Reception of the Japanese Ambassador, General Oshima, by the Fuehrer on 14 December 1941, from 1300 to 1400 o'clock in the presence of the Reich Foreign Minister.

First the Fushrer presents Ambassador Oshima with the Grand Cross of the Order of Marit of the German Eagle in gold. With cordial words he acknowledges his services in the achievement of German-Japanese cooperation, which has now obtained its culmination in a close brother-hood of arms.

denoral Oshima expresses his thanks for the great honor and emphasizes how glad he is that this brotherhood of arms has now come about between Germany and Japan.

The Fushrer continues: "You gave the right declaration of war!"
This method is the only proper one. Japan pursued it formerly and it corresponds with his own system, that is, to negotiate as long as possible. But if one sees that other is interested only in putting one off, in shaming and humiliating one, and is not willint to come to an agreement, then one should strike — as hard as possible, indeed — and not waste time declaring war. It was heartwarming to him to hear of the first operations of the Japanese. He himself negotiated with infinite patience at times, for example, with Poland and also with Russia. When he then realized, that the other did not want to come to an agreement, he struck suddenly and without formalities. He would continue to go this way in the future.

The Japanese Government did indeed not act thoughtlessly; it had, he must say, shown angelical patience toward that ruffian, Roosevelt. There is a German proverb, saying: "The most virtuous cannot live in peace if his evil neighbor dislikes it". These are words containing a bitter truth. If the neighbor is unwilling, one just has to destroy him.

must freely admit having been worried about the prospects for success of the submarine war. How could a commander tell when he could torpedo and when not? American ships went in convoys and under dimmed lights, and besides the Americans had delivered to the English 50 destroyers of a type of which they themselves had 80 more. One could not expect a U-boat commander to work through an entire book before each torpeding in boat commanders had been under an intolerable psychological strain, p.4 for in the last analysis each one of them felt the enormous responsibility at the thought that he might bring his country into a new war by a misjudged torpedoing. These days were now definitely past. He had given the German U-boat commanders orders to torpedo everything in sight. The German surface naval forces could also feel more free to operate. Up till now American ships had stood nearby and radioed until the British naval forces arrived, without any possibility for the Germans to defend themselves against this. He would now send the U-boats up to American ports and would not have to take the three-mile zone into consideration any more.

He, the Fuebrer, was convinced that Roosevelt must be beaten. It was a great feat of the Japanese that they had destroyed at the very start the nimbus of American superiority. Then he tells of the American flighting capacity, which he does not consider high, and gives examples from the year 1918. At that time the German troops were exhausted and tired and the American ones fresh and well fed. Nevertheless, wherever Germans met Americans, the latter were so thoroughly beaten that they required weeks efore they could be sent into action again. How could troops whose God is the dollar hold firm to the last?

p.5 Clear conditions had now been created. A weight had been lifted from the minds of the German U-boat commanders. All the Jewish concepts like "western hemisphere", "300-mile zone", etc. had become untenable. Germany would make the ocean insecure.

In 1939 he had faced an important decision. He would either have had to send the German U-boats into combat and would then have had no more crews for the subsequent mass production, or he would have had to use the greatest part of the available U-boats for training purposes, in order to have sufficient submarine personnel for the future. Thank God, he had decided to adopt the second solution, and this would now have its effect, since 19,20 even 24 U-boats would be put into service monthly. The number of our U-boats would increase enormously each month, especially since, on the average, we had hitherto lost less than two U-boats a month.

General Oshima tells the Fuehrer that Japan had fought under similarly difficult conditions, when Nanking was bembed and the pilots had orders to spare the foreign legations under all circumstances. This was an impossible restraint for the pilots. It was infinitely fortunate, the Fuehrer continues, that now he could relieve the men in the submarines of the responsibility and now once more bore it his abs.

On the remaining front there now came the winter standstill. Unfortunately a temperature drop of 38 had occurred right in the middle of the development of a big operation. Any operation ceases at such a temperature. Besides the burden for the individual man of fighting in this cold weather, there is the trouble with the motorized vehicles. Above all, however, the automatic weapons would not operate any more. Of course, mome operations would be completed. First, Sevastopol must be taken; the preparations for this were almost concluded. Then, the siege of Leningrad would be continued, and third, he hoped soon to be able to resume the operations in the direction of the Caucasus, He mast align the remaining sectors of the Eastern front on as short a line as possible, corresponding approximately to a straight line from Leningrad to Taganrog. This would then give him the possibility of withdrawing the motorized and armored units and the best infantry divisions, in order to freshen them up during the winter. Large-scale operations would then be resumed in the spring.

In the meantime he would now take strong action in the Mediterranean. Next week, 51 German U-boats would be in the Mediterranean, and in the meantime a large number of motor torpedo boats had also arrived there. The Luftwaffe was moving an entire air force (Luftflotte) under the command of General Kesselring there. In the end the English would have to pay dearly for their stay in the Mediterranean. In this connection he recalls the Norway undertaking, where the English fleet suffered such losses through the action of U-boats and Luftwaffe that it finally had to witheraw.

His major objectives at present were the destruction of Russia, the southward drive ever the Caucasus, and the torpedoing of the Anglo-Saxon navy and nerchant marine. Today the tonnage of the Anglo-Saxon nations was already too small to carry an expeditionary force to the continent.

Above all, the abriet torpedo waaron must on further feveloped, In this regard the Japanese Covernment was of great assistance by supplying Japanese torpedos. The fact that we are still backward with this weapon was due to the mistake that the torpedos were constructed and tested by the Navy, while the planes designated to carry them were constructed and tested by the Luftwaffe. The development was parallel but was not carried on in unison. General Oshima asks whether these Japanese torpedos could not be utilized soon. Germany now had 70 of them and also the corresponding drawings. He is convinced that Germany could have great success with it, since the training was not too difficult and the German pilots were very valiant. The English did not know that Germany had Japanese torpedoes, and so a surprise would be possible. The Fuehrer agrees with Oshima and says that he would make use of the torpedo weapon soon. For quite some time now an entire wing (Geschwader) had been training with aerial torpedoes exclusively. He would make a concentrated surprise attack, an attack on which everything would be staked.

General Oshima now spreads out a map and gives the Fuehrer a comprehensive lecture on the war situation in the Pacific and the Archipelago area. He tells the Fuehrer of the successes of the Japanese air force and fleet and about the advance of the Japanese land forces in the Philippines and the Malay Peninsula. At the conclusion of his report on the situation, Oshima says that after the capture of Singapore Japan must turn toward India. In this connection he considered it important that German and Japanese operations should be synchronized. It would be very advantageous if when Japan attacked India from the East, the German troops would threaten India from the West. The Fuehrer again explains to Oshima his plans for the Spring and says that first he intends to p.10 attack in the South, since a thrust to the Caucasus, also with regard to oil, and an advance to Iraq and Iran -- which also implies a threat to India -- would be of primary importance, to begin with. Only then would he resume operations in the center of the Eastern front. The Russians thought we would want to take Moscow first, but this was of lesser impor-

Meanwhile, he would turn his entire attention to North Africa. We would furthermore, as he had already mentioned, torpedo every ship we encountered, and he believed that thereby heavy damage could be inflicted on the Anglo-Saxon fleet. Oshima expresses his great desire that in all these German and Japanese undertakings the operations should be synchronized If this were done cleverly and if the method of operations worked as a sort of lever or exchange action, this would inevitably lead to the ruin of the Anglo-Saxon powers. To this the Fuehrer agrees and declares furple that November and December are always the worst months to carry on warfare. As soon as the weather improved he would again ruthlessly attack English ports and dockyards. The Luftwaffe had already made extensive preparations for this. With the English ports and docks ruined, England would be helpless.

Then General Oshima spoke about landing warfare, which had been greatly developed and practiced in Japan during the past 30 years. On the island of Hainan, which was occupied by Japan, the attempts and exercises had been carried out with great energy. The necessary landing boats had also been extensively developed. He suggests that as soon as contact has been reestablished between Germany and Japan — which is possible by air and surely will soon be possible by long-distance U-boats — delegates of the German Wehrmacht should come to Japan to study the methods developed by the Japanese.

p.12 The Fuehrer briefly mentions the necessity of stopping American shipments to Vladivostok. Oshima says that it would be an easy task to halt American shipments to Vladivostok, since, in order to get there, American ships have to pass through straits which could be covered by artillery: besides, he is of the opinion that America would not make any more shipments to Russia.

Reception of the Japanese Ambassador, General Oshima, by the Fushrer on 14 December 1941, from 1300 to 1400 o'clock in the presence of the Reich Foreign Minister.

First the Fuehrer presents Ambassador Oshima with the Grand Gross of the Order of Merit of the German Eagle in gold. With cordial words he acknowledges his services in the achievement of German-Japanese cooperation, which has now obtained its culmination in a close brotherhood of arms.

General Oshima expresses his thanks for the great honor and emphasizes how glad he is that this brotherhood of arms has now come about between Germany and Japan.

The Fuehrer continues: "You gave the right declaration of war!" This method is the only proper one. Japan pursued it formarly and it corresponds with his own system, that is, to negotiate as long as possible. But if one sees that other is interested only in putting one off, in shaming and humiliating one, and is not willing to come to an agreement, then one should strike - as hard as possible, indeed - and not weste time declaring war. It was heartwarming to him to hear of the first operations of the Japanese. He himself negotiated with infinite patience at times, for example, with Poland and also with Russia. When he then realized, that the other did not want to come to an agreement, he struck suddenly and without formalities. He would continue to go this way in the future.

The Japanese Government did indeed not act thoughtlesely; it had, he must say, shown angelical patience toward that ruffian, Roosevelt. There is a German proverb, saying: "The most virtuous cannot live in peace if his evil neighbor distiles it". These are words containing a bitter truth. If the neighbor is unwilling, one just has to destroy him.

The entry of Japan into the war was a great relief to Germany. He must freely ad it having been worried about the prospects for success of the submarine war. How could a commander tell when he could torpedo and when not?

American ships went in convoys and under dimmed lights, and besides the Americans had delivered to the English 50 destroyers of a type of which they themselves had 80 more. One could not expect a U-boat commander to work through an entire book before each torpeding in order to establish whether the ship were English or American. The U-boat commanders had been under an intolerable psychological strain, for in the last analysis each one of them felt the enormous responsibility at the thought that he might bring his country into a new war by a misjudged torpedoing. These days were now definitely past. He had given the German U-boat commanders orders to torpedo everything in sight. The German surface naval forces could also feel more free to operate. Up till now American ships had stood nearby and radioed until the British navel forces arrived, without any possibility for the Germans to defend themselves against this. He would now send the U-boats up to American ports and would not have to take the three-mile zone into consideration any more.

He, the Fuehrer, was convinced that that Roosevelt must be beaten.

It was a great feat of the Japanese that they had destroyed at the very start the mimbus of American superiority. Then he tells of the American fighting capacity, which he does not consider high, and gives examples from the year 1918. At that time the German troops were exhausted and tired and the American ones fresh and well fed. Nevertheless, wherever Germans met Americans, the latter were so thoroughly beaten that they required weeks before they could be sent into action again. How could troops whose God is the dollar hold firm to the last?

Clear conditions had now been created. A weight had been lifted from the minds of the Germans U-boat commanders. All the Jewish concepts like "western hemisphere", "300-mile sone", etc. had become untenable. Germany would make the ocean insecure.

In 1939 he had faced an important decision. He would either have had to send the German U-boats into combat and would then have had no more crews for the subsequent mass production, or he would have had to use the greatest part of the available U-boats for training purposes, in order to have sufficient submarine personnel for the future. Thank God, he had decided to adopt the second solution, and this would now have its effect, since 19,20,even 2h U-boats would be put into service monthly. The number of our U-boats would increase enormously each month, especially since, on the average, we had kest hitherto lost less than two U-boats a month.

difficult conditions, when Nanking was bombed and the pilots had orders to spare the foreign legations under all circumstances. This was an impossible restraint for the pilots. It was infinitely fortunate, the Fuehrer continues, that now he could relieve the men in the submarines of the responsibility and now once more bore it himself.

on the remaining front there now came the winter standstill. Unfortunately a temperature drop of 36° had occurred right in the middle of the development of a big operation. Any operation ceases at such a temperature. Besides the burden for the individual men of fighting in this cold weather, there is the trouble with the motorized vehicles. Above all, however, the automatic weapons would not operate any more. Of course some operations would be completed. First, Sevastopol must be taken; the preparations for this were almost concluded. Then, the siege of laningrad would be continued, and third, he hoped soon to be able to resume the operations in the direction of the Caucasus. He must align the remaining sectors of the Eastern front on as a short a line as possible, corresponding approximately to a straight line from Leningrad to faganrog. This would then give him the possibility of withdrawing the motorised and armoved units and the best infantry divisions, in order to freshen them up during the winter. Large-scale operations would then be resumed in the Spring.

In the meantime he would now take strong action in the Mediterranean. Next week, 51 German U-boats would be in the Mediterranean, and in the meantime a large number of motor torpedo boats had also arrived there. The Luftwaffe was moving an entire air force (Luftflotte) under the sommand of General Resselring there. In the end the English would have to pay dearly for their stay in the Mediterranean. In this connection he recalls the Norway undertaking where the

English fleet suffered such losses through the action of U-boats and Luftwaffe that it finally had to withdraw.

His major objectives at present were the destruction of Russia, the southward drive over the Caucasus, and the torpedoing of the Anglo-Saxon navy and merchant marine. Today the termage of the Anglo-Saxon nations was already too small to carry an expeditionary force to the continent.

Above all, the sorial torpedo weapon must be further developed. In this regard the Japanese Government was of great assistance by supplying Japanese torpedos. The fact that we are still backward with this weapon was due to the mistake that the torpedos were constructed and tested by the navy, while the planes designated to carry them were constructed and tested by the Luftwaffe. The development was parallel but was not carried on in unison. General Cahima ake whether these Japanese torpedos could not be utilized soon. Germany now had 70 of them and also the corresponding drawings. He is convinced that Germany could have great success with it, since the training was not too difficult and the German pilots were very valiant. The English did not know that Germany had Japanese tospedoes, and so a surprise would be possible. The Fuebrer agrees with Oshima and says that the would make use of the torpedo weapon soon. For quite some time now an entire wing (Geschwader) had been training with aerial torpedoes exclusively. He would make a concentrated surprise attack, an attack on which everything would be staked.

denoral Oshima now speads out a map and gives the Fushrer a comprehensive lacture on the war situation in the Pacific and the Archipelage area. He tells the Fushrer of the successes of the Japanese air force and fleet and about the advance of the Japanese land forces in the Philippines and the Malay Paninsus. At the conslusion of his report on the situation, Oshima says that after the capture of Singapore India Japan must turn toward India. In this connection he considered it important that German and Japanese operations should be synchronized. It would be very advantageous if when Japan attacked India from the East, the German troops would threaten India from the West. The Fushrer again explains to Oshima his plans for the Spring and says that first he intends to attack in the South, since a thrust to the Caucasus, also with regard to oil, and an advance to Iraq and Iran - which also implies a threat to India - would be of primary importance, to begin with. Only then would he resume operations in the center of the Eastern front. The Russians thought we would want to take Moscow first, but this was of lesser importance to him.

Meanwhile, he would turn his entire attention to North Africa. We would furthermore, as he had already mentioned, torpedo every ship we encountered, and he believed that thereby heavy damage could be inflicted on the Anglo-Saxon fleet. Oshima expresses his great desire that in all these German and Japanese undertakings the operations should be synchronised. If this were done cleverly and if the method of operations worked as a sort of lever of exchange action, this would insvitably lead to the ruin of the Anglo-Samon powers. To this the Fuehrer agrees and declares further that November and December are always the worst months to carry on warfare. As soon as the weather improved he would again ruthlessly attack English ports and dockyards. The Luftmaffe had already made extensive preparations for this. With the English ports and docks ruined, England would be helpless.

Then General Oshima spoke about landing warfare, which had been greatly developed and practiced in Japan during the past 30 years. On the island of Hainan, which was occupied by Japan, the attempts and exercises had been carried out with great energy. The necessary landing boats had also been extensively developed. He suggests that as soon as contact has been reestablished between Germany and Japan - which is possible by air and surely will soon be possible by long-distance U-boats - delegates of the German Wehrmacht should come to Japan to study the methods developed by the Japanese.

The Fuebrer briefly mentions the necessity of stopping American shipments to Vladivostok. Oshima says that it would be an easy task to halt American shipments to Vladivostok, since, in order to get there, American ships have to pass through straits which would be covered by artillery: besides, he is of the opinion that America would not make any more shipments to Russia.

It would be very advantageous if when Japan attacked India from the East, the German troops would threaten India from the West. The Fuehrer again explains to Oshima his plans for the Spring and says that first he intends to p.10 attack in the South, since a thrust to the Caucasus, also with regard to oil, and an advance to Iraq and Iran -- which also implies a threat to India --would be of primary importance, to begin with. Only then would he resume operations in the center of the Eastern front. The Russians thought we would want to take Moscow first, but this was of leaser importance to him.

Meanwhile, he would turn his entire attention to North Africa. We would furthermore, as he had already mentioned, torpedo every ship we encountered, and he believed that thereby he vy damage could be inflicted on the Anglo-Saxon fleet. Oshima expresses his great desire that in all these German and Japanese undertakings the operations should be synchronized if this were done cleverly and if the method of operations worked as a sort of lever or exchange action, this would inevite by lead to the ruin of the Anglo-Saxon powers. To this the Fuehrer agrees and declares further that November and December are always the worst months to carry on warfare. As soon as the weather improved he would again ruthlessly attack English ports and dockyards. The Luftwaffe had already made extensive Then General Oshima spoke about landing werfere, which had been greatly developed and practiced in Japan during the past 30 years. On the island of Hainan, which was occupied by Japan, the attempts and exercises had been carried out with great energy. The necessary landing boats had also been extensively developed. He suggests that as soon as contact has been reestablished between Germany and Japan -- which is possible by air and surely will soon be possible by long-distance U-boats -- delegates of the German Wehrmacht should come to Japan to study the methods developed by the Japanese.

preparations for this. With the English ports and docks ruined, England

p.12 The Fuehrer briefly mentions the necessity of stopping American shipments to Vladivostok. Oshima says that it would be an easy task to halt American shipments to Vladivostok, since, in order to get there, American ships have to pass through straits which could be covered by artillery: besides, he is of the opinion that America would not make any more shipments to Russia.
