. Young: Now, I do want to congratulate the Minister of Municipal Affairs upon his appointment to this extremely important post in the Cabinet.

An hon. member: They could not get anybody else!

Mr. Young: I would like to wish him well as he faces one of the most important and one of the most difficult jobs in this province at this time; the modernization of the municipal structure as set up by The Baldwin Act, over a century ago.

Some of the Minister's more recent statements would indicate that he is aware of the urgency of this modernization programme. Certainly, his statement this morning would indicate that he has a real grasp of the problem that he faces today and I would hope that this statement is the forerunner of many more to come, and I would hope that the skeleton which he set out this morning will be fleshed out before too many years are passed.

I also hope that this Minister is really serious. We have heard these grand general statements year after year in this House. Now we have a new Minister, and we give him full credit and our best wishes and full support as he attempts to do the job that he has to do.

He has inherited a situation in which former Ministers just refused to act, or acted with all too great hesitancy. When they were forced through the very pressure of events to act, it was with extreme caution and at a snail's pace. The result is that problems have piled up, and this Minister faces a crisis of mammoth proportions. The fact is that there are municipalities that are designed for the 1850's and they just cannot do the job that they were designed for, under the conditions of the 1960's.

Municipal experts tell us that with the kind of economy we now have, with the kind of social responsibility that we now accept along with the changing functions of government at all levels, and efficient municipal government now needs about 250,000 people to adequately support the functions which citizens are demanding of it. But we have only about half a dozen Ontario municipalities in this population category. Of the rest, 90 per cent are at 8,000 people or less, and the fact is that 99 per cent of our Ontario municipalities are still just not large enough to meet the demands for 1968. Even if we scale that population figure down from 250,000 to 150,000, that statement is still true.

No wonder then, that the other Ministers in the Cabinet have, as a matter of sheer efficiency, overridden and ignored the tiny municipalities, the legacy of a bygone age, and set up their own administrative units. In the process, they have taken over at the provincial level, all too many of the functions, which were once and should be today, the functions of local government. As a result we have a hodgepodge of administrative boundaries set up by the various Ministers without relationship to each other, and certainly without regard to the municipal units that happened to exist within them.

I have said in former years, and I say now, that the refusal of former Ministers of Municipal Affairs and of this government to move more rapidly toward a modernization of our municipal structure, is destroying effective local government—this is exactly what the Minister himself had to say this morning on this problem—and is substituting for it, the provincial administration in all too many areas. Perhaps now, after what we have heard, this Minister is ready to move. We hope so.

A couple of years ago, I suggested to the former Minister that he might win a permanent niche in the history of Ontario if he would tackle with realism and determination the setting up of new regional municipalities in this province.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): What happened to him?

Mr. Young: Well, he did not move, and the voters saw fit to censure his laconic approach. So I repeat what I said at that time. Now, the new Minister has been handed the torch, and if he holds it high, and tackles this problem with real courage and real determination, who knows but that visiting school children a century from now will ask, "Who is that fine-looking gentleman carved in immortal bronze, gracing the front lawn of the Parliament buildings?"

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Where is your violin?

Mr. Young: Well, the answer might come if the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs was the man who had the guts to reshape the structure of municipal government in Ontario and bring it into the 20th century—if he did for the jet age what Baldwin did for the colonial age.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I bring that to the Minister's attention. Certainly the job, if it is done properly, will justify that kind of immortality and I hope that this Minister earns it.

But maybe that is asking too much. The fact is that local government can survive in the province only if the smaller municipalities can combine around the strong central cities into regional municipal government, large enough to have an adequate tax base, to plan their own development within the framework of provincial terms of reference, to hire trained and competent staff, to use the computers and other sophisticated machinery now available and to carry out the local functions which were originally intended for municipalities. And this means that many of their functions which have been eroded to the provincial level must be returned to local government and this may well be one of the basic problems that this Minister faces.

His colleagues, having reorganized their departments because of a failure of local government, now like the power they have assumed as well as the efficiency with which they think they operate and they will have no enthusiasm at all for the idea of setting up new regional municipalities to which they would have to restore much of the powers and functions which they now hold. That is the dilemma which this Minister faces. But every year of delay consolidates these Ministerial administrative areas and makes it more difficult for the re-emerging of meaningful local government.

Already this year, Bill 44 has in effect taken education out of the local municipalities. I know the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) has as recently as November 14, 1967, said this, when he spoke to the Southwood secondary school in the city of Galt:

> I must stress that the government of Ontario is not, by implication, designating > the county as the basis of any system of regional government which may be adopted in the future. The idea of regional government or any such consolidated form of local government is still under study by this government.

But the fact is that each of these new school units will be setting up an educational centre in the county. The administration will be set up, the organization and all the paraphernalia will be built around that new centre, and then it is going to be much more difficult for this Minister if he envisages regional government larger than the county—and certainly that is needed—to come into effect in the days ahead. Of course, the hon. Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman)—or his old title, Reform Institutions—is going ahead with his regional detention centres completely obvious to the future needs of regional government and of larger municipal units. He is combining these units wherever he can, and setting up the detention centres.

Now, it is true, as the Minister said, that studies are under way. We had these studies in Niagara, Peel-Halton, and the Lakehead. But outside of the Ottawa study this House says to the Minister, "What action is being taken?" The Niagara study has been in for three years now but as far as the appearances are concerned, little or nothing has taken place. The Peel-Halton study sits there, a nice study. I do not agree with some of it and I do not think—at least I would say that a great many of the members here do not agree with some of the recommendations —but the fact is, it sits there. And while there may be discussions going on, that we know not of, the fact is that at a time of urgency when municipalities are dying because of a lack of action on the part of this government, and more and more of their powers are being eroded to central government, these studies are sitting on the shelves; and action, as far as we can see, is not taking place. Now what seems to happen with this government in this field is just the same as happens in so many other things, that the government reacts to crisis and when the crisis becomes acute, action is taken. Metro Toronto is a case in point: When the crisis blew to mammoth proportions we got Bill 81. When the Ottawa situation became intolerable, then action came in that field.

I do not know how long we have to wait in the other fields before we get action. But the other thing which is disturbing, I think, to many of us is that when action does come it is action which we are told is politically possible at the time. And yet it is action which is setting up new municipalities, and in the case of Metro and Ottawa where you have power blocs warring within the municipality with each other. It may be again a little bit of the divide-and-rule philisophy, but you have right here in Metro, and you have the same thing in Ottawa, where each smaller municipality is warring for industrial and apartment assessment, where each one will reject the idea of low-cost low-income housing and where these problems are festering, and will continue to fester as long as there is no one, overall power within the municipality to co-ordinate and to do the job that has to be done.

So we find that this is the situation. Along with this is another disturbing element where some of the members of this government heartily disagree with what the Minister has said this morning. I have only to refer to what the hon. member for York Centre has already referred to and that is, the statement of the hon. Provincial Treasurer yesterday, in reply to a question which I posed to him about the function and power of the economic council. He said this:

> Mr. Chairman, no. I would hardly think that the regional development programme on the one hand and the matter of regional government on the other hand, are closely related. There may be areas where there could well be a course of consultation, but this was not the purpose for the establishment of regional development councils or the regional development programme, in the first instance. As far as I am aware, Mr. Chairman, there is a rather substantial difference between regional government as it is contemplated or proposed and regional development, although, as I say, they may come together once in a while. But I do not think they are closely related.

It just seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that here are two different points of view. Because, after all, if the present councils are going to move forward to be entities of their own to plan regionally and plan economically, this is just at loggerheads with what the Minister has said this morning when he spoke of the necessity of regions which are adequate planning areas. He said they must be big enough to make economic as well as physical planning possible.

This is the kind of conflict which must be resolved within this Cabinet if we are to have any kind of meaningful regional municipal development in the days ahead. Because if indeed we are to build the municipal government, we must restore to them the power they must have and which has been taken from them, the power to make real decisions at that level. This is where I would disagree with the hon. member for York Centre, because only as we get viable regional municipal governments can we hand these powers back. If the hon. member for York Centre feels that, at the present time, under present circumstances, we can afford to give this decision-making process back to the tiny municipalities, in the first place, they will not know what to do with it and in the second place, economically and otherwise they are just incapable of exercising it. So we might as well face that fact. First of all, before we hand that kind of power back, we must have a larger unit comprised of 150,000 to 250,000 citizens with the kind of power which will make that kind of government really meaningful.

Now, if we are going to do this, of course—basic to the whole proposition—we must have a provincial land-use plan. Norman Pearson told the Legislature's committee on agriculture and food recently that broad areas of land to be used for agriculture cities and urban developments should be marked out. He said:

> Detail and regional planning could then take place within the broad areas mapped in the provincial plan.

And perhaps, this is not so different in essence to what we have already heard. He says:

> Ontario should quickly develop a master plan to use its land in effective ways.

This is from Norman A. Pearson, of the centre for research and resource development at Guelph University. Mr. Pearson knows what he is talking about; he has done a gerat deal of research in this field, and I believe he gives us good advice here. Just in the one field which was mentioned today in the field of GO transit—decisions have to be made in this as in other areas.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Haskett) whoever is responsible here, has to make the decision. I suppose the Minister of Highways (Mr. Gomme) in this instance, has to make a decision as to which one of the four suggested schemes are going to be implemented. When that is done the Minister can think of the land-use plan around the Metropolitan area; until that is done the part which transport plays in this whole field will frustrate the Minister in setting up any kind of a reasonable land-use plan and so—

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Would you not put it the other way around?

Mr. Young: I would say it might be co-operation here, but if the Minister of Highways says we are going to have plan 4, for example, I presume that the Minister of Municipal Affairs will be brought in for consultation; he will have to be; then the Minister can say, "Now go ahead, let us have a land-use plan", but he has got to have, I suppose, the approval of the Minister of Highways and the Provincial Treasurer along the way. So it is a team effort, and perhaps the Minister has a real job in correlating and bringing these people together. I would hope that the task force that has been often suggested would be put to work, that we finish with this bits and pieces philosophy in the province of Ontario.

True, we are having studies now in three vital areas, and those studies are extremely important, but what about the land in between? What about the left overs, the pieces in between these large urban centres? Are they going to be tied into the urban centres? Or are they going to be sloughed off? Somehow or other you will have to deal with them after the new regional centres and the new regional governments are set up. I think we cannot afford that kind of luxury, and that kind of delay. Certainly, as Smith has outlined, we have to have some kind of boundaries drawn. Now certainly, the Smith report is not a final thing. He does not say so himself. He says that this is a suggestion which the Minister might take into consideration and which the Legislature might use as a starting point. But there is a starting point. There is a place where we can begin. That kind of work has to be done in some detail, and I would hope that the data that the hon. Provincial Treasurer mentioned yesterday—which is being collected across this province—can be used and can be very, very important in this whole phase of developing a land-use plan for the province of Ontario.

It is very interesting that most European countries do not wait for the municipalities to take the initiative, and I do not think we can afford that here.

In most of the legislation in most of the countries where planning is taken seriously, it says that if a small unit—the municipality does not take the initiative then the next level of government must move in, and tell them that they have got to get busy by a certain date or else the plan is going to be imposed. And that threat generally serves the purpose, and there is co-operative action mighty fast, when those words are spoken.

Now the Minister does have something of that power now, and we hope that he is not going to hesitate if it is necessary to move in and to set the plans that may be necessary.

I think that along this same line we have to recognize the fact that no local municipality on its own—I should not be as general as that—very few local municipalities will sign their own death warrants by asking for a plan of the area.

I have one very interesting item here from a book which is in the library. It is A Local Government in Crisis, written by W. A. Robson, professor emeritus of public administration, University of London.

Now he says this, in one of his chapters in dealing with this whole problem of initiation:

> It is obvious that any far-reaching reform, however necessary in the interest of good local government or even to its mere survival, will be opposed tooth and nail by the local authorities concerned. It can, in fact, only be brought about by the action of a central government acting on its own initiative.

This, of course, comes out of the experience of London, and we saw the same kind of experience here in the province of Ontario.

With the emergence of a land-use plan, with a general outline of where region of governments ought to be in the province of Ontario, we ask the question, what kind of regions should they be?

I am not going to go into that in detail today. The time does not permit it. But I do want to quote from the last issue of The Municipal World, where we have an article based on a speech by John Pearson, co-ordinator of regional studies programme, Department of Municipal Affairs. It is called Community Life and Regionalism, and it puts forth something of what a regional government might be expected to do.

We hear so much of this problem—that if we have regional government, the city will overshadow the rural population and the rural population will be completely blotted out as far as their influence is concerned. But I think this little excerpt from that speech does show what can happen:

> In Sweden, Stockholm functions as both a county and a city with control over the contiguous area extending miles beyond the city boundaries through the acquisition of lands over 50 years ago by a far-sighted council, representing primarily the business interests of the city.
> Today satellite towns are part of the larger community, organically joined to Stockholm's downtown. Highways link the new towns with each other and rapid transit unites them all with the city centre.
> While each of the communities have achieved some balance in their economy, offering considerable local employment, commuter and shopping activity maintains a constant flow to and from the central business areas.
> While certain administrative functions are vested in the respective towns, the policy for long-term planning and provision of major services is determined by the central administration, operating under a council of 100 members elected on party lines. This centralization of fiscal and development control does not however, unduly inhibit the community organizations and services which thrive in each of the towns.
> On a nation-wide scale, Japan has embarked on a most ambitious programme of regional development, initiated in 1960, based on a national policy of central planning, government guidance, and the stimulation of regional and local initiative. This tremendous undertaking ensures a two-fold attack on the congestion of larger cities and the poverty of the remote areas of the country.

Now this is the fear that is in so many minds, and he answers it this way:

> Public investment is being directed to the outer reaches of metropolitan areas to relieve the pressures on the central cities and stem the flow of people from the smaller urban communities and rural settlements. In a fashion, similar to the pattern developed in Stockholm, constellations of small and medium cities are being stabilized through the dispersal of industrial and commercial growth which would normally accrue in the already highly urbanized regions of Japan. Industrial parks are proposed where a depressed rural economy produces surplus labour which would otherwise gravitate to the metropolitan cities.

I think this presents the kind of action which we could expect from a properly organized municipal regional government where the city becomes not a centralizing factor as it is today under present circumstances, with certain overspill taking place into an organized area with devastating results, but when the whole area becomes a co-ordinated whole, and where the development proceeds outward to the very fringes, and the economic growth is stimulated properly throughout the whole region.

This party has put on record, on a couple of occasions in this House, the foundation plan for municipal finance which, perhaps, we can discuss in more detail in the proper estimate. The Minister has said he would study it. I am not going into those details at the moment, but I am certain—with proper municipal regional government—the foundation plan would be the basis for the whole new structure of government, and the whole new structure of finance. It can help, even today with the small and inefficient municipalities which we have, but that plan, we hope, will develop and eventually will become a financial base for a new structure.

Essential to the new municipalities must be the cities which I have mentioned. What kind of a city are we going to have in the future? Again, the Minister expressed his concern about this this morning. He pointed out that, come what may, by 1980 we are going to be an urban province with great stretches of open space, it is true, but the great centre of influence and industry is going to be more and more centralized here in Ontario. We hope that with this centralization will come the kind of decentralized regional municipality which I have talked about, so that building does not simply go up into the air but spreads out a bit for economic health.

Now what is happening today in Canada? I have a quote here from a Mr. W. H. Cruikshank, vice-president of Bell of Canada Limited, hardly a radical I suppose—

Mr. Sargent: You would not fool him.

Mr. Young: Well, he says something here which I would like to bring before the House, and even though he may not be radical in his point of view, he has something to say to us. Speaking during a panel on the industry's social responsibilities, Mr. Cruikshank said:

> The United States has started to rebuild the long deteriorated social structure of the city.
> The gathering storm in Canada has received less attention than the long-deteriorated social structure in the cities of the United States.
> Unemployment, inadequate educational systems, lack of opportunity and blight are central to the problem.

He said a dominant factor causing this situation is the shift in population from the city's core to the suburbs.

> Those who could afford to leave the central cities—the affluent, the skilled and the educated, have done so.
> Among those were some of the more socially conscious elements of our society: the Sunday school teacher, the boy scout leader, the manager, they have left behind them an incoming tide of the poor, the unskilled, the under-educated, and the so-called disadvantaged.
>
> With this shift in population have come many problems: deterioration in housing, and other private assets, increasing crime, soaring welfare costs. Complicating the issue further is the ever-widening gap between civic expenses and tax revenue.

So says Mr. Cruikshank.

Now, so far in our cities, we have been doing too much of this thing that has been termed "dollar or assessment planning." We have built our communities, we have put up buildings—the factory, the home, the apartment—but community needs have been ignored all too often. Those community needs were supposed to come in later: the libraries, the transportation systems, community centres, things of this nature which make for good community life. We have said, "Well, they will come after the people move in." We make fine plans. The city of Toronto has done this, and so have many other cities, and then we have left them to be implemented by somebody who might come along to do it. Eatons—

Mr. Sargent: They have a responsibility too.

Mr. Young: Yes, they brought a beautiful plan and the city said, "Fine, let us see it implemented, with certain modifications." We have had other plans in the Metro area and always we say we will lay out the plans and then we expect the private entrepreneur to move in and carry these plans out. Then the argument starts because the entrepreneur wants the bigger dollar value; the city council often wants to build as much social value into it as possible. Then you have the struggle, and very often the entrepreneur goes away and says, "I cannot afford to do it."

Now, on the south side of Queen Street we see something which perhaps points the way to the future. Instead of a city simply being a referee, you see, between the planners, and the private developers, the city moved in, bought the land, acquired it, and then said, "We invite private enterprise to build here under certain specific conditions, something which will harmonize with the new city hall." And while there were some difficulties in bringing this to fruition, the fact is it did happen, and this perhaps means that there is something here which we can look at.

Of course, fundamentally, we must make up our minds what we want of our cities, we have to say that cities should be built for people, not for the private entrepreneur, and not for the builder, or the subdivider. They should be built primarily for the people who are going to live there in the future. If these cities are to be the centre of a new region, one of the fundamental things—and I come back to what we have talked about so often in this Legislature as far as Metro Toronto is concerned—is GO transit, rapid transit, if we are to think in terms of regional planning fanning out from the cities, then rapid transit ought to be in the very centre. We have to have transit considered to be just as important as sewers or water mains or streets. It often happens in other cities around the world, at the time the city is built, transit is there. And it is there when the people move into the new subdivisions and the new towns. When it is there, then people do not get to depend upon the car as the means of transportation quite as much as if it is not.

I think of the kind of thing which is being done in some of the cities where planning has gone some distance. If I can find my notes, I find the city of Manchester, for example—which is not much different than Metro Toronto in size, a little smaller—there the city has acquired the land in the heart of the city, is building and has built satellite towns outside to move the people out; and those people have the first right to move back into the new structures when they are built. But the thing that struck me about the city of Manchester is that they have on their planning staff 100 qualified planners and architects, and 300 people on their planning staff.

In Preston, in the county of Lancashire, which is a regional government with 2.5 million people, you have 100 qualified planners with 530 people on the planning staff. Now, this is the kind of planning which we have not even thought about on this continent yet. In Amsterdam, in Holland, you have 120 professionals on the planning staff. In Hamburg, 80 planners and 80 traffic engineers—these are the experts—and in the city of Rotterdam, you have 125 planners.

Mr. Sargent: What has this got to do with the beer strike?

Mr. Young: This may not have much to do with the beer strike, I say to the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, but it does have a tremendous amount to do with the kind of cities we are going to live in in the future. What I am saying to this Minister—and if he is serious about this whole matter of the future as he indicated this morning, then we are going to shift our emphasis—we are going to find that in the days ahead we are going to plan communities far more carefully than we have in the past. We mentioned the other day in connection with another item in this House that in the city of Copenhagen, in the great apartment complexes, they build day nurseries right in for the working mothers; they are there as part and parcel of that civilization. We do not do that yet, we do not consider that important here.

We have in Amsterdam, park space which in that country is almost incredible, where you have what they call the densest population per square mile in the world—900 people per square mile. And yet, in the city of Amsterdam, you have park space, one park established there which has 2,100 acres. Two other parks larger than this now developing in that area of great land scarcity. Wide boulevards are there—and open spaces where people can play and people can breathe. In other words these cities are being designed for people, not for builders and land speculators. I suppose in the long run, what was said about Stockholm comes back to us on this continent. As the article pointed out, Stockholm did acquire their land as these other cities have acquired land, brought it in the public domain. I have another quote here from a person who again can hardly be called a radical—if I can find it—a Mr. Churchill:

> Colonel Edward Churchill, the builder of Expo 1967, said yesterday that to encourage better projects, cities should own all the land and remove the profit-making factor from being uppermost in the minds of developers.

This was on June 11, 1968.

> No land in the city should be owned by anyone but the city, he said. The idea should be to get land assembly out of development.

> The Colonel, who is co-ordinating plans for the Northumberland Straits crossing between New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, said he favours the entrepreneural system of development although it has its problems. One of the problems of private development is that it must be a piecemeal thing, as it is hard to establish criteria not based on the profit motive. But if everything was left to the government on the other hand, he said, nothing would happen and development would tend to be uncreative projects.

So he opts for the same kind of thing which so many of the European cities have discovered to be practical—that land is assembled by the city or by the municipality.

And then they can put development plans on that land, and then say to private enterprise, "Come in and help us build, but build according to these particular plans." The city of Stockholm had to expropriate the whole heart of the city for redevelopment; they built the first great office tower, the first basic part of a marketplace there, and then when private enterprise saw how it was going and that every bit of space was rented, they said: "Let us build the next one". And so, the next four were built by the private enterprisers where the government said, "Be our guest" on a 99-year lease, renewable every 20 years, that is, reviewed every 20 years. The city of Farsta, one of the satellite cities of Stockholm, was built by private enterprise, by a consortium of large corporations; but the land was owned by the city and the city plan drawn up by the city and then Farsta was built according to the specifications of the city planners, in co-operation with the planners of the private consortium.

This is the kind of future which I think must be faced if we are going to build real cities that have meaning in the province of Ontario. Along with this we could mention other things such as the face-lifting of existing areas, the cleaning up of our slums, and all that sort of thing. But I am simply saying to the Minister, and to this House today, that we have a tremendous challenge in renovating our cities, and we have not much time. We have been warned by planner after planner that the years are going by all too quickly and the costs are sky-rocketing with the years.

The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Davis) not long ago in this House, pointed out that while it is a costly business to educate our young people, education is an investment in the future that will pay off in the future. And while it may be a costly business to invest in the cities, that investment is something which will pay off in greater production and more efficiency in the days ahead. And, if we can combine our regional development with the renovation of our cities and building, with imagination and foresight, the new cities that are bound to emerge over the next few years, then we are getting some place in this province.

There has been a lot said in this House about the role of the federal government in this whole process. I am not going to go into that in detail today. But I will say this—that the kind of money which is going to be demanded for our city rejuvenation must come from the federal Treasury. They have the great taxing base; that is ultimately where it must come from. That means, simply, that this Minister—he is wide awake—if he is going to do his job, has got to work with the new Minister in Ottawa, making sure that the money flows in for these specific purposes.

I know we have these economic regions set up, which may be devices in some meassure to get federal money for economic purposes, I do not know. But the fact is that there must be co-ordination—provincial, municipal, federal—to see that the great fiscal resources are there, to put into rapid transit, to tear down the slums, to put the new kind of airy, spacious, liveable cities into the province of Ontario.

So, today, to this Minister, we simply say that we hope that he faces this task with realism and with determination. I have some speeches on my desk where he makes the statement—two of them use the same words—"we cannot afford the luxury of taking a leisurely approach to coping with the responsibility of designing and building the cities and the towns of the future." And he read that again today. "We have not the time to do it."

So today, Mr. Chairman, I say to this House, and to this Minister, that the challenge of renovation of our cities and the challenge of the renovation of the municipal government and giving it the power it ought to have, are the great challenges before this Minister, and we wish him well as he undertakes them.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the remarks of the member for York Centre and the member for Yorkview. Both, I think, have outlined many of the challenges, if not all of them, of the position of the Minister of Municipal Affairs.

I am intrigued with the idea of having some sort of a niche on these walls one hundred years from now, but I keep thinking of some of the various gargoyles that are around and I think, perhaps, I will settle for something less.

An hon. member: On the lawn covered with mildew.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, I think the matters raised cover a variety of topics, and rather than make any comments on them now, we will deal with them under the votes. So, I think we might carry right on.

On vote 1401:

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the attention of the hon. Minister a resolution that has been passed or approved by the council of the city of Windsor. It can have some important bearing, not only on the municipality, but on municipalities throughout the length and breadth of Ontario. It concerns the duplication of studies that may take place in various municipalities.

The council thinks that in The Department of Municipal Affairs there should be some type of division set up so that various municipalities throughout the province could obtain the reports and results of studies over a wide range of municipal operations, so that they themselves would not engage in studies that may be undertaken in other areas. In other words, what they would like is sort of a clearing house for ideas, and in that way save their own taxpayer some money.

I would like the Minister's comments on this, and ask him if he is considering the implementation of such a suggestion, or possibly, whether he has something similar to this actually in operation today?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, I replied to the city of Windsor yesterday. I do not think we have found the copy of the letter as yet, but it is here somewhere.

We pointed out to them that there are a number of facilities available now. We have in The Department of Municipal Affairs, I think, one of the best municipal libraries in the province. We do have a research section, and I think it would be fair to say that, in the six months that I have been there, they have not done all the research that they would have liked to have done because they have been working on specific projects and I think are going to continue to be. But hopefully, in their odd moments, they do get some time to do some pure research.

There are other facilities available for research. The federation of mayors and municipalities for Canada have quite a research section.

I undertook to the city of Windsor to have a further look at that resolution. I do not want to do anything that is going to duplicate something which is being done now either by us, or by others. It may be that some co-ordinating effort will be necessary.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, this is just exactly what we want—some clearing house somewhere in the province where they can go and attempt to find answers to the various problems they may have. I think the Minister is using the right approach.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I would like to directly discuss a matter that I discussed with the Minister and with the Deputy Minister earlier last week. The problem—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think that would come under vote 1402.

Mr. Deans: Vote 1402? Thank you.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this may or may not be the place to talk about basic exemption grants. Does the Minister want to discuss that here?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, there is an item for that under vote 1405.

Mr. E. A. Winkler (Grey South): Mr. Chairman, my remarks also are directed mainly at planning and, if the Minister so desires, I can wait until that particular item arises.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister, if under vote 1401, the appointment of commissioners of enquiry under section 320 of The Municipal Act should be discussed. I believe that is the relevant section.

I am referring to the appointment of his honour Judge S. L. Clunis as commissioner into the sale of lots by the municipality of Sandwich West, prior to the annexation of a portion of that township by the city of Windsor, as of January 1, 1966.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know what has become of the activities of that commission, but they do seem to be in abeyance and while I cannot discuss the matters within the terms of reference of the commission—which I believe the city of Windsor applied to the Minister to have broadened and they were not broadened—I would like to ask the Minister where the activities of the commission now stand, whether or not the commissioner is going to proceed to a conclusion and submit his report to the Minister and whether the Minister will release that report to us in the very near future.

This matter has been outstanding for a considerable length of time. The application by the city to have the terms of reference broadened so that enquiry could be made as to the names of the individuals who participated in any way in the sale of these lots was refused, I think, with consequent undue restriction on the objectives of the commission and consequently a denial to the citizens of Windsor and the public of information to which they were entitled.

I hope that the Minister, having turned down that request, will not allow this commission to simply pass into oblivion, but that we will have a report and have it in the near future.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, this perhaps might be more appropriate under 1404 but let us deal with it now. The commission was appointed by order-in-council on July 20, 1967. His honour Judge Clunis was appointed at that time to enquire into the sufficiency of the sale price of all land sold by the corporation in the township of Sandwich West—I think those were the terms of reference.

Now, the last report I had was sometime in April, which indicated his honour was scheduled to conclude his hearings during the latter part of March. Then we were advised by the counsel for the commissioner that the hearings had been completed and transcripts were in preparation.

There was no indication then of the time for submission of Judge Clunis' report, and it has not come to my attention. I will be glad to see what the delay is. It should be pointed out that the good people of Windsor have kept his honour Judge Clunis busy on a number of other matters and I think there is a shortage of judges in Windsor and I suspect this is the reason. But I will be glad to look into that and see where the status of it is now.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, under main office we have quite a substantial item for salaries, and so on. And in the annual report the Minister sets out a very useful diagram which is very helpful here. I was wondering if he would advise us as to what items are covered in the annual report.

As I see it, all the top items of the main office, but also the law branch, the administrative services branch, the municipal research branch—is that correct?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, there are four branches, if I can put it that way, under the main office, the main office itself being the Minister's office and the Deputy Minister's office, municipal research, the law branch, and administrative services. Included with the main office are the studies under local government reviews.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister advise the Legislature as to how much of item 4 is for outside experts that are retained, how much is going outside for consulting services, and how much of that amount is for staff that is detailed to work in that type of work?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On item 4, $325,000, I would think, would practically all be for outside services. Included in that item is some $300,000 for local government reviews, $20,000 for special enquiries—items which come up from time to time—and finally, there is a $5,000 item for a study which we are doing in conjunction with the regional development branch of Treasury, which is actually administering the project but we are paying for part of it. In answer to the member's question, all of that $325,000 would be for outside people.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of employing outside people is rather contrary to the concept of using the knowledge of local people rather than imposing outside experts' ideas upon them. I would feel that we should consider expending this money and getting much more out of it by hiring more qualified people within the department who are aware of the importance of gathering in and co-ordinating local opinion and expertise and developing plans thereby.

One of the great problems of developing plans is implementing them. You can develop a plan but the big problem is to have it accepted. The Minister, I know, has had experience in municipal work as an alderman and must recognize the suspicion with which the views of outside experts are viewed. Often they are people who have been associated with universities and not down to earth, everyday municipal governments.

I think in many instances these plans, including the Ottawa-Carleton and Metro plans, have been well conceived. Basically we have done a good job. This government deserves credit for leading, I think, the world in this form of co-ordinated borough government. But often what we are doing is we are imposing an idea from the top instead of developing it in co-ordination with the local people.

I submit that we would get far more effective results, we would have plans accepted more readily, were the Minister to change this policy of going to outsiders and instead using the money within his own department with men qualified and experienced in local government, hiring them within the department and putting them out in the field.

We have many leaders in local government who would be well qualified to organize these studies and consider them in their negotiations and studies. I submit that this item should not be spent outside; it should be spent within the department in co-ordination with the municipalities.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, I would like to answer the point that the member raised during his opening remarks, and perhaps this would be a good time to deal with it. I do not think that it is as serious as he described, or as cut and dried either.

Let me say first of all that when an area indicates that it would like a review of problems, we call it a local government review. They know that some change is needed, and perhaps that is as far as they have defined it, so they have come in the past and asked for this kind of assistance and we have proceeded down a certain path.

This is not to say that the path will not change, or our approach will not change. What has happened is that normally we will appoint a commissioner or commissioners from outside the government, often from academic circles, and sometimes from planning circles, who presumably bring in an independent and fresh point of view.

I doubt very much whether most municipalities would accept the department putting itself completely in the position of the Royal commission. What municipalities are looking for—and what we are looking for, frankly, because we admit that we do not have all the answers—is this independent, fresh approach.

Sometimes these people are more independent of pressure, if I can put it that way, than perhaps is palatable. My friend from Yorkview referred to a report in an area somewhere near here, and I think that we might describe it that way. But they do take this type of approach.

Now in this process and preparation of the data book, normally, and increasingly so, our own staff is involved in the research capacity of collecting the data and often acts as secretary to the commissioner, and so on. We involve our staff this way. But to date we have felt—and I am not saying that this will change—that an outside person presents a more independent and fresh approach which is more acceptable to the people involved.

Now, from that point on, once he has made one report—and let me say that I think some commissioners communicate better than others—I would suspect that those commissioners have a better idea of where they are going before they start on the job, because they have some ideas. But it is one of the by-products of the local government study, this educational process, and this interplay of ideas. I think for example, that in the Kitchener-Waterloo area, where there have been briefs, hearings, and now hearings about hearings—and I am not saying that there was a unanimity of opinions—but in that case, in the commissioner's, Dr. Fyfe's, and my view—and I rely on press reports, talks with members, and from people in the area—many things have been gotten out and on to the table. They recognize their problems. He is picking their minds and to some extent, they have been picking his mind. I do not know what kind of report he will write, and what he is going to recommend, but I would commend to any commissioners that we may appoint, that kind of involvement of the grass roots, which Dr. Fyfe has carried on.

However, no commissioner or study is imposing anything on anyone right now, because the commissioner reports, period. From then it is up to the government. They may adopt the report, or they may bury it, put it in limbo and do nothing about it—

Mr. Sargent: Since when has this changed?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: —or they may do nothing about it—

Mr. Sargent: When did you change your policy?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In that determination of what happens to that report—and I am being particular about Ottawa-Carleton—there was the closest possible involvement with the people from the time that we announced our intention to go ahead with Ottawa; the door was open to people from Ottawa-Carleton because we wanted their views and ideas. In fact, a committee was set up to work with us in the preparation of the legislation, and we tried as much as possible to involve the grass roots approach in this overall technique. I hope that answered some of the points that were raised.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in this question of commission enquiries and research, this is the most important department in government insofar as the people of Ontario are concerned. The life of every person in Ontario is affected by The Department of Municipal Affairs. Heretofore we have had a Minister in charge of this department who has been commended in this House for the job that he has done. But believe me—and I would say this to his face if he were here—at the municipal level, or the grass roots of Ontario, he had the policy that every time that you get a group of mayors, and reeves together, or the assessment groups together, he took it upon himself to flog them about the state of affairs in Ontario's municipalities. If there ever was needed in this province, a man who can do a selling job and work with the people, and work for them, he is needed now, in this department.

I, at this point, have never been impressed with this Minister who has taken over here. I think and I thought that he was a lightweight to start with. His staff is going around saying that he is now doing his homework and getting in but time will tell, and if he is, then I will be the first man to say so. I think that he has got an extremely big job to do. We have had in this province, these lackeys and consultants floating around for years in municipal deals as consultants. They are on the list, I guess, to be chosen to give a report on this and that; and the reports that they bring in are pretty well law by the time that they get down to the municipal level, so he must have a new policy over here.

Getting to the point, I would like to know: You have $3,000 in here for commissions. How much did you pay Hardy for the job at the Lakehead? And while he is thinking about that, Mr. Chairman, I would also like to know who sets the tab for a study or report of this nature? Do you call for tenders? You do not do this, and this is what I am concerned about. So, if you are on the list, then you are on the gravy train with the government, and we have had these people over the years who do your consultant work. Believe me, I have not been impressed by some of the people that you have on your list.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They are not too impressed with you, either.

Mr. Sargent: Well, that is all right, this is only one man's opinion. I happen to have been in the position of running a municipality very successfully, and for 11 years. I knew what I was talking about, I assume, and I found a lot of people who do not know what they are talking about.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): What is new? Did you intend them to send a letter to all the urban geographers and ask how much they want to do a study of a municipality? How would you tender?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: This is interesting. In any other area of business, you call for tenders—

Mr. Pitman: But these are human beings.

Mr. Sargent: —and qualifications. But it is the same old trick. It is the "in" group here who get these jobs.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Some of these fellows are no better qualified that I am, and that is not very good.

Interjections by hon. members.

An hon. member: Yes, but there are very few of them left.

Mr. Sargent: I will go along with the leader of the New Democratic Party, I am not very smart. But I have the right to ask questions for my people. For a long time this department has been in need of a good shaking up. I have had correspondence, and a dozen phone calls on one transfer of property in the last month. Now, I have 60,000 people—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think this will come under the planning vote.

Mr. Sargent: I do not care, it is under your department. You are the fellow who has got to face up to it. In a private business, you would go broke in one week; what are you doing in this business? I want to hear his answer.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The total cost to May 31 for the Lakehead report, and this includes what was paid to Mr. Hardy, and the research people, for the publication of the report and the other expenses to May 31 and accumulative, not just for the one year—amount to $65,743.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Hardy received $65,000—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I did not say that. I just got through saying that I have not the breakdown of that figure—what was paid to Mr. Hardy, what was paid to the research people, what was paid for travelling expenses, other expenses related to this study, what was paid for the publication of the report, the data book and so on, total $65,743.

Mr. Sargent: What did Mr. Hardy get?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have not got that breakdown. I will be glad to get it for you but we do not have it here.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I think those of us in this group have no objection at all to independent people taking a look at what is needed in regional government. This is what we advocate. We think that the best brains ought to be secured and that they ought to take a fresh look, as the Minister says, at these areas. I would like to ask him a couple of questions about this fresh look.

In the Waterloo county area, I am wondering what the terms of reference are there? How big an area is taken in? Is the outside perimeter circumscribed or is the term of reference that whatever is needful for making a proper region here should be looked at?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, by the terms of reference by the order-in-council all of Waterloo county but there is nothing to prevent him from looking farther afield. I think he has invited briefs and, I think, received briefs from Guelph. I do not know how much further afield he has gone than that.

Mr. Young: Then these people are not circumscribed in any sense. In the term if they feel the boundaries ought to be pushed out, they are free to recommend?

The other question I had for the Minister is in connection with the reports that have been sort of lying dormant for some time. I say that, as far as we knew, nothing has happened. That may be an overstatement because we—or at least, it is accurate as far as we are concerned, but as far as the Minister is concerned it may not be.

The Niagara study and the Peel-Halton study have been sitting and I wonder if the Minister would comment as to the progress in connection with these two studies?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, to answer the member frankly and honestly, I am now getting back to these other studies. We talked about grass roots involvement in these things. It becomes a tremendous involvement by the Minister and I think there must be, because the people who are being legislated feel that they should, at all times during this process, be in a position to talk to the Minister—to the staff, yes, but also to the Minister.

I think it is safe to say that for about three or four or five months the staff of the department and the Minister were turned upside down with the Ottawa-Carleton legislation. There were questions to be answered, there were people to be seen, studies to be made and legislation to be drafted and everything that goes with it.

That was our programme, if I can put it that way, for this session of the Legislature. We are now turning our attention, I am turning my attention—that is the beginning of the process to some of the other reports which have come in and some should report, presumably, by the end of the year. Muskoka should report this fall. Kitchener-Waterloo should report this fall. So we are thinking in terms of a legislative programme for another year along the lines of some of the reports that have come in.

If you want me to be more specific than that, I could perhaps say in Peel-Halton, because you mentioned that one, I think the design which was suggested in Peel-Halton was not acceptable generally to the local people. We have got to start there over again and think of something. In the absence of our doing any thinking, or any suggesting, they are doing a great deal out there themselves.

Peel, in particular, have had a number of meetings. They have quite a few ideas. I have not met with them, I have met with a couple of municipalities at the north end—not to try and give them answers, but just to hear their viewpoint. They may well come up with something on their own and I hope we can get involved in that process. I think probably on the basis of Peel alone and Halton alone—and hopefully, perhaps, something jointly at a later date.

I hope to get involved in that situation shortly, but I would say that the specific proposals made by Mr. Plunkett seem to be in limbo or farther out at this point.

Mr. Young: Well, Mr. Chairman, could I pursue this matter further?

As I see it, one of the big problems with delay is that delay is a sort of self-perpetuating business.

In the Niagara peninsula, the local people were involved in the regional study. They were sold on the idea that something was needed and the key people there were willing to sit down and talk and listen. Then, the report came in and, because of delays, you had changes in municipal government. Those local people then, not having been involved in the first part, seeing their own little empires again being disrupted, began to build up opposition.

This is inevitable if delay is too long in these studies. I would hope that the Minister will see that there is real importance in pushing forward and getting these things done, and done quickly, because this kind of delay can be self-defeating.

Another thing the Minister said is a bit disturbing. He said that this year—the Ottawa study had to have priority.

That is all right, but does this mean then that we are only going to look forward to one study per year coming into the realm of legislation? Does it mean that there will be more than this—that likely we can look forward to several of these studies being implemented and if necessary, the—

Mr. Sargent: Dozens of studies.

Mr. Young: Pardon?

Mr. Sargent: Dozens of studies.

Mr. Young: I do not know if you can complete dozens in one year, but certainly you can do more than one. Certainly, with the backlog there is now, it seems to me that the Minister ought to make dead certain that over this next 12 months more than one more regional government comes into existence in this province.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would agree. I think that we have learned a great deal from Ottawa-Carleton—learned how to manage our time.

As I said in my opening remarks, I hope that the pace would quicken to other points. Of course, I think we have to wait for some indication of government policy and the white paper arising out of Smith's particular recommendations. We are, of course, involved with that, as far as the government task forces are concerned.

The other problems, particularly, are those relating to the Peel-Halton study as to what is to come out of the new tariffs, goals, plans—

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, just in this connection, the Minister reminds me of a problem here. I noticed that in his speech of last February 27, he indicated that we are going to move forward. He mentioned the Smith report and the five-year item, and I quizzed him about this in the House. He said that after the May series of conferences he would decide to follow a general course suggested—I am sorry, that is not the quote:

> Reference is made to a target date for the preparation of a plan of action for regional government throughout Ontario. There could very well be certain areas of the province where new regional type governments could be established before that date—

Before the five years—and then, I asked:

> The Minister is not backing away from the possibility of establishing regions in five years?
> My point is—

Said the Minister:

> That if the government decides to go down the path of regional government—if, then I think the five year suggested timetable made by Smith could probably be attained.

In other words, he makes that a statement.

But then the rather startling thing to me was that, a little later on, in a speech made in Stratford on Sunday, July 7, word for word he repeats [you will have to slap the wrists of your script writers, Mr. Minister] that the five-year period is the target for the study.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They were such jewels the first time.

Mr. Young: I see—so the Minister is not backing down on the statement he made in the House to me at that time. This is simply the script writer, not realizing what the Minister has said, and getting those paragraphs back into the speech.

Fine, I am delighted to know that the Minister then feels the sense of urgency, in that he is not—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am delighted to know that you are reading my speeches so carefully.

Mr. Young: Well, we like to—

Mr. Sargent: We know you do not write any.

Mr. Young: Then I think we have the assurance from the Minister that it is not just a case of studying for five years, it is a case of action, so that regional government can move within the five years.

The other thing that I would like the Minister to comment on at the same time is whether or not he really has a policy. He say "if", you see, in two cases and then emphasizes the "if". Does this government really feel that regional municipal government must come and is it committed to that phase of development?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, there is no government statement to that effect.

Mr. Young: Then we are talking in a vacuum here today?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think the white paper will say something about that.

Mr. Young: When might we expect it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In the fall.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might just ask a question in regard to this estimate on the statement that the member for Yorkview has brought forward. It relates to this main office expenditure, I think, and this does deal with the whole question of regional government.

Last afternoon in the House, when the Provincial Treasurer's estimates were before the Legislature, I questioned him on the whole role of the Cabinet committee, and the advisory committee in relation to the provincial planning. He indicated that, by 1969, it is expected that there will be a provincial development policy, and this would include land use and many of the matters which the Minister himself mentioned in his remarks earlier—economic and physical planning, which he indicated would be a natural role for the development of Municipal Affairs, and of course, the problem of urban growth.

What bothers me, Mr. Minister, and Mr. Chairman, through you, is that this is being done within the purview of The Department of the Treasury, and largely in terms of what is best for the economy of the province. I was very heartened by the phraseology which the Minister used in his own speech this morning, in which he said that we were dealing essentially, and here I quote, "with the quality of the environment which we live in."

What I am afraid of, if the provincial development policy comes out in 1969, is that if the decision of the government is to carry on with some form of regional government —and certainly it is in this specific area, because we have already had this in this session, and we have all these studies which apparently, are moving toward a provincial policy in that area—is not the area of activity of the Minister going to be severely limited?

Are we not going to answer this question in economic terms? That is where Ontario can best place its industry and, in terms of transportation, markets and so on, and other methods which I think have a definite priority will be proscribed by decisions being made within The Department of the Provincial Treasurer.

That is a rather philosophical question, I know, but I would like the Minister's comment on this.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Before I do, I have the figure that the member for Grey-Bruce asked for. Out of the $65,000, Mr. Hardy, over a three-year period, was paid approximately $20,683.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of information. A man works three years for $20,000? Boy, he must be a top-notch man.

Mr. Chairman: Is the Minister going to comment further?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Let me say to the hon. member for Peterborough that I do not have the answer to his philosophical question. We are working very closely—and I think that we have to work more closely—with The Provincial Treasurer's Department, and formerly with The Department of Trade and Development and with the regional development people. It is interesting—and I think that the member for Yorkview commented on this—perhaps that the Provincial Treasurer and I had appeared to say two different things.

The Provincial Treasurer said yesterday that regional government was not necessarily tied in with regional development. Perhaps

I said something a little different today. I would agree with the Provincial Treasurer, but add three words at this time. My own personal view is that if the regional governments are large enough then there will be a much greater tie-in between the regional development and regional government.

It may be that those areas are contiguous, but they may not be. It may be thought desirable ultimately to have a number of municipalities who in turn form an economic region. The problems are common over that region. I do not know, but I do not think, certainly, that anyone is satisfied in terms of a programme of regional government with the present ten economic regions of the province. I do not think that anyone, if I may use that vernacular, bought those regions, although they might be ultimately regions of regional government.

Mr. Young: They were set up to fit the federal computer!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Perhaps some place back in antiquity, they were originally done by DBS. They are useful for their purposes. I think that someday there will be a growing together of the two, because from my point of view regional government, or just government, planning and development are one and the same thing.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in this area of regional government—would the Minister advise in future regional government movements? Is it your policy to continue to have the province pay for the regional mayor's salary? If we are to have ten regional governments, wherein his salary is paid for by the province, then we have another form of bureaucracy, because that is controlled from Queen's Park here. What is your reason for paying the Ottawa-Carleton mayor's salary? Why should it not be charged against the taxes down there?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You will realize that we are only paying for it during the initial stage. Just as was the case in Metropolitan Toronto, originally we undertook to pay the initial expenses for Ottawa-Carleton and shall continue to do so until the end of the year.

Mr. Chairman: Vote—

Mr. Sargent: Just take your time! I did not hear what you said there.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We have undertaken to pay the initial expenses in Ottawa-Carleton till the end of this year.

Mr. Sargent: There is no reason why that should not be charged against the municipalities down there. I do not think I should have to pay for that out of my taxes! I am against paying for his salary out of taxes. The principle is wrong.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1401? The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a word regarding the area government review study in the county of Waterloo, under the direction of Dr. Fyfe. It was my privilege to sit and listen to a lot of recommendations given last spring, and under his chairmanship thousands of people have put in hours of work on the presentations.

They have been received from all the municipalities in the county and beyond, the planning boards and department and social councils and so on, and a tremendous mass of information has been gathered. Coupled with this, I think that the people of the area have a pretty good idea of what type of government and development—with the consultation of the planning body which now exists in the area—would best suit their needs for the future.

But with the developments which are coming along now, the large housing developments that have been released—first of all there was the Peel Village development in Preston, which was, sir, more or less backhandedly sponsored by this government, and announced by the government. In recent days they have introduced two other large schemes where 30,000 people are planned for an area in the county—people in the area are beginning to wonder whether the official right hand knows what the left hand is doing when it comes to regional planning in our area.

We were told originally that the Peel Village development was incongruous by all the local planning departments, and eventually, by the same old process, the resistance was broken down, and it is now accepted by the city of Preston—although not by the people of the area to which the development is going to be given.

We are told that OHC has been linked to a reported land scheme in the twin-city area which could get housing for approximately 30,000 people. Land purchase is said to have been made in Waterloo township and to the east of the Grand River. Government spokesmen have refused to confirm the government's connection with the scheme, but reliable twin-city sources indicate that there is no doubt that the corporation is to be involved.

What I would like to know is when will the local planners—the people involved and the local leaders in the area, know what is going to happen to the area? They carry on their planning year after year and suddenly the government seems to move in and say, "Look this is what we are going to do in your area."

This makes the Fyfe commission report look nothing more than an exercise in futility. We heard what the Hardy report costs up in the Lakehead and I am sure that this one will cost equally as much.

There is another report here which says that Dr. Fyfe, commissioner of the Waterloo area local government study, said he had inklings of the development from the Ontario housing corporation some time ago. Now what about all the people who submitted briefs? They did not know that the government was planning a 30,000-resident area to one side of the city, and another one for the other side of the city.

An hon. member: Thirty thousand people.

Mr. Good: Thirty thousand people, I am sorry—this is is the sort of thing that people are wondering, back in the twin-city area; when is some consultation going to be had with the local planners and the local government?

This, in my estimation, is not a potential thing; the forms have been bought, I understand, the companies have moved in; the people are back on their land for five years. But we should have some type of control over speculation—I think developers have to assemble land in this area—but I think it is high time that we get the speculators out of the land business and let the developers look after it.

Could you just answer a few questions and let me know when the local planners and the local area planning board are going to find out what is going on here?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You have asked a number of questions. I would point out to you that both the Peel Village proposal and the Kitchener annexation proposal are both before the Ontario municipal board.

Those are matters of public knowledge; they have been debated, dealt with, argued about, in the local area. Now, I am not aware that Ontario housing has bought property in the area.

Mr. Good: This is what I mean.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, let me say this; you just got through saying that we should be taking the speculation out of building homes, and if Ontario housing felt—and I have no idea whether they have or not at this point bought property—I would think this is one of the—and apparently you say it is five years away before it is going to be used. Presumably, this would be one of the best ways to end speculation in that area if they have bought that amount of property, to put it into their land bank for the future. I cannot think of a better way to cut out speculation.

Mr. Good: How does this fit in with Dr. Fyfe's report?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, let me say this: That Ontario housing corporation has been urged by municipalities in Waterloo county to do this sort of thing—I do not know whether they have or not—to take some of the speculation out of the development of land. Central mortgage and housing corporation, I understand, were either approached, or looked into that area themselves. We have the Peel Village proposal, we have the Kitchener annexation proposal—I am hopeful that we will have Dr. Fyfe's proposals as quickly as we can, his report and proposals.

During the time of the study there cannot be a vacuum; life goes on, developers, Ontario housing corporation and everybody else, maintain their interest and nothing is frozen during this study. But I would agree with the member completely that the sooner the study is completed—the hearings have now been completed, Dr. Fyfe, as I understand it, is writing his report—the sooner his report is written, his proposals are out, and presumably some of these things will fit into a pattern.

Mr. J. R. Breithaupt (Kitchener): Mr. Chairman, there is only one item that I might contend with in that the Minister has just made a statement that really nothing is frozen during the time of such a report. Surely the fact is that although the matter, I trust, is now being to some extent redeemed, the annexation proposal by the city of Kitchener was, in fact, frozen as a decision made, presumably, by Dr. Fyfe in this matter. Meanwhile the other proposal with respect to Peel Village taking place in another portion of the county and another riding, was basically approved, at least approved in principle as my colleague, the member for Waterloo North has said. It would appear to me that the Minister is completely correct in saying that nothing can be frozen in that development. The basic approach to the continuing growth of the province must continue and on occasion the reports which are called for may be out of date or may not have all the facts because they are simply not available to the commissioner. However, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in the general operation of this department and in the instructions given or the information sought from the respective commissioners, there should be much more co-ordination between the facilities that the commissioner has and the information which he is seeking from the various municipalities.

Now, in the city of Kitchener, we have attempted to work with the commissioner and try to develop our point of view so far as the growth of Waterloo county is concerned. And as my colleague, the member for Waterloo North, is aware, the city of Waterloo and the township of Waterloo, areas which he represents, have also attempted to work towards the final and proper development of our portion of Ontario.

But to return to his comments, it does seem that the various studies and the various plans which are put forward by the individual municipalities, by their planning departments, by various organizations; all seem to be confused by the fact that there are other developments going on. For example, sir, the reeve of Waterloo township was not aware of many of these things and as well, indeed, the commissioner may not be aware of them.

And to suddenly try to develop a programme whereby in the middle of a study an announcement of a large development such as the Peel Village development is made without the knowledge of the commissioner, or without the knowledge of the reeve of the township abutting onto that land, seems to me to be somewhat of an extreme manner of secrecy. Surely we can trust the individual representatives in the municipalities to come up with a more sound approach if they know what is going on.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, of course, the Peel Village announcement was made some months ago; it was made by a private developer. I do not know how you are going to stop that kind of an announcement going on. I do not know how you are going to stop Kitchener saying they want 10,000 acres of Waterloo township. How are you going to prevent those things?

Mr. Breithaupt: I agree, I do not think you are, but surely the announcement, in fact, was made in the development at least, in the presence of the Premier? Similarly the annexation sought by Kitchener for the development of this entire area was basically rejected and we find out later the rejection was made presumably through the view that Dr. Fyfe had that such an annexation would be upsetting to what the name of the eventual community would be, as though the name of the community has anything to do with the need for development in the area.

It seems to be a difficult matter for the Minister to resolve, and I do not for a moment think he can lightly deal with it. I think it is a serious matter and it is one which, no doubt, he faces every day in the overall development of other areas in the province. Surely the same situation pertains in the Ottawa-Carleton area. It no doubt pertains in the St. Catharines area and in various others where annexation is not moving as quickly as the demand for land is moving. Surely the Minister has this difficulty, and I would encourage him to attempt to resolve it so that once again the local officials have more basic knowledge.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1401? The member for Kent has been trying to get the floor for some time.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, I know the hon. Minister is new in this portfolio, but listening to the comments this afternoon, I would like to ask the Minister, has his government announced that we are going to have regional government across the province of Ontario? Is that the decision of this department, Mr. Chairman?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, the member for Yorkview asked a similar question and I said "no". And I will say "no" again at this point.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Recent experience, Mr. Chairman, teaches me to be very careful about what vote things fall in. May I ask where the finances are voted here for the local offices of this department?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: What kind of offices?

Mr. Sopha: The Minister's office. The office known as The Department of Municipal Affairs. I am going to speak about the offices in my constituency, if I can find the vote.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: For example, in the member's constituency we have a planning office and we have an assessment office which, appropriately, would come under those votes, 1402 or 1404.

Mr. Sopha: I am very grateful to the Minister.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: But if it is offices generally, perhaps it might.

Mr. Sopha: Well, I do not know what your offices do in Sudbury. I have had contact with most of the offices of the provincial government in Sudbury. I have not had the pleasure to come into contact with this Minister's offices and I wanted to enquire what they do. I have had the privilege—perhaps you will permit me to say modestly—that in all of the amalgamations and annexations that have taken place in recent years, I have had the privilege of being counsel for one or other municipality, and I have never encountered the Minister's people. May I enquire just precisely what they do and what services they offer?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, in Sudbury in particular, there are three branches represented. The assessment branch is represented, and I think what they would do in that area would be obvious. The administration branch is represented and they deal mainly with the smaller municipalities which need our help and our services—the improvement districts, the unorganized territory. And finally, the community planning branch is located there.

Mr. Sopha: Then we get down to the meat of the situation. Which of the offices of your department was it that wanted to leave town?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, that great problem was resolved and they all decided they were happy in Sudbury so which one it was really does not matter.

Mr. Sopha: Yes, a very strange impetus, I must say. Considering that in the environs of Sudbury some 150,000 people live—and with all respect to my friend from North Bay, he represents about 45,000 here—it was a strange impetus to me, indeed, to hear along the grapevine that your offices wanted to fly the coop and set up at North Bay.

One wonders what there is about our community that led to this stimulus for flight from it. And it makes one wonder—and I say aloud here—it makes one wonder, in view of the great desire to leave, just what interest they have in the development of the Sudbury region.

And I merely add the footnote to it—as I say, I do not know those individuals—it is very strange to me that, as I have been connected with every amalgamation and annexation, two to come up, one on July 25, one on August 7; the one on the 25th we are going to seek to amalgamate 6 townships on the east side, on August 7 we are going to seek to annex and amalgamate 4 townships on the west side, I find it rather incredible that being involved in important moves like that, the only people I have never encountered are The Department of Municipal Affairs. I have never seen them, heard from them, never seen any indication of any interest. They never furnished any information or assistance, guidance, asked any questions, expressed any interest in the new groupings that are taking place in the Sudbury basin. The only thing I ever hear about The Department of Municipal Affairs is they want to leave town, the whole bunch of them. They had the premises rented in North Bay from a good Tory, a whole floor of a building, and were all set at the end of the month to take off for North Bay until—and let the record declare—you know who caught them? The member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Demers), he caught them.

To his eternal praise, let it be said here that he caught them and he scotched the snake. He would be too modest to tell it here, but I am going to tell it for him. He caught them red-handed and as a result of his efforts—and I hear all this on the grapevine—he prevented the move. So I sympathize with my friend from Nipissing and whether they like us or not, we still have them.

So I hope the first thing that happens is that the Minister ascertain the ones who do not like us in our community, and he gets rid of them. He can send them to Sarnia, Sault Ste. Marie, Aklavik, James Bay or some place else, and get somebody there who will develop the same pride in our community as the ordinary residents have. Then this department will fulfill its total mission in the environs of the great Sudbury basin.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a number of questions. First of all, last year we passed the municipal and school tax credits for The Assistance to Elderly Persons Act, or an Act entitled that. Would the Minister please inform me how many grants—they are not grants actually, they are loans or credits—were made pursuant to that Act in the metropolitan area?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Would the member wait until vote 1405, and we can deal with it then?

Mr. Ben: I looked at 1405, Mr. Chairman, there is a Municipal Tax Assistance Act and there are a few others, but it does not cover this particular one. That is why I brought it up under main office. Would the Minister go over it again?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am sorry, 1407, the last item. The last item under 1407, we can deal with it then.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member for Humber have other questions on vote 1401?

Mr. Ben: Yes. On February 21, 1968, Mr. Chairman, the Minister stated at that time that the following month there would be meetings with smaller municipalities, and that a modified code—that is, a building code—might result from those meetings. Would the Minister tell us what happened at those meetings and when we can anticipate having—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is 1402, planning.

Mr. Ben: That is planning, is it? Community planning. All right, if you say so, I do not see it under there either.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are three areas that I would like to raise under this vote. The first one—at the risk of a brief repetition—I would like to go back to these local government studies that the Minister was commenting on and, more particularly, the timetable for their implementation. Quite frankly, I have been a little disturbed by the government's approach, studies that seemed sometimes to drift out into limbo.

Now, I have a suspicion that part of this is because there is not an overall approach and master plan. The Minister's predecessor tended to argue that you could not have a master plan, you had to work at it piecemeal and deal with the crises and the pressures as they arise. This may be true in the beginning but I think we have reached the stage where the urgency of this problem is so widely recognized that a master plan, or the shaping of a master plan, is not out of place.

I was interested, for example, in the Minister's comment that we have learned a lot from the Ottawa-Carleton study—and if I interpreted him correctly—in the timetable for implementing it. Well, if I may go back and give my own judgment, which may or may not be right, in the instance of the Mayo study in the Niagara peninsula, it was my impression that while there was a bit of flack—as there will always be in any municipality with regard to a given set of recommendations—generally speaking, this got the approval of the area.

Brock University held seminars, they played a very constructive and useful role. You had a great discussion of it by the local people, and then nothing happens. In my view, this is the kind of thing that should not be permitted, if a situation is urgent and if you had a study and get a report. You do the study of the studies in the community, the educational process. Then, it seems to me, is the time to arrive at a consensus and to move, and not to permit what my colleague quite rightly said, is an interregnum which encourages the inevitable parochial vested interests, to dig their heels in and ultimately frustrate the implementation of the report.

Now, by way of a variation, I would agree —not knowing anything of the detail, I confess, of the Plunkett report and its implementation in Peel-Halton—but certainly anybody who has been reading the papers and watching what happened there would have to agree that there was no consensus, no possible consensus. If you have that kind of a situation, act rather quickly, go back and do a further study. If it was an urgent enough situation to begin with, to do a study, I suggest it is an urgent enough situation—perhaps even more urgent—to move in and do a second study if the first one proves to be so unacceptable that you cannot operate on it.

In short, the plea I would make to the Minister—particularly as a new man in the post who has manifested some willingness to take a fresh approach—that in this area, studies should be in the context of a master plan, and when the studies are completed, there should be a timetable for their implementation that will not be so swift that you deny the opportunity for education at the local level. I had an impression in the one at the Lakehead that there was a bit of a tendency there.

I know the Minister is going to say he is going to be "damned if he does and damned if he does not"—in fact I am engaging in that now—but at the Lakehead level it seemed to me that you were rushing so that they did not have an opportunity to study the Hardy report, particularly when the Hardy report finally came out as being much broader in its context than many people thought, in the first instance, it was going to be. I think there was a very legitimate reason for a bit of a pause. But in other instances there should be a timetable of action, or going back to the drawing boards and doing the study all over again if it proves unacceptable.

However that it just by way of free advice to the Minister on this hot afternoon.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, let me say with Hardy—and perhaps I have learned a little lesson there in terms of timetabling—you have to think ahead and if something is to happen at the Lakehead—without committing myself as to whether I think it should or should not at this point, because we have not expressed a view on the report other than a couple of small items in it—you have to think in terms of legislation, really, I suppose, now and some time in the next eight months. And it became pretty important that we got local reaction before the summer started, so that we could go on from there. Then, if it were thought desirable, we could draw up legislation in the fall for legislation next winter.

You put it off—in that particular instance a matter of a couple of months' delay would have put the whole thing off—or you could have put the whole thing off for a year, but your point is, I think, probably well taken. The other point which I think you have made is to strike while the iron is hot. In the case of Niagara, I am told—and I have now read through the comments on the Mayo report, there were three areas of major concern, I think. One was the administration of justice, and secondly education. Both those things have now disappeared. Thirdly, the costs, and particularly the costs related on the assessment base. Those three items not being resolved at that time, I think, perhaps made it difficult for the department to foresee.

During the interim it is my observation, however, that the interest has not lessened, in fact it has perhaps increased. There is perhaps some air of inevitability, I do not know. But generally, I would agree with you, and I might say particularly to that end I have said in the last six months on a number of occasions no more studies until we get some of these under our belt. We may well have to launch one or two more but I want to slow the process down in total so that we could get on and be in a position to strike while the iron was hot.

Mr. MacDonald: What about the master plan concept?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The master plan concept? I would agree that this is going to be inevitable. We are going in about four different directions, or at least I would like to be going in about four different directions. I have not got the staff at this moment to go in those four directions at once, but we are working on that. We have the studies that are under way. We have some fires that we would like to light—if I can put it that way—where we think there should be some action generated. We have some fires which, quite frankly, might be better put out for the time being. And finally we cannot lose sight of what is going to happen if there is an indication from the government that in five years we should have that kind of a master plan. So that means going ahead in about four different directions at once, and I admit to you that at this point in time we do not have the staff to do it. I hope that we will.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I had two other points but at this point, can we tidy it up, and I will concede the floor to my colleague? I would like to follow up on the Minister's comments that we do not have the staff. I think this is so basic that I would like to interject on the remarks of the leader of my party.

I cannot help feeling that this is a paramount problem. I am not trying to flatter the Minister when I say that I think there are two departments in this government where the greatest expansion and the most exciting developments are going to take place. One is The Department of Education, the other is The Department of Municipal Affairs, and I would suggest to the Minister that he has not the staff, he has not got a particle of the staff he is going to need if he is going to be able to do the kind of things that he talked about this morning, because we are going towards an urban society. This is going to determine the kind of quality of life which takes place in this province. As the Minister was speaking I was just looking through the book at the expenditures on main office for the various departments and I think it is rather interesting. Now, I realize that the community planning branch is in a sense a part of his main office, but Municipal Affairs is expending $1.3 million; Lands and Forests, $3 million; Health, $7 million; Education—once again $1.3 million. But The Department of Education is so diverse and is established throughout the entire province to such an extent that main office does not really represent salaries in that particular department. Trade and Development—$3 million, nearly $4 million;

Transport—$1.5 million; Correctional Services —nearly $3 million. It seems to me that this is basic. I think—and I speak not so much to the Minister as to this entire government—that they should get on with it and recognize that The Department of Municipal Affairs is an important aspect for the rest of this century.

Now, I come to the point that my leader was talking about before. We have a number of these studies and I think a pattern is emerging from various studies. Sometimes, particularly in the Plunkett report, that pattern is not there at all and I think the Minister quite rightly this afternoon indicated that we are going to have to take another look and find a way of getting this area into this pattern. But it is going to be an immense amount of work in co-ordinating all of these studies, co-ordinating them into a master plan; it is going to take an immense number of people. I have had a good deal to do with the Minister's department, as he realizes, particularly with the community planning branch, and may I say that I know of no part of this government which is more co-operative, more effective, more efficient? But may I say that I would not work for the Minister if he were the last employer in this entire province?

Those men, I think, are not only over-worked—they are over-worked all weekend. The whole thing is ludricous that you be concerned, as you said, have four fires burning; they should all be burning and there should be many more that should be lit and they should all be co-ordinated into a single fire, if I can carry on the Minister's pattern of thought just a few moments ago. But I suggest to him that not only does he not have the staff, but I have the greatest reluctance in believing that the staff would become available if he wanted them tomorrow. It is very much like the Minister of Health who may very well like to set up schools for emotionally disturbed children or centres for emotionally disturbed children, but the staff is not there. And really what I would like to do at this point is ask what is the Minister doing to try to get that staff, to try to train them? What are our universities doing? I know that some of the people in my area have some colourful epithets for some people who come into their township and they all come from overseas—"we never see a Canadian."

Well, of course, as the member for Yorkview mentioned, if a city the size of Toronto has 200 or 300 planners in Great Britain, obviously they have planning programmes there in their universities, and I would hope that we would have them in the colleges of applied arts and technology in Ontario. And I hope that the Minister has a dynamic plan for providing staff because it is going to be needed, if he is going to carry any part of the kind of picture which he painted this morning.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1401?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, if I may talk to the two remaining points. Again, the point to raise is of the same general nature but with regard to enquiries rather than local government study. The Minister indicated that the enquiry that was being conducted by a member of the judiciary down in the Windsor situation had got lost, and he is going to enquire to find out what happened last April. Quite frankly, I think this kind of enquiry into an urgent situation, that was sufficiently suspect and worrying, should not be permitted to become lost in this fashion. Sometimes the suggestion has come from the Opposition that there should be time limits when reports can be made. I recognize that this is often not a very practical kind of proposal because the judge may have other things to do and he may discover that the enquiry is a much more complexed one than he originally anticipated.

But there is a happy medium and I think we have gone way past the happy medium. In the same category, what has happened, for example, to the enquiry that the Prime Minister said he was going to establish into the controversial business of a certain member of the London city council who was forced to resign his seat and then had to resign his employment so that he could reclaim his seat? It strikes me that this is a serious infringement on civil rights of civil servants at the municipal level. It was going to be investigated—this is the way the Prime Minister got it out of the political pot, so to speak, in advance of the election. What has happened to that study?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Dealing with the Windsor study first, I would agree; it has gone on for much too long. The local municipality pays the bills—I suppose we supplied the commissioner, but they pay the bills ultimately. Perhaps we lost interest at that point, I do not know, but it should not have dragged on this long.

With regards to the one in London, I think I answered this question in the House. If not, I have indicated to the federation of labour and several other groups who have been in touch with me about it.

This was brought to my attention, I think, probably, in January or February, following the Prime Minister's announcement of—well, I suppose about a year ago now, 13 months ago now—that a committee would be put up or would be set up. I think it was, in fact, set up a couple of months later. At that point, the terms of reference, if you recall, were broadened somewhat to include university boards of governors.

The committee was set up and chaired by the general municipal counsel from our department, consisting of a representative from The Department of Education, a representative from the civil service commission, and one from The Department of the Attorney General. Mr. Yates has had one sickness after the other. He is better now. Along about Febraury, it came to my attention it was not progressing very quickly, because of the chairman's sickness.

I got in touch with the Attorney General and asked him—we felt the chairman should be a lawyer—if he would find a lawyer to chair the committee. He has in fact done so. I understand they are getting along very well, but I told the Prime Minister to begin with, and the federation of labour and others, that I was frankly embarrassed about the situation.

It was one of those things where illness intervened and the committee did not go ahead as it should have. I would hope we will come up with an answer before too long.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, while in London let me raise, if I might, the Schoales affair.

Quite frankly, I am puzzled as to why, on some occasions, even when there is fairly widespread belief in the community that a situation has developed which is worthy of investigation, the government sees fit to take no action. Let me concede that, at the outset, the government's basic argument—and there is some strength in this—is that if the local people wanted to, they may have an investigation. All they needed to do is have the council so vote. But the council, for one reason or other, has decided—or the board of education rather—has decided not to.

However, it seems to me that sometimes circumstances develop in a community where the people who are involved – not immediately, but in a general sense, because it is within their jurisdiction—can erronously come to the conclusion that this should not be exposed to the light of day and that the function of the government is to examine the situation and to say, "Well, there is enough apprehension in the community, there are enough people asking questions that these rumours should be laid to rest."

If I may go back and draw an analogy, if you had waited on the mayor of Eastview and his council to have investigated Eastview, you would never have found out what was going on in Eastview. I would like to meet the man who would not agree that the situation would have been neglected. It obviously should have been cleaned up. It was an incredible Pandora's box of municipal ills.

There is a widespread feeling that this is being swept under the rug in London. The paper which normally is rather friendly to this government has been pretty forceful in contending that this should be investigated. Citizens and groups of citizens and petitions have beeen presented to the government and the government has just dug its heels in and said, "Nothing will be done."

My question to the Minister is: under what circumstances do you decide to investigate on some occasion and on what basis? Is it purely an objective assessment? Is it sometimes a political assessment that you are going to move in and look into a questionable situation in the local municipality?

When do you decide that you will sit it out, as apparently you are determined to do here?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have not made a decision for an enquiry, as yet, because there have only been, I guess two reports in my six months, London being one of them.

London was requested by the chairman of the board of education—

Mr. MacDonald: And by citizens through petition.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: By a petition, and I may say that—by a petition of some 200 names. Then, in addition to that, I had one other letter. I may say that the petitioner, Mr. Ross, I think subsequently wrote to the Prime Minister, and sent me a copy.

I do not know whether the Prime Minister has replied, so it could well be that the position of the government might well change. I do not think that is going to happen, but I think if he were here, he would say it is still under consideration, or perhaps he has answered the letter.

I think we would take an objective view —look at the facts.

In the particular case, I actually wrote the letter, but it was a joint decision—a recommendation made by officials of my department, of The Department of Education and of The Attorney General's Department. They looked at the situation. We talked about it and jointly agreed that an enquiry was not needed, not warranted. Now I think the next time perhaps only one department will be involved, but we would make the same sort of objective approach.

Mr. MacDonald: Why not? With the local paper editorializing and saying that this should be investigated; with a considerable number of groups and individuals in the community insisting that the thing cannot be swept under the rug, it seems to me that if the Minister is not going to have an enquiry he has got to explain why an enquiry is not needed. Just to say, "we have come to the conclusion there will be no enquiry," is going to feed the rumours, not allay them.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not think I have anything to add to what I have said. I think probably the first criterion would have to be if it was requested by the local council or, in this case, by the local board of education. They have the power to do the same thing themselves.

Mr. MacDonald: But I made the case that, under certain circumstances the local authorities will not move.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right!

Mr. MacDonald: I leave it. If it is still under study we will hope for the best.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not want to mislead you. When I talked to the Prime Minister I got the impression that the same sort of answer would go for him as had already gone for me.

Mr. MacDonald: If it does not surprise the Minister, I was not being too deceived. I have not got any flaming hopes that there is going to be action here, but I was just grasping at that little straw.

Let me have a final comment, if I might, Mr. Chairman, on a couple of elements with regard to research. I was rather interested in an advertisement in the Globe and Mail for a new staff member earlier this year—

> Municipal Programme Analyst: A new and interesting position has been established in The Department of Municipal Affairs, providing an excellent opportunity for a person with an aptitude for analysis and communications. Reporting to the director, municipal subsidies branch, the officer will be responsible for analyzing and evaluating a wide range of programmes relative to loans, shared costs or subsidies, developing theories and practices, preparing instructions to be used by municipal officials, undertaking studies and preparing reports pertaining to the programmes.

I wonder if the Minister would elaborate? What exactly is this? Is this a routine or periodic assessment of your programmes, or are you really breaking new ground?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not think so. I am not familiar with that advertisement, to be honest with you. I will be glad to get some more information on it.

I do not think it is particularly breaking new ground. I think the purpose of it is as described.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think your question is why this, perhaps, is not under the research vote, or at least, under the research branch.

Mr. MacDonald: I presume it is.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, actually it is reported through the municipal subsidies branch.

I do not know whether a person has been hired or not. I do not think it is quite as high faluting as it sounds, if I can put it that way.

Mr. MacDonald: It is only seven months ago since you put the ad in, so in the fullness of time you are going to act.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I might comment on that and to the member of Peterborough; I think we were talking about the planning branch. We are practically up to complement now. We are not experiencing, in any of the branches, the difficulties we have had in the past—no, just all the reasons for this.

Mr. Pitman: What about the future?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The future? Well there are a number of universities and colleges, as you know, getting into this. I have not got these figures here, but there are more planners being trained. We have not got quite the problems we did have.

Looking over the estimates, looking over the debates, the difference for the last two or three years, the differences between the complement and the number actually on staff were pretty fantastic. I am told now, for example, in the community planning branch, which has a complement of 140, I think—136 authorized as of April 1—there are now only 11 vacancies, six of which are for planners, one draftsman and four stenographers. Not quite as serious as it was.

Mr. MacDonald: One final question and then I will sit down, Mr. Chairman.

In your research programmes, is the Minister in a position to give any indication to us as to his further reactions to the municipal foundation programme as a means of introducing greater equity into our tax structure?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I think the extent of the research to date has been that—I said we were going to research it. We have gone a little bit further, but I cannot comment an awful lot.

I think I started off by saying our research branch have been spending too much time filling in some holes, instead of doing the kind of research which we would all like them to do. So they have not got on with that as much as they would like to.

The finance branch—this might not be done by the research branch, it would probably be done by the research people and the finance people. The finance people, at this point, are completely tied up with the task force on Smith. We are not—

Mr. MacDonald: Let me express the worry that if there are revisions of this general approach the Minister thinks can be made, it would seem to me that any focus of research work on it had better be done early, rather than late. This is something that should be looked at by the select committee which is going to report on the Smith report. We in the NDP obviously are persuaded that this kind of an aproach is the answer—any number of revisions that might be made—because it is very complex.

Therefore, any studying that the department is going to do might better be done now, so that it could be fitted into what might emerge from the select committee report, rather than doing it later, because I do not know to what extent the select committee is going to have either the resources, or the time, to do a serious research job on it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, the director of research tells me that both task forces—regional government and finance—are looking at the overall picture as well as this specfic recommendation. Whether they are specifically looking at the foundation plan, I do not know. I think you will realize that what you suggested was tremendously complicated in terms of the number of government programmes administered by, I suppose, 20 departments—moneys coming from so many different places.

I agree with you, it would be desirable to put some sort of foundation under those programmes and arrive at a minimum amount. It is going to be a tremendous job. It was much simpler for example, in Education, a piece of cake in Education, because you were dealing with grants from one department going to school boards. Now obviously you are not. You are dealing with a number of municipal subsidies—grants of one sort or another.

The other point is—and perhaps this is the chicken and the egg—I agree with the proposition that you put forth, in many ways. I cannot help but think that if there were fewer governments and there were 25 or 30 municipalities, instead of 967, how much simpler it would be to do. But chicken and egg, I think.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I think what the Minister says is right on the point that there are so many grants, that in many cases the local clerk or revenue official who is the treasurer, perhaps just does not know what is available.

I remember one instance where, in my own municipality, it was said that a certain person knew what grants were available. He was the most valuable man on the whole staff and he was the only one who knew.

This multiplicity of grants is something that I think the Minister has just got to face up to. Today many municipalities are not getting the full amount to which they are entitled because they do not know—they do not have trained staff and their staff cannot find out. I suppose the provincial department that otherwise might tell them is not too anxious to let them know because, after all is said and done, this is added expenditure. The budget can be cut by that amount.

It just makes common sense that all these grants should be brought together. As the Minister says, if we get the regional governments then, of course, the thing becomes much more simple. But surely, even with the multiplicity of municipalities that we have today, it just makes common sense to consolidate these grants and put in the foundation plans which we have suggested, because this whole thing is such a hodgepodge today that nobody really knows where we are, including the Minister.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, just briefly, this last shot on this first vote here.

The member for Peterborough, I think, brings up a very timely point, in that I have always felt that this is the most important department in government. It is our liaison with the municipalities across Ontario.

I recognize that the Minister has a very able Deputy Minister and he has very fine key people—people like John Pearson—down the line. But he has, in my mind, a very weak group of middle people. I have had dealings with them and I do not think that they are the type of personnel that should be dealing with municipalities. They do not have the background to meet the mayors of the different cities across the province. I think we should have top people in this department and you are going to have to pay them to get them.

I think that this is one area where you should go out and get people who can do the job. This is one area where I think we can spend money to get good people—go out in the area of business and hire these top people.

The Minister, Mr. Chairman, has previously shown his feeling that, when these bills come through the House, he is agreeable to saying "the Minister may", instead of "the Minister shall". This department has too much power and I am concerned about the fact that we are losing our autonomy at local levels.

Herein and hereafter I think that every bill that comes before this House shall have this provision, that "the Minister may", not "the Minister shall". I have a number of cases where I have had subdivision plans for my people and one small category man in your department can point the finger and cancel a big subdivision plan because of his power. Somewhere along the line, in our thinking, we have to have an awareness that the municipalities are running their own show and not Queen's Park.

How I can say this any plainer, I do not know, but there has to be an awareness on the part of the Minister, his department and officials that the show is run at local levels and all politics are local and not at Queen's Park.

We have had a case in Walkerton of a man who has a beautiful subdivision, approved by the town and by the planning area. It is completely ready to go, and one official in your department puts the kibosh on it.

I do not think that anyone in Queen's Park should have the right to come into the local level and say, "We are the boss". I think that there has to be a great awareness on the part of the Minister to instruct his people along this line.

We are all trying to do the same job and give the people what they want, but within bounds.

And while I am on the subject, I would like to say further—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is a pretty wide field that they are talking about.

Mr. Chairman: I realize that it is community planning which you are steering into, and it is really in the next vote.

Mr. Sargent: All right, sir.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I would just like to make a comment about what I feel is a kind of irrational dichotomy which the member for Grey-Bruce has put forward.

We gather good people in The Department of Municipal Affairs and then we give them no power. This is somewhat pointless.

Mr. Sargent: I did not say that.

Mr. Pitman: I also cannot understand how the Liberal Party can suggest that they wish a provincial plan, and then not want to give any power to implement the plan. That is somewhat baffling.

But we shall go on. I think that once the larger units are created, then there will be some rationality in providing a greater degree of opportunity for thought and planning within the larger units. But I do not think that you can dissipate the power until you have created units which will be able to use that power effectively.

Before this vote passes, I would like to ask two questions. Firstly, I would like to comment on the Minister's remarks. I am aware of the fact that, as far as the complement is concerned, the department has been able to fill the slot, but I am concerned and perhaps the Minister could go into a little bit more detail on whether there is sufficient opportunity across the province, particularly in the colleges of applied arts and technology for what could be called the "lower" staff needs, particularly for the municipalities, who now have no planners at all. A great deal of this, as the Minister well knows, in this province is run by municipalities who have no planners and planning assistants, and I am wondering to what extent the educational facilities we have at present can provide for not only the future needs of the department—which, I would suggest, sir, would multiply tremendously—but also for the municipalities.

Finally, I wonder if the Minister could go into any detail in this fifth vote—grants and expense—to encourage research and develop new techniques in all areas of municipal affairs? Just a very quick run-down of the kinds of research which the department is carrying on, and the new techniques which are perhaps being developed by the expenditure of some $60,000?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The $60,500 is made up of some $28,500 in grants to the various municipal associations, planning, fellowships and scholarships, community planning associations, and so on. The remaining $32,000 really consist of grants to area planning boards. I think that the title is really a little high-flown on this estimate. It really consists of grants to municipal associations and grants to area planning boards.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, turning to another subject under this vote—and I think that it is the only place that it will come; it is in connection with municipal elections. Is this the place?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, I would like to pursue a little further the case of Maurice Collins, the London municipal employee who was elected to the London city council in December, 1966. As the Minister knows, subsequently his opponent contested his election in court, and the judge upheld the case for disqualification. Now, I heard the Minister's answer to the hon. member for York South that a committee was set up to investigate this sort of thing, among others. What I am concerned with is: What was the necessity for a committee to be established to look into what was considered discrimination against municipal employees standing for civic office?

I say that because you will remember that we had a select committee on municipal affairs established in 1961, and they brought in an interim report in 1963, and subsequently their report in 1965. But in the interim report they stated very firmly and clearly the need to amend sections 35, 36 and 198(a) of The Municipal Act, to do away with this unfair discrimination in regards to persons who were thought to have, or did have, some conflict of interest in relation to their job and being a municipal official. I cannot understand why we have to wait for a committee's investigation to make a ruling on it in the face of the very clear enunciations of the select committee's report.

I just would like to quote from the report in part. The report recommended in 1963 that sections 35, 36 and 198(a) be completely rewritten, and combined to ensure that a person is not disqualified from holding public office because a conflict-of-interest situation arises. Then it goes on to say what should be provided in case one elected councillor does violate the rule, what could happen if he has a conflict of interest. They go on to say:

> At present, there are certain people who may be disqualified from sitting on council because of their position as a director, manager, treasurer, secretary treasurer or agent. These persons, along with their fellow citizens, should not be discouraged from seeking public office.

It goes on:

> Sections 35, 36 and 198(a) should be completely rewritten so as to emphasize disclosure, not disqualification. The restriction prohibiting a member of council from having a pecuniary interest in contract or proposed contract with a council should be lifted provided that disclosure is made of his interest and he abstains from any discussion relating thereto, and the voting thereon.

Now, there has been a lot of discussion in regards to conflict of interest in public office, and it seems to me that through the report of the select committee and other learned enunciations that the question has almost been settled. I, for the life of me, cannot understand why we have to wait for a committee to make an investigation and bring back a report when there is one that has been established for a long time.

The Minister gave logical reasons for the delay in carrying out the work of the committee—sickness and other reasons that one has to agree are reasonable—but in this particular instance, where it is the opinion of learned people that the fact that a person works for a municipality as an officer of a union, that he for that reason is disqualified from exercising his rights under our democratic process to be an elected official, why could the Minister not have recognized the position of the select committee and just take action under The Municipal Act and change it to remove this iniquitous section?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I can only assume—and I was not the Minister at the time—that it was the opinion of the government that they were not ready to accept fully the recommendation of the select committee and they wanted to have further study. I would agree with that conclusion, and until such time as changes are made, they would be part of the legislative programme.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I just would like to add a few last words on this. I am still not sure that I have got this idea of mine across to the Minister on this matter of how I feel that we should be dealing with these local regional studies. I feel that the Minister should set out now a master plan which points out centres around which these regions should be developed. There might be 40 or 50, but I think that this is the number one job as I said before. We cannot be going at it piecemeal without having some concept of the centres around which we are going to develop our regions. In some places such as the Metro Toronto area, we have to have several centres being developed if we are going to keep it within bounds so far as size is concerned.

Then we should have a chairman appointed by the Minister from his department, or hired by his department, who is qualified to organize and share with local people in the development of a plan. I cannot go along with the continued statement of the Minister that he himself has not time to deal with these matters. If he would set out the broad areas and the broad concepts, then he could leave the plans in the hands of the local groups to develop.

When the Americans have been giving foreign aid and deciding in Washington what the aid should be, they have been getting singularly poor results for their money. And we in this province, when we decide what is good for the municipalities by studies that we implement here, are going to get the same kind of result. I suggest that the Minister will get his plans drafted in a form that can be presented in bills very quickly under a scheme that is put together with the co-ordination of the department and the local official representatives, and perhaps even lay representatives he appoints in the regions. We are continually having these plans and studies done, study upon study, and study of studies, and it takes forever to get them into legislation.

We could have a lot of these programmes going on simultaneously if the Minister would not do it on this piecemeal basis. He waits for fires to be going before he moves to put them out. For example, in the area of York county, he said, "I have not heard from certain municipalities yet and I am not going to pull them in to meet with them until they have written me saying they want to meet with me." I do not think that he should be waiting for fires to develop before he tries to handle them. I think he should be stepping into the situation and providing leadership and the means whereby these municipalities can work together to solve their problems. I do not go along with some of the speakers who said that we need to have hundreds of planners and spend much more money. It is not necessary to spend a lot more money. It is the way we spend the money that counts; it is the way we involve people that counts; then we will get our achievement.

Glasgow has been planned to death. It is stagnant. In Stockholm it takes five years to get an apartment. These are places that sound wonderful. We have a pretty good system here but we could improve upon it if we would involve our local people more.

Vote 1401 agreed to.

On vote 1402:

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): I would like to find out from the Minister where I would bring in a couple of questions on a question I asked him, to which he gave me an answer on May 28, involving company-owned towns—under which vote would that come?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: On vote 1404.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1402—the member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss a matter that I discussed previously with the Minister and the Deputy, but before I do I would also like to say how much I appreciate the efforts that they put out in trying to help us this way, to seek to come up with the answers to some of the problems of the constituents. In this regard there have been times since I have come into this House that I have felt that the Minister has too much power—not this particular Minister, but Ministers in general have too much power. In this particular case I feel that it would be better if he had a little more power.

What happened here was that a gentleman applied for relief from a building bylaw in the township of Saltfleet and there was a committee of adjustment hearing. There was representation made by a group of interested citizens to this committee of adjustment, and the committee informed the spokesman for the citizens that they would be informed of the outcome of the hearing, they would get word of the decision. They never did get word. The committee of adjustment neglected to inform them because actually they did not have to by law. The law is very clear. It says that any person who wishes to be informed of the outcome of the hearing must put in a written request. What happened was that these people were denied their opportunity to appear; they were not familiar with the law as many people are not, and the time for appeal came and went and they were unable to appeal the decision of the committee of adjustment and they are now stuck with a situation which appears to be wrong.

Now, had the Minister had more power, I think that he would agree with me he would have acted and the matter would have been heard again at the very worst, and the people would have been given the opportunity to appeal to the Ontario municipal board had the committee of adjustment's decision come down as it did in the first place. What I was going to suggest ought to happen—and I think the Minister would agree with this too—is that it should become necessary for the committees of adjustment to send a copy of the decision that they arrive at, to every person who makes representation in opposition or in favour of any particular matter that comes before them.

It should not be necessary for a citizen to go through the formality of writing on a piece of paper the fact that he wants to receive the decision. The fact that he is there making representation—many times written representation—should be sufficient to ensure that the answer is relayed to him and the opportunity to appeal the decision if he so desires is afforded.

I would ask the Minister if there would be any possibility of change such as this in the offing. Does he say that perhaps section 10 of The Planning Act will be changed to bring about this desired end result—that every person making representation before a committee of adjustment will receive the written result of the hearing?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, I think we undoubtedly have to take a look at the Act. I do not know whether the solution may be just the way you described it, but I think we must insist—at some of these committee of adjustment hearings there could be 50 or 100 people. Nobody really has any knowledge as to who they are, but I think it should be said—whether you put this in legislation or just how you do it; the chairman obviously at the end of the meeting, or when they are concluded with a matter, and if they are going to reserve their decision, which is their right to do, should definitely announce at that point, "We are reserving our decision. If you want a copy of the decision will you speak to the secretary right now, and give him your name and address?"

Now, he obviously did not do this in this case.

Mr. Deans: What he did was say quite clearly that you shall be informed.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: "You will be informed"?

Mr. Deans: "You will be informed." And when he said this, of course, the people assumed they would be informed and, as everyone knows, it is difficult to tell how long this kind of process is going to take. It may take a few days, it may take a few weeks. And so the people did not know, there was no way for them to find out. They could not phone every day and ask the committee of adjustment if they were ready yet with the decision. And so they have missed the opportunity to appear.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Which is wrong, I quite agree.

Mr. Deans: Very, very wrong, and there ought to be some way that this could be rectified, I believe. I would hope that there might be, even in this case, although the Minister has suggested to me that legally they have no recourse. But it seems to me that the committee of adjustment chairman relieved these people of this obligation by stating quite clearly that he was going to tell them, or inform them, of the result of the hearing.

You say that perhaps there would be 50 or so people there, but what I would suggest is that any people who present the petition in opposition to something they have, by presenting this petition, placed in writing their opposition together with their names, names of the spokesman—they have to sign a petition—and by doing this I would think that if someone presented a petition to me I would expect that I would have to let them know the outcome of it.

I would think even in that case that regardless of whether it states clearly that I want to hear the result, the fact that I presented a written petition ought to be sufficient. And even a broad interpretation of it—and what I am afraid is going to happen here is they are going to be stuck with the decision of the committee of adjustment without being given what would perhaps be natural justice. And I think that some changes should be made.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402. The member for Humber.

Mr. Ben: Mr. Chairman, when we were discussing vote 1401, I got on the subject of uniform building codes. And I pointed out to the hon. Minister that on February 21 last the hon. Minister made a statement in this House that within the next month he would be meeting with members of the smaller communities or municipalities with a view to bringing in a code which is less stringent than the national building code which the Minister had been recommending to municipalities. Now, one, is the province going to come out with a uniform building code for the province of Ontario? If not, is it going to come out with two forms, one for the larger municipalities, where they can have more stringent criteria, and one for the smaller municipalities where such a stringent code is not required?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think probably, while the member was away, following whatever I said on February 21, I believe in May, I made an announcement to the House that we were setting up a committee of people in this field to have a look at it. Specifically, in the process of asking people from the urban development institute, the association of professional engineers, the association of architects, Ontario building officials association, and the city engineers association, the Canadian manufacturers' association, and the association of clerks and treasurers, to each give us the names or put together a committee. To your specific question "Is Ontario going to have a building code of its own?" No, I would think not.

Mr. Ben: I am going to recommend that the national building code be adopted then. I speak of Ontario because we are concerned with only Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I do not want to prejudge what the committee is going to do but I would hope that they could find a way to achieve perhaps more uniformity in the local bylaws than there is now.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey South was on his feet before.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, it was suggested that I raise this matter—

Mr. Chairman: As the member for Grey South has been on his feet before, I will call the member for Essex South next.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I suggested, as you recall under item No. 1, that I would postpone my remarks until 1402. And I would be very remiss in my responsibility to my constituency, and indeed to the entire county of Grey, to the citizens there, if I did not raise my voice in objection to the implementation of present policy within the department in that county. It may be, although I have not studied the matter statistically, that we are not as advanced in regard to overall planning in the entire county. Certainly I agree that we are not, by comparison to counties in the southern portion of the province, but the policy of making the entire county come into planning before the approval of subdivisions, currently under consideration, is given, I think is a very bad one.

We know very well that our county is no exception, that the populations are actually decreasing. Looking at figures not very many days ago, I regret very much to inform the members of the chamber, that the population in the county of Grey had again decreased in all except one municipality. And I believe that a part of this is responsibility in regard to planning. It may be, as some other member said, that the opportunity that exists in the larger urban centres—I think it was a member in the party over there, who said this is in actual fact taking place—we do not deny that, because the opportunity is there. But I suggest, Mr. Chairman to the Minister, through you, that we are aware of the land-use studies that have been made. We are aware of the land use in that particular county, a programme that will be put into effect, and I am sure that the officials of the department are aware of it now Therefore, I feel that the philosophy being practised in the county is a very discriminatory one against the people who have not, through their own desire, come into an overall planning situation. Some of the municipalities, as the Minister well knows, have come under the subdivision bylaw control programme, and some of them have not.

And because of the desire of the department to force Grey county into a planning situation, the people who are not now under subdivision bylaw control, have a tremendous advantage over the people who do find themselves in that situation. There is no committee of adjustment, therefore there is nobody to appeal to other than the departmental officials. And in each and every case they have said "no". When we consider the development of a large recreational area, and there are subdivisions of 100 to 150 properties, and the departmental officials say when the planning is complete—when they have met an spent thousands and thousands of dollars, and they have met the requirements of The Department of Health, they have met the requirements of the Ontario water resources commission, they have met the requirements so far as the roads committees are concerned—then the departmental officials say they will give them permission to sell five or six or seven properties, which is not enough to pay for the financing of such a scheme. Consequently development then, in my humble opinion, is being thwarted.

These areas can be used for nothing else but this purpose, Mr. Chairman, and therefore I suggest that unless the planning or the thinking of the department and its officials are to project their view, I am grateful for the study that is taking place at the present moment but it has taken too long to bring this about, and in the end the result of that study will take another year or two to implement and the people who have this huge investment—and they are humble people, they are not wealthy people, they are not city slickers, they are there developing themselves and for the purposes of the community.

Mr. Sargent: The Liberal Party—

Mr. Winkler: Yes, we have seen what they have done before, too. Mr. Chairman, I believe that the thinking of the department will have to change where presently the land being developed, as I have related to it or referred to it, is for the purpose and for the future land-use purpose that the departmental officials know will be implemented, that they be approved now, that they not have to wait until the entire county—and I say this justifiably—comes into an overall scheme, with which I agree; that these people be given a broader base to work from and more consideration in accordance with the present needs of the area and with the entire county.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kent.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Chairman, I would be remiss, too, if I did not say a few words in regards to this vote. We do know that a new Minister has taken over this portfolio. And over the number of years that I have been a member in this honourable assembly, we have heard a lot about planning and development, and regional development councils. And I must say the same as the hon. member for Grey South has said, that I represent a riding with towns and villages; and in those towns and villages the population is not stationary, it is going down. Everything, these councils and chambers of commerce, over the last number of years, have done everything they could think of to encourage some industry, some development to take place in these areas. But nothing has taken place.

And we listen in this Legislature to the tremendous development that is taking place here in the great metropolitan area, and we have no quarrel with that. But, Mr. Chairman, we in the rural area must develop too; there must be a change in planning; there must be a different approach taken to it; it just cannot be one metropolitan area; we in the rural areas have to have development also. Now, I must say we have listened to the members who represent ridings in the far north and they are in the same condition as we are. I must say to the newly appointed Minister of Municipal Affairs that I do hope his approach for planning has something in regards to development of our towns and villages that are standing still. If not, Mr. Chairman, they are going to disappear. And something has to be done before this goes too far. Too much study, too much planning, and not enough action, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: Hear, hear!

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402, the Minister.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I woud like to comment just briefly. I suppose my good friends from Grey South and Kent, Mr. Chairman, have perhaps brought home to us a little bit the other side of the coin because I have to say to my friends opposite, and I say to myself, that not everyone in this province obviously is as convinced of the necessity of what we feel we must do as perhaps they are or I am. I think the member for Grey South and the member for Kent very legitimately have placed before this House the views of a great number of people in this province of Ontario this afternoon. And some place in between we try to find a happy balance.

Now, in particular as far as the county of Grey is concerned—my friend talked about Grey county—we are not in effect trying to do anything in Grey county as a whole, and this may be one of the problems. We have been dealing with the individual municipalities. Perhaps we should be looking at the county as a whole because, as the member has pointed out, some of the municipalities may have gained an advantage. I would say it was a queer sort of an advantage that they have because we have not looked at the total county.

All we are asking these townships to do—not only in Grey and not only in Kent, but right across the province—all we have asked townships to do—in my own county of Kent—is to sit down and determine where they are going. We heard something about Pickering this afternoon. I suppose that is what Ministers of Municipal Affairs should wake up in the middle of the night thinking about. You can think of a few other situations. Pickering is a recent one, but you think of the places where it has become necessary to spend many, many dollars—Burlington Beach, Van Wagner's Beach—of the taxpayers' money to correct situations. And those are two unrelated fields—one financial, the other perhaps planning, lack of planning—where the taxpayers' money has had to be spent in large gobs to try and rectify the mistakes in planning of the past or the lack of planning in the past. Hopefully, we plan well enough today that 50 years from now the kind of money which has been spent or needs to be spent in those situations will not be necessary to be spent. That is probably a pious hope but I think we try and take that attitude. Who would have thought ten years ago that Pickering was going to have the serious problems that it does, because people were building nice subdivisions, good planning? I am sure The Department of Health okayed it, I am sure other departments okayed it, and we ultimately, I suppose okayed these things. And we arrive at the situation that we are in now, which is not something that cannot be worked out, it is not a horrible situation.

But who would have thought ten years ago, five years ago, that there was going to be this boom in Grey and Bruce, in vacation property? This is something that is very unique. Who would have thought ten years ago we were going to have the 10-acre problem that we have in Wellington and Dufferin? These things change, they change very rapidly. Who would have thought that Haldimand and Norfolk—and the leader of the Opposition raised these points yesterday—would have been one of the areas which needs planning and—I am glad he referred to that—they are planning, they are coming along very well and very quickly and we are very delighted with what they are doing. But a year ago no one would have thought that was necessary.

And this is probably part of the problem in the municipalities in Grey, that all of a sudden, very quickly, it becomes necessary that they do plan, that they do sit down and ask themselves the very simple question, "What do we want our municipality to become? Where are we going?" They do this through the vehicle of the official plan, and they come up with an official plan which suits their purposes, we comment on it, circulate it to the departments, see if it fits in with some sort of provincial policy and then hopefully say, "Go to it." That is what those townships are in the process of doing. I do not think they are as wildly enthusiastic about it, if I can put it that way, as some of us in this House on both sides can get carried away about the necessity of planning. It is interesting; we are still a very big diversified province and this has been an interesting commentary on it.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming had been up previously.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, what I have to say might not come completely within this vote because it concerns three different towns. However, I believe this is the proper vote to raise it under.

I am talking about the situation at Timagami and Goward and Latchford. At the moment they have started to move the townsite of Timagami to the new townsite of Goward.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This would really come under the townsite vote which I think is 1405, but I would suggest to the Chairman that we might consider item 3 of vote 1405 now, and also item 1 of vote 1407, which concern townsites, both capital and ordinary, and grants under The Planning Act, and perhaps we could deal with all those things under this one vote.

Mr. Chairman: In other words, under vote 1402, community planning, we could deal with items 3 and 8 of vote 1405 and item 1 of vote 1407. The members concur this will be in order at this time?

Mr. Jackson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Because one of the main ore bodies from Sherman mine lies underneath one of the corners of Timagami, it has made it necessary to move the townsite to another location. It is being done by creating a new townsite at Goward, which is a few miles north of Timagami. I do not really see anything wrong with moving Timagami because I believe it has to be done; however the creation of a new townsite in the area it is being created in, in my opinion is going to create many problems in the future.

One of the problems we have run into through the north is that a mining company will create a townsite, then when that mining company moves out, it leaves a town without any visible means of support, without any financial support and we might as well say we have a ghost town. However, just north of there we have the town of Latchford, which is a thriving town. Although it has no industry, it somehow maintains its status quo, and this extra building would be a boon to the town of Latchford. At the moment the town of Latchford is on the verge of spending quite a bit of money to put in sewage and water distribution systems and it is being duplicated at Goward. Now, if it is necessary to move the townsite of Timagami, in my opinion and in the opinion of many people in the north, it would be better to move it a little farther north to the town of Latchford.

Something else that bothers me about moving the town of Timagami is that even though they are moving the townsite, and moving the people who live there into Goward—and some of them are moving completely out of the area because they are not working at Sherman mine—they are also allowing certain businesses to build up in Timagami. Right along the highway there has been a new motel, at the moment there is construction going on on a new garage and service station. Now, if it is necessary to move the townsite, I would like the Minister to comment on how he can justify allowing them to put in this new motel and the other buildings that are being built at this time?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Where is the motel being built?

Mr. Jackson: Right in the middle of Timagami, just I would say, to the east of where the townsite has to be moved, the part of the townsite that has to be moved.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am sorry, I cannot answer that. I would have to look into it. I am not familiar with this situation, I hope to go up to Timagami next month, and some of the other townsites. Without knowing the particulars, I would somewhat agree with the philosophy that the member has expressed, that we should do all we could not to create new townsites.

One of the mines was in to see us two or three months ago and was exploring ways of improving a highway with the hope that a town site will not be necessary, rather an existing town with improved accommodation. In the case of Timagami, I am told that it was largely a matter of where services could be provided, very expensive services, but I think that was the controlling factor. Generally though, I would agree with the philosophy the member has expressed. If there are existing towns and if they are satisfactory, let us try and use them, rather than create new town sites. As far as the motel is concerned, if the member will give us the particulars, we will see why it came into being.

Mr. Jackson: I would like to point out to the Minister on this same line, Mr. Chairman, that when the Adams mine came into existence, they refused to allow the Adams mine to build a townsite or to build up in the area. They said there were towns in the area and if there was any building to be done, it would be done in the existing towns. They also, through Lands and Forests zoned the area so that no building could take place without the permission of Lands and Forests, and it has prevented a shack town existence that has happened throughout the mining communities.

But as I say, something that really bothers me about Goward is the fact that, as the Minister says, the reason they picked this site was because of sandy soil that they could put sewers in and water facilities and save a little bit of money. But they are going to do this anyway at Latchford. At this moment, Latchford is negotiating with the Ontario water resources commission to put in a sewage and water supply system. Now we are duplicating that service within a very few miles. I would like the Minister to look into this when he is up there. Although they have built on sandy soil—they have built the houses on sandy soil—now the services are going through rock. The basic reason they moved in there was that the services could be put into the sand a lot easier and a lot cheaper than they could be put into the rock, and they have just reversed this procedure.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister have any comments to make about this matter?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not know enough about it to comment any further.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402. I must say the member for Grey-Bruce had been trying to get the floor a short while ago. Does the member for Grey-Bruce wish the floor?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, just a point on the subject of planning in these outlying parts of the province. At what point—the key—the key or the motivation behind any development, Mr. Chairman, is decentralization of industry. You control the subdivision plans for housing and you have great controls there, through your department, but I do not think in our economy we can tell industry where they are going to locate.

What liaison do you have in this department for the locating of industry in Ontario? I mean, that is the key for development of these outlying parts—decentralization of industry. What liaison do you have with the Minister of Trade and Development in the alleged placement of industry?

I put that in quotes if there is any, I do not know. But do you have any liaison?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, but our function is not to place industry.

Mr. Sargent: I do not suggest it is. I say is there not merit in thinking along those lines? How can you do an intelligent upgrading of the outlying parts of the province if you do not have any motivation to build these places? Are you—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No such measures are being considered at this time.

Mr. Sargent: That is a good word, "catalyst", but do you have an intelligent thoughts at all on that?

Mr. Chairman: The Minister said he had.

Mr. Sargent: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Sargent: You are only proving what I said, then.

Mr. Pitman: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could make one or two comments on this particular vote?

It would appear to me that we are in a kind of an interregnum at the moment. We still have the 900-plus small municipalities, that is, beside the larger cities, and the Minister has said what we wish the townships to do is to show where they are going. But it seems to me that what the townships keep asking is, "Where are you going?" We keep asking each other where are you going and no one seems to go anywhere.

Perhaps that is too harsh a statement, but I think the speed of our going anywhere is greatly undermined by this fact.

One of the reasons that the townships find it very hard to say where they are going is that they do not have the personnel to give them the kind of direction that they want. There is a kind of a realization that this is a very difficult and very complex and complicated area. This whole business of municipal planning is becoming far more sophisticated than it was 50 years ago and, along with the realization that their resources have been undermined, they do not have the ability to carry out the functions and the more sophisticated services they are expected to provide. They also realize that they have not got the expertise either.

This is why, some time ago, I suggested to the Minister that there might be some value in making grants to municipalities to secure the personnel to provide the official plans.

I would like to go a bit farther than that at this point, because I think that the last thing we want to do is to encourage that they make official plans on the township basis. Invariably—and I do not want to go into specific matters, which the Minister already knows—but invariably, the plans of a single township will spill over to other townships. I am not even sure that even a county official plan has a viability at the moment, but that at least, would have a greater viability to the township than the township size.

What I am suggesting is, possibly, this—we either hold out the banana or we use the stick, and I suggest that, in a sense, the Minister has got the stick. He has already got the legislation this session which provides him with a stick but I think he is reluctant to use it.

We are still in this, as I say, interregnum. We do not want to undermine the confidence of the township, their confidence in themselves and in the municipal departments. To be honest, I think that the worst we would wish to see is that if we moved toward regional government by undermining the viability of the local governments, then we have done, I think, a great disservice to the democracy in this province. So I would suggest that, possibly, in this particular case, the banana is the far more effective way of bringing along these townships and these counties into providing the official plan.

May I add another bit of gratuitous advice on this matter? The whole question of guidelines of The Department of Municipal Affairs. I was rather surprised—rather shocked—to discover that there was a guide and there was a policy in The Department of Municipal Affairs in relation to, for example, urban development—rural areas, I should say. I asked members of this department who have been very helpful, "Well, where does this come from?"

It came from a speech made by his predecessor, a couple of years ago. I was handed the speech and I carried it out in my hot little hand and read it and of course, it read very well. This seems to be a strange way of providing guidelines, particularly in view of the fact that many municipal councils do not carry around with them speeches from previous Ministers of Municipal Affairs.

It would seem to me that if these guidelines were present, it would stop so many of the false battles that take place, where municipal councils give approval and give encouragement to local people to develop a certain area. They go to the cost and expense of carrying out the survey and getting the plan, and so on, and they come down to discover that it is against all the rules of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

It seems to me that these false battles undermine confidence of local officials in their relationship with The Department of Municipal Affairs. So I think too, this is an unfortunate time in the province's history to have this kind of battle going on, because, as the Minister knows—I do not want to bring up a local situation—but you have a housing crisis in a city.

It appears that the way to relieve this housing crisis is to simply move out into the suburban areas. You have people in suburban areas who are quite willing to sell land and to develop their land in the hope of providing housing. At the same time, you have the Veterans' Land Act sort of closing off and people scrambling about trying to get the land which will comply under The Department of Veterans Affairs legislation.

You have all this going on and I am afraid The Department of Municipal Affairs becomes the bete noire of the whole business. You know, if there is somebody to blame it is The Department of Municipal Affairs—and I think quite wrongly, in many cases.

There will be no wild enthusiasm for my suggestion—and it is not entirely the fault of The Municipal Affairs Department—back where I come from. It is nice to believe that it is, but my honest feeling is that if we had, I suggest to the Minister, grants during this interregnum period, before we get to wherever we are going at the provincial level—grants which would encourage a large use of planning. And as well as that, the more specific guidelines.

I could add other things. I think, possibly, grants for more and more conferences, although I do not really think the Minister has the personnel to have the number of conferences that are needed to provide the kind of background in the municipal planning which really must take place at the local level right across the province.

Mr. Sopha: Not enough action!

Mr. Pitman: But nevertheless, I do suggest this is a solution.

Mr. Sopha: Not enough action!

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402. The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister if he has made any attempt to streamline the procedures of the applications on the part of municipalities to his department in respect of planning? As it is today, it takes so long to have a planning subdivision approved. Is there any way that this could be speeded up so that approval may be given a lot quicker than it is today?

I have two other questions after this, Mr. Chairman.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have not found the information that I am looking for here. Would you like to proceed with another question and I will try to find it?

Mr. B. Newman: Yes, may I ask him if the department is considering amending The Planning Act to enable municipalities to pass bylaws so that they could eliminate dilapidated structures, such as fences, and so forth?

The original resolution had been passed by the town of Lindsay. I understand that it circulated among many municipalities throughout the province of Ontario, and was endorsed by many.

This would permit the councils and municipalities to pass bylaws authorizing the pulling down, or repairing or renewal, at the expense of the owner, any building, fence, scaffolding, or erection which, by reason of its ruinous or dilapidated state, faulty construction, or otherwise, is in such condition that an unsightly pile of rubble, or ruins, or enclosed or fenced-off areas exists, and constitutes public eyesores, and can have a detrimental effect on the adjoining property and depreciate the value of the surrounding area.

This would enable municipalities to beautify their communities and I think that it is worthy of consideration.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We are aware of these resolutions, and we have them under consideration. Going back to your previous point, and I suspect that perhaps came from this resolution—interestingly enough, that was a resolution that originally came from the town of St. Thomas, I am not sure. At any rate, that came around just about the time that I first arrived in the department and it was endorsed by some 20 or 25 municipalities. I took the opportunity to write to them and say all right, I am all for streamlining, what would you do? To date I have had a reply from one of them, and this is seven months later. It was very easy to talk about streamlining, but when you get right down to how you would streamline, that is something else again.

My friend for Wentworth raised a very interesting point this afternoon about the decisions of the committee of adjustment, and I agree with him. But the committees of adjustment now, in so many cases, are causes of what seems to be red tape and so you add something else in that bundle to protect against the sort of situation which my friend from Wentworth described. You run the risk of adding so much more red tape, necessary but perhaps not altogether desirable.

From time to time, we run studies on the amount of time involved. The member particularly mentioned subdivisions, and we studied 100, or 97 actually, between the dates of April 17, and July 4. From the time that the initial application was received for approval, and the date of draft approval, 23 of the plans were approved in 3 months, 38 were approved in four to seven, and 17 were approved in from 8 to 11 months. The remaining 18 took longer than 12 months to approve. This is the draft approval position.

Generally, when we run these studies we find that the lapse in most of these situations is not as great as it used to be.

Mr. B. Newman: I am happy to hear that, Mr. Chairman. Is there any chance of having an extension of time concerning winter work subsidies if in the application for these subsidies the delay is the fault of the Ontario municipal board? In other words, if a community has requested an approval of its winter works programme, and—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is under 1407.

Mr. B. Newman: I will take it up at that point then. May I bring to your attention another resolution? This originated in my own community and concerns the beautification of the area between the roadway and the lot line. This would entail an amendment to the Municipal Act to enable municipalities to pass bylaws to permit the owners or lessees of land abutting upon any highway within those portions of the municipalities in which land would be used for residential purposes, to erect, establish, make and maintain fences and hedges on the untravelled portion of such highway, for such consideration and upon such terms and conditions met that may be agreed but not so unreasonable as to confine, impede or hinder public traffic. This would enable the resident of a municipality to beautify that portion between the lot line and the road.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not recall that resolution and I am wondering if it may have gone to the Minister of Highways rather than to our department?

Mr. B. Newman: No, it specifically made mention "be it resolved that the Minister of Municipal Affairs be urged to—". This was passed on July 24 of this year by the city of Windsor.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I have not got a copy.

Mr. B. Newman: I will make a copy of it and send it over to hon. Minister.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the Minister was mentioning a lack of suggestions for streamlining the procedure in approval of draft plan approval through the community planning branch. One suggestion that I heard that I think has merit, is that wherever municipalities have a master plan adopted and approved by the department, then if they accompany their subdivision agreement with a statement of declaration that the plan meets all the requirements of the master plan, the official plan, then it gets automatic approval.

It seems a waste of time to impose on this branch—which is already overworked and which is doing its best to keep up with a never-ending and increasing burden—needless reviews of plans which can be shown to meet all the requirements of the official plan.

I suggest to the Minister that this would be a great way to facilitate the approval of plans, because many of the areas which do not now have an official plan would perhaps move faster to get their official plan implemented if they knew that this would expedite plans now being considered. I would apprecate the Minister's views on such a suggestion.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: You were talking about the official plan, I think, rather than a master plan?

Mr. Deacon: Yes.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well I would agree generally. The problem is that the situation tends to change from time to time. Our official plans tend to be, I would suspect, on an average at least five years old perhaps. They are updated and amended, but the situation changes, as do the views of the OWRC and other government agencies relating to that particular plan with regard to a subdivision.

But it is safe to say that where there is an official plan there is no question that a plan approval of a subdivision is processed much more quickly than where there is not. I think where the official plan is up to date, where it is firm, everybody gets the same treatment. But where we are aware that there is an active, vigorous planning programme going on—I think the staff are normal—those things go through much more quickly.

Mr. Deacon: I am pleased with the Minister's observations on that. I think perhaps if they had an automatic approval of the plan—if there are no observations to come back within a two- or three-week period—it might be one way of spurring the matter in such circumstances where there is an official plan approved. And as long as the department and the OWRC and others that are concerned are aware of the fact that if they do not put before the department their objections quickly then these plans are going to proceed. One of the great costs in processing land today is the delay of getting subdivision plans approved.

Now, another matter in the community planning branch that I would like to bring up here is the MTARTS study, which I believe was handled by this division was it not, Mr. Chairman? Is this the area of MTARTS study came under?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think so.

Mr. Deacon: The MTARTS study seems to be based upon the availability of services, or where it is most feasible for services to be provided to the area surrounding this metropolis, rather than based upon where people seem to want to go. They seem to be under the impression that it is very difficult to process, or to provide sewage and water facilities to the north of the city and that seems to be the whole basis of the report.

It is based upon pushing people as close as possible to the lake where they can easily dump the effluent from the sewage plants and also pump in the water for the water supply. But it is very interesting to note—and I am wondering whether the representatives of the community planning branch took into account the fact—that some 42 per cent to 45 per cent of the people who have moved into the Toronto area during the past ten years have moved to the north, not to the east, not to the west, but to the north; that some 30 to 32 per cent have moved to the west of the city and some 25 or 26 per cent to the east.

Obviously the preference of people is to the north. I think the basic planning and study and the thoughts of the community planning branch should surely be taking into account what people seem to want and then find out what the cost of providing the services to those people is going to be. It is a matter of an additional cost if they are going to be away from the lake, and that can certainly be measured. If you are going to put in a sewage plant and pump water ten miles away from the lake it is going to be more expensive than it is right on the lake; and these are measurable economic factors to take into account. It seems to me that the MTARTS people should have put that in their study rather than just guide their study along—have it completely hedged in by where the services would really go.

Would the Minister say if any consideration was given to where people want to move? I could not seem to see that in the report.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not know that it is specifically in the report in the goals planned as outlined. I think it certainly must be in the evaluation which must be carried on by the Treasury and which we will be involved in, as will all departments, in the final analysis, and I think this is certainly very important. We have to weigh the balance between what the costs are and certainly, not just what people want, but the social values—perhaps the kind of society that we are hoping to live in or to create. Those intangibles—if I can put it that way—certainly have to be taken into account.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, from a planning concept certainly there are many problems in working on a band concept rather than a semi-circle concept. What the Minister is referring to, I presume, is the matter of satellite cities or green belts and that type of thinking rather than the actual direction of the development from the city.

Has the community planning branch made any recommendation to the Minister concerning the establishment of county or regional planning boards or providing county councils, or regional councils, other than in the area where they have already implemented their new Acts, such as Toronto and Ottawa-Carleton, giving them control over municipal planning and thereby delegating to these regional boards the responsibility for subdivision approval that we now are still leaving with the community planning branch? It seems to me unnecessary, in view of the fact that these regional and county boards should be well qualified to decide what is good for their area.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, the department actively are encouraging the creation of larger planning units—county units, groups of municipalities, because with a larger unit the technical advice and staff become more possible.

Mr. Deacon: Would that also include the department delegating to such regional planning boards or councils the ability to give approval to plans without having to go through the department's community planning branch?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, that has only been suggested in one piece of legislation to date.

Mr. Deacon: But the Minister is hoping to do that in time? Is that something he is proposing to bring in?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I would dearly love to, yes.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Thunder Bay has been attempting to get the floor before on a certain point.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the Minister if this is the place in his estimates where he would like us to discuss improvement districts.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out and remind the committee again that in dealing with the community planning branch—1402—we are also discussing items 3 and 8 of 1405 and item 1 of 1407.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Vote 1404 contains improvement districts.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Kitchener.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, at the regular meeting of the council of the corporation of the city of Kitchener a resolution was passed on June 3, 1968, as follows:

> Whereas the amendments made to section 27 of The Planning Act by Bill 89, enacted at the current session of the Ontario Legislature, infringes upon the autonomy heretofore granted to municipal councils with respect to zoning matters; whereas the said amendments allow the Minister of Municipal Affairs to invalidate municipal restricted area bylaws and to change the zoning imposed upon any lands in the province without any notice to anyone, without any protection or right of appeal being provided to the individuals or municipal councils involved; whereas such powers granted to a Minister of the Crown are contrary to the principles of democracy and local self government; therefore be it resolved that the government of Ontario be urged to immediately repeal the aforesaid amendments to section 27 of The Planning Act, and further that copies of this resolution be forwarded to the Ontario municipal association, the association of Ontario mayors and reeves, and to the councils of other Ontario cities for their endorsation and support.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is not my intent to review the lengthy debate that went on at the time of this amendment but as hon. members are aware, the Minister now has the power to exercise these matters and he need give notice to no one. Further, his action, of course, is not subject to the approval of the Ontario municipal board or of any other body. I am wondering if the Minister can inform us—

Mr. Chairman: Order, please. I should point out to the member—and I suspected that this was the case—that under the rules of the House no member shall reflect upon a vote of the House during a session in which that vote was carried.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was going to enquire of the Minister whether he has received any request to exercise this power as such, or whether any are pending at the present time with respect to this type of change of restricted area bylaws. That was my only comment.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The answer to the first question is "yes" and to the second question "no."

Mr. Breithaupt: Can you give me the number?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Oh, I think I mentioned them in the House and if you would ask your seat-mate he would tell you all about one of them.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Would the Minister care to tell me what initiative the community planning branch has taken to unravel the tangled knot of urban renewal in the city of Toronto, and whether there are any plans or projects which are matters of discussion between this branch and the appropriate officials of the city of Toronto?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The city of Toronto, as I think you probably know, has hired a new director and during this time—let me put it this way: Certainly during the last 12 months I think we have been meeting more with the officials of the city of Toronto; we are looking forward to doing more of it. Some of the experience which we have gained in other municipalities in the province we are attempting to pass on, and it is being requested of us and we are passing it on to Toronto officials and, I think, imparting some of the knowledge which we have in this rather difficult area.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, would the Minister tell me if there are any specific proposals which are under discussion with the community planning branch on the city of Toronto, for urban renewal?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, there are the three areas where schemes are going ahead. I could give you a report on those three areas; one is Kensington—we are not really actively involved; Kensington at this point with the council is in the process of creating or appointing a committee made up of residents and representatives of the councils. I think that is probably the state of that scheme at this moment. Don Vale, I hesitate to comment at great length on it; I think the city has been making some progress, we are told, in working with the residents in that area. Trefann Court, I would say, is at a standstill at this moment. Those are the three areas in the city which are active at this moment, to our knowledge.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister subscribe to the views which were expressed by the Minister of Correctional Services during the election on the question of the participation of the residents of urban renewal areas in the initial planning and discussion of projects?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Very definitely! Sorry, go ahead.

Mr. J. Renwick: I was going to ask you what you had done to emphasize or to implement that policy which the Minister of Correctional Services spoke about so definitely during the election period.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is not really a new policy. Perhaps we have defined it more. We are in the process now. We have imparted it, perhaps verbally, and we are going to get it out to the planning people in the field in the very near future. Perhaps I could read you some of this material:

> The province of Ontario has provided guidance, legislation and financial advice to municipalities concerned with urban renewal for over ten years. The province has not only matched federal aid, step by step, programme by programme, but has led the way for all Canada in legislation for urban renewal, research into urban renewal problems and in publication of literature, field guides, and manuals that have attracted nation-wide attention.

I am not going to read all this, some of which is history now, but I think it is rather an impressive record and, really, what we would hope is that much of what has been done has been good. Some of it has been very painful, and I am sure the hon. member recognizes that, but much of it has been good.

I think the figure which has been spent on urban renewal in the ten-year period is now approaching, I believe, $120 million—something in that order—over the last ten years. That is at all levels and we have contributed our share of that.

Now, there is a great deal more to be done but it does go ahead steadily, perhaps with more speed in some areas than it has here. And I would be glad to give some of those figures.

It must be understood that the programmes are initiated and carried out by the municipality. Neither the federal government, through central mortgage and housing corporation, nor the province through The Department of Municipal Affairs, intend to enter directly into matters as locally intimate as those involved in urban renewal. We are ready to help municipalities take full advantage of aid from the federal government and the province, but the lead must come from the province itself.

Since 1964, when the province of Ontario, among all provinces, kept pace with the federal government on both housing and urban renewal, there have also been advances and modifications in procedures and policies. These have included more generous aid from both the federal and provincial governments to municipalities under 30,000 in population. The door has been opened, in principle at least, to sharing in the cost of special relocation allowances to help owner-occupants in urban renewal areas to purchase another home without increasing additional financial hardship.

Studies are continuing into such problems as rehabilitation, the price of cleared land to be disposed of to a municipality for public purposes; and a relocation of commercial enterprises, as well as better techniques of relocating residences. Now, those are the sort of things which both ourselves and central mortgage see as our particular role.

Mr. Chairman: As a matter of clarification, I point out to the Minister and ask him, in the centre of the remarks, he said, "the lead must come from the provinces." Is that what he meant?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: From the municipality.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister said "provinces"—and apparently he was wrong. I just wanted to clarify it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It has been clarified now. No, the lead must come from the municipality. As the province continues to assist municipalities to enjoy the benefits of financial aid from the federal government and from the provinces, it will increasingly demand a higher standard of official community plans than has been received in the past. This, we believe, is a reasonable request, and one which should be welcomed by all municipalities. While the urban renewal aid programme is available to help overcome the mistakes of the past, we must do everything possible to make sure that similar mistakes of growth and development are not repeated ad infinitum. This is in keeping with the statements made by my predecessor when provincial policy announcements on urban renewal were made in the summer of 1964.

Now, the second part is about the minimum housing standard programmes and such, in 1938. This is a draft, I may say, and something which will be going out to the municipalities. I had originally intended to put this on record, perhaps during the Budget debate. It will now go out to the municipalities.

Thirdly, and most important, and this is your particular question, is the matter of citizen participation in planning for urban renewal and its implementation. Citizen participation and community planning in urban renewal means many things to many people. At one extreme, it means planning by the people, where everyone has an opinion, whether well-informed or not. At the other extreme, it is the path of acceptance of an idea, prepared by experts and imposed as "good for the people." At best inevitable or unavoidable, and uncompromising at worse. In between, there are a variety of ideas, including active resistance, friendly involvement, creative conflict, self determination and responsible involvement. All these phrases, incidentally, came from a series of meetings which the staff had with a number of people who are involved directly with, or on the fringes of, the scheme here in Toronto, and elsewhere in the province.

For over 20 years, citizen participation has been recognized by the province as an essential element of good community planning which, among other things, includes the planning for the renewal of an area, neighbourhood or district. This is reflected in The Planning Act which states that every planning board shall hold public meetings. And I do not need to read those sections to my friends. The urban renewal votes have stressed these matters.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the Minister has very much—I would point out the time to him.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: A good point to stop.

Mr. Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair. We will resume at eight.

It being 6:00 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

On vote 1402:

Mr. Chairman: When we recessed at 6:00 o'clock, the Minister was in the middle of making some comments.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Yes, Mr. Chairman, we were talking particularly about citizen participation in urban renewal projects, and I will continue reading from this statement which is not much longer. You will recall that I indicated that The Planning Act reflected that the planning board should hold public meetings and publish information for the purpose of obtaining the participation and co-operation of the inhabitants of the planning area in determining the solution of problems or matters affecting the development of the planning area. That section has been in The Planning Act for some time.

Later, in 1958, "Urban Renewal Notes", a publication of The Department of Planning and Development dealing with urban renewal, emphasized the importance of citizen participation. There were two statements taken directly from that publication some 10 years ago.

> Urban renewal is not an activity that is undertaken in the backroom but it is one in which the entire community has a vital concern.
> On this concern depends the success or failure of the programme and at a later stage, at the preliminary discussion stage, the community should turn its attention also to the use of community groups—churches, social agencies and the like—that are valuable in supporting redevelopment and interpreting redevelopment programmes for the public, particularly where the redevelopment of residential areas is concerned. All meetings at this point would also of course include representation from the planning board and council.
> This guidance over the years has been helpful to many municipalities, notably Ottawa and Hamilton. Events last year in Toronto, however, have made it necessary for the province to take a firmer stand to ensure that citizen participation does in fact take place.

On October 12, as my friend has mentioned, my colleague, the hon. Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman), made the following statement:

> The Ontario government will not participate in any future urban renewal projects unless, in the initial stages, an urban renewal committee is estabilshed on which there will be representation of the residents of that area and with an urban renewal scheme as contemplated. This urban renewal committee will provide the vehicle through which the residents will present their plans for conservation, rehabilitation, or re-development which they believe will best suit the needs of the area in which they live.

Subsequent to this statement, with which I and the staff of my department wholeheartedly agree, I instructed that detailed guidelines on citizen participation be prepared and be made available to all the municipalities engaged in urban renewal operations. Those guidelines are now available. They are designed not only to assure the province that there is an adequate and real involvement by the people directly affected by urban renewal, but also to help municipalities in framing the programme for this participation.

The guidelines in general deal with such basics as communication with citizens, organization at the local area levels to ensure adequate communication, on-site office arrangements and staff, to mention a few.

The spirit of citizen participation is well expressed in a recent publication on urban renewal in Sudbury, entitled "A Progress Report, April, 1968", and it says in part:

> The interest and encouragement of every citizen is vital to the success of this very important project which is so essential to the revitalization not only of the downtown area but of the entire community.

This spirit, Mr. Chairman, must apply to all communities in Ontario that are attempting to make full use of the tools of urban renewal to help overcome their problems.

It must be realized, however, that decisions in urban renewal, as in all phases of municipal development, are ultimately decisions that have to be made by elected representatives in the interests of the community at large. Decisions in urban renewal can be assisted by good citizen participation and community organization, but to expect such decisions on a popular vote basis would be to invite chaos and stagnation.

Now, in effect, we have re-inforced the statement which was made by the then Minister of Reform Institutions—I think we have tried to point out—and I do not want to be critical perhaps of what has gone on in the immediate area—but we have tried to point out—and Sudbury is a case in point—there simply have not been some of the problems which you have experienced here in this area. But we think we are getting back on the right track here and quietly giving and being asked for some assistance and we hope we will get this vehicle rolling again.

Mr. Chairman: Was the member for Riverdale pursuing this?

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to know that the Minister, at least, verbally agrees with the imperative need for adequate participation. I do not want him, or anyone else, to think that I underestimate the patience that is required in order to achieve any form of meaningful participation.

I would draw to the Minister's attention, if he has not already either received it or had an opportunity to peruse it, the booklet, "Rehabilitation, Outline for a Policy"—which was put together by the ward two residents association, the Don Vale association, which is a very real endeavour on the part of the very people who you would wish to have participate in urban renewal, to work out a policy at the local level of the various steps which could be taken.

I agree, and I think that anyone who has had any brief experience at all with urban renewal schemes would know, that you are not talking about a referendum vote, or a popular vote. What you are talking about is the ability of the people in the area to form some sort of meaningful structured association within which committees can operate in conjunction with the committees at the level of the municipal corporation, and with committees at the provincial and federal level, in order to make certain that the plans which are evolved for any area meet the largest popular response as can be achieved.

I think that is quite clear, and it is very easy to talk about citizen participation, but very difficult to implement it. I think that the Minister understands when I say it takes, in my view, an almost infinite kind of patience. The Minister may be aware of the results obtained in New Haven, Connecticut, which was held up for many years as the classic ideal form of urban renewable. What in fact happened, just recently in New Haven, was not just because of the difference of the racial problem in the United States but simply because what they had thought was an adequate form of citizen participation was, in fact, only a very formal participation, and the people in the area did not have any continuing connection with it.

The reason was quite clearly that they were also engaged in clearing an area and relocating people elsewhere without giving adequate consideration to where the people were going to be relocated. That is why I think that this ward two association booklet is very valuable in its contribution in the Ontario context.

I think that we have to get away from any suggestion that the only thing that can be done is to demolish totally an area, and that large portions of the downtown part of Metropolitan Toronto can be rehabilitated. Other areas or parts of the area will require new buildings and structures, but the basic form of the community can be maintained and rehabilitated and renovated over a long period of time so that the community is not destroyed and the people continue to have the kind of participation about which we have just been speaking and about which the hon. Minister spoke.

I would ask the Minister one further question. Now that we have a new broom in Ottawa—of the same old straw or not remains to be seen—but are there discussions between your department and the federal government on any part of this urban renewal programme, and are discussions anticipated in the near future?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not at my level. Perhaps at the staff level I think that it should be said that we talked to people in the municipalities and the director said this to me during the dinner hour. He said that I could have said that we talked to people in Toronto and area on this problem daily, as we do to other municipalities. I think that it is also safe to say that we talked to central mortgage and housing.

We have a very good daily relationship on these problems. I think that I should say to you that not at my level have I talked to the Ottawa officials, although I propose to do so, and in fact I made that note during the dinner hour, that I should be in consultation with Mr. Hellyer before very long.

It is also safe to say that our level—although I cannot speak for central mortgage and housing corporation—but both of us feel that we want to avoid duplication at all costs, let me put it that way. Both of us are required on these advisory and technical committees, and both of us are represented. The staff can do nothing else than to go to these committee meetings and we are looking for ways where either one or both of us can get out of the picture, but keep informed and rely on the other.

Or perhaps both of us can get out and leave it to the municipality. The federal government's role is primarily, I suppose, the banker. In some ways ours is, too, and if we are going to leave the initiative to the local municipalities, then we can do our part by trying to get out of the picture rather than get into it. I suppose really one of our big roles would be promoting urban renewal. My own community—and I guess I would say this in Chatham—has several examples of where urban renewal projects, in my view, would be worthwhile. The council—including the time when I was on council—has shown no great interest in this.

This is really our role as much as anything, or it should be our primary job to get down to the Chathams of this province and say: "Come on here. The federal government and ourselves will give you all the help, the money you need", and stir up interest in it, rather than the direct supervision or the detailed checking and so on, because there are competent staffs who do this. This is what we are trying to do, and we are talking with central mortgage along these lines. I do not want to speak for them, but I think they are in agreement with us.

But to answer the member's question, I have not been directly in touch with central mortgage since the election.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): We, of course, watch with great enthusiasm the project going on in Sudbury where a severely blighted area of the downtown core of the city is going to be demolished and replaced by other forms of development. Perhaps it is appropriate to express a word of gratitude to the Globe and Mail for the series of articles that newspaper did on the city in which it gave very prominent place to the urban renewal development in the central core of the city. I am told those articles in that widely-read newspaper elicited many enquiries from many parts of the country about the progress and the actual mechanics of the operation of the scheme. I, of course, am very enthusiastic about the participation of this department and I would like to take the opportunity to congratulate this Minister and his officials for the vigorous way and the encouraging way in which they have participated as one of the three partners in the scheme.

Now, there is one thing to be noted. One must accord every laudation to the citizens. I do not know what the member for Riverdale means about citizen participation, but if he means the participation of citizens who actually form the commission, then they are entitled to every congratulation.

It is rather an anomaly to see these people of great ability, professional people, successful people, coming foward and giving so much effort, taking so much time and making such a great contribution to the success of the scheme. It is anomalous to see them throw themselves into that type of enterprise and yet the same people, if you suggested to them that they run for municipal council, they would throw up their hands in horror at the thought of giving up their evenings to sit around the council table and perhaps suffer the criticism that falls on municipal councillors. However, their contribution is certainly magnificent.

Now, the other thing is that perhaps Sudbury will be an example of that type of scheme that will teach lessons to the department and other levels of government in other parts of the province. Perhaps some of the kinks that will be ironed out in Sudbury will provide valuable experience. Certainly the difficulties are many. As the member, one becomes acquainted with them in relation to the dislocation of people, their displacement and the provision of alternative accommodation for them—not to forget the prices being paid for the condemnation and expropriation of the property and the pain and anguish that that item gives rise to.

Well, these are all matters of experience. The other thing, I do not want to be entirely benign about this, I do not want to get out of character entirely; when one remembers that this is a three-party partnership, municipal government, provincial government and federal government through CMHC and I think they put up rather a large chunk of the cash, the senior government, through CMHC, I just forget how much—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right.

Mr. Sopha: How much?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Fifty per cent.

Mr. Sopha: Fifty per cent, they put up half the cash—one wonders about the huffing and puffing of the Provincial Treasurer about some remarks made by Mr. Hellyer about interference in municipal affairs when they are very much a partner. The Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) seemed terribly sensitive about Mr. Hellyer's references yesterday and I suppose Mr. Hellyer will become the responsible Minister. Well, as long as he is putting up the cash, I would accord to him the right to make some observations about how it is spent and I hope the Provincial Treasurer is prepared to accept any suggestions that Mr. Hellyer may make.

Now finally, I think that the major difficulty that will be encountered in efficiency in these schemes is the fact that three partners means difficulty in the decision-making process. Before they take a step, they always have to go back to the overseers in their own level of government. They have to go to the city council. The municipal people have to go to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. The CMHC people have to go back to the senior government; so that the decision-making process is inefficient in the extreme. I would hope—and I have said this in another context—that perhaps in the future scheme some overall body capable of making and enforcing decisions can replace the present process. Then this government can delegate, to some appropriate organ, the power to make decisions so that the scheme can get ahead.

The chief deficiency in it is its slowness. We have been at ours now—how long is it?—three or four years and I think they have yet to tear down a building. But I am very encouraged that when they start to tear them down—the old Queen's hotel is going within the month—thousands of cockroaches will be made homeless and a landmark in the city will disappear.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well just one comment, Mr. Chairman, and I am through.

We looked at Sudbury for leadership in this regard. We were talking about citizen participation. I will just mention it—I am not going to read it at all, but there are all different kinds of citizen participation and in some measure, we are talking about business participation, commercial owners in Sudbury and tenants as well, homeowners. We have been talking about one kind—a different kind, perhaps, than the context of Toronto. It was a very delightful brief. Some time you should read the brief from the Sydenham ward ratepayers association in Kingston. The member is here.

I suspect that this ratepayers association is well loaded, if I can use that expression, with RMC people, with Queen's people, but it really is quite a fascinating brief. It is the same thing, citizen participation, and they worry about different kinds of things, but it all adds up to the same sort of thing.

Mr. W. Hodgson (York North): Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest this afternoon to the various arguments put forth by the different members of this Legislature and I was very interested and pleased to hear the Minister say that he was very desirous of county planning boards.

The county that I have the privilege of representing, six municipalities in the county of York, I would imagine maybe is a unique situation in the province of Ontario, but in 1954, when Bill 80 was passed and created Metropolitan Toronto, it gave jurisdiction over planning in six southern municipalities of York county.

Now the members of York county council and the Minister is quite aware of this, but we are very desirous that York county becomes a planning area of its own. More particularly, since Bill 44 will be passed in the next few days to the third reading, where the county school administration over the county will be the new type of administration as far as school boards are concerned. It makes them all the more desirous that they should have complete control over the planning in York county.

We are reaching that very desirable population that was mentioned by the member for Yorkview (Mr. Young), this afternoon, 150,000—we are very desirous of, let us say, running our own show. The question I am going to ask the Minister is; they have made representation; what is their next step?

Should they make official representation to the Minister so he could give them leadership in this field and give them direction? What is their next step as far as becoming a planning area of their own?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The member for York North has spoken to me about this and we have met with York county on two or three occasions and they have, of course, met with the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts). I wish I had an answer for him, but I do not. I think I indicated this afternoon—we were talking about this under the main office vote—perhaps about the relationship of regional development to regional government. I said that, in the long run, and in my personal view—which is not a statement of government policy—you cannot separate planning and development. I would say that those boundaries should ultimately be contiguous to achieve maximum facility of operation to ensure more rapid results.

I am not happy with the situation, and nor were the draftsmen, I would think, where you have a governmental area in York county, in which their planning function was under the Metro planning board. On the other hand, it must be said that the Metro planning people—and I am sure that all of them work toward the end objectively rather than for a larger Metro—object to. Or are not happy that they do not have all the tools to do the planning that they should do because they really advise, or do not control to the fullest, those parts of the Metro planning area which are not part of Metro.

I am not happy with the situation, and I do not think that it is good, but as I said to the member, and to the county of York, at this point I do not have a solution. I hope that before too long, a solution will be forthcoming. I think that the answer will com to us in terms of the MTARTS study, and then I hope that we will have a better answer than the one we have now.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York North.

Mr. W. Hodgson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, and I can assure you that the boys in York county are just as anxious for a solution to the problem as you are. You have heard from the members for York Centre (Mr. Deacon), and Ontario and York; they are all very anxious. We are being pressed all the time for an answer and I appreciate very much if we could have an early solution to this problem.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, if I may go back for a moment to the urban renewal. I am rather hesitant to say anything unkind about urban renewal, but, together with those wonderful aspects of the rebuilding of the downtown core that takes place, there are problems. The largest problem seems to be the housing of those people who resided in the area which are to be torn down and rebuilt. Now, until we get to the point where we are prepared to provide adequate compensation for people who lose their homes in urban renewal, then it is not going to meet with the success and achieve the end result that it should be achieving.

These urban renewal projects should not necessarily just be one of beautification. It should be one of upgrading and improving the living standards of the people who have lived in these areas. At the present moment, the compensation that is allowed those people who have to move out of what may be considered inadequate housing, is not nearly enough to allow them to move into housing in another area.

Now I feel that until we get to the acceptance of the house-for-a-house ideal in home expropriation, which it does not end up being in many cases, we are not going to achieve the results that we desire. We do not build nearly enough public housing to take in the many families that are put out of homes and who have lived in what may be classed by some as substandard units. We do not provide enough public housing to facilitate accommodation of these people.

There are two areas in which we have to be more forceful in this province if we are going to undertake any massive urban renewal of the type mentioned in Sudbury and is presently going on in Hamilton. That is to ensure that those people who have to move—and generally they are the lower income group—are provided with accommodation that is better, or at least as good, at a cost that they can afford. Until we get to this point, urban renewal will not serve a useful purpose.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to confirm the views of the southern part of the county of York insofar as wishing to become involved with the rest of the county on a planning basis, and also to state that the Minister need not be concerned that we are not now well represented on the Metro planning board, as we are getting good representation, and to date we have had little to complain about.

The main problem is that we do not see ourselves, in the long run, as part of Metro. We want to be part of another region north of Metro and we hope that the Minister will get busy and give leadership to the group so that we will develop that as soon as possible.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, a year or more ago, in this House, we had certain problems brought before the Minister of Energy and Resources Management (Mr. Simonett). This was in connection with the erosion which was threatening certain houses at that time in the Metro area. This followed a death in York East, where erosion had destroyed backyards, and one life. Now, at the present time, the engineering and the actual works are being completed on Troutbrook Drive in my riding, and the St. Lucy Drive project is finished. The people there are happy about the situation. But the problem that I bring before the Minister tonight, in this whole realm of planning, is raised by a speech of Herbert Fennerty, an engineer with James F. MacLaren, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star of January 27, 1968. He warned that there were 73 miles of river bank in Metro where erosion could cause landslides.

He told the Metro conservation authority on flood control that erosion threatened life and property. He pointed out there were 246 miles of waterway in the Metro region south of Highway 7. He said that a preliminary engineering report showed 277 problem areas, mostly on the Humber, and urged tougher laws to control building near river banks.

Now, a year ago, we had quite a discussion in this House about this problem. Ultimately, I suppose, it is up to the municipalities to see to it that buildings are so placed along the river banks that erosion will not threaten their extinction in the years ahead. But this is not always possible in many areas of Ontario where there are situations like this. Sometimes councils are just a little lax, and sometimes the pressure of high value land leads to the building of homes just too close to erosion-prone banks.

Now I do not know whether this Minister has taken this into consideration, but he certainly should, because ultimately the subdivision plans have to be approved in his department. While again I think that the major responsibilities should rest, for most of these subdivision plans, particularly in this area, at the local level. There is an area here where the regulation could be made where The Planning Act could be so amended that a certain criteria to be set up in respect to erosion-prone lands and the building thereon. I wonder if the Minister has any comment in this regard?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, except to agree with the hon. member. I live on the shores of Lake Erie, and I am a little bit conscious of the problem of erosion. We lose about a foot a year I think, on the average, and we are 100 feet back. My father always took the attitude that he had a hundred years to worry about it, and he was not going to worry about it much, and I am not too worried. But as far as we are concerned, the two cottages next to us have both been moved, both of which would be completely over the bank at this point, so I am aware of this problem.

We have erosion, although not particularly with relation to housing, in Chatham on the Thames. There is a great big block downtown, which is ripe for urban renewal, which is about to fall into the creek in Chatham. This is The Department of Labour suggesting that there should be something done about what is a serious problem of erosion, so I am aware of the problems of erosion, but particularly as far as the department is concerned. I do not know what happened when St. Lucy Drive and those plans were approved —whenever they were—but now, and I have noticed this myself, I think because of the slight interest I have in erosion problems, that every approval for a plan of subdivision I see, and I see a small percentage of them, and often consents, the other things which come to my desk for one reason or another, we always seem to circulate the conservation authorities—I guess we circulate the branch in energy, who, in turn, write to the authority and get their opinion. The director tells me that we give great weight to the opinion of the local conservation authority and/or the branch.

I think this is true, because I noticed two or three severances for one reason or another which they were getting a clean bill of health for practically everything else—from health and highways and the local MOH and so on, down the list, and the conservation authority was not too enthusiastic about it and we have taken that advice perhaps, and put stronger emphasis on it than some of the other advice we have had. So I think currently we pay a great deal of attention to the problem which you have raised.

Mr. Young: Another planning matter, Mr. Chairman, which I would like to raise with the Minister. I have done this in former years with former Ministers, and that is the section of The Planning Act which provides for 5 per cent of the land to be subdivided for municipal purposes and used mainly for parks. Now I think all of us are aware that in the larger cities as we enter the high rise apartment stage that the 5 per cent land is no longer adequate as we live vertically instead of horizontally.

This 5 per cent was designed mainly for the urban sprawl of former days when we lived in bungalows or houses on larger lots and when the 5 per cent was designed to give space particularly to children in those homes.

Now today no longer adequate and often composite subdivision plans come in. Part of a plan will be high rise apartments, another part row housing, and then single family homes, and because the single family area is the least valuable land, the 5 per cent land is often taken in that section. Too often in the past—I hope this practice is passing—it may be swampland or land which is river valleys and this sort of thing, but too often not good play space.

Then the fact remains that we are now facing a population problem wherein this kind of mixed subdivision plan the play space is just not good enough. Standards have been set by people in this field of something like 2.5 acres per thousand of population, that is for immediate play space, and then there is an addition to that for open space of various kinds—river valleys and so on. But I wonder if the Minister is taking this matter under serious consideration that some other criteria ought to be set up for land for municipal purposes other than the 5 per cent of the subdivision area.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, we are. I noticed in last year's estimates, I think that Mr. Spooner undertook to take a look at this. We have not come up with an answer yet. The municipality cannot, in their approval, ask for more than 5 per cent; they can zone for a high content of public space.

Mr. Young: They can take 5 per cent of the apartment land, and sell it to buy more of less valuable space, but very few of them do this.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right. Interestingly enough, and I am not saying this is what our conclusions should be, but the three problems I have had relating to this matter in the last eight months, most particularly from the member for Ontario South (Mr. W. Newman), are municipalities where they have 5 per cent land that they simply do not know what to do with. They have money in the bank that they do not know what to do with —and they would like an amendment to the Act—these are three little municipalities—to use it for other civic purposes and I think that may well be the next amendment to the Act, giving some discretion probably to the poor old Minister.

Mr. Young: They will be very sorry indeed if they do after they are built up!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well without naming the municipalities, something like 20 per cent of the municipality, and it is a village, is an open space and the thing that they need most at this time, and they have $15,000 sitting in the bank, is a new roof on the arena. Now there should be permission in the Act for somebody to allow them to do that.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402; the member for Algoma-Manitoulin.

Mr. S. Farquhar (Algoma-Manitoulin): I am almost frightened to speak up; I am afraid of getting cut off at the knees by the hon. member for London South (Mr. White).

Mr. Chairman: I would suggest the member just disregard his interjections.

Mr. Farquhar: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. It has become pretty apparent, Mr. Chairman, that planning seems to be dependent pretty well on initiative from the municipalities and I am wondering if the Minister has given very much thought to those areas where there are no such bodies—in the unorganized areas of northern Ontario and other places. Specifically, I can tell him that it is very difficult to get planning interest, planning initiative and planning impetus going in some of those areas.

I might mention that the area I refer to in particular is along the north shore of Georgian Bay in Algoma and I have had some talks with his Mr. Sowa from Sudbury. I am wondering if this gentleman out of the branch in Sudbury is given the time and attention and support from the department that is needed in an area like that—or if perhaps more of his attention is not directed into the more sophisticated areas of planning needs than in that area, for instance.

Now I might mention that there have been quite a few talks with people along that area by myself, and by Mr. Sowa. There is an atmosphere and an attitude there; there are people there that are interested in forming a planning board, but what I am concerned with now is whether or not planning is the answer or whether organization is the answer to some of these areas.

Which comes first? I will be frank to say that your representative from Sudbury feels that planning comes first and organization comes second. I do not agree in this particular set of circumstances, but I would like to have the Minister's views.

I might mention that it has become very apparent finally to those people in that area that they are going nowhere until they do get planning and organizing in municipal government, both or either one, preferably both.

I would like to ask the Minister what his opinion is with respect to what takes priority —actually what effort and what emphasis is being provided by the government, because it simply cannot come from there; it has to be provided from here, in the original instance anyhow. It is not going anywhere and it becomes particularly important now because there are developments about to take place on the north shore of Georgian Bay, and, in fact, one or two of them have already started —but that I do not need to talk about tonight.

We do not want to enter into the type of shack town development that we had there on the occasion when Elliot Lake was growing strong. We have been able to get away from it just nicely and we do not want to start again, and unless planning effort, or organizational effort with the people that are interested and prepared to take a part in it, is undertaken, that is exactly what we are going to have once again.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402 carried? The Minister wishes to comment?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I have some letters from your part of the world which indicates to me that what you are saying is quite correct. It is more than just planning, it is governmental services, or services in unorganized territories. We are taking a very good look at this, particularly from our point of view of planning—but more has to be done, I would agree.

Mr. Farquhar: I would just make one brief comment and that is to the effect that the reason that the attitude is there, and the people are there to help with it and to lend themselves to organization and take some responsibility for these efforts there, is because they have very recently, on several occasions, found that they are going nowhere for the simple reason that there is nobody to vest property in. Therefore, several of the grants that are available from this government are not available to them, so there they sit in terms of recreational needs and many other kinds of needs.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister wish to comment further? The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): On vote 1405, item 8, I wonder if the Minister would just give us a little rundown on actually what these grants consist of, who receives them and how they are paid in unorganized territory?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am sorry, I missed the first part.

Mr. Jackson: Vote 1405, item 8.

Mr. Chairman: Item 8?

Mr. Jackson: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: That is quite in order; we are debating item 8.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is a decrease in the vote this year mainly because the Brunetville situation is now nearly done; the house moving is out of this vote. I think something else was transferred, but, specifically, how the $60,000 was intended to be spent is: For the tax stabilization in Kapuskasing—$40,000; and grants to designated municipalities in planning areas containing unorganized territory—$20,000, for a total of $60,000. And the director tells me, I would say this to the member for Algoma-Manitoulin, that $20,000 has not been used yet but we will be willing to talk to anybody about how we might use it. And this is exactly what you were talking about.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402, the member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, does this vote include all of 1407 did you say?

Mr. Chairman: No, as I pointed out earlier in the deliberations this afternoon, we are dealing with vote 1402 which is the community planning branch; and also item 3 and 8 of vote 1405 which had to do with planning, and item 1 of vote 1407 which was lands, grants and payments for townsites. Those three items in the subsequent votes are included in vote 1402.

Mr. Deacon: Well, I want to make one last comment on vote 1407, sir, item one. On the matter of loans, grants and payments to provide services for townsites, namely, in Moosonee, what is the situation regarding the southern part of the townsite across the river which lacks municipal services? Some of the homes are on properly designated lots and there is no way of getting water protection to these homes at the present time.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am not as familiar with this situation as I would like to be. Water services will be provided on the south side this year. I saw a memorandum today which I have not had a chance to read, discussing the price which should be charged for lots—some 200, is that right?—which are now ready and which can be put up for sale. I am going up there in a month's time. I will know more about that. But, generally, things are on schedule; lots are ready.

Mr. Deacon: The Minister advised us that definitely the southern part of the town which is largely, in fact almost entirely, inhabited by Indians is now being serviced. They will be in a position to buy lots at a set cost in order to—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Serviced this year.

Mr. Deacon: They will be serviced this year? And are there any arrangements being made in co-operation with The Department of Highways so that they can get fire protection over there? At the present time the bridge over there is such that they could not get a fire truck over three anyway.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: A meeting of the summit was held—between The Department of Highways, The Department of Energy and Resources Management, The Department of Lands and Forests, the Minister of Municipal Affairs, and the chairman of the ONR—and the bridge is being built.

Mr. Deacon: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1402 carried, which also carries items 3 and 8 of 1405; and item 1 of vote 1407.

Vote 1402 agreed to.

On vote 1403:

Mr. Deacon: The matter of municipal finance in this whole area of operation is one that provides a tremendous opportunity for The Department of Municipal Affairs, in that it can provide proper accounting records in an understandable form for municipalities, so that not only their members of council, not only the clerks and treasurers, not only the assessors, not only the road superintendent, but also the voters can get an idea of how well their municipality is operated.

But, until recently, I was not aware of anything other than changes being made in accounting procedures for municipalities. Nothing has been done to my knowledge yet —maybe the Minister could correct me on this—in the way of providing comparative statistics as to, in effect, the cost benefits that are being derived, comparative cost benefits, between various municipalities.

The purpose of such figures would be to let the voters and council members and others concerned see how well their municipality is being operated in comparison with others. It would provide them with an incentive, based on facts, to see just how they rate and where they might improve. What progress, would the Minister advise me, has been made by this municipal finance branch in this direction?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Most of this actually comes under the municipal accounting branch in this same vote, just to set the record straight. Now, I think you will recall that perhaps a year and a half ago the previous Minister indicated to the municipalities what all would be done concerning municipal finance reporting in Ontario.

And most of what he said would be done—the involvement of the institute of chartered accountants of Ontario, the study group; the educational programme of the clerks and treasurers association; the statement of source and application of funds; the five-year review; new standard forms are in the process of being printed—I think nearly everything in that statement by Mr. Spooner has now been done or will be done by the end of this year.

The progress has increased, I think, in the last couple of years. I saw the forms of the new financial statements the other day; and the auditor's report—they have six columns of comparable figures and so on—and I was rather impressed with them, with my limited knowledge. I think they will be much more meaningful to the municipalities, to the councils, and to the citizens as a whole. He raised the point of comparisons and, of course, I would agree that you get into this area of assessment and equalizing assessment before you can equalize the mill rate.

I would hope if we can get all the municipalities on a comparable accounting reporting basis, then we will be in a much better position to make comparisons. Three weeks ago there was a very interesting meeting of the reporting officers of The Department of Municipal Affairs from acoss the country, some forty or fifty, meeting with the Dominion bureau of statistics people, who specialize in this area. There is very real progress being made, not only by Ontario but across the country.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, this is a very basic tool used in industry and branch operations to obtain the greatest performance and efficiency, and actually enable those managing these operations to do the best job. They become well informed.

But one problem in examining the accounting records that the Minister kindly arranged for me to get a few weeks ago, was that they were still very complicated, and they would not provide many of the tools of measurement of performance that would be useful, such as the operation of roads—by pointing out a comparison of the numbers of miles of unpaved roads, how much is being spent per mile, the condition of the roads, according to the inspection, for the moneys being spent. This is a field in which The Department of Municipal Affairs alone can help us improve greatly our efficiency in our performance of local government.

We all know we criticize the short-sightedness in so many instances of municipal officers, clerk-treasurers, elected officials and others. But it is usually due to their lack of knowledge of the basic facts. And it is in this vote that we are dealing with now where we have the greatest opportunity to really help these people in a meaningful way.

Now one of the problems at the present time is that you are operating through so many different branches that the municipal officials are confused as to who to go to. I would suggest that consideration be given to not setting up different branches around the province—and each having different responsibilities within The Department of Municipal Affairs—but having experts located around the province who are familiar or know how to get the information required to assist municipalities in all aspects.

They would be in a position where they can travel out to towns and villages and other municipalities to provide these people—by sitting down with them—with comparative information as to how they are performing in various aspects of their operations. Then, I think, we will see a much greater response. Very few people read a report that is just mailed back to them. They just do not see it.

But if a department representative who understands the facts and has the comparative figures, goes and sits down with the council and the clerk-treasurer, I think they then will start to see the ways that they can improve their own operations. There are very, very few people in municipal government who are not as anxious as every one of us are here to give our people value for our tax dollar.

So I am looking forward to this department —even though it has to be for various reasons, diversified and broken down here, at head office so to speak—being in a much more straightforward and simple form in the way it meets with the local municipalities. It is too confusing and they are reporting that we are not enabling these people to get useful facts from the blue books.

It is not at all helpful—or very seldom very helpful—to municipalities in improving their methods of operation. I hope that the Minister will give careful consideration to changing the approach of dealing with local municipalities.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1403 carried? The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister—I may have missed this—have you a plan to reform the assessment base on rental capitalization programme?

Mr. Chairman: That is 1404.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, that is not this vote? Well, then, I am talking about in the area of municipal finance, under this vote. We have approximately how many municipalities —1200 municipalities under—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There are 967.

Mr. Sargent: Well 967. And 619 of these municipalities—possibly 65.8 per cent—did not send assessment notices to tenants last year.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is the next vote, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you are probably right, but how can any municipality do any financing when they do not have the proper method of accounting or assessment procedures? I would like to know when you are on this vote.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1404?

Mr. Sargent: We are on vote 1403, Mr. Chairman, municipal finance.

We have the municipal accounting branch, finance—

Mr. Chairman: Under vote 1405, item 2—The Assessment Act is —

Mr. Sargent: I will forget about assessments. I will get on to the mechanical systems used in the book-keeping of the municipalities to determine their subsidies. By the confession of the Minister himself, things were in a sorry mess in Ontario insofar as his department was concerned.

If the Minister would like me to go over the whole bit, I will be glad to. But I would like to ask at this point what are you doing to catch up with things? Are men in the field now in each area—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: They are.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1403 carried?

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, one point I did not bring up. There are some aspects of municipal borrowing and financing that I wanted to ask the Minister about.

I understand that he has in the department now, one of the foremost people in the municipal bond field—a Mr. Brown, is that true?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is right.

Mr. Deacon: In the comments made in this House, some people have mentioned the fact that very little money is now going—or there is a great decrease in the amount of money going—into municipal bond. The market is not interested in them and there are many reasons for this.

First of all, in the past, municipalities have been required to sell serial bonds which mature at a certain amount each year rather than term bonds with a sinking fund. This has the disadvantage that if you want to market your bonds, they are much more difficult to market. If you have term bonds with the one standard maturing date and you have sinking fund purchases, there is always a better market for them. The bond market has become very conscious of market ability in recent years and has been shunning the serial bonds that the department's regulations have required.

I understand that there is a way they can make them—they can get around this regulation and make a compromise, but it is not as good—as having straight permission for term bonds. Is there a change in legislation coming through which will enable all municipalities to sell bonds with sinking fund provisions?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, there are two things. We have this matter under study in relation to sinking funds. We are looking at this problem. Of course, the other thing I think which needs to be said is that because of the Canada pension moneys used for the Ontario education capital aid corporation—the municipalities are simply not required now to go to the public the way they formerly did. There is a chart on page 34 of the annual report which indicates, for example, that 10 years ago in 1958 the municipalities went to the public for some 88 per cent of their money, the remainder coming from provincial programmes. Today—or at least in 1967, they went to the public for only 40 per cent of their borrowing requirements.

But we do have the point which you raised, under study.

Mr. Deacon: Well I suggest that it is a good thing to have a situation where you can raise money on the public market in case these Canada pension funds dry up due to demands upon that fund on a current basis which would not permit investment in these municipalities. Through municipal securities, the private market does provide a very good test ground for the sound operation of municipalities.

One item that the Minister might consider in this matter is enabling them to have a longer term on the bonds than has been the practice in the past. Sometimes the bonds have been required to be of too short a term and have not been as attractive as they otherwise might have been.

Another matter is the importance of developing a set-up under which municipalities, instead of borrowing directly themselves, will be borrowing in the future through regional or county boards and thus have a larger unit borrowing on a larger assessment base.

Vote 1403 agreed to.

On vote 1404:

Mr. R. Haggerty (Welland South): Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I believe it would be correct to say that there is general agreement in Ontario that the number one problem about property tax is that it is too high. I think this has been shown in the basic shelter exemption tax. The first place the property tax has been called upon to finance most is the cost of services such as education which are not services to property. As a result, the property owners have been asked to bear an unreasonably large share of the many services provided by the public —such as roads, streets and police forces.

A major problem of real property tax in Ontario is the lack of equity mainly in the determination of the tax base and, for example, the assessed value.

Although most municipalities have undoubtedly made progress in reducing the assessment and equities, considerable problems remain with municipalities. In part, this consists of the variations in the ratios between the assessed values and market values. There are differences within the individual municipality in the valuation of land, buildings, business land, sub-divided land against unsub-divided land, farm property, urban property, industrial property. Then there is the question of equity, in some parts of Ontario, of fixed assessment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read into the record some comments from the Niagara regional local government review on assessment procedures in the counties of Welland and Lincoln. The report is dated August of 1966:

> The following problems of assessment and finance are found within the region: (1) There is no uniform, up-to-date system of assessment administration for the whole area. (2) There is an uneven spread of taxable resources among the member municipalities. This situation, in turn, leads to (a) wide disparity in the property tax burden (when the latter is measured in per capita terms or in dollars per $1,000 of taxable assessment) and (b) wide variation in the extent to which member municipalities depend on provincial grants for current and capital expenditures. (3) There are extensive differences in debt burdens.
> The purpose of this chapter is to document the above problems briefly, and to suggest at least partial remedies.

And it goes on to say:

> Assessment administration: In criticism of assessment practice in the province we can do no better than quote the hon. J. W. Spooner, Minister of Municipal Affairs. After listing 12 common infractions of legal requirements, or poor assessment methods, or indifferent administration, he said:
> "It is safe to say that if the administration of the tax base by the senior levels of government were as inadequately administered, the nation would probably be bankrupt . . . I suggest there are three basic reasons, at the present time, why the assessment function is poorly applied:
> 1. Poorly trained and part-time assessors.
> 2. The use of outdated and inadequate assessment systems.
> 3. The reluctance by municipalities to appropriate sufficient funds to institute and maintain assessment efficiency."

Outdated assessment systems. A modern centralized system of assessment, known as the county assessment commissioner system, is in operation in Lincoln county. The city of St. Catharines, however, is outside the system. As a matter of interest, the county of Lincoln was the first county in Ontario to appoint a county assessment commissioner.

All municipalities under the jurisdiction of the Lincoln county assessment commissioner are assessed at 29 per cent of market values. Such uniformity is a remarkable achievement but the small size of the percentage indicates that the level of assessed value is unrealistic.

In Welland county—without an assessment commissioner system—assessed values ranged from 30 per cent of market values in Crowland township to 49 per cent in the village of Crystal Beach.

The 1954 assessment manual—based on 1940 values—is still the basic guide to valuation presently in the region. So far, there has been little active preparation to implement the new manual published by the department in 1964. Indeed, only two counties and two municipalities in the whole province have their plans for change to the new manual well under way.

Local opinion expressed in submissions. The cities of St. Catharines and Niagara Falls recommended a uniform method of assessment for the region. The city of Welland had no comment but the city of Port Colborne said in its brief:

"Assessment based on a larger area with central location in one of the larger cities would not be acceptable and would be of great disadvantage to the local taxpayer."

On questioning the Port Colborne representatives at the public hearings, the commissioners were unable to establish what this "great disadvantage" would be. Interviews conducted by the review commission in all the municipalities of Lincoln county showed great satisfaction with their centralized system.

The township of Wainfleet, in the commentary to its brief, recommended the county assesssment commissioner system, while the townships of Crowland and Willoughby both recommended a regional approach to assessment. The village of Chippawa, on the other hand, maintained that centralization of assessment would merely add to the cost of providing the service.

And the conclusions in the brief:

(1) There is a greater centralization of assessment administration in Lincoln county than in Welland, but unless the cities join with the counties under some system, assessment administration cannot reach peak efficiency.

(2) The new provincial manual should be introduced throughout the region as soon as possible, so that all assessments will be raised to more realistic values.

(3) The licensing of assessors will soon ensure that only full time, fully trained assessors are employed. This, too, will tend towards centralized assessment.

(4) Wide disparities in the taxable resources and tax burdens of the area call for remedial action. This can be achieved by consolidating—uniting—some municipalities, and by sharing some expenditures over an appropriately large region under the jurisdiction of a regional municipal authority. Experience in Metropolitan Toronto has shown that unless consolidations take place concurrently with the sharing of expenditures of a region-wide nature, the "have" municipalities tend to benefit at the expense of the "have not" municipalities.

(5) Taxes to pay for certain services taken over by a regional authority can be levied only over those parts of the region which directly benefit from the services.

(6) Taxes to pay for certain services taken over by a consolidated municipality should be levied only over the parts of the consolidated municipality which directly benefit from the services.

(7) The dependency of some municipalities in the region upon grants in aid indicates the necessity for consolidation to form a more viable unit. It points also to the erection of a regional authority with the means to provide some of the services that are lacking.—This does not imply that we favour a reduction of provincial grants.

(8) There are wide disparities in net debt burdens. These are not necessarily a problem, and would tend to narrow if a regional authority assumes outstanding indebtedness on the assets it takes over.

These are the comments of the Mayo report.

Since Bill 44 has been passed by this House, establishing county school boards, while this may assist in achieving equality of education, it fails miserably in achieving the other goal, equity of education costs, because of the existing chaotic assessment conditions. The application of the provincial assessment equalization factors, as it is applied in municipalities today, is outdated.

The report of the Niagara region local government review commission on pages 42 and 43 refers in some detail to the serious inadequacies of existing assessment practices within the region. This is also followed up on page 65 of the report with a definite recommendation that regarding assessment throughout the region, and this includes the cities, the commission correctly takes the position that taxes for regional purposes must be levied on a completely uniform and consistent assessment base throughout the area under the proposed new provincial assessment manual.

So long as the new assessment manual is not made mandatory right across the province, there will be serious irregularities and disparities which could result in smaller municipalities paying for a larger share of the cost of education and other large expenditures of the urban centres which elected to stay out and remain with the older assessment manual or guide.

The application of the equalization formula in the assessment field is wholly inadequate—the merest stop-gap measure. Mandatory reassessment on a standard basis that includes the cities is essential and it should happen immediately so that all the taxpayers may be treated on an equal basis.

Mr. G. A. Kerr (Halton West): Mr. Chairman, just a few remarks regarding the submission of the Ontario federation of agriculture to the Treasurer and the report of the Ontario committee on taxation. This deals with assessment and I think it probably comes under this vote.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that there is a select committee on taxation now sitting. Incidentally, I would like to make the name of this committee official as the White committee, if that is all right with the members of the House.

We have had the Lawrence committee, we have had the Price committee, the Evans committee, and I think it is only natural we should have the White committee.

Mr. Sargent: Who said they were any good?

Mr. Kerr: The OFA is concerned, Mr. Chairman, among other things, with the recommendations in the Smith report dealing with provisions of The Assessment Act as they affect farm lands and buildings.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, does the hon. member have the right to name a committee?

Mr. Kerr: I think so. I will move a motion a little later if it is all right.

Mr. Sargent: What good is later?

Mr. Kerr: They are particularly concerned with the provisions of The Assessment Act dealing with farm lands and buildings. The Smith committee recommends that this special basis be repealed and also that the provisions of The Assessment Act and Police Act, providing an exemption of farm lands from taxation for certain expenditures, be repealed.

Now section 35, subsection (3) of the present Assessment Act, as hon. members know, gives some benefit to the bona fide farmer as far as municipal assessment and taxation is concerned. The farmers, particularly in my riding, and I am sure this applies pretty well to the rural section of, shall we say, the golden horseshoe area, close to the urban sprawl, are concerned because of the recommendations in the Smith report.

They are also concerned, Mr. Chairman, because of the large number of farm properties that are being sold to city folk at somewhat high values and, therefore, driving up the assessed value of rural property. This is certainly the case in my bailiwick, and I am sure that it is the same between here and Hamilton.

What happens, therefore, is that municipal assessors sometimes are unduly influenced by these sale values, thus penalizing the man who wants to continue to work the farm or who does not wish to sell or take advantage of high land values. Up to now, section 35 of The Assessment Act, particularly subsection 3 recognizes this, and gives the bona fide farmer certain considerations that he must have if he is to continue to work the farm. They are all right now; they just do not like the recommendations that may result in new legislation, but I am sure that the White committee will take this into consideration—

Mr. Sargent: White wash committee!

Mr. Kerr: —and will recommend that the Act not be changed. Now, I think that these submissions should be given a great deal of consideration if we wish to—

Mr. J. H. White (London South): I have to interject at this time to say that during the election campaign, I promised nothing, and I have kept my promise.

Mr. Kerr: Well, Mr. Chairman, if we are to continue to have a healthy agricultural industry in particularly this part of the province, then we must take special cognizance of these comments of the OFA. I am sure that the hon. Minister is aware of these comments, and appreciates the necessity of giving the same type of break that he does in the present Act. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that it is hard to believe that this hon. gentleman is at this time guiding the estimates of his department for the first time. The more I listen to him, I figure that he is a veteran at this and I cannot help but take a minute to compliment him.

Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Thunder Bay.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would like to say to my friend from Halton West, if I may, that I am sure that the chairman of the White committee is here and he will take those things into account. I am glad to have those views on record.

Mr. White: Mr. Chairman, we did have submissions today from the Ontario federation on agriculture dealing with this and other matters and I have to say that their views were very well expressed, and made a deep impression on all members of the committee. I want to assure you, sir, and my friend from Halton West, and other members who are concerned about this important matter that the views of the association will be given every consideration by the committee.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister what basis or criteria do you use for appointing chairman and members to improvement district boards? I happen to have six of them in my riding, and some of the people who happen to live under that kind of municipal governmental structure are not quite happy, and some are. I have had considerable correspondence with your predecessor, and you yourself, and on one board in particular the chairman happens not to live in the improvement district. Yet he is the chairman and the secretary and the assessor and the tax-collector—and he does not even live within the boundaries.

In another, the chairman of the district board does not attend too many of the meetings—but they do hold the meetings within the confines of the improvement district and then send the recommendations down to Toronto, where the chairman happens to reside. He looks them over, vetoes them, and if he approves, fine and dandy, but if he does not, there is nothing done about it. Now, I was just wondering what the policy of the department is that allows a situation of this calibre to exist in perpetuity. Certainly after a reasonable length of time, and without going through this long-drawn-out process of voting and having 65 per cent of those eligible to vote in favour of it, surely, the people should be given self-determination after a reasonable length of time, rather than being subjected to this sort of absentee rule, where the chairman, of the board sometimes lives hundreds of miles away and dictates the policy. If he does not happen to subscribe to it—too bad.

In one particular instance, it is my understanding that the chairman of the district improvement board happens to be an employee of the largest employer within the confines of the improvement district and I can assure you that this does not make for very good relations. This does not contribute to the kind of atmosphere that would be conducive to democracy, and the kind of participatory government that should be prevalent in all of our municipalities. I was wondering—

An hon. member: Does he work for the railway?

Mr. Stokes: No he does not. He happens to work for one of the biggest mining corporations in Canada, and I was just wondering what your policy is with regard to appointing these people? Why do you appoint somebody who is never there? He dictates the policy.

Mr. Sopha: What is he speaking of? Manitouwadge?

Mr. Stokes: Yes, and the other one happens to be the unorganized territory, in the improvement district of Dorion. Now, they have made representation to you on numerous occasions, and in that particular instance, the chairman of the board is also the secretary treasurer, the tax collector, and the assessor.

Mr. Sopha: And also president of the local Conservative association!

Mr. Stokes: No, but he is also chairman of the board of education for the city of Port Arthur.

Mr. R. M. Johnston (St. Catharines): There is nothing wrong with that!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is Tory democracy.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Dealing with the last point first, he is no longer the assessor, as he has resigned from the position. I should say that I was not familiar with these circumstances, or with the matter of absences. I will be glad to take a look at both, because I think that the people involved in the improvement districts obviously should be on the spot or nearly so. I am told, and this is often the case, that there is difficulty in finding people to take these positions. You ask how they are chosen? The views of the local organizations and the views of the local members are solicited. I would be glad to have your views any time that there is a vacancy. Quite often it seems to me that we have trouble finding somebody who is obviously capable of doing the job and is willing to take it on.

As far as self-determination is concerned, we are delighted. Any time that they want to come to us and say that they are ready to stand on their own two feet, then we will offer them all the help in the world to stand on their own two feet and elect their own council. One of the ones that you mentioned, as I am sure that you are aware, is very heavily in debt.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister if the tax basis on a graduated system is presently to be put into effect in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I submit that there is a great iniquity here because we have the people who can least afford it in the province, paying two thirds of the taxes. This is a basic iniquity in the method of assessment in the province.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): Can you verify that statement?

Mr. Sargent: Presently, yes, in a minute. But I think that it is true. For example, we have an old-age widow pensioner living in a little house, which, with its lot, would be assessed at about $1,800. She is largely dependent upon the old age pension, with some help from relatives and a little from other sources, ending up with an annual income of, normally, $1,000. At a 63 mill rate—take that as an average base—she would be paying out of her $1,800 assessment, about $113 taxes a year. Now, we take a man who has an income of say $25,000 a year, and he has a very fine residence assessed at $13,000. On a tax rate of 63 mills, he will be paying a total of $819 taxes a year. Now he has an income of $25,000 so he is paying $819 a year. And the old age pensioner's taxes represent about eleven per cent of her total annual income. In the second case, the man who has this big home and the big income, the municipal taxes he pays represent little better than three per cent.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: What about the income tax the $25,000-salaried pays?

Mr. Sargent: Well, we are not talking about that.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: You are talking about the taxes.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you do not know what you are talking about. You do not even know your own department, let alone this department.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know a little bit about taxes.

Mr. Sargent: So, you just sit back and listen for a moment; you will learn something.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Carried!

Mr. Sargent: Now the Minister says "carried". He has a long way to go. I am telling you, Mr. Chairman, this is a very sick man if the facts come out here. In this province, we have 900 municipalities. And I will just read you the sad state you are in. A total of 154 municipalities, or 17 per cent of Ontario, have no appraisal record of any kind. How can you run a business that way? 803 municipalities, or 85 per cent in Ontario, do not use any mechanical system to prepare their assessment rolls. And he says to me "carried", with a smug look on his face.

Hon. Mr. Simonett: Do you think I am sold on the idea that mechanical devices are the only way to keep books?

Mr. Sargent: Just you hold on a moment, you will see the mess this department is in here in a moment.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor here and you have got to hear this out.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I wonder if the hon. member will—

Mr. Sargent: I will not entertain a question here now.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am trying to be helpful.

Mr. Sargent: You are not being helpful at all.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I wonder if the member realizes that he is reading from a speech relating to matters that are now four years old?

Mr. Sargent: These are figures of 1967 given by the Minister.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Relating to 1964.

Mr. Sargent: All right, we will give you a chance in a moment, then, to qualify and tell us the system.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I thought you would want to be accurate.

Mr. Sargent: There are 142 municipalities then, Mr. Chairman, that did not close their assessment rolls by October 1, nor did they have any extension of time. 133 municipalities, or 14.2 per cent did not prepare their assessment rolls in accordance with the Act. 283 municipalities, or 30 per cent, do not assess properties under sections 53 or 54 of The Assessment Act, to assess and collect taxes for part of the year which is a very important source of revenue for growing municipalities. You know that. But 30 per cent are not doing this.

Where is your big machinery of men to put this in—millions of dollars being lost in one area alone in tax revenues. No wonder people are up in arms and saying, "You do not know your business". Maybe you are trying to find out, but let us get on with the job and do not sit there and say "carried" and be so smug about the job. You have got an awful mess there.

And believe me, a person who is knowledgeable about municipal finance, and has been through the bit like I have, I know you do not know your job at this point. 170 municipalities, further, did not include population on their assessment roll.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Sargent: I am not trying to sell the Minister. I could not sell him anything—

Hon. Mr. Simonett: I know you could not.

Mr. Sargent: —because you have not got the intelligence to listen. Mr. Chairman, you can talk this vote inside out and this is a most important thing; the most important thing of any operation is the cashbox of any government; the assessment department. Nothing can happen. No money comes in until you fellows do a good job. And you have a tough job. And I think you have your work cut out for you.

A total of 162 municipalities, Mr. Chairman, or 17.3 per cent, did not bother to assess or collect business tax. Many millions of dollars down the drain here. And no wonder the House is quiet to hear about these millions of dollars.

There were 619 municipalities, of 65.8 per cent, did not send assessment notices to tenants, and many people were deprived and disenfranchised of voting and school support privileges were nullified.

There were 509 municipalities, or 62 per cent, showed completely unacceptable deviations from the value norm for certain classes of property. For example, if the mean value of all property was 35 per cent of market value, then residential might read 26 per cent, commercial 45 per cent, industrial 19 and farms 39 per cent.

In every county—I go on to qualify this situation—we have a serious situation here in assessment in Ontario. You say these figures are out of date? They were in effect as of June 1967. And I do not think that with Mr. Spooner leaving things in the hurry he did, or because the people did not want him any more, that this Minister has had a chance to upgrade and pick up the pieces. I do not believe for one moment he has done that, so quit kidding the troops and tell us the facts as they are today.

You say these things have changed. I would like to know how this report has changed since this Minister has taken over. So, in this department, no matter how the Minister glosses it over with his helpers there, he has a very bad situation. We talk about the inequities in the business assessment field in Ontario—there is no change geared to the times—we have had the same pattern for years in this section, appendix A.

Mr. Chairman, do I have the right to talk about business tax under this vote? Well, it being a hot night, I do not know whether I am getting to first base or not. You could talk forever about the many shortcomings of this department.

Mr. Chairman: Order please! Vote 1404.

Mr. Sargent: I would like to ask the Minister how he assesses the fact that a distiller is based on real property and is assessed 150 per cent, and a brewer is only assessed at 75 per cent? What is the reason for not having the brewers up with the distillers in this regard?

An hon. member: The suds are not as expensive.

Mr. Sopha: Whisky is stronger.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: The corn liquor costs more than the beer.

Mr. Sargent: Why do we have people in our economy who are the top potential money-earners, such as barristers, solicitors, surgeons, oculists, doctors—a doctor up our way had to borrow $30,000 to pay his income tax last year. These people are only taxed—

Mr. Sopha: That was a quarterly payment.

Mr. Sargent: We have this special group of people only paying 50 per cent assessment on their business tax. And we have manufacturers paying 60 per cent, retail stores paying 75 per cent. But the people who have the biggest income accrue in years in this area of the professional people, you have not changed a bit, the basis of assessment on business tax to them. Now, why do you take a gold mine like a radio station and you only assess them 25 per cent?

An hon. member: Shame!

Mr. Sargent: Or the newspapers. You assess them 35 to 25 per cent, depending on population.

Mr. R. M. Johnston: Do away with it, it is only a nuisance tax anyway.

Mr. Sargent: I think this is a sad commentary. There is no rhyme or reason for the taxation geared to the times. I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your time, but we have to get on with it.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, I understand in the legislation in regard to collective bargaining for the municipal employees, that the restriction and stifling of free collective bargaining still exists under The Municipal Act, where employees in this province are restricted to 66⅔ per cent for medical, hospital and group life insurance as far as they are concerned under the Act.

Now, this Act was amended on July 7, 1966, from the position of 50 per cent to the 66⅔. I want to say that the employees at the municipal level should have the right to bargain on all issues, all issues, not just the question of wages, vacations with pay and paid holidays and so on. They should have the right to bargain on all issues, and the only restriction should be on their inability to negotiate the maximum benefits with that municipality or their employer.

I think that for too long the municipal employees in this province have been treated as second-class citizens as far as collective bargaining is concerned. I suggest to the Minister that he ought to amend The Municipal Act again to the extent of eliminating in its entirety the question of any percentages to place a restrictive level on the question of medical, hospital and group life insurance coverage. I think that if we did that, if we eliminated that level, then we would be putting the municipal employees in this province on the same level as all other industrial workers and professional workers that have the same rights; the same free right to collective bargaining so that their objective—

Mr. Chairman: Order please! I have been trying to follow the member and relate his remarks to this particular vote. Could he explain to the Chairman exactly where he relates his—

Mr. Pilkey: Well we are talking about The Municipal Act. This is the department, as I understand it, in vote 1404, municipal administration—

Mr. Chairman: This is municipal organization.

Mr. Pilkey: Right. Municipal administration and this comes under that—

Mr. Chairman: Is the member speaking to the municipal organization and administration branch division of this vote?

Mr. Pilkey: Right.

Mr. Chairman: May I ask the Minister if it properly comes under this particular department?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: If we stretch it, it does.

Mr. Chairman: Is the Minister prepared to entertain questions and discussion under this particular vote?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well I think the member is probably through. I realize that representations have been made by the provincial federation of Ontario professional firefighters, the Ontario police association—the joint council of the building services union were in the other day to meet with the committee of the Cabinet and made the same requests. It is under consideration by the government. It was not part of this year's legislative programme.

Mr. Pilkey: Could I in this regard too, then, ask the Minister if he has any jurisdiction over the Ontario municipal employees' retirement system? Because again, I want to say in that regard as well, that the employees in this province at the municipal level are restricted and the legislation is stifling pre-collective bargaining. In the areas of pensions you introduce—I do not want to indicate for a moment—

Mr. Chairman: I think this might properly have been under vote 1403.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing in these estimates for—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Order please!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is nothing in these estimates about OMERS. I think it could have been appropriately raised either under vote 1401 at the most, perhaps under vote 1403, but I really do not think it comes under this vote.

But there is nothing particular in vote 1404, or really any place, where it is indicated that OMERS could be discussed here.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I am more than pleased to see that the hon. member for Oshawa has finally joined me in this request for consideration of the right of the employee to bargain for a complete coverage of his fringe benefits because we have—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Might I say, Mr. Chairman, that I listened to the member for Windsor-Walkerville this morning making these same comments to the Minister of Education (Mr. Davis). Could we take them as read?

Mr. B. Newman: All I wanted to do was to point out to the Minister that I hope when he considers amending legislation that he likewise informs the Minister of Education, so changes can be made in both Acts at the same time, and this was the extent of my comments concerning this.

However I would like to ask the Minister if he has completed the studies concerning the request of the city of Windsor for representation on the board of the Sandwich, Windsor and Amherstburg railway? I notice that the municipality had asked for representation quite some time ago. In fact, this is an old problem and has been kicked around in council I would say for probably 10 years now. However, earlier this year the Minister informed council that he would study the problem and then make a report and—

Mr. Chairman: Does this come under another vote—vote 1406?

Mr. B. Newman: No. This was brought up in another year and it was under vote 1404, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Of course the details change. I am asking the Minister where it would properly—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It should be under vote 1406, which is the Ontario municipal board. However, to answer your question very frankly, it is true I wrote to the clerk of Windsor—I think in March—and said that I would look into this matter. The staff, I understand, are about ready to report to me. So I have not yet completed the study.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: May I point out to the member that under vote 1404, which is administration and assessment, there is the item in vote 1405, The Assessment Act, which would properly be included under this particular debate—this discussion.

Mr. B. Newman: May I ask the Chairman then, where I could discuss municipal elections?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Now.

Mr. B. Newman: Now?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right now.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you. May I ask the Minister if he is giving any consideration to having a standard date throughout the province when we have a federal election? The elections across Canada are on one day. When we have a provincial election throughout the province it happens to be on a given day, why not municipally, Mr. Chairman?

I could read to you an editorial as presented by the radio station CKWW suggesting that you consider having a set date throughout the province and that be the date for municipal elections. In this way interest could be created at the one time throughout the province and you would probably have a better turn-out of the electorate.

They would express their democratic privilege by casting a ballot on a given date. By having it as it has been in my own community—one area of the city having their elections on a Monday and the city proper or suburb having it two days later or two days earlier—does not lend itself to good citizen participation in the democratic light and I think that consideration should be given to, if possible, standardizing a municipal election day in the province.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, might I just say that the views expressed by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville are practically my own. The situation is complicated somewhat because we have staggered terms, two-year terms, three-year terms. So it is not just as easy as it sounds. The other thing is, I suppose, perhaps in many ways the matter is now settled for many municipalities because of that particular section of Bill 44.

Mr. B. Newman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I can understand the fact that if it is staggered you cannot do it—but let us say the first Monday in December or the first Wednesday in December all across Canada.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well this, of course, is what Bill 44 says. I doubt whether any municipality would have two election days.

Mr. B. Newman: The Act could be amended so it could have one date though.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Can you imagine any municipality that is going to have its school board elections on the first Monday and then have another separate election day, let us say on the second Monday?

Mr. B. Newman: No. I am simply asking—in co-operation with the Minister of Education—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I think it is settled.

Mr. B. Newman: Thank you.

Mr. D. M. De Monte (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, something has come up recently because of the federal elections and certain members of the councils in the city of Toronto being elected to the federal House. I am wondering whether the Minister is considering setting down the rules when a ward becomes vacant or an alderman retires or a controller retires, somebody else is placed in his position by the electorate.

I understand now that the city council can appoint somebody to sit in a vacancy. I think, with the greatest of respect, that this is grossly unfair and not in keeping with our democratic process. I am wondering if the Minister is considering either amending The Municipal Act so that there could be a by-election when a seat becomes vacant, or whether the rules for councilmen selecting a successor should be set down? I am suggesting that either the runner-up be appointed by city council—and this should be set out in the law—or a by-election should be held to fill a vacancy in the city council. I would like to ask the Minister whether he has considered this in view of what has transpired recently?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I answered a question about this in the House the other day. I suppose there are two things to be said. One was that we amended The Municipal Act this year so that in all elections the runner-up need not be appointed. We made our views known then as a government on that particular score that the council could appoint whoever they wanted and I think that would be some indication at that point in time of the government's thinking and of government policy.

What I said the other day was, in reply to a question, I think, from the hon. member for Riverdale, that I had not as yet been asked by the city of Toronto for what you are talking about—for by-elections—that it was not in my view possible at this session of the Legislature, nor to my knowledge was there any request from any municipality, or any municipal associations, for this kind of legislation. I think before I made a precipitous answer and expressed a view or tried to express the government's view on this, I would like to see what the municipalities across the province think about it.

Mr. De Monte: Mr. Chairman, on the same point, may I ask the hon. Minister, through you, why the government said the runner-up need not be appointed? Is there a reason for it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, we debated that on second reading.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Yorkview.

Mr. Young: Mr. Chairman, I would like to come back to the matter raised by the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville, the matter of civic elections. There was a very fine study by the bureau of municipal research in May of 1968. What they point out here is that actually the myth of greater interest and accessibility on the part of the citizens of local government is a myth—that actually there is more participation, the higher up you go in the scale of government.

One thing that is pointed out here is that likely, and I think this is true, if we get regional government, then the people will have far more interest in elections because they are bigger than most local elections we have now.

Mr. Sargent: What regions are they?

Mr. Young: Regional municipal government.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Young: No, no. I think this Minister is going to bring it and we already have two of them set up in Metro Toronto and in Ottawa. But in addition to what the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville had to say about uniformity of days in elections, I would like to see the Minister examine very carefully the possibility of setting the election date ahead, a little bit toward the warmer weather. Any of us who have gone through municipal elections know that sometimes the process of winning municipal office can be pretty brutal, particularly when cold weather sets in late in November and early December. I think the idea of the early December election was generated because of the lame duck nature of council, that is, during December councils cannot vote money and obligate the future council, although lame duck councils will carry on other business.

Now that was all right with one-year terms, but when you get three-year terms, you could set your date of election back to the first of November, or even mid-November, and still not have, over a period of time, any more months of lame duck councils than you used to have with the one-year term. This would add greatly, I think, to the effectiveness of electioneering in the municipal field. It would also, I think, generate—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That, of course, would make it very difficult to standardize the election date, because I say to you that the small municipalities who are on a one-year term would not want to deviate from the December date.

Mr. Young: All right. I am not advocating that at the moment, but as we pass to regional government, the legislation, I think, could be framed as we approach regional government as three-year terms. This may be the carrot for a three-year term. That, as we get the three-year term, the election date then goes back to, perhaps, mid-November or early November. This could work out, I think, to the benefit of municipal elections and I give this free advice and free suggestions to the Minister.

Mr. Chairman: The leader of the Opposition.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, the matter of municipal elections has been raised and the hon. member for Dovercourt brought the subject of the by-election possibility to the floor of the House a few months ago. This is going to be a continuing problem, not just the one that faces Toronto at the present time. Although this, I suppose, would be of some importance when we realize that Toronto does have the three-year term and that any statement of policy by the Minister now could be fulfilled by legislation later this year.

There is every expectation there will be a fall session and I can say to the Minister, Mr. Chairman, that any statement that he would make along those lines, calling for a by-election and indicating that we would be prepared to offer this legislation before the end of this year, we Liberals would support. I believe this is the very best alternative to the situation that faces Toronto and faces many of the municipalities, and might face them at any time.

I hope that the Minister, if he is waiting for the municipalities to approach him for this amendment, will take the first step and approach them, to see what the view would be.

Mayor Dennison, apparently, has said recently that the Legislature just concluding its session now would not have an opportunity to enact such a regulation, or such legislation, until 1969. Of course, this is not the case. We are expecting a fall session and I think the Minister could make an indication now as to his intention, which might clarify the situation.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404? The member for Sudbury East was really on his feet first. I should point out that he did not address the chair, but he was on his feet.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. In the field of company towns I assume that the residential tax is paid by the company and therefore it would be advantageous to have the mill rate as high as possible, would it not, Mr. Minister? If you could do this, then the rebate would be a great deal higher and the mayors and reeves in the area I come from are a bit upset about this.

Just on the 1967 figure we see the town of Lively, with a mill rate of 57.35, and then you compare it to Chelmsford which has a mill rate of 31.38, and Haileybury, 32.26, and so on down the line. There seems to be a bit of discrepancy here in towns that are approximately the same size and I am wondering if the Minister is at all suspicious that the mill rate might be deliberately jacked up in order to get rebates; and secondly, I am wondering if the Minister could give me the mill rates for the towns of Levack, Onaping and Lively for 1968.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will get them for you, but I have not got them here. I think we can get them, if the mill rates are set. No I am not suspicious, because, in part, this is taken care of in their equalizing factor and unless they are levying for a great deal of money they do not need—it would not work out that way. I mean their mill rate might be 200 but it would depend on their basis of assessment.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404; the member for Grey-Bruce.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I hate to leave this assessment before I get them fixed in my mind what is going to happen in the future. I mentioned the fact that, because of the present system, we have a great inequity insofar as a certain group of the people paying —the fact is, that a low third of our income group is paying two-thirds of the taxes.

I would like to suggest to the Minister that the same principle as applied to the income tax graduation at the federal level could be used as a base in the Ontario assessment field for residential and farm property and I would like to throw this out to the Minister for his consideration—that a maximum tax of 20 mills on the first $2,000 of assessment, a maximum tax of 35 mills on the next $1,000 of assessment, and a maximum of 40 mills on the next $2,000, and thereafter no ceiling, hereby we have a graduation of people who can at least afford to pay the same basis we pay our income tax on.

This would be what you are trying to do in the basic shelter agreement. You are trying to get at these people. Unless you are going through this whole operation to ensure giving them back a shelter grant, you could circumvent that by having a graduated form of assessment for these people. This covers all the bases pretty well for the people we are most concerned about.

But I am, as usual, confused about the matter of the regional government. You say that "no, the regional government is not in the hopper," as it were. Now my friends in the New Democratic Party say I use a lot of base. I do not know who knows what is going on. I sure do not, and my friend from Kent (Mr. Spence) does not know what is going on. You said "no" to him, and you say—but Don O'Hearn says in his column—

Mr. Chairman: Order. Is the member discussing this vote?

Mr. Sargent: I am talking about regional government. I do not know how we got into that bit there.

Mr. Chairman: I should say to the member he is speaking of regional government.

Mr. Sargent: A minute ago they were talking about regional government and they got by. There is one question I want to find out about.

Mr. Chairman: Not while I was in the chair!

Mr. Sargent: Come on; just a second.

Mr. Chairman: No discussion of regional government. We are dealing with assessment.

Mr. Sargent: Okay!

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404; the member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: I have a brief question I would like to ask the Minister, Mr. Chairman. Is it, in fact, true that a tenant can be disenfranchised in a municipal election; that is, prohibited from voting in a municipal election because the landlord does not pay his taxes? Now, in one municipality up north I am told there were people denied the vote because the landlord was in arrears in his taxes?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would be glad to look at the particular situation, but no is the answer.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on this election bit. Do you plan to legalize the use of voting machines in Ontario? Municipally, the use of voting machines?

Mr. Chairman: The Minister will reply to the question?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is a committee of the clerks and treasurers association looking at election procedures. Not so much election policy, but election procedures including, I assume, in fact I am quite sure, voting machines. We are represented on that committee. I have been giving some thought to expanding the area that they are looking at and when they report I will be able to confirm.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have to go through all that? Can you not just say yes or no?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. I cannot say yes or no.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on the same election bit. Most of us have gone through a lot of the elections, and a very frustrating thing on election day is the fact that people in nursing homes cannot vote. I think that somewhere in the hopper you should have a mobile clinic—a mobile polling booth that could visit nursing homes so as to enable these people to vote. Have you thought anything about that?

Oh, come on. I am asking you a question. Do you not know the answer? What is going on?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will be glad to take that under consideration.

Mr. Sargent: That is mighty neighbourly of you. Waken up and let us go.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404. The member for Sandwich-Riverside.

Mr. F. A. Burr (Sandwich-Riverside): Mr. Chairman, the city councils of Oshawa and Windsor have asked the Minister to consider amending present legislation to provide that hospitals be eligible sites for polling booths at provincial and municipal elections for the convenience of patients. Has the Minister considered this matter?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In my experience, in my community, in many cases the hospitals are used and nursing homes are used. In some cases they are not because there simply are not the facilities there. Again we are looking at some of the mechanics, and I hope that we can come up with some answers.

Mr. Sargent: What do you know the answer to?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That was a double-barrelled resolution, as you are aware. I think the provincial select committee, when it is reconstituted, is going to look at some of those things, and I think it is very important that the procedures that they recommend carry over into the municipal field.

For example, voting machines. If they recommend the use of voting machines, which incidentally I have just found out are authorized by The Municipal Act—section 74—I did not realized that, if they recommend them, then I think it would be logical that we would try and push them municipally so that there was a greater use of them. We would have to figure some sort of ownership of them, work them back and forth. I think it is important that we work together municipally and provincially and, hopefully, federally, in this area.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404. The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, the Minister in replying to my colleague for Windsor-Walkerville in regard to election dates said that provisions in Bill 44 would automatically bring municipal elections into line with a standard date. I cannot see where there is any provision here that municipalities have to hold their municipal elections on the same date as the elections for the school board? Has the Minister a separate Act which brings this in?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: What I am saying is that you have Bill 44 saying that the school boards will hold their elections on the first Monday in December. Now, can you imagine any municipality for the municipal election, or the utilities elections, the elections which they run, having them on any other date but the first Monday in December when the board of education are going to have their election. I think the matter is settled for us.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I can imagine and know one or two cases where this will occur. But if it does occur, it may be necessary for the Minister to consider, and I hope he will consider, bringing in an Act which will standardize the date and standardize the terms to two-year terms, so that we automatically will then be brought into line, not just hopefully so.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not a three-year term?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404. The member for Waterloo North.

Mr. E. R. Good (Waterloo North): Mr. Chairman, I have two matters on which I would like the Minister's comments. The first deals with the problem of municipalities in which universities are located, and the other deals with the matter of regional assessment.

First, I would like to mention that the city of Waterloo has a population of 32,000 and has an additional 10,000 university students. While the relationship between the city and university has been harmonious, the disputes of any consequence have been non-existent. The universities have had a basic understanding of the financial problems facing the municipality and have attempted, wherever possible, to alleviate the situation.

They have arranged for their own garbage collection, pay a sewer surcharge based on water consumption, security police, and matters of that nature. However, in spite of this spirit of co-operation which has prevailed for many years, there is growing evidence that the relationship is becoming strained by virtue of the declining industrial assessment balance and the more than normal mill rate increases.

This is a problem which has existed in the city of Kingston for a good many years. It is fast becoming a very major problem in Waterloo, with the large university student population. It is a problem in other municipalities of medium and smaller size which house large universities.

Our present industrial assessment declined from 60 per cent to 46 per cent in 1962 and is presently down to 40 per cent. An increase in the residential mill rate of 8.5 mills this year far outpaces any increase in the past. We find ourselves fast becoming a dormitory community, in spite of the fact that we are very proud to have the universities in our midst.

There is also evidence that the use made of the campuses is changing to meet today's requirements. Construction is now under way of a building for married quarters. This development will certainly generate an elementary school population from current tax-free residences. That means that the city will be educating the children of married people who are living on the campus.

Approval was recently granted to locate a chartered bank on the university; there is application to locate taverns, student union buildings, book shops and facilities for everything else that could be sold in any shop or store in the community.

This is all in competition to local business and is on non-tax generating property. The city of Waterloo endorses the idea that in lieu of assessment some grant should be made from the provincial government to these municipalities who are suffering this tight squeeze.

Would the Minister comment on this first, and then I would like to pursue my other problems.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, we have had representations—at least I have—from Kingston and another university town directly; Guelph were in to see me. I referred this matter to the Provincial Treasurer. Smith, of course, recommended that universities should not be exempt from taxation, and this is one of the things which is being looked at by the task force—

Mr. Good: This I am aware of. What is the Minister's view?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: My view? Well, I have made my views known through the medium of the task force, through the Provincial Treasury and, of course, my view will be reflected undoubtedly in the white paper which the government will present.

Mr. Good: Well, what does the Minister feel? I mean, does he feel there is some relief coming?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I think in due course when the white paper is published, you will have the benefit of my views.

Mr. Good: In the meantime, we blunder blindly on not knowing what to expect.

Mr. Sargent: That is a perfect answer.

Mr. Good: May I pursue another matter, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Sargent: That is the statement of the year.

Mr. Good: The other matter I would like to pursue is one which I heard discussed at great length at the hearings, and it has to do with assessment. This thought was put forth and discussed at the regional hearings under Dr. Fyfe, and this was in the matter of assessment that the two books known as "Appraisal Notes for Assessors" and "The Assessors' Handbook of Cost Factors," produced by The Department of Municipal Affairs, be made mandatory throughout the province. They would, of course, create more uniformity locally and much improved equalization of assessments provincially.

It was stated there to Dr. Fyfe, at the hearing, that an assessment programme carried out on a county basis would be better than one which is carried out by the separate municipalities within the county. It was also stated that a regional office for assessment would also be better than the present system of a county doing their own assessing along with the 12 municipalities. The cities of Kitchener, Galt and Waterloo are doing their own assessing.

I remember Dr. Fyfe asked those there what they thought of the provincial government looking after the assessing and this thought was projected and discussed for some time. It was felt then that the only way that assessment can be improved upon locally and provincially is to make mandatory, throughout the province, the use of those books and take the assessment function out of the hands of local level governments and set up regional or county areas under the jurisdiction of The Department of Municipal Affairs assessment branch.

In setting up this type of operation, you would have, in the county or region, a nucleus of well-staffed and qualified assessment personel to carry out a proper uniform and equalized assessment programme on a large scale. This would also justify the use of up-to-date data processing equipment and all assessment notices and assessment rolls would be the same throughout the area. This, I believe, is what the government would be accomplishing by doing this. By pooling all the assessment personnel in a certain area, it would leave key personnel available to assist in similar assessment programmes throughout the province.

This, then, would result in a more uniform wage schedule for all assessment personnel and, by setting up assessment on a regional or county basis, if it were under the direction of the assessment branch of The Department of Municipal Affairs, it would then take off any political pressures which might now exist in the local assessment departments.

I would ask the Minister what his comments would be on this type of assessment.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I would have to give the member the same reply, but I do not want to beg his question. Smith made some very interesting and factual statements about our assessment practices in the province. I think members will realize there have been great improvements in the last ten years. I think there have been great improvements since Smith obviously wrote those sections of the report. My friend, the member for Grey-South, has quoted a great chapter of Smith and, in particular, quoted a speech which Mr. Spooner made in 1964. There have been remarkable—

Mr. Sargent: In 1967:

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There have been remarkable improvements since that time, but I do not think there is any question but that we have to go much further. Smith has suggested certain ways of doing it; Dr. Fyfe has suggested ways; the department has views—

Mr. Sargent: Can the Minister name those ways?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There is no question in my mind that we are going to have to improve our practices; the municipalities have it in their power to do it and we have provided grants. The practices have not improved as much as we would like to see them improve. I am not critical of municipalities; there is nothing more painful to a municipality than a re-assessment. Many of us who have been in local government — I think when we were in local government, we put the matter of re-assessment as far away in our minds as we could.

Mr. Sargent: But you had to do them.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Because undoubtedly some people's taxes—a great number—would go up. Some would go down. But certainly it is necessary and desirable—to achieve equity in assessment, and I would hope that with the recommendations of Smith, the views of the task force and the select committees, we can move ahead. I hope we can move ahead in this field more quickly than we have in the past and achieve some real equity in a reasonable period of time.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, does the Minister have any plans for the immediate future of unifying assessments, say, within counties, where—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This has been done in—I do not know how many of the counties.

Mr. Good: But the large cities are still outside.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is right. Thirty of the counties, I believe, or 33, are now on a county basis.

Mr. Good: Has the department any plans for getting the cities in the county assessment?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not particularly, but we encourage this. We have particularly encougaged it in the districts. Port Arthur came in but Fort William would not come in in the district of Thunder Bay. We encourage this.

Mr. Good: Well, you have Ministers over there, like the Minister of Education, who says, "You go in, you do it". Now, if you think a thing is good for an area, do you not think you should exercise a little persuasion?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Persuasion, yes.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I am not clear on the fact that the Minister made the statement that the municipalities could move themselves on assessment. I do not know how far he will allow them to move, but I would like to suggest that the rental values will be the only answer so far as the needs of today are concerned. The only real value, I suggest, of any building or land is the income, actual or potential, which it will produce and that in the case of residential, commercial and farm property, the capitalized rental value on a 10-year basis is a proper assessment.

Very briefly, I want to say that I believe that such rentals are more sensitive to change in conditions of today within any municipality and I am talking of cities primarily. Thus they will more quickly affect the assessment rules. This, in effect, will do away with the levying of business tax, if you institute this capitalized rental value system. You have it adjusted between the various members of each section in our communities. I know there has been some attempt at the use of rental capitalization in the so-called manual system of assessment which is largely used now.

Unfortunately, the rental factor in the manual system of assessment has little or no relationship to the rents today. But I would like to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that the statute currently invoked now should be amended to make rental capitalization the only, or the least principal factor in arriving at valuation, and that such rentals must be the actual rental of the premises where there is such a rental in force. If we could institute this system, we could do away with the levying of business tax because there is certainly a great area to get rid of the inequities on the business tax system today in Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404? The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Chairman, in one of the townships in my riding, the township of Whitney, there are two provincial institutions. There is the new Ontario hospital and across the road there are about 100 and some acres set aside for a community college. The township of Whitney has a small population and these two choice pieces of land are no longer subject to taxation. They are not putting any taxation back in the township at this point. I wonder if the Minister's answer to the hon. member for Waterloo North concerning universities would apply to this same situation, that this will certainly be taken into account to help a smaller municipality like this.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1404 carried—that also carries item 2 of vote 1405, which was the subsidies under The Assessment Act.

Vote 1404 agreed to.

On vote 1405:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I direct my remarks to item 2, The Assessment Act—

Mr. Chairman: Item 2 has just been carried, I would say to the member.

Mr. Sopha: Item 2?

Mr. Chairman: Item 2 of vote 1405. The Chairman indicated this to the committee quite some time ago that we were also debating—

Mr. Sopha: I thought you said item 3.

Mr. Chairman: No, this was carried under vote 1402.

Mr. Sopha: Items 3 and 8?

Mr. Chairman: Items 3 and 8 were carried under the community planning branch.

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Mr. Chairman: We were dealing with vote 1404 which is municipal administration and assessment, and item 2 under vote 1405 was—

Mr. Sopha: Well may I have your leave? I did not understand that. I held by remarks back deliberately not participating in the debate because I want to raise a matter under that as the Minister well knows that is not repetitious of anything that has been said.

Mr. Chairman: Well I believe—

Mr. Sopha: And I was just unaware, so I I beg your indulgence.

Mr. Chairman: I do not think under the circumstances that Chairman has to go by the book because I am not sure the member was here and—

Mr. Sopha: I was not here.

Mr. Chairman: —he did not participate in the debate on assessment, I think it is fair to permit him—

Mr. Sopha: Right.

Mr. Chairman: I think it is fair to permit him.

Mr. Sopha: Thank you very much.

The Assessment Act, Mr. Chairman, that I direct my remarks to is the euphemism that covers a multitude of sins. Formerly, until couple of years ago, the moneys—the $10 million plus that you see there used to be described in the estimates of this department as grants to mining municipalities. Now, for reasons which were never revealed to me, a year or so ago that was changed to encompass it under The Assessment Act and that refers of course—those grants as you may recall—to the exemption from municipal assessment the mining companies enjoy.

You are aware, Mr. Chairman, that like the rest of us in the province, like any other form of enterprise, like any other individual taxpayer, I think mining companies enjoy an immunity and an exemption that is not reflected anywhere else in the life of Ontario. I want to say at this point—and I measure my words very carefully—that all the paeans of phrase that the Minister heaps upon J. Wilfrid Spooner, his predecessor, as he did at the opening of his estimates, it is very germane to say in respect of this vote, that I would have to add a qualification to those exhortations of the Minister. Wilfrid Spooner, throughout his political career and, particularly, when he held the high office of Minister of Municipal Affairs was, in short, never a friend of Sudbury. He was not a friend of Sudbury and it was with some measure of relief—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I did not object to going ahead and dealing with The Assessment Act. It was carried under vote 1404. If we are going to talk about these things—I think it should be said the member has said these things for three or four years and made attacks on Mr. Spooner. I read them the other day on how Timmins was better treated than Sudbury. Frankly, it seems to me when we are breaking the rules and going back on a vote, we do not have to listen to the stuff that we have listened to for the last three or four years.

Mr. Sargent: Who are you to say that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Moreover I would say, Mr. Chairman, that we all know—I am not familiar with the payments under this Act, the mining revenue payments—

Mr. Sopha: You will be when I finish.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We know very well that Mr. Smith made recommendations—

Mr. Sopha: You will be when I finish.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: They are over in Treasury now. The basis of them will undoubtedly be changed and I think that we are wasting a great deal of time. I think that we are doing so as a favour to this member and I do not think it is in order.

Mr. Sopha: Well I want no favours, Mr. Chairman. As the member for Sudbury, I do not want the people of Sudbury to think ill of me for accepting a favour.

Mr. Chairman: Just a moment. May I ask the member to wait a moment? There has been a point of order raised. The member for Sudbury was granted the privilege of speaking for a few moments on item 2. The Minister suggests—well perhaps we should go on to another vote.

Mr. Sopha: Well I insist on my right to speak.

Mr. Chairman: Well the member was given the privilege, after a vote had been carried, of speaking.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman gave the member the privilege of speaking, since he had not spoken before on this particular vote and he wanted—

May I speak to the member and to the House, please?

Mr. Sopha: Oh, are you speaking to me? Forgive me, I did not realize that.

Mr. Chairman: The member's sarcasm is superb, of course. I suggest that he continue and if he has new material that has not been given on this subject that he do so in as brief a time as possible.

Mr. Sopha: I put away Mr. Spooner by saying one sentence: That I hope his successor will approach the city of Sudbury in this regard with a good deal more fairness than Wilfrid Spooner ever demonstrated to it.

The formula under which the grant is paid, the $10 million, that portion of it that goes to mining municipalities—it was never an accident that it was invented and supported in Kirkland Lake. One observed last week that, when the mayor of the city of Sudbury, in the latter days of conversion advocated the taxation of smelters, the payment of municipal taxes by smelters, the reeve of Kirkland Lake —Teck township was so gracious to say that Sudbury might support the taxation at the local level of smelters—an injustice that has been perpetrated for half a century in permitting them to escape. An injustice that finally in Sudbury has riled the citizens to anger out of the frustration of being done out of what is rightfully theirs.

I say to the reeve of Teck township that I hope in the fullness of time, when this injustice is corrected that it will not any longer, as it has in the past, be a determinant of the attitude of Teck township toward the taxation of mining companies.

The member for York South was quite right, I say, in chastising me as he has done. He is quite right, and I admit it, that in the earlier years when I came here—and I make the ninth annual speech on this, I hope they note that in Sudbury, this is my ninth annual —the member for York South was quite right in chastising me that in the earlier years of my stewardship here I advocated an increase in the grants under this item.

I advocated it because my conduct was compatable with the mendicant attitude, the begging attitude, of successive municipal councils who came to Wilfrid Spooner's door, with hat in hand, to ask him to give them more money. That is why my conduct was such. But finally it dawned on me that that was not going to produce results and I changed my attitude. In the last three or four years, I have consistently here advocated the repeal of section 35 (5) of The Assessment Act.

Indeed last year I put a bill on the order paper in this House, spoke to it, but it was talked out. Then lo and behold, if you are patient enough, when you are speaking for what is right and just, eventually if you are patient enough justice will come your way. On February 28 this year, glorious day—one to be remembered—the International Nickel Company itself came forward with its brief to the Smith committee and advocated itself that they pay municipal taxes.

So I went to a meeting of municipal officials. All the municipal officials in the Sudbury district convened around the month of April. I went to that meeting with my face hanging out. I was so bold as to say to them that so far as I knew there were two groups and one person who advocated that Inco should pay municipal taxes—the chamber of commerce, Sopha and the International Nickel Company.

Mr. Sargent: Not the Minister of course.

Mr. Sopha: The International Nickel Company. Now, it ought to be added that finally —it is to be hoped in the fall session of this Legislature—that this department, this Minister, will bring in the necessary legislation to repeal the inequity of that exempting section that gives mining companies a special privilege as against all other people in the province, in that they do not have to pay municipal taxes.

There is one other aspect that I want to put into the record before that day comes—before Armageddon arrives—before we see the dawn of Utopia. I want to give full credit to the chamber of commerce in Sudbury on this very point.

The Premier of the province one day came in here and he announced the increase in grants under item 2 two years ago. They made a small and niggardly increase in the amounts allocated to mining companies.

I well recall that it was very pertinent that when he announced the increase in Sudbury —which was about three-quarters of a million dollars—when he came to that, he read down the whole list. It hurts the Minister's sensitivity to note for Timmins theirs was doubled; Sudbury's went up a third—it hurts him to refer to that.

When the Premier announced Sudbury's increase I leaned across my desk and I uttered two words to him. I said, "Not enough." He stopped and he looked, that ungrateful wretch across the way sitting in the Opposition. He made a comment about my ingratitude, but I have never walked down the streets of Sudbury and met a person that ever taxed me about those two words. The only comment I ever got about the increase the Premier made under this grant was: "Elmer, you are right".

Now, that grant, that increase, came out of what was known by another term, the Clasky committee studies, and in relation to that committee—I want it recorded here so the picture will be a total picture—that on September 23, 1966, while that committee was sitting the chamber of commerce wrote to the Premier and I put one paragraph in the record. The president of the chamber of commerce, Fernand Gratton — now Judge Gratton of Nipissing—said this in the third paragraph:

> However we are very seriously concerned about one aspect of the committee's terms of reference.

That is the Clasky committee.

> Our board of directors have studied them very closely and are unable to establish clearly that our proposal for assessment of mining properties on a regional basis as outlined in our brief, is to be fully studied as an alternative source of municipal tax revenue for mining municipalities.

Now, that is the very guts of the problem. That deals with the question as a matter of principle. Should mining companies pay taxes like everybody else? That is the principle behind it.

Now, let me say in regard to the principle that on February 6, after I was re-elected to this House for the third time to represent my community, I held a public meeting in Sudbury, and I announced that public meeting in the press in an ad which I paid for myself. I hired the hall, advertised on radio, bought the ad in the newspaper. I was chairman, and the meeting was the first one in the history of politics in Sudbury that ever began on time. It began sharp at 8 o'clock. The ad for the meeting said this:

> Elmer W. Sopha, MPP, invites all interested persons to a public meeting to discuss the important question of contribution to the cost of municipal government by the mining companies in this area.

It was a cold winter night, about 65 people showed up, but they were the cream of the crop those 65—trade union leaders from united steel workers. Mancini was there, Seguin, and other people from the union; architects, planners, municipal councillors, one person from Inco.

They all showed up and we discussed one subject. We discussed the principle of whether mining companies should pay taxes like the rest of us, and there was not a scintilla of disagreement. No person at the meeting expressed any disagreement with that principle. So you can see the concern of the chamber of commerce that that matter should have been studied by the Clasky committee. The Premier replied to that letter on October 6, 1966, and his last paragraph says this:

> However, to preclude any possible misunderstandings, I shall make a special point of again advising the committee that your proposal falls within the terms of reference.

That is clear. There is absolute clarity about what the chamber requested and the Premier's reply in his direction to the committee. But the facts of life were that that committee did not study that problem. It never did report on that problem of the liability for taxation of the mining companies.

After their report was published, the displeasure of the chamber of commerce at the failure to report on that very important subject was expessed in a letter to the Prime Minister which said this—

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the member would permit the Chairman just a moment.

When the Chairman left the chair just a few moments ago, we had passed vote 1404 and the Chairman thought that the committee clearly understood that item 2 of 1405 was included in the debate.

The member for Sudbury suggested to the Chairman that he was not aware of that and the Chairman permitted him discussion on vote 1405, item 2, which is subsidies to The Assessment Act.

Now, the Chairman would just like some assurance from the Minister that the remarks of the member for Sudbury are in fact related to subsidies, grants and so on, under The Assessment Act on item 2.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, they are not, Mr. Chairman, because we are talking about how—

Mr. Sopha: Oh yes they are!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, all right, you give the ruling then.

Mr. Chairman: Now just a moment. I did extend a special privilege to the member due to the fact of his misunderstanding on what the Chairman had submitted, and I do not want him to revert to vote 1404. I am sure he does not intend to, but I want some assurance because I cannot just determine if he is specifically talking on the right track on item 2 of vote 1405.

Mr. Sopha: Will you accept my assurance they are? No question about it. I give my assurance as an hon. member of this House.

Mr. Chairman: I have no doubt of the proper intention of the member. However, it seems to me that if the Minister wishes to entertain this debate the Chairman will permit it in view of the apparent misunderstanding. If the Minister is prepared to accept—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well, I think really the distinction is—and this is why we tried to consider them together—that 1404 relates to what is assessed, and probably what is exempt from assessment; vote 1405 relates to the direct subsidies to assessment—administration and mining municipalities.

I think, and this is what I am saying, that if the member is talking of the assessment or non-assessment of smelters, this would properly have come under vote 1404, not vote 1405 item 2. But we have heard him this far, so let us finish it off.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman was getting the same feeling, that the member for Sudbury was not sticking to the specific item which is vote 1405. I would ask him if he could restrict his remarks to that area?

Mr. Sopha: I will make every effort to do that. What I am talking about really is injustice, and I have obliged my conscience, so that I will sleep peacefully tonight to tell about this injustice.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Have you got anything to say under this vote?

Mr. Sopha: Yes. I have come to the point where the chamber of commerce expressed a disappointment to the Prime Minister that the Clasky committee had not done what the Prime Minister had undertaken that they would do, and that was to look into the question of accessibility of smelting. Indeed, in his reply of June 27, 1967, he says in the second paragraph, and I think that it is worth reading, he says:

> I must say to you, however, that while I appreciate to some degree, the merits of some aspects of your statements, I really do not understand how you could feel anything but elated by the course of events that have already transpired, and the extent to which the government exceeded and more than exceeded to the recommendations of the committee which studied so assiduously.

In other words, the Prime Minister gives the impression that he is hurt by the chamber of commerce drawing his attention to the wider question of whether mining companies should pay taxes instead of this system under item 2 of vote 1405. In other words, Sudbury, and many other basin municipalities, looking to the provincial government, I say to my friend from Grey-Bruce, for a hand-out, or beneficence, by tackling the problem at the local level by assessing these companies and having them pay their taxes to the local treasury, like everyone else does.

All right, this has become a very anxious problem. I can only hope and pray that by the fall of the year, when this House meets again, that the Minister of Municipal Affairs will come in here, and really, all he has to do is agree with Inco's own submission. I did not expect, after all the years that I have been here talking about it, that the object of my ire, the International Nickel Company would suddenly turn around, not for reasons of altruism, and, in effect, agree with me that they should pay taxes at the municipal level. It is in the hands of the Minister to correct the situation.

In the meantime, all the Premier does about it, you see, is to put the member for Nickel Belt on another committee. Instead of dealing with the problem, the member goes into another committee to deal with this question. That is small comfort to the citizens of Sudbury. The member for Nickel Belt was on the Clasky committee! We never heard anything he ever said—

Mr. G. Demers (Nickel Belt): You know better than to say that.

Mr. Sopha: —at any time when he sat on that committee, in the light of the chamber of commerce's attitude, that the member for Nickel Belt ever advocated that they grapple with the guts of the problem, which was whether the smelter should be assessable. Indeed, when I brought my bill in here last year, advocating the repeal of 35-5, it was wanting for support from the member for Nickel Belt.

Mr. Sargent: Inco is a big contributor!

Mr. Sopha: He never supported the bill! The citizens of Sudbury are to wait then for the deliberations of the member for Nickel Belt on this second committee. Who knows, if they do not get at the nub of this problem, and remove that inequity from The Assessment Act—and make the International Nickel Company, and indeed the Falconbridge Nickel Mines subject to municipal taxation the same as everybody else—and underline that, "the same as everybody else." It will be small comfort that the member for Nickel Belt goes on another committee. There might be an infinite number of committees. Now, I am tired of the member of Nickel Belt being on these committees to "look into it." I want some action. I plead for some action.

Mr. Demers: You got a million bucks which is more than you achieved in nine years.

Mr. Sopha: What I really plead, and we plead for, is the elimination of this system of handouts—this $10 million, which is a handout to Sudbury, the largest recipient of mining revenue payments under that item, and indeed the largest contributor of the taxes that make it up. Sudbury is the largest contributor. At least half of the taxes from which those payments are derived are paid as a result of the industry of the miners in Sudbury, who moil in the mine for copper and nickel, and the 12 or 14 other products that are produced there.

Up to now, I think that it is fair to say that the system, the Spooner system, sometimes called the McBain formula, was a device whereby Kirkland Lake and Timmins derived benefit from the industry of the people of Sudbury. They shared in what was produced in Sudbury.

Well I think that Sudbury is entitled to some justice. This justice can only come at the local level, in the light of the brief and submission of the International Nickel Company of Canada, and this is my final submission.

Mr. P. D. Lawlor (Lakeshore): You are being very parochial.

Mr. Sopha: It may be parochial. I am the member for Sudbury. I will accept that aspersion. How great is my victory.

Mr. Lawlor: They do not want to contribute.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let me just deal with that very briefly—with the mines profit tax from which this payment is derived. As far as I am concerned, I make no advocacy whatsoever that this statute be repealed. If the government of this province, and this Minister, and the Treasury Board want to continue to use those moneys, the $15 or $18 million whatever it is that they derive for economic rent, for the continuation of the mining revenue payments under the formula of The Assessment Act, then I could not possibly tender any objection to the system.

But, at the local level, Sudbury, and the surrounding municipalities, ought to be permitted to tax the installations of the mining companies. That is the position that I take, and more power to the other municipalities to continue the mining revenue payments. Well, I am at the end of the ninth annual plea for justice, and how great is the victory. It is this great. I want to read it into the record.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sopha: Well, let us not tarry. I am going to read this into the record. It is the conversion of the International Nickel Company. It is almost equal to what happened to Saul on the road to Damascus. Here is what they said in their brief:

> International Nickel does not consider the committee's proposal to be a satisfactory answer to the problem of providing the mining community with a fair share of tax revenue from the mining industry. Moreover, by continuing or even extending the present exemptions of processing facilities for property tax purposes, it runs contrary to contemporary trends in taxation.

Hearken!

> We propose, instead, that the municipal property assessment base be broadened to cover all processing facilities including smelters and concentrators. This could be done by amending section 35-5 of The Assessment Act to read as follows: "The buildings, plants, and machinery, in, on, or under mineral land and used mainly for obtaining minerals from the ground, storing the same, subject to subsection 10, the minerals in or under such land are not assessable."
>
> The effect of this change would be to subject all concentraters, smelters and refineries in the province, including those of International Nickel, to the full impact of municipal taxation.
> More important we believe this amendment would complement and simplify many facets of the proposed regional government. In principle, International Nickel supports regional municipal government and with particular emphasis on the equitable sharing of the costs of regional services.

To which I say Amen!

And I say to my friend from Nickel Belt that there is the object of his mission in life—to bring about justice to the Sudbury basin so that finally, notwithstanding the procrastination of this department, Inco will be required to pay its taxes at the local level. This will be accepted, and the services for the population they have created—not in the biological sense, but in the economic sense they created the population to mine their ores—will be paid for by that mining company. And if next fall I stand in this House, as I hopefully will, and sit here and listen to the Minister bring in the amending legislation to remove that inequity then the nine annual speeches will have been worth it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I think after nine annual speeches, and the rather unctuous query, "How great is my victory—I have triumphed in getting Inco to come to heel," the record should be clarified, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: Never heard you support it.

Mr. MacDonald: For years, while the CCF and the New Democratic Party was the only party fighting for what he has now become converted to, he was opposed to it, Mr. Chairman. I listened to the hon. member. Now you have spoken—

Mr. Sopha: Point of order.

Mr. Chairman: What is the point of order?

Mr. Sopha: I rise on a point of order. He is not entitled to distort what I said.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not distorting it.

Mr. Sopha: He is not entitled to mislead the House.

Mr. MacDonald: All right; I will clarify that.

Mr. Sopha: This is a very important matter of principle. I admitted for several years I took the other view.

Mr. Chairman: I do not see what this point of order is? The member does not seem to have made any point of order.

Mr. MacDonald: This is 1968. Let us go back nine years to 1960. What was the hon. member saying? Listen—it is not ancient history—it is Sopha:

> It is nowadays fashionable among Canadians to decry the economic domination of American capital. There are those among us who will say there is a great danger of the loss of political sovereignty as a result of the investment of that capital.
> There is another aspect to it, sir, and we must always keep these things in balance and make reasonable approaches to them. I might say that as far as Sudbury is concerned it has been the recipient of the most bountiful munificence on the part of these two companies. There is not a project designed to ameliorate the general welfare wherein these companies have failed to give their most unremitting assistance.

The hon. member for Sudbury said that, Mr. Chairman—to be found in Hansard in the year 1960, page 259. One year later in 1961—I am only going to do two. This is the second one.

> With all these things combined—

said he, quoted in Hansard, page 2051, of the year 1961, March 13:

> With all these things combined, I can only make my pleas, sir—as I did last year and I suppose as I will every year—for a more equitable share of the mines' profits and taxes that this government collects on behalf of the citizens.

Mr. Sopha: I said that I changed my mind.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, but, Mr. Chairman, I am not distorting, I am correcting misinformation. He said, for example, he supported the proposition of municipalities going, like mendicants, going to get more—but in fact he was an apologist for the two companies that he now condemns. The fact of the matter is that some other people created a bandwagon in going after Inco and Inco is now recognizing they have got to do something, so he climbed on the bandwagon, rather belatedly.

But to return to his statement in 1961:

> I am not advocating that these mining companies be taxed, if it is not government policy that they be taxed at the municipal level. I hold no brief for Falconbridge Nickel Mines, or International Nickel Mines, and I do not think there is anybody at Sudbury, at least among our body of opinion—

Mr. Sopha: I did not hear that last part.

Mr. MacDonald: How can you hear it when you are talking? There is a simple proposition; if you shut your mouth and opened your ears you could hear.

Mr. Sopha: Hey! What are you doing? Do you not support my position?

Mr. MacDonald: I continue to quote:

> At least not among our body of opinion, who suggests that they should be taxed at the municipal level and thus be made in many respects at the whim of the local council.

In short, he was not going to put the great Inco at the whim of the local council. But now he has changed his mind.

Mr. Sopha: I already admitted that years ago I had a different view.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the simple fact of the matter is that for years Inco has not paid its share and it has not paid its share because this government is in bed in a cosy fashion with it—and in the same big bed was the hon. member for Sudbury—for years.

Now, sure, some people fought for greater justice and Inco recognizes that they are going to lose the battle. Like the car insurance company, they have made an appeasement offer, so let us examine this gift horse as to what Inco is going to do.

But meanwhile the hon. member for Sudbury, because he has no alternative if he is going to survive in Sudbury, has climbed on the bandwagon, and professes to be opposed to Inco. Well for years he was the apologist for Inco. Let us just have the whole record, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Sopha: Indeed, they never make a major decision without asking me.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, "How great is my Victory?" The hon. member for Sudbury asks, "How great is my victory?" In light of the record which went on for nine years, these nine annual speeches, I think the record should be complete for all there to be read, so that future readers will not be mislead.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405 carried?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1405.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405 is carried.

Mr. Sargent: No, it is not—I was on my feet—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405 is carried; on vote 1406.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, 1405 has not been discussed yet at all. None of the grants Act. There are nine votes in 1405, you did not give us a chance to speak on them. Just to discuss item 2.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1406! Vote 1405 is carried.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, there are nine items in this vote, and we have only talked about item 2.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405 is carried.

Mr. Sargent: You did not give us a chance to talk about them.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1406.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, this is wrong, there are nine items we have not talked about here.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman put vote 1405.

Mr. Sargent: I was on my feet and you turned the other way. I am telling you the truth, Mr. Chairman. I was on my feet and you turned the other way. There are nine items we must talk about on this vote.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405 is carried!

Mr. Sargent: It is not carried, we have not had a chance to talk about it.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, perhaps there is some way to clarify this before we get into a vote on your ruling. The hon. member, as I understand it, was on his feet wanting to talk about something on vote 1405.

But to go back to some of the difficulties that we have experienced in the last hour, you indicated some time before that two of the items in vote 1405, item 3 and item 8 would have and were in fact carried with a previous vote. But if, in fact, you are saying that vote 1405 was carried just in the moment before the hon. member for Grey-Bruce was trying to get the floor, then surely that is not reasonable—and you have been the soul of reasonableness all evening.

I would suggest to you, sir, that if the hon. member has some matters to put before the House on this particular vote that it would not be reasonable at this time to deny him the opportunity.

Mr. Chairman: May I say to the leader of the Opposition that flattery will get him nowhere in the first place.

Mr. Sargent: Oh, come on, be reasonable!

Mr. Chairman: Well, if the member for Grey-Bruce will remain silent for a few moments to let the Chairman answer the words of the—

Just as soon as the member for Grey-Bruce has finished the Chairman will endeavour to handle the situation.

As suggested by the leader of the Opposition, items 3 and items 8 of vote 1405 were carried with vote 1402, along with item 1 of vote 1407.

Then the member for York South was answering certain remarks—

An hon. member: Completely out of order.

Mr. Sopha: No more out of order than you were to begin with.

Mr. Chairman: All right now, hold on. Let us just take it easy.

The member for York South was replying to certain remarks of the member for Sudbury and during the "noise", shall we call it and the many interjections, the Chairman did put vote 1405 through. In the opinion of the Chairman, the minute that it carried we passed to vote 1406.

However, the Chairman wanted the committee to know that he was thoroughly and completely aware of what has been going on. In view of the noise that was going on, I will give the benefit of the doubt to the member for Grey-Bruce that he did not hear me carry the vote.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Sargent: Well thank you Mr. Chairman. Of all this department's estimate, this is the largest spending vote. You tried to pull a fast one there, Mr. Chairman, but I do not blame you one bit.

Some hon. members: Oh come on!

Mr. Sargent: What do you mean? I am just saying what I think.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member wish to debate vote 1405 in a proper manner? If he does, will he please proceed.

Mr. Sargent: I am in no hurry, I have the floor.

Mr. Chairman: Well then, proceed in a proper manner, and you have the floor.

Mr. Sargent: Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The minute that you are out of order, you will not have the floor.

An hon. member: Do you hear that? Get off the pot!

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405?

Mr. Sargent: It is a very democratic process that we are living under here, I hope, and I would like to find out from the Minister—nice to have you back, Mr. Prime Minister, it is nice of you to drop in once in a while.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Well Mr. Chairman it is very seldom indeed I am absent.

Mr. Sargent: We have a $16 million increase in this item on Unconditional Grants Act, from $28 million last year to $44 million this year. What is the breakdown of the formula as far as population areas are concerned?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There were increases in the Act, as you will recall, this year, which account for some $4 million over the appropriation of last year, which was $40 million, and this is $44.1 million. There were also increases in population which of course tend to increase the amount required.

Mr. Sargent: Well I know that you have an increase, but what is the formula increase as far as population area is concerned. My point is that the smaller areas have been discriminated against insofar as I think that Toronto is receiving about $7.50 or $5.50 per capita grant.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is a $7.50 grant.

Mr. Sargent: What would the per capita grant be for a city under 25,000 population?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is in the Act. A city under 25,000 would receive $5.50—no $6!

Mr. Sargent: So there is a difference of $1.50. Has the Minister any plans to give parity in this regard.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We discussed this the other day when the act to amend this act went through.

Mr. Sargent: Well I was not here, and I am asking the question. Are there any plans for parity?

Mr. Chairman: I would point out to the member that there can be no reflection upon a previous vote of the House during the session.

Mr. Sargent: Okay. Under the basic shelter—

Mr. MacDonald: This is a deliberate waste of time.

Mr. Sargent: If anyone wastes the time of the House, it is the leader of the New Democratic Party. He gets up on a bunch of nothingness. We have $150 million under this vote!

Mr. Chairman: May I remind the member that any previous vote of this House during the session may not be reflected upon?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, on this I think—

Some hon. members: Carried, carried!

Mr. Sargent: I had asked earlier if I could speak on this basic tax exemption, and he had given me this vote to speak on it. And now I cannot?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: That is why I am on my feet Mr. Chairman. That item 9 should read to correspond with the The Residential Property Tax Reduction Act. The estimates could be changed accordingly.

Mr. Chairman: Carried?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, in this regard, how much money has been spent on the entire programme as far as tax exemption deliverance is concerned.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The total administrative budget for the tax reduction programme is in the neighbourhood of $800,000 and we do not frankly know how much newspaper advertising will be required. At the present time we have committed some $80,000.

Mr. Sargent: So we are spending $800,000 to deliver $150 million, in effect?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, it is a percentage of about one half of one per cent. In the first year this can be considered to be very good.

Mr. Chairman. Was this not considered in a previous vote?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes it was.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I would like to say that we are only dealing with the actual amount of $150 million under note 1405. We are not discussing administration or any other area.

Mr. Sargent: I am interested in knowing how much you are spending on direct mail?

Mr. Chairman: That is in a previous vote. We are only dealing with the amount of the vote.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I know that you have had a hard day, but we are talking about spending $150 million of money that should not have been spent in the first place. The taxation system should have been handled so that it would not have had to be done this way.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Mr. Chairman, he is out of order.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I would point out to the member again that item 9 in the estimates, the basic shelter exemption of $150 million has been covered by previous vote of this House, in this session—

Mr. Sargent: The Minister was on his feet a moment ago, and said that we could talk on this vote.

Mr. Chairman: He pointed out to you in answer to your question about the administration of costs that it came under a previous vote.

Mr. Sargent: Where?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1403 covered the municipal finance subsidies. I think that the member may quite properly debate anything under vote 1405.

Mr. Sargent: I do not think that you should interpolate what I think at all. I am asking questions and I would like the answers.

Mr. Chairman: Order! The Chairman is pointing out to the member what he can debate under vote 1405. Items 2, 3 and 8 have been carried. Item 1—

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. With the greatest respect to you, I know that you try to be fair, but we cannot get to the bottom of these things if we do not ask questions. You try repeatedly to block these questions and it has got to the point where we feel that we are doing something wrong asking questions about millions of dollars. Now who is right? The people of this province elect us to speak for them.

Mr. Chairman: I say to the member that if he brings his questions up in a proper manner, under the proper votes and estimates, he will get the answers to them.

An hon. member: He is filibustering.

Mr. Sargent: I am not filibustering. I have a right to ask these questions and I want an answer.

Mr. Chairman: The Chairman rules that he cannot ask the questions that he has attempted to ask. He may debate any other of the items under vote 1405.

Mr. Sargent: Well, you will find some way to block those too so I will sit down.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, there are two new items under this Act, The Whirlpool Rapids Bridge Act of 1967, and the Lewiston-Queenston Bridge Act of 1967. What is the situation with regard to the Ambassador, the Ivy Lea, the Peace bridge, and the Bluewater bridge? Do they not have grants paid to them in this way?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The only other one is The Rainbow Bridge Act, of 1941. These two that you mentioned were brought in last year and actually I think that the carriage of them was with The Department of Highways. But they are now a fixed amount until 1980, and the carriage of them was by the Treasurer. They are being paid under this vote.

Mr. Deacon: Are there amounts being paid in another fashion to municipalities? I presume these are being paid directly to the municipalities.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Deacon: Are the amounts being paid in lieu of taxes in effect to the other bridges?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: To my knowledge, only the Rainbow bridge, under The Rainbow Bridge Act, which is paid to the city of Niagara Falls and is still paid by The Department of Highways.

Mr. Deacon: Can the Minister advise us why these two and the Rainbow bridge get special treatment? Is there some reason for that special consideration?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No.

Mr. Deacon: Why should the others not be treated accordingly and similarly?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, the other bridges would pay their taxes directly to the municipality.

These are, in effect, grants in lieu of taxes because we own the bridges or own a share of the bridges. I guess we do not own either of these bridges 100 per cent, I think we own half of them and therefore we pay a grant in lieu in fact, to the municipalities.

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I, as a private member, recall a bill coming before the private bills committee about the Bluewater bridge and there was some dispute about this matter of assessment and taxes paid by that bridge. As I remember, the municipality of Point Edwards was not allowed to assess the structure and get the taxes they felt were commensurate with this amount. Why should they be advised in order to get comparable and fair treatment to bring in a private bill similar to these Acts here, the Whirlpool Rapids, the Lewiston-Queenston bridge to cover the matter?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We undertook to study this situation and I have been in touch with Point Edwards since.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405?

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, on the winter works incentive programme you estimate $10.5 million. How much is recoverable from the federal government?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is gross. This is our share.

Mr. Sargent: That is your gross? What is your recovery from the federal?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: We recover—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405!

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Are you net budgeting or gross budgeting? Every department seems to have a different rule.

Mr. Sargent: This is not your net cost; your net cost is about $3 million or $4 million. What is our cost? Your recovery the last time from the federal government was $7 million on the gross expenditure of $10.2 million. Now what is your recovery this year?

Mr. Singer: The gross budget on one page and net budget on the next—it is so confusing your Ministers cannot follow it.

Mr. Sargent: You had better get the Prime Minister to sit next to you; he might know some answers here.

An hon. member: The Treasury board chairman knows.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Could we go on to the next question, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Sargent: The next question will be then, going down the line again to basic shelter grants—is the $150 million an estimation or approximation? Is that going to be enough money or are you going to budget more money for it?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: In my view it is going to be a sufficient amount.

Mr. Sargent: You think it will be a sufficient amount?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have any indications to back that up now? The demands are getting off municipalities?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: There are no indications to change our original view that this was a sufficient amount of money.

Mr. Sargent: On the same line, Mr. Chairman, it is going to cost you $800,000 to distribute this money. How much money is it costing the municipalities at local levels? Do you know that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not.

Mr. Sargent: Do you have an approximation of the cost?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Not very much.

Mr. Sargent: Well, it is the biggest thing they have ever handled at local level. I mean it is costing another million or so dollars at their level.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I doubt that very much.

Mr. Sargent: So you do not know the centennial grants programme—the $1.8 million? Is that the final payment on centennial projects last year—what is that?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Pardon. The centennial grants programme? That is to pay for the centennial projects which are not yet completed, most notably in the city of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh you should not have said that.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Grey-Bruce apparently had not finished his questions.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): You recognized the member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Chairman: I think the Chairman has done this on many occasions where a member has resumed his seat waiting for answers from the Minister and he was not quite finished with his questions.

The member for Grey-Bruce; if he has another question.

Mr. Sargent: Are there any outlying projects across the province for centennial projects that are included here? Are they all—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Pardon? I am sorry.

Mr. Sargent: All the local projects for centennial works across the province, are they looked after in this vote? This is the final thing.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes. Most of them would have been paid in the last fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405; the member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister what is the normal procedure when a municipality makes application to the municipal board for the right to issue debentures for a school project and after some three or four months of deliberation, the Ontario municipal board turns them down and then they say they are negotiating an unconditional grant that has to go before Treasury board and eventually that is turned down.

Is this in keeping with the Bill 44 which was just passed for the equalization of educational opportunity where—in the opinion of the Ontario municipal board—they are turned down and just because of their inability—in the opinion of the board—to carry this load they are denied the right to equality of educational opportunities.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: The fact that they are being combined is going to help the situation considerably. The total resources of the area are going to be available for the issue of debentures rather than just the single municipality and this should help.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405.

The Member for Waterloo North.

Mr. Good: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak to one aspect of item 9, basic shelter tax exemption. It has nothing to do with the Act nor the regulations but a matter which has arisen because of the Act and I think you will agree it will be in order.

This has to do with the refunding of payments from property owners whose taxes are prepaid with mortgages to lending companies. Now when apartment owners—or property owners for that matter—prepay their taxes to mortgage companies a year in advance when those taxes are paid by the lending companies they find that the municipality deduct the basic tax exemption from the taxes. We will say in the case of the 15 or 23 apartment building this is quite a sizeable sum.

Now that property owner is supposed to have that money to pay back to his tenants. There is nothing in the regulations, nothing in the Act, which gives any direction as to how the mortgage companies holding the prepaid taxes are to return them to the tenant or to the property owner. The present memorandum which is sent out to municipalities simply says that if the mortgage or lending company pays the taxes in full it is then the responsibility of the municipality to send the grant directly back to the tenant.

Now this is not happening in practice. I have consulted with several of the mortgage companies and they tell me they have had no direction whatsoever in this regard. So some of them are simply deducting the exemption from next year's taxes—which means that the property owner is receiving it back only one-twelfth at a time over the 12-month period. So that in effect, he will have to reimburse his tenants by this December and the mortgage company would still have half of his tax exemption until next June.

I think something should be done by this department and direction given to these mortgage people. They say, "You cannot expect us to send out 10,000 or 15,000 cheques," if that is the number of mortgages they have. I find that a great many, especially apartment owners, are finding themselves in a position where the mortgage company has their money. They are going to have to pay their tenants and they want some direction from this department on what is going to be done about it. Would the Minister comment on this please?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I wonder if I could answer the member for Grey-Bruce's question first. The winter works vote is a gross figure.

Mr. Sargent: You are only $7 million out—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Do you want the answer to the question or not?

Mr. Sargent: That is it!

Hon. Mr. McKeough: All right, that is what you wanted to know; that is the answer I have given I just wanted to be—

Mr Singer: You fellows have to take a little time—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Well. I was reasonably sure it was gross, but I thought the programme was larger than it was.

Mr. Singer: Well, some of them are not so sure.

Mr. Sargent: Seven million dollars is not bad for—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1405 carried.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would like to answer the question of the member for Waterloo North.

We recognize that this is a problem. It seems to become less of a problem each day because mortgage companies are becoming aware of what is happening. We feel these problems are being worked out and the problems which have been given to us by owners seem to be being worked out as well.

If the member has a specific problem I would be glad to work it out with him. We have not issued instructions; we do not feel that we can do this to mortgage companies to cover every set of circumstances. But we would be glad to work with him about it.

Vote 1405 agreed to.

On vote 1406:

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that there may be some questions on the last two votes of these estimates I move that the committee rise and report.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee rise and report certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply reports that it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Tomorrow, first of all I would like to deal with the legislation that is on the order paper; we will then resume the estimates of the Department of Municipal Affairs, which will be followed by The Department of Mines, which will be followed by the Department of Civil Service.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I can make my speech again.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I hope the hon. member will have an opportunity to do it tomorrow. The estimates after the Department of the Civil Service are, I think, those which we said some time ago would be taken in whatever order they come forward.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:30 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

WEDNESDAY, JULY 17, 1968

The House met at 10 o'clock a.m.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Once again today, we may expect visitors later. In the east gallery this afternoon we will welcome the members of the leadership development programme of the Oshawa recreation department.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Hon. W. G. Davis (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, I beg to submit the report of the board of governors of the Ontario institute for studies in education, and also the annual report for Ryerson technical institute.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts), in view of the release this morning about the courier service in the pending postal strike—I do appreciate the fact that the government is on top of this at this point in having the courier service to nine or ten points across the province by plane and by truck—but I was wondering if the Prime Minister would consider the use of the 100,000 or so students out of work now. Would he consider the use of them in a mail courier service in Ontario at this point? Would there be an area of consideration there, sir?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): As I explained in the House yesterday, the service that we have set up referred really to the functions of this government. It is not a service we are making available to the public. We have an organization within the public service itself, that we think will do the job, particularly on a short range emergency basis. I do not think that it would be our responsibility, nor would it be possible, for us to attempt to organize a mail service to perform the functions normally performed by the post office facilities of the federal government. We have given that no consideration and I think it would be quite impracticable.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay has a question of the Minister of Mines from the other day. Is he prepared to ask it and clear that from the order paper?

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): I do not have a copy of it with me, Mr. Speaker.

A question for the Minister of Mines. What is the status of land held by Algoma Central Railway regarding mineral rights and will there be charged an annual rental for renewal of mining leases and acreage tax as provided for in Bill 118?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, on the assumption that the member is talking about the Algoma Central Railway and not Algoma Steel—in order to be liable for mining acreage tax lands must have been granted as mining lands, or must be held or used for mining purposes, or there must be a severance of the mining rights.

It is my understanding that Algoma Central Railway owns approximately 38 townships in the district of Algoma. Most of those lands do not fall in any of these categories and therefore are not taxable under The Mining Act. But the railway company has approximately 1,200 acres on our mining tax rolls and these will be subject to tax increases provided for in Bill 118, the same as any other corporation.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Grey-Bruce some days ago placed a question to the Prime Minister in connection with unions. I do not know whether he still wishes to ask it or whether—

Mr. Sargent: May I have a copy of it, Mr. Speaker?

Would the Prime Minister indicate if he is aware that a large majority of union members are afraid of bodily injury, or even their lives, if they complain or object to union policy?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Oh, come off it!

Mr. Sargent: Listen to them scream down there. Why do they not grow up and be geared to the times?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order!

Mr. Sargent: Would the Prime Minister advise if he is aware that many of these unions are controlled by U.S. union officials and that the rank-and-file union members in Ontario have little or nothing to say in what goes on?

Would the Prime Minister advise the House just what he is doing about this very serious catastrophe that is about to upset the economy, and if he is willing to call a full-scale investigation to indicate a policy of immediate control?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, it is impossible to answer a question such as this with yes or no. It contains so many expressions of opinion. I might say yes; I am aware that there are problems in the area in which this question is phrased but I would not necessarily agree with the opinions which are held by the member, which I think are embodied in the question.

We have various studies being carried on at all times, of course, in the government and The Department of Labour. I would draw to the member's attention that in August of 1966 the government appointed the hon. Ivan C. Rand as a commissioner to institute an inquiry —and it might be interesting to read from the order-in-council—he was appointed commissioner to:

> inquire into the means of enforcement of the rights, duties, obligations and liabilities of employees and employers individually and collectively, and of trade unions and their members individually and collectively, with relation to each other and to the general public, or any individual or section thereof, and the use of strikes, cessation of work, walk-outs, picketing, demonstrations and boycotts, whether lawful of unlawful, in labour disputes; and to examine the use of and procedures for obtaining injunctions in relation thereto, and to report thereon, and to make such recommendations as he may deem fit to the Lieutenant-Governor in council.

Now, if you will examine these terms of reference with care it will be seen that a good many of the things referred to have been placed in Mr. Justice Rand's hands.

He has held a great many public hearings, representations from individuals and from organizations. I think perhaps his report will be available within the foreseeable future. By that I mean I would hope that it would be distributed by, probably, September.

Now there are questions of printing and so on, but the information I have presently is that we will have the result of his deliberations within the next six to eight weeks.

I think hon. members will find that he will have dealt, in that report, with many of the matters that are raised in this question.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Prime Minister's views on this, but I—

Mr. Speaker: Order! If the member—

Mr. Sargent: Concern is not enough, action is needed now!

Mr. Speaker: Order!

Will the member resume his seat while the Speaker is on his feet?

Now if the member wishes to ask the Prime Minister if he will accept a supplementary question he is entitled to do so, but he is not entitled to comment or express his opinion.

Mr. Sargent: Will the Prime Minister accept a supplementary question?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Yes, but I will regret it later.

Mr. Sargent: The Prime Minister is very gracious this morning.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: When did I refuse?

Mr. Sargent: Yes, that is right.

I would ask the Prime Minister this: Does he not agree that the area of business, the economy, needs more than concern at this point; that it needs some action, and we cannot wait until a justice brings down a report?

Mr. MacDonald: What is the member proposing?

Mr. Sargent: An immediate investigation.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The immediate investigation is just about concluded, so there is no point in asking for another immediate investigation. I can tell the House, quite frankly, that we do not intend to take any precipitate action in this field without permitting all parties to these questions to have an opportunity to put their point of view, that is not the way we run the government. We want to consult those concerned. We want to have a proper basis if it is necessary to establish policies that will be sound and in the best interest of all the people of this province—and I mean all the people.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the hon. Prime Minister.

Following the Prime Minister's letter of December 13, 1967, to Mr. Gus Mauro of the Mauro accordian academy regarding the licencing of music teachers in the province of Ontario, has any progress been made in this regard?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I referred the matter to two other departments for comment and I am not in a position this morning to tell the House what that comment was. But I will—

Mr. Young: Mr. Mauro has received no comment.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I do not know. I receive quite a few letters and as far as this particular one is concerned, I do not know whether it was acknowledged or not.

But in any event, upon receipt of it I instituted some investigation so that I would have some basis upon which to deal with the letter. Now, I will be able to tell the member tomorrow morning what this is. I have not had time since the question came to me this morning, but I will be quite happy to answer it tomorrow.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Lands and Forests.

Has there been a reduction in the use of provincial parks since the introduction of the increase in entrance fees?

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Timiskaming, there has been a slight decrease in the overall attendance. This we feel is due to the poor weather in the latter part of June and early July. The improved weather in the past two weeks has shown a definite increase in park attendance and I am sure by the end of this year, we will have a substantial increase over last year.

Mr. Jackson: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? He says there has been a slight decrease, does he have the exact figures on the decrease?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I could get the figures for the member, Mr. Speaker, of the decrease up to, say, last Saturday, of this year in comparison to last year. The hon. member lives in the same part of the country as I do, and knows it has been raining there for the last month, so it is very difficult to get people to camp in continuous wet weather.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Lands and Forests has a reply?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this is the answer to a question by the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Ruston).

His question was: Due to the continued spread of the cottony maple scale disease in Essex county and especially in the township of Colchester South, will the Minister consider the request of Essex county council to take steps to assist in controlling this disease?

Mr. Speaker, my department would be pleased to assist in an advisory capacity. We have recently done an investigation in Colchester South township and there is no evidence that this insect has ever caused serious permanent damage to maples and is above all not attracted to maples in Ontario. Infestations of this insect have always been local and very short-lived. On July 4, 1968, a letter was sent to the clerk of the township advising him of the condition of the present insect problem.

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Attorney General (Mr. Wishart):

It is a six-part question:

1. Was the death of Isaac Teichroeb, which occurred on December 28, 1966, reported to the coroner?

2. Was an inquest held into this death?

3. If not, why not?

4. Was the cause of the death a flash-back explosion in the boiler room of the SS Nixon Berry?

5. Prior to the explosion in the boiler, had an oiler been fired for refusing to light that particular boiler?

6. Was Mr. Teichroeb burned by steam a few days before the fatal accident?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I will have to take this question as notice in order to find the answer. Just for the information of the member, the acting Attorney General is the Provincial Secretary (Mr. Welch), but I am quite happy to take the question this morning.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Does he have a right of succession?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: The Provincial Secretary? Does the member mean to the the Attorney General? With his ability, I think he has the right of succession to any position in this Cabinet.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Bill 176, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Act.

THE EXECUTIVE COUNCIL ACT

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister) moves second reading of Bill 177, An Act to amend The Executive Council Act.

Mr. R. F. Nixon (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the bill as on the order paper is not printed, but I am sure we can deal with it even though there would be an error apparently on the order paper in this regard.

I was wondering, sir, if the Prime Minister would explain why it is necessary to change the names of the Ministers, when each ministry has a bill which really controls the name of the department that is administered? It seems to be a needless duplication.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, I think it is a pure legality that has to do with the other powers and provisions in The Executive Council Act. I am advised by our legal people that the Act has to be changed to be in conformity with the individual Acts that govern the operation of the departments. The Executive Council Act governs the operation of the executive council as opposed to the individual departments. It is purely—as I understand it—a matter of statutory interpretation.

Mr. Speaker: I would say to the leader of the Opposition that the Clerk of the House who is responsible for the order papers points out to me that this is a printer's error and that the bill is printed and has been available to the members. We have so few of these happenings that I am sure the members will not object to the odd printer's error in this way.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY RETIREMENT ALLOWANCES ACT

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer) moves second reading of Bill 178, An Act to amend The Legislative Assembly Retirement Allowances Act.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Clerk of the House: The 26th order, House in committee of supply; Mr. A. E. Reuter in the chair.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

(Concluded)

On vote 1406:

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Chairman, on vote 1406 many of the members of this House over the years will have had many, many hours of their time consumed trying to tie together the Ontario municipal board and their local school areas and getting all the loose ends tied up; and I only want to make this point very briefly.

There is a complete lack of liaison, Mr. Chairman, between the OMB and the various other departments of the business of this province.

I am—as all municipal officials have been from time to time—concerned about the power that this board has. At the same time I do appreciate the intervention of Mr. Kennedy when a member of Parliament approaches him to get a long-lasting piece of all the legislation tied together in one ball of wax so it can be finalized.

I do not think it becomes this department or the government over there one iota that we cannot have some sort of proper cohesion. A case in point, the county of Bruce, the Walkerton high school. It took them three years to put together the opening of a high school and they listed, in chronological order, Mr. Chairman, the dates and meetings they have held with the government on the various levels to get this thing finalized and any words of mine, at this point, will not sink through the fact that we need to have a businesslike approach between the OMB and the various parts of government.

I think it is a sad affair that the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) or The Department of Education or the Treasury benches will not appoint a liaison board that can finalize these things and put them through without all this fal-de-ral of hundreds of phone calls and meetings to tie together the opening of a school.

In the area of business, Mr. Chairman, we have people who come in and expedite and tie up the loose ends and get a deal finalized but it is a sick piece of business today, for anyone starting at the county or township level to get all these authorities and their permissions signed down the line.

My point today is to say that the Minister has got a great selling job to do, a great selling job to do in his department. I think of the man who said he was the best milking machine salesman in the world. He found a farmer with one cow and he sold him two milking machines and he took the cow as a down-payment on them. Well, this is the selling job that the Minister will have to do in his department, in getting the government to be aware of the need to get a businesslike approach to tying together the needs of the people.

It is very frustrating for people on school boards to decide they want a school and not be knowledgable about the intricacies of the many hoops they must jump through to get this thing finalized. They sit for months and months, they cannot get to first base and so they come to you and I, as members, and say: "What the hell goes on, why can we not move in this thing?"

So in the final analysis we have got to phone up Mr. Kennedy or somebody on the board and use our "power" or "authority". They go to bat—they go to bat because they do not want to antagonize a member of the Legislature, but it should not have to happen that way.

I think we should have a man or a group of people in government who will expedite and duly go around to these different boards and say "Now, how can we tie this together for you and go through all the channels for you?" That is my one point in this vote, Mr. Chairman. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York Centre on vote 1406.

Mr. D. M. Deacon (York Centre): Mr. Chairman, the municipal board has had a very important role to play in past years, particularly during the depression years, when many municipalities got into difficulty. But it is now being required to look into matters which really should not be needed in this day and age in areas where we have regional governments and quite a good deal of expertise among the groups submitting financing programmes for approval by the municipal board.

I would suggest to the Minister that he give consideration to eliminating from the review of the municipal board these new regional governments that are being set up, because they do take up the time of the board unnecessarily when among the members and the people working out the financing programmes are people probably even better qualified than those on the municipal board to judge the merits and ability of the municipality to carry out financing.

In Metropolitan Toronto for example, we have people who are as well qualified as any in the province to work out programmes, and it seems to be a waste of time for the board to have to ask them to rule upon submissions of such bodies for financing programmes and capital expenditures. I feel that when we do have responsible, large units of government, we are now not in a position—or we should not be—to require the municipal board to spend their time on such matters. I would appreciate the comment of the Minister on this viewpoint.

Hon. W. D. McKeough (Minister of Municipal Affairs): In the area of financial control, Mr. Chairman, you will recognize that Mr. Smith has made certain recommendations and frankly I have not thought about them to any great extent. The supervision or control of the debt position of the municipalities, in my view, is by the Ontario municipal board, and it is working very well indeed and expeditiously, and carefully, and thoughtfully. It is a very necessary function.

I realize that there are those—including Mr. Smith—who think that those decisions should be made by the Minister and the department, rather than by an appointed board. I have no strong feelings one way or another at this point. I do say that I think that it is working rather well at this time.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1406?

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, I do not necessarily agree with Smith in this matter. I am saying that we have very sophisticated groups of municipalities in these regional programmes; that the department is working out in Ottawa, Toronto, and major cities, where we know that they are very well aware of what the market requires, and what the sound financial practice would be, and much more so than are we who are not dealing with these matters daily.

It does seem a waste of our time and of those concerned to subject them to the regulation and supervision of the municipal board or department. This is the viewpoint that I basically wanted to present.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Windsor-Walkerville.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, earlier in the discussion of the estimates of the department, I made mention of the effects a ruling from the Ontario municipal board may have on a community in regard to winter works projects. I had asked the Minister if it was proper to discuss that at the time, and he suggested that I bring it up under some vote later in the estimates.

I would now like to ask of the Minister if, because of a delay on the part of the municipal board, a delay in the approval of a community project, would the Minister consider adding the number of days for which delay was the responsibility of the OMB to the end of the winter works project? In other words, if the project was delayed by five days as a result of OMB decisions, would the Minister consider adding five days at the end of April 30, at which a subsidy would be available to municipalities?

In my own municipality, it was a matter of $2,000 a day for five days, which is a sizeable amount. It would save the ratepayers that amount if the extension of the time were made by the department.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am not familiar with the particular circumstances in Windsor which give rise to the question, but I would be glad to take a look at them. I would have to say, however, that we have no authority to extend the time because it is a matter determined by the federal government, which sets the time limits.

Mr. B. Newman: Well then, Mr. Minister, could I ask them for earlier approval on projects such as this, so that a municipality is not caught short-handed as a result of the OMB decisions?

There is one other topic that I would like to bring up, and I assume that this is the proper time and vote. Is the department considering the extension of the financing of, say, the E. C. Rowe expressway from a 20- to a 30-year period?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, I do not think so in particular. We are looking at longer term borrowing. This question was raised briefly yesterday, and it was pointed out that we do have on our staff, people skilled in the money market. We have a constant liaison with the Treasury who have a great deal of expertise as far as the money markets are concerned, and have a concern for municipal borrowing.

My own view would be that increasingly the OWRC, or the government through the commission, are loaning moneys on a long-term basis. It may well be for as long as 30- or 40-year periods.

It may well be that in total and balance that this money is to be made available from the commission and other agencies to municipalities, and this may well mean that municipalities, should confine their borrowings from the public to the shorter term market. I do not mean one or two years, but perhaps a 20-year contract.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Peterborough.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I would like to bring a matter to the Minister's attention which I think is a representative, rather than a specific, point. It would seem to me that one of the roles of the OMB, as well as insuring that the finances of the municipalities are in some sensible state, is that of defending and making sure that the rights of the taxpayers are also looked after.

I have here what is a very representative situation of what I think may very well become some of the problems that we will face, and particularly in view of the changes that have taken place as a result of Bill 44, and the reorganization of the educational system of this province.

It might be in order to begin my remarks with a quote from a Globe and Mail editorial of April 26. This is headed "A Scandalous Waste":

> One of the most important functions of the Ontario municipal board is to nip municipal folly in the bud. It is not stated in quite these terms in the various provincial statutes which set out the duties of the board, but the authority is there to control civic spending, if it is excessive, or ill-advised, and it may be used occasionally to stop municipal projects in their tracks.
> The Metro school board has embarked on the building of $13 million of suburban administration facilities by giving initial approval for spendidly prestigious education centres in North York and Etobicoke. This is a scandalous waste of public money, prompted, we suspect, by a wish to consolidate the notion that Metro's individual boards of education are here to stay.
> This is despite the assurances from Premier John Robarts that the present structures of government in the Metro area will be reconsidered after 1969.

It goes on to describe the ornate Etobicoke centre which will cost $3 million, and calls for an auditorium, cafteria, board room, conference and demonstration rooms, in addition to office space.

> Some members of the Metro school board, it should be said, have tried to restore perspective to the situation by questioning priorities in costs, but they were outnumbered and regrettably, gained no support from chairman Barry Lowes.
> The next move is up to the municipal board, and we would hope, the delegations of citizens and trustees.

I think that the important thing here is that the Globe and Mail suggests that delegations of citizens and trustees have a role to play, and I would like to bring before the House a series of events which prevented the citizens from really playing their proper role.

I think that the first mistake was not made by, and certainly had nothing to do with, The Department of Municipal Affairs, but is the way in which the Etobicoke board of education apparently runs its affairs. This seems, to a writer of a letter to a newspaper, to be a very strange way.

It seems that most of the major decisions are made in secret session, and, therefore, the citizens of Etobicoke really have no opportunity to get all the facts, or to question board members, or to make it a really democratic decision on a matter which is extremely important and which affects all the other boroughs of Metro Toronto, and will result in the expenditure of millions of dollars.

I would like to go on for a minute from that point. The citizens' committee did gather and tried to do something about bringing before the public the amount of expenditure which was going to be paid out if each of these individual boroughs had their own educational centre, and had centres of the size and of the complexity which the Etobicoke and North York boards were planning to build.

The spokesman for the citizens' group, Mr. Charles Millard, wrote to Mr. Kennedy as chairman of the Ontario municipal board. This was May 6, 1968:

> On behalf of the citizens' committee of concern, we are most anxious to appear before the board regarding the final approval of funds and financing to build a so-called Etobicoke education centre. Since Ontario municipal board approval in this case could mean tacit approval for similar projects throughout Metro and the province, a very great deal hinges on the board's decision, and we very much want to make representation to the board in enough time to prepare a submission.
> Could you, therefore, let the writer know at your early convenience when this case will be heard, and if this letter will serve as an application to be heard.
> Thanking you for your early attention.
> Yours faithfully,
> Charles M. Millard.

Mr. Millard received a reply from Mr. Kennedy, as chairman of the board, on May 22—this is over two weeks after that letter had been written.

> Unfortunately, your letter to me of May 6 instant, while duly received, did not come to my attention until today [that is May 22]. The funds required for capital construction by the metropolitan school board are the subject of both approvals under a recent amendment to The Ontario Municipal Board Act. However, if you make a specific request for a hearing on the Etobicoke education centre, I will endeavour promptly to arrange a public hearing. I should tell you, in advance, however, that the duties of this board are laid down in section 62.

And the chairman goes on to point out what the duties of the Ontario municipal board in this regard are. And one of them is, and I will just quote a part of this:

> Before approving of same, make such inquiry into the nature of the power to be exercised, or undertaking that is proposed to be, or has been proceeded with [it does not matter if it has already been started], the necessity or the expediency of the same, the financial position and obligations of the municipality.

Well, on May 27, Mr. Millard, writing on behalf of a number of other citizens in Etobicoke, wrote to the chairman of the municipal board:

> Dear Mr. Kennedy:
> Thank you for your letter of May 22, 1968, and thank you for your offer, if requested, to arrange a public hearing of the board to inquire into a number of relevant matters associated with, or stemming from an undertaking that is proposed to be, or has been proceeded with, namely, an Etobicoke administration education centre.
> As you will readily recognize, this is rather a complex matter with far-reaching implications, requiring careful preparation. Therefore, the request is for a preliminary hearing, and could this be conveniently held within one month? However, we will do our best to cooperate with you and the board.
> Thanking you for your prompt attention.

That was written on May 27. On May 28, Mr. Millard received a letter from Mr. Scott, who is the secretary of the Ontario municipal board, enclosing a board order which it had approved, and, of course, the first section of that board order is that: "The public hearing of this application be and the same is hereby dispensed with"—simply stating that the project had been approved and apparently indicated that was the end of it.

Mr. Millard wrote back again to Mr. Kennedy on May 31:

> Dear Mr. Kennedy:
> In order to keep the record straight, I wrote to you on May 6, 1968, and received your reply dated May 22.
> In your reply, you quoted section 62 of The Municipal Board Act, setting out the duties of the municipal board, and you offered to arrange a public hearing.
> On May 27, I formally made the necessary request for a public hearing, and as the Act provides that other relevant matters is for the board to decide, I suggested a preliminary hearing for this purpose.
> Under the circumstances, I cannot believe that a letter written by secretary R. Scott, under date of May 20 has been seen or authorized by you. Certainly the postscript on Mr. Scott's letter is wholly unacceptable, and if this correctly presents the position of the board, it makes a thorough public hearing into this entire matter all the more urgent and necessary.
> Yours sincerely, C. H. Millard.

On June 30, he received another letter from Mr. Scott, simply saying:

> I have received your letter of May 31. When the board's letter of May 22 was written to you, the board was not aware that this project had been commenced under the authority of the order made on the first day of February, 1968.
> Yours truly, R. Scott.

Mr. Millard then decided he would try again to get in touch with the chairman of the board; he sent a telegram to Mr. Kennedy. This was sent the day after the letter had been received:

> Before taking a final decision—

(and, of course, Mr. Millard was aware of the fact that the Act does allow the Ontario municipal board to move in even after a project has been commenced):

> —on steps now deemed necessary, may we know please if, in fact, you have seen the correspondence from Professor George Kirk and self since your letter to me dated the 22nd of May, 1968.

He then received a letter once again from Mr. Scott:

> Your telegram to the chairman was received at his home over the weekend. The full import of your telegram is not understood.
> If you wish to discuss this matter—

Now, this is the thing, now it has gone from "a public hearing" to

> If you wish to discuss this matter with the chairman, you should make an appointment by telephone with his secretary at 365-1901.

This is the final letter, I am sure the Minister will be glad to know. A final letter came from the citizens' group concerned with the Etobicoke education centre:

> This will acknowledge receipt of Mr. Scott's letter dated June 10, 1968.
> Since Mr. Scott has now raised the question of a possible discussion with you, and if it is your wish to have such a discussion, I would willingly cooperate, providing it is understood and agreed that such a discussion is in no way a substitute for an Ontario municipal board inquiry under section 62 of The Ontario Municipal Board Act.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I just suggest to the Minister that I hope he will look into this matter with some concern, because it does mean an expenditure of many millions of dollars on the part of the province, as this is just a beginning of the development of local educational centres. In this particular case, I feel, at least, that the people of Etobicoke have been poorly served.

In a sense, a citizens' group is attempting, I would suggest, on behalf of this government—because I think citizens do act on behalf of governments as well as on behalf of opposition to government acts—to force, I think, education boards to justify the expenditures which they are making in the cause of education. And, indeed, they are demanding certain priorities because in the township of Etobicoke there are some schools that do not even have enough classrooms. And some of the priorities here—for example, as suggested by the Globe and Mail—a programme of free dental care for people on welfare was left without a penny.

Now, I just suggest to you, sir, to the Minister, that this is the kind of spending which needs to be thoroughly examined and should be examined within the democratic process.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I am not familiar with all this file and I will be glad to have a look at it. If I could just make a couple of comments, however, very briefly, and subject to being able to change my mind after I have looked at that correspondence. First of all, just a small point, it is Miss Scott not Mr. Scott, who is the secretary, and who, I would say, is one of the most obliging people in any department. I would suggest to my friend from Grey-Bruce that if he does not want to phone the chairman, if he phones Miss Scott, he can nearly always get the information that he is looking for. I am glad to put that on the record because she is a very helpful person.

More important, however, I think probably I would disagree with the thoughts expressed in the Globe and Mail editorial—I remember reading it—at the beginning to a certain extent, and I think my friend did, perhaps, at the end of his remarks, to some extent.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Has the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) read this morning's editorial?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I would suggest that perhaps tomorrow morning you could ask the question before the orders of the day and find that out, but I do not think it is germane to our discussion.

Mr. Sopha: It is in your department; the editorial relates to your department.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is in both our departments.

Mr. Sopha: I thought it was a good editorial.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I have read it; I do not know whether the Provincial Treasurer has or not.

Mr. Sopha: A good editorial, did you not think?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have a great admiration for the Globe and Mail. The beginning of that editorial indicated that it was the responsibility of the provincial government or the Ontario municipal board, I think, to control—I have forgotten just what the words were—I am not—

Mr. Pitman: Civic spending that appears excessive or ill-advised.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Right!

Now, I am not sure that it is the function of the Ontario municipal board to determine whether something is ill-advised—perhaps excessive, but not ill-advised. I do not know that that is the function of the government. We are concerned, and I do not want to make a speech about local autonomy, but we have had all kinds of talk here during these estimates, which has been most interesting, about building effective units of regional government. Surely, a borough of several hundred thousand people and a board of education, and a Metro board must be regarded as effective units.

I think what Mr. Kennedy and the board are very concerned with, and certainly the policy of the government is that they should be concerned with it, is the particular relationship of a project, or group of projects, to their ability to spend that amount of money, their ability to borrow. I do not know whether it is in Mr. Kennedy's prerogative—really if we are trying to create strong units of local government—to decide whether portable classrooms which are not before the board, or the replacement of portable classrooms at that particular point, are before the board, or whether they should be, or whether it should be an education centre.

I have heard Mr. Kennedy on one or two occasions, I suppose, tell me that he personally was violently opposed as a ratepayer to something which some municipality was proposing. But he does not look at it in that view, he looks at it in relation to their ability to spend the money, to their ability to borrow. In other words, he is saying these are local decisions—provided they are within the five-year plan, provided they are within that ability.

Certainly the policy of the government, and also Mr. Kennedy, is to spend a great deal of time suggesting to municipalities that they should establish priorities. I am not going to comment on this particular proposal as I think the borough of Etobicoke would tell you that they have examined their priorities, I think, in this instance. I am not sure of the involvement of The Department of Education. There would not be any grants payable on this building, to my knowledge, because it is not a school biulding, so I do not know just what their involvement is, or how much involvement they would have—but I would think from time to time they would be saying things to school boards about priorities. Priorities, yes, but I would hope we would not get down to determining them at Queen's Park. To me and, I think, to you, it is probably a simple determination as to which is more important—an education centre or a replacement of portable classrooms or an administrative office.

You and I could decide that. But when we get down to a determination of where that school might be—a choice between two locations, or the determination between a school and a recreational area in a municipality's budget, that is properly left with them.

Mr. Pitman: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would agree with what the Minister has said in relation to the local decisions.

I think the main problems which these citizens faced was—and once again I would agree that the mistake in the first instance was made by the Etobicoke board of education—there should have been an opportunity to make their representations, to make their views known. I suppose the Minister would agree that, at the next election for the Etobicoke board of education, the citizens then have another opportunity to state their views. But, of course, the problem by that time is that the decisions that they were mainly concerned about, that is in regard to an education centre, will be gone. The citizens' group's main concern is perhaps a matter unstated in the statutes—that the Ontario municipal board has an opportunity to ensure that citizens have a democratic right to be heard. I think their feeling was that, in this case, this was not clearly set out and defined and that this opportunity was not actually given them.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a comment on this. Under the provisions of The Municipal Act, of course, this Legislature has laid down and puts it in mandatory fashion that whenever moneys are to be spent that are not allocated in current revenues, a vote shall be required of all those who have the right to vote on money bylaws. Under The Ontario Municipal Board Act, an application may be made to that board to dispense with the taking of the vote. It is my impression, certainly my experience among the two score municipalities with which I have the closest contact, but beyond that it is my impression that in the overwhelming majority of cases, the Ontario municipal board on application to dispense with the taking of the vote, grants approval to the dispensation. I think really it is only in the rare instance that, in fact, they require the taking of the vote by those entitled to vote on money bylaws.

The one example I can recall, that will, of course, stick in everybody's mind, is the required taking of a vote for the building of the city hall in Toronto and it was defeated. But I forget now the mechanics of when ultimately that very fine building was built. A great deal more money was spent in its erection than was at issue in the original vote.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Four million dollars!

Mr. Sopha: Four million dollars? Thank you. Four million dollars more and it is an anomaly that at that time there was no vote held. But that is illustrative of the place to which these provisions in the legislation have come. That right to vote on money bylaws has become a rather hollow, ephemeral, thing in the municipal life of the province. I would think it is the obligation of the government, no one else's, to rationalize the statutes and to determine, as a matter of government policy, whether the vote shall be dispensed with. That would, of course, eliminate this almost mythological, artificial application to the board. As the Minister said this morning, the board looks at the ability of the municipality to pay. Apparently, though it was never laid down anywhere, the board advised something like a 25 per cent ratio of debt to the taxation facilities. That is said to be an arbitrary figure the board has determined. The government, I would say, has the obligation to lay down some rational approach that everybody will comprehend. Then there will not exist in the statutes what appears to be the right of those ratepayers to vote on this expenditure when, in reality, in truth, the right does not exist. The votes simply are not held.

Now, then, one must also take into account the observations of the Smith committee. In volume 2 they recommend greater flexibility be given to municipalities to make expenditures otherwise than out of current revenues within prescribed and somewhat arbitrary limits. That would seem to me to be a much more sensible approach to the whole thing than this upset. This gives a field day to the newspapers, of course. Every time this problem arises, the newspapers have plenty of material upon which to advocate their stand for or against the contemplated project. In the fall, out of what is going on, the local municipal councillors are either lauded, which is rare, or they are condemned for the action that they propose to take. But then again they are only acting in accordance with what has become encrusted practice in this province. Whenever you are going to make an expenditure where you have to borrow, the application for dispensation with the vote is made at the same time. It is a mechanical thing. I have been a municipal solicitor for 13 years and whenever we do it, we do it that way. There is an automaticity to it. You draw the necessary bylaws and then you draw the bylaw to make the application to the board to dispense with this taking of a vote.

Maybe in the enlightened society those entitled to vote the money bylaws no longer want to be bothered with the vote. Maybe they are just as content, for all we know, to leave these things to their elected council to determine. I merely plead that a very long look be made at these provisions in order to ascertain if they might not be rationalized in the light of present practices and points of view.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I agree with much of what the member has said. In fact, I would think nearly all. We are taking a look at it. There are a number of situations in the Act where the provisions are different for a police station than they are for a city hall or for a comfort station and a fire hall, for example; and they should all presumably be the same. I would not want to see a vote completely taken away; but perhaps the emphasis should be that there is not a vote unless the Ontario municipal board decides there should be. The emphasis that way rather than the other way around. We are looking at exactly those ideas.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, from time to time officials and elected representatives of municipalities are quite alarmed with the debenture debt. Yet the municipalities need many services such as water, sewage, schools and so forth.

Now, how many municipalities—if the Minister has this available—have been turned down by the Ontario municipal board this past year in trying to increase their debenture debt for such services?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I do not have those figures in just that form. In terms of their five-year programme, I think that could be obtained. I think there were press reports that Mr. Kennedy felt that he had cut back several hundreds of millions of dollars out of this year's programme and there were no screams to me, or to the government. So I assume the cutting was not as painful as it may have appeared to have been.

I do not have those figures. I have known of a number of instances—and I am thinking particularly perhaps of schools—where the board has said: "No, it can't be done" and with a little working around and a fresh look at it and perhaps trying some new approaches, something ultimately seems to be worked out.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): This information is readily available. I am sure the member for Kent would have appreciated, as we all would, to find out how many of them were refused.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I will be glad to try to get that information.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the municipal board, I would think, in a case where they have annexation hearings, and I look to the Windsor area and see rulings made by them with regard to the application of the city of Windsor for annexation of adjoining areas. I wonder if their rulings really do not look too sound in that case. We think, for instance, of the township of Sandwich West, where the city of Windsor annexed all their business and industrial and commercial assessment and left the township with only rural assessment and residential, leaving the township in a rather precarious situation, as well as the school boards.

Of course, this is probably policy of the government with regard to regional government and needs some looking at there. But I believe this is very serious indeed when one municipality can be more or less torn asunder by a municipal board ruling, and left then to get on their merry way as best they can. I think this is a very serious situation in that area.

In my own dealings with the municipal board, I found it very fair, and rulings, I thought, were always given very fairly. The only complaint I would probably have is if there was just some method of having a little quicker service. I realize that with bylaws, and solicitors, and so forth, it all takes time. But I am just wondering, if maybe, with the wide range of use that the municipal board is made of now, the many rulings it has to make and a number of different things, committees of adjustment, rulings in large number, that maybe we should have three offices set up throughout the province or some regional areas where these could be made. Or enlarge the municipal board some perhaps, because I believe this does hold up a lot of areas and construction and so forth.

I would just like to go on record, Mr. Chairman, that I believe that the rulings I have seen in most cases of the municipal board have been satisfactory, but I think the method of their operations could stand some considerable improvement with regard to time.

Vote 1406 agreed to.

On vote 1407:

Mr. Bukator: I was wondering—

Mr. Chairman: I would point out to the member that item 1 of 1407 was discussed under vote 1402 under community planning and it has been passed.

Mr. Bukator: I see. I was not here yesterday, I was out of town. I think I could touch on the subject on the next item then because it all pertains to municipalities and grants to municipalities.

I am sure that the Minister has been confronted by municipalities that are about to be annexed, or agreeing to become merged with one another, but the grants structure seems to be the hindrance here. Has the Minister any comments to make? I am concerned about the Niagara peninsula and when it becomes one —and I am sure it is not too far off—the grant structure, as you know, for school purposes, is 60 per cent in the rural townships where it may be only 17 per cent in the city. And you have no doubt looked into this matter.

Is there a possibility of having these figures before the annexation, or before the merger, whereby the elected representatives can rightly say to their people who elect them to their offices of reeves and councillors, that we would like to be part of the larger and better administration in many cases, if it is a larger city, providing that we are not hurt when it comes to the tax dollar and grants? Because on bridges in townships they get 80 per cent and in the city you only get 33.3 per cent, schools you get 60 instead of 20 in the city. Now, just to be called a city, or a larger administration, and have to pay more in tax dollars is not quite the answer to the problem.

Grants for school purposes have been increased and I think when the day comes—and I hope it is soon—that the province takes over a larger share of education costs, then the municipalities would not have, Mr. Chairman, these arguments that they have now. Why should we become a larger area and have to pay more on our taxes?

I am wondering if the Minister would have some comment on that that I could take home to my people because I know this is serious and I am sure it is not too far off before the Mayo report or something like it, will be implemented.

Mr. Chairman: I would just say the member's remarks were somewhat out of order in relation to this particular vote. I am sure he realizes it, if the Minister would like to provide answers I am sure the committee would be pleased to permit it.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: Yes, I do not know where it might have been more appropriate, it really is not under this vote. But we try to provide these figures. They are rough, they are estimates, because they are based on so many unknowns, you do not know what savings are going to be, you do not know what increased costs are going to be, but we do try to provide these very rough guidelines whenever we can.

I suppose I could say this, that perhaps we do not put as much stress on them as we might if we are convinced that greater equity is going to be achieved, if I can put it that way, in relationship to the burden of real estate taxes in two communities. Now, the matter of grants is of concern to me, for example, policing arrangements. I think we have to come to grips with some of these situations so that municipalities will not be badly hurt in terms of provincial grants.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on items 2 or 3 of vote 1407?

Mr. Ben: Mr. Speaker, I rose yesterday with reference to item 3, The Municipal and School Tax Credit Assistance Act, and I asked the hon. Minister how many people had availed themselves of the loans under this particular Act. I would also like to know, how much, if any, has been paid back under this particular Act. I ask those questions with reference to the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: I have the information for the hon. member. Last year there were 132 municipalities which participated. There were approximately 2,600 loans made, for a total of $363,000, of that, 1,130 loans were in Metro for a total of $164,000. I do not have the figures as to how many have been paid back. I think probably we could get that up to a certain point. The only other comment is that so far this year there seems to be an indication that there will be more loans throughout the province. The activity seems somewhat higher but that really is just a guess at this time.

Mr. Ben: Can the Minister speculate as to the number of people in the Metro area that would qualify for these loans?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No, not offhand. Many more than that number, I am sure of that. I have a note here. I will get the information for you but actually we make the loan but Treasury gets the money back. So those figures would come from Treasury rather than us, as to the number which have been discharged—we can get them for you.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further on items 2 or 3?

The member for Peterborough.

Mr. Pitman: I wonder if I could ask the Minister whether special loans or grants are made under this vote which will allow a municipality to carry a particular project. In view of the discussion we had here yesterday, in terms of the need for town planners and for people who are concerned with environmental studies, I think the Minister must have been somewhat disconcerted to read in the paper this morning the fact that York University is requesting Metro Toronto to provide them with a grant which will allow them to build a new public administration building.

Now, they have not been turned down, but it looks like the same thing which happened on two other previous occasions may happen again and I think the Minister would be, I would imagine, concerned that this very important institution which would provide the kind of personnel we were talking about so much yesterday afternoon might not be built. I am wondering if under this vote it is possible for The Department of Municipal Affairs to make any kind of a special grant to allow a municipality to provide for this very much needed facility in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. There is nothing under vote 1407 or any of my votes which would allow me to do that.

Mr. Chairman: Anything under vote 1407?

Mr. Deacon: Mr. Chairman, in item 2, loans made as approved by the Lieutenant-Governor in council. What type of loans are envisaged in this provision? What sort of interest rate term, and is there any forgiveness?

Hon. Mr. McKeough: No. These two items are for this year's estimate, Elliot Lake and Manitouwadge. Neither one of them is in a position to start paying back yet. These are the loans which we are making to Elliot Lake and Manitouwadge.

Mr. Deacon: Why are these municipalities not resorting to the normal provincial fund for borrowing? Why is there a special item set up for them? Could they not go to—

Hon. Mr. McKeough: This is deficit financing. Both of those municipalities were, as you are aware, in very serious trouble and they are still financing at a deficit.

Mr. Chairman: Anything further under vote 1407?

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Mr. Chairman, might I ask the Minister in connection with The Municipal Works Assistance Act, what is the status of that Act at the present time?

Mr. Chairman: This is a statutory item and not debatable, although the Minister may provide information if he wishes.

Mr. Young: I just wanted to get the question in, because this Act was one which was supposed to be temporary and suddenly it is a permanent thing.

Hon. Mr. McKeough: It is wound up. It wound up on March 31 last, I believe. The moneys which are here are to wind it up.

Vote 1407 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of Municipal Affairs.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MINES

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Mr. Chairman, in attempting to prepare myself for the first presentation by me of the estimates of The Department of Mines, I originally envisaged that I would be able to take the members of the House on a glorified verbal tour of discovery of The Department of Mines, but then I have concluded that this late in the session, and also perhaps with some of the more experienced members of the House especially from the north being more knowledgeable about the department than I am, that this would not be a good idea and it might show up my own inadequacies.

Therefore, rather than do that, I intend to get into three main topics on these initial remarks in any event.

Number one, a discussion on taxation policies of the government affecting the mines and especially the recommendations of the Smith committee.

Number two, the question of the treatment in Canada of Ontario ores.

Number three, a discussion of the Texas Gulf situation.

Before getting into the meat of the thing, though, I must say that one reason I feel sorry for some of the new members of the House, in this session, is that they have not had the opportunity as I had for nine years, to sit over here on these benches with a great fellow, a great man of northern Ontario, my predecessor in this office, the then Hon. George C. Wardrope. I cannot say anything more laudatory about Mr. Wardrope and his membership in this House and his conscientiousness to duty other than to say that dear old George was a great guy. The fact that he is not here, political bias or partisanship aside, makes the members of this House the losers. I am finding that his knowledge of the north and his knowledge of this department make his shoes rather hard to fill.

In respect of the estimates, sir, you will note that there is roughly, in round figures, about $500,000 increase in the estimates of The Department of Mines this year over last year.

There really are not any grand new programmes which are envisaged under these amounts, and I hope the hon. members will appreciate that being appointed, I think the usual term is elevated, to the Cabinet on the day before this House opened means that I am in the position where I am attempting to pilot through the House, estimates of which I had no hand in the formulation, the preparation; no part in the departmental routine in setting them up; and certainly I had nothing to do with getting them through Treasury board, Cabinet or eventually getting them into this House.

I must assure the members that I hope there will be changes in these estimates and the amounts concerned in relation to next year, but this may be a fight that I will have on my hands with Treasury board for next year.

Anyway, let us get down to the meat of the thing. I wanted to say something about the present taxing system and the Smith committee report. Since my appointment I have attempted to do a little bit of travelling through the north, and to meet those associated with the mining industry and those affected by the mining industry in the north.

One thing I am attempting to point out to them is that in my readings of the briefs and presentations that have been made to the government respecting the overall reform of Ontario's taxing powers and tax procedures is the fact that a lot of people are not happy with the existing system, or perhaps even the quantum of the taxes raised by this province from the mining industry.

That is number one.

Number two, is that a lot of people, and perhaps this includes members of the government, are not particularly happy with most of the recommendations in the Smith committee report as they deal with the mining industry and the mines tax and the mining municipality grants.

This is fine. This is the way democracy works. I think the government of the day wants to hear these views and opinions.

The one thing that does surprise me, as I read these briefs; as I have representations made to me, as well as presumably to the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton); and as I sit in on some of the sessions of the current committee in dealing with this matter, is the fact that these points arise again and again.

The present situation is not exactly what it should be. The Smith committee recommendations in respect of the mining industry perhaps will not improve the situation. Other than that, we do not appear to be getting anywhere.

I would like to hear, and have emphasized to the people of the north and those in the mining municipalities and in the industry, that there is no question about it that Ontario's tax base has to be diversified and widened.

The existing system may not be that wonderful, and the Smith committee report recommendations may not be that wonderful and may not be the answer and, therefore, please would people start coming along with constructive alternatives to what these two aspects as they presently exist, and to the existing conditions, and to what the Smith committee recommended.

I am not saying that this applies to all briefs or presentations, but having recently gone through the transition in the government that I have, I certainly appreciate that it is a much harder job to come up with new answers than it is to sit back and criticize other people.

Certainly, as the Minister of Mines, when this matter is determined and when the government does come up with these answers, I do not particularly want to hear people come out with a wholesale condemnation of that answer if they have not gotten off their fannies, and come up with some worthwhile constructive solutions themselves, while the matter is being debated, and determined. You can believe me that this is a matter that is receiving the most serious consideration right now.

The opportunity, both publicly and privately, is present to anybody who has constructive ideas to present them. My chore over the last two months has been to go over the north and talk to people in the mining industry and emphasize this to them. If they have got a suggestion, now is the time to make it, either publicly or privately, it does not matter which. This is the time for people to make their voices heard, and not after the government comes up with solutions.

There is one other matter with respect to taxation that does concern me. That is the feeling, in some quarters, that the mining industry in the province is not paying its way as far as tax revenues are concerned to this province.

There is one aspect of this that relates to the federal government, as I said, that does irk me, and that is this: that even though it is the provincial responsibility to provide services, and to provide the atmosphere for increased exploration in the mineral industry, and to help production of mines, the lion's share of the tax revenue in this country goes not to the provinces, but to the federal government. It is not the federal government that has to provide these services, and they are expensive, to the northern mining industries, and municipalities.

This is an iniquity which should be rectified. Unfortunately at the moment, the mining industry is the ham in the sandwich. I think that there have been repeated attempts by the government, and the predecessors of this government, to make successive governments at Ottawa see the light, in regard to our natural resource industries—so far, without much help, and without much success. I would like to emphasize, as strongly as I can, that this is an unfair arrangement. The provinces in the country do have the duty and responsibility to oversee our natural resource industries, and at the same time, in fulfilling the responsibilities, as I think that this government is now doing with respect to the provision of schools, roads, and health services, townsites, and pollution. These are all provincial responsibilities and they are all expensive services that must be provided by the provinces.

Yet, when you go down the record, you certainly find that when you go right into the figures and percentages, the federal government takes the lion's share of taxes taken by any government from the mining industry. In my view, this is inequitable. I must say that if the hon. member for Sudbury had increased duties in this House, and had to sit and take a wider view than the perhaps parochial pump-house view that he has taken in respect of mining municipalities' grants, and the situation in Sudbury, I am sure that he would realize, along with a lot of others who are now thinking of looking at this subject, that again welcome to the situation where the mining municipality grant system in this province does not hold all the answers that it should. That there are inequities I am cognizant, and there is no question about it.

However, if you remove this situation, you go back to the dog-eat-dog days prior to 1953 or whenever it was that the mining municipality grant was instituted, which system, at that time was acknowledged by anybody and everybody to be unfair and inequitable. For this reason, the mining municipality grant system was instituted. There is now strong demand and pressures and the hon. member for Sudbury has joined the bandwagon—

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): Indeed he leads it!

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): You joined it; not led it!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: —to have the mining municipality system changed and presumably to revert to the old system.

Mr. Sopha: The government looks bad in this area.

An hon. member: So why are you crying?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I, again, am not saying that the current system holds the answer to the matter. There are those who feel that this is the best choice of a number of evils.

Mr. Sopha: Inco has made the government look bad in this area.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: But if you have to look at the overall interests of the province of Ontario as a whole, and not just a select little area—

Mr. Sopha: It is the most important area.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You have to look at the interest of the north as a whole, and I do not see how any rational person, having in mind the interest of the whole, could come up with the answers that the hon. member for Sudbury now is propounding.

Mr. Sopha: Half of the mineral wealth of Ontario is in Sudbury.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Now, I apologise for going back to the tax situation, but let us get back to the ore situation. In respect of the ore situation, it has always been the policy of this government, as far as I can see in my readings and as far as I can interpret the statutes, to encourage, and to have incentives, for the treatment in Ontario of ores mined in Ontario. One section of The Mining Act does not speak about Ontario, it speaks about the treatment of ores in Canada, and this is something that perhaps during the discussion of these estimates some viewpoints could be expressed vis-à-vis. The treatment in Ontario versus the treatment in Canada. I would like to hear some remarks respecting this.

Mr. Sopha: It is refined in Norway and Minnesota and New Jersey.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Order, Mr. Chairman!

Mr. Chairman: The Minister is speaking without notes, so let us give him a chance?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It has always been the policy of this government, as far as I can see, to encourage, and to greatly encourage, the treatment, certainly in Canada, and perhaps in Ontario, of ores mined in Ontario.

Examples of this, of course, are present with us right today in respect of the iron ore situation, and in respect of the production of nickel. There are special allowances in respect of both of these—of the ores that end up with the production of both of these metals—there are special allowances and special incentives in our current taxing system in respect of both of these metals, and they have been highly successful, in my mind, in following up the general objectives of government.

Now, having said that I want that as the background for anything more that will follow here in a minute. Under that general principle it is certainly, perhaps, the time to seriously consider—and the government is now seriously considering—I want to emphasize this, that perhaps incentives and perhaps holding tariffs in this particular area may not be the answer, due to certain recent developments in the mining industry. I think it is only fair to be frank with the House and with the public, and with the mining industry, to indicate to you, Mr. Chairman, that the government is considering dropping the role of merely adding incentives to this particular field. The government, at the moment, is seriously considering whether or not the time has come to insist upon this. But it is not just a black-and-white issue, and sometimes I wish that members in the House especially, and some people in the mining industry, would stop considering it as a black-and-white issue, because there are many, many factors to be considered.

For instance, I am informed in respect of radioactive materials produced that, first of all, the treatment in Ontario of all of the radioactive ores that would be and could be produced in this province would be the height of folly. First, because of the very expense in respect of the treatment of that type of ore and, second, the fact that the shipment of, for instance, uranium ore in the yellow cake form is by far the most convenient and the least dangerous to everyone concerned. So right off the bat an exception would have to be made—as it has been made in the past—to certain of the radioactive materials.

Secondly, let us take the case of iron ore produced in Ontario. There have been great technological changes made in the last five years in respect of the production and treatment of iron ores. The pelletizing process has opened up a wonderful new world and a great potential for this province in respect of the exploitation of the low-grade iron ores of this province.

But the thing we must always remember is that the finding of low-grade iron ore properties is not confined by any means to Ontario, that there are known deposits of low-grade iron ore not only in Ontario but outside of Ontario which could and will and must be a very great competitive factor in anything that we attempt to do in this province. The main problem in respect of the iron and steel industry in this province and the production of these ores is that there has to be vertical integration of the industry in respect of this.

What I am saying to you is that it is easy to know and to find low-grade iron ore deposits. The thing that it has to be tied in with very, very closely is the treatment of the iron ore. There has to be in the way in which the industry has developed over the last 10 or 15 years a very close connection; a very close arrangement between the producers of the iron ore and the owners of the blast furnaces and the rolling mills.

I can tell the members of the House right now where there are tremendous low-grade iron ore potential areas in this province, and it has been known for 20, 30, 50 years where these areas are. They are not being utilized at the moment, solely and simply because there is not the capacity to treat those ores in Ontario; and because it is the view of those in the industry that there is not that much of a market, or there has not been that much of a market.

So I am saying the treatment of iron ores in Ontario is not necessarily the answer. Nevertheless, through the guidance and, I think, the incentives instituted and carried out by this government over the years there has been a great development of the iron and steel industry and the production of iron ore in this province. It is a very touchy situation that in my view, and in the view of my advisors, should not be upset by any hurried legislation which would insist upon the treatment of all iron ores in this province at the moment.

Also, I may say to you something that is not known widely in the province, there is the fact that the amount of iron ore that is exported from this province is balanced in any event by the amount of iron ore that is imported into this province and treated in this province.

So that in respect of the iron ore industry and the iron and steel industry such insistence in our legislation that all of this ore that is produced here be treated in Ontario would not gain anything economically for the people within the province, or the people within the industry at the moment—and I stress at the moment.

Mr. MacDonald: Where is it imported from?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am not too sure, I will get that information.

Mr. MacDonald: From Labrador?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No. No. It is imported from the U.S.

Now, the tightrope which I think this government and any government has to walk in respect of the whole question of the treatment of ores in this province is the fact that this is not a regional problem within the province. It is not even a northern Ontario problem. It is not even a provincial problem. It is not even a national problem.

It is an international problem, in that in this day and age, with ease of transportation, we have to be extremely wary of upsetting some of the very fine balances that now exist in the mining industry. We can make all the goofs we want in this day and age, but in respect of the mining industry it is an awesome responsibility to take upon one's shoulders—the fact that if we upset this balance today, we may not even know about it today.

Our children may not even bear the responsibility for the goofs that we could make as a government today. The mining industry especially is based upon such long-term plans that these are factors that may not even come to the surface until the time of our grandchildren. It is a tightrope that this government and any government has to walk—especially in relation to the mining industry—when one starts interfering with some of these matters, the main factors of which are outside of our control completely.

Mr. Sopha: Some of them are outside of our country.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Precisely. Exactly the very point I am making. In any event I hark back to my general overall principle—that it has always been the policy of this government to have incentives, to have this done, and it may be—the government is now considering it—that this matter should be insisted upon in our legislation. This and similar problems are receiving the very serious consideration of the government at the moment.

Now, the final item that I wanted to get into was the question of Texas Gulf, and Ecstall mining company. I reiterate to the members, Mr. Chairman, that I was appointed to the position on February 13, 1968. Within seven days, I had officials and the top people of Texas Gulf into my office and, to put it bluntly, we have been putting the heat and the pressure on Texas Gulf ever since; innumerably, in all sorts of ways.

But it astounds me the amount of misinformation that does reach the press about some of these things. I think, really, the best way—because I do not want to take too long—is that we get back to the "what", and the "where", and the "when".

People talk about the Texas Gulf smelter. There is no such animal, of course, and this is perhaps what we are trying to rectify. But we are not dealing with a smelter. We are dealing with two types of smelters, I hope, a copper smelter and a zinc smelter, and the two are most unlike. For the benefit of the members of the House, the copper produced at the Kidd Creek mine of Ecstall Mining Corporation is sent to Quebec, and the copper that is produced by Texas Gulf is being refined in Canada.

It is outside the province, but I hark back to my earlier words of warning to you, that I would like to hear some discussion by the members in this House as to whether or not we want to deal and we want to insist upon Ontario treatment versus treatment in Canada. So I just bring that point to your attention. The copper that is being produced is being produced or refined, smelted, in Canada at the moment already.

The other question, of course, is the zinc smelter. Now, in no uncertain fashion we have let it be known to the Texas Gulf people that changes do have to be made in their procedures and their system, and that both of these products should be produced in Ontario. And, while I have indicated in the past that we should not discriminate for or against a single company, or for or against a single area, I can tell you that it is the hope of the government that there will be a new copper smelter built to process and treat the copper ores produced at the Kidd Creek mine of Ecstall Mining Corporation in the Timmins area. And the company, since my elevation to the Cabinet—if that is the right word—has retained the Ralph M. Parsons Company, an international firm of mining consultants, with offices in Toronto, New York and Los Angeles, to present a very expensive feasibility report to them. This is a study of the processes of a copper smelter and the economics of the situation. Of course, the economics of the situation will deal with the location of the projected smelter, and the capital and operating costs, as well as the process. We are interested in all of these matters. We are interested obviously, as I have indicated in no uncertain terms to the company, in the location.

But we are also interested in the process. The reasons for this, of course, are the continuing problem in regard to pollution in this field. There have been errors made in the past—there is no question about this—in relation to the lack of government insistence in relation to certain metallurgical processes in regard to the smelting situation. We want to make sure that the pollution problem, which some of the citizens of this province have had to put up with in the past, is not repeated by any new ventures.

Obviously, then, we are interested in the process of the smelting of the copper and where it is going to be done. It is certainly the hope and the wish of this government that the copper smelter be built in the Timmins area. I can also indicate to you that the latest word I have had from the company is that the studies they now have taking place for them are dealing with the situation, and is directed along the course of action that the copper smelter will be built in the Timmins area. It may not be built in the Timmins area; I do not want anybody to come to me and say, in later years, that this government promised that it would be in the Timmins area. But I can tell you that we have let the company know that we would like it to be built in the Timmins area, and the company has indicated so far an agreement with this.

The hon. member for Sudbury will be amused with the reaction of the company officials when I mentioned this rumour—I am not so sure whether the member for Sudbury initiated it or was just spreading it in the House the other day—but he will be amused at the reaction of the company officials who were quite incensed. I have just one word to describe it, and that is "garbage". They have not, do not, and will not contemplate building either of their smelters in Quebec. Now in regard to the—

Mr. Sopha: Where is the zinc smelter to be?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Sopha: Where is the zinc smelter to be?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, wait a minute, let us just finish the copper. They now inform me that they will be in no position to make the final determination of the process, or the economics of the situation—and basically it is an economic situation—in regard to the copper, until this expensive, far-reaching report is in their hands. This report will not be in their hands until the end of this calendar year.

Now, in regard to zinc: the same heat, the same pressure, has been put on Texas Gulf and Ecstall in the same manner as the copper, with one exception. I am speaking very frankly and bluntly to the House, now, in relation to the location of the zinc smelter. Ontario, at the moment does not have a zinc smelter. There are, I am informed, literally hundreds of small zinc potential areas scattered throughout the length and breadth of Ontario's north country. They have been very seriously handicapped, as far as production and exploitation and exploration is concerned, because there has been in the past no single area which would produce enough zinc in this province to make it economically feasible for a zinc smelter to be built in the province.

This has now, of course, all changed due to the fortuitous of finding—right under the noses of Ontario's mining industry, of the immensely rich ore body at Kidd Creek mine in Timmins. Therefore, we have indicated, again in no uncertain terms, to the Texas Gulf company that a zinc smelter in our view should be built in Ontario as rapidly as possible, and as soon as possible. I am no technical person at all, Mr. Chairman, as you will appreciate; but I understand, as far as the metallurgy is concerned, zinc has a number of very great problems in respect of the separation, concentration and smelting thereof.

There are very great problems, or there could be very great problems in regard, I understand, to pollution as well from zinc. The erection of a new smelter in Ontario, a zinc smelter, does require a great deal of study. Again, since my elevation to the Cabinet, the Ecstall Mining Corporation has retained again, I am told, a very well-known firm of international consultants by the name of Allan Jeffson and Associates, again to do a study of the processes, the economics and the location of a zinc smelter, with the difference in respect of the zinc smelter that it be located in Ontario.

In this regard, we feel that it is not our position to dictate to this particular company where this smelter should be located, because this will have an even greater economic impact, we hope, on a number of these smaller mines, or what could be smaller mines in Ontario. This is something we feel they are better suited to figure out than we are. Quite frankly, and therefore the pressures that have been put on the company do not relate in respect of the zinc smelter to the location of the zinc smelter.

Mr. Sopha: Well, you are not making yourself clear to me. Is it to be in Ontario?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, we would like it to be built in Ontario. The studies that the company has now commissioned are on the basis that they be in Ontario, not necessarily in the Timmins area.

Mr. Sopha: North or south?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: At the moment we are not differentiating to the company our insistence that it be built in any area, north or south.

Mr. Sopha: That is all right.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: There are greater economic problems in respect of shipments. There are greater problems in respect of other materials and power and what-not needed in respect of zinc than there are in respect of copper I am informed.

Mr. Chairman: Order, please!

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: This is a greater problem, but again we have been assured by the company that it will have this very expensive, and I hope, very comprehensive report in its hands by the end of this calendar year. Under the circumstances, I do not feel that, at the moment, we can put any more pressures on this particular company in respect of these two types of smelters than we are putting. Certainly, what pressures we have put on them and the heat that has been turned on them so far has been quite productive in the last couple of months.

Mr. Sopha: This is a good Minister of Mines.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Now, I am in trouble.

In any event, Mr. Chairman, those are the three main topics that I did want to discuss. Of course, I hope we will have a frank discussion on the administration of the department as we go through the estimates.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Mr. Chairman, I certainly consider it a privilege and an honour to be lead-off speaker for the Liberal Party on a department of government which legislates and assists a billion-dollar industry, an industry which has not only been a money-maker for the affluent investors here in southern Ontario, but, of course, has been a developer of the rich underground wealth of the part of the province I call home: northern and northwestern Ontario.

Mining can do this province more and more economic good. Just how soon we will enjoy the full potential benefits of that great untapped underground wealth up there depends on the effectiveness and progressiveness of legislation we here in this assembly enact, on the aggressiveness and ability of this department, added to what those in the industry are willing to do.

At this point I would like to congratulate the new Minister of Mines on his appointment and also on the tremendous opening speech which he gave us here today. I think he promises a great deal. May I also inform him that many mining authorities in our area have already commented quite favourably on this decision of the Premier, (Mr. Robarts) and they look forward to big things from this Minister, and if the type of dynamics he has displayed today is a true indication of what we are going to get from him and his department then I think the outlook for mining in this province is very good indeed.

Now, while there is much jubilation that Ontario has broken the billion-dollar mining production barrier—witness the front page of the 1967 annual report complete with jet —we all know that there is a multi-billion dollar mining production potential in this province, and it should be this Minister and this department's aim and responsibility to go after it with all haste and efficiency.

But how in the world can they with this annual budget of $4,438,000? That is only $3 million more than this House voted for horse racing, and it is almost $6.5 million less than we are giving to The Department of Lands and Forests, a department which runs a deficit and has nowhere the potential of mining.

Now, let us not forget that we voted $10,875,000 to tourism, and I am not aware that tourism is a greater industry or of greater value necessarily to the province of Ontario than mining.

Please do not misunderstand. I am all for this province's annual investment in Lands and Forests and Tourism and Information, but surely mining, with its great future and value to our economy, warrants an equal financial stimulus.

You know, after all these years, and this department was established in 1919 when it was separated from Lands and Forests, we do not even know the extent of our mineral wealth. From what I am told me only know a fraction of what we actually have and this bothers me quite a bit. This department's efforts at aerial magnetometer surveying, while commendable, is far too shallow and too slow. It will take many years to completely survey our province at this turtle's pace and that is a description that was given by a prospector I know quite well, far more than it would if we channelled more funds into this high potential area. It will pay for itself many times over in future mining production and economic development of the north.

I understand, meanwhile, certain private enterprises already have this province surveyed from end to end and I hope the Minister will find that out for sure before the end of his term. What is more private industry has gone into the more in-depth surveying by use of the more advanced aerial electromagnetic surveying equipment, with which from a plane technicians can ascertain electro-conductors in the ground: nickel, iron, copper being electro-conductors, while our department of government is still trailing far behind with the old aerial magnetometer survey system which, of course, detects the magnetic properties in the terrain below, but is not anywhere near as revealing as the electro-magnetic equipment.

Now, this is why we need more money in this department. We have got to speed up the mapping and the field work, so that our prospectors will have more to go on.

Every mine in this province I am told and that seems reasonable, was discovered and staked by a prospector. It seems logical that if you give him the tools and the help, he will stake every piece of untested ground in the north. Then we will know where we are going and what our mining potential really is.

But it seems to me that the Minister sounded a note of warning in his speech today, and a note which worries me a bit. One would almost think that he will ask for less for this department next year so that the department will not be able to move ahead too quickly because he seems extremely wary and extremely cautious.

Today I would like to call on this government to put more money into mining, and I call on this Minister to use it to put more advanced and thorough surveying methods into practice, to increase drastically the surveying and the mapping programmes, because the faster and more effective the field work, the faster our mining production will climb and the sooner this entire province will benefit.

I said that there was not a mine in Ontario that we did not owe to the hard work, know-how and courage of the prospector. I meant it. Yet what acknowledgement does this government actually give to the importance of the prospector in this whole scheme?

I get the impression that The Department of Mines is moving away from the prospector and is completely concentrating now on the mining companies.

What incentives does current legislation offer the Ontario prospector?

I have looked through The Mining Act and the report of the department and I do not see very much incentive really for the prospector, for the little man who goes out and actually discovers this ore, who does all the footwork. Very little or none. One the contrary, some of our mining legislation is so outdated it acts as a deterrent to mineral discovery and as a discourager to prospecting, and I plan to mention some of the legislation which I feel to be outmoded.

First let us have a look at the prospecting activity in 1967. It is right here in the annual report on page 18. It says mining claims recorded in Ontario in 1967 were down 6,826 when compared with the year previous. Further, it states the number of mining licences issued and renewed last year was down by 1,433 for 1966.

Why? Ask the prospectors, as I have. This department in no way is encouraging new people into the mining field, and it is offering small incentive to those already in it. The select committee on mining in 1966 recognized this when in their recommendations in this report they included: on page 63 a whole section on classes and special training and aids for prospectors.

I understand the department is making some effort in this area, but I think that what it does for prospectors has got to be extended far beyond training.

If we are going to speed up the process we must go much further. When a prospector heads into the hinterland he has to stake himself. Some search for years without hitting paydirt. But when one does, this whole province profits. The average prospector does not make that much out of a find.

These men are working more for us than they are for themselves. They are making our natural resources pay off for us. Ore that has laid idle since the beginning of time begins working for us only after it is discovered, and the handful of men among us who have the ability to go out and look for it, and find it should be elevated to a much higher position of importance in this Ontario society.

I am making a pitch on behalf of the prospector. I know quite a few of them; they figure they are a forgotten race. It is fine and dandy to talk about mining taxation and so forth, Texas Gulf Sulphur and so forth, but what about the man who started it all away back when, and who continues to be the beginning of each one of these great discoveries?

Indeed, I think we should be paying them for their work. Rather they are having to pay this government so much just for the privilege of breaking their necks out there in the bush for this province's development.

Does the farmer, for example, have to pay to till the soil? He is subsidized and so he should be because he is developing a resource which is so important to us. But so is the prospector. And his gamble is not entirely unlike that of the farmer.

If the science of prospecting is slipping in this province, and last year's statistics as I have read them would seem to indicate that it is, then the time has come to consider staking the prospector.

But let us do it the right way. He is not asking for a $400 or $500 handout. He just wants some of the burdensome restrictions due to outmoded legislation lifted to make his job easier and more worthwhile.

The prospector and some geologists have told me that the whole psychology of prospecting in geology mining in this province is changing, that the legislation is not keeping pace with this new psychology.

Let us take, for example, the annual 90-claim limit. Right here we are telling him, do not work too hard. All you can stake is 90 claims a year and not more than 18 in a given year in each mining division, and after that you cannot even stake an additional number of claims sufficient to protect the 90 you have. Imagine if the rest of the professions were told they could only work so much in a year or make so much money; they would not stand for it. They would claim unfair legislation. But that is what we do to our prospectors.

A much more practical form of plan would be to leave the ceiling at 90 claims per year, but as the holder sells or transfers a certain number of that maximum he should be permitted to stake an additional number of claims in the amount of those transferred. If he sells ten of the 90 then he should be permitted to stake ten more up to the 90 maximum. Either this or throw out the ceiling altogether.

I think the select committee on mining in 1966 in its report was trying to indicate this when it says on page 29:

> At times of new base metal discoveries, where it is desirable to accumulate large acreage, the limit of 18 claims for licence is a handicap to the licence and the principals. At such times the services of experienced claims takers are frequently at a premium in a staking rush coupled with the use of inexperienced claim stakers causes unnecessary confusion.
> The object in permitting, and indeed, fostering claims taking is to promote the development of the mineral resources. The requirements therefore surrounding this activity should be kept simple and in tune with the times.

As long as this ceiling remains on staking we are limiting the whole process of mining discovery.

Needless to say, quickening the pace of our aerial geological surveys will also help our prospectors to do more, inasmuch as the results of these surveys will be placed in the prospectors' hands to guide him in his ground work, save him countless days of searching in barren areas, and getting the most out of all his efforts. These maps and other publications issued by the department are primarily for those interested in mining, and hardly anyone else, so I wonder why the department insists on charging so much for them.

I am told some of these publications or maps cost over $4 apiece. I might be wrong, but this is what the prospectors tell me.

As I said before, the prospector is rendering everyone in Ontario a service. The information contained in these maps, and so on, is vital to his work. We as members of this Legislature have all kinds of reports in front of us that I daresay are worth quite a few dollars. They are given to us to help us in our work, to serve the people, and I think we should do the same thing for the prospectors; supply this material to him free of charge because he is out there, he is working for us.

Sure, he is going to get something out of it himself, but I think we should supply these materials to him as an incentive and to help him to lessen his burden.

The cost of claim filing is another area of hardship for the prospector. Ten dollars a claim is too much. No prospector files one claim at a time. He will file at least 18. That is $180. And if he files a full 90-claim quota for the year, he will have $900 tied up.

Remember, he is gambling on those claims. When he files normally he only has surface samples of the ore there to go on. It takes expensive underground exploration to know whether he is really sitting on anything good.

Some of the prospectors I have spoken to say at least the first 18 claims should be allowed at $5 a claim. That is because these claims are usually staked in blocks of 18 and the lower rate would give the prospector a break on the first block and would be yet another incentive to his work.

This concession this year by the department would at least demonstrate its good will toward the men who work the land and bring up the big finds. It would be an excellent gesture for this new Minister. Certainly this department has got to do something to get prospecting back up to the level it was in 1966.

The question is, is the graph going to continue going down? It has been going up to '66. Now in '67 it has gone down a bit. Is it going to spring back up or is it going to continue going down?

Another beef the prospectors have with this department is the antiquated metal tag system. There are four stakes put down to mark each claim and a metal tag bearing the mining district initials, and the claim number must be attached to each stake at $1 per set. Now these tags can only be obtained at their respective district recording office. Result, we saw the big schmozzle at the Sault Ste. Marie recording office during the Blind River rush. Men had to wait in line for hours to buy tags, and at one point the office ran out of metal tags. Prospectors feel the day has come to issue an all Ontario tag, never mind the district. The number is all that is needed to identify the claim.

Then anyone heading into a remote area for claim staking need only stop at the closest Ontario mine recording office and buy his tags. A prospector travelling up north of Armstrong, for instance, could pick his tags up in Port Arthur, instead of having to fly to Sioux Lookout to the recording office there before going into the property. It is just a needless process that is antiquated, and it is one more delaying factor in the whole Ontario mining system, which I think we agree now should be speeded up.

We are certainly hopeful that this aggressive new Minister is going to have the courage to go after these things. They may be fine points but they are important points. When I spoke to the prospectors and geologists up my way, these are the things that they called to my attention, so they must be important points.

Mr. Chairman, we have two types of prospectors. Those who are contracted to the big mining concerns on one hand, and, on the other, the small independent prospector. There is really little comparison between the two. The first is completely secure—backed up by big money and all the aids of the progressive mining industry. The second is on his own with only his own finances and the assistance of, perhaps, a few associates in his efforts. He has only the results of the research and surveys of this department to back him up.

His is the greatest risk. His work is carried out at the greatest personal sacrifice. I think it is time this province enacted legislation which would differentiate between the two—they are not in the same category. All of the price tags this department places on its various services, I think, are readily met by the company prospector, but to the independent operator each cost is another burden, another hurdle. It seems by far easier to put them all in the same fishbowl and administer them together. There is little enough spirit of independence left in this country. Let us not flog one of the last vestiges of adventure and individualism we find in these independent prospectors until they too, are forced into the clutches of the big companies. This department should rather assist these strong-hearted men to stay on their own feet.

This year, the new Minister announced a very bold move on the part of his department. That was the increase in acreage tax on the annual rental for surface and mineral rights from 25 cents to $1 per acre. I join with many others in commending him and his department for this. It is the kind of move that will speed up use of our rich mineral resources. It should be a good inducement to those who have been sitting on some of Ontario's mineral wealth to develop it, or transfer it to some other party who will. This was one of the recommendations of the select committee on mining which the department did act on. Let us hope it will do some good. As long as this mineral wealth lies idle, my area is being deprived of further progress, revenue and development.

I notice another was the increase from $500,000 to $1 million for development of mining and access roads which we see in vote 1307 of the 1968 mining department estimates. This, too, is bound to speed up the process.

In summation, Mr. Chairman, I would say this department has no cause to sit back on its laurels. The annual production on mining in Ontario should be many billions of dollars. We have reached one billion. I call on the Cabinet and the government to put more money into mining. We need more and better aerial geological surveys to find out just how much mineral wealth Ontario has. We need incentives for prospectors to speed up the progress of discovery and staking of this mineral wealth, incentives through better legislation that I have brought up here today.

We need more mining access roads to permit the developers to get at the rich ore and bring it out. The report of the select committee on mining recommended greater subsidies in the field of mining research to hasten discovery of better and more economic ways to locate and recover the ore, and I fully subscribe to that.

And I understand that the federal department is, some time in the future, going to launch a geological satellite and I just wonder whether this Minister and this department are investigating the possibility of getting some cameras for the province of Ontario aboard that satellite so as to be fully included in that particular advanced project, because from what I understand, it is going to be a very forward move. It is going to pick up the mining industry considerably, at least we are hopeful that it will, and I hope this Ontario Department of Mines is completely involved in that project, as much as it possibly can be.

But mining, as important as it is to our economy must not be allowed to destroy what we already have—air, water and land—not to cause the discomfort of our people. And so I echo yet other recommendations of the same select committee, that constant vigilance be maintained to avoid pollution of atmospheric air; that all necessary steps be taken to restore and maintain the natural quality of water in the environment.

And I hope that during the course of the discussion of these estimates, the Minister will be able to put the members' minds at ease in this respect and that we will be able to find out just exactly what advanced methods this department is encouraging to protect our water and our air.

I would like to add to this that mining companies be compelled to restore the land as well where they have defaced it on a large scale as we see in some mining communities in this province—where the industries have piled up so much ore slag around in a community that it looks like a piece of the moon. This land belongs to Ontario residents. Mining companies are only leasing the mining rights. No one can give them the right to destroy our God-given air, water and landscale as we see in some mining communities in this province—where the industries have pany does this, it is giving with one hand to the betterment of the local community and taking away with the other.

The mining industry and the American mining investment dollars give much to our province. We remain indebted to them, but, at the same time, Ontario gives much to them, and this department, this government, this Legislature owes it to the people of Ontario to guarantee that it is the people of Ontario who are the major benefactors of their heritage—the wealth of rich ores that lie below our ground.

I think this is why the front bench in the Liberal party here has argued so intensely about this point, that these mining companies have to pay their own way and have to pay more than they have been paying. It is simply because we want to make sure that our people get just as much benefit as possible out of this natural resource.

Mr. Chairman, I wish this Minister and his department well. As I said at the opening, I am very much encouraged by his remarks, his attitude and his presence of mind in dealing with this very difficult subject.

I know he will do the best job he can. My suggestions are founded in conversations with prospectors and geologists and my own knowledge of the north. I hope he will take them very seriously and they will constitute some contribution to the betterment of mining and to the people of Ontario.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, in view of the lateness of the hour, do you still wish me to continue?

Mr. Chairman: I think perhaps the member could continue and maybe pick out a point at which he could break the remarks off properly. There is still almost five minutes.

Mr. Jackson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

The hon. Minister has stated he is new to the mining field and I can only say that I started later than he did and I do not have the advantage of a progressive department and the advisors that he has. However, we do have a rather efficient research department and I would like to say right now that anything I can put forward today is because of that research department and if I put it forward in the wrong way, it is not because they have not given me the proper information or because they have not given me enough, it is because I put it together wrong and I presented it wrong. So I will take the blame for that if necessary.

Mr. Chairman, I have the annual review for 1967 and I consider it one of the most artistic, colourful and interesting reports ever put out by any department of this government. I assure the Minister of Mines, sir, that I do not mean to be sarcastic in my remarks; I did find this report truly interesting and I compliment the department for their efforts. The report is reasonably complete, it is factual, and the facts are well presented. I do believe, at times, it misleads a little bit and I would like to point out one way that it has. It is right in the beginning of the book and it is the portrait of the Minister and I believe they used the black pencil a little bit too heavily. I hope the Minister will correct that.

However, Mr. Chairman, the entire text of this report is calculated to do one thing and one thing only, and that is to point out a rosy and optimistic picture of the mining industry in the province of Ontario. In this they have succeeded. To most of those who read the report it must appear that the coffers of the provincial Treasury are being swelled at an alarming rate, that the riches of our natural resources are providing the people of Ontario, and in particular northern Ontario, with a way of life that is second only to that of the Queen. It leaves the distinct impression on the reader that all is well on the northern front.

Again I go back to the review, and on page 25 we have a picture of a field of rye complete with a pretty girl—

Mr. MacDonald: That is the influence of the new Minister.

Mr. Jackson: And according to the caption, it says "This crop of rye was grown by International Nickel's agricultural department in an experimental plot in the tailings disposal area west of Copper Cliff. It represents further progress in the company's search to find a way of stabilizing the surface of the tailings area." And I have underlined the last part of the caption. It says, "This is an indication that mining operations need not be destructive to the general economy."

As I say, Mr. Chairman, it is complete with the picture of a pretty girl and I was going to go on to say "grown by the International Nickel Company" but I must point out that I think the northerners have something to do with the pretty girls and the company has something to do with growing the rye.

But, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out something about this picture. Did it not strike you as being just a wee bit odd that a nickel mining company should have a department devoted completely to research into agriculture? Does it not appear odd that the purpose stated in this report is to stabilize the tailings area when for a radius of 25 or more miles the ground has been stripped clean of vegetation by the pollution coming from the smelters? Does it not seem odd that absolutely no mention of the pollution fact is made in this booklet?

It being 12:30 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

The House resumed at 2:00 o'clock p.m.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF MINES
(Concluded)

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. D. Jackson (Timiskaming): Mr. Chairman, I would just like to go back and point out part of the caption on the picture on page 25 of the review. It says: "This is an indication that mining operations need not be destructive to the general economy".

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, that the facts stated on page 25 of this review are a deliberate attempt to mislead the readers of the review. I do not doubt their factuality, but they are an apparent ruse to lead us away from the more apparent fact that without any possible doubt, mining operations are destructive to the general economy of this province, as well as being an extreme health hazard to the residents of our mining communities.

Our lakes are filled in and lost with tailings from the many mills. The air we breathe and which nourishes our forests and crops is polluted by the air-borne waste from the smelters, pellet plants, rock crushers, and refineries. Our rivers, streams, and lakes are being polluted by human waste because in nearly all of the mining communities the sewage facilities are either inadequate or nonexistent partly because of a lack of planning, but mostly because of a low municipal income and the inability of the municipalities to find a reasonable tax source—coupled with this government's refusal to cope with the problems of the mining communities in a realistic manner.

On page 53—

Mr. Chairman: While the member is finding his place, if I may be permitted, this is a very important day upon which life begins for a very important person in this assembly. I am happy, and it is my privilege to announce, that today is the 40th anniversary of the birth of the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Nixon).

Some hon. members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jackson: On page 53, there is an excellent example of town planning, and I point to Elliot Lake. This is a poor example of economic planning, but nevertheless a well laid out town with all of the necessary facilities. Once again, Mr. Chairman, this picture misleads the reader. Unless he has actually visited such places as Timmins, Geraldton, Cobalt, and I could name many more of our northern towns, he will acquire the impression that mining communities are things of beauty and luxury, and that every one has the most modern of city conveniences, and far be that from the truth.

One has only to check with the OWRC to realize that the water supply and sanitary facilities in a great number of our mining municipalities are hopelessly overloaded; to realize also that a great number of communities lack a water supply, or proper sewage disposal, and in many cases, they lack both. I have a clipping from the Northern Daily News, which is the newspaper which circulates most widely in Timiskaming. It is headlined "Official Report for Timiskaming", and it is a statement by Dr. E. R. Harris, the medical officer for Timiskaming, and he says that:

> There are a great many very poor houses in the area, in fact, many of them are little more than shacks. More and more complaints are being received each year, about substandard housing, and 1967 was no exception. An urgent need for homes exists throughout the area, said Dr. Harris. Some of these dwellings would have been substandard 50 years ago, he said.

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister, through you, and every member of this assembly, is that not a sad state of affairs in a province that boasts that in 1967 it produced over $1 million in mineral wealth? The rich get richer and the poor get poorer. The one thing that has now changed, Mr. Chairman, is that the poor are now being joined by a large segment of our population who were formerly earning a living wage, but because of the rising costs of living have now joined the ranks of the poor.

I have been able to gain one outstanding fact from reading this review, and that is today that our mineral wealth is being removed at an unprecedented pace, and as the cover depicts, it is flying away from us. Less and less of the value of that mineral wealth is being returned to the people for a better way of living.

Mr. Chairman, our natural resources are being stripped from our land at an ever increasing pace. The profits and benefits which should be enjoyed by the Canadian people, and the people of Ontario, are being enjoyed by a select few. It is no secret that most of our mineral production is shipped directly to the United States in its raw form, or at best, in its concentrated form. By shipping raw ore to the United States, we provide that country with the industrial raw material that is vital to their growing economy, and with that, I, nor this party, have no real quarrel.

We have the raw materials and they have the industrial capacity to use the materials, but I do object to the shipment of raw material to any foreign country when that shipment is made at the expense of, or the restriction of, our domestic economy, or the growth of our domestic economy.

A smelter built at Timmins to process the ore from Ecstall Mining Company would provide directly and indirectly several thousand jobs for Canadians. A smelter at Timmins would also provide a new source of taxation to aid in reducing the tax burden on the mining municipalities, and the average householder. Instead, we allow the raw ore and concentrates to be exported to provide jobs in Europe and the United States. Neither the government of Canada, nor the legislative assembly of Ontario or any other province, has the slightest obligation to provide jobs for workers in other countries of the world. We, in this assembly, do have an obligation to provide jobs for Canadians and Ontarians.

This assembly has an obligation, and a very pressing one, I might say, to provide jobs for the workers of Ontario. We can fulfil that obligation, to a very great extent, by refusing to allow any of our natural resources to be removed from Ontario until they have been processed at least to the pre-manufacturing level. Mr. Chairman, this is the time, when we get to this point in our thinking, that they bring forth the old "bugaboo", the scare. The scaremongers are forever repeating the old wives' tale that if you restrict the foreign mining companies too much, they will not invest in Ontario. In my opinion, and that of many others, that is hogwash.

Until now, the terms under which our resources have been exploited, and I use exploited rather than developed, have been dictated to us. The companies have said to us, "If you let us have your ore, we will let you dig it up out of the ground. Of course you must agree that we will not be taxed like the rest of industry, or we will not do it."

We, like fools, permit it, and even go so far as to help them. The plain truth is, Mr. Chairman, that our natural resources are so badly needed and so hungrily sought after that we are in a position to insist on the terms of development. We can be masters in our own house if we have the guts to make a stand, and make it now.

We all know the plight of those nations that have become highly industrialized, even though they almost totally lack the raw materials within their own national borders. They are forced to compete on the world market for the materials. Mr. Chairman, these nations are turning in ever increasing numbers to Canada, and this vast storehouse, to supply their needs. It is as simple as that, Mr. Chairman. We have it, and they want it.

About ten years ago, between 1950 and 1952, the government of the United States of America became concerned over the increasing need for minerals in that country, and appointed a special committee to investigate the needs and possible supply of vital resources. The report of that committee is known as the Paley report and I would like to quote a few paragraphs from it before I go any further.

> The United States' appetite for materials is gargantuan and so far insatiable. At mid-century over 2.5 billion tons of material are being used up each year to keep the country going and to support its high standard of living. With a population of 151 million, each person uses up, on an average, some 18 tons a year. He uses about 14,000 pounds of fuel for heat and energy—warming houses and offices, running automobiles and diesel trains, firing factory boilers, and hundreds of other tasks.
> He uses 10,000 pounds of building materials—lumber, stone, sand and gravel etc. plus 800 pounds of metals winnowed from 5,000 pounds of ores. He eats nearly 1,600 pounds of food. This, together with cotton and other fibres for clothing, pulpwood for paper and other miscellaneous products, mounts up to 5,700 pounds of agricultural materials. In addition, he uses 800 pounds of non-metallics, such as lime, fertilizer and chemical raw materials.

And in the next paragraph, which is headlined "Rising Demand; Dwindling Resources":

> Such a level of consumption, climaxing 50 years of phenomenal economic progress, has levied a severe drain upon the United States' endowment of natural resources.

Mr. Chairman, I point out to you and to the Minister, through you, this report has pinpointed two things: the vastly growing demand in the United States and the rapidly dwindling supply, and this is not particular to the United States, it is every industrial nation in the world.

A little farther on the report states:

> As a nation we have long lived and prospered mightily without serious concern for our material resources. Our sensational progress in production and consumption has been attributable not only to the freedom of our institutions and the enterprise of our people, but also to the spendthrift use of our rich heritage of natural resources.

The spendthrift use of our rich heritage of natural resources exactly described the attitude that the government of Ontario has shown.

But point of fact, Mr. Chairman, is the Americans have not changed. They are still consuming far more raw material than they can produce from their own resources, and they compensate for that lack of resources by exploiting every under-developed and backward country of the world.

To point out what I say, they have not changed their views. I am not quite sure which paper this one comes from, but it is dated January 16, 1968, and it points out—it is referring back to the Paley report:

> As a result, almost all of their projections have turned out to be too low. Within the past year or two, we have exceeded the commission's projections of consumption in 1975 for practically every major metal, nearly 10 years ahead of the expectations. It is foolish to think that we can continue to meet the escalating demand of our resources without much better and more comprehensive information than we now have.

It goes on to say:

> The emerging nations that have sizeable mineral resources are going to insist more and more on controlling the destiny of those resources. Such control cannot be confined to such relatively simple measures as the levying of taxes. The trend now is to further include working conditions, a role in pricing and sales, and often the participation by government in corporate structure and investment decisions.

Mr. Chairman, that large friendly nation to the south of our border has very neatly pigeonholed Canada as one of the underdeveloped and backward nations to be exploited.

On page 6 of the report, the committee goes on to say, and I will just give it to you very briefly:

> Our national economy had not merely grown up to its resource base, but in many important respects had outgrown it. We had completed our slow transition from a raw materials surplus nation to a raw materials deficit nation.
> We began as an "underdeveloped" nation with rich resources and little industry. The inevitable has now come to pass. Whereas for many decades the United States economy produced more raw materials than it consumed, and thus had a net outflow of materials to the rest of the world, we seem now to have settled solidly into the position of consuming more materials than we produce.
> The commission believes that the United States will find it increasingly worthwhile to turn abroad for more supplies of many basic materials, particularly minerals.

Through you, Mr. Chairman, I ask the Minister: Is this what is to happen to Ontario in the future? Are we going to allow our resources to be so depleted that any possible expansion of our industries will be severely curtailed because we lack then, what we now possess in such large quantities, without realizing any of the benefits that should accompany the development of our resources.

I would like to go on a little further in the report and it states:

> The industrial nations of western Europe and Japan on the one hand, have strong industrial capacity—

And I might point out that this was 1950, > —and labour skills, but severe resource limitations. They can prosper in the future only on the basis of heavy imports.

Mr. Chairman, the whole report goes on this way and I am going to add a few more, but I think that anything I add after this point is just so much chaff in the wind. I think the point is proven.

However, I do have one or two little quotes to make.

> To meet or anticipate our needs from the supply side—

And I am quoting from the report,

> —we stockpile, and we seek reserve materials capacity in safe areas, domestic and foreign.

I think that is a very important paragraph, because if we consider reserve materials capacity in safe areas, which area could be safer than Canada? We are here; we are close; we have reasonable political stability; we have a ready work force; we have a relatively slow growing economy so we are not going to need our own ores and minerals in the very near future.

I might point out that our economy is growing very slowly because it depends on foreign ownership and capital control. So that we ourselves will not require our resources domestically in the foreseeable future and—very, very important—I think we are obviously stupid enough to give our resources away.

With the added incentive in Ontario, having a provincially owned railroad that will haul unprocessed ore at a preferential rate, Canada, in my opinion, is the safest of safe areas.

Mr. Chairman, over and over again, it is repeated throughout the report the need for the United States to secure foreign source of mineral supply. Canada is the needed source and Ontario possesses much of the mineral wealth of Canada.

So far, Mr. Chairman, I have attempted to accentuate three basic points.

First, the fact that mining does in fact adversely affect the general economy in Canada or in Ontario, under certain conditions and in some situations.

Second, that the province of Ontario and the people of this province are not receiving a reasonable and equitable return for the exploitation of our natural resources.

Third, that our natural resources are in great demand throughout the world and we should put an end to the practice of allowing the corporate giants of the mining industry to dictate our mining policy.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): I have been saying that for years. I am glad the NDP have finally adopted it.

Mr. Jackson: You will have your chance to speak for yourself in a few minutes.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): It is Ottawa that is giving it away.

Mr. Jackson: At this point, Mr. Chairman, I plead for a drastic change in the government's policy towards the north, and towards mining; and through Ontario's active intervention in the policy of the federal government as well.

For too long our Department of Mines has been a sluggish regulatory body, and I believe the Minister has admitted this to himself; content to sit back and take credit while our mineral resources are being exploited and plundered. It has never shown any small concern to build something that would be permanent or good for the people of the areas involved.

I plead now with the Minister for a new role for The Department of Mines, a role of positive leadership, a role which is supported by government policy to encourage vast, new social and economic development in northern Ontario.

Development, as I use the term, is more than jobs, or capital investment, or stock and bonds, or promoters.

Development, to me is the establishment of a permanent economic basis, on which communities can grow and flourish. It is the constant challenge of new exploration and diversification. It is the commonsense application of planning for a sound economy which can meet the stresses of changing world demand, and which recognizes that processing and manufacturing must accompany raw ore extraction if economic viability is to follow. It is building a social environment which will bring permanent benefit to the people of the area, and to the citizens of Ontario, and to the citizens of Canada.

To me, therefore, Mr. Chairman, development involves a factor of democratic, public control. Surely the lesson of the past is that private economic enterprise in itself cannot, or will not, ensure lasting northern well being.

That was because the old route to development cut all the corners and placed the people last in its calculus of profit. It was a process accompanied by tax concessions which penalizes the municipalities involved, and I believe this is recognized by all three parties. By giving virtual carte blanche for the businessmen, in too many cases it meant the industries would leave when the cream had been skimmed. The pattern of shanty town to boom town to company town to ghost town has been repeated to often in the north.

I think it is time we abandoned the old frontier mentality of get in; get rich; get out. It is time, instead, to institgate a new frontier approach to development in the fullest sense of the word.

I propose, and this party proposes through me, that incentives to private enterprise no longer take the form of tax concessions, or special depletion allowances, whether federal or provincial.

Instead, this government should establish a provincial Crown corporation to undertake development work and to co-operate in that endeavour with private business to provide such open financial assistance as may be warranted and required, in the forms of grants, to undertake enterprises of its own.

I propose that this assistance should be reflected in some form of proportionate equity holding by the Crown corporation in the businesses involved, on the same basis as any other shareholder. In such a manner we can ensure the public interest, as voiced by the corporation, will be an acknowledged factor in all future decisions made by the companies.

I propose that the initial capitalization of this Crown corporation be voted openly by this Legislature, and that further funds, if and when required, be voted on an annual basis as part of the estimates. In this way, we in the Legislature, who are the democratically-elected representatives of the people, will know exactly how much is being spent each year to bolster economic development in the north.

I propose that the Crown corporation's role not be limited to mining, though obviously it will have a crucial role to play in that industry. It should be involved in all new resources enterprises in the north requiring public assistance. Its operations should also include exploration and development on its own, wherever private business is not prepared to do the necessary job.

I have no regrets about proposing that we abandon the old tax concession route that has been used to stimulate private enterprise. It is no secret to me, or to anyone who has looked at the north, that the mining municipalities have long suffered financially from this approach. However, it has proved difficult, if not impossible, for members of the Legislature to calculate, on behalf of the electorate who put up the money, just how much public funds are being diverted in this way. Thirdly, as a result of the Smith committee report, we are now trying to modernize and reform our provincial tax system on a fairer basis. It would be a backward step to perpetuate, in a new northern development programme, one of the most indefensible aspects of the old tax system.

I would like to propose further that the Prime Minister (Mr. Robarts) immediately set up a Cabinet task force on northern development, involving all the northern Ministers, perhaps chaired by the Minister of Mines. Let that task force begin the long-overdue job of designing a total blueprint for long term northern development, which would be presented to the Legislature, perhaps in the form of a white paper, sometime during the next session.

It would be a good idea if the task force were to enlist the participation and co-operation of all members from northern Ontario, regardless of their party affiliation. I, for one, and I speak for all the northern members in this caucus, would be glad to work on any project that would enhance the wellbeing of the region I live in and represent.

I make no apologies for having spoken with some heat so far, as a member from northern Ontario, but it would be a serious mistake if you assume my concern for developing the northern two-thirds of our province stems only from the fact that I live there, because it does not. I see this programme as having enormous benefit for the whole province, in recognizing the need for a few frontier policy for the north. Personally, I am convinced that what is good for the north is good for the rest of Ontario. I am not so sure the reverse is true.

The continued prosperity of the mining industry is a key to northern development, and northern development is a key to the overall growth of our province. It will be harmful to our total economic and social balance if all new growth takes place around the golden horseshoe.

We are building for ourselves, here in the southern heartland of Ontario, not only an exciting economy, but a frightening complex of problems which will cost us plenty, in human and financial terms, to bring under control, in the future.

I refer to problems of inadequate housing, of urban redevelopment, of large scale pollution, of inadequate recreation, or insufficient transportation.

To the extent it is within our power to do so, it makes sense not to accelerate these problems, but rather to spread our future growth more evenly so that all citizens of Ontario can have, as the government says, "a place to stand and a place to grow." So to me, it makes sense, from an overall Ontario point view, to attach the highest priority to developing the great land mass which lies north of the French River.

So I speak not only as a northern Ontario member protesting our unequal share in Ontario life, though I do that, too. I speak as an Ontarian, appealing to all members of this Legislature of Ontario, for all of us. Let us get the north moving and there is no better place to start than the mining industry.

I would just like to comment a little farther on some of the remarks that the Minister said.

The Minister has said that we need changes in our taxation system. We, for one group, not only agree with him, we heartily insist that he does something. It is my personal opinion and the consensus of this party that we feel that this Minister can do it; that he can play a great role in the leadership that is needed to develop the northern part of this province.

We further feel that he cannot do it alone; that if he is going to do a good job of it, to do an efficient job, he is going to have to take into consideration all the other departments that are concerned with northern development and growth, and I am talking about Municipal Affairs and the Ontario water resources commission and Ontario Hydro, Lands and Forests and The Department of Transport. I would point out to him something that my colleague from Wentworth (Mr. Deans) said—that the Transport Minister (Mr. Haskett) should not just take into consideration that which has always been in his department—he should also consider the total transportation needs of Ontario.

And when he does that in co-operation with the Minister of Mines, (Mr. A. F. Lawrence) it will improve and speed up the development of the north. When he takes into consideration the problems of all of our northern municipalities, and again, in co-operation with the Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. McKeough) they work all of these problems out, they will not only realize that we have to have a fair tax basis, but we need it now, not five or six years in the future. I, for one, tell the Minister here, through you, Mr. Chairman, that if this party can help him do that, we are quite willing. Just ask us.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister wish to make any comment in reply?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): Such a degree of unanimity Mr. Chairman; I feel like we are all together, hand-in-hand, going up the hill to the bright glory land. Only perhaps when darkness falls I will find I am standing on the precipice alone—I am not too sure. In any event, in respect of some of the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Knight) a lot of which I can agree with, I think, however, we can deal with some of the things as we get into the individual votes if that is acceptable to him.

There was one point that stopped me cold and I am sorry the Provincial Treasurer (Mr. MacNaughton) is not in the House at the moment. I do not want this to sound arrogant at all but I just hope that the Provincial Treasurer did not get the same impression that you did, that I feel that there should be a reduction in the expenditures in relation to The Department of Mines next year. That is all, because I can assure you that those are not my intentions in any event.

In respect of the remarks of the hon. member for Timiskaming, and I do not mean this in any personal way at all, but because he indicated that this was a product of his research department, I really perhaps think that the NDP should start getting a new research department because some of the facts that he included in his remarks are quite wrong of course.

The question of pollution, which he indicated was not even mentioned in the annual review, of course is. It is quite a full report. I had better revise that—there is a fairly full report from the sulphur fumes arbitrator. If this is not pollution, I do not know what is.

This is the main field of endeavour in which this department, in any event, deals with pollution. The remarks relating to water pollution and air pollution, of course, should be directed to other agencies of the government which do not fall under the jurisdiction of The Department of Mines.

One very brief comment he had, and I do not quite understand it. He said there was poor economic planning in respect of Elliot Lake. I do not know why. Elliot Lake is going full blast at the moment in all sorts of ways, and is certainly a vibrant living, busy community once again.

He did leave one impression that worries me. I think it is fairly commonly held, and

I must admit that before I got injected into this job, it was an impression that I had in the back of my mind, as well, and that was that the mining industry, as such, is not taxed as much as the rest of industry. In other words, the comparable taxation rates were somehow or other less for the mining industry than they are for, say, the manufacturing segment of the economy or others. Of course, this is totally false.

Mr. Sopha: No, it is totally true.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The mines tax, for instance, is an extra tax over and above the other ones. For instance, I have got a comparison here and I told that these are average figures—the comparison of Ontario tax paid by a non-mining company and a mining company. I will not go through the details, I can give it to the hon. members if they are interested.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Based on $100 of income for instance, that is profit before taxes, a non-mining company would pay in the way of provincial taxes—this is what I am talking about, this is the only jurisdiction we have here—$16.50. For a mining company, and I am told these are average figures, it would be $20.80. Now, I am not saying that even this is enough.

As a matter of fact, the point I am trying to get across, or did try to get across a little earlier, was for a $1.1 billion industry. The return for the type of asset, a non-recurring, wasting asset, this is a special industry and it has got to be treated specially, I think, in regard to the tax revenue. There is no question of that in my mind.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Mr. Chairman, would the Minister give us a breakdown of the $16 and the $20 figures?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Let me just finish this point now. But for a $1.1 billion industry to produce, by way of special taxes, only something over $16 million last year in the way of tax revenue by way of these special taxes, is one that is causing grave concern to the government at a time when we are looking for a more diversified and broader tax base.

This comparison of Ontario tax paid by a non-mining company and a mining company is based, as I say, on $100 of income. Profit before taxes in both cases are the same, $100 in both cases, a non-mining and a mining company. Municipal tax paid by the non-mining company has been estimated to be $5. Nothing for the mining. Tax collected by the province to match the above payment via the mining tax legislation, of course in the non-mining company would be nil; for the mining company it would be $10.

The profit, subject to provincial corporation tax, in respect of a non-mining company would be $95. In respect of a mining company it would be $90. The provincial corporation tax which they both pay, of course, 12 per cent, is $11.40 in respect of the non-mining company and $10.80 in respect of the mining company. The total provincial taxes, as I say, therefore, based on $100 of income, for the non-mining company would be $16.50; for a mining company it would be $20.80.

So, I am not saying to you that this is an exorbitant amount, but I am trying to knock down the popularly-held impression that the mining company pays less than an ordinary company, a company in other segment of the economy.

But there was one other matter that I wanted to get into. I have forgotten what it was but I am sure we will get into it as we go through the items.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, you were just going to call the first vote I think it was.

On vote 1301:

Mr. Chairman: The main office vote. The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: The painful experience of recent days prompts me to ask before I start to speak: Where would the Minister consider it suitable to deal with the matter of that staking rush at Elliot Lake?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The staking rush. I think that should come under the mining and lands branch.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301, the member for Cochrane South.

Mr. W. Ferrier (Cochrane South): Mr. Chairman, I have a number of things I would like to bring up. The first thing I would like say is that I would like to compliment the Minister for his public statement that they have now taken a stand. At least the copper smelter should be built at Timmins if all things prove out; that if the study that Parsons are going to do for Texas Gulf if this proves economically feasible, and so on, that the smelter will be there.

I might say to the hon. Minister, through you, Mr. Chairman, that if this government had taken this stand at least a year ago, I do not suppose I would be making this speech today, I would not be here. I think that the expression of one section of the province in bringing pressure to bear in many ways to convince this government need for a smelter in that particular area is beginning to bear fruit. And while the Minister has not promised that this is going to take place, at least he has said that he will do everything possible to persuade the company that it should be there.

I would like to commend the Minister for this stand. I would like to assure him that we will keep raising this matter. I would like to ask him, has the government the technical personnel to review the decision of Parsons should it not prove altogether favourable to a Timmins location? Would you be in a position to review the research and perhaps bring more pressure to bear if it was felt to be warranted?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, I think we have.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301. The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. E. W. Martel (Sudbury East): Mr. Chairman, just one point, and I do not know if I am bringing it up at the appropriate place under the main office. It deals with the accommodation of the men working for Falconbridge. The Minister has advised me that he had been advised that this was going to be looked into and handled.

I checked on it this week to see if any move had been made by Falconbridge to clean up its accommodation for the men at Levack, and to this point nothing has been done respecting this matter. I am wondering if the Minister has any further information as to when we can expect this matter to be dealt with.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I have been informed, both verbally and in writing, by the company officials that this matter had been cleaned up. I thought this had been communicated to the hon. member. If it has not it is my fault. I believed that it had been cleaned up. I will review this matter and take it up with the hon. member and certainly let him have what information we have. I thought that had already been sent to him.

This is a matter that really I do not know if it falls under the jurisdiction of The Department of Mines, but certainly we are as concerned as the hon. member is.

Mr. Martel: I must compliment the Minister of Mines because I took this to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Bales) and he just washed his hands of it. The food has been improved. Apparently the food is much better in the area, now but for the actual sleeping accommodations, nothing apparently has been done. This was the information I received as late as last weekend.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301—the member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Chairman, with regard to the Minister's remarks about the location of the smelter to process copper and zinc ores from the Ecstall Mining Company operation, certainly the slight glimmer of hope that the Minister has given us with regard to his activities in trying to persuade this company to locate in Ontario is some small consolation, but to me it is only a little tiny step. I think that the north, our resources, both human and natural, have been exploited far too long and this present government, in its infancy, away back in 1944 or 1945, imposed regulations on the pulp and paper companies and said that henceforth you will export no more pulpwood in its raw form across the border. As a result of it we saw the birth of several pulp and paper communities in northern Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: This is a speech of mine that I made earlier in the session.

Mr. Stokes: This is a fact that as a result of government intervention we did see the birth of several communities in the north based on the forest products industry. I suggest to this Minister, Mr. Chairman, that he has a responsibility to the people of northern Ontario and, indeed, the people of all Ontario, to insist that these companies locate in areas where they are going to serve the best interests of the people of Ontario. I think it is common knowledge that for every one person who is engaged in the extractive industry, that is, extracting the ore at the site, it represents four or five jobs in processing the raw material elsewhere.

Mr. Sopha: It would probably be about 10 or 11 jobs altogether.

Mr. Stokes: It is quite possible, I have given a conservative estimate, but it would be at least four or five. Now, instead of subsidizing mining municipalities through grant in lieu of municipal taxes, I think if they were forced to build and locate smelters in underdeveloped areas that have never been able to attract other types of industry, through EIO or ODC loans, or convince the federal government that it should be a designated area for the same reasons, I think that it behooves this government to insist that mining companies locate smelters and related industries in areas such as this. This department has a wonderful opportunity to do that with regard to the ores from Ecstall Mining Corporation.

Now, I would just like to make one other brief observation. As the Minister well knows, there is a study being carried out, jointly with the federal and provincial governments in northwestern Ontario, and I am sure the Minister is well aware of it. He knows the terms of reference, it is a very modest sum that is being spent on it, some $140,000, to cover an area of such geographic proportions as northwestern Ontario. He made no reference in his opening remarks at all to this study as it pertains, or at least, should pertain, to his department. Now, I have drawn to his attention, and other of his Cabinet colleagues, since I have been in this House, the need to assure mining municipalities that their life will be perpetuated to any extent that is possible through actions of this government. One that comes to mind is the area of Geraldton, where their economy, to a very large extent, is dependent upon the gold mining industry and with the dwindling reserves of ore of MacLeod-Mosher. It is only going to be a very few months until we are going to see quite a decline in the population and the job opportunities in Geraldton unless direct action is taken by this Minister and his department to assure that this will not happen.

In connection with this study that is continuing at the present time, I think this Minister has a responsibility to do a detailed inventory, within an economic distance of these existing mining municipalities, to exploit the potential that is there, to assess what potential is there, and to do everything possible, and, if necessary, provide incentives for mining people and mining companies to go into the area and exploit the potential right within the area, rather than letting an existing town die with all the services which have been put there—millions of dollars in schools and roads and hospitals, equity in homes, and the equity the businessmen have in their small businesses.

I think it behooves this Minister and this department to make a very detailed and comprehensive survey and study of the potential right within that area, because we have had cases where providence has allowed the ore to run out and towns have died. Now, some few years later, we find ourselves duplicating the same thing a few miles away and to me it is utter nonsense. If it is reasonable at all to do as I have suggested —and I think it is reasonable—I think this Minister has a responsibility to these people.

Now, in connection with that, I think this Minister has never mentioned that in the event that private enterprise does not see fit to go in and spend sufficient money in this, the government has a responsibility to do so. It is my understanding that this kind of activity is working reasonably well in the province of Quebec where they have set up a Crown-owned corporation and in co-operation with private enterprise. They are doing a great amount of exploration and development work, in co-operation with private enterprise—I understand they have something like 22 agreements signed—I do not know to what extent they have been able to get mines into production, but at least it is a start. And I would suggest to the Minister, or at least I would like his comments on what he thinks of such a proposition and if he does not agree with it, I would like to know why?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, it is not that we agree or disagree, it is just that so far we have not seen anything that would convince us that this is the answer to the problem.

Mr. Stokes: Does the Minister not think he has a responsibility to existing mining municipalities?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, in that respect —perhaps this could be discussed under the geological branch—we are undertaking, of course, a rather exciting concept of inventory of known facts relating to the whole of the north. We are concentrating a few pilot studies in certain areas, but, as I say, this can be discussed more readily I think under the geological branch rather than under head office.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Chairman, last year in this vote there was $25,000 set aside for research into silicosis in the mining industry. Those of us who live in mining towns know how miners, who have worked in the dust-exposure aspects of mining, have been crippled by various kinds of chest diseases which sometimes develop into silicosis, and I would like to know if this study is going to continue or if it has been completed. If it has been completed and if the facts have been published, what does the department propose to do with the information that may have been gathered?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: One of the disappointments I gather last year within the department was that this study could not take place because of the unavailability, at that time, of the specialists—the very experienced specialists—they thought were going to head it up, so that the money was not spent last year. It is included in the head office vote again this year and our hope is that the gentlemen will be able to do the study this year.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, in the only public accounts that we have, which is for the year previous to that, is that the sulphur dioxide special investigation which, for the year 1966-1967, some $25,000 is shown as having been spent of which about half has been recovered from International Nickel and Falconbridge Mines?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: This is not the sulphur dioxide committee at all, this is a special study into the question of the occurrence of silicosis; this is something entirely different and it was not spent last year.

Mr. J. Renwick: The sulphur dioxide investigation: was that completed and its results ever published?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: This is being taken in hand by the environmental health section of The Department of Health. We have had discussions in the House this year during the question period relating to this. It is continuing.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I am going to be very brief. The Minister has accepted responsibility for sulphur dioxide pollution and—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No he has not!

Mr. Jackson: Well, his department has the responsibility. He disclaims any responsibility for water and land pollution and my claim is that because this pollution is caused by a company or an industry that is under his jurisdiction that he should take a much greater hand in directing the people who have something to do with this type of pollution; that although his department is not responsible for it, is no reason and no excuse for him to say that it is "not in my department and we will forget about it"; that because he is the Minister responsible for the cause of the pollution, or should I say for the industry that causes the pollution, that he should be knocking on the door of the responsible Ministers and saying "let us get together and see what we can do about it".

It is too long. We are sent to The Department of Health and the Minister there says "I am only responsible for one type of pollution." You get into the Ontario water resources and they say "we are only responsible for one type of pollution." It is about time that this Cabinet, if it is a Cabinet, got together and deceided that not one Minister is responsible for anything, the government is responsible for it. Let us have a little bit of co-operation and a little action.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I can understand the hon. member's frustrations sometimes in trying to pinpoint these things. I have had them myself on occasion in a like position in which he now sits. For instance the hon. member must be frustrated right now in respect to this matter because if it is going to be discussed at all within this department, it really should come under vote 1305. It has not been ruled out of order so we will talk about it now.

I think one of the matters that has concerned a great many people in and outside of this House in the last few years has been the divided responsibility in respect of pollution problems within the provincial government. I say that quite bluntly and frankly to the hon. member and I think it was certainly a step in the right direction—a very great step—that the responsibility for air pollution, not just health matters, but in relation to aesthetics and foliage and everything else has now been concentrated under the jurisdicition of the Minister of Health. These are the people who can, and I am sure will, do a good job in it.

Certainly as a member of the government I am not attempting to shirk any responsibility in this field whatsoever, but I do say that with the exception of the sulphur fumes arbitrator, which is rather a special problem, this is the only jurisdiction this particular department has in this matter. I have never yet heard the Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), and I am sure he will agree with this, disclaim any responsibility since the passage of the new legislation for the sulphur fumes. He is responsible, or rather his department is responsible.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301—the member for Port Arthur.

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Are we discussing vote 1301 or 1305?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: As I indicated this is a matter that should be discussed under vote 1305 but—

Mr. Chairman: When we we get to vote 1305 we can have full discussion on it instead of wandering all over the place.

Mr. Knight: In that case, Mr. Chairman, I will go on to something else.

Mr. Chairman: On vote 1301?

Mr. Knight: Yes. I do not know whether this would be the right place to ask it or not but I wonder if the hon. Minister could give the House the revenue for last year for The Department of Mines—the net revenue.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The net revenue? You mean the mining tax alone?

Mr. Knight: No, just the overall revenue of the department for the operating year.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It is $16.7 million.

Mr. Knight: A total of $16 million is the revenue of this department, and we are putting back less than $5 million to continue and to enhance the efforts of this department and we find out that—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The total is $4.8 million.

Mr. Knight: Yes, $4.8 million. Is there any explanation for this? Has the Cabinet actually felt that there was not need for any further investment in this particular department? Could the Minister tell us what has been the philosophy behind this department? Mining is so important not only to the whole province but especially to the part that I come from. Could the Minister tell us what the philosophy of the Cabinet has been on this?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well fiirst I am sure must be the fact—and I think it is a fact—that mining revenues do not belong to the north by any stretch of the imagination. This is something that irks me whenever I get up in the north and wherever I go people say "We are neglected—look at this, there is only $8.5 million being returned on a mining municipality grant when your revenue from the mining tax alone is $16 million"—that is a load of horse feathers in my book.

The assets, the mineral assets especially, in this province, belong to the people of the province as a whole. They do not belong to the north, they do not belong to the south, and nothing gets my dander up faster than to have somebody indicate those sentiments at all. Good heavens we have not yet reached the stage of separatism, I hope, where we are going to be breaking things down on a regional concept—the south could not exist without the north and vice versa.

Mr. Knight: I am glad you said that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I think that is the main philosophy behind it. Now in respect of the actual expenditures of the department obviously there are a great many expenditures in other departments which directly affect the mining industry and the economy of the north—highways, health—you just heard about that—pollution problems, transportation in all sorts of ways, communications.

This is an on-going collective thing; this is the aspect of it, I think, that is often overlooked by those in the mining industry when they say: "Good heavens, for your Department of Mines you are only spending $4.8 million and you are getting $16.7 million out of it."

There are all sorts of other expenditures within government which directly relate to the health and the wealth of the mining industry. This is one reason why I think the idea is becoming quite current—in government circles in any event—that the mining industry is not even paying its way at the moment as far as revenues are concerned.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. Minister quite misunderstood my comment. I did not mean to suggest that because $16 million came out of the mining in the north that $16 million should go right straight back into the north. I am not a fool after all.

I was merely suggesting that an area of endeavour which could produce so much for this province and yet receive in return to enhance its development so little—a quarter of what it is producing—it seems to me that there is a horrible imbalance here and there is a strong argument right there to put more money into mining.

We know that by way of production we passed the billion dollar mark last year, and I would like to ask the hon. Minister: Does this department know in dollars what quantity of ore—discovered ore, but as yet undeveloped—exists in this province? Does the department, for example, keep records? Does it check with mining companies to find out how much they are developing, how much they are not; what the ore body is and what exists?

And would the Minister be prepared to tell us that while perhaps production is at the billion dollar mark, the potential, because of the ore bodies already discovered that we know of, would be so much? Can you give us a figure?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No. It is just impossible.

First of all, reserves within certain mines, known reserves, change from day to day. They go up and down like a toilet seat as far as the value of these things is concerned on the market price. It is just impossible, even with those of which the value is known.

Second, there are some types of mining that live a hand to mouth existence. Silver mining is completely different from any other type as far is this is concerned. They will go along for 200 feet in order to exploit a little vein that thick and they do not know whether they are going to hit it when they get their either.

When they do hit it, it is worthwhile obviously or they would be out of business. These things vary from geographic area to area and from company to company; and from mine to mine in the type of metal ore that they seek, and we just simply have no way of knowing whether published figures are reliable or not.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I understand how mining and investment goes, and so on, but is the Minister suggesting that the prospectuses that the mining companies put out are not accurate and are subject to change every day? Is there no way that the department can keep a general knowledge or idea of what our storehouse is—of what we have? I mean, how can we undertake to get that ore body into production? It belongs to the people, not the mining company, they have the rights to it only.

This is an area where more money should be spent. Maybe these mining inspectors, besides inspecting mines, could spend some time finding out exactly what exists in each individual area. I think that we are operating blindly here. It is just like the stock market, it is a gamble, up and down, which way it is going to go. But this is such a vital area to the province that some effort should be made to find these things out.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, sir, the opinions expressed by qualified professional people in a prospectus are exactly that—a question of opinion—and they vary with the individual. We cannot rely on that, quite frankly, any more than I could rely on my department officials to come up with a satisfactory answer. They do not know either, until the stuff is taken out of the ground, what there is in a number of cases.

Mr. Knight: Could your department not issue a prospectus to the people of Ontario? Could it not compile this information based on these prospectus reports so that we have some idea of what we have got, and where we are going? That is what I am talking about. Surely in the age of the computer there are other difficult statistics that are available. I am just talking about knowing where we are going and what we have got. I am sure that these mining companies must know a lot of things that your department does not, and I think that the department should know more about their business than it appears to know.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Now that I realize what it is that the hon. member is saying in the main point of his remarks, I should say that we are doing this. We are bringing out a comprehensive mineral resources inventory, but that comes under the geological branch.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Chairman, I had two or three issues that are as closely related to policy as anything else, and therefore I think that the first vote is an appropriate place to raise them. The first two of them are related to the thing that the Minister has just been discussing with the hon. member for Port Arthur—and that is in my view all government departments cannot be revenue departments. Obviously some of them are not. You cannot expect to raise a revenue, and you have just got to spend to meet human needs.

Mineral resources should be a revenue capacity. Clearly I think that mines is one area where we are taking in much more than we are spending. However, having said that, I am interested in the Minister's hesitation in moving into certain areas which might represent public expenditures, but which in our view, would result in an accelerated development of the industry.

Let me pick on a new point that he injected into the discussion in the course of his introductory remarks. He said, for example, in regard to the zinc smelter that this would not likely go in Timmins, and that there are many zinc mines in the province of Ontario which have really been struggling along because they did not have a smelting capacity within the province. I judge from his comments that what he was saying, in effect, was that if a zinc smelter was built, it might be available to all existing zinc mines in the province of Ontario. If that is the case, I am a little curious why the government—in the interest of the industry as a whole, sometime in the past, and having considered it a valid expenditure of public money, if no private money was willing to go in—did not build a zinc smelter.

I think that if one were to explore thoroughly, one would find that many government departments had often taken an overall look at the picture and come to the conclusion that here is where they should move in to provide a co-ordinating role. Conceivably there would be expenditure of money to provide something for processing or grain elevators. For example, to bring wheat down from the west to make it available to farmers here, when it has to be held before the farmers will buy it.

It seems to me that this is a legitimate role for the public moving into and assisting in the development of the whole industry. Now, if a private industry is going to do the job here, and build a zinc smelter that would be available to all the other mines who are producing a small quantity of zinc, then good. But if they are not, why will the government not consider it?

Let me go on to a related matter in the same category. We have been arguing for the last two or three years that in the field of exploration, processing and development of mines there is a legitimate role for a mixed economy, along the lines of the kind of thing that happened in the province of Quebec. Some experts in the mining industry—and I have quoted them before in the House—have drawn attention to the fact that there has been a serious drop-off in mining exploration. There is a tendency in mining companies to underpin the economic stability of the country by a diversification of their assets into many other industries that have no relationship to mining. The net result of this is that a lot of money that was extracted from mining is channelled into bread companies, cement companies, Bahama casinos, and so on.

Now, if the mining industry is not willing to do the necesary exploration work, what they decided in Quebec was that, in the interest of the industry as a whole, the government should step in and do the necessary exploration work. If private enterprise, would not co-operate, then they would step in and do it themselves. Certainly when you move into the development area, it can be done on a partnership basis as is being done by the Crown corporation in the province of Ontario. I would like to raise that with the Minister, and get his comment, because the hon. member for Port Arthur, who unfortunately has left us already, said that there were certain areas where an expanded budget could be contemplated.

He named, for example, more mapping and surveying, and greater assistance to prospectors, and access roads—but I would add to that list. It is not because I want to take from the revenues of the department which are needed elsewhere, but because they ultimately will produce even more through a bigger industry, whether or not you should not go into smelting, if it means that it is taking a part of the production from a great many mines, and no one mining corporation is willing to do the job, or to go into exploration or beyond that perhaps even, contemplate—if it is not too shattering a thought to the Tory members—the idea of a partnership in developing.

Well, that is one little package that I wanted to raise with the Minister. I have another point, but perhaps he would like to deal with that before I go on.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am bound in my political dogma, just as the hon. member is, and therefore I asked the same question of my officials very early in the game when I first got in there. The information that I have received is simply that there was not enough known potential zinc ore in the province that would make the thing – not economically feasible—but even possible. It is now a factor that has to be considered because of Texas Gulf. Prior to Texas Gulf, it was not worth it in any shape or form.

It is quite possible, and quite probable, with the discovery of the large ore body at Texas Gulf, that it is economically feasible as well. If it is going to be economically feasible—and here is where you and I differ—we feel that it is far better to let the industry itself come out with the thing rather than—

Mr. MacDonald: I do not object to that if they would do it.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: And again, getting back to the Quebec Crown company; in relation to exploration, we are watching this. We are watching it quite intensively. It is a pretty big operation. I admit, I am worried about prospecting and its decline. Actually, I am not so sure there is a decline. But nevertheless, exploration has got to be the lifeline of this job. There is no question about it and we are searching for new ways. We are watching what takes place in other jurisdictions and one of them is Quebec. But so far we just have not seen anything that would convince us. If some spectacular results ensue, then of course the thing will receive even more intensive consideration. But at the moment, no.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, my plea is that the government take a positive role. I think even the Tory mind can encompass the concept of a government in the second half of the 20th century taking a positive role instead of a purely passive one in terms of the full development of the industry.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: If other people can reach that mental state, I am sure we can.

An hon. member: They would have done it—

Mr. Sopha: You have to be awfully optimistic to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: That may be an appropriate tone and point in which to leave that. I go to my final point that I wanted to raise with the Minister. I am curious to find out exactly what has happened in this tidying up of the situation with the Algoma Central Railway. Now my colleague from Thunder Bay asked a question this morning and, as I recall, the answer was that there is something like 1,200 acres on which mining tax is now being paid.

My recollection, and I do not happen to have the exact figures but I can give them to you in round numbers, was that back in 1953—this is the fascinating thing about this —inadvertently some clerk in the department discovered that ACR—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Actually, I wonder if this could not be discussed under the mining lands branch, when I will have someone in front of me whose advice I can reach for.

Mining lands branch is the last one—vote 1306.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301.

Mr. Sopha: Well then, Mr. Chairman, this matter of the Crown corporation has been raised and it is the appropriate place for me to add a comment about the role of such an organization in preference to that circus that was produced in the staking of the Elliot Lake mines. I say quite frankly that I would very much favour some form of enterprise, either totally operated by the Crown or a mixed enterprise of public money and private money, in the development of plans which I thought—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: If I may interrupt again, in the interest of keeping things in their proper place. If the hon. member could save his remarks on that to vote 1306 as well, that is mining lands.

Mr. Sopha: Well, this is raised, you see. There is the unfairness, the disadvantage of someone else trying to get a word in—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1306 will be the appropriate place.

Mr. Sopha: —the disadvantage, that some can carry on a debate about these things but if anyone else tries to horn in, well it has got to be reserved.

Mr. Chairman: We will get you in first.

Mr. Sopha: Excuse me, I am sorry.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1306 will be the appropriate spot. The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of policy matters that I would like to bring up with the hon. Minister. On page 6 of the orange booklet of part 9, section 1612, this reads as follows:

> Subject to the requirements of this Act and except as otherwise provided in this Act—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You are going to hate me, Mr. Chairman, but I wonder if this could come under the proper vote again when I have the proper individual here—this should be vote 1303, mines inspection branch.

Mr. Ferrier: All right, I will bring it up then.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Port Arthur.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: We do not do anything in head office.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, while the Minister is telling us what votes what comes under, I wonder if he could tell us what the mining recorder's office is. Does that come under vote 1306 also?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Correct, 1306.

Mr. Knight: Vote 1306. Thank you!

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Jackson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to just comment on what the Minister just said, "They do not do anything in head office". He said that he was not going to make any goofs that would go on into the future and he said, if they do not do anything, they cannot make any mistakes.

I wondered if that is what he is doing. But something that has come up in the reading I have done over the last few months is that several times they proposed a library of information on development. I hope you do not rule me out on this one.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Sorry, we have got it—

Mr. Jackson: Is that under head office?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is under vote 1302.

Mr. Jackson: Well, if we go into the taxation policy I hope that comes under this.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Only because I cannot find any other slot to put it in.

Mr. Jackson: It is mentioned that, in the matter of the Smith report, there have been many briefs presented, and one thing that has shown up all through, sir, is that they are all against it but nobody has made any submissions to do anything else. I would just like to assure him that this party fully intends to present a brief on the Smith report and mining taxation and that we will try to be very, very constructive.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask about the possibility of revising The Mining Act as it now exists. Would this be in the right vote?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It all depends on what the subject matter is.

Mr. Martel: Pardon?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It all depends what the subject matter is.

Mr. Martel: The people I talk to in the various unions in my area do not feel that The Mining Act meets with the times.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Is this in respect of safety, for instance?

Mr. Martel: No, it is just an overall Act. I am just wondering if there is any possibility that The Mining Act might be revised and brought up to date. What they have recommended was something in line with The Industrial Safety Act which would, I hope, come under this section. That would come from head office, the whole rewriting of this Act.

Would there be any possibility of having a revision?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes. The safety provisions are being rewritten right now.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. R. G. Hodgson (Victoria-Haliburton): Mr. Chairman, I want to mention a matter, and I belive it falls within this vote, that has do with the uranium mining in the area of Bicroft and Faraday townships.

We have a large volume of low grade ore in Faraday and Bicroft: we also have some very high grade ore in the Faraday mine property and it is rumoured they are progressing towards production in a year or two's time.

I believe this department should enter into discussions with the mining people of Faraday and see if there cannot be a larger operation by the mixing of the ores of Bicroft area and the other mines in the Faraday sector and see if we cannot make a longer production lifetime of the Faraday operation. Now this might take the assistance of your asociate the Minister of Trade and Development (Mr. Randall) here but, it seems to me that this would be a very worthwhile venture for your department and this government in the interests of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1301.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, two points, I am sure they are under this particular vote. One, I notice that the maintenance cost is up about $100,000; maybe the Minister is harder on the furniture than his predecessor was. The second point is that he mentioned one aspect of being concerned about prospecting in the province and I am curious to find out whether or not his department or he, himself, in view of his interest and knowledge in the field, is consulting with his colleague, the Minister of Financial and Commercial Affairs (Mr. Rowntree), about those portions of The Securities Act and The Corporations Act relating to prospectors' syndicates which would appear to me, with a very scant knowledge, to be a now outmoded method of financing prospecting syndicates. There may be a field in which prospecting in this province could be stimulated if those sections were reviewed. I do not mean that it is a cure-all but it is one aspect of the problem.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The increases in the head office votes are the result, first of all, of salaries due to some new staff requirements and the maintenance expansion as related to additional furniture, not Minister's furniture, business furniture, equipment and machinery required as a result of the relocation of most of the offices of the department here in Toronto. By the time these current moves take place over in the Whitney block, there will only be two departments in the Whitney, The Department of Lands and Forests, and The Department of Mines, and all this in relation to the purchase of new furniture and new equipment has been as well as the relocation of the old—that is it, almost in its entirety.

In relation to the question of The Securities Act, as the hon. member knows I share some of his views and some of his concerns in relation to the financing of what is currently known as the junior mining companies. This is a problem that I do not know the answer to; I do not know that anybody does. Again it is a question of balancing the public interest as a whole with the requirements of a very specialized segment of the financial community. I know the hon. member is not indicating in any manner, shape or form that the new requirements in The Securities Act are not requirements, are not needed in the public interest.

We have both taken a part in the formulation of some of those requirements. As a by-product of those requirements there is no question in my mind whatsoever that this is imposing a very great hardship on the financing of junior mines in the province. In saying that, though, I do not mean to imply that the current restrictions should be relaxed at all. I do not know. This is a personal opinion that I am voicing, but certainly it is a worry to The Department of Mines that there are seemingly not as many smaller mining companies now in the market as there used to be. Whether this is because of general economic conditions or high priced money, I do not know, but I think it is the result of a number of factors. I am also personally convinced that one of these factors is the restriction in The Securities Act. On the other hand this is just one of the reasons why The Securities Act had to be beefed up the way it was. There were too many people selling moose pasture, obviously.

How do we protect the public interest in general, and how can we attempt to continue to promote this capital in junior mining ventures is the balance. I am not so sure that that balance has been reached, and I do not know what we can do about it. If the hon. member has some ideas I would be glad to hear them.

Mr. J. Renwick: I have precisely one, Mr. Chairman, and that is one I raised before. I think there may well be in consideration between The Department of Mines and The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs at least exploratory studies made about setting up in the province of Ontario a separate exchange for mining companies, however mining companies may be defined.

Quite likely the kind of definition I am talking about is a junior mining company which would exclude the big overall conglomerate companies such as Noranda and International Nickel and those mammoth companies.

It seems to me that if there is a segregation and isolation in the mining industry in its traditional Ontario sense involving prospecting and exploration and development prior to the point at which it becomes a producing mine, so there should be that kind of a separate stock exchange for those companies where you then get within that exchange and within the companies which are concerned—a concentration of the expertise and the know-how which would lead to more sophisticated methods of providing for the financing of the junior mines.

Then, I would think, this would be a very real step forward. At the present time you have a stock exchange which is mixed up with the industrial and other fields, and only a small portion of their time is directed toward the junior mining field, which is one of the basic fundamental resources industries of the province.

Strangely enough I do share the Minister's view about the inhibitions of the provisions which were inserted in The Securities Act about the junior mining companies. I think that there may be basic economic conditions which affected it, but I am inclined to think that we have imposed an unnecessary inhibitory method.

The Minister will recall, Mr. Chairman, and very clearly as I do, that that particular amendment which the member for Downsview (Mr. Singer) and myself, and certainly the member for Eglinton (Mr. Reilly), were instrumental in having passed, was passed at the time of the committee in order to fill a necessary gap in the securities legislation. It was a rather arbitrary and not carefully thought out procedure, but it was necessary in order to provide the kind of protection which was needed.

I do not want to get diverted on to that, other than to say that I do think under the initiative of The Department of Mines and The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs there is some place in the province of Ontario—and maybe it could be located in the north—maybe there is a location in the north with communication facilities which we have which would make it a heartland of the financing and development of—in the initial stages of mining properties and the prospecting and exploration—a place for a separate and distinct mining exchange which could be supervised by the government, of course, but which could have the benefit of the concentrated expertise of those persons who know best how to get money for prospecting and exploration purposes, and who will ensure that it is used for those purposes and not drained off, which is what has been so detrimental to the mining industry in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I noted the challenge of the Minister of Mines and I do not think that is too strong a word in relation to the problem of taxation of the mining industry. I inform him, through you, that I have made arrangements with the select committee to present a brief to that committee when it visits Sudbury on August 1, in respect of this problem, that is taxation of mining companies.

I inform him in the light of the remembrance of criticism directed at myself from him a number of years ago before appearing before Royal commissions. Perhaps he did not encompass select committees of the Legislature, and maybe he reserves that criticism to members appearing before Royal commissions. I do not know. I do remember the allusion that he made.

Whatever the government decided with its multiplicity of committees, they had the study of the Smith committee which took four years to complete. I do not wish to deliberately insult anyone, but I make an objective criticism. In my view it is not a very worthwhile document in its overall picture. Certainly it is a faint shadow of the prominence and the depth of analysis of the Carter commission report in Ottawa. And the Carter commission report pointed out to us that above all else that the one group in the country that is not suffering from oppressive taxes is the mining industry.

I say, in passing, that Inco, which of course is the leader, and when you speak about mining you speak about Inco because it is the leader in this country in the mining field. It is regarded as such by the rest of the mining industry. Inco is looked upon as a big brother or father confessor. This leader in every respect in mining is referred to throughout the industry, according to the argot, as "Nickel". They refer to Inco as "Nickel"—as "Nickel" says, and "Nickel" leads. So the pattern is set for the rest of the industry.

It only took them one thin volume to criticize the recommendations of the Smith committee, but they very kindly delivered to me a copy of their criticism of the Carter commission. I thought somebody had bought me a case of beer. That is the size of the box it took to deliver the three very thick volumes which led me immediately to conclude that there must be merit in the Carter commission, since it took them so many pages to criticize it.

However, whatever the government does with its study and the studies it is making of it, and the further brief that the government is inviting, I hope that the end result that is achieved is that the people of Ontario will be given a greater share of the profits from the natural resources of this province, particularly the ores that are in the ground.

I say, in stating that belief, that I wish someone would take me into a quiet corner for a day or two and explain to me, because I would really like to know if there is any argument, to explain to me where the morality is that permits W. H. Wright to walk out of northern Ontario with $47 million; J. P. Bickell only walked out with $14 million.

These are private and personal fortunes made out of the ores that the merciful providence put in the ground. I do not really know how much Harry Oakes had at the time he came to his infamous end in the Bahamas, but it was many millions.

I would like to know, as a matter of morals, where individuals have the right to come along to a body of ore in the ground, and say to the exclusion of everyone else, that that ore is ours; we own that; that is ours to exploit and to reap the profit out of and to carry it away, and use the wealth thus created in monetary form, according to our own dictates, our own desires and our own plans.

If there is morality in that proposition, I would like to know what it is.

Now the reverse of it, of course, is that the people of Ontario, are the owners of the mineral wealth. I agree with that proposition that the mines profit tax does not belong to the north. I have always agreed with that; it belongs to all of the people of Ontario. It is a royalty paid for the raw material.

But as we approach the two-third point in the twentieth century, certainly our thinking has advanced a long way from those days of the freebooters, such as Wright and Oakes and Bickell, who came into the north and wrested personal gain, to a very gross extent, out of the sweat of others, among them incidentally, my father and other relatives, one of whom died of silicosis working in the Hollinger mine in Timmins.

I just do not see it, and I hope the end result, however it is achieved, is that the Treasury board of this province readjusts what has been a wrong for two-thirds of a century. I do not see it through the eyes of the Smith committee, that it is necessary to have two taxes, two separate taxes, whatever label you put on them. Those experts seem to delight in devising labels for taxes. I wish they would have thought in terms of principles, rather than labels, and the mechanism of collecting it. The mines profits tax seems to me to be an adequate mechanism, and their only necessity is to increase that to the point where the people of Ontario get their just share of this wealth which belongs to them.

I view these mining companies, whether they are big or small, as trustees; they are trustees who have the right to develop the resources, but must develop them within a framework of responsibility, to all of the people of the province. And we are not interested, we are simply not interested, in creating great wealth in the hands of a few; a fair return—yes, for their investment. But no disproportionate reward, using up irreplaceable assets. That is the sad thing, of course, the saddest characteristic about ore is that it is irreplaceable, and every pound that is taken out of the ground diminishes our right or our ability to maximize its use for the people of our province.

Now, of course, it is a very broad subject and the Minister alluded to other aspects of it, which I am not going to go into. It would be safe to say that it will continue to be a matter of very great anxiety to myself that so much of this wealth is owned by foreign hands, and in so many ways. My goodness, I wish the Minister could see into my thinking and become aware of how repulsive the notion is to me; how much I recoil from the notion that the government of Ontario has to really demonstrate anything that could be suspected of being obsequious in respect of that giant American corporation that is developing that Kidd Creek ore body.

Well, I hope in his communication to them, when he said that Sopha is promoting a rumour over in the Legislature, whatever epithet that they may have replied, and some of them might have been on principle, I hope they realize, as long as I am in existance, that they are confronting an economic nationalist who will exercise a close surveillance over what they do. Maybe the Minister is putting the heat on them to do the right thing by the people of Ontario in using our ore, our mineral wealth. Maybe it is lucky my leader is away, I would certainly be ready to lean on them to a very great extent; at the same time expressing a warm welcome to them to come here and develop that ore body in a civilized fashion. That would include, of course, a very great attention to the interests of the people of Ontario and Canada in general. And their development would always be subject to the total interests of our province and our nation.

Well, let me say that I am very encouraged by the accession of this young man to this portfolio; I did not think much of the previous one; neither did the people of Port Arthur. And I think, more or less, we have a breath of fresh air coming into this department. I was very encouraged by his opening remarks, Mr. Chairman, and he made them extemporaneously, like the boy going out to ride the bicycle for the first time and saying: "Look mother, no hands."

Vote 1301 agreed to.

On vote 1302:

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, I presume this is the area where we can talk about aerial geological surveys.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes.

Mr. Knight: Thank you.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, first of all, do you want me to refer to your remarks?

Mr. Knight: Yes please.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You mentioned aero-magnetic surveys. Well, of course, the whole of the province has been completely redone over the last five years, by the province, in conjunction with the GSC, the federal government, for a completely new series of maps done through the method of aero-magnetic survey.

It is a five-year plan; it is coming to a close this year, so that as far as that aspect of it is concerned, I can only assume the hon. member did not know that. Perhaps that is the problem of the department in the past for not publishing this very, very great piece of work.

In saying that, I am not patting the provincial government on the back unnecessarily, I trust, either, because this has been a joint venture with the federal government, a five-year plan, that is now coming to a close. All of the maps have not yet been published, but they are being published as quickly as possible. But, as I say, this five-year plan is drawing to a close this year, and will result in the whole of the precambrian shield being resurveyed and remapped by aero-magnetic survey.

Now, in respect of the electro-magnetic surveys, this is a very contentious matter, not only within this department, but within the provincial government and mining exploration companies across the country. A few years ago, the province of Saskatchewan entered into a pilot project along this line, and I think it is the consensus of those far more knowledgeable and experienced than I am in the field, that this just did not pay, as far as the results were concerned. There is a great deal of controversy in respect of the worth, the genuineness, the results, the effects of EM surveys, and how these things can prove of benefit to those who are doing exploration work. It has been the decision within the department, and the decision of this government, backed, I may say, by resolution by the Mines Ministers across the country, that this is the type of thing, at the moment, in any event, that governments should not get into. The worth of it has really not been proved.

In respect of field work, of course, every year, for the last seven or eight years, there has been a large increase in the number of field parties that are out every year doing ground geological surveys through this department. This year there are 30 geological parties out in the field right now, of which something like 12 are in northwestern Ontario. This has been an expanded programme; it has been a very exciting programme, I think, by this department over the years, and again I can say this because I have played no part in the formulation of that programme, although in my mind this is something that should bear a high priority figure. This is what we have to do more of.

This has already produced a lot of very tangible material benefits in the way of new staking, new exploration interest. We now have to tell people the time and date and place where these reports and these maps are being released to the public. In some cases, with respect to particularly hot areas, there have been lineups at the door to purchase the results of these surveys. They are of a very material benefit. I am convinced that it is a great thing. As I say, it has been an expanded programme and it is going to go on.

Now, in respect of prospectors, I have already indicated to you that it is the concern of the government and this department that there should be increased exploration activity —I will put it that way in any event. With regard to the prospector classes, again this year this thing has taken a great boost. We have had very successful field classes at Madoc, for instance, this year, and we have not done that before. We are giving lectures in classes to the junior forest rangers at their camps; they have nothing else to do in the evenings so we are filling them full of this.

We are taking the classes into the Indian reserves, especially in northwestern Ontario. Four or five different reserves in northwestern Ontario have had lectures this year. We are having a little bit of trouble with respect to translation problems, but it is getting across and we think this is the role that this department should be playing in encouraging prospecting. I would hope that we are going to venture into new fields in this way, too, with respect to all sorts of things.

I may have trouble Provincial Treasurer as we go into it a little later on, so I had better not get into it in too much detail. But this is a whole concept on which I hope the department will have an expanded programme on and we will have a little bit more in the way of material results to report to the members next year.

The member mentioned the cost of maps and reports. This surprised me. Quite frankly, I was not aware that there was any map produced by this department that cost over a dollar. In respect to some of these reports, I can see them costing four or five dollars, perhaps—but not the maps. The matter of the reports is a point we will certainly take under consideration.

The tax system: this is a matter that is receiving very serious consideration right now within the department. The member lost me when he started talking about the satellite programme, I just do not understand it. I appreciate, I think, what the new Minister of Communications at the federal level is going to attempt to do, I understand, with respect to TV satellites. But I do not understand how this could be fitted in with some of the concepts we are formulating right now in respect of data retrieval, computers and closed-circuit television within the department itself for the greater availability of mineral information within the province. But how this could tie in with the federal satellite thing I am not too sure, unless the member is talking about the exciting concept of the Minister of Education with respect to this biblio centre thing. If that is what he means, we will tied in with that.

Mr. Stokes: Maybe he wants to put the Minister in orbit.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Could be. But other than that, I am afraid the member lost me. I do not understand it.

Was there anything else the member had?

Mr. Knight: Yes, the annual claim limit. The select committee recommended, I believe, that it be increased to at least 20 in a block per mining division. Has the department considered putting that into effect, that recommendation of the select committee, in order to increase the annual limit of claims that can be staked?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am sorry, I missed the first couple of words when the member started out there.

Mr. Knight: Yes. I brought up the point of the 90 claim annual limit on the number of claims that can be filled a year. The select committee recommended that, since it is done by division, it had been no more than 18 files per mining division. They recommended increasing it to 20.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, no, it is 90 anywhere in the province. If somebody wants to do it in one division they can do that. That is no problem. That is my understanding. I am going to put the member off here though. That comes under the mining lands branch, not under the geological branch. That would be vote 1306, rather than this one.

Mr. Knight: Well, I am just merely quoting from page 29 of the report of the select committee on mining.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: A lot of those recommendations have been put into effect.

Mr. Knight: It states:

> The limit has been increased to meet changing situations and presently stands at 90, of which not more than 18 may be staked in a year in any one of the 14 mining divisions of the province.

In other words, you cannot stake more than 18 in a given mining division. And so the recommendation from the committee follows that this should be increased to 20 per division.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, as I say, this should really come under the mining lands branch vote of 1306, but because it has been brought up—we have gone well beyond that. The holder of any individual licence can stake 90 claims anywhere in the province. That is a two-year old report, you know, and we have done some things.

Mr. Knight: I am glad to hear it has been increased, but as I understand it even 90 is quite a limitation. What is the reason for this? Perhaps I am just ignorant, I should know why there is a ceiling placed on it.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It was increased from 18 to 90, but the purpose of it is obviously to restrict the hog—I will put it that way. Okay? Some guy goes out, thinks he has something, and before you know it he has tied up five townships on a single licence. Well, this is inequitable. On the other hand, it was the view of the then government of the day that the restriction of 18 was too small, so it has been increased to 90.

Mr. Knight: But, really, Mr. Chairman, this individual licence limit of 90 claims for the year does not really restrict the hog, because there is such an illegal thing as filing by proxy, staking by proxy, wherein someone uses an asociate's mining licence and there is no limit on the number of associates. I understand this is going on very prevalently out in the field, that it is really a useless law because they are doing it anyway.

They are only limited by the number of licences that can be obtained by individuals and so you are only limited to the number of individuals there are and therefore it is not really a limitation and it should not really exist, because it is just an invitation to break the law.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, as I say, this should really come under vote 1306. I would rather have any further discussion of it when I have the official here who knows the answers far better than I. But we will certainly take the views of the member under consideration. That is the easy way out, I suppose, at this stage of the game. But certainly I think it is fair to say that the experience of the department is that this is now not being abused to the extent that the member would indicate.

Mr. Knight: Mr. Chairman, if I could just get back to the maps, the aerial magnetometer survey maps. Is the department absolutely sure that the full benefit of these surveys is going into the finished product, into these maps? The word that I get from the field is that in many cases the maps that are coming out as a result of these surveys are just a sort of a rehash of old information they already had with just a little bit added to it. I just wonder if you are really getting the full benefit. Are these maps actually turned out by the national geographical institute, or by the department?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: They are turned out by our own cartographers who have quite a reputation, I might say. We have one of the best cartographic units, I think, in the country, and they are being turned out by our own unit. The GSC is helping with the paper work, field work and production of it. But they are being distributed here.

Vote 1302 agreed to.

On vote 1303:

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Chairman, this point that I raised on vote 1301, on page 6 of the orange booklet, page 6, part 9, section 62-2, it reads as follows:

> Subject to the requirements of this Act, and except as otherwise provided in the Act, the responsibility for the authorization and decisions as to the qualifications of employees rests with the employer, or his agent.

Now, my position is that this section interferes with collective bargaining, and my friends protested this section through the mining committee of the Legislature some years ago. At that meeting, a spokesman of the Ontario mining association said that they had no intention of using this section to interfere with collective bargaining. Despite this assurance, it has been used in arbitration.

When an arbitration involves the determination as to whether a man has the quality or ability to do a job, if this Act is used, then the union has no case, as this law supersedes any contract or other Act.

Mr. Chairman: Will the member relate collective bargaining to mines inspection? I would just like to make sure.

Mr. Ferrier: Well, the hon. Minister said that this was to be brought up under this vote. I thought that it might pertain to policy, but he wanted it to be brought up under this vote.

Mr. Chairman: May I ask the Minister if collective bargaining comes under the mines inspection branch?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No. This relates, I suppose, to the operation of mines?

Mr. Ferrier: That is right.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, I suppose if it has to be discussed anywhere it might as well be here.

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps it should have been under vote 1301?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: It is a grey area, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: In view of the grey area, the member may proceed.

Mr. Ferrier: Then there is another section of the Act in this orange booklet section, 165-3, and this has to do with medical qualifications, and examinations to qualify as a hoist man.

The person has to secure a medical certificate. An almost unbelievable experience was had by the steelworkers union in the Timmins area. An employee of one of the mines applied for a hoisting job as provided for under their union agreement. The company had him examined by a company doctor and he said that the man was colour blind. The union then had the man examined by one of the foremost eye, ear, nose and throat men in Canada who said that he was not colour blind. The union took up the case and the company arrogantly quoted section 165-3 of the Act which says that the person must be examined by a legally qualified medical practitioner acceptable to the employer.

This, of course, precluded the union the right to go to arbitration as again they were faced with a ridiculous section of the Act, superseding a collective agreement. The company refused to accept the diagnosis of a qualified specialist in the field as opposed to a general practitioner as was the case.

The irony of this situation should be noted. This same company, when getting the eyes of their staff examined, sent them to the same specialist that the union sent the aggrieved employee to. However, they refused to accept the findings of the specialist in the case of the employee.

The changes needed in these sections are quite simple. The changes in 65-2 should read something like this. This section shall not apply when there is a collective bargaining agreement in effect between a mining company and a union.

The change in 165-3 should be: Unless the person has been examined by a legally qualified practitioner, and where possible and necessary, a specialist shall be consulted. These words, "acceptable to the employer" should be deleted.

Now, these were brought up with the mining committee, and there was some thought that they might be acted upon. It interferes with the operation of unions in the mining industry. I would like to have the Minister's comment as to whether he is prepared to see that these two sections are amended as we suggest.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: We will certainly take this matter under consideration, but the whole theory or concept running through The Mining Act is that first and foremost the operator of the mine is responsible. I am sure that is a fairly onerous duty, to be responsible for the mine and the employees.

I do not think that everyone is versed in the peculiar problems that arise in the mining industry and I am sure that the hon. member is not. I find his criticism of that section of the Act a little hard to understand.

If there is a conflict of opinion between the employer and the union as to the qualifications of a man, the employer, being responsible for the worker in law, under not only The Mining Act, but in law, in general, for the operation of the mine and the safety of those employees, must be the one to decide ultimately as to the qualifications necessary for the job, unless there are other qualifying factors, one of these being the hoist man.

The hoist man is a pretty important individual in the mine as I am sure the hon. member is aware. We have stepped in there, and with some statutes we have indicated some qualifications that should be right in the statute. If there is a dispute as to the qualifications of the medical practitioner who was supposed to give the certificate, then surely this is a dispute where both sides are acting in good faith, both management and labour. They should iron this out themselves.

Certainly there are, on occasion, conditions in collective bargaining agreements which relate to this matter. If, in this particular instance, it has not been settled, and if there is no provision for settling a dispute such as that within the bargaining agreement, then it had better go in next time. But in the meantime, the statute takes priority.

It should be, in my mind, a medical practitioner of the employer's choosing. I say that quite bluntly to him. I cannot appreciate any real criticism of that.

However, you have made your point. We will take a look at it and, as I say, I am new at the game. I may not know what I am talking about and this is one of the purposes of an exercise such as this. We will take a look at it. I may be completely all wet on it, but I do not think this particular problem has arisen before, and certainly that section of The Mining Act has been in force for a good length of time.

We are revising these sections of the Act and this will be the responsibility of the departmental committees to take a look at this particular problem.

Mr. Ferrier: I think these sections, Mr. Chairman, mean that there is no appeal, and if there is a grievance, as there obviously was in this case, then the company acts with a high hand. I think in many collective agreements that if there are what the working man or the union feel are abuses then these can be taken to an abritration board and a judge usually decides if the employee has a case or not.

But in this instance, there is no possibility of seeing if the man has a legitimate grievance because he is precluded by the sections of the Act. I think it allows the company sometimes to act in a high-handed way. I do not think that the unions would want anybody in there who would not be a good safety risk. I think they are as concerned about protecting the lives of their members as the company is of preventing accidents, but I think that if these two sections were appealed that these kind of grievances could be proceeded with as they are in other industries, and they would not be subject to the same abuse or in some cases I think some of the injustices that could result.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1303? The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, in looking into the public accounts for 1966-67, I see that the amount allowed for mines inspection branch was in the neighbourhood of $350,000 and two years later it still only reached $406,000.

Before I begin with this great collection that I have here, it seems to me that this is probably one of the reasons for what I consider a deficiency in the inspection branch of The Department of Mines.

I simply do not think this is enough money to allow the Minister to hire or employ the number of people that would be necessary to ensure that the various mines in the north are inspected adequately.

This is my first complaint. I do not think we have enough money allocated here and possibly the Provincial Treasurer could get a little more generous with the amount allowed.

Now, I want to delve, at some length, into safety. Before I begin this, I want to say that I am looking at safety from two points of view. Safety for the men, but also safety from the point of view that the production would be greater, the number of injuries less, the compensation would be less—and when compensation is cut to 50 per cent, the welfare would be less—if we could cut down the number of accidents that are occurring in the mines and in the smelters.

However, the companies that I am associated with are not the most encouraging people to work with when it comes to safety. This is a tight little sector that they want to hang on to and control by themselves. They have no desire to share safety with the union, the people who are directly involved, possibly because it is going to cost a little money to bring the plants into a proper and safe condition.

Now I want to go back, and this is no reflection on the present Minister of Mines, I can assure you, but I want to go back to about the middle of March when we had a disclosure—some people do not like me using the word "tipped off"—that the companies are advised about inspections. Now, for 20 years in this province, this department has denied categorically that the companies were aware, or were given advance notice, that an inspection was going to take place. And as a result, when they got the tip-off—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I know the hon. member wants to be fair, but that is not so.

Mr. Martel: The unions were always advised that the company did not know in advance that an inspection was going to take place. Now the company might have known, but the unions are convinced that it was always a denial that this was going to take place.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No! We have exchanged a lot of questions in the House, and we have exchanged a lot of communications about this. The point is that in some cases the company has to know in advance.

Mr. Martel: I am coming to that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I do not want any blanket, generalized statements that will start weaving around my ear. In no cases did the department advise management that an inspection is going to take place. Because I have indicated, on the floor of the House, that this is necessary on occasion. All right?

Mr. Martel: I am coming to that point. I disagree completely with the Minister that the companies have to know in advance, because what happens when the company knows in advance is that they keep men in and they work overtime and they clean the place up where the royal tour is going to take place. This could be checked out by the reports that the Minister gave me on the conditions of the coal plant in Copper Cliff, when we had a glowing report on the conditions and yet, a month later, there was another explosion because once the inspection has taken place the conditions are allowed to deteriorate again.

What I am saying is that the companies should not know in advance, not just for the sake of the union, but for the sake of all the men involved and the company.

If the company does not know, they will have to maintain the good conditions that exist when there is an inspection going to take place. These conditions will exist year round and well they should, because when this disclosure that the company had to know in advance was given to me in the House, I received phone calls, not just from the mining industry or the mines unions, but from the UAW and all kinds of unions across this province, that this was going on in their industry as well.

I think it defeats the whole purpose of an inspection, which is to see the conditions which exist day by day. If we are going to clean the whole operation up solely for an inspection, then we defeat the whole purpose of an inspection and we might as well not go through with it. It is just an exercise in futility.

Now, as a result of this, the men have become quite disillusioned. The Minister has the same correspondence I have, but I will just make reference to two of them, regarding what the men think of inspections:

> I am sure that if these mining inspectors were doing their job as it should be done, and if the Inco safety engineers were sincere about safety, a lot of our problems would be corrected and many accidents that are now taking place would be prevented. Unfortunately, this is not the case and the result is what we are going through today.

The men do not have any faith in the inspections that are taking place. The Minister was with me in Sudbury and they are quite emphatic about this point—they are not too convinced that the inspections are achieving what they should be achieving, and this is why I criticize the amount of money being given to the Minister because I think he is not getting sufficient funds in order to have the type of staff that is necessary to do the job.

Now the problem areas. I have mentioned the coal plant. This is just one. But one problem area that really seems to be coming into a great deal of play, deals with the tagging and locking process, and this is the correspondence I have received to date on this.

I just want to go into one case—May 27 to Mr. R. L. Smith. I am just going to read a couple of portions and then I am going to read a couple of affidavits which are completely contrary to what the mines inspection branch found to be the case.

I have to point out, sir, that section 462 of The Mining Act reads as follows:

> Competent persons in charge. Where electrical apparatus is used at a mine, it shall be in charge of an authorized person who shall be qualified by experience to handle such apparatus.
> Every person operating or having charge of an electrical apparatus shall have been instructed in his duty, and shall be competent to perform the work that he is set out to do.

This deals with the problem of men who are ordered to work on live equipment. Mr. Smith's branch looked into this and in his report to Mr. Falkowski of the safety and health branch, he said:

> Just to sum it up, no one was asked to work on live equipment.

And I have in this bundle somewhere, affidavits sworn out by three men:

> On May 23, 1968, I was a member of a work group instructed to proceed to work on electrical substation equipment thought to be properly switched and tagged, but which, in fact, was still carrying 6,900 volts.

And I have three such affidavits. Now this is completely contrary to the report submitted to the union by the mines inspector. The point I am trying to make again is if you relate this to the fact that the men are not sure that advising the company is advisable because it gets cleaned up if the mines inspection branch seems to go along with the company, there is no confidence of the men or of the union in the department and this is not what we want.

I think we want to work, all of us in this Legislature at least, for betterment. It is beneficial to the company and it is beneficial to those employed, but it is an area that the company does not want anyone involved in.

Now I could go on to gas and dust but I am going to eliminate these two sections. I want to get at Dravo and MacIssac. Now I put some questions to the floor some time ago and Dravo and MacIssac, strangely enough, do get involved in actual mining. I could read the extracts—just one short one from the Minister on June 6. The question though, I think, does create the wrong impression when it mentions that these two companies are involved in standard mining operations.

I have a letter from the union which says that MacIssac is operating at MacLennan mine at Bolen's Bay and this property is producing ore. They are driving raises and are carrying out standard mining procedure. This has been going on for quite some time.

Dravo is operating at Clarabelle. There are two shafts at the property. Dravo is doing the mining and the hoisting. They use trucks to dump the ore into the open pit. Inco uses their shovels to load this ore and it is also crushed and processed by Inco.

It goes on further in the letter:

> We do not know that Scobie open pit is producing also; at Crean Hill open pit, Pioneer Construction is doing the work on this property, and these people have no safeties really.

They have one of the worst accident records, I imagine, of any company in Ontario and that is why I raise the question with the Minister.

It might appear that I am being pro union, but I am not; this is the safety of men involved here—their lives and so on. Now, some of them are ridiculous accidents and I will agree with the Minister that some of them are through negligence on the part of the men.

However, I think we have to get safety teams into these areas and, if necessary, we are going to have to legislate it because these companies are not going to give up their preferred position. They want the sole say when it comes to inspections.

The Minister also wanted to know about—and I do not know if this comes in at this point—recommendations of inquests as a result of accidents, and the fact that the company is not implementing them. I believe the Minister received a letter dated July 11, 1968, and I will just read a few of these to indicate again that the company does not implement the safety regulations which would cut down the number of accidents that do occur:

> Inquest into the death of V. McIntyre, shaft No. 9, Scobie: Recommendation: Closer safety supervision should be applied to all contract or temporary mining projects where companies are sinking shafts for later mining development.
> Inquest into the death of Alexander Boudreau, March 13, 1968: Recommendation: It is recommended that the company institute a safety programme coupled with an intensive training course for new employees.
> Inquest into the death of F. Quigley: Furthermore the jury recommends that a safety engineer be hired by the company for each operation, and that more co-operation should exist between men and management in the field of safety.

The same thing goes on, and all that I am trying to illustrate here is that if the companies are not willing to give up their share or to participate in an active programme with the men, then I think it is up to the government to legislate this into existence. I think the Minister is aware that they do not want to reliquish this position where they themselves are responsible for safety. I would certainly appreciate something very concrete in the way of recommendations or assistance to alleviate this problem from the Minister of Mines.

Mr. Chairman: Does the Minister have any comments?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman. It is not my position, nor the position of any Minister in this government to attempt to take the place of management vis-à-vis with organized labour in any particular industry. This I do not intend to do.

On the other hand, I think other people can be used on occasions as well as by other organizations and other vested interests. In respect of the floor of this Legislature as well, I know the hon. member is aware and cognizant of the danger that we all can fall into on occasion by being used as a tool of some group—so I just want to get that across.

I have been a member of an international industrial union in my day and, therefore, I am not anti-labour any more than this government is, or this department is, than I am pro management, but I have come to the conclusion, and I must be quite frank and blunt with the House, Mr. Chairman, after having come into this department that, in the Sudbury area, there are certain agencies of government that are being utilized in respect of management-union problems in a way in which they should not be.

I think our inspection branch in the Sudbury area on occasion has been deliberately harassed and deliberately used, especially, almost exclusively, by local 6500 of the steelworkers for two purposes: 1. Political; 2. As a means to bring added pressure to bear at a time when a collective agreement is going to be running out within the next 12 months.

Now again, as I say, I have come into this thing with no preconceived notions or ideas whatsoever, one way or the other. To have preconceived notions as some critic pointed out to me a few weeks ago in the north, you have to have knowledge, and boy, you do not have any. They were saying this to me, but I just say that this is my impression at the moment.

It is an unfair position, I think, to put conscientious, overworked and, in some cases, underpaid, civil servants in the position where they are being utilized as pawns and tools in a struggle for a better collective bargaining agreement between a powerful, aggressive union and a powerful aggressive group of management. Quite frankly, I do not like it at all, I do not think this is fair. I do not know how to combat the thing.

You talk about electrical problems as far as tagging and switch-pulling. There is no question at all that there is a dispute going on right now between management and labour that, it appears to me, is not totally unrelated—but is not related in very many specifics in any event to the question of safety at all. It is related to the question of qualification and who is going to be what in the bargaining agreement, and in respect of certain details within that agreement. And I think a lot of these questions that are now coming forward relate more strictly and solely to the economic end of things, in an argument between management and labour, than they do to safety.

Now, this may not be so in all cases. I can say to you that each of these cases, to the best of our ability, have been face down. These complaints that have come to us have been immediately transmitted to the local engineers, who on the whole are extremely experienced, qualified, conscientious people, and who are being driven up the wall, I may say, by some petty complaints and some petty matters that should not have come to them at all and which any government agency should not be bothered with. And as I say, this irks me.

In any event, it is our duty and responsibility in government to make sure that these things are traced out and are rectified if, in the view of the people in the field—and after all these are the ones I have to rely on—our local inspectors in the field believe that they should be. And on the whole they are. And in some of these cases, they are judgment calls.

The government inspector has not a halo over his head as far as infallibility is concerned; he can be as wrong as anybody else. And in these cases we are doing it. But we just simply do not appear to have the problems, in respect of these safety matters, anywhere else in the province, that we have between Inco and local 6500, as far as the quantity of them is concerned.

Far be it for me to stand up in this House and attempt to justify or defend International Nickel—they have more means than I have, or perhaps even this government has, of presenting themselves—but, on the other hand, I look at statistics and they have got more safety engineers than the rest of the mining industry put together, underground and in their plants in the Sudbury area. Their safety record is one of the best in an industry in which the safety record is one of the best of any industry. I regretfully have come to the conclusion that perhaps the hon. member, but certainly the officials in the department, are being deliberately harassed in a manner that is leading far more to industrial disputes on an economic basis than they do in respect of safety matters.

But, regardless of that, it is still our duty and responsibility to check these things out, and this we are attempting to do to the best of our ability. We have increased the staff. The staff of safety engineers has been doubled in the Sudbury area over the last two years; there is a vacancy there right now. We have a hard time, quite frankly, getting mining engineers to work for the department in the Sudbury area because of the current conditions there. The reputation of this fight and this battle has spread right through the mining industry, right through the north. It is no secret. I am not saying that where there is smoke there is not fire; we have got to check these things out. But it is an unfortunate situation and I think in some of these respects the officials of local 6500 should be a trifle more responsible than they are being at the same time.

We will get after Inco; I have no fear of Inco in relation to telling them off or putting them in their proper place, any more than has the most junior engineer on the staff of the department. But I do want to say, with the greatest sincerity, that it is an unfortunate situation. It has a far greater relationship to the expiry of the collective bargaining agreement next year than it does to the safety matter.

Now in respect of the contractors; again looking at statistics, this worried me sick when I saw that this year alone the two contractors in the Sudbury area had three fatalities. Last year, I think they had one; the year before that they had two; and the year before that I do not think they had any. But, in any event, so far this year there is a terriffic increase.

And I have made my views known, both publicly and privately, as the hon. member knows, I think, to the mining companies in the Sudbury area respecting these two contractors. The chief engineer, Mr. Smith—sitting right in front of me here—has been up there just within the last ten days taking a better and closer look at the whole situation. It is not a good one; it is one that has us all worried. But then again, statistics do not tell you everything. I look at the three fatalities that have occurred up there. One was the result of a drunken truck driver running over somebody. Good heavens, this can happen and probably does right out here in Queen's Park Crescent more often than it does in the mines. Really, this has nothing to do with mining safety.

Number two was some guy who got on top of a waste chute, attempted to get the waste moving, and while he was standing on the waste chute, he indicated to the man who controls the chute at the bottom that the thing should be opened. He signalled, the thing opened—no more man standing on any waste chute. Again you can legislate all you want; you can have safety committees all you want—these things happen.

The third fatality, I have forgotten the details of it, but it was equally stupid and inane as those two were—if not more so. As I say, you can have all the standards, all the legislation you want. Nevertheless, the whole question of safety and a safety programme in respect of these contractors, is being looked at very carefully by the department. There have been great reforms just within the last two or three weeks that the hon. member may not be aware of. I am sorry I do not have the details of these but there have been safety programmes, crash programmes instituted, I understand within the last two weeks.

There has been the hiring of extra safety personnel, and I can assure you that the matter is not being taken lightly by the officials of the department and it is receiving very serious consideration.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1303.

Mr. Martel: Just a few comments. One is the safety record. As the Minister himself indicated, sometimes figures do not give everything that they should. Inco has a practice; the man gets injured, they bring him into work by cab and it does not show up on the safety record. How do you defend against this sort of practice, where men are brought in to sit in a dry for five or six weeks on end?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, my understanding of the workmen's compensation board regulations—I may be wrong—is that the injured party has a choice of medical attention at all times. This is a medical problem rather than a legal problem or a statutory problem. I know you have indicated this before to me in correspondence. We have attempted to check these things out. But it is the doctors, the medical practitioners, the certificate of approval that must be given for the return to work of anybody who is injured. Again, how far can you go in legislation? What reforms can there possibly be there? Are we going to set up a panel of 27 medical practitioners who look at everybody who has got a scratched finger? I mean you have got to be realistic about it as well.

Mr. Martel: I am not talking about a scratched finger; I am talking about broken legs—where the man is brought into the dry and he does not even show as a compensation case, in order to keep the rates down. This is going on continuously. They send cabs out to get them for five or six weeks on end. They even take them underground. I am not disagreeing with everything the Minister has said, but this bit of safety—certainly since I have become familiar with it—goes much beyond the fact that a contract is going to expire next year. This goes back years.

I mean my relationship with these people goes back long before this contract is going to expire. Some of this might be true, but at the same time I can talk about fatalities where a man does get killed and then they immediately set up a programme to teach the new job. Well, why do they not teach the man the job before the fatality occurs, as in the case of Thomson? They are now training very, very well—but why did they not do it before the man got killed?

This is my concern. I am not taking management's part against the union's part. I am saying these safety programmes should be in now, because if the union man violates a company rule, they have recourse to give him time off, and so on. But what recourse has the union got when the company violates safety? There is none, unless you are going to tie it up with a walkout, which would be ridiculous. I think the Minister is aware that some of these mining barons are not willing to give up their position of having the final say on safety.

Just before leaving, I would just like to show you how a safety meeting goes. Now if the union had the right to say to the company: "Something is dangerous, let us sit down and talk about it," and they sat down and discussed it, let us say, within 24 hours, you possibly could get away from it. But this thing can be stretched out for weeks before it is dealt with, and the procedure is as follows. Management does not recognize a committee at plant or department level. They will only recognize us as a group of employees. We must enter our initial complaint with our immediate supervisor. If he does not take action to correct the situation, then we go to a higher supervisor. We list our complaints, give a copy to the plant superintendent and then he grants us a meeting.

This may take two or three weeks, but the safety factor is something that could be imminent and in two or three weeks you could have someone dead. This is the area I am trying to get at—the fact that companies should be willing to sit down with the union to eliminate a problem when it exists. Not two or three weeks from now, or not because there is an inspection going to take place—but immediately. I think everyone will benefit—the company, the unions and the compensation rates will go down and productivity will be higher than it is at the present time. This is what I am interested in. I am not interested in internal disputes between the union and the company. I am interested in safety for the sake of the men involved.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1303.

The member for Sudbury.

Mr. Sopha: Some of the comments made by the Minister, Mr. Chairman, I heartily agree with, and would preface what I have to say by saying that the most disenchanting feature of the atmosphere of the community which I represent, is the constant warfare, the pall, the clash of two mighty economic organizations, that hangs over the community. I am told by university people, people of intellectual attainment who can observe phenomena like this, that upon arrival in Sudbury, the thing they noticed is this operation of the dialectic between the mighty union on the one side and the company on the other.

One gets very discouraged of course, that there seems to be no break—no sunrise on the horizon—that someday might be replaced by an attitude of co-operation in the development of that very rich and very gigantic ore body. But certainly, on the part of the union, one sees that local 6500 is managed by a mere fraction of its membership. Its membership is something like 18,000 in the local, and only two or three hundred people take an active interest in the affairs of that union. They have a very small group down there. I think it is correct to say they think they know the last word on safety. They are very activist in this regard, in addition to what the Minister mentioned. I take very great exception and I took the opportunity to make public comment about it, to the harassment of the coroners. They carried on a veritable programme of harassment of Dr. Pidutti, who has given many years of very valuable and selfless service to the people of the community and who does not relish the obligation cast upon him to conduct these inquests. But these union people led by Falkowski, McGuire and others, came to those coroner's inquisitions and wanted to turn them into a political forum or an agency for collective bargaining, and wanted to intervene and, in many respects, disrupt the activities of the coroner, and they have the disease of course, that is promoted by the member for High Park (Mr. Shulman), who would give coroners' inquisitions a place in the scheme of things far beyond what they have been in our legal system or ever were intended to be.

Now Dr. Pidutti, I am glad to say, has very stoutly resisted this, and the Attorney General very encouragingly came to his defence in the attitude that he took, as against such things; that they want to bring a tape recorder and set it up and make a record of the proceedings. People wanted to give evidence about the matter who were not present or did not work in the mine concerned but wanted to give general evidence about mining practices. Well that was far and away beyond what was ever intended that a coroner should do. On the other hand, it is fair to point out that the attitude of the company is very resistant and inflexible and the company over the years has always adopted the stance that you must not give in or make any concessions to the unions because it will be a sign of weakness if you concede that they have some rights in the nature of a partnership in the working of the ore body. So the struggle goes on, and where it ends I do not know. It is going to continue to be a characteristic of life in our community.

But I want to make a statement. I have made it here before. I think the member for Sudbury East goes too far in his criticisms and I say that my observation has told me that International Nickel is one of the most safety-conscious companies in the world. They make a fetish out of safety. They hire expert people to be in charge of their safety programmes. There is an adage around, that I never heard challenged, that they would take the whole crop of mining engineers that come out of all of the universities in Canada and would put them, not on production, but on safety and in the safety programme.

On the mining of their ore you hear jests. Let me illustrate it. A worker at Garson mines, who is a very dear friend of mine, worked there for many, many years—underground. One day they were putting on the storm windows and he puts up a scaffold there and he says, "well that ought to be safe enough for us to get at the storm windows. If I did that underground in the 1,700-foot level at Garson the foreman, the superintendent of the level and three engineers would have to come and check it before anybody was allowed to get up on it."

That reaction is multipled among the workers. Indeed, among some of the workers you often encounter the reaction that their opportunity to make bonus is inhibited because of the safety requirements. They do not let them turn themselves loose and work with all the vigour and lack of caution that they might otherwise do in order to make as much money as possible. It is said that if a man underground is reading a comic book the foreman will come along and suggest he get along and do some work. If he is caught without his safety glasses on he will get five days off. He is sent home immediately and required to stay home for five days.

I myself have been engaged in arbitrations in yesteryear on behalf of locals 6500 and 598 of mine, mill. Before that, when matters of safety formed the subject of the grievance, the company witnesses demonstrated, in their evidence, the strict adherence that the company requires to matters of safety.

Now what are the figures? I think it only fair to put them on the record in respect of fatalities. In the last five years. My source is The Department of Mines. (See appendix, page 5879.)

In 1963 in the whole mining industry there were 25 fatalities. Total number employed, 46,562. The rate per thousand was .54. In International Nickel at Sudbury and Port Colborne, there were 6 fataltiies out of 15,200 employees, making a rate per thousand of .39.

In 1964 there were 28 fatal accidents out of 47,309 employed and the rate per thousand was .59. There were two fatal injuries with Inco, out of 17,178 employed, for a rate per thousand employed of .12.

In 1965 there were 26 fatalities, with 48,975 employed, for a rate per thousand of .53. Inco had four fatalities out of 19,477 employed and the per thousand rate .21.

In 1966, there were 31 fatal injuries with 49,901 employed and rate per thousand of .62. Inco had seven fatal injuries, and 19,891 employed for .35 per thousand employees.

In 1967, there were 26 fatal injuries and 50,701 employed and the rate per thousand .51, and Inco had four fatalities out of 20,203 employed for a rate per thousand of .20.

In the last three years—with the exception of 1966—the rate for Inco has always been less than half of the national figure. In the last year, 1967, it is only 40 per cent of the total for the industry. The average for the 10 years from 1958 to 1967, was 33.2 fatal injuries per year, 51,905 persons employed; and the rate per thousand was .64. For Inco: 3.5 fatal injuries with an average of 18,295 employed, and the rate per thousand was .19 —which was just about something less than 30 per cent of the rate over the whole industry.

I think that considering the large numbers of people that are employed in Inco, collected in a relatively small area, as opposed to the very disparate nature of the mining industry—spread as it is over the land area that comprises something like 72 per cent of the total area of this province—it is quite remarkable that the rate is as low as it is, and I think that it is mute testimony to the great obsession with safety that the company has.

I thought that it was only fair to look into the statistics after I have sat here all year and listened to the member for Sudbury East ask these questions, and make these remarks, and see what they demonstrated. He can talk about workmen's compensation rates all he wants and I think that an investigation should be made into these very serious charges that he makes—that people are brought in taxis with broken legs. I think that Inco will be rather startled by those allegations and I hope that they make some sort of reply. I doubt that very much that it occurs.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): The practice occurs in the whole province.

Mr. Sopha: Here are the workmen's compensation rates for 1968 per $100 of payroll: Gold mining, $7; uranium, $5; and all other mining, $4; and nickel mining, $1.60; logging, $5.75; sawmills, $3.25; foundries, $3.25; construction, $3. The nickel mining at $1.60 is well below the average for all the other industries.

I doubt that the rate is a reflection of the things that the member for Sudbury East says and it would really surprise me that anything of that nature occurs. Of course I am aware that people are put on light duty. I do not see anything wrong with that when they are on process of recovery, they do it with a doctor's slip. I have had many clients ready for light duty go and get the doctor's slip, go back to work and draw their full pay.

But what my friend accuses—and he will correct me if I am wrong—is that the report to compensation is not made at all, and the people are just treated and brought in by taxi. He said that some of them were sent underground in that condition.

Well, I shall call Mr. J. A. Piggot up and ask him if that has ever been done. I would expect that he will—and he is a very fair and honourable man, manager of the works at Sudbury—certainly repudiate as nonsense any such form of suggestion.

Mr. Martel: I would ask the hon. member for Sudbury that he look into one case, and that is the case of Mr. Les Chayka, of Coniston. He can report back to the House for us.

Mr. Sopha: I know him. He was a bondsman of a client of mine.

Mr. Martel: Yes, that is right. You had better check into it.

Mr. Pilkey: It is no use talking to the management, get some employees and talk to them.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I do not like to become involved in dirt throwing, and I think that is what we have heard in the last five minutes—

Mr. Sopha: What did he say?

Mr. Jackson: I said that I did not like to become involved in dirt throwing, and that is what we have been hearing for the last few minutes. But when he talks about 200 people representing all the miners, how many people does he represent? Does he expect all these miners to come out to union meetings? I do not think that this is true.

But to get back to the vote. The member for Sudbury East has brought up the fact that sometimes the union goes to The Department of Mines, or the inspector. The Minister actually said that they harass the inspector, but previous to this he said that the company has the last word on safety.

Where does the union go when all of a sudden the company says: "This is how it is going to be." Does the union, when they think that there is a safety problem, just sit down and say "All right, let it be"?

I think that any representative has a duty to the people that he represents to fight right through to the last minute if he thinks he is right. If he thinks that he is wrong, then I hope that he is big enough to admit it. But, in many instances, I think that the mining inspector, when he looks into them, finds in many instances they are right.

If one man's life is saved—or a finger or an arm—then they have proved their worth. The fact that sometimes the mining inspector is caught in the middle, bothers me and everyone else, but as long as they are doing the job and creating an atmosphere of safety, then I think they should continue.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I do not mind the inspector being caught in the middle because that is what he is paid for. If he does not like it then he better get out of the civil service! But, on the other hand, there have been cases where there was deliberate harassment on petty matters that relate more to economic activity than to lack of safety.

The member for Timiskaming asked where the union should go if they think that there is a breach of the provisions of The Mining Act. They go to The Department of Mines if the complaint has been made through the regular channels and through the provision for it in the collective bargaining agreement with the company. But quite often, in these things the regular channels are leapfrogged, just as in the case of the Sudbury area with this one local. At least this is where most of the trouble occurs.

The union and anybody else in the province has got a right to expect that the law of the province will be carried out and will be fulfilled. That is why there are safety provisions in the Act. There has already been an acceptance by government of the responsibility that certain minimal standards —at least minimal standards, in some cases far surpassing minimal standards—have to be set out in statutory form. This has been done by our predecessors in this chamber.

If there is any breach of those standards obviously the one who wants to hear about it is the Minister of Mines, but in the case of some of these grey areas, I just wish in respect to safety matters in any event, the two parties could get together on some of them.

It is not a fight between union and management. Apart altogether from the human factor—as the member for Sudbury points out—it is an economic thing as well. It makes good sense on the budget sheet at the end of the year to have good safety practices. Therefore, from that point of view alone—and I am led to believe that this is not the factor—but from that factor alone, obviously the company is as concerned as are the people in their employ to make sure that there are decent safety conditions in the mines. My point is that too often, I suspect, the safety provisions and the safety procedures are being used for another purpose and this I do not like.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the later comments of the Minister in regard to this problem. I have raised as many years as I have been here the question of the rights of the miner as to his demotion because of physical incompetence. I was just searching a brief I had to find the section of The Mining Act that provides that the management has the sole right to demote and carry on their operation as they see fit.

This section of The Mining Act removes any right of the union through a collective agreement to represent the employee when he is demoted, taken off the job or reduced in pay, because the company, the management feels that there is some decrease in his physical ability to carry on a particular job.

Now no one argues about that kind of a policy if it is in regards to safety, but certainly if he wants to give more than lip service to his feeling of a greater degree of co-operation between the employee and the employer in regards to their rights, he should remove that section, and allow it to be a matter of collective bargaining.

The union's only wish is to have the right to know, and to assure the employee that he has been justifiably demoted because of a physical deficiency, and to convince him that he has been given justice and the move has been made for his own benefit and for the benefit of his fellow workmen. But when this decision is made solely by management without any recourse, I do not even believe that they have the right to see medical evidence as to why management have demoted them—because they are not in their opinion, able to carry on their particular occupation.

In some cases, it can be a drastic cut to the employee if he is removed from being a hoistman, which is one of the higher paid jobs, a very responsible job, and one in which the workman must have all of his faculties at all times. He has the right to know why and as to whether or not he can correct his ailment and then go back to his own job. But he has not got this right under any legislation. The Mining Act takes this right from him, even though he is paying union dues to a trade union—surely in this regard he needs representation.

Now this question has been raised year after year, and we have never had any success in having the Minister of Mines take a real look at this particular section. I have not got it in front of me but I am sure that the Minister's officials who have been around the years that I have been in the House, have heard the same story. He could do something towards developing a greater amount of co-operation in this regard—the mere fact that they have the right to know why they have been demoted and what they should do on their own behalf to correct their ailment so that they might go back into a higher paying job; not just letting management have the right to say: "In our opinion your physical capabilities have changed and we will have to change your job. We have that right under The Mining Act which supersedes your collective agreement".

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1303?

Does the Minister wish to comment further on that point?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, merely that we did have a discussion earlier on this point; perhaps the hon. member was not in the House, I do not know. But again you cannot suck and whistle at the same time. You have got to fix somebody with responsibility under the Act, and under the previous governments this responsibility has been fixed on the employer. And I am sure that the hon. member would not argue that that responsibility should be taken away from him. If he is responsible for safety in the Act in the mine, then obviously somebody has to judge the qualifications of these people. In the long run it has got to be the operator of the mine—it has got to be the management.

In any event, as I indicated before, the sections of the Act are being looked at by the departmental committee at the moment. There will, I hope, be a revision presented to the House perhaps in the next session, and your point of view will certainly receive consideration.

Votes 1303 and 1304 agreed to.

On vote 1305:

Mr. Knight: Just scanning the amount of money that has been appropriated to this particular vote—if we take a look at the figures in 1965—$25,000 was appropriated and nothing was spent. 1966/67, $29,000 was set aside, $227 were spent; in 1968 $29,000, and I see where the department expects to spend $30,000. Could the Minister explain why?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You are talking about vote 1305, sulphur fumes arbitrator. Well, this is really a bookkeeping entry. Yes, all the moneys are refunded by the companies concerned. This is set up by the department but the expenses are all paid by the companies involved at the end of the year. It has to be included in the estimates because the moneys do not come back from the companies until the end of the year. You get what I mean? In other words again, this is gross bookkeeping here. Gross amounts. These are the amounts that have to be shown in the estimates, but every cent of it does come back from the companies concerned at the end of the year.

Mr. Knight: Yes, but if you take 1965 there is nothing there. Does this mean that nothing went out, nothing was used, there was no activity in this area? There is not even a dollar indicated on the sheet.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, I do not quite understand. I am sorry, you have got me. My book only goes back to 1966.

Mr. Knight: In 1966, $227. It does not indicate very much activity.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well you have got me lost. Oh, I see, right! I have to rely on my experts here.

The money is refunded on a calendar year basis, and, of course, our estimates are dealing with the fiscal year basis. So do not ask me why, but there is some sort of gap there back a number of years ago where that occurred. That is the explanation that has just been given to me in any event. Does that meet with your satisfaction, or not?

Mr. Knight: Well, I am not very clear. I am somewhat confused now. I understand that we are dealing in an area of air pollution control inasmuch as it has to do with sulphur. Is that right?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No! Maybe I had better explain this. The sulphur fumes arbitrator, I wish he would come out here if he is here please. He is a departmental official whose duty it is to act as an arbitrator in the event that claims are made under The Sulphur Fumes Arbitration Act. Now, his duties have been expanded of late in that he now keeps, in relation to his duties, records of sulphur fumes content in the areas of the province where smelting takes place. But the whole expense of this office and his staff and these records and what-not is refunded at the end of the calendar year to the department.

This estimate is in here because in the interval between now and when we get the money back, obviously he likes to eat and he likes to get paid, so this is the way we do it. But his job essentially is to arbitrate claims under the Act that are made against the companies concerned where no settlement can be reached between the parties involved. In other words, if in the growing season there is a inversion or there is damage to crops, then the person who feels his crops have been damaged makes a claim to the arbitrator and a claim to the company concerned.

It is the duty of the arbitrator to go out and to inspect the area and keep in his files, and in his records, the extent of the damage and the extent of the fumes in the air that day to the best of his ability. At the end of the year, that is, at harvest time, the claimant and the company then get together. If they cannot reach a satisfactory settlement of the claim, then the arbitrator decides for them. All of his staff, including his salary, are paid for by the companies involved at the end of the year on a formula of which I do not have the details, but I think it is necessary for the knowledge of this House only to grasp the principle involved. Okay?

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I just have one question. In the case of some of the land deeds in the Sudbury area, there is a little rider attached to them that says that—

Mr. Chairman: This is 1306?

Mr. Jackson: Yes, it is.

Mr. Chairman: Well, we are dealing with vote 1305.

Mr. Jackson: Sulphur arbitration, this is what I am getting to.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Go ahead.

Mr. Jackson: It is a rider that is attached to some of these deeds and I do not have it here at the moment. But it states that the owner of the property cannot come back on the company involved for damage done by sulphur dioxide fumes.

Mr. Sopha: He is right. That was the Hepburn government.

Mr. Jackson: I am just wondering how this can be legal, that such a rider can be attached to any deed, where a man cannot come back and claim damages for a recurring situation. Would the Minister comment on this?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, I must admit I have not heard of this before, but I can well imagine that where service rights are owned by a company and they sell those rights, they can reserve whatever they want. If somebody is fool enough to purchase those rights, I suppose this is the situation, with those reservations in title, and it is not a clear title. There are those reservations in them. It is exactly the same as a land developer presumably selling new land, but reserving an easement to the Bell Telephone or the Hydro for a line over it or a sewer to the local municipality under it. I would suppose that this is the situation.

Now, as I say, I have not heard of this before, but I am informed that in the days of the Hepburn government this was legalized by an Act in the Legislature of that government. It would seem strange to me—and this is right off the top of my head—that private covenants or private conditions could override a matter of public policy. But apparently this was done. Let me take a look at this. It is the first time it has been brought to my attention, so let me take a look at it.

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to give the Minister a copy of this.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: All right!

Mr. Jackson: And I would just like to say that an easement across a piece of property for a sewer or a hydro line is something you can put your finger on. You know it is there and you have to allow for it. But fumes that are in the air you do not see. Most people moving into the area do not grasp the significance of it. If the Minister is going to look into it, I urge him God speed. If something can be done, it should be done as quickly as possible.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, on this point, I have looked into this and I had hoped it was something I could blame this government for. To my dismay I discovered that in 1942 by order-in-council of that previous government it was laid down that all land, all Crown lands after that date in the Sudbury area, contain a sulphur fumes easement and are not subject to any action for damages and they are not amenable to sulphur fumes arbitration. And on the patents issued by the Crown since that time, that easement is included.

Mr. MacDonald: That government was a little more susceptible to Inco pressure—

Mr. Jackson: Mr. Chairman, this makes it that much worse. It compounds doing it. I think this department should take a very serious look at it.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): I would like to try for my QC on that.

Mr. J. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1305, would the Minister tell me how many notices of arbitration the arbitrator would receive in, say, the last year?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: In the last three years I do not think there have been any arbitrations. There have been claims, but no arbitration. In other words, the parties themselves have come to an amicable, presumably, an amicable settlement and there have been no arbitrations.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, I wanted to know how many notices of claims.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Notices of claims—20 to 30 a year, I am told.

Mr. J. Renwick: Then could the Minister tell me from what areas of the province they come?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Yes, they come from the Sudbury area, the Wawa area and that is all.

Mr. J. Renwick: Are any claims subject to arbitration under this Act from the Erco plant—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: From the what plant?

Mr. J. Renwick: The Erco plant in Haldimand-Norfolk?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, that is not sulphur, is it?

Mr. J. Renwick: There are no sulphur fumes from that.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I may be wrong, but I do not think there are sulphur fumes. The concern there is not sulphur fumes.

Mr. J. Renwick: Well, my last concern is that for some reason or other, and I recall asking the Minister of Health about this when The Air Pollution Control Act was passed. One section of that Act, which is the elaborate section concerning a person complaining about air pollution causing damage, outlines the procedure which is to be followed to a board of negotiations and so on. The Act specifically, by its terms for some reason or other, exempted any of the claims which should be dealt with under The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act. The Minister at that time indicated that that was only for the purpose of his department taking over the field of air pollution and that in due course The Damage by Fumes Arbitration Act would be done away with and The Department of Health would take it over. Is that the Minister's understanding of what will take place?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, I would not want to make as definite a statement as that, but I can say to the member that it is the wish of both the Minister of Mines and the Minister of Health that if and when we can ever close these sessions off, we will get together to discuss this whole matter, because there is a bit of an anomaly here.

If government policy is that all matters of air pollution should be under The Department of Health, perhaps it is still a hangover. On the other hand there are special considerations involved in the function of this particular thing. All I can undertake to the hon. member is that if we can ever end up these sessions—

Mr. J. Renwick: I think we will.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You think we will?

Mr. J. Renwick: This is part of the operation of government you know. This assembly is not something designed to interfere with your work.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: My worry is the time element only. I know the hon. member may be super-human, but for Ministers of the Crown—in any event, there still are only seven days a week and 24 hours a day; this is one matter of many, however, that has been postponed until the end of this current session.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, the point I wanted to raise has been partly considered. I wanted to ask what, if any, co-ordination there was between the operation of this Act and the general move into coping with air pollution through The Department of Health. But the Minister has indicated that when the session is over he is going to sit down and see if there should not be a co-ordination instead of this departmentalized approach. But when he does, there are a couple of points on which I must say I have rather mixed feelings. They may not be consistent, but if the Minister is reviewing it, let me present some of the contradictory feelings.

One, with regard to the operation of this Act, I think there is a bit of a two-sided feature in it, that the company is so intimately involved, and at the end of the year they compensate anything that happens to go out. I remember raising this with one of the Minister's predecessors and he conceded, this is back some years ago, that it might be better that it be handled cleanly by the government. Then, if they wanted to bill on a regular fashion for fumes and their damages, or on some ad hoc fashion in accordance with the claims that were made during that year at the end of each year.

However, on the other side of the picture, now that we are moving into coping with pollution and fume damages, I think it is a legitimate proposition that the company that causes the damage should have to foot the bill. I think that we should watch that we not move into some procedure whereby this becomes, in effect, a public responsibility to compensate for that damage. And, even if one does get a more co-ordinated approach between what is happening here and is happening to the Minister of Health, and even if one gets a tribunal that is more directly in the government instead of operating on the doorsteps of the company, and in the minds of some perhaps they were erroneously subject to pressures from the company to keep the claims down because they have got to pay the bill at the end of the year.

I still think that we have got to have some arrangement whereby the industry causing the damage has got to pay the bill. And that might be an incentive for them to clean up fumes that have been causing damages for many a year, in many other parts of the province, such as Erco. I leave it to the Minister in his contemplations following the close of the session.

Vote 1305 agreed to.

On vote 1306:

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say to the Minister in respect of this vote that I hope that the display, in relation to the staking of the land that the department threw open in Elliot Lake, is the last circus-like activity that we encounter in that way. I would think, from following it, that the highly-idealistic conception of the small prospector did not materialize in the form of many participants of that type of creature in that staking rush, carried on under the aegis of the Minister.

One got the impression that in end the very large group of well-heeled people, using helicopters, snowmobiles, and all sorts of other mechanical devices, ended up with the lion's share of the land. I do not believe that The Department of Mines is in the entertainment business. And whereas it might have been a provision and quite a fiesta with wide publicity, including pictures of the Minister and so on, and a creation of a somewhat Robert Service atmosphere, including the shooting of Dan McGrew, I think that ought to be replaced, and this is the way I would replace it.

If The Department of Mines wants to take this province seriously—I think this province ought to be taken seriously—that is why I reject remarks like that of the Minister of Trade and Development that "you cannot eat independence." I take the country seriously.

If they think there is an ore-building potential north of Elliot Lake, then they can do one of two things which I would like to advocate. They can set up a Crown corporation such as the government of Quebec has done and start to exploit that area. If they do not like that, if that is too radical an innovation, the Minister appears not to like it, he did not show any enthusiasm for the precedent set by the government of Quebec; then the second alternative I advocate is that they approach someone or some group of companies. No matter how much idealism we give to the small prospector here, the facts of life will be that if there is ore in the ground, it will be exploited by people who have an accumulation of capital. And what is more important than the capital, of course, will be the know-how, the technology, in its development. If they approach one or more groups of people from the point of view that we will lease this area to you, provided that the people of Ontario get in on the action. And what is the action for the people of Ontario? Well, the economists can figure out an appropriate percentage of the net profits from the development, whether it be 10 per cent—I would hate to think it would be less than 10—15 per cent, 25 per cent, of the net profits.

It is about time we started to chart new paths in this province. And we had a return in direct fashion from the economic experience of development of ore bodies. I do not think that is too socialistic a creed to promote in the modern age. And I would certainly be all for some sort of partnership between the public and the private developers.

We will accord the private developers the privilege of putting up the cash and providing the know-how. But, after all, we are sacrificing a great deal too. We are giving them a piece of land that may turn out to have high ore-bearing potential, such as Texas Gulf. I assume that the geologists in the department, before this foolishness started at Elliot Lake, had looked at this piece of ground and had determined that its potential was high. If they did not, then the whole exercise was ludicrous. If they did not start from that premise that it was potential ore-bearing land.

But, as it turned out, it does not treat the resources of this country seriously. To get all the Metro press up there! I will bet they thought it was a great frolic, to go into the north. They got their hip rubber boots on, and the parkas, and I hope took very expensive whisky with them, and went up there. We have seen them over the years come up, people from Toronto like that. They think it is a great venture. And then the Minister of Mines arrived on the scene! Well, you would think it was a re-enactment of the shooting of Dan McGrew, the whole business.

I looked at it with a good deal of horror because the government of Ontario is not in the entertainment business. It is in far more serious business than that. And I do not see that our interests were promoted at all with people racing around those northern woods in snowmobiles and helicopters trying to outdo each other in the staking of claims. And I want to put what I have said in the right of this fact, that after Texas Gulf discovered the Kidd Creek deposit, and we remember with a good deal of dismay the immense amount of staking that took place in the surrounding terrain to Texas Gulf. I think I am correct, and I will be hastily put straight if I am not, there was not one ore-producing property, not one other, ever emerged in that area other than the Texas Gulf find. It has got the one and only. They staked for miles around there, and the result was the biggest crap game in town, down here on Bay Street. The Toronto stock exchange is the name it goes under. It did a tremendous business as a result of that staking, and stocks skyrocketed to new highs and fell to the depressive lows. Fortunes were made and lost, but not one other ore-bearing piece of land, other than the Texas Gulf find, was found in the whole area.

Well, that demonstrates that all this activity, presided over by the Minister of Mines at Elliot Lake, and him being the chief major domo of the circus that went on, a lot of it was pointless. Because we know, living in the north, that they were out seeking moose pasture, a lot of them. The only benefit they get out of staking a lot of that ground would be the fresh air and the exercise that involved in going around and staking.

But, Mr. Chairman, they do not ever amount to anything and I have not heard, of course, that any potential mines are emerging from that. But I just asked the Minister to get away from frivolity and if this department feels it has some land that might be developed, then I ask that my suggestion, at least be considered. That it be put out on a profit sharing basis.

And it is a funny thing, of course, Mr. Chairman, that the government in Canada, that is considered to be farthest to the right on the political spectrum, the Social Credit government of Alberta, is the one that has adopted this scheme and developed it to its highest point in the oil bearing lands—that sea of oil that underlies the province of Alberta. And of course has carried on a joint profit partnership venture with developers that have come in there and the people of Alberta have benefited immensely from the royalties that pour into the public treasury because of the partnership. Now, if the Social Credit party can exploit that to a high development in Alberta, can it be so socialistic a notion to promote that we might do it in Ontario?

Mr. Chairman: Vote 1306?

The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I return to the question of ACR that I was going to raise earlier. I am a little curious as to what exactly the position is at the moment. My colleague from Thunder Bay asked a question, and the amount of money that was collected in mineral taxes was a very small amount. Now the situation, as I understand it, is that if land is held and a land tax is paid, then the mineral tax does not have to be paid; but if the licensee sells the surface rights then he becomes liable for mineral tax; and if he retains the mineral rights it becomes liable to the mineral tax.

Now inadvertently, back about 1952 or 1953, some clerk discovered that the ACR had been selling off the land. My recollection was of hundreds of thousands of acres during the years, back over decades, but they had never been paying any mineral taxes, and that the accumulated bill was in the range of some millions of dollars. When the matter was raised with the then Premier, Mr. Frost, he agreed to give them time to decide whether or not they wanted to retain the land and explore for mineral deposits, or return it to the Crown.

This was perhaps the most appropriate occasion for the use of that term, "in the fullness of time", because they were given no less than about 13 or 14 years before they made up their minds what, if anything, they would return. And they began to return, some two or three years ago, great townships, great areas. But my question to the Minister is how much of the land do they now hold? Second, how much of it are they paying land tax on? And third, how much have they sold of the surface rights and, therefore, are they liable for mineral tax?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, I can only tell you that my understanding is, because the records of our department do not show it, of course, that land tax is being paid on approximately 38 townships, something like that.

Mr. Stokes: That is 850,000 acres.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, the figure that sticks in my mind, somehow or other, is 38 townships. Now there has been no separation there, presumably, of the mineral rights from the surface rights, so that we are not getting anything as far as the tax rolls in our department are concerned, from those 38 townships. On the other hand there are a number of acres in which either there are mining activities being carried on, or there has been a separation of the mineral rights from the surface, or the lands have been granted as mining lands, or they are being held as mining lands, and on this there are approximately only 1,200 acres. So, as far as this department is concerned, there are, on the mining tax rolls in the name of Algoma Central, only 1,200 acres.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister says that all of the land that was in the in-between category, being given time by the government to decide whether or not they were going to hand it back has been cleared up. Because when they started, about two or three years ago, and handed back about half a dozen townships, there was one announcement from your immediate predecessor of a handback of something like six or eight townships at a single time, and there was the rider that there were a few more townships that they were giving further consideration to. Now my point is, have they been handed back completely, or are a few of them still under consideration?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am advised that they have been handed back.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, am I to understand they do not, in fact, pay a mining tax on any of the remaining 800,000 acres? Could an individual go in there and stake it, if they do not hold the mining rights and do not in fact pay a mining tax? Could any individual go in there and stake on it?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I am told that Algoma Central received this in some form of special grant away back. Because they pay the provincial land tax, then they own both the surface and the mineral rights.

Mr. Stokes: Why do they not pay taxes?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Because they are paying land tax; they do not have to pay the mining tax if it is not being held for mining purposes.

Mr. MacDonald: That was part of the special Hepburn deal was it not?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I do not know the history of it. I am not trying to evade the question, I just do not know.

An hon. member: Say it was.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: I will say it was, anyway.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Knight: In the course of my opening remarks, Mr. Chairman, to the Minister, I suggested among the incentives I thought should be offered to the prospector, a reduction in the fee for claims filing of the 18 claims filed, from $10 to $5. I suggested that if a prospector files for his maximum for the year, 90 claims, it would amount to about $900 which is an awful lot of money to be tied up. I do not think I received any reaction from the Minister for that idea. I wonder if he could give me a reaction to it now, and I have another question after I get his answer.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, there has been no great demand from the industry itself. I am told that this was not a recommendation of successive select committees. As far as I know, there had been no pressures brought to bear on the department to have this $10 fee reduced, and quite frankly in this day and age of inflation, it does not seem to me that it is an exorbitant amount for people to obtain exclusive rights to what we all agree is an asset belonging to the people.

Mr. Knight: The other question I would like to ask on behalf of the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid), who, I understand, is on his way here by train and had been expected about now. He has received reports of concern from people in his area that the Fort Frances recording office may be phased out. Now, I am given to understand that there has been no definite announcement from the department that they plan to do this, but the word is in the wind. Subsequently, on enquiring of some of my sources in the north, a prospector who is very interested in this sort of thing, and has been active in the executive of the northwestern Ontario prospectors association, told me that, indeed, everyone up there is concerned that this office may be closed, and to use his words: "There just is not any reason whatsoever why it should be closed. As a matter of fact, instead of closing it, the department should be spending more money and expanding it." What I would like to know is what revenue was received through the Fort Frances recording office last year, as opposed to the cost of operation?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, if no reason has filtered through to this mythical citizen in Fort Frances, I can assure you that it is not my fault, because I have been up there, and we have scheduled a number of public meetings about it, and had town hall meetings in the old tradition about it, at which the Minister has been the target for all sorts of things. But I think that this is how it has got to operate.

Frankly, I would like to make sure of expansion needs in the department, because I want to make sure that I can convince my colleagues in the Cabinet, as well as the members of the House, and especially the members of the Treasury board and the Provincial Treasurer, so that when I go to them to ask for more money to be spent in this Department of Mines in the future, I can convince them that the Ontario taxpayer gets his buck's value for every tax buck paid.

Now we have a mining recorder's office here, which is by far the lowest in the amount of work done, claims registered and the amount of revenue produced. It is by far the lowest and I do not think that there is a member in this House that would try to claim that Fort Frances is a mining town. It is not, let us face it. Now, this whole situation arises out of a recommendation, again of the 1966 select committee report on mining, which indicated that there should be a consolidation of all the services of the department in various places. In other words, instead of having a geologist out this way, and the mining recorder down here, and the engineer out there, they should be brought together. In all cases, a mining recorder's office, and a geologist, if economically feasible, should be combined where somebody who requires the services of either of them should be able to find them. Now, by no stretch of the imagination as Minister of Mines, can I come to this Legislature and even attempt to convince you that we should put a resident geologist in Fort Frances. There is just not the work there for a resident geologist.

If we are going to tie the two together, then—as a tri-party committee has recommended—we have got to do one of two things. Either we have got to put a resident geologist in there—which means a lot of extra expense—or we have got to pull out the mining recorder. Now, as I say, the decision has not finally been made, and this is one of the things that I have got to buckle down to and make a decision as soon as the session is over.

Fort Frances, in 1966, had 1,186 claims registered. Let us take a look at some of the others. In the Porcupine office, 5,724; and in the Sudbury one, 5,610; in Sault Ste. Marie, 5,502; and in the Port Arthur office, 5,707. In 1966 in Fort Frances there were less than 1,200 claims. The mining recorder there, who is a very able and conscientious man who is required within the department for other duties if we can possibly pull him out of there, probably does not know what to do with himself half the time. There is just not enough work involved to keep the mining recorder and the one member of his staff there.

Now surely the economy of the Fort Frances area is not going to teeter on the edge of bankruptcy because we pull two civil servants out of there. The value of the claims in 1966 was $15,811.94 in the Fort Frances area. This compares with Red Lake at almost $80,000; Port Arthur $91,000; the Soo, $80,000; Sudbury, $85,000. There is just no comparison. As I say, I want to expand some of these services and make sure that this department, in the words of the member for Sudbury, is "where the action is." To convince my colleagues on the Treasury board that the services of The Department of Mines should be available where they are required, I really do not see how in all responsibility I can come to the House and to the Treasury board, and convince them of this when we have such a glaring example of a waste of taxpayers' money.

So, as I say, the decision has not been made yet. But it has got to be made, and it is something that I have been putting to the back of my mind. But Fort Frances is not the only one. There are others, and we are reviewing all of these offices, and their boundaries, and the function of their people. This is something that has got to be done, that is all. You ask me how much the costs were. The salaries in the Fort Frances recording office for 1967 were $11,920. There were miscellaneous expenses of $280, which makes a grand total of $12,200. The revenue for the last fiscal year was just under $13,000, so it was just barely breaking even. Included in this was no direct charge for the rent at all, as the recording office is in the courthouse. From an economic point of view, and just from a general use point of view, something has got to be done soon.

Mr. Knight: Well, from the Minister's remarks I would gather that the department has pretty well written the Fort Frances area off as a good mining area.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No, the record in the division would be transferred to Kenora, if the decision is made. I will be perfectly frank with you—I do not want to be the superintendent over a declining department either. It is against my grain to close any office anywhere in the department, and I am doing my darnedest to find other ways to utilize the space and staff. So far, to be frank, I have not come up with an answer. But by no means will it mean destroying the records, and closing the place up. All of the province has to be covered in a recording division somewhere, and the records have to be available.

It may be that the boundaries would be redrawn and part of the records would be available at the Lakehead office, and the balance at the Kenora office. But this is a decision that is not final. I have been up there, and pleaded with them to come up with suggestions. But all I get is this great fear that the office will close down. I really do not believe that it can be justified to leave it open.

Mr. Knight: Well, just one more question in this respect. Some of the people I spoke to were by phone. That is not specifically in my riding, but I did check into it a bit, and they tell me that you, or some representatives from your department were supposed to attend a meeting and they did not go. There was also some kind of a scheduled meeting with the representatives from the prospectors' association and a few others in the area and that they were quite disappointed that you did not meet with them.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Mr. Chairman, I have been doing a lot of travelling around, and we were not able to get into Manitouwadge last week because of fog conditions. But although we have been disappointed in one or two of the other places that we have tried to reach, the Lakehead has not been one of those. I got a very irate letter just last week from some guy in the Lakehead who was crabbing about the Fort Frances office being closed, and why in the world would I not appear at the Lakehead to gather the opinion of the local people about it.

Of course this is a good two months after I had already been up in Fort Frances canvassing them and speaking to them about it. In any event, I do not think a reply has gone out to that gentleman yet because I have been waiting for my temper to cool, but if that is what is being referred to why—

Mr. Sopha: One of the requirements of a Minister is to keep his cool.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Oh no, I do not agree with that at all.

Vote 1306 agreed to.

On vote 1307:

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, on vote 1307 on mining access roads. A short while ago a news release appeared in the paper where some $400,000 was being spent in access roads in northern Ontario. One was an extension to Highway 808 from a point some 52 miles north of central Patricia for a distance of—I think it was something like 9 miles. The contract was in the neighbourhood of $200,000. The other one was an extension to—I believe it was Highway 125 from Balmertown, representing another 12 miles and an expenditure of close to $200,000. I understand the Minister, Mr. Chairman, is the chairman of the access roads committee. I was just wondering, how do you determine where the access roads are going to be built? What kind of an overall plan do you have for opening up the north?

Now I do not object to access roads. As a matter of fact, I have been advocating more of them. But I was just wondering what kind of an overall programme you have in your interdepartmental committee? I understand there are four or five Cabinet Ministers involved in this. What kind of an overall plan have you? What kind of a yardstick do you use?

I have one other question I would like to ask you in connection with access roads. They are not really access roads, but I understand as a result of Bill 118 you will be taking over forest roads which I hope would include access to mining sites, and I would just like to get the Minister to confirm those two things.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Well, the whole concept of this thing is just in the process of being changed. We are not even going to call it a mining access roads committee, from now on it is going to be roads to resources. We are trying to fill a gap which—

Mr. Sopha: Who is that—Diefenbaker?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: That is right. We are trying to fill a gap caused when the federal government just pulled the rug out from under all the provincial governments a couple of years ago with no advance warning at all. This left provincial governments right across the country holding the darn bag, but in any event the situation here simply is this: The Minister of Mines is the chairman of the committee attempting to co-ordinate all of these resource roads in the north. Whether they be for mining purposes, for tourist purposes, for forestry purposes, timber access roads, or whatnot, we are trying to co-ordinate all of these in the hands of a Cabinet committee and the Cabinet committee is named the northern Ontario roads to resources committee.

Again we are groping with the terms of reference. It may be that we will include in here a very close liaison with The Department of Transport respecting the new air strip programme. I also want to bring in the Hydro because they do build an awful lot of roads in the north too. But for the first time out of this, I hope, will come a co-ordinated building programme for these resource roads right through the north.

I just wish we had a reflector here to show a map of northern Ontario—this is an exciting thing; this thing is going to go up from both sides, from Pickle Crow on the one side and from Red Lake on the other, right up to Lingman Lake. It should open up that whole northwest—and when I talk about the northwest in this concept I am not talking about Fort Frances and Rainy River and whatnot, this is the real northwest, far north of Big Trout.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the timetable?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: The timetable is something again that we are having a look at. I am not satisfied that we are doing enough on this. On the Pickle Crow side we are about 68 miles north of Pickle Crow; we are ten miles north of Red Lake at Balmertown, or we will be this fall on the one side, but this is really something.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the gap?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Two hundred and sixty-five miles. There are untold mineral resources up there. We were talking about iron ore before. There are two of the largest low-grade iron ore developments in Ontario lying up there to be tapped.

Mr. Stokes: Are you going to attempt to include the Indian reservations that would have easy access to the outside—

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: Anything that is there we will try to connect it, but this is something else too. For the first time the geological branch of The Department of Mines has been involved in this thing and to cut costs we are heading for moraine land and gravel deposits and whatnot, and we are trying to get away from expensive rock cuts. This is not going to produce the best road in the world, but again we feel we are going to get a buck's value for any buck spent on it.

Mr. MacDonald: Ten years from now The Department of Highways will rebuild them anyway.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: You are quite right, probably so, and let us hope so; but at least the purpose of this is to open up an area. We are not sure what is there, but the requirements that we have are now studies from each of the departments involved.

We have a study of the general economic needs of the area from the provincial economist; we have a report from The Department of Mines; we have a report from The Department of Lands and Forests; we have a report from The Department of Tourism and Information; and as I say once we get the thing rolling I hope we will have very close liaison with The Department of Transport and Hydro as well, so that it is a pretty co-ordinated thing and I hope it is going to work.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Cochrane South.

Mr. Ferrier: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could ask the Minister if there is any money in this vote allotted to bridging the Smooth Rock Falls and Timmins area? Is there any money allotted for that?

Hon. A. F. Lawrence: No.

Vote 1307 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates for The Department of Mines.

It being 6:00 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF CIVIL SERVICE

Hon. C. S. MacNaughton (Provincial Treasurer): Well, Mr. Chairman, in keeping with the time and the temperature—very brief remarks: This year marks the 50th anniversary of the establishment of a civil service commission in Ontario. The occasion draws attention to the success of this jurisdiction, during the 12 administrations of the past half-century, in developing a progressive employment programme for the public service of Ontario.

The years since the establishment of the commission, which recommends our personnel policies, have seen far-reaching changes, not only in conditions of government employment but also in the way of life for the people of this province. The active and enlarging role of The Department of Civil Service, which ensures the application of the merit principle in employment and the well-being of all members of the public service, reflects directly the rising level of activity and service of government in general.

Every government jurisdiction now recognizes that the process of public administration has reached a degree of complexity requiring the employment of highly skilled and exceptionally motivated body of men and women. Improved management must be applied in carrying out the many activities of the government if the people of this province are to receive, with efficiency and economy, the benefits provided by this Legislature.

The public service of Ontario must attract and retain well-qualified personnel. It must provide the opportunity and atmosphere for legitimate career aspirations. It must maintain a just and equitable system of rewards. The government is in competition, in every sense, with private industry for the cream of the crop in virtually every specialty and skill to ensure that the programmes and policies of this Legislature are administered effectively. These estimates must be viewed in that perspective.

Among the new developments in the department is the establishment of a programme of French language training in recognition of the government's desire to implement recommendations of the first volume of the report of the Royal commission on bilingualism and biculturism.

I am pleased to report to the committee that French language training is now available to senior personnel in the public service, as well as those in local offices, where there is regular contact with French-speaking citizens seeking government services.

Many of the members, Mr. Chairman, will be aware of the progress of French language instruction for the legislators of this House, which is part of our bilingual programme. They have taken advantage of this service and can evaluate it from personal experience. I can assure the members that a continuation of the present courses will be offered when the next session of this Legislature is held. In addition, the department is canvassing members on the feasibility of an immersion-type programme at some suitable time between sessions perhaps in the coming fall.

Another successful innovation has been the introduction of a temporary help agency to provide for short-term and casual employment. This temporary help programme creates a pool of potential permanent employees to fill vacancies as they arise. Temporary help personnel are required to meet the standards of the civil service and, when the opportunity develops, they can step directly into permanent positions.

Among other highlights of the department's efforts to improve its service to the government and to the public service are several organizational changes. The former personnel research branch has been amalgamated with staff development to bring these two services into closer relationship under a single director. The administrative services branch has been reduced in numbers with the establishment of a management information service which is the nerve centre for data on all personnel in the public service.

The increase in size and complexity of the public service is reflected throughout the department, whose operations I will review briefly for the committee. The pay and classification standards branch carries out continuous studies toward ensuring equal pay for equal work in all departments and rates of remuneration comparable to those provided in the community. It must plan future requirements and study new developments in the field of job evaluation.

The demands upon its pay research activities, which provide comprehensive salary recommendations to both the Treasury board and the civil service commission, continue to escalate in both volume and quality.

The recruitment branch faces major pressures in attracting the special skills required for more sophisticated government operations. It must and does maintain a productive contact with universities, community colleges and secondary school systems to secure a continuous flow of graduates from these institutions for the public service. At the same time, the government recognizes the value of stability and experience by hiring a significant percentage of mature people with proven ability.

These activities require a constant approach to the public through institutional advertising, special publications for graduates and the specific position advertising which appears in the newspapers from day to day.

The staff development and research branch also helps to develop the personnel resources required by government through its training programmes. We are now in a position to compete with other major employers in offering the opportunities and facilities for job training and career development. Employees can upgrade their qualifications through in-service courses, or at universities and other post-secondary institutions for which bursaries are provided. This branch also develops and operates special courses directed toward specific fields such as systems and procedures or data processing. The senior officers' courses continue to be quite effective and attract participants from many other Canadian jurisdictions.

By incorporating personnel research into this area, we can assess the value of different types of training in terms of improved performance. This unit continues its psychological research into personnel management to assist in the identification of problems in morale, turnover, work output and interpersonal relations. It is instrumental in developing techniques for assessing qualifications of employment and it contributes substantially toward the continuous examination of the validity of position qualifications.

The administrative services branch now provides both the housekeeping facilities for the department and the elaborate filing system required for adequate personnel records of the entire public service. The staff has established an excellent record for speed and accuracy in processing and certifying for the commission all personnel transactions, which currently average about 2,500 a week.

The management information service logs all personnel transactions through data processing equipment to furnish management with vital information on employment and staffing trends, career histories, turnover statistics and other relevant data. This small section has established an effective relationship with the large-scale computer operations of The Department of Highways in the interests of avoiding duplication of facilities and staff.

The planning and audit branch has received many favourable reports from departmental management in its efforts to improve utilization of personnel resources and to ensure application of personnel policies. Its documented recommendations have led to significant improvements in organization, staffing and procedure. The audit group, established as a separate branch last year, is now fully functional and has conducted outside audits across the province where the statutory functions of the commission must be delegated to local departmental authorities.

The Ontario joint council, civil service arbitration board and grievance board render outstanding service to the people of Ontario in assuring just conditions of employment in the public service. While the government must maintain equitable pay and employment standards, it must also guard against inflationary settlements which could be detrimental to the provincial economy. We are fortunate in Ontario that employment negotiations are resolved fairly and realistically.

It is gratifying to me to announce that the publications branch recently won recognition from the association of industrial editors of Canada by placing second in a nation-wide competition for excellence in personnel publications. Topic magazine and Topic Bulletin keep our employees informed of government activities in general, and on specific developments in personnel policy and practice. In addition, the branch prepares a number of other publications pertinent to the work of the department, as well as the brochures required for recruitment and staff development activities.

The employee services branch, as I explained last year, is a comparatively new venture directed to the assistance of personnel who develop behavioural problems, particularly in the field of alcoholism. I must acknowledge the considerable help that has been provided in this field by the advisory committee which includes representatives from the alcoholism and drug addiction foundation, The Ontario Department of Health, the civil service association of Ontario and senior officers from a number of departments.

Mr. Chairman, this is a very cursory review of the various programmes which come under the responsibility of the civil service commission and The Department of Civil Service. A much more comprehensive outline is available in the annual report of the department, which was tabled this week and has been distributed to the hon. members. It provides a significant statistical breakdown on the public service which will assist the members in assessing the personnel policies of the Ontario government as they are administered by this commission and this department.

Mr. H. Edighoffer (Perth): Mr. Chairman, I am happy to have been given this opportunity to make a few comments on The Department of Civil Service. As a new member, I am of course very happy to be able to comment on this, its 50th anniversary.

Also, I might add that as my riding is next door to the riding of the Provincial Treasurer, I feel that I am a neighbour to the man responsible for this department, and I welcome this opportunity to try to keep track of my neighbour.

Having been involved in a small private business for some years, I feel it has some usefulness when discussing this department, which is the largest employer in Ontario, because private business, no matter what size, when it is free and competitive, has features that promote efficiency and reduce waste. But government operations often achieve quite the opposite because there is no profit motive involved in the operation of governments; they frequently lose sight of the efficient operation.

As this is my first year in the House, I was very anxious to see the 1967 civil service report. I have been checking for the last month to see if it had been completed, and I found that it was, but that it could not be distributed until it was tabled in the House. I wonder why the Minister could not have approved its distribution before yesterday, and I would appreciate hearing the reason sometime during the estimates.

Mr. Chairman, the time for a further review of the operation of the Ontario civil service is surely upon us. Today, the rapid pace of change is such that recommendations made only a few years ago are invalid. I am thinking particularly of the increasing use of the computer for cost/benefit analysis and planning/programming/budgeting systems. We are going to be forced into the closest co-operation with the federal government in many areas.

It is clear from recent conferences, such as the Minister's information systems committee conference at the Constellation hotel on May 28 and 29 that everyone is most anxious to start off on the right foot, and to bring in systems that are in every way compatible with each other.

It seems to be essential, in this new climate, for a regular course of professional updating to be provided for all members of the civil service. It is no longer possible for a person to expect to be appointed, at an early age, and to proceed through the service, as a career civil servant, without continuously refreshing, not only his knowledge of his immediate responsibilities and how they are being handled in other jurisdictions, but also his whole approach to the business of being a civil servant, his relationship with the public, accepted limitations on his freedom to initiate policy, to make statements to the press and so on.

All these things have changed over the years, and in this session we have seen more than one Deputy Minister making policy "on the spot" as it were, in a press conference. I am not suggesting that all these changes are bad, but I sometimes feel that we must constantly remind those who support our efforts that it is the elected representatives of the people who make policy, and they who are charged with implementing it.

Because I attach so much importance to the esprit de corps of the regular civil servant, I find myself questioning very seriously the wisdom of the government in placing so much reliance on temporary help services. I can appreciate that there will be occasions when work "peaks" for short periods, and in these circumstances it would be unwise to retain a larger staff than is necessary for several months of slack work, and to get into all the ramifications of insurance and pension problems.

But it is one thing to use manpower and overload services in this way and quite another to develop a pattern of increasing and regular reliance on such agencies. In effect, we could be seeing an irresponsible echelon within the regular framework of the responsible service. And we are seeing scores of thousands of dollars of public funds being funnelled into this lucrative private field.

The abuse of temporary help occurs in other ways, as the member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) pointed out earlier this year when The Highways Department estimates were under discussion. People have been hired for temporary road work season after season for a lengthy time without benefit of pension rights or security of any kind. This particular system further lends itself to political favouritism and patronage of the worst kind, and we want to see it ended. It represents nothing less than feudalism surviving into this modern age.

Now, Mr. Chairman, returning to regular hiring, collective bargaining has placed an increased emphasis on good pay research and a sound classification plan. Such a plan must not be rigid. It must be so flexible, in fact, that job descriptions can be revised and updated to keep pace with the changing nature of work, without a major upheaval.

Two years ago, I noted, the then Treasurer, the hon. J. N. Allan, said, and I quote from Hansard, June 2, 1966, page 4233:

> The province leads in supporting and implementing progressive personnel policies, such as educational leave programmes, rights in regard to political activity under The Public Service Act, and grievance procedures with outside arbitration. Perhaps the most important feature, which has a direct effect on administration, is the arrangement for collective bargaining under the statute. In the last two years, all matters respecting working conditions and terms of employment for persons in the bargaining unit have been negotiated. On only three occasions has there been resort to arbitration and one which pertained to a small group.

And a little later the Minister said:

> In the past, I have been asked about the policies of the government in regard to bargaining procedures for outside boards and commissions. It is our intention to bring in legislation to provide for such procedures whenever a majority of employees are represented by the civil service association of Ontario. I know that the hon. members of the House will wish to give full support to such amendment of The Public Service Act. This will demonstrate the government's willingness to deal with its employees directly and to be represented at the bargaining table.

Nevertheless, two years later, it is possible to do better on welfare than it is by doing an honest day's work mowing the lawns and sweeping out the washrooms of Queen's Park. The CSAO is not among those who are pleased with the way things are going. A total of 38,000 government employees have placed their future in the hands of an arbitration board, and, incredibly, they represent not a few small groups, as in 1966, but 669 classes of jobs, all before arbitration at the same time. This, I think, is a ridiculous way to engage in collective bargaining procedures. According to CSAO general manager, Harold Bowen, in his release of June 13:

> Negotiations and mediation have been futile. Government offers were so ridiculously low that they could have no possible basis, and, in the view of the association, were indicative of poor faith.

Because of the across-the-board nature of the negotiations, people involved had jobs as widely varying as:

Highway maintenance; construction inspection; treatment and rehabilitation of mental patients and prison inmates; investigations of security; the planning of future services for the public; and Ontario's labour relations services.

The association says:

> Many of these jobs form the very basis of the efficiency of the government's operations. Yet the initial offers of government had ranged from as low as two per cent for a one-year contract.

Included in the dispute were the draftsmen and related classes which were the subject of a special study ordered by the arbitration board arising out of the 1966 pay dispute. Although the study was extensive, taking over a year to complete, the government ignored its guidance and the obvious intent of the arbitration board to see fair play in this specialized area.

In general, CSAO was forced into arbitration against the underlying desire of its membership, which entered into this stage with what the press release calls simply "disgust." They had hoped to bargain in good faith with the government, but that good faith had been completely lacking. This from a government which had, only two years previously, trumpeted its progressive collective bargaining arrangements. No wonder, late at night in the corridors and basements of Queen's Park, one hears the ironic laughter of men who know they have been betrayed.

What a confused labour picture—50,000 workers, of whom about 10,000 are temporary, with nothing to go on but the whim of their superiors, who are sometimes politically motivated. A bundle of retroactive promises that have been delayed in their implementation! Have we yet had action, for instance, on the Provincial Treasurer's statement of May 8, in this House, regarding agreement with certain classes, which was supposed to be retroactive to October 1, 1967? And I note that for the 38,000 in 669 categories now in arbitration, increases will be retroactive to January 1, 1968.

And what about the Minister of Labour's (Mr. Bales), speech in Ottawa in January? Of course, we need studies all the time to promote the efficiency of the service, but, while many of these may be at departmental level, surely they must all be initially directed, and continually supervised, from the top—and that means by the Provincial Treasurer. Furthermore, I feel that, in the interests of efficiency, we need our own Glassco commission here, even if we also have internal organization and methods studies.

What about the family information service provided by Benefacts Ltd.? Who are these people? What is their background? What was the contract price for this service? Why could this kind of routine job not be done internally? Is it really needed? Is there not the idea of prying coming into this again? Many people I know did not fill out the card, saying, "It is none of their business." Now there is uneasiness that this information, ostensibly gathered for the purpose of helping people learn just what benefits they are entitled to, might be used for other purposes, such as evaluation for upgrading and so on.

As for the now-famous relationship between Mr. Colin Brown and the Ontario government —a love-affair which blossoms out periodically into a full-page advertisement, especially at election times—why did the government complete a contract with London Life and other companies in October, 1965, when it was known that OMSIP would be in operation in 1966?

OMSIP cushions the private insurance companies to make their profit on favoured risks like civil servants, while leaving the hard-core risks to the public purse. One of the reasons OMSIP costs more than it should is that the best risks are all siphoned off to private interests. By handing the civil service to London Life on a plate, the government makes sure that Colin Brown does well, even as it makes sure that the people of Ontario pay a good deal more than they would otherwise have to.

When the London Life contract runs out in October, 1968, will the government be changing its policy, so as to bring civil servants into OMSIP and thus move the centre of gravity of OMSIP back closer to where it should be? Or will the Premier (Mr. Robarts), still continue to favour his friends?

The general increase in the estimates of the civil service is approximately $628,000. Approximately half of this is for the setting up of a French-language course for civil servants which, of course, we all favour. But surely, there ought to be at least a similar amount shown for courses in technological advance? The world is not standing still and the civil service should be ahead of the game.

The business of grasping just what a total information system implies is every bit as big a job as the learning of a second language, and it should be provided for accordingly. In addition, there ought to be further substantial sums set aside for what, for want of a better term, I would call "futures research" into what will be expected of the civil service two, five, ten and 32 years from now. We ought to have—and again, please excuse the jargon of the Hudson institute—"a surprise-free analysis" of the job the civil servant of each of several categories will be doing in time to come. The techniques for doing this kind of thing have now been so refined that accurate results, with alternatives of course, can be postulated.

The Ontario civil service is moving into a new phase of its life, and we owe it to the fine men and women who make up the staffs of the various departments to play fair by all while watching the interests of the taxpayers of Ontario.

Mr. C. G. Pilkey (Oshawa): Mr. Chairman, approximately two weeks ago, the leader of my party asked me to make the opening remarks on the civil service estimates. I want to say that my two weeks of research work has been rather amazing, in terms of this department. I want to say, at the outset, that I have nothing against the employees of the civil service. I think that they are doing a good job within the framework of poor and inadequate wages.

Hon. A. Grossman (Minister of Correctional Services): Well, that balances you nicely on both sides.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): That is no reflection on the civil service.

Mr. Pilkey: The "Queen's Park report," by Mr. Don O'Hearn, in the Oshawa Times of yesterday made some comment on this. He said:

> The CSAO now is well established, and one gets the impression that most civil servants are well satisfied with it. There > have been very substantial gains in wages and conditions in the civil service; due largely to its efforts it has brought about these gains in a responsible manner, without strikes and hysterics.

I would hope that Mr. O'Hearn did not think that the two, strikes and hysterics, are synonomous. I would hope that you could have hysterics without strikes, and strikes without hysterics. But nevertheless, he puts this on a rather synonomous basis.

Just for a moment, I would like to relate some of these wages that Mr. O'Hearn talks about. Before I do, I would like to quote again for a moment from the document headed the Civil Service Commission of Ontario, the annual report for 1967. It says:

> In the fall of 1967, a special institutional campaign was adopted to create a favourable climate for the recruitment into the Ontario public service, and to stress the idea that the Ontario government is a good employer. Posters using an animal theme with modern message were used in subways, buses and streetcars to promote the Ontario public service.

And I want to say, if the wages of the employees of the civil service are symbolic with animals, they are not getting too much hay. If that is what it is symbolic with.

Now, let me point out that, first of all, if this schedule is not up-to-date—I would hope that the Minister would correct me. I want to point out that the wages are not conducive to the wages that are being paid in industry, they are not. I notice that the Minister, when he was making his remarks, said that they were in competition with private industry for professional and skilled help. I did not hear him say too much about the unskilled labour and what they were competing with. They are not paying them the wages that private industry are getting in this province, and they are not even coming close.

Now, the salary range for the agricultural assistant—ranging from $3,750 to $4,400. I would like to know who can live on that kind of a wage—$3.750 to $4,400. If things were so good, I do not know what those pickets were doing in front of this Legislature today. I went out there and I talked to two of the fellows that were in that picket line. Let me tell you what they were getting in terms of take-home pay. One fellow, who had spent 18 years in the service of this government, was taking home $125 every two weeks. Another chap I talked with is taking home $134 in two weeks, and has to support a family of three children in addition to his wife.

I ask anyone sitting in this Legislature, would it be possible to support a family with a decent or any kind of a standard of living, and put a roof over their head, on those kind of wages?

This whole wage schedule is full of these types of classifications—building caretaker, the building cleaners, the building cleaner and his helper—most of them getting less than $2 per hour. And if they are getting $2, they are getting just a little over $2.06 an hour. As a matter of fact, I was just going over the book here, and the chauffeur attendant for the Prime Minister—I hope that on the wages you are paying him you are buying him the odd meal—when you are out with these chauffeurs. I hope you are buying him the odd meal, because these fellows are not going to be able to spend too much on food on the basis of the wages that this province is paying them. And your clerical people, stenographers—the clerical stenographers get a very, very insignificant wage. Your conservation people—and I can go on and on. Your skilled people—draftsmen, cooks—all of them get nowhere near the going rates in industry here in the province of Ontario. So I will have to disagree with the remarks made by Mr. O'Hearn that everything is fine, and everything is rosy. I am going to point out in a moment that things just are not as good as some people would believe. I might point out and just put into the record a statement, an article put out by the Toronto branch of the CSAO. Let us just find out what they are saying here in the Toronto branch. I understand that this is the largest branch in the province of Ontario, right here in Toronto. Let us find out what they are saying.

This was a general meeting of the Toronto branch on May 27, 1968, which was not so very long ago.

> There were criticisms levelled at ourselves regarding the Whitby situation. It was stated that the breakaway in Whitby was a fait accompli. No rebellion should be condemned. Let us be honest with ourselves. The executive did not fulfill their obligation to the members; instead of condemning them, let us try to correct this. If we are honest with ourselves, and try to find out where we failed, then we can succeed. Perhaps they had courage. Perhaps they will be more successful than we are today. The association's negotiations are outdated. Let us talk about something beneficial to ourselves. The association has never threatened the government. It was also brought up that the association comprises members who do what the association says. The association is a membership and if the members do not do something, nothing will be done. It was then stated that we probably do not realize the potential power we possess as a group. Government knows we cannot act collectively. Let us get organized and show the government what we mean. Everyone else gets a good portion outside of government. They get 16 per cent to 25 per cent. We get 4 per cent, 3 per cent, 2 per cent. Let us do something constructive. We are being exploited if we accept this. It is our own fault. We are at a standstill. The association cannot negotiate one agreement in six months. It takes them two years to negotiate one arbitration. People are becoming disgusted. Strike is illegal.

Now they pass the following motion, and this is the key as far as I am concerned.

> Be it resolved that the resolutions committee be instructed to submit a motion through the Toronto branch No. 1 to the board of directors of the civil service association of Ontario incorporated to seek necessary changes in legislation to amend The Public Service Act, also to seek certification under The Labour Relations Act for all civil servants in Ontario.

I want to say that in terms of my research —and this is where I have been looking into this Public Service Act—I want to submit, Mr. Chairman, that the only way that the civil servants in this province are going to make any meaningful progress is to have this Public Service Act amended.

In the Act the government gives the civil service association of Ontario sole jurisdiction over the employees. Only in one place, though, can I find the civil service association of Ontario mentioned; it was on page 9 in section 90 1 (b), and it says that the civil service association of Ontario is appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in council. It tells how they set up a joint council. As I understand it, this joint council are the people that do the negotiating for the civil service. Maybe they are a good organization, but by the same token, how do they get sole jurisdiction in terms of collective bargaining for the employees of this province? By legislation.

Do they not get a freedom of choice on whom they want to represent them? Apparently they do not. I wonder where my good friend from Eglinton (Mr. Reilly) is? He seems to have a lot to say about the free choice of employees inside trade unions. Why, he should be standing on his feet screaming to the high heavens about this kind of legislation. But he sits very silently about this. He sits very silently about this situation, and lets this situation carry on.

Apparently they do not need to get 50 per cent of the total of the people; they do not have to come under The Labour Relations Act to get certification under section 5—the establishment of the bargaining rights by certification. It goes on to say what we have to do to be certified as a bargaining agent. As a matter of fact it even goes beyond that. It goes on to say in The Labour Relations Act on page 23 what you have to do to terminate the bargaining unit. At least you have that right. You have the right to be certified if you can get 50 per cent, plus one, and if the employers want control of the organization, they just need to get 50 per cent plus one and they can terminate. And these are the rights for the trade union movement here in the province of Ontario. But it seems to me that the employees of this province are denied this right. They are legislated right into an association. Oh, they do not have to join if they do not want to. They have a card and it says that they authorize the Provincial Treasurer to deduct dues, but they can revoke this—and I am not too sure about that. Apparently there are some people who have revoked their membership in this organization and their dues are still being deducted. I would hope that the Minister would take a look at that situation, and see that these people are refunded their money, because they revoked their membership from the association. I have no brief for the CSAO or the new organization. They were out here today, the united government workers of Ontario.

Now, let us just assume for a moment that the united government workers of Ontario get a majority. Is the Minister prepared to give them recognition? How do they get recognition? I mean, we have The Labour Relations Act for everyone else, but how does any other organization get recognition amongst the employees of this civil service? I think that this is a very important point, a very important point, that if the majority—or if there is a group of employees who do not want to belong to the civil service organization, then they ought to have the right to make a determination and be recognized and do their bargaining through another agent. But apparently this is not happening today.

As a matter of fact, let me say that, under the present legislation, if the CSAO only had 10 per cent of the membership of the civil service of this province, they would still be recognized as the sole bargaining agent for these people. At least that is what I understand. Yet you have set some precedents in the province. And let me say, too, in this regard I notice under the grievance procedure, and the definition of an employee association, it says, "An employee association means the duly constituted association of persons in the public service which has for one of its purposes the representation of public servants in matters relating to employment and to which the majority of the public servants belong".

Now does this mean that if the majority of the public servants joined another organization they would be recognized under this section? I recognize it is headed grievance procedure, but would we have one organization handling the grievances and another organization handling the collective bargaining? Is this what this means? I would like the Minister to answer that question later on. I want to say again that I think the civil servants of this province ought to have the opportunity to make their determinations as far as their agents are concerned.

I also want to say that some of the other things that are related in The Public Service Act and on page 10 in article 3—I guess it is 19, 3, yes—it goes on to say, every decision of the civil service arbitration board shall be signed by the chairman and he shall transmit to the chairman of the joint council who shall forthwith transmit it to the appropriate authority to be implemented.

First of all, I would like to know if this is a final and binding proposition; not only in terms of salaries, but in terms of working conditions.

I understand that after this arbitration board has reported the working conditions are then transferred to the regulations. While drafting this legislation, it appears to me that the intent could be lost, and it seems to me that the government now has sole jurisdiction over the drafting of the regulations, and the intent could be lost. If I was the association I would be very fearful of that kind of a regulation in the Act. Because, as I say, the intent could very well be lost as far as the final and binding arbitration is concerned.

Now, I also would like to ask a question in regard to this Act that rather bothered me. On page 43, in terms or dismissals, it says: "the determination by the board of a grievance under section 29 is final"—but they did not put a period there; they said "subject to the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor in council." But on the following pages—again on the question of grievances—it says: "the determination of a grievance by the board, under section 39 is final." (period). It goes on to say, in section 42 in the classification rating: "the decision of a classification rating committee is final."

Now why was the period not put there—in terms of someone being dismissed and reinstated through the procedure, and then could be upset by subject of the authority of the Lieutenant-Governor in council? And so, I ask the Minister that question as well. I also want to say that there are some precedents in The Public Service Act—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would stress to the hon. member that I am doing my best to keep track but it would be much more appropriate, and I would say helpful, to me if you would ask these questions under the appropriate votes, if that is not presuming too much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: Well I believe the member for Oshawa is what is known—

Mr. Pilkey: I have got them catalogued. The ones I do not get an answer to, I will be back?

Mr. Chairman: That would be a good idea, if he would perhaps keep a record of them.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): After all, he has bargained with General Motors for a few years.

Mr. Pilkey: All right.

I want to say that there are some precedents being set, or there have been precedents set by this government, and in the booklet —if we could refer back to the booklet again —on page 38 it says: "these arrangements were extended last year to include the employees of the Niagara parks commission, the Ontario hospital service commission, and the Ontario water resources commission."

Now this is the point that I want to make. Parallel arrangements for negotiations are available to the uniformed staff of the Ontario Provincial Police and to the employees of the liquor licence and liquor control board. In other words, they have separate negotiations as I follow it. They have separate negotiations with a separate committee, and not the joint council; they do not negotiate through the joint council. And so there are now precedents and have been precedents set in this province for negotiations for civil servants, who are public servants, outside the purview of the joint council.

You also mention that it is in The Ontario Public Service Act and in the regulations; and they are talking about the liquor licence board of Ontario and the Ontario Provincial Police, and that will be found on page 49 of that document. So that obviously these employees are covered under The Crown Agency's Act, but nevertheless, they are covered differently than the rest of the employees. Again I would like to ask the Minister what covers their bargaining regulations? I could not find that—that they had any regulations. I could find them for the civil servants but I could not really find them for the people in the liquor licence board of Ontario and the Ontario Provincial Police. I suspect very strongly there are regulations but I could not find them.

I also want to point out to the Minister that he has, as I understand it, set up for the civil service of this province a co-ordination of employer-employee meetings at the departmental and local level. I have a document here that outlines the—I guess you would call it terms of reference or the rules that are set down. I understand it is working in the department of the Minister of Correctional Services very well, that is what the document said—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Everything in my department works very well.

Mr. Pilkey: —The Department of Health and one other department, and this is working. Obviously I have not talked to any of the employees so I have to take the word of the document that it is working.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member can ask me; it is working.

Mr. Pilkey: But really, as I read the document, it is rather meaningless. You are holding all the cards with this document, make no mistake about that. The employees are not holding too many of those tickets, you have them all. And let me just point out some of the things that it says:

> It is recommended that management maintain firm control over the time, agenda and frequency of meetings.

You know, you are holding most of the aces on that one. You will determine the time, you will even determine what is going to be on the agenda, and you will determine the frequency of the meetings.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is out of context.

Mr. Pilkey: I see, it is out of context, but that is what it says. And it goes on to say:

> Management should reserve the right to reject a request for a meeting if it appears that the subject proposed is not properly an item for consideration at that level.

You have some more cards there. All you have to say is, "Well, sorry fellows, we would like to meet but really that item could not be considered at this level, and we reject it"—even though the employees want to put it on the agenda and they think it is right. Under the terms of this document, they think it is right, but the government has the right to say, "No, we are not going to have that on the agenda".

Then it goes on to say, in general—section 4 of The Public Service Act sets out the areas which are entirely within the prerogative of management and not subject to negotiation under any circumstances.

So you take that list of rights and you write it in the document too and in no way can the employees negotiate through this document on a departmental basis. I would think that if the employees of the civil service could read that document and really peruse it, all the employees with a little understanding would find out that they were rather short-changed as far as that document is concerned.

I also want to know, Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister, it is my understanding that really there has been no meaningful negotiation that takes place with the Ontario joint council. They come together only to refer the unsettled items in dispute to arbitration; that is all they do. I would like to know if this is a fact or not. This is my understanding, that really the joint council does not work—that all they do is come together and refer the unsettled items to the joint council.

If you say they are meeting, I would like to know from the Minister what has been settled recently at the joint council level in terms of collective bargaining? What have they done in settlements, without going to arbitration? I also want to say that it has been my understanding that, when agreements are settled, there is no really significant ratification of agreement.

I think this is wrong, I think that the employees should come together and have an opportunity to hear what the settlements are and have a semblance of ratification.

This is an impossible situation. I mean, we hold meetings in our union; we have had 8,000 at a meeting and then voted on the question of ratification.

Hon. J. R. Simonett (Minister of Energy and Resources Management): You never had 8,000 at a meeting in your life.

Mr. Pilkey: I think you could do that across the province in terms of ratification, if there is really no significance in the ratification.

Now the other thing. I would think that the Minister at least had some recognition that everything is not rosy within the framework of the civil service programme here in the province of Ontario. Because—and I want to give him some recognition for that—if I take what he has done at its face value I want to give him some recognition, because he asked Judge Little to make some determination. So I would hope that he thought that everything was not right and that we ought to have a study in some of these areas.

Let us just take a look for a moment at some of the terms of reference. One of them was a determination of an appropriate bargaining unit. Now maybe it means that there will be more than one organization representing the employees in this province. Maybe it will be set up on the basis of occupational groups in terms of negotiation. I do not know what Judge Little is going to say, but in any event, it seems to me that there was some recognition that there was something wrong.

Number two was the recognition, in the employees' report, of the bargaining agent. Again, I am sure that he recognized that there was some feeling engendered by the employees of this province that they were not all in favour of the present bargaining agent under The Public Service Act and that it was necessary to make some changes. I would hope that Judge Little, when he hands down his report, studies this in some depth, because I think that that is absolutely necessary.

I do not think I need to go on to outline to the Minister what he set up as terms of reference for Judge Little, but I do think that this was a progressive step, at least I hope it was. At least he recognized that there was something wrong within the service and he needed a study to ascertain exactly what it was.

I want to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by saying again that this province ought to give their employees a free choice in terms of a bargaining agent. They ought to have a free choice in organization and they ought to have a free right to collective bargaining in this province.

Let me say that this province goes around —or at least the government does, in any event—and again I want to get back to the book, this one on the civil service, 1967. I would hope that I got the proper interpretation from the work; it goes on to say, on page 10:

> In our regular advertising programme, with the encouragement of the departments, we standardized the format and layout of our ads and adopted Ontario's logo for display in every advertisement.

Now I hope that the logo was that little crest—and below it it says "The Province of Opportunity"—that is what the logo is. I did not know what that word meant, you see, but I assumed that is what it meant.

Now we are going to have to give the collective bargaining agent his rights and freedoms if we intend to give that slogan and those words meaning. This is what the whole term democracy is about.

As recently as this morning, I have seen one of the members get up mischievously and put some devious questions to the Prime Minister, and leave the inference that there is no democracy within the trade unions of Ontario, and that the union members have no freedom of choice in terms of membership, and policy, or anything else. Let me say that this is not factual. The fact is that they do have freedom of choice given them by The Labour Relations Act, as to the direction they wish to go. They are also free to determine the policies and programmes of their organization.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Labour Relations Act has no bearing here, if I may correct the hon. member. It is The Public Service Act that regulates the civil service.

Mr. Pilkey: The point that I am trying to make here—and the hon. Minister is entirely correct, in that it is not applicable to the employees of the government, but I wish to relate The Labour Relations Act to this—it is the other employees.

All I am saying is that the civil servants should have equal opportunity with the other workers. This should be the province of opportunity, yes, but rather it should be the province of equal opportunity. Let us give those employees the equal opportunity to make their own determination as to what they want as a bargaining unit. I do not like the way they are legislated into an organization.

As I said at the outset, maybe the CSAO have got the best leadership in the world. I do not even know the gentlemen who lead the civil service association of Ontario. I would not know them if I fell over them. All I am saying is that the civil servants ought to have the same rights and opportunities as any other worker in the province of Ontario. If we are going to adopt the democratic principle, that everyone believes does not exist within the trade unions of Ontario, then we ought to give the civil servants the same opportunity. This means that, as this man from Toronto pointed out, they believe by resolution that they should be covered by The Labour Relations Act, so that they have a freedom of choice, and a freedom to collective bargaining.

Mr. Chairman: Would the Minister wish to reply to the comments or deal with the questions as we come to the votes?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would like to say to the hon. member for Perth, with respect to the annual report, that he will recall my absence from Ontario for ten days from June 23 to July 3, and the report was available to me on my return—and that probably accounts for some of the delay in getting it tabled. Now, he was interested in the matter of Benefact services. This really is a service for the purpose of informing employees of their benefits, which are related to long service.

Both the civil service commission and the Treasury board examined this matter very carefully, and I cannot really understand why any long service employee would not be delighted to receive the information that the card will eventually provide. It will eventually tell them the total benefits under the superannuation plan, and evaluate the various fringe benefits that accrue to them in terms of health services, sick leave and, I presume, vacation credits—the whole gamut of benefits will be set up in a sensible brochure for each civil servant in the employ of the government. It is an excellent service. It is being used widely in industry, I understand, and it is not too expensive. The cost actually per employee is 50c; the total cost is 50c to provide the people with this.

Mr. E. W. Sopha (Sudbury): A lot less than the council of arts report cost.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, probably right.

To provide the civil servants of the province with this information is not an expensive item. I think it will prove very valuable to them individually, and probably retain them in the service for longer. I think it will encourage them to continue their career, to make a full-time career out of it, because the advantages of remaining in the civil service will be well delineated.

Now I do not know that there is much point in my attempting to go into this health services insurance programme again. I have gone into that in great detail in the House and gave a statement on it before the orders of the day sometime ago, I think in response to questions from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent). If the hon. member would like to do a little research in Hansard, he will find it all set out there in complete detail. These references to London Life and Colin Brown are totally inaccurate. London Life was one of a group of six actual insurance companies. There were more than that that actually pooled their resources to take on the total risk. The insurance companies themselves which became the group that underwrote the health services of the associated benefits under the civil service health insurance plan, actually appointed the London Life to do the negotiation for it. It was by agreement, and I would say one more thing to clarify the position on this for the hon. member. The negotiations were carried out by the civil service association, not by the government.

Mr. MacDonald: And London Life!

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, it may be. Let me put it this way to you, Mr. Chairman, the civil servants of the province are very happy with it. They are very happy with it because it is a good plan.

Mr. MacDonald: They were forced to take it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They were not forced to take them. They were all part of negotiation and the whole package was negotiated in good faith and accepted on that basis. No matter what any member of this House likes to say about it, it is an accepted plan and it is a good one, and those that are benefitting from it are very much aware of it.

Mr. Sopha: I am trying to join it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I did not know, but you can join, I believe. I will find out if you like.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would think that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), would hope that when the present contract expires, if it is the wish of the civil servants of this province to become members of OMSIP, yes, I would hope he would, I would think he would.

An hon. member: You will welcome them with open arms.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: But again, it will be a matter for negotiation with the association which I think is quite proper.

Mr. Sopha: Has Stanfield taken Colin Brown off his Christmas list yet?

Mr. Chairman: Perhaps the record should be corrected that the Minister referred to the member for Grey-Bruce, I am sure he meant the member for Perth, in his remarks.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no, I did not. When I made the reference to the hon. member for Perth, I said I supplied the information on a previous occasion in response to a question from the hon. member for Grey-Bruce, which I did.

Mr. Sargent: I have questions I want to ask you.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I dare say you have. I can be sure of that. Now I will try to deal with the questions of the hon. member for Oshawa.

Mr. Chairman, on that welter of questions, if I may put it that way, I doubt very much if I will answer anything close to all of them; but I am happy that he has made a list and we will come back to it so that we can deal with them later.

Let me see, it will probably not be in any particular order. I would make this general observation to the hon. member that the terms of reference assigned to Judge Little cover, in general terms, many of the specific things he is talking about. I think he will agree with that, so that if I do not go into detail on some of them, it may well be that it is because it is before his honour for consideration and we hope to hear from him reasonably soon. There are a number of submissions still to be made to him, but he is progressing very well. As a matter of fact, I think right now he is taking a short but well-earned vacation.

Let me see—reference to cleaners' salaries. Just about right—$1.94 to $2.06 an hour, and they are presently under arbitration. This is one of the classes that is before Judge Anderson at the moment in arbitration process. It has been that way since January 1 last, that was the effective date of the cycle for review purposes.

Mr. Pilkey: Do you think they will get it?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, I do not know. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, the Rt. hon. Prime Minister, said that you cannot squeeze all that much juice out of a lemon—well you remember his words. There is a limit to the amount of juice you can squeeze out of a lemon. Do you remember that?

Mr. Sopha: He was referring to this government.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I think he was referring to the union that was negotiating for the seaway workers. I think that is what he had in mind.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Now, with reference to matters settled in direct negotiation or at mediation, these are ratified by a mail ballot to all members. If that answers the question as to the question as to the ratification procedures?

Mr. MacDonald: Are the terms of the settlement known?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, the ballot is not very much good unless the terms of the settlement are known. I suggest that the members are made aware of the terms of the settlement for ratification purposes. With respect to matters, and I am addressing the hon. member for Oshawa again, not resolved at local and departmental negotiations, they can be referred to the joint council or, if need be, to arbitration—and frequently they are.

Grievance against dismissal is not final, I think you made a reference to this, I believe. The appointments are by the Crown by law, and then they are at the Crown's pleasure in most circumstances. However, the government publicly announced the policy that it would implement every decision of the grievance board and it has implemented every case since 1960. Every decision of the grievance board has been implemented by the government, so it seems to me—

Mr. Pilkey: Why does that addition to the Act not appear on the grievance procedure?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is a statutory requirement where the Crown is involved.

Mr. Pilkey: They are involved in the other one, too.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, they are not appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor in council. I will try and explain that a little later on. With respect to the Ontario Provincial Police, for instance, this may be the answer to your question. They have their own association—incidentally, outside the civil service association—but parallel arrangements for negotiations are available as for the rest of the civil service and are dealt with by regulations in their Acts. I mean the counterpart of the same regulations under The Public Service Act is in the Act governing the Ontario Provincial Police. I believe it is the same regulations as in our Act; that is right.

Regulation 213-65, the Ontario Provincial Police negotiating and arbitration committee: In this regulation; a) arbitration committee means the Ontario Provincial Police arbitration committee, b) negotiating committee, means the Ontario provincial negotiating committee, and so on.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Hamilton East): What section is that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Regulation 213-65, page 49, Ontario regulation 213-65. The same powers, same procedures; parallel procedures in every way.

Mr. Pilkey: Except they have a separate association.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: So what? References to free choice of bargaining agent: Of course, that is covered in the terms of reference that is assigned to Judge Little. I think you made reference to that yourself, so we are awaiting his report.

I would say this, though, and I think it is quite appropriate to say it now, that if he recommends, and the government accepts the recommendation that the free choice of bargaining agents be implemented, I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, they will still have to negotiate under The Public Service Act and on the same basis as it now applies to the CSAO.

I doubt very much—I know—that does not cover all the questions the hon. member asked me. Maybe we will pick them up as we go along.

On vote 301:

Mr. Chairman: The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, through you to the Minister: I think the Minister is well aware of the contention of our party in regards to the civil service association of Ontario, and their main conflict with the establishment. We realize that maybe half of the civil servants of this province are happy with their lot under the association as their bargaining agent. I am aware, personally, that many are not satisfied with their lot under the civil service procedures of collective bargaining and what they are able to gain from it.

That is one issue that we find almost in every area where we have two groups that negotiate together. But, nevertheless, there is the principle that bothers us and that is the exclusion under The Labour Relations Act. And we feel, and I know that we have to deal with this, with the government as a whole. We cannot deal with it with the Minister of Labour, and I do not suppose we can deal with it with the Provincial Treasurer in charge of the civil service administration.

But we have to deal with the three of them to get our point across. What I would like to know from the spokesman for the government in regard to the civil service association, is a clear enunciation as to why they want to sustain the employees of the government under The Civil Service Act, The Public Service Act, as it spells out setting up their methods of collective bargaining, rather than being in favour of removing the exclusions from The Labour Relations Act. As we recognize it as being one of the best—we at least give it credit as being one of the best in North America—and removing the exclusions, so that any branch, as has been mentioned by my colleague from Oshawa, any group, can organize themselves in a union of their choice. I think we are entitled, at this point, to a clear enunciation from the Minister the Treasurer of the principle involved in the government's sustaining this kind of procedure before we get into any particulars as to how it is operating. I think it is about time because from here on in and in the coming years, it is going to be a subject that is going to be more prevalent across the province.

I do not know just how active the united government workers of Ontario are going to be, but I know they are going to find a lot of sympathy in a lot of the groups; and I think that the government should enunciate very clearly their reasons for submitting this group to the binds that they are in as civil servants.

Surely, when we read the Act, they are under enough obligations to the Crown in their occupation without being subjected to legislation that refuses them their free choice of a collective bargaining agent. If the Minister wants to listen to these words and enunciate government policy, I would like to know the principle that sustains this kind of approach.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, the civil service association of Ontario has been a separate, incorporated association for, I think, about 40 years. And the government, I might say, in no way interferes with their policies or their membership. I think, at the moment, they represent something like 65 per cent of the civil servants, which hardly indicates to me that they do not have the support of what might be called an appropriate percentage of the civil servants of this province—65 per cent is a pretty fair percentage. There are a number, as has been said, of the civil servants who do not belong. This is by choice, that they do not belong. Nevertheless, 65 per cent of them are represented. Now, we have no intention of interfering with them.

I am almost prompted to ask the hon. member whether he believes in the CSAO. They have done some good things for the public service. As a matter of fact it cannot be too bad as we have had bargaining, as the hon. member knows—because he was here when the present cyclical review and bargaining processes were set up in 1964. During that period, the average pay of the civil servants has risen from $4,431 to $5,865, on average. The last figure was reached last year and it will probably be increased when the negotiations that are presently under way are completed, and when the arbitrations are completed. Now, that happens to be about 40 per cent. During that period, the cost of living rise has been from 133 points to 149, or 8 per cent.

All salary negotiations are worked out on a basis of very intensive salary research. I explained this in debate in the Legislature a year ago, with either the hon. member who has just spoken or another of the hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: What was the per cent increase again?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The average? The average pay has risen in three years, that is until last year, by 40 per cent—approximately 40 per cent.

Mr. Gisborn: That all depends where it came from.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: From $4,431 to $5,865. That does not include the professional revisions just recently awarded.

Mr. MacDonald: And you say the price index rose by how much—8 per cent?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: From 133 to 149, a good record. I frankly do not know how there could be too many disgruntled employees, or members of the civil service association. I think there has been a great deal accomplished for them as members of that organization.

On the other hand, a point has been referred to on a number of occasions this evening. Notwithstanding what I have just said, the terms of reference assigned to Judge Little have to do with bargaining units. I sent a copy of the order-in-council over to your leader a few days ago. If the hon. member is not familiar with them, I have them here, but I think he is familiar with the terms of reference that are assigned. Now, I think this indicates that we discuss these things with the association. We do sit down and discuss these things, otherwise we would not have asked Judge Little to undertake these hearings and make these determinations. So this, Mr. Chairman, is the government's policy with respect to the association. We do not propose to interfere with them but we do propose to keep talking to them; listen to their representations; have them heard and considered by an appointee such as Judge Little from time to time. This is the process we are going through right now.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might ask the Minister how many sets of negotiations have been carried on in the last two years; how many went to arbitration, and how many were settled by direct negotiation?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, I will have that information for the hon. member in a moment.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent): I might say to the Minister, I have listened with great interest to the debate that has gone on here and, of course, there seems to be a lack of information coming from the civil service association to the civil servants. There is a lack of communication, I believe. On many occasions, I have been approached by different civil servants who do not clearly understand what is taking place. I have been informed that these negotiations or arbitrations have been going on for six or seven months which is alarming to the individuals—civil servants.

Now, I would like to bring to the attention of the Minister some of the things that have been brought to my attention. And maybe he can give me an answer that I would be able to inform the civil servants as to just what is taking place. One of the questions which has been asked of me concerns the right of the civil servants of the province of Ontario to choose a bargaining agent of their own choice. A second question concerns a complete lack of communication between the government and employees. For example, a complete lack of interest in the welfare of the civil servants' pay, working conditions, time involved in negotiating, and hours of work.

Now, since the government has given the civil service association of Ontario the right to bargain for civil servants, it would appear that the civil service association of Ontario is government-sponsored, and their prime and only purpose is to pacify its members, not to serve.

Now, these are some of the things that come to my attention Mr. Minister, and I think this is the time to bring them to your attention, so that we will clearly understand and have answers for the civil servants who seem to be not too well informed.

Now, there is another problem that has been brought to my attention, and this concerns The Department of Health, especially our hospital schools where they have started a new programme called the unit system which no one seems to know too much about. We have been working under unified nursing which was started approximately five years ago. We have not completed this system yet, and are going to have the unit system changed starting in September of 1968.

Now as I understand—as I am informed by civil servants—these civil servants will have to write examinations. There are no text books available for them to get any information. There is nothing to inform them what exams they will have to write, and this leaves them in a kind of a quandary to know what will take place if they fail these examinations.

Now, there is another problem that concerns this new unit system, that the nursing aides and attendants are going to be under the new unit system. They are to be called, I believe, housekeepers or ward counsellors. Therefore, are their jobs going to be abolished since educational qualifications have been increased from grade 10 to grade 12? If this is job security, Mr. Chairman, when they can abolish high ranking supervisory jobs, what chance would the lower-grade civil servants have? There is a lack of communication between the civil service association and the civil servants and I think that this could be improved to keep them better informed. Maybe the Minister could inform me if these civil servants are informed of the working conditions of the civil service association of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member for Kent East—

Mr. Spence: Kent now!

Mr. E. Sargent (Grey-Bruce): What is your name?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Some of these ridings change just a little bit.

On the matter of bargaining, the hon. member probably heard me make reference to that when I was addressing certain remarks to the hon. member for Oshawa—or rather Wentworth, I said, Mr. Chairman, this matter of bargaining, bargaining units and bargaining agents of their choice, this is all in the terms of reference that are before Judge Little, so that hopefully we will be able to consider his recommendations before too long.

I just say again, as I have said before, that they would not have been incorporated in those terms of reference if we did not feel an interest and had not listened to the representations of the association. They are there, so that might be something you can tell those people that have indicated their concern to you.

I find it difficult to accept this observation that has been expressed to you, that there is a complete lack of interest on the part of the government and the civil service commission. It is totally untrue. It is manifest, I think, in the fact that our—is it 97? Just a moment. We have had a recent experience—the percentage of turnover in the civil service was at an all-time low in 1967. The percentage of regular staff involved in turnover is 7.8 per cent. It is lower than it has been for some years. I can only construe that as meaning that there is an element of considerable satisfaction among the civil servants so I find it difficult to accept that observation, although it is quite—

Mr. Sargent: What is the other side of the coin? How many vacancies do you have to staff?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I will give you that information when it is your turn, shall I? Will I finish dealing with the hon. member for Kent? Would that be all right?

Mr. MacDonald: Do not be so solicitous.

Mr. Sargent: How nice these guys get when they are on their estimates. They are nice and sweet and all honey—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The Provincial Treasurer is always nice. I wish we could say the same about you.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not always. Now, communication—was this not another complaint that they indicated to you? I did make some earlier references about our attempts to communicate. This is done, of course, through Topic magazine and Topic Bulletin. And, to the extent that there may be some concern about lack of communication or any of the matters the hon. member has referred to, and more particularly with the problems in the various classifications in The Department of Health—although those are more the responsibility of the Minister who is their employer—tell them to watch for an upcoming issue of Topic. We will try to have an article in there that will describe how to deal with the situation to which you make reference.

Mr. Sargent: Propaganda—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You cannot win.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, you cannot win.

Mr. Spence: What about the civil servants writing exams; or that they have to have grade 12 instead of grade 10?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are not released from service. It might offer them an opportunity to upgrade themselves. If they do not make it they may not be upgraded as much or as fast as they might like to be, but there is no danger of losing employment, I can assure you.

Now, with respect to the number of arbitrations. I believe this question was asked by the hon. member for Wentworth.

Mr. Deans: I am looking for the total number of settlements, including the number of negotiated contracts. How many were settled by arbitration, and how many were settled by negotiations?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: In 1966, by arbitration, clerical and maintenance—the material I have does not appear to be complete. If you want this in complete detail, and if you will give me a little time, I will get it for you.

Mr. Deans: I know this comes under vote 308. You are dealing with the civil service arbitration grievance board and joint council. I guess it would be better under that vote.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think it is more appropriate.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Chairman, I would like to bring to the Minister's attention the fact that he misled the House—I would understand unintentionally—but he mentioned turnover in staff, that the staff turnover rates have diminished over past years. Actually, the turnover rate has diminished but it is not 7 per cent, it is 13.9 per cent when you take in both regular and probationary. Mr. Minister, you were not mentioning that. If you look at probationary alone you have got a turnover of 38 per cent, which is tremendous.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the member is 100 per cent wrong. I made it quite clear, Mr. Chairman, that I am making reference to the regular service. I made no attempt to mislead the House, intentionally, or otherwise. I made it quite clear that it was the regular staff.

Mr. B. Newman: You make it all so clear that there is another figure here.

An hon. member: It is 39 per cent for probationary.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: May I comment again on this point? I want to qualify that the figure to which the hon. member makes reference includes probationary staff. Now, that is the whole purpose of a probationary period of employment. During that probationary period many employees do not measure up to the requirements and it makes it possible for us not to engage them permanently. That is what makes that figure, but I made specific reference to regular staff because, of course, that is what counts.

Mr. B. Newman: Even though you may make reference to a specific thing, why do you not give us the whole picture on the thing? You noticed that your probationary staff turnover rate had increased over the year, too, so it is not as rosy as you tried to lead the House to believe it to be.

Mr. Chairman: The member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, there are a number of issues that I wanted to raise. May I ask the Minister who is eligible for membership in the CSAO?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Everyone; everybody; anybody can join, right up the line to Deputy Ministers. Certain senior levels are excluded from the bargaining process—but they can be members of the CSAO and many do belong.

Mr. MacDonald: You mean everybody in the public service?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, everybody can join.

Mr. MacDonald: What I wanted to get at is: Everybody in the public service, and I presume in the parallel organizations.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Classified or unclassified.

Mr. MacDonald: Unclassified, but—

Mr. M. Shulman (High Park): Coroners, too?

Mr. MacDonald: Did you want to reply to that "coroners, too?"

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are not Crown employees.

Mr. MacDonald: They are not Crown employees, they are not public servants?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are not in that category, no.

Mr. MacDonald: Let me get to the point I wanted. How do you explain the situation in which people who are not public servants—for example, skilled tradesmen—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to you, sir, really we are ranging all over the place here on the main office. This should be discussed on vote 308, really—the matter you just made reference to.

Mr. MacDonald: Does this come on vote 308?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Oh, yes.

Mr. Chairman: Arbitration boards, grievance boards for the civil service.

Mr. MacDonald: Why would it be? It seems to me that it is policy under the whole section of bargaining units, who can be in a bargaining unit. Would that not be appropriate under policy which is now admittedly being reviewed by Judge Little?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, I suppose it is all right but we have strayed quite a bit.

Mr. MacDonald: It was in that context, quite frankly, that I wanted to raise it.

What I am curious about is that I understand, in the instance of certain skilled tradesmen in Guelph University—which is not now a Crown agency, it is a separate institution operated under a board of governors—that the civil service association has been certified under The Labour Relations Act to represent these people.

I am curious as to how far this goes, because, quite frankly, in the interest of the civil service association—whose relationships with UGWO, as it is described, are going to be a little tense—the relationships are going to become even worse if the civil service association is going to have an effect on the monopoly in this position among public servants with full right to move out among others, but nobody can come into them.

I mean, in trade union terms, this is having the right to raid in one direction but not to raid in the other direction. It would seem to me that this is just going to be bad for everybody, including the CSAO. Does the Minister agree?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, it is seldom I agree with the hon. member, although I do sometimes, and in this instance I agree with him entirely. We wonder just as much as you do; we are concerned about it. Again, we hope the recommendations of Judge Little will have something to say about this.

In all honesty, Mr. Chairman, I could not agree more. I would say to you in all frankness—and I hope this gets back to the ears of the civil service association—that the only reason we have not had some discussions is because of the terms of reference that are being reviewed by Judge Little.

Mr. MacDonald: You do not want to be sub judice.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No. It is a fact, I did not want to be prejudicial, but in this instance we are just as concerned as you are.

Mr. Pilkey: What about Midland? At Midland it was the same thing. They were certified with municipal employees in Midland.

Mr. MacDonald: I personally am willing to leave the matter—the Provincial Treasurer has been quite frank on the issue. It is before Judge Little. I trust that Judge Little report is going to come down fairly soon. In fact, can the Minister give us any indication of when that is likely to come?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I would doubt if it would be before this fall or very early spring. I do not think it is possible because he is not sitting now. He will resume his sittings in the fall.

I think I am right that he—and there are some more submissions to be made to him—he is progressing very well. He is right on schedule, but—

Mr. MacDonald: Let me pursue this for a moment then. If Judge Little's report is not going to be down until some time in the fall —if there are further sittings—what is going to be your position vis-à-vis the group in the Don jail? The civil servants in the Don jail?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: They are all members of the public service now.

Mr. MacDonald: Admittedly they are all members of the public service. They have been given the right to continue in CUPE and the whole matter has been referred to Judge Little, but this was for only one year. At the end of one year the government's guarantee that their position would be retained presumably runs out.

What is going to be the position there if, at the end of the year, you have not heard from Judge Little and the whole thing sort of drifts out into limbo?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I guess I am going to prejudge the judge in this instance as to when he may be finished. We hope this fall. There is a submission to Judge Little on this matter by the Don jail employees. I can only say hopefully this fall. It is very difficult to answer your question—very difficult.

Mr. MacDonald: May I say this, that I think there are a number of matters that hinge on Judge Little's report to such an extent that I do not think it would be out of place for the government to suggest to Judge Little that the receipt of his report is a relatively urgent matter. Because, quite frankly, I think you are going to get yourself into a position that, quite rightly, can be construed once again as one of bad faith, certainly in relationship to the people in Don jail. Indeed, the Minister talks as though everything was very rosy, and if I may just interject in passing here, in terms of the relationship, in the release that was put out by the CSAO when they went to arbitration on June 26 and 27, their comment was: "Negotiations and mediation have been futile. Government offers were so ridiculously low that they could have no possible basis and, in the view of the association, were indicative of poor faith."

Those are pretty harsh terms for people who are presumably very happy in this best of all company with the government at Queen' Park.

However, let me move on to this next point that I wanted—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Pretty harsh terms for an organization that is not supposed to be militant enough, according to you.

Mr. MacDonald: You are raising another point. We will deal with that on another occasion.

I wanted to raise with the Minister a number of questions in connection with the whole issue of political activity of civil servants. As the House knows, or at least older members of the House will know, we had complete exclusion from political activity under some resolution that was passed in 1896 until 1963, and in 1963—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The Public Service Act was amended.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, in 1963 we did move into the 20th century. I do not think we have had any discussion since then and I just want to draw attention to one or two of the stipulations that were put in the Act then. I would concede in advance that we made a real step forward. I do not think we went as far as we could have gone or as we should have gone, but it was a real step forward.

Some of the hesitancies I would like to draw to the attention of the House. For example, in—I am reading from the Ontario Statutes, 1962-1963, from The Act to amend The Public Service Act—and in section 3, subsection 9(c) it refers to, for example, "a civil servant shall not during a provincial or a federal election canvass on behalf of a candidate in the election."

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is really making a mockery of the law. As the chairman of the civil service commission, with whom I had many discussions when we were thrashing through this back in those days, will recall—just let me have the House ponder for a moment—if you talk to your neighbour on behalf of your favourite candidate, is that canvassing?

Mr. Sopha: Yes.

Mr. MacDonald: I suspect it is part of the free speech that is rather basic in this country, and, if it is part of the free speech, suppose you talk to your neighbours all the way along the street—where does free speech and canvassing begin?

Mr. Sopha: At the second house.

Mr. MacDonald: At the second house? Well, I will tell you what happens. If you happen to be canvassing for a candidate of the government party, then free speech can extend that much further.

Mr. Pilkey: The whole block.

Mr. MacDonald: The whole block and perhaps all the way around the block.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I think, Mr. Chairman, I will have to say that that is not correct. I know of no circumstances where anyone pursuing the ordinary course of canvassing in an election to which the member makes reference has been penalized. No punitive measures have been taken, that I am aware of.

Mr. Sargent: What does the Minister mean? He fired them.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, may I say to the Provincial Treasurer, I am delighted to hear him say that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not know of any.

Mr. MacDonald: Okay, now he does not know of anybody who has been fired or anybody who has been penalized. I want to make two comments on that.

One, as far as I am concerned, I do not happen to know of anybody, but it makes a mockery of the law, because the law says you cannot do it. It is a bad law because (a), it infringes on basic civil rights and, (b), the Provincial Treasurer himself says that it is not in effect enforced. Therefore, it is fundamentally a bad law.

That is what I argued in 1963 and I suggest it is time that we cleaned up the law.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, there are other types of canvassing—perhaps it should be more precise—there are other types of canvassing that can lead to very serious problems where civil servants are involved. I think the member must be aware of that.

Perhaps the Act should be written in more precise terms, I would be prepared to admit that, but I was not around—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, would I be imposing on you to ask for you to allow me to address the member for York South?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, I would ask the members to refrain from interjections which interrupt the proper and free debate. I believe these matters are quite important. The Minister is replying to certain questions put by the member for York South and I think there should be no interruptions at this point.

Mr. Sargent: How does he get special leave?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right, Mr. Chairman, I will pursue this and attempt to finish it.

I am advised—I do not know because I was not around, I had no knowledge of it at the time—I think the canvassing for money was taken under very considerable consideration. Again I agree with the hon. member, it is something we can take a look at and we will.

Mr. MacDonald: I hope the Provincial Treasurer will take a look at it because I feel rather certain that the definition of "canvassing", as we considered it back in 1963, was canvassing when you talked to a person and you tried to solicit support on behalf of the candidate that you were working for. Canvassing for money, I think, is another matter altogether.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: That is bagman activity; that is not simple little lowly citizens being involved.

Let me go on to one other clause, 9(d): "Except during the leave of absence granted under subsection 2"—this is when one becomes a candidate—"civil servants shall not at any time speak in public or express views in writing for distribution to the public on any matter that forms part of the platform of a provincial or federal political party."

Once again, I suggest that you are being unnecessarily stringent there. I grant you there has to be a degree of discretion used, but I can think of occasions when people who happen to be close to the political party in power appeared to be saying things that were accepted—that they got away with. If they were somebody in the Opposition they would likely get into difficulties.

The Minister has indicated he is ready to review all this. I think the time has come perhaps to get into the second half of the 20th century on it. But when we are considering moving into the second half, may I put a $64 question to the Provincial Treasurer?

In clause 3 of the amending Act in 1963 it refers to "a Crown employee may be a candidate for election to any elected municipal office, including a member or trustee of an elementary or secondary school board, or trustee of an improvement district," and so on. Then there are exceptions: "The candidacy, service or activity is not in affiliation with, or sponsored by, a provincial or federal political party."

Let us suppose that what is emerging in the city of Toronto—and it is not beyond the realm of possibility — should take place; namely, that elections in the municipality of the city of Toronto or Metro Toronto should be fought on a party basis. At least one party is committed to a willingness to do it. Another one is considering it. Leading spokesmen, including Cabinet Ministers in this government, have indicated that it is a good idea for the Conservative party.

Does this mean, I put it to the Provincial Treasurer, that if in the next municipal election in Metropolitan Toronto—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: If what the Provincial Treasurer is saying is that he is going to impose his will on everybody in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and if, perchance, there is a decision agreed to by all political parties that they will run on a party ticket, then any civil servant in the metropolitan area in effect will be denied what little right he has in here. He will not be able to run municipally at all.

Hon. A. F. Lawrence (Minister of Mines): If he runs under a party label.

Mr. MacDonald: Right, but if all parties decide that they are going to run on a party label, in effect you are going to force him to run as an independent against party label candidates from the other three parties.

I do not know what the Minister's views are but I would suggest to him it is rather an anomalous position you are going to be in. If you are going to look the Act over, I suggest, once again, that this is a place where some second thoughts might be held.

Mr. Sargent: Is the member pleading for mercy now?

Mr. MacDonald: No, I am not pleading for mercy.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to pursue this very much. I agree in part with what the hon. member has said.

Excuse me, I will sit down until you are ready, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I would ask the member for Grey-Bruce not to pose so many interjections during the debate.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: I do not really mind, but I am assuming the hon. member wants to hear what I have to say.

I have already indicated the extent that I am in agreement with the hon. member—that this section of that particular piece of legislation should be reviewed. It is my own opinion, with respect to his last observation, that an intolerable situation could exist in the event that a civil servant was elected. Let us assume he was elected on a party ticket and he was trying to serve as a member of one government and serve another government in a different capacity. Suppose those political stripes were at variance. I say you would develop an intolerable situation there.

Mr. MacDonald: I have news for the Provincial Treasurer.

Years ago when I was in Ottawa and happened to be engaged with a group in the local civil service association, we did a study of what we described as civil rights for civil servants. I was fascinated to discover that the kind of step forward we took in 1963 was really only a baby step. Some of the things that the Minister fears, for example, have not been realized in the province of Saskatchewan, where you have pretty full complete political rights.

Indeed, the point that I wanted to draw to the Minister's attention is that there was even an instance, in one of the Scandinavian countries, where a Deputy Minister ran for the Opposition party and was defeated and returned to his job as Deputy Minister.

Mr. J. Renwick (Riverdale): Protected by an ombudsman.

Mr. MacDonald: Protected by an ombudsman, right.

Now I would be willing to concede to the Provincial Treasurer that even I have found that to be rather idealistic, because if a man is at the Deputy Minister level, he is at the policy making level and the implementing level. But the point I am trying to make to the—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Not only that, he is privileged. He is privy to—

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: —he is privy to government policy and it would not work, Mr. Chairman. I do not agree with that.

Mr. Sargent: He knows enough to put the government out of business.

Mr. MacDonald: Agreed, but all I am saying is that most people below Deputy Minister level—once you decide that they can have only certain political rights, otherwise you are living with a lot of bogeymen—that kind of thinking is part of a bygone age and really restricts the basic rights of civil servants and puts them in the class of second-class citizens.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 301? The member for Hamilton East.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like some information.

I understand we have approximately 43,000 civil servants in the province, but—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: There are 50,000.

Mr. Gisborn: There are 50,000 now. That is quite an increase from the last time I saw the figures.

What would be the wage tab for the civil service of Ontario? The total wage tab.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The total wage tab for the civil service? I will have that for you in a moment.

Mr. Chairman: The Minister is getting the information for the member for Hamilton East.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As of December 31, 1967, it is in the annual report actually, $296.2 million—just under $300 million. It is on page 51 of the annual report.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, the main office vote, I take it, is where you discuss policy insofar as your department is concerned?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes.

Mr. Sargent: The figure of $292 million—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: It is $296 million.

Mr. Sargent: Well, $296 million is the gross; the cost of salaries; the administrative salaries of the department.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, of all the civil servants.

Mr. Sargent: All civil servants. Have you, at any time, thought of a job evaluation programme or the idea of calling in an efficiency expert team to find out, by job evaluation, what we are getting for our money? In other words, if, in your wisdom, at budget sitting time, you could decide to cut the corners and say we are going to do a cut back of 10 or 15 per cent in personnel, across the broad picture, you save possibly $30 million in this one area.

Have you, at any time, though of discussing an efficiency survey, job evaluation?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well Mr. Chairman, there is a continuing process of job evaluation that goes on. The departments undertake their own. The Deputy Minister is responsible for it. He would assign his personnel branch, I suppose, to help him. Jobs are evaluated at regular intervals. They have to be approved by the section head, the branch head, the Deputy Minister. As a matter of fact, I think the job evaluation reports are referred to the commission and are audited there. The advisory service branch of Treasury investigates, on an assignment basis sections of departments where matters of efficiency are involved—this sort of thing the hon. member is referring to is an on-going process. It goes on all the time.

Mr. Sargent: My point is one of not flogging the point of Parkinson's law. At no point have you ever made a cutback. You probably have an increase of maybe 7 or 10 per cent in your personnel a year, with the population going up maybe 1 per cent or 2 per cent—I do not know whether those figures are right or not—but somewhere along the line, if a programme of cutting back were in line, I do not see why you could not cut back 10 per cent. It is a never-ending process of loading on, loading on. It is, well, fact that to get a job in the civil service is a pension for life. Somewhere along the line, someone has got to do a job for the taxpayers of Ontario, and this is a good area for it.

Speaking of policy, the automatic feeding of people is a multi-million-dollar industry in this country today, and automation is part of feeding people. On June 20, I asked the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) a four-point question about the granting of the installation of vending machines in one new building across here. I asked him who had the contract, was it a low-tender deal, the terms, the commission, the costs, the pay out and all this. His answer to me was that it was nothing, that this was a matter of civil service. I got no reply from him.

As I mentioned before, the people in the vending industry—and I am talking about a multi-million deal in the complex we have here. The contracts for this operation here will be a multi-million-dollar operation. We feel in the industry, and I am part of it, that this is a—I will qualify that, I publish a magazine in that area and I know what I am talking about—they feel that it is not good business for the government to let a contract without a low-tender bid basis. I think it behooves the government, the Minister in charge of civil service, that if you have the right to give these contracts out on a low-bid basis, we would like to know about it.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this is a policy that is administered by the Minister of Public Works. Actually the civil service association of Ontario, about which there has been much discussion tonight, operates the restaurants. Now I confess I cannot tell him what the arrangements are between the association and The Department of Public Works. I do not know.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Chairman, I believe what you are saying but someone in government should furnish this information because it is public business. I will expect an answer either from you, sir, or the Minister of Public Works because he passed the buck to you and now you are passing it back to him.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, Mr. Chairman, I am not passing the buck. I simply say it, and I am not ashamed to admit it, I do not know.

Mr. Sargent: Well, will you get it for me?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well I will ask the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Sargent: He said it was your responsibility.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well all right, we will try to clarify it for you.

Mr. Sargent: Please do. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 301, the member for Oshawa.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask a question but before I do, I do not think the remark that was made by the member for Grey-Bruce should be allowed to stand—when he said that as soon as you get on a civil servant job it is just being on pension. I think that is wrong. I think that just because employees of a government are not in private enterprise system—they are providing a service to the people of this province—they should not be looked down upon as people who, as soon as they get a job, are on pension. These people work, too, and I think they make a contribution to this province, and without them, this province would not make progress.

Mr. Sargent: Did you ever try to talk to these people? Did you ever try to get them on the phone? They come back from lunch at 3 o'clock and are never there when you want them. You cannot get any people on the phone in this civil service. Do they punch a time clock like industry does?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, all I can say is that I am glad the hon. member said that. I would not presume to say that about the civil service of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Sargent: Well somebody has got to say it. It is a big joke—what goes on here as far as business is concerned.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right. I will put it this way. You are quite entitled to your opinions and you are quite entitled to express them. Mr. Chairman, I do not have to agree with them.

Mr. Sargent: I cannot take a two or three hour luncheon break.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: All right. I am not going to quarrel. I just said I do not have to agree with you on this, and I am not going to because I know it is not true. Now, some things we can sit back and ignore, that one I cannot.

Mr. Sargent: It is just a big joke.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, I think it is a common expression from everyone that: "we have got too many civil servants doing too little." I do not go along with the opinion.

Nevertheless, I want to ask a question of the Minister. In answering some of my remarks he did say that to his knowledge all of the grievances were implemented. I am given to understand that there was a debate in this House last year, and I do not want to raise the old chestnuts, but nevertheless I understand that you passed a special order to gain these people their rates, but they never did get their classification. Even though the grievance board upheld their grievance, the government would not implement them.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, we did implement their situations by order-in-council. That is exactly what I mean. I do not mean to say to the hon. member that the grievances are always upheld, because they are not, but whatever the grievance board decides is not interfered with by the government. To my knowledge, since 1960, every decision of the grievance board has been upheld by the government.

Now, in the matter of dealing with the situation which, as I recall it from last year, was to give effect to the classification rating committee decision, we by order-in-council approved the payment of some extra funds to him. That was to give implementation to that decision.

Mr. Chairman: The member for High Park.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that I would not have to raise this matter in the House, so I wrote to the Minister on June 5, hoping to get an answer; but I have received none, so I shall have to raise the matter publicly here in the House, and hope that this way I will get a reply.

Earlier this year, I raised the matter of one Mr. David Greene in this House, and the Minister answered me at that time. He was an electrician at the hospital. I am not going to go into the details of the case at this time because I do not think that it is pertinent to this vote.

Mr. Chairman: Does the member have a grievance in connection with a certain employee?

Mr. Shulman: I said that I was not going to go into that matter.

Mr. Chairman: Good, because we do have a special vote for that here.

Mr. Shulman: No, this actually has been brought up here before, and the Minister did reply. However, another matter did come up in connection with the civil service association in this matter, subsequent to this. I wrote a letter to the Minister but supposedly he has been busy. This particular man, after losing a job in the Whitby hospital, went to the civil service association to ask if he could get other work. He did not go alone but was accompanied by his wife. A certain conversation occurred at that time with Mr. Bowen, the head of the CSAO, and I forwarded the statement which Mr. Greene and his wife sent to me, to the Minister, and asked him to investigate that.

I wish to read this into the record at this time, because I have not received any reply from the Minister and I would like to know the other side of the story. The allegations are sufficiently serious that I wish to have the Minister look into this matter.

This letter is signed by David Greene, and Winnie Greene; there is also an accompanying letter, which perhaps I should read. It is dated June 1, 1968. It says:

> Dear Dr. Shulman: Further to our telephone conversation, enclosed please find a statement signed by my wife and myself. Due to the fact that almost all the employees at Whitby have resigned from the CSAO and from their new union, UGWO, I think that Mr. Bowen is—

And he goes on to talking about David Greene, and perhaps I should not go on to read that. The Minister does have a copy of this. But here is the statement—this is what disturbs me and what I asked the Minister to investigate some seven weeks ago:

> On Wednesday, May 29, 1968, my wife and I were interviewed by the general manager of the civil service association of Ontario, Mr. Harold Bowen. This was at the CSAO offices in Toronto. The first question Mr. Bowen asked us was if we were prepared to relocate and, if so, would there be any problem in selling our house. I gave no reply to this question, but asked him what he had in mind.
> He then intimated that he could get me placed in a department other than in The Department of Health. This was possible, he said, due to his many contacts with the various Ministers. I then asked him why he could get me in another department, but could not get me reinstated in my former position as an electrician at the Ontario hospital at Whitby. He then told us that as the Opposition had raised the issue in the Legislature, I would never get back into Whitby, as the government would not back down and admit that they were wrong, although he agreed with me that my work, regularity, and punctuality was satisfactory. He said that I had been used as a guinea pig, and was a victim of circumstances.

When I pointed out that there were many political appointees, Mr. Bowen said that Dr. Dymond was not very bright, and in fact he said that Dr. Dymond was often an embarrassment to his own government.

My wife and I were so upset with his interview that, as we got up to leave, Mr. Bowen said that no matter if I went to the NDP, the UAW, the trades and labour council of Oshawa, or the newly formed UGWO, I would never get my old job back—

Mr. Pilkey: Oh, he would get it back.

Mr. Shulman: To continue:

I then told him that I would fight this till my dying breath, and he said that if I would only keep quiet and not appeal to these various organizations, things would be better all around.

It is signed, "David Greene and Winnie Greene."

Now, the matters raised here are quite serious, and the matters raised by the initial firing, or letting go of the man—in the Minister's words—I felt were rather upsetting. The Minister had no time, ever, to explain why he was let go. This other matter, I think is far more upsetting; and I am even more upset that the Minister did not answer the letter. I am asking him now, publicly, if he will investigate this matter.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is nothing like working for an employer and publicly stating he is not bright. There is a great deal of loyalty there. I would love to have a lot of employees like that.

Mr. Shulman: He is an ex-employee.

Interjections by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: With your help I will!

Mr. Pilkey: You are back in the 19th century.

Mr. Shulman: On a point of order, if I may. I would like to make it very clear that it was not the employee that was alleged to have made these statements, but the head of the civil service association.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I will apologize for not replying to the hon. member's letter. I can recite from a memorandum dated June 13, addressed to the secretary of the Treasury board who probably was processing the letter and case referred to by the hon. member before it reached me.

Without reading it all, the memorandum states: "This employment was terminated on August 31, 1967, when The Department of Health declined to give further extension to his probationary period." This is their perfect right.

As I have explained before, the purpose of a probationary period is just this. This man was not a full-fledged public service member in that sense of the word. He was a probationer, and now—

Mr. Shulman: This was not the matter that I was raising tonight.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Here is a section from the report of the grievance committee: "Nevertheless, the board has also held the opinion that, unless there has been explicit commitment to the contrary, it is inherent in the concept of probation that either party may terminate the employment at the end of the probationary period, or even during the initial period, without having to account for its action, or having the power to protest effectively."

This is implicit in the whole procedure of the probationary period. I do not know if the hon. member for Oshawa can tell me, but I expect that they have probation in the regulations of which he has had some experience.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, when I started out I said that I was not going to raise that particular issue. What I asked the Minister to investigate was not the firing of Mr. Greene, which we went into earlier in the session. What I asked him to investigate are the matters that apparently, or allegedly, occurred at the interview with Mr. Bowen.

That is what this letter was all about. Does the Minister not have my letter with him?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I cannot comment on any exchange of conversation, or words that took place between Mr. Greene and Mr. Bowen. That is not my place. I would not comment on it in this House, nor would I comment on it by letter.

I do not know that the place to get this information is anywhere but from Mr. Bowen, I suggest.

Mr. Shulman: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister is not going to comment on it, then may I suggest that there are two people whose statements concurred—I asked the Minister to look into this. Apparently he does not feel that he should look into this, and it is a very serious matter.

Whenever a member of this Legislature brings up a matter here and the head of the civil service association says that, because the Opposition brought this up in the House your chances are nil on getting back, then I think that the Minister is wrong if he does not think that this is worth looking into. Does the Minister not feel that this is worth looking into?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. member for High Park is confused or not, but Mr. Bowen is the secretary and general manager of the civil service association.

Whatever transpired between Greene and Bowen, is, as far as I am concerned, their business. At this point, as far as I am concerned, it is nothing but hearsay. I do not doubt the member's comments, but his reference relates to hearsay as well. I think that is all I have to say on that subject.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 301. The member for Yorkview.

Mr. F. Young (Yorkview): Could I ask the Minister, then—I think what he says is correct, after all he cannot say what is in the mind of another person. The impression that is given here is that, because an Opposition member brought up a certain man's job in the Legislature, the government would not reinstate him.

I think all the Minister needs to say here is that this attitude on the part of Mr. Bowen is incorrect, That this would not—the very fact that an Opposition member may raise a case like this—will not place that job in jeopardy because of that fact.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): You do not believe that?

Mr. Chairman: The member for Parkdale.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Chairman, I just want to make a few brief remarks on the number of employees that the government has on the payroll, and to question whether or not the government has any overall policy in trying to assess the value in the rapid expansion we have in hiring people.

There have been comparisons made with large firms in the private sector with the rate that they hire people to do their work, and the rate that governments hire people. I realize that there is a difference in the work that government does, and the type of work that private business does, but to give you an example, and not to spend a lot of time comparing government with various industries, I just want to give you one example to show you the trend of thought I have.

The American Shell Oil Company, back in 1958, had just over 38,000 employees. That was about the same number of employees that the government of Ontario had about that time, or shortly after. In 1967 the Shell Oil Company did 2.5 times the amount of business and it had 300 fewer employees. When I compare this example with what goes on in the province of Ontario, I feel that it would be worthwhile for government to take a hard look at how they employ people and whether or not they are getting the best value for our dollar. For example, in 1958 we had slightly over 27,000 employees. It has almost doubled in ten years. We have over 50,000 now, and I rather question if this it at all necessary.

I realize that we are spending far more money than we were in the past but, at the same time, so much of the increased cost of government has been through our grants. For example, in about four years our grants to the universities have increased nearly five times. Yet you can spend hundreds of millions of dollars through grants to universities and I think you only have 69 employees. Admittedly, the spending of that money does not result in increased employment, but I was wondering if the government has any immediate plans on how to assess their hiring schemes.

I know that a few years ago—probably about three years ago—an extensive investigation was made by a private consulting firm as to the classification of the employees of the government. But I think the government really needs a consulting firm to take a look at how efficient are we in the use of our manpower.

We have to bear in mind that, despite all the changes that have taken place in the quarter of a century the present government has been in power, that government employees have increased by approximately 430 per cent. It is a tremendous expansion and we may say, "Yes, we are spending more money—we are supplying more services." Yes, when you look at private corporations, they too have been expanding at a tremendous rate. I singled out the American Shell Oil, not because it was the only one, but because they had approximately the same number of employees ten years ago as did the province of Ontario.

I cannot help but ask myself why is it that government seems to need a tremendous amount of manpower despite the fact that we, too, are now using IBM machines. We are using the computers that normally lessen the requirements for manpower.

I would like to hear from the Minister whether or not there is any possibility that they would retain a consulting firm to take a good look at our employment policies.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, the areas of control in respect of the civil service are largely vested with the Treasury board. However, it may be appropriate to discuss it here.

The control is at the approved complement level. Treasury board—and I am maybe being out of order a little bit here, but I cannot explain it any other way, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what the figure will be for the current year. A year ago, I do recall—and I think I mentioned to this House last year—in response to the requests for approval complement by the various departments, Treasury board in the course of approvals reduced the combined figure requested by something like, I think, 2,200. So there is an element of continuing control in this field.

Increases in staff are altogether related to new programmes. Most of them appear in The Department of Health or Department of Highways, although I can say The Department of Highways have instituted some new maintenance control measures that have substantially reduced staff.

You will hear, on the one hand, from one of your colleagues, that we have hired people. We do reduce staff where it is in the interests of economy and efficiency, and we get criticized if we lay anybody off. We get criticized if we fire anybody, or dismiss anybody, or eliminate a redundant job classification. On the other hand, we get criticized because we are engaging too many.

This matter is under constant review. It is dealt with at the time the estimates are presented to the Treasury board. The complement requests are considered there, and the reductions are given effect to at that time. Then, during the year, if the complement needs some adjustment, Treasury board receives requests for Treasury board orders approving increased complements.

So it is kept under review on a weekly basis, I would say, but it is growing. It is bound to grow in a growing jurisdiction, notwithstanding the fact we do provide many control measures.

I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that the staff of Treasury board, the staff of the civil service commission, and the staff of the departments themselves, having some knowledge of what Treasury boards expect of them, provide all the control measures we need without an outside agency.

Mr. Trotter: Mr. Chairman, I think it is only human that a major civil servant who has a lot of influence with one particular department is going to be anxious to expand that department. It is the history of any particular organization, be it public or private—and these government departments have continued to grow like Topsy.

You look at the records and see it. In fact—I did not have a chance to see this book, I was going by other figures and by your annual report in 1967—it is even worse than I had expected. It has grown faster. I was going to say that you had approximately 48,000 employees; you are now at 50,500.

So that it seems that, once a department is formed, or once a department starts a particular operation, it is never cut back. Often a private corporation will have a reassessment of its policies in the different plants it has, and sometimes it is cut off when it does not fulfill the services it is meant to do. Government never seems to do this, and this is why we seem to be employing more and more people all the time. I feel that the government just does not have the controls on this, and you just have to look at the results.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton. Mr. Chairman, I am just going to suggest to the member, if I may: I ask him to conceive, if he will, how we can continue with what might be appropriately referred to as programmes for people—programmes for people that are constantly asked for by the Opposition. What happens when we build a new Ontario hospital—and we have built many of them? What happens when we move into the field of health insurance—

Mr. Trotter: When have you built a new provincial hospital?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: How can he expect anything but growth in the service in a growing jurisdiction?

Mr. Trotter: What year did you build your last provincial hospital?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I opened one at Kirkland Lake about two weeks ago and a new one in London.

An hon. member: Sure, a brand new one.

Mr. Trotter: How many employed?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: There are 300 employees.

Mr. Trotter: Yes, and Goderich about six years ago.

Mr. H. Peacock (Windsor West): Mr. Chairman, I want to ask for your advice as to whether to raise or not to raise, the question of the handling of salaries for jail employees transferred to the civil service at the beginning of the year under vote 301 or 302. I think probably vote 301.

What I want to find out from the Provincial Treasurer, Mr. Chairman, is whether or not the province recognized wage increases due in 1968 under terms of collective bargaining agreements reached between these jail employees and their municipal employers following the take-over.

I wrote to the Minister of Reform Institutions in April of this year in respect to increases negotiated by Essex county jail employees prior to the take-over on January 1. The Minister's answer at that time left me still in the dark as to whether those negotiated increases were going to be implemented in 1968 beacuse he spoke of raising wage levels where they were lower than the provincial classification wage level. And he spoke, in his reply of April 11 to me, of continuing to award merit increases until they reached the maximum rate in the municipality, even where that was greater than the maximum for comparable civil service classifications. Neither of those areas, Mr. Chairman, cover the proposition of a straight across the board wage increase on top of what the employees were already getting. I know that there were employees in the Essex county jail looking forward to across the board increases in 1968, not just being raised from a rate under the municipality of Essex county up to the rate for the same classification in the provincial service; and not being continued through a progression to the maximum rate under the collective agreement they signed with the municipality prior to the take-over; but actually receiving the lump sum across the board wage increase which they had negotiated for various classifications.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, our own classifications for jail employees are presently under arbitration. It may very well be that the arbitration award will be so close to the situation that may well have developed at Windsor, that there will be little or no material difference. But we will have to wait for that arbitration award to see.

The city of Hamilton had a similar situation and they undertook to remunerate their own employees because they had a separate agreement, very similar to the situation that prevails in Windsor. It is an association, I believe, in Windsor, is it not?

So, the city of Hamilton elected to remunerate those employees who had negotiated certain things in their employee group before coming into the public service; and then they moved into the public service at the scales and rates of pay according to their various classifications.

Now, I can only repeat that we shall have to await the arbitration award, under any circumstances, and at that point, I have very grave doubts as to whether we will be far enough apart to make it a difficult situation.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, am I not correct, though, in saying that the arbitration award will recommend increases effective as of the beginning of the second year of the provincial take-over? It will not affect this initial period of the take-over during which, as I believe to be the case, employees in the Essex county jail would have been due such across the board wage increases as they had negotiated under the prior collective agreement between themselves and the county.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well that is understood, that these people became public servants as of January 1 and they will be entitled to whatever the arbitration award has made.

Mr. Peacock: Back to January 1?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: As of January 1, yes.

Vote 301 agreed to.

On vote 302:

Mr. Pilkey: On vote 302: I do not know if I got the remarks correctly from the Minister. He said, I believe, that it was a 40 per cent increase.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Approximately, yes.

Mr. Pilkey: It was a 40 per cent increase in wages?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The average wage.

Mr. Pilkey: And it went to $5,000?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, and I have the figures here yet, I think. Just a moment. As a matter of fact, it is in the annual report. Average salary at December 31, 1965, $5,865. Now that is an increase in the average scale of remuneration in a four-year period.

Mr. Peacock: Not 1965?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, this is in 1967. And in a four-year period that average has risen from something like $4,400, which I call awfully close to 40 per cent.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, the only comment I wanted to make was—and I have not figured this out actuarily—that it appears to me that about 71 per cent of the employees of this province fall in the lesser category—71 per cent.

Now, if my mathematics are correct, on the basis of this percentage, distribution of civil service staff by salary ranges; 10 per cent are under $3,500, 18 per cent are in the range $3,500 to $3,999; 20 per cent in the next range, 10 per cent in the next and 18 per cent in the next; which means that over and above this average, there is only 29 per cent of the whole service in that category. I would not think, just because it went up 40 per cent, that this was saying too much in terms of salaries that this province pays.

Mr. Peacock: Mr. Chairman, with respect to those figures. Some reference was made earlier to collective bargaining. I do not want to get into a collective bargaining situation with the Provincial Treasurer but could I ask him if these figures are presented on the basis of the total payroll of the province divided by the total number of employees, or are they the actual straight time earnings of the employees on the provincial payroll, exclusive of the fringe benefit costs and any overtime that might have been paid?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes. That is right. That is what they are.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 302?

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Chairman, I would like this clarification. It is more or less in the area of principle—the miserable type of wage is an established fact and I do not think we can do anything about that at this point—and is about the group of cleaners in the building, under The Department of Public Works. I raised this question under the Public Works estimates, and I did not pursue it with that Minister because it does comes under this department. I am talking about the cleaners in this building who work for Public Works but come under civil service classifications. I understand this was raised briefly by the member for Oshawa. The rates for the male cleaners, I understand, range from $1.94 to $2.07, in that area.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, that class is under arbitration now.

Mr. Gisborn: Well all right. If it is under arbitration, there should be heavy criticism of your department due to the fact that they have been negotiating since January 1, and we are now past six months, to decide the lowest rate in the department. It is inexcusable. But that is not the question I want to raise.

It is inexcusable that you take six months to decide on what kind of an increase you are going to give those in the lowest rate areas. You are going to give them a raise from $1.94 for male cleaners, but it is the female cleaners I want to talk about. I understand they get $1.69 at the present time. Their rates are in negotiations that started in January, and they are not completed yet. They work, I understand, five hours a day, so they get $8.45.

I made the appeal to the Minister of Public Works to use his influence to try to at least give them a $10 bill for coming down here and putting in their five-hour stint. But the question is, and I want the opinion of the Minister of this department, of the civil service, as to the equal-pay policy of the government. I understand that the males and the females in the cleaning groups do the same work. I have observed them, as I said the other night, doing their cleaning. Both the male and female use mops out of the pail and mop the floors, but there is a difference in their pay of a substantial amount, some 40 cents. Now what is the approach of the department in regard to equal pay for equal work?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Well, Mr. Chairman, there is a difference in their work. It may be that at intervals during the course of their daily employment they use mops and pails—most people that clean floors do, I guess it is fair to say—but, also, there are heavy jobs involved that the men are obliged to do that the ladies cannot perform. So there is this differential. It is not, in the strict sense, equal pay for equal work because there are jobs such as carting out large containers of refuse, all these manner of things, these jobs are assigned to the men, not the women. There is a distinct difference. Now I am not as familiar with this entire situation as would be the Minister of Public Works, but of this much I am sure, that there is a distinction in the nature of the work.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 302. The member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. R. F. Ruston (Essex-Kent): Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss a little wage classifications, and so forth, in 302. I think the hon. Minister mentioned that comparable remuneration was made—that the province of Ontario paid comparable wages to other industry—and I think maybe that this is not quite correct, at least in some areas.

I look at truck driver operator (1) for The Department of Highways, hourly rate $2.23. I think in some parts of the province, where wage scales differ, of course, and especially maybe in our own area, townships, counties road men who drive similar vehicles have a wage scale which runs from $2.40 to $3.25 per hour. At the same time the provincial government subsidizes 50 per cent of these wages, so they are subsidizing wages considerably higher than what they pay themselves. They subsidize them to the point of 50 per cent. I do not think that this is quite cricket.

I see grader operator, $2.41. In some areas they are as high as $3.40 under contract. There again they are subsidized 50 per cent by the province, so there is some variance there.

I think the main problem with most civil servants and the government is the long time it takes from the time they start negotiation of wages until some kind of a settlement is made. I think there is too much indifference on the part of the government. They have a lot of employees and I think that they should take a different attitude with regard to this, because employees seem to lost interest in their job—they feel the employers are not taking an interest in them, as I think the hon. member for Kent mentioned a while ago.

I believe that there are one or two areas that we could improve considerably, with regard to the employees of the province, and that is wage classification nearer to what industry pays, and also a much better effort made with regard to negotiation of wage scales.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, just one comment. The truck driver (1) referred to by the hon. member is part of a classification that is also under arbtitration.

Reference has been made by the hon. member before the length of time it takes for negotiations to succeed or, if time is required, for the arbitration award to be made. These are procedures, incidentally, that are all agreed to by the association and the government.

Mr. Gisborn: What would happen if they did not agree?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Again, Mr. Chairman, I am replying to the hon. member for Essex-Kent.

Mr. Sopha: Do not be so touchy.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, no; because I think he wants to hear me again.

For the information of the hon. member, the cyclical review and the negotiation process is on a two-year cycle. Every two years certain classifications come up for review. Both sides meet and attempt to negotiate what appears to be a satisfactory offer. If a satisfactory agreement cannot be reached and the intervention of joint council does not accomplish it, then the right to arbitration is the next step—or mediation, in this sense.

This process takes time. On the other hand, nobody loses in the long run. They may be out of pocket the increase for a period of time, but when the negotiation is effected, or a settlement is reached by mediation, or an abritration award is handed down, it is retroactive to the date upon which the class came under review.

I can only suggest to you that we have no trouble hiring truck drivers. For every vacancy for a truck driver where I live—and it is very similar in the part of the country you live—I can fill that job 20 times overnight, so it is really not that bad.

I think any hon. member living in a riding where there is an opportunity to place an employee on the staff of The Department of Highways, either at the district level or at the patrol level, is anxious to find these opportunities.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 302. The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, I would like to confirm a statement made by the hon. member for Oshawa a little while ago that all was not well within the ranks of the civil service association. I would like to read into the record a letter I received from one of my constituents, who happens to be an employee of The Department of Highways.

It is addressed to the civil service association of Ontario, attention Mr. Harold Bowen, general manager:

Dear Sir:

Please inform me as to what progress, if any, has been made in the pending classification and wage adjustments within the supply position of The Department of Highways.

I understand that there is considerable dissatisfaction within this group, particularly in regard to the clerk (2) supply. There is every justification for this dissatisfaction. I am included in this group, and I am very downcast and disillusioned toward the CSAO. The association showed very clearly its disregard for the workers in the lower income brackets when it adopted and instituted a percentage raise system whereby, for example, a 20 per cent increase—a man who earns $15,000 per year would get a raise of $3,000 and a man who earns $4,000 a year would only get an increase of $800. Please consider that both men pay the same for a loaf of bread.

To the man who earns $15,000 a year this raise is only a matter of prestige, but to the man earning $4,000 it is a matter of survival, and survival should have priority over prestige—$1,000 across the board should be $1,000 across the board for all, not $3,000 for some, and only a token for others.

Understandably, men who have greater individual ability and more responsibility should be paid more, but the wages should begin from a basic wage that is well within the cost of living and from there increased according to your classification, but it should not be allowed, as at present, to balloon way out of proportion.

As our paid general manager I am sure you are getting a very comfortable salary, and I challenge you to subsist on my take-home pay of $14.20 per day, supporting a wife, paying rent, and so on, and still maintain your dignity.

I am sure now that this has been brought to the attention of the CSAO. The CSAO will bring this more forcibly before our employers, if the CSAO is any good. Also I am sure that the CUPE or some other union would gladly offer assistance to the CSAO if they sought this assistance, and they have been through this already.

Respectfully yours.

So you can see, Mr. Chairman, that all is not well. If the Minister and the members of the CSAO feel that a man can live on $14.20 for five days a week, I think that he had better consider his remarks again.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, to some extent it is not really appropriate to comment on this. These are all matters on which negotiation processes have been established by agreement. Within that negotiation framework, I would suggest, is the place for determination of the classes that he referred to, and which are under arbitration.

I begin to wonder whether my friends in the NDP are in support of the CSAO, or whether they are trying to undermine and destroy it.

Mr. Sopha: They have not said yet.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: No, they have not, but you would wonder from the comments.

Mr. Stokes: I would plead with you to insist upon them coming into the 20th century and paying a decent wage.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, in the strict sense of the word, the hon. member's remarks are out of order.

Mr. Gisborn: Your smear tactics are also out of order.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: My smear tactics are nothing to the innuendo that you are very, very capable of dealing with.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: I challenge the Minister to check Hansard tomorrow, and see if he finds any indication we are not in favour of the civil service association, and I made it very clear in my opening remarks. It is a smear attack you are making.

Mr. Chairman: Order!

Votes 302 and 303 agreed to.

On vote 304:

Mr. R. H. Knight (Port Arthur): Je suis certain que mes compagnons dans la Partie Liberale me joignent en offrant sincere compliments au gouvernement pour ses efforts a mieux servir ceux de langue française dans cette province. Certainement cette programme d'enseignement pour ceux dans la service publique prouvera à nos canadiens français notre bonne volonté et bientôt leur servira directement.

Cette decision à introduire le français au service publique a pris du courage and de la clairvoyance, au partie du gouvernement.

Cependant je trouve que c'est mon devoir à cautionné les deputés honorable de cette assemblée, et le gouvernement des dangers qui accompagneront cette programme. Le danger le plus serieux, c'est que les bilingues devienne les privilegés de Queen's Park, et ce sera un domage, ça causeraient du rancune parmi ceux qui ne sont pas capable d'apprendre le français, au moment travaillant dans le province, nous avons parmis nos employees de la service publique un esprit de corps et de bonne humeur qu'ons ne voit pars partout; mais separer ceux qui parle les deux langues de ceux qui parlent seulement une langue; et élevé les bilingue a une place privilegé de point de vue d'autorité et d'argent, et ça sera pas long, cette bonne esprit de corps deviendra quelque chose du passé.

Ce qu'on faut se demander maintenant est: "Est-ce-que ceux qui ont servi l'Ontario depuis beaucoup d'année, souffriront-ils si ils ne sont pas capable à apprendre le français? Est-ce-que les bilingues d'épasseront ces employées loyales simplement parce qu'ils n'ont pas été capable d'apprendre une deuxième langue?

C'est maintenant qu'il faut y penser. Il faut devra faire bien attention de ne pas d'étrire ce que nous avons en essaient à faire quelque chose de bons. Ces la manirère qu'on introduit le français qui va déterminer les résultats. Je crois que cette département devrait consulté sérieusement avec les représentent des employées du service publique avant d'allée plus loins.

A Ottawa, au gouvernement federal je crois qu'ons paye les biligues plus que ceux d'une langue, et ça cause beaucoups de rancune. Si le gouvernement d'Ontario fait le même chose ici à Toronto je vous promais que le bonne esprit que nous voyons ici parmi les employées ne durera pas.

Alors j'espère que le ministre a bien écoute mes mots. N'oubliez pas ça toujours été ce de langue française qui ont été capable d'apprendre l'anglais, et non pas l'opposé, et si ça c'est vraie nous voyerons de plus en plus de personnes français ici à Queen's Park, et si ils sont donne les meilleurs positions, simplement parce qu'ils sont bilingue, ça causera une division sérieuse entre les bilingues, et ceux de langue anglaise.

Alors monsieur le président, et par vous au ministre, faites bien attention à introduir cette programme de la meilleur manière possible, et, d'une manière qui ne detruire pas ce que nous avons, et qui fera un succès de cette idée.

I wonder if the hon. Minister would comment on that?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: By all means.

Mr. Chairman, I just say to you that the three gentlemen seated before me all say that they can speak French, but I regret that I cannot. I admire the hon. member's facility with French, and perhaps he would be kind enough to tell me what he said?

Mr. Knight: I hope that the exercise that we have just had will serve to point out just how difficult and complicated the process that we are launching into will be.

What I said, I say very seriously. The point that I was trying to make was that I thought that my hon. colleagues in the Liberal benches, here, would join me in complimenting the government in moving ahead with courage and far-sightedness in trying to make the residents of the French language more comfortable in this province.

I said also that I thought that there were some dangers, and I thought that it was time to sound a warning note before we go too far. We have, as far as I am concerned, a wonderful spirit among the civil servants, and the many friends up in the north who work for the government have a great spirit. I have found it here, around Queen's Park. It is sort of bubbly, a good esprit de corps. However, when we introduce bilingualism, the danger we encounter is that we might elevate those that are bilingual to a position of privilege, as I think has happened in some cases in the federal service in Ottawa. This is the danger, that, people who have served the people of this province for many years may suddenly find that they cannot keep pace with the younger ones; cannot command a second language; and thus the younger ones will possibly be placed in a position of authority over them, and may even make more money.

The light that we have to shed on this point is that in the past, we have found that it has almost always been those of French origin—the English who have been able to learn French. One can envision that as this plan unfolds, you will have more and more employees in the civil service of French extraction. What I am afraid of is that a certain amount of resentment may come from this. It is really a far more complicated programme than we envision at this point, and I would hope—and I certainly commend the Minister and department for this programme—but I hope that you will take my words very seriously. Let us hope that those who have served here for many years do not suffer; and in trying to do something that is very good, we do not destroy the wonderful spirit that we have.

The one other thing that I mentioned—I am not speaking in the sequence of the remarks but the gist of the ideas are here—I thought that, perhaps, the department officials should speak with the representatives of the civil service about this possible problem so that if there is continuous liaison in the implementation of this programme, we will have a chance of putting it into effect without falling into the pitfalls I have mentioned.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to make one comment and say I think the hon. member's remarks and observations were very sensible. I am sure we will be able, as we gradually introduce the French language into the civil service, to find the happy balance that is required to make it work. But I just simply want to say his remarks were well taken and we will consider them.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Chairman, does the money in this vote reflect the amount of money that is being spent on the classes for the members?

Mr. Chairman: This is just for the civil service.

Mr. Stokes: Not for the members?

Mr. Chairman: Does it include the—

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Yes, that is right, it includes the members.

Mr. Stokes: Well, I think it would be quite in order for me then, Mr. Chairman, at this time, due to the fact I have availed myself of the opportunity of taking the French classes, to congratulate the Minister or whoever is responsible for having set them up. I think we are well on the way to becoming bilingual, and by the time we are finished the course of 32 lessons—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Well I am on the way to becoming trilingual.

Mr. Stokes: By the time we are finished the course of 32 lessons, I am sure we will all have thought it was a worthwhile exercise. I would also like to congratulate whoever was responsible for setting up the lunches so that we did not have to unduly waste time—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Stokes: No, I sincerely mean this. It avoided a lot of delay and allowed us to pay much more attention to the French classes, and I would just like to say on behalf of this group anyway, thank you very much.

Mr. Chairman: Can the member provide evidence that he has been at the classes?

Mr. Stokes: Je parle Français un peu, aussi.

Votes 304 to 307, inclusive, agreed to.

On Vote 308:

Mr. Pilkey: In vote 308, I said during my initial remarks that it was my understanding that no meaningful negotiations took place between the Ontario joint council and I said that most of the unsettled items in dispute were referred to arbitration, I also asked at that point if my remarks were not correct then what had been settled recently at the joint council in regard to collective bargaining?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the last two have gone to arbitration. I may get some information on the other. The member's question was how many were settled in joint council without going to arbitration?

Mr. Pilkey: What have they settled recently?

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: What have they settled? Salary settlements negotiated 1966 to 1968 by direct negotiation, there were four occupational categories; by mediation, one occupational category; by arbitration, four occupational categories; and at joint council, one occupational category.

Mr. Pilkey: Mr. Chairman, let me follow up with another question. In this regard the joint council, as I understand it, is set up under The Public Service Act. Now, notwithstanding the items that have been referred to Judge Little, has the government given any consideration of recognizing other organizations. I particularly mention the united government workers of Ontario, which is now estimated to have something like 2000 members. I use that as an estimate, I do not know exactly what the membership is. Is the government prepared to give them any recognition?

Mr. Chairman: I hardly think that point would come under vote 308.

Mr. Pilkey: Well, it is the joint council. They are the people who have recognition under vote 308 and I just wanted to know if the Minister is prepared to expand on that.

Hon. Mr. MacNaughton: The answer is no. The united government workers of Ontario has no status under The Public Service Act at the moment. Whether they will have or what Judge Little will recommend only the judge at this moment knows. I cannot comment on that and I do not think I should. But as at the moment the answer is no.

Vote 308 to 310, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: This completes the estimates of The Department of Civil Service.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves that the committee of supply rise and report it has come to certain resolutions and ask for leave to sit again.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and asks for leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are only two bills left on the order paper and they will be in committee of the whole. We are going to deal with those and then perhaps give them third reading, which will clear all the legislation from the order paper at long last.

Then I would like to proceed with the Budget debate. There are some members who want to take part in that debate and we will let that routine run until we see how many speak and for how long.

That will leave, then, the estimates of The Department of Financial and Commercial Affairs, the Lieutenant-Governor, my own estimates and the Provincial Auditor, which we will deal with. Not necessarily in that order, but as we reach them.

Then, of course, there still remains to be dealt with the report of the workmen's compensation board.

I cannot really give any accurate times as to when these items will be called, because we are approaching the end, but in any event as the day progresses I will give all the notice that I can.

There is a resolution dealing with the use of the French language in this Legislature and that, too, will be called. I should think that will probably come on Friday or Monday, depending upon the speed with which we move tomorrow or the speed with which we do not move.

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11:10 o'clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1968

The House met at 10:00 o'clock a.m

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Later today we are to have as visitors in the east gallery, under the aegis of The Department of Education, a political group who are with the department at the moment. I am sure that when they come they will be interested to see the proceedings of this House, in this hot and humid atmosphere, which by this afternoon should be even better than it is now.

Petitions.

Presenting reports.

Mr. J. B. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present the report of the standing committee on public accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was a question addressed to me by the hon. member for Yorkview (Mr. Young) yesterday about the licensing of music teachers. I have now checked back through the file and I find that I received a letter from Mr. Mauro which I referred to The Department of Education and The Department of Labour for examination as to all the elements involved. Then it turned out that there had been requests to the government from other organizations interested in the teaching of music, concerning licensing. The position and the information required by the two departments involved has not yet been completely assembled.

I acknowledged Mr. Mauro's letter and I rather thought that an acknowledgement might have gone from one of the other departments to him; it did go to some of the other organizations that were enquiring.

However, in the meantime, Mr. Mauro has been contacted and informed of what the situation is to date, so I think the situation is in order as far as Mr. Mauro is concerned.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Peterborough has a question of the Minister of Trade and Development from the other day.

Mr. W. G. Pitman (Peterborough): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could address the question to the Minister of Trade and Development?

Did the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company receive any grant or grants from the Minister's department prior to the transfer of that company's operations from Hamilton to Lindsay? If so, what was the total amount of moneys paid to the company?

Hon. S. J. Randall (Minister of Trade and Development): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is "no." We had no grant system available when Firestone went in there in 1965, but it was a federally designated area at that time so they could have got a federal grant.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Wentworth.

Mr. I. Deans (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Development.

Are regular inspections made of Ontario housing corporation properties to ensure that fire alarm systems and sprinkler systems are maintained in good working order?

If so, who inspects the premises; the fire department or the OHC? How often are these inspections carried out?

Hon. Mr. Randall: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question, regular inspections are carried out in every OHC building which has a fire alarm system. Under an arrangement between OHC and the fire prevention bureau of the metropolitan fire department, the fire department carries out regular inspections of OHC properties. In addition, OHC maintenance staff carry out a complete inspection at least once a year. In those buildings where there is an electrically controlled fire alarm system, inspection and servicing is carried out on a twice yearly basis by private firms specializing in this type of work.

I would like to advise the hon. members that the fire alarm system of 14 Raydak Drive, where a fire occurred on July 15 was inspected yesterday morning by Dominion Fire and Burglary Alarm Limited and was found to be operational. The firm also determined that the battery-operated standby power system for the fire alarm was also fully operational. A check carried out by OHC maintenance staff on June 10 of the water standpipe systems showed the water valve to be in an open position.

Following the fire, the valve was found to be closed and an investigation into this is underway. Valves to all water standpipes in OHC properties have now been padlocked in an open position to ensure that no standpipe valve can be inadvertently closed.

At the time of the fire it was reported that property damage amounted to $13,000. It has since been estimated that the damage amounted to approximately $1,700.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when our people found out that this valve had been turned off, we also made an enquiry and found that the superintendent had turned it or somebody in the building, perhaps not the superintendent, had turned it but there was a false alarm on July 2, and somebody apparently must have gone down and turned it off. That valve is in the boiler room which is locked. So it must have been one of the staff members. Now we are working with Dominion Fire and Burglary to find out if there is a system that can automatically notify them if the alarm system has been turned off and left off.

I think one of the difficulties in these multiple family buildings, is the fact that there are youngsters running around. The ringing of the fire alarm system is almost a daily occurrence in many areas and, I suppose, the superintendent of the building sometimes, like perhaps the rest of us, would turn it off. If he inadvertently forgot to turn it back on, that is what could have happened up there. But we are investigating it further, and we would like to find some way of knowing when the alarm is turned off and for how long.

So that is the situation at the moment.

Mr. Deans: May I ask a supplementary question? It is more a comment really.

Will you instruct all of the superintendents in the OHC buildings not to touch the fire alarm systems? They are of no value if they are going to be shut off.

Hon. Mr. Randall: Yes, I think you are quite right. As far as we are concerned, we want to make sure the tenants and the property are protected but I was talking to a gentleman who works with me, who lives in a very deluxe apartment here, not half a mile from this building, and he said that their tenants, if they listen to the fire alarm system, would be out on the street about once a day. For some reason or other, the fire alarm system keeps going off and nothing happens.

Now I have had that in my apartment also, but I think in this case here it may be human error and we are checking it out.

Mr. Deans: It is better to be out on the street once each day than to die in a fire.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid (Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. When will the Minister inform the pulp and sulphite union No. 92 and the Boise Cascade Company, both located in Fort Frances, of the contents of the conciliation officer's report, made some seven weeks ago?

What is the reason for the long delay in making the conciliation officer's report known? Is it departmental policy to withhold conciliation officer or conciliation board reports for this length of time?

Hon. D. A. Bales (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the questions from the hon. member, the department sent the report to the union and the company on July 15 by mail, and it should be in their hands by this time.

In the circumstances, I do not think it is reasonable to say that there was a delay, because the report was not sent out. A conciliation officer was trying to be of assistance to the parties to reach an agreement and I can tell you that, in reference to the third part of the question, that it is not department policy to withhold conciliation officer or board reports. We send them out as soon as possible under the circumstances.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Will the Minister accept a supplementary question? Does it not seem overly long to you, sir, over seven weeks, before either the company or the union received any word from the department at all?

Hon. Mr. Bales: I think that there were communications in various ways and as you were well aware, there are a number of strikes and disagreements in the pulp and paper industry—and this I mentioned in a question some several weeks ago. There were some 150 agreements involved in all.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Thunder Bay.

Mr. J. E. Stokes (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Lands and Forests. Is the department satisfied that the spraying programme in northwestern Ontario conducted last month to halt the budworm infestation, was a success.

Hon. R. Brunelle (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member for Thunder Bay, the coverage of the 250,000 acre budworm infested area near Shebandowan by the spray aircraft was considered quite successful. This spraying was completed on June 27. The results of the chemicals are now being determined by insect rangers and students who are making a mortality count on the budworms in the area. This work has just got under way. It will be completed in about two weeks.

This survey did not start sooner because of the delayed action of the chemical on the insects. Final determination as to whether the level of the infestation has been controlled hinges on the information that will be obtained in October on the count of eggs hatched by any surviving insects.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Downsview.

Mr. V. M. Singer (Downsview): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. On Monday evening last, while the House was in committee of the whole debating the reports of the liquor control board of Ontario, and the liquor licence board of Ontario, the hon. member for Humber (Mr. Ben), during the course of his remarks, made a certain comment that I think was highly unfortunate and lends itself to a most unsavoury interpretation. I did not make any comments in connection with that point at that time, sir, for two reasons.

First, I was not in the House when those remarks were made. I later came into the House and heard a part of the discussion, and I had hoped, and this is my second reason, that with a reasonable lapse of time, there could have and would have been an explanation, at least, of those remarks by that member.

Let me say, sir, that in my very strong opinion I do not think that in the records of this important body, there is any room for remarks, whether intended or not, that bring at least to the minds of those persons affected, opprobrium because of either their racial or religious background. I would have hoped that the sort of joke that finds its merit—so called—in an attack on a minority group, passed out of the scene of public discussion together with the buggy-whip.

I want to say, sir, as strongly as I can, that I dissociate myself with that kind of remark, I would hope that the annals of this Legislature will not henceforth show the sort of remark that could be interpreted by those who apparently are the butt of it, as being a substantial indication of a feeling of intolerance or lack of understanding.

This remark has disturbed me very deeply, and has disturbed a great number of my constituents very deeply. I am sure that most members of the House will agree with me that occasionally, while remarks may be made in what appears to be good common sense, that if by any chance those remarks can be reasonably interpreted as casting an insult or equal sort of opprobrium on a religious or racial group, that they have no part in the proceedings of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Humber.

Mr. G. Ben (Humber): Mr. Speaker, since the remarks pertain to me, I can rise in rebuttal to what was said by the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: I would hope for an explanation rather than a rebuttal.

Mr. Ben: Well, an explanation—I do not know whether it is an explanation or a rebuttal—we are playing with words here, though I imagine that you, yourself, Mr. Speaker, are entitled to certain interpretations.

There were not that many members in this House on Monday night when the remarks complained of were made. They were made between the hours—if my memory serves me correctly—somewhere between 10.15 p.m. and 10.25 p.m. The hon. member for Downsview, as he stated, was not in the House at the time the remarks were made.

But it is important to recall that although the hon. member had not been in the House to hear the remarks that I had made, when the hon. Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Grossman) was chastising me, the hon. member for Downsview got up and said that he adopted the remarks made by the hon. Minister. In other words, without having heard the accusation made against me or even the evidence, he said: "Guilty". That disturbed me immensely.

The other thing that disturbed me, Mr. Speaker, is that both the Minister of Correctional Services and the hon. member for High Park (Mr. Shulman) stated that they both know me, and they know that I am not anti-semitic, and I would not make anti-semitic remarks. Now these are the other two people, Mr. Speaker.

I said that one should not quote from these things—the prime versions of Hansard, the unexpurgated editions, but unfortunately the other edition will not be out until later. The fact is that the hon. Minister of Correctional Services did not get up and make any objection until some five or six or seven minutes after I had made my remarks. He said he picked that particular time, and he thought that was the appropriate time, and yet immediately after I made my remarks, the hon. Minister interjected, and I quote, "What a theory that is!"

In other words, if he found anything wrong with my remarks at the time, surely he should have spoken up. But there is another thing that is important, Mr. Speaker, and that is that I consider the members of this House to be honourable men. It is not important whether their race, their religious group or their association is slurred, libelled or slandered, and if such occurred, they would get up as honourable men and object to anybody being slandered. Yet not one hon. member who was present in this House made even a comment about it. I would choose to believe that they did not make a comment because there was nothing worthy of comment, rather than choose to believe that they are all dishonourable men and would not get up to defend the least individual group who is slandered.

Now, as I said, I was rather upset because nothing would have happened about this remark had the Minister of Correctional Services not risen. My remark, if I may put it in the vernacular of Yorkville, simply said that as far as I was concerned—"The Jewish people were too brainy to blow their bread on booze". It was a remark that was flattering their discretion in these matters.
