

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS.

BS 2341

Chap.

Copyright No.

Shelf. B 206

1873

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

NOTES,

EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,

ON THE EPISTLES OF PAUL

TO

THE THESSALONIANS, TO TIMOTHY, TO TITUS, AND TO PHILEMON.

By ALBERT BARNES,

AUTHOR OF "NOTES ON THE PSALMS," "LECTURES ON THE EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY," ETC., ETC.

REVISED EDITION.

NEW YORK:
HARPER & BROTHERS, PUBLISHERS, FRANKLIN SQUARE.

1873.

BS2341

.B26.

1873

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1873, by ABBY A. BARNES and WILLIAM PURVES, Executors of the Will of ALBERT BARNES, deceased, in the Office of the Librarian of Congress, at Washington.

NOTES,
EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,
ON THE
FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.
BY ALBERT BARNES.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. The Situation of Thessalonica.

THESSALONICA was a city and sea-port of Macedonia. It was at the head of the Bay Thermaicus, or the Gulf of Thessalonica (see the map prefixed to the Notes on the Acts of the Apostles), and was, therefore, favorably situated for commerce. It was on the great Ægean Way; was possessed of an excellent harbor, and had great advantages for commerce through the Hellespont, and with Asia Minor and the adjacent countries. It was south-west of Philippi and Amphipolis, and a short distance north-east of Berea. Macedonia was an independent country until it was subdued by the Romans. The occasion of the wars which led to its conquest by the Romans was an alliance which was formed by Philip II. with Carthage during the second Punic War. The Romans delayed their revenge for a season; but Philip having laid siege to Athens, the Athenians called the Romans to their aid, and they declared war against the Macedonians. Philip was compelled to sue for peace, to surrender his vessels, to reduce his army to 500 men, and to defray the expenses of the war. Perseus, the successor of Philip, took up arms against the Romans, and was totally defeated at Pydna by Paulus Æmilius, and the Romans took possession of the country. Indignant at their oppression, the Macedonian nobility and the whole nation rebelled under Andriscus; but after a long struggle they were overcome by Quintus Cæcilius, surnamed, from his conquest, Macedonius, and the country became a Roman province, B.C. 148. It was divided into four districts, and the city of Thessalonica was made the capital of the second division, and was the station of a Roman governor and questor. At the time, therefore, that the Gospel was preached there, this whole country was subject to Roman authority.

The city, called, when Paul visited it, Thessalonica, was anciently called Therme, and by this name was known in the times of Herodotus, Thucydides, and Æschines. We are informed by Strabo that Cassander changed the name of Therme to Thessalonica in honor of his wife, who was a daughter of Philip. Others have said that the name was given to it by Philip himself, in memory of a victory which he obtained over the armies of Thessaly. In the time of Brutus and Cassius it was a city of so much importance that the promise of being permitted to plunder the city, as the reward of victory, infused new courage into their armies.

The city was inhabited by Greeks, Romans, and Jews. It adored many gods, but particularly Jupiter, as the father of Hercules, the alleged founder of its ancient royal family. It had a celebrated amphitheatre, where gladiatorial shows were exhibited for the amusement of the citizens, and a circus for public games. The Roman part of the population was, of course, introduced after the conquest, and it is impossible now to estimate the relative number of the Greeks and the Romans in the time when the Gospel was preached there. In common with most of the other cities of Greece, a considerable number of Jews resided there, who had a synagogue at the time when the city was visited by Paul. Acts xvii. 1. Little is known of the morals of the place, but there is reason to believe that it was somewhat distinguished for dissoluteness of manners. "The females, particularly, could claim little credit on the score of modest, retiring demeanor; for this virtue was in so low estimation in the city that the place was selected as the scene of the wanton fancies of the satirist." (Lucian.) See Hug. Introd.

The name of the place now is Saloniki. It is a Turkish commercial town, and contains about 70,000 inhabitants. Its situation and appearance are thus described by Dr. Clarke. "The walls of Salonica give a very remarkable appearance to the town, and cause it to be seen at a great distance, being whitewashed; and, what is still more extraordinary, they are painted. They extend in a semi-circular manner from the sea, inclosing the whole of the buildings within a peribolus, whose circuit is five or six miles; but a great part of the space within the walls is void. It is one of the few remaining cities which has preserved the ancient form of its fortifications; the mural turrets yet standing, and the walls that support them being entire. Their antiquity is perhaps unknown, for, though they have been ascribed to the Greek emperors, it is very evident they were constructed in two distinct periods of time; the old Cyclopean masonry remaining in the lower parts of them, surmounted by an upper structure of brick-work. Like all the ancient and modern cities of Greece, its wretched aspect within is forcibly contrasted with the beauty of its external appearance. The houses are generally built of unburnt bricks, and, for the most part, they are no better than so many hovels." It is, however, a flourishing commercial town, from which is exported the corn, cotton, wool, tobacco, bees'-wax, and silk of Macedonia. It is the seat of a pasha, and has still among its population a considerable proportion of Jews. Rabbi Benjamin of Tudela, who visited it in A.D. 1160, describes it under the name of Salunki, and says that it was built by Seleucus, one of the four Greek nobles who arose after Alexander, and that when he visited it it was "a large city containing about five hundred Jewish inhabitants." "The Jews," says he, "are much oppressed in this place, and live by the exercise of handicrafts." Itinerary, vol. i., 49, 50, ed. 1840. He describes it as having at that time more Jewish inhabitants than any other town in Greece, Thebes alone excepted. It is said at present to contain about 20,000 Jewish inhabitants. Its favorable situation for commerce is probably the cause of the numerous assemblage of the Jews there. See Asher's ed. of Benjamin of Tudela, vol. ii., p. 42. Compare the Notes and Illustrations on Acts xvii. 1. The annexed cut, from Churton and Jones on the New Testament, will illustrate the appearance of the city.

THESSALONICA.

§ 2. The Establishment of the Church in Thessalonica.

The Gospel was first preached in Thessalonica by Paul and Silas. After their release from imprisonment at Philippi, they passed through Amphipolis and Appollonia, and came to Thessalonica. For some cause they appear not to have paused to preach in either of the first two places, but went at once to the city of Thessalonica. That was a much more important place, and they may have been attracted there particularly because many Jews resided there. It was customary for the apostle Paul, when he came to a place where there were Jews, to preach the Gospel first to them; and as there was a synagogue in Thessalonica, he entered it, and for three Sabbath days reasoned with the Jews in regard to the Messiah. The points on which he endeavored to convince them were that, according to the Scriptures, it was necessary that the Messiah should be put to death, and that he would rise from the dead, and that all the predictions on these points were completely fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth. Acts xvii. 2, 3. A few of the Jews believed, and a much larger number of the "devout Greeks," and also a considerable number of females of the more elevated ranks. From these converts the Church was organized, and the number at the organization would seem to have been large. It is not quite certain how long Paul and Silas remained at Thessalonica. It is known only that they preached in the synagogue for three Sabbaths, and, if that were all the time that they remained there, it could not have been more than about three weeks. But it is not certain that they did not remain in the city a longer time. It is possible that they may have been excluded from the synagogue, but still may have found some other place in which to preach. This would seem probable from one or two circumstances referred to in the history and in the epistle. In the history (Acts xvii. 5) it appears that Paul and Silas, for a time at least, made the house of Jason their home, and that so large numbers attended on their ministry as to give occasion to great excitement among the Jews. In the epistle (1 Thess. ii. 9) Paul says that when he was among them he "labored night and day, because he would not be chargeable unto any of them, and preached unto them the Gospel of God" (comp. 2 Thess. iii. 8), which looks as if he had been with them a longer time than the "three Sabbaths," and as if he had labored at his usual occupation for support before he shared the hospitality of Jason. It appears also, from Phil. iv. 16, that he was there long enough to receive repeated supplies from the Church at Philippi. "For even in Thessalonica ye sent once and again unto my necessity."

Paul and Silas were driven away from Thessalonica by the opposition of the Jews. A mob was created by them; the house of Jason was assailed; he and "certain brethren," who were supposed to have harbored and secreted Paul and Silas, were dragged before the magistrates and accused of receiving those who "had turned the world upside down," and who were guilty of treason against the Roman emperor. Acts xvii. 5-7. So great was the tumult, and such would be the danger of Paul and Silas if they remained there, that the members of the Church judged it best that they should go to a place of safety, and they were conveyed by night to the neighboring city of Berea. There the Gospel was received with more favor, and Paul preached without opposition, until the Jews from Thessalonica, hearing where he was, came thither and excited the people against him. Acts xvii. 13. It became necessary again that he should be removed to a place of safety, and he was conducted to Athens, while Silas and Timothy remained at Berea. Timothy, it appears, had accompanied Paul, and had been with him, as well as Luke, at Philippi and Thessalonica, though he is not mentioned as present with them until the arrival at Berea. When Paul went to Athens, he gave commandment to those who conducted him, that Silas and Timothy should come to him as soon as possible; and while he waited for them at Athens, he delivered the memorable speech on Mars' Hill, recorded in Acts xvii. Their actual arrival at Athens is not mentioned by Luke (Acts xvii.), but that Timothy came to him there appears from 1 Thessalonians iii. 1, 2. "Wherefore when we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone, and sent Timotheus our brother, etc., to comfort you concerning your faith." Timothy appears, therefore, to have been with Paul at Athens but a short time, for he sent him back to Thessalonica, and before his return Paul had gone to Corinth, whither Timothy followed him. Acts xviii. 5.

§ 3. The Time and Place of Writing the Epistle.

The subscription at the close of this epistle affirms that it was written at Athens. But these subscriptions are of no authority whatever (see Notes at the close of 1 Corinthians), and in this case, as in several others, the subscription is false. Paul remained but a short time at Athens, and there is internal evidence that the epistle was not written there. In 1 Thess. iii. 1, 2, Paul says that, such was his anxiety for them, that he had concluded to remain at Athens alone, and that he had sent Timothy to them from that place to impart to them consolation. In the same epistle (chap. ii. 6) he speaks of Timothy's return to him before the epistle was written. But from Acts xvii. and xviii. 5 it is evident that Timothy did not return to Paul at Athens, but that he and Silas came to him after he had left Athens and had gone to Corinth. To that place Paul had gone after his short visit to Athens, and there he remained a year and a half. Acts xviii. 11. It is further evident that the epistle was not written to the Thessalonians so soon as it would be necessary to suppose if it were written from Athens. In chap. ii. 17, 18, the author says, "But we, brethren, being taken from you a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavored the more abundantly to see your face with great desire. Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us." From this it is evident that the apostle had repeatedly endeavored to visit them, but had been hindered. But it is not reasonable to suppose that he had attempted this during the short time that he was in Athens, and so soon after having been driven away from Berea. It is more probable that this had occurred during his residence at Corinth, and it would seem also from this that the epistle was written toward the close of his residence there. At the time of writing the epistle Silas and Timothy were with the apostle (chapter i. 1), and we know that they were with him when he was at Corinth. Acts xviii. 5.

If this epistle was written at the time supposed, at Corinth, it must have been about the 13th year of the reign of Claudius, and about A.D. 52. That this was the time in which it was written is the opinion of Mill, of Lardner, of Hug, and is indeed generally admitted. It was the first epistle written by the apostle Paul, and, in some respects, may be allowed to excite a deeper interest on that account than any others of his. The Second Epistle to the Thessalonians is supposed to have been written at the same place, and probably in the same year. See Lardner, vol. vi., 4-6. Grotius, indeed, supposes that the order of the epistles has been inverted, and that that which is now called the "Second Epistle to the Thessalonians" was in fact first sent. But there is no evidence of this.

§ 4. The Character of the Church at Thessalonica, and the Design of the Epistle.

The Church at Thessalonica, at first, was composed of the following classes of persons:—(1.) Jews. To them Paul preached first, and though the mass of them opposed him, and rejected his message, yet some of them believed. Acts xvii. 4. (2.) Greeks who had been proselyted to the Jewish faith, and who seem to have been in attendance on the synagogue. Acts xvii. 4. They are called "devout Greeks"—σεβομένοι Ἕλληνοι—that is, religious Greeks, or those who had renounced the worship of idols, and who attended on the worship of the synagogue. They were probably what the Jews called "Proselytes of the Gate"—persons who were admitted to many privileges, but who were not proselytes in the fullest sense. There were many such persons usually where a synagogue was established among the Gentiles. (3.) Females of the more elevated rank and standing in the community. Acts xvii. 4. They were women of influence, and were connected with distinguished families. Possibly they also may have been of the number of the proselytes. (4.) Not a few members of the Church appear to have been converted from idolatry by the preaching of the apostle, or had connected themselves with it after he had left them. Thus, in chap. i. 9, it is said, "For they themselves show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you, and how ye turned to God from idols, to serve the living and true God."

Though the apostle had been much opposed when there, and the Gospel had been rejected by the great body of the inhabitants of Thessalonica, yet it had been most cordially embraced by these different classes (chap. ii. 13), and they were entirely harmonious in the belief of it. They forgot all their former differences in the cordiality with which they had embraced the Gospel.

The characteristics of the Church there, and the circumstances existing which gave occasion for the two Epistles to the Thessalonians, appear to have been, so far as can be gathered from the history (Acts xvii.), and the epistles themselves, the following :

(1.) The members of the Church had very cordially embraced the Gospel; they were the warm friends of the apostle; they greatly desired to receive his instruction; and these things prompted him to the earnest wish which he had cherished to visit them (chap. ii. 17), and now led him to write to them. Comp. chap. i. 5, 6; ii. 8, 9, 13, 19, 20. Paul had for them the strong affection which a nurse has for the children committed to her charge (chap. ii. 7), or a father for his children (chap. ii. 11), and hence the interest shown for them by writing these epistles.

(2.) They were disposed not only to embrace the Gospel, but to spread it abroad (chap. i. 8), and Paul was evidently desirous of commending them for this, and of exciting them to greater love and zeal in doing it.

(3.) They had at first embraced the Gospel amid scenes of strife (chap. ii. 2); they were now opposed, as they had been then, by the Jews, and by their own countrymen (chap. ii. 14); and they appear to have been called to some peculiar trials, by the loss of some valued members of the Church—friends who were peculiarly dear to their hearts. Chap. ii. 3, 5; iii. 13. To console them in view of these afflictions was one design of the first epistle, and in doing it the apostle states one of the most interesting views of the resurrection to be found in the Scriptures. Chap. iv. 14–18.

(4.) They had been instructed in reference to the future coming of the Saviour; to the day of judgment; and to the fact that the appearing of the "day of the Lord" would be like a thief in the night. Chap. v. 2. But they seem to have inferred that that day was near, and they were looking for the immediate advent of the Redeemer and the close of the world. To this view they seem to have been led by two things. One was a misinterpretation of what the apostle says (chap. iv. 14–18; v. 2, 3) about the advent of the Redeemer, which they seem to have understood as if it meant that it would be "soon;" and the other was, probably, the fact that certain letters had been forged in the name of Paul which maintained this doctrine. 2 Thess. ii. 2. To correct this view was one of the leading objects of the second epistle, and accordingly the apostle in that shows them that events must occur preceding the coming of the Lord Jesus which would occupy a long time, and that the end of the world, therefore, could not be near. 2 Thess. ii. 3–12.

(5.) An error seems also to have prevailed among them in regard to the resurrection, which was the cause of great uneasiness to those who had lost Christian friends by death. 1 Thess. iv. 13. They seem to have supposed that when the Lord Jesus should appear, they who would then be alive would have great advantages over those who were deceased; that the living would be allowed to behold his glory, and to participate in the splendors of his personal reign, while those who were in their graves would slumber through these magnificent scenes. To correct these views, appears to have been one design of the first epistle. The apostle shows them that at the coming of the Saviour, all the redeemed, whether living or dead, would participate alike in his glory. They who were alive would not anticipate those who were in their graves. In fact, he says, those who were dead would rise before the change would take place in the living that was to fit them to dwell with the Lord, and then all would be taken up to be forever with him. 1 Thess. iv. 15-18.

(6.) It would appear to be not improbable that after the departure of the apostle from Thessalonica he had been accused by the enemies of the Gospel there of a want of courage, and that they had urged this as proof that he was conscious that the Gospel was an imposture. Besides, his leaving the Church there without any instructors in a time when they greatly needed them may have been urged as a proof that he had no real affection for them, or concern for their welfare. To meet this charge, he urges several things, vindicating his conduct, and showing the strength of his attachment for them. He says (1.) that, as they knew, so far from being deterred by persecution from preaching, after a violent persecution at Philippi he and his fellow-laborers had at once preached the same Gospel at Thessalonica, and they had done it there amid the same kind of opposition. Chap. ii. 2. (2.) That they themselves were witnesses that it had been done without any appearance of fraud or of guile. They had given them all possible proofs of sincerity. Chap. ii. 3-5. (3.) That they had given every proof possible that they did not seek glory from men, and that their aims were not selfish. They were willing to have imparted, not the Gospel only, but also their own lives; and to show that they had had no selfish aim while with them, they had supported themselves by the labor of their own hands. Chap. ii. 6-9. (4.) That so far from feeling any interest in them, he had repeatedly sought to visit them, but had in every instance been prevented (chap. ii. 17, 18); and (5.) that, since he was prevented from going to them, he had submitted to the personal sacrifice of parting with Timothy at Athens, and of being left alone there, in order that he might go to them and comfort their hearts. Chap. iii. 1, 2.

(7.) In common with other churches, gathered in part or in whole from the heathen, they were in danger of falling into the sins to which they had been addicted before their conversion, and one object of the first epistle is to put them on their guard against the leading vices to which they were exposed. Chap. iv. 1-7.

(8.) It would seem, also, that there were some in the Church who had a spirit of insubordination toward their religious teachers, and who, under pretense of edifying others, were guilty of disorder. To correct this was also one object of the epistle. Chap. v. 12-14.

From these views, the design of this epistle, and also of the second epistle to the same Church, which seems to have been written soon after this, will be apparent. They are the effusions of warm attachment toward a Church which the apostle had founded, but from which he had been soon driven away, and which he had been prevented from revisiting when he had earnestly desired it. They are filled with expressions of tender regard; they remind the members of the Church of the ardor with which they had at first embraced the Gospel; they caution them against the dangers to which they were exposed; they commend them for their fidelity hitherto, and encourage them in their trials and persecutions. They present some most interesting views of the nature of the Gospel, and especially contain statements about the resurrection of the saints, which are not found elsewhere in the New Testament, and views in relation to the great apostasy and the "man of sin," which demonstrate that the writer was inspired, and which are of inestimable importance in guarding the true Church from the power of Antichrist. No one could have drawn the picture of the Papacy in the second chapter of the second epistle who was not under the inspiration of the Holy Ghost; and no true Christian can be sufficiently grateful that the apostle was thus inspired to reveal the features of that great apostasy, to put the Church on its guard against the wiles and the power of him who "exalteth himself above all that is called God." The annexed cut, by Ch. Texier, from Churton and Jones, may be interesting as illustrating the style of church architecture in ancient Thessalonica.

EARLY CHRISTIAN CHURCH AT THESSALONICA.

FIRST EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

CHAPTER I.

PAUL, and Silvanus,^a and Timothy, unto the church of the ^bThessalonians which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ: Grace ^c*be* unto you, and

^a 1 Pet. 5. 12.

^b Acts 17. 1, etc.

CHAPTER I.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

The first chapter of this epistle embraces the following subjects:

1. The inscription by Paul, Silas, and Timothy to the Thessalonians, and the usual salutations. Ver. 1.

2. An expression of thanks for their fidelity in the Gospel. Ver. 2-4. The apostle says that he made mention of them continually in his prayers; that he remembered their faith, and love, and patience, for by these things they had shown that they were among the elect of God.

3. He reminds them of the manner in which they received the Gospel when it was first preached to them. Vs. 5, 6. The power of God had been manifested among them in a remarkable manner; they had embraced the Gospel with strong assurance, and, though in the midst of deep afflictions, they had received the word with joy.

4. The effect of the establishment of the Church in Thessalonica had been felt far abroad, and had been of the most happy character. Ver. 7-10. They had become examples to all that believed in Macedonia and Achaia. From them the Gospel had been sounded abroad throughout Greece, and, indeed, in all places with which they had connection by their commercial relations. Those who dwell in distant places bore witness to the influence of the Gospel on them, and to the power of that religion which had turned them from idols to serve the living God. These verses contain a beautiful illustration of the effect of the Gospel in a place favorably situated for commerce, and having extensive intercourse with other regions.

peace, from God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 We give thanks to God always for you all, making mention of you in our prayers;

3 Remembering without ceasing

^c Eph. 1. 2.

1. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timothy. On the reasons why Paul associated other names with his in his epistles, see Notes on 1 Cor. i. 1, and 2 Cor. ii. 1. Silvanus, or Silas, and Timothy were properly united with him on this occasion, because they had been with him when the Church was founded there, Acts xvii.; and because Timothy had been sent by the apostle to visit them after he had himself been driven away. Ch. ii. 1, 2. Silas is first mentioned in the New Testament as one who was sent by the Church at Jerusalem with Paul to Antioch (see Notes on Acts xv. 22); and he afterwards became his traveling companion. ¶ Which is in God the Father, and in the Lord Jesus Christ. Who are united to the true God and to the Redeemer; or who sustain an intimate relation to the Father and to the Lord Jesus. This is strong language, denoting that they were a true church. Comp. 1 John v. 20. ¶ Grace be unto you, etc. See Notes on Rom. i. 7.

2. We give thanks to God always for you all. See Notes on Rom. i. 9. ¶ Making mention of you in our prayers. See Notes on Eph. i. 16. It may be observed here, (1.) that the apostle was in the habit of constant prayer. (2.) That he was accustomed to extemporary prayer, and not to written prayer. It is not credible that "forms" of prayer had been framed for the churches at Thessalonica and Ephesus, and for the other churches for which Paul says he prayed, nor would it have been possible to have adapted such forms to the varying circumstances attending the organization of new churches.

3. Remembering without ceasing. Remembering your faith and love whenever we pray. This is not to be un-your ^a work of faith, and labour ^b of love, and patience ^c of hope in our Lord Jesus Christ, in the sight of God and our Father;

^a Jno. 6. 29. ² Thess. 1. 11.

^b Heb. 6. 10.

^c Rom. 12. 12.

derstood literally, but it is language such as we use respecting any thing that interests us much. It is constantly in our mind. Such an interest the apostle had in the churches which he had established. ¶ Your work of faith. That is, your work, showing or evincing faith. The reference is probably to acts of duty, holiness, and benevolence, which proved that they exercised faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. Works of faith are those to which faith prompts, and which show that there is faith in the heart. This does not mean, therefore, a work of their own which produced faith, but a work which showed that they had faith. ¶ And labor of love. Labor produced by love, or showing that you are actuated by love. Such would be all their kindness toward the poor, the oppressed, and the afflicted; such all their acts which showed that they loved the souls of men. ¶ And patience of hope. Patience in your trials, showing that you have such a hope of future blessedness as to sustain you in your afflictions. It was the hope of heaven through the Lord Jesus that gave them patience. See Notes on Rom. viii. 24. "The phrases here are Hebraisms, meaning active faith, and laborious love, and patient hope, and might have been so translated."—Doddridge. ¶ In our Lord Jesus Christ. That is, your hope is founded only on him. The only hope that we have of heaven is through the Redeemer. ¶ In the sight of God and our Father. Before God, even our Father. It is a hope which we have through the merits of the Redeemer, and which we are permitted to cherish before God; that is, in his very presence. When we think of God; when we reflect that we must soon stand before him, we are permitted to cherish this hope. It is a hope which will be found to be genuine even in the presence of a holy and heart-searching God. This does not mean that it had been merely professed before God, but that it was a hope which they might dare to entertain even in the presence of God, and which would bear the scrutiny of his eye.

4 Knowing, brethren ¹ beloved, your election of God.

5 For our Gospel came ^d not unto you in word only, but also in pow-

¹ or, beloved of God, your election.
^d Isa. 55. 11. Mark 16. 20.

4. Knowing, brethren beloved, your election of God. The margin here reads, "beloved of God, your election." The difference depends merely on the pointing, and that which would require the marginal reading has been adopted by Hahn, Tittman, Bloomfield, and Griesbach. The sense is not materially varied, and the common version may be regarded as giving the true meaning. There is no great difference between "being beloved of God" and "being chosen of God." The sense then is, "knowing that you are chosen by God unto salvation." Compare Notes on Eph. i. 4, 5, 11. The word "knowing" here refers to Paul himself, and to Silas and Timothy, who united with him in writing the epistle, and in rendering thanks for the favors shown to the Church at Thessalonica. The meaning is, that they had so strong confidence that they had been chosen of God as a church unto salvation, that they might say they knew it. The way in which they knew it seems not to have been by direct revelation or by inspiration, but by the evidence which they had furnished, and which constituted such a proof of piety as to leave no doubt of the fact.—Calvin. What this evidence was the apostle states in the following verses. It was shown by the manner in which they embraced the Gospel, and by the spirit which they had evinced under its influence. The meaning here seems to be, not that all the members of the Church at Thessalonica were certainly chosen of God to salvation—for, as in other churches, there might have been those there who were false professors—but that the Church, as such, had given evidence that it was a true Church—that it was founded on Christian principles—and that, as a Church, it had furnished evidence of its "election by God." Nor can it mean, as Clarke and Bloomfield suppose, that God "had chosen and called the Gentiles to the same privileges to which he chose and called the Jews; and that as they (the Jews) had rejected the Gospel, God had now electd the Gentiles in their stead;" for a considerable por-er, ^a and in the ^b Holy Ghost, and in much assurance; ^c as ye know what manner of men we were among you for your sake.

^a 1 Cor. 2. 4.

^b 2 Cor. 6. 6.

^c Heb. 2. 2.

tion of the Church was composed of Jews (see Acts xvii. 4, 5), and it can not, therefore, mean that the Gentiles had been selected in the place of the Jews. Besides, the election of the Gentiles, or any portion of the human family, to the privileges of salvation, to the neglect or exclusion of any other part, would be attended with all the difficulties which occur in the doctrine of personal and individual election. Nothing is gained on this subject, in removing difficulties, by supposing that God chooses masses of men instead of individuals. How can the one be more proper than the other? What difficulty in the doctrine of election is removed by such a supposition? Why is it not as right to choose an individual as a nation? Why not as proper to reject an individual as a whole people? The fact thus stated, that the Church at Thessalonica had shown that it was a true Church of Christ, chosen by God, may teach us, (1.) that a true church owes what it has to the "election of God." It is because God has chosen it; has called it out from the world; has endowed it in such a manner as to be a true church. (2.) A church may give evidence that it is chosen of God, and is a true church. There are things which it may do which will show that it is undoubtedly such a church as God has chosen, and such as he approves. There are just principles on which a church should be organized, and there is a spirit which may be manifested by a church which will distinguish it from any other association of men. (3.) It is not improper to speak with strong confidence of such a church as undoubtedly chosen of God. There are churches which, by their zeal, their self-denial, and their deadness to the world, show beyond question their "election of God;" and the world may see that they are founded on other principles, and manifest a different spirit, from other organizations of men. (4.) Every church should evince such a spirit that there may be no doubt of its "election of God." It should be so dead to the world, so pure in doctrine and in practice, and so much engaged in spreading the knowledge of salvation, that the world will see that it is governed by higher principles than any worldly association, and that nothing could produce this but the influence of the Holy Spirit of God.

5. For our Gospel came not unto you. When first preached. Acts xvii. 1-3. Paul speaks of it as "our Gospel," because it was the Gospel preached by him and Silas and Timothy. Comp. 2 Thess. ii. 14; 2 Tim. ii. 8. He did not mean to say that the Gospel had been originated by him, but only that he had delivered the good news of salvation to them. He is here stating the evidence which had been given that they were a church "chosen by God." He refers, first, to the manner in which the Gospel was received by them (ver. 5-7), and, secondly, to the spirit which they themselves manifested in sending it abroad. Ver. 8-10. ¶ In word only. Was not merely spoken; or was not merely heard. It produced a powerful effect on the heart and life. It was not a mere empty sound that produced no other effect than to entertain or amuse. Comp. Ezek. xxxiii. 32. ¶ But also in power. That is, in such power as to convert the soul. The apostle evidently refers not to any miracles that were wrought there, but to the effect of the Gospel on those who heard it. It is possible that there were miracles wrought there, as there were in other places, but there is no mention of such a fact, and it is not necessary to suppose it in order to see the full meaning of this language. There was great power manifested in the Gospel in its leading them to break off from their sins, to abandon their idols, and to give their hearts to God. See this more fully explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. ii. 4. ¶ And in the Holy Ghost. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ii. 4. It is there called the "demonstration of the Spirit." ¶ And in much assurance. That is, with firm conviction, or full persuasion of its truth. It was not embraced as a doubtful thing, and it did not produce the effect on the mind which is caused by any thing that is uncertain in its character. Many seem to embrace the Gospel as if they only half believed it, or as if it were a matter of very doubtful truth and importance; but this was not the case with the Thessalonians. There was the firmest conviction of its truth, and they embraced it "heart and soul." Comp. Col. ii. 2; Heb. vi. 11. From all that is said in this verse, it is evident that the power of God was remarkably manifested in the conversion of the Thessalonians, and that they embraced the Gospel with an uncommonly strong conviction of its truth and value. This fact will account for the subsequent zeal which the apostle so much commends in them—for it is usually true that the character of piety in a church, as it is in an individual, is determined by the views with which the Gospel is first embraced, and the purposes which are formed at the beginning of the Christian life. ¶ As ye know what manner of men, etc. Paul often appeals to those among whom he had labored, as competent witnesses with respect to his own conduct and character. See ch. ii. 9, 10; Acts xx. 33-35. He means here that he and his fellow-laborers had set them an example, or had shown what Christianity was by their manner of living, and that the Thessalonians had become convinced that the religion which they taught was real. The holy life of a preacher goes far to confirm the truth of the religion which he preaches, and is among the most efficacious means of inducing them to embrace the Gospel.

6 And ye became^a followers of us, and of the Lord, having received

^a 2 Cor. 8. 5.

6. And ye became followers of us. "You became imitators—μιμηταί—of us." This does not mean that they became followers of Paul, Silas, and Timothy, in the sense that they had set themselves up as teachers, or as the head of a sect, but that they imitated their manner of living. See Notes on 1 Cor. iv. 16; xi. 1. ¶ And of the Lord. The Lord Jesus. You also learned to imitate him. From this it is evident that the manner in which the Saviour lived was a prominent topic of their preaching, and also that it was one of the means of the conversion of the Thessalonians. It is probable that preaching on the pure and holy life of the Lord Jesus might be made a much more important means of the conversion of sinners than it is. Nothing is better adapted to show them the evil of their own guilty lives than the contrast between their lives and his; and nothing can be conceived better fitted the word in much affliction, with joy^b of the Holy Ghost;

^b Acts 13. 52.

to win them to holy living than the contemplation of his pure and holy deportment. ¶ Having received the word in much affliction. That is, amidst much opposition from others. See Acts xvii. 5-8. It was in the midst of these trials that they had been converted—and they seem to have been all the better Christians for them. In this they were imitators of the Saviour, or shared the same lot with him, and thus became his followers. Their embracing and holding fast the truths of religion amidst all this opposition, showed that they were controlled by the same principles that he was, and that they were truly his friends. ¶ With joy of the Holy Ghost. With happiness produced by the Holy Ghost. Though they were much afflicted and persecuted, yet there was joy. There was joy in their conversion; in the evidence of pardoned sin; in the hope of heaven. See Notes on Acts viii. 8. However great may be the trials and persecutions experienced in receiving the Gospel, or however numerous and long the sufferings of the subsequent life in consequence of having embraced it, there is a joy in religion that more than overbalances all, and that makes religion the richest of all blessings.

7. So that ye were ensamples to all that believe. Examples in reference to the firmness with which you embraced the Gospel, the fidelity with which you adhered to it in trials, and the zeal which you showed in spreading it abroad. These things are specified in the previous and subsequent verses as characterizing their piety. The word here rendered ensamples—τύποις—is that from which the word type is derived. It properly denotes any thing caused or produced by the means of blows (from τύπτω), and hence a mark, print, or impression, made by a stamp or die; and then a resemblance, figure, pattern, exemplar—a model after which any thing is made. This is the meaning here. They became, as it were, a model or pattern after which the piety of others should be moulded, or showed what the piety of others ought to be. ¶ In Macedonia. Thessalonica was an important city of Macedonia (see the Introd. Comp. Notes on Acts xvi. 9), and of course their influence would be felt on the whole of the surrounding region. This is a striking instance of the effect which a church in a city may have on the country. The influence of such a church may be felt, and will usually be felt afar on the other churches of a community—just as, in all other respects, a city has an important influence on the country at large. ¶ And Achaia. Achaia proper was the part of Greece of which Corinth was the capital.* The word, however, was sometimes so used as to comprehend the whole of Greece, and in this sense it seems to be employed here, as there is no reason to suppose that their influence would be felt particularly in the province of which Corinth was the centre. Koppe observes that Macedonia and Achaia were the two provinces into which all Greece was divided when it was brought under the Roman yoke, the former of which comprehended Macedonia proper, Illyricum, Epirus, and Thessaly, and the other Greece properly so called. The meaning here is, therefore, that their influence was felt in all parts of Greece; that their piety was spoken of, and the effect of their conversion had been felt in all those places. Thessalonica was a commercial city, and a sea-port. It had intercourse with all the other parts of Macedonia, with Greece, and with Asia Minor. It was partly owing to the advantages of its situation that its influence was thus felt. Its own merchants and mariners who went abroad would carry with them the spirit of the religion of their Church, and those who visited it from other ports would see the effect of religion there. This is just an instance, therefore, of the religious influence which a commercial town and a sea-port may have on other parts of the world. A revival of religion in such a place will extend its influence afar to other places, and appropriate zeal among the friends of the Redeemer there may have an important effect on sea-ports, and towns, and lands far remote. It is impossible to overestimate the importance of such places in regard to the spread of the Gospel; and Christians who reside there—be they merchants, mechanics, lawyers, physicians, mariners, or ministers of the Gospel, should feel that on them God has placed the responsibility of using a vast influence in sending the Gospel to other lands. He that goes forth from a commercial town should be imbued with the spirit of the Gospel, and churches located there should be so under the influence of religion that they who come among them from abroad shall bear to their own lands honorable testimony of the power of religion there.

7 So that ye were ensamples to all that believe in Macedonia and Achaia.

8 For from you sounded ^a out the word of the Lord not only in Macedonia and Achaia, but also in ev-

^a Rom. 10. 18.

8. For from you sounded out the word of the Lord. The truths of religion were thus spread abroad. The word rendered "sounded out"—ἐξήχηται—refers to the sounding of a trumpet (Bloomfield), and the idea is, that the Gospel was proclaimed like the sonorous voice of a trumpet echoing from place to place. Compare Isa. lviii. 1; Rev. i. 10. Their influence had an effect in diffusing the Gospel in other places, as if the sound of a trumpet echoed and re-echoed among the hills and along the vales of the classic land of Greece. This seems to have been done (1.) involuntarily; that is, the necessary result of their conversion, even without any direct purpose of their own, would be to produce this effect. Their central and advantageous commercial position; the fact that many of them were in the habit of visiting other places, and the fact that they were visited by strangers from abroad, would naturally contribute to this result. But (2.) this does not appear to be all that is intended. The apostle commends them in such a way as to make it certain that they were voluntary in the spread of the Gospel; that they made decided efforts to take advantage of their position to send the knowledge of the truth abroad. If so, this is an interesting instance of one of the first efforts made by a church to diffuse the Gospel, and to send it to those who were destitute of it. There is no improbability in the supposition that they sent out members of their Church—messengers of salvation—to other parts of Macedonia and Greece, that they might communicate the same Gospel to others. See Doddridge. ¶ But also in every place. Thessalonica was connected not only with Macedoery place ^a your faith to God-ward is spread abroad; so that we need not to speak any thing.

9 For they themselves shew of us what manner of entering in we

a 2 Thess. 1. 4.

nia and Greece proper, in its commercial relations, but also with the ports of Asia Minor, and, not improbably, with still more remote regions. The meaning is, that in all the places with which they trafficked, the effect of their faith was seen and spoken of. ¶ Faith to God-ward. Fidelity toward God. They showed that they had a true belief in God and in the truth which he had revealed. ¶ So that we need not to speak any thing. That is, wherever we go, we need say nothing of the fact that you have been turned to the Lord, or of the character of your piety. These things are sufficiently made known by those who come from you, by those who visit you, and by your zeal in spreading the true religion.

9. For they themselves. They who have visited you, and they whom you have sent out; all persons testify of your piety. The apostle seems to refer to all whom he had met or had heard of "in all places," who said any thing about the Thessalonians. They were unanimous in bearing testimony to their fidelity and piety. ¶ Show of us what manner of entering in we had unto you. The testimony which they bear of you is, in fact, testimony of the manner in which we preached the Gospel, and demeaned ourselves when we were with you. It shows that we were intent on our Master's work, and that we were not actuated by selfish or sinister motives. The argument is, that such effects could not have been produced among them if Paul, Silas, and their fellow-laborers had been impostors. Their sound conversion to God; their change from idolatry to the true religion, and the zeal which had been the result of their conversion, was an argument to which Paul and his fellow-laborers might appeal in proof of their sincerity and their being sent from God. Paul often makes a similar appeal. Comp. Notes on 2 Cor. iii. 2, 3. It is certain that many of the Jews in Thessalonica, when Paul and his fellow-laborers were there, regarded them as impostors (Acts xvii. 6-8), and there is every reason to suppose had unto you, and how ye turned to God ^b from idols, to serve the living and true God;

10 And to wait ^c for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the b 1 Cor. 12. 2. Gal. 4. 8.

c Phil. 3. 20.

that after they left the city they would endeavor to keep up this impression among the people. To meet this, Paul now says that their own undoubted conversion to a life of holiness and zeal under their ministry was an unanswerable argument that this was not so. How could impostors and deceivers have been the means of producing such effects? ¶ And how ye turned to God from idols. That is, under our preaching. This proves that the Church was to a considerable extent composed of those who were converted from idolatry under the preaching of Paul. Comp. Introd. §4. The meaning here is, that they who came from them, or they who had visited them, bore abundant testimony to the fact that they had turned from idols to the worship of the true God. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. xii. 2; Gal. iv. 8. ¶ To serve the living and true God. He is called the "living God" in opposition to idols, who are represented as dead, dumb, deaf, and blind. Comp. Psa. cxxxv. 15-17; Isa. xlv. 10-17; Matt. xvi. 16; John v. 26; Acts xiv. 15.

10. And to wait for his Son from heaven. It is clear from this and from other parts of these two epistles, that the return of the Lord Jesus to this world was a prominent subject of the preaching of Paul at Thessalonica. No small part of these epistles is occupied with stating the true doctrine on this point (1 Thess. iv. 5), and in correcting the errors which prevailed in regard to it after the departure of Paul. 2 Thess. ii. 1-12. Perhaps we are not to infer, however, that this doctrine was made more prominent there than others, or that it had been inculcated there more frequently than it had been elsewhere, but the apostle adverts to it here particularly because it was a doctrine so well fitted to impart comfort to them in their trials (ch. iv. 13-18), and because, in that connection, it was so well calculated to rouse them to vigilance and zeal. Ch. v. 1-11. He makes it prominent in the second epistle, because material errors prevailed there in reference to it which needed to be dead, even Jesus, which delivered us from the wrath ^a to come.

^a Matt. 3. 7. Rom. 5. 8.

corrected. In the passage before us he says that the return of the Son of God from heaven was an important point which had been insisted on when he was there, and that their conduct, as borne witness to by all, had shown with what power it had seized upon them, and what a practical influence it had exerted in their lives. They lived as if they were "waiting" for his return. They fully believed in it; they expected it. They were looking out for it, not knowing when it might occur, and as if it might occur at any moment. They were, therefore, dead to the world, and were animated with an earnest desire to do good. This is one of the instances which demonstrate that the doctrine that the Lord Jesus will return to our world is fitted, when understood in the true sense revealed in the Scriptures, to exert a powerful influence on the souls of men. It is eminently adapted to comfort the hearts of true Christians in the sorrows, bereavements, and sicknesses of life (John xiv. 1-3; Acts i. 11; 1 Thess. iv. 13-18; 2 Pet. iii. 8, 9); to lead us to watchfulness and to an earnest inquiry into the question whether we are prepared to meet him (Matt. xxiv. 37-44; xxv. 13); to make us dead to the world, and to lead us to act as becomes the children of light (1 Thess. v. 5-9); to awaken and arouse impenitent and careless sinners (1 Thess. v. 2, 3; 2 Pet. iii. 3-7); and to excite Christians to self-denying efforts to spread the Gospel in distant lands, as was the case at Thessalonica. Every doctrine of the Gospel is adapted to produce some happy practical effects on mankind, but there are few that are more full of elevated and holy influences than that which teaches that the Lord Jesus will return to the earth, and which leads the soul to wait for his appearing. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. i. 7; Phil. iii. 20. ¶ Whom he raised from the dead. See Notes on Acts ii. 24-32; 1 Cor. xv. 4-9. Paul probably means to intimate here that this was one of the great truths which they had received, that the Lord Jesus had been raised from the dead. We know it was a prominent doctrine wherever the Gospel was preached. ¶ Which delivered us from the wrath to come. Another of the prominent doctrines of Christianity, which was undoubtedly always inculcated by the first preachers of religion. The "wrath to come" is the divine indignation which will come upon the guilty. Matt. iii. 7. From that Christ delivers us by taking our place, and dying in our stead. It was the great purpose of his coming to save us from this approaching wrath. It follows from this (1.) that there was wrath which man had to dread—since Jesus came to deliver us from something that was real, and not from what was imaginary; and (2.) that the same wrath is to be dreaded now by all who are not united to Christ, since in this respect they are now just as all were before he died; that is, they are exposed to fearful punishment from which he alone can deliver. It may be added that the existence of this wrath is real, whether men believe it or not, for the fact of its existence is not affected by our belief or unbelief.

REMARKS.

This chapter teaches

(1.) That it is right to commend those who do well. Ver. 3. Paul was never afraid of injuring any one by commending him when he deserved it; nor was he ever afraid to rebuke when censure was due.

(2.) Christians are chosen to salvation. Ver. 4. Their hope of heaven depends on the "election of God."

(3.) It is possible for a people to know that they are chosen of God, and to give such evidence of it that others shall know it also. Ver. 4. It is possible for a church to evince such a spirit of piety, self-denial, love, and holiness, and such a desire to spread the Gospel, as to show that they are "chosen of God," or that they are a true church. This question is not to be determined by their adherence to certain rights and forms; by their holding to the sentiments of an orthodox creed; by their zeal in defense of the "apostolic succession;" but by their bringing forth "the fruits of good living." In determining that the Church at Thessalonica was "chosen of God," Paul does not refer to its external organization, or to the fact that it was founded by apostolic hands, or that it had a true ministry and valid ordinances, but to the fact that it evinced the true spirit of Christian piety; and particularly that they had been zealous in sending the Gospel to others. There were three things to which he referred: 1. That the Gospel had power over themselves, inducing them to abandon their sins; 2. That it had such influence on their lives that others recognized in them the evidence of true religion; and, 3. That it made them benevolent, and excited them to make efforts to diffuse its blessings abroad.

(4.) If a church may know that it is chosen or elected of God, it is true of an individual also that he may know it. It is not by a direct revelation from heaven; not by an infallible communication of the Holy Spirit; not by a voice or vision; but it is in the same way in which this may be evinced by a church. The conversion of an individual, or his "election of God," may be certainly known by himself, if, 1. The Gospel is received as "the Word of God," and induces him to abandon his sins; 2. If it leads him to pursue such a life that others shall see that he is actuated by Christian principles; and, 3. If he makes it his great aim in life to do good, and to diffuse abroad, as far as he can, that religion which he professes to love. He who finds in his own heart and life evidence of these things need not doubt that he is among the "chosen of God."

(5.) The character of piety in the life of an individual Christian, and in a church, is often determined by the manner in which the Gospel is embraced at first, and by the spirit with which the Christian life is entered on. See Notes on Vs. 5, 6. If so, then this fact is of immense importance in the question about organizing a church, and about making a profession of religion. If a church is so organized as to have it understood that it shall be to a considerable extent the patron of worldly amusements—a "half-way house" between the world and religion—that purpose will determine all its subsequent character, unless it shall be counteracted by the grace of God. If it is organized so as to look with a benignant and tolerant eye on gaiety, vanity, self-indulgence, ease, and what are called the amusements and pleasures of life, it is not difficult to see what will be its character and influence ever onward. How can such a church diffuse far and near the conviction that it is "chosen of God," as the Church at Thessalonica did? And so of an individual. Commonly, the whole character of the religious life will be determined by the views with which the profession of religion is made. If there is a purpose to enjoy religion and the world too; to be the patron of fashion as well as a professed follower of Christ; to seek the flattery or the plaudits of men as well as the approbation of God, that purpose will render the whole religious life useless, vacillating, inconsistent, miserable. The individual will live without the enjoyment of religion, and will die leaving little evidence to his friends that he has gone to be with God. If, on the other hand, there is singleness of purpose, and entire dedication to God at the commencement of the Christian life, the religious career will be one of usefulness, respectability, and peace. The most important period in a man's life, then, is that when he is pondering the question whether he shall make a profession of religion.

(6.) A church in a city should cause its influence to be felt afar. Ver. 7-9. This is true, indeed, of all other churches, but it is especially so of a church in a large town. Cities will be centres of influence in fashion, science, literature, religion, and morals. A thousand ties of interest bind them to other parts of a land, and though in fact there may be, as there often is, much more intelligence in a country neighborhood than among the same number of inhabitants taken promiscuously from a city; and though there may be, as there often is, far more good sense and capability to appreciate religious truth in a country congregation than in a congregation in a city, yet it is true that the city will be the radiating point of influence. This, of course, increases the responsibility of Christians in a city, and makes it important that, like those of Thessalonica, they should be models of self-denial and of efforts to spread the Gospel.

(7.) A church in a commercial town should make use of its peculiar influence to spread the Gospel abroad. Ver. 7-9. Such a place is connected with remote lands, and those who, for commercial purposes, visit distant ports from that place, should bear with them the spirit of the Gospel. Such, too, should be the character of piety in the churches in such a city, that all who visit it for any purpose should see the reality of religion, and be led to bear an honorable report of it again to their own land.

(8.) Such, too, should be the piety of any church. The church at Thessalonica evinced the true spirit of religion. Ver. 7-9. Its light shone afar. It sent out those who went to spread the Gospel. Its members, when they went abroad, showed that they were influenced by higher and purer principles than those which actuated them before conversion, and than were evinced by the heathen world. Those who visited them also saw that there was a reality in religion, and bore an honorable report of it again to their own lands. Let any church evince this spirit, and it will show that it is "chosen of God," or that it is a true church; and wherever there is a church formed after the primitive model these traits will always be seen.

(9.) It is our duty and privilege to "wait for the Son of God to return from heaven." We know not when his appearing, either to remove us by death or to judge the world, will be; and we should therefore watch and be ready. The hope of his return to our world to raise the dead, and to convey his ransomed to heaven, is the brightest and most cheering prospect that dawns on man, and we should be ready, whenever it occurs, to hail him as our returning Lord, and to rush to his arms as our glorious Redeemer. It should be always the characteristic of our piety, as it was that of John, to say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Rev. xxii. 20.

CHAPTER II.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

The principal subjects embraced in this chapter are the following:

I. A statement of the conduct of Paul and his fellow-laborers when they first preached the Gospel at Thessalonica. Ver. 1-12. In this statement the apostle specifies particularly the following things: (1.) That he and his fellow-laborers had been shamefully treated at Philippi, and had been obliged to encounter much opposition at Thessalonica. Vs. 1, 2. (2.) That in their efforts to convert the Thessalonians they had used no deceit, corruption, or guile. Vs. 3, 4. (3.) That they had not sought the praise of men, and had not used the weight of authority which they might have done as the apostles of Christ. Ver. 6. (4.) That they had been gentle and mild in their intercourse with them. Vs. 7, 8. (5.) That, in order not to be burdensome, or to subject themselves to the charge of selfishness, they had supported themselves by laboring night and day. Ver. 9. (6.) That the Thessalonians themselves were witnesses in what a holy and pure manner they had lived when there, and how they had exhorted them to a holy life. Ver. 10-12.

II. The apostle refers to the manner in which the Thessalonians had received the truth at first, as undoubtedly the word of God, and not as the word of men. Ver. 13.

III. He reminds them of the fact that they had met with the same opposition from the Jews which the churches in Judea had, for that every where the Jews had made the same opposition to the messengers of God, killing the Lord Jesus and their own prophets, and forbidding the apostles to speak to the Gentiles. Ver. 14-16.

IV. In the conclusion of the chapter the apostle expresses the earnest desire which he had to visit them, and the reason why he had not done it before. It was because he had been prevented by causes beyond his control, and now his earnest and sincere wish was that he might be permitted to see them, for they were his hope, his joy, and his crown. Ver. 17-20.

It is reasonable to suppose that the statements in this chapter were designed to meet a certain condition of things in the Church there, and if so, we may learn something of the difficulties which the Thessalonians had to encounter, and of the objections which were made to Paul and to the Gospel. It is often in this way that we can get the best view of the internal condition of a church referred to in the New Testament—not by a direct statement respecting difficulties and errors in it, but by the character of the epistle sent to it. Judging by this rule, we should infer that there were those in Thessalonica who utterly denied the divine origin of the Gospel. This general charge the apostle meets in the first chapter by showing that the power of the Gospel evinced in their conversion, and its effects in their lives, demonstrated it to be of heavenly origin.

In reference to the state of things

CHAPTER II.

FOR yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you, that it was not in vain :

2 But even after that we had suf-

^a Acts 16. 12, etc.

as referred to in this chapter, we should also infer the following things :

1. That it was represented by some that Paul and his fellow-laborers sought influence and power; that they were indisposed to labor, and were, in fact, impostors. This charge Paul refutes abundantly by his appeal to what they knew of him, and what they had seen of him when he was there. Ver. 1-12.

2. That the Church at Thessalonica met with severe and violent opposition from the Jews who were there. Ver. 14-17. This appears to have been a formidable opposition. Comp. Acts xvii. 5, seq. They would not only be likely to use violence, but it is not improbable that they employed the semblance of argument that might perplex the Church. They may have stated that they were from the same country as Paul and his fellow-laborers; and that they, while pretending to great zeal for religion, were, in fact, regarded as apostates, and were engaged in overturning the revealed doctrines of God. It would be easy to represent them as men who, from this cause, were worthy of no confidence, and to urge the fact that those who thus acted in opposition to the religion of their own country, and to the sacred rites of the Temple at Jerusalem, could be entitled to no regard. These charges, if they were made, the apostle meets by assuring the Thessalonians that they were suffering precisely the same things which the churches in Judea did; that the Jews manifested the same spirit there which they did in Thessalonica; that they had killed alike the Lord Jesus and their own undoubted prophets, and that it was a characteristic of them that they were opposed to all other men. Their opposition, therefore, was not to be wondered at, nor was it to be regarded as any argument that the apostles, though Jews, were unworthy of confidence. Vrs. 15, 16.

3. It was very probably represented by the enemies of Paul and his fellow-laborers that they had fled from Thessalonica on the slightest danger, and that if they had had any regard for the Church there they would have remained in the time of peril, or, at least, that they would have returned to visit them. Their continued absence was probably urged as a proof that they had no concern for them. The apostle meets this by stating that they had been indeed "taken from them" for a little time, but that their hearts were still with them, and by assuring them that he had often endeavored to visit them again, but that "Satan had hindered" him. Ver. 17-20. He had, however, given them the highest proof of interest and affection that he could, for when he was able to go himself, he had, at great self-denial, sent Timothy to establish them in the faith, and to comfort their hearts. Ch. iii. 1-3. His absence, therefore, should not be urged as a proof that he had no regard for them.

^b Acts 17. 2, 3.

^c Jude 3.

1. For yourselves, brethren, know our entrance in unto you. See Notes on ch. i. 9. Paul appeals to themselves for proof that he and his fellow-laborers had not come among them as impostors. The Thessalonians had had a full opportunity to see them, and to know what influenced them. Paul frequently appeals to his own life, and to what they among whom he labored knew of it, as a full refutation of the slanderous accusations of his enemies. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. iv. 10-16; ix. 19-27; 2 Cor. vi. 3-10. Every minister of the Gospel ought so to live as to be able, when slanderously attacked, to make such an appeal to his people. ¶ That it was not in vain. κενή. This word means (1.) empty, vain, fruitless, or without success; (2.) that in which there is no truth or reality—false, fallacious. Eph. v. 6; Col. ii. 8. Here it seems, from the connection (ver. 3-5), to be used in the latter sense, as denoting that they were not deceivers. The object does not appear to be so much to show that their ministry was successful, as to meet a charge of their adversaries that they were impostors.

3 For our exhortation was not of deceit, ^a nor of uncleanness, nor in guile:

^a 2 Pet. 1. 16.

Paul tells them that, from their own observation, they knew that this was not so.

2. But even after that we had suffered before. Before we came among you.

¶ And were shamefully entreated, as ye know, at Philippi. Acts xvi. 19, seq. By being beaten and cast into prison. The shame of the treatment consisted in the fact that it was wholly undeserved; that it was contrary to the laws; and that it was accompanied with circumstances designed to make their punishment as ignominious as possible. The Thessalonians knew of this, and Paul was not disposed to palliate the conduct of the Philippians. What was "shameful treatment" he speaks of as such without hesitation. It is not wrong to call things by their right names, and, when we have been abused, it is not necessary that we should attempt to smooth the matter over by saying that it was not so. ¶ We were bold in our God. By humble dependence on the support of our God. It was only his powerful aid that could have enabled us to persevere with ardor and zeal in such a work after such treatment. The meaning here is, that they were not deterred from preaching the Gospel by the treatment which they had received, but at the next important town, and on the very first opportunity, they proclaimed the same truth, though there was no security that they might not meet with the same persecution there. Paul evidently appeals to this in order to show them that they were not impostors, and that they were not influenced by the hope of ease or of selfish gains. Men who were not sincere and earnest in their purposes would have been deterred from prosecuting their labors further by such treatment as they had received at Philippi. ¶ With much contention. Amidst much opposition, and where great effort was necessary. The Greek word here used is ἀγών (agony), a word referring usually to the Grecian games. See Notes on Col. ii. 1. It means the course, or place of contest; and then the contest itself, the strife, the combat, the effort for victory; and the apostle here means that, owing to the opposition there, there

4 But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust ^b with the Gospel, even so we speak; not as pleas-was need of an effort on his part like the desperate struggles of those who contended for the mastery at the Grecian games. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24-27. The triumph of the Gospel there was secured only by an effort of the highest kind, and by overcoming the most formidable opposition.

^b 1 Tim. 1. 11, 12.

3. For our exhortation. That is, the exhortation to embrace the Gospel. The word seems to be used here so as to include preaching in general. The sense is, that the means which they used to induce them to become Christians were not such as to delude them.

¶ Was not of deceit. Was not founded on sophistry. The apostle means to say that the Thessalonians knew that his manner of preaching was not such as was adopted by the advocates of error. ¶ Nor of uncleanness. Not such as to lead to an impure life. It was such as to lead to holiness and purity.

The apostle appeals to what they knew to be the tendency of his doctrines as an evidence that they were true. Most of the teaching of the heathen philosophers led to a life of licentiousness and corruption. The tendency of the Gospel was just the reverse. ¶ Nor in guile. Not by the arts of deceit. There was no craftiness or trick, such as could not bear a severe scrutiny. No point was carried by art, cunning, or stratagem. Every thing was done on the most honorable and fair principles. It is much when a man can say that he has never endeavored to accomplish any thing by mere trick, craft, or cunning. Sagacity and shrewdness are always allowable in ministers as well as others; trick and cunning never. Yet stratagem often takes the place of sagacity, and trick is often miscalled shrewdness. Guile, craft, cunning, imply deception, and can never be reconciled with that entire honesty which a minister of the Gospel, and all other Christians, ought to possess. See Notes on 2 Cor. xii. 16. Compare Ps. xxxii. 2; xxxiv. 13; John i. 47; 1 Pet. ii. 1, 22; Rev. xiv. 5.

4. But as we were allowed of God to be put in trust with the Gospel. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 11, 12. Since there had been committed to us an office so high and holy, and so much demanding sincer-

ing men, but God, which trieth our hearts.

5 For neither ^a at any time used we flattering words, as ye know,

^a 2 Cor. 2. 17.

ity, fidelity, and honesty, we endeavored to act in all respects in conformity to the trust reposed in us. The Gospel is a system of truth and sincerity, and we evinced the same. The Gospel is concerned with great realities, and we did not resort to great illusions. The office of the ministry is most responsible, and we acted in view of the great account which we must render. The meaning is, that Paul had such a sense of the truth, the reality, and the importance of the Gospel and of his responsibility, as effectually to keep him from any thing like craft or cunning in preaching it. An effectual restrainer from mere management and trick will always be found in a deep conviction of the truth and importance of religion. Artifice and cunning are the usual accompaniments of a bad cause; and, when adopted by a minister of the Gospel, will usually, when detected, leave the impression that he feels that he is engaged in such a cause. If an object can not be secured by sincerity and straightforward dealing, it is not desirable that it should be secured at all. ¶ Even so we speak. In accordance with the nature of the Gospel; with the truth and sincerity which such a cause demands. ¶ Not as pleasing men. Not in the manner of impostors, who make it their object to please men. The meaning of the apostle is, that he did not aim to teach such doctrines as would flatter men; as would win their applause; as would gratify their passions or their fancy. We are not to suppose that he desired to offend men; or that he regarded their esteem as of no value; or that he was indifferent whether they were pleased or displeased; but that it was not the direct object of his preaching to please them. It was to declare the truth, and to obtain the approbation of God, whatever men might think of it. See Notes on Gal. i. 10. ¶ Which trieth our hearts. It is often said to be an attribute of God that he tries or searches the hearts of men. 1 Chron. xxviii. 9; xxix. 17; Jer. xi. 20; xvii. 10; Psa. xi. 4; Rom. viii. 27. The meaning here is, that the apostle had a deep nor a cloak of covetousness; God is witness:

6 Nor of men ^b sought we glory, neither of you, nor yet of others, conviction of the truth that God knew all his motives, and that all would be revealed in the last day.

^b John. 5. 41, 44. Gal. 1. 10.

5. For neither at any time used we flattering words. See Notes on Job xxxi. 21, 22; and on 2 Cor. ii. 17. The word here rendered "flattering"—κολακεία—occurs no where else in the New Testament. The meaning is, that the apostle did not deal in the language of adulation; he did not praise them for their beauty, wealth, talent, or accomplishments, and conceal from them the painful truths about their guilt and danger. He stated simple truth—not refusing to commend them if truth would admit of it, and never hesitating to declare his honest convictions about their guilt and danger. One of the principal arts of the deceiver is flattery; and Paul says that when preaching to the Thessalonians he had carefully avoided it. He now appeals to that fact as a proof of his own integrity. They knew that he had been faithful to their souls. ¶ Nor a cloak of covetousness. The word rendered "cloak" here, πρόφασις, means, properly, "what is shown or appears before any one;" that is, show, pretense, pretext, put forth in order to cover one's real intent. Matt. xxiii. 14; Mark xii. 40; Luke xx. 47. The meaning here is, that he did not put on a pretense or appearance of piety for the sake of promoting the schemes of covetousness. The evidence of that was not only what they observed of the general spirit of the apostle, but also the fact that when with them he had actually labored with his own hands for a support. Ver. 9. It is obvious that there were those there, as sometimes there are now, who, under the pretense of great zeal for religion, were really seeking wealth, and it is possible that it may have been alleged against Paul and his fellow-laborers that they were such persons. ¶ God is witness. This is a solemn appeal to God for the truth of what he had said. He refers not only to their own observation, but he calls God himself to witness his sincerity. God knew the truth in the case. 47. There could have when we might have ¹ been burdensome, ^a as the apostles of Christ.

7 But we were gentle among you,

¹ or, used authority.

been no imposing on him; and the appeal, therefore, is to one who was intimately acquainted with the truth. Learn hence, (1.) that it is right, on important occasions, to appeal to God for the truth of what we say. (2.) We should always so live that we can properly make such an appeal to him.

6. Nor of men sought we glory. Or praise. The love of applause was not that which influenced them. See Notes on Col. i. 10. ¶ Neither of you, nor yet of others. Nowhere has this been our object. The love of fame is not that which has influenced us. The particular idea in this verse seems to be, that though they had uncommon advantages, as the apostles of Christ, for setting up a dominion or securing an ascendancy over others, yet they had not availed themselves of it. As an apostle of Christ; as appointed by him to found churches; as endowed with the power of working miracles, Paul had every advantage for gaining authority over others, and turning it to the purposes of ambition or gain.

¶ When we might have been burdensome. Marg., “or, used authority.” Some understand this as meaning that they might have demanded a support in virtue of their being apostles; others, as Calvin, and as it is in the margin, that they might have used authority, and might have governed them wholly in that manner, exacting unqualified obedience. The Greek properly refers to that which is weighty—ἐν βαρέι—heavy, burdensome. Anything that weighs down or oppresses, as a burden, sorrow, or authority, would meet the sense of the Greek. It seems probable, from the context, that the apostle did not refer either to authority or to support exclusively, but may have included both. In their circumstances, it might have been somewhat burdensome for them to have maintained him and his fellow-laborers, though as an apostle he might have required it. Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 8-15. Rather than be oppressive in this respect, he had chosen to forego his right, and to maintain himself by his own labor. As an apostle also he might have exerted his authority, and might have made use of his great office for the purpose of placing himself even as a nurse cherisheth her children :

B

8 So, being affectionately desirous

^a 2 Cor. 12. 13-15.

at the head of churches, and giving them laws. But he chose to do nothing that would be a burden; he treated them with the gentleness with which a nurse cherishes her children (ver. 7), or a father his sons (ver. 11), and employed only the arts of persuasion. Comp. Notes on 2 Cor. xii. 13-16. ¶ As the apostles of Christ. Though the writer uses the word apostles here in the plural number, it is not certain that he means to apply it to Silas and Timothy. He often uses the plural number where he refers to himself only; and though Silas and Timothy are joined with him in this epistle (ch. i. 1), yet it is evident that he writes the letter as if he were alone, and as if they had no part in the composition or the instructions. Timothy and Silas are associated with him for the mere purpose of salutation or kind remembrance. That this is so is apparent from ch. iii. In ver. 1 of that chapter Paul uses the plural term also. “When we could no longer forbear, we thought it good to be left at Athens alone.” Comp. ver. 5. “For this cause, when I could no longer forbear, I sent to know your faith.” Neither Silas nor Timothy were apostles in the strict and proper sense, and there is no evidence that they had the “authority” which Paul here says might have been exerted by an apostle of Christ.

7. But we were gentle among you. Instead of using authority, we used only the most kind and gentle methods to win you, and to promote your peace and order. The word here rendered “nurse,” may mean any one who nurses a child, whether a mother or another person. It seems here to refer to a mother (compare ver. 11), and the idea is, that the apostle felt for them the affectionate solicitude which a mother does for the child at her breast.

8. So, being affectionately desirous of you. The word here rendered “being affectionately desirous”—ἐμείρω—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means to long after, to have a strong affection for. The sense here is, that Paul was so strongly attached to them that he would have been willing to lay down his life for them. ¶ We were of you, we were willing to have^a imparted unto you, not the Gospel of God only, but also our own souls, because ye were dear unto us.

9 For ye remember, brethren, our labor^b and travail: for laboring night and day, because we would not be chargeable unto any of you,

^a Rom. 1. 11.

willing to have imparted unto you. To have given or communicated. Rom. i. 11. ¶ Not the Gospel of God only. To be willing to communicate the knowledge of the Gospel was in itself a strong proof of love, even if it were attended with no self-denial or hazard in doing it. We evince a decided love for a man when we tell him of the way of salvation, and urge him to accept of it. We show strong interest for one who is in danger, when we tell him of a way of escape, or for one who is sick, when we tell him of a medicine that will restore him; but we manifest a much higher love when we tell a lost and ruined sinner of the way in which he may be saved. There is no method in which we can show so strong an interest in our fellow-men, and so much true benevolence for them, as to go to them and tell them of the way by which they may be rescued from everlasting ruin. ¶ But also our own souls. Or rather lives—ψυχὰς. Matt. vi. 25; xx. 28; Luke xii. 22, 23; Mark iii. 4. This does not mean that the apostle was willing to be damned, or to lose his soul in order to save them, but that if it had been necessary he would have been ready to lay down his life. See 1 John iii. 16. "We ought to lay down our lives for the brethren." Compare Notes on John xv. 13; Rom. ix. 1-3. His object seems to be to assure them that he did not leave them from any want of love to them, or from the fear of being put to death. It was done from a strong conviction of duty. He appears to have left them because he could not longer remain without exposing others to danger, and without the certainty that there would be continued disturbances. See Acts xvii. 9, 10.

9. Ye remember, brethren, our labor. Doubtless in the occupation of a tent-maker. See Notes on Acts xx. 34. Compare 1 Cor. iv. 12. ¶ And travail. See Notes on 2 Cor. xi. 27. The word means wearisome labor. ¶ For laboring we preached unto you the Gospel of God.

10 Ye are witnesses, and God also, how holily and justly, and unblameably we behaved ourselves among you that believe:

11 As ye know how we exhorted, and comforted, and charged every night and day. That is, when he was not engaged in preaching the Gospel. He appears to have labored through the week, and to have preached on the Sabbath; or if engaged in preaching in the day time during the week, he made it up by night labor. ¶ We preached unto you the Gospel of God. That is, I supported myself when I preached among you. No one, therefore, could say that I was disposed to live in idleness; no one that I sought to make myself rich at the expense of others.

^b Acts 20. 34, 35. 2 Thess. 3. 7, 8.

10. Ye are witnesses. They had a full opportunity of knowing his manner of life. ¶ And God also. See Notes on ver. 5. ¶ How holily. Piously—observing all the duties of religion. ¶ And justly. In our intercourse with men. I did them no wrong. ¶ And unblameably. This seems to refer to his duties both to God and man. In reference to all those duties no one could bring a charge against him. Every duty was faithfully performed. This is not a claim to absolute perfection, but it is a claim to consistency of character, and to faithfulness in duty, which every Christian should be enabled to make. Every man professing religion should so live as to be able to appeal to all who have had an opportunity of knowing him, as witnesses that he was consistent and faithful, and that there was nothing which could be laid to his charge.

11. How we exhorted. That is, to a holy life. ¶ And comforted. In the times of affliction. ¶ And charged. Gr., testified. The word testify is used here in the sense of protesting, or making an earnest and solemn appeal. They came as witnesses from God of the truth of religion, and of the importance of living in a holy manner. They did not originate the Gospel themselves, or teach its duties and doctrines as their own, but they came in the capacity of those who bore witness of what God had revealed and required, and they did this in the earnest one of you, as a father doth his children,

12 That ye would walk ^a worthy of God, who ^b hath called you unto his kingdom and glory.

13 For this cause also thank we God without ceasing, because, when

^a Eph. 4. 1.

^b 1 Cor. 1. 9.

^c Matt. 10. 40. 2 Pet. 1. 23.

and solemn manner which became such an office. ¶ As a father doth his children. With an interest in your welfare such as a father feels for his children, and with such a method as a father would use. It was not done in a harsh, dictatorial, and arbitrary manner, but in tenderness and love.

12. That ye would walk worthy of God, etc. That you would live in such a manner as would honor God, who has chosen you to be his friends. See Notes on Eph. iv. 1. A child "walks worthy of a parent" when he lives in such way as to reflect honor on that parent for the method in which he has trained him; when he so lives as to bring no disgrace on him, so as not to pain his heart by misconduct, or so as to give no occasion to any to speak reproachfully of him. This he does, when (1.) he keeps all his commands; (2.) when he leads a life of purity and virtue; (3.) when he carries out the principles of the family into his own life; (4.) when he honors a father by evincing a profound respect for his opinions; and (5.) when he endeavors to provide for his comfort, and to promote his welfare. In a manner similar to this, a true Christian honors God. He lives so as not to bring a reproach upon him or his cause, and so as to teach the world to honor him who has bestowed such grace upon him. ¶ Who hath called you. See Notes on 1 Cor. i. 9.

13. For this cause also thank we God. In addition to the reasons for thankfulness already suggested, the apostle here refers to the fact that they received the truth, when it was preached, in such a way as to show that they fully believed it to be the word of God. ¶ Not as the word of men. Not of human origin, but as a divine revelation. You were not led to embrace it by human reasoning, or by the mere arts of persuasion, or from personal respect for others, but by your conviction that it was a revelation from God.

ye received the word of God which ye heard of us, ye received it not ^c as the word of men, but, as it is in truth, the word of God, which effectually worketh ^d also in you that believe.

14 For ye, brethren, became fol^d Jas. 1. 18. 1 Pet. 1. 23.

It is only when the Gospel is embraced in this way that religion will show itself sufficient to abide the fiery trials to which Christians may be exposed. He who is convinced by mere human reasoning, may have his faith shaken by opposite artful reasoning; he who is won by the mere arts of popular eloquence, will have no faith which will be proof against similar arts in the cause of error; he who embraces religion from mere respect for a pastor, parent, or friend, or because others do, may abandon it when the popular current shall set in a different direction, or when his friends shall embrace different views; but he who embraces religion as the truth of God, and from the love of the truth, will have a faith, like that of the Thessalonians, which will abide every trial. ¶ Which effectually worketh also in you that believe. The word rendered "which" here—ὅς—may be referred either to "truth" or to "God." The grammatical construction will admit of either, but it is not material which is adopted. Either of them expresses a sense undeniably true, and of great importance. The meaning is, that the truth was made efficacious in the minds of all who became true Christians. It induced them to abandon their sins, to devote themselves to God, to lead pure and holy lives, and it enabled them to abide the trials and temptations of life. Comp. Notes on Phil. ii. 12, 13; Heb. xiii. 21. The particular illustration here is, that when they embraced the Gospel it had such an efficacy on their hearts as to prepare them to meet the terrors of bitter persecution without shrinking.

14. For ye, brethren, became followers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus. Which are united to the Lord Jesus, or which are founded on his truth; that is, which are true churches. Of those churches they became imitators—μιμηταί—to wit, in their sufferings. This does not lowers of the churches of God which in Judea are in Christ Jesus: for ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen, even as they have of the Jews;

a Acts 7. 52.

mean that they were founded on the same model; or that they professed to be the followers of those churches, but that they had been treated in the same way, and thus were like them. They had been persecuted in the same manner, and by the same people—the Jews; and they had borne their persecutions with the same spirit. The object of this is to comfort and encourage them, by showing them that others had been treated in the same manner, and that it was to be expected that a true Church would be persecuted by the Jews. They ought not, therefore, to consider it as any evidence that they were not a true Church that they had been persecuted by those who claimed to be the people of God, and who made extraordinary pretensions to piety. ¶ For ye also have suffered like things of your own countrymen. Literally, “of those who are of your fellow-tribe, or fellow-clansmen”—συμφυλετῶν. The Greek word means “one of the same tribe,” and then a fellow-citizen or fellow-countryman. It is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. The particular reference here seems not to be to the heathen who were the agents or actors in the scenes of tumult and persecutions, but to the Jews by whom they were led on, or who were the prime movers in the persecutions which they had endured. It is necessary to suppose that they were principally Jews who were the cause of the persecution which had been excited against them, in order to make the parallelism between the Church there and the churches in Palestine exact. At the same time there was a propriety in saying that, though this parallelism was exact, it was by the “hands of their own countrymen” that it was done; that is, they were the visible agents or actors by whom it was done—the instruments in the hands of others. In Palestine, the Jews persecuted the churches themselves; out of Palestine, they did it by means of others. They were there the real authors of it, as they were in Judea,

15 Who both killed the Lord Jesus and their ^a own prophets, and have ¹ persecuted us; and they please not God, and are contrary to all men;

1 or, chased us out.

but they usually accomplished it by producing an excitement among the heathen, and by the plea that the apostles were making war on the civil institutions of the country. This was the case in Thessalonica. “The Jews which believed not, moved with envy, set all the city on an uproar.” “They drew Jason and certain brethren unto the rulers of the city, crying, These that have turned the world upside down are come hither also.” Acts xvii. 5, 6. The same thing occurred a short time after at Berea. “When the Jews of Thessalonica had knowledge that the word of God was preached of Paul at Berea, they came thither also and stirred up the people.” Acts xvii. 13. Comp. Acts xiv. 2. “The unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evil-affected against the brethren.” “The epistle, therefore, represents the case accurately as the history states it. It was the Jews always who set on foot the persecutions against the apostles and their followers.” Paley, Hor. Paul. in loc. It was, therefore, strictly true, as the apostle here states, (1.) that they were subjected to the same treatment from the Jews as the churches in Judea were, since they were the authors of the excitement against them; and (2.) that it was carried on, as the apostle states, “by their own countrymen;” that is, that they were the agents or instruments by which it was done. This kind of undesigned coincidence between the epistle and the history in the Acts of the Apostles, is one of the arguments from which Paley (Hor. Paul.) infers the genuineness of both. ¶ As they have of the Jews. Directly. In Palestine there were no others but Jews who could be excited against Christians, and they were obliged to appear as the persecutors themselves.

15. Who both killed the Lord Jesus. See Notes on Acts ii. 23. The meaning here is, that it was characteristic of the Jews to be engaged in the work of persecution, and that they should not regard it as strange that those who had put their own Messiah to death, and slain the prophets, should now be found persecuting the true children of God. ¶ And their own prophets. See Notes on Matt. xxi. 33-40; xxiii. 29-37; Acts vii. 52. ¶ And have persecuted us. As at Iconium (Acts xiv. 1), Derbe, and Lystra (Acts xiv. 6), and at Philippi, Thessalonica, and Berea. The meaning is, that it was characteristic of them to persecute, and they spared no one. If they had persecuted the apostles themselves, who were their own countrymen, it should not be considered strange that they should persecute those who were Gentiles. ¶ And they please not God. Their conduct is not such as to please God, but such as to expose them to his wrath. Ver. 16. The meaning is not that they did not aim to please God—whatever may have been the truth about that—but that they had shown by all their history that their conduct could not meet with the divine approbation. They made extraordinary pretensions to being the peculiar people of God, and it was important for the apostle to show that their conduct demonstrated that they had no such claims. Their opposition to the Thessalonians, therefore, was no proof that God was opposed to them, and they should not allow themselves to be troubled by such opposition. It was rather proof that they were the friends of God—since those who now persecuted them had been engaged in persecuting the most holy men that had lived. ¶ And are contrary to all men. They do not merely differ from other men in customs and opinions—which might be harmless—but they keep up an active opposition to all other people. It was not opposition to one nation only, but to all; it was not to one form of religion only, but to all—even including God's last revelation to mankind; it was not enmity or contrariness evinced in their own country only, but they carried it with them wherever they went. The truth of this statement is confirmed, not only by authority of the apostle and the uniform record in the New Testament, but by the testimony borne of them in the classic writers. This was universally regarded as their national characteristic, for they had so demeaned themselves as to leave this impression on the minds of those with whom they had intercourse. Thus Tacitus describes them as “cherishing hatred against all others”—adversus omnes alios hostile odium. Hist., v., 5. So Juvenal (Sat., xiv., 103, 104) describes them:

Non monstrare vias eadem nisi sacra colenti,
Quæsitum ad fontem solas deducere verpos.

“They would not even point out the way to any one except of the same religion; nor, being asked, guide any to a fountain except the circumcised.” So they are called by Appollonius “atheists and misanthropes, and the most uncultivated barbarians”—ἀθεοὶ καὶ μισανθρώποι καὶ ἀφύεστατοι τῶν βάρβαρων. Josephus Con. Ap., ii., 14. So Diodorus Siculus (xxxiv., p. 524) describes them as “those alone among all the nations who were unwilling to have any intercourse [or intermingling—επιμιξίας] with any other nation, and who regarded all others as enemies”—καὶ πολέμιους ὑπολαμβάνειν πάντας. Their history had given abundant occasion for these charges.

16. Forbidding us to speak to the Gentiles. See Acts xvii. 5, 13. No particular instance is mentioned in the life of Paul previous to this when they had formally commanded him not to preach to the heathen, but no one can doubt that this was one of the leading points of difference between him and them. Paul maintained that the Jews and Gentiles were now on a level with regard to salvation; that the wall of partition was broken down; that the Jew had no advantages over the rest of mankind in this respect, and that the heathen might be saved without becoming Jews or being circumcised. Rom. ii. 25-29; iii. 22-31. Comp. Notes on Col. i. 24. The Jews did not hold it unlawful “to speak to the Gentiles,” and even to offer to them eternal life (Matt. xxiii. 15), but it was only on condition that they should become proselytes to their religion, and should observe the institutions of Moses. If saved, they held that it would be as Jews—either originally such, or such by becoming proselytes. Paul maintained just the opposite opinion, that heathens might be saved without becoming proselytes to the Jewish system, and that, in fact, salvation was as freely offered to them as to the children of Abraham. Though there are no express instances in which they prohibited Paul from speaking to the Gentiles recorded before the date of this epistle, yet events occurred afterwards which showed what were their feelings, and such as to make it in the highest degree probable that they had attempted to restrain him. See Acts xxii. 21, 22. "And he [Christ] said unto me [Paul], Depart, for I will send thee far hence unto the Gentiles. And they [the Jews] gave him audience unto this word, and then lift up their voices and said, Away with such a fellow from the earth, for it is not fit that he should live." ¶ That they might be saved. That is, as freely as others, and on the same terms—not by conversion to Judaism, but by repentance and faith. ¶ To fill up their sins away. At all times—πάντοτε—in every generation. That is, to do now as they have always done, by resisting God and exposing themselves to his wrath. The idea is, that it had been a characteristic of the nation, at all times, to oppose God, and that they did it now in this manner in conformity with their fixed character. Comp. Acts vii. 51–53, and Notes on Matthew xxiii. 32, on the expression, "Fill ye up then the measure of your fathers." ¶ For the wrath is come upon them. This can not mean that the wrath of God had been then actually poured out upon them in the extreme degree referred to, or that they had experienced the full expressions of the divine displeasure, for this epistle was written before the destruction of their city and Temple (see the Introduction); but that the cup of their iniquity was full; that they were in fact abandoned by God; that they were the objects even then of his displeasure; and that their destruction was so certain that it might be spoken of as an indubitable fact. The "wrath of God" may be said to have come upon a man when he abandons him, even though there may not be as yet any external expressions of his indignation. It is not punishment that constitutes the wrath of God. That is the mere outward expression of the divine indignation, and the wrath of God may in fact have come upon a man when as yet there are no external tokens of it. The overthrow of Jerusalem and the Temple were but the outward expres-

16 Forbidding^a us to speak to the Gentiles that they might be saved, to fill^b up their sins away; for the

^a Acts 17. 5, 13; 18. 12. ^b Gen. 15. 16. Matt. 23. 32.

wrath is come upon them to the uttermost.^c

17 But we, brethren, being taken

^c Rev. 22. 11.

sions of the divine displeasure at their conduct. Paul, inspired to speak of the feelings of God, describes that wrath as already existing in the divine mind. Comp. Rom. iv. 17. ¶ To the uttermost. Gr.—εἰς τέλος—to the end; that is, until wrath shall be complete or exhausted; or wrath in the extreme degree. It does not mean "to the end of their race or history," nor necessarily to the remotest periods of time; but it refers to that which constitutes completion, so that there should be nothing lacking of that which would make indignation perfect: εἰς τέλος—"gantz und gar"—thoroughly, entirely, through and through.—Passow. Some have understood this as meaning at the last, or at length, as Macknight, Rosenmüller, Koppe, and Wetstein; others as referring to duration, meaning that it would follow them everywhere; but the more correct interpretation seems to be to refer it to that extremity of calamity and woe which was about to come upon the nation. For an account of this, see Notes on Matt. xxiv. 21.

17. But we, brethren, being taken from you. There is more implied in the Greek word here rendered, "being taken from you"—ἀπορφανισθέντες—than appears from our translation. It properly has relation to the condition of an orphan (Compare Notes on John xiv. 18), or one who is bereaved of parents. Then it is used in a more general sense, denoting to be bereaved of; and in this place it does not mean merely that he was "taken from them," but there is included the idea that it was a painful bereavement. It was such a state as that of one who had lost a parent. No word, perhaps, could have expressed stronger attachment for them. ¶ For a short time. Gr., "For the time of an hour;" that is, for a brief period. The meaning is, that when he left them he supposed it would be only for a short time. The fact seems to have been (Acts xvii. 10) that it was supposed, when Paul was sent to Berea, that things would soon be in such a state that he could safely return to Thessalonica. He was "sent" there by those who thought it was necessary for the safety of some from you for a short time in presence, not in heart, endeavored the more abundantly to see your face with great desire.

18 Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again; but Satan hindered us.

¹ Or, glorifying.

a 2 Cor. 1. 14. Phil. 4. 1.

of his friends at Thessalonica, and he evidently purposed to return as soon as it could properly be done. It had, in fact, however, turned out to be a long and painful absence. ¶ In presence, not in heart. My heart was still with you. This is an elegant and touching expression, which we still use to denote affection for an absent friend. ¶ Endeavored the more abundantly to see your face. Made every endeavor possible. It was from no want of affection that I have not done it, but from causes beyond my control. ¶ With great desire. Comp. Notes on Luke xxii. 15.

18. Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul. The phrase "even I Paul" seems to be used by way of emphasis. He had a special desire to go himself. He had sent Timothy to them (ch. iii. 2, 5), and, perhaps, some might have been disposed to allege that Paul was afraid to go himself, or that he did not feel interest enough in them to go, though he was willing to send one to visit them. He is, therefore, at much pains to assure them that his long separation from them was unavoidable. ¶ But Satan hindered us. Comp. Notes on 2 Cor. xii. 7. In what way this was done is unknown, and conjecture would be useless. The apostle recognized the hand of Satan in frustrating his attempt to do good, and preventing the accomplishment of his strong desire to see his Christian friends. In the obstacles, therefore, to the performance of our duty, and in the hindrances of our enjoyment, it is not improper to trace the hand of the great enemy of good. The agency of Satan may, for aught we can tell, often be employed in the embarrassments that we meet with in life. The hindrances which we meet with in our efforts to do good, when the providence of God seems to favor us, and his word and Spirit seem to call us to a particular duty, often look very much like the work of Satan. They are just such obstructions as a 19 For what is our hope, or joy, or crown of ¹ rejoicing? Are not even ye in ^a the presence ^b of our Lord Jesus Christ at his ^c coming?

20 For ye are our glory and joy.

^b Jude 24.

^c Rev. 1. 7.

very wicked being would be glad to throw in our way.

19. For what is our hope. That is, "I had a strong desire to see you; to assist you; to enjoy your friendship; for you are my hope and joy, and my absence does not arise from a want of affection." The meaning, when he says that they were his "hope," is that their conversion and salvation was one of the grounds of his hope of future blessedness. It was an evidence that he was a faithful servant of God, and that he would be rewarded in heaven. ¶ Or joy. The source of joy here and in heaven. ¶ Or crown of rejoicing. Margin, as in Gr., glorifying; that is, boasting or exulting. The allusion is, probably, to the victors at the Grecian games; and the sense is, that he rejoiced in their conversion as the victor there did in the garland which he had won. See Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24-27. ¶ Are not even ye. Or, will not you be? ¶ In the presence of our Lord Jesus Christ at his coming. "When the Lord Jesus appears at the end of the world, then our highest source of happiness and honor will be your conversion and salvation." Then their salvation would be a proof of his fidelity. It would fill his soul with the highest happiness that he had been the means of saving them from ruin.

20. For ye are our glory and joy. The meaning is, that the source of happiness to a minister of the Gospel in the day of judgment will be the conversion and salvation of souls. The object of the apostle in dwelling on this in a manner so tender and affectionate is, to show them that his leaving them, and his long absence from them, were not caused by any want of affection for them.

REMARKS.

(1.) Ministers of the Gospel should be entirely sincere, and without guile. They should attempt to carry no measure—not even the conversion of sinners—by trick or management. Ver. 3-5.

(2.) They should not make it a point to please men. Verse 4. If they do please men, or if their ministry is acceptable to men, they should not regard it, indeed, as proof that they are unfaithful, for they "should have a good report of them that are without;" nor should they make it a point to displease men, or consider it a proof that because men are offended, therefore they are faithful; but it should not be their leading aim or purpose to gratify men. They should preach the truth; and if they do this, God will take care of their reputation, and will give them just as much as they ought to have. The same principle should operate with all Christians. They should do right, and leave their reputation with God. Compare Psa. xxxvii. 5, 6.

(3.) Ministers of the Gospel should be gentle, tender, and affectionate. They should be kind in feeling, and courteous in manner—like a father or a mother. Verses 7-11. Nothing is ever gained by a sour, harsh, crabbed, dissatisfied manner. Sinners are never scolded either into duty or into heaven. "Flies are not caught with vinegar." No man is a better or more faithful preacher because he is rough in manner, coarse or harsh in his expressions, or sour in his intercourse with mankind. Not thus was the Master, or Paul. There is no crime in being polite and courteous; none in observing the rules of good breeding, and paying respect to the sensibilities of others; and there is no piety in outraging the laws which society has found necessary to adopt to promote happy intercourse. What is wrong we should indeed oppose—but it should be in the kindest manner toward the persons of those who do wrong; what is true and right we should maintain and defend—and we shall always do it more effectually if we do it kindly.

(4.) Ministers should be willing to labor in any proper calling, if it is necessary for their own support or to do good. Verse 9. It is, indeed, the duty of a people to support the Gospel, but there may be situations where they are not able to do it, and a minister should be able to earn something in some other way, and should be willing to do it. Paul made tents; and if he was willing to do that, a minister should not feel himself degraded if he is obliged to make shoes; or to hoe corn, or to plow, or to keep cattle. He had better not do it, if he can avoid it well—for he needs his time for his more important work; but he should feel it no dishonor if he is obliged to do it, and should feel that it is a privilege to preach the Gospel even if he is obliged to support himself by making either tents or shoes. It is no dishonor for a minister to work hard; and it is not well for a man to enter the ministry wholly unacquainted with every other way of procuring an honest living.

(5.) Every minister should be able to appeal to the people among whom he has labored in proof that he is an honest man, and lives consistently with his profession. Vs. 1, 9, 10, 11. The same remark applies to all other Christians. They should so live that they may at once refer to their neighbors in proof of the uprightness of their lives, and their consistent walk. But to be enabled to do this, a man should live as he ought—for the world generally forms a very correct estimate of character.

(6.) The joy of a minister in the day of judgment will be measured by the amount of good which he has done, and the number of souls which he has been the means of converting and saving. Ver. 19. It will not be the honor which he has received from men; the titles which they have conferred on him; the commendation which he has received for eloquence, for talent, or for learning, but it will be found in the number of those who have been converted from the error of their ways, and in the evidence of the good which he did on the earth. And will not the same thing be substantially true of all others who bear the Christian name? Will it then be a source of joy to them that they were richer than their neighbors; or that they were advanced to higher honors; or that they had a more splendid mansion; or that they were able to fare more "sumptuously?" The good that we do will be remembered certainly with pleasure in the day of judgment: of how many other things which now interest us so much can the same thing be said?

(7.) Paul expected evidently to recognize the Thessalonian Christians at the day of judgment, for he said that they would be then his "joy and crown of rejoicing." Verse 19. But this could not be, unless he should be able

CHAPTER III.

WHEREFORE when we could no longer forbear, we to know those who had been converted by his instrumentality. If he expected to recognize them, and to rejoice with them, then we also may hope to know our pious friends in that happy world. Nothing in the Bible forbids this hope, and we can hardly believe that God has created the strong ties which bind us to each other to endure for the present life only. If Paul hoped to meet those who had been converted by his instrumentality, and to rejoice with them there, then the parent may hope to meet the child over whose loss he mourned; the husband and wife will meet again; the pious children of a family will be re-assembled; and the pastor and his flock will be permitted to rejoice together before the Lord. This hope, which nothing in the Bible forbids us to entertain, should do much to alleviate the sorrow of the parting pang, and may be an important and powerful inducement to draw our own thoughts to a brighter and a better world. Of many of the living it is true that the best and dearest friends which they have are already in heaven—and how should their own hearts pant that they may meet them there!

CHAPTER III.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter is a continuation of the course of thought pursued in the previous chapter, and seems designed to meet the same state of feeling existing in Thessalonica, and the same objections which some there urged against the apostle. The objection seems to have been, that he had really no attachment for them, and no regard for their welfare; that he had fled from them on the slightest danger; and that when the danger was passed he had not returned, but had left them to bear their afflictions alone. It appears to have been inferred from his long absence that he had no solicitude for their welfare, and had brought them into difficulties, to escape from which, or to bear which, he was now indisposed to render any assistance. It was important, therefore, for him to remind them of what he had actually done, and to state his real thought it good to be left at Athens alone;

B 2

2 And sent^a Timotheus, our broth-

^a Acts 17. 15.

feelings toward them. He refers them, therefore, to the following things as proof of his interest in them, and his affection for them:

(1.) He had sent Timothy to them at great personal inconvenience, when he could not go himself. Ver. 1-5.

(2.) He had been greatly comforted by the report which Timothy had brought of their steadfastness in the faith. Verses 6-8. Every expression of their attachment to him had gone to his heart, and their faith and charity had been to him in his trials the source of unspeakable consolation. His very life depended, as it were, on their fidelity, and he says that he should live and be happy if they stood fast in the Lord. Ver. 8.

(3.) He expresses again the earnest desire which he had to see them; says that it had been to him the subject of unceasing prayer night and day, and beseeches God again now that he would be pleased to direct his way to them. Ver. 9-11.

(4.) As a proof of affection, the chapter is closed with a fervent prayer that God would cause them to abound more and more in love, and would establish their hearts unblameable before him. Vs. 12, 13. The Thessalonians well knew the apostle Paul. They had had abundant proof of his love when he was with them; and if his enemies there had succeeded in any degree in causing their affection toward him to become cool, or to excite suspicions that he was not sincere, their love must have been rekindled, and their suspicions must have been entirely allayed by the expressions of attachment in this chapter. Language of warmer love, or of deeper interest in the welfare of others, it would not be possible to find any where.

1. Wherefore. See ch. ii. 18. This particle (διὸ) is designed here to refer to another proof of his affection for them. One evidence had been referred to in his strong desire to visit them, which he had been unable to accomplish (ch. ii. 18), and he here refers to another, to wit, the fact that he had sent Timothy to them. ¶ We could no longer forbear. That is, when I could er, and minister of God, and our fellow-laborer in the Gospel of Christ, to establish you, and to comfort you concerning your faith :

not (verse 5), for there is every evidence that Paul refers to himself only, though he uses the plural form of the word. There was no one with him at Athens after he had sent Timothy away (Acts xvii. 15; xviii. 5), and this shows that when, in ch. ii. 6, he uses the term apostles in the plural number, he refers to himself only, and does not mean to give the name to Timothy and Silas. If this be so, Timothy and Silas are no where called "apostles" in the New Testament. The word rendered here could forbear (στέγους), means, properly, to cover, to conceal; and then to hide or conceal anger, impatience, weariness, etc., that is, to hold out as to any thing, to bear with, to endure. It is rendered suffer in 1 Cor. ix. 12; beareth, 1 Cor. xiii. 7; and forbear, 1 Thess. iii. 1, 5. It is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. It means that he could no longer bear up under, hide, or suppress his impatience in regard to them—his painful emotions—his wish to know of their state—and he therefore sent Timothy to them. ¶ We thought it good. I was willing to suffer the inconvenience of parting with him in order to show my concern for you. ¶ To be left at Athens alone. Paul had been conducted to Athens from Berea, where he remained until Silas and Timothy could come to him. Acts xvii. 15. It appears from the statement here that Timothy had joined him there, but such was his solicitude for the Church at Thessalonica, that he very soon after sent him there, and chose to remain himself alone at Athens. Why he did not himself return to Thessalonica is not stated. It is evidently implied here that it was a great personal inconvenience for him thus to part with Timothy, and to remain alone at Athens, and that he evinced a strong love for the Church at Thessalonica by being willing to submit to it. What that inconvenience consisted in he has not stated, but it is not difficult to understand. (1.) He was among total strangers, and, when Timothy was gone, without an acquaintance or friend. (2.) The aid of Timothy was needed in order to prosecute the work which he contemplated. He had requested that Timothy should join him as soon as possible when he left Berea (Acts xvii. 15), and he evidently felt it desirable that in preaching the Gospel in that city he should have all the assistance he could obtain. Yet he was willing to forego these comforts and advantages in order to promote the edification of the Church at Thessalonica.

2. And sent Timotheus. That is, evidently, he sent him from Athens—for this is the fair construction of the passage. But in the history (Acts xvii.) there is no mention that Timothy came to Athens at all, and it may be asked how this statement is reconcilable with the record in the Acts? It is mentioned there that "the brethren sent away Paul [from Berea] to go, as it were, to the sea; but Silas and Timotheus abode there still. And they that conducted Paul brought him to Athens." Acts xvii. 14, 15. The history further states, that after Paul had remained some time at Athens he went to Corinth, where he was joined by Timothy and Silas, who came to him "from Macedonia." Acts xviii. 5. But, in order to reconcile the account in the Acts with the statement before us in the epistle, it is necessary to suppose that Timothy had come to Athens. In reconciling these accounts, we may observe that, though the history does not expressly mention the arrival of Timothy at Athens, yet there are circumstances mentioned which render this extremely probable. First, as soon as Paul reached Athens, he sent a message back to Silas and Timothy to come to him as soon as possible, and there is every probability that this request would be obeyed. Acts xvii. 15. Secondly, his stay at Athens was on purpose that they might join him there. "Now whilst Paul waited for them at Athens, his spirit was stirred within him." Acts xvii. 16. Thirdly, his departure from Athens does not appear to have been in any sort hastened or abrupt. He had an opportunity of seeing the city (Acts xvii. 23); he disputed in the synagogue and in the market "daily" (Acts xvii. 17); he held a controversy with the philosophers (Acts xvii. 18-22); he made converts there (Acts xvii. 24), and "after these things" he calmly went to Corinth. There was no tumult or excitement, and it is not suggested that he was driven away, as in other places, because his life was in danger. There was, therefore, ample time for Timothy to come to him there—for Paul was at liberty to remain as long as he pleased, and as he stayed there for the express purpose of having Timothy and Silas meet him, it is to be presumed that his wish was in this respect accomplished. Fourthly, the sending back of Timothy to Macedonia, as mentioned in the epistle, is a circumstance which will account for the fact mentioned in Acts xviii. 5, that Timothy came to him “at Corinth,” instead of at Athens. He had given directions for him to meet him at Athens (Acts xvii. 15), but the history mentions only that he met him, after a long delay, at Corinth. This delay, and this change of place, when they rejoined each other for the purpose of laboring together, can only be accounted for by the supposition that Timothy had come to him at Athens, and had been immediately sent back to Macedonia, with instructions to join him again at Corinth. This is one of the “undesigned coincidences” between the history in the Acts of the Apostles and the epistles of Paul, of which Paley (Hor. Paul.) has made so good use in demonstrating the genuineness of both. “The epistle discloses a fact which is not preserved in the history; but which makes what is said in the history more significant, probable, and consistent. The history bears marks of an omission; the epistle furnishes a circumstance which supplies that omission.” ¶ Our brother. See Notes on Col. i. 1. The mention of his being a “brother” is designed to show his interest in the Church there. He did not send one whose absence would be no inconvenience to himself, or for whom he had no regard. He sent one who was as dear to him as a brother. ¶ And minister of God. Another circumstance showing his affection for them. He did not send a layman, or one who could not be useful with him or to them, but he sent one fully qualified to preach to them, and to break to them the bread of life. One of the richest tokens of affection which can be shown to any people, is to send to them a faithful minister of God. ¶ And our fellow-laborer in the Gospel of Christ. A third token of affectionate interest in their welfare. The meaning is, “I did not send one whom I did not want, or who could be of no use here, but one who was a fellow-laborer with me, and whose aid would have been of essential service to me. In parting with him, therefore, for your welfare, I showed a strong attachment for you. I was willing to endure personal inconvenience, and additional toil, in order to promote your welfare.” ¶ To establish you. To strengthen you, to make you firm—στηρίζαι. This was to be done by presenting such considerations as would enable them to maintain their faith steadfastly in their trials. ¶ And to comfort you concerning your faith. It is evident that they were suffering persecution on account of their faith in the Lord Jesus; that is, for their belief in him as a Saviour. The object of sending Timothy was to suggest such topics of consolation as would sustain them in their trials—that is, that he was the Son of God; that the people of God had been persecuted in all ages; that God was able to support them, etc.

3 That^a no man should be moved by these afflictions : for yourselves

^a Eph. 3. 13.

^b John 16. 3. 1 Cor. 4. 9. 2 Tim. 3. 12. 1 Pet. 2. 21.

3. That no man should be moved. The word rendered moved (σαίρω) occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It properly means to wag, to move to and fro, as of dogs which wag their tails in fondness (Hom. Od. K., 216; Æl. A. N., x., 7; Ovid, xiv., 258); then to caress, to fawn upon, to flatter; then to move or waver in mind—as from fear; to dread, to tremble. See Passow and Wetstein. Here the sense is, to be so moved or agitated by fear, or by the terror of persecution, as to forsake their religion. The object of sending Timothy was, that they might not be thus moved, but that, amidst all opposition, they might adhere steadfastly to their religion. ¶ These afflictions. See Notes on ch. ii. 14. ¶ For yourselves know that we are appointed thereunto. It is not quite certain whether by the word “we” here the apostle refers to himself, or to himself and the Thesalonians, or to Christians in general. On either supposition what he says is true, and either would meet the case. It would be most to the purpose, however, to suppose that he means to state the general idea that all Christians are 4 For verily, when we were with you, we told you before that we should suffer tribulation; even as it came to pass, and ye know.

5 For this cause, when^a I could no longer forbear, I sent to know

^a Ver. 1.

exposed to persecution, and could not hope to avoid it. It would then appear that the Thessalonians had partaken only of the common lot. Still there may have been a special reference to the fact that Paul and his fellow-laborers there were subjected to trials; and if this be the reference, the idea is that the Thessalonians should not be "moved" by their trials, for even their teachers were not exempt. Even their enemies could not say that the apostle and his co-workers were impostors, for they had persevered in preaching the Gospel when they knew that these trials were coming upon them. The phrase "we are appointed thereunto," means that such was the divine arrangement. No one who professed Christianity could hope to be exempted from trial, for it was the common lot of all believers. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. iv. 9; 2 Tim. iii. 12.

4. For verily, when we were with you, we told you before, etc. It is not mentioned in the history (Acts xvii.) that Paul thus predicted that peculiar trials would come upon them, but there is no improbability in what is here said. He was with them long enough to discourse to them on a great variety of topics, and nothing can be more probable than that, in their circumstances, the subjects of persecution and affliction would be prominent topics of discourse. There was every reason to apprehend that they would meet with opposition on account of their religion, and nothing was more natural than that Paul should endeavor to prepare their minds for it beforehand. ¶ That we should suffer tribulation. We who preached to you; perhaps also including those to whom they preached. ¶ Even as it came to pass, and ye know. When Paul, Silas, and Timothy were driven away, and when the Church was so much agitated by the opposition of the Jews. Acts xvii. 5-8.

5. For this cause. Since I knew that you were so liable to be persecuted, and since I feared that some might be your faith, lest^b by some means the tempter have tempted you, and our labor^c be in vain.

6 But now when Timotheus came from you unto us, and brought us good tidings of your faith and turned from the truth by this opposition. ¶ When I could no longer forbear. See Notes on ver. 1. ¶ I sent to know your faith. That is, your fidelity, or your steadfastness in the Gospel. ¶ Lest by some means. Either by allurements to apostasy set before you by your former heathen friends, or by the arts of false teachers, or by the severity of suffering. Satan has many methods of seducing men from the truth, and Paul was fearful that by some of his arts he might be successful there. ¶ The tempter. Satan; for though the Jews were the immediate actors in those transactions, yet the apostle regarded them as being under the direction of Satan, and as accomplishing his purposes. He was, therefore, the real author of the persecutions which had been excited. He is here called the "Tempter," as he is often (comp. Matt. iv.), and the truths taught are, (1.) that Satan is the great author of persecution; and (2.) that in a time of persecution—or of trial of any kind—he endeavors to tempt men to swerve from the truth, and to abandon their religion. In persecution, men are tempted to apostatize from God in order to avoid suffering. In afflictions of other kinds, Satan often tempts the sufferer to murmur and complain; to charge God with harshness, partiality, and severity, and to give vent to expressions that will show that religion has none of its boasted power to support the soul in the day of trial. Comp. Job i. 9-11. In all times of affliction, as well as in prosperity, we may be sure that "the Tempter" is not far off, and should be on our guard against his wiles. ¶ And our labor be in vain. By your being turned from the faith. See Notes on Gal. iv. 11.

^b 2 Cor. 11. 2. 3.

^c Gal. 4. 11.

6. But now when Timotheus came from you unto us. To Corinth, after he had been sent to Thessalonica. Acts xviii. 5. Compare Notes on ver. 2. ¶ And brought us good tidings. A cheerful or favorable account. Greek, "evangelizing;" that is, bringing good news. ¶ Of your faith. Of your faithfulness charity, and that ye have good remembrance of us always, desiring^a greatly to see us, as we also to see you;

7 Therefore, brethren, we were comforted^b over you, in all our affliction and distress, by your faith:

8 For now we live, if ye stand fast^c in the Lord.

a Phil. 1. 8. b 2 Cor. 7. 6, 7. c Eph. 6. 13, 14. Phil. 4. 1.

or fidelity. Amid all their trials they evinced fidelity to the Christian cause. ¶ And charity. Love. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. 1. ¶ And that ye have good remembrance of us always. That is, probably, they showed their remembrance of Paul by obeying his precepts, and by cherishing an affectionate regard for him, notwithstanding the efforts which had been made to alienate their affections from him. ¶ Greatly desiring to see us, as we also to see you. There was no disposition to blame him for having left them, or because he did not return to them. They would have welcomed him again as their teacher and friend. The meaning of this is, that there was between him and them a strong mutual attachment.

7. We are comforted over you. See Notes on 2 Cor. i. 3-7; vii. 6, 7. The sense here is, that their steadfastness was a great source of consolation to him in his trials. It was an instance in which the holy lives and the fidelity of a people did much, as will always be the case, to lighten the burdens and cheer the heart of a minister of the Gospel. In the inevitable trials of the ministerial office there is no source of comfort more rich and pure than this.

8. For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord. This is equivalent to saying, "My life and comfort depend on your stability in the faith, and your correct Christian walk. I seem to live. I truly live." Comp. Martial, vi., 70. Non est vivere, sed valere, vita—"Life consists not merely in living, but in the enjoyment of health." See, also, Seneca, Epis. 99, and Manilius, iv., 5, as quoted by Wetstein. The meaning here is, that Paul now enjoyed life; he had that which constituted real life, in the fact that they acted as became Christians, and so as to show that his labor among them had not been in vain. The same thing here affirmed is true of all faith-

9 For what thanks can we render to God again for you, for all the joy wherewith we joy for your sakes before our God;

10 Night and day praying exceedingly that we might see your face, and might perfect^d that which is lacking in your faith?

11 Now God himself and our Fad 2 Cor. 13. 9, 11. Col. 4. 12.

ful ministers of the Gospel. They feel that they have something that may be called life, and that is worth living for, when those to whom they preach maintain a close walk with God.

9. For what thanks can we render to God again. That is, what expression of thanksgiving can we render to God which will be an equivalent for the joy which your holy walk has furnished, or which will suitably express our gratitude for it.

10. Night and day. Constantly. ¶ Praying exceedingly. Gr., abundantly; that is, there was much more than ordinary prayer. He made this a special subject of prayer; he urged it with earnestness, and without intermission. Compare ch. ii. 17. ¶ And might perfect that which is lacking in your faith. Might render it complete, or fill up any thing which is wanting. The word here used (καταρτίσαι) means, properly, to make fully ready, to put full in order, to make complete. See Notes on Rom. ix. 22; 2 Cor. xiii. 9; Gal. vi. 1. It is rendered mending, Matt. iv. 21; Mark i. 19; perfect and perfected, Matt. xxi. 19; Luke vi. 40; 2 Cor. xiii. 11; 1 Thess. iii. 10; Heb. xiii. 21; 1 Pet. v. 10; fitted, Rom. ix. 22; perfectly joined together, 1 Cor. i. 10; restore, Gal. vi. 1; prepared, Heb. x. 5; and framed, Heb. xi. 3. It is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. The meaning here is, that whatever was deficient in their views of religious doctrine the apostle desired to supply. It is to be remembered that he was with them but a comparatively short time before he was compelled to depart to Berea, and it is reasonable to suppose that there were many subjects on which he would be glad to have an opportunity to instruct them more fully.

11. Now God himself. This is evidently a prayer. He earnestly sought of God that he might be permitted to visit them, and that he would so pre-ther, and our Lord Jesus Christ¹ direct our way unto you.

12 And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love^a one toward another, and toward all men, even as we do toward you :

1 or, guide.

a 1 John 4. 7-12.

pare the way that he might do it. ¶ And our Father. Even our Father. The reference is particularly to the "Father," the First Person of the Trinity. It does not refer here to the divine nature in general, or to God as such, but to God as the Father of the Lord Jesus. It is a distinct prayer offered to him that he would direct his way to them. It is right therefore to offer prayer to the Father as such—as the First Person of the Trinity. ¶ And our Lord Jesus Christ. This also is a prayer as much as the former was, for it can be understood in no other way. What can be its meaning, unless the apostle believed that the Lord Jesus had power to direct his way to them, and that it was proper for him to express this wish to him; that is, to pray to him? If this be so, then it is right to pray to the Lord Jesus, or to worship him. See Notes on John xx. 23; Acts i. 24. Would Paul have prayed to an angel to direct his way to the Church at Thessalonica? ¶ Direct our way unto you. Marg., guide. The Greek word — κατευθύνω — means to guide straight toward or upon any thing. It is rendered guide in Luke i. 79, and direct here and in 2 Thess. iii. 5. It does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. The idea is that of conducting one straight to a place, and not by a roundabout course. Here the petition is that God would remove all obstacles so that he could come directly to them.

12. And the Lord make you to increase and abound in love. Comp. Notes on 2 Cor. ix. 8. The word "Lord" here probably refers to the Lord Jesus, as this is the name by which he is commonly designated in the New Testament. See Notes on Acts i. 24. If this be so, then this is a petition to the Lord Jesus as the fountain of all grace and goodness.

13. To the end he may establish your hearts. That is, "may the Lord cause you to increase in love (ver. 12), in order that you may be established, and be without blame in the day of judgment." The idea is that if charity were diffused through their hearts, they would abound in every virtue, and would be at length found blameless. ¶ Unblameable. See Notes on ch. i. 10; Phil. ii. 15; iii. 6; Heb. viii. 7. Comp. Luke i. 6; 1 Thess. v. 23. The meaning is, so that there could be no charge or accusation against them. ¶ In holiness. Not in outward conduct merely, or in the observance of rites and forms of religion, but in purity of heart: ¶ At the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. To judge the world. See Notes on ch. i. 10. As we are to appear before him, we should so live that our Judge will find nothing in us to be blamed. ¶ With all his saints. With all his holy ones—τῶν ἁγίων. The word includes his angels who will come with him (Matt. xxv. 31), and all the redeemed who will then surround him. The idea is that before that holy assemblage it is desirable that we should be prepared to appear blameless. We should be fitted to be welcomed to the "goodly fellowship" of the angels, and to be regarded as worthy to be numbered with the redeemed who "have washed their robes, and have made them white [pure or clean] in the blood of the Lamb." When we come to appear amid that vast assemblage of holy beings, the honors of the world will appear to be small things; the wealth of the earth will appear worthless, and all the pleasures of this life beneath our notice. Happy will they be who are prepared for the solemnities of that day, and who shall have led such a life of holy love—of pure devotion to the Redeemer—of deadness to the world—of zeal in the cause of pure religion—of universal justice, fidelity, honesty, and truth, as to be without reproach, and to meet with the approbation of their Lord.

13 To the end he may stablish your hearts^b unblameable in holiness before God, even our Father, at the coming^b of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints.

b 2 Thess. 2. 17. 1 John 3. 20, 21.
c Zec. 14. 5. Jude 14.

CHAPTER IV.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter, properly, comprises two parts: First, various practical ex-

CHAPTER IV.

FURTHERMORE then we ¹ beseech you, brethren, and ² exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how ye ought to walk ^a and to please God, hortations, ver. 1-12; and, secondly, suggestions designed to console those who had been bereaved. Ver. 13-18.

¹ or, request.

² or, beseech.

The first part embraces the following topics:

(1.) An exhortation to increase and abound in the Christian virtues which they had already manifested. Vs. 1, 2.

(2.) A particular exhortation on the subject of sanctification (ver. 3-8), in which two points are specified, probably as illustrations of the general subject, and embracing those in regard to whom they were exposed to special danger. The first was fornication, the other was fraud.

(3.) An exhortation to brotherly love. Vs. 9, 10.

(4.) An exhortation to quiet industry, and to honesty in their dealings, particularly with those who were not Christians. Vs. 11, 12.

The second part is designed to comfort the Thessalonians who had been bereaved. Ver. 13-18. Some of their number had died. They appear to have been beloved members of the Church, and dear friends of those to whom the apostle wrote. To console them he brings into view the doctrine of the second coming of the Saviour, and the truth that they would be raised up to live with him forever. He reminds them that those who had died were "asleep"—reposing in a gentle slumber, as if they were to be awakened again (verse 13); that they should not sorrow as those did who had no hope (ver. 13); that if they believed that Jesus died and rose again, they ought to believe that God would raise up all those who sleep in Jesus (verse 14); that in the last day they would rise before the living should be changed, or that the living would not be taken up to heaven and leave their departed friends in their graves (vs. 15, 16), and that both the living and the dead would be raised up to heaven, and would be forever with the Lord. Ver. 17. With this prospect, they had every ground of comfort which they could desire, and they should sustain so ye would abound ^b more and more.

2 For ye know what commandments we gave you by the Lord Jesus.

3 For this is the will of God, even a Col. 1. 10. b 1 Cor. 15. 58.

each other in their trials by this bright hope. Ver. 18

1. Furthermore then. Το λοιπόν. "As to what remains." That is, all that remains is to offer these exhortations. See Notes on 2 Cor. xiii. 11; Gal. vi. 17; Eph. vi. 10; Phil. iv. 8. The phrase is a formula appropriate to the end of an argument or discourse. ¶ We beseech you. Margin, request. The Greek is "we ask you"—ἔρωτῶμεν. It is not as strong a word as that which follows. ¶ And exhort you. Marg., beseech. This is the word which is commonly used to denote earnest exhortation. The use of these words here implies that Paul regarded the subject as of great importance. He might have commanded them—but kind exhortation usually accomplishes more than a command. ¶ By the Lord Jesus. In his name and by his authority. ¶ That as ye have received of us. As you were taught by us. Paul doubtless had given them repeated instructions as to their duty as Christians. ¶ How ye ought to walk. That is, how you ought to live. Life is often represented as a journey. Rom. vi. 4; viii. 1; 1 Cor. v. 7; Gal. vi. 16; Eph. iv. 1. ¶ So ye would abound more and more. "That is, follow the directions which they had received more and more fully."—Abbott.

2. For ye know what commandments. It was but a short time since Paul was with them, and they could not but recollect the rules of living which he had laid down. ¶ By the Lord Jesus. By the authority of the Lord Jesus. Some of those rules or commandments the apostle refers to, probably, in the following verses.

3. For this is the will of God, even your sanctification. It is the will or command of God that you should be holy. This does not refer to the purpose or decree of God, and does not mean that he intended to make them holy; but it means that it was his command that they should be holy. It is also true that it is agreeable to the divine will or purpose that Christians should be your sanctification, that ^a ye should abstain from fornication :

4 That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel in sanctification and honour ;

^a 1 Cor. 6. 15, 18.

^b Eph. 4. 17, 18.

holy, and that God means to use such an influence as to secure this; but this is not the truth taught here. This text, therefore, should not be brought as a proof that God intends to make his people holy, or that they are sanctified. It is a proof only that he requires holiness. The word here rendered sanctification—ἀγιασμός—is not used in the Greek classics, but is several times found in the New Testament. It is rendered holiness, Rom. vi. 19, 22; 1 Thess. iv. 7; 1 Tim. ii. 15; Heb. xii. 14; and sanctification, 1 Cor. i. 30; 1 Thess. iv. 3, 4; 2 Thess. ii. 13, and 1 Pet. i. 2. See Notes on Rom. vi. 19; 1 Cor. i. 30. It means here purity of life, and particularly abstinence from those vices which debase and degrade the soul. Sanctification consists in two things, (1.) in “ceasing to do evil,” and (2.) in “learning to do well.” Or in other words, the first work of sanctification is in overcoming the propensities to evil in our nature, and checking and subduing the unholy habits which we had formed before we became Christians; the second part of the work consists in cultivating the positive principles of holiness in the soul. ¶ That ye should abstain from fornication. A vice which was freely indulged among the heathen, and to which, from that fact, and from their own former habits, they were particularly exposed. On the fact that they were thus exposed, and on the reasons for these solemn commands on the subject, see Notes on Acts xv. 20 and 1 Cor. vi. 18.

4. That every one of you should know how to possess his vessel. The Greek here would properly mean to gain possession of; to acquire for one's own use; and, if applied to the body, would mean that the man should secure or gain possession of his own body; that is, should rescue it from the dominion or slavery of lust and passion. The word vessel here (σκεῦος) probably refers to the body. When it is so used, it is either because the body is frail and feeble, like an earthen vessel, easily broken (2 Cor. iv. 7), or because it is

5 Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles ^b which know not God :

6 That no man go beyond and ¹ defraud his brother in ² any mat-

1 or, oppress; or, overreach.

2 or, the.

that which contains the soul, or in which the soul is lodged. Lucret., lib. iii., 441. The word vessel also (Heb. כֵּלִי, Gr. σκεῦος) was used by the later Hebrews to denote a wife, as the vessel of her husband. Schœttg., Hor. Heb., p. 827. Comp. Wetstein, in loc. Many, as Augustine, Wetstein, Schœttgen, Koppe, Robinson (Lex.), and others, have supposed that this is the reference here. Comp. 1 Pet. iii. 7. The word body, however, accords more naturally with the usual signification of the word, and as the apostle was giving directions to the whole Church, embracing both sexes, it is hardly probable that he confined his direction to those who had wives. It was the duty of females, and of the unmarried among the males, as well as of married men, to observe this command. The injunction then is that we should preserve the body pure. See Notes on 1 Cor. vi. 18–20. ¶ In sanctification and honor. Should not debase or pollute it; that is, that we should honor it as a noble work of God, to be employed for pure purposes. See Notes on 1 Cor. vi. 19.

5. Not in the lust of concupiscence. In gross gratifications. ¶ Even as the Gentiles. This was, and is, a common vice among the heathen. See Notes on Acts xv. 20; Rom. i. 29; Eph. iv. 17, 18, and the reports of missionaries every where. ¶ Which know not God. See Notes on Rom. i. 21, 28. Comp. Eph. ii. 12.

6. That no man go beyond. ὑπερβαίνειν. This word means to make to go over, as, for example, a wall or mountain; then, to overpass, to wit, certain limits, to transgress; and then to go too far, that is, to go beyond right—hence to cheat or defraud. It is not used elsewhere in the New Testament. The idea of overreaching is that which is implied in its use here. ¶ And defraud. πλεονεκτεῖν. Marg., oppress, or overreach. This word properly means to have more than another; then to have an advantage; and then to take advantage of any one, to cir-ter; because that the Lord is the avenger of all such, as we also have forewarned you and testified.

7 For God hath not called us unto uncleanness, but ^a unto holiness.

a Lev. 11. 44. Heb. 12. 14. 1 Pet. 1. 14-16.

cumvent, defraud, cheat. It is rendered get an advantage, 2 Cor. ii. 11; defraud, 2 Cor. vii. 2; 1 Thess. iv. 6; make a gain, 2 Cor. xii. 17, 18. Comp. for the use of the adjective, 1 Cor. v. 10, 11; vi. 10; Eph. v. 5; and the noun, Mark vii. 22; Luke xii. 15; Rom. i. 29; 2 Cor. ix. 5; Eph. v. 3; Col. iii. 5; 1 Thess. ii. 5; 2 Pet. ii. 3, 14. It is the word commonly used to denote covetousness. Taking advantage of is the idea which it conveys here. ¶ In any matter. Margin, "or the." According to the reading in the margin, this would refer to the particular matter under discussion (verse 3-5), to wit, concupiscence, and the meaning then would be that no one should be guilty of illicit intercourse with the wife of another. Many expositors—as Hammond, Whitby, Macknight, Rosenmüller, and others, suppose that this is a prohibition of adultery, and there can be no doubt that it does include this. But there is no reason why it should be confined to it. The Greek is so general that it may prohibit all kinds of fraud, overreaching, or covetousness, and may refer to any attempt to deprive another of his rights, whether it be the right which he has in his property, or his rights as a husband, or his rights in any other respect. It is a general command not to defraud; in no way to take advantage of another; in no way to deprive him of his rights. ¶ Because that the Lord is the avenger of all such. Of all such as are guilty of fraud; that is, he will punish them. Comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 19; Eph. vi. 9. ¶ As we have also forewarned. Doubtless when he was with them.

7. For God hath not called us unto uncleanness. When he called us to be his followers, it was not that we should lead lives of impurity, but of holiness. We should, therefore, fulfill the purposes for which we were called into his kingdom. The word uncleanness (ἀκαθαρσία) means, properly, impurity, filth; and then, in a moral sense, pollution, lewdness, as opposed to chastity. Rom. i. 24; vi. 19; 2 Cor. xii.

8 He therefore that ¹despiseth, despiseth not man, but God, who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit.

9 But as touching brotherly love, ye need not that I write unto you;

1 or, rejecteth.

21; Gal. v. 19; Eph. iv. 19; v. 3; Col. iii. 5.

8. He therefore that despiseth. Marg., rejecteth. That is, he who disregards such commands as these which call him to a holy life, is really rejecting and disobeying God. Some might be disposed to say that these were merely the precepts of man, and that therefore it was not important whether they were obeyed or not. The apostle assures them in the most solemn manner that, though communicated to them by man, yet they were really the commands of God. ¶ Who hath also given unto us his holy Spirit. This is a claim to inspiration. Paul did not give these commands as his own, but as taught by the Spirit of God. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. vii. 40.

9. But as touching brotherly love. The "peculiar charity and affection which one Christian owes to another."—Doddridge. See Notes on John xiii. 34. ¶ Ye need not that I write unto you. That is, as I have done on the other points. They were so taught of God in regard to this duty that they did not need any special instruction. ¶ For ye yourselves are taught of God. The word here rendered "taught of God"—θεοδιδάκτοι—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It is correctly translated, and must refer here to some direct teaching of God on their own hearts, for Paul speaks of their being so taught by him as to need no special precepts in the case. He probably refers to that influence exerted on them when they became Christians, by which they were led to love all who bear the divine image. He calls this being "taught of God," not because it was of the nature of revelation or inspiration, but because it was in fact the teaching of God in this case, though it was secret and silent. God has many ways of teaching men. The lessons which we learn from his Providence are a part of his instructions. The same is true of the decisions of our own consciences, and of the secret and silent influence of his Spirit on for ye yourselves are taught ^a of God to love one another.

10 And indeed ye do it toward all the brethren which are in all

^a John 15. 12, 17.

our hearts, disposing us to love what is lovely, and to do what ought to be done. In this manner all true Christians are taught to love those who bear the image of their Saviour: They feel that they are brethren; and such is their strong attachment to them, from the very nature of religion, that they do not need any express command of God to teach them to love them. It is one of the first, the elementary effects of religion on the soul, to lead us to love "the brethren"—and to do this is one of the evidences of piety about which there need be no danger of deception. Comp. 1 John iii. 14.

10. And indeed ye do it. See Notes on ch. i. 7. ¶ But we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more. See Notes on ch. iii. 12. Here, as elsewhere, the apostle makes the fact that they deserved commendation for what they had done a stimulus to arouse them to still higher attainments.—Bloomfield.

11. And that ye study to be quiet. Orderly, peaceful; living in the practice of the calm virtues of life. The duty to which he would exhort them was that of being subordinate to the laws; of avoiding all tumult and disorder; of calmly pursuing their regular avocations, and of keeping themselves from all the assemblages of the idle, the restless, and the dissatisfied. No Christian should be engaged in a mob; none should be identified with the popular excitements which lead to disorder and to the disregard of the laws. The word rendered "ye study" (φιλοτιμέομαι) means, properly, to love honor, to be ambitious; and here means the same as when we say, "to make it a point of honor to do so and so."—Robinson, Lex. It is to be regarded as a sacred duty; a thing in which our honor is concerned. Every man should regard himself as disgraced who is concerned in a riot or a mob. ¶ And to do your own business. To attend to their own concerns, without interfering with the affairs of others. See Notes on Phil. ii. 4; Comp. 2 Thess. iii. 11; 1 Tim. v. 13; 1 Pet. iv. 13. The injunction here is one of the beautiful precepts of Christianity so well adapted to promote the good order and the happiness of society. It would prevent the impertinent and unauthorized prying into the affairs of others, to which many are so prone, and produce that careful attention to what properly belongs to our calling in life, which leads to thrift, order, and competence. Religion teaches no man to neglect his business. It requires no one to give up an honest calling, and to be idle. It asks no one to forsake a useful occupation, unless he can exchange it for one more useful. It demands, indeed, that we shall be willing so far to suspend our ordinary labors as to observe the Sabbath; to maintain habits of devotion; to improve our minds and hearts by the study of truth; to cultivate the social affections, and to do good to others as we have an opportunity; but it makes no one idle, and it countenances idleness in no one. A man who is habitually idle can have very slender pretensions to piety. There is enough in this world for every one to do, and the Saviour set such an example of untiring industry in his vocation as to give each one occasion to doubt whether he is his true follower if he is not disposed to be employed. ¶ And to work with your own hands, as we commanded you. This command is not referred to in the history (Acts xvii.), but it is probable that the apostle saw that many of those residing in Thessalonica were disposed to spend their time in indolence, and hence insisted strongly on the necessity of being engaged in some useful occupation. Comp. Acts xvii. 31. Idleness is one of the great evils of the heathen world in almost every country, and the parent of no small part of their vices. The effect of religion every where is to make men industrious; and every man, who is able, should feel himself under sacred obligation to be employed. God made man to work (comp. Gen. ii. 15; iii. 19), and there is no more benevolent arrangement of his government than this. No one who has already enough for himself and family, but who can make money to do good to others, has a right to retire from business and to live in idleness (comp.

Macedonia: but we beseech you, brethren, that ye increase more and more:

11 And that ye study to be quiet,

and to "do your own business, and to work with your own hands, as we commanded you;

a 1 Pet. 4. 15.

Acts xx. 34; Eph. iv. 27); no one has a right to live in such a relation as to be wholly dependent on others, if he can support himself; and no one has a right to compel others to labor for him, and to exact their unrequited toil, in order that he may be supported in indolence and ease. The application of this rule to all mankind would speedily put an end to slavery, and would convert multitudes, even in the Church, from useless to useful men. If a man has no necessity to labor for himself and family, he should regard it as an inestimable privilege to be permitted to aid those who can not work—the sick, the aged, the infirm. If a man has no need to add to what he has for his own temporal comfort, what a privilege it is for him to toil in promoting public improvements; in founding colleges, libraries, hospitals, and asylums; and in sending the Gospel to those who are sunk in wretchedness and want! No man understands fully the blessings which God has bestowed on him, if he has hands to work and will not work.

12. That ye may walk honestly toward them that are without. Out of the Church. Comp. Notes on Col. iv. 5. The word rendered honestly, means becomingly, decorously, in a proper manner. Rom. xiii. 13; 1 Cor. xiv. 40. It does not refer here to mere honesty in the transaction of business, but to their general treatment of those who were not professing Christians. They were to conduct themselves toward them in all respects in a becoming manner—to be honest with them; to be faithful to their engagements; to be kind and courteous in their intercourse; to show respect where it was due, and to endeavor in every way to do them good. There are few precepts of religion more important than those which enjoin upon Christians the duty of a proper treatment of those who are not connected with the Church. ¶ And that ye may have lack of nothing. Marg., no man. The Greek will bear either construction, but the translation in the text is probably the correct one. The phrase is to be taken in connection not merely with that which immediately precedes it—as if 12 That ye may walk honestly^b toward them that are without, and that ye may have lack of¹ nothing.

b Rom. 13. 13.

1 or, no man.

"their walking honestly toward those who were without" would preserve them from want—but as meaning that their industrious and quiet habits, their patient attention to their own business, and their upright dealing with every man, would do it. They would, in this way, have a competence, and would not be beholden to others. Learn hence that it is the duty of a Christian so to live as not to be dependent on others, unless he is made so by events of divine Providence which he can not foresee or control. No man should be dependent on others as the result of idle habits, of extravagance and improvidence, of the neglect of his own business, and of intermeddling with that of others. If by age, losses, infirmities, sickness, he is made dependent, he can not be blamed, and he should not repine at his lot. One of the ways in which a Christian may always do good in society, and honor his religion, is by quiet and patient industry, and by showing that religion prompts to those habits of economy on which the happiness of society so much depends. It is not quite easy to see the connection of the commands in these verses (10, 11) with what precedes or with what follows, or to understand what particular occasion there was in the Church at Thessalonica, as we may presume there was some occasion, for giving these instructions. It may have been either (a) that the liberality which the apostle so much commends as abounding among them (verse 10) involved some elements of a "restless, meddling, and practically idle spirit," that exposed them to accusations from those who were "without" (Ellicott, in loc.); or (b) that their mistaken expectations of the near approach of the "day of the Lord"—the coming of the Saviour—the end of the world—led them to a neglect of their regular duties and avocations, as if there was no use in trying to gain any thing, or as if the things of this world had no value—an effect which has always followed an unfounded expectation of the immediate approach of the end of the world; or (c) that by this neglect of their proper worldly employments,

13 But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sor-and abandonment of industrious habits, they made themselves really dependent on the charity of their fellow-men for support, and that thus their conduct tended to bring religion into reproach from men of the world. Any of these causes may have produced a state of things such as that which is implied in these commands, and we know that human nature is such that such things as these might have existed in the Church.

13. But I would not have you to be ignorant. I would have you fully informed on the important subject which is here referred to. It is quite probable from this, that some erroneous views prevailed among them in reference to the condition of those who were dead, which tended to prevent their enjoying the full consolation which they might otherwise have done. Of the prevalence of these views it is probable the apostle had been informed by Timothy on his return from Thessalonica. Chap. iii. 6. What they were we are not distinctly informed, and can only gather from the allusions which Paul makes to them, or from the opposite doctrines which he states, and which are evidently designed to correct those which prevailed among them. From these statements, it would appear that they supposed that those who had died, though they were true Christians, would be deprived of some important advantages which those would possess who would survive to the coming of the Lord. There seems some reason to suppose, as Koppe conjectures (compare also Saurin, Serm., vi., 1), that the cause of their grief was twofold; one, that some among them doubted whether there would be any resurrection (comp. 1 Cor. xv. 12), and that they supposed that they who had died were thus cut off from the hope of eternal happiness, so as to leave their surviving friends to sorrow "as those who had no hope;" the other, that some of them believed that, though those who were dead would indeed rise again, yet it would be long after those who were living when the Lord Jesus would return had been taken to glory, and would be always in a condition inferior to them. See row not, even as others which have no hope.

14 For if we believe that Jesus

Koppe, in loc. The effect of such opinions as these can be readily imagined. It would be to deprive them of the consolation which they might have had, and should have had, in the loss of their pious friends. They would either mourn over them as wholly cut off from hope, or would sorrow that they were to be deprived of the highest privileges which could result from redemption. It is not to be regarded as wonderful that such views should have prevailed in Thessalonica. There were those even at Corinth who wholly denied the doctrine of the resurrection (1 Cor. xv. 12); and we are to remember that those to whom the apostle now wrote had been recently converted from heathenism; that they had enjoyed his preaching but a short time; that they had few or no books on the subject of religion; and that they were surrounded by those who had no faith in the doctrine of the resurrection at all, and who were doubtless able—as skeptical philosophers often are now—to urge their objections to the doctrine in such a way as greatly to perplex Christians. The apostle, therefore, felt the importance of stating the exact truth on the subject, that they might not have unnecessary sorrow, and that their unavoidable grief for their departed friends might not be aggravated by painful apprehensions about their future condition. ¶ Concerning them which are asleep. It is evident from this that they had been recently called to part with some dear and valued members of their Church. The word sleep is frequently applied in the New Testament to the death of saints. For the reasons why it is, see the Notes on John xi. 11; 1 Cor. xi. 30; xv. 51. ¶ That ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. That is, evidently, as the heathen, who had no hope of future life. Comp. Notes on Eph. ii. 12. Their sorrow was caused not only by the fact that their friends were removed from them by death, but from the fact that they had no evidence that their souls were immortal; or that, if they still lived, they were happy; or that their bodies would rise again. Hence, when they buried them, they buried their hopes in the grave, and, so far as they had any evidence, they were never to see them again. Their grief at parting was not mitigated by the belief that the soul was now happy, or by the prospect of again being with them in a better world. It was on this account, in part, that the heathens indulged in expressions of such excessive grief. When their friends died, they hired men to play in a mournful manner on a pipe or trumpet, or women to howl and lament in a dismal manner. They beat their breasts; they uttered loud shrieks; they rent their garments; they tore off their hair; they cast dust on their heads, or sat down in ashes. It is not improbable that some among the Thessalonians, on the death of their pious friends, kept up these expressions of excessive sorrow. To prevent this, and to mitigate their sorrow, the apostle refers them to the bright hopes which Christianity had revealed, and points them to the future glorious reunion with the departed pious dead. Learn hence, (1.) that the world without religion is destitute of hope. It is just as true of the heathen world now as it was of the ancient pagans, that they have no hope of a future state. They have no evidence that there is any such future state of blessedness; and without such evidence there can be no hope. Comp. Notes on Eph. ii. 12. (2.) That the excessive sorrow of the children of this world, when they lose a friend, is not to be wondered at. They bury their hopes in the grave. They part, for all that they know or believe, with such a friend forever. The wife, the son, the daughter, they consign to silence—to decay—to dust, not expecting to meet them again. They look forward to no glorious resurrection when that body shall rise, and when they shall be reunited to part no more. It is no wonder that they weep—for who would not weep when he believes that he parts with his friends forever? (3.) It is only the hope of future blessedness that can mitigate this sorrow. Religion reveals a brighter world—a world where all the pious will be reunited; where the bonds of love will be made stronger than they were here; where they will never be severed again. It is only this hope that can soothe the pains of grief at parting; only when we can look forward to a better world and feel that we shall see them again—love them again—love them forever—that our tears are made dry. (4.) The Christian, therefore, when he loses a Christian friend, should not sorrow as others do. He will feel, indeed, as keenly as they do, the loss of their society; the absence of their well-known faces; the want of the sweet voice of friendship and love—for religion does not blunt the sensibility of the soul, or make the heart unfeeling. Jesus wept at the grave of Lazarus, and religion does not prevent the warm, gushing expressions of sorrow when God comes into a family and removes a friend. But this sorrow should not be like that of the world. It should not be (a) such as arises from the feeling that there is to be no future union; (b) it should not be accompanied with re-peating or complaining; (c) it should not be excessive, or beyond that which God designs that we should feel. It should be calm, submissive, patient; it should be that which is connected with steady confidence in God; it should be mitigated by the hope of a future glorious union in heaven. The eye of the weeper should look up through his tears to God. The heart of the sufferer should acquiesce in him, even in the unsearchable mysteries of his dealings, and feel that all is right. (5.) It is a sad thing to die without hope—so to die as to have no hope for ourselves, and to leave none to our surviving friends that we are happy. Such is the condition of the whole heathen world; and such the state of those who die in Christian lands who have no evidence that their peace is made with God. As I love my friends—my father, my mother, my wife, my children, I would not have them go forth and weep over my grave as those who have no hope in my death. I would have their sorrow for my departure alleviated by the belief that my soul is happy with my God, even when they commit my cold clay to the dust; and were there no other reason for being a Christian, this would be worth all the effort which it requires to become one. It would demonstrate the unspeakable value of religion, that my living friends may go forth to my grave and be comforted in their sorrows with the assurance that my soul is already in glory, and that my body will rise again! No eulogium for talents, accomplishments, or learning; no pæans of praise for eloquence, beauty, died and rose again, even so ^a them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him.

a 1 Cor. 15. 20, etc.

or martial deeds; no remembrances of wealth and worldly greatness, would then so meet the desires which my heart cherishes, as to have them enabled, when standing around my open grave, to sing the song which only Christians can sing:

Unveil thy bosom, faithful tomb,
Take this new treasure to thy trust;
And give these sacred relics room
To seek a slumber in the dust.

Nor pain, nor grief, nor anxious fear
Invalidate thy bounds. No mortal woes
Can reach the peaceful sleeper here,
While angels watch the soft repose.

So Jesus slept: God's dying Son
Pass'd thro' the grave, and blest the bed;
Rest here, blest saint, till from his throne
The morning break, and pierce the shade.

Break from his throne, illustrious morn;
Attend, O Earth, his sovereign word;
Restore thy trust—a glorious form—
Call'd to ascend, and meet the Lord.

WATTS.

14. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again. That is, if we believe this, we ought also to believe that those who have died in the faith of Jesus will be raised from the dead. The meaning is not that the fact of the resurrection depends on our believing that Jesus rose, but that the death and resurrection of the Saviour are connected with the resurrection of the saints; that the one follows from the other, and that the one is as certain as the other. The doctrine of the resurrection of the saints so certainly follows from that of the resurrection of Christ, that, if the one is believed, the other ought to be also. See Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 12-14. ¶ Which sleep in Jesus. A most beautiful expression. It is not merely that they have calm repose—like a gentle slumber—in the hope of a waking again, but that this is “in Jesus”—or “through” (διὰ) him; that is, his death and resurrection are the cause of their quiet and calm repose. They do not “sleep” in heathenism, or in infidelity, or in the gloom of atheism—but in the blessed hope which Jesus has imparted. They lie, as he did, in the tomb—free from pain and sorrow, and with the certainty of being raised up again.

15 For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive, and remain unto

They sleep in Jesus, and are bless'd, How kind their slumbers are;
From sufferings and from sin released,
And freed from every snare.

When, therefore, we think of the death of saints, let us think of what Jesus was in the tomb of Joseph of Arimathea. Such is the sleep of our pious friends now in the grave; such will be our own when we die. ¶ Will God bring with him. This does not mean that God will bring them with him from heaven when the Saviour comes—though it will be true that their spirits will descend with the Saviour; but it means that he will bring them from their graves, and will conduct them with him to glory, to be with him. Comp. Notes on John xiv. 3. The declaration, as it seems to me, is designed to teach the general truth that the redeemed are so united with Christ that they will share the same destiny as he does. As the head was raised, so will all the members be. As God brought Christ from the grave, so will he bring them; that is, his resurrection made it certain that they will rise. It is a great and universal truth that God will bring all from their graves who “sleep in Jesus;” or that they will all rise. The apostle does not, therefore, refer so much to the time when this will occur—meaning that it will happen when the Lord Jesus returns—as to the fact that there is an established connection between him and his people, which makes it certain that if they die united with him by faith, they will be as certainly brought from the grave as he was. If, however, it means, as Prof. Bush (Anastasis, p. 266, 267) supposes, that they will be brought with him from heaven, or will accompany him down, it does not prove that there must have been a previous resurrection, for the full force of the language would be met by the supposition that their spirits had ascended to heaven, and would be brought with him to be united to their bodies when raised. If this be the correct interpretation, then there is probably an allusion to such passages as the following, representing the coming of the Lord accompanied by his saints. “The Lord my God shall the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent them which are asleep.

16 For ^a the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout,

^a Matt. 24. 30, 31.

come, and all the saints with thee." Zech. xiv. 5. "And Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied of these, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh, with ten thousand of his saints." Jude 14. "Who," says Pres. Dwight (Serm., p. 164), "are those whom God will bring with him at this time? Certainly not the bodies of his saints. . . . The only answer is, he will bring with him 'the spirits of just men made perfect.'" [¶]

15. For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord. By the command, or inspired teaching of the Lord. Prof. Bush (Anastasis, p. 265) supposes that the apostle here alludes to what the Saviour says in Matthew xxiv. 30, 31. "And they shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven," etc. It is possible that Paul may have designed a general allusion to all that the Lord had said about his coming, but there can not have been an exclusive reference to that passage, for in what he says here there are several circumstances mentioned to which the Saviour in Matthew does not allude. The probability, therefore, is, that Paul means that the Lord Jesus had made a special communication to him on the subject. [¶] That we which are alive. See this fully explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 51. From this expression, it would seem that some of the Thessalonians supposed that Paul meant to teach that he himself, and many of the living, would survive until the coming of the Lord Jesus, and, of course, that that event was near at hand. That this was not his meaning, however, he is at special pains to show in 2 Thess. ii. 1-10. [¶] And remain unto the coming of the Lord. Those Christians who will then be alive. [¶] Shall not prevent them which are asleep. Shall not precede; anticipate; go before. The word prevent with us is now commonly used in the sense of hinder, but this is never its meaning in the Scriptures. The word, in the time of the translators of the Bible, was used in its primitive and proper sense (prevenio), meaning to precede, or anticipate. Job iii. 12, "Why did the knees prevent me?" That is, why did they anticipate me, so that I did not perish. Psal. lxxxix. 8, "Let thy tender mercies speedily prevent us;" that is, go before us in danger. Psal. cxix. 147, "I prevented the dawning of the morning, and cried;" that is, I anticipated it, or I prayed before the morning dawned. Matt. xvii. 25, "Jesus prevented him, saying;" that is, Jesus anticipated him; he commenced speaking before Peter had told him what he had said. Compare Psalms xvii. 13; lix. 10; lxxxviii. 13; xcv. 2; 2 Sam. xxii. 6, 19; Job xxx. 27; xli. 11. The meaning here is, that they who would be alive at the coming of the Lord Jesus, would not be "changed" and received up into glory before those who were in their graves were raised up. The object seems to be to correct an opinion which prevailed among the Thessalonians that they who should survive to the coming of the Lord Jesus would have great advantages over those who had died. What they supposed those advantages would be—whether the privilege of seeing him come, or that they would be raised to higher honors in heaven, or that they who had died would not rise at all—does not appear, nor is the origin of this sentiment known. It is clear, however, that it was producing an increase of their sorrow on the death of their pious friends, and hence it was very important to correct the error. The apostle, therefore, states that no such disadvantage could follow, for the matter of fact was, that the dead would rise first.

16. For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven. See Notes on Acts i. 11. [¶] With a shout. The word here used (κέλευσμα), does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It properly means a cry of excitement, or of urging on; an outcry, clamor, or shout, as of sailors at the oar, Luc., Catapl., 19; of soldiers rushing to battle, Thuc., iii., 14; of a multitude of people, Diod. Sic., iii., 15; of a huntsman to his dogs, Xen., Ven., vi., 20. It does not mean here that the Lord would himself make such a shout, but that hewould be attended with it; that is, with a multitude who would lift up the voice like that of an army rushing to the conflict. [¶] With the voice of the archangel. The word archangel occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, except in Jude 9, where it is applied to with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God: and the dead in Christ shall rise first: ^a

^a Rev. 20. 5, 6.

Michael. It properly means a chief angel; one who is first, or who is over others—ἀρχων. The word is not found in the Septuagint, and the only archangel, therefore, which is named in the Scriptures, is Michael. Jude 9. Comp. Rev. xii. 7. Seven angels, however, are referred to in the Scriptures as having an eminence above others, and these are commonly regarded as archangels. Rev. viii. 2. "And I saw the seven angels which stood before God." One of these is supposed to be referred to in the Book of Tobit, xii. 15, "I am Raphael, one of the seven holy angels, which present the prayers of the saints, and which go in and out before the glory of the Holy One." The names of three only of the seven are mentioned in the Jewish writings: Michael, the patron of the Jewish nation, Dan. x. 13, 21; xii. 1. Gabriel, Dan. viii. 16; ix. 21. Comp. Luke i. 19, 26. Raphael, Tobit iii. 17; v. 4; viii. 2; ix. 1, 5; xii. 15. The Book of Enoch adds that of Uriel, p. 187, 190, 191, 193. Michael is mentioned as one "of the chief princes," Daniel x. 13; and as "the great prince," Dan. xii. 1. Comp. Notes on Eph. i. 21, and see an article by Prof. Stuart in the Bibliotheca Sacra, No. 1, on Angelology. It seems evident from the Scriptures, that there is one or more among the angels to whom the name archangel properly belongs. This view is in accordance with the doctrine in the Scriptures that the heavenly beings are divided into ranks and orders, for, if so, it is not unreasonable to suppose that there should be one or more to whom the most exalted rank appertains. Comp. Rev. xii. 7. Whether there is more than one to whom this name appropriately belongs, it is impossible now to determine, and is not material. The word here (in Greek) is without the article, and the phrase might be rendered, "with the voice of an archangel." The Syriac renders it, "with the voice of the prince of the angels." On an occasion so august and momentous as that of the coming of the final Judge of all mankind, the resurrection of the dead, and the solemn transactions before the tribunal of the Son of God deciding

17 Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in ^b the clouds, to the destiny of countless millions forever, it will not be inappropriate that the highest among the heavenly hosts should be present and take an important part in the solemnities of the day. It is not quite certain what is meant here by "the voice of the archangel," or for what purpose that voice will be heard. It can not be that it will be to raise the dead—for that will be by the "voice of the Son of God" (John v. 28, 29), and it seems most probable that the meaning is, that this will be a part of the loud shout or cry which will be made by the descending hosts of heaven, or the voice of the archangel, for the purpose of summoning the world to the bar of judgment. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 31. ¶ And with the trump of God. The trump which God appoints to be sounded on that solemn occasion. It does not mean that it will be sounded by God himself. See Notes on Matt. xxiv. 31. ¶ And the dead in Christ. Christians. ¶ Shall rise first. That is, before the living shall be changed. A doctrine similar to this was held by the Jews. "Resch Lachisch said, Those who die in the land of Israel, shall rise first in the days of the Messiah." See Wetstein, in loc. It is implied in all this description, that the interval between their resurrection and the change which will occur to the living, will be brief, or that the one will rapidly succeed the other. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 23, 51, 52.

^b Rev. 11. 12.

17. Then we which are alive. Those who will then be alive. See ver. 15. The word here rendered then (ἐπειτα), does not necessarily mean that this would occur immediately. It properly marks succession in time, and means afterward, next, next in the order of events, Luke xvi. 7; Gal. i. 21; James iv. 14. There may be a considerable interval between the resurrection of the pious and the time when the living shall be caught up to meet the Lord, for the change is to take place in them which will fit them to ascend with those who have been raised. The meaning is, that after the dead are raised, or the next thing in order, they and the living will ascend to meet the Lord. The proper meaning of the word, however, meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be ^a with the Lord.

^a John 14. 3.

denotes a succession so close as to exclude the idea of a long interval in which other important transactions would occur, such an interval, for example, as would be involved in a long personal reign of the Redeemer on earth. The word demands this interpretation—that the next thing in order after the resurrection of the righteous, will be their being caught up with the living, with an appropriate change, into the air—though, as has been remarked, it will admit of the supposition of such a brief, momentary interval (ἐν ἀτόμῳ, ἐν ῥίπῃ ὀφθαλμοῦ, 1 Cor. xv. 51, 52) as will be necessary to prepare for it. ¶ Shall be caught up. The word here used implies that there will be the application of external force or power by which this will be done. It will not be by any power of ascending which they will themselves have, or by any tendency of their raised or changed bodies to ascend of their own accord, or even by any effort of their own will, but by a power applied to them which will cause them to rise. Comp. the use of the word ἀρπάζω in Matthew xi. 12, “the violent take it by force;” xiii. 19, “then cometh the wicked one and snatcheth away,” John vi. 15, “that they would come and take him by force,” x. 12, “the wolf catcheth them;” Acts viii. 39, “the Spirit of the Lord caught away Philip;” 2 Cor. xii. 2, “such a one caught up to the third heaven;” also, John xii. 28, 29; Acts xxiii. 10; Jude 23; Rev. xii. 5. The verb does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. In all these instances there is the idea of foreign force or violence effecting that which is done. What force or power is to be applied in causing the living and the dead to ascend, is not expressed. Whether it is to be by the ministry of angels, or by the direct power of the Son of God, is not intimated, though the latter seems to be most probable. The word should not be construed, however, as implying that there will be any reluctance on the part of the saints to appear before the Saviour, but merely with reference to the physical fact that power will be necessary to elevate them to meet him in the air. Will their bodies then be such that they will have the power of locomotion at will from place to place? ¶ In the clouds. Gr., “in clouds”—ἐν νεφέλαις—without the article. This may mean “in clouds;” that is, in such numbers, and in such grouping, as to resemble clouds. So it is rendered by Macknight, Koppe, Rosenmüller, Bush (Anasta., p. 266), and others. The absence of the article here would rather seem to demand this interpretation. Still, however, the other interpretation may be true, that it means that they will be caught up into the region of the clouds, or to the clouds which will accompany the Lord Jesus on his return to our world. Matt. xxiv. 30; xxvi. 64; Mark xvi. 26; xiv. 62; Rev. i. 7. Comp. Dan. vii. 13. In whichever sense it is understood, the expression is one of great sublimity, and the scene will be immensely grand. Some doctrine of this kind was held by the ancient Jews. Thus Rabbi Nathan (Midras Tillin, xlvi. 13) says, “What has been done before will be done again. As he led the Israelites from Egypt in the clouds of heaven, so will he do to them in the future time.” ¶ To meet the Lord in the air. In the regions of the atmosphere—above the earth. It would seem from this that the Lord Jesus, in his coming, would not descend to the earth, but would remain at a distance from it in the air, where the great transactions of the judgment will occur. It is, indeed, nowhere said that the transactions of the judgment will occur upon the earth. The world would not be spacious enough to contain all the assembled living and dead, and hence the throne of judgment will be fixed in the ample space above it. ¶ And so shall we ever be with the Lord. This does not mean that they will always remain with him in the air—for their final home will be heaven—and after the trial they will accompany him to the realms of glory. Matthew xxv. 34, “Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom,” etc. The time during which they will remain with him “in the air,” is nowhere mentioned in the Bible. It will be as long as will be necessary for the purposes of judging a world, and deciding the eternal doom of every individual “according to the deeds done in the body.” There is no reason to suppose that this will be accomplished in a single day of twenty-four hours; but it is impossible to form any conjecture of the period which will be occupied.

18 Wherefore ¹ comfort one another with these words.

¹ or, exhort.

18. Wherefore comfort one another. Marg., exhort. The word comfort probably best expresses the meaning. They were to bring these glorious truths and these bright prospects before their minds in order to alleviate the sorrows of bereavement. The topics of consolation are these: first, that those who had died in the faith would not always lie in the grave; second, that when they rose they would not occupy an inferior condition because they were cut off before the coming of the Lord; and, third, that all Christians, living and dead, would be received to heaven and dwell forever with the Lord. ¶ With these words. That is, with these truths.

REMARKS.

1. This passage (ver. 13-18) contains a truth which is to be found in no heathen classic writer, and nowhere else except in the teachings of the New Testament. For the elevated and glorious view which it gives of future scenes pertaining to our world, and for all its inestimable consolations, we are wholly indebted to the Christian religion. Reason, unassisted by revelation, never dared to conjecture that such scenes would occur; if it had, it would have had no arguments on which the conjecture could be supported.

2. The death of the Christian is a calm slumber. Ver. 13. It is not annihilation; it is not the extinction of hope. It is like gentle repose when we lie down at night, and when we hope to awake again in the morning; it is like the quiet, sweet sleep of the infant. Why, then, should the Christian be afraid to die? Is he afraid to close his eyes in sleep? Why dread the night—the stillness of death? Is he afraid of the darkness, the silence, the chilliness of the midnight hour, when his senses are locked in repose? Why should death to him appear so terrible? Is the slumbering of an infant an object of terror?

3. There are magnificent scenes before us. There is no description any where which is more sublime than that in the close of this chapter. Great events are brought together here, any one of which is more grand than all the pomp of courts, and all the sublimity of battle, and all the grandeur of a triumphal civic procession. The glory of the descending Judge of all mankind; the attending retinue of angels, and of the spirits of the dead; the loud shout of the descending host; the clangor of the archangel's trumpet; the bursting of graves and the coming forth of the millions there entombed; the rapid, sudden, glorious change on the millions of living men; the consternation of the wicked; the ascent of the innumerable host to the regions of the air, and the solemn process of the judgment there—what has ever occurred like these events in this world? And how strange it is that the thoughts of men are not turned away from the trifles—the show—the shadow—the glitter—the empty pageantry here—to these bright and glorious realities!

4. In those scenes we shall all be personally interested. If we do not survive till they occur, yet we shall have an important part to act in them. We shall hear the archangel's trump; we shall be summoned before the descending Judge. In these scenes we shall mingle, not as careless spectators, but as those whose eternal doom is there to be determined, and with all the intensity of emotion derived from the fact that the Son of God will descend to judge us, and to pronounce our final doom! Can we be too much concerned to be prepared for the solemnities of that day?

5. We have, in the passage before us, an interesting view of the order in which these great events will occur. There will be (1.) the descent of the Judge with the attending hosts of heaven; (2.) the raising up of the righteous dead; (3.) the change which the living will undergo (comp. 1 Cor. xv. 52); (4.) the ascent to meet the Lord in the air; and (5.) the return with him to glory. What place in this series of wonders will be assigned for the resurrection of the wicked is not mentioned here. The object of the apostle did not lead him to advert to that, since his purpose was to comfort afflicted Christians by the assurance that their pious friends would rise again, and would suffer no disadvantage by the fact that they had died before the coming of the Redeemer. From John v. 28, 29, however, it seems most probable that they will be raised at the same time with the righteous, and will ascend with them to the place of judgment in the air.

6. There is no intimation here of a "personal reign" of Christ upon the earth. Indeed, there is no evidence that he will return to the earth at all. All that appears is, that he will descend "from heaven" to the regions of "the air," and there will summon the living and the dead to his bar. But there is no intimation that he will set up a visible kingdom then on earth, to continue a thousand or more years; that the Jews will be re-collected in their own land; that a magnificent city or temple will be built there; or that the saints will reign personally with the Lord Jesus over the nations. There are two considerations in view of this passage, which, to my mind, are conclusive proof that all this is romance—splendid and magnificent indeed as an Arabian tale—but wholly unknown to the apostle Paul. The one is, that if this were to occur, it is inconceivable that there should have been no allusion to it here. It would have been such a magnificent conception of the design of the Second Advent, that it could not have failed to have been adverted to in a description like this. The other consideration is, that such a view would have been exactly in point to meet the object of the apostle here. What could have been more appropriate in comforting the Thessalonian Christians respecting those who had died in the faith than to describe the gorgeous scenes of the "personal reign" of Christ, and the important part which the risen saints were to play in that great drama? How can it be accounted for that the apostle did not advert to it? Would a believer in the "personal reign" now be likely to omit so material a point in a description of the scenes which are to occur at the "Second Advent?"

7. The saints will be forever with the Lord. They will dwell with him in his own eternal home. John xiv. 3. This expression comprises the sum of all their anticipated felicity and glory. To be with Christ will be, in itself, the perfection of bliss; for it will be a security that they will sin no more, that they will suffer no more, and that they will be shielded from danger and death. They will have realized the object of their long, fond desire—that of seeing their Saviour; they will have suffered the last pang, encountered the last temptation, and escaped forever from the dominion of death. What a glorious prospect is this! Assuredly we should be willing to endure pain, privation, and contempt here for the brief period of our earthly pilgrimage, if we may come at last to a world of eternal rest. What trifles are all earthly sorrows compared with the glories of an endless life with our God and Saviour!

8. It is possible that even the prospect of the judgment-day should be a source of consolation. Ver. 18. To most men it is justly an object of dread—for all that they have to fear is concentrated on the issues of that day. But why should a Christian fear it? In the descending Judge he will hail his Redeemer and friend; and just in proportion as he has true religion here, will be the certainty of his acquittal there. Nay, his feelings in anticipation of the judgment may be more than the mere absence of fear and alarm. It may be to him the source of positive joy. It will be the day of his deliverance from death and the grave. It will confirm to him all his long-cherished hopes. It will put the seal of approbation on his life spent in endeavoring to do the will of God. It will reunite him to his dear friends who have died in the Lord. It will admit him to a full and glorious view of that Saviour whom "having not seen he has loved;" and it will make him the companion of angels and of God. If there is any thing, therefore, which ought to cheer and sustain our hearts in the sorrows and bereavements of this life, it is the anticipation of the glorious scenes connected with the Second Advent of our Lord, and the prospect of standing before him clothed in the robes of salvation, surrounded by all those whom we have loved who have died in the faith, and with the innumerable company of the redeemed of all ages and lands.

CHAPTER V.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter consists of two parts. I. The continuation of the subject of the coming of the Lord. Ver. 1-11; and, II. Various practical exhortations.

In the first part, the apostle states (1.) that it was well understood by the Thessalonians that the coming of the

CHAPTER V.

BUT of the times and the seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you.

Lord would be sudden, and at an unexpected moment, vs. 1, 2; (2.) he refers to the effect of his coming on the wicked and the righteous—that it would be attended with the sudden and inevitable destruction of the former, ver. 3, but that the result of his coming would be far different on the righteous. Ver. 4-11. The prospect of his coming was fitted to make them watchful and sober; ver. 6-8; and his advent would be attended with their certain salvation. Ver. 9-11.

In the second part of the chapter he exhorts them to show proper respect for their spiritual teachers and rulers, vs. 12, 13; to endeavor to restrain the unruly, to support the feeble, and to evince toward all the spirit of patience and forbearance, ver. 14; to manifest a meek and benevolent manner of life, ver. 15; to rejoice always, ver. 16; to pray constantly, ver. 17; to render thanks to God in every situation, ver. 18; to cherish the influences of the Holy Ghost on their souls, ver. 19; to show respect for all the divine prophetic communications, ver. 20; to consider and examine carefully every thing submitted to them for belief; to adhere steadfastly to all that was good and true, ver. 21; and to avoid the very appearance of evil, ver. 22. The epistle closes with a fervent prayer that God would sanctify them entirely; with an earnest entreaty that they would pray for him; with a command that the epistle should be read to all the churches, and with the benediction. Ver. 22-28.

1. But of the times and the seasons. See Notes on Acts i. 7. The reference here is to the coming of the Lord Jesus, and to the various events connected with his advent. See the close of ch. iv. ¶ Ye have no need that I write unto you. That is, they had received all the information on the particular point to which he refers which it was necessary they should have. He seems to refer particularly to the suddenness of his coming. It is evident from this, as well as from other parts of this epistle, that this had been, from some cause, a prominent topic which he had

2 For yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh^a as a thief in the night.

3 For when they shall say, Peace

^a Luke 12. 39, 40. 2 Pet. 3. 10. Rev. 16. 15.

dwelt on when he was with them. See Notes on ch. i. 10.

2. For yourselves know perfectly. Accurately. It is only once used by Paul elsewhere. Eph. v. 15. "See that ye walk circumspectly."—Ellicott. That is, they had been fully taught this. There could be no doubt in their minds respecting it. ¶ The day of the Lord so cometh. Of the Lord Jesus—for so the word "Lord" in the New Testament commonly means. See Notes on Acts i. 24. The "day of the Lord" means that day in which he will be manifested, or in which he will be the prominent object in view of the assembled universe. ¶ As a thief in the night. Suddenly and unexpectedly, as a robber breaks into a dwelling. A thief comes without giving any warning, or any indications of his approach. He not only gives none, but he is careful that none shall be given. It is a point with him that, if possible, the man whose house he is about to rob shall have no means of ascertaining his approach until he comes suddenly upon him. Compare Notes on Matt. xxiv. 37-43; Luke xii. 39, 40. In this way the Lord Jesus will return to judgment; and this proves that all attempts to determine the day, the year, or the century when he will come, must be fallacious. He intends that his coming to this world shall be sudden and unexpected, "like that of a thief in the night;" that there shall be no such indications of his approach that it will not be sudden and unexpected; and that no warning of it shall be given so that men may know the time of his appearing. If this be not the point of the comparison in expressions like this, what is it? Is there any thing else in which his coming will resemble that of a thief? And if this be the true point of comparison, how can it be true that men can ascertain when that is to occur? Assuredly, if they can, his coming will not be like that of a thief. Comp. Notes on Acts i. 7.

3. For when they shall say, Peace and safety. That is, when the wicked shall say this, for the apostle here refers only to those on whom "sudden destruction" will come. Compare Notes on and safety; then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child; and they shall not escape.

a Jer. 13. 21.

Matt. xxiv. 36-42; 2 Pet. iii. 3, 4. It is clear from this, (1.) that when the Lord Jesus shall come, the world will not all be converted. There will be some to be "destroyed." How large this proportion will be it is impossible now to ascertain. This supposition, however, is not inconsistent with the belief that there will be a general prevalence of the Gospel before that period. (2.) The impenitent and wicked world will be sunk in carnal security when he comes. They will regard themselves as safe. They will see no danger. They will give no heed to warning. They will be unprepared for his advent. So it has always been. It seems to be a universal truth in regard to all the visitations of God to wicked men for punishment, that he comes upon them at a time when they are not expecting him, and that they have no faith in the predictions of his advent. So it was in the time of the flood; so it was in the destruction of Sodom, Gomorrah, Jerusalem, and Babylon; so it is when the sinner dies; and so it will be when the Lord Jesus shall return to judge the world. One of the most remarkable facts about the history of man is that he takes no warning from his Maker; that he never changes his plans, or feels any emotion, because his Creator "thunders damnation along his path," and threatens to destroy him in hell. ¶ Sudden destruction. Destruction that was unforeseen (αἰφνιδίως) or unexpected. The word here rendered sudden occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, except in Luke xxi. 34, "Lest that day come upon you unawares." The word rendered destruction—ἄλεστρος—occurs in the New Testament only here and in 1 Cor. v. 5; 2 Thess. i. 9; 1 Tim. vi. 9; in all of which places it is correctly translated destruction. The word destruction is familiar to us. It means, properly, demolition; pulling down; the annihilation of the form of any thing, or that form of parts which constitutes it what it is; as the destruction of grass by eating; of a forest by cutting down the trees; of life by murder; of the soul by consigning it to misery. It does not necessarily 4 But ye,^b brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief.

5 Ye are all the children of light,

b Eph. 5. 8. 1 John 2. 8.

mean annihilation—for a house or city is not annihilated which is pulled down or burnt; a forest is not annihilated which is cut down; and a man is not annihilated whose character and happiness are destroyed. In regard to the destruction here referred to, we may remark, (1.) that it will be after the return of the Lord Jesus to judgment, and hence it is not true that the wicked experience all the punishment which they ever will in the present life; (2.) that it seems fairly implied that the destruction which they will then suffer will not be annihilation, but will be connected with conscious existence; and (3.) that they will then be cut off from life, and hope, and salvation. How can the solemn affirmation that they will be "destroyed suddenly" be consistent with the belief that all men will be saved? Is it the same thing to be destroyed and to be saved? Does the Lord Jesus, when he speaks of the salvation of his people, say that he comes to destroy them? ¶ As travail upon a woman with child. This expression is sometimes used to denote great consternation, as in Psa. xlviii. 6; Jer. vi. 24; Micah iv. 9, 10; great pain, as Isa. liii. 11; Jer. iv. 31; John xvi. 21; or the suddenness with which any thing occurs, Jer. xiii. 21. It seems here to be used to denote two things; first, that the coming of the Lord to a wicked world will be sudden; and, secondly, that it will be an event of the most distressing and overwhelming nature. ¶ And they shall not escape. That is, they will not escape the destruction, or punishment. They calculated on impunity, but now the time will have come when none of these refuges will avail them, and no rocks will cover them from the "wrath to come."

4. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness, that that day should overtake you as a thief. The allusion here is to the manner in which a thief or robber accomplishes his purpose. He comes in the night, when men are asleep. So, says the apostle, the Lord will come to the wicked. They are like those who are asleep when the thief comes upon them. But it is not so with and the children of the day: we are not of the night, nor of darkness.

a Matt. 25. 5. Rom. 13. 12, 13.

Christians. They are, in relation to the coming of the day of the Lord, as men are who are awake when the robber comes. They could see his approach, and could prepare for it, so that it would not take them by surprise.

5. Ye are all the children of light. All who are Christians. The phrase "children of light" is a Hebraism, meaning that they were the enlightened children of God. ¶ And the children of the day. Who live as if light always shone round about them. The meaning is, that in reference to the coming of the Lord they are as men would be in reference to the coming of a thief, if there were no night and no necessity of slumber. They would always be wakeful and active, and it would be impossible to come upon them by surprise. Christians are always to be wakeful and vigilant; they are so to expect the coming of the Redeemer that he will not find them off their guard, and will not come upon them by surprise.

6. Therefore let us not sleep, as do others. As the wicked world does. Comp. Notes on Matt. xxv. 5. ¶ But let us watch. That is, for the coming of the Lord. Let us regard it as an event which is certainly to occur, and which may occur at any moment. See Notes on Matt. xxv. 13. ¶ And be sober. The word here used (νιψω) is rendered sober in 1 Thess. v. 6, 8; 1 Pet. i. 13; v. 8; and watch in 2 Tim. iv. 5, and 1 Pet. iv. 7. It does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It properly means to be temperate or abstinent, especially in respect to wine. Joseph., Jewish Wars, 5. 5. 7. Xenophon, Cyr., 7. 5. 20. Then it is used in a more general sense, as meaning to be sober-minded, watchful, circumspect. In this passage there is an allusion to the fact that persons not only sleep in the night, but that they are frequently drunken in the night also. The idea is, that the Lord Jesus, when he comes, will find the wicked sunk not only in carnal security, but in sinful indulgences, and that those who are Christians ought not only to be awake and to watch as in the day-time, but to be temperate. They ought to be like persons engaged in the sober, honest, and appropriate employments of the day, and not like those who waste their days in sleep and their nights in revelry. A man who expects soon to see the Son of God coming to judgment, ought to be a sober man. No one would wish to be summoned from a scene of dissipation to his bar. And who would wish to be called there from the ball-room; from the theatre; from the scene of brilliant worldly amusement? The most gay votary of the world; the most accomplished, and flattered, and joyous patron of the ball-room; the most richly-dressed and admired daughter of vanity, would tremble at the thought of being summoned from those brilliant halls where pleasure is now found to the judgment-bar. They would wish to have at least a little time that they might prepare for so solemn a scene. But if so, as this event may at any moment occur, why should they not be habitually sober-minded? Why should they not aim to be always in that state of mind which they know would be appropriate to meet him? Especially should Christians live with such vigilance and soberness as to be always prepared to meet the Son of God. What Christian can think it appropriate for him to go up to meet his Saviour from the theatre, the ball-room, or the brilliant worldly party? A Christian ought always so to live that the coming of the Son of God in the clouds of heaven would not excite the least alarm.

6 Therefore^a let us not sleep, as do others; but let us watch and be sober.^b

b 1 Pet. 5. 8.

7. For they that sleep, sleep in the night. Night is the time for sleep. The day is the time for action, and in the light of day men should be employed. Night and sleep are made for each other, and so are the day and active employment. The meaning here is, that it is in accordance with the character of those who are of the night, that is, sinners, to be sunk in stupidity and carnal security, as if they were asleep; but for the children of the day, that is, for Christians, it is no more appropriate to be inactive than it is for men to sleep in the day-time. "It is not to be wondered at that wicked men are negligent and are given to vice, for they are ignorant of the will of God.

7 For they that sleep, sleep in the night; and they that be drunken, are drunken in the night.

8 But let us, who are of the day, be sober, putting on the breast-a Isa. 59. 17.

Negligence in doing right, and corrupt morals, usually accompany ignorance."—Rosenmüller. ¶ And they that be drunken, are drunken in the night. The night is devoted by them to revelry and dissipation. It is in accordance with the usual custom in all lands and times, that the night is the usual season for riot and revelry. The leisure, the darkness, the security from observation, and the freedom from the usual toils and cares of life, have caused those hours usually to be selected for indulgence in intemperate eating and drinking. This was probably more particularly the case among the ancients than with us, and, much as drunkenness abounded, it was much more rare to see a man intoxicated in the day-time than it is now. To be drunk then in the day-time was regarded as the greatest disgrace. See Polyb., Exc. Leg., 8, and Apul., viii., as quoted by Wetstein. Comp. Notes on Acts ii. 15; Isa. v. 11. The object of the apostle here is, to exhort Christians to be sober and temperate, and the meaning is, that it is as disgraceful for them to indulge in habits of revelry as for a man to be drunk in the day-time. The propriety of this exhortation, addressed to Christians, is based on the fact that intoxication was hardly regarded as a crime, and, surrounded as they were with those who freely indulged in drinking to excess, they were then, as they are now, exposed to the danger of disgracing their religion. The actions of Christians ought always to be such that they may be performed in open day and in the view of all the world. Other men seek the cover of the night to perform their deeds; the Christian should do nothing which may not be done under the full blaze of day.

8. But let us, who are of the day, be sober. Temperate, as men usually are in the day-time. ¶ Putting on the breastplate of faith and love. This is a favorite comparison of the apostle Paul. See it explained at length in the Notes on Eph. vi. 14. ¶ And for an helmet, the hope of salvation. See Notes on Eph. vi. 17.

plate ^a of faith and love; and for an helmet, the hope of salvation.

9 For God hath not appointed ^b us to wrath, but to obtain salvation by our Lord Jesus Christ.

b Rom. 9. 22. 1 Pet. 2. 8.

9. For God hath not appointed us to wrath. This is designed as an encouragement to effort to secure salvation. The wish of God is to save us, and therefore we should watch and be sober; for the same reason we should take to ourselves the whole of the Christian armor, and strive for victory: If he had appointed us to wrath, effort would have been vain, for we could do nothing but yield to our inevitable destiny. The hope of a final triumph should animate us in our efforts, and cheer us in our struggles with our foes. How much does the hope of victory animate the soldier in battle! When morally certain of success, how his arm is nerved! When every thing conspires to favor him, and when he feels that God fights for him, and intends to give him the victory, how his heart exults, and how strong is he in battle! Hence, it was a great point among the ancients, when about entering into battle, to secure evidence that the gods favored them, and meant to give them the victory. For this purpose they offered sacrifices, and consulted the flight of birds and the entrails of animals; and for this purpose armies were accompanied by soothsayers and priests, to interpret any signs which might occur that would be favorable, or to propitiate the favor of the gods by sacrifice. See Homer, passim; Arrian's Expedition of Alexander, and the classic writers generally. The apostle alludes to something of this kind here. He would excite us to maintain the Christian warfare manfully, by the assurance that God intends that we shall be triumphant. This we are to learn by no conjectures of soothsayers; by no observation of the flight of birds; by no sacrifice which we can make to propitiate his favor, but by the unerring assurance of his holy word. If we are Christians, we know that he intends our salvation, and that victory will be ours; if we are willing to become Christians, we know that the Almighty arm will be stretched out to aid us, and that the "gates of hell" can not prevent it.

10 Who died for us, that, whether ^a we wake or sleep, we should live together with him.

11 Wherefore ¹ comfort yourselves

^a Rom. 14. 8, 9. ² Cor. 5. 15.

10. Who died for us. That is, to redeem us. He designed by his death that we should ultimately live with him; and this effect of his death could be secured only as it was an atoning sacrifice. ¶ Whether we wake or sleep. Whether we are found among the living or the dead when he comes. The object here is to show that the one class would have no advantage over the other. This was designed to calm their minds in their trials, and to correct an error which seems to have prevailed in the belief that those who were found alive when he should return would have some priority over those who were dead. See Notes on ch. iv. 13-18. ¶ Should live together with him. See Notes on John iv. 3. The word rendered "together" (ἅμα), is not to be regarded as connected with the phrase "with him"—as meaning that he and they would be "together," but it refers to those who "wake and those who sleep"—those who are alive and those who are dead—meaning that they would be together, or would be with the Lord at the same time; there would be no priority or precedence.—Rosenmüller.

11. Wherefore comfort yourselves. See Notes on ch. iv. 18. ¶ And edify one another. Strive to build up each other, or to establish each other in the faith by these truths. See Notes on Rom. xiv. 19. Comp. 1 Cor. iii. 9. 16; 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 20. ¶ Even as also ye do. Continue to do it. Let nothing occur to disturb the harmony and consolation which you have been accustomed to derive from these high and holy doctrines.

12. And we beseech you, brethren, to know them which labor among you. Who they were is not mentioned. It is evident, however, that the Church was not left without appointed persons to minister to it when its founders should be away. We know that there were presbyters ordained over the Church at Ephesus, and over the Churches in Crete (Acts xx. 17; Titus i. 5), and that there were bishops and deacons at Philippi (Phil. i. 1), and there is every reason to believe that similar officers would be appointed in together, and edify one another, even as also ye do.

12 And we beseech you, brethren, to know them ^b which labour

¹ or, exhort.

^b Heb. 13. 7, 17.

every newly-organized Church. The word "know" seems to mean that they were not to make themselves strangers to them, to be cold and distant toward them, to be ignorant of their wants, or to be indifferent to them. While a people are not obtrusively to intermeddle with the business of a minister, any more than they are with that of any other man, yet there are things in regard to him with which they should be acquainted. They should seek to be personally acquainted with him, and make him their confidant and counselor in their spiritual troubles. They should seek his friendship, and endeavor to maintain all proper intercourse with him. They should not regard him as a distant man, or as a stranger among them. They should so far understand his circumstances as to know what is requisite to make him comfortable, and should be on such terms that they may readily and cheerfully furnish what he needs. And they are to "know" or regard him as their spiritual teacher and ruler; not to be strangers to the place where he preaches the word of life, and not to listen to his admonitions and reproofs as those of a stranger, but as those of a pastor and friend. ¶ Which labor among you. There is no reason to suppose, as many have done, that the apostle here refers to different classes of ministers. He rather refers to different parts of the work which the same ministers perform. The first is, that they "labor"—that is, evidently, in preaching the Gospel. For the use of the word, see John iv. 38, where it occurs twice, and 1 Cor. xv. 10; xvi. 16. The word is one which properly expresses wearisome toil, and implies that the office of preaching is one that demands constant industry. ¶ And are over you in the Lord. That is, by the appointment of the Lord, or under his direction. They are not absolute sovereigns, but are themselves subject to one who is over them—the Lord Jesus. On the word here rendered "are over you" (πρωϊσταμένους), see Notes on Rom. xii. 8, where it is translated ruleth. ¶ And admonish you.

among you, and are over you in the Lord, and admonish you;

13 And to esteem them very highly in love for their work's sake.

a Mark 9. 50.

1 or, beseech.

The word here used (νουθετίω) is rendered admonish, and admonished, in Rom. xv. 14; Col. iii. 16; 1 Thess. v. 12; 2 Thess. iii. 15; and warn, and warning, 1 Cor. iv. 14; Col. i. 28; 1 Thess. v. 14. It does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means, to put in mind; then to warn, entreat, exhort. It is a part of the duty of a minister to put his people in mind of the truth; to warn them of danger; to exhort them to duty; to admonish them if they go astray.

13. And to esteem them very highly in love. To cherish for them an affectionate regard. The office of a minister of religion demands respect. They who are faithful in that office have a claim on the kind regards of their fellow-men. The very nature of the office requires them to do good to others, and there is no benefactor who should be treated with more affectionate regard than he who endeavors to save us from ruin; to impart to us the consolations of the Gospel in affliction; and to bring us and our families to heaven. ¶ For their work's sake. Not primarily as a personal matter, or on their own account, but on account of the work in which they are engaged. It is a work whose only tendency, when rightly performed, is to do good. It injures no man, but contributes to the happiness of all. It promotes intelligence, industry, order, neatness, economy, temperance, chastity, charity, and kindness in this world, and leads to eternal blessedness in the world to come. A man who sincerely devotes himself to such a work has a claim on the kind regards of his fellow-men. ¶ And be at peace among yourselves. See Notes on Mark ix. 50; Rom. xii. 18; xiv. 19.

14. Now we exhort you, brethren, Marg., beseech. This earnest entreaty is evidently addressed to the whole Church, and not to the ministers of the Gospel only. The duties here enjoined are such as appertain to all Christians in their appropriate spheres, and should not be left to be performed by ministers only. ¶ Warn them. The same word which in ver. 12 is rendered admonish. It is the duty of every Church

And be^a at peace among yourselves.

14 Now we¹ exhort you, brethren, warn them that are² unruly,^b

2 or, disorderly.

b Heb. 12. 12.

member, as well as of the ministers of the Gospel, affectionately to admonish those whom they know to be living contrary to the requirements of the Gospel. One reason why there is so little piety in the Church, and why so many professors of religion go astray, is that the great mass of Church members feel no responsibility on this subject. They suppose that it is the duty only of the officers of the Church to admonish an erring brother, and hence many become careless, and cold, and worldly, and no one utters a kind word to them to recall them to a holy walk with God. ¶ That are unruly. Marg., disorderly. The word here used (ἀτακτος), is one which properly means not keeping the ranks, as of soldiers; and then irregular, confused, neglectful of duty, disorderly. The reference here is to the members of the Church who were irregular in their Christian walk. It is not difficult, in an army, when soldiers get out of the line, or leave their places in the ranks, or are thrown into confusion, to see that little can be accomplished in such a state of irregularity and confusion. As little difficult is it, when the members of a Church are out of their places, to see that little can be accomplished in such a state. Many a Church is like an army where half the soldiers are out of the line; where there is entire insubordination in the ranks, and where not half of them could be depended on for efficient service in a battle. Indeed, an army would accomplish little if as large a proportion of it were irregular, idle, remiss, or pursuing their own aims to the neglect of the public interest, as there are members of the Church who can never be depended on in accomplishing the great purpose for which it was organized. ¶ Comfort the feeble-minded. The dispirited; the disheartened; the downcast. To do this is also the duty of each Church member. There are almost always those who are in this condition, and it is not easy to appreciate the value of a kind word to one in that state. Christians are assailed by temptation; in their efforts to do good they are opposed, and become disheartened;

comfort the feeble-minded, support the weak, ^a be patient ^b toward all men.

15 See that none render ^c evil for evil unto any man; but ever fol-

^a Rom. 15. 1.

^b Eph. 4. 2.

^c Prov. 20. 22, 24, 29. Matt. 5. 39, 44. 1 Pet. 3. 9.

in their contests with their spiritual foes they are almost overcome; in their troubles they walk through shades of night, and find no comfort. In such circumstances, how consoling is the voice of a friend! How comforting is it to feel that they are not alone! How supporting to be addressed by one who has had the same conflicts, and has triumphed! Every Christian—especially every one who has been long in the service of his Master—has a fund of experience which is the property of the Church, and which may be of incalculable value to those who are struggling now amid many embarrassments along the Christian way. He who has that experience should help a weak and sinking brother; he should make his own experience of the efficacy of religion in his trials and conflicts, the means of sustaining others in their struggles. There is no one who would not reach out his hand to save a child borne down a rapid stream; yet how often do experienced and strong men in the Christian faith pass by those who are struggling in the “deep waters, where the proud waves have come over their souls,” with no attempt to rescue them—without even a word of sympathy and kindness! ¶ Support the weak. See Notes on Rom. xv. 1. ¶ Be patient toward all men. See the Greek word here used explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. 4. Compare Eph. iv. 2; Gal. v. 22; Col. iii. 12.

15. See that none render evil for evil. See Notes on Matt. v. 39-44. The meaning here is, that we are not to take vengeance. Comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 17-19. This law is positive, and is universally binding. The moment we feel ourselves acting from a desire to “return evil for evil,” that moment we are acting wrong. It may be right to defend our lives and the lives of our friends; to seek the protection of the law for our persons, reputation, or property; to repel the assaults of calumniators and slanderers; but in no case should the motive be to do them wrong for the evil which they have low ^d that which is good, both among yourselves, and to all men.

16 Rejoice ^e evermore.

17 Pray ^f without ceasing.

18 In ^g every thing give thanks:

^d Gal. 6. 10.

^e Phil. 4. 4.

^f Rom. 12. 12.

^g Eph. 5. 20.

done us. ¶ But ever follow that which is good. Which is benevolent, kind, just, generous. See Notes on Rom. xii. 20, 21. ¶ Both among yourselves, and to all men. The phrase “to all men,” seems to have been added to avoid the possibility of misconception. Some might possibly suppose that this was a good rule to be observed toward those of their own number, but that a greater latitude in avenging injuries might be allowable toward their enemies out of the Church. The apostle, therefore, says that the rule is universal. It relates to the heathen, to infidels, to skeptics, and to persecutors, as well as to the members of the Church. To every man we are to do good as we are able—no matter what they do to us. This is the rule which God himself observes toward the evil and unthankful (see Notes on Matt. v. 45), and is one of the original and beautiful laws of our holy religion. See Ellicott, in loc.

16. Rejoice evermore. See Notes on Phil. iii. 1; iv. 4.

17. Pray without ceasing. See Notes on Rom. xii. 12. The direction here may be fairly construed as meaning (1.) that we are to be regular and constant in the observance of the stated seasons of prayer. We are to observe the duty of prayer in the closet, in the family, and in the assembly convened to call on the name of the Lord. We are not to allow this duty to be interrupted or intermitted by any trifling cause. We are so to act that it may be said we pray regularly in the closet, in the family, and at the usual seasons when the Church to which we belong meets for prayer. (2.) We are to maintain an uninterrupted and constant spirit of prayer. We are to be in such a frame of mind as to be ready to pray publicly if requested, and when alone, to improve any moment of leisure which we may have when we feel ourselves strongly inclined to pray. That Christian is in a bad state of mind who has suffered himself, by attention to worldly cares, or by light conversation, or by gayety and vanity, or by for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you.

a Eph. 4. 30.

reading an improper book, or by eating or drinking too much, or by late hours at night among the thoughtless and the vain, to be brought into such a condition that he can not engage in prayer with proper feelings. There has been evil done to the soul if it is not prepared for communion with God at all times, and if it would not find pleasure in approaching his holy throne.

18. In every thing give thanks. See Notes on Eph. v. 20; Phil. iv. 6. We can always find something to be thankful for, and there may be reasons why we ought to be thankful even for those dispensations which appear dark and frowning. Chrysostom, once the archbishop of Constantinople, and then driven into exile, persecuted, and despised, died far away from the splendors of the capital, and from the comforts and honors which he had enjoyed, uttering his favorite motto—δόξα τῷ Θεῷ πάντων ἕνεκεν—glory to God for all things. Bibliotheca Sacra, i., 700. So we may praise God for every thing that happens to us under his government. A man owes a debt of obligation to him for any thing which will recall him from his wanderings, and which will prepare him for heaven. Are there any dealings of God toward men which do not contemplate such an end? Is a man ever made to drink the cup of affliction when no drop of mercy is intermingled with it? Is he ever visited with calamity which does not in some way contemplate his own temporal or eternal good? Could we see all, we should see that we are never placed in circumstances in which there is not much for which we should thank God. And when, in his dealings, a cloud seems to cover his face, let us remember the good things without number which we have received, and especially remember that we are in the world of redeeming love and have the hope of heaven, and we shall find enough for which to be thankful. ¶ For this is the will of God. That is, that you should be grateful. This is what God is pleased to require you to perform in the name of the Lord Jesus. In the gift of that Saviour he has laid the foundation for such a claim, and he requires that you should not be un-

19 Quench ^a not the Spirit.

20 Despise ^b not prophesyings.

b 1 Cor. 14. 1, 39.

mindful of the obligation. See Notes on Heb. xiii. 15.

19. Quench not the Spirit. This language is taken from the way of putting out a fire, and the sense is, we are not to extinguish the influences of the Holy Spirit in our hearts. Possibly there may be an allusion here to fire on an altar, which was to be kept constantly burning. This fire may have been regarded as emblematic of devotion, and as denoting that that devotion was never to become extinct. The Holy Spirit is the source of true devotion, and hence the enkindlings of piety in the heart, by the Spirit, are never to be quenched. Fire may be put out by pouring on water; or by covering it with any incombustible substance; or by neglecting to supply fuel. If it is to be made to burn, it must be nourished with proper care and attention. The Holy Spirit, in his influences on the soul, is here compared with fire that might be made to burn more intensely, or that might be extinguished. In a similar manner the apostle gives this direction to Timothy, "I put thee in remembrance that thou stir up (ἀναζωπυρέειν, kindle up, cause to burn) the gift of God." 2 Tim. i. 6. Any thing that will tend to damp the ardor of our piety, to chill our feelings, to render us cold and lifeless in the service of God, may be regarded as "quenching the Spirit." Neglect of cultivating the Christian graces, or of prayer, or of the Bible, or of the sanctuary, or of a careful watchfulness over the heart, will do it. "Worldliness, vanity, levity, ambition, pride, the love of dress, or indulgence in an improper train of thought, will do it. It is a great rule in religion that all the piety which there is in the soul is the fair result of culture. A man has no more religion than he intends to have; he has no graces of the Spirit which he does not seek; he has no deadness to the world which is not the object of his sincere desire, and which he does not aim to possess. Any one, if he will, may make elevated attainments in the divine life; or he may, if he will, make his religion merely a religion of form, and know little of its power and its consolations.

20. Despise not prophesyings. On the 21 Prove ^a all things; hold ^b fast that which is good.

^a 1 John 4. 1.

^b Phil. 4. 8.

22 Abstain ^b from all appearance of evil.

^c Isa. 33. 15.

subject of prophesying in the early Christian Church, see Notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 1, seq. The reference here seems to be to preaching. They were not to undervalue this in comparison with other things. It is possible that in Thessalonica, as appears to have been the case subsequently in Corinth (compare 1 Cor. xiv. 19), there were those who regarded the power of working miracles, or of speaking in unknown tongues, as a much more eminent endowment than that of stating the truths of religion in language easily understood. It would not be unnatural that comparisons should be made between these two classes of endowments, much to the disadvantage of the latter; and hence there may have been a necessity for this solemn caution not to disregard or despise the ability to make known divine truth in intelligible language. A similar counsel may not be inapplicable to us now. The office of setting forth the truth of God is to be the permanent office in the Church; that of speaking foreign languages by miraculous endowment was to be temporary. But the office of addressing mankind on the great duties of religion, and of publishing salvation, is to be God's great ordinance for converting the world. It should not be despised, and no man commends his own wisdom who contemns it; for (1.) it is God's appointment—the means which he has designated for saving men. (2.) It has too much to entitle it to respect to make it proper to despise or contemn it. There is nothing else that has so much power over mankind as the preaching of the Gospel; there is no other institution of heaven or earth, among men, that is destined to exert so wide and permanent an influence as the Christian ministry. (3.) It is an influence which is wholly good. No man is made the poorer, or the less respectable, or more miserable in life or in death, by following the counsels of a minister of Christ when he makes known the Gospel. (4.) He who despises it contemns that which is designed to promote his own welfare, and which is indispensable for his own salvation. It remains yet to be shown that any man has promoted his own happiness, or the welfare of his family, by treating with contempt the instructions of the Christian ministry.

21. Prove all things. Subject every thing submitted to you to be believed to the proper test. The word here used (δοκιμάζετε) is one that is properly applicable to metals, referring to the art of the assayer, by which the true nature and value of the metal is tested. See Notes on 1 Cor. iii. 13. This trial was usually made by fire. The meaning here is that they were carefully to examine every thing proposed for their belief. They were not to receive it on trust; to take it on assertion; to believe it because it was urged with vehemence, zeal, or plausibility. In the various opinions and doctrines which were submitted to them for adoption, they were to apply the appropriate tests from reason and the Word of God, and what they found to be true they were to embrace; what was false they were to reject. Christianity does not require men to disregard their reason, or to be credulous. It does not expect them to believe any thing because others say it is so. It does not make it a duty to receive as undoubted truth all that synods and councils have decreed; or all that is advanced by the ministers of religion. It is, more than any other form of religion, the friend of free inquiry, and would lead men every where to understand the reason of the opinions which they entertain. Comp. Acts xvii. 11, 12; 1 Pet. iii. 15. ¶ Hold fast that which is good. Which is in accordance with reason and the Word of God; which is adapted to promote the salvation of the soul and the welfare of society. This is just as much a duty as it is to "prove all things." A man who has applied the proper tests, and has found out what is truth, is bound to embrace it, and to hold it fast. He is not at liberty to throw it away, as if it were valueless; or to treat truth and falsehood alike. It is a duty which he owes to himself and to God to adhere to it firmly, and to suffer the loss of all things rather than to abandon it. There are few more important rules in the New Testament than the one in this passage. It shows what is the true nature of Christianity, and it is a

23 And the very God of peace sanctify you wholly: and I pray

God your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless ^a rule whose practical value can not but be felt constantly in our lives. Other religions require their votaries to receive every thing upon trust; Christianity asks us to examine every thing. Error, superstition, bigotry, and fanaticism attempt to repress free discussion, by saying that there are certain things which are too sacred in their nature, or which have been too long held, or which are sanctioned by too many great and holy names, to permit their being subjected to the scrutiny of common eyes, or to be handled by common hands. In opposition to all this, Christianity requires us to examine every thing—no matter by whom held; by what councils ordained; by what venerableness of antiquity sustained; or by what sacredness it may be invested. We are to receive no opinion until we are convinced that it is true; we are to be subjected to no pains or penalties for not believing what we do not perceive to be true; we are to be prohibited from examining no opinion which our teachers regard as true, and which they seek to make us believe. No popular current in favor of any doctrine; no influence which name, and rank, and learning can give it, is to commend it to us as certainly worthy of our belief. By whomsoever held, we are to examine it freely before we embrace it; but when we are convinced that it is true, it is to be held, no matter what current of popular opinion or prejudice may be against it; no matter what ridicule may be poured upon it; no matter though the belief of it may require us to die a martyr's death.

^a 1 Cor. i. 8, 9.

22. Abstain from all appearance of evil. Not only from evil itself, but from that which seems to be wrong. There are many things which are known to be wrong. They are positively forbidden by the laws of heaven, and the world concurs in the sentiment that they are wicked. But there are also many things about which there may be some reasonable doubt. It is not quite easy to determine in the case what is right or wrong. The subject has not been fully examined, or the question of its morality may be so difficult to settle, that the mind may be nearly or quite balanced in regard to

it. There are many things which, in themselves, may not appear to us to be positively wrong, but which are so considered by large and respectable portions of the community; and for us to do those things would be regarded as inconsistent and improper. There are many things, also, in respect to which there is great variety of sentiment among mankind—where one portion would regard them as proper, and another as improper. There are things, also, where, whatever may be our motive, we may be certain that our conduct will be regarded as improper. A great variety of subjects, such as those pertaining to dress, amusements, the opera, the ball-room, games of chance and hazard, and various practices in the transaction of business, come under this general class; which, though on the supposition that they can not be proved to be in themselves positively wrong or forbidden, have much the "appearance" of evil, and will be so interpreted by others. The safe and proper rule is to lean always to the side of virtue. In these instances it may be certain that there will be no sin committed by abstaining; there may be by indulgence. No command of God, or of propriety, will be violated if we decline complying with these customs; but, on the other hand, we may wound the cause of religion by yielding to what possibly is a mere temptation. No one ever does injury or wrong by abstaining from the pleasures of the ball-room, from the theatre, or from a glass of wine; who can indulge in them without, in the view of large and respectable portions of the community, doing that which has the "appearance," at least, of "evil?"

23. And the very God of peace. The God who gives peace or happiness. Comp. Notes on Rom. i. 7. ¶ Sanctify you. See Notes on John xvii. 17. ¶ Wholly. ὁλοτελείς. In every part; completely. It is always proper to pray that God would make his people entirely holy. A prayer for perfect sanctification, however, should not be adduced as proof that it is in fact attained in the present life. ¶ Your whole spirit and soul and body. There is an allusion here, doubtless, to the popular opinion in regard to what constitutes man. We have a body; we have animal life and instincts in common with the inferior creation; and we have also a rational and immortal soul. This distinction is one that appears to the mass of men to be true, and the apostle speaks of it in the language commonly employed by mankind. At the same time, no one can demonstrate that it is not founded in truth. The body we see, and there can be no difference of opinion in regard to its existence. The soul (ἡ ψυχή—psyche), the vital principle, the animal life, or the seat of the senses, desires, affections, appetites, we have in common with other animals. It appertains to the nature of the animal creation, though more perfect in some animals than in others, but is in all distinct from the soul, or "spirit," as the seat of conscience, and as capable of moral agency. See the use of the word in Matt. xxii. 37; Mark xii. 30; Luke x. 27; xii. 20; Acts xx. 10; Heb. iv. 12; Rev. viii. 9, et al. In the Pythagorean and Platonic philosophy this was distinguished from the higher rational nature (ὁ νοῦς, τὸ πνεῦμα) as this last belonged to man alone. This psyche (ψυχή), "soul," or life, it is commonly supposed, becomes extinct at death. It is so connected with the bodily organization that when the tissues of the animal frame cease their functions this ceases also. This was not, however, the opinion of the ancient Greeks. Homer uses the term to denote that which leaves the body with the breath, as escaping from the ἔρκος ὀδοντῶν—the fence or sept of the teeth—and as also passing out through a wound. This ψυχή—psyche—continued to exist in Hades, and was supposed to have a definite form there, but could not be seized by the hands. Ody., ii., 207. See Passow, 2. Comp. Prof. Bush, Anasta., p. 72, 73. Though this word, however, denotes the vital principle or the animal life, in man it may be connected with morals—just as the body may be—for it is a part of himself in his present organization, and, whatever may be true in regard to the inferior creation, it is his duty to bring his whole nature under law, or so to control it that it may not be an occasion of sin. Hence the apostle prays that the "whole body and soul"—or animal nature—may be made holy. This distinction between the animal life and the mind of man (the anima and animus, the ψυχή and the πνεῦμα), was often made by the ancient philosophers. See Plato, Timæ., p. 1048, A; Nemesius, de Nat. Hom., 1 Cit. Glyca, p. 70; Lucretius, iii., 94, 116, 131; Juvenal, xv., 146; Cicero, de Divinat., 129, as quoted by Wetstein, in loc. A similar view prevailed also among the Jews. Rabbi Isaac (Zohar in Lev., fol. 29, 2) says, "Worthy are the righteous in this world and the world to come, for lo, they are all holy; their body is holy, their soul is holy, their spirit and their breath is holy." Whether the apostle meant to sanction this view, or merely to speak in common and popular language, may indeed be questioned, but there seems to be a foundation for the language in the nature of man. The word here rendered spirit (πνεῦμα), refers to the intellectual or higher nature of man; that which is the seat of reason, of conscience, and of responsibility. This is immortal. It has no necessary connection with the body, as animal life or the psyche (ψυχή) has, and consequently will be unaffected by death. It is this which distinguishes man from the brute creation; this which allies him with the higher intelligences around the throne of God. ¶ Be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The apostle does not intimate here that either the body or the vital principle will be admitted to heaven, or will be found in a future state of being, whatever may be the truth on that subject. The prayer is, that they might be entirely holy, and be kept from transgression, until the Lord Jesus should come; that is, until he should come either to remove them by death, or to wind up the affairs of this lower world. See Notes on ch. i. 10. By his praying that the "body and the soul"—meaning here the animal nature, the seat of the affections and passions—might be kept holy, there is reference to the fact that, connected as they are with a rational and accountable soul, they may be the occasion of sin. The same natural propensities; the same excitability of passion; the same affections which in a brute would involve no responsibility, and have nothing moral in their character, may be a very different thing in man, who is placed under a moral law, and who is bound to restrain and govern all his passions by unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ.

24 Faithful is he ^a that calleth you, who also will do it.

25 Brethren, pray for us.

a 1 Cor. 10. 13. 2 Thess. 3. 3.

a reference to that law, and to his higher nature. For a cur to snarl and growl; for a lion to roar and rage; for a hyena to be fierce and untamable; for a serpent to hiss and bite, and for the ostrich to leave her eggs without concern (Job xxxix. 14), involves no blame, no guilt for them, for they are not accountable; but for man to evince the same temper and the same want of affection, does involve guilt, for he has a higher nature, and all these things should be subject to the law which God has imposed on him as a moral and accountable being. As these things may, therefore, in man be the occasion of sin, and ought to be subdued, there was a fitness in praying that they might be "preserved blameless" to the coming of the Saviour. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 27.

24. Faithful is he that calleth you. That is, your sanctification after all depends on him, and as he has begun a work of grace in your hearts, you may depend on his faithfulness to complete it. See Notes on ch. iv. 3; Phil. i. 6; 1 Cor. i. 9.

25. Brethren, pray for us. A request which the apostle often makes. See Notes on Heb. xiii. 18. He was a man of like passions as others; he was exposed to the same temptations; he was engaged in an arduous work; he was often called to meet with opposition, and he peculiarly needed the prayers of the people of God. A minister, surrounded as he is by temptations, is in great danger if he has not the prayers of his people. Without those prayers he will be likely to accomplish little in the cause of his Master. His own devotions in the sanctuary will be formal and frigid, and the word which he preaches will be likely to come from a cold and heavy heart, and to fall also on cold and heavy hearts. There is no way in which a people can better advance the cause of piety in their own hearts than by praying much for their minister.

26. Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 16.

26 Greet all the brethren with an holy kiss.

27 I¹ charge you by the Lord, that this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren.

1 or, adjure.

27. I charge you by the Lord. Marg., adjure. Gr., "I put you under oath by the Lord"—ὀρκίζω ὑμᾶς τὸν κύριον. It is equivalent to binding persons by an oath. See Notes on Matt. xxvi. 63. Comp. Gen. xxi. 23, 24; xxiv. 3. 37; 1. 25. ¶ That this epistle be read unto all the holy brethren. To all the Church. Comp. Notes on Col. iv. 16. The meaning is, that the epistle was to be read to the whole Church on some occasion on which it was assembled together. It was not merely designed for the individual or individuals into whose hands it might happen to fall; but as it contained matters of common interest, and was designed for the whole body of believers at Thessalonica, the apostle gives a solemn charge that it should not be suppressed or kept from them. Injunctions of this kind, occurring in the epistles, look as if the apostles regarded themselves as under the influence of inspiration, and as having authority to give infallible instructions to the churches.

28. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, etc. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 20.

In regard to the subscription at the close of the epistle, purporting that it was written from Athens, see the Intro., § 3. These subscriptions are of no authority, and the one here, like several others, is probably wrong.

From the solemn charge in ver. 27. of this chapter, that "this epistle should be read to all the holy brethren," that is, to the Church at large, we may infer that it is in accordance with the will of God that all Christians should have free access to the Holy Scriptures. What was the particular reason for this injunction in Thessalonica is not known, but it is possible that an opinion had begun to prevail even then that the Scriptures were designed to be kept in the hands of the ministers of religion, and that their common perusal was to be prohibited. At all events, whether this opinion prevailed then or not, it is not unreasonable to suppose that the Holy Spirit, by whom this epistle was 28 The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you. Amen.

The first epistle unto the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

dictated, foresaw that the time would come when this doctrine would be defended by cardinals, and popes, and councils; and that it would be one of the means by which the monstrous fabric of the Papacy would be sustained and perpetuated. It is worthy of remark, also, that the apostle Paul, in his epistles to the Thessalonians, has dwelt more fully on the fact that the great apostasy would occur under the Papacy, and on the characteristics of that grand usurpation over the rights of men, than he has any where else in his epistle. See Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 3-12. It is no improbable supposition that with reference to that, and to counteract one of its leading dogmas, his mind was supernaturally directed to give this solemn injunction, that the contents of the epistle which he had written should be communicated without reserve to all the Christian brethren in Thessalonica. In view of this injunction, therefore, at the close of this epistle, we may remark, (1.) that it is a subject of express divine command that the people should have access to the Holy Scriptures. So important was this considered, that it was deemed necessary to enjoin those who should receive the word of God, under the solemnities of an oath, and by all the force of apostolic authority, to communicate what they had received to others. (2.) This injunction had reference to all the members of the Church, for they were "all" to be made acquainted with the Word of God. The command is, indeed, that it be "read" to them, but by parity of reasoning it would follow that it was to be in their hands; that it was to be accessible to them; that it was in no manner to be withheld from them. Probably many of them could not read, but in some way the contents of revelation were to be made known to them—and not by preaching only, but by reading the words of inspiration. No part was to be kept back; nor were they to be denied such access to it all that they could fully understand it; nor was it to be insisted on that there should be an authorized expounder of it. It was presumed that all the members of the Church were qualified to understand what had been written to them, and to profit by it. It follows, therefore, (3), that there is great iniquity in all those decisions and laws which are designed to keep the Scriptures from the common people. This is true (a) in reference to the Papal communion, and to all the ordinances there which prohibit the free circulation of the sacred volume among the people; (b) it is true of all those laws in slaveholding communities which prohibit slaves from being taught to read the Scriptures; and (c) it is true of all the opinions and dogmas which prevail in any community where the right of "private judgment" is denied, and where free access to the volume of inspiration is forbidden. The richest blessing of heaven to mankind is the Bible; and there is no book ever written so admirably adapted to the common mind, and so fitted to elevate the sunken, the ignorant, and the degraded. There is no more decided enemy of the progress of the human race in intelligence, purity, and freedom, than he who prevents the free circulation of this holy volume; and there is no sincerer friend of the race than he who "causes it to be read by all," and who contributes to make it accessible to all the families and all the inhabitants of the world.

NOTES,

EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,

ON THE

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

BY ALBERT BARNES.

INTRODUCTION.

FOR a general view of Thessalonica, of the establishment of the Church there, of the character of the Church, and of the design for which the apostle addressed these letters to it, see the Introduction to the First Epistle.

This epistle appears to have been written soon after the first, and from the same place—Corinth. See Introd. to the First Epistle, § 3. The proof of this, indeed, is not certain, for there are no marks of time or place in the epistle by which these points can be determined. The probability rests upon these grounds: (1.) That the same persons—Paul, Silas, and Timothy—are associated in both epistles, and are mentioned as being together at the time when they were written (1 Thess. i. 1; 2 Thess. i. 1); but as there is reason to believe that they did not continue long together, it is to be presumed that one epistle was written soon after the other. (2.) Paul refers to an error which had grown up, apparently in consequence of a misunderstanding of his first epistle (ch. ii. 1, 2); an error which he regarded as of great magnitude, and which was producing very unhappy results (ch. ii. 2; iii. 10, 11); and it was natural that he should hasten to correct that error as soon as possible. (3.) There is some probability, as Benson has remarked, that the epistle was written before the troubles came upon him at Corinth under the administration of Gallio (Acts xviii. 12–16), and yet that he saw that the storm was approaching, and hints at it in ch. ii. 2: “And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men.” If so, this epistle was written but a few months at farthest after the first. We may regard the evidence, therefore, as sufficiently clear, that this epistle was written at Corinth some time during the latter part of A.D. 53, or the beginning of A.D. 54.

There is little doubt as to the design for which it was written. Either by a false interpretation of his former epistle, or by an epistle forged in his name and sent to them, the opinion had become prevalent in the Church at Thessalonica that the Saviour was about to appear, and that the end of the world was at hand. See ch. ii. 2. Comp. Hug’s Introd., § 94, and Stuart’s Notes on the same, p. 741, seq. To correct this impression was the leading design of this epistle. Some had become alarmed, and were suffering from unnecessary apprehension (ch. ii. 2); and some, under the natural belief that labor then was useless, and that property was of no value, had given up all attention to their worldly concerns (ch. iii. 10, 11); and it was of the utmost importance that the error should be corrected. This was done in this second epistle, and in doing it, Paul, as was usual, intermingled several other topics of importance, adapted to the condition of those to whom he wrote.

This epistle, though short, has great permanent value, and is indispensable to a proper understanding of the great doctrine of the Second Advent of the Redeemer. It was written, indeed, to correct an error in a single church, and at a particular time, but history has shown that there is a tendency to that same error in all ages, and that there was need of some permanent inspired statement to check it. It was inferred from the First Epistle of Paul to the Thessalonians, that he meant to teach that the day of judgment was not far off. Had not this second epistle been written to correct that false interpretation, and to show what was his belief, it would have been charged on him that he was mistaken, and then the inference would have been naturally made that all the prophecies respecting that event are false. The distance between this and absolute infidelity, it is easy to see, is very small. Paul, by his prompt explanation, arrested that danger, and showed that he intended to teach no such doctrine as had been drawn from his first letter to them. This epistle, therefore, is of importance to show (1.) that the apostle did not believe, or mean to teach, that the end of the world was near. There are many expressions, indeed, which, like those in First Thessalonians, would seem to imply that the apostle held that belief, but the explanation of an inspired apostle of his own sentiments at the time settled that matter. No one has now a right to charge that belief on him, or on others who then used the same language. No one can now pretend that they held the opinion that the end of the world was near. There is no stronger language on that subject in any of their writings than that which occurs in the first epistle to the Thessalonians, and Paul in the second epistle expressly says that he held no such opinion, and meant to teach no such thing. (2.) This epistle is a standing rebuke of the kind of interpretation which attempts to determine the time when the Saviour will come, and of all those theories which represent "the day of Christ as at hand." The declarations in the Scriptures are positive and abundant that the time of his appearing is not made known to mortals (see Notes on Acts i. 7), and it is not possible now to make out a stronger argument to prove that that time is near, than could have been made out from the first epistle to the Thessalonians; and yet Paul deemed it necessary to write them a second letter, expressly to show them that the interpretation which they put on his language was unauthorized. The truth is, that it was not the design of God to make known to men the exact time when the Lord Jesus will return to judgment; and all attempts, since the time of Paul, to settle that have failed, and all will doubtless continue to fail, as they always have done.

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE THESSALONIANS.

CHAPTER I.

PAUL, and Silvanus, and Timotheus, unto ^a the Church of the Thessalonians in God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

2 Grace ^b unto you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

3 We are bound to thank God always for you, brethren, as it is ^a 1 Thess. i. 1, etc.

^b 1 Cor. i. 3.

CHAPTER I.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter comprises the following points:

(1.) The salutation. Vs. 1, 2.

(2.) An expression of thanks for the progress which the Thessalonians had made in piety, and especially for the manner in which they had been enabled to bear their trials. Vs. 3, 4.

(3.) An assurance that the manner in which they had been enabled to bear their trials was an evidence that they were true Christians. Ver. 5.

(4.) A declaration that those who had persecuted them, and all others who were wicked, would be punished when the Lord Jesus should come, and that when this occurred the righteous would appear in glory and honor. Ver. 6-10.

(5.) The expression of an earnest desire that they might be prepared for the solemn scenes of that day. Vs. 11, 12.

1, 2. Paul, and Silvanus, and Timotheus. See Notes on 1 Thess. i. 1.

3. We are bound to thank God always for you. See Notes on 1 Thess. i. 2. ¶ As it is meet. As it is fit or proper.

¶ Because that your faith groweth exceedingly. It would seem probable from this that Paul had heard from them since his first epistle was written. He had doubtless received intelligence of the error which prevailed among them respecting his views of the coming of meet, because that your faith groweth exceedingly, and the charity of every one of you all toward each other aboundeth:

4 So that we ourselves glory ^c in you in the churches of God, for your patience and faith in all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure;^d

5 Which is ^e a manifest token of the Lord Jesus, and of the progress which the truth was making, at the same time. ¶ And the charity of every one of you all toward each other. Your mutual love.

^c 2 Cor. 9. 2. 1 Thess. 2. 19, 20. ^d James 5, 11.
^e 1 Phil. 1. 28.

4. So that we ourselves glory in you in the churches of God. That is, we mention your example to other churches, and glory in it, as an evidence of what the Gospel is fitted to do. See Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 19, 20. Comp. Notes on 2 Cor. ix. 2. ¶ For your patience. Your patient endurance of trials. ¶ And faith. Fidelity, or constancy. You have shown unwavering confidence in God in your afflictions. ¶ In all your persecutions and tribulations that ye endure. See Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 14; iv. 13. It would seem from this that the persecutions and trials to which the apostle referred in his first epistle were still continued.

5. Which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God. The word "which" is supplied by our translators, and there may be some doubt to what the apostle has reference as being "a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God." The general sense seems to be, that the fact that they were thus persecuted was an evidence that there would be a future judgment, when the righteous who were persecuted would be rewarded, and the wicked who persecuted them would be punished. The manner in which they bore their trials was an indication also of what the result would be in regard to them. Their patience the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffer.^a a 1 Thess. 2. 14. Heb. 10. 23, 32.

and faith under persecutions were constantly showing that they would "be counted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which they were called to suffer." It is evident that a relative must be supplied here, as our translators have done, but there has been a difference of view as to what it refers. Some suppose that it is to "patience," others to "persecutions and tribulations," and others to the whole sentence preceding. The latter is probably the true construction, and the sense is, that the endurance of affliction in a proper manner by the righteous is a proof that there will be a righteous judgment of God in the last day. (1.) It is evidence that there will be a future judgment—since the righteous here suffer so much, and the wicked triumph so much. (2.) These things are now permitted in order that the character may be developed, and that the reason of the sentence in the last day may be seen. (3.) The manner in which these afflictions are borne is an evidence—an indication (ἐνδειγμα) of what the results of the judgment will be. The word rendered "manifest token" (ἐνδειγμα), occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means an indication, token, proof—any thing that shows or points out how a thing is, or is to be (from ἐνδεικνυμι, to show, to point out). The meaning here is, therefore, that the course of events referred to—the persecutions which they endured, and the manner in which they were borne—pointed out the fact, or furnished a proof that there would be a righteous judgment, and also afforded an indication of what the result of that judgment would be. We may, in general, learn what will be the issues of the judgment in the case of an individual from the manner in which he bears trials. ¶ Of the righteous judgment of God. That there will be a just judgment hereafter. The crimes of the wicked who go unpunished on the earth, and the sufferings of the good who are unavenged, are a demonstration that there will be a judgment, when all these inequalities will be adjusted. ¶ That ye may be counted worthy. As the result of your affliction, that you may be fitted for the kingdom of God. This does not mean that Christians will merit heaven by their sufferings, but that they may show that they have such a character that there is a fitness or propriety that they should be admitted there. They may evince such patience and resignation, such deadness to the world and such holy lives, as to show that they are not disqualified to enter into that kingdom where the redeemed are to dwell. No true Christian will ever feel that he is worthy of heaven on his own account, or that he has any claim to eternal life, yet he may have evidence that he has the characteristics to which God has promised salvation, and is fitted to dwell in heaven. ¶ Of the Kingdom of God. In heaven. See Notes on Matt. iii. 2. ¶ For which ye also suffer. The sufferings which you now endure are because you are professed heirs of the kingdom; that is, you are persecuted because you are Christians. See 1 Thess. ii. 14.

6. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you. The sense is, "There will be a future judgment, because it is right and proper that God should punish those who now persecute you. It is not right that they should go unpunished, and triumph forever. It is not an arbitrary thing—a thing which is indifferent—a thing which may or may not be done; it is a just and proper thing that the wicked should be punished." The doctrine is, that the future punishment of the wicked is just and proper; and that, being just and proper, it will be inflicted. Many suppose that there would be no justice in the eternal punishment of the wicked; that the threatening of that punishment is wholly arbitrary; that it might easily be dispensed with, and that because it is unjust it will not be inflicted, and need not be dreaded. But that it is just and proper, a very slight degree of reflection must show. For (1.) it is inconceivable that God should threaten such punishment unless it were just. How can it be reconciled with his perfections that he can hold up before mankind the assurance that any of them will be punished forever, unless it be right that it should be so? Can we believe that he deliberately threatens what is

6 Seeing ^a it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you;

7 And to you who are troubled,

^a Rev. 6. 10.

^b Rev. 14. 13.

^c 1 Thess. 4. 16. Jude 14. 1 the angels of his power.

^b rest with us; when the Lord Jesus ^c shall be revealed from heaven with ¹ his mighty angels.

8 In ^d flaming fire, ² taking ^e vengeance

^d Heb. 10. 27. 2 Pet. 3. 7.

² or, yielding.

^e Deut. 32. 41, 43.

wrong, or that, in the face of the universe, he publicly declares his intention to do what is wrong? (2.) Men themselves believe that it is just that the wicked should be punished. They are constantly making laws, and affixing penalties to them, and executing them, under the belief that it is right. Can they regard it as wrong in God to do the same thing? Can that be wrong in him which is right in themselves? (3.) If it is right to punish wickedness here, it is not wrong to punish it in the future world. There is nothing in the two places which can change the nature of what is done. If it is right for God to visit the sinner here with the tokens of his displeasure, there is nothing which can make it wrong to visit him in like manner in the future world. Why should that be wrong in another world which is right and proper in this? (4.) It will be a righteous thing for God to punish the wicked in a future state, for they are not always punished here as they deserve. No one can seriously maintain that there is an equal distribution of rewards and punishments on the earth. Many a man goes to the grave having received no adequate punishment for his crimes. Many a murderer, pirate, robber, traitor, plunderer of nations under the name of a conqueror, thus dies. No one can doubt that it would be a "just" thing to punish them here if they could be arrested. Why should it be any the less "just" to punish them when they enter another world? In like manner, many a man lives a life of profligacy; or is an open scoffer; or casts off the government of God; or is a seducer of innocence; and yet lives in the midst of wealth, and goes down in calmness and peace to the grave. Psa. lxxiii. 3-5; Job xxi. 23-33. Why is it not "just" that such a one should be punished in the future world. Compare Psa. lxxiii. 16-20. But, if it is right that God should punish the wicked in the future world, it will be done. For (1.) there is nothing to hinder him from doing it. He has all power, and has all necessary means of inflicting punishment entirely at his disposal. (2.) It would not be right not to do it. It is not right for a magistrate to treat the righteous and the wicked alike, or to show that he has as much regard for the one as for the other. (3.) It can not be believed that God has uttered a threatening which he never meant to execute, or that he will appear before the universe as having held up before men the terror of the most awful punishment which could be inflicted, but which he never intended to carry into effect. Who could have confidence in such a Being? Who could know what to believe when he makes the most solemn declarations? (4.) The Judge of all the earth "will do right;" and if it is right to declare that "the wicked shall be turned into hell," it will not be wrong to inflict the sentence. And if, on the whole, it is right that the sinner should be punished, it will be done. ¶ Them that trouble you. Those who persecute you. See 1 Thess. ii. 14.

7. And to you who are troubled. That is, "it will be a righteous thing for God to give to you who are persecuted rest in the last day." As it will be right and proper to punish the wicked, so it will be right to reward the good. It will not, however, be in precisely the same sense. The wicked will deserve all that they will suffer, but it can not be said that the righteous will deserve the reward which they will receive. That reward will be right and proper, because (1.) there is a fitness that they who are the friends of God should be treated as such, or it is proper that he should show himself to be their friend; and (2.) because in this life this is not always clearly done. They are often less prospered, and less happy in their outward circumstances, than the wicked. There is, therefore, a propriety that in the future state God should manifest himself as their friend, and show to assembled worlds that he is not indifferent to character, or that wickedness does not deserve his smiles, and piety incur his frown. At the same time, however, it will be owing wholly to ance on them that know ^a not God, and ^b that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ:

9 Who shall be punished with

^a Psa. 79. 6. Zep. 1. 6.

^b Rom. 2. 8.

everlasting destruction ^c from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory ^d of his power;

10 When he shall come to be ^e

^c Phil. 3. 19. 2 Pet. 3. 7.

^d Isa. 2. 19.

^e Matt. 25. 31.

his grace that any are ever admitted to heaven. ¶ Rest. The future happiness of believers is often represented under the image of rest. It is rest like that of the weary laborer after his day of toil; rest, like that of the soldier after the hardships of a long and perilous march; rest, like the calm repose of one who has been racked with pain. See Notes on Heb. iv. 9. The word rest here (ἀνεσις) means a letting loose, a remission, a relaxation; and hence composure, quiet. 2 Cor. ii. 12; vii. 5. ¶ With us. That is, with Paul, Silas, and Timothy. Ver. 1. It would increase the comfort of the Thessalonians derived from the anticipation of the future world, to reflect that they would meet their religious teachers and friends there. It always augments the anticipated joy of heaven to reflect that we are to share its blessedness with others. There is no envy among those who anticipate heaven; there will be none there. They who desire heaven at all, desire that it may be shared in the highest degree by all who are dear to them. ¶ When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven. Shall appear; shall come from heaven. See Notes on 1 Thess. iv. 6. ¶ With his mighty angels. Marg., angels of his power. So the Greek. The sense is, that angels of exalted rank and glory will accompany him. See Notes on 1 Thess. iv. 16. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 31; xxv. 31.

8. In flaming fire. This is a circumstance which is not noticed in the account of his appearing in the parallel place in 1 Thess. iv. 16. The object of the apostle here seems to be to represent him as coming amid vivid flashes of lightning. He is commonly described as coming in clouds, and to that common description there is here added the image of incessant lightnings, as if the whole heavens were illuminated with a continued blaze. ¶ Taking vengeance. Marg., yielding. Gr., giving. The word vengeance is used in the sense of punishment, for there can not be in God what literally corresponds with the passion of revenge. Comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 19. ¶ On them that know not God. On all who are strangers to him; that is, who are living in heathenish darkness, or who, having heard of him, have no practical acquaintance with him. ¶ And that obey not the Gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ. Who do not embrace it, and practice its precepts in their lives. Comp. Notes on Rom. ii. 9.

9. Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction. See Notes on Matt. xxv. 41-46. The word which is here rendered destruction (ἄλεθρον), is different from that which occurs in Matt. xxv. 46, and which is there rendered punishment—κόλασις. The word—ἄλεθρον—olethron—occurs only here and in 1 Cor. v. 5; 1 Thess. v. 3; 1 Tim. vi. 9; in each of which places it is rendered destruction. It does not denote annihilation, but is used in the same sense in which we use the word when we say that a thing is destroyed. Thus health is destroyed when it fails; property is destroyed when it is burned or sunk in the ocean; a limb is destroyed that is lost in battle; life is destroyed when one dies. In the case before us, the destruction, whatever it be, is (1.) to be continued forever; and (2.) is to be of the nature of punishment. The meaning then must be, that the soul is destroyed as to the great purposes of its being—its enjoyment, dignity, honor, holiness, happiness. It will not be annihilated, but will live and linger on in destruction. It seems difficult to conceive how any one can profess to hold that this passage is a part of the word of God, and yet deny the doctrine of future eternal punishment. It would not be possible to state that doctrine in clearer language than this. It is not stated in clearer language in any creed or confession of faith, and if it be not true that the wicked will be punished forever, it must be admitted that it would not have been possible to reveal the doctrine in human language. ¶ From the presence of the Lord. That is, a part of their punishment will consist in being banished from the immediate presence of the Lord. There is a sense in which God is every where glorified in his saints, and to be admired ^a in all them that believe

^a Psa. 68. 35.

present, and in that sense he will be in the world where the wicked will dwell, to punish them. But the phrase is also used to denote his more immediate presence; the place where are the symbols of his majesty and glory; the home of the holy and the blessed. It is in that sense that the word is used here, and the idea is, that it will be one of the circumstances contributing to the deeper woe of the place of punishment, that those who dwell there will be banished from that holy abode, and will never be permitted to enter there. ¶ And from the glory of his power. The meaning seems to be, that they will not be able to endure the manifestation of his power and majesty when he shall appear, but will be driven away by it into outer darkness. See ch. ii. 8. The Saviour, in describing his Second Advent, uses this language: "They shall see the Son of man coming in the clouds of heaven, with power and great glory." Matt. xxiv. 30. There will be a great exhibition of both. The power will be seen in the convulsions of nature which will precede or attend him; in the resurrection of the dead; and in the bringing of all to judgment: the glory will be seen in his own person; the dignity and number of his attendants; and the honor that will then be conferred on him as the final Judge of all mankind. By the manifestation of that power and glory the wicked will be driven away into eternal ruin. They will not be able to stand before it, and though, in common with the righteous, they may see the majesty of the Redeemer in the last day, yet they will be driven away to witness it no more.

10. When he shall come to be glorified in his saints. That is, the redeemed in that day will be the means of promoting his glory, or the universe will see his glory manifested in their salvation. His chief glory, as seen in that day, will be connected with the fact that he has redeemed his people; and he will come in order that the appropriate honor of such a work may then be manifested. He will be "glorified" then by the numbers that will have been redeemed; by their patience in the trials through which they have passed; by the triumphs which religion will have made on the earth; by their praises and songs, and by their ascent with him to the realms of blessedness. ¶ And to be admired in all them that believe. This may either mean (1.) that he will be admired among or by them that believe; or (2.) that the ground of the admiration which he will receive in that day will be what will be seen in them; that is, their graces, their numbers, their joys, their triumphs will be the occasion of producing admiration of him—for he will be regarded as the source of it all. Tindal renders it, "and to be made marvelous in all them that believe." The latter interpretation seems to me to be the correct one. The general idea is, that Christ in that day will be manifested in a glorious manner, and that the source of his highest triumphs will be what is seen in the saints. His main honor when he returns to the world will not be the outward splendors which will attend his coming, nor the angels that will accompany him, nor the manifestation of his power over the elements, but the Church which he has redeemed. It will then be seen that he is worthy of universal admiration for having redeemed that Church. He will then be admired or glorified in his people, (1.) for having conceived the plan of redeeming them; (2.) for being willing to become incarnate and to die to save them; (3.) for the defense of his Church in all its persecutions and trials; (4.) for raising his people from the dead; (5.) for the virtues and graces which they will exhibit in that day. This appropriate honor of Christ in the Church has never yet been fully seen. His people on earth have, in general, most imperfectly reflected his image. They have in general been comparatively few in number, and scattered upon the earth. They have been poor and despised. Often they have been persecuted, and regarded as the "filth of the world and the off-scouring of all things." The honors of this world have been withheld from them. The great have regarded it as no honor to be identified with the Church, and the proud have been ashamed to be enrolled among the 11 Wherefore also we pray always for you, that our God would ¹ count you worthy ^a of this calling, and fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness, and the work of faith with power; followers of the Lamb. In the last day all this will be changed, and the assembled Church will show to admiring worlds how great and glorious is its Redeemer, and how glorious was the work of redemption. ¶ Because our testimony among you was believed. The meaning of this seems to be, that they would be among the number of those who would in that day honor the Saviour, because they had embraced what the apostle had preached to them respecting these future scenes. Thus interpreted, this clause should be regarded as connected with ver. 7, "And to you it is a righteous thing that he should give rest with us, because our testimony among you was believed." That is, you have shown that you are true Christians, and it is proper that you should partake of the triumphs and hopes of that day.

(because our testimony among you was believed) in that day.

¹ Or, vouchsafe.

^a Col. 1. 12. Rev. 3. 4.

11. Wherefore also we pray always for you. See Notes on 1 Thess. i. 2. ¶ That our God would count you worthy of this calling. Marg., "or, vouchsafe." The meaning is, "that he would regard you as worthy of this calling." See Notes on verse 5. ¶ Of this calling. See Notes on Eph. iv. 1. The "calling" here is that which had brought them into the kingdom, and led them to become Christians. ¶ And fulfil all the good pleasure of his goodness. That is, make the work of salvation complete and effectual. Olshausen has well expressed the sense. "May God fill you with all that good which is pleasing to him." The thoughts in the passage are, (1.) that the purpose toward them on the part of God was one of "goodness" or benevolence; (2.) that there was a state of mind which would be regarded by him as pleasing, or as his "good pleasure;" and (3.) that Paul wished that this might be accomplished in them. He desired that there might be in them every thing which would be pleasing to God, and which his benevolence was fitted to secure. ¶ And the work of faith. The work which faith is adapted to produce on the soul. See 1 John v. 4, 5. ¶ With 12 That ^b the name of our Lord Jesus Christ may be glorified in you, and ye in him, according to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ.

^b 1 Pet. 1. 7.

power. Effectually, completely. The apostle prays that so much power may be exerted as will be sufficient to secure the object. The work of religion on the soul is always represented in the Bible as one of power.

12. That the name of our Lord Jesus Christ. That is, that the Lord Jesus himself may be honored among you; the name often denoting the person. The idea is, that the apostle desired that the Lord Jesus might be honored among them by the fair application and development of the principles of his religion. ¶ And ye in him. That you may be regarded and treated as his friends when he shall come to judge the world. ¶ According to the grace of our God and the Lord Jesus Christ. That is, that you may experience all the honor which his grace is fitted to impart.

In view of the exposition given of this chapter, we may remark:

(1.) That the wicked will certainly be punished when the Lord Jesus shall come to judgment. Words can not reveal this truth more plainly than is done in this chapter, and if it is not to be so, then language has no meaning.

(2.) The punishment of the wicked will be eternal. It is impossible for language to teach that doctrine more clearly than is done in this chapter. If it were admitted to have been the intention of God to teach the doctrine of eternal punishment, it is impossible to conceive that he could have chosen more plain and positive language to express the doctrine than has been done here. Can it be, then, that he means to trifle with men on so solemn a subject, by using words which have no meaning?

(3.) It will greatly aggravate the punishment of the wicked that it will be "a righteous thing" for God thus to punish them. If they were to suffer as martyrs; if in their sufferings they could feel that they were oppressed and crushed beneath mere power; if they could feel that they were right and that God was wrong; if they could get up a party in the universe against God, sympathizing with them as if they were wronged, the case would be changed. A man can endure suffering much more easily when he has a good conscience, and when he feels that he is right, than he can when he feels that what he endures is deserved. But the sinner in hell can never have this consolation. He will forever feel that God is right and that he is wrong, and that every pang which he endures is deserved.

(4.) If it be a "righteous thing" that the wicked shall be punished, then they never can be saved by mere justice. No one will go to heaven because he deserves or merits it. All dependence on human merit, therefore, is taken away in the matter of salvation, and if the sinner is ever saved, it will be by grace, and not by justice.

(5.) If it is a "righteous thing" that the sinner should perish, he will perish. God will do right to all.

(6.) It is amazing that the mass of men have so little concern about their future condition. God has plainly declared that he will destroy the wicked forever, and that it will be a righteous thing for him to do it; and yet the mass of mankind are wholly unconcerned, and disregard all the solemn declarations of the Bible on this subject, as if they were idle tales. One would suppose that the very possibility of eternal suffering would rouse all the sensibilities of the soul, and lead to the earnest inquiry whether it is not possible to avoid it. Yet the mass of men feel no concern in this inquiry. It is impossible to get them ever to think of it. We can not induce them even to ask the question seriously, whether they themselves are to be happy or miserable to all eternity. This stupidity and indifference is the most unaccountable fact on earth, and probably distinguishes this world from all others.

(7.) It is rational to think of religion; to reflect on eternity; to be serious; to be anxious about the future state. If there is even a possibility that we may be miserable forever, it is proper to be serious about it. And if there is a solemn declaration of God that it will be a "righteous thing" for him to punish the wicked, and that he will "punish them with everlasting destruction," assuredly the mind should be concerned. Is there any thing more worthy the calm and sober attention of the human soul than such solemn declarations of the infinite God?

CHAPTER II.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

The main object of this chapter is to correct an erroneous impression which had been made on the minds of the Thessalonians respecting the second coming of the Saviour, either by the former letter of the apostle, or by one forged in his name. They had received the impression that that event was about to take place. This belief had produced an unhappy effect on their minds. Ver. 2. It became, therefore, necessary to state the truth on the subject, in order to free their minds from alarm; and this purpose of the apostle leads to one of the most important prophecies in the New Testament. The chapter comprises the following points:

I. An exhortation that they would not be alarmed or distressed by the expectation of the speedy coming of the Saviour. Vss. 1, 2.

II. A statement of the truth that he would not soon appear, and of the characteristics of a great apostasy which must intervene before his advent. Ver. 3-12.

In this part of the chapter the apostle shows that he did not mean to teach that that event would soon happen, by stating that before that would take place there would occur a most melancholy apostasy which would require a considerable time before it was matured.

(a) That day would not come until there should be a great apostasy, and a revelation of the man of sin. Ver. 3.

(b) The character of this man of sin was to be such that it could not be mistaken: he would be opposed to God; he would exalt himself above all that is called God; he would sit in the temple showing himself as God. Ver. 4.

(c) There was a restraint then exercised which prevented the development of the great apostasy. There were indeed causes then at work which would lead to it, but they were then held in check, and God would restrain them until some future time, when he would suffer the man of sin to be revealed. Ver. 5-7.

(d) When that time should come, then that "wicked" one would be re-

CHAPTER II.

NOW we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord

vealed, with such marks that he could not be mistaken. His coming would be after the working of Satan, with power, and signs, and lying wonders, and under him there would be strong delusion, and the belief of a lie. Ver. 8-12. This great foe of God was to be destroyed by the coming of the Saviour, and one object of his appearing would be to put an end to his dominion. Ver. 8.

III. The apostle then says, that there was occasion for thankfulness to God that he had chosen them to salvation, and not left them to be destroyed. Vss. 13, 14.

IV. An exhortation to stand fast, and to maintain what they had been taught (ver. 15), and a prayer that God, who had given them a good hope, would comfort their hearts, closes the chapter. Vss. 16, 17.

1. Now we beseech you, brethren, by the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ. The phrase "by the coming" is not here, as our translators seem to have supposed, a form of solemn adjuration. It is not common, if it ever occurs in the Scriptures, to make a solemn adjuration in view of an event, and the connection here demands that we give to the phrase a different sense. It means respecting his coming; and the idea of Paul is, "In regard to that great event of which I spoke to you in my former epistle—the coming of the Saviour—I beseech you not to be troubled, as if it were soon to happen." As his views had been misunderstood or misrepresented, he now proposes to show them that there was nothing in the true doctrine which should create alarm, as if Christ were about to appear. ¶ And by our gathering together unto him. There is manifest allusion here to what is said in the first epistle (ch. iv. 17), "then we shall be caught up together with them in the clouds;" and the meaning is, "in reference to our being gathered unto him, I beseech you not to be shaken in mind, as if that event were near."

2. That ye be not soon shaken in mind. The word here used signifies, properly, to be moved as a wave of the sea, or to be tossed upon the waves as a vessel is. Then it means to be shaken

Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, 2 That ye be not soon shaken in in any way. See Matt. xi. 7; xxiv. 29; Luke vi. 38; Acts iv. 31; Heb. xii. 26. The reference here is to the agitation or alarm felt from the belief that the day of judgment would soon occur. It is uniformly said in the Scriptures that the approach of the Lord Jesus to judge the world will produce great consternation and alarm. Matt. xxiv. 30, "Then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven, and then shall all the tribes of the earth mourn." Rev. i. 7, "Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him; and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him." Luke xxiii. 30, "Then shall they begin to say to the mountains, Fall on us; and to the hills, Cover us." Comp. Isa. ii. 21, 22. Of the truth of this there can be no doubt. We may imagine something of the effects which will then be produced, by the alarm which is caused in a community when a belief prevails that the day of judgment is near. In a single year (1843) seventeen persons were admitted to the Lunatic Asylum in Worcester, Mass., who had become deranged in consequence of the expectation that the Lord Jesus was about to appear. It is easy to account for such facts, and no doubt, when the Lord Jesus shall actually come, the effect on the guilty world will be overwhelming. The apostle here says, also, that those who were Christians were "shaken in mind and troubled" by this anticipation. There are, doubtless, many true Christians who would be alarmed at such an event, as there are many who, like Hezekiah (Isa. xxxviii. 1, 2), are alarmed at the prospect of death. Many real Christians might, on the sudden occurrence of such an event, feel that they were not prepared, and be alarmed at the prospect of passing through the great trial which is to determine their everlasting destiny. It is no certain evidence of a want of piety to be alarmed at the approach of death. Our nature dreads death, and though there may be a well-founded hope of heaven, it will not always preserve a delicate physical frame from trembling when it comes. ¶ Or be troubled. That is, disturbed, or terrified. It would seem that this belief mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter,

had produced much consternation among them. ¶ Neither by spirit. By any pretended spirit of prophecy. But whether this refers to the predictions of those who were false prophets in Thessalonica, or to something which it was alleged the apostle Paul had himself said there, and which was construed as meaning that the time was near, is not certain. This depends much on the question whether the phrase "as from us," refers only to the letters which had been sent to them, or also to the "word" and to the "spirit" here spoken of. See Olshausen on the place. It would seem, from the connection, that all their consternation had been caused by some misconstruction which had been put on the sentiments of Paul himself, for if there had been any other source of alarm, he would naturally have referred to it. It is probable, therefore, that allusion is made to some representation which had been given of what he had said under the influence of the Holy Spirit, and that the expectation that the end of the world was near was supposed to be a doctrine of inspiration. Whether, however, the Thessalonians themselves put this construction on what he said, or whether those who had caused the alarm represented him as teaching this, can not be determined. ¶ Nor by word. That is, by public instruction, or in preaching. It is evident that when the apostle was among them this subject, from some cause, was prominent in his discourses. See verse 5. It had been inferred, it seems, from what he said, that he meant to teach that the end of the world was near. ¶ Nor by letter. Either the one which he had before written to them—the First Epistle to the Thessalonians—or one which had been forged in his name. ¶ As from us. That is, Paul, Silas, and Timothy, who are united in writing the two epistles (1 Thess. i. 1; 2 Thess. i. 1), and in whose names a letter would be forged, if one of this description were sent to them. It has been made a question whether the apostle refers here to the former epistle which he had sent to them, or to a forged letter; and on this question critics have been about equally divided. The reasons for the former opinion may be seen in Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, in loc. The question is not very important, and perhaps can not be easily settled. There are two or three circumstances, however, which seem to make it probable that he refers to an epistle which had been forged, and which had been pretended to be received from him. (1.) One is found in the expression "as from us." If he had referred to his own former letter, it seems to me that the allusion would have been more distinct, and that the particle "as" (ὡς) would not have been used. This is such an expression as would have been employed if the reference were to such a forged letter. (2.) A second circumstance is found in the expression in the next verse, "Let no man deceive you by any means," which looks as if they were not led into this belief by their own interpretation of his former epistle, but by a deliberate attempt of some one to delude them on the subject. (3.) Perhaps a third circumstance would be found in the fact that it was not uncommon in the early times of Christianity to attempt to impose forged writings on the churches. Nothing would be more natural for an impostor who wished to acquire influence than to do this; and that it was often done is well known. That epistles were forged under the names of the apostles, appears very probable, as Benson has remarked, from ch. iii. 17, Gal. vi. 11, and Philem. 19. There are, indeed, none of those forged epistles extant which were composed in the time of the apostles, but there is extant an epistle of Paul to the Corinthians, besides the two which we have; another to the Laodiceans; and six of Paul's epistles to Seneca—all of which are undoubted forgeries. See Benson, in loc. If Paul, however, here refers to his former epistle, the allusion is doubtless to 1 Thess. iv. 15, and v. 2, 3, 4, which might easily be understood, as teaching that the end of the world was near, and to which those who maintained that opinion might appeal with great plausibility. We have, however, the authority of the apostle himself that he meant to teach no such thing. ¶ As that the day of Christ is at hand. The time when he would appear—called "the day of

α Matt. 24. 4-6.

3 Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except^a there come a falling away first, and that man of sin^b be revealed, the^c son of perdition:

^a 1 Tim. 4. 1.

^b Dan. 7. 25.

4 Who opposeth and exalteth^d

^e John 17. 12.

^d Isa. 14. 13. Rev. 13. 6.

Christ," because it would be appointed especially for the manifestation of his glory. The phrase "at hand" means near. Grotius supposes that it denotes that same year, and refers for proof to Rom. viii. 38; 1 Cor. iii. 22; Gal. i. 4; Heb. ix. 9. If so, the attempt to fix the day was an early indication of the desire to determine the very time of his appearing—a disposition which has been so common since, and which has led into so many sad mistakes.

3. Let no man deceive you by any means. That is, respecting the coming of the Lord Jesus. This implies that there were then attempts to deceive, and that it was of great importance for Christians to be on their guard. The result has shown that there is almost no subject on which caution is more proper, and on which men are more liable to delusion. The means then resorted to for deception appear, from the previous verse, to have been either an appeal to a pretended verbal message from the apostle, or a pretended letter from him. The means now consist of a claim to uncommon wisdom in the interpretation of obscure prophecies of the Scriptures. The necessity for the caution here given has not ceased. ¶ For that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first. Until an apostasy (ἀποστασία) shall have occurred—the great apostasy. There is scarcely any passage of the New Testament which has given occasion to greater diversity of opinion than this. Though the reference seems to be plain, and there is scarcely any prophecy of the Bible apparently more obvious and easy in its general interpretation, yet it is proper to mention some of the opinions which have been entertained of it. Some have referred it to a great apostasy from the Christian Church, particularly on account of persecution, which would occur before the destruction of Jerusalem. The "coming of the Lord" they suppose refers to the destruction of the holy city, and according to this, the meaning is, that there would be a great apostasy before that event would take place. Of this opinion was Vitringa, who refers the "apostasy" to a great defection from the faith which took place between the time of Nero and Trajan. Whitby also refers it to an event which was to take place before the destruction of Jerusalem, and supposes that the apostasy would consist in a return from the Christian to the Jewish faith by multitudes of professed converts. The "man of sin," according to him, means the Jewish nation, so characterized on account of its eminent wickedness. Hammond explains the apostasy by the defection to the Gnostics, under the arts of Simon Magus, whom he supposes to be the man of sin, and by the "day of the Lord" he also understands the destruction of Jerusalem. Grotius takes Caligula to be the man of sin, and by the apostasy he understands his abominable wickedness. In the beginning of his government, he says, his plans of iniquity were concealed, and the hopes of all were excited in regard to his reign; but his secret iniquity was subsequently "revealed," and his true character understood. Wetstein understands by the "man of sin," "Titus and the Flavian house." He says that he does not understand it of the Roman Pontiff, who "is not one such as the demonstrative pronoun thrice repeated designates, and who neither sits in the temple of God, nor calls himself God, nor Caius, nor Simon Gioriae, nor any Jewish impostor, nor Simon Magus." Koppe refers it to the king mentioned in Dan. xi. 36. According to him, the reference is to a great apostasy of the Jews from the worship of God, and the "man of sin" is the Jewish people. Others have supposed that the reference is to Mohammed, and that the main characteristics of the prophecy may be found in him. Of the Papists, a part affirm that the apostasy is the falling away from Rome in the time of the Reformation, but the greater portion suppose that the allusion is to Antichrist, who, they say, will appear in the world before the great day of judgment, to combat religion and the saints. See these opinions stated at length, and examined, in Bishop Newton, On the Prophecies, diss. xxii. Some more recent expositors have referred it to Napoleon Bonaparte, and some (as Olshausen) suppose that it refers to some one who has not yet appeared, in whom all the characteristics here specified will be found united. Most Protestant commentators have referred it to the great apostasy under the Papacy, and, by the "man of sin," they suppose there is allusion to the Roman Pontiff, the Pope. It is evident that we are in better circumstances to understand the passage than those were who immediately succeeded the apostles. Eighteen hundred years have passed away since the epistle was written, and the "day of the Lord" has not yet come, and we have an opportunity of inquiring whether in all that long tract of time any one man can be found, or any series of men have arisen, to whom the description here given is applicable. If so, it is in accordance with all the proper rules of interpreting prophecy to make such an application. If it is fairly applicable to the Papacy, and can not be applied in its great features to any thing else, it is proper to regard it as having such an original reference. Happily, the expressions which are used by the apostle are, in themselves, not difficult of interpretation, and all that the expositor has to do is to ascertain whether in any one great apostasy all the things here mentioned have occurred. If so, it is fair to apply the prophecy to such an event; if not so, we must wait still for its fulfillment. The word rendered "falling away" (ἀποστασία, apostasy), is of so general a character that it may be applied to any departure from the faith as it was received in the time of the apostles. It occurs in the New Testament only here and in Acts xxi. 21, where it is rendered "to forsake"—"thou teachest all the Jews which are among us to forsake Moses"—ἀποστασίαν ἀπὸ Μωυσέως. The word means a departing from, or a defection. See the verb used in 1 Tim. iv. 1, "Some shall depart from the faith"—ἀποστήσονται. Compare Notes on that passage. See also Heb. iii. 12; Luke viii. 13; Acts v. 37. The reference here is evidently to some general falling away, or to some great religious apostasy that was to occur; which would be under one head, leader, or dynasty; and which would involve many in the same departure from the faith, and in the same destruction. The use of the article here,

"the apostasy" (Greek), Erasmus remarks, "signifies that great and before-predicted apostasy." It is evidently emphatic, showing that there had been a reference to this before, or that they understood well that there was to be such an apostasy. Paul says (ver. 5) that when he was with them he had told them of these things. The writers in the New Testament often speak of such a defection under the name of Antichrist. See Rev. xiii. 14; 1 John ii. 18, 22; iv. 3; 2 John 7. ¶ And that man of sin. This is a Hebraism, meaning a man of eminent wickedness; one distinguished for depravity. Comp. John xvii. 12; Prov. vi. 12, in Heb. The use of the article here—ὁ ἄνθρωπος—"the man of sin," is also emphatic, as in the reference to "the falling away," and shows that there is allusion to one of whom they had before heard, and whose character was well known; who would be the wicked one by way of eminence. See also ver. 8, "that wicked"—ὁ ἄνομος. There are two general questions in regard to the proper interpretation of this appellation; the one is, whether it refers to an individual, or to a series of individuals of the same general character, aiming at the accomplishment of the same plans; and the other is, whether there has been any individual, or any series of individuals, since the time of the apostle, who, by eminence, deserved to be called "the man of sin." That the phrase, "the man of sin," may refer to a succession of men of the same general character, and that it does so refer here, is evident from the following considerations: (1.) The word "king" is used in Dan. vii. 25; xi. 36, to which places Paul seems to allude, to denote a succession of kings. (2.) The same is true of the beast mentioned in Dan. vii., viii., Rev. xiii., representing a kingdom or empire through its successive changes and revolutions. (3.) The same is true of the "woman arrayed in purple and scarlet" (Rev. xvii. 4), which can not refer to a single woman, but is the emblem of a continued corrupt administration. (4.) It is clear that a succession is intended here, because the work assigned to "the man of sin" can not be supposed to be that which could be accomplished by a single individual. The statement of the apostle is, that there were then tendencies to such an apostasy, and that the "man of sin" would be revealed at no distant period, and yet that he would continue his work of "lying wonders" until the coming of the Saviour to destroy him. In regard to this "man of sin," it may be further observed, (1.) that his appearing was to be preceded by "the great apostasy;" and (2.) that he was to continue and perpetuate that apostasy. His rise was to be owing to a great departure from the faith, and then he was to be the principal agent in continuing such a departure by "signs and lying wonders." He was not himself to originate the defection, but was to be the creation, or the result of it. He was to rise upon it, or grow out of it, and, by artful arrangements adapted to that purpose, was then to perpetuate it. The question is, to whom this phrase, descriptive of a succession of individuals so eminent for wickedness that the name "the man of sin" could be applied to them, was designed by the Spirit of inspiration to refer. Bishop Newton has shown that it can not refer to Caligula, to Simon Magus, to the revolt of the Jews from the Romans, to the revolt of the Jews from the faith, to the Flavian family, to Luther, as some of the Papists suppose, or to one man who will appear just before the end of the world, as others of the Romanists suppose. See his Dissertations on the Prophecies, xxii. p. 393-402. Comp. Olshausen, in loc. The argument is too long to be inserted here. But can it be referred to the Papacy? Can it denote the Pope of Rome, meaning not a single Pope, but the succession? If all the circumstances of the entire passage can be shown to be fairly applicable to him, or if it can be shown that all that is fairly implied in the language used here has received a fulfillment in him, then it is proper to regard it as having been designed to be so applied, and then this may be numbered among the prophecies that are in part fulfilled. The question now is on the applicability of the phrase "the man of sin" to the Pope. That his rise was preceded by a great apostasy, or departure from the purity of the simple Gospel, as revealed in the New Testament, can not reasonably be doubted by any one acquainted with the history of the Church. That he is the creation or result of that apostasy, is equally clear. That he is the grand agent in continuing it, is equally manifest. Is the phrase itself one that is properly applicable to him? Is it proper to speak of the Pope of Rome, as he has actually appeared, as "the man of sin?" In reply to this, it might be sufficient to refer to the general character of the Papacy, and to its influence in upholding and perpetuating various forms of iniquity in the world. It would be easy to show that there has been no dynasty or system that has contributed so much to uphold and perpetuate sins of various kinds on the earth as the Papacy. No other one has been so extensively and so long the patron of superstition; and there are vices of the grossest character which have all along been fostered by its system of celibacy, indulgences, monasteries, and absolutions. But it would be a better illustration of the meaning of the phrase "man of sin," as applicable to the Pope of Rome, to look at the general character of the Popes themselves. Though there may have been some exceptions, yet there never has been a succession of men of so decidedly wicked character as have occupied the Papal throne since the great apostasy commenced. A very few references to the characters of the Popes will furnish an illustration of this point. Pope Vagilius waded to the Pontifical throne through the blood of his predecessor. Pope Joan—the Roman Catholic writers tell us—a female in disguise, was elected and confirmed Pope, as John VIII. Platina says that "she became with child by some of those that were round about her; that she miscarried, and died on her way from the Lateran to the temple." Pope Marcellinus sacrificed to idols. Concerning Pope Honorius, the council of Constantinople decreed: "We have caused Honorius, the late Pope of Old Rome, to be accursed; for that in all things he followed the mind of Sergius the heretic, and confirmed his wicked doctrines." The council of Basle thus condemned Pope Eugenius: "We condemn and depose Pope Eugenius, a despiser of the holy canons; a disturber of the peace and unity of the Church of God; a notorious offender of the whole universal Church; a Simonist; a perjurer; a man incorrigible; a schismatic; a man fallen from the faith, and a willful heretic." Pope John II. was publicly charged at Rome with incest. Pope John XIII. usurped the Pontificate, spent his time himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple in hunting, in lasciviousness, and monstrous forms of vice; he fled from the trial to which he was summoned, and was stabbed, being taken in the act of adultery. Pope Sixtus IV. licensed brothels at Rome. Pope Alexander VI. was, as a Roman Catholic historian says, "one of the greatest and most horrible monsters in nature that could scandalize the holy chair. His beastly morals, his immense ambition, his insatiable avarice, his detestable cruelty, his furious lusts, and monstrous incest with his daughter Lucretia, are, at large, described by Guicciardini Ciconius, and other authentic Papal historians." Of the Popes, Platina, a Roman Catholic, says: "The chair of Saint Peter was usurped, rather than possessed, by monsters of wickedness, ambition, and bribery. They left no wickedness unpracticed." See the New Englander, April, 1844, p. 285, 286. To no succession of men who have ever lived could the appellation "the man of sin" be applied with so much propriety as to this succession. Yet they claim to have been the true "successors" of the apostles, and there are Protestants that deem it of essential importance to be able to show that they have derived the true "succession" through such men. ¶ Be revealed. Be made manifest. There were, at the time when the apostle wrote, two remarkable things: (1.) there was already a tendency to such an apostasy as he spoke of; and (2.) there was something which as yet prevented the appearance or the rise of the man of sin. Ver. 7. When the hinderance which then existed should be taken out of the way, he would be manifested. See Notes on ver. 7. ¶ The son of perdition. This is the same appellation which the Saviour bestowed on Judas. See it explained in the Notes on John xvii. 12. It may mean either that he would be the cause of ruin to others, or that he would himself be devoted to destruction. It would seem here rather to be used in the latter sense, though this is not absolutely certain. The phrase, whichever interpretation be adopted, is used to denote one of eminent wickedness.

4. Who opposeth. That is, he is distinguished as an opposer of the great ple of God, shewing himself that he is God.

5 Remember ye not, that, when system which God has revealed for human salvation, and of those who would serve God in purity in the Gospel of his Son. No Protestant will doubt that this has been the character of the Papacy. The opposition of the general system to the Gospel; the persecution of Wickliffe, of John Huss, of Jerome of Prague, of the Waldenses, and the Reformers; the Inquisition, the cruelties in the reign of Mary, the horrors perpetrated by the Duke of Alva in the Netherlands, and the massacre on St. Bartholomew's day in France, are obvious illustrations of this. ¶ And exalthe himself above all that is called God. That is, whether among the heathens or the Jews; above a false God, or the true God. This could be true only of one who set aside the divine laws; who undertook to legislate where God only has a right to legislate; and whose legislation was contrary to that of God. Any claim of a dominion over conscience, or any arrangement to set aside the divine laws, and to render them nugatory, would correspond with what is implied in this description. It can not be supposed that any one would openly claim to be superior to God, but the sense must be that the enactments of the "man of sin" would pertain to the province in which God only can legislate, and that the ordinances made by him would be such as to render nugatory the divine laws, by appointing others in their place. No one can reasonably doubt that all that is here affirmed may be found in the claims of the Pope of Rome. The assumptions of the Papacy have related to the following things: (1.) To authority above all the inferior orders of the priesthood—above all pastors, bishops, and primates. (2.) Authority above all kings and emperors, "despising some, and advancing others, obliging them to prostrate themselves before him, to kiss his toe, to hold his stirrup, to wait barefooted at his gate, treading even upon the neck, and kicking off the imperial crown with his foot."—Newton. Thus Gregory VII. made Henry IV. wait barefooted at his gate. Thus Alexander III. trod upon the neck of Alexander I. Thus Celestine kicked off the imperial crown of Henry VI. Thus the right was claimed, and asserted, of laying nations under interdict, of deposing kings, and of absolving their subjects from their oaths of allegiance. And thus the Pope claimed the right over all unknown lands that might be discovered by Columbus, and apportioned the New World as he pleased—in all these things claiming prerogatives which can appertain only to God. (3.) To authority over the conscience, in matters which can pertain only to God himself, and where he only can legislate. Thus it has been, and is, one of the claims set up for the Pope that he is infallible. Thus he “forbids what God has commanded,” as the marriage of the clergy, communion in both kinds, and the use of the Scriptures for the common people. Thus he has set aside the second commandment by the appointment of image-worship; and thus he claims the power of the remission of sins. Multitudes of things which Christ allows his people are forbidden by the Papacy, and many things are enjoined, or allowed, directly contrary to the divine legislation. ¶ Or that is worshiped. σεβασμα. This word means an object of worship. See Acts. xvii. 3, where it is rendered devotions. It may be applied to the worship of a heathen divinity, or of the true God. “It may refer to a person, an idol, or a place. Probably Paul refers here to the heroes and other subordinate divinities of the heathen mythology.”—Olshausen. No one can doubt that the Pope has claimed higher honors, as the vicegerent of Christ, than was ever rendered in the ancient “hero worship.” ¶ So that he, as God. That is, claiming the honors due to God. This expression would not imply that he actually claimed to be the true God, but only that he sits in the temple, and manifests himself as if he were God. He claims such honors and such reverence as the true God would if he should appear in human form. It should be observed here, however, that there is much reason to doubt the genuineness of this phrase—“as God”—ως Θεόν. Mill supposes that it was inserted from the context. It is marked with an asterisk in the Vulgate, the Coptic, and the Syriac, and is omitted by many of the fathers. See Mill and Wetstein. It is rejected by Griesbach and Lachmann, and marked as doubtful by Hahn. It is defended, however, by Matthæi, Koppe, Knapp, and Schott. The sense is not materially affected whether it be regarded as genuine or not. ¶ Sitteth in the temple of God. That is, in the Christian Church. It is by no means necessary to understand this of the temple at Jerusalem, which was standing at the time this epistle was written, for (1.) the phrase “the temple of God” is several times used with reference to the Christian Church: 2 Cor. vi. 16; Eph. ii. 21; 1 Cor. iii. 16, 17; Rev. iii. 12; and (2.) the temple was the proper symbol of the Church, and an apostle trained amid the Hebrew institutions would naturally speak of the Church as the temple of God. The temple at Jerusalem was regarded as the peculiar dwelling-place of God on earth. When the Christian Church was founded, it was spoken of as the peculiar dwelling-place of God. See the passages referred to above. He dwelt among his people. He was with them, and walked with them, and manifested himself among them—as he had done in the ancient temple. The usage in the New Testament would not lead us to restrict this language to an edifice, or a “church,” as the word is now commonly used, but rather to suppose that it denotes the Church as a society; and the idea is, that the Antichrist here referred to would present himself in the midst of that Church as claiming the honors due to God alone. In the temple at Jerusalem, God himself presided. There he gave laws to his people; there he manifested himself as God; and there he was worshiped. The reign of the “man of sin” would be as if he should sit there. In the Christian Church he would usurp the place which God had occupied in the temple. He would claim divine attributes and homage. He would give laws and responses as God did there. He would be regarded as the head of all ecclesiastical power; the source from which all authority emanated; the same in the Christian Church which God himself was in the temple. This does not then refer primarily to the Pope as sitting in any particular church on any particular occasion, but to his claiming in the Church of Christ the authority and homage which God had in the temple at Jerusalem. In whatever place, whether in a cathedral or elsewhere, this authority should be exercised, all that the language here conveys would be fulfilled. No one can fail to see that the authority claimed by the Pope of Rome meets the full force of the language used here by the apostle. ¶ Showing himself that he is God. This does not necessarily mean that he actually, in so many words, claimed to be God; but that he usurped the place of God, and claimed the prerogatives of God. If the names of God are given to him, or are claimed by him; if he receives the honors due to God; if he asserts a dominion like that of God, then all that the language fairly implies will be fulfilled. The following expressions, applied to the Pope of Rome by Catholic writers without any rebuke from the Papacy, will show how entirely applicable this is to the pretended head of the Church. He has been styled "Our Lord God the Pope; another God upon earth; king of kings and lord of lords. The same is the dominion of God and the Pope. To believe that our Lord God the Pope might not decree as he decreed, is heresy. The power of the Pope is greater than all created power, and extends itself to things celestial, terrestrial, and infernal. The Pope doeth whatsoever he listeth, even things unlawful, and is more than God." See the authority for these extraordinary declarations in Bishop Newton, On the Prophecies, diss. xxii. How can it be doubted that the reference here is to the Papacy? Language could not be plainer, and it is not possible to conceive that any thing can ever occur which would furnish a more manifest fulfillment of this prophecy. Indeed, interpreted by the claims of the Papacy, it stands among the very clearest of all the predictions in the Sacred Scriptures.

I was yet with you, I told you these things ?

6 And now ye know what¹ with-

¹ or, holdeth.

5. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? The whole subject of the second advent of the Saviour seems to have constituted an important part of the instructions of Paul when at Thessalonica. He now refers them to what he had told them respecting the great apostasy, to show that his views had not changed, and that he did not mean holdeth, that he might be revealed in his time.

7 For the mystery of iniquity to have them understand that the world would soon come to an end. He had stated these things to them, implying that a considerable interval must elapse before the Saviour would appear. Much of the obscurity of this prophecy arises from the fact that the apostle alludes to things which he had told them when with them, of which we have now no knowledge. Hence, what would be perfectly clear to them, on reading this letter, is now difficult to be understood.

6. And now ye know what withholdeth. Marg., holdeth. The reference is to something that then operated to constrain or hold back the obvious tendency of things, so that the "man of sin" should not at once appear, or so that things should not soon so develop themselves as to give rise to this antichristian power. There were causes at work, even then, which would ultimately lead to this; but there was also something which checked the tendency of things so that the revelation or development of the "man of sin" was put off to a future period. The obvious meaning of this would be that, when the apostle wrote, there was a tendency to what would occur under the great apostasy, and that this would soon develop itself if it were not restrained. If the reference is to the Papacy, this would consist in corruptions already existing in the Church, having a resemblance to those which afterward existed under that system, or which were the germ of that system. If there was a tendency toward the concentration of all power in an individual in the Church; if there was an assumption of authority by one class of ministers above another; if there was a denial of the "parity of the clergy," the tendency would have been to that ultimate assumption of authority which is found in the Romish hierarchy. But conjecture is useless as to what was the precise form in which this tendency then began to develop itself. That corruptions early existed in the Church, which terminated in the Papacy, and which led on directly to it, we know; that the apostle was able to foresee and predict such a final de-doth already ^a work: only he who now letteth, will let, until he be taken out of the way.

^a 1 John 4. 3.

velopment, shows that he was under the influence of inspiration. It is not known precisely what is referred to by the phrase "what withholdeth," τὸ κατέχον. The phrase means properly something that holds back, or restrains. The word here is in the neuter gender, "What withholdeth." In the following verse it is in the masculine gender, ὁ κατέχων—"he that letteth," or withholdeth; and the reference would seem to be to some agency or state of things under the control of an individual, or of some civil power, that then operated as a restraint on the natural tendency of things. Of this, the apostle says, they had had full information; but we can only conjecture what it was. The restraining power of any individual, or of any government, or of God, would meet all that the phrase implies. The most natural interpretation is that which refers it to civil power, meaning that there was something in the form of the existing administration which would prevent this development until that restraint should be removed. The supposition that there was even then a tendency to concentrate all ecclesiastical power at Rome, and that while the civil authority remained there it would not suffer ecclesiastical power to grow to the exorbitant height which it ultimately reached, will meet all that is implied in the language. ¶ That he might be revealed in his time. The "man of sin." The meaning is, that there was then a restraint operating which would prevent the development of this anti-christian power until the proper time; that is, till the state of the world should be such that in the divine arrangements it would be proper to permit it. It was not to be developed until the Gospel should be extensively preached, and had had an opportunity of showing its fair effects on the nations; until the Gospel had become so planted and established that even the rise of this anti-christian power could not effectually uproot it. Had the "man of sin" been permitted to rise at once, the consequence might have been that the new religion would have been crushed, so that it could never have revived again. There was a providential arrangement by which this growth of wickedness should be checked and restrained until the new religion should take deep root in the earth, and its perpetuity should be secured. Then the great trial was to be permitted under the "man of sin."

8 And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall ^δ consume with the spirit ^ε of his ^δ Dan. 7. 10, 11.

^ε Isa. 11. 4. Rev. 19. 15, 21.

7. For the mystery of iniquity. On the meaning of the word mystery, see Notes on Rom. xi. 25. Comp. 1 Cor. ii. 7; Eph. i. 9; iii. 3; Col. i. 26. It means properly that which is hidden or concealed; not necessarily that which is unintelligible. The "mystery of iniquity" seems here to refer to some hidden or concealed depravity—some form of sin which was working secretly and silently, and which had not yet developed itself. Any secret sources of iniquity in the Church; any thing that tended to corrupt its doctrines, and to destroy the simplicity of the faith of the Gospel, would correspond with the meaning of the word. Doddridge correctly supposes that this may refer to the pride and ambition of some ministers; the factious temper of some Christians; the imposing of unauthorized severities; the worship of angels, etc. ¶ Doth already work. There are elements of these corruptions already existing in the Church. Bishop Newton maintains that the foundations of Popery were laid in the apostle's days, and that the superstructure was raised by degrees; and this is entirely in accordance with the statements of the apostle Paul. In his own time, he says, there were things which, if not restrained, would expand and ripen into that apostasy. He has not told us particularly to what he refers, but there are several intimations in his writings, as well as in other parts of the New Testament, that even in the apostolic age there existed the elements of those corruptions which were afterward developed and embodied in the Papacy. Even "then," says Bishop Newton, "idolatry was stealing into the Church (1 Cor. x. 14), and a voluntary humility and worshiping of angels." Col. ii. 18. [See, however, my Note on that passage.] "There existed strife and divisions (1 Cor. iii. 3), an adulterating and handling the Word of God deceitfully (2 Cor. ii. 17; iv. 2), a gain of godliness, teaching of things for filthy lucre's sake (1 Tim. vi. 5; Titus i. 11), a vain observation of festivals (Gal. iv. 10), a vain distinction of meats (1 Cor. viii. 8), a neglecting of the body (Col. ii. 23), traditions, and commandments, and doctrines of men (Col. ii. 8-22)." Compare 3 John 9: "Diotrephes, who loveth to have the pre-eminence." These things constituted the elements of the corruptions which were afterward developed in the Papacy, and which are embodied in that system. An eye that could see all would even then have perceived that, if there were no restraint, these incipient corruptions would grow up into that system, and would be expanded into the errors and arrogant claims which have ever characterized it. Comp. 1 John iv. 3. ¶ Only he who now letteth. Who now hinders, or restrains—ὁ κατέχων. This is the same word which is used in ver. 6, and rendered "withholdeth," except that it is there in the neuter gender. There can be no doubt that there is reference to the same restraining power, or the same power under the control of an individual; but what that was, is not quite certain. It was some power which operated as a check on the growing corruptions then existing, and which prevented their full development, but which was to be removed at no distant period, and whose removal would give an opportunity for the development of those corruptions, and for the full revelation of the "man of sin." The supposition that the civil power of Rome was such a restraint, operating to prevent the assumption of the ecclesiastical claims of supremacy which afterward characterized the Papacy, will correspond with all that is necessarily implied in the language. ¶ Will let, until he be taken out of the way. This will be an effectual check on these corruptions, preventing their full development, until it is removed, and then the "man of sin" will appear. The supposition which will best suit this language is, that there was then some civil restraint preventing the development of existing corruptions, but that there would be a removal or withdrawing of that restraint; and that then the tendency of the existing corruptions would be seen. It is evident, as Olshausen remarks, that this resisting or restraining power must be something out of the Church, and distinguished from the antichristian tendency itself: von der Kirche und vom Antichristenthum. It is necessary, therefore, to understand this of the restraints of civil power. Was there, then, any fact in history which will accord with this interpretation? The belief among the primitive Christians was that what hindered the rise of the "man of sin" was the Roman empire, and therefore "they prayed for its peace and welfare, as knowing that when the Roman empire should be dissolved and broken in pieces, the empire of the 'man of sin' would be raised on its ruins."—Bishop Newton. How this revolution was effected may be seen by the statement of Machiavel. "The emperor of Rome, quitting Rome to dwell at Constantinople" (in the fourth century, under Constantine), "the Roman empire began to decline, but the Church of Rome augmented as fast. Nevertheless, until the coming in of the Lombards, all Italy being under the dominion of either emperors or kings, the bishops assumed no more power than what was due to their doctrine and manners; in civil affairs they were subject to the civil power. But Theodoric, king of the Goths, fixing his seat at Ravenna, was that which advanced their interest, and made them more considerable in Italy, for there being no other prince left in Rome, the Romans were forced for protection to pay greater allegiance to the Pope. The Lombards having invaded and reduced Italy into several cantons, the Pope took the opportunity, and began to hold up his head. For being, as it were, governor and principal of Rome, the emperor of Constantinople and the Lombards bare him a respect, so that the Romans (by mediation of their Pope), began to treat and confederate with Longinus [the emperor's lieutenant] and the Lombards, not as subjects, but as equals and companions; which said custom continuing, and the Pope's entering into alliance sometimes with the Lombards, and sometimes with the Greeks, contracted great reputation to their dignity." (Hist. of Florence, bk. i., p. 6, of the English translation.) A more extended quotation on the same subject may be seen in Newton, On the Prophecies, p. 407, 408. To any one acquainted with the decline and fall of the Roman empire, mouth, and shall destroy ^a with the brightness of his coming.

^a Heb. 10. 27.

nothing can be more manifest than the correspondence of the facts in history respecting the rise of the Papacy, and the statement of the apostle Paul here. The simple facts are these. (1.) There were early corruptions in the Church at Rome, as there were elsewhere, but peculiarly there, as Rome was the seat of philosophy and of power. (2.) There were great efforts made by the bishop of Rome to increase his authority, and there was a steady approximation to what he subsequently claimed—that of being universal bishop. (3.) There was a constant tendency to yield to him deference and respect in all things. (4.) This was kept in check as long as Rome was the seat of the imperial power. Had Rome continued to be the capital of the empire, it would have been impossible for the Roman bishop ever to have obtained the civil and ecclesiastical eminence which he ultimately did. The capital could not have had two heads, both claiming and exercising supreme power; and there never could have been a “revelation of the man of sin.” (5.) Constantine removed the seat of empire to Constantinople; and this removal or “taking away” of the only restraint on the ambitious projects of the Roman bishops, gave all the opportunity which could be desired for the growth of the Papal power. In all history there can not, probably, be found a series of events corresponding more accurately with a prophetic statement than this; and there is every evidence, therefore, that these are the events to which the apostle here refers, and that, therefore, he was inspired.

8. And then shall that Wicked be revealed. ὁ ἄνομος—“the wicked one,” referring to the “man of sin,” and called “the wicked one” because of the eminent depravity of the system of which he was to be the head. See Notes on ver. 3. ¶ Whom the Lord shall consume. The Lord Jesus. See Notes on Acts i. 24. The word consume here—ἀναλώσει—means to destroy. See Gal. v. 15; Luke ix. 54. The word would be applicable to any kind of destruction. The methods by which this would be done are immediately specified—and it is of much importance to understand them, if this refers to the Papacy. ¶ With the spirit of his mouth. What goes out of his mouth, or what he speaks; that is, his word, his truth, his command, or his Gospel—all of which may be regarded as speaking. In Rev. i. 16; xix. 15–21, it is said of the Redeemer that “a sharp two-edged sword goeth out of his mouth;” that is, his word, his doctrine, or his command—what he speaks—is like a sharp sword. It will cut deep; it will lay open the heart; it will destroy his enemies. “This appears to be an allusion to (although not an exact quotation of) Isa. xi. 4: ‘With the breath of his lips he shall destroy the impious man.’ (Sept. version.) In the Targum Jonathan, this prophecy (which was probably in St. Paul’s thoughts) is applied to the Messiah’s coming, and ‘the impious,’ רשע (ἄσεβῆ, Sept.), is interpreted to mean an individual Antichrist.”—Conybeare and Howson, vol. i., 404. The reference in the passage before us is to one of the methods which would be employed to “destroy” the man of sin; and the sense is, that it would be by what is spoken by the Redeemer. This, so far as the language is concerned, may refer either to what he will say at his coming, or to his truth already spoken or revealed; to what will proceed from his mouth, or to what has proceeded from his mouth; to what will go from his own lips, or to what has gone from his lips, by whomsoever uttered; and the meaning, as thus explained, is that one of the grand agencies for destroying this antichristian power is the truth spoken or revealed by the Saviour. The passage would thus be applicable to any method or time when that truth might be employed in what would properly be called “the brightness of his coming,” or the “manifestation of his appearing,” in bringing that power to an end. The language might be applicable to his Second Advent, or it might be applicable to any time when the Saviour would thus “appear,” or manifest himself in the application of his truth. ¶ And shall destroy. καταρτίσει. Shall bring to naught; cause to cease; put an end to. This is, in some respects, a stronger word than that which in the former part of the verse is rendered consume. It denotes a more entire destruction than that, though it does not refer so much to any positive agency by which it will be done. In the former word the attention is directed more to the agency by which the destruction will be effected; in this word the attention is directed rather to the intensity or totality of the destruction. The antichristian domination will wholly cease, or be entirely destroyed. The words, in the two forms in which they occur, would naturally harmonize with the idea that there would be a somewhat gradual process under the operation of truth toward the destruction of the "man of sin"—represented by the expression, "Shall consume with the spirit of his mouth;" but that the complete annihilation of his power would be accomplished by some more manifest exertion of power—represented by the words, "Shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." ¶ With the brightness of his coming. With the manifestation of his coming, or his being present. The Greek word rendered brightness—ἐπιφάνεια—epiphany, means merely an appearing, or appearance. It occurs only in the following places in the New Testament, in all of which, except in the passage before us, it is rendered appearing, and in all of which it refers to the Saviour: 1 Tim. vi. 14; 2 Tim. i. 10; iv. 1; Titus ii. 13. The idea of brightness, of splendor, of glory, is not in the word, nor is there in the word any such idea as our common translation would seem to convey as that of dazzling light, or insufferable splendor, that would consume all before it. In one of the passages where the word occurs (Titus ii. 13), the idea of glory is added—ἐπιχάνειαν τῆς δόξης—"glorious appearing;" but the idea is in no sense in the word rendered there appearing and here brightness. The word rendered coming—παρουσία, parousia—means the being or becoming present. (Rob., Lex.). In the New Testament it is rendered coming in Matt. xxiv. 3, 27, 37, 39; 1 Cor. xv. 23; xvi. 17; 2 Cor. vii. 6; Phil. i. 26; 1 Thess. ii. 19; iii. 13; iv. 15; v. 23; 2 Thess. ii. 1, 8, 9; James v. 7, 8; 2 Pet. i. 16; iii. 4-12; 1 John ii. 28; and presence in 2 Cor. x. 10; Phil. ii. 12. In all these places, except in 1 Cor. xvi. 17; 2 Cor. vii. 6, 7; x. 10; Phil. i. 26; ii. 12; 2

9 Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan, with all

Thess. ii. 1-9, it refers to some coming of the Saviour. The word does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It would undoubtedly refer to some manifestation that might be called the appearing or the presence of the Saviour; some coming on his part to do what was done by his own agency. It would not be necessarily implied, however, that this would be visible, or that it would be attended by any visible symbols of glory or splendor. What was done would be attributed to the fact that he had come, or was present to accomplish it by his own power. The agency in doing it would not be his brightness, but himself. It may be remarked, then, in view of this explanation, (1.) that truth—that which is spoken by the Saviour, or which has proceeded out of his mouth—will be an important means of weakening or destroying this power of the "man of sin." (2.) That the complete and final destruction of this power will be reserved for some display or manifestation of the Saviour that might be properly described as his "coming," or as a manifestation of himself. (3.) That this coming or manifestation does not necessarily refer to his last appearing, or to his second visible advent to our world to raise the dead and judge mankind, but may be any remarkable manifestation of himself before that, and even before the commencement of his millennial reign. It is true, indeed, that the word here used and rendered coming—παρουσία—commonly refers to his coming to wind up human affairs, as in 1 Cor. xv. 23; 1 Thess. ii. 19; iii. 13; iv. 15; James v. 7, 8; 1 John ii. 28; but it is also true that in Matt. xxiv. it does not necessarily imply this, but is rather, in an important sense, to be referred to his coming to destroy Jerusalem; and it is here, also, that the corresponding word, or a word which is often employed to denote his coming—ἐρχομαι, erchomai—is applicable to any approach which he may make to individuals or to nations, by death, by calamity, by his incarnation, or for consolation. Matt. v. 17; xi. 3-19; xxiii. 35; xxiv. 44; Luke ix. 56; xii. 40; John vii. 31; xi. 27; xiv. 18-23, etc. (4.) Any manifestation of himself, or of his power, that would destroy the empire of the "man of sin" previous to the beginning of the millennium, or before his final advent power and signs and lying wonders,

10 And with all deceivableness^a of unrighteousness in them that

^a Heb. 3. 13.

to judge the world, would be a fulfillment of what is fairly implied in the language here used. (5.) It may be assumed, as the Bible is one book, inspired by the same divine Spirit, that the same idea on the same subject will be presented whenever it is alluded to, though not, of course, always in the same words, or with the same fullness of detail, and, therefore, the description in one part, if more ample, may be referred to to illustrate the meaning in another. On this principle, as the book of Revelation is the last portion of the revelation that God has given to mankind, and as it is mainly occupied in describing future scenes—the consummation of human affairs—it may be proper to refer to that as containing a more full development of the idea here suggested by the apostle in few words. The destruction of the “man of sin”—the Papacy—occupies no inconsiderable portion of that volume, and is described with great particularity. The statement there, as found in the latter part of ch. xvi., and chs. xvii., xviii., xix., is substantially that the two great powers of the Papacy and Mohammedanism will be destroyed before the scenes which are described in the twentieth chapter, and that after those powers are destroyed there will be the peaceful scene of a “thousand years” when “Satan shall be bound;” or, that at the beginning of that period, both those powers shall have been annihilated, and that Satan will be bound. What is material to the point now before us is, that the destruction of the Papacy—the “man of sin”—as well as the destruction of the Mohammedan power, will be accomplished by some manifestation or going forth of the Son of God; some appearing of himself as the great agent in accomplishing this work. Rev. xvii. 14; xix. 11-21. I regard that description drawn out by John as a full illustration of the idea here suggested in so brief a manner by the apostle Paul. See Notes on Rev. xvi.-xx.

9. Even him, whose coming is after the working of Satan. Gr., κατ' ἐνεργειαν τοῦ Σατανᾶ—according to the energy of Satan; that is, the energetic or efficient operation of Satan. Comp. Eph.

i. 19; Col. i. 29. The word rendered after, it need not be said to one who looks at the Greek, does not refer to time, but is a preposition, meaning according to; in conformity with; meaning that the manner of his appearing would be accompanied by such works as would show that the agency of Satan was employed, and such as he only could produce. It does not mean that the coming of the Lord Jesus would be after Satan had worked in this manner, but that the manifestation of that wicked one would be with such demonstrations of power and wonder as Satan only could effect. The system over which he presides is originated by Satan, and is sustained by those things which he alone can perform. On the word Satan, see Notes on Job i. 6. The idea is, that it would be under the direction and control of the great enemy of God, and that the things on which it would rely for support could be traced to his agency. In all the pretended miracles to which it would appeal, there would be nothing which Satan could not accomplish.

¶ With all power. With all the power which Satan can exhibit; meaning, also, that there would be a great exertion of power in the case. It would not be a feeble and imbecile dominion. The dominion of the Papacy has been, in fact, one of the most powerful on earth. There has been none which has been more dreaded by the nations of the earth; and there have been times when nations trembled, and kings turned pale on their thrones, at the frown of the Pope. ¶ And signs. This word frequently denotes real miracles, but not necessarily so. It may be applied to pretended miracles as well as real, and is undoubtedly so used here, as it is connected with “lying wonders,” and as it is said that the thing wrought would be “after the working of Satan.” There is doubtless reference to such “signs and wonders” as the Saviour mentions in Matt. xxiv. 24. See Notes on that passage. It is hardly necessary to remark that the Papacy has always relied for support on its pretended miracles. Even in our own age the wonders performed by the Prince Hohenloe, and by the pretended seamless perish; because they received not the love ^a of the truth, that they might be saved.

^a 1 Cor. 16. 22.

garment of the Saviour, have been proclaimed as true miracles, and as furnishing indubitable evidence of the truth of the Roman Catholic system. The dissolving of the blood of St. Januarius; the removal of Pilate's stairs to Rome; and the transportation to Italy of the "house of our Lady," are among the miracles to which there is a constant reference by the Papists themselves. In addition to these and to all similar pretensions, there is the power claimed of performing a miracle at the pleasure of the priest by the change of bread and wine into the "body and blood, the soul and divinity" of the Lord Jesus. In 1756, there was published in London a book entitled, "The miraculous power of the Church of Christ, asserted through each successive century, from the apostles down to the present time." The power of working miracles has been one of the standing claims of the Papacy. ¶ And lying wonders. False or pretended miracles. They would be such as would be claimed to be miracles; such as would excite wonder; yet such as were false and delusive. No Protestant assuredly needs to be convinced that this is just the character of the pretended miracles of the Papacy. It would be impossible for language to describe them more clearly, in the apprehension of all Protestants, than is done in this language of the apostle Paul.

10. And with all deceivableness of unrighteousness. With all the delusions of unrighteousness. There are two ideas here. The first is that there would be deceit; and the other is that it would be for the purpose of promoting unrighteousness or iniquity. The iniquitous system would be maintained by fraudulent methods. No one who has read Pascal's Provincial Letters can ever doubt that this description is applicable to the system of the Jesuits; and no one familiar with the acts of the Papacy, as they have always been practiced, can doubt that the whole system is accurately described by this language. The plausible reasoning by which the advocates of that system have palliated and apologized for sins of various kinds, has been among its most remarkable features. ¶ In them that perish. Among those who will perish; that is, among the abandoned and wicked. The reference is to men of corrupt minds and lives, over whom this system would have power; countenancing them in their depravity, and fitting them still further for destruction. The idea is that these acts would have especial reference to men who would be lost at any rate, and who would be sustained in their wickedness by this false and delusive system. ¶ Because they received not the love of the truth. They prefer this system of error and delusion to the simple and pure Gospel, by which they might have been saved.

11 And for this cause God shall send them strong delusion,^b that they should believe a lie:

^b Ezek. 14. 9. Rom. 1. 24.

11. And for this cause. Because they choose error, or their hearts love that more than they do truth. The original reason of their embracing and adhering to the system was not an arbitrary decree on the part of God, but that they did not love the truth. Hence he gave them up to this system of error. If a man strongly prefers error to truth, and sin to holiness, it is not wrong to allow him freely to evince his own preference. ¶ God shall send them strong delusion. Gr., "energy of deceit;" a Hebraism, meaning strong deceit. The agency of God is here distinctly recognized, in accordance with the uniform statements of the Scriptures respecting evil. Comp. Exod. vii. 13; ix. 12; x. 1, 20-27; xi. 10; xiv. 8; Deut. x. 30; Isa. xlv. 7. On the nature of this agency, see Notes on John xii. 40. It is not necessary here to suppose that there was any positive influence on the part of God in causing this delusion to come upon them, but all the force of the language will be met, as well as the reasoning of the apostle, by supposing that God withdrew all restraint, and suffered men simply to show that they did not love the truth. He often places men in circumstances to develop their own nature, and it can not be demonstrated to be wrong that he should do so. If men have no love of the truth, and no desire to be saved, it is not improper that they should be allowed to manifest this. How it happened that they had no "love of the truth" is a different question, to which the remarks of the apostle do not appertain. Comp. Notes on Rom. ix. 17, 18; i. 24. ¶ That they should believe a lie. This does not affirm that God wished them to believe a lie; nor that he would not have preferred that they should believe the truth; nor that he exerted any direct agency to cause them to believe a lie. It means merely that he left them, because they did not love the truth, to believe what was false, and what would end in their destruction. Can any one doubt that this constantly occurs in the world? Men are left to believe impostors; to trust to false guides; to rely on unfounded information; to credit those who live to delude and betray the innocent; to follow those who lead them to ruin. God does not interpose by direct power to preserve them. This is not peculiarly the doctrine of revelation. The fact pertains just as much to the infidel as it does to the believer in Christianity, and he is just as much bound to explain it as the Christian is. It belongs to our world—to us all—and it should not be charged on Christianity as a doctrine pertaining peculiarly to that system.

12 That ^a they all might be damned who believed not the

^a Deut. 32. 35.

12. That they all might be damned. The word damned we commonly apply now exclusively to future punishment, and it has a harsher signification than the original word. Compare Notes on 1 Cor. xi. 29. The Greek word—κρίνω—means to judge, determine, decide; and then to condemn. Rom. ii. 27; xiv. 22; James iv. 11; John vii. 51; Luke xix. 22; Acts xiii. 27. It may be applied to the judgment of the last day (John v. 22; viii. 50; Acts xvii. 31; Rom. iii. 6; 2 Tim. iv. 1), but not necessarily. The word judged, or condemned, would, in this place, express all that the Greek word necessarily conveys. Yet there can be no doubt that the judgment or condemnation which is referred to is that which will occur when the Saviour will appear. It does not seem to me to be a necessary interpretation of this to suppose that it teaches that God would send a strong delusion that they should believe a lie in order that all might be damned who did not believe the truth, or that he desired that they should be damn-truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness.

ed, and sent this as the means of securing it; but the sense is, that this course of events would be allowed to occur, so that (iva—not εις τὸ) all who do not love the truth would be condemned. The particle here used, and rendered “that” (iva), in connection with the phrase “all might be damned,” is employed in two general senses, either as marking the end, purpose, or cause for, or on account of, which any thing is done—to the end that, or in order that it may be so and so; or as marking simply the result, event, or upshot of an action, so that, so as that. (Robinson, Lex.) In the latter case it denotes merely that something will really take place, without indicating that such was the design of the agent, or that what brought it about was in order that it might take place. It is also used, in the later Greek, so as neither to mark the purpose, nor to indicate that the event would occur, but merely to point out that to which the preceding words refer. It is not proper, therefore, to infer that this passage teaches that all these things would be brought about in the arrangements of Providence, in order that they might be damned who came under their influence. The passage teaches that such would be the result; that the connection between these delusions and the condemnation of those who were deluded, would be certain. It can not be proved from the Scriptures that God sends on men strong delusions in order that they may be damned. No such construction should be put on a passage of Scripture if it can be avoided, and it can not be shown that it is necessary here. ¶ Who believed not the truth. The grounds or reasons why they would be damned are now stated. One would be that they did not believe the truth—not that God sent upon them delusion in order that they might be damned. That men will be condemned for not believing the truth, and that it will be right thus to condemn them, is every where the doctrine of the Scriptures, and is equally the doctrine of common-sense. See Notes on Mark xvi. 16. ¶ But had pleasure in unrighteousness. This is the second ground or reason of their condemnation. If men have pleasure in 13 But we ^a are bound to give thanks alway to God for you, brethren beloved of the Lord, because God hath from the beginning chosen ^b you to salvation through sanctification of the Spirit and belief of the truth; sin, it is proper that they should be punished. There can be no more just ground of condemnation than that a man loves to do wrong.

^a c. 1. 3. ^b Eph. 1. 4. 1 Thess. 1. 4. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

13. But we are bound to give thanks alway to God for you. See Notes on ch. i. 3. ¶ Because God hath from the beginning chosen you to salvation. The following important things are affirmed or implied here: (1.) That God had chosen or elected them (ἐἰλετο) to salvation. The doctrine of election, therefore, is true. (2.) That this was from the beginning (ἀπ' ἀρχῆς); that is, from eternity. See Notes on John i. 1; Eph. i. 4; iii. 9-11. The doctrine of eternal election is, therefore, true. (3.) That this was the choice of the persons to whom Paul referred. The doctrine of personal election is, therefore, true. (4.) That this is a reason for thanksgiving. Why should it not be? Can there be any higher ground of praise or gratitude than that God has chosen us to be holy and happy forever, and that he has from eternity designed that we should be so? Whatever, therefore, may be the feelings with which those who are not chosen to salvation regard this doctrine, it is clear that those who have evidence that they are chosen should make it a subject of grateful praise. They can have no more exalted source of gratitude than that they are chosen to eternal life. ¶ Through sanctification of the Spirit. Being made holy by the divine Spirit. It is not without respect to character, but it is a choice to holiness and then to salvation. No one can have evidence that he is chosen to salvation except as he has evidence that he is sanctified by the Spirit. See Notes on Eph. i. 4. ¶ And belief of the truth. In connection with believing the truth. No one who is not a believer in the truth can have evidence that God has chosen him.

14. Whereunto he called you by our Gospel. He made the Gospel as preached by us the means of calling you to salvation. That is, God has chosen you 14 Whereunto ^c he called you by our Gospel, to the obtaining of the glory ^d of our Lord Jesus Christ.

15 Therefore, brethren, stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle.

^c 1 Pet. 5. 10.

^d John 17. 22.

to salvation from eternity, but has made the Gospel as preached by us the means of carrying that eternal purpose into effect. ¶ To the obtaining of the glory of our Lord Jesus Christ. That you may partake of the same glory as the Saviour in heaven. See Notes on John xvii. 22-24.

15. Therefore. In view of the fact that you are thus chosen from eternity, and that you are to be raised up to such honor and glory. ¶ Stand fast. Amid all the temptations which surround you. Comp. Notes on Eph. vi. 10-14. ¶ And hold the traditions which ye have been taught. On the word traditions, see Notes on Matt. xv. 2. Compare Notes on 1 Cor. xi. 2. It means, properly, things delivered over from one to another; then any thing orally delivered — any precept, doctrine, or law handed down from one generation to another without being written. It is frequently employed to denote that which is not written, as contradistinguished from that which is written (compare Matt. xv. 2), but not necessarily or always; for here the apostle speaks of the “traditions which they had been taught by his epistle.” Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. xi. 2. Here it means the doctrines or precepts which they had received from the apostle, whether when he was with them, or after he left them; whether communicated by preaching or by letter. This passage can furnish no authority for holding the “traditions” which have come down from ancient times, and which profess to have been derived from the apostles; for (1.) there is no evidence that any of those traditions were given by the apostles; (2.) many of them are manifestly so trifling, false, and contrary to the writings of the apostles that they could not have been delivered by them; (3.) if any of them are genuine, it is impossible to separate them from those which are false; (4.) we have all that is necessary for salvation in the written word; and (5.) there is not the least evidence that the apostle here meant to refer to any such thing. He speaks only of what had been delivered to them by himself, whether orally or by letter; not of what was delivered from one to another as from him. There is no intimation that they were to hold any thing as from him which they had not received directly from him, either by his own instructions personally or by letter. With what propriety, then, can this passage be adduced to prove that we are to hold the traditions which professedly come to us through a great number of intermediate persons? Where is the evidence that the Church was to hold those unwritten traditions and transmit them to future times? ¶ Whether by word. By preaching, when we were with you. It does not mean that he had sent any oral message to them by a third person. ¶ Or our epistle. The former letter which he had written to them.

16 Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself, and God even our Father, which ^a hath loved us, and hath given us everlasting consola-

^a John 13. 1. Rev. 1. 5.

16. Now our Lord Jesus Christ himself. This expression is equivalent to saying, "I pray our Lord Jesus Christ, and God our Father, to comfort you." It is really a prayer offered to the Saviour—a recognition of Christ as the source of consolation as well as the Father; a union of his name with that of the Father in invoking important blessings. It is such language as could be used only by one who regarded the Lord Jesus as divine. ¶ And God even our Father. Gr., "And God, and (kai) our Father;" though not incorrectly rendered "even our Father." If it should be contended that the use of the word "and"—"our Lord Jesus Christ, and God"—proves that the Lord Jesus is a different being from God, the use of the same word "and" would prove that the "Father" is a different being from God. But the truth is, the apostle meant to speak of the Father and the Son as the common source of the blessing for which he prayed. ¶ Which hath loved us. Referring particularly to the Father. The love which is referred to is that manifested in redemption, or which is shown us through Christ. See John iii. 16; 1 John iv.

tion and good hope ^b through grace,

17 Comfort your hearts, and stablish you in every good word and work.

^b 1 Pet. 1. 3.

9. ¶ And hath given us everlasting consolation. Not temporary comfort, but that which will endure forever. The joys of religion are not like other joys. They soon fade away; they always terminate at death; they cease when trouble comes—when sickness invades the frame, when wealth or friends depart, when disappointment lowers, when the senses by age refuse to minister as they once did to our pleasures. The comforts of religion depend on no such contingencies. They live through all these changes; they attend us in sickness, in poverty, in bereavement, in losses, and in age; they are with us in death; and they are perpetuated forever beyond the grave. ¶ And good hope through grace. See Notes on Rom. v. 2-5; Heb. vi. 19.

17. Comfort your hearts. See Notes on 1 Thess. iii. 2; v. 11, 14. The Thessalonians were in the midst of trials, and Paul prayed that they might have the full consolations of their religion. ¶ And stablish you. Make you firm and steadfast. 1 Thess. iii. 2, 13. ¶ In every good word and work. In every true doctrine, and in the practice of every virtue.

This chapter is very important in reference to the rise of that great antichristian power which has exerted, and which still exerts, so baleful an influence over the world. Assuming now that it refers to the Papacy, in accordance with the exposition which has been given, there are a few important reflections to which it gives rise.

(1.) The Second Advent or appearing of the Redeemer in our world is an event which is distinctly predicted in the Scriptures. This is assumed in this chapter; and though Paul corrects some errors into which the Thessalonians had fallen, he does not suggest this as one of them. Their error was in regard to the time of his appearing, not the fact.

(2.) The time when he will appear is not made known to men. The apostles did not pretend to designate it, nor did the Saviour himself. Matt. xxiv. 36; Mark xiii. 32; Acts i. 7.

(3.) The course of reasoning in this chapter would lead to the expectation that a considerable time must elapse before the Saviour would appear. The apostles, therefore, did not believe that the end of the world was near, and they did not teach false doctrine on the subject, as infidels have often alleged. No one, who attentively and candidly studies this chapter, it seems to me, can suppose that Paul believed that the Second Advent of the Saviour would occur within a short time, or during the generation when he lived. He has described a long series of events which were to intervene before the Saviour would appear—events which, if the interpretation which has been given is correct, have been in fact in a process of development from that time to the present, and which, it must have been foreseen, even then, would require a long period before they would be completed. There was to be a great apostasy. There were at that time subtle causes at work which would lead to it. Those causes were, however, then held in check and restrained by some foreign influence. But the time would come when that foreign force would be withdrawn. Then those hidden and restrained corruptions would develop themselves into this great anti-christian power. That power would sustain itself by a series of pretended miracles and lying wonders, and after all this would be the second coming of the Son of man. But this would require time. Such a series of events would not be completed in a day, or in a single generation. It would require a succession—perhaps a long succession—of years before the developments would be complete. It is clear, therefore, that the apostle did not hold that the Lord Jesus would return in that age, and that he did not mean to be understood as teaching it; and consequently it should not be said that he or his fellow-apostles were mistaken in the statements which they have recorded respecting the second coming of the Lord Jesus, and the end of the world.

(4.) The apostle Paul was inspired. He has recorded in this chapter a distinct prediction of an important series of events which were to occur at a future, and most of them at quite a remote period. They were such that they could have been foreseen by no natural sagacity, and by no human skill. There were, indeed, corruptions existing then in the Church, but no mere natural sagacity could have foreseen that they would grow up into that enormous system which would overshadow the Christian world, and live for so many ages.

(5.) If these predictions refer to the Papacy, we may see how we are to regard that system of religion. The simple inquiry, if this interpretation is correct, is, how did the apostle Paul regard that system to which he referred? Did he consider it to be the true Church? Did he regard it as a Church at all? The language which he uses will enable us easily to answer these questions. He speaks of it as “the apostasy;” he speaks of the head of that system as “the man of sin,” “the son of perdition,” “the wicked one,” and as “opposing and exalting himself above all that is called God;” he says that his “coming is after the working of Satan, with lying wonders, and with all deceivableness of unrighteousness.” Can it be believed then that he regarded this as a true Church of Jesus Christ? Are these the characteristics of the Church as laid down elsewhere in the Scriptures? Wherever it may lead, it seems clear to me that the apostle did not regard that system of which he spoke as having any of the marks of a true Church, and the only question which can be raised on this point is whether the fair interpretation of the passage demands that it shall be considered as referring to the Papacy. Protestants believe that it must be so understood, and Papists have not yet disproved the reasons which they allege for their belief.

(6.) If this is the fair interpretation, then we may see what is the value of the pretended “succession” of the ministry through that system. If such a regular “succession” of ministers from the apostles could be made out, what would it be worth? What is the value of a spiritual descent from Pope Alexander VI.? How would it increase the proper respect for the ministerial office, if it could be proved to be derived in a right line from those monsters of incest, ambition, covetousness, and blood who have occupied the Papal throne? A Protestant minister should blush and hang his head if it were charged on him that he held his office by no better title than such a derivation. Much less should he make it a matter of glorying, and an argument to prove that he only is an authorized minister, that he has received his office through such men.

(7.) From this chapter we may see the tendency of human nature to degeneracy. The elements of that great and corrupt apostasy existed even in apostolic times. Those elements grew regularly up into the system of the Papacy, and spread blighting and death over the whole Christian world. It is the tendency of human nature to corrupt the best things. The Christian Church was put in possession of a pure, and lovely, and glorious system of religion. It was a religion adapted to elevate and save the race. There was not an interest of humanity which it would not have fostered and promoted; there was not a source of human sorrow which it would not have mitigated or relieved; there were none of the race whom it would not have elevated and purified. Its influence, as far as it was seen, was uniformly of the happiest kind. It did no injury any where, but produced only good. But how soon was it voluntarily exchanged for the worst form of superstition and error that has ever brooded in darkness over mankind! How soon did the light fade, and how rapidly did it become more obscure, until it well-nigh went out altogether! And with what tenacity did the world adhere to the system that grew up under the great apostasy, maintaining it by learning, and power, and laws, and dungeons, and racks, and fagots! What a comment is this on human nature, thus "loving darkness more than light," and error rather than truth!

(8.) The chapter teaches the importance of resisting error at the beginning. These errors had their foundation in the time of the apostles. They were then comparatively small, and perhaps to many they appeared unimportant; and yet the whole Papal system was but the development of errors, the germs of which existed in their days. Had these been crushed, as Paul wished to crush them, the Church would have been saved from the corruption, the woes, and the persecutions produced by the Papacy. So error now should always be opposed—no matter how small or unimportant it may appear. We have no right to connive at it; to patronize it; to smile upon it. The beginnings of evil are always to be resisted with firmness; and if that is done, the triumph of truth will be certain.

(9.) The Church is safe. It has now passed through every conceivable form of trial, and still survives, and is now more vigorous and flourishing than it ever was before. It has passed through fiery times of persecution; it has survived the attempts of emperors and kings to destroy it; it has lived while the system of error described here by the apostle Paul has thrown its baleful shade over almost the whole Christian world. It can not reasonably be supposed that it will be called to pass through such trials again as it has already endured; but whether it does or not, the past history of the Church is a guarantee that it will survive all that it is destined to encounter in the future. None but a religion of divine origin could have continued to live amid so many corruptions, and so many attempts to destroy it; and in the view of the past history of that Church it is impossible not to come to the conclusion that it has been founded by God himself.

CHAPTER III.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter is made up of exhortations and directions in regard to the performance of various Christian duties.

(1.) The apostle asks their prayers. Vs. 1, 2. He desires them to pray particularly that the true religion might prosper, and that, in preaching the Gospel, he might be delivered from the opposition of unreasonable and wicked men.

(2.) He expresses confidence that God would incline them to do what was right, and prays that he would keep their hearts in his love, and in patient waiting for the Saviour. Ver. 3-5.

(3.) He commands them to remove from their number those who were disorderly, and especially those who were idle, and addresses an earnest exhortation to this class, that they would be diligently engaged in the prosecution of the business of their appropriate callings. Ver. 6-12.

CHAPTER III.

FINALLY, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord

may¹ have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you:

2 And that we may be delivered

¹ run.

(4.) He exhorts them not to be weary in doing well. Ver. 13.

(5.) He directs that if any one should not obey the commands given in this epistle, he should be noted, and they were to separate themselves from him. Yet they were not to regard him as an enemy, but to admonish him as a brother. Vs. 14, 15.

(6.) The epistle closes with the usual salutations. Ver. 16-18.

1. Finally brethren, pray for us. That is, for Paul, Silas, and Timothy, then engaged in arduous labors at Corinth. This request for the prayers of Christians is one which Paul often makes. See Notes on 1 Thess. v. 25. ¶ That the word of the Lord may have free course. That is, the Gospel. The margin is "run." So also the Greek. The idea is, that it might meet with no obstruction, but that it might be carried abroad with the rapidity of a racer out of whose way every hinderance was removed. The Gospel would spread rapidly in the earth if all the obstructions which men have put in its way were removed; and that they may be removed should be one of the constant subjects of prayer. ¶ And be glorified. Be honored; or appear glorious. ¶ Even as it is with you. It is evident from this that Paul met with some obstructions in preaching the Gospel where he was then laboring. What they were, he mentions in the next verse. He was then at Corinth (see the Introduction), and the history in the Acts of the Apostles informs us of the difficulties which he had to encounter there. See Acts xviii.

2. And that we may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men. That is, from opposition in their endeavors to spread the Gospel. Paul encountered such men every where, as all do who labor to diffuse the knowledge of the truth, but it is probable that there is particular reference here to the opposition which he encountered when in Corinth. This opposition arose mainly from the Jews. See Acts xviii. 5, 6, 12, 13. The word unreasonable is rendered in the margin absurd. The Greek word (ἀρόπος) means, properly, out of place; then absurd, unusual, strange; then improper, unreasonable, wicked. It is rendered in Luke xxiii. 41, amiss; in Acts xxiii. 6, harm. It does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. It refers here to men who acted amiss or improperly; men who were not found in the right place, or who had not the right views of things; and probably does not refer so much to their being positively wicked or malicious, as to their putting things out of their proper place. They gave an undue prominence to certain things, and less importance to others than they deserved. They had a distorted view of the value of objects, and in tenacious adherence to their own ideas, and prosecuting their own objects to the exclusion of all others, they presented a constant obstruction to the true Gospel. This word would apply, and probably was designed to be applied, to Jewish teachers (see Acts xviii. 5, 6) who gave an undue prominence to the laws of Moses; but it will apply to all who entertain distorted views of the relative importance of objects, and who put things out of their place. Men often have a hobby. They give more importance to some object than it deserves. They, therefore, undervalue other objects; press their own with improper zeal; denounce others who do not feel the same interest in them which they do; withdraw from those who will not go with them in their views; form separate parties; and thus throw themselves in the way of all who are endeavoring to do good in some other method. It was from men who thus put themselves out of place that the apostle prayed to be delivered. ¶ And wicked men. Men with bad aims and purposes. It is not always true that those who would come under the appellation of what the apostle here calls "unreasonable" are wicked. They are sometimes well-meaning but misguided men. But in this case, it seems, they were men of bad character, who were at heart opposed to what was good, as well as inclined to put things out of their place. ¶ For all men have not faith. Of the truth from ¹ unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith.

3 But the Lord ^a is faithful, who shall establish you, and keep ^b you from evil.

1 absurd.

a 1 Cor. 1. 9.

b John 17. 15.

of this, no one can doubt. The only question is as to its bearing on the case before us. Some suppose it means, "there are few men whom we can safely trust;" others, that it means that they have not that "upright and candid disposition which would engage men to receive the testimony of the apostles" (Doddridge); others, that "all men do not embrace the Christian faith, but many oppose it" (Benson); and others, that "all men do not believe, but the worthy only." — Bloomfield. The connection seems to require us to understand it as meaning that all men are not prepared to embrace the Gospel. Hence they set themselves against it, and from such men Paul prayed that he might be delivered. Comp. 2 Tim. iii. 8. The state of mind in which the apostle was when he wrote this, seems to have been this: He recollected the readiness with which the Thessalonians had embraced the Gospel, and the firmness with which they held it, and seems to have supposed that they would imagine that the same thing must be found true every where. But he says all men have not the same faith which they had; all were not prepared cordially and fully to embrace the Gospel. There were unreasonable and wicked men whom he had encountered, from whom he prayed that he might be delivered.

3. But the Lord is faithful. Though men can not be trusted, God is faithful to his promises and his purposes. He may always be confided in; and when men are unbelieving, perverse, unkind, and disposed to do us wrong, we may go to him, and we shall always find in him one in whom we may confide. This is an exceedingly interesting declaration, and is a beautiful illustration of the resource which a truly pious mind will feel that it has. We often have occasion to know, to our sorrow, that "all men have not faith." We witness their infidelity. We see how they turn away from the truth. We see many who once gave some evidence that they had "faith"

4 And we have confidence in the Lord touching you, that ye both do and will do the things which we command you.

5 And the Lord direct ^d your

c 2 Cor. 7. 16.

d 1 Chron. 29. 18.

abandon it all; and we see many in the Church who seem to have no true faith, and who refuse to lend their aid in promoting the cause of religion. In such circumstances, the heart is disposed to despond, and to ask whether religion can be advanced in the midst of so much indifference and opposition? At such times, how consoling it is to be able to turn, as Paul did, to one who is faithful; who never fails us; who will certainly accomplish his benevolent purposes. Men may be faithless and false, but God never is. They may refuse to embrace the Gospel, and set themselves against it, but God will not abandon his great purposes. Many who are in the Church may forget their solemn and sacred vows, and may show no fidelity to the cause of their Saviour, but God himself will never abandon that cause. To a pious mind it affords unspeakably more consolation to reflect that a faithful God is the friend of the cause which we love, than it would were all men, in and out of the Church, its friends. ¶ Who shall establish you, and keep you from evil. See Notes on John xvii. 5. Compare Notes on Eph. vi. 16. The allusion is to the Evil One, or Satan, and the meaning is, that God would keep them from his wiles.

4. And we have confidence in the Lord. Not primarily in you, for you have hearts like others, but in the Lord. It is remarkable that when Paul expresses the utmost confidence in Christians that they will live and act as becomes their profession, his reliance is not on any thing in themselves, but wholly on the faithfulness of God. He must be a stranger to the human heart who puts much confidence in it even in its best state. See Phil. i. 6; iv. 7; 2 Tim. i. 12; Jude 24; Rev. iii. 10; Prov. xxviii. 26.

5. And the Lord direct your hearts into the love of God. So direct your hearts that you may love God. ¶ And into the patient waiting for Christ. Marg., patience of Christ. The marginal reading is in accordance with the Greek, and seems best to express the apos-hearts into the love of God, and into the ¹patient waiting for Christ.

6 Now we command you, brethren,

1 or, patience of Christ.

tle's meaning. The prayer of the apostle was, (1.) that they might have the love of God in their hearts, and (2.) "the patience of Christ;" that is, the same patience which Christ evinced in his trials. They were then suffering affliction and persecution. They needed patience, that they might endure their trials in a proper manner. It was natural for the apostle to refer them to the Saviour, the great example of patience, and to pray that they might have the same which he had. That it does not mean that they were to wait patiently for the appearing of Christ, as our translation seems to imply, is quite clear, because the apostle had just been showing them that he would not appear until after a long series of events had occurred.

6. Now we command you, brethren.

The apostle now (ver. 6-12) turns to an important subject—the proper method of treating those who were idle and disorderly in the Church. In the previous epistle he had adverted to this subject, but in the mild language of exhortation. When he wrote that epistle he was aware that there were some among them who were disposed to be idle, and he had tenderly exhorted them "to be quiet, and to mind their own business, and to work with their own hands." 1 Thess. iv. 11. But it seems the exhortation, and the example of Paul himself when there (1 Thess. ii. 9), had not been effectual in inducing them to be industrious. It became, therefore, necessary to use the strong language of command, as he does here, and to require that, if they would not work, the Church should withdraw from them. What the original cause of their idleness was is not known. There seems no reason, however, to doubt that it was much increased by their expectation that the Saviour would soon appear, and that the world would soon come to an end. If this was to be so, of what use would it be to labor? Why strive to accumulate property with reference to the wants of a family, or to a time of sickness, or to old age? Why should a man build a house that was soon to be burnt up, or why ren, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ, that ye withdraw ^a yourselves from every brother ^b that walketh disorderly, and not after

E

a 1 Tim. 6. 5.

b 1 Cor. 5. 11, 13.

buy a farm which he was so soon to leave? The effect of the expectation of the speedy appearing of the Lord Jesus has always been to induce men to neglect their worldly affairs, and to lead idle lives. Man, naturally disposed to be idle, wants the stimulus of hope that he is laboring for the future welfare of himself, for his family, or for society, nor will he thus labor if he believes that the Saviour is about to appear. ¶ In the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. See Notes on 1 Cor. iv. 4. ¶ That ye withdraw yourselves. See Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 5. This is the true notion of Christian discipline. It is not primarily that of cutting a man off, or denouncing him, or excommunicating him; it is that of withdrawing from him. We cease to have fellowship with him. We do not regard him any longer as a Christian brother. We separate ourselves from him. We do not seek to affect him in any other respect; we do not injure his name or standing as a man, or hold him up to reprobation; we do not follow him with denunciation or a spirit of revenge; we simply cease to recognize him as a Christian brother, when he shows that he is no longer worthy to be regarded as such. We do not deliver him over to the civil arm; we do not inflict any positive punishment on him; we leave him unmolested in all his rights as a citizen, a man, a neighbor, a husband, a father, and simply say that he is no longer one of us as a Christian. How different is this from excommunication, as it has been commonly understood! How different from the anathemas fulminated by the Papacy, and the delivering of the heretic over to the civil power! ¶ From every brother that walketh disorderly. Compare Notes on 1 Cor. v. 11-13. A "disorderly walk" denotes conduct that is in any way contrary to the rules of Christ. The proper idea of the word used here (ἀτάκτως), is that of soldiers who do not keep the ranks; who are regardless of order; and then those who are irregular in any way. The word would include any violation of the rules of Christ on any subject. ¶ And not after the tradi-

the tradition which ye received of us.

7 For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us: for we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you;

8 Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought; but wrought^a with labour and travail night and day, that we might not be chargeable to any of you:

^a Acts 18. 3; 20. 34.

^b 1 Cor. 9. 6.

tion which ye received of us. According to the doctrine which we delivered to you. See Notes on ch. ii. 15. This shows that by the word "tradition" the apostle did not mean unwritten doctrines handed down from one to another, for he evidently alludes to what he had himself taught them, and his direction is not that that should be handed down by them, but that they should obey it.

7. For yourselves know how ye ought to follow us. You know what you should do in order to imitate us. ¶ For we behaved not ourselves disorderly among you. See Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 10.

8. Neither did we eat any man's bread for nought. We were not supported in idleness at the expense of others. We gave a fair equivalent for all that we received, and, in fact, labored for our own support. See Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 9.

9. Not because we have not power, etc. See Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 6, 12-14.

10. For even when we were with you, this we commanded you. It would seem from this that the evil of which the apostle here complains had begun to operate even when he was with them. There were those who were disposed to be idle, and who needed the solemn command of an apostle to induce them to labor. ¶ That if any would not work, neither should he eat. That is, at the public expense. They should not be supported by the Church. This was a maxim among the Jews (see Wetstein, in loc.), and the same sentiment may be found in Homer, Demosthenes, and Pythagoras. See Grotius, in loc. The maxim is founded in obvious justice, and is in accordance with the great law under which our Creator has placed us, Gen. iii. 19. That law, in the circumstances, was benevolent, and it should be our aim to carry it

9 Not because we have not power,^b but to make ourselves an example unto you to follow us.

10 For even when we were with you, this we commanded you, that^c if any would not work, neither should he eat.

11 For we hear that there are some which walk among you disorderly, working not at all, but are busy-bodies.^d

^c Gen. 3. 19.

^d 1 Tim. 5. 13. 1 Pet. 4. 15.

out in reference to ourselves and to others. The rule here laid down by the apostle extends to all who are able to work for a living, and who will not do it, and binds us not to contribute to their support if they will not labor for it. It should be regarded as extending (1.) to the members of a Church—who, though poor, should not be supported by their brethren, unless they are willing to work in any way they can for their own maintenance. (2.) To those who beg from door to door, who should never be assisted unless they are willing to do all they can do for their own support. No one can be justified in assisting a lazy man. In no possible circumstances are we to contribute to foster idleness. A man might as properly help to maintain open vice.

11. For we hear. It is not known in what way this was made known to Paul, whether by Timothy, or by some other one. He had no doubt of its truth, and he seems to have been prepared to believe it the more readily from what he saw when he was among them. ¶ Which walk disorderly. See Notes on ver. 6. ¶ But are busy-bodies. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. v. 13; 1 Pet. iv. 15. That is, they meddled with the affairs of others—a thing which they who have nothing of their own to busy themselves about will be very likely to do. The apostle had seen that there was a tendency to this when he was in Thessalonica, and hence he had commanded them to "do their own business." 1 Thess. iv. 11. The injunction, it seems, had availed little, for there is no class of persons who will so little heed good counsel as those who have a propensity to intermeddle with the affairs of others. One of the indispensable things to check this is, that each one should have enough to 12 Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus Christ, that with quietness they work,^a and eat their own bread.

13 But ye, brethren,¹ be not ^b weary in well doing.

^a Eph. 4. 28.
^b 1 Cor. 15. 58.

1 or, faint not.

14 And if any man obey not our word by ² this epistle, note that man, and have ^c no company with him, that he may be ashamed.

15 Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother.^d

² or, signify that man by an epistle.

^c Matt. 18. 17. Ver. 6.

^d Lev. 19. 17.

do himself; and one of the most pestiferous of all persons is he who has nothing to do but to look after the affairs of his neighbors. In times of affliction and want we should be ready to lend our aid. At other times, we should feel that our neighbor can manage his own affairs as well as we can do it for him; or, if he can not, it is his business, not ours. The Greek word used occurs only here and in 1 Tim. v. 13. Comp. Notes on Phil. ii. 4.

12. Now them that are such we command and exhort by our Lord Jesus, etc. A more solemn command and appeal to do what he had before enjoined on all of them. 1 Thess. iv. 11. See Notes on that verse.

13. But ye, brethren, be not weary in well-doing. Marg., faint not. The Greek means, properly, to turn out a coward; then to be faint-hearted; to despond. The idea is, that they were not to be discouraged from doing good to the truly worthy and deserving by the idleness and improper conduct of some who asked their assistance. They were, indeed, shiftless and worthless. They would not labor; they spent their time in intermeddling with the concerns of their neighbors, and they depended for their support on the charity of others. The tendency of this, as all who have ever been applied to by such persons for aid know, is to indispose us to do good to any. We learn insensibly to feel that all who ask for aid are of the same character; or, not being able to discriminate, we close our hands alike against all. Against this the apostle would guard us, and he says that though there may be many such persons, and though we may find it difficult to distinguish the worthy from the unworthy, we should not become so disheartened as not to give at all. Nor should we be weary though the applications for assistance are frequent. They are, indeed, frequent. God designs that they should be. But the effect should not be to dishearten us, or to make us weary in well-doing, but to fill us with gratitude—for it is a privilege to be permitted to do good. See Acts xx. 35. It is the great distinguishing characteristic of God that he always does good. It was that which marked the character of the Redeemer, that he “went about doing good;” and whenever God gives us the opportunity and the means of doing good, it should be to us an occasion of special thanksgiving. A man ought to become “weary” of every thing else sooner than of evincing benevolence. Comp. Notes on Gal. vi. 10.

14. And if any man obey not our word by this epistle. Marg., “or, signify that man by an epistle.” According to the marginal reading, this would mean “signify, mark out, or designate that man to me by an epistle.” The difference is merely whether we unite the words “by the epistle” with what goes before or what follows. The Greek would admit of either construction (Winer, p. 93), but it seems to me that the construction in the text is the correct one, for (1.) the requirement was to proceed to discipline such a man by withdrawing from him; (2.) in order to do this it was not necessary that the case should be made known to Paul, for there was no supposable difficulty in it, and the effect would be only needless delay; (3.) Paul regarded the right of discipline as residing in the Church itself, and did not require that cases should be referred to him to determine. See Notes on 1 Cor. v. 2-4. (4.) Though the Greek will admit of either construction, yet it rather favors this. See Olshausen, in loc. ¶ Note that man. The word here used, means to mark; to sign; to note with marks; and the idea is, set such a mark upon him that he may be shunned; that is, withdraw all Christian fellowship from him. ¶ And have no company with him. The Greek word here means, to mix up together; then 16 Now the Lord ^a of peace himself give you peace always by all means. The Lord be with you all.

17 The salutation ^b of Paul with mine own hand, which is the token in every epistle: so I write.

^a Rom. 16. 20.

^b 1 Cor. 16. 21.

to mingle together with; to have intercourse with. The idea is, that they were not to mingle with him as a Christian brother, or as one of their own number. They were not to show that they regarded him as a worthy member of the Church, or as having a claim to its privileges. The extent of their discipline was, that they were to withdraw from him. See Notes on ver. 6, and Matt. xviii. 17. Comp. 2 John 10, 11.

15. Yet count him not as an enemy, but admonish him as a brother. This shows the true spirit in which discipline is to be administered in the Christian Church. We are not to deal with a man as an adversary over whom we are to seek to gain a victory, but as an erring brother—a brother still, though he errs. There was necessity for this caution. There is great danger that when we undertake the work of discipline we shall forget that he who is the subject of it is a brother, and that we shall regard and treat him as an enemy. Such is human nature. We set ourselves in array against him. We cut him off as one who is unworthy to walk with us. We triumph over him, and consider him at once as an enemy of the Church, and as having lost all claim to its sympathies. We abandon him to the tender mercies of a cold and unfeeling world, and let him take his course. Perhaps we follow him with anathemas, and hold him up as unworthy the confidence of mankind.

18 The ^c grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. Amen.

The second epistle to the Thessalonians was written from Athens.

^c Rom. 16. 24.

Now all this is entirely unlike the method and aim of discipline which the New Testament requires. There all is kind and gentle, though firm; the offender is a man and a brother still; he is to be followed with tender sympathy and prayer, and the hearts and the arms of the Christian brotherhood are to be open to receive him again when he gives any evidence of repenting.

16. Now the Lord of peace. The Lord who alone can impart peace. See Notes on Rom. xv. 33; 1 Cor. xiv. 33; Heb. xiii. 20; John xiv. 27.

17. The salutation of Paul with mine own hand. See Notes on 1 Cor. xvi. 21. ¶ Which is the token in every epistle. Gr., sign. That is, this signature is a sign or proof of the genuineness of the epistle. - Comp. Notes on Gal. vi. 11. ¶ So I write. Referring, probably, to some mark or method which Paul had of signing his name, which was well known, and which would easily be recognized by them.

18. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you all. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 20.

From the subscription to this epistle, it purports to have been "written from Athens." This is probably incorrect, as there is reason to think that it was written from Corinth. See the Introduction. At all events, this subscription is of no authority. See Notes at the end of the Epistles to the Romans and 1 Corinthians.

NOTES,
EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,
ON THE
FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TIMOTHY.
BY ALBERT BARNES.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. Notices of the Life of Timothy.

NEARLY all that can now be known of Timothy is to be learned from the New Testament. He was a native of either Derbe or Lystra, but it is not certainly known which. Acts xvi. 1. Paul found him there on his visit to those places, and does not appear to have been acquainted with him before. His mother, whose name was Eunice, was a Jewess, and was pious, as was also his grandmother, Lois. 2 Tim. i. 3. His father was a Greek, but was evidently not unfriendly to the Jewish religion, for Timothy had been carefully trained in the Scriptures. 2 Tim. iii. 15. Paul came to Derbe and Lystra, and became acquainted with him, about A.D. 51 or 52; but there is no method now of ascertaining the exact age of Timothy at that time, though there is reason to think that he was then a youth. 1 Tim. iv. 12. It would seem, also, that he was a youth of uncommon hope and promise, and that there had been some special indications that he would rise to distinction as a religious man, and would exert an extended influence in favor of religion. 1 Tim. i. 18. At the time when Paul first met him, he was a "disciple," or a Christian convert; but the means which had been used for his conversion are unknown. His mother had been before converted to the Christian faith (Acts xvi. 1), and Timothy was well known to the Christians in the neighboring towns of Lystra and Iconium. The Gospel had been preached by Paul and Barnabas, in Iconium, Derbe, and Lystra, some six or seven years before it is said that Paul met with Timothy (Acts xvi. 1), and it is not improbable that this youth had been converted in the interval.

Several things appear to have combined to induce the apostle to introduce him into the ministry, and to make him a traveling companion. His youth; his acquaintance with the Holy Scriptures; the "prophecies which went on before him;" his talents; his general reputation in the Church, and, it would seem also, his amiableness of manners, fitting him to be an agreeable companion, attracted the attention of the apostle, and led him to desire that he might be a fellow-laborer with him. To satisfy the prejudices of the Jews, and to prevent any possible objection which might be made against his qualifications for the ministerial office, Paul circumcised him (Acts xvi. 3), and he was ordained to the office of the ministry by "the laying on of the hands of the presbytery." 1 Tim. iv. 14. When this ordination occurred is not known; but it is most probable that it was before he went on his travels with Paul, as it is known that Paul was present on the occasion, and took a leading part in the transaction. 2 Tim. i. 6.

Timothy, having joined Paul and Silas, accompanied them on a visit to the churches of Phrygia and Galatia, in which they delivered them the decrees to keep which had been ordained at Jerusalem. Acts xvi. 4, seq. Having done this, they endeavored to go together into Bithynia, a province of Asia Minor, on the northwest, but were prevented; and they then went into Mysia, and to the towns of Troas. Acts xvi. 8. Here Luke appears to have joined them; and from this place, in obedience to a vision which appeared to Paul, they went into Macedonia, and preached the Gospel first at Philippi, where they established a Church. In this city Paul and Silas were imprisoned; but it is remarkable that nothing is said of Timothy and Luke, and it is not known whether they shared in the sufferings of the persecution there or not. Every thing, however, renders it probable that Timothy was with them at Philippi, as he is mentioned as having started with them to go on the journey (Acts xvi. 3, seq.), and as we find him at Berea after the apostle had been released from prison, and had preached at Thessalonica and Berea. Acts xvii. 14. From this place Paul was conducted to Athens, but left an injunction for Silas and Timothy to join him there as soon as possible. This was done: but when Timothy had come to Athens, Paul felt it to be important that the Church at Thessalonica should be visited and comforted in its afflictions, and, being prevented from doing it himself, he sent Timothy, at great personal inconvenience, back to that Church. Having discharged the duty there, he rejoined the apostle at Corinth (Acts xviii. 5), from which place the First Epistle to the Thessalonians was written. See Intro. to 1 Thess., and Notes on 1 Thess. i. 1, and iii. 2. These transactions occurred about A.D. 52.

Paul remained at Corinth a year and a half (Acts xviii. 11), and it is probable that Timothy and Silas remained with him. See 2 Thess. i. 1. From Corinth he sailed for Syria, accompanied by Priscilla and Aquila, whom he appears to have left on his way at Ephesus. Acts xviii. 18, 19-26. Whether Timothy and Silas accompanied him is not mentioned, but we find Timothy again with him at Ephesus, after he had been to Cesarea and Antioch, and had returned to Ephesus. Acts xviii. 22; xix. 1-22. From Ephesus, he sent Timothy and Erastus to Macedonia (Acts xix. 22), but for what purpose, or how long they remained, is unknown. From 1 Cor. iv. 17, it appears that Paul expected that on this journey Timothy would stop at Corinth, and would give the Church there instructions adapted to its situation. Paul continued in Ephesus until he was compelled to depart by the tumult caused by Demetrius, when he left and went to Macedonia. Acts xx. Whether Timothy, during the interval, had returned to Ephesus from Macedonia, is not expressly mentioned in the history; but such a supposition is not improbable. Paul, during the early part of his residence in Ephesus, appears to have labored quietly (Acts xix. 9, 10); and Timothy was sent away before the disturbances caused by Demetrius. Acts xix. 22. Paul designed to follow him soon, and then to go to Jerusalem, and then to Rome. Acts xix. 21. Paul (Acts xx. 31) was in Ephesus in all about three years; and it is not unreasonable to suppose that he remained there after Timothy was sent to Macedonia long enough for him to go and to return to him again. If so, it is possible that when he himself went away, he left Timothy there in his place. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 3. It has been the general opinion that the First Epistle to Timothy was written at this time, either when the apostle was on his way to Macedonia, or while in Macedonia. But this opinion has not been unquestioned. The departure of Paul for Macedonia occurred about A.D. 58 or 59. In Acts xx. 4, Timothy is again mentioned as accompanying Paul, after he had remained in Greece three months, on the route to Syria through Macedonia. He went with him, in company with many others, into "Asia." Going before Paul, they waited for him at Troas (Acts xx. 5), and thence doubtless accompanied him on his way to Jerusalem. It was on this occasion that Paul delivered his farewell charge to the elders of the Church of Ephesus, at Miletus. Acts xx. 17, seq. When in Macedonia, Paul wrote the Second Epistle to the Corinthians, and Timothy was then with him, for he unites in the salutations. 2 Cor. i. 1. Timothy was also with the apostle on this journey at Corinth, when from that city he wrote his Epistle to the Romans. Rom. xvi. 21.

The subsequent events of the life of Timothy are less known. It does not appear from the Acts of the Apostles that he was with Paul during his two years' imprisonment at Cesarea, or during his voyage to Rome. It is certain, however, that he was at Rome with the apostle when he wrote the Epistles to the Philippians, to the Colossians, and to Philemon. Phil. i. 1; Col. i. 1; Philem. i. From Heb. xiii. 23, it appears also that Timothy had been with the apostle there, but that when the epistle was written he was absent on some embassy, and that Paul was expecting his speedy return. See Notes on that verse. Between the first and second imprisonment of Paul at Rome, no mention is made of Timothy, nor is it known where he was, or whether he accompanied him in his travels or not. When he was imprisoned there the second time, he wrote the Second Epistle to Timothy, in which he desires him to come to Rome, and bring with him several things which he had left at Troas. 2 Tim. iv. 9, 13-21. If Timothy went to Rome, agreeably to the request of the apostle, it is probable that he was a witness there of his martyrdom.

In regard to the latter part of the life of Timothy, there is nothing which can be depended on. It has been the current opinion, derived from tradition, that he was "bishop" of Ephesus; that he died and was buried there; and that his bones were subsequently removed to Constantinople. The belief that he was "bishop" of Ephesus rests mainly on the "subscription" to the Second Epistle to Timothy—which is no authority whatever. See Notes on that subscription. On the question whether he was an episcopal prelate at Ephesus, the reader may consult my "Inquiry into the Organization and Government of the Apostolic Church," p. 88-107. The supposition that he died at Ephesus, and was subsequently removed to Constantinople, rests on no certain historical basis.

Timothy was long the companion and the friend of the apostle Paul, and is often mentioned by him with affectionate interest. Indeed there seems to have been no one of his fellow-laborers to whom he was so warmly attached. See 1 Tim. i. 2-18; 2 Tim. i. 2; ii. 1; 1 Cor. iv. 17, where he calls him "his own son," and "his beloved son;" 2 Tim. i. 4, where he expresses his earnest desire to see him, and makes a reference to the tears which Timothy shed at parting from him; 1 Cor. xvi. 10, 11, where he bespeaks for him a kind reception among the Corinthians; 1 Cor. xvi. 10; Rom. xvi. 21; 1 Thess. iii. 2, and especially ii. 19, 20, where he speaks of his fidelity, of his usefulness to him in his labors, and of the interest which he took in the churches which the apostle had established.

§ 2. When and Where the Epistle was Written.

The subscription at the close of the epistle states that it was written from Laodicea. But these subscriptions are of no authority, and many of them are false. See Notes at the end of 1 Corinthians. There has been much diversity of opinion in regard to the time when this epistle was written, and, of course, in regard to the place where it was composed. All that is certain from the epistle itself, is that it was addressed to Timothy at Ephesus, and that it was soon after Paul had left that city to go into Macedonia. 1 Tim. i. 3. Paul is mentioned in the Acts as having been at Ephesus twice. Acts xviii. 19–23; xix. 1–41. After his first visit there, he went directly to Jerusalem, and, of course, it could not have been written at that time. The only question then is, whether it was written when Paul left the city, having been driven away by the excitement caused by Demetrius (Acts xx. 1), or whether he visited Ephesus again on some occasion after his first imprisonment at Rome, and, of course, after the narrative of Luke in the Acts of the Apostles closes. If on the former occasion, it was written about the year 58 or 59; if the latter, about the year 64 or 65. Critics have been divided in reference to this point, and the question is still unsettled, and it may be impossible to determine it with entire certainty.

Those who have maintained the former opinion, among others, are Theodoret, Benson, Zachariae, Michaelis, Schmidt, Koppe, Planck, Grotius, Lightfoot, Witsius, Lardner, Hug, and Professor Stuart. The latter opinion, that it was written subsequently to the period of Paul's first imprisonment at Rome, is maintained by Paley, Pearson, L'Enfant, Leclerc, Cave, Mill, Whitby, Macknight, and others.

An examination of the reasons in favor of each of these opinions in regard to the date of the epistle may be found in Paley's Horæ Paul.; Macknight; Hug's Introd., and Koppe, Proleg.

The theory of Eichhorn, which is peculiar, and which is supported by some ingenious and plausible but not conclusive reasoning, may be seen in his Einleitung in das neue Test., 3 B., 314–352.

In the diversity of opinion which prevails about the time when the epistle was written, it is impossible to determine the question in such a manner as to leave no room for doubt. After the most careful examination which I have been able to give to the subject, however, it seems to me that the former opinion is correct, that it was written soon after Paul was driven from Ephesus by the tumult caused by Demetrius, as recorded in Acts xix.; xx. 1. The reasons for this opinion are briefly these:

1. This is the only record that occurs in the New Testament of the apostle's having gone from Ephesus to Macedonia. See above. It is natural, therefore, to suppose that this is referred to in 1 Tim. i. 3, unless there is some insuperable difficulty in the way.

2. There is no certain evidence that Paul visited the Church at Ephesus after his first imprisonment at Rome. It is certainly possible that he did, but there is no record of any such visit in the New Testament, nor any historical record of it elsewhere. If there had been such a visit after his release, and if this epistle was written then, it is remarkable that the apostle does not make any allusion to his imprisonment in this epistle, and that he does not refer at all to his own escape from this danger at Rome. Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 16, 17.

3. The supposition that the epistle was written at the time supposed, agrees better with the character of the epistle, and with the design for which Timothy was left at Ephesus, than the others. It is manifest from the epistle that the Church was in some respects in an unsettled condition, and it would seem also that one part of the duty of Timothy there was to see that it was placed under a proper organization. This Paul had evidently proposed to accomplish himself; but it is clear from chap. i. 3 that he had left his work unfinished, and that he gave what he had proposed to do into the hands of Timothy to be perfected. After the first imprisonment of Paul at Rome, however, there is every reason to suppose that the Church was completely organized. Even when Paul went from Macedonia to Jerusalem (Acts xx.), there were "elders" placed over the Church at Ephesus, whom Paul assembled at Miletus, and to whom he gave his parting charge, and his final instructions in regard to the Church.

4. At the time when Paul wrote this epistle, Timothy was a young man—a youth. 1 Tim. iv. 12. It is true, that if he was somewhere about twenty years of age when he was introduced into the ministry, as has been commonly supposed, this language would not be entirely inappropriate, even after the imprisonment of Paul, but still the language would more properly denote one somewhat younger than Timothy would be at that time.

5. To this may be added the declaration of Paul in 1 Tim. iii. 14, that he "hoped to come to him shortly." This is an expression which agrees well with the supposition that he had himself been driven away before he had intended to leave; that he had left something unfinished there which he desired to complete, and that he hoped that affairs would soon be in such a state that he would be permitted to return. It may be also suggested, as a circumstance of some importance, though not conclusive, that when Paul met the elders of the Church of Ephesus at Miletus, he said that he had no expectation of ever seeing them again: "And now, behold, I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more." Acts xx. 25. I do not think that this is to be understood as an inspired prediction, affirming with absolute certainty that he never would see them again, but that he rather expressed his apprehensions that it would be so from the circumstances which then existed. Acts xx. 22, 23. Still, this passage shows that when he uttered it he did not expect to visit Ephesus again, as he manifestly did when he wrote the epistle to Timothy.

These considerations seem so clear that they would leave no doubt on the mind, were it not for certain things which it seems to many impossible to reconcile with this supposition. The difficulties are the following:

1. That before Paul went to Macedonia, he had sent Timothy with Erastus before him (Acts xix. 22), purposing to follow them at no distant period, and to pass through Macedonia and Achaia, and then to go to Jerusalem, and afterward to visit Rome. Acts xix. 21. As he had sent Timothy before him but so short a time before he left Ephesus, it is asked how Timothy could be left at Ephesus when Paul went himself to Macedonia? To this objection we may reply, that it is not improbable, by any means, that Timothy may have accomplished the object of his journey to Macedonia, and may have returned to the apostle at Ephesus before he was driven away. It does not appear, from the narrative, that Timothy was intrusted with any commission which would require a long time to fulfill, nor that Paul expected that he would remain in Macedonia until he himself came. The purpose for which he sent Timothy and Erastus is not indeed mentioned, but it seems probable that it was with reference to the collection which he proposed to take up for the poor saints at Jerusalem. See Notes on Acts xix. 21, 22. Comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 1-6. If it was the purpose to prepare the churches for such a collection, it could not have required any considerable time, nor was it necessary that Timothy should remain long in a place; and it was natural also that he should return to the apostle at Ephesus and apprise him of what he had done, and what was the prospect in regard to the collection. It has been clearly shown by Hug (Introd. to the New Test., § 104-109), that such a journey could easily have been made in the time during which the apostle remained at Ephesus after he had sent Timothy and Erastus to Macedonia.

2. The next objection—and one which is regarded by Paley as decisive against the supposition that the epistle was written on this occasion—is that, from the Second Epistle to the Corinthians (i. 1), it is evident that, at the time in which this epistle is supposed to have been written, Timothy was with the apostle in Macedonia. The Second Epistle to the Corinthians was undoubtedly written during this visit of Paul to Macedonia, and at that time Timothy was with him. See the Introd. to 2 Cor., § 3. "How, then, can it be supposed that he was at Ephesus? Or how can this fact be reconciled with the supposition that Timothy was left there, and especially with the declaration of Paul to him (1 Tim. iii. 14), that he "hoped to come to him shortly?" That Paul expected that Timothy would remain at Ephesus, at least for some time, is evident from 1 Tim. iii. 15, "But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house of God;" and from chap. iv. 13, "Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine." The only solution of this difficulty is, that Timothy had left Ephesus, and had followed the apostle into Macedonia; and the only question here is, whether, since the apostle designed that he should remain at Ephesus, and expected himself to return and meet him there, Timothy would be likely to leave that place and go to Macedonia. It is certain that the history in the Acts does not make this record, but that is no material objection—since it can not be supposed that every occurrence in the travels of the apostles was recorded. But there are two or three circumstances which may render the supposition that Timothy, either by the concurrence, or by the direction of Paul, privately communicated to him, may have left Ephesus sooner than was at first contemplated, and may have rejoined him in Macedonia. (1.) One is, that the main business which Timothy was appointed to perform at Ephesus—to give a solemn charge to certain persons there to teach no other doctrine but that which Paul taught (1 Tim. i. 3)—might have been speedily accomplished. Paul was driven away in haste, and, as he had not the opportunity of doing this himself as he wished, he left Timothy in charge of it. But this did not require, of necessity, any considerable time. (2.) Another is, that the business of appointing suitable officers over the Church there, might also have been soon accomplished. In fact, the Church there is known to have been supplied with proper officers not long after this, for Paul sent from Miletus for the elders to meet him there on his way to Jerusalem. This remark is made in accordance with the opinion that a part of the work which Timothy was expected to perform there was to constitute proper officers over the Church. But there is no proof that that was a part of his business. It is not specified in what Paul mentions, in chap. i. 3, as the design for which he was left there, and it is hardly probable that the apostle would have spent so long a time as he did in Ephesus—nearly three years (Acts xx. 31)—without having organized the Church with proper officers. Besides, the address of Paul to the elders at Miletus implies that they had received their appointment before he left them. See Acts xx. 18–35, particularly ver. 35. The instructions to Timothy in this epistle about the proper qualifications of the officers of the Church, do not prove that he was then to appoint officers at Ephesus, for they are general instructions, having no particular reference to the Church there, and designed to guide him in his work through life. There is, therefore, nothing in the duties which Timothy was to perform at Ephesus which would forbid the supposition that he may have soon followed the apostle into Macedonia. (3.) It appears that though Paul may have intended, if possible, to visit Ephesus on his way to Jerusalem, in accordance with 1 Tim. iii. 14, 15; iv. 13, yet, if that had been his intention, he subsequently changed his mind, and found it necessary to make other arrangements. Thus it is said (Acts xx. 16) that “Paul had determined to sail by Ephesus, because he would not spend the time in Asia;” that is, he had resolved to sail past Ephesus without visiting it. It would seem probable also, that this resolution had been formed before he left Macedonia, for it is said that he “had determined” it (ἔκρινε), and, if so, there is no improbability in supposing that he had in some way caused it to be intimated to Timothy that he wished him to leave Ephesus and join him before he left Macedonia. (4.) In fact, and in accordance with this supposition, we find Timothy with Paul when he went on that occasion into “Asia.” Acts xx. 4, 5. These considerations render it probable that the epistle was written to Timothy soon after Paul had left Ephesus to go into Macedonia after the tumult excited by Demetrius. As Paul was driven away unexpectedly, and when he had not completed what he designed to do there, nothing is more natural than the supposition that he would embrace the earliest opportunity to give suitable instructions to Timothy, that he might know how to complete the work.

§ 3. The Occasion and Design of the Epistle.

This is specified in chap. i. 3. Paul had gone into Macedonia, having been suddenly driven away from Ephesus, before he had entirely accomplished what he designed to do there. He left Timothy there to "charge some that they teach no other doctrine;" that is, no other doctrine than that which he had himself taught when there. It is clear, from this, that there were certain errors prevailing which Paul thought it of the highest importance to have corrected. In regard to those errors, see the Introduction to the Epistle to the Ephesians, and the Epistle to the Colossians. Some of the circumstances which gave occasion to this epistle can be gathered from the history in the Acts of the Apostles; others can be derived from the epistle itself. From these sources of information we learn the following things in reference to the state of the Church at Ephesus, which made it proper that Timothy should be left there, and that these instructions should be given him to regulate his conduct.

(1.) There was much opposition to the apostle Paul from the Jews who resided there. Acts xix. 8, 9.

(2.) There were in the Church teachers who endeavored to enforce the maxims of the Jewish law, and to represent that law as binding on Christians. 1 Tim. i. 6, 7.

(3.) Some of the Jews residing there were addicted to exorcism, and endeavored to make use of Christianity and the name of Jesus to promote their selfish ends. Acts xix. 14. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 4.

(4.) The Jewish teachers laid great stress on genealogies and traditions, and were much given to debates about various questions connected with the law. 1 Tim. i. 4-6.

(5.) There were erroneous views prevailing respecting the rights of women, and the place which they ought to occupy in the Church. 1 Tim. ii. 8-15.

(6.) The organization of the officers of the Church had not been effected as Paul wished it to be. It is probable that some of the officers had been appointed, and that some instructions had been given to them in regard to their duties, but the whole arrangement had not been completed. 1 Tim. iii., iv.

(7.) There were certain questions in regard to the proper treatment of widows which had not yet been determined. 1 Tim. v.

(8.) The apostle in his preaching had inculcated benevolent principles, and had asserted the natural equality of all men, and it would seem that certain persons had taken occasion from this to excite a spirit of discontent and insubordination among those who were servants. The doctrine seems to have been advanced that, as all men were equal, and all had been redeemed by the same blood, therefore those who had been held in bondage were free from all obligation to serve their masters. There were those evidently who sought to excite them to insurrection; to break down the distinctions in society; and to produce a state of insubordination and disorder. 1 Tim. vi. Comp. Eph. vi. 5-10; Col. iii. 22; iv. 2.

Such appears to have been the state of things when the apostle was compelled suddenly to leave Ephesus. He had hitherto directed the affairs of the Church there mainly himself, and had endeavored to correct the errors then prevailing, and to establish the Church on a right foundation. Matters appear to have been tending to the desired result; religion was acquiring a strong hold on the members of the Church (Acts xix. 18-20); error was giving way; the community was becoming more and more impressed with the value of Christianity; the influence of idolatry was becoming less and less (Acts xix. 23, seq.); and the arrangements for the complete organization of the Church were in progress. Such was the promising state of things in these respects that the apostle hoped to be able to leave Ephesus at no very distant period, and had actually made arrangements to do it. Acts xix. 21. But his arrangements were not quite finished, and before they were completed he was compelled to leave by the tumult excited by Demetrius. He left Timothy, therefore, to complete the arrangements, and, in this first epistle, gave him all the instructions which were necessary to guide him in that work.

This view of the state of things in Ephesus at the time when the apostle was constrained to leave it, will enable us to understand the drift of the epistle, and the reasons why the various topics found in it were introduced. At the same time, the instructions are of so general a character that they would be an invaluable guide to Timothy not only at Ephesus, but through his life; and not only to him, but to all the ministers of the Gospel in every age and land. A more detailed view of these topics will be furnished in the analysis prefixed to the several chapters of the epistle.

The Epistles to Timothy and Titus occupy a very important place in the New Testament, and without them there would be a manifest and most material defect in the volume of inspiration. Their canonical authority has never been questioned by the great body of the Church, and there is no doubt that they are the productions of the apostle Paul. If the various epistles which he wrote, and the various other books of the New Testament, be attentively examined, it will be found that each one is designed to accomplish an important object, and that if any one were removed a material chasm would be made. Though the removal of any one of them would not so impair the volume of the New Testament as to obscure any essential doctrine, or prevent our obtaining the knowledge of the way of salvation from the remainder, yet it would mar the beauty and symmetry of the truth, and would render the system of instruction defective and incomplete.

This is true in regard to the Epistles to Timothy and Titus, as it is of the other epistles. They fill a department which nothing else in the New Testament would enable us to supply, and without which instructions to man respecting redemption would be incomplete. They relate mainly to the office of the ministry; and though there are important instructions of the Saviour himself respecting the office (Matt. x., Mark xvi., and elsewhere), and though in the address of Paul to the elders of Ephesus (Acts xx.), and in the Epistles to the Corinthians, there are invaluable suggestions respecting it, yet such is its importance in the organization of the Church, that more full and complete instructions seem to be imperiously demanded. Those instructions are furnished in these epistles. They are as full and complete as we could desire in regard to the nature of the office, the qualifications for it, and the duties which grow out of it. They are fitted not only to direct Timothy and Titus in the work to which they were specifically appointed, but to counsel the ministry in every age and in every land. It is obvious that the character and welfare of the Church depend greatly, if not entirely, on the character of the ministry. The office of the ministry is God's great appointment for the preservation of pure religion, and for spreading it abroad through the world. The Church adheres to the truth; is built up in faith; is distinguished for love, and purity, and zeal, in proportion as the ministry is honored, and shows itself qualified for its work. In every age corruption in the Church has commenced with the ministry; and where the Gospel has been spread abroad with zeal, and the Church has arisen in her strength and beauty, it has been pre-eminently where God has sent down his Spirit in copious measures on those who have filled the sacred office. So important, then, is this office to the welfare of the Church and the world, that it was desirable that full instructions should be furnished in the volume of revelation in regard to its nature and design. Such instructions we have in these epistles, and there is scarcely any portion of the New Testament which the Church could not better afford to part with than the Epistles to Timothy and Titus. Had the ministry always been such as these epistles contemplate; had they who have filled the sacred office always possessed the character and qualifications here described, we may believe that the Church would have been saved from the strifes that have rent it, and that the pure Gospel would long ere this have been spread through the world.

But it is not to the ministry only that these epistles are of so much value. They are of scarcely less importance to the Church at large. Its vitality; its purity; its freedom from strife; its zeal, and love, and triumph in spreading the Gospel, depend on the character of the ministry. If the Church will prosper from age to age, the pulpit must be filled with a pious, learned, laborious, and devoted ministry, and one of the first cares of the Church should be that such a ministry should be secured. This great object can not better be attained than by keeping the instructions in these epistles steadily before the minds of the members of the Church; and though a large part of them is particularly adapted to the ministers of the Gospel, yet the Church itself can in no better way promote its own purity and prosperity than by a prayerful and attentive study of the Epistles to Timothy and Titus.

FIRST EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TIMOTHY.

CHAPTER I.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ,
by the commandment of God
our Saviour, and Lord Jesus Christ, which is our hope.^b

^a Acts 9. 15.

^b Col. 1. 27.

^c Acts 16. 1.

CHAPTER I.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter comprises the following subjects :

(1.) The salutation to Timothy, in the usual manner in which Paul introduces his epistles. Vs. 1, 2.

(2.) The purpose for which he had left him at Ephesus. Vs. 3, 4. It was that he might correct the false instructions of some of the teachers there, and especially, as it would seem, in regard to the true use of the law. They gave undue importance to some things in the law of Moses; they did not understand the true nature and design of his institutions; and they mingled in their instructions much that was mere fable.

(3.) The true use and design of the law. Ver. 5-11. It was to produce love, not vain jangling. It was not made to fetter the conscience of the good by vain and troublesome austerities and ceremonies; it was to restrain and bind the wicked. The use of the law, according to these teachers, and according to the prevailing Jewish notions, was to prescribe a great number of formalities, and to secure outward conformity in a great variety of cumbersome rites and ceremonies. Paul directs Timothy to teach them that love, out of a pure heart and a good conscience, was the elementary principle of religion, and that the "law" was primarily designed to restrain and control wicked men, and that the Gospel brought to light and enforced this important truth.

(4.) The mention of the Gospel in this connection leads Paul to express his thanks to God that he had been intrusted with this message of salvation. Ver. 12-17. Once he had the same

2 Unto Timothy, my own son^d in the faith; Grace, mercy, and peace, from God our Father and Jesus Christ our Lord.

3 As I besought thee to abide

^d Tim. 1. 4.

^e Gal. 1. 3. 1 Pet. 1. 2.

views as others. But he had obtained mercy, and he was permitted to publish that glorious Gospel which had shed such light on the law of God, and which had revealed a plan of salvation that was worthy of universal acceptance.

(5.) This solemn duty of preaching the Gospel he commits now to Timothy. Ver. 18-20. He says that he had been called to the work in accordance with prophecies which had been uttered of him in anticipation of his future usefulness in the Church, and in the expectation that he would not, like some others, make shipwreck of his faith.

1. Paul, an apostle of Jesus Christ. See Notes on Rom. i. 1. ¶ By the commandment of God. See Notes on 1 Cor. i. 1. ¶ Our Saviour. The name Saviour is as applicable to God the Father as to the Lord Jesus Christ, since God is the great Author of salvation. See Notes on Luke i. 47. Comp. 1 Tim. iv. 10; Titus ii. 10; Jude 25. ¶ And Lord Jesus Christ. The apostle Paul had received his commission directly from him. See Notes on Gal. i. 11, 12. ¶ Which is our hope. See Notes on Col. i. 27.

2. Unto Timothy. For an account of Timothy, see Introd., § 1. ¶ My own son in the faith. Converted to the Christian faith by my instrumentality, and regarded by me with the affection of a father. See Notes on 1 Cor. iv. 15. Paul had no children of his own, and he adopted Timothy as a son, and uniformly regarded and treated him as such. He had the same feeling also toward Titus. Tit. i. 4. Comp. Notes on Gal. iv. 19; 1 Thess. ii. 7, 11; and Philem. 10. ¶ Grace, mercy, and peace, etc. See Notes on Rom. i. 7.

3. As I besought thee still to abide at still at Ephesus, when I went ^a into Macedonia, that thou mightest charge some that they teach no other doctrine.

^a Acts 20. 1, 3.

Ephesus. It is clear from this that Paul and Timothy had been laboring together at Ephesus, and the language accords with the supposition that Paul had been compelled to leave before he had completed what he designed to do there. See the Introd., § 2. ¶ When I went into Macedonia. Having been driven away by the excitement caused by Demetrius and his fellow-craftsmen. Acts xx. 1. See the Introd., § 2, 3. ¶ That thou mightest charge some. The word charge here—παράγγειλις—seems to mean more than is commonly implied by the word as used by us. If it had been a single direction or command, it might have been given by Paul himself before he left, but it seems rather to refer to that continuous instruction which would convince these various errorists, and lead them to inculcate only the true doctrine. As they may have been numerous; as they may have embraced various forms of error; and as they might have had plausible grounds for their belief, this was evidently a work requiring time, and hence Timothy was left to effect this at leisure. It would seem that the wrath which had been excited against Paul had not affected Timothy, but that he was permitted to remain and labor without molestation. It is not certainly known who these teachers were, but they appear to have been of Jewish origin, and to have inculcated the peculiar sentiments of the Jews respecting the law. ¶ That they teach no other doctrine. That is, no other doctrine than that taught by the apostles. The Greek word here used is not found in the classic writers, and does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament, except in ch. vi. 3 of this epistle, where it is rendered “teach otherwise.” We may learn here what was the design for which Timothy was left at Ephesus. (1.) It was for a temporary purpose, and not as a permanent arrangement. It was to correct certain errors prevailing there which Paul would have been able himself soon to correct if he had been suffered to remain. Paul expected soon to return to him again, and then they would proceed unitedly with their work. Ch. iv.

4 Neither give heed ^b to fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith; so do.

^b c. 6, 3, 4, 20.

13; iii. 15. (2.) It was not that he might be the “Bishop” of Ephesus. There is no evidence that he was “ordained” there at all, as the subscription to the second epistle declares (see Notes on that subscription), nor were the functions which he was to perform those of a prelatical bishop. He was not to take the charge of a “diocese,” or to ordain ministers of the “second rank,” or to administer the rite of “confirmation,” or to perform acts of discipline. He was left there for a purpose which is specified, and that is as far as possible from what are now regarded as the appropriate functions of a prelatical bishop. Perhaps no claim which has ever been set up on any subject has had less semblance of argument than that which asserts that Timothy was the “Bishop of Ephesus.” See this clause examined in my Inquiry into the Organization and Government of the Apostolic Church, p. 84–107.

4. Neither give heed to fables. That is, that they should not bestow their attention on fables, or regard such trifles as of importance. The “fables” here referred to were probably the idle and puerile superstitions and conceits of the Jewish Rabbies. The word rendered fable (μῦθος) means, properly, speech or discourse, and then fable or fiction, or a mystic discourse. Such things abounded among the Greeks as well as the Jews, but it is probable that the latter are here particularly intended. These were composed of frivolous and unfounded stories which they regarded as of great importance, and which they seem to have desired to incorporate with the teachings of Christianity. Paul, who had been brought up amid these superstitions, saw at once how they would tend to draw off the mind from the truth, and would corrupt the true religion. One of the most successful arts of the adversary of souls has been to mingle fable with truth; and when he can not overthrow the truth by direct opposition, he endeavors to neutralize it by mingling with it as much as he can that is false and frivolous. ¶ And endless genealogies. This also refers to Jewish teaching. The Hebrews kept careheart, and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned :

5 Now the end ^a of the commandment is charity, out of a pure ^b

^a Rom. 13. 8, 10. Gal. 5. 14.

^b 2 Tim. 2. 22.

ful genealogical records, for this was necessary in order that the distinction of their tribes might be kept up. Of course, in the lapse of centuries these tables would become very numerous, complicated, and extended—so that they might without much exaggeration be called “endless.” The Jews attached great importance to these tables, and insisted on their being carefully preserved. As the Messiah, however, had now come; as the Jewish polity was to cease; as the separation between them and the heathen was no longer necessary; and as the distinction of tribes was now useless, there was no propriety that these genealogical tables should be regarded by Christians. The whole system was, moreover, contrary to the genius of Christianity, for it served to keep up the pride of blood and of birth. ¶ Which minister questions. Which afford matter for troublesome and angry debates. It was often difficult to settle or understand those tables. They became complicated and perplexing. Nothing is more difficult than to unravel an extensive genealogical record. To do this, therefore, would often give rise to contentions, and when settled, would give rise still further to questions about rank and precedence. ¶ Rather than godly edifying which is in faith. These inquiries do nothing to promote true religion in the soul. They settle no permanent principle of truth; they determine nothing that is really important in the salvation of men. They might be pursued through life, and not one soul be converted by them; they might be settled with the greatest accuracy, and yet not one heart be made better. Is not this still true of many controversies and logomachies in the Church? No point of controversy is worth much trouble which, if it were settled one way or the other, would not tend to convert the soul from sin, or to establish some important principle in promoting true religion. ¶ So do. These words are supplied by our translators, but they are necessary to the sense. The meaning is, that Timothy was to remain at Ephesus, and faithfully perform the duty which he had been left there to discharge.

5. Now the end of the commandment.

See Notes on Rom. x. 4. In order that Timothy might fulfill the design of his appointment, it was necessary that he should have a correct view of the design of the law. The teachers to whom he refers insisted much on its obligation and importance; and Paul designs to say that he did not intend to teach that the law was of no consequence, and was not, when properly understood, obligatory. Its nature and use, however, was not correctly understood by them, and hence it was of great importance for Timothy to inculcate correct views of the purpose for which it was given. The word “commandment” here some have understood of the Gospel (Doddridge), others of the particular command which the apostle here gives to Timothy (Benson, Clark, and Macknight); but it seems more naturally to refer to all that God had commanded—his whole law. As the error of these teachers arose from improper views of the nature and design of law, Paul says that that design should be understood. It was not to produce distinctions and angry contentions, and was not to fetter the minds of Christians with minute and burdensome observations, but it was to produce love. ¶ Is charity. On the meaning of this word, see Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. 1. ¶ Out of a pure heart. The love which is genuine must proceed from a holy heart. The commandment was not designed to secure merely the outward expressions of love, but that which had its seat in the heart. ¶ And of a good conscience. A conscience free from guilt. Of course there can be no genuine love to God where the dictates of conscience are constantly violated, or where a man knows that he is continually doing wrong. If any one wishes to have the evidence of love to God, he must keep a good conscience. All pretended love, where a man knows that he is living in sin, is mere hypocrisy. ¶ And of faith unfeigned. Undissembled confidence in God. This does seem to be intended specifically of faith in the Lord Jesus, but it means that all true love to God, such as his law would produce, must be based on confidence in him. How can any one have love to God who has no confidence in him?

6 From which some ¹ having swerved,^a have turned aside unto vain jangling;

7 Desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding ^b neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm.

¹ Or, not aiming at.

^a 2 Tim. 4. 10.

Can we exercise love to a professed friend in whom we have no confidence? Faith, then, is as necessary under the law as it is under the Gospel.

6. From which some having swerved. Marg., not aiming at. The word here used—ἀστοχέω—means, properly, to miss the mark; to err; and then, to swerve from. Comp. ch. vi. 21; 2 Tim. ii. 18. It does not mean that they had ever had that from which they are said to have swerved—for it does not follow that a man who misses a mark had ever hit it—but merely that they failed of the things referred to, and had turned to vain talk. The word “which” (ὧν), in the plural, refers not to the law, but to the things enumerated—a pure heart, a good conscience, and unfeigned faith. ¶ Have turned aside unto vain jangling. Vain talk, empty declamation, discourses without sense. The word here used does not mean contention or strife, but that kind of discourse which is not founded in good sense. They were discourses on their pretended distinctions in the law; on their traditions and ceremonies; on their useless genealogies; and on the fabulous statements which they had appended to the law of Moses.

7. Desiring to be teachers of the law. That is, to have the credit and reputation of being well versed in the law of Moses, and qualified to explain it to others. This was a high honor among the Jews, and these teachers laid claim to the same distinction. ¶ Understanding neither what they say. That is, they do not understand the true nature and design of that law which they attempt to explain to others. This was true of the Jewish teachers, and equally so of those in the Church at Ephesus who attempted to explain it. They appear to have explained the law on the principles which commonly prevailed among the Jews, and hence their instructions tended greatly to corrupt the faith of the Gospel. They made affirmations of what they knew nothing of, and though they made confident assertions, yet they often per-

8 But we know that the law is good,^c if a man use it lawfully;

9 Knowing this, that ^d the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for tained to things about which they had no knowledge. One needs only a slight acquaintance with the manner of teaching among Jewish Rabbies, or with the things found in their traditions, to see the accuracy of this statement of the apostle. A sufficient illustration of this may be found in Allen's Modern Judaism.

^b Rom. 1. 23.

^c Rom. 7. 12.

^d Gal. 5. 23.

8. But we know that the law is good. We admit this; it is that which we all concede. This declaration is evidently made by the apostle to guard against the supposition that he was an enemy of the law. Doubtless this charge would be brought against him, or against any one who maintained the sentiments which he had just expressed. By speaking thus of what those teachers regarded as so important in the law, it would be natural for them to declare that he was an enemy of the law itself, and would be glad to see all its claims abrogated. Paul says that he designed no such thing. He admitted that the law was good. He was never disposed for one moment to call it in question. He only asked that it should be rightly understood and properly explained. Paul was never disposed to call in question the excellency and the utility of the law, however it might bear on him or on others. Comp. Notes on Rom. vii. 12, and on Acts xxi. 21–26. ¶ If a man use it lawfully. In a proper manner; for the purposes for which it was designed. It is intended to occupy a most important place, but it should not be perverted. Paul asked only that it should be used aright, and, in order to this, he proceeds to state what is its true design.

9. Knowing this. That is, “if any one knows or admits this, he has the proper view of the design of the law.” The apostle does not refer particularly to himself as knowing or conceding this, for then he would have used the plural form of the participle (see the Greek), but he means that any one who had just views of the law would see that that which he proceeds to specify was its real purpose. ¶ The law is not made for a righteous man. There has been great variety in the interpretation of this passage. Some suppose that the law here refers to the ceremonial laws of Moses (Clarke, Rosenmüller, Abbot); others to the denunciatory part of the law (Doddridge and Bloomfield); and others that it means that the chief purpose of the law was to restrain the wicked. It seems clear, however, that the apostle does not refer merely to the ceremonial law, for he specifies that which condemns the unholy and profane; the murderers of fathers and mothers; liars and perjured persons. It was not the ceremonial law which condemned these things, but the moral law. It can not be supposed, moreover, that the apostle meant to say that the law was not binding on a righteous man, or that he was under no obligation to obey it—for he every where teaches that the moral law is obligatory on all mankind. To suppose also that a righteous man is released from the obligation to obey the law, that is, to do right, is an absurdity. Nor does he seem to mean, as Mac-knight supposes, that the law was not given for the purpose of justifying a righteous man, for this was originally one of its designs. Had man always obeyed it, he would have been justified by it. The meaning seems to be, that the purpose of the law was not to fetter and perplex those who were righteous, and who aimed to do their duty and to please God. It was not intended to produce a spirit of servitude and bondage. As the Jews interpreted the law, it did this, and this interpretation appears to have been adopted by the teachers at Ephesus to whom Paul refers. The whole tendency of their teaching was to bring the soul into a state of bondage, and to make religion a condition of servitude. Paul teaches, on the other hand, that religion is freedom, and that the main purpose of the law was not to fetter the minds of the righteous by numberless observances and minute regulations, but that it was to restrain the wicked from sin. This is the case with all law. No good man feels himself fettered and manacled by wholesome laws, nor does he feel that the purpose of law is to reduce him to a state of servitude. It is only the wicked who have this feeling, and in this sense the law is made for a man who intends to do wrong.

¶ For the lawless. To bind and restrain them. The word here used means, properly, those who have no law, and then, those who are transgressors—the wicked. It is rendered transgressors in Matt. xv. 28; Luke xxii. 37; and wicked, Acts ii. 23; 2 Thess. ii. 8. ¶ And disobedient. Those who are insubordinate and refractory. The word properly means those who are under no subjection or authority. It occurs in the New Testament only here and Titus i. 6, 10, where it is rendered unruly, and Heb. ii. 8, where it is translated not put under; that is, under Christ. ¶ For the ungodly. Those who have no religion; who do not worship or honor God. The Greek word occurs in the following places, in all of which it is rendered ungodly. Rom. iv. 5; v. 6; 1 Tim. i. 9; 1 Pet. iv. 18; 2 Pet. ii. 5; iii. 7; Jude iv. 15. The meaning is, that the law is against all who do not worship or honor God. ¶ And for sinners. The word used here is the common word to denote sinner. It is general, and includes sins of all kinds. ¶ For unholy. “Those who are regardless of duty to God or man.”—Robinson, Lex. The word occurs in the New Testament only here, and in 2 Tim. iii. 2. It has particular reference to those who fail of their duty toward God, and means those who have no piety; who are irreligious. ¶ And profane. This does not necessarily mean that they were profane in the sense that they blasphemed the name of God, or were profane swearers—though the word would include that—but it means, properly, those who are impious, or who are scoffers. See Notes on Heb. xii. 16. The word occurs only in the following places, in all of which it is rendered profane. 1 Tim. i. 9; iv. 7; vi. 20; 2 Tim. ii. 16; Heb. xii. 16. A man who treats religion with contempt, mockery, or scorn, would correspond with the meaning of the word. ¶ For murderers of fathers. The Greek properly means a smiter of a father (Robinson), though here it undoubtedly means a parricide. This was expressly forbidden by the law of Moses, and was a crime punishable by death. Exod. xxi. 15. It is said to have been a crime which the Roman law did not contemplate as possible, and hence that among the Romans there was no enactment against it. It is, indeed, a crime of the highest order; but facts have shown that if the Romans supposed it would never be committed, they did not judge aright of human nature. There is no sin which man will not commit if unrestrained, and there is in fact no conceivable form of crime of which he has not been guilty. ¶ Murderers of mothers. A still more atrocious and monstrous crime, if possible, than the former. We can conceive nothing superior to this in enormity, and yet it has been committed. Nero caused his mother to be murdered, and the annals of crime disclose the names of not a few who have imbrued their hands in the blood of those who bare them. This was also expressly forbidden by the law of Moses. Exod. xxi. 15. ¶ For manslayers. This word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means a homicide—a murderer. The crime is expressly forbidden by the law. Exod. xx. 13; Gen. ix. 6.

unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers,

10 For whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with man-

10. For whoremongers. Lev. xix. 29; xx. 5. ¶ For them that defile themselves with mankind. Sodomites. See the evidence that this crime abounded in ancient times, in the Notes on Rom. i. 27. It was forbidden by the law of Moses, and was punishable with death. Lev. xx. 13. ¶ For menstealers. The word here used—ἀνδράποδοστῆς—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It properly means one who steals another for the purpose of making him a slave—a kidnapper. This is the common way in which men are made slaves. Some, indeed, are taken in war and sold as slaves, but the mass of those who have been reduced to servitude have become slaves by being kidnapped. Children are stolen from their parents, or wives from their husbands, or husbands from their wives, or parents from their children, or whole families are stolen together. None become slaves voluntarily, and consequently the whole process of making slaves partakes of the nature of theft of the worst kind. What theft is like that of stealing a man's children; his wife; his father; his mother? The guilt of manstealing is incurred essentially by those who purchase those who are thus stolen—as the purchaser of kind, for menstealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound ^a doctrine;

11 According to the glorious Gosa 2 Tim. 4. 3. Tit. 1. 9.

a stolen horse, knowing it to be so, participates in the crime. A measure of that criminality also adheres to all who own slaves, and who thus maintain the system—for it is a system known to have been originated by theft. This crime was expressly forbidden by the law of God, and was made punishable with death. Exod. xxi. 16; Deut. xxiv. 7. ¶ For liars. Lev. vi. 2-4; xix. 11. ¶ For perjured persons. Those who swear falsely. Lev. xix. 12; vi. 3; Exod. xx. 7. ¶ And if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine. To sound or correct teaching—for so the word doctrine means. The meaning is, if there is any thing else that is opposed to the instruction which the law of God gives.

11. According to the glorious Gospel. The Gospel is a system of divine revelation. It makes known the will of God. It states what is duty, and accords in its great principles with the law, or is in harmony with it. The law, in principle, forbids all which the Gospel forbids, and in publishing the requirements of the Gospel, therefore, Paul says that the law really forbade all which was prohibited in the Gospel, and was designed to restrain all who would act contrary to that Gospel. There is no contradiction between the law and the Gospel. They forbid the same things, and, in regard to morals and true piety, the clearer revelations of the Gospel are but carrying out the principles stated in the law. They who preach the Gospel, then, should not be regarded as arrayed against the law, and Paul says that they who preached the Gospel aright really stated the true principles of the law. This he evidently intends should bear against the false teachers who professed to explain the law of Moses. He means here that if a man wished to explain the law, the best explanation would be found in that Gospel which it was his office to publish. Comp. Rom. iii. 31. ¶ Of the blessed God. Revealed by the blessed God—the same God who was the Author of pel of the blessed ^a God, which ^b was committed to my trust.

12 And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled ^c me, for a c. 6. 15.

b 1 Cor. 9. 17.

c 1 Cor. 15. 10.

the law. ¶ Which was committed to my trust. Not to him alone, but to him in common with others. He had received it directly from the Lord. 1 Cor. ix. 17. Comp. Notes on Gal. i. 1.

12. And I thank Christ Jesus our Lord. The mention of the Gospel (ver. 11), and of the fact that it was committed to him, leads the apostle to express his gratitude to him who had called him to the work of preaching it. The Lord Jesus had arrested him when he was a blasphemer and a persecutor. He had constrained him to leave his career of persecution and blasphemy, and to consecrate himself to the defense and the propagation of the Gospel. For all this, though it had required him to give up his favorite projects in life, and all the flattering schemes of ambition, he now felt that praise was due to the Redeemer. If there is any thing for which a good man will be thankful, and should be thankful, it is that he has been so directed by the Spirit and Providence of God as to be put into the ministry. It is, indeed, a work of toil and of self-denial, demanding many sacrifices of personal ease and comfort. It requires a man to give up his splendid prospects of worldly distinction, of wealth, and of ease. It is often identified with want, and poverty, and neglect, and persecution. But it is an office so honorable, so excellent, so noble, and so ennobling; it is attended with so many precious comforts here, is so useful to the world, and it has such promises of blessedness and happiness in the world to come, that, no matter what a man is required to give up in order to become a minister of the Gospel, he should be thankful to Christ for putting him into the office. A minister, when he comes to die, feels that the highest favor which Heaven has conferred on him has been in turning his feet away from the paths of ambition, and the pursuits of ease or gain, and leading him to that holy work to which he has been enabled to consecrate his life. ¶ Who hath enabled me. Who has given me ability or strength for this service. The aposthat he counted me faithful, ^d putting ^e me into the ministry;

13 Who was before ^f a blasphemer, and a persecutor, and injurious:

d 1 Cor. 7. 25.

f Acts 8. 3. 1 Cor. 15. 9.

e Col. 1. 25.

tle traced to the Lord Jesus the fact that he was in the ministry at all, and all the ability which he had to perform the duties of that holy office. It is not necessary here to suppose, as many have done, that he refers to miraculous power conferred on him, but he makes the acknowledgment which any faithful minister would do, that all the strength which he has to perform the duties of his office is derived from Christ. Comp. Notes on John xv. 5; 1 Cor. xv. 10. ¶ For that he counted me faithful. This is equivalent to saying that he reposed confidence in me. It means that there was something in the character of Paul, and in his attachment to the Saviour, on which reliance could be placed, or that there was that which gave the assurance that he would be faithful. A sovereign, when he sends an ambassador to a foreign court, reposes confidence in him, and would not commission him unless he had reason to believe that he would be faithful. So it is in reference to all who are called by the Redeemer into the ministry. They are his ambassadors to a lost world. His putting them into the ministry is an act expressive of great confidence in them—for he commits to them great and important interests. Learn hence, (1.) that no one ought to regard himself as called to the ministry who is not "faithful" to his Master; and (2.) that the office of the ministry is most honorable and responsible. Nowhere else are there so great interests intrusted to man.

13. Who was before a blasphemer. This does not mean that Paul before his conversion was what would now be regarded as an open blasphemer; that he was one who abused and reviled sacred things; or one who was in the habit of profane swearing. His character appears to have been just the reverse of this, for he was remarkable for treating what he regarded as sacred with the utmost respect. See Notes on Phil. iii. 4-6. The meaning is, that he had in fact, though ignorantly and in unbelief, reviled the name of Christ, and opposed him and his

but I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly ^a in unbelief.

14 And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with

^a Luke 23. 34.

cause, not believing that he was the Messiah; and in thus opposing him he had been actually guilty of blasphemy. The true Messiah he had in fact treated with contempt and reproaches, and he now looked back upon that fact with the deepest mortification, and with wonder that one who had been so treated by him should have been willing to put him into the ministry. On the meaning of the word blaspheme, see Notes on Matt. ix. 3. Comp. Acts xxvi. 11. In his conduct as here referred to, Paul elsewhere says that he thought at the time that he was doing what he ought to do (Acts xxvi. 9); here he says that he now regarded it as blasphemy. Learn hence that men may have very different views of their conduct when they come to look at it in subsequent life. What they now regard as harmless, or even as right and proper, may hereafter overwhelm them with shame and remorse. The sinner will yet feel the deepest self-reproaches for that which now gives him no uneasiness. ¶ And a persecutor. Acts ix. 1, seq.; xxii. 4; xxvi. 11; 1 Cor. xv. 9; Gal. i. 13, 23. ¶ And injurious. The word here used (ὕβριστις) occurs only in one other place in the New Testament, Rom. i. 30, where it is rendered despiteful. The word injurious does not quite express its force. It does not mean merely doing injury, but refers rather to the manner or spirit in which it is done. It is a word of intenser signification than either the word "blasphemer" or "persecutor," and means that what he did was done with a proud, haughty, insolent spirit. There was wicked and malicious violence, a degree of arrogance, and spirit of overbearing and intolerance in what he did, which greatly aggravated the wrong that was done. Comp. the Greek in Matt. xxii. 6; Luke xi. 45; xviii. 32; Acts xiv. 5; 1 Thess. ii. 2; 2 Cor. xii. 10, for illustrations of the meaning of the word. Tindal and Coverdale render it here "tyrant." ¶ But I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly in unbelief. Compare Notes on Luke xxiii. 34. The ignorance and unbelief of Paul were not such excuses for what faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

15 This is a faithful ^b saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that he did that they would wholly free him from blame, nor did he regard them as such—for what he did was with a violent and wicked spirit—but they were mitigating circumstances. They served to modify his guilt, and were among the reasons why God had mercy on him. What is said here, therefore, accords with what the Saviour said in his prayer for his murderers: "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do." It is undoubtedly true that persons who sin ignorantly, and who regard themselves as right in what they do, are much more likely to obtain mercy than those who do wrong designedly.

^b 2 Tim. 2. 11. Tit. 3. 8.

14. And the grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant. That is, in his conversion under these circumstances, and in the aid which was afterward imparted to him in his work. ¶ With faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. Accompanied with the exercise of faith and love; or producing faith and love. The grace which was imparted to him was seen in the faith and love which it produced. See Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 10.

15. This is a faithful saying. Greek, "Faithful is the word," or doctrine—ὁ λόγος. This verse has somewhat the character of a parenthesis, and seems to have been thrown into the midst of the narrative because the mind of the apostle was full of the subject. He had said that he, a great sinner, had obtained mercy. This naturally led him to think of the purpose for which Christ came into the world—to save sinners—and to think how strikingly that truth had been illustrated in his own case, and how that case had shown that it was worthy the attention of all men. The word rendered "saying" means in this place doctrine, position, or declaration. The word "faithful," means assuredly true; it was that which might be depended on, or on which reliance might be placed. The meaning is, that the doctrine that Christ came to save sinners might be depended on as certainly true. Comp. 2 Tim. ii. 11; Titus' iii. 8. ¶ And worthy of all acceptation. Worthy to be embraced or believed by all. This is so, because (1.) all are sinners and need a Saviour. All, therefore, ought to welcome a doctrine which shows them how they may be saved. (2.) Because Christ died for all. If he had died for only a part of the race, and could save only a part, it could not be said with any propriety that the doctrine was worthy of the acceptance of "all." If that were so, what had it to do with all? How could all be interested in it or benefited by it? If medicine were provided for only a part of the patients in a hospital, it could not be said that the announcement of such a fact was worthy the attention of all. It would be highly worthy the attention of those for whom it was designed, but there would be a part who would have nothing to do with it; and why should they concern themselves about it? But if it was provided for each one, then each one would have the highest interest in it. So, if salvation has been provided for me, it is a matter claiming my profoundest attention; and the same is true of every human being. If not provided for me, I have nothing to do with it. It does not concern me at all. (3.) The manner in which the provision of salvation has been made in the Gospel is such as to make it worthy of universal acceptance. It provides for the complete pardon of sin, and the restoration of the soul to God. This is done in a way that is honorable to God—maintaining his law and his justice; and, at the same time, it is in a way that is honorable to man. He is treated afterward as a friend of God, and an heir of life. He is raised up from his degradation, and restored to the favor of his Maker. If man were himself to suggest a way of salvation, he could think of none that would be more honorable to God and to himself; none that would do more to maintain the law and to elevate him from all that now degrades him. What higher honor can be conferred on man than to have his salvation sought as an object of intense and earnest desire by one so great and glorious as the Son of God? (4.) It is worthy of all acceptance, from the nature of the salvation itself. Heaven is offered, with all its everlasting glories, through the blood of Christ—and is not this worthy of universal acceptance? Men would accept of a coronet or crown; a splendid mansion or a rich estate; a present of jewels and gold, if freely tendered to them—but what trifles are these compared with heaven! If there is any thing that is worthy of universal acceptance, it is heaven—for all will be miserable unless they enter there. ¶ That Christ Jesus, came into the world to save sinners. The great and peculiar doctrine of the Gospel. He "came into the world." He therefore had a previous existence. He came. He had, therefore, an object in coming. It makes his Gospel more worthy of acceptance that he had an intention, a plan, a wish, in thus coming into the world. He "came" when he was under no necessity of coming; he came to save, not to destroy; to reveal mercy, not to denounce judgment; to save sinners—the poor, the lost, the wandering—not to condemn them; he came to restore them to the favor of God, to raise them up from their degradation, and to bring them to heaven. ¶ Of whom I am chief. Gr., first. The word is used to denote eminence, and it means that he occupied the first rank among sinners. There were none who surpassed him. This does not mean that he had been the greatest of sinners in all respects, but that in some respects he had been so great a sinner that on the whole there were none who had surpassed him. That to which he particularly refers was doubtless the part which he had taken in putting the saints to death; but in connection with this, he felt, undoubtedly, that he had by nature a heart eminently prone to sin. See Romans vii. Except in the matter of persecuting the saints, the youthful Saul of Tarsus appears to have been eminently moral, and his outward conduct was framed in accordance with the strictest rules of the law. Phil. iii. 6; Acts xxvi. 4, 5. After his conversion he never attempted to extenuate his conduct or to excuse himself. He was always ready, in all circles and in all places, to admit to its fullest extent the fact that he was a sinner. So deeply convinced was he of the truth of this that he bore about with him the constant impression that he was eminently unworthy; and hence he does not say merely that he had been a sinner of most aggravated character, but he speaks of it as something that always pertained to him—"of whom I am chief." We may remark, Christ Jesus came ^a into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief.

F

^a Matt. 9. 13. Luke 19. 10.

(1.) that a true Christian will always be ready to admit that his past life has been evil; (2.) that this will become the abiding and steady conviction of the soul; and (3.) that an acknowledgment that we are sinners is not inconsistent with evidence of piety, and with high attainments in it. The most eminent Christian has the deepest sense of the depravity of his own heart, and of the evil of his past life.

16. Howbeit for this cause. That is, this was one of the causes, or this was a leading reason. We are not to suppose that this was the only one. God had other ends to answer by his conversion than this, but this was one of the designs why he was pardoned—that there might be, for all ages, a permanent proof that sins of the deepest dye may be forgiven. It was well to have one such example at the outset, that a doubt might never arise about the possibility of forgiving great transgressors. The question thus would be settled forever. ¶ That in me first. Not first in the order of time, as our translation would seem to imply, but that in me the first or chief of sinners (ἐν ἑμοὶ πρώτῳ) he might show an example. The idea is, that he sustained the first rank as a sinner, and that Jesus Christ designed to show mercy to him as such, in order that the possibility of pardoning the greatest sinners might be evinced, and that no one might afterward despair of salvation on account of the greatness of his crimes. ¶ Might show forth all long-suffering. The highest possible degree of forbearance, in order that a case might never occur about which there could be any doubt whether the Lord Jesus was forbearing and ready to pardon. It was shown by his example that he could evince any possible degree of patience, and could have mercy on the greatest imaginable offenders. ¶ For a pattern. ὑποτύπωσις. This word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, except in 2 Tim. i. 13, where it is rendered form. It properly means a form, a sketch, or an imperfect delineation. Then it denotes a pattern or example, and here it means that

16 Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all the case of Paul was an example for the encouragement of sinners in all subsequent times. It was that to which they might look when they desired forgiveness and salvation. It furnished all the illustration and argument which they would need to show that they might be forgiven. It settled the question forever that the greatest sinners may be pardoned; for, as he was "the chief of sinners," it proved that a case could not occur which was beyond the possibility of mercy. ¶ Which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting. All might learn from the mercy shown to him that salvation could be obtained. From this verse we may learn (1.) that no sinner should despair of mercy. No one should say that he is so great a sinner that he can not be forgiven. One who regarded himself as the "chief" of sinners was pardoned, and pardoned for the very purpose of illustrating this truth, that any sinner may be saved. His example stands as the illustration of this to all ages; and were there no other, any sinner might now come and hope for mercy. But there are other examples. Sinners of all ranks and descriptions have been pardoned. Indeed, there is no form of depravity of which men can be guilty, in respect to which there are not instances where just such offenders have been forgiven. The persecutor may reflect that great enemies of the Cross like him have been pardoned; the profane man and the blasphemer, that many such have been forgiven; the murderer, the thief, the sensualist, that many of the same character have found mercy, and have been admitted to heaven. (2.) The fact that great sinners have been pardoned is a proof that others of the same description may be also. The same mercy that saved them can save us—for mercy is not exhausted by being frequently exercised. The blood of atonement which has cleansed so many can cleanse us—for its efficacy is not exhausted by being once applied to the guilty soul. Let no one then despair of obtaining mercy because he feels that his sins are too great to be forgiven. Let him look to the past, long-suffering, for a pattern ^a to them which should hereafter believe on him to life everlasting.

17 Now unto the King ^b eternal, and remember what God has done. Let him remember the case of Saul of Tarsus; let him think of David and Peter; let him recall the names of Augustine, and Col. Gardiner, and the Earl of Rochester, and John Newton, and John Bunyan—and thousands like them, who have found mercy; and in their examples let him see a full proof that God is willing to save any sinner, no matter how vile, provided he is penitent and believing.

^a Rom. 15. 4. ^b Psa. 10. 16. ^c c. 6. 15, 16.

17. Now unto the King eternal. This ascription of praise is offered to God in view of the mercy which he had shown to so great a sinner. It is the outbreak of that grateful emotion which swelled his bosom, and which would not be denied expression, when Paul recalled his former life and the mercy of God to his soul. It somewhat interrupts, indeed, the train of his remarks, but the heart was so full that it demanded utterance. It is just an instance of the joy and gratitude which fill the soul of a Christian when he is led along in a train of reflections which conduct him to the recollection of his former sin and danger, and to the fact that he has obtained mercy and has now the hope of heaven. The apostle Paul not unfrequently, in accordance with a mode of writing that was common among the Hebrews, interposes an expression of praise in the midst of his reasonings. Comp. Rom. i. 25; 2 Cor. xi. 31. God is called King here, as he is often in the Scriptures, to denote that he rules over the universe. A literal translation of the passage would be, "To the King of ages, who is immortal," etc. The meaning of this expression—"the King of ages"—βασιλεῖ τῶν αἰώνων—is, that he is a king who rules throughout all ages. This does not mean that he himself lives forever, but that his dominion extends over all ages or generations. The rule of earthly monarchs does not extend into successive ages; his does. Their reign is temporary; his is enduring, and continues as one generation after another passes on, and thus embraces them all. ¶ Immortal. This refers to God himself, not to his reign. It means that he immortal, ^e invisible, ^d the only wise ^e God, be honour ^f and glory for ever and ever. Amen.

18 This charge I commit unto

^d John 1. 18. ^e Rom. 16. 27. ^f 1 Chron. 29. 11.

does not die, and it is given to him to distinguish him from other sovereigns. All other monarchs but God expire, and are just as liable to die at any moment as any other men. ¶ Invisible. Ch. vi. 16. See Notes on John i. 18. ¶ The only wise God. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 27. The word "wise" is wanting in many MSS., and in some editions of the New Testament. It is omitted by Griesbach, marked as doubtful by Tittman, and rejected in the valuable edition of Hahn. Erasmus conjectures that it was added against the Arians, who maintained that the Father only was God, and that as he is here mentioned as such, the word wise was interpolated to denote merely that the attribute of perfect wisdom belonged only to him. Wetstein regards the reading as genuine, and suspects that in some of the early manuscripts where it is wanting it was omitted by the transcriber because it was regarded as inelegant for two adjectives to be united in this manner. It is not easy to determine as to the genuineness of the reading. The sense is not materially affected, whichever view is adopted. It is true that Jehovah is the only God, it is also true that he is the only wise God. The gods of the heathen are "vanity and a lie," and they are wholly destitute of wisdom. See Psa. cxv. 3-8; cxxxv. 15-18; Isa. xl. 18-20; xlv. 10-17. ¶ Be honor. Let there be all the respect and veneration shown to him which is his due. ¶ And glory. Praise. Let him be praised by all forever. ¶ Amen. So be it; an expression of strong affirmation. John iii. 3. Here it is used to denote the solemn assent of the heart to the sentiment conveyed by the words used. See Notes on Matt. vi. 13; 1 Cor. xiv. 16.

18. This charge. This command or injunction. It does not refer to any "charge," or "cure," which he had as bishop or minister, as the word is sometimes used now, but to the commands or injunctions which he was delivering to him. The command particularly referred to is that in ver. 8. ¶ According to the prophecies which went before on thee. The general mean-thee, son Timothy, according ^a to the prophecies which went before on thee, that thou by them mightest war a good warfare;

^a c. 4. 14.

19 Holding ^b faith, and a good conscience, which some having put away, concerning faith have made shipwreck:

^b c. 3. 9.

ing of this is plain. It is that Paul was committing to Timothy an important trust, and one that required great wisdom and fidelity; and that in doing it he was acting in conformity with the hopes which had been cherished respecting Timothy, and with certain expressed anticipations about his influence in the Church. From early life the hope had been entertained that he would be a man to whom important trusts might be committed; and it had been predicted that he would be distinguished as a friend of religion. These hopes seem to have been cherished in consequence of the careful training in religion which he had had (2 Tim. ii. 1; iii. 15), and probably from the early indications of seriousness, prudence, and piety which he manifested. It was natural to entertain such hopes, and it seems, from this place, that such hopes had even assumed the form of predictions. It is not absolutely necessary to suppose that these predictions referred to by the word prophecies were inspired, for the word may be used in a popular sense, as it is often now. We speak now familiarly of predicting or foretelling the future usefulness of a serious, prudent, studious, and pious youth. We argue from what he is to what he will be, and we do not deem it unsafe or improper to hazard the prediction that, if he lives, he will be a man to whom important interests may be intrusted. As there were, however, prophets in the Christian Church (See Notes on Acts xi. 27; 1 Cor. xiv.), and as it is possible that in some cases they were inspired to predict future events, it can not be regarded as improper to suppose that some of them had foretold the future usefulness of this religiously-educated youth. Whatever may be meant by the expression, this general observation may be made, that when a young man enters on the active duties of life, and when great interests are intrusted to him, it is not improper to remind him of the hopes which had been cherished of him; of the anticipations which had been formed of his future usefulness; and of the expressions which may have been used by the pious and the discerning respecting his future character. This is a kind of reminiscence which will rather increase his sense of responsibility than flatter his vanity; and it may be made a means of exciting him to diligence and fidelity. A virtuous young man will not willingly disappoint the long-cherished hopes of his friends. He will be likely to be made more diligent and useful by the remembrance of their fond anticipations of his future success. ¶ That thou by them. By those prophecies. That is, that being stimulated and excited by those predictions and hopes, you might be led to fidelity and usefulness. ¶ Mightest war a good warfare. The Christian life is often compared to a warfare or struggle for victory (comp. Eph. vi. 10-17; 1 Cor. ix. 7; 2 Cor. iv. 4), and the services of the Christian ministry especially are likened to those of a soldier. 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4; iv. 7. The meaning here is, that he ought to contend with earnestness as a Christian and a minister in that holy service in which he was engaged, and endeavor to secure the victory. He "wars a good warfare" who is engaged in a righteous cause; who is faithful to his commander and to his post; who is unslumbering in observing the motions of the enemy, and fearless in meeting them; who never forsakes his standard, and who continues thus faithful till the period of his enlistment has expired, or till death. Such a soldier the Christian minister should be.

19. Holding faith. Fidelity to the cause in which you are enlisted—as a good soldier should do. This does not mean that Timothy should hold to the system of doctrines revealed in the Gospel, but that he should have that fidelity which a good soldier should have. He should not betray his trust. He should adhere to the cause of his master with unwavering steadfastness. This would include, of course, a belief of the truth, but this is not the leading idea in the phrase. ¶ And a good conscience. See Notes on Acts xxiii. 1. A good conscience, as well as fidelity, is necessary in the service of the Redeemer. A good conscience is that which is well informed in regard to what is right, and where its dictates are honestly followed. ¶ Which some having put away. That is, which good conscience some have put from them, or, in other words, they have not followed its dictates. The truth thus taught is, that men make shipwreck of their faith by not keeping a good conscience. They love sin. They follow the leadings of passion. They choose to indulge in carnal propensities. As a matter of course, they must, if they will do this, reject and renounce the Gospel. Men become infidels because they wish to indulge in sin. No man can be a sensualist, and yet love that Gospel which enjoins purity of life. If men would keep a good conscience, the way to a steady belief in the Gospel would be easy. If men will not, they must expect sooner or later to be landed in infidelity. ¶ Concerning faith. In respect to the whole subject of faith. They are unfaithful to God, and they reject the whole system of the Gospel. "Faith" is sometimes used to denote the Gospel—as faith is the principal thing in the Gospel. ¶ Have made shipwreck. There is an entire destruction of faith—as a ship is wholly ruined that strikes on a rock and sinks.

20 Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander; whom I have delivered ^a unto Satan, that they may learn not to blaspheme.

^a 1 Cor. 5. 5.

20. Of whom is Hymeneus and Alexander. Hymeneus is nowhere else mentioned in the New Testament, except in 2 Tim. ii. 17, where he is mentioned in connection with Philetus as a very dangerous man. An Alexander is mentioned in Acts xix. 33, which some have supposed to be the same as the one referred to here. It is not certain, however, that the same person is intended. See Notes on that verse. In 2 Tim. iv. 14, Alexander the coppersmith is mentioned as one who had done the apostle "much evil," and there can be little doubt that he is the same person who is referred to here. One of the doctrines which Hymeneus held was that the "resurrection was past already" (2 Tim. ii. 18); but what doctrine Alexander held is unknown. It is not improbable, as he is mentioned here in connection with Hymeneus, that he maintained the same opinion, and, in addition to that, he appears to have been guilty of some personal injury to the apostle. Both also were guilty of blasphemy. ¶ Whom I have delivered unto Satan. On the meaning of this expression, see Notes on 1 Cor. v. 5. ¶ That they may learn not to blaspheme. It can not be supposed that Satan would undertake to teach them not to blaspheme, or that Paul put them under him as an instructor on that subject. The instructions of Satan tend rather to teach his followers to blaspheme, and none in his school fail to be apt scholars. The meaning is, that Paul excommunicated them, and not improbably brought upon them, by giving them over to Satan, some physical maladies, that they might be reformed. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. v. 5. It is not entirely clear what is meant by blaspheme in this place. Comp. Notes on ver. 13. It can not be supposed that they were open and bold blasphemers, for such could not have maintained a place in the Church, but rather that they held doctrines which the apostle regarded as amounting to blasphemy; that is, doctrines which were in fact a reproach on the divine character. There are many doctrines held by men which are in fact a reflection on the divine character, and which amount to the same thing as blasphemy. A blasphemer openly expresses views of the divine character which are a reproach to God; an errorist expresses the same thing in another way, by teaching as true about God that which represents him in a false light, and to suppose which, in fact, is a reproach. The spirit with which this is done in the two cases may be different; the thing itself may be the same. Let us be careful that we hold no views about God which are reproachful to him, and which, though we do not express it in words, may lead us to blaspheme him in our hearts.

CHAPTER II.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter is occupied mainly with directions about the mode of conducting public worship. Timothy had been left at Ephesus to complete the plans which the apostle had commenced in reference to the Church there, but the completion of which had been unexpectedly prevented (see the Introd.), and it was important to state to Timothy the views which he entertained on this subject. It was important also that general directions on these subjects should be given, which would be useful to the Church at large. The directions in this chapter relate to the following subjects:

CHAPTER II.

I EXHORT,¹ therefore, that, first of all, supplications, prayers, in-

¹ or, desire.

I. Public prayer. Ver. 1-8.

(1.) It was to be offered for all classes of men, without distinction of rank, sect, party, country, or name, especially for all that were in authority. Vss. 1, 2. The reasons for this were,

(a) That God desired all men to be saved, and it was acceptable to him that prayer should be offered for all. Vss. 3, 4.

(b) There is but one God over all the human race, and all are alike his children. Ver. 5.

(c) There is one and the same Mediator between God and all men. Ver. 5.

(d) The same atonement has been made for all. Vss. 6, 7.

(2.) The way in which prayer should be offered. It should be with holy hands, and without the intermingling of any bad passion. Ver. 8.

II. The duties of women. Ver. 9-15.

(1.) Modesty in their demeanor and apparel. Ver. 9.

(2.) Good works—the chief ornament of women professing piety. Ver. 10.

(3.) The duty of learning from others with a gentle and quiet spirit. Ver. 11.

(4.) The duty of a proper subordination and submission to man. Ver. 12.

(5.) The reasons for this subordination and submission are then stated. They are,

(a) That Adam was first formed. Ver. 13.

(b) That the woman had been deceived, and should be willing to occupy a subordinate place, as she was first in the transgression and was the means of leading him into sin. Ver. 14.

(6.) Yet, as if to make a kind remark in favor of woman—to show that he did not intend to teach that she was degraded and abandoned of God—the tercessions, and giving of thanks, be made for all men;

2 For kings,^a and for all that are

^a Rom. 13. 1, etc.

apostle says that she would be under the divine protection, and that, in the special sorrow and peril which had been brought upon her for her transgression, God would sustain her if she continued in faith, and evinced the spirit of a Christian in her life. Ver. 15.

1. I exhort, therefore. Marg., desire.

The word exhort, however, better expresses the sense of the original. The exhortation here is not addressed particularly to Timothy, but relates to all who were called to lead in public prayer. Ver. 8. This exhortation, it may be observed, is inconsistent with the supposition that a liturgy was then in use, or with the supposition that there ever would be a liturgy; since, in that case, the objects to be prayed for would be prescribed. How singular would it be now for an Episcopal bishop to “exhort” his presbyters to pray “for the President of the United States and for all who are in authority.” When the prayer is prescribed, do they not do this as a matter of course? ¶ First of all. That is, as the first duty to be enjoined; the thing that is to be regarded with primary concern. Comp. Luke xii. 1; 2 Pet. i. 20. It does not mean that this was to be the first thing in public worship in the order of time, but that it was to be regarded as a duty of primary importance. The duty of praying for the salvation of the whole world was not to be regarded as a subordinate and secondary thing. ¶ Supplications. It is not entirely easy to mark the difference in the meaning of the words used here, and it is not essential. They all relate to prayer, and refer only to the different parts of prayer, or to distinct classes of thought and desire which come before the mind pleading for others. On the difference between the words supplications and prayer, see Notes on Heb. v. 7. ¶ Intercessions. The noun used here occurs only in this place and in ch. iv. 5 of this epistle. The verb, however (ἐντυγχάνω), occurs in Acts xxv. 4; Rom. viii. 27, 34; xi. 2; Heb. vii. 25. See the meaning explained in the Notes on Rom. viii. 26; Heb. vii. 25. There is one great Intercessor between God in authority: ¹ that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life in all godliness and honesty.

¹ or, eminent place.

and man who pleads for our salvation on the ground of what he himself has done, but we are permitted to intercede for others, not on the ground of any merit which they or we possess, but on the ground of the merit of the great Advocate and Intercessor. It is an inestimable privilege to be permitted to plead for the salvation of our fellow-men. ¶ Giving of thanks. That is, in behalf of others. We ought to give thanks for the mercy of God to ourselves; it is right and proper also that we should give thanks for the goodness of God to others. We should render praise that there is a way of salvation provided; that no one is excluded from the offer of mercy; and that God is using so many means to call lost sinners to himself. ¶ For all men. Prayers should be made for all men—for all need the grace and mercy of God; thanks should be rendered for all—for all may be saved. Does not this direction imply that Christ died for all mankind? How could we give thanks in their behalf if there were no mercy for them, and if no way had been provided by which they could be saved? It may be observed here that the direction to pray and to give thanks for all men shows the large and catholic nature of Christianity. It stands opposed entirely to the narrow and bigoted feelings of the Jews, who regarded the whole Gentile world as excluded from covenant mercies, and as having no offer of life. Christianity threw down these barriers, and all men are on a level; and since Christ has died for all, there is ample ground for thanksgiving and praise in behalf of the whole human race.

2. For kings. On the respect due to rulers, see Notes on Rom. xiii. 1-7. The meaning here is, that while all men should be the subjects of prayer, those should be particularly remembered before the throne of grace who are in authority. The reason is that so much depends on their character and plans; that peace or war—the security of life, liberty, and property—depends so much on them. God has power to influence their hearts, and to incline them to what is just and equal; and hence we should pray that a divine influence may descend upon them. The salvation of a king is of itself of no more importance than that of a peasant or a slave; but the welfare of thousands may depend on him, and hence he should be made the special subject of prayer. ¶ All that are in authority. Marg., “or, eminent place.” This does not necessarily mean those who hold office, but refers to any of elevated rank. The happiness of all who are under their control depends greatly on them, and hence we should pray for them that they may be converted men, and inclined to do that which is right. ¶ That we may lead a quiet and peaceable life. That their hearts may be so inclined to what is right that they may protect us in the enjoyment of religion, and that we may not be opposed or harassed by persecution. This does not mean that their protection would dispose us to lead quiet and peaceful lives, but that under their protection we may be saved from oppression on account of our religion. Christians are disposed of themselves to be peaceful and orderly; they ask of their rulers only that they may not be harassed in the enjoyment of their rights. ¶ In all godliness and honesty. In the practice of all our duties toward God, and of all the duties which we owe to men. The word godliness here denotes piety—or the duty which we owe to God; the word honesty refers to our duties to our fellow-men. The Christian asks from civil rulers such protection that he may be enabled quietly to perform both these classes of duties.

3 For this is good and acceptable in the sight of God our Saviour.

3. For this is good and acceptable. That is, it is good and acceptable to God that we should pray for all men. The reason is that he desires their salvation, and hence it is agreeable to him that we should pray for it. If there were no provision made for their salvation, or if he was unwilling that they should be saved, it could not be agreeable to him that we should offer prayer for them.

4. Who will have all men to be saved. That is, it is in accordance with his nature, his feelings, his desires. The word will can not be taken here in the absolute sense, denoting a decree like that by which he willed the creation of the world, for then it would certainly be done. But the word is often used to denote a desire, wish, or what is in accordance with the nature of any one. Thus it may be said of God that he "wills" that his creatures should be happy—because it is in accordance with his nature, and because he has made abundant provision for their happiness—though it is not true that he wills it in the sense that he exerts his absolute power to make them happy. God wills that sickness should be relieved, and that sorrow should be mitigated, and that the oppressed should go free, because it is agreeable to his nature; though it is not true that he wills it in the sense that he exerts his absolute power to produce it. A parent wills the welfare of his child. It is in accordance with his nature, his feelings, his desires; and he makes every needful arrangement for it. If the child is not virtuous and happy, it is his own fault. So God wills that all men should be saved. It would be in accordance with his benevolent nature. He has made ample provision for it. He uses all proper means to secure their salvation. He uses no positive means to prevent it, and if they are not saved it is their own fault. For places in the New Testament where the word here translated "will" (ἑλέω) means to desire or wish, see Luke viii. 20; xxiii. 8; John xvi. 19; Gal. iv. 20; Mark xvii. 24; 1 Cor. vii. 7; xi. 3; xiv. 5; Matt. xv. 28. This passage can not mean, as many have supposed, that God wills that all kinds of men should be saved, or that some sinners of every rank and class should be saved, because (1.) the natural and obvious interpretation of the language is opposed to such a sense. The language expresses the desire that "all men" should be saved, and we should not depart from the obvious sense of a passage unless necessity requires it. (2.) Prayer and thanksgiving (ver. 1) are directed to be offered not for some of all ranks and conditions, but for all mankind. No exception is made,

4 Who ^a will have all men to be saved, and to come unto the knowledge of the truth.

^a John 3. 15, 16. ² Pet. 3. 9.

5 For there is one ^b God, and one mediator^c between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; and no direction is given that we should exclude any of the race from the expressions of our sympathy, and from an interest in our supplications. The reason given here for that prayer is that God desires that "all men should be saved." But how could this be a reason for praying for all, if it means that he desired only the salvation of some of all ranks? (3.) In vs. 5 and 6, the apostle gives reasons showing that God wishes the salvation of all men, and those reasons are such as to prove that the language here is to be taken in the most unlimited sense. Those reasons are, (a) that there is one God over all, and one Mediator between God and men—showing that God is the Father of all, and has the same interest in all; and (b) that Christ gave himself a ransom for all—showing that God desired their salvation. This verse proves (1.) that salvation is provided for all—for if God wished all men to be saved, he would undoubtedly make provision for their salvation; and if he had not made such provision, it could not be said that he desired their salvation, since no one can doubt that he has power to provide for the salvation of all; (2.) that salvation should be offered to all men; for if God desires it, it is right for his ministers to announce that desire, and it is not proper for them to announce any thing contrary to this; (3.) that men are to blame if they are not saved. If God did not wish their salvation, and if he had made no provision for it, they could not be to blame if they rejected the Gospel. If God wishes it, and has made provision for it, and they are not saved, the sin must be their own: and it is a great sin, for there is no greater crime which a man can commit than to destroy his own soul, and to make himself the eternal enemy of his Maker. ¶ And to come unto the knowledge of the truth. The truth which God has revealed; the "truth as it is in Jesus." See Notes on Eph. iv. 21.

^b Rom. 3. 30.

^c Heb. 9. 15.

5. For there is one God. This is a reason for offering prayer for all men, and for the declaration (ver. 4.) that God desires that all men should be saved. The reason is founded on the fact that he is the common Father of the race, and that he must have the same desire for the welfare of all his children. He has made them of one blood (Acts xvii. 26), and he must have the same interest in the happiness of all. Comp. Notes on Eph. iv. 6; Rom. iii. 30. ¶ And one Mediator between God and men. See Notes on Gal. iii. 19, 20; Heb. ix. 15. This also is given as a reason why prayer should be offered for all, and as a proof that God desires their salvation. The argument is, that there is the same Mediator between God and all men. He is not the Mediator between God and a part of the human race, but between "God and men," implying that he desired the salvation of the race. Whatever love there was in giving the Mediator at all, was love for all the race; whatever can be argued from that about the interest which God has in man is proof of his interest in the race at large. It is proper, therefore, to pray for all. Let it be observed that there is but one Mediator. There is not one for kings and another for their subjects; one for the rich and another for the poor; one for the master and another for the slave. All are on the same level, and the servant may feel that, in the gift of a Mediator, God regarded him with the same interest that he did his master. It may be added also that the doctrine of the Papists, that the saints or the Virgin Mary may act as mediators to procure blessings for us, is false. There is but "one Mediator;" and but one is necessary. Prayer offered to the "saints" or to the "Virgin" is essential idolatry, and at the same time it is a practical denial of the great central doctrine of Christianity that there is "one Mediator" who alone makes intercession for us with God. 1 John ii. 1; Isa. liii. 12; Heb. vii. 25. ¶ The man Christ Jesus. Jesus was truly and properly a man, having a perfect human body and soul, and is often called a man in the New Testament. But this does not prove that he was not also divine, any more than his being called God (John i. 1; xx. 28; Rom. ix. 5; 1 John v. 20; Heb. i. 8) proves that he was not also a man. The use of the word man here was probably

6 Who gave himself a ransom ^a for all, to ¹ be testified in due time.

a Matt. 20. 28.

7 Whereunto I am ordained a preacher, and an apostle, (I speak designed to intimate that, though he was divine, it was in his human nature that we are to consider him as discharging the office.—Doddridge.

1 or, a testimony.

6. Who gave himself a ransom for all. This also is stated as a reason why prayer should be offered for all, and a proof that God desires the salvation of all. The argument is, that as Christ died for all, it is proper to pray for all, and that the fact that he died for all is proof that God desires the salvation of all. Whatever proof of his desire for their salvation can be derived from this in relation to any of the race is proof in relation to all. On the meaning of the phrase "he gave himself a ransom," see Notes on Matt. xx. 28; Rom. iii. 25. On the fact that it was for "all," see Notes on 2 Cor. v. 14. ¶ To be testified in due time. Marg., a testimony. The Greek is, "the testimony in its own times," or in proper times—τὸ μαρτύριον καιροῖς ἰδίους. There have been very different explanations of this phrase. The common interpretation, and that which seems to me to be correct, is that "the testimony of this will be furnished in the proper time; that is, in the proper time it will be made known through all the world." See Rosenmüller. Paul affirms it as a great and important truth that Christ gave himself a ransom for all mankind—for Jews and Gentiles; for all classes and conditions of men alike. This truth had not always been understood. The Jews had supposed that salvation was designed exclusively for their nation, and denied that it could be extended to others unless they became Jews. According to them, salvation was not provided for, or offered to heathens as such, but only on condition that they became Jews. In opposition to this, Paul says that it was a doctrine of revelation that redemption was provided for all men, and that it was intended that the testimony to this should be afforded at the proper time. It was not fully made known under the ancient dispensation, but now the period had come when it should be communicated to all. Comp. Notes on Rom. v. 6, and Gal. iv. 4.

7. Whereunto. Gr., "Unto which;" that is, to the bearing of which testhe truth in Christ and lie not;) a teacher of the Gentiles in faith and verity.

^a John 4. 21.

timony I am appointed. ¶ I am ordained. Gr., "I am placed or constituted"—ἐτέθη. The word "ordain" has now acquired a technical signification, meaning to set apart solemnly to a sacred office by the imposition of hands; but it has not this meaning here. It does not refer to the manner in which he was set apart, or to any act of others in consecrating him to this work, but merely to the fact that he had been placed in this office, or appointed to it. He refers doubtless to the fact that the Lord Jesus had designated him to this work. ¶ A preacher, and an apostle. See Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 1-6; Gal. i. 11, 12. ¶ I speak the truth in Christ, and lie not. That is, by Christ; or I solemnly appeal to Christ—a form of an oath. See Notes on Rom. ix. 1. Paul makes a solemn declaration similar to this in regard to his call to the apostleship, in Gal. i. 20. For the reasons why he did it, see Notes on that verse. It is probable that there were those in Ephesus who denied that he could be an apostle, and hence his solemn declaration affirming it. ¶ A teacher of the Gentiles. Specially appointed to carry the Gospel to the Gentiles or the heathen. See Notes on Rom. xi. 13; Gal. ii. 7. ¶ In faith and verity. These words mean that he was appointed to instruct the Gentiles in faith, and in the knowledge of the truth.

8. I will therefore. The Greek word here—βούλομαι—is different from the word rendered will—θέλω—in ver. 4. The distinction is, that the word there used—θέλω—denotes an active volition or purpose; the word here used—βούλομαι—a mere passive desire, propensity, willingness. —Rob., Lex. The meaning here is, "it is my will"—expressing his wish in the case, or giving direction—though using a milder word than that which is commonly employed to denote an act of will. ¶ That men pray everywhere. Not merely in the Temple, or in other sacred places, but in all places. The Jews supposed that there was special efficacy in prayers offered at the Temple in Jerusalem; the heathen also had the same view in regard to their tem-

8 I will therefore that men pray ^a everywhere, lifting up holy ^b hands, without wrath and doubting.

^b Heb. 10. 22.

ples—for both seemed to suppose that they came nearer to God by approaching his sacred abode. Christianity teaches that God may be worshipped in any place, and that we are at all times equally near him. See Notes on John iv. 24; Acts xvii. 25. The direction here given that men should pray, in contradistinction from the duties of women, specified in the next verse, may be intended to imply that men should conduct the exercises of public worship. The duties of women pertain to a different sphere. Comp. vs. 11, 12. ¶ Lifting up holy hands. To lift up the hands denotes supplication, as it was a common attitude of prayer to spread abroad the hands toward heaven. Comp. Psa. lxxviii. 31; Exod. xix. 29, 33; 1 Kings viii. 22; 2 Chron. vi. 12, 13; Isa. i. 15. See also Horace, Odes, III., xxiii. 1; Ovid, M., ix., 701; Livy, v., 21; Seneca, Ep., 21. "Holy hands" here mean hands that are not defiled by sin, and that have not been employed for any purpose of iniquity. The idea is, that when men approach God they should do it in a pure and holy manner. ¶ Without wrath. That is, without the intermingling of any evil passion; with a calm, peaceful, benevolent mind. There should be nothing of the spirit of contention; there should be no anger toward others; the suppliant should be at peace with all men. It is impossible for a man to pray with comfort, or to suppose that his prayers will be heard, if he cherishes anger. The following exquisite and oft-quoted passage from Jeremy Taylor, is a more beautiful and striking illustration of the effect of anger in causing our prayers to return unanswered than was probably ever penned by any one else. Nothing could be more true, beautiful, and graphic. "Anger sets the house on fire, and all the spirits are busy upon trouble, and intend propulsion, defense, displeasure, or revenge. It is a short madness, and an eternal enemy to discourse and a fair conversation; it intends its own object with all the earnestness of perception or activity of design, and a quicker motion of a too warm and distempered blood; it is a fever in the heart, and

9 In like manner also, that women adorn themselves in modest apparel, with shamefacedness and sobriety, not with¹ brodered hair, or gold, or pearls, or costly array; 10 But (which becometh women

1 or, plaited. 1 Pet. 3. 3.

a calenture in the head, and a fire in the face, and a sword in the hand, and a fury all over; and therefore can never suffer a man to be in a disposition to pray. For prayer is the peace of our spirit, the stillness of our thoughts, the evenness of recollection, the seat of meditation, the rest of our cares, and the calm of our tempest; prayer is the issue of a quiet mind, of untroubled thoughts; it is the daughter of charity and the sister of meekness; and he that prays to God with an angry, that is, with a troubled and discomposed spirit, is like him that retires into a battle to meditate, and sets up his closet in the out-quarters of an army, and chooses a frontier garrison to be wise in. Anger is a perfect alienation of the mind from prayer, and therefore is contrary to that attention which presents our prayers in a right line to God. For so have I seen a lark rising from his bed of grass, and soaring upward, and singing as he rises, and hopes to get to heaven, and rise above the clouds; but the poor bird was beaten back with the loud sighings of an eastern wind, and his motion made irregular and inconsistent, descending more at every breath of the tempest than it could recover by the libration and frequent weighing of his wings, till the little creature was forced to sit down and pant, and stay till the storm was over; and then it made a prosperous flight, and did rise and sing, as if it had learned music and motion from an angel."—The Return of Prayers, Works, vol. i., 638. Ed. Lond., 1835. ¶ And doubting. This word, as used here, does not mean, as our translation would seem to imply, that we are to come before God without any doubts of our own piety, or in the exercise of perfect faith. The word used (διαλογισμός) means, properly, computation, adjustment of accounts; then reflection, thought; then reasoning, opinion; then debate, contention, strife. Luke ix. 46; Mark ix. 33, 34; Phil. ii. 14. This last is the sense evidently in this place. They were not to approach God in prayer in the midst of clamorous disputings and angry contentions. They were not to come when the mind was heated with debate, and irritated by strife for victory. Prayer was to be offered in a calm, serious, sober state of mind, and they who engage in polemical strife, or in warm contention of any kind, are little fitted to unite in the solemn act of addressing God. How often are theologians, when assembled together, so heated by debate, and so anxious for party victory, that they are in no suitable state of mind to pray! How often do even good men, holding different views on the disputed points of religious doctrine, suffer their minds to become so excited, and their temper so ruffled, that they are conscious that they are in an unfit state of mind to approach the throne of grace together! That theological debate has gone too far, that strife for victory has become too warm, when the disputants are in such a state of mind that they can not unite in prayer; when they could not cease their contentions, and with a calm and proper spirit bow together before the throne of grace.

9. In like manner also. That is, with the same propriety; with the same regard to what religion demands. The apostle had stated particularly the duty of men in public worship (ver. 8), and he now proceeds to state the duty of women. All the directions here evidently refer to the proper manner of conducting public worship, and not to private duties; and his object is to state the way in which he would have the different sexes appear. He had said that he would have prayers offered for all men (ver. 1, seq.), and that in offering such petitions he would have the men on whom devolved the duty of conducting public devotion, do it with holy hands; without any intermingling of passion, and with entire freedom from the spirit of contention. In reference to the duty of females in attendance on public worship, he says that he would have them appear in apparel suitable to the place and the occasion—adorned not after the manner of the world, but with the zeal and love in the cause of the Redeemer which became Christians. He would not have a woman become a public teacher (ver. 12), but would wish her ever to occupy the place in society for which she was designed (ver. 11), and to which she had shown that she was adapted. Vs. 13, 14. The direction in ver. 9-12, therefore, is to be understood particularly of the proper deportment of females in the duties of public worship. At the same time, the principles laid down are doubtless such as were intended to apply to them in the other situations in life, for if modest apparel is appropriate in the sanctuary, it is appropriate every where. If what is here prohibited in dress is wrong there, it would be difficult to show that it is right elsewhere. ¶ That women adorn themselves. The words "I will" are to be understood here as repeated from ver. 8. The apostle, by the use of the word adorn (κοσμεῖν), shows that he is not opposed to ornament or adorning, provided it be of the right kind. The world, as God has made it, is full of beauty, and he has shown in each flower that he is not opposed to true ornament. There are multitudes of things which appear to be designed for mere ornament, or are made merely because they are beautiful. Religion does not forbid true adorning. The Christian differs from the people of the world on this subject only on the question what is true ornament, or what it becomes us, all things considered, to do in the situation in which we are placed, the character which we sustain, the duties which we have to perform, and the profession which we make. It may be that there are ornaments in heaven which would be any thing but appropriate for the condition of a poor, lost, dying sinner on earth. ¶ In modest apparel. The word here rendered modest (κόσμιος), properly relates to ornament, or decoration, and means that which is well-ordered, decorous, becoming. It does not, properly, mean modest in the sense of being opposed to that which is immodest, or which tends to excite improper passions and desires, but that which is becoming or appropriate. The apostle does not positively specify what this would be, but he mentions some things which are to be excluded from it, and which, in his view, are inconsistent with the true adorning of Christian females — "broidered hair, gold, pearls, costly array." The sense here is, that the apparel of females should be such as becomes them, or such as is appropriate to them. The word here used (κόσμιος), shows that there should be due attention that it may be truly neat, fit, decorous. There is no religion in a negligent mode of apparel, or in inattention to personal appearance — any more than there is in wearing gold and pearls; and a female may as truly violate the precepts of her religion by neglecting her personal appearance as by excessive attention to it. The true idea here is, that her attention to her appearance should be such that she will be offensive to no class of persons; such as to show that her mind is supremely fixed on higher and more important things, and such as to interfere with no duty which she owes, and no good which she can do, either by spending her time needlessly in personal adorning, or by lavishing that money for dress which might do good to others, or by neglecting the proprieties of her station, and making herself offensive to others. ¶ With shamefacedness. With modesty of appearance and manner — an eminent female virtue, whether in the sanctuary or at home. ¶ And sobriety. The word here used means, properly, sanity; then sober-mindedness, moderation of the desires and passions. It is opposed to all that is frivolous, and to all undue excitement of the passions. The idea is, that in their apparel and deportment they should not intrench on the strictest decorum. — Doddridge. ¶ Not with broidered hair. Marg., plaited. Females in the East pay much more attention to the hair than is commonly done with us. It is plaited with great care, and arranged in various forms, according to the prevailing fashion, and often ornamented with spangles, or with silver wire or tissue interwoven. See Notes on Isa. iii. 24. The sense here is, that Christian females are not to imitate those of the world in their careful attention to the ornaments of the head. It can not be supposed that the mere braiding of the hair is forbidden, but only that careful attention to the manner of doing it, and to the ornaments usually worn in it, which characterized worldly females. ¶ Or gold, or pearls. It is not to be supposed that all use of gold or pearls as articles of dress is here forbidden; but the idea is, that the Christian female is not to seek these as the adorning which she de-professing godliness) with good works.

11 Let the woman ^a learn in silence with all subjection.

12 But I suffer not a woman to

^a 1 Cor. 14. 34.

sires, or is not to imitate the world in these personal decorations. It may be a difficult question to settle how much ornament is allowable, and when the true line is passed. But though this can not be settled by any exact rules, since much must depend on age, and on the relative rank in life, and the means which one may possess, yet there is one general rule which is applicable to all, and which might regulate all. It is that the true line is passed when more is thought of this external adorning than of the ornament of the heart. Any external decoration which occupies the mind more than the virtues of the heart, and which engrosses the time and attention more, we may be certain is wrong. The apparel should be such as not to attract attention; such as becomes our situation; such as will not be particularly singular; such as will leave the impression that the heart is not fixed on it. It is a poor ambition to decorate a dying body with gold and pearls. It should not be forgotten that the body thus adorned will soon need other habiliments, and will occupy a position where gold and pearls would be a mockery. When the heart is right; when there is true and supreme love for religion, it is usually not difficult to regulate the subject of dress. ¶ Costly array. Expensive dress. This is forbidden—for it is foolish, and the money thus employed may be much more profitably used in doing good. “Costly array” includes that which can be ill afforded, and that which is inconsistent with the feeling that the principal ornament is that of the heart.

10. But (which becometh women professing godliness) with good works. That is, it is not appropriate for women who profess to be the followers of the Saviour, to seek to be distinguished for external decorations. If they are Christians, they have seen the vanity of these things, and have fixed the heart on more substantial realities. They are professed followers of him “who went about doing good,” and teach, nor to usurp authority over the man, but to be in silence.

13 For Adam was first formed, then Eve.

14 And Adam was not deceived, the performance of good works especially becomes them. They profess to have fixed their affections on God the Saviour, and to be living for heaven; and it is not becoming in them to seek such ornaments as would indicate that the heart is supremely attached to worldly things. There is great beauty in this direction. Good works, or deeds of benevolence, eminently become a Christian female. The nature of woman seems to be adapted to the performance of all deeds demanding kindness, tenderness, gentleness of feeling, pity, sympathy, and affection; and we feel instinctively that while acts of hardy enterprise and daring in a good cause peculiarly become a Christian man, there is something exquisitely appropriate to the female character in deeds of humble and unobtrusive sympathy and benevolence. God seems to have formed her mind for just such things, and in such things she occupies her appropriate sphere, rather than in seeking external adorning.

11. Let the woman learn in silence. Listen attentively to instruction, without attempting to teach in public. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 35. ¶ With all subjection. With due subjection to those who are in authority, and who are appointed to minister in holy things. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 34.

12. But I suffer not a woman to teach. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiv. 34. ¶ Nor to usurp authority over the man. See Notes on 1 Cor. xi. 3.

13. For Adam was first formed, then Eve. The apostle, in this verse and the following, gives reasons why a woman should occupy a subordinate situation, and not usurp authority. The first is, that she was second in the act of creation, or was made subsequent to man. The reason here assigned can not be understood to be merely that of priority of existence—for then it would give every old person authority over a younger one; but it must refer to the circumstances of the case as detailed in the history of the creation. Gen. i., ii. Man was but the woman being deceived, was in the transgression.

15 Notwithstanding she shall be made as the Lord of this lower creation, and then the woman was made of a rib taken from his side, and given to him, not as a Lord, but as a companion. All the circumstances combine to show the subordinate nature of her rank, and to prove that she was not designed to exert authority over the man. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. xi. 8, 9.

14. And Adam was not deceived. This is the second reason why the woman should occupy a subordinate rank in all things. It is that, in the most important situation in which she was ever placed, she had shown that she was not qualified to take the lead. She had evinced a readiness to yield to temptation; a feebleness of resistance; a pliancy of character, which showed that she was not adapted to the situation of headship, and which made it proper that she should ever afterward occupy a subordinate situation. It is not meant here that Adam did not sin, nor even that he was not deceived by the Tempter, but that the woman opposed a feebler resistance to the temptation than he would have done, and that the temptation as actually applied to her would have been ineffectual on him. To tempt and seduce him to fall, there were needed all the soft persuasions, the entreaties, and the example of his wife. Satan understood this, and approached man not with the specious argument of the serpent, but through the allurements of his wife. It is undoubtedly implied here that man in general has a power of resisting certain kinds of temptation superior to that possessed by woman, and hence that the headship properly belongs to him. This is, undoubtedly, the general truth, though there may be many exceptions, and many noble cases to the honor of the female sex, in which they evince a power of resistance to temptation superior to man. In many traits of character, and among them those which are most lovely, woman is superior to man; yet it is undoubtedly true that, as a general thing, temptation will make a stronger impression on her than on him. When it is said that "Adam was not deceived," it is not meant that when saved in childbearing, if they continue in faith and charity and holiness with sobriety.

he partook actually of the fruit he was under no deception, but that he was not deceived by the serpent; he was not first deceived, or first in the transgression. The woman should remember that sin began with her, and she should therefore be willing to occupy an humble and subordinate situation. ¶ But the woman being deceived. She was made to believe that the fruit would not injure her, but would make her wise, and that God would not fulfill his threatening of death. Sin, from the beginning, has been a process of delusion. Every man or woman who violates the law of God is deceived as to the happiness which is expected from the violation, and as to the consequences which will follow it.

15. Notwithstanding she shall be saved. The promise in this verse is designed to alleviate the apparent severity of the remarks just made about the condition of woman, and of the allusion to the painful facts of her early history. What the apostle had just said would carry the mind back to the period in which woman introduced sin into the world, and, by an obvious and easy association, to the sentence which had been passed on her in consequence of her transgression, and to the burden of sorrows which she was doomed to bear. By the remark in this verse, however, Paul shows that it was not his intention to overwhelm her with anguish. He did not design to harrow up her feelings by an unkind allusion to a melancholy fact in her history. It was necessary for him to state, and for her to know, that her place was secondary and subordinate, and he wished this truth ever to be kept in memory among Christians. It was not unkind or improper also to state the reasons for this opinion, and to show that her own history had demonstrated that she was not designed for headship. But she was not to be regarded as degraded and abandoned. She was not to be overwhelmed by the recollection of what "the mother of all living" had done. There were consolations in her case. There was a special divine interposition which she might look for, evincing tender care on the part of God in those deep sorrows which had come upon her in consequence of her transgression; and instead of being crushed and broken-hearted on account of her condition, she should remember that the everlasting arms of God would sustain her in her condition of sorrow and pain. Paul, then, would speak to her the language of consolation, and while he would have her occupy her proper place, he would have her feel that God was her Friend. In regard to the nature of the consolation referred to here, there has been a considerable variety of opinion. Some have held that, by the expression "she shall be saved in child-bearing," the apostle designs to include all the duties of the maternal relation, meaning that she should be saved through the faithful performance of her duties as a mother.—Robinson, Lexicon. Rosenmüller regards the word rendered "child-bearing" (τεκνογονία) as synonymous with education, and supposes that the meaning is, that a woman, by the proper training of her children, can obtain salvation as well as her husband, and that her appropriate duty is not public teaching, but the training of her family. Wetstein supposes that it means, "she shall be saved from the arts of impostors, and from the luxury and vice of the age, if, instead of wandering about, she remains at home, cultivates modesty, is subject to her husband, and engages carefully in the training of her children." This sense agrees well with the connection. Calvin supposes that the apostle designs to console the woman by the assurance that, if she bears the trials of her condition of sorrow with a proper spirit, abiding in faith and holiness, she will be saved. She is not to regard herself as cut off from the hope of heaven. Doddridge, Macknight, Clarke, and others, suppose that it refers to the promise in Gen. iii. 15, and means that the woman shall be saved through, or by means of bearing a child, to wit, the Messiah; and that the apostle means to sustain the woman in her sorrows, and in her state of subordination and inferiority, by referring to the honor which has been put upon her by the fact that a woman gave birth to the Messiah. It is supposed also that he means to say that special honor is thus conferred on her over the man, inasmuch as the Messiah had no human father.—Dodd- ridge. The objections to this interpretation, however, though it is sustained by most respectable names, seem to me to be insuperable. They are such as these: (1.) The interpretation is too refined and abstruse. It is not that which is obvious. It depends for its point on the fact that the Messiah had no human father, and if the apostle had intended to refer to that, and to build an argument on it, it may be doubted whether he would have done it in so obscure a manner. But it may reasonably be questioned whether he would have made that fact a point on which his argument would turn. There would be a species of refinement about such an argument, such as we should not look for in the writings of Paul. (2.) It is not the obvious meaning of the word "child-bearing." There is nothing in the word which requires that it should have any reference to the birth of the Messiah. The word is of a general character, and properly refers to child-bearing in general. (3.) It is not true that woman would be "saved" merely by the fact that one of her own sex had given birth to the Messiah. She will be saved, as man will be, as a consequence of his having been born; but there is no evidence that the mere fact that woman gave birth to him, and that he had no human father, did any thing to save Mary herself, or any one else of her sex. If, therefore, the word refers to the "bearing" of the Messiah, or to the fact that he was born, it would be no more proper to say that this was connected with the salvation of woman than that of man. The true meaning, it seems to me, has been suggested by Calvin, and may be seen by the following remarks. (1.) The apostle designed to comfort woman, or to alleviate the sadness of the picture which he had drawn respecting her condition. (2.) He had referred, incidentally, as a proof of the subordinate character of her station, to the first apostasy. This naturally suggested the sentence which was passed on her, and the condition of sorrow to which she was doomed, particularly in child-birth. That was the standing demonstration of her guilt; that the condition in which she suffered most; that the situation in which she was in greatest peril. (3.) Paul assures her, therefore, that though she must thus suffer, she ought not to regard herself in her deep sorrows and dangers, though on account of sin, as necessarily under the divine displeasure, or as excluded from the hope of heaven. The way of salvation was open to her as well as to men, and was to be entered in the same manner. If she had faith and holiness, even in her condition of sorrow brought on by guilt, she might as well hope for eternal life as man. The object of the apostle seems to be to guard against a possible construction which might be put on his words, that he did not regard the woman as in circumstances as favorable for salvation as those of man, or as if he taught that salvation for her was more difficult, or perhaps that she could not be saved at all. The general sentiments of the Jews in regard to the salvation of the female sex, and their exclusion from the religious privileges which men enjoy; the views of the Mohammedans in reference to the inferiority of the sex; and the prevalent feelings in the heathen world, degrading the sex, and making their condition, in regard to salvation, far inferior to that of man, show the propriety of what the apostle here says, and the fitness that he should so guard himself that his language could not possibly be so construed as to give countenance to such sentiments. According to the interpretation of the passage here proposed, the apostle does not mean to teach that a Christian female would be certainly saved from death in childbirth—for this would not be true, and the proper construction of the passage does not require us to understand him as affirming this. Religion is not designed to make any immediate and direct change in the laws of our physical being. It does not of itself guard us from the pestilence; it does not arrest the progress of disease; it does not save us from death; and, as a matter of fact, woman, by the highest degree of piety, is not necessarily saved from the perils of that condition to which she has been subjected in consequence of the apostasy. The apostle means to show this—that in all her pain and sorrow; that amid all the evidence of apostasy, and all that reminds her that she was “first” in the transgression, she may look up to God as her friend and strength, and may hope for acceptance and salvation. ¶ If they continue. If woman continues; it being not uncommon to change the singular form to the plural, especially if the subject spoken of have the character of a noun of multitude. Many have understood this of children, as teaching that if the mother was faithful, so that her children should continue in faith, she would be saved. But this is not a necessary, or a probable interpretation. The apostle says nothing of children, and it is not reasonable to suppose that he would make the prospect of her salvation depend on their being pious. This would be to add a hard condition of salvation, and one nowhere else suggested in the New Testament. The object of the apostle evidently is to show that woman must continue in the faithful service of God if she would be saved—a doctrine every where insisted on in the New Testament in reference to all persons. She must not imitate the example of the mother of mankind, but she must faithfully yield obedience to the laws of God till death. ¶ Faith. Faith in the Redeemer and in divine truth, or a life of fidelity in the service of God. ¶ Chastity. Love to all. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. ¶ Holiness. She must be truly religious. ¶ With sobriety. All these things must be united with a becoming soberness or seriousness of deportment. See Notes on ver. 9. In such a life, woman may look to a world where she will be forever free from all the sadnesses and sorrows of her condition here; where, by unequalled pain, she will be no more reminded of the time when

“Her rash hand in evil hour Forth reaching to the fruit, she pluck'd, she ate;”

and when before the throne she shall be admitted to full equality with all the redeemed of the Lord. Religion meets all the sadnesses of her condition here; pours consolation into the cup of her many woes; speaks kindly to her in her distresses; utters the language of forgiveness to her heart when crushed with the remembrance of sin—for “she loves much” (Luke vii. 37-48); and conducts her to immortal glory in that world where all sorrow shall be unknown.

CHAPTER III.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

The object of this chapter is to give

CHAPTER III.

THIS is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, ^a he desireth a good work.

^a Phil. 1. 1.

2 A bishop ^b then must be blame-

^b Tit. 1. 6, etc.

directions respecting the qualifications and duties of the officers of the Christian Church. As it is evident that Timothy was to be partly employed in the appointment of suitable officers for the Church at Ephesus, and as the kinds of officers here referred to were to be permanent in the Church, it was important that a full statement should be put on record, under the influence of inspiration, respecting their qualifications and duties. The chapter embraces the following subjects:

I. The qualifications of a bishop. Ver. 1-7. The enumeration of his qualifications is preceded by a general statement that the office is an honorable one, and that he who aspires to it seeks an employment that is, in itself, to be regarded as desirable. Ver. 1. The qualifications specified for this office are the following:

(1.) He must be a man of good private character, possessing and illustrating the Christian virtues, or, as we should say now, an upright man, and a Christian gentleman. Vs. 2, 3.

(2.) He must be a man who rules his own house well, and who thus shows that he is qualified to preside as the first officer in the Church of God. Vs. 4, 5.

(3.) He must be a man of suitable age and experience—one who will not be likely to fall into the temptations that are laid for the young. Ver. 6.

(4.) He must have a fair reputation among those who are not Christians—as it is intended that the influence of his ministry shall reach them, and as it is impossible to do them good unless he is believed to be a man of integrity. Ver. 7.

II. The qualifications of deacons. Ver. 8-10, 12, 13. They must be,

(1.) Men of fair character—serious, temperate, candid. Ver. 8.

(2.) Men who hold to the doctrines of the Gospel with a pure conscience. Ver. 9.

(3.) Men who have been proved, and who have shown that they are qualified to serve the Church. Ver. 10.

(4.) Men whose wives are of such a character that their example will contribute to the promotion of the common cause. Ver. 11.

(5.) Men not living in polygamy, and who exercise exemplary family government. Vs. 12, 13.

III. The reason why Paul gave these instructions to Timothy. Vs. 14, 15. It was that he might know how he ought to demean himself in the important station which he was called to occupy. Paul hoped to be able to come to him before long, and to complete the work which he had commenced at Ephesus, but, in the mean time, he gave him these written counsels, that he might understand particularly the duty which was required of him.

IV. The chapter closes with a statement which seems to have been intended to impress the mind of Timothy with the importance of the duties in which he was engaged. Vs. 15, 16. The statement is, that the Church is the great defender of the truth in the world (verse 15), and that the truth which the Church is to maintain is of the greatest importance to mankind. It relates to the incarnation of the Son of God, and to the work which he accomplished on earth—a work which excited the deepest interest in heaven, and the true doctrine respecting which it was of the utmost importance to keep up among men. Ver. 16. This reason is further urged in the following chapter, by showing that the time would come when, under the influence of Satan, these great doctrines would be denied, and the truth be corrupted and perverted.

1. This is a true saying. Gr., “Faithful is the word”—the very phrase which is used in ch. i. 15. See Notes on that verse. The idea here is, that it was worthy of credence; it was not to be doubted. ¶ If a man desire. Implying that there would be those who would wish to be put into the ministry. The Lord, undoubtedly, by his Spirit, often excites an earnest and irrepressible desire to preach the Gospel—a desire so strong that he in whom it exists can be satisfied in no other calling. In such a case, it should be regarded as one evidence of a call to this work. The apostle, however, by the statements which follow, intimates that wherever this desire exists, it is of the utmost importance to have just views of the nature of the office, and that there should be other qualifications for the ministry than a mere desire to preach the Gospel. He proceeds, therefore, to state those qualifications; and no one who "desires" the office of the ministry should conclude that he is called to it unless these qualifications, substantially, are found in him. The word rendered desire here (ὀρέγω) denotes, properly, to reach or stretch out—and hence, to reach after any thing, to long after, to try to obtain. Heb. xi. 16. ¶ The office of a bishop. The Greek here is a single word—ἐπισκοπή. The word ἐπισκοπή (Episcopē)—whence the word Episcopal is derived—occurs but four times in the New Testament. It is translated visitation in Luke xix. 44, and in 1 Peter ii. 13; bishoprick, Acts i. 20; and in this place office of a bishop. The verb from which it is derived (ἐπισκοπέω) occurs but twice. In Heb. xii. 15, it is rendered looking diligently, and in 1 Pet. v. 2, taking the oversight. The noun rendered bishop occurs in Acts xx. 28; Phil. i. 1; 1 Tim. iii. 2; Titus i. 7; 1 Pet. ii. 25. The verb means, properly, to look upon, behold; to inspect, to look after, see to, take care of; and the noun denotes the office of overseeing, inspecting, or looking to. It is used to denote the care of the sick, Xen., Æc., 15, 9 (comp. Passow); and is of so general a character that it may denote any office of overseeing or attending to. There is nothing in the word itself which would limit it to any class or grade of the ministry, and it is, in fact, applied to nearly all the officers of the Church in the New Testament, and, indeed, to Christians who did not sustain any office. Thus it is applied (a) to believers in general, directing them to "look diligently, lest any one should fail of the grace of God," Heb. xii. 15; (b) to the elders of the Church at Ephesus, "over the which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers," Acts xx. 28; (c) to the elders or presbyters of the Church in 1 Pet. v. 2, "Feed the flock of God, taking the oversight thereof;" (d) to the officers of the Church in Philippi, mentioned in connection with deacons as the only officers of the Church there, "to the saints at Philippi, with the bishops and deacons," Phil. i. 1; (e) to Judas, the apostate, Acts i. 20; and (f) to the great Head of the Church, the Lord

Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 25, "the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls." From this use of the term it follows, (1.) That the word is never used to designate the peculiarity of the apostolic office, or so as to have any special applicability to the apostles. Indeed, the term bishop is never applied to any of the apostles in the New Testament; nor is the word in any of its forms ever used with reference to them, except in the single case of Judas, Acts i. 20. (2.) It is never employed in the New Testament to designate an order of men superior to presbyters, regarded as having any other functions than presbyters, or being in any sense "successors" to the apostles. It is so used now by the advocates of prelacy; but this is a use wholly unknown to the New Testament. It is so undeniable that the name is never given in the New Testament to those who are now called "bishops" that even Episcopalians concede it. Thus, Dr. Onderdonk (Tract on Episcopacy, p. 12) says, "ALL that we read in the New Testament concerning 'bishops' is to be regarded as pertaining to the 'middle grade;' that is, to those who are now regarded as 'priests.'" This is not strictly correct, as is clear from the remarks above, respecting what is called the "middle grade;" but it is strictly correct, so far as it affirms that it is never applied to prelates. (3.) It is used in the New Testament to denote ministers of the Gospel who had the care or oversight of the churches, without any regard to grade or rank. (4.) It has now, as used by Episcopalians, a sense which is wholly unauthorized by the New Testament, and which, indeed, is entirely at variance with the usage there. To apply the term to a pretended superior order of clergy, as designating their peculiar office, is wholly to depart from the use of the word as it occurs in the Bible. (5.) As it is never used in the Scriptures with reference to prelates, it should be used with reference to the pastors, or other officers of the Church; and to be a pastor or overseer of the flock of Christ, should be regarded as being a scriptural bishop. ¶ He desireth a good work. An honorable office; an office which it is right for a man to desire. There are some stations in life which ought never to be desired, but it is proper for any one to desire the office of a bishop who has the proper qualifications. Compare Notes on Rom. xi. 13.

2. A bishop. A minister of religion, according to the foregoing remarks, who has the charge or oversight of any Christian Church. The reference here is, doubtless, to one who had the government of the Church intrusted to him (vs. 4, 5), and who was also a preacher of the Gospel. ¶ Must be blameless. This is a different word (ἀνεπιληπτος) from that rendered blameless in Luke i. 6; Phil. ii. 15; iii. 6 (ἄμωπτος). Comp., however, Notes on Luke i. 6; Phil. iii. 6. The word here used does not mean that, as a necessary qualification for office, a bishop should be perfect; but that he should be a man against whom no charge of immorality, or of holding false doctrine, is alleged. His conduct should be irreprehensible or irreproachable. Undoubtedly it means that if any charge could be brought against him implying moral obliquity, he is not fit for the office. He should be a man of irreproachable character for truth, honesty, chastity, and general uprightness. ¶ The husband of one wife. This need not be understood as requiring that a bishop should be a married man, as Vigilantius, a presbyter in the Church at Barcelona in the fourth century, supposed, however desirable in general it may be that a minister of the Gospel should be married. But, while this interpretation is manifestly to be excluded as false, there has been much difference of opinion on the question whether the passage means that a minister should not have more than one wife at the same time, or whether it prohibits the marriage of a second wife after the death of the first. On this question, the Notes of Bloomfield, Doddridge, and Macknight may be consulted. That the former is the correct opinion seems to me to be evident from the following considerations: (1.) It is the most obvious meaning of the language, and it would doubtless be thus understood by those to whom it was addressed. At a time when polygamy was not uncommon, to say that a man should "have but one wife" would be naturally understood as prohibiting polygamy. (2.) The marriage of a second wife, after the death of the first, is nowhere spoken of in the Scriptures as wrong. The marriage of a widow to a second husband is expressly declared to be proper (1 Cor.

vii. 39); and it is not unfair to infer from that permission that it is equally lawful and proper for a man to marry the second time. But, if it is lawful for any man, it is right for a minister of the Gospel. No reason can be assigned against such marriages in his case which would not be equally valid in any other. Marriage is as honorable for a minister of the Gospel as for any other man (comp. Notes on Heb. xiii. 4); and, as Doddridge has well remarked, "Circumstances may be so adjusted that there may be as much reason for a second marriage as for the first, and as little inconvenience of any kind may attend it." (3.) There was a special propriety in the prohibition, if understood as prohibiting polygamy. It is known that it was extensively practiced, and was not regarded as unlawful. Yet one design of the Gospel was to restore the marriage relation to its primitive condition; and, though it is not necessary to suppose that polygamy was ever tolerated in the Christian Church, for there is no evidence of that, yet, in order to fix a special mark of disapprobation on this practice, it might have been deemed desirable to require of the ministers of the Gospel that they should have but one wife. Thus the practice of polygamy would gradually come to be regarded as dishonorable and improper, and the example and influence of the ministry would tend to introduce correct views in regard to the nature of this relation. One thing is clear from this passage, that the views of the Papists in regard to the celibacy of the clergy are directly at variance with the Bible. The declaration of Paul in Heb. xiii. 4 is that "marriage is honorable in all;" and here it is implied that it was proper that a minister should be married. If it were not, why did not Paul prohibit it altogether? Instead of saying that it was improper that a bishop should have more than one wife, why did he not say that it was improper that he should be married at all? Would not a Romanist say so now? ¶ Vigilant. This word (νηφάλειος) occurs only here and in ver. 11; Titus ii. 2. It means, properly, sober, temperate, abstinent, especially in respect to wine; then sober-minded, watchful, circumspect.—Robinson. A minister should have a watchful care over his own conduct. He should be on his guard against sin in any form.

less, the husband of one wife, vigilant, sober, of ¹ good behav-

¹ or, modest.

¶ Sober. σώφρονα. Properly, a man of a sound mind; one who follows sound reason, and who is not under the control of passion. The idea is, that he should have his desires and passions well regulated. Perhaps the word prudent would come nearer to the meaning of the apostle than any single word which we have. ¶ Of good behavior. Marg., modest. Coverdale renders it mannerly. The most correct rendering, according to the modern use of language, would be, that he should be a gentleman. He should not be slovenly in his appearance, or rough and boorish in his manners. He should not do violence to the usages of refined intercourse, nor be unfit to appear respectably in the most refined circles of society. Inattention to personal neatness, and to the rules which regulate refined intercourse, is indicative neither of talent, learning, nor religion; and though they are occasionally—not often—connected with talent, learning, and religion, yet they are never the fruit of either, and are always a disgrace to those who exhibit such incivility and boorishness, for such men ought to know better. A minister of the Gospel should be a finished gentleman in his manners, and there is no excuse for him if he is not. His religion, if he has any, is adapted to make him such. He has usually received such an education as should have made him such, and in all cases he ought to have had such a training. He is admitted into the best society, and has an opportunity of becoming familiar with the laws of refined intercourse. He should be an example and a pattern in all that goes to promote the welfare of mankind, and there are few things so easily acquired that are fitted to do this as refinement and gentility of manners. No man can do good, on the whole, or in the “long run,” by disregarding the rules of refined intercourse; and, other things being equal, the refined, the courteous, the polite gentleman in the ministry, will always do more good than he who neglects the rules of good-breeding. ¶ Given to hospitality. This is often enjoined on all Christians as a duty of religion. For the reason of this, and the nature of the duty, see Notes on our, given to hospitality, apt to teach:

Rom. xii. 13; Heb. xiii. 2. It was a special duty of the ministers of religion, as they were to be examples of every Christian virtue. ¶ Apt to teach. Gr., Didactic; that is, capable of instructing, or qualified for the office of a teacher of religion. As the principal business of a preacher of the Gospel is to teach, or to communicate to his fellow-men the knowledge of the truth, the necessity of this qualification is obvious. No one should be allowed to enter the ministry who is not qualified to impart instruction to others on the doctrines and duties of religion; and no one should feel that he ought to continue in the ministry who has not industry, and self-denial, and the love of study enough to lead him constantly to endeavor to increase in knowledge, that he may be qualified to teach others. A man who would teach a people, must himself keep in advance of them on the subjects on which he would instruct them.

3. Not given to wine. Marg., “Not ready to quarrel and offer wrong, as one in wine.” The Greek word (πάροικος) occurs in the New Testament only here and in Titus i. 7. It means, properly, by wine; that is, spoken of what takes place by or over wine, as revelry, drinking-songs, etc. Then it denotes, as it does here, one who sits by wine; that is, who is in the habit of drinking it. It can not be inferred, from the use of the word here, that wine was absolutely and entirely prohibited; for the word does not properly express that idea. It means that one who is in the habit of drinking wine, or who is accustomed to sit with those who indulge in it, should not be admitted to the ministry. The way in which the apostle mentions the subject here would lead us fairly to suppose that he did not mean to commend its use in any sense; that he regarded it as dangerous, and that he would wish the ministers of religion to avoid it altogether. In regard to its use at all, except at the communion or as a medicine, it may be remarked, that a minister will do no injury to himself or others by letting it entirely alone; he may do injury by indulging in it. No man is under any obligation of courtesy or Christian duty to use it; thousands of ministers of the Gospel have brought ruin on themselves, and disgrace on the ministry, by its use. Compare Notes on Matt. xi. 9, and 1 Tim. v. 23. ¶ No striker. He must be a peaceable, not a quarrelsome man. This is connected with the caution about the use of wine, probably, because that is commonly found to produce a spirit of contention and strife. ¶ Not greedy of filthy lucre. Not contentious or avaricious. Gr., Not desirous of base gain. The desire of this is condemned every where in the New Testament; but it is especially the duty of a minister of the Gospel to be free from it. He has a right to a support (see Notes on 1 Cor. ix.), but there is nothing that more certainly paralyzes the usefulness of a minister of the Gospel than the love of money. There is an instinctive feeling in the human bosom that such a man ought to be actuated by a nobler and a purer principle. As avarice, moreover, is the great sin of the world—the sin that sways more hearts, and does more to hinder the progress of the Gospel, than all others combined—it is important in the highest degree that the minister of religion should be an example of what men should be, and that he, by his whole life, should set his face against that which is the main obstruction to the progress of that Gospel which he is appointed to preach. ¶ But patient. Modest, mild, gentle. See the word (Gr.) in Phil. iv. 5; Titus iii. 2; James iii. 17; and 1 Pet. ii. 18, where it is rendered gentle. The word means that the minister of the Gospel should be a man of mild and kind demeanor, such as his Master was. ¶ Not a brawler. Comp. 2 Tim. ii. 24. That is, he should not be a man given to contention, or apt to take up a quarrel. The Greek is, literally, Not disposed to fight. ¶ Not covetous. Gr., Not a lover of silver; that is, of money. A man should not be put into the ministry who is characteristically a lover of money. Such a one, no matter what his talents may be, has no proper qualification for the office, and will do more harm than good.

3 Not¹ given to wine, no striker, not greedy of filthy lucre; but patient,^a not a brawler, not covetous;

1 or, not ready to quarrel and offer wrong, as one in wine.

4. One that ruleth well his own house.

4 One that ruleth well^b his own house, having his children in subjection with all gravity:

a 2 Tit. 2. 24.

b Psa. 101. 2.

This implies that a minister of the Gospel would be, and ought to be, a married man. It is every where in the New Testament supposed that he would be a man who could be an example in all the relations of life. The position which he occupies in the Church has a strong resemblance to the relation which a father sustains to his household; and a qualification to govern a family well would be an evidence of a qualification to preside properly in the Church. It is probable that, in the early Christian Church, ministers were not unfrequently taken from those of mature life, and who were, at the time, at the head of families; and, of course, such would be men who had had an opportunity of showing that they had this qualification for the office. Though, however, this can not be insisted on now as a previous qualification for the office, yet it is still true that, if he has a family, it is a necessary qualification, and that a man in the ministry should be one who governs his own house well. A want of this will always be a hindrance to extensive usefulness. ¶ Having his children in subjection with all gravity. This does not mean that his children should evince gravity, whatever may be true on that point; but it refers to the father. He should be a grave or serious man in his family; a man free from levity of character, and from frivolity and fickleness, in his intercourse with his children. It does not mean that he should be severe, stern, morose—which are traits that are often mistaken for gravity, and which are as inconsistent with the proper spirit of a father as frivolity of manner—but that he should be a serious and sober-minded man. He should maintain proper dignity (σεμνότης); he should cherish self-respect, and his deportment should be such as to inspire others with respect for him.

5. For if a man know not how to rule. This is a beautiful and striking argument. A Church resembles a family. It is, indeed, larger, and there is a greater variety of dispositions in it than there is in a family. The authority of a minister of the Gospel in a Church is also less absolute than that of a father. But still there is a striking resemblance. The Church is made up of an assemblage of brothers and sisters. They are banded together for the same purposes, and have a common object to aim at. They have common feelings and common wants. They have sympathy, like a family, with each other in their distresses and afflictions. The government of the Church also is designed to be paternal. It should be felt that he who presides over it has the feelings of a father; that he loves all the members of the great family; that he has no prejudices, no partialities, no selfish aims to gratify. Now, if a man can not govern his own family well; if he is severe, partial, neglectful, or tyrannical at home, how can he be expected to take charge of the more numerous "household of faith" with proper views and feelings? If, with all the natural and strong ties of affection which bind a father to his own children; if, when they are few comparatively in number, and where his eye is constantly upon them, he is unable to govern them aright, how can he be expected to preside in a proper manner over the larger household where he will be bound with comparatively feebler ties, and where he will be exposed more to the influence of passion, and where he will have a much less constant opportunity of supervision? Confucius, as quoted by Doddridge, has a sentiment strikingly resembling that before us: "It is impossible that he who knows not how to govern and reform his own family, should rightly govern and reform a people." We may remark, also, in this verse, a delicate and beautiful use of words by the apostle to prevent the possibility of misapprehension. While he institutes a comparison between the government of a family and that of the Church, he guards against the possibility of its being supposed that he would countenance arbitrary authority in the Church, even such authority as a father must of necessity employ in his own family. Hence he uses different words. He speaks of the father as "ruling" over his own family; or presiding over it—προσπι-

5 (For if a man know not how to rule his own house, how shall he take care of the Church of God?)

¹ or, one newly come to the faith.

6 Not ^a a novice, lest being lifted up with pride ^b he fall into the condemnation of the devil.

^a Prov. 16. 18.

^b Jude 6.

ναι; he describes the minister of religion as having a tender care for the Church—ἐπιμελήσεται.

6. Not a novice. Marg., one newly come to the faith. The Greek word, which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, means, properly, that which is newly planted. Thus it would mean a plant that was not strong, or not fitted to bear the severity of storms; that had not as yet struck its roots deep, and could not resist the fierceness of a cold blast. Then the word comes to mean a new convert; one who has had little opportunity to test his own faith, or to give evidence to others that he would be faithful to the trust committed to him. The word does not refer so much to one who is young in years, as one who is young in faith. Still, all the reasons which exist against introducing a very recent convert into the ministry, will apply commonly with equal force against introducing one young in years. ¶ Lest being lifted up with pride. We are not to suppose that this is the only reason against introducing a recent convert into the ministry, but it is a sufficient reason. He would be likely to be elated by being intrusted at once with the highest office in the Church, and by the commendations and flattery which he might receive. No condition is wholly proof against this; but he is much less likely to be injured who has had much experience of the depravity of his own heart, and whose mind has been deeply imbued with the spirit of the Gospel. ¶ He fall into the condemnation of the devil. That is, the same kind of condemnation which the devil fell into; to wit, condemnation on account of pride. It is here intimated that the cause of the apostasy of Satan was pride—a cause which is as likely to have been the true one as any other. Who can tell but it may have been produced by some new honor which was conferred on him in heaven, and that his virtue was not found sufficient for the untried circumstances in which he was placed? Much of the apostasy from eminent virtue in this world arises from this cause; and possibly the case of Satan may have been the most signal instance of the kind which has occurred in the universe. The idea of Paul is, that a young convert should not suddenly be raised to an exalted station in the Church. Who can doubt the wisdom of this direction? The word rendered lifted up (τυφωθεῖς) is from a verb which means to smoke, to fume, to surround with smoke; then to inflate—as a bladder is with air; and then to be conceited or proud; that is, to be like a bladder filled, not with a solid substance, but with air.

7 Moreover he must have a good report of them ^a which are without; lest he fall into reproach, and the snare ^b of the devil.

^a Acts 22. 12. 1 Thess. 4. 12. ^b c. 6. 9. 2 Tim. 2. 26.

7. Moreover he must have a good report of them which are without. Who are without the Church; that is, of those who are not Christians. This includes, of course, all classes of those who are not Christians—heathens, infidels, Jews, moral men, and scoffers. The idea is, that he must have a fair reputation with them for integrity of character. His life must be in their view upright. He must not be addicted to any thing which they regard as inconsistent with good morals. His deportment must be such that they will regard it as not inconsistent with his profession. He must be true, and just, and honest in his dealings with his fellow-men, and so live that they can not say that he has wronged them. He must not give occasion for scandal or reproach in his intercourse with the other sex, but must be regarded as a man of a pure life and of a holy walk. The reason for this injunction is obvious. It is his business to endeavor to do such men good, and to persuade them to become Christians. But no minister of the Gospel can possibly do such men good, unless they regard him as an upright and honest man. No matter how he preaches or prays; no matter how orthodox, learned, or apparently devout he may be, all his efforts will be in vain unless they regard him as a man of incorruptible integrity. If they hate religion themselves, they insist justly that, since he has professed it, he shall be governed by its principles; or if they feel its importance, they will not be influenced to embrace it by a man that they regard as hypocritical and impure. Go to a man whom you have defrauded, or who regards you as having done or attempted to do wrong to himself or to any other one, and talk to him about the necessity of religion, and he will instinctively say that he does not want a religion which will not make its professor true, honest, and pure. It is impossible, therefore, for a minister to overestimate the importance of having a fair character in the view of the world, and no man should be introduced into the ministry, or sustained in it, who has not a fair reputation. Comp. Notes on Col. iv. 5; 1 Thess. iv. 12. ¶ Lest he fall into reproach. That is, in such a way as to bring dishonor on the ministerial character. His life will be such as to give men occasion to reproach the cause of religion. ¶ And the snare of the devil. The snare which the devil lays to entrap and ruin the ministers of the Gospel and all good men. The snare to which reference is here made is that of blasting the character and influence of the minister of the Gospel. The idea is, that Satan lays a snare so as to entangle him and to secure this object, and the means which he uses is the vigilance and suspicion of those who are out of the Church. If there is any thing of this kind in the life of a minister which they can make use of, they will be ready to do it. Hence the necessity on his part of an upright and blameless life. Satan is constantly aiming at this thing; the world is watching for it; and if the minister has any propensity which is not in entire accordance with honesty, Satan will take advantage of it and draw him into the snare.

8 Likewise must the deacons ^c be grave, not double-tongued, not ^d given to much wine, not greedy of filthy lucre;

^c Acts 6. 3.

^d Ver. 3. Lev. 10. 9.

8. Likewise must the deacons. On the meaning of the word deacons, see Notes on Phil. i. 1. On their appointment, see Notes on Acts vi. 1. The word here evidently denotes those who had charge of the temporal affairs of the Church, the poor, etc. No qualifications are mentioned, implying that they were to be preachers of the Gospel. In most respects, except in regard to preaching, their qualifications were to be the same as those of the bishops. ¶ Be grave. Serious, sober-minded men. In Acts vi. 3 it is said that they should be men of honest report. On the meaning of the word grave, see Notes on ver. 4. They should be men who by their serious deportment will inspire respect. ¶ Not double-tongued. The word here used—δίλογος—does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. It means, properly, uttering the same thing twice (from δῖς and λέγω), and then deceitful, or speaking one thing and meaning another. They should be men who can be relied on for the exact truth of what they say, and for the exact fulfillment of their promises. ¶ Not given to much wine. See ver. 3. The word much is added here to what is said (ver. 2) of the qualification of a bishop. It is not affirmed that it would be proper for the deacon, any more than the bishop, to indulge in the use of wine in small quantities, but it is affirmed that a man who is much given to the use of wine ought not, on any consideration, to be a deacon. It may be remarked here, that this qualification was every where regarded as necessary for a minister of religion. Even the heathen priests, on entering a temple, did not drink wine.—Bloomfield. The use of wine, and of strong drinks of all kinds, was absolutely prohibited to the Jewish ministers of every rank when they were about to engage in the service of God. Lev. x. 9. Why should it be any more proper for a Christian minister to drink wine than for a Jewish or a heathen priest? Shall a minister of the Gospel be less holy than they? Shall he have a feebler sense of the purity of his vocation? Shall he be less careful lest he expose himself to the possibility of conducting the services of religion in an irreverent and silly manner. Shall he venture to approach the altar of God under the influence of intoxicating drinks, when a sense of propriety restrained the heathen priest, and a solemn statute of Jehovah restrained the Jewish priest from doing it? ¶ Not greedy of filthy lucre. See Notes on ver. 3. The special reason why this qualification was important in the deacon was, that he would be intrusted with the funds of the Church, and might be tempted to appropriate them to his own use in-proved; then let them use the office of a deacon, being found blameless.

9 Holding^a the mystery^b of the faith in a pure conscience.

10 And let these also first be

^a Eph. 1. 9.

^b Ver. 16.

stead of the charitable purposes for which they were designed. See this illustrated in the case of Judas, John xii. 6.

9. Holding the mystery of the faith. On the word mystery, see Notes on 1 Cor. ii. 7. It means that which had been concealed, or hidden, but which was now revealed. The word faith, here, is synonymous with the Gospel; and the sense is, that he should hold firmly the great doctrines of the Christian religion which had been so long concealed from men, but which were now revealed. The reason is obvious. Though not a preacher, yet his influence and example would be great, and a man who held material error ought not to be in the office. ¶ In a pure conscience. A mere orthodox faith was not all that was necessary, for it was possible that a man might be professedly firm in the belief of the truths of revelation, and yet be corrupt at heart.

10. And let these also be first proved. That is, tried or tested in regard to the things which were the proper qualifications for the office. This does not mean that they were to be employed as preachers, but that they were to undergo a proper trial in regard to their fitness for the office which they were to fill. They were not to be put into it without any opportunity of knowing what they were. It should be ascertained that they were grave, serious, temperate, trustworthy men; men who were sound in the faith, and who would not dishonor the office. It is not said here that there should be a formal trial, as if they were candidates for this office; but the meaning is, that they should have had an opportunity of making their character known, and should have gained such respect for their piety, and their other qualifications, that there would be reason to believe that they would perform the functions of the office well. Thus, in Acts vi. 3, when deacons were first appointed, the Church was directed to "look out seven men of honest report," who might be appointed to the office. ¶ Then let them use the office of a deacon. Let them be appointed to this office, and fulfill its duties. ¶ Being found blameless. If nothing can be alleged 11 Even so must their wives^a be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things.

12 Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife, ruling^b their children and their own houses well.

^a Tit. 2. 3.

^b ver. 4.

13 For they that have¹ used the office of a deacon well,^c purchase to themselves a good degree, and against their character. See Notes on ver. 2.

¹ or, ministered.

^c Matt. 25. 21.

11. Even so must their wives be grave. Chrysostom, Theophylact, Grotius, Bloomfield, and many others, suppose that by the word wives, here (γυναίκας), the apostle means deaconesses. Clarke supposes that it refers to women in general. The reason assigned for supposing that it does not refer to the wives of deacons, as such, is, that nothing is said of the qualifications of the wives of bishops—a matter of as much importance as that of the character of the wife of a deacon; and that it can not be supposed that the apostle would specify the one without some allusion to the other. But that the common interpretation, which makes it refer to the wives of deacons, as such, is to be adhered to, seems to me to be clear. For (1.) it is the obvious and natural interpretation. (2.) The word here used—wives—is never used of itself to denote deaconesses. (3.) If the apostle had meant deaconesses, it would have been easy to express it without ambiguity. Compare Notes on Rom. xvi. 1. (4.) What is here mentioned is important, whether the same thing is mentioned of bishops or not. (5.) In the qualifications of bishops, the apostle had made a statement respecting his family which made any specification about the particular members of the family unnecessary. He was to be one who presided in a proper manner over his own house, or who had a well-regulated family. Vs. 4, 5. By a comparison of this passage, also, with Titus ii. 3, 4, which bears a strong resemblance to this, it would seem that it was supposed that the deacons would be taken from those who were advanced in life, and that their wives would have some superintendence over the younger females of the Church. It was, therefore, especially important that they should be persons whose influence would be known to be decidedly favorable to piety. No one can doubt that the character of a woman may be such that it is not desirable that her husband should be an officer in the Church. A bad woman ought not to be intrusted with any additional power or influence. ¶ Grave. See Notes on verse 4. ¶ Not slanderers. Compare Titus ii. 3, “Not false accusers.” The Greek word is διαβόλους—devils. It is used here in its original and proper sense, to denote a calumniator, slanderer, or accuser. It occurs in the same sense in 2 Tim. iii. 3, and Titus ii. 3. Elsewhere in the New Testament it is uniformly rendered devil (comp. Notes on Matt. iv. 1), and is given to Satan, the prince of the fallen angels (Matt. ix. 34), by way of eminence, as the accuser. Comp. Notes on Job i. 6–11, and Rev. xii. 10. Here it means that they should not be women who were in the habit of calumniating others, or aspersing their character. Mingling as they would with the Church, and having an opportunity to claim acquaintance with many, it would be in their power, if they chose, to do great injury to the character of others. ¶ Sober. See Notes on ver. 2. ¶ Faithful in all things. To their husbands, to their families, to the Church, to the Saviour.

12. Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife. See Notes on ver. 2. ¶ Ruling their children and their own houses well. See Notes on vs. 4, 5.

13. For they that have used the office of a deacon well. Marg., ministered. The Greek word is literally “they who have deaconized well,” meaning ministering, or serving in the office of a deacon. The sense would be well expressed by the phrase deaconizing well. The word implies nothing as to the exact nature of the office. ¶ Purchase to themselves. Procure for themselves. See this word explained in the Notes on Acts xx. 28. ¶ A good degree. The word here used (βαθμός) occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, a step, as of a stair; and the fair meaning is that of going up higher, or taking an additional step of dignity, honor, or standing. So far as the word is concerned, it may mean either an advance in office, in dignity, in respectability, or in influence. It can great boldness in the faith ^a which is in Christ Jesus.

14 These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly :

^a 2 Tim. 2. 1.

not certainly be inferred that the apostle referred to a higher grade of office; for all that the word essentially implies is that, by exercising this office well, a deacon would secure additional respectability and influence in the Church. Still, it is possible that those who had performed the duties of this office well were usually appointed to be preachers. They may have shown so much piety, prudence, good sense, and ability to preside over the Church, that it was judged proper that they should be advanced to the office of pastors of the churches. Such a course would not be unnatural. This is, however, far from teaching that the office of a deacon is a subordinate office, with a view to an ascent to a higher grade. ¶ And great boldness in the faith. The word here rendered boldness properly refers to boldness in speaking. See it explained in the Notes on Acts iv. 13. Comp. 2 Cor. iii. 12; Phil. i. 20. But the word is commonly used to denote boldness of any kind—openness, frankness, confidence, assurance. John viii. 13, 26; Mark viii. 32; 2 Cor. vii. 4. As it is here connected with faith—“boldness in the faith”—it means, evidently, not so much public speaking, as a manly and independent exercise of faith in Christ. The sense is, that by the faithful performance of the duties of the office of a deacon, and by the kind of experience which a man would have in that office, he would establish a character of firmness in the faith which would show that he was a decided Christian. This passage, therefore, can not be fairly used to prove that the deacon was a preacher, or that he belonged to a grade of ministerial office from which he was regularly to rise to that of a presbyter.

14. These things write I unto thee, hoping to come unto thee shortly. That is, he hoped to come there to give instructions personally, or to finish himself the work which he had commenced in Ephesus, and which had been interrupted by his being driven so unexpectedly away. This verse PROVES that the apostle did not regard Timothy as the permanent diocesan bishop of Ephesus. Would any Episcopal bishop write this to another bishop? If Timothy were the permanent prelate of Ephesus, would Paul have intimated that he expected soon to come and take the work of completing the arrangements there into his own hands? In regard to his expectation of going soon to Ephesus, see Notes on ch. i. 3. Comp. the Intro. to the Epistle.

15 But if I tarry long, that thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself in the house ^b of God, which is the Church of the

^b 2 Tim. 2. 20.

15. But if I tarry long. Paul appears to have been uncertain how long circumstances would require him to be absent. He expected to return, but it was possible that his hope of returning soon would be disappointed. ¶ That thou mayest know how thou oughtest to behave thyself. That is, that he might have just views about settling the affairs of the Church. ¶ In the house of God. This does not mean in a place of public worship, and, of course, it does not refer to propriety of department there. It refers rather to the Church as a body of believers, and to intercourse with them. The Church is called the “house of God,” because it is that in which he dwells. Formerly, his peculiar residence was in the Temple at Jerusalem; now that the Temple is destroyed, it is in the Church of Christ, among his people. 2 Cor. vi. 16. ¶ Which is the Church of the living God. This seems to have been added to impress the mind of Timothy with the solemn nature of the duty which he was to perform. What he did pertained to the honor and welfare of the Church of the living God, and hence he should feel the importance of a correct department, and of a right administration of its affairs. ¶ The pillar and ground of the truth. There has been no little diversity of opinion among critics whether this phrase is to be taken in connection with the preceding, meaning that the Church is the pillar and ground of the truth; or whether it is to be taken in connection with what follows, meaning that the principal support of the truth was the doctrine there referred to—that God was manifest in the flesh. Bloomfield remarks on this: “It is surprising that any who have any knowledge or experience in Greek literature could tolerate so harsh a construction as that living God, the pillar and ¹ground of the truth,

16 And, without controversy,

¹ or, stay.
² manifested.

^a 1 Cor. 2. 7.
^b John 1. 14. 1 John 1. 2.

which arises from the latter method." The more natural interpretation certainly is to refer it to the former; and this is supported by the consideration that it would then fall in with the object of the apostle. His design here seems to be to impress Timothy with a deep sense of the importance of correct conduct in relation to the Church; of the responsibility of those who preside over it; and of the necessity of care and caution in the selection of proper officers. To do this, he reminds him that the truth of God—that revealed truth which he has given to save the world—is intrusted to the Church; that the Church designed to preserve it pure, to defend it, and to transmit it to future times; and that, therefore, every one to whom the administration of the affairs of the Church is intrusted should engage in this duty with a deep conviction of his responsibility. On the construction of the passage, Bloomfield, Rosenmüller, and Clarke may be consulted. The word "pillar" means a column, such as that by which a building is supported, and then any firm prop or support. Gal. ii. 9; Rev. iii. 12. If it refers to the Church here, it means that that is the support of the truth, as a pillar is of a building. It sustains it amid the war of elements, the natural tendency to fall, and the assaults which may be made on it, and preserves it when it would otherwise tumble into ruin. Thus it is with the Church. It is intrusted with the business of maintaining the truth, of defending it from the assaults of error, and of transmitting it to future times. The truth is, in fact, upheld in the world by the Church. The people of the world feel no interest in defending it, and it is owing to the Church of Christ that it is preserved and transmitted from age to age. The word rendered "ground"—ἐδραίωμα—means, properly, a basis or foundation. The figure here is evidently taken from architecture, as the use of the word pillar is. The proper meaning of the one expression would be, that truth is supported by the Church, as an edifice is by a pillar; of the other, that the truth rests on the Church, as a house great is the mystery ^a of godliness: God was manifest ² in the flesh, ^b justified in the Spirit, ^c seen of an-

^c Matt. 3. 16. John 16. 8, 9. Rom. 1. 4. 1 Pet. 3. 18.
1 John 5. 6.

does on its foundation. It is that which makes it fixed, stable, permanent; that on which it securely stands amid storms and tempests; that which renders it firm when systems of error are swept away as a house that is built on the sand. Comp. Notes on Matt. vii. 24-27. The meaning, then, is that the stability of the truth on earth is dependent on the Church. It is owing to the fact that the Church is itself founded on a rock—that the gates of hell can not prevail against it—that no storms of persecution can overthrow it—that the truth is preserved from age to age. Other systems of religion are swept away; other opinions change; other forms of doctrine vanish; but the knowledge of the great system of redemption is preserved on earth unshaken, because the Church is preserved, and because its foundations can not be moved. This does not refer, I suppose, to creeds and confessions, or to the decisions of synods and councils; but to the living spirit of truth and piety in the Church itself. As certainly as the Church continues to live, so certain it will be that the truth of God will be perpetuated among men.

16. And, without controversy. Undeniably, certainly, without contradiction. The object of the apostle is to say that the truth which he was about to state admitted of no dispute. ¶ Great is the mystery. On the meaning of the word mystery, see Notes on 1 Cor. ii. 7. The word means that which had been hidden or concealed. The meaning here is not that the proposition which he affirms was mysterious in the sense that it was unintelligible, or impossible to be understood; but that the doctrine respecting the incarnation and the work of the Messiah, which had been so long kept hidden from the world, was a subject of the deepest importance. This passage, therefore, should not be used to prove that there is any thing unintelligible, or any thing that surpasses human comprehension, in that doctrine, whatever may be the truth on that point; but that the doctrine which the apostle now proceeds to state, and which had been so long concealed from mankind, is of the utmost consequence. ¶ Of godliness. The word godliness means, properly, piety, reverence, or religiousness. It is used here, however, for the Gospel scheme, to wit, that which the apostle proceeds to describe. This "mystery," which had "been hidden from ages and from generations, and which was now manifested" (Col. i. 26), is the great doctrine on which religion depends every where, or is that which constitutes the Christian scheme. ¶ God. Probably there is no passage in the New Testament which has excited so much discussion among critics as this, and none in reference to which it is so difficult to determine the true reading. It is the only one, it is believed, in which the microscope has been employed to determine the lines of the letters used in a manuscript; and, after all that has been done to ascertain the exact truth in regard to it, still the question remains undecided. It is not the object of these Notes to enter into the examination of questions of this nature. A full investigation may be found in Wetstein. The question which has excited so much controversy is, whether the original Greek word was Θεός, God, or whether it was ὄς, who, or ὀ, which. The controversy has turned, to a considerable degree, on the reading in the Codex Alexandrinus; and a remark or two on the method in which the manuscripts of the New Testament were written will show the true nature of the controversy. Greek manuscripts were formerly written entirely in capital letters, and without breaks or intervals between the words, and without accents. See a full description of the methods of writing the New Testament, in an article by Prof. Stuart, in Dr. Robinson's Bibliotheca Sacra, No. 2, p. 254, seq. The small, cursive Greek letters which are now used, were not commonly employed in transcribing the New Testament, if at all, until the ninth or tenth centuries. It was a common thing, also, to abridge or contract words in the manuscript. Thus, παρ would be used for πατήρ, father; κς for κυριος, Lord; ζς for Θεος, God, etc. The words thus contracted were designated by a faint line or dash over them. In this place, therefore, if the original were ΘC, standing for Θεός, God, and the line in the Θ, and the faint line over it, were obliterated from any cause, it would be easily mistaken for OC—ὄς—who. To ascertain which of these is the true reading, has been the great question; and it is with reference to this that the microscope has been resorted to in the examination of the Alexandrian manuscript. It is now generally admitted that the faint line over the word has been added by some later hand, though not improbably by one who found that the line was nearly obliterated, and who meant merely to restore it. Whether the letter O was originally written with a line within it, making the reading God, it is now said to be impossible to determine, in consequence of the manuscript at this place having become so much worn by frequent examination. The Vulgate and the Syriac read it who or which. The Vulgate is, "Great is the sacrament of piety which was manifested in the flesh." The Syriac, "Great is the mystery of godliness, that he was manifested in the flesh." The probability in regard to the correct reading here, as it seems to me, is that the word, as originally written, was Θεός, God. At the same time, however, the evidence is not so clear that it can be properly used in an argument. But the passage is not necessary to prove the doctrine which is affirmed, on the supposition that that is the correct reading. The same truth is abundantly taught elsewhere. Comp. Matt. i. 23; John i. 14. ¶ Was manifest. Marg., Manifested. The meaning is, appeared in the flesh. ¶ In the flesh. In human nature. See this explained in the Notes on Rom. i. 3. The expression here looks as though the true reading of the much-disputed word was God. It could not have been ὀ, which, referring to "mystery;" for how could a mystery "be manifested in the flesh?" Nor could it be ὄς, who, unless that should refer to one who was more than a man; for how absurd would it be to say that "a man was manifested, or appeared in the flesh!" How else could a man appear? The phrase here means that God appeared in human form, or with human nature; and this is declared to be the "great" truth so long concealed from human view, but now revealed as constituting the fundamental doctrine of the Gospel. The expressions which follow in this verse refer to God as thus manifested in the flesh; to the Saviour as he appeared on earth, regarded as a divine and human being. It was the fact that he thus appeared and sustained this character which made the things which are immediately specified so remarkable, and so worthy of attention. ¶ Justified in the Spirit. That is, the incarnate person above referred to; the Redeemer, regarded as God and man. The word Spirit, here, it is evident, refers to the Holy Spirit; for (1.) it is not possible to attach any intelligible idea to the phrase, "he was justified by his own spirit, or soul;" (2.) as the Holy Spirit performed so important a part in the work of Christ, it is natural to suppose there would be some allusion here to him; and (3.) as the "angels" are mentioned here as having been with him, and as the Holy Spirit is often mentioned in connection with him, it is natural to suppose that there would be some allusion to him here. The word justified, here, is not employed in the sense in which it is used when applied to Christians, but in its more common signification. It means to vindicate; and the sense is, that he was shown to be the Son of God by the agency of the Holy Ghost; that he was thus vindicated from the charges alleged against him. The Holy Spirit furnished the evidence that he was the Son of God, or justified his claims. Thus he descended on him at his baptism, Matt. iii. 16; he was sent to convince the world of sin because it did not believe on him, John xvi. 8, 9; the Saviour cast out devils by him, Matt. xii. 28; the Spirit was given to him without measure, John iii. 34; and the Spirit was sent down in accordance with his promise, to convert the hearts of men, Acts ii. 33. All the manifestations of God to the Saviour; all the power of working miracles by the agency of the Spirit; all the influences imparted to the man Christ Jesus, endowing him with such a wisdom as man never had before, may be regarded as an attestation of the Holy Ghost to the divine mission of the Lord Jesus, and of course as a vindication from all the charges against him. In like manner, the descent of the Holy Ghost on the day of Pentecost, and his agency in the conversion of sinners, proves the same thing, and furnishes an unanswerable argument in vindication of the Redeemer that he was sent from God. To this the apostle refers as a part of the glorious truth of the Christian scheme now revealed—the "mystery of religion;" as a portion of the amazing record which the Church was to preserve as connected with the redemption of the world. ¶ Seen of angels. They were attendants on his ministry, and came to him in times of distress, peril, and want. Comp. Luke ii. 9-13; xxii. 43; xxiv. 4; Heb. i. 6; Matt. iv. 11. They felt an interest in him and his work, and they gladly came to him in his sorrows and troubles. The design of the apostle is to give an impressive view of the grandeur and glory of that work which attracted the attention of the heavenly hosts, and which drew them from the skies that they might proclaim his advent, sustain him in his temptations, witness his crucifixion, and watch over him in the tomb. The work of Christ, though despised by men, excited the deepest interest in heaven. Comp. Notes on 1 Pet. i. 12. ¶ Preached unto the Gentiles. This is placed by the apostle among the "great" things which constituted the "mystery" of religion. The meaning is, that it was a glorious truth that salvation might be, and should be, proclaimed to all mankind. Elsewhere this is called, by way of eminence, "the mystery of the Gospel;" that is, the grand truth which had not been known until the coming of the Saviour. See Notes on Eph. vi. 19; Col. i. 26, 27; iv. 3. Before his coming, a wall of partition had divided the Jewish and Gentile world. The Jews regarded the rest of mankind as excluded from the covenant mercies of God, and it was one of the principal stumbling-blocks in their way, in regard to the Gospel, that it proclaimed that all the race is on a level, that that middle wall of partition has been broken down, and that salvation may now be published to all men. Comp. Acts xxii. 21; Eph. ii. 14, 15; Rom. iii. 22; x. 11-20. The Jew now has no peculiar advantage for salvation by being a Jew; the Gentile is not excluded from the hope of salvation. The plan of redemption is adapted to man as such—without regard to his complexion, country, customs, or laws. The blood of Christ was shed for all, and wherever a human being can be found, salvation may be freely offered him. This is a glorious truth; and taken in all its bearings, and in reference to the views which then prevailed, and which have always more or less prevailed about the distinctions made among men by caste and rank, there is scarcely any more glorious truth connected with the Christian revelation, or one which will exert a wider influence in promoting the welfare of man than this. It is a great privilege to be permitted to proclaim that all men, in one respect—and that the most important—are on a level; that they are all equally the objects of the divine compassion; that Christ died for one as really as for another; that birth, wealth, elevated rank, or beauty of complexion, contribute nothing to the salvation of one, and that poverty, a darker skin, slavery, or a meaner rank, do nothing to exclude another from the favor of his Maker. ¶ Believed on in the world. This also is mentioned among the “great” things which constitute the mystery of revealed religion. But why is this regarded as so remarkable as to be mentioned thus? In point of importance, how can it be mentioned in connection with the fact that God was manifest in the flesh; that he was vindicated by the Holy Ghost; that he was an object of intense interest to angelic hosts, and that his coming broke down the walls which had separated the world, and placed them now on a level? I answer, perhaps the following circumstances may have induced the apostle to place this among the remarkable things evincing the greatness of this truth: (1.) The strong improbability arising from the greatness of the “mystery,” that the doctrine respecting the incarnate Deity would be believed. Such is the incomprehensible nature of many of the truths connected with the incarnation; so strange does it seem that God would become incarnate; so amazing was it that he should appear in human form, and that the incarnate Son of God should die, that it might be regarded as a wonderful thing that such a doctrine had in fact obtained credence in the world. But it was a glorious fact that all the natural improbabilities in the case had been overcome, and that men had accredited the announcement. (2.) The strong improbability that his message would be believed, arising from the wickedness of the human heart. Man, in all his history, had shown a strong reluctance to believe any message from God, or any truth whatever revealed by him. The Jews had rejected his prophets and put them to death (Matt. xxiii., Acts vii.); and had at last put his own Son—their Messiah—to death. Man every where had shown his strong inclination to unbelief. There is in the human soul no elementary principle or germ of faith in God. Every man is an unbeliever by nature—an infidel first; a Christian afterward; an infidel as he comes into the world; a believer only as he is made so by grace. The apostle, therefore, regarded it as a glorious fact that the message respecting the Saviour had been believed in the world. It overcame such a strong and universal reluctance to confide in God that it showed that there was more than human power in operation to overcome this reluctance. (3.) The extent to which this had been done may have been a reason why he thought it worthy of the place which he gives it here. It had been embraced, not by a few, but by thousands in all lands where the Gospel had been published; and it was proof of the truth of the doctrine, and of the great power of God, that such high mysteries as those relating to redemption, and so much opposed to the natural feelings of the human heart, should have been embraced by so many. The same thing occurs now. The Gospel makes its way against the native incredulity of the world, and every new convert is an additional demonstration that it is from God, and a new illustration of the greatness of this mystery. ¶ Received up into glory. To heaven. Comp. John xvii. 5. See Notes on Acts i. 9. This is mentioned as among the “great” or remarkable things pertaining to “godliness,” or to the Christian revelation, because it was an event which had not elsewhere occurred, and was the crowning grandeur of the work of Christ. As such it was fitted to excite the deepest interest in heaven itself. No event of more importance has ever occurred in the universe, of which we have any knowledge, than the re-ascension of the triumphant Son of God to glory after having accomplished the redemption of a world.

In view of the instructions in this chapter, we may make the following remarks:

1. The word bishop in the New Testament never means what is now commonly understood by it—a Prelate. It does not denote here, or any where else in the New Testament, one who has charge over a diocese composed of a certain district of country, embracing a number of churches with their clergy.

2. There are not "three orders" of clergy in the New Testament. The apostle Paul in this chapter expressly designates the characteristics of those who should have charge of the Church, but mentions only two, "bishops" and "deacons." The former are ministers of the word, having charge of the spiritual interests of the Church; the others are deacons, of whom there is no evidence that they were appointed to preach. There is no "third" order. There is no allusion to any one who was to be "superior" to the "bishops" and "deacons." As the apostle was expressly giving instructions in regard to the organization of the Church, such an omission is unaccountable if he supposed there was to be an order of "prelates" in the Church. Why is there no allusion to them? Why is there no mention of their qualifications? If Timothy was himself a prelate, was he to have nothing to do in transmitting the office to others? Were there no peculiar qualifications required in such an order of men which it would be proper to mention? Would it not be respectful, at least, in Paul to have made some allusion to such an office, if Timothy himself held it?

3. There is only one order of preachers in the Church. The qualifications of that order are specified with great minuteness and particularity, as well as beauty. Ver. 2-7. No man really needs to know more of the qualifications for this office than could be learned from a prayerful study of this passage.

4. A man who enters the ministry should have high qualifications. Ver. 2-7. No man ought, under any pretense, to be put into the ministry who has not the qualifications here specified. Nothing is gained in any department of human labor by appointing an incompetent person to fill it. A farmer gains nothing by employing a man on his farm who has no proper qualifications for his business; a carpenter, a shoemaker, or a blacksmith gains nothing by employing a man who knows nothing about his trade; a neighborhood gains nothing by employing a man as a teacher of a school who has no qualifications to teach, or who has a bad character. Such a man would do more mischief on a farm, or in a work-shop, or in a school, than all the good which he could do would compensate. And so it is in the ministry. The true object is not to increase the number of ministers; it is to increase the number of those who are qualified for their work, and if a man has not the qualifications laid down by the inspired apostle, he should seek some other calling.

5. The Church is the guardian of the truth. Ver. 15. It is appointed to preserve it pure, and to transmit it to future ages. The world is dependent on it for any just views of truth. It has the power, and is intrusted with the duty, of preserving on earth a just knowledge of God and of eternal things; of the way of salvation; of the requirements of pure morality: to keep up the knowledge of that truth which tends to elevate society and to save man. It is intrusted with the Bible, to preserve it uncorrupted, and to transmit it to distant ages and lands. It is bound to maintain and assert the truth in its creeds and confessions of faith. And it is to preserve the truth by the holy lives of its members, and to show in their walk what is the appropriate influence of truth on the soul. Whatever religious truth there is now on the earth has been thus preserved and transmitted, and it still devolves on the Church to bear the truth of God on to future times, and to diffuse it abroad to distant lands.

6. The closing verse of this chapter (ver. 16) gives us a most elevated view of the plan of salvation, and of its grandeur and glory. It would be difficult, if not impossible, to condense more interesting and sublime thought into so narrow a compass as this. The great mystery of the incarnation; the interest of angelic beings in the events of redemption; the effect of the Gospel on the heathen world; the tendency of the Christian religion to break down every barrier among men, and to place all the race on a level; its power in overcoming the unbelief of mankind; and the re-ascension of the Son of God to heaven, having accomplished his work, present a series of most wonderful facts to our contemplation. These things are found in no other system of religion, and these are worthy of the profound attention of every human being. The manifestation of God in the flesh! What a thought! It was worthy of the deepest interest among the angels, and it claims the attention of men, for it was for men and not for angels that he thus appeared in human form. Comp. Notes on 1 Pet. i. 12.

7. How strange it is that man feels no more interest in these things! God was manifest in the flesh for his salvation, but he does not regard it. Angels looked upon it with wonder; but man, for whom the Redeemer came, feels little interest in his advent or his work! The Christian religion has broken down the barrier among nations, and has proclaimed that all men may be saved; yet the mass of men look on this with entire unconcern. The Son of God ascended to heaven, having finished his great work; but how little interest do the mass of mankind feel in this! He will come again to judge the world; but the race moves on regardless of this truth, unalarmed at the prospect of meeting him, feeling no interest in the assurance that he has come and died for sinners, and no apprehension in view of the fact that he will come again, and that they must stand at his bar. All heaven was moved with his first advent, and will be with his second; but the earth regards it with unconcern. Angelic beings look upon this with the deepest anxiety, though they have no personal interest in it; man, though all his great interests are concentrated on it, regards it as a fable, disbelieves it all, and treats it with contempt and scorn. Such is the difference between heaven and earth—angels and men!

CHAPTER IV.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

There is, in many respects, a strong resemblance between the first part of this chapter and 2 Thess. ii. Comp. Notes on that chapter. The leading object of this chapter is to state to Timothy certain things of which he was constantly to remind the Church; and, having done this, the apostle gives him some directions about his personal deportment. The chapter may be conveniently divided into three parts:

I. Timothy was to put the Church constantly in remembrance of the great apostasy which was to occur, and to guard them against the doctrines which would be inculcated under that apostasy. Ver. 1-6.

(a) There was to be, in the latter days, a great departing from the faith. Ver. 1.

(b) Some of the characteristics of that apostasy were these: there would be a giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. Ver. 1. Those who taught would hypocritically speak what they knew to be falsehood, having their own consciences seared. Ver. 2. They would forbid to marry, and forbid the use of certain articles of food which God had appointed for man. Ver. 3-5.

II. Timothy was to warn the churches against trifling and superstitious views, such as the apostle calls "old wives' fables." Ver. 7-11.

(a) He was not to allow himself to be influenced by such fables, but at once to reject them. Ver. 7.

(b) The bodily exercise which the friends of such "fables" recommended was of no advantage to the soul, and no stress ought to be laid on it, as if it were important. Ver. 8.

(c) That which was truly profitable, and which ought to be regarded as important, was godliness; for that had promise of the present life, and of the life to come. Ver. 8.

(d) Timothy must expect, in giving these instructions, to endure labor and to suffer reproach; nevertheless, he was faithfully to inculcate these important truths. Vs. 10, 11.

III. Various admonitions respecting his personal deportment. Ver. 12-16.

(a) He was so to live that no one would despise him or his ministry because he was young. Ver. 12.

(b) He was to give a constant attention to his duties until the apostle should himself return to him. Ver. 13.

(c) He was carefully to inculcate the gift which had been conferred by his education, and by his ordination to the work of the ministry. Ver. 14.

(d) He was to meditate on these things, and to give himself wholly to the work, so that his profiting might appear to all. Ver. 15.

(e) He was to take good heed to gels, ^a preached unto the Gentiles, ^b believed on ^c in the world, received up ^d into glory.

^a Matt. 4. 11. Luke 2. 13. Eph. 3. 10. 1 Pet. 1. 12.
^b Acts 13. 46, 48. Rom. 10. 12, 13.

himself, and to the manner and matter of his teaching; that he might save himself and those who heard him. Ver. 16.

1. Now the Spirit. Evidently the Holy Spirit; the Spirit of inspiration. It is not quite certain, from this passage, whether the apostle means to say that this was a revelation then made to him, or whether it was a well-understood thing as taught by the Holy Spirit. He himself elsewhere refers to this same prophecy, and John also more than once mentions it. Comp. 2 Thess. ii. 1; 1 John ii. 18; Rev. xx. From 2 Thess. ii. 5, it would seem that this was a truth which had before been communicated to the apostle Paul, and that he had dwelt on it when he preached the Gospel in Thessalonica. There is no improbability, however, in the supposition that so important a subject was communicated directly by the Holy Ghost to others of the apostles. ¶ Speaketh expressly. In express words—ῥητῶς. It was not by mere hints, and symbols, and shadowy images of the future; it was in an open and plain manner—in so many words. The object of this statement seems to be to call the attention of Timothy to it in an emphatic manner, and to show the importance of attending to it. ¶ That in the latter times. Under the last dispensation, during which the affairs of the world will close. See Notes on Heb. i. 2. This does not mean that this would occur just before the end of the world, but that it would take place during that last dispensation, and that the end of the world would not happen until this should have occurred. See Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 3. ¶ Some shall depart from the faith. The Greek word here—ἀποστήσουται, apostēsontai—is that from which we have derived the word apostatize, and would be properly so rendered here. The meaning is, that they would apostatize from the belief of the truths of the Gospel. It does not mean that, as individuals, they would have been true Christians, and then would have fallen away, but that there would be a departure from the great doc-

G 2

CHAPTER IV.

NOW the Spirit speaketh expressly, that ^e in the latter

^e Col. 1. 6. ^d Luke 24. 51. Acts 1. 9.
^e Dan. 11. 35. Matt. 24. 5-12. 2 Pet. 2. 1.

trines which constitute the Christian faith. The ways in which they would do this are immediately specified, showing what the apostle meant here by departing from the faith. They would give heed to seducing spirits, to the doctrines of devils, etc. The use of the word "some," here—τινες—does not imply that the number would be small. The meaning is, that certain persons would thus depart, or that there would be an apostasy of the kind here mentioned, in the last days. From the parallel passage in 2 Thess. ii. 3, it would seem that this was to be an extensive apostasy. ¶ Giving heed to seducing spirits. Rather than to the Spirit of God. It would be a part of their system to yield to those spirits that led astray. The spirits here referred to are any that cause to err, and the most obvious and natural construction is to refer it to the agency of fallen spirits. The language, indeed, may be applicable to false teachers, yet, if it is, it is applied to them as under the influence of evil spirits. This may refer, so far as the phraseology is concerned, to any false teaching; but it is evident that the apostle had a specific apostasy in view—some great system that would corrupt the Christian faith; and the words here should be interpreted with reference to that. It is true that men in all ages are prone to give heed to seducing spirits; but the thing referred to here is some grand apostasy, in which the characteristics would be manifested, and the doctrines held, which the apostle proceeds immediately to specify. Comp. 1 John iv. 1. ¶ And doctrines of devils. Gr., "Teachings of demons"—διδασκαλίας δαιμονίων. This may either mean teachings respecting demons, or teachings by demons. The particular sense must be determined by the connection. Ambiguity of this kind in the construction of words, where one is in the genitive case, is not uncommon. Comp. John xv. 9, 10; xxi. 15. Instances of the construction where the genitive denotes the object, and should be translated concerning, occur in Matt. ix. 35, "The Gospel of the kingdom," that is, concerning the kingdom; Matt. x. 1, "Power of unclean spirits," that is, over or concerning unclean spirits. So, also, Acts iv. 9; Rom. xvi. 15; 2 Cor. i. 5; Eph. iii. 1; Rev. ii. 13. Instances of construction where the genitive denotes the agent, occur in the following places: Luke i. 69, "A horn of salvation," that is, a horn which produces or causes salvation. John vi. 28; Rom. iii. 22; 2 Cor. iv. 10; Eph. iv. 18; Col. ii. 11. Whether the phrase here means that, in the apostasy, they would give heed to doctrines respecting demons, or to doctrines which demons taught, can not, it seems to me, be determined with certainty. If the previous phrase, however, means that they would embrace doctrines taught by evil spirits, it can hardly be supposed that the apostle would immediately repeat the same idea in another form; and then the sense would be, that one characteristic of the time referred to would be the prevalent teaching respecting demons. They would "give heed to," or embrace, some peculiar views respecting demons. The word here rendered devils is δαίμονια—demons. This word, among the Greeks, denoted the following things: (1.) A god or goddess, spoken of the heathen gods. Comp., in New Testament, Acts xvii. 18. (2.) A divine being, where no particular one was specified, the agent or author of good or evil fortune; of death, fate, etc. In this sense it is often used in Homer. (3.) The souls of men of the golden age, which dwelt unobserved upon the earth to regard the actions of men, and to defend them—tutelary divinities, or geniuses, like that which Socrates regarded as his constant attendant. Xen. Mem., 4, 8, 1, 5. Apol. Soc., 4. See Passow. (4.) To this may be added the common use in the New Testament, where the word denotes a demon in the Jewish sense—a bad spirit, subject to Satan, and under his control; one of the host of fallen angels—commonly, but not very properly, rendered devil, or devils. These spirits were supposed to wander in desolate places, Matt. xii. 43; Comp. Isa. xiii. 21; xxxiv. 14; or they dwell in the air, Eph. ii. 2. They were regarded as hostile to mankind, John viii. 44; as able to utter heathen oracles, Acts xvi. 17; as dwelling in the idols of the heathen, 1 Cor. x. 20; Rev. ix. 20. They are spoken of as the authors of evil, James ii. 19; Comp. Eph. vi. 12; and as having the power of taking possession of a person, of producing diseases, or of causing mania, as in the case of the demoniacs, Luke iv. 33; viii. 27; Matt. xvii. 18; Mark vii. 29, 30; and often elsewhere. The doctrine, therefore, which the apostle predicted would prevail, might, so far as the word used is concerned, be either of the following: (1.) A compliance with the prevalent notions of the heathen respecting false gods; or a falling into idolatry similar to that taught in the Grecian mythology. It can hardly be supposed, however, that he designed to say that the common notions of the heathen would prevail in the Christian Church, or that the worship of the heathen gods as such would be set up there. (2.) A compliance with the Jewish views respecting demoniacal possessions, and the power of exorcising them. If this view should extensively prevail in the Christian Church, it would be in accordance with the language of the prediction. (3.) A compliance with the prevalent heathen notions respecting the departed spirits of the good and the great, who were exalted to the rank of demi-gods, and who, though invisible, were supposed still to exert an important influence in favor of mankind. To these beings the heathen rendered extraordinary homage. They supposed that they took a deep interest in human affairs. They invoked their aid in war, in commerce, in trouble, and in danger. They set apart days in honor of them. They offered sacrifices, and performed rites and ceremonies to propitiate their favor. They were regarded as a sort of mediators or intercessors between man and the superior divinities. If these things are found any where in the Christian Church, they may be regarded as a fulfillment of this prediction, for they were not of a nature to be foreseen by any human sagacity. Now it so happens that they are, in fact, found in the Papal communion, and in a way that corresponds fairly to the meaning of the phrase, as it would have been understood in the time of the apostle. There is, first, the worship of the Virgin Mary and of the saints, or the extraordinary honors rendered to them—corresponding almost exactly with the reverence paid by the heathen to the times some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits,^a and doctrines of devils;

^a Rev. 16. 14.

spirits of heroes, or to demi-gods. The saints are supposed to have extraordinary power with God, and their aid is implored as intercessors. The Virgin Mary is invoked as "the Mother of God," and as having power still to command her Son. The Papists do not, indeed, offer the same homage to the saints which they do to God, but they ask their aid; they offer prayer to them. The following extracts from the Catechism of Dr. James Butler, approved and recommended by Dr. Kenrick, "Bishop of Philadelphia," expresses the general views of Roman Catholics on this subject: "Q. How do Catholics distinguish between the honor they give to God, and the honor they give to the saints, when they pray to God and the saints? A. Of God alone they beg grace and mercy; and of the saints they only ask the assistance of their prayers. Q. Is it lawful to recommend ourselves to the saints, and ask their prayers? A. Yes; as it is lawful and a very pious practice to ask the prayers of our fellow-creatures on earth, and to pray for them." In the "Prayer to be said before mass," the following language occurs: "In union with the holy Church and its minister, and invoking the blessed Virgin Mary, Mother of God, and all the angels and saints, we now offer the adorable sacrifice of the mass," etc. In the "General Confession," it is said, "I confess to Almighty God, to the blessed Mary, ever Virgin, to blessed Michael the archangel, to blessed John the Baptist, to the holy apostles Peter and Paul, and to all the saints, that I have sinned exceedingly." So, also, the Council of Trent declared, Sess. 25, Concerning the Invocation of the Saints, "that it is good and useful to supplicate them, and to fly to their prayers, power, and aid; but that they who deny that the saints are to be invoked, or who assert that they do not pray for men, or that their invocation of them is idolatry, hold an impious opinion." See also Peter Dens's Moral Theology, translated by the Rev. J. F. Berg, p. 342-356. Secondly, in the Papal communion the doctrine of exorcism is still held—implying a belief that evil spirits or demons have power over the human frame—a doctrine which comes fairly under the meaning of the phrase here—"the doctrine respecting demons." Thus, in Dr. Butler's Catechism: "Q. What do you mean by exorcism? A. The rites and prayers instituted by the Church for the casting out devils, or restraining them from hurting persons, disquieting places, or abusing any of God's creatures to our harm. Q. Has Christ given his Church any such power over devils? A. Yes, he has. See St. Matt. x. 1; St. Mark iii. 15; St. Luke ix. 1. And that this power was not to die with the apostles, nor to cease after the apostolic age, we learn from the perpetual practice of the Church, and the experience of all ages." The characteristic here referred to by the apostle, therefore, is one that applies precisely to the Roman Catholic Church communion, and can not be applied with the same fitness to any other association calling itself Christian on earth. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the Holy Spirit designed to designate that apostate Church.

2 Speaking lies in hypocrisy; having their conscience seared with a hot iron;

2. Speaking lies in hypocrisy. Ἐν υποκρίσει ψευδολόγων. Or rather, "by or through the hypocrisy of those speaking lies." So it is rendered by Whitby, Benson, Macknight, and others. Our translators have rendered it as if the word translated "speaking lies"—ψευδολόγων—referred to demons, or devils—δαίμονίων—in the previous verse. But there are two objections to this. One is, that then, as Koppe observes, the words would have been inverted—ψευδολόγων ἐν υποκρίσει. The other is, that if that construction is adopted, it must be carried through the sentence, and then all the phrases "speaking lies," "having their conscience seared," "forbidding to marry," etc., must be referred to demons. The preposition ἐν, in, may denote by or through, and is often so used. If this be the true construction, then it will mean that those who departed from the faith did it by or through the hypocritical teachings of those who spoke lies, or who knew that they were inculcating falsehoods; of those whose conscience was seared;

of those who forbade to marry, etc. The meaning then will be, "In the last days certain persons will depart from the faith of the Gospel. This apostasy will essentially consist in their giving heed to spirits that lead to error, and in embracing corrupt and erroneous views on demonology, or in reference to invisible beings between us and God. This they will do through the hypocritical teaching of those who inculcate falsehood; whose consciences are seared," etc. The series of characteristics, therefore, which follow, are those of the teachers, not of the taught; of the ministers of the Church, not of the great body of the people. The apostle means to say that this grand apostasy will occur under the influence of a hypocritical, hardened, and arbitrary ministry, teaching their own doctrines instead of the divine commands, and forbidding that which God has declared to be lawful. In the clause before us—"speaking lies in hypocrisy"—two things are implied, first, that the characteristic of those referred to would be that they would "speak lies;" second, that this would be done hypocritically. In regard to the first, there can be no doubt among Protestants of its applicability to the Papal communion. The entire series of doctrines respecting the authority of the Pope, purgatory, the mass, the invocation of saints, the veneration of relics, the Seven Sacraments, the authority of tradition, the doctrine of merit, etc., is false. Indeed, the system could not be better characterized than by saying that it is a system "speaking lies." The only question is, whether this is done "in hypocrisy," or hypocritically. In regard to this, it is not necessary to maintain that there is no sincerity among the ministers of that communion, or that all are hypocritical in their belief and their teaching. The sense is, that this is the general characteristic, or that this is understood by the leaders or prime movers in that apostasy. In regard to the applicability of this to the ministers of the Papal communion, and the question whether they teach what they know to be false, we may observe (1.) that not a few of them are men of eminent learning, and there can be no reason to doubt that they know that many of the Catholic legends are false, and many of the doctrines of their faith contrary to the Bible. (2.) Not a few of the things which are practiced in that communion must be known by them to be imposture, though not known to be so by the people. Such are all the pretended miracles wrought by the relics of the saints; the liquefying of the blood of St. Januarius, etc. See Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 9. As the working of these tricks depends wholly on the priesthood, they must know that they are "speaking lies in hypocrisy." (3.) The matter of the fact seems to be, that when young men who have been trained in the Catholic Church, first turn their attention to the ministry, they are sincere. They have not yet been made acquainted with the "mysteries of iniquity" in the communion in which they have been trained, and they do not suspect the deceptions that are practiced there. When they pass through their course of study, however, and become acquainted with the arts and devices on which the fabric rests, and with the scandalous lives of many of the clergy, they are shocked to find how corrupt and false the whole system is. But they are now committed. They have devoted their lives to this profession. They are trained now to this system of imposture, and they must continue to practice and perpetuate the fraud, or abandon the Church, and subject themselves to all the civil and ecclesiastical disabilities which would follow if they were to leave the Church and reveal all its frauds and impostures. A gentleman of high authority, and who has had as good an opportunity as any man living to make accurate and extensive observations, stated to me that this was a common thing in regard to the Catholic clergy in France and Italy. No one can reasonably doubt that the great body of that clergy must be apprized that much that is relied on for the support of the system is mere legend, and that the miracles which are pretended to be wrought are mere trick and imposture. ¶ Having their conscience seared with a hot iron. The allusion here is doubtless to the effect of applying a hot iron to the skin. The cauterized part becomes rigid and hard, and is dead to sensibility. So with the conscience of those referred to. It has the same relation to a conscience that is sensitive and quick in its decisions, that a cauterized part of the body has to a thin, delicate, and sensitive skin.

3 Forbidding to marry, and commanding to abstain from meats, which God hath created to be received ^a with thanksgiving of ^a Eccl. 5. 18.

Such a conscience must exist in a mind that can practice delusion without concern; that can carry on a vast system of fraud without wincing; that can incarcerate, scourge, or burn the innocent without compassion; and that can practice gross enormities, and indulge in sensual gratifications under the mask of piety. While there are many eminent exceptions to an application of this to the Papal communion, yet this description will apply better to the Roman priesthood in the time of Luther—and in many other periods of the world—than to any other body of men that ever lived.

3. Forbidding to marry. That is, "They will depart from the faith through the hypocritical teaching of those who forbid to marry." See Notes on ver. 2. This does not necessarily mean that they would prohibit marriage altogether, but that it would be a characteristic of their teaching that marriage would be forbidden, whether of one class of persons or many. They would commend and enjoin celibacy and virginity. They would regard such a state, for certain persons, as more holy than the married condition, and would consider it as so holy that they would absolutely prohibit those who wished to be most holy from entering into the relation. It is needless to say how accurately this applies to the views of the Papacy in regard to the comparative purity and advantages of a state of celibacy, and to their absolute prohibition of the marriage of the clergy. The tenth article of the decree of the Council of Trent, in relation to marriage, will show the general view of the Papacy on that subject: "Whosoever shall say that the married state is to be preferred to a state of virginity, or celibacy, and that it is not better and more blessed to remain in virginity, or celibacy, than to be joined in marriage, let him be accursed!" Comp. Peter Dens's Moral Theology, p. 497-500. ¶ And commanding to abstain from meats, etc. The word meat in the Scriptures commonly denotes food of all kinds. Matt. iii. 4; vi. 25; x. 10; xv. 37. This was the meaning of the word when the translation of the Bible was made. It is now used by us, almost exclusively, to denote animal food. The word here used—βρῶμα—means, properly, whatever is eaten, and may refer to animal flesh, fish, fruit, or vegetables. It is often, however, in the New Testament employed particularly to denote the flesh of animals. Heb. ix. 10; xiii. 9; Rom. xiv. 15, 20; 1 Cor. viii. 8, 13. As it was animal food particularly which was forbidden under the Jewish code, and as the questions on this subject among Christians would relate to the same kinds of prohibition, it is probable that the word has the same limited signification here, and should be taken as meaning the same thing that the word meat does with us. To forbid the use of certain meats, is here described as one of the characteristics of those who would instruct the Church in the time of the great apostasy. It is not necessary to suppose that there would be an entire prohibition, but only a prohibition of certain kinds, and at certain seasons. That this characteristic is found in the Papacy more than any where else in the Christian world, it is needless to prove. The following questions and answers from Dr. Butler's Catechism, will show what is the sentiment of Roman Catholics on this subject: "Q. Are there any other commandments besides the Ten Commandments of God? A. There are the commandments or precepts of the Church, which are chiefly six. Q. What are we obliged to do by the second commandment of the Church? A. To give part of the year to fast and abstinence. Q. What do you mean by fast-days? A. Certain days on which we are allowed but one meal, and forbidden flesh meat. Q. What do you mean by days of abstinence? A. Certain days on which we are forbidden to eat flesh meat, but are allowed the usual number of meals. Q. Is it strictly forbidden by the Church to eat flesh meat on days of abstinence? A. Yes; and to eat flesh meat on any day on which it is forbidden, without necessity and leave of the Church, is very sinful." Could there be a more impressive and striking commentary on what the apostle says here, that "in the latter days some would depart from the faith, under the hypocritical teaching of those who commanded to abstain them which believe and know the truth.

4 For every creature of God is from meats?" The authority claimed by the Papacy to issue commands on this subject, may be seen still further by the following extract from the same catechism, showing the gracious permission of the Church to the "faithful." "The abstinence on Saturday is dispensed with, for the faithful throughout the United States, for the space of ten years (from 1833), except when a fast falls on a Saturday. The use of flesh meat is allowed at present by dispensation, in the diocese of Philadelphia, on all the Sundays of Lent, except Palm Sunday, and once a day on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday in each week, except the Thursday after Ash Wednesday, and also excepting Holy-week." Such is the Roman Catholic religion! See also Peter Dens's Moral Theology, p.321-339. It is true that what is said here might apply to the Essenes, as Koppe supposes, or to the Judaizing teachers, but it applies more appropriately and fully to the Papal communion than to any other body of men professing Christianity; and taken in connection with the other characteristics of the apostasy, there can be no doubt that the reference is to that. ¶ Which God hath created. The articles of food which he has made, and which he has designed for the nourishment of man. The fact that God has created them is proof that they are not to be regarded as evil, and that it is not to be considered as a religious duty to abstain from them. All that God has made is good in its place, and what is adapted to be food for man is not to be refused or forbidden. Comp. Eccles. v. 18. There can be no doubt that in the apostasy here referred to those things would be forbidden not because they were injurious or hurtful in their nature, but because it might be made a part of a system of religion of self-righteousness, and because there might be connected with such a prohibition the belief of special merit.

4. For every creature of God is good. Gr., all the creatures, or all that God has created—πάν κτίσμα: that is, as he made it. Comp. Gen. i. 10, 12, 18, 31. It does not mean that every moral agent remains good as long as he is a creature of God, but moral agents, men and angels, were good as they were good, and nothing to be refused, if it be received with thanksgiving:

made at first. Gen. i. 31. Nor does it mean that all that God has made is good for every object to which it can be applied. It is good in its place; good for the purpose for which he made it. But it should not be inferred that a thing which is poisonous in its nature is good for food, because it is a creation of God. It is good only in its place, and for the ends for which he intended it. Nor should it be inferred that what God has made is necessarily good after it has been perverted by man. As God made it originally, it might have been used without injury. Apples and peaches were made good, and are still useful and proper as articles of food; rye and Indian-corn are good, and are admirably adapted to the support of man and beast; but it does not follow that all that man can make of them is necessarily good. He extracts from them a poisonous liquid, and then says that "every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused." But is this a fair use of this passage of Scripture? True, they are good—they are to be received with gratitude as he made them, and as applied to the uses for which he designed them; but why apply this passage to prove that a deleterious beverage which man has extracted from what God has made is good also, and good for all the purposes to which it can be applied? As God made these things, they are good. As man perverts them, it is no longer proper to call them the "creation of God," and they may be injurious in the highest degree. This passage, therefore, should not be adduced to vindicate the use of intoxicating drinks. As employed by the apostle, it had no such reference, nor does it contain any principle which can properly receive such an application. ¶ And nothing to be refused. Nothing that God has made, for the purposes for which he designed it. The necessity of the case—the "exigency of the passage"—requires this interpretation. It can not mean that we are not to refuse poison if offered in our food, or that we are never to refuse food that is to us injurious or offensive; nor can it any more mean that we are to receive all that may be offered to us as a beverage. The sense is, that as God made it, and for the 5 For it is sanctified by the word of God and prayer.

6 If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things, thou shalt be a good minister of Jesus Christ, nourished up ^a in the words purposes for which he designed it, it is not to be held to be evil; or, which is the same thing, it is not to be prohibited as if there were merit in abstaining from it. It is not to be regarded as a religious duty to abstain from food which God has appointed for the support of man. ¶ If it be received with thanksgiving. See Notes on 1 Cor. x. 31. Comp. Eph. v. 20; Phil. iv. 6.

^a Jer. 15. 16. 1 Pet. 2. 2.

5. For it is sanctified by the word of God. By the authority or permission of God. It would be profane or unholy if he had forbidden it; it is made holy or proper for our use by his permission, and no command of man can make it unholy or improper. Comp. Gen. i. 29; ix. 3. ¶ And prayer. If it is partaken of with prayer. By prayer we are enabled to receive it with gratitude, and every thing that we eat or drink may thus be made a means of grace. Comp. 1 Cor. x. 31.

6. If thou put the brethren in remembrance of these things. Of the truths just stated. They are, therefore, proper subjects to preach upon. It is the duty of the ministry to show to the people of their charge what is error and where it may be apprehended, and to caution them to avoid it. Nourished up in the word of faith. That is, you will be then "a good minister of Jesus Christ, as becomes one who has been nourished up in the words of faith, or trained up in the doctrines of religion." The apostle evidently designs to remind Timothy of the manner in which he had been trained, and to show him how he might act in accordance with that. From one who had been thus educated, it was reasonable to expect that he would be a faithful and exemplary minister of the Gospel. ¶ Whereunto thou hast attained. The word used here means, properly, to accompany side by side; to follow closely; to follow out, trace, or examine. It is rendered shall follow in Matt. xvi. 17; having had understanding in Luke i. 3; and hast fully known in 2 Tim. iii. 10. It does not elsewhere of faith and of good doctrine, whereunto thou hast attained.

7 But refuse profane and old wives' fables, ^b and exercise thyself rather unto godliness.

8 For bodily exercise profiteth

^b Tim. i. 14.

occur in the New Testament. The meaning here seems to be, that Timothy had followed out to their legitimate results the doctrines in which he had been trained; he had accurately seen and understood their bearing, as leading him to embrace the Christian religion. His early training in the Scriptures of the Old Testament (2 Tim. i. 5; iii. 15), he had now fully carried out, by embracing the Lord Jesus as the Messiah, and by evincing the proper results of the early teaching which he had received in connection with that religion. If he now followed the directions of the apostle, he would be a minister of the Lord Jesus worthy of the attainments in religious knowledge which he had made, and of the expectations which had been formed of him. No young man should, by neglect, indolence, or folly, disappoint the reasonable expectations of his friends. Their cherished hopes are a proper ground of appeal to him, and it may be properly demanded of every one that he shall carry out to their legitimate results all the principles of his early training, and that he shall be in his profession all that his early advantages make it reasonable to expect that he will be.

7. But refuse. That is, refuse to pay attention to them, or reject them. Do not consider them of sufficient importance to occupy your time. ¶ Profane. The word here used does not mean that the fables here referred to were blasphemous or impious in their character, but that they had not the character of true religion. 2 Tim. ii. 16. ¶ And old wives'. Old women's stories; or such as old women held to be important. The word is used here, as it is often with us, in the sense of silly. ¶ Fables. Fictions, or stories that were not founded on fact. The heathen religion abounded with fictions of this kind, and the Jewish teachers were also remarkable for the number of such fables which they had introduced into their system. It is probable that the apostle referred here particularly to the Jewish fables, and the counsel which he gives to Timothy is to have nothing to do with them. ¶ And exercise thyself rather unto godliness. Rather than attempt to understand those fables. Do not occupy your time and attention with them, but rather cultivate piety, and seek to become more holy.

8. For bodily exercise profiteth little. Marg., for a little time. The Greek will admit of either interpretation, and what is here affirmed is true in either sense. The bodily exercise to which the apostle refers is of little advantage compared with that piety which he recommended Timothy to cultivate, and whatever advantage could be derived from it would be but of short duration. "Bodily exercise" here refers, doubtless, to the mortifications of the body by abstinence and penance which the ancient devotees, and particularly the Essenes, made so important as a part of their religion. The apostle does not mean to say that bodily exercise is in itself improper, or that no advantage can be derived from it in the preservation of health, but he refers to it solely as a means of religion; as supposed to promote holiness of heart and of life. By these bodily austerities it was believed that the corrupt passions would be subdued, the wanderings of an unholy fancy fettered down, and the soul brought into conformity to God. In opposition to this supposition, the apostle has here stated a great principle which experience has shown to be universally correct, that such austerities do little to promote holiness, but much to promote superstition. There must be a deeper work on the soul than any which can be accomplished by the mere mortification of the body. See Notes on Col. ii. 23, and comp. 1 Cor. ix. 25-27. ¶ But Godliness. Piety or religion. ¶ Is profitable unto all things. In every respect. There is not an interest of man, in reference to this life, or to the life to come, which it would not promote. It is favorable to health of body, by promoting temperance, industry, and frugality; to clearness and vigor of intellect, by giving just views of truth, and of the relative value of objects; to peace of conscience, by leading to the faithful performance of duty; to prosperity in business, by making a man temperate, honest, prudent, and industrious; to a good name, by leading a man to pursue such a course of life as will deserve it; to comfort in trial, calmness in death, and immortal peace beyond the grave. Religion injures no one. It does not destroy health; it does not enfeeble the intellect; it does not disturb the conscience; it does not pander to raging and consuming passions; it does not diminish the honor of a good name; it furnishes no subject of bitter reflection on a bed of death. It makes no one poorer; it prompts to no crime; it engenders no disease. If a man should do that which would most certainly make him happy, he would be decidedly and conscientiously religious; and though piety promises no earthly possessions directly as its reward, and secures no immunity from sickness, bereavement, and death, yet there is nothing which so certainly secures a steady growth of prosperity in a community as the virtues which it engenders and sustains, and there is nothing else that will certainly meet the ills to which man is subject. I have no doubt that it is the real conviction of every man that, if he ever becomes certainly happy, he will be a Christian; and I presume that it is the honest belief of every one that the true and consistent Christian is the most happy of men. And yet, with this conviction, men seek every thing else rather than religion; and in the pursuit of baubles, which they know can not confer happiness, they defer religion—the only certain source of happiness—to the last period of life, or reject it altogether. ¶ Having promise of the life that now is. That is, it furnishes the promise of whatever is really necessary for us in this life. The promises of the Scriptures on this subject are abundant, and there is probably not a want of our nature for which there might not be found a specific promise in the Bible. Comp. Psa. xxiii. 1; lxxxiv. 11; Phil. iv. 19. Religion promises us useful food and raiment, Matt. vi. 25-33; Isa. xxxiii. 16; comfort in affliction, Deut. xxxiii. 27; Job v. 19; Psa. xlvi; Heb. xiii. 5; support in old age and death, Isa. xlv. 4; Psa. xxiii. 4; Comp. Isa. xliii. 2; and a good reputation and an honored name when we are dead. Psa. xxxvii. 1-6. There is nothing which man really needs in this life which is not promised by religion; and if the inquiry were made, it would

¹ little: but godliness ^a is profitable unto all things, having promise ^b of the life that now is, and of that which is to come.

¹ or, for a little time.

a c. 6. 6.

9 This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation.

10 For therefore we both labour and suffer reproach, because we

^b Psa. 84. 11.

be surprising to many, even with our imperfect religion, how literally these promises are fulfilled. David, near the close of a long life, was able to bear this remarkable testimony on this subject: "I have been young, and now am old; yet have I not seen the righteous forsaken, nor his seed begging bread." Psa. xxxvii. 25. And now, of the beggars that come to our doors, to how few of them can we give a cup of cold water, feeling that we are giving it to a disciple! How rare is it that a true Christian becomes a beggar! Of the inmates of our almshouses, how very few give any evidence that they have religion! They have been brought there by vice, not by religion. True piety sends none to the almshouse; it would have saved the great mass of those who are there from ever needing the charity of their fellow-men. ¶ And of that which is to come. Eternal life. And it is the only thing that promises such a life. Infidelity makes no promise of future happiness. Its business is to take away all the comforts which religion gives, and to leave men to go to a dark eternity with no promise or hope of eternal joy. Vice promises pleasures in the present life, but only to disappoint its votaries here; it makes no promise of happiness in the future world. There is nothing that furnishes any certain promise of happiness hereafter, in this world or the next, but religion. God makes no promise of such happiness to beauty, birth, or blood; to the possession of honors or wealth; to great attainments in science and learning; or to the graces of external accomplishment. To none of these, whatever flattering hopes of happiness they may hold out here, is there a promise made that they will secure future eternal bliss. It is not by such things that God graduates the rewards of heaven, and it is only piety or true religion that furnishes any assurance of happiness in the world to come.

9. This is a faithful saying. See Notes on ch. i. 15.

10. For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach. In making this truth known, that all might be saved, or that salvation was offered to all. The labor was chiefly experienced in carrying this intelligence abroad among the Gentiles; the reproach arose chiefly from the Jews for doing it. ¶ Because we trust in the living God. This does not mean, as our translation would seem to apply, that he labored and suffered because he confided in God, or that this was the reason of his sufferings, but rather that this trust in the living God was his support in these labors and trials. "We labor and suffer reproach, for we have hope in God. Through him we look for salvation. We believe that he has made this known to men, and believing this, we labor earnestly to make it known, even though it be attended with reproaches." The sentiment is, that the belief that God has revealed a plan of salvation for all men, and invites all men to be saved, will make his friends willing to labor to make this known, though it be attended with reproaches.

¶ Who is the Saviour of all men. This must be understood as denoting that he is the Saviour of all men in some sense which differs from what is immediately affirmed—"specially of those that believe." There is something pertaining to them in regard to salvation which does not pertain to "all men." It can not mean that he brings all men to heaven, especially those who believe—for this would be nonsense. And if he brings all men actually to heaven, how can it be especially true that he does this in regard to those who believe? Does it mean that he saves others without believing? But this would be contrary to the uniform doctrine of the Scriptures. See Mark xvi. 16. When, therefore, it is said that he "is the Saviour of all men, specially of those who believe," it must mean that there is a sense in which it is true that he may be called the Saviour of all men, while, at the same time, it is actually true that those only are saved who believe. This may be true in two respects. (1.) As he is the Preserver of men (Job vii. 20), for in this sense he may be said to save them from famine, and war, and peril—keeping them from day to day; comp. Psa. cvii. 28;

trust in the living God, who is the Saviour of all men, specially of those that believe.

11 These things command and teach.

(2.) as he has provided salvation for all men. He is thus their Saviour—and may be called the common Saviour of all; that is, he has confined the offer of salvation to no one class of men; he has not limited the atonement to one division of the human race; and he actually saves all who are willing to be saved by him. ¶ Specially of those that believe. This is evidently designed to limit the previous remark. If it had been left there, it might have been inferred that he would actually save all men. But the apostle held no such doctrine, and he here teaches that salvation is actually limited to those who believe. This is the specialty or the peculiarity in the salvation of those who actually reach heaven—that they are believers. See Notes on Mark xvi. 16. All men, therefore, do not enter heaven, unless all men have faith. But is this so? What evidence is there that the great mass of mankind die believing on the Son of God?

11. These things command and teach. As important doctrines, and as embracing the sum of the Christian system. It follows from this that a minister of the Gospel is solemnly bound to teach that there is a sense in which God is the Saviour of all men. He is just as much bound to teach this as he is that only those will be saved who believe. It is a glorious truth, and it is a thing for which a man should unceasingly give thanks to God, that he may go and proclaim that he has provided salvation for all, and is willing that all should come and live.

12. Let no man despise thy youth. That is, do not act in such a manner that any will despise you on account of your youth. Act as becomes a minister of the Gospel in all things, and in such a way that men will respect you as such, though you are young. It is clear from this that Timothy was then a young man, but his exact age there is no means of determining. It is implied here, (1.) that there was danger that, by the levity and indiscretion to which youth are so much exposed, the ministry might be regarded with contempt; and (2.) that it was possible that his deportment should be so grave, serious, and every way appropriate, that the ministry would not be blamed but honored. The way in which Timothy was to live so that the ministry would not be despised on account of his youth, the apostle proceeds immediately to specify. ¶ But be thou an example of the believers. One of the constant duties of a minister of the Gospel, no matter what his age. A minister should so live that if all his people should closely follow his example their salvation would be secure, and they would make the highest possible attainments in piety. On the meaning of the word rendered example, see Notes on Phil. iii. 17; 1 Thess. i. 7. ¶ In word. In speech—that is, in your manner of conversation. This does not refer to his public teaching—in which he could not properly be an example to them—but to his usual and familiar conversation. ¶ In conversation. In general deportment. See this word explained in the Notes on Phil. i. 27. ¶ In charity. Love to the brethren, and to all. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. ¶ In spirit. In the government of your passions, and in a mild, meek, forgiving disposition. ¶ In faith. At all times, and in all trials, show to believers by your example how they ought to maintain unshaken confidence in God. ¶ In purity. In chasteness of life. See ch. v. 2. Let there be nothing in your intercourse with the other sex that will give rise to scandal. The Papists, with great impropriety, understand this as enjoining celibacy—as if there could be no purity in that holy relation which God appointed in Eden, and which he has declared to “be honorable in all” (Heb. xiii. 4), and which he has made so essential to the well-being of mankind. If the apostle had wished to produce the highest possible degree of corruption in the Church, he would have enjoined the celibacy of the clergy, and the celibacy of an indefinite number of nuns and monks. There are no other institutions on the earth

12 Let ^a no man despise thy youth; but be thou an example of the believers, in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity.

^a Tim. 2. 7, 15.

13 Till I come, give attendance to reading, to exhortation, to doctrine.

14 Neglect ^a not the gift that is in thee, which was given thee by prophecy, ^b with the laying on ^c of the hands of the presbytery.

^a 2 Tim. i. 6.

15 Meditate upon these things;

^b c. 1. 18.

^c Acts 13. 3.

which have done so much to corrupt the chastity of the race as those which have grown out of the doctrine that celibacy is more honorable than marriage.

13. Till I come. See Notes on ch. iii. 14, 15. ¶ Give attendance to reading. The word here used may refer either to public or to private reading. See Acts xiii. 15; 2 Cor. iii. 14. Comp. Esdr. ix. 48. The more obvious interpretation here is to refer it to private reading, or to a careful perusal of those books which would qualify him for his public work. The then written portions of the sacred volume—the Old Testament—are doubtless specially intended here, but there is no reason to doubt that there were included also such other books as would be useful, to which Timothy might have access. Even those were then few in number, but Paul evidently meant that Timothy should, as far as practicable, become acquainted with them. He himself, on more than one occasion, showed that he had some acquaintance with the classic writings of Greece. Acts xvii. 28; Titus i. 12. ¶ To exhortation. See Notes on Rom. xii. 8. ¶ To doctrine. To teaching—for so the word means. Comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 7.

14. Neglect not the gift that is in thee. An important question arises here, to what the word gift refers: whether to natural endowment, to office, or to some supposed virtue which had been conferred by ordination—some transmitted influence which made him holy as a minister of religion, and which was to continue to be transmitted by the imposition of apostolic hands. The word which is here used is rendered gift in every place in which it occurs in the New Testament. It is found in the following places, and with the following significations: deliverance from peril, 2 Cor. i. 11; a gift or quality of the mind, 1 Cor. vii. 7; gifts of Christian knowledge or consolation, Rom. i. 11; 1 Cor. i. 7; redemption or salvation through Christ, Rom. v. 15, 16; vi. 23; xi. 29; the miraculous endowments conferred by the Holy Spirit, Rom. xii. 6; 1 Cor. xii. 4, 9, 28,

30, 31; and the special gift or endowment for the work of the ministry, 1 Tim. iv. 14; 2 Tim. i. 6; 1 Pet. iv. 10. The gift then referred to here was that by which Timothy was qualified for the work of the ministry. It relates to his office and qualifications—to every thing that entered into his fitness for the work. It does not refer exclusively to any influence that came upon him in virtue of his ordination, or to any new grace that was infused into him by that act, making him either officially or personally more holy than other men or than he was before; but it comprised the whole train of circumstances by which he had been qualified for the sacred office and recognized as a minister of religion. All this was regarded as a gift, a benefit, a favor—χάρισμα, charisma—and he was not to neglect or disregard the responsibilities and advantages growing out of it. In regard to the manner in which this gift or favor was bestowed, the following things are specified: (1.) It was the gift of God. 2 Tim. i. 6. He was to be recognized as its source; and it was not therefore conferred merely by human hands. The call to the ministry, the qualifications for the office, and the whole arrangement by which one is endowed for the work, are primarily to be traced to God as the source. (2.) It was given to Timothy in accordance with certain predictions which had existed in regard to him—the expectations of those who had observed his qualifications for such an office, and who had expressed the hope that he would one day be permitted to serve the Lord in it. (3.) It was sanctioned by the laying on of the hands of the Presbytery. The call of God to the work thus recognized by the Church, and the approbation of the Presbytery expressed by setting him apart to the office, were to be regarded by Timothy as a part of the “gift” or benefit (charisma) which had been conferred on him, and which he was not to neglect. (4.) An additional circumstance which might serve to impress the mind of Timothy with the value of this endowment, and the responsibility of this office, was that Paul himself had been concerned in his ordination. 2 Tim. i. 6. He who was so much more aged (Philem. 9. Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 6, 7); he who had been a father to him, who had adopted him, and who had treated him as a son, had been concerned in his ordination; and this fact imposed a higher obligation to perform aright the functions of the office. We are not to suppose, therefore, that there was any mysterious influence—any virus—conveyed by the act of ordination, or that that act imparted any additional degree of holiness. The endowment for the ministry; the previous anticipation and hopes of friends; and the manner in which he had been inducted into the sacred office, were all to be regarded as a benefit or favor of a high order, and as a reason why the gift thus bestowed should not be neglected; and the same things now should make a man who is in the ministry deeply feel the solemn obligations resting on him to cultivate his powers in the highest degree, and to make the most of his talents. ¶ Which was given thee by prophecy. That is, the prophetic declarations and the hopes of pious friends in regard to your future usefulness, have been among the means by which you have been introduced to the ministry, and should be a reason why you should cultivate your powers, and perform faithfully the duties of your office. See Notes on ch. i. 18. ¶ With the laying on of the hands of the presbytery. It was common to lay on the hands in imparting a blessing, or in setting apart to any office. See Matt. xix. 15; Mark vi. 5; Luke iv. 40; xiii. 13; Lev. viii. 14; Num. xxvii. 23; Acts xxviii. 8; vi. 6; viii. 17; xiii. 3. The reference here is undoubtedly to the act by which Timothy was set apart to the office of the ministry. The word rendered presbytery—πρεσβυτεριον—occurs only in two other places in the New Testament—Luke xxii. 66, where it is rendered elders; and Acts xxii. 5, where it is rendered “estate of the elders.” It properly means an assembly of aged men; council of elders. In Luke xxii. 66, and Acts xxii. 5, it refers to the Jewish sanhedrim. See Notes on Matt. v. 22. In the passage before us, it can not refer to that body—for they did not ordain men to the Christian ministry—but to some association, council, or body of elders of the Christian Church. It is clear from the passage (1.) that there was more than one person engaged in this service and taking part in it when Timothy was ordained, and therefore it could not have been by a prelate or bishop alone. (2.) That the power conferred, whatever it was, was conferred by the whole body constituting the Presbytery—since the apostle says that the “gift” was imparted, not in virtue of any particular power or eminence in any one individual, but by the “laying on of the hands of the presbytery.” (3.) The statement here is just such a one as would be made now respecting a Presbyterian ordination; it is not one which would be made of an Episcopal ordination. A Presbyterian would choose these very words in giving an account of an ordination to the work of the ministry; an Episcopalian would not. The former speaks of an ordination by a Presbytery; the latter of ordination by a Bishop. The former can use the account of the apostle Paul here as applicable to an ordination, without explanations, comments, new versions, or criticisms; the latter can not. The passage, therefore, is full proof that, in one of the most important ordinations mentioned in the New Testament, it was performed by an association of men, and not by a prelate, and, therefore, that this was the primitive mode of ordination. Indeed, there is not a single instance of ordination to an office mentioned in the New Testament which was performed by one man alone. See this passage examined at greater length in my “Inquiry into the Organization and Government of the Apostolic Church,” p. 208-221.

15. Meditate upon these things. Upon the train of events by which you have been led into the ministry, and upon the responsibilities and duties of the office. Let your mind be deeply impressed with these things; make them the subject of profound and serious thought. ¶ Give thyself wholly to them. Gr., “Be in them”—a phrase similar to that of Horace—totus in illis. The meaning is plain. He was to devote his life wholly to this work. He was to have no other grand aim of living. His time, attention, talents, were to be absorbed in the proper duties of the work. He was not to make that subordinate and tributary to any other purpose, nor was he to allow any other object to interfere with the appropriate duties of that office. He was give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear ¹ to all.

16 Take heed ^a unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in

¹ or, in all things.

^a Ezek. 44. 21.

not to live for money, fame, or pleasure; not to devote his time to the pursuits of literature or science for their own sakes; not to seek the reputation of an elegant or profound scholar; not to aim to be distinguished merely as an accomplished gentleman, or as a skillful farmer, teacher, or author. Whatever was done in any of these departments was to be wholly consistent with the direction ἐν τοῦτοις ἵσθι—"be in these things"—be absorbed in the appropriate duties of the ministerial office. It may be remarked here that no man will ever make much of himself, or accomplish much in any profession, who does not make this the rule of his life. He who has one great purpose of life to which he patiently and steadily devotes himself, and to which he makes every thing else bend, will uniformly rise to respectability, if not to eminence. He who does not do this, can expect to accomplish nothing. ¶ That thy profiting. Gr., Thy going forward; that is, thy advancement or progress. A minister of the Gospel ought to make steady improvement in all that pertains to his office. No man ought to be satisfied with present attainments. ¶ To all. Marg., in all things. The margin is the more correct rendering, but either of them makes good sense. It should be apparent to all persons who attend on the stated preaching of a minister of the Gospel, that he is making steady advances in knowledge, wisdom, and piety, and in all things that pertain to the proper performance of the duties of his office. If a man really makes progress, it will be seen and appreciated by others; if he does not, that also will be as well understood by his hearers.

16. Take heed unto thyself. This may be understood as relating to every thing of a personal nature that would qualify him for his work. It may be applied to personal piety; to health; to manners; to habits of living; to temper; to the ruling purposes; to the intercourse with others. In relation to personal religion, a minister should take heed (1.) that he has true piety, and (2.) that he is advancing in them: for in doing this thou shalt both save ^b thyself, and them that hear thee.

^b James 5. 20.

the knowledge and love of God. In relation to morals, he should be upright; to his intercourse with others, and his personal habits, he should be correct, consistent, and gentlemanly, so as to give needless offense to none. The person of a minister should be neat and cleanly; his manners such as will show the fair influence of religion on his temper and deportment; his style of intercourse such as will be an example to the old and the young, and such as will not offend against the proper laws of courtesy and urbanity. There is no religion in being filthy; in uncouth manners; in an inconvenient and strange form of apparel; in bad grammar, and in sloven habits—and to be a real gentleman should be as much a matter of conscience with a minister of the Gospel as to be a real Christian. Indeed, under the full and fair influence of the Gospel, the one always implies the other. Religion refines the manners—it does not corrupt them; it makes one courteous, polite, and kind—it never produces boorish manners, or habits that give offense to the well-bred and the refined. ¶ And unto the doctrine. The kind of teaching which you give, or to your public instructions. The meaning is, that he should hold and teach only the truth. He was to "take heed" to the whole business of public instruction; that is, both to the matter and the manner. The great object was to get as much truth as possible before the minds of his hearers, and in such a way as to produce the deepest impression on them. ¶ Continue in them. That is, in these things which have been specified. He was ever to be found perseveringly engaged in the performance of these duties. ¶ For so doing thou shalt both save thyself. By holding of the truth, and by the faithful performance of your duties, you will secure the salvation of your soul. We are not to suppose that the apostle meant to teach that this would be the meritorious cause of his salvation, but that these faithful labors would be regarded as evidence of piety, and would be accepted as such. It is equivalent to saying that an unfaithful minister of the Gospel can not be saved; that one who faithfully performs all the duties of that office with a right spirit will be. ¶ And them that hear thee. That is, you will be the means of their salvation. It is not necessary to suppose that the apostle meant to teach that he would save all that heard him. The declaration is to be understood in a popular sense, and it is undoubtedly true that a faithful minister will be the means of saving many sinners. This assurance furnishes a ground of encouragement for a minister of the Gospel. He may hope for success, and should look for success. He has the promise of God that if he is faithful he shall see the fruit of his labors, and this result of his work is a sufficient reward for all the toils, and sacrifices, and self-denials of the ministry. If a minister should be the means of saving but one soul from the horrors of eternal suffering and eternal sinning, it would be worth the most self-denying labors of the longest life. Yet what minister of the Gospel is there, who is at all faithful to his trust, who is not made the honored instrument of the salvation of many more than one? Let not, then, the faithful preacher be discouraged. A single soul rescued from death will be a gem in his eternal crown brighter by far than ever sparkled on the brow of royalty.

CHAPTER V.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter embraces the following subjects:

(1.) The proper method of admonition when others err—to wit, an aged man should be entreated as a father, younger men as brethren, the aged women as mothers, and the younger with the pure feelings which one has for a sister. Vs. 1, 2.

(2.) Instructions respecting the proper treatment of widows. Ver. 3-16.

(a) Those who were true widows were to be regarded with honor and respect.

(b) Who sustained his character. Ver. 4-7. Those who had evinced piety at home in taking charge of those who were dependent on them, and who were steady in their devotions. No one was to be received into this number who was not of the age of sixty; who had been married to more than one man; and who had not given evidence in all the duties of domestic fidelity and charity that she was imbued with the spirit of religion. Vs. 9, 10.

(c) Those who were young were not to be admitted into this class. Ver. 11-15. The reasons given are, that they would marry again, or that they would be idle, and would be intermeddlers in the affairs of others. It was better, therefore, that they should marry, and have charge of a family of their own. Vs. 14, 15.

(d) The duty of the individual members of the Church to sustain helpless and dependent widows, if they had such among their relations. Ver. 16. In these verses (3-16) it is evident that the apostle had his eye on a class of widows that sustained some such relation to other females as the elders did to the whole Church. They were aged women to whom was intrusted the superintendence of the females of the Church—probably because, from the custom then prevalent, men had much less liberty of access to the other sex, and much less freedom of intercourse was allowable, than now.

(3.) The duty of supporting and honoring those who rule in the Church. Vs. 17, 18.

(4.) The suitable guarding of the rights of the elders in the Church. No accusation was to be received, unless it was sustained by two or three witnesses. Ver. 19.

(5.) No one who was guilty was to be spared. All who sinned were to be publicly rebuked. Ver. 20.

(6.) A solemn charge is given to Timothy to keep these commandments. Ver. 21.

(7.) The statement of his duty not to ordain any person rashly or hastily to the sacred office. Ver. 22.

(8.) To guard his health. Ver. 23.

(9.) A declaration respecting sin—that sometimes it is open beforehand, and sometimes it is concealed till it is revealed at the judgment, closes the chapter. Vs. 24, 25.

The design of this closing statement seems to be, to show Timothy that he should not judge men by appearances, but that he should evince great caution in forming his estimate of their character.

CHAPTER V.

REBUKE not an elder, but entreat him as a father; and the younger men as brethren;

2 The elder women as mothers;

the younger as sisters, with all purity.

3 Honour widows that are widows indeed.^a

4 But if any widow have chil-

^a Ver. 5. 16.

1. Rebuke not an elder. The word elder here is not used in the sense in which it often is, to denote an officer of the Church, a presbyter, but in its proper and usual sense, to denote an aged man. This is evident, because the apostle immediately mentions in contradistinction from the elder, "the younger men," where it can not be supposed that he refers to them as officers. The command to treat the "elder" as a "father," also shows the same thing. By the direction not to rebuke, it is not to be supposed that the minister of the Gospel is not to admonish the aged, or that he is not to show them their sins when they go astray, but that he is to do this as he would to a father. He is not to assume a harsh, dictatorial, and denunciatory manner. The precepts of religion always respect the proprieties of life, and never allow us to transgress them, even when the object is to reclaim a soul from error, and to save one who is wandering. Besides, when this is the aim, it will always be most certainly accomplished by observing the respect due to others on account of office, relation, rank, or age. ¶ But entreat him as a father. As you would a father. That is, do not harshly denounce him. Endeavor to persuade him to lead a more holy life. One of the things for which the ancients were remarkable above most of the moderns, and for which the Orientals are still distinguished, was respect for age. Few things are enjoined with more explicitness and emphasis in the Bible than this. Lev. xix. 32; Job xxix; Prov. xx. 20; xxx. 17. Comp. Dan. vii. 9, 10; Rev. i. 14, 15. The apostle would have Timothy, and, for the same reason, every other minister of the Gospel, a model of this virtue. ¶ And the younger men as brethren. That is, treat them as you would your own brothers. Do not consider them as aliens, strangers, or enemies, but entertain toward them, even when they go astray, the kind feelings of a brother. This refers more particularly to his private intercourse with them, and to his personal efforts to reclaim them when they had fallen into sin. When these efforts were ineffectual, and they sinned openly, he was "to rebuke them before all" (ver. 20), that others might be deterred from following their example.

2. The elder women as mothers. Showing still the same respect for age, and for the proprieties of life. No son who has proper feelings will rebuke his own mother with severity. Let the minister of religion evince the same feelings if he is called to address a "mother in Israel" who has erred. ¶ The younger as sisters. With the feelings which you have toward a sister. The tender love which one has for a beloved sister would always keep him from using harsh and severe language. The same mildness, gentleness, and affection should be used toward a sister in the Church. ¶ With all purity. Nothing could be more characteristic of Paul's manner than this injunction; nothing could show a deeper acquaintance with human nature. He knew the danger which would beset a youthful minister of the Gospel when it was his duty to admonish and entreat a youthful female; he knew, too, the scandal to which he might be exposed if, in the performance of the necessary duties of his office, there should be the slightest departure from purity and propriety. He was therefore to guard his heart with more than common vigilance in such circumstances, and was to indulge in no word, or look, or action, which could by any possibility be construed as manifesting an improper state of feeling. On nothing else do the fair character and usefulness of a youthful minister more depend than on the observance of this precept. Nowhere else does he more need the grace of the Lord Jesus, and the exercise of prudence, and the manifestation of incorruptible purity, than in the performance of this duty. A youthful minister who fails here can never recover the perfect purity of an unsullied reputation, and never in subsequent life be wholly free from susdren or nephews, let them learn first to show ¹ piety at home, and to requite their parents: for that

¹ or, kindness.

picion. Compare Notes on Matt. v. 28.

3. Honor widows. The particular attention and respect which are enjoined here seem to refer to the class of widows who were supported by the Church, and who were intrusted with the performance of certain duties toward the other female members. See ver. 9. It is to be remembered that the intercourse of the sexes is much more circumscribed in Oriental countries than it is among us; that access to the female members of the Church would be much less free than it is now, and that consequently there might have been a special propriety in intrusting the duty of watching over the younger among them to the more aged. This duty would be naturally intrusted to those who had not the care of families. It would also be natural to commit it, if they were qualified, to those who had not the means of support, and who, while they were maintained by the Church, might be rendering a valuable service to it. It would seem, therefore, that there was a class of this description, who were intrusted with these duties, and in regard to whose qualifications it was proper that Timothy should be instructed. The change of customs in society has made this class less necessary, and probably the arrangement was never designed to be permanent, but still it may be a question whether such an arrangement would not now be wise and useful in the Church. On this subject, see Notes on Rom. xvi. 1. ¶ That are widows indeed. Who are truly widows. We associate with the word widow, commonly, not only the idea of the loss of a husband, but many other things that are the usual accompaniments of widowhood—a poor and dependent condition; care and solitude; sadness and sorrow. This idea is implied in the use of the word employed here—χήρα—which means properly one who is be-reaved (from the adjective χήρος, be-reaved), and which, as Calvin says, conveys the idea of one in distressed circumstances. What Paul regarded as constituting true widowhood, he specifies in verses 4, 5, 9, 10. He connects with it the idea that she had no per-is good and acceptable before God.

5 Now she that is a widow in-sons dependent on her; that she was desolate, and evinced true trust in God; that she was so aged that she would not marry again; and that by her life she had given evidence of possessing a heart of true benevolence. Ver. 10.

4. But if any widow have children. Who would be dependent on her care, and who might themselves contribute to her support. ¶ Or nephews. The word nephew now commonly means the son of a brother or sister. Formerly the English word also meant grandchildren, or descendants of any description.—Webster. The Greek word here—ἐκγωνα—has the latter meaning. It denotes those spring from or born of; and then descendants of any kind—sons, daughters, grandchildren. The Greek word would not, in fact, properly include nephews and nieces. It embraces only those in a direct line. ¶ Let them learn first to show piety at home. Marg., “or, kindness.” That is, let the children and grandchildren learn to do this. Let them have an opportunity of performing their duty toward their aged parent or grandparent. Do not receive such a widow among the poor and dependent females of the Church, to be maintained at public expense, but let her children support her. Thus they will have an opportunity of evincing Christian kindness, and of requiting her for her care. This the apostle calls “showing piety”—ἐνσεβειν—that is, filial piety: piety toward a parent by providing for the wants of that parent in advanced age. The word is commonly used to denote piety toward God, but it is also used to denote proper reverence and respect for a parent.—Robinson. ¶ And to requite their parents. To repay them, as far as possible, for all their kindness. This debt can never be wholly repaid, but still a child should feel it a matter of sacred obligation to do as much toward it as possible. ¶ For that is good and acceptable before God. It is a duty every where enjoined. Comp. Notes on Matt. xv. 5-7; Eph. vi. 1, 2.

5. Now she that is a widow indeed and desolate. The word rendered desolate means solitary, alone. It does not nec-deed, and desolate, trusteth in God, and continueth in supplications and prayers night and day.

6 But she that liveth ¹ in pleasure is dead ^a while she liveth.

¹ or, delicately.

a Rev. 3. 1.

essarily imply the idea of discomfort which we attach to the word desolate. The sense is, that she had no children or other descendants; none on whom she could depend for support. ¶ Trusteth in God. She has no one else to look to but God. She has no earthly reliance, and, destitute of husband, children, and property, she feels her dependence, and steadily looks to God for consolation and support. ¶ And continueth in supplications and prayers night and day. Continually. Comp. Notes on ch. ii. 1. See also the description of Anna in Luke ii. 36, 37. The apostle regards this as one of the characteristics of those who were "widows indeed," who were to be received into the class to be maintained by the Church, and to whom the charge of younger members of the Church might be intrusted.

6. But she that liveth in pleasure.

Marg., delicately. The Greek word (σπαταλάω) occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, except in James v. 5: "Ye have lived in pleasure on the earth." It properly means to live in luxury, voluptuously; to indulge freely in eating and drinking; to yield to the indulgence of the appetites. It does not indicate grossly criminal pleasures; but the kind of pleasure connected with luxurious living, and with pampering the appetites. It is probable that in the time of the apostle there were professedly Christian widows who lived in this manner—as there are such professing Christians of all kinds in every age of the world.

¶ Is dead while she liveth. To all the proper purposes of life she is as if she were dead. There is great emphasis in this expression, and nothing could convey more forcibly the idea that true happiness is not to be found in the pleasures of sense. There is nothing in such pleasures that answers the purposes of life. Their gratification is not the object for which life was given, and as to the great and proper designs of existence, such persons might as well be dead.

7. And these things give in charge.

H

7 And these things give in charge, that they may be blameless.

8 But if any provide not for his own, and specially ^b for those of his own house, ² he hath denied

^b Isa. 58. 7.

² or, kindred.

Announce, or declare these things, to wit, particularly respecting the duty of children to their widowed mothers, and the proper duty of those who are widows.

8. But if any provide not for his own. The apostle is speaking (ver. 4) particularly of the duty of children toward a widowed mother. In enforcing that duty, he gives the subject, as he often does in similar cases, a general direction, and says that all ought to provide for those who are dependent on them, and that if they do not do this, they have a less impressive sense of the obligations of duty than even the heathen have. On the duty here referred to, comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 17; 2 Cor. viii. 21. The meaning is, that the person referred to is to think beforehand (προνοεῖ) of the probable wants of his own family, and make arrangements to meet them. God thus provides for our wants; that is, he sees beforehand what we shall need, and makes arrangements for those wants by long preparation. The food that we eat, and the raiment that we wear, he foresaw we should need, and the arrangement for the supply was made years or ages since; and to meet these wants he has been carrying forward the plans of his providence in the seasons; in the growth of animals; in the formation of fruit; in the bountiful harvest. So, according to our measure, we are to anticipate what will be the probable wants of our families, and to make arrangements to meet them. The words "his own" refer to those who are naturally dependent on him, whether living in his own immediate family or not. There may be many distant relatives naturally dependent on our aid, besides those who live in our own house. ¶ And specially for those of his own house. Marg., kindred. The word house, or household, better expresses the sense than the word kindred. The meaning is, those who live in his own family. They would naturally have higher claims on him than those who did not. They would commonly be his nearer relatives, and the fact, from the faith, and is worse than an infidel.

9 Let not a widow be ¹ taken into

¹ or, chosen.

whatever cause, that they constituted his own household, would lay the foundation for a strong claim upon him. He who neglected his own immediate family would be more guilty than he who neglected a more remote relative. ¶ He hath denied the faith. By his conduct, perhaps not openly. He may be still a professor of religion and do this; but he will show that he is imbued with none of the spirit of religion, and is a stranger to its real nature. The meaning is, that he would, by such an act, have practically renounced Christianity, since it enjoins this duty on all. We may hence learn that it is possible to deny the faith by conduct as well as by words; and that a neglect of doing our duty is as real a denial of Christianity as it would be openly to renounce it. Peter denied his Lord in one way, and thousands do the same thing in another. He did it in words; they by neglecting their duty to their families, or their duty in their closets, or their duty in attempting to send salvation to their fellow-men, or by an openly irreligious life. A neglect of any duty is so far a denial of the faith. ¶ And is worse than an infidel. The word here does not mean an infidel, technically so called, or one who openly professes to disbelieve Christianity, but any one who does not believe; that is, any one who is not a sincere Christian. The word, therefore, would include the heathen, and it is to them, doubtless, that the apostle particularly refers. They acknowledged the obligation to provide for their relatives. This was one of the great laws of nature written on their hearts, and a law which they felt bound to obey. Few things were inculcated more constantly by heathen moralists than this duty. Galgacus, in Tacitus, says, "Nature dictates that to every one, his own children and relatives should be most dear." Cicero says, "Every man should take care of his own family"—suos quisque debet tueri. See Rosenmüller, in loc., and also numerous examples of the same kind quoted from Apuleius, Cicero, Plutarch, Homer, Terence, Virgil, and Servius, in Priceus, in loc. The doctrine here is, (1.) that a Christian

the number under threescore years old, having been the wife of one man, ought not to be inferior to an unbeliever in respect to any virtue; (2.) that in all that constitutes true virtue he ought to surpass him; (3.) that the duties which are taught by nature ought to be regarded as the more sacred and obligatory from the fact that God has given us a better religion; and (4.) that a Christian ought never to give occasion to an enemy of the Gospel to point to a man of the world and say, "there is one who surpasses you in any virtue."

9. Let not a widow be taken into the number. Marg., chosen. The margin expresses the sense of the Greek more accurately, but the meaning is not materially different. Paul does not here specify into what "number" the widow is to be "taken," or for what purpose she is to be "chosen," but he speaks of this as a thing that was well understood. There can be no doubt, however, what he means. In the Acts of the Apostles (ch. vi. 1) we have this account: "And in those days, when the number of the disciples was multiplied, there arose a murmuring of the Grecians against the Hebrews, because their widows were neglected in the daily ministrations." "It appears that from the first formation of the Christian Church, provision was made out of the public funds of the society for the indigent widows who belonged to it." See Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, on 1 Tim., No. 11. To this, as to a well-known practice, Paul here evidently refers. The manner in which he refers to it is such as to show that the custom had an existence. All that was necessary in the case was not to speak of it as if it were a new arrangement, but to mention those who ought to be regarded as proper subjects of the charity. It would seem, also, that it was understood that such widows, according to their ability, should exercise a proper watch over the younger females of the Church. In this way, while they were supported by the Church, they might render themselves useful. ¶ Under threescore years old. For such reasons as those mentioned in ver. 11-14. ¶ Having been the wife of one man. There has been much diversity of opinion whether this means that she had never had but one husband, or whether she had been the wife of but one man at a time; that is, whether she had cast off one and married another. See Whitby, in loc. The same difficulty has been felt in regard to this as on the passage in ch. iii. 2. See Notes on that verse. Doddridge, Clarke, and others, suppose that it means, "who had lived in conjugal fidelity to her husband." The reason assigned for this opinion by Doddridge is that the apostle did not mean to condemn second marriages, since he expressly (ver. 14) commends it in the younger widows. The correct interpretation probably is to refer it to one who had been married but once, and who, after her husband had died, had remained a widow. The reasons for this opinion briefly are—(1.) That this is the interpretation most naturally suggested by the phrase; (2.) that it agrees better with the description of the one that was to be enrolled among the "number"—those who were "widows indeed"—as we should more naturally apply this term to one who had remained unmarried after the death of her husband, than to one who had been married again; (3.) that, while it was not unlawful or improper in itself for a widow to marry a second time, there was a degree of respect and honor attached to one who did not do it, which would not be felt for one who did. Comp. Luke ii. 36, 37: "She was a widow of great age, and had lived with a husband seven years from her virginity; and she was a widow of about fourscore and four years." The same is true now. There is a higher degree of respect felt for such a widow than there is for one who has been married again, though she may be again a widow. (4.) Among the heathen, it was regarded as especially honorable to have been married to but one man, and such widows wore the Pudicitie Coronam, or crown of chastity. Val. Max., l. i., c. 2. Comp. Livy, l. x., c. 23. See Whitby. (5.) As these persons were not only to be maintained by the Church, but appear also to have been intrusted with an office of guardianship over feet, if she have relieved the afflicted, if she have diligently followed every good work.

10 Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged ^astrangers, if she have washed the saints'

a Acts 16. 15.

11 But the younger widows rethe younger females, it was of importance that they should have such a character that no occasion of offense should be given, even among the heathen; and, in order to that, Paul gave direction that only those should be thus enrolled who were in all respects widows, and who would be regarded, on account of their age and their whole deportment, as "widows indeed." I can not doubt, therefore, that he meant to exclude those from the number here referred to who had been married the second time.

10. Well reported of for good works. Of good character or reputation. See Notes on ch. iii. 7. ¶ If she have brought up children. Either her own or others. The idea is, if she has done this in a proper manner. ¶ If she have lodged strangers. If she has been characterized by hospitality—a virtue greatly commended in the Scriptures. Comp. Notes on ch. iii. 2. ¶ If she have washed the saints' feet. It is not certain whether this is to be understood literally, or whether it merely denotes that she had performed offices of a humble and self-denying kind—such as would be shown by washing the feet of others. It was one of the rites of hospitality in the East to wash the feet of the guest (Gen. xviii. 4), and Paul might have spoken of this as having been literally performed. There is not the slightest evidence that he refers to it as a religious rite or ordinance, any more than that he refers to the act of bringing up children as a religious rite. Comp. Notes on John xiii. 1–10. ¶ If she have relieved the afflicted. If it has been her character that she was ready to furnish relief to those who were in distress. ¶ If she have diligently followed every good work. This is one of the characteristics of true piety. A sincere Christian will, like God, be the friend of all that is good, and will be ready to promote every good object according to his ability. He will not merely be the patron of one good cause, to the neglect of others, but he will endeavor to promote every good object; and though from peculiar circumstances, and peculiar dealings of Providence, he may have been particu-

fuse: for when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ, they will marry;

larly interested in some one object of charity, yet every good object will find a response in his heart, and he will be ready to promote it by his influence, his property, and his prayers.

11. But the younger widows refuse. That is, in respect to the matter under discussion. Do not admit them into the class of widows referred to. This can not mean that he was to reject them as members of the Church, or not to treat them with respect and kindness. ¶ For when they have begun to wax wanton against Christ. There is probably a thought conveyed by these words to most minds which is by no means in the original, and which does injustice both to the apostle and to the "younger widows" referred to. In the Greek there is no idea of wantonness in the sense of lasciviousness or lewdness; nor was this, though now a common idea attached to the word, by any means essential to it when our translation was made. The word wanton properly meant wandering or roving in gayety or sport, moving or flying loosely, playing in the wind; then it came to mean wandering from moral rectitude, licentious, dissolute, libidinous.—Webster. The Greek word here used, καταστροφή—katastreniazo—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. The word στρενιάω—streniaō—however, is used twice, and is in both cases translated lived deliriously. Rev. xviii. 7, 9. The word is derived from σθένος—sthenos—(whence strenuous), properly meaning rudeness, insolence, pride, and hence, revel, riot, luxury; or from στρενής—strenēs, the adjective—strong, stiff, hard, rough. The verb then means "to live strenuously, rudely," as in English, "to live hard;" also, to live wild, or without restraint; to run riot, to live luxuriously. The idea of strength is the essential one, and then of strength that is not subordinate to law; that is wild and riotous. See Passow and Robinson, Lex. The sense here is, that they would not be subject to the restraints implied in that situation; they would become impatient, and would marry again. The idea is not that of wantonness or lewdness, but it is that of a mind not subdued by age and by trials, that would be im-

12 Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith.

13 And withal they learn to be patient under the necessary restraints of the condition which was contemplated. They could not be depended on with certainty, but they might be expected again to enter into the married relation. ¶ They will marry. It is clear, from this, that the apostle did not contemplate any vows which would prevent their marrying again; nor does he say that it would be absolutely wrong for them to marry, even if they were admitted into that rank; nor does he speak as if there were any vows to restrain them from doing it. This passage, therefore, can never be adduced in favor of the practice of taking the veil in nunneries, and of a vow of perpetual seclusion from the world.

12. Having damnation. Or, rather, having condemnation; incurring guilt. This does not mean of necessity that they would lose their souls. See the phrase explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. xi. 29. The meaning is, that they would contract guilt, if they had been admitted among this class of persons, and then married again. The apostle does not say that it would be wrong in itself (comp. Notes on ver. 14), or that they would be absolutely prohibited from it, but that injury would be done if they were admitted among those who were "widows indeed"—who were supported by the Church, and who were intrusted with a certain degree of care over the more youthful females—and should then leave that situation. It might give occasion for scandal; it might break in upon the arrangements; it might show that there was a relaxing of the faith, and of the deadness to the world, which they were supposed to have; and it was better that they should be married (ver. 14) without having been thus admitted. ¶ Because they have cast off their first faith. This does not mean that they would lose all their religion, or wholly fall away, but that this would show that they had not the strong faith, the deadness to the world, the simple dependence on God (ver. 5), and the desire which they had to be weaned from worldly cares and influences, which they once had. When they became widows, all their earthly hopes seemed to be blasted.

idle, wandering about from house to house; and^a not only idle, but tattlers also, and busy-bodies, speaking things which they ought not.

^a 2 Thess. 3. 11.

They were then dead to the world, and felt that their sole dependence was on God. But if, under the influence of these strong emotions, they were admitted to the "class of widows" in the Church, there was no certainty that they would continue in this state of mind. Time would do much to modify their grief. There would be a reviving love of the world, and they would be disposed to enter again into the marriage relation, and thus show that they had not the strong and simple faith which they had when the blow which made them widows fell heavily upon them.

13. And withal. In addition to the prospect that they may marry again, there are other disadvantages which may follow from such an arrangement, and other evils to be feared, which it is desirable to avoid. ¶ They learn to be idle. That is, if supported by the Church, and if without the settled principles which might be expected in those who are more aged and experienced, it may be feared that they will give themselves up to an indolent life. There would be a security in the soberness and the established habits of those more advanced in life, which there could not be in their case. The apostle does not mean that widows are naturally disposed to be idle, but that in the situation referred to there would be danger of it. ¶ Wandering about from house to house. A natural consequence of supposing that they had nothing to do, and a practice not only profitless, but always attended with mischief. ¶ Tattlers also. Literally, overflowing; then overflowing with talk; praters, triflers. They would learn all the news; become acquainted with the secrets of families, and of course indulge in much idle and improper conversation. Our word gossipers would accurately express the meaning here. The noun does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. The verb occurs in John iii. 10; rendered, prating against. ¶ And busy-bodies. See Notes on 2 Thess. iii. 11. The word means, probably, working all round, over-doing, and then an intermeddler. Persons who have nothing of their own to do commonly find employment by interesting themselves in the affairs of their neighbors. No one likes to be wholly idle, and if any one is not found doing what he ought to do, he will usually be found engaged in doing what he ought not. ¶ Speaking things which they ought not. Revealing the concerns of their neighbors; disclosing secrets; magnifying trifles, so as to exalt themselves into importance, as if they were intrusted with the plans of others; inventing stories and tales of gossip, that they may magnify and maintain their own consequence in the community. No persons are commonly more dangerous to the peace of a neighborhood than those who have nothing to do.

¹ for their railing.

14. I will therefore. I give it as my opinion; or this is my counsel. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. vii. 6, 10, 40. ¶ That the younger women marry. The word women is not expressed or necessarily implied in the original—νεωτέρας—and it is evident that the apostle here had particular reference to widows, and that the injunction should be understood as relating to them. We are not to suppose that he gives this as an absolute and universal command, for it might not always be at the option of the widow to marry again, and it can not be doubted that there may be cases where it would be unadvisable. But he speaks of this as a general rule. It is better for such persons to have domestic concerns that require their attention, than it is to be exposed to the evils of an idle life. We may learn from this (1.) that second marriages are not improper or unlawful, but that in some circumstances they may be preferable to widowhood; (2.) that marriage itself is in a high degree honorable. How different are the views of the inspired apostle Paul about marriage from those of the Papists! ¶ Bear children, guide the house. These words signify, says Bloomfield, to "exercise and occupy themselves in the duties of a wife." It is better to 15 For some are already turned aside after Satan.

16 If any man or woman that believeth have widows, let them relieve them, and let not the Church be charged; that it may relieve them that are widows indeed.

17 Let ^a the elders that rule well

^a 1 Thess. 5, 12, 13.

be employed in the duties growing out of the cares of a family than to lead a life of celibacy. ¶ Give none occasion to the adversary. The enemy of religion—the heathen or the infidel. ¶ To speak reproachfully. Marg., for their railing. That is, on account of a life which would do no honor to religion. In the performance of domestic duties, when fully employed, they would avoid the evils specified in ver. 13. Every one who professes religion should so live as to give no occasion to an infidel or a man of the world to speak reproachfully of the cause of the Redeemer.

15. For some are already turned aside after Satan. That is, some young widows. The meaning is, that in the respects above mentioned (ver. 13) they had followed the great Tempter, rather than the Lord Jesus. This is stated as a reason why they should not be admitted into the number of the widows who were to be maintained at the expense of the Church, and to whom the care of the younger female members was to be committed.

16. If any man or woman that believeth. Christians are often simply called believers, because faith is the leading and most important act of their religion. ¶ Have widows. Widowed mothers, or grandmothers, or any other widows whose support would naturally devolve on them. ¶ Let them relieve them. That is, let them support them. This was an obvious rule of duty. See Notes on ver. 8. Nothing can be more unreasonable than to leave those who are properly dependent on us to be supported by others, when we are able to maintain them ourselves. ¶ That it may relieve, etc. That it may have the means of supporting those who are really dependent. To require or expect the Church, therefore, to support those whom we ought ourselves to support, is, in fact, to rob the poor and friendless. In regard to these directions respecting widows (ver. 3-16), we may remark in general, as the result of the exposition which has been given, (1.) they were to be poor widows, who had not the means of supporting themselves. (2.) They were, probably, to be not merely supported, but to be usefully employed in the service of the Church, particularly in overseeing the conduct, and imparting instruction to the female members. (3.) They were to be of such age and character that there would be security of stability and correctness of deportment; such that they would not be tempted to leave the situation, or to act so as to give occasion of reproach. (4.) It is by no means certain that this was intended to be a permanent arrangement. It grew probably out of the peculiar customs respecting intercourse between the sexes in the Oriental world, and would undoubtedly be proper now in similar circumstances. But it by no means follows that this arrangement is binding on the churches where the customs of society are different. Yet (5.) the passage inculcates the general principle that the poor widows of the Church are to be assisted, when they have no relatives on whom they can naturally depend. No class of people are more helpless than aged widows, and for that class God has always shown a special concern, and his people should do so likewise.

17. Let the elders that rule well. Gr., πρεσβύτεροι, presbyters. The apostle had given full instructions respecting bishops (ch. iii. 1-7); deacons (ch. iii. 8-13); widows (ch. v. 3-16); and he here proceeds to prescribe the duty of the Church toward those who sustain the office of elder. The word used—elder or presbyter—properly refers to age, and is then used to denote the officers of the Church, probably because the aged were at first intrusted with the administration of its affairs. The word was in familiar use among the Jews to denote the body of men that presided in the synagogue. See Notes on Matt. xv. 2; Acts xi. 30; xv. 2. ¶ That rule well. Presiding well, or well managing the spiritual interests of the Church. The word rendered rule—προεστώτες—is from a verb meaning to be over; to preside over; to have the care of. The word is used with reference to bishops, Titus i. 5, 7; to an apostle, 1 Pet. v. 1; and is such be counted worthy of double honour, especially they who labour in the word and doctrine.

18 For the Scripture saith, ^a Thou

^a Deut. 25. 4.

a word as would apply to any officers to whom the management and government of the Church was intrusted. On the general subject of the rulers in the Church, see Notes on 1 Cor. xii. 28. It is probable that the same organization was not pursued in every place where a Church was established; and where there was a Jewish synagogue, the Christian Church would be formed substantially after that model, and in such a Church there would be a bench of presiding elders. See, on this subject, Whately's Kingdom of Christ delineated, p. 84-86. The language here seems to have been taken from such an organization. On the Jewish synagogue, see Notes on Matt. iv. 23. ¶ Be counted worthy of double honor. Of double respect; that is, of a high degree of respect; of a degree of respect becoming their age and office. Comp. 1 Thess. v. 12, 13. From the quotation which is made in ver. 18, in relation to this subject, it would seem probable that the apostle had some reference also to their support, or to what was necessary for their maintenance. There is no improbability in supposing that all the officers of the Church, of whatever grade or rank, may have had some compensation, corresponding to the amount of time which their office required them to devote to the service of the Church. Nothing would be more reasonable, if their duties in the Church interfered with their regular employments in their secular calling, than that their brethren should contribute to their support. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. ¶ Especially they who labor in the word and doctrine. In preaching and instructing the people. From this it is clear that, while there were "elders" who labored "in the word and doctrine," that is, in preaching, there were also those who did not labor "in the word and doctrine," but who were nevertheless appointed to rule in the Church. Whether, however, they were regarded as a separate and distinct class of officers, does not appear from this passage. It may have been that there was a bench of elders to whom the general management of shalt not muzzle the ox that treadeth out the corn: And, ^b The labourer is worthy of his reward.

19 Against an elder receive not

^b Luke 10. 7.

the Church was confided, and that a part of them were engaged in preaching; a part may have performed the office of "teachers" (see Notes on Rom. xii. 7; 1 Cor. xii. 28); and a part may have been employed in managing other concerns of the Church, and yet all were regarded as the πρωεστώτες πρεσβύτεροι—or "elders presiding over the Church." It can not, I think, be certainly concluded from this passage that the ruling elders who did not teach or preach were regarded as a separate class or order of permanent officers in the Church. There seems to have been a bench of elders selected on account of age, piety, prudence, and wisdom, to whom was intrusted the whole business of the instruction and government of the Church, and they performed the various parts of the duty as they had ability. Those among them who "labored in the word and doctrine," and who gave up all their time to the business of their office, would be worthy of special respect and of a higher compensation.

18. For the Scripture saith. This is adduced as a reason why a Church should show all due respect and care for its ministers. The reason is, that as God took care to make provision for the laboring ox, much more should due attention be paid to those who labor for the welfare of the Church. ¶ Thou shalt not muzzle the ox. See this passage explained, and its bearing on such an argument shown, in the Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 8-10. ¶ And, The laborer is worthy of his reward. This expression is found substantially in Matt. x. 10 and Luke x. 7. It does not occur in so many words in the Old Testament, and yet the apostle adduces it evidently as a quotation from the Scriptures, and as authority in the case. It would seem probable, therefore, that he had seen the Gospel by Matthew or by Luke, and that he quoted this as a part of Scripture, and regarded the Book from which he made the quotation as of the same authority as the Old Testament. If so, then this may be regarded as an attestation of the apostle to the inspiration of the "Gospel" in which it was found.

an accusation, but ¹ before two ^a or three witnesses.

¹ or, under.

^a Deut. 19. 15.

20 Them that sin rebuke ^b before all, that ^c others also may fear.

^b Lev. 19. 17.

^c Deut. 13. 11.

19. Against an elder. The word elder here seems to be used in the sense in which it is in the previous verse as relating to office, and not in the sense of an aged man, as in ver. 1. The connection demands this interpretation.

¶ Receive not an accusation. He was not to regard such a charge as well founded unless sustained by two or three witnesses. It is clear from this that Paul supposed that Timothy would be called on to hear charges against others who were in the ministerial office, and to express his judgment on such cases. There is no reason, however, to suppose that he meant that he should hear them alone, or as a "bishop," for this direction does not make the supposition improper that others would be associated with him. It is just such counsel as would now be given to a Presbyterian or Congregational minister, or such as would be given to an associate justice in a court, on the supposition that a brother judge was at any time to be tried by him and his colleagues.

¶ But before two or three witnesses. Marg., under. The meaning is, unless supported by the testimony of two or three persons. He was not to regard an accusation against a presbyter as proved, if there was but one witness in the case, however positive he might be in his testimony. The reasons for this direction were probably such as these: (1.) This was the requirement of the Jewish law in all cases, which had thus settled a principle which the apostle seems to have regarded as important, if not obligatory, under the Christian dispensation. See Deut. xvii. 6; xix. 15. Comp. Notes on John viii. 17; 2 Cor. xiii. 1. (2.) There would be much greater reason to apprehend that one person might be deceived in the matter on which he bore witness, or might do it from malignant motives, or might be bribed to give false testimony, than that two or three would give such testimony; and the arrangement, therefore, furnished an important security for the innocent. (3.) There might be reason to apprehend that evil-minded persons might be disposed to bring charges against the ministers of the Gospel or other officers of the Church, and it was important, therefore, that their rights should be guarded with anxious care. The ministers of religion often give offense to wicked men by their rebukes of sin (comp. Mark vi. 17-20); wicked men would rejoice to see an accusation against them sustained; the cause of religion would be liable to suffer much when its ministers were condemned as guilty of gross offenses, and it is right, therefore, that the evidence in the case should be as free as possible from all suspicion that it is caused by malignity, by hatred of religion, by conspiracy, or by a desire to see religion dishonored. (4.) The character of a minister of the Gospel is of value, not only to himself and family, as is the case with that of other men, but is of special value to the Church, and to the cause of religion. It is the property of the Church. The interests of religion depend much on it, and it should not be wantonly assailed; and every precaution should be adopted that Christianity should not be deprived of the advantage which may be derived in its favor from the piety, the experience, and the talents of its public defenders. At the same time, however, the wicked, though in the ministry, should not be screened from the punishment which they deserve. The apostle gave no injunction to attempt to cover up their faults, or to save them from a fair trial. He only demanded such security as the nature of the case required, that the trial should be fair. If a minister of the Gospel has been proved to be guilty of crime, the honor of religion, as well as simple justice, requires that he shall be punished as he deserves. He sins against great light; he prostitutes a holy office, and makes use of the very reputation which his office gives him, that he may betray the confidence of others; and such a man should not escape. There should be no "benefit of clergy;" and neither a black coat, nor a mitre, nor bands, nor the lawn should save a villain.

20. Them that sin. That have been proved to have committed sin—referring probably to the elders mentioned in the previous verse, but giving the direction so general a form that it might be applicable to others. ¶ Re-

21 I charge ^a thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, and the elect

a 2 Tim. 4. 1.

δ Rev. 12. 7-9.

buke before all. Before all the Church or congregation. The word rebuke properly denotes to reprove or reprehend. It means here that there should be a public statement of the nature of the offense, and such a censure as the case demanded. It extends only to spiritual censures. There is no power given of inflicting any punishment by fine or imprisonment. The power of the Church, in such cases, is only to express its strong and decided disapprobation of the wrong done, and, if the case demands it, of disowning the offending member or minister. This direction to "rebuke an offender before all," may be easily reconciled with the direction in ver. 1, "Rebuke not an elder." The latter refers to the private and pastoral intercourse with an elder, and to the method in which he should be treated in such intercourse—to wit, with the feelings due to a father; the direction here refers to the manner in which an offender should be treated who has been proved to be guilty, and where the case has become public. In the latter case there is to be a public expression of disapprobation. ¶ That others also may fear. That they may be kept from committing the same offense. Comp. 1 Pet. ii. 14. The design of the punishment is not the gratification of the private feelings of him who administers it, but the prevention of crime.

21. I charge thee before God. Comp. Luke xvi. 28; Acts ii. 20. The word rendered charge means, properly, to call to witness; then to affirm with solemn attestations; then to admonish solemnly, to urge upon earnestly. It is a word which implies that the subject is of great importance. Paul gives this charge as in the presence of God, of the Redeemer, and of the elect angels, and wishes to secure that sense of its solemnity which must arise from the presence of such holy witnesses. ¶ And the Lord Jesus Christ. As in the presence of the Lord Jesus; with his eye resting upon you. ¶ And the elect angels. It is not uncommon in the Scriptures to speak as if we were in the presence of holy angels, and of the disembodied spirits of the good. Comp. Notes on Heb. xii. 1. No one can prove that the angels, and angels, that thou observe these things without preferring ¹ one ^e

1 or, prejudice.

e Deut. 1. 17.

that the departed spirits of holy men, are not witnesses of what we do. At all events, it is right to urge on others the performance of duty as if the eye of a departed father, mother, or sister were fixed upon us, and as if we were encompassed by all the holy beings of heaven. Sin, too, should be avoided as if every eye in the universe were upon us. How many things we do which we would not do; how many feelings we cherish which we would at once banish from our minds, if we felt that the heavens above us were as transparent as glass, and that all the holy beings around the throne were fixing an intense gaze upon us! The word "elect" here seems to imply that there had been some influence used to keep them, and some purpose respecting them, which had not existed in regard to those who had fallen. Saints are called elect because they are chosen of God unto salvation (see Notes on Eph. i. 4, 5), and it would appear that it is a great law extending through the universe, that both those who remain in a state of holiness, and those who are made holy, are the subjects of purpose and choice on the part of God. The fact only is stated; the reasons which led to the choice, alike in regard to angels and men, are unknown to us. Comp. Notes on Matt. xi. 25. ¶ That thou observe these things. Probably referring to all the things which he had enjoined in the previous parts of the epistle. ¶ Without preferring one before another. Marg., prejudice. The meaning is, without previous judgment—χωρίς προκρίματος—without any prejudice on account of rank, wealth, personal friendship, or predilection of any sort. Let there be entire impartiality in all cases. Justice was beautifully represented by the ancients as holding a pair of scales equally balanced. It is as important that there should be entire impartiality in the Church as in civil transactions, and though it is not wrong for a minister of the Gospel to have his personal friends, yet in the administration of the affairs of the Church he should remember that all are brethren, and that all, of whatever rank, color, sex, or age, have equal rights. ¶ Partiality. Gr., inclination, or proclivity— before another, doing nothing by partiality.

22 Lay hands ^a suddenly on no

^a Acts 13. 3.

that is, without being inclined to favor one party or person more than another. There should be no purpose to find one guilty and another innocent; no inclination of heart toward one which would lead us to resolve to find him innocent, and no aversion from another which would make us resolve to find him guilty.

22. Lay hands suddenly on no man. Some have understood this of the laying on hands to heal the sick (Koppe); others of the laying on of hands to absolve penitents, but the obvious meaning is to refer it to ordination. It was usual to lay the hands on the heads of those who were ordained to a sacred office, or appointed to perform an important duty. See Notes on ch. iv. 14. Comp. Acts vi. 6; viii. 17. The idea here is, that Timothy should not be hasty in an act so important as that of introducing men to the ministry. He should take time to give them a fair trial of their piety; he should have satisfactory evidence of their qualifications. He should not at once introduce a man to the ministry because he gave evidence of piety, or because he burned with an ardent zeal, or because he thought himself qualified for the work. It is clear from this that the apostle regarded Timothy as having the right to ordain to the ministry; but not that he was to ordain alone, or as a prelate. The injunction would be entirely proper on the supposition that others were to be associated with him in the act of ordaining. It is just such as a Presbyterian father in the ministry would give in a charge to his son now; it is in fact just the charge which is now given by Presbyterians and Congregationalists to those who are set apart to the sacred office, in reference to ordaining others. ¶ Neither be partakers of other men's sins. This is evidently to be interpreted in connection with the injunction "to lay hands suddenly on no man." The meaning, in this connection, is, that Timothy was not to become a participant in the sins of another by introducing him to the sacred office. He was not to invest one with a holy office who was a wicked man or a heretic, for this would be to man, neither be partaker ^b of other men's sins: keep thyself pure.

23 Drink no longer water, but use

^b 2 John 11.

sanction his wickedness and error. If we ordain a man to the office of the ministry who is known to be living in sin, or to cherish dangerous error, we become the patrons of the sin and of the heresy. We lend to it the sanction of our approbation; we give to it whatever currency it may acquire from the reputation which we may have, or which it may acquire from the influence of the sacred office of the ministry. Hence the importance of caution in investing any one with the ministerial office. But while Paul meant, doubtless, that this should be applied particularly to ordination to the ministry, he has given the direction a general character. In no way are we to participate in the sins of other men. We are not to be engaged with them in doing wrong; we are not to patronize them in a wicked employment; we are not to be known as their companions or friends; and we are not to partake of their unlawful gains. We are not to loan money, or a boat, or a horse, or a pistol, or a bowie-knife for an unlawful business; we are not to furnish capital for the slave-trade, or for manufacturing intoxicating drinks, or for an enterprise that contemplates the violation of the Sabbath. ¶ Keep thyself pure. Particularly, in regard to participation in the sins of others; generally, in all things—in heart, in word, in conduct.

23. Drink no longer water. There has been much difficulty felt in regard to the connection which this advice has with what precedes and what follows. Many have considered the difficulty to be so great that they have supposed that this verse has been displaced, and that it should be introduced in some other connection. The true connection, and the reason for the introduction of the counsel here, seems to me to be this: Paul appears to have been suddenly impressed with the thought—a thought which is very likely to come over a man who is writing on the duties of the ministry—of the arduous nature of the ministerial office. He was giving counsels in regard to an office which required a great amount of toil, care, and anxiety. The labors enjoined were such as to demand all the time; the care and anxiety incident to such a charge would be very likely to prostrate the frame and to injure the health. Then he remembered that Timothy was yet but a youth; he recalled his feebleness of constitution and his frequent attacks of illness; he recollected the very abstemious habits which he had prescribed for himself, and, in this connection, he urges him to a careful regard for his health, and prescribes the use of a small quantity of wine, mingled with his water, as a suitable medicine in his case. Thus considered, this direction is as worthy to be given by an inspired teacher as it is to counsel a man to pay a proper regard to his health, and not needlessly to throw away his life. Compare Matt. x. 23. The phrase, "drink no longer water," is equivalent to, "drink not water only." See numerous instances in Wetstein. The Greek word here used does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. ¶ But use a little wine. Mingled with the water—the common method of drinking wine in the East. See Robinson's Bibliotheca Sacra, i., 512, 513. ¶ For thy stomach's sake. It was not for the pleasure to be derived from the use of wine, or because it would produce hilarity or excitement, but solely because it was regarded as necessary for the promotion of health; that is, as a medicine. ¶ And thine often infirmities. ἀσθενείας—weaknesses or sicknesses. This word would include all infirmities of the body, but it seems to refer here to some attacks of sickness to which Timothy was liable, or to some constitutional feebleness; but beyond this we have no information in regard to the nature of his maladies. In view of this passage, and as a further explanation of it, we may make the following remarks: (1.) The use of wine, and of all intoxicating drinks, was solemnly forbidden to the priests under the Mosaic law when engaged in the performance of their sacred duties. Lev. x. 9, 10. The same was the case among the Egyptian priests.—Clarke. Compare Notes on ch. iii. 3. It is not improbable that the same thing would be regarded as proper among those who ministered in holy things under the Christian dispensation. The natural feeling would be, and not improperly, that a Christian minister should not be less holy than a Jewish priest, and especially when it is remembered that the reason of the Jewish law remained the same—"that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and clean and unclean." (2.) It is evident from this passage that Timothy usually drank water only, or that, in modern language, he was a "teetotaller." He was, evidently, not in the habit of drinking wine, or he could not have been exhorted to do it. (3.) He must have been a remarkably temperate youth to have required the authority of an apostle to induce him to drink even a little wine. See Doddridge. There are few young men so temperate as to require such an authority to induce them to do it. (4.) The exhortation extended only to a very moderate use of wine. It was not to drink it freely; it was not to drink it at the tables of the rich and the great, or in the social circle; it was not even to drink it by itself; it was to use "a little," mingled with water—for this was the usual method. See Athæneus, Deipno., lib. ix., x., c. 7. (5.) It was not as a common drink, but the exhortation or command extends only to its use as a medicine. The only inference which can be legitimately drawn from this injunction is, that it is proper to use a small quantity of wine for medicinal purposes. (6.) There are many ministers of the Gospel, now, alas! to whom under no circumstances could an apostle apply this exhortation—"Drink no longer water only." They would ask, with surprise, what he meant? Whether he intended it in irony, and for banter—for they need no apostolic command to drink wine. Or if he should address to them the exhortation, "use a little wine," they could regard it only as a reproof for their usual habit of drinking much. To many, the exhortation would be appropriate, if they ought to use wine at all, only because they are in the habit of using so much that it would be proper to restrain them to a much smaller quantity. (7.) This whole passage is one of great value to the cause of temperance. Timothy was undoubtedly in the habit of abstaining wholly from the use of wine. Paul knew this, and he did not reprove him for it. He manifestly favored the general habit, and only asked him to depart in some small degree from it, in order that he might restore and preserve his health. So far, and no further, is it right to apply this lana little wine ^a for thy ^r stomach's sake and thine often infirmities.

24 Some men's sins are open ^b beforehand, going before to judg-

^a Prov. 31. 6.

guage in regard to the use of wine; and the minister who should follow this injunction would be in no danger of disgracing his sacred profession by the debasing and demoralizing sin of intemperance.

24. Some men's sins are open beforehand. This declaration, though it assumes a general form, is to be taken evidently in connection with the general subject of introducing men to the ministry (ver. 22); and ver. 23 is to be regarded as a parenthesis. The apostle had given Timothy a charge (ver. 22) respecting the character of those whom he should ordain. He here says, in reference to that, that the character of some men was manifest. There was no disguise. It was evident to all what it was, and there could be no danger of mistake respecting it. Their conduct was apparent to all. About such men he ought not to hesitate a moment, and, no matter what their talents, or learning, or rank in the community, he ought to have no participation in introducing them to the ministry. ¶ Going before to judgment. Their character is well understood. There is no need of waiting for the day of judgment to know what they are. Their deeds so precede their own appearance at the judgment-bar that the record and the verdict can be made up before they arrive there, and there will be scarcely need even of the formality of a trial. The meaning here is, that there could be no doubt about the character of such men, and Timothy should not be accessory to their being introduced into the office of the ministry. ¶ And some men they follow after. That is, their character is not fully understood here. They conceal their plans. They practice deception. They appear different from what they really are. But the character of such men will be developed, and they will be judged according to their works. They can not hope to escape with impunity. Though they have endeavored to hide their evil deeds, yet they will follow after them to the judgment-bar, and will meet them there. The meaning, in this connection, seems to be, that there ought ment: and some men they follow after.

25 Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand;

^b Gal. 5. 19.

to be circumspection in judging of the qualifications of men for the office of the ministry. It ought not to be inferred from favorable appearances at once, or on slight acquaintance, that they are qualified for the office—for they may be of the number of those whose characters, now concealed or misunderstood, will be developed only on the final trial.

25. Likewise also the good works of some are manifest beforehand. Their character is clear, and accurately understood. There can be no doubt, from their works, that they are good men. We need not wait for the day of judgment to determine that point, but we may treat them here as good men, and introduce them to offices which only good men should fill. The idea here is, that their character may be so certain and undoubted that there need be no hesitation in setting them apart to the office of the ministry. ¶ And they that are otherwise can not be hid. That is, they can not be ultimately concealed or misunderstood. There are arrangements in the divine government for bringing out the character of every man so that it may be clearly seen. The expression here refers to good men. The idea is, that there are some good men whose character is known to all. Their deeds spread a glory around them, so that no one can mistake what they are. They correspond, in respect to the publicity of their character, with those mentioned in ver. 24, whose "sins are open beforehand;" for the good deeds of the one are as manifest as the sins of the other. But there are those who are "otherwise." They are modest, retiring, unobtrusive, unknown. They may live in obscurity; may have slender means for doing good; may be constitutionally so diffident that they never appear on the stage of public action. What they do is concealed from the world. These correspond in respect to publicity with those mentioned in ver. 24, "whose deeds follow after them." Yet, says the apostle, these can not always be hid. There are arrangements for developing every man's character, and it will be ultimately known what he is. The connection here seems to be this. As Timothy (ver. 24) was to be on his guard in introducing men into the ministry against those whose character for evil was not developed, but who might be concealing their plans and practicing secret sins, so he was to endeavor to search out the modest, the unobtrusive, and those who, though now unknown, were among the excellent of the earth, and bring them forward to a station of usefulness where their virtues might shine on the world.

Apart from the reference of this beautiful passage (vs. 24, 25) to the ministry, it contains truth important to all.

(1.) The character of many wicked men is clearly known. No one has any doubt of it. Their deeds have gone before them, and are recorded in the Books that will be open at the judgment. They might even now be judged without the formality of appearing there, and the universe would acquiesce in the sentence of condemnation.

(2.) The character of many wicked men is concealed. They hide their plans. They are practicing secret iniquity. They do not mean that the world shall know what they are. More than half the real depravity of the world is thus concealed from human view, and in regard to more than half the race who are going up to the judgment there is an entire mistake as to their real character. If all the secret wickedness of the earth were disclosed, no one would have any doubt about the doctrine of human depravity.

(3.) There is a process steadily going forward for bringing out the real character of men, and showing what they are. This process consists, first, in the arrangements of Providence for developing their character here. Many a man, who was supposed to be virtuous, is shown, by some sudden trial, to have been all along a villain at heart. Many a minister of the Gospel, a lawyer, a physician, an officer in a bank, a merchant, whose character was supposed to stand fair, has been suffered to fall into open sin, that he might develop the long-cherished secret depravity of his soul. Secondly, the process will be completed on the final trial. Then nothing will be concealed. Every man will be seen as he is. All those whose characters were understood to be wicked here will be seen then also to be wicked, and many who were supposed on earth to be good will be seen to have been hollow-hearted and base hypocrites.

(4.) Every man in the last day will be judged according to his real character. No one, however successful he may be here, can hope to practice a deception on his final Judge.

(5.) There is a fitness and propriety in the fact that there will be a final judgment. Indeed, there must be such a judgment, in order that God may be just. The characters of men are not fully developed here. The process is not completed. Many are taken away before their schemes of iniquity are accomplished, and before it is really understood what they are at heart. If they were to live long enough on the earth, their characters would be ultimately developed, but the divine arrangement is that man shall not live long here, and the development, therefore, must be in the future world.

(6.) The modest, the retiring, the humble, and those here unknown, will not be overlooked in the last great day. There is much good, as there is much evil in the world, that is now concealed. There are many plans of benevolence formed which they who formed them are not permitted to complete; many desires of benefiting others are cherished which there are no means of gratifying; many a deed of kindness is performed which is not blazoned abroad to the world; and many a wish is entertained for the progress of virtue, the freedom of the enslaved, the relief of the oppressed, and the salvation of the world, which can find expression only in prayer. We are not to suppose then that all that is concealed and unknown in the world is evil.

(7.) There will be amazing developments in the last great day; and as it will then be seen in the revelations of the secret deeds of evil that human nature is corrupt, so it will be seen that there was much more good in the world than was commonly supposed. As a large portion of the wickedness of the earth is concealed, so, from the necessity of the case, it is true that no small portion of the goodness on earth is hidden. Wickedness conceals itself from shame, from a desire better to effect its purposes, and they that are otherwise can not be hid.

CHAPTER VI.

LET as many servants ^a as are under the yoke count their

^a Eph. 6. 5.

from the dread of punishment; goodness, from its modesty, its retiring nature, and from the want of an opportunity of acting out its desires; but whatever may have been the cause of the concealment, in every case all will be made known on the final trial—to the shame and confusion of the one class; to the joy and triumph of the other.

CHAPTER VI.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter embraces the following subjects of counsel and exhortation:

(1.) The kind of instruction which was to be given to servants. Ver. 1-5. They were to treat their masters with all proper respect, ver. 1; if their masters were Christians, they were, on that account, to serve them with the more fidelity, ver. 2; and any opposite kind of teaching would tend only to stir up strife and produce dissatisfaction and contention, and could proceed only from a proud and self-confident heart.

(2.) The advantage of piety and of a contented mind. Ver. 6-8. The argument for this is, that we brought nothing into the world, and can carry nothing out; that our essential wants here are food and raiment, and that, having enough to make us comfortable, we should be content.

(3.) The evils of a desire to be rich (vs. 9, 10)—evils seen in the temptations to which it leads; the passions which it fosters; and the danger to religion.

(4.) An exhortation to Timothy, as a minister of religion, to pursue higher and nobler objects. Ver. 11-16. He was to follow after righteousness, and to fight the good fight of faith. To do this, he was to be encouraged by the assurance that the great and only Potentate would, in due time, place the crown on his head.

(5.) The duty of those who were rich—for it is supposed that some Christians will be rich—either by inheritance or by prosperous business.

own masters worthy of all honour, that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed.

2 And they that have believing masters, let them not despise them,

Ver. 17-19. They are (a) not to be proud; (b) they are not to trust in their riches so as to forget their dependence on God; (c) they are to do good with their property; and (d) to make their wealth the means of securing eternal life.

(6.) A solemn charge to Timothy to observe these things, and not to be turned from them by any of the arguments and objections of pretended science. Vs. 20, 21.

1. Let as many servants. On the word here rendered servants—δοῦλοι—see Notes on Eph. vi. 5. The word was in fact commonly applied to a slave, but it is so extensive in its signification as to be applicable to any species of servitude, whether voluntary or involuntary. If slavery existed in Ephesus at the time when this epistle was written, it would be applicable to slaves; if any other kind of servitude existed, the word would be equally applicable to that. There is nothing in the word itself which essentially limits it to slavery. Examine Matt. xiii. 27; xx. 27; Mark v. 44; Luke ii. 29; John xv. 15; Acts ii. 18; iv. 29; xvi. 17; Rom. i. 1; 2 Cor. iv. 5; Jude 1; Rev. i. 1; ii. 20; vii. 3. The addition of the phrase “under the yoke,” however, shows undoubtedly that it is to be understood here of slavery. ¶ As are under the yoke. On the word yoke, see Notes on Matt. xi. 29. The phrase here properly denotes slavery, as it would not be naturally and commonly applied to any other species of servitude. See Lev. xxvi. 13. Dem., 322, 12. ζυγὸς δουλοσύνης.—Rob., Lex. It is sometimes applied to the Mosaic law as being a severe and oppressive burden—a condition of servitude or bondage. Acts xv. 10; Gal. v. 1. It may be remarked here that the apostle did not regard slavery as a light or desirable thing. He would not have applied this term to the condition of a wife or a child. ¶ Count their own masters worthy of all honor. Treat them with all proper respect. They were to manifest the right spirit themselves, whatever their masters did; because they are brethren; but rather do them service, because they are ¹ faithful and beloved,

¹ or, believing.

they were not under any circumstances to do any thing that would dishonor religion. The injunction here would seem to have particular reference to those whose masters were not Christians. In the following verse, the apostle gives particular instructions to those who had pious masters. The meaning here is, that the slave ought to show a Christian spirit toward his master who was not a Christian; he ought to conduct himself so that religion would not be dishonored; he ought not to give his master occasion to say that the only effect of the Christian religion on the mind of a servant was to make him restless, discontented, dissatisfied, and disobedient. In the humble and trying situation in which he confessedly was—under the yoke of bondage—he ought to evince patience, kindness, and respect for his master, and, as long as the relation continued, he was to be obedient. This command, however, was by no means inconsistent with his desiring his freedom, and securing it if the opportunity presented itself. See Notes on 1 Cor. vii. 21. Comp., on the passage before us, the Notes on Eph. vi. 5-8, and 1 Pet. ii. 18. ¶ That the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed. That religion be not dishonored and reproached, and that there may be no occasion to say that Christianity tends to produce discontent and to lead to insurrection. If the effect of religion had been to teach all who were servants that they should no longer obey their masters, or that they should rise upon them and assert their freedom by violence, or that their masters were to be treated with indignity on account of their usurped rights over others, the effect would have been obvious. There would have been a loud and united outcry against the new religion, and it could have made no progress in the world. Instead of this, Christianity taught the necessity of patience, meekness, and forbearance in the endurance of all wrong—whether from private individuals (Matt. v. 39-41; 1 Cor. vi. 7), or under the oppressions and exactions of Nero (Rom. xiii. 1-7), or amid the hardships and cruelties of slavery. These peaceful partakers of the benefit. These things teach and exhort.

3 If any man teach otherwise, and injunctions, however, did not demonstrate that Christ approved the act of him "that smote on the one cheek," or that Paul regarded the government of Nero as a good government—and as little do they prove that Paul or the Saviour approved of slavery.

2. And they that have believing masters. Masters who are Christians. It is clear from this that Paul supposed that, at that time and under those circumstances, a man might become a Christian who had slaves under him. How long he might continue to hold his fellow-men in bondage, and yet be a Christian, is, however, quite a different question. It is quite clear, from the New Testament, as well as from facts now, that God may convert men when pursuing any kind of wickedness. The effect of religion, however, in all cases, will be to lead them to cease to do wrong. It is by no means improbable that many of those who had owned slaves, in accordance with the prevailing custom in the Roman empire, may have been converted—for the fact that a man has been living a life of sin does not prevent the possibility of his conversion. There is no evidence, however, that Paul refers here to any who had bought slaves after they were converted; nor is there any intimation of any such transaction among Christians in the New Testament. Nor is there any intimation that he regarded it as right and best that they should continue to hold slaves; nor that he would approve of their making arrangements to persevere in this as a permanent institution. Nor is it to be fairly inferred from this passage that he meant to teach that they might continue this, and yet be entitled to all the respect and confidence due to the Christian name, or be regarded as maintaining a good standing in the Church. Whatever may be true on these points, the passage before us only proves that Paul believed that a man who was a slaveholder might be converted, and be spoken of as a "believer," or a Christian. Many have been converted in similar circumstances, as many have in the practice of all other kinds of iniquity. What was their duty after their conversion, was another question; and what was the duty of their "servants" or slaves, was another question still. It is only this latter question which the apostle is here considering. ¶ Not despise them, because they are brethren. Not treat them with any want of the respect which is due to their station. The word here used sometimes denotes to neglect, or, not to care for. Matt. vi. 24; Luke xvi. 13. Here it is not necessary to suppose that it denotes actual contempt, but only that want of respect which might possibly spring up in the mind if not well instructed, or not on its guard, among those who were servants or slaves. It was to be apprehended that one result of the fact that the master and the slave had both embraced religion, would be to produce in the mind of the servant a want of respect and deference for his master. This danger was to be apprehended from the following causes: (1.) Christianity taught that all men were made of "one blood," and were by nature equal. Acts xvii. 26. It was natural, therefore, for the slave to infer that by nature he was equal to his master, and it would be easy to pervert this truth to make him disrespectful and insubordinate. (2.) They were their equals as Christians. Christianity taught them that they were all "brethren" in the Lord, and that there was no distinction before God. It might be natural to infer from this that all distinctions in society were to be abolished, and that, in all respects, the slave was to regard himself as on a level with his master. (3.) Some, who did not well understand the nature of Christianity, or who might have been disposed to cause trouble, may have taken advantage of the undeniable truths about the equality of men by nature and by redemption to produce discontent on the part of the slave. They may have endeavored to embitter the feelings of the slaves toward their masters who held them in bondage. The effect, it is easy to see, may have been to lead those who were in a state of servitude to manifest open and marked disrespect. In opposition to this the apostle instructs Timothy to teach that Christianity does not rudely assail the existing institutions of society, and especially does not teach those who are in subordinate ranks to be disrespectful to those above them. ¶ But rather do them serv- ice. That is, serve them with more cheerfulness and alacrity than they did before the master was converted; or serve them with the more cheerfulness because they are Christians. The reasons for this were, because the master was now more worthy of affectionate regard, and because the servant might look for better treatment at his hands. Comp. Notes on Eph. vi. 6. ¶ Because they are faithful. That is, because they are believers, or are Christians—πιστοί; the same word which in the beginning of the verse is rendered believing. It does not here mean that they were "faithful" to their servants or their God, but merely that they were Christians. ¶ And beloved. Probably, "beloved of God," for so the word is often used. As they are the friends of God, they who are servants should show them the more respect. The idea is, simply, that one whom God loves should be treated with more respect than if he were not thus beloved; or, a good man deserves more respect than a bad man. In all the relations of life, we should respect those above us the more in proportion to the excellency of their character. ¶ Partakers of the benefit. That is, the benefit which the Gospel imparts—for so the connection requires us to understand it. It can not mean, as many have supposed, that they were "partakers of the benefit of the labors of the servant," or enjoyed the fruits of their labors—for how could this be a reason for their treating them with the more respect? This would be rather a reason for treating them with less respect, because they were living on the avails of unrequited toil. But the true reason assigned is, that the master had been, by the grace of God, permitted to participate in the same benefits of salvation as the servant; he had received, like him, the pardon of sin, and he was to be regarded as a fellow-heir of the grace of life. The expression here might be rendered, "they are partakers of, or are devoted to, the good cause."—Rob., Lex. The argument is that they were not infidels, or strangers to religion, or men who would try to hinder the progress of that which was dear to the heart of the servant, but were united with them in that same good work; they participated in the blessings of the same salvation, and they were really endeavoring to further the interests of religion.

consent not to wholesome ^a words, even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the doctrine which is according ^b to godliness;

^a 2 Tim. 1. 13.

^b Tim. 1. 1.

There ought, therefore, to be the more respect shown to them, and the more cheerful service rendered them.

3. If any man teach otherwise. Otherwise than that respect should be shown to masters, and that a more cheerful and ready service should be rendered because they were Christians. It is evidently implied here that some might be disposed to inculcate such views of religion as would produce discontent and a spirit of insubordination among those who were held to servitude. Who they were is not known, nor is it known what arguments they would employ. It would seem probable that the arguments which would be employed would be such as these: that God made all men equal; that all had been redeemed by the same blood; that all true Christians were fellow-heirs of heaven; that it was wrong to hold a Christian brother in bondage, etc. From such undeniable principles it would seem that they drew the inference that slaves ought at once to assert their freedom; that they should refuse obedience to their masters; and the tendency of their teaching was, instead of removing the evil by the gradual and silent influence of Christian principles, to produce discontent and insurrection. From some of the expressions here used by the apostle as characteristic of these teachers, it would seem to be probable that they were Jews. They were men given to subtle disputations; they doted about questions and verbal disputes; and they were intent on gain, supposing that that which conduced to mere worldly prosperity was of course religion. These characteristics apply well to Jewish teachers. ¶ And consent not to wholesome words. Words conconducting to a healthful state of the Church; that is, doctrines tending to produce order and a due observance of the proprieties of life; doctrines leading to contentment, to sober industry, and to the patient endurance of evils. ¶ Even the words of our Lord Jesus Christ. The doctrines of the Saviour—all of which tended to a quiet life, and to a patient endurance

4 He is proud, ¹ knowing ^c nothing, but ² doting about questions and strifes of words, whereof cometh envy, strife, railings, evil surmisings,

1 or, a fool.

c 1 Cor. 8. 2.

2 or, sick.

of wrongs. ¶ And to the doctrine which is according to godliness. Which tends to produce piety or religion; that is, the doctrine which would be most favorable to an easy and rapid propagation of the Gospel. The idea seems to be that such a state of insubordination and discontent as they would produce would be unfavorable to the promotion of religion. Who can doubt it?

4. He is proud. That is, he is lifted up with his fancied superior acquaintance with the nature of religion. The Greek verb means, properly, to smoke, to fume; and then to be inflated, to be conceited, etc. The idea is, that he has no proper knowledge of the nature of the Gospel, and yet he values himself on a fancied superior acquaintance with its principles. ¶ Knowing nothing. Marg., a fool. That is, that he does not understand the nature of religion as he supposes he does. His views in regard to the relation of masters and servants, and to the bearing of religion on that relation, show that he is not acquainted with the true genius of Christianity. The apostle expresses this in strong language, by saying that he knows nothing. See Notes on 1 Cor. viii. 2. ¶ But doting. Marg., sick. The Greek word—ποσέω—means, properly, to be sick; then to languish, to pine after. The meaning here is, that such persons had a sickly or morbid desire for debates of this kind. They had not a sound and healthy state of mind on the subject of religion. They were like a sickly man, who has no desire for solid and healthful food, but for that which will gratify a diseased appetite. They desired not sound doctrine, but controversies about unimportant and unsubstantial matters—things that bore the same relation to important doctrines which the things that a sick man pines after do to substantial food. ¶ Questions and strifes of words. The Jews abounded much in disputes of this sort, and it would seem probable that the persons here referred to were Jewish teachers. Comp. Notes on ch. i. 6, 7, and Acts xviii. 15. ¶ Whereof cometh envy. The only fruit of which is to produce envy. That is, the appearance of superior knowledge, the boast of being profoundly acquainted with religion, and the show of an ability for subtle argumentation, would produce in a certain class envy. Envy is uneasiness, pain, mortification, or discontent, excited by another's prosperity, or by his superior knowledge or possessions. See Notes on Rom. i. 29. ¶ Strife. Or contentions with those who will not readily yield to their opinions. ¶ Railings. Harsh and abusive language toward those who will not concede a point—a common effect of disputes, and more commonly of disputes about small and unimportant matters than of those which are of magnitude. Such railings often attend disputes that arise out of nice and subtle distinctions. ¶ Evil surmisings. Suspicions that they are led to hold their views not by the love of the truth, but from sordid or worldly motives. Such suspicions are very apt to attend an angry debate of any kind. It might be expected peculiarly to exist on such a question as the apostle refers to here—the relation of a master and a slave. It is always very hard to do justice to the motives of one who seems to us to be living in sin, or to believe it to be possible that he acts from right motives.

5 Perverse¹ disputings of men of corrupt minds, and destitute of the

¹ or, gallings one of another.

5. Perverse disputings. Marg., gallings one of another. In regard to the correct reading of this passage, see Biblical Repository, iii., 61, 62. The word which is here used in the Received Text—παρὰδιὰτριβῆν—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It properly means misemployment; then idle occupation.—Rob., Lex. The verb from which this is derived means to rub in pieces, to wear away; and hence the word here used refers to what was a mere wearing away of time. The idea is that of employments that merely consumed time without any advantage. The notion of contention or dispute is not necessarily implied in the passage, but the allusion is to inquiries or discussions that were of no practical value, but were a mere consumption of time. Comp. Koppe on the passage. The reading in the margin is derived from the common usage of the verb to rub, and hence our translators attached the idea of rubbing against each other, truth, supposing that gain is godliness: from such^a withdraw thyself.

^a 2 Tim. 3. 5.

or of galling each other, as by rubbing. This is not, however, the idea in the Greek word. The phrase "idle employments" would better suit the meaning of the Greek than either of the phrases which our translators have employed. ¶ Of men of corrupt minds. That is, of wicked hearts. ¶ And destitute of the truth. Not knowing the truth; or not having just views of truth. They show that they have no correct acquaintance with the Christian system. ¶ Supposing that gain is godliness. That that which contributes to an increase of property is, of course, true religion; or that it is proper to infer that any course which contributes to worldly prosperity must be sanctioned by religion. They judge of the consistency of any course with religion by its tendency to promote outward prosperity. This they have exalted into a maxim, and this they make the essential thing in religion. But how could any men do this? And what connection would this have with the subject under consideration—the kind of instruction that was to be given to servants? The meaning of the maxim seems to be, that religion must necessarily be favorable to prosperity by its promoting temperance, industry, and length of days; and that since this was the case, it was fair to infer that any thing which would not do this could not be consistent with religion. They adopted it, therefore, as a general rule of judging, and one in entire accordance with the wishes of their own hearts, that any course of life that would not do this must be contrary to the true spirit of religion. This maxim, it would seem, they applied to the relation of the slave and his master, and as the tendency of the system was always to keep the servant poor and in a humble condition, they seem to have inferred that the relation was contrary to Christianity, and hence to have excited the servant to disaffection. In their reasoning they were not far out of the way, for it is fair to infer that a system that tends to produce uniform poverty, and to perpetuate a degraded condition in society, is contrary to the genius of Christianity. They were wrong (1.) in making this a general maxim by which to judge of every thing in religion; (2.) in so applying it as to produce insubordination and discontent in the minds of servants toward their masters; and (3.) in supposing that every thing which produces gain is consistent with religion, or that men can infallibly judge of the moral quality of any course of life by its contributing to outward prosperity. Religion will uniformly lead to that which conduces to prosperity, but it does not follow that every way of making money is therefore a part of piety. It is possible, also, that in some way they hoped for "gain" to themselves by inculcating those principles. It may be remarked here, that this is not an uncommon maxim practically among men—that "gain is godliness." The whole object of life with them is to make money; the rule by which they judge of every thing is by its tendency to produce gain; and all their religion may be summed up in this, that they live for gain. Wealth is the real object of pursuit; but it is often with them cloaked under the pretense of piety. They have no more religion than they suppose will contribute to this object; they judge of the nature and value of every maxim by its tendency to make men prosperous in their worldly business; they have as much religion as they suppose will promote their pecuniary interest, and they sacrifice every principle which they suppose would conflict with their earthly advancement. ¶ From such withdraw thyself. That is, have no communion or fellowship with them. Do not recognize them as religious teachers; do not countenance their views. Timothy was in no way to show that he regarded them as inculcating truth, or to patronize their doctrines. From such men, as having any claim to the character of Christians, every man should withdraw with feelings of unutterable pity and loathing. This passage (ver. 1-5) is often appealed to by the advocates and apologists for slavery, to prove that Christianity countenances that institution, and that no direct attempt should be made by the ministers of the Gospel, or other Christians, to show the evil of the system, and to promote its abolition, and to prove that we have no right to interfere in any way with what pertains to these "domestic relations." It is of importance, therefore, in view of the exposition which has been given of the words and phrases in the passage, to sum up the truths which it inculcates. From it, therefore, the following lessons may be derived: (1.) That those who are slaves, and who have been converted to Christianity, should not be indolent or disorderly. If their masters are Christians, they should treat them with respect, and all the more so because they are fellow-heirs of the grace of life. If they are not Christians, they should yet show the nature of religion on themselves, and bear the evils of their condition with patience—showing how religion teaches its friends and possessors to endure wrong. In either case, they are to be quiet, industrious, kind, meek, respectful. This Christianity every where enjoins while the relation continues. At the same time, however, it does not forbid the slave earnestly to desire his freedom, or to use all proper measures to obtain it. See 1 Cor. vii. 21. (2.) That the ministers of religion should not labor to produce a spirit of discontent among slaves, or excite them to rise upon their masters. This passage would undoubtedly forbid all such interference, and all agencies or embassies sent among slaves themselves to inflame their minds against their masters in view of their wrongs; to put arms into their hands; or to induce them to form combinations for purposes of insurrection. The true spirit of Christianity does not require us so much to go to those who are wronged as to those who do the wrong. The primary message in such cases is to the latter; and when it does go to the former, it is to teach them to be patient under their wrongs, to evince the Christian spirit there, and to make use only of those means which are consistent with the Gospel to free themselves from the evils under which they suffer. At the same time, nothing in this passage, or in any other part of the New Testament, forbids us to go to the master himself, and to show him the evil of the system, and to enjoin upon him to let the oppressed go free. Nothing in this passage can be reasonably construed as teaching that an appeal of the most earnest and urgent kind may not be made to him; or that the wrongs of the system may not be fully set before him; or that any man or set of men may not lawfully lift up in his hearing a loud and 6 But godliness ^a with contentment is great gain.

7 For we brought nothing into

^a Prov. 15. 16.

earnest voice in favor of the freedom of all. And in like manner, there is nothing which makes it improper that the slave himself should be put fully in possession of that Gospel which will apprise him of his rights as a man, and as redeemed by the blood of Jesus. Every human being, whether held in bondage or not, has a right to be made acquainted with all the provisions and truths of that Gospel, nor has any man or class of men a right to withhold such knowledge from him. No system of things can be right which contemplates that that Gospel shall be withheld, or under which it is necessary to withhold it in order to the perpetuity of the system. (3.) The passage teaches that it is possible that a man who is a slaveholder may become a Christian. But it does not teach that, though he may become a Christian while he is a slaveholder, that it is proper for him to continue this relation after he becomes such. It does not teach that a man can be a Christian and yet go into the business of buying and selling slaves. It does not teach that a man can be a Christian and continue to hold others in bondage—whatever may be true on that point. It does not teach that he ought to be considered as maintaining a “good standing” in the Church if he continues to be a slaveholder; and whatever may be the truth on these points, this passage should not be adduced as demonstrating them. It settles one point only in regard to these questions—that a case is supposable in which a slave has a Christian master. It settles the duty of the slave in such a case; it says nothing about the duty of the master. (4.) This passage does not teach that slavery is either a good thing, or a just thing, or a desirable relation in life, or an institution that God wishes to be perpetuated on the earth. The injunctions to slaves to be patient, meek, industrious, and respectful, no more demonstrate this than the command to subjects to be obedient to the laws proves that God regarded the government of Nero as such an administration as he wished to be perpetuated on the earth. To exhort a slave to manifest a Christian spirit under his this world, and it is certain ^b we can carry nothing out.

8 And having food and rai-

^b Psa. 49. 17.

oppressions and wrongs, is not to justify the system that does him wrong, nor does it prohibit us from showing to masters that the system is contrary to the Gospel, and that it ought to be abandoned. (5.) This passage, therefore, furnishes no real support for slavery. It can no more be adduced in favor of it than any exhortation to those who are oppressed, or in any degrading situation in life, to be patient, proves that the system which oppresses and degrades them is a good one. Nor does the fact that a man may be converted who is a slaveholder, and may be spoken of as a πιστός, or believer, prove that it would be right and desirable that he should continue that relation, any more than the fact that Saul of Tarsus became a Christian when engaged in persecution proves that it would have been right for him to continue in that business, or than the conversion of the Ephesians who “used curious arts” (Acts xix. 19) proved that it would have been proper for them to continue in that employment. Men who are doing wrong are converted in order to turn them from that course of life, not to justify them in it.

6. But godliness. Piety; religion. The meaning is, that real religion should be regarded as the greatest and most valuable acquisition. ¶ With contentment. This word, as now used, refers to a state of mind; a calm and satisfied feeling; freedom from murmuring and complaining. The idea is, that “piety, connected with a contented mind—or a mind acquiescing in the allotments of life—is to be regarded as the real gain.” Tindal gives substantially the same interpretation: “Godliness is great riches, if a man be content with that he hath.” Coverdale: “Howbeit, it is of great advantage, who is so godly, and holdeth him content with that he hath.” The word which is used here—ἀντάρκεια—means, properly, self-sufficiency, and is used here, in a good sense, to denote a mind satisfied with its lot. If there be true religion, united with its proper accompaniment, peace of mind, it is to be regarded as the true riches. The object of the apostle seems to be ment, let us be therewith content.^a

^a Gen. 28. 20.

to rebuke those who supposed that property constitutes every thing that is worth living for. He tells them, therefore, that the true gain, the real riches which we ought to seek, is religion, with a contented mind. This does more to promote happiness than wealth can ever do, and this is what should be regarded as the great object of life.

7. For we brought nothing into this world, etc. A sentiment very similar to this occurs in Job i. 21, and it would seem probable that the apostle had that passage in his eye. See Notes on that passage. Numerous expressions of this kind occur in the classic writers. See Wetstein, in loc., and Pricæus, in loc., in the Critici Sacri. Of the truth of what is here said there can be no difference of opinion. It is apparent to all. We bring no property with us into the world—no clothing, no jewels, no gold—and it is equally clear that we take nothing with us when we leave the earth. Our coming into the world brings no property into the world in addition to that which the race before possessed, and our going from the world removes none that we may have helped the race to accumulate. This is said by the apostle as an obvious reason why we should be contented if our actual wants are supplied—for this is really all that we need, and all that the world is toiling for. ¶ We can carry nothing out. Comp. Psa. xlix. 17. “For when he [the rich man] dieth, he shall carry nothing away; his glory shall not descend after him.”

8. And having food and raiment. “Food and raiment,” here, seem to be used to denote the supplies of our wants in general. It is not uncommon to denote the whole by a part, and as these are the principal things which we really need, and without which life could not be sustained, the apostle uses the phrase to denote all that is really necessary for us. We can not suppose that he would forbid the desire of a comfortable habitation, or of the means of knowledge, or of conveniences for worshiping God, etc. The idea is, that, having those things which meet the actual necessities of our nature and save us from distress, we should not strive after 9 But they that will^b be rich, fall into temptation, and a snare, and

^b Prov. 28. 20.

“uncertain riches,” or make wealth the object of our anxious pursuit. Comp. Notes on Phil. iv. 11, 12.

9. But they that will be rich. Further to enforce the duty of contentment, the apostle refers to some of the evils which necessarily attend a desire to be rich. Those evils have been so great and uniform in all ages, and are such necessary accompaniments of that desire, that, even amidst many inconveniences which may attend the opposite condition, we should be contented with our lot. Indeed, if we could see all, it would only be necessary to see the evils which the desire of wealth produces in the world to make us contented with a most lowly condition of life. Perhaps nothing more would be necessary to make a poor man satisfied with his lot, and grateful for it, than to be acquainted with the perplexities and cares of a rich man. There is more emphasis to be placed on the word will, here, in the phrase ‘will be rich,’ than might be supposed from our translation. It is not the sign of the future tense, but implies an actual purpose or design to become rich—οἱ βουλόμενοι—they willing, or purposing. The reference is to those in whom this becomes an object of earnest desire, and who lay their plan’s for it. ¶ Fall into temptation. That is, they are tempted to do wicked things in order to accomplish their purposes. It is extremely difficult to cherish the desire to be rich, as the leading purpose of the soul, and to be an honest man. ¶ And a snare. Birds are taken in a snare, and wild beasts were formerly. See Notes on Job xviii. 8, 9. The net was sprung suddenly upon them, and they could not escape. The idea here is, that they who have this desire become so entangled that they can not easily escape. They become involved in the meshes of worldliness and sin; their movements are so fettered by cares, and inordinate desires, and artificial wants, that they are no longer freemen. They become so involved in these things that they can not break away from them if they would. Comp. Prov. xxviii. 20. ¶ And into many foolish and hurtful lusts. Desires, such as the love of wealth creates. They are into many foolish and hurtful lusts, which drown men in destruction and perdition.

10 For ^a the love of money is the

a Exod. 23. 8.

foolish—as being not such as an intelligent and immortal being should pursue; and they are hurtful—as being injurious to morals, to health, and to the soul. Among those desires are the fondness for display; for a magnificent dwelling, a train of menials, and a splendid equipage; for sumptuous living, feasting, the social glass, company, and riotous dissipation. ¶ Which drown men in destruction and perdition. The word which is here rendered drown—βυθίζω—means, to sink in the deep, or, to cause to sink; and the meaning here is, that they become submerged as a ship that sinks. The idea of drowning is not, properly, exactly the meaning of the language, but the image is that of a wreck, where a ship and all that is in it go down together. The destruction is complete. There is a total ruin of happiness, of virtue, of reputation, and of the soul. The ruling desire to be rich leads on a train of follies which ruin every thing here and hereafter. How many of the human family have thus been destroyed!

10. For the love of money is the root of all evil. That is, of all kinds of evil. This is evidently not to be understood as literally true, for there are evils which can not be traced to the love of money—the evils growing out of ambition, intemperance, debasing lusts, and the hatred of God. The expression here is evidently a popular saying—“all sorts of evils grow out of the love of money.” Similar expressions often occur in the classic writers. See Wetstein, in loc., and numerous examples quoted by Pricæus. Of the truth of this no one can doubt. No small part of the crimes of the world can be traced to the love of gold. But it deserves to be remarked here that the apostle does not say that “money is the root of all evil,” or that it is an evil at all. It is the “love” of it which is the source of evil. ¶ Which while some coveted after. That is, some who were professing Christians. The apostle is doubtless referring to persons whose history was known to Timothy, and warning him, and teaching him to warn others by their example.

root of all evil; which while some coveted after, they have ¹erred from the faith, and pierced themselves through with many sorrows.

1 been seduced.

¶ They have erred from the faith. Marg., been seduced. The Greek is, they have been led astray from; that is, they have been so deceived as to depart from the faith. The notion of deception or delusion is in the word, and the sense is, that, deceived by the promises held out by the prospect of wealth, they have apostatized from the faith. It is not implied of necessity that they were ever real Christians. They have been led off from truth and duty, and from all the hopes and joys which religion would have imparted. ¶ And have pierced themselves through with many sorrows. With such sorrows as remorse, and painful reflections on their folly, and the apprehension of future wrath. Too late they see that they have thrown away the hopes of religion for that which is at best unworthy the pursuit of an immortal mind; which leads them on to a life of wickedness; which fails of imparting what it promised when its pursuit is successful, and which, in the great majority of instances, disappoints its votaries in respect to its attainment. The word rendered “pierced themselves through”—περιέπειραν—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, and is a word whose force and emphasis can not be well expressed in a translation. It is from πέιρω, peiro, and is made more emphatic by the addition of the preposition περι, peri. The word πέιρω, peiro, means, properly, to pierce through from one end to another, and is applied to meat that is pierced through by the spit when it is to be roasted (Pussow); then it means to pierce through and through. The addition of the preposition (περι) to the word, conveys the idea of doing this all round; of piercing every where. It was not a single thrust which was made, but they are gashed all round with penetrating wounds. Such is the effect on those who cast off religion for the sake of gold. None can avoid these consequences who do this. Every man is in the hands of a holy and just God, and sooner or later he must feel the effects of his sin and folly.

11. But thou, O man of God, flee these 11 But thou, O man ^a of God, flee these things; and follow after righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness.

12 Fight ^b the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life, whereunto

^a Deut. 33. 1.

^b 2 Tim. 4. 7.

^c Heb. 13. 23.

things. These allurements of wealth, and these sad consequences which the love of gold produces. ¶ But follow after righteousness, etc. Make these the grand object of your pursuit. On the virtues here enumerated, see Notes on Gal. v. 22, 23.

12. Fight the good fight of faith. The noble conflict in the cause of religion. See Notes on Eph. vi. 10-17. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 26, 27. The allusion is to the contests at the Grecian games. ¶ Lay hold on eternal life. As the crown of victory that is held out to you. Seize this as eagerly as the competitors at the Grecian games laid hold on the prize. See Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 25. ¶ Whereunto thou art also called. That is, by the Spirit of God, and by the very nature of your profession. God does not "call" his people that they may become rich; he does not convert them in order that they may devote themselves to the business of gain. They are "called" to a higher and nobler work. Yet how many professing Christians there are who seem to live as if God had "called" them to the special business of making money, and who devote themselves to it with a zeal and assiduity that would do honor to such a calling, if this had been the grand object which God had in view in converting them! ¶ And hast professed a good profession before many witnesses. That is, either when he embraced the Christian religion, and made a public profession of it in the presence of the Church and of the world; or when he was solemnly set apart to the ministry; or as he in his Christian life had been enabled to do by publicly evincing in duty and in trial his attachment to the Saviour. I see no reason to doubt that the apostle may have referred to the former, and that in early times a profession of religion may have been openly made before the Church and the world. Such a method of admitting members to the Church would have been natural, and would have been fitted to make a deep impression on others. It is a thou art also called, and hast professed ^e a good profession before many witnesses.

13 I give thee charge ^d in the sight of God, who quickeneth all things, and before Christ Jesus, who ^e be-good thing often to remind professors of religion of the feelings which they had when they made a profession of religion; of the fact that the transaction was witnessed by the world; and of the promises which they then made to lead holy lives. One of the best ways of stimulating ourselves or others to the faithful performance of duty, is the remembrance of the vows then made; and one of the most effectual methods of reclaiming a backslider is to bring to his recollection that solemn hour when he publicly gave himself to God.

^d c. 5. 21.

^e John 18. 36, 37.

13. I give thee charge in the sight of God. See Notes on ch. v. 21. ¶ Who quickeneth all things. Who gives life to all. See Notes on Eph. ii. 1. It is not quite clear why the apostle refers to this attribute of God as enforcing the charge which he here makes. Perhaps he means to say that God is the source of life, and that as he had given life to Timothy—natural and spiritual—he had a right to require that it should be employed in his service; and that if, in obedience to this charge and in the performance of his duties, he should be required to lay down his life, he should bear in remembrance that God had power to raise him up again. This is more distinctly urged in 2 Tim. ii. 8-10. ¶ And before Christ Jesus. As in the presence of Christ, and stimulated by his example. ¶ Who before Pontius Pilate witnessed a good confession. Marg., profession. The same Greek word is used which in ver. 12 is translated profession. The reference is to the fact that the Lord Jesus, when standing at the bar of Pilate, who claimed to have power over his life, did not shrink from an open avowal of the truth. John xviii. 36, 37. Nothing can be better fitted to preserve our minds steadfast in the faith, and to enable us to maintain our sacred vows in this world when allured by temptation, or when ridiculed for our religion, than to remember the example of the Lord Jesus. Let us place him before us as he stood at the bar fore Pontius Pilate witnessed a good¹ confession;

14 That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable,^a until the appearing^b of our Lord Jesus Christ:

15 Which in his times he shall

¹ profession.
^b 1 Thess. 5. 23.

^a Phil. 2. 15.
^c c. 1. 18.

show who is the blessed^c and only Potentate, the^d King of kings and Lord of lords;

16 Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which^e no man can approach unto; whom^f no man hath seen nor can see; to

^d Rev. 17. 14.
^f Exod. 33. 20.

^e Rev. 1. 16, 17.

of Pilate—threatened with death in its most appalling form, and ridiculed for the principles which he maintained; let us look on him, friendless and alone, and see with what seriousness, sincerity, and boldness he stated the simple truth about himself, and we shall have one of the best securities that we can have that we shall not dishonor our profession. A clear view of the example of Christ our Saviour in those circumstances, and a deep conviction that his eye is upon us to discern whether we are steadfast as he was, will do more than all abstract precepts to make us faithful to our Christian calling.

14. That thou keep this commandment. Referring particularly to the solemn injunction which he had just given him, to “fight the good fight of faith,” but perhaps also including all that he had enjoined on him. ¶ Without spot. It seems harsh, and is unusual, to apply the epithet “without spot”—ἄσπιλος—to a command or doctrine, and the passage may be so construed that this may be understood as referring to Timothy himself—“That thou keep the commandment so that thou mayest be without spot and unrebukable.” See Bloomfield, Crit. Dig., in loc. The word here rendered “without spot” occurs in the New Testament only here, and in James i. 27; 1 Pet. i. 19; 2 Pet. iii. 14. It means without any stain or blemish; pure. If applied here to Timothy, it means that he should so keep the command that there would be no stain on his moral character; if to the doctrine, that that should be kept pure. ¶ Unrebukable. So that there shall be no occasion for reproach or reproof. See Notes on Phil. ii. 15. ¶ Until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. See Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 19; iv. 16; v. 23.

15. Which in his times he shall show. Which God will reveal at such times as he shall deem best. It is implied here that the time is unknown to men. See Notes on Acts i. 7. ¶ Who is the blessed and only Potentate. God, who is the ruler over all. The word used here—δυνάστης—means one who is mighty (Luke i. 22), then a prince or ruler. Comp. Acts viii. 27. It is applied here to God as the mighty ruler over the universe. ¶ The King of kings. Who claims dominion over all the kings of the earth. In Rev. vii. 14, the same appellation is applied to the Lord Jesus, ascribing to him universal dominion. ¶ Lord of lords. The idea here is, that all the sovereigns of the earth are under his sway; that none of them can prevent the accomplishment of his purposes; and that he can direct the winding up of human affairs when he pleases.

16. Who only hath immortality. The word here—ἀθάνασία—properly means exemption from death, and seems to mean that God, in his own nature, enjoys a perfect and certain exemption from death. Creatures have immortality only as they derive it from him, and of course are dependent on him for it. He has it by his very nature, and it is in his case underyived, and he can not be deprived of it. It is one of the essential attributes of his being that he will always exist, and that death can not reach him. Comp. the expression in John v. 26, “The Father hath life in himself,” and the Notes on that passage. ¶ Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto. Gr., “Inhabiting inapproachable light.” The light where he dwells is so brilliant and dazzling that mortal eyes could not endure it. This is a very common representation of the dwelling-place of God. See examples quoted in Prieæus, in loc. Heaven is constantly represented as a place of the most pure and brilliant light, needing not the light of the sun, or the moon, or the stars (Rev. xxi. 23, 24; xxii. 5), and God is represented as dwelling in that light, surrounded by amazing and inapproachable glory. Comp. Rev. iv. 6; Ezek. i. 4; Heb. i. 3.

whom ^a be honour and power everlasting. Amen.

17 Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded, nor trust ^b in ¹ uncertain

^a Jude 25. ² Rev. 1. 6.

^b Psa. 62. 10.

¶ Whom no man hath seen nor can see. See Notes on John i. 18. ¶ To whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen. See Notes on Rom. xi. 36.

17. Charge them that are rich in this world, that they be not high-minded. One of the evils to which they are particularly exposed. The idea is, that they should not value themselves on account of their wealth, or look down with pride and arrogance on their inferiors. They should not suppose that they are any better men, or any nearer heaven, because they are wealthy. Property really makes no distinction in the great things that pertain to character and salvation. It does not necessarily make a man wise, or learned, or great, or good. In all these things, he who has not wealth may be vastly superior to him who has; and for so slight and unimportant a distinction as gold can confer, no man should be proud. Besides, let such a man reflect that his property is the gift of God; that he is made rich because God has chosen to arrange things so that he should be; that it is not primarily owing to any skill or wisdom of his own; that his property only increases his responsibility, and that it must all soon be left, and he be as poor as the "beggar that lies at his gate;" and he will see ample reason why he should not be proud. ¶ Nor trust in uncertain riches. Marg., the uncertainty of. The margin expresses the meaning of the Greek more accurately than the text, but the sense is not materially varied. Riches are uncertain because they may soon be taken away. No dependence can be placed on them in the emergencies of life. He who is rich to-day has no security that he will be to-morrow; and if he shall be rich to-morrow, he has no certainty that his riches will meet his necessities then. A man whose house is in flames, or who is shipwrecked, or whose child lies dying, or who is himself in the agonies of death, can derive no advantage from the fact that he is richer than other men. See Notes on Luke xii. 16-21.

I

riches, but in the living God, who giveth us richly all things to enjoy;^c

18 That they do good, that they be rich in good works, ready to

¹ the uncertainty of.

^c Eccl. 5. 18, 19.

That against which Paul here directs Timothy to caution the rich, is what they are most exposed to. A man who is rich is very liable to "trust" in his riches, and to suppose that he needs nothing more. Comp. Luke xii. 19. He feels that he is not dependent on his fellow-men, and he is very likely to feel that he is not dependent on God. It is for this cause that God has recorded so many solemn declarations in his Word respecting the instability of riches (comp. Prov. xxiii. 5), and that he is furnishing so many instructive lessons in his providence, showing how easily riches may suddenly vanish away. ¶ But in the living God. (1.) He is able to supply all our necessities, and to do for us what riches can not do; and (2.) he never changes, or leaves those who put their trust in him. He is able to meet our wants if in the flames, or in a storm at sea, or when a friend dies, or when we lie on a bed of death, or wherever we may be in the eternal world. ¶ Who giveth us richly all things to enjoy. The meaning of this seems to be, that God permits us to enjoy every thing. Every thing in the works of creation and redemption he has given to man for his happiness, and he should therefore trust in him. He has not merely given wealth for the comfort of men, but he has given every thing; and he on whom so many and so great blessings have been bestowed for his comfort, should trust in the great Benefactor himself, and not rely merely on one of his gifts. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. iii. 21-23.

18. That they do good. On the duty enjoined in this verse, see Notes on Gal. vi. 10; Heb. xiii. 16. ¶ That they be rich in good works. "That their good works may be as abundant as their riches." ¶ Ready to distribute. To divide with others. Comp. Acts iv. 34. The meaning is, that they should be liberal, or bountiful. ¶ Willing to communicate. Marg., or, sociable. The translation in the text is a more correct rendering of the Greek. The idea is, that they should be willing to distribute, willing¹ to communicate;

19 Laying up in store for themselves a good foundation against the time to come, that they may lay^a hold on eternal life.

20 O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding^b profane and vain babblings, and share their blessings with others, so as to make others comfortable. See Notes on Heb. xiii. 16. Comp. the argument of Paul in 2 Cor. viii. 13-15, and the Notes on that passage.

¹ or, sociable.

^a Phil. 3. 14.

19. Laying up in store for themselves, etc. The meaning of this verse is, that they were to make such a use of their property that it would contribute to their eternal welfare. It might be the means of exalted happiness and honor in heaven, if they would so use it as not to interfere with religion in the soul, and so as to do the most good possible. See the sentiment in this verse explained at length in the Notes on Luke xvi. 9.

20. Keep that which is committed to thy trust. All that is intrusted to you, and to which reference has been particularly made in this epistle. The honor of the Gospel, and the interests of religion, had been specially committed to him; and he was sacredly to guard this holy trust, and not to suffer it to be wrested from him. ¶ Avoiding profane and vain babblings. Gr., "Profane, empty words." The reference is to such controversies and doctrines as tended only to produce strife, and were not adapted to promote the edification of the Church. See Notes on chap. i. 4; iv. 7. ¶ And oppositions of science falsely so called. Religion has nothing to fear from true science, and oppositions of science falsely so called:

21 Which some professing have erred concerning the faith. Grace be with thee. Amen.

The first to Timothy was written from Laodicea, which is the chiefest city of Phrygia Pacatiana.

^b Tit. 1. 14.

^c 2 Tim. 2. 18.

the minister of the Gospel is not exhorted to dread that. Real science, in all its advances, contributes to the support of religion; and just in proportion as that is promoted will it be found to sustain the Bible, and to confirm the claims of religion to the faith of mankind. See this illustrated at length in Wiseman's lectures on the connection between science and religion. It is only false or pretended science that religion has to dread, and which the friend of Christianity is to avoid. The meaning here is, that Timothy was to avoid every thing which falsely laid claim to being "knowledge" or "science." There was much of this in the world at the time the apostle wrote; and this, more perhaps than any thing else, has tended to corrupt true religion since.

21. Which some professing. Evidently some who professed to be true Christians. They were attracted by false philosophy, and soon, as a consequence, were led to deny the doctrines of Christianity. This result has not been uncommon in the world. ¶ Have erred concerning the faith. See Notes on ch. i. 6, 7; vi. 10. ¶ Grace be with thee. See Notes on Rom. i. 7.

On the subscription at the close of this epistle, see Introd., § 2. It is, like the other subscriptions at the close of the epistles, of no authority.

NOTES,
EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,
ON THE
SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TIMOTHY.
BY ALBERT BARNES.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. Time and Place of writing the Epistle.

THERE has been much diversity of sentiment on the question when this epistle was written. That it was written at Rome, and when the apostle was imprisoned there, is the unanimous opinion of all who have written on the epistle, and indeed is apparent on the face of it. See chap. i. 8, 16; iv. 6. But whether it was written during his first imprisonment there, or during a second imprisonment, is a question on which critics even now are by no means agreed. The most respectable names may be found on each side of this question, though the common opinion has been that it was during a second imprisonment. Of this opinion are Mosheim, Michaelis, Benson, Mill, Macknight, Leclerc, Paley, Stuart, Clarke, and Doddridge. The reasons for this may be seen at length in Hug's Introduction, p. 761-763, Macknight, and in Paley's Horæ Paulinæ. Dr. Lardner, Baronius, Witsius, Lightfoot, Hammond, Hug, Hensen, and others, maintain that it was written during the first imprisonment, and that it was sent about the same time as the epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, Philippians, and Philemon. The reasons for this opinion may be found in Hug's Introduction, p. 556-559, and in Lardner, vol. vi., p. 38-72. It is not consistent with the designs of these Notes to go at length into an examination of this question, and it is not material in order to an exposition of the epistle.

After considering the reasonings of Lardner and Hug to prove that this epistle was written during Paul's first imprisonment at Rome—that is, as they suppose, during his only imprisonment there, and not long after the first epistle was written—it still seems to me that there are insuperable difficulties in such a view, and that the evidence is clear that it was during a second imprisonment. The reasons for this are briefly the following :

(1.) In the epistles to the Philippians and to Philemon, written during his first imprisonment, Paul confidently looked forward to a release, and to a speedy departure from Rome. In this epistle he had no such expectation. Thus, he tells the Philippians (ii. 24), "I trust in the Lord, that I myself shall come shortly." See also chap. i. 24. In the epistle to Philemon (ver. 22) he says, "But withal prepare me also a lodging : for I trust that through your prayers I shall be given unto you." In this epistle, however, the author had no such trust or anticipation. Chap. iv. 6. "For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith ; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness."

(2.) In chap. iv, 16 the apostle uses the following language: "At my first answer, no man stood with me, but all men forsook me." It is true that this may refer to a hearing which he had had before Nero during the same imprisonment at Rome in which this second epistle was written; but the most natural interpretation is to suppose that he had had one hearing, and had been discharged, and that the imprisonment of which he speaks in this epistle was a second one. This seems to me to be confirmed by what he says in the next verse: "Notwithstanding, the Lord stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear; and I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion." Here it appears (a) that he had been delivered, on that occasion, from death—"I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion," which is equivalent to saying that he was discharged; (b) that after that discharge he was permitted to preach the Gospel—"that by me the preaching might be fully known;" (c) that he had been permitted after that to travel and preach—"and that all the Gentiles might hear," which is just such an expression as he would use on the supposition that he had been discharged, and been permitted to go abroad and preach the Gospel extensively, and is not such an expression as he could have used if he had been imprisoned but once.

(3.) The expression occurring in chap. iv. 20, "Erastus abode at Corinth," implies that he had made a second journey to Rome. The word rendered "abode"—ἐμείλεν—is such as would be used where two were traveling together, and where one of them chose to remain at a certain place. It implies that, at the time referred to, the two were together, and that one chose to go on, and the other to remain. But it is capable of very clear proof that, when Paul was sent to Rome by Festus (Acts xxvi. xxvii.), he did not stop at Corinth; and if Erastus had been with him then, he would have passed by that place with him on his way to Rome. Further, when Paul left Corinth, as related in Acts xx., on his way to Jerusalem, Timothy was with him. This is the last time that Paul is mentioned as having been at Corinth before coming to Rome, and there could have been no need of informing Timothy of the fact that Erastus remained there, if this were so, because that fact would be as well known to Timothy as to Paul. Besides, that departure from Corinth took place some five years before Paul wrote this second epistle to Timothy; and what would be the use of his reminding Timothy of this after so long an interval? It is clear, moreover, that Paul refers to some recent transaction. He is urging Timothy to use all diligence to come to him before winter; that is, as soon as possible. Chap. iv. 21. But how could it be a reason for this urgency to say that, some five years before, he had been forsaken by one fellow-laborer, and had been obliged to leave another one sick on the way?

(4.) Similar remarks may be made respecting what Paul says in the close of the same verse (chap. iv. 20): "Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick." Paul, when sent by Festus to Rome, did not stop at Miletus; for the course which the ship took on that occasion is minutely described (Acts xxvii.), and there is every certainty that there can be that it did not put in at that place. The time, then, to which Paul must refer here, unless he made a second journey to Rome after he had been once discharged, must have been several years before: certainly as far back as when he took leave of the elders of the church of Ephesus, as recorded in Acts xx. But this was about five years before; and what would have been the pertinency of informing Timothy that, some five years before, he had left a fellow-laborer sick there, as a reason why he should then hasten to Rome as soon as possible? It was evidently a recent occurrence to which the apostle refers here; and the only natural supposition is that, not long before his arrival at Rome, he had parted with both these friends, and now needed, in consequence, especially the presence of Timothy. Of course, if this be so, Paul must have made another circuit through these countries, of which the Acts of the Apostles gives us no account, and which must have been after his first imprisonment. It is true that Hug suggests that the word rendered "I have left"—ἀπέλιπον—may be in the third person plural, and may be rendered "they have left." But, who left him there? We are not told; and as "nothing is suggested in the context which would supply us with a subject of the verb in the third person plural, we are led naturally to construe it of the first person singular, and, consequently, to apply it to Paul."—Prof. Stuart, in Hug's Introd.

(5.) With this supposition of a second and recent journey, agrees the passage in 2 Tim. iv. 13, "The cloak which I left at Troas with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments." This evidently refers to some recent affair. Can it be believed that these had been there for some five years, and that Paul had not needed them before? He was two years at Cæsarea. He had abundant opportunity of sending for them. An article of wearing apparel, or books to study, or his own writings, he would be likely to need long before, and it is highly improbable that he should have suffered them to remain during this long period without sending for them.

(6.) In the epistles which were written during Paul's first imprisonment, certain persons are referred to as being then with him, who are in this epistle mentioned as absent. It is almost beyond a doubt that the epistles to the Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians, and to Philemon, were written during Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. See the Introduction to those epistles. In the epistle to the Colossians (i. 1), Timothy is mentioned as being then with the apostle. When this was written, of course he was absent. In the same epistle, Mark is mentioned as with Paul, and unites with him in the salutation to the Colossians (chap. iv. 10); when this epistle was written he was absent, for Timothy is ordered to bring him with him (chap. iv. 11). Demas was then with him (Col. iv. 14); now he was absent, for Paul says, "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world, and is departed unto Thessalonica." Chap. iv. 10. These circumstances make it quite clear that the second epistle to Timothy was not written during the imprisonment at Rome in which the epistles to the Colossians, to Philemon, etc., were written, unless a change had taken place in the circumstances of the apostle, which we have no reason to suppose occurred. The probability, then, seems to be strong, that the apostle was imprisoned there a second time, and that the things referred to in this epistle occurred then.

(7.) To these circumstances should be added the fact that many of the fathers say that Paul was liberated from his first imprisonment, and afterward traveled extensively in preaching the Gospel. This testimony is borne by Eusebius, Chrysostom, Theodoret, and others. See Calmet's Dictionary, and Lives of the Apostles, by D. F. Bacon, New Haven, p. 619–621. If the supposition of a second imprisonment at Rome, during which this epistle was written, is correct, then it was written probably not far from the year 65. Lardner, however, who supposes it was written during the first imprisonment, places its date in May, A.D. 61; Hug, also, in the same year.

§ 2. The Place where Timothy was when the Epistle was addressed to him.

There can be little doubt that Timothy was at Ephesus at the time when this epistle was addressed to him. The evidence for this opinion is thus stated by Lightfoot and others:—(1.) Paul directs Timothy to salute the household of Onesiphorus, chap. iv. 19. But it is evident, from chap. i. 18, that Onesiphorus was an Ephesian, and, as the direction is to salute his “household,” it may be argued with the more certainty that Timothy was then at Ephesus, the ordinary residence of the family of Onesiphorus. (2.) He directs Timothy to take Troas in the way as he came to him at Rome (chap. iv. 13), which was the way that Paul had gone to Ephesus (2 Cor. ii. 12; Acts xx. 5), thus showing that this was the usual route of travel, and was a way which Timothy would naturally take in passing from Ephesus to Rome. It is true that this does not absolutely prove that he was at Ephesus, since, if he had been in any other part of the western portion of Asia Minor, the direction would have been the same, but it is a slight circumstance corroborating others. (3.) He warns him to beware of Alexander (chap. iv. 14), who we know was an Ephesian. 1 Tim. i. 20; Acts xix. 33. (4.) In chap. iv. 9 he gives direction to Timothy to come to him as soon as possible, and then adds (ver. 12), “Tychicus have I sent to Ephesus.” From this it would seem that one reason why he wished him then to come was that he had appointed Tychicus to occupy his place there, so that he could leave without injury to the cause. But it would also seem probable that Paul was not in the habit of calling away a laborer from an important station without supplying his place. Thus, in Titus iii. 12, he says, “When I shall send Artemas unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me.” It may thence be inferred that Timothy was at Ephesus at the time when Paul wrote to him, and that he had taken care that his place should not be left vacant, by the appointment of Tychicus to fill it when he should leave. (5.) It may be added, that the errors and vices which Timothy is directed to oppose are the same which are referred to in the first epistle, and it may be hence inferred that he was at the same place.

How long Timothy had been in Ephesus is not certainly known, and is not material to be known in order to a proper understanding of the epistle. It does not appear, from the Acts, that he was with Paul during the two years in which he was in Cæsarea, nor during his voyage to Rome; yet it is certain that he was in Rome when Paul wrote to the Philippians, to the Colossians, and to Philemon, because he is named in the titles to those epistles. In Heb. xiii. 23 Paul says that Timothy was "set at liberty," or, more probably, "sent away" (see Notes on that verse), but to what place he had gone is not mentioned. Nothing would be more natural, however, than that he should visit Ephesus again, and it is not improbable that Paul would leave him there when he again visited Rome.

§ 3. The Occasion on which the Epistle was written.

The epistle was evidently written when the apostle was expecting soon to be put to death. Chap. iv. 6-8. The main object of writing it seems to have been to request Timothy to come to him as speedily as possible. Chap. iv. 9. But, in doing this, it was natural that Paul should accompany the request with such counsel as Timothy needed, and such as it was proper for him to give in probably the last letter that he would write to him. The particular reason why the apostle desired the presence of Timothy seems to have been that nearly all the others on whom he might have supposed he could rely in a time of trial had left him. Thus he says that Demas had forsaken him; Crescens had gone to Galatia; Titus to Dalmatia; and Tychicus he had himself sent to Ephesus. Chap. iv. 10-12. No one remained with him but Luke (chap. iv. 11), and he was therefore desirous that Timothy and Mark should be with him. Chap. iv. 11. He did not ask their presence merely that they might sustain him in his trials, but that they might aid him in the work of the ministry (ch. iv. 11), for it would seem that all hope of doing good in Rome was not closed.

If the view of the time when this epistle was written which has been taken in this introduction is correct, and if this is the last epistle which was written by the apostle Paul before his martyrdom, then it occupies a very important place in the sacred canon, and is invested with great interest. It may be regarded as the dying counsels of the most eminent of the apostles to one who had just entered on the ministerial life. We should read it with the interest with which we do the last words of the great and the good. Then we feel that every word which they utter has a weight which demands attention. We feel that, whatever a man might do at other times, he will not trifle then. We feel that, having little time to express his wishes, he will select topics that lie nearest his heart, and those which he deems most important. There is no more interesting position in which we can be placed than when we sit down at such a man's feet and listen to his parting counsels. To a young minister of the Gospel, therefore, this epistle is invaluable; to any and every Christian it can not fail to be a matter of interest to listen to the last words of the great apostle of the Gentiles, and to ponder his last written testimony in favor of that religion to the promulgation of which he had devoted his talents and his life.

SECOND EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TIMOTHY.

CHAPTER I.

PAUL, an apostle of Jesus Christ is to exhort Timothy to steadfastness and fidelity as a Christian and a minister; to entreat him to adhere to the truth, and to live as became a Christian, in the midst of the temptations by which he was surrounded, and while so many were turning away from the Christian faith. Timothy was young; he was exposed, like others, to trials; he could not be unaware that not a few had apostatized; he knew that his father in Christ was in bonds, and he was liable to become disheartened, or to be led astray. In these circumstances, the apostle seems to have resolved to place before him strong reasons to induce him to devote himself steadfastly to the cause of religion, and not to allow those things which might tend to alienate him from Christianity to have any effect on his mind. After the usual salutations, therefore (vs. 1, 2), he proceeds to present these considerations to the mind of Timothy: (1.) He commences the chapter with delicate praise of his young friend—one of the most happy methods of inducing him to persevere in the course of life on which he had entered. Ver. 3-5. We naturally desire to perfect that in which we already excel; we feel encouraged for future efforts in a cause in which we have already been successful. The apostle, therefore, reminds Timothy of the manner in which he had been trained; of the piety of his mother and grandmother, and assures him of his own belief that their efforts to train him up in the ways of religion had not been in vain. (2.) He urges various considerations to induce him not to turn away from that holy pur-

a Eph. 3. 6.

2 To Timothy, my dearly beloved son:^{b} Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and Christ Jesus our Lord.

3 I thank God, whom I serve °

b 1 Tim. 1. 2.

° Acts 23. 1.

CHAPTER I.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

The principal design of this chapter is to exhort Timothy to steadfastness and fidelity as a Christian and a minister; to entreat him to adhere to the truth, and to live as became a Christian, in the midst of the temptations by which he was surrounded, and while so many were turning away from the Christian faith. Timothy was young; he was exposed, like others, to trials; he could not be unaware that not a few had apostatized; he knew that his father in Christ was in bonds, and he was liable to become disheartened, or to be led astray. In these circumstances, the apostle seems to have resolved to place before him strong reasons to induce him to devote himself steadfastly to the cause of religion, and not to allow those things which might tend to alienate him from Christianity to have any effect on his mind. After the usual salutations, therefore (vs. 1, 2), he proceeds to present these considerations to the mind of Timothy: (1.) He commences the chapter with delicate praise of his young friend—one of the most happy methods of inducing him to persevere in the course of life on which he had entered. Ver. 3-5. We naturally desire to perfect that in which we already excel; we feel encouraged for future efforts in a cause in which we have already been successful. The apostle, therefore, reminds Timothy of the manner in which he had been trained; of the piety of his mother and grandmother, and assures him of his own belief that their efforts to train him up in the ways of religion had not been in vain. (2.) He urges various considerations to induce him not to turn away from that holy purpose to which he had devoted himself. The considerations which he urges are these: (a) he had been solemnly consecrated to the work of preaching the Gospel, ver. 6; (b) God had imparted to him, as to others, a spirit of love and power, and a sound mind, ver. 7; (c) the grace of God had called him to his great work, and he possessed that Gospel by which life and immortality are brought to light, ver. 8-11; (d) he urges his own example, and says that, amid all his own trials, he had never seen occasion to be ashamed of the Gospel, ver. 12-14; and (e) he reminds Timothy that all his other friends in Asia had turned away from him, specifying two of them, and urges him, therefore, to maintain a steadfast attachment to the principles which he had professed, verse 15. (3.) The chapter closes with an earnest prayer that the Lord would bless the family of Onesiphorus, and with a grateful mention of his kindness to him, ver. 16-18.

1. Paul an apostle of Jesus Christ. See Notes on Rom. i. 1. ¶ By the will of God. Called to be an apostle in accordance with the divine will and purpose. See Notes on Gal. i. 1. ¶ According to the promise of life which is in Christ Jesus. In accordance with the promise of eternal life through the Saviour; that is, he was called to be an apostle to carry out the great purpose of human salvation. Comp. Eph. iii. 6. God has made a promise of life to mankind through faith in the Lord Jesus, and it was with reference to this that he was called to the apostleship.

2. To Timothy, my dearly beloved son. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 2. ¶ Grace, mercy, and peace, etc. See Notes on Rom. i. 7.

from my forefathers with pure conscience,^a that without ceasing I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day;

4 Greatly desiring^b to see thee,

^a Heb. 13. 18.

^b c. 4. 9, 21.

3. I thank God, whom I serve from my forefathers. Paul reckoned among his forefathers the patriarchs and the holy men of former times, as being of the same nation with himself, though it may be that he also included his more immediate ancestors, who, for any thing known to the contrary, may have been distinguished examples of piety. His own parents, it is certain, took care that he should be trained up in the ways of religion. Comp. Notes on Phil. iii. 4, 5; Acts xxvi. 4, 5. The phrase "from my forefathers" probably means, after the example of my ancestors. He worshiped the same God; he held substantially the same truths; he had the same hope of the resurrection and of immortality; he relied for salvation on the same Saviour having come, on whom they relied as about to come. His was not, therefore, a different religion from theirs; it was the same religion carried out and perfected. The religion of the Old Testament and the New is essentially the same. See Notes on Acts xxiii. 6. ¶ With pure conscience. See Notes on Acts xxiii. 1. ¶ That without ceasing. Comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 12; 1 Thess. v. 17. ¶ I have remembrance of thee in my prayers night and day. See Notes on Phil. i. 3, 4.

4. Greatly desiring to see thee. See ch. iv. 9, 21. It was probably on account of this earnest desire that this epistle was written. He wished to see him, not only on account of the warm friendship which he had for him, but because he would be useful to him in his present circumstances. See Intro., § 3. ¶ Being mindful of thy tears. Alluding probably to the tears which he shed at parting from him. The occasion to which he refers is not mentioned; but nothing is more probable than that Timothy would weep when separated from such a father and friend. It is not wrong thus to weep, for religion is not intended to make us stoics or savages. ¶ That I may be filled with joy. By seeing you again. It is easy to imagine what joy it would give Paul, then a prisoner, forsaken by being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy;

5 When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith^c that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grand-nearly all his friends, and about to die, to see a friend whom he loved as he did this young man. Learn, hence, (a) that there may be very pure and warm friendship between an old and young man, and (b) that the warmth of true friendship is not diminished by the near prospect of death.

^c 1 Tim. 4. 6.

5. When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 5. On the faith of Timothy, see Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 6. ¶ Which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois. That is, the same faith dwelt in her; or, she was a sincere believer in Christ. It would seem probable, from this, that she was the first of the family who had been converted. In the Acts of the Apostles (xvi. 1) we have an account of the family of Timothy: "Then came he to Derbe and Lystra; and behold a certain disciple was there, named Timotheus, the son of a certain woman which was a Jewess, and believed; but his father was a Greek." In this account no mention is made of the grandmother Lois, but there is no improbability in supposing that Paul was better acquainted with the family than Luke. There is, at any rate, no contradiction between the two accounts; but the one confirms the other, and the "undesigned coincidence" furnishes an argument for the authenticity of both. See Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, in loc. As the mother of Timothy was a Hebrew, it is clear that his grandmother was also. Nothing more is known of her than is here mentioned. ¶ And in thy mother Eunice. In Acts xvi. 1, it is said that the mother of Timothy was "a Jewess, and believed;" but her name is not mentioned. This shows that Paul was acquainted with the family, and that the statement in the epistle to Timothy was not forged from the account in the Acts. Here is another "undesigned coincidence." In the history in the Acts, nothing is said of the father, except that he was "a Greek," but it is implied that he was not a believer. In the epistle before us nothing whatever is said of him. But the mother Lois, and thy mother ^a Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also.

6 Wherefore I put thee in remem-

^a Acts 16. 1.

piety of his mother alone is commended, and it is fairly implied that his father was not a believer. This is one of those coincidences on which Paley has constructed his beautiful argument in the Horæ Pauline in favor of the genuineness of the New Testament.

6. That thou stir up the gift of God. The original word used here denotes the kindling of a fire, as by bellows, etc. It is not uncommon to compare piety to a flame or a fire, and the image is one that is obvious when we speak of causing that to burn more brightly. The idea is that Timothy was to use all proper means to keep the flame of pure religion in the soul burning, and more particularly his zeal in the great cause to which he had been set apart. The agency of man himself is needful to keep the religion of the heart warm and glowing. However rich the gifts which God has bestowed upon us, they do not grow of their own accord, but need to be cultivated by our own personal care. ¶ Which is in thee by the putting on of my hands. In connection with the presbytery. See Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 14. This proves that Paul took part in the ordination of Timothy; but it does not prove either that he performed the duty alone, or that the "ordaining virtue," whatever that was, was imparted by him only; for (1.) it is expressly said (1 Tim. iv. 14) that he was ordained by the laying on of the hands of the presbytery, of which Paul was doubtless one; and (2.) the language here used, "by the putting on of my hands," is just such as Paul, or any other one of the presbytery, would use in referring to the ordination of Timothy, though they were all regarded as on a level. It is such an expression as an aged Presbyterian, Congregational, or Baptist minister would address to a son whom he had assisted to ordain. Nothing would be more natural than to remind him that his own hands had been laid on him when he was set apart to the work of the ministry. It would be of the nature of a tender, pathetic, and solemn appeal, bringing all that there was in brance that thou stir up the gift of God,^b which is in thee by the putting on of my hands.

7 For God hath not given us the

^b 1 Tim. 4. 14.

his own character, age, and relation to the other to bear on him, in order to induce him to be faithful to his trust. On other occasions he would naturally remind him that others had united with him in the act, and that he had derived his authority through the presbytery, just as Paul appeals to Timothy, 1 Tim. iv. 14. But no one would now think of inferring from this that he meant to be understood as saying that he alone had ordained him, or that all the authority for preaching the Gospel had been imparted through his hands, and that those who were associated with him only expressed "concurrence," that is, that their presence there was only an unmeaning ceremony. What was the "gift of God" which had been conferred in this way Paul specifies in the next verse. It is "the spirit of power, and of love, and of a sound mind." The meaning is, that these had been conferred by God, and that the gift had been recognized by his ordination. It does not imply that any mysterious influence had gone from the hands of the ordainers, imparting any holiness to Timothy which he had not before.

7. For God hath not given us the spirit of fear. A timorous and servile spirit. This is said in order to encourage Timothy, who was not improbably modest and diffident. ¶ But of power. Power to encounter foes and dangers; power to bear up under trials; power to triumph in persecutions. That is, it is the nature of the Gospel to inspire the mind with holy courage. Comp., however, Luke xxiv. 49. ¶ And of love. Love to God and to the souls of men. The tendency of this, also, is to "cast out fear" (1 John iv. 18), and to make the mind bold and constant. Nothing will do more to inspire courage, to make a man fearless of danger, or ready to endure privation and persecution, than love. The love of country, of wife, of children, and of home, makes the most timid bold when they are assailed; and the love of Christ and of a dying world nerves the soul to great enterprises, and sustains it in the deepest sorrows. ¶ And of a sound mind. The Greek word denotes spirit of fear; ^a but of power, ^b and of love, and of a sound mind.

8 Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord, nor of me his prisoner: but be thou partaker ^c of the afflictions of the Gospel according to the power of God;

^a Rom. 8. 15. ¹ John 4. 18.
^c Col. 1. 24. ^d Matt. 1. 21.

^b Luke 24. 49.
^e Rom. 8. 28, 30.

one of sober mind; a man of prudence and discretion. The state referred to is that in which the mind is well balanced, and under right influences; in which it sees things in their just proportions and relations; in which it is not feverish and excited, but when every thing is in its proper place. It was this state of mind which Timothy was exhorted to cultivate; this which Paul regarded as so necessary to the performance of the duties of his office. It is as needful now for the minister of religion as it was then.

8. Be not thou therefore ashamed of the testimony of our Lord. Do not be ashamed to bear your testimony to the doctrines taught by the Lord Jesus. John iii. 11, 32, 33; vii. 7. Comp. Acts x. 22; xx. 24; 1 Cor. i. 6; Rev. xxii. 16. Paul seems to have apprehended that Timothy was in some danger of being ashamed of this Gospel, or of shrinking back from its open avowal in the trials and persecutions to which he now saw it exposed him. ¶ Nor of me his prisoner. Of the testimony which I have borne to the truth of the Gospel. This passage proves that, when Paul wrote this epistle, he was in confinement. Comp. Eph. iii. 1; vi. 20; Phil. i. 13, 14, 16; Col. iv. 3, 18; Phil. 9. Timothy knew that he had been thrown into prison on account of his love for the Gospel. There might be some danger that, in order to avoid that, a timid young man might shrink from an open avowal of his belief in the same system of truth. ¶ But be thou partaker of the afflictions of the Gospel. The sufferings to which the profession of the Gospel may expose you. Comp. Notes on Col. i. 24. ¶ According to the power of God. That is, according to the power which God gives to those who are afflicted on account of the Gospel. The apostle evidently supposes that they who were subjected to trials on account of the Gospel might look for divine strength to up-

9 Who hath saved ^d us, and called ^e us with an holy calling, not ^f according to our works, but according to his own purpose ^g and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus, before ^h the world began;

10 But is now made manifest ⁱ by ^f Tit. 3. 5.

^h Eph. 1. 4.

^g Deut. 7. 7, 8. Eph. 1. 9, 11.
ⁱ 1 Pet. 1. 20.

hold them, and asks him to endure those trials, relying on that strength, and not on his own.

9. Who hath saved us. See Notes on Matt. i. 21. He has brought us into a state in which salvation is so certain that Paul could speak of it as if it were already done. ¶ And called us. See Notes on Rom. viii. 28, 30. ¶ With an holy calling. A calling which is in its own nature holy, and which leads to holiness. Comp. Notes on Eph. iv. 1; Phil. iii. 14; Heb. iii. 1. ¶ Not according to our works. Titus iii. 5. See Notes on Eph. ii. 8, 9. The idea is, that our own works have nothing to do in inducing God to call us. As, when we become Christians, he does not choose us because of our works, so the eternal purpose in regard to our salvation could not have been formed, because he foresaw that we would perform such works as would be a reason why he should choose us. The whole arrangement was irrespective of our deserts. ¶ But according to his own purpose and grace. See Notes on Rom. ix. 11-13, 16; Eph. i. 4, 5. ¶ Which was given us in Christ Jesus, before the world began. That is, which he intended to give us, for it was not then actually given. The thing was so certain in the divine purposes that it might be said to be already done. Comp. Notes on Rom. iv. 17.

10. But is now made manifest. The purpose to save us was long concealed in the divine mind, but the Saviour came that he might make it known. ¶ Who hath abolished death. That is, he has made it so certain that death will be abolished that it may be spoken of as already done. It is remarkable how often, in this chapter, Paul speaks of what God intends to do as so certain that it may be spoken of as a thing that is already done. On the meaning of the expression here, see Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 54. Comp. Notes on Heb. ii. 14. The meaning is, that, through the the appearing of our Saviour Jesus Christ, who hath abolished ^a death, and hath brought life ^b and

^a 1 Cor. 15. 54.

Gospel, death will cease to reign, and over those who are saved there will be no such thing as we now understand by dying. ¶ And hath brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. This is one of the great and glorious achievements of the Gospel, and one of the things by which it is distinguished from every other system. The word rendered "hath brought to light"—φωτίζω—means to give light, to shine; then to give light to, to shine upon; and then to bring to light, to make known.—Rob., Lex. The sense is, that these things were before obscure or unknown, and that they have been disclosed to us or made clear by the Gospel. It is, of course, not meant that there were no intimations of these truths before, or that nothing was known of them—for the Old Testament shed some light on them; but that they are fully disclosed to man in the Gospel. There all ambiguity and doubt are removed, and the evidence is so clearly stated as to leave no doubt on the subject. The intimations of a future state, among the wisest of the heathen, were certainly very obscure, and their hopes very faint. The hope of a future state is styled by Cicero, Futurorum quoddam augurium sæculorum—a conjecture or surmise of future ages.—Tusc. Q., 1. Seneca says it is "that which our wise men do promise, but they do not prove."—Epis., 102. Socrates, even at his death, said, "I hope to go hence to good men, but of that I am not very confident; nor doth it become any wise man to be positive that so it will be. I must now die, and you shall live; but which of us is in the better state, the living or the dead, God only knows." Pliny says, "Neither soul nor body has any more sense after death than before it was born." Cicero begins his discourse on the subject with the avowal that he intended to deliver nothing as fixed and certain, but only as probable, and as having some likelihood of truth. And, having mentioned the different sentiments of philosophers, he concludes, "Which of these opinions is true, some god must tell us; which is most like to truth, is a great question." See Whitby, in loc. Such doubts ex-immortality to light through the Gospel:

11 Whereunto I am appointed a

^b John 5. 24-29.

isted in regard to the immortality of the soul; but of the resurrection and future life of the body, they had no conception whatever. Comp. Acts xvii. 32. With what propriety, then, may it be said that these doctrines were brought to light through the Gospel! Man would never have known them if it had not been for revelation. The word "life," here, refers undoubtedly to life in the future world. The question was, whether man would live at all; and that question has been determined by the Gospel. The word "immortality" means, properly, incorruption, incapacity of decay; and may be applied either to the body or the soul. See it explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 42. It is used in reference to the body, in 1 Cor. xv. 42, 53, 54. In Rom. ii. 7, it is applied to the future state of rewards, without special reference to the body or soul. Here it seems to refer to the future state as that in which there will be no corruption or decay. Many suppose that the phrase "life and immortality," here, is used by hendiadys (two things for one), as meaning immortal or incorruptible life. The Gospel thus has truths not found in any other system, and contains what man never would have discovered of himself. As fair a trial had been made among the philosophers of Greece and Rome as could be made, to determine whether the unaided powers of the human mind could discover these great truths; and their most distinguished philosophers confessed that they could arrive at no certainty on the subject. In this state of things, the Gospel comes and reveals truths worthy of all acceptation; sheds light where man had desired it; solves the great problems which had for ages perplexed the human mind, and discloses to man all that he could wish—that not only the soul will live forever, but that the body will be raised from the grave, and that the entire man will become immortal. How strange it is that men will not embrace the Gospel! Socrates and Cicero would have hailed its light, and welcomed its truths as those which their whole nature panted to know.

11. Whereunto I am appointed a preacher, and an apostle, and a teacher of the Gentiles.

12 For the which cause I also suffer these things: nevertheless^a I am not ashamed: for I know preacher. That is, I am appointed to make these truths known. See Notes on Eph. iii. 7, 8.

^a Rom. 1. 16.

¹ or, trusted.

^b 1 Pet. 4. 19.

12. For the which cause I also suffer these things. That is, I suffer on account of my purpose to carry the Gospel to the Gentiles. See Notes on Col. i. 24. ¶ Nevertheless I am not ashamed. Comp. Notes on Rom. i. 16. ¶ For I know whom I have believed. Marg., trusted. The idea is, that he understood the character of that Redeemer to whom he had committed his eternal interests, and knew that he had no reason to be ashamed of confiding in him. He was able to keep all that had been intrusted to his care, and he would not suffer him to be lost. See Isa. xxviii. 16. ¶ And am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him. That is, the soul, with all its immortal interests. Man has nothing of higher value to intrust to another than the interests of his soul, and there is no other act of confidence like that in which he commits the keeping of that soul to the Son of God. Learn hence, (1.) that religion consists in intrusting the soul to the care of the Lord Jesus; because (a) we feel that we can not secure its salvation ourselves; (b) it is by nature in danger; (c) if not saved by him, it will not be saved at all. (2.) That it is a great and invaluable treasure which is committed to him. (a) No higher treasure can be committed to another than the soul; (b) the whole question of our happiness on earth and in heaven is intrusted to him, and all depends on his fidelity. (3.) It is done by the true Christian with the most entire confidence, so that the mind is at rest. The grounds of this confidence are (a) what is said of the mighty power of the Saviour; (b) his promises that he will keep all who confide in him (comp. John x. 27-29); (c) experience—the fact that those who have trusted in him have found that he is able to keep them. (4.) This act of committing the soul, with all its interests, to the Saviour, is the true source of peace in the trials of life.

whom I have¹ believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have^b committed unto him against that day.

13 Hold fast^c the form^d of^e sound

^c Rev. 2. 25.

^d Rom. 6. 17.

^e 1 Tim. 6. 3.

This is so because, (a) having done this, we feel that our great interests are secure. If the soul is safe, why need we be disturbed by the loss of health, or property, or other temporary comforts? Those are secondary things. A man who is shipwrecked, and who sees his wife, his son, his daughter safe with him on the shore, will be little concerned that a casket of jewels fell overboard—however valuable it might be. (b) All these trials will soon pass away, and he will be safe in heaven. (c) These very things may further the great object—the salvation of the soul. A man's great interests may be more safe when in a prison than when in a palace; on a pallet of straw than on a bed of down; when constrained to say, "Give us this day our daily bread," than when able to "clothe himself in purple and fine linen, and to fare sumptuously every day." ¶ Against that day. The day of judgment—called "that day," without any thing further to designate it, because it is the great day; "the day for which all other days were made." It seems to have been so much the object of thought and conversation among the early Christians, that the apostle supposed that he would be understood by merely referring to it as "that day;" that is, the day which they were always preaching about, talking about, thinking about.

13. Hold fast the form of sound words. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 3. On the Greek word here rendered "form," see Notes on 1 Tim. i. 16, where it is rendered pattern. The word means a form, sketch, or imperfect delineation—an outline. Grotius says that it here means "an exemplar, but an exemplar fixed in the mind—an idea." Calvin says that the command is that he should adhere to the doctrine which he had learned, not only in its substance, but in its form. Archbishop Tillotson explains this as meaning the profession of faith which was made by Christians at baptism. There seems to be an allusion to some summary or outline of truth which Paul had given words, which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus.

14 That ^a good thing which was committed unto thee, keep by the Holy Ghost which dwelleth in us.

^a 1 Tim. 6. 20.

^b Acts 19. 10.

to Timothy, though there is no evidence that it was written. Indeed, there is every presumption that, if it refers to such a summary, it was not committed to writing. If it had been, it would have been regarded as inspired, and would have taken its place in the canon of Scripture. It may be presumed that almost none of the sacred writings would have been more sacredly preserved than such a condensed summary of Christian truth. But there is no improbability in supposing that Paul, either at his ordination, or on some other occasion, may have stated the outlines of the Christian religion to Timothy, in order that he might have a clear and connected view of the subject. The passage, therefore, may be used as an argument for the propriety of some brief summary of doctrine as a matter of convenience, though not as having binding authority on the consciences of others. ¶ Of sound words. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 3. The Greek is the same in both places. ¶ Which thou hast heard of me. This makes it probable that he does not refer to a written creed, since it was something which he had "heard," not what he had read. ¶ In faith and love which is in Christ Jesus. Hold these truths with sincere faith in the Lord Jesus, and with that love which is the best evidence of attachment to him.

14. That good thing which was committed unto thee. See Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 20. The reference here in the phrase, "that good thing committed unto thee," is to the sound Christian doctrine with which he had been instructed, and which he was required to transmit to others. ¶ Keep by the Holy Ghost. By the aid of the Holy Ghost. One of the essential methods of preserving the knowledge and the love of truth is to cherish the influences of the Holy Spirit.

15. This thou knowest, that all they which are in Asia be turned away from me. That is, in that part of Asia Minor of which Ephesus was the capital.

15 This thou knowest, that all ^b they which are in Asia be turned ^c away from me; of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes.

16 The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus; ^d for he oft ^c e. 4. 10, 16.

^d e. 4. 19.

The name Asia was often given particularly to that province of Asia Minor. See Notes on Acts ii, 9; xvi. 6. This passage proves that Timothy was somewhere in that region when this epistle was written to him, for otherwise he could not be supposed to "know" what is here said. When Paul says that "all" were turned away from him, he must use the word in a general sense, for he immediately specifies one who had been faithful and kind to him. ¶ Of whom are Phygellus and Hermogenes. We know nothing of these individuals but what is here mentioned. It would seem that they were prominent persons, and those from whom the apostle had a right to expect other treatment. "The ecclesiastical traditions allege that they were of the seventy disciples, and in the end became followers of Simon Magus. We imagine that this is little more than conjecture."—Pict. Bib. It is a sad thing when the only record made of a man—the only evidence which we have that he ever lived at all—is that he turned away from a friend, or forsook the paths of true religion. And yet there are many men of whom the only thing to be remembered of them is that they lived to do wrong.

16. The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus. The family of Onesiphorus—for so the word house is often used. He was himself still living (ver. 18), but not improbably then absent from his home. Comp. ch. iv. 19. He was evidently of Asia, and he is the only one who is mentioned from that region who had showed the apostle kindness in his trials. He is mentioned only in this epistle, and nothing more is known of him. The record is entirely honorable to him, and for his family the apostle felt a warm interest on account of the kindness which he had shown to him in prison. The ecclesiastical traditions also state that he was one of the seventy disciples, and was ultimately bishop of Corone. But there is no evidence of refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain.^a 17 But when he was in Rome, he sought me out very diligently, and found me.

^a Acts 28. 20.

this. There is much force in the remark of the editor of the Pictorial Bible, that "the pretended lists of the seventy disciples seem to have been made out on the principle of including all the names incidentally mentioned in the sacred books, and not otherwise appropriated." ¶ For he oft refreshed me. That is, showed me kindness, and ministered to my wants. ¶ And was not ashamed of my chain. Was not ashamed to be known as a friend of one who was a prisoner on account of religion. Paul was bound with a chain when a prisoner at Rome. Phil. i. 13, 14, 16; Col. iv. 3, 18; Phil. em. 10. Comp. Notes on Acts xxviii. 20.

17. But when he was in Rome. What was the employment of Onesiphorus is not known. It may have been that he was a merchant, and had occasion to visit Rome on business. At all events, he was at pains to search out the apostle, and his attention was the more valuable because it cost him trouble to find him. It is not every one, even among professors of religion, who in a great and splendid city would be at the trouble to search out a Christian brother, or even a minister, who was a prisoner, and endeavor to relieve his sorrows. This man, so kind to the great apostle, will be among those to whom the Saviour will say, at the final judgment, "I was in prison, and ye came unto me." Matt. xxv. 36.

18. The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day. The day of judgment. See Notes on ver. 12. This proves that Onesiphorus was then alive, as Paul would not offer prayer for him if he was dead. The Papists, indeed, argue from this in favor of praying for the dead—assuming from ch. iv. 19, that Onesiphorus was then dead. But there is no evidence of that. The passage in ch. iv. 19, would prove only that he was then absent from his family. ¶ And in how many things he ministered unto me at Ephesus. This was the home of Onesiphorus, and his family was still 18 The Lord grant unto him that he may find mercy of the Lord in ^b that day: and in how many things he ^c ministered unto me at Ephesus, thou knowest very well.

^b Matt. 25. 34-40.

^c Heb. 6. 10.

there. Ch. iv. 19. When Paul was at Ephesus, it would seem that Onesiphorus had showed him great kindness. His affection for him did not change when he became a prisoner. True friendship, and especially that which is based on religion, will live in all the vicissitudes of fortune, whether we are in prosperity or adversity; whether in a home of plenty or in a prison.

This chapter is full of interest, and may suggest many interesting reflections. We see

(1.) A holy man imprisoned and about to die. He had nearly finished his course, and had the prospect of soon departing.

(2.) He was forsaken by his friends, and left to bear his sorrows alone. They on whom he might have relied had left him; and to all his outward sufferings there was added this, one of the keenest which his Master endured before him, that his friends forsook him, and left him to bear his sorrows alone.

(3.) Yet his mind is calm, and his faith in the Gospel is unshaken. He expresses no regret that he had embraced the Gospel; no sorrow that he had been so zealous in it as to bring these calamities upon himself. That Gospel he still loves, and his great solicitude is that his young friend may never shrink from avowing it, though it may call him also to pass through scenes of persecution and sorrow.

(4.) In the general apostasy, the turning away of those on whom he might have relied, it is refreshing and interesting to find mention made of one unshaken friend. Ver. 16. That faithful friend never swerved in his affections. He had been kind to the apostle in former years of comparative honor, and he did not leave him now in the dark day of adversity. It is always interesting to find true friendship in this world—friendship that survives all reverses, and that is willing to manifest itself when the great mass turn coldly away. There is such a thing as friendship, and there is such a thing as religion, and when

CHAPTER II.

THOU therefore, my son, be ^a strong in the grace that is in Christ Jesus.

2 And the things that thou hast

^a Jos. 1. 7. Eph. 6. 10.

1 or, by.

they meet and mingle in the same heart, the one strengthens the other; and then neither persecution, nor poverty, nor chains, will prevent our doing good to him who is in prison and is about to die. See Notes on ch. iv. 16.

CHAPTER II.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter is made up of various exhortations and encouragements to duty. The apostle exhorts Timothy to be strong in the Christian graces (ver. 1); to commit the great trust which he had received to faithful men (ver. 2); to endure hardships like a good soldier (ver. 3-7), and refers him (a) to the case of one who goes to war, whose great business it is to please him in whose service he is (ver. 4); (b) to the case of one who strives for a crown at the games (ver. 5), and (c) to the husbandman who looks onward for the reward of his labor (ver. 6). He then, in order to encourage him to be patient in enduring the trials to which he would be exposed, refers him (a) to the certainty of the truth of that religion in whose cause he would suffer (ver. 8); (b) to his own case, reminding him how much he had endured in that cause (vs. 9, 10); (c) to the fact that our sufferings here will be crowned with certain glory hereafter (vs. 11, 12); and (d) to the assurance that the Lord Jesus will be faithful to all his promises to his people (ver. 13). These things the apostle then exhorts him to press upon the hearts of others, that they might not waste their time in unprofitable pursuits, but might engage in the same great and arduous struggle for securing the reward. Ver. 14. He then exhorts Timothy to study to perform his duties in such a way that he would not be ashamed, and to avoid the unimportant strifes which were then raging; and, to enforce this, he refers to a real case with which Timothy was acquainted—that of Hymeneus and Philetus, who, by unprofitable speculations, had been led to deny a funda-heard of me ¹ among many witnesses, the same commit ^b thou to faithful men, who shall be able ^c to teach others also.

3 Thou therefore endure ^d hard-

^b 1 Tim. 1. 18.

^c Tit. 1. 9.

^d c. 4. 5.

mental doctrine of religion. Ver. 15-18. Yet, Paul says, he should not be discouraged because some had been led into dangerous errors. The foundation of God remained firm. Those that were truly his were known, and would not apostatize. Ver. 19. In illustration of this, and to show that it was to be expected that all would not honor religion, the apostle refers to a house in which there were all sorts of vessels, some to honor and some to dishonor, and says that, if any one would endeavor to free himself from all that was base and impure, he would be a vessel meet for the use of the Master. Vs. 20, 21. To accomplish this, he gives Timothy various directions respecting his conduct. He was to flee from youthful lusts; he was to follow righteousness, faith, charity, and peace; he was to avoid foolish questions; he was to be an example of gentleness and meekness, and he was patiently to instruct those that were of a different character. Ver. 22-26.

1. Thou, therefore. In view of the fact stated in the previous chapter, that many had turned away from the apostle, and had forsaken the paths of truth. ¶ Be strong in the grace which is in Christ Jesus. Comp. Notes on Eph. vi. 10. The meaning is, Be strong, relying on the grace which the Lord Jesus only can impart.

2. And the things which thou hast heard of me among many witnesses. Marg., by. Before, or in the presence of, many witnesses. Perhaps he refers to a solemn charge which he gave him, in the presence of the Church, when he was ordained. It is by no means improbable that such a charge was given then to a newly ordained minister, as it is now. On such an occasion, the apostle would be likely to state a summary of Christian doctrine—(comp. Notes on ch. i. 13)—and to exhort Timothy to a faithful adherence to it. ¶ The same commit thou to faithful men. In the same way as those things have been committed to you. The reference is undoubtedly to ordination to ness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.

4 No man that warreth^a entangleth himself with the affairs of

a 1 Cor. 9. 25, 26.

the ministerial office. Timothy was to see that those only were admitted to the ministry who were qualified to understand the truths of religion, and to communicate them to others. This is a clear warrant for ministers to set apart others to the same sacred office. It does not prove that the people are not at liberty to choose their own pastor, but only that those in the ministry are to set apart others to the same office with themselves. There is, doubtless, to be a "succession" of ministers in the Church; but the true line of the "succession" is to be found in good men who are qualified to teach, and who have the spirit of Christ, and not merely in those who have been ordained. ¶ Who shall be able to teach others also. On the qualifications of ministers, see Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2-7.

3. Thou therefore endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ. Such hardships as a soldier is called to endure. The apostle supposes that a minister of the Gospel might be called to endure hardships, and that it is reasonable that he should be as ready to do it as a soldier is. On the hardships which he endured himself, see Notes on 2 Cor. xi. 23-29. Soldiers often endure great privations. Taken from their homes and friends; exposed to cold, or heat, or storms, or fatiguing marches; fed on coarse fare, or almost destitute of food, they are often compelled to endure as much as the human frame can bear, and often, indeed, sink under their burdens and die. If, for reward or their country's sake, they are willing to do this, the soldier of the Cross should be willing to do it for his Saviour's sake, and for the good of the human race. Hence, let no man seek the office of the ministry as a place of ease. Let no one come into it merely to enjoy himself. Let no one enter it who is not prepared to lead a soldier's life, and to welcome hardship and trial as his portion. He would make a bad soldier, who, at his enlistment, should make it a condition that he should be permitted to sleep on a bed of down, and always be well clothed and fed, and never exposed to peril, or compelled to pursue a wearisome march. Yet do not some men enter the ministry making these the conditions on which they will serve Christ? And would they enter the ministry on any other terms?

4. No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life. Having alluded to the soldier, and stated one thing in which the Christian minister is to resemble him, another point of resemblance is suggested to the mind of the apostle. Neither the minister nor the soldier is to be encumbered with the affairs of this life, and the one should not be more than the other. This is always a condition in becoming a soldier. He gives up his own business during the time for which he is enlisted, and devotes himself to the service of his country. The farmer leaves his plow, and the mechanic his shop, and the merchant his store, and the student his books, and the lawyer his brief; and neither of them expect to pursue these things while engaged in the service of their country. It would be wholly impracticable to carry on the plans of a campaign if each one of these classes should undertake to prosecute his private business. See this fully illustrated from the Rules of War among the Romans, by Grotius, in loc. Roman soldiers were not allowed to marry, or to engage in any husbandry or trade; and they were forbidden to act as tutors to any person, or curators to any man's estate, or proctors in the cause of other men. The general principle was, that they were excluded from those relations, agencies, and engagements, which it was thought would divert their minds from that which was to be the sole object of pursuit. So with the ministers of the Gospel. It is equally improper for them to "entangle" themselves with the business of a farm or plantation; with plans of speculation and gain; with any purpose of worldly aggrandizement. The minister of the Gospel accomplishes the design of his appointment only when he can say in sincerity that he "is not entangled with the affairs of this life." Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 25-27. ¶ That he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier. That is, who has enlisted him, or in whose employ he is. His great object is to approve himself to him. It is not to pursue his own plans, this life; that he may please him who hath chosen him to be a soldier.

5 And if a man also strive for masteries, yet is he not crowned, except he strive lawfully.

1 laboring first, must be partaker.

or to have his own will, or to accumulate property or fame for himself. His will is absorbed in the will of his commander, and his purpose is accomplished if he meets with his approbation. Nowhere else is it so true that the will of one becomes lost in that of another as in the case of the soldier. In an army it is contemplated that there shall be but one mind, one heart, one purpose—that of the commander; and that the whole army shall be as obedient to that as the members of the human body are to the one will that controls all. The application of this is obvious. The grand purpose of the minister of the Gospel is to please Christ. He is to pursue no separate plans, and to have no separate will of his own; and it is contemplated that the whole corps of Christian ministers and members of the churches shall be as entirely subordinate to the will of Christ as an army is to the orders of its chief.

5. And if a man also strive for masteries. As in the Grecian games. See this favorite illustration of Paul explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24, seq. ¶ Yet is he not crowned except he strive lawfully. In conformity with the rules of the games. See Grotius, in loc. No one could obtain the prize unless he had complied with all the laws of the games, and had thus given to those with whom he contended, a fair opportunity to succeed. "In those contests, he who transgressed the rules in the least matter, not only failed of the prize, even though the apparent victor, but was sometimes disgraced and punished."—Pict. Bib. So the apostle here represents the Christian minister as engaged in a struggle or conflict for the crown. He says that he could not hope to win it unless he should comply with all the laws by which it is conferred; unless he should subdue every improper propensity, and make an effort like that evinced by the combatants at the Olympic games. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 26, 27.

6 The husbandman¹ that labour-eth must be first partaker of the fruits.

7 Consider^a what I say; and the^b Lord give thee understanding in all things.

a 1 Tim. 4. 15.

b Prov. 2. 6.

6. The husbandman that laboreth. The margin is, "laboring first, must be partaker." The idea, according to the translation in the text, is, that there is a fitness or propriety (δεξι) that the man who cultivates the earth should enjoy the fruits of his labor. See the same image explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 10. But if this be the meaning here, it is not easy to see why the apostle introduces it. According to the marginal reading, the word "first" is introduced in connection with the word labor—"laboring first, must be partaker." That is, it is a great law that the husbandman must work before he receives a harvest. This sense will accord with the purpose of the apostle. It was to remind Timothy that labor must precede reward; that if a man would reap, he must sow; that he could hope for no fruits, unless he toiled for them. The point was not that the husbandman would be the first one who would partake of the fruits; but that he must first labor before he obtained the reward. Thus understood, this would be an encouragement to Timothy to persevere in his toils, looking onward to the reward. The Greek will bear this construction, though it is not the most obvious one.

7. Consider what I say. See Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 15. The sense is, "Think of the condition of the soldier, and the principles on which he is enlisted. think of the aspirant for the crown in the Grecian games; think of the farmer, patiently toiling in the prospect of the distant harvest; and then go to your work with a similar spirit." These things are worth attention. When the minister of the Gospel thinks of his hardships; of his struggles against an evil world; of his arduous and discouraging toil, let him think of the soldier, of the man who struggles for this world's honors, and of the patient farmer—and be content. How patiently do they bear all, and yet for what inferior rewards! ¶ And the Lord give thee understanding in all things. Enable you to see the force of these considerations, and to apply them to your own case. Such are often the discouragements of the ministry; so prone is the mind to despondency, that we need the help of the Lord to enable us to apply the most obvious considerations, and to derive support from the most plain and simple truths and promises.

8 Remember that Jesus Christ,^a of the seed of David, was raised from the dead according to my Gospel:

^a Rom. 1. 3, 4.

8. Remember that Jesus Christ, of the seed of David, was raised from the dead. Or rather, perhaps, "Remember Jesus Christ; him who was raised from the dead." The idea seems not to be, as our translators supposed, that he was to reflect on the fact that he was raised from the dead; but rather that he was to think of the Saviour himself. "Think of the Saviour, now raised up from the dead after all the sorrows of this life, and let this encourage you to bear your trials." There is nothing better fitted to enable us to endure the labors and trials of this life than to think of the Saviour. On the phrase, "seed of David," see Notes on Rom. i. 3. ¶ According to my Gospel. The Gospel which I preach. See Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 14.

9. Wherein I suffer trouble as an evil-doer. As if I were a violator of the laws. That is, I am treated as if I were a criminal. ¶ Even unto bonds. As if I were one of the worst kind of malefactors. See Notes on Eph. vi. 20. During the apostle's first imprisonment at Rome, he was permitted to "dwell in his own hired house," though guarded by a soldier, and probably chained to him. See Notes on Acts xxviii. 16, 30. What was his condition in his second imprisonment, during which this epistle was written, we have no means of knowing with certainty. It is probable, however, that he was subjected to much more rigid treatment than he had been in the first instance. The tradition is that he and Peter were together in the Mamertine prison at Rome, and the place is still shown in which it is said they were confined. The Mamertine prisons are of great antiquity. According to Livy, they were constructed by Ancus Martius, and enlarged by Servius Til-

9 Wherein I suffer trouble, as an evil-doer, even unto bonds;^b but the word of God is not bound.

10 Therefore I endure all things

^b Eph. 6. 20.

lius. The lower prison is supposed to have been once a quarry, and to have been at one time occupied as a granary. These prisons are on the descent of the Capitoline Mount, toward the Forum. They consist of two apartments, one over the other, built with large, uncemented stones. There is no entrance to either, except by a small aperture in the roof, and by a small hole in the upper floor, leading to the cell below, without any staircase to either. The upper prison is twenty-seven feet long by twenty wide; the lower one is elliptical, and measures twenty feet by ten. In the lower one is a small spring, which is said at Rome to have arisen at the command of Peter, to enable him to baptize his keepers, Processus and Martianus, with forty-seven companions, whom he converted. No certain reliance can be placed on any part of this tradition, though in itself there is no improbability in supposing that these prisons may have been used for confining Christians, and the apostle Paul among others. ¶ But the word of God is not bound. This is one of Paul's happy turns of thought. Comp. Acts xxvi. 29. The meaning is plain. The Gospel was prospered. That could not be fettered and imprisoned. It circulated with freedom, even when he who was appointed to preach it was in chains. See Phil. i. 13, 14. As this was the great matter, his own imprisonment was of comparatively little consequence. What may befall us is of secondary importance. The grand thing is the triumph of truth on the earth; and well may we bear privations and sorrows if the Gospel moves on in triumph.

10. Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sakes. See Notes on 2 Cor. i. 6. The sense is, what I suffer is in the cause of the Church, spoken of here, as it is often, as chosen, or elect. See Notes on Eph. i. 4. ¶ That they may also obtain the salvation, etc. Their salvation, though they were elected, could not be secured without proper efforts. The meaning of the apostle here is, that he was willing to suffer if he might save others; and any one for the ^a elect's sakes, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory.

11 It is a faithful saying: For if ^b we be dead with him, we shall also live with him:

12 If we suffer, we shall also reign with him: If we deny ^c him, he also will deny us:

^a 2 Cor. 1. 6.
^c Matt. 10. 33.

^b Rom. 6. 5, 8.
^d Rom. 3. 3.

13 If ^d we believe not, yet he abideth faithful: he ^e can not deny himself.

14 Of these things put ^f them in remembrance, charging them before the Lord that they strive ^g not about words to no profit, but to the subverting of the hearers.

15 Study ^h to show thyself ap-

^e Num. 23. 19.
^g Tit. 3. 9, 10.

^f 2 Pet. 1. 13.
^h 2 Pet. 1. 10.

ought to be willing to suffer in order to secure the salvation of the elect—for it was an object for which even the Son of God was willing to lay down his life.

11. It is a faithful saying. Or, rather, that which he was about to say was worthy of entire credence and profound attention. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 15. The object is to encourage Timothy to bear trials by the hope of salvation. ¶ For if we be dead with him. See Notes on Rom. vi. 8. ¶ We shall also live with him. This was a sort of maxim, or a settled point, which is often referred to in the Bible. See Notes on Rom. vi. 3, 4, 5. Comp. John xi. 25; 1 Thess. iv. 14.

12. If we suffer, we shall also reign with him. The meaning is, that the members will be treated as the Head is. We become united with him by faith, and, if we share his treatment on earth, we shall share his triumphs in heaven. See Notes on Rom. viii. 17. ¶ If we deny him, he also will deny us. See Notes on Matt. x. 32, 33.

13. If we believe not, yet he abideth faithful. This can not mean that, if we live in sin, he will certainly save us, as if he had made any promise to the elect, or formed any purpose that he would save them, whatever might be their conduct; for (1.) the apostle had just said that if we deny him he will deny us; and (2.) there is no such promise in the Bible, and no such purpose has been formed. The promise is, that he that is a believer shall be saved, and there is no purpose to save any but such as lead holy lives. The meaning must be, that if we are unbelieving and unfaithful, Christ will remain true to his word, and we can not hope to be saved. The object of the apostle evidently is to excite Timothy to fidelity in the performance of duty, and to encourage him to bear trials, by the assurance that we can not hope to escape if we are not faithful to the cause of the Saviour. This interpretation accords with the design which he had in view. ¶ He can not deny himself. Implying that it would be a denial of his very nature to save those who are unfaithful. He is holy; and how can he save one who is unholy? His very nature is purity; and how can he save one who has no purity? Let no one, then, suppose that, because he is elected, he is safe, if he lives in sin. The electing purpose of God, indeed, makes salvation sure; but it is only for those who lead righteous lives. Nothing would be more dishonorable for God than to resolve to save a man that lived habitually in sin; and if that were the doctrine of election, it would deserve all the opprobrium that has ever been heaped upon it.

14. Of these things put them in remembrance. These great principles in regard to the kingdom of Christ. They would be as useful to others as they were for Timothy, to whom they were specially addressed. ¶ Charging them before the Lord. In the presence of the Lord, implying that it was a very important matter. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 18. ¶ That they strive not about words to no profit. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 6; vi. 4. ¶ But to the subverting of the hearers. Turning them away from the simplicity of faith. It is rare, indeed, that a religious controversy does not produce this effect, and this is commonly the case, where, as often happens, the matter in dispute is of little importance.

15. Study to show thyself approved unto God. Give diligence (2 Pet. ii. 10), or make an effort so to discharge the duties of the ministerial office as to meet the divine approbation. The object of the ministry is not to please men. Such doctrines should be preached, and such plans formed, and proved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly ^a dividing the word of truth.

16 But shun profane and vain babblings; for they will increase unto more ungodliness:

17 And their word will eat as a Matt. 13. 52. 1 gangrene.

such a manner of life pursued, as God will approve. To do this demands study or care—for there are many temptations to the opposite course; there are many things the tendency of which is to lead a minister to seek popular favor rather than the divine approval. If any man please God, it will be as the result of deliberate intention and a careful life. ¶ A workman that needeth not to be ashamed. A man faithfully performing his duty, so that when he looks over what he has done he need not blush. ¶ Rightly dividing the word of truth. The word here rendered “rightly dividing,” occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, to cut straight, to divide right; and the allusion here may be to a steward who makes a proper distribution to each one under his care of such things as his office and their necessities require. Comp. Notes on Matt. xiii. 52. Some have supposed that there is an allusion here to the Jewish priest cutting or dividing the sacrifice into proper parts; others, that the allusion is to the Scribes dividing the law into sections; others, to a carver distributing food to the guests at a feast. Robinson (Lex.) renders it, “rightly proceeding as to the word of truth;” that is, rightly and skillfully teaching the word of truth. The idea seems to be, that the minister of the Gospel is to make a proper distribution of that word, adapting his instructions to the circumstances and wants of his hearers, and giving to each that which will be fitted to nourish the soul for heaven.

16. But shun profane and vain babblings. See Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 20. ¶ For they will increase unto more ungodliness. Their tendency is to alienate the soul from God, and to lead to impiety. Such kinds of disputation are not merely a waste of time, they are productive of positive mischief. A man fond of contention in religious things is seldom one who has much love for the practical duties of piety, doth a canker: ¹ of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus;

18 Who concerning the truth have erred, ^b saying ^c That the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some.

19 Nevertheless the foundation
b 1 Tim. 6. 21. c 1 Cor. 15. 12.

or any very deep sense of the distinction between right and wrong. You will not usually look for such a man in the place of prayer, nor can you expect his aid in the conversion of sinners, nor will you find that he has any very strict views of religious obligation.

17. And their word. The word, or the discourses of those who love vain and idle disputations. ¶ Will eat as doth a canker. Marg. gangrene. This word—γάγγραινα—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It is derived from γραιω, γραινω, graio or graino, to devour, corrode, and means gangrene or mortification—the death of a part, spreading, unless arrested, by degrees over the whole body. The words rendered “will eat,” mean will have nutriment; that is, will spread over and consume the healthful parts. It will not merely destroy the parts immediately affected, but will extend into the surrounding healthy parts and destroy them also. Thus it is with erroneous doctrines. They will not merely eat out the truth in the particular matter to which they refer, but they will also spread over and corrupt other truths. The doctrines of religion are closely connected, and are dependent on each other—like the different parts of the human body. One can not be corrupted without affecting those adjacent to it, and, unless checked, the corruption will soon spread over the whole. ¶ Of whom is Hymeneus and Philetus. In regard to Hymeneus, see Notes on 1 Tim. i. 20. Of Philetus nothing more is known. These men have gained an undesirable immortality, destined to be known to the end of time only as the advocates of error.

18. Who concerning the truth have erred. To what extent they had erred is unknown. Paul mentions only one point—that pertaining to the resurrection; but he says that this was like a gangrene. It would certainly, unless checked, destroy all the other

“ of God standeth ¹ sure, having this seal, The Lord ^b knoweth them that are his. And, Let ^c every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity.

^a Prov. 10. 25.

¹ or, steady.

20 But in a great house there are

^b Nah. 1. 7. Jno. 10. 14, 27.

^c Psa. 97. 10.

doctrines of religion. No man can safely hold a single error, any more than he can safely have one part of his body in a state of mortification.

¶ Saying, that the resurrection is past already. It is not known in what form they held this opinion. It may have been, as Augustine supposes, that they taught that there was no resurrection but that which occurs in the soul when it is recovered from the death of sin, and made to live anew. Or it may be that they held that those who had died had experienced all the resurrection which they ever would, by passing into another state, and receiving at death a spiritual body fitted to their mode of being in the heavenly world. Whatever was the form of the opinion, the apostle regarded it as a most dangerous error, for just views of the resurrection undoubtedly lie at the foundation of correct apprehensions of the Christian system. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 12-19.

¶ And overthrow the faith of some. That is, on this point, and as would appear, on all the correlative subjects of Christian belief. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 19, 20.

19. Nevertheless the foundation of God is sure. Marg., steady. The meaning is, that though some had been turned away by the arts of these errorists, yet the foundation of the Church which God had laid remained firm. Comp. Eph. ii. 20: “And are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone.” As long as this foundation remains firm there is no reason to be troubled from the few instances of apostasy which may have occurred. Comp. Psa. xi. 3. It is not uncommon to compare the Church to a building erected on a solid foundation. Eph. ii. 20, 21; 1 Cor. iii. 9, 10; Matt. xvi. 18. ¶ Having this seal. Or rather a seal with this inscription. The word seal is sometimes used to denote the instrument by which an impression is made, and sometimes the impression or inscription itself. A seal is used for security (Matt. xxvii. 66), or as a mark of genuineness. Rev. ix. 4. The seal here is one that was affixed to the foundation, and seems to refer to some inscription on the foundation-stone which always remained there, and which denoted the character and design of the edifice. The allusion is to the custom, in rearing an edifice, of inscribing the name of the builder and the design of the edifice on the corner-stone. See Rosenmüller, Alte u. neue Morgenland, No. 405. So the Church of Christ is a building reared by the hands of God. Its foundation has been firmly and securely laid, and on that foundation there is an inscription always remaining which determines the character of the edifice. ¶ The Lord knoweth them that are his. This is one of the inscriptions on the foundation-stone of the Church, which serves to mark the character of the building. It always stands there, no matter who apostatizes. It is at the same time a fearful inscription—showing that no one can deceive God; that he is intimately acquainted with all who enter that building; that in the multitudes of those which enter there his friends and foes are intimately known. He can separate his own friends from all others, and his constant care will be extended to all who are truly his own, to keep them from falling. This has the appearance of being a quotation, but no such passage is found in the Old Testament in so many words. In Nahum i. 7, the following words are found: “And he knoweth them that trust in him;” and it is possible that Paul may have had that in his eye, but it is not necessary to suppose that he designed it as a quotation. A phrase somewhat similar to this is found in Numb. xvi. 5: “the Lord will show who are his;” rendered in the Septuagint, “God knoweth who are his;” and Whitby supposes that this is the passage referred to. But whether Paul had these passages in view or not, it is clear that he meant to say that it is one of the fundamental things in religion that God knows who are his own people, and that he will preserve them from the danger of making shipwreck of their faith. ¶ And, Let every one that nameth the name of Christ depart from iniquity. This is the other seal or inscription which is made on not only vessels ^a of gold and of silver, but also of wood and of earth; and some to honour, and some to dishonour.

K

21 If ^b a man therefore purge him-

^a Rom. 9. 21.

^b Jer. 15. 19.

the foundation which God has laid. The foundation has two inscriptions—the first implying that God knows all who are his own people; the other, that all who are his professed people should depart from evil. This is not found in so many words in the Old Testament, and, like the former, it is not to be regarded as a quotation. The meaning is, that it is an elementary principle in the true Church, that all who become members of it must lead holy lives. It is also true that they will lead holy lives, and amid all the defections of errorists, and all their attempts to draw away others from the true faith, those may be known to be the true people of God who do avoid evil.

20. But in a great house. Still keeping up the comparison of the Church with a building. The idea is, that the Church is a large edifice, and that in such a building we are not to expect entire uniformity in all the articles which it contains. ¶ There are not only vessels of gold and of silver, etc. You are not to expect to find all the articles of furniture alike, or all made of the same material. Variety in the form, the use, and the material, is necessary in furnishing such a house. ¶ And some to honor, and some to dishonor. Some to most honorable uses—as drinking-vessels, and vessels to contain costly viands, and some for the less honorable purposes connected with cooking, etc. The same thing is to be expected in the Church. See this idea illustrated at greater length under another figure in the Notes on 1 Cor. xii. 14–26. Comp. Notes on Rom. ix. 21. The application here seems to be, that in the Church it is to be presumed that there will be a great variety of gifts and attainments, and that we are no more to expect that all will be alike than we are that all the vessels in a large house will be made of gold.

21. If a man therefore purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor. If a man cleanse or purify himself. Comp. Notes on John xv. 2. The word self from these, he shall be a vessel unto honour, sanctified, and meet for the master's use, and prepared ^c unto every good work.

22 Flee ^d also youthful lusts: but ^e

^c e. c. 3. 17.

^d Eccl. 11. 9, 10.

^e Heb. 12. 14.

“these” refers here to the persons represented by the vessels of wood and of earth—the vessels made to dishonor, as mentioned in the previous verse. The idea is, that if one would preserve himself from the corrupting influence of such men, he would be fitted to be a vessel of honor, or to be employed in the most useful and honorable service in the cause of his Master. On the word vessel, see Notes on Acts ix. 15. ¶ And meet for the Master's use. Fit to be employed by the Lord Jesus in promoting his work on earth.

22. Flee also youthful lusts. Such passions as youth are subject to. On the word flee, and the pertinency of its use in such a connection, see Notes on 1 Cor. vi. 18. Paul felt that Timothy, then a young man, was subject to the same passions as other young men; and hence his repeated cautions to him to avoid all those things, arising from his youth, which might be the occasion of scandal. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 12; v. 2. It is to be remembered that this epistle is applicable to other ministers, as well as to Timothy; and, to a young man in the ministry, no counsel could be more appropriate than to “FLEE from youthful lusts,” not to indulge for a moment in those corrupt passions to which youth are subject, but to cultivate the pure and sober virtues which become the ministerial office. ¶ But follow righteousness, etc. Comp. Notes on Heb. xii. 14. The general meaning here is, that he was to practice all that is good and virtuous. He was to practice righteousness, or justice and equity, in all his dealings with men; faith, or fidelity in his duties; charity, or love to all men (See Notes on 1 Cor. xiii.); peace, or harmony and concord with all others. What virtues could be more appropriate for a minister of the Gospel? ¶ With them that call on the Lord out of a pure heart. That is, with all Christians, who are often characterized as those who call on the Lord. 1 Cor. i. 2. Comp. Acts ix. 11. In all his intercourse with them, Timothy follow righteousness, faith, charity, peace, with them that call ^a on the Lord out of a pure heart.

23 But foolish and unlearned questions ^b avoid, knowing that they do gender strifes.

^a 1 Cor. 1. 2.

^b ver. 16.

was to manifest the virtues above recommended. But not with them alone. It would be incumbent on him to exhibit the same virtues in his intercourse with all.

23. But foolish and unlearned questions avoid. See Notes on ver. 16. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. i. 4, 6; iv. 7. The word unlearned, here, means trifling; that which does not tend to edification; stupid. The Greeks and the Hebrews were greatly given to controversies of various kinds, and many of the questions discussed pertained to points which could not be settled, or which, if settled, were of no importance. Such has been the character of no small part of the disputes which have agitated the world. Paul correctly says that the only effect of such disputes is to engender harsh contention. Points of real importance can be discussed with no injury to the temper; but men can not safely dispute about trifles.

24. And the servant of the Lord. Referring here primarily to the Christian minister, but applicable to all Christians; for all profess to be the servants of the Lord. ¶ Must not strive. He may calmly inquire after truth; he may discuss points of morals or theology, if he will do it with a proper spirit; he may "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints" (Jude 3); but he may not do that which is here mentioned as strife. The Greek word—μάχεσθαι—commonly denotes to fight, to make war, to contend. In John vi. 52; Acts vii. 26; 2 Tim. ii. 24, it is rendered strove and strive; in James iv. 2, fight. It is not elsewhere used in the New Testament. The meaning is that the servant of Christ should be a man of peace. He should not indulge in the feelings which commonly give rise to contention, and which usually characterize it. He should not struggle for mere victory, even when endeavoring to maintain the truth; but he should defend the truth, in all cases, with a kind spirit and a mild temper; with entire

24 And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men, apt to teach,¹ patient,

25 In meekness ^c instructing those that oppose themselves; if God peradventure ^d will give them re-

¹ or, forbearing.

^c Gal. 6. 1.

^d Acts 8. 22.

candor; with nothing designed to provoke and irritate an adversary; and so that, whatever may be the result of the discussion, "the bond of peace" may, if possible, be preserved. Comp. Notes on Rom. xii. 18. ¶ But be gentle unto all men. See Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 7. The word rendered gentle does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. It means that the Christian minister is to be meek and mild toward all; not disputatious and quarrelsome. ¶ Apt to teach. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. ¶ Patient. Marg., forbearing. The Greek word here used does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means, patient under evils and injuries.—Rob., Lex. Comp. Notes on Eph. iv. 2; Col. iii. 13.

25. In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves. That is, those who embrace error, and array themselves against the truth. We are not to become angry with such persons, or to denounce them at once as heretics. We are not to hold them up to public reproach and scorn; but we are to set about the business of patiently instructing them. Their grand difficulty, it is supposed in this direction, is that they are ignorant of the truth. Our business with them is, calmly to show them what the truth is. If they are angry, we are not to be. If they oppose the truth, we are still calmly to state it to them. If they are slow to see it, we are not to become weary or impatient. Nor, if they do not embrace it at all, are we to become angry with them, and denounce them. We may pity them, but we need not use hard words. This is the apostolic precept about the way of treating those who are in error; and can any one fail to see its beauty and propriety? Let it be remembered, also, that this is not only beautiful and proper in itself; it is the wisest course, if we would bring others over to our opinions. You are not likely to convince a man that you are right, and that he is wrong, if you first make him angry; nor are you very likely to do it if you show that you are angry. You penance to the acknowledging ^a of the truth.

26 And that they may ¹ recover

a Tit. 1. 1.

1 awake.

themselves out of the snare ^b of the devil, who are taken ² captive by him at his will.

b 1 Tim. 3. 7.

2 alive.

then put him on his guard; you make him a party, and, from self-respect, or pride, or anger, he will endeavor to defend his own opinions, and will not yield to yours. Meekness and gentleness are the very best things, if you wish to convince another that he is wrong. Win his heart first, and then modestly and kindly show him what the truth is, in as few words and with as unassuming a spirit as possible, and you have him. ¶ If God peradventure will give them repentance, etc. Give them such a view of the error which they have embraced, and such regret for having embraced it, that they will be willing to admit the truth. After all our care in teaching others the truth, our only dependence is on God for its success. We can not be absolutely certain that they will see their error; we can not rely certainly on any power which argument will have; we can only hope that God may show them their error, and enable them to see and embrace the truth. Comp. Acts xi. 18. The word rendered peradventure here—μήποτε—means, usually, not even, never; and then, that never, lest ever—the same as lest perhaps. It is translated lest at any time, Matt. iv. 6; v. 25; xiii. 15; Mark iv. 12; Luke xxi. 34; lest, Matt. vii. 6; xiii. 29; xv. 32, et al.; lest haply, Luke xiv. 12; Acts v. 39. It does not imply that there was any chance about what is said, but rather that there was uncertainty in the mind of the speaker, and that there was need of caution lest something should occur; or lest any thing was done, or should be done, to prevent something from happening. It is not used elsewhere in the New Testament in the sense which our translators, and all the critics, so far as I have examined, give to it here—as implying a hope that God would give them repentance, etc. But I may be permitted to suggest another interpretation, which will accord with the uniform meaning of the word in the New Testament, and which will refer the matter to those who had embraced the error, and not to God. It is this: “In meekness instructing those that oppose themselves (ἀντιδιὰτιθεμένων) lest—μήποτε—God should give them repentance, and they should recover themselves out of the snare of the devil,” etc. That is, they put themselves in this posture of opposition so that they shall not be brought to repentance, and recover themselves. They do it with a precautionary view that they may not be thus brought to repentance, and be recovered to God. They take this position of opposition to the truth, intending not to be converted; and this is the reason why they are not converted.

26. And that they may recover themselves. Marg., awake. The word which is rendered recover in the text, and awake in the margin—ἀνανήψωσιν—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It properly means, to become sober again, as from inebriation; to awake from a deep sleep; and then, to come to a right mind, as one does who is aroused from a state of inebriety or from sleep. The representation in this part of the verse implies that, while under the influence of error, they were like a man intoxicated, or like one in deep slumber. From this state they were to be aroused, as one is from sleep, or as a man is recovered from the stupor and dullness of intoxication. ¶ Out of the snare of the devil. The snare which the devil has spread for them, and in which they have become entangled. There is a little confusion of metaphor here, since, in the first part of the verse, they are represented as asleep or intoxicated; and, here, as taken in a snare. Yet the general idea is clear. In one part of the verse the influence of error is represented as producing sleep or stupor; in the other, as being taken in a snare or net; and, in both, the idea is, that an effort was to be made that they might be rescued from this perilous condition. ¶ Who are taken captive by him at his will. Marg., alive. The Greek word means, properly, to take alive; and then, to take captive, to win over (Luke v. 10); and then, to ensnare or seduce. Here it means that they had been ensnared by the arts of Satan unto (εἰς) his will; that is, they were so influenced by him that they complied with his will. Another interpretation of this passage should be mentioned here, by which it is proposed to avoid the incongruousness of the metaphor of awaking one from a snare. It is adopted by Doddridge, and is suggested also by Burder, as quoted by Rosenmüller, A. u. n. Morgenland. According to this, the reference is to an artifice of fowlers to scatter seeds impregnated with some intoxicating drugs, intended to lay birds asleep, that they may draw the snare over them more securely. There can be no doubt that such arts were practiced, and it is possible that Paul may have alluded to it. Whatever is the allusion, the general idea is clear. It is an affecting representation of those who have fallen into error. They are in a deep slumber. They are as if under the fatal influence of some stupefying potion. They are like birds taken alive in this state, and at the mercy of the fowler. They will remain in this condition unless they shall be roused by the mercy of God; and it is the business of the ministers of religion to carry to them that Gospel which God is accustomed to bless in showing men their danger. That message should be continually sounded in the ears of the sinner, with the prayer and the hope that God will make it the means of arousing him to seek his salvation.

CHAPTER III.

THIS know also, that^a in the last days perilous times shall come.

^a 1 Tim. 4. 1. 2 Pet. 3. 3 1 John 2. 18. Jude 17, 18.

CHAPTER III.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

In the first part of this chapter (ver. 1-8) Paul reminds Timothy of the great apostasy which was to be expected in the Church, and states some of the characteristics of it. In ver. 9 he says that that apostasy would not always continue; but would be at some time arrested, and so arrested as to show to all men the folly of those who were concerned in it. In vs. 11, 12, he refers Timothy to his own manner of life in the midst of persecutions, as an encouragement to him to bear the trials which might be expected to occur to him in a similar manner. "Perilous times" were to come, and Timothy might be expected to be called to pass through trials similar to those which Paul himself had experienced. In those times the remembrance of his example would be invaluable. In vs. 12, 13, he assures Timothy that persecutions and trials were to be expected by all who aimed to lead holy lives, and that it was as certainly to be expected that evil men would become worse and worse. And in ver. 14-17 he exhorts him to be steadfast in maintaining the truth; and, to encourage him to do this, reminds him of his early training in the Holy Scriptures, and of the value of those Scriptures. To the Scriptures he might repair in all times of trial, and find support in the divine promises. What he had learned there was the inspired truth of God, and was able to make him wise, and to furnish him abundantly for all that he was to do or to suffer.

2 For^b men shall be lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient,

^b Rom. 1. 29-31.

1. This know also. The object of this reference to the perilous times which were to occur was evidently to show the necessity of using every precaution to preserve the purity of the Church, from the fact that such sad scenes were to open upon it. The apostle had dwelt upon this subject in his first epistle to Timothy (ch. iv.), but its importance leads him to advert to it again. ¶ In the last days. Under the Gospel dispensation; some time in that period during which the affairs of the world will be closed up. See Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 1, and Heb. i. 2. ¶ Perilous times shall come. Times of danger, of persecution, and of trial. On the general meaning of this passage, and the general characteristics of those times, the reader may consult the Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 1-12, and 1 Tim. iv. 1-3. There can be no doubt that in all these passages the apostle refers to the same events.

2. For men shall be lovers of their own selves. It will be one of the characteristics of those times that men will be eminently selfish—evidently under the garb of religion. Ver. 5. The word here used—φιλαυτος—does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means a lover of one's self, selfish. Such a love of self as to lead us to secure our salvation, is proper. But such regard to ourselves interferes with the rights and happiness of no other persons. The selfishness which dient to parents, unthankful, unholy,

3 Without natural affection, truce-breakers,¹ false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good,

1 or, makebates.

a 2 Pet. 2, 10, etc.

4 Traitors,^a heady, high-minded,^b lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God;

5 Having^c a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof: from such turn away.

b Phil. 3, 19.

c Tit. 1, 16.

is here condemned is that regard to our own interests which interferes with the rights and comforts of others; which makes self the central and leading object of living; and which tramples on all that would interfere with that. As such, it is a base, a hateful, and a narrow passion; but it has been so common in the world that no one can doubt the correctness of the prophecy of the apostle that it would exist "in the last times." ¶ Covetous. Gr., Lovers of silver; that is, of money. Luke vi. 14. See Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 10. ¶ Boasters. See Notes on Rom. i. 30. ¶ Proud. See Notes on Rom. i. 30. ¶ Blasphemers. See Notes on Matt. ix. 3. ¶ Disobedient to parents. See Notes on Rom. i. 30. ¶ Unthankful. See Luke vi. 35. The word here used occurs in the New Testament only in these two places. Ingratitude has always been regarded as one of the worst of crimes. It is said here that it would characterize that wicked age of which the apostle speaks, and its prevalence would, as it always does, indicate a decline of religion. Religion makes us grateful to every benefactor—to God and to man. ¶ Unholy. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 9.

3. Without natural affection. See Notes on Rom. i. 31. ¶ Trucebreakers. The same word in Rom. i. 31, is rendered implacable. See Notes on that verse. It properly means without treaty; that is, those who are averse to any treaty or compact. It may thus refer to those who are unwilling to enter into any agreement; that is, either those who are unwilling to be reconciled to others when there is a variance—implacable; or those who disregard treaties or agreements. In either case, this marks a very corrupt condition of society. Nothing would be more indicative of the lowest state of degradation than that in which all compacts and agreements were utterly disregarded. ¶ False accusers. Marg., makebates. The word makebate means one who excites contentions and quarrels.—Webster. The Greek here is διάβολοι—devils—the primitive meaning of which is, calumniator, slanderer, accuser. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 11, where the word is rendered slanderers. ¶ Incontinent. 1 Cor. vii. 5. Literally, without strength; that is, without strength to resist the sollicitations of passion, or who readily yield to it. ¶ Fierce. The Greek word used here—ἀνήμερος—does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means ungentle, harsh, severe, and is the opposite of gentleness and mildness. Religion produces gentleness; the want of it makes men rough, harsh, cruel. Comp. Notes on eh. ii. 24. ¶ Despisers of those that are good. In Titus i. 8, it is said of a bishop that he must be "a lover of good men." This, in every condition of life, is a virtue, and hence the opposite of it is here set down as one of the characteristics of that evil age of which the apostle speaks.

4. Traitors. This word is used in the New Testament only here and in Luke vi. 16, Acts vii. 52. It means any one who betrays—whether it be a friend or his country. Treason has been in all ages regarded as one of the worst crimes that man can commit. ¶ Heady. The same word in Acts xix. 36, is rendered rashly. It occurs only there and in this place in the New Testament. It properly means falling forward; prone, inclined, ready to do anything; then precipitate, headlong, rash. It is opposed to that which is deliberate and calm, and here means that men would be ready to do any thing without deliberation, or regard for the consequences. They would engage in enterprises which would only disturb society, or prove their own ruin. ¶ High-minded. Literally, puffed up. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 6, where the same word is rendered lifted up with pride. The meaning is, that they would be inflated with pride or self-conceit. ¶ Lovers of pleasures more than lovers of God. That is, of sensual pleasures, or vain amusements. This has been, and is, the characteristic of a great part of the world, and has often distinguished even many who profess religion. Of a large portion of mankind it may be said that it is their characteristic that they live for pleasure; they have no serious pursuits; they brook no restraints which interfere with their amusements, and they greatly prefer the pleasures to be found in the gay assembly, in the ball-room, or in the place of low dissipation, to the friendship of their Creator.

6 For of this sort are they which " creep into houses, and lead cap-

^a Tit. 1. 11.

5. Having a form of godliness. That is, they profess religion, or are in connection with the Church. This shows that the apostle referred to some great corruption in the Church; and there can be little doubt that he had his eye on the same great apostasy to which he refers in 2 Thess. ii., and 1 Tim. iv. All the things to which he refers here have been practiced and tolerated in that apostate Church; while no body of men, at any time, have been more zealous in maintaining a form of godliness; that is, in keeping up the forms of religion. ¶ But denying the power thereof. Opposing the real power of religion; not allowing it to exert any influence on their lives. It imposes no restraint on their passions and carnal propensities, but in all respects, except in the form of religion, they live as if they had none. This has been common in the world. The most regular and bigoted adherence to the forms of religion furnishes no evidence in itself that there is any true piety at heart, or that true religion has any actual control over the soul. It is much easier for men to observe the forms of religion than it is to bring the heart under its controlling influence. ¶ From such turn away. Have no intercourse with them as if they were Christians; show no countenance to their religion; do not associate with them. Comp. 2 John, 10, 11. See Notes on 2 Cor. vi. 17.

6. For of this sort are they which creep into houses. Who go slyly and insidiously into families. They are not open and manly in endeavoring to propagate their views, but they endeavor by their address to ingratiate themselves first with weak women, and through them to influence men. Comp. Titus i. 11. The word trans-lative silly women laden with sins, led away with divers lusts,

lated "creep into" is rendered by Doddridge, insinuate themselves; by Bloomfield, wind their way into, in the manner of serpents; by Bretschneider, deceitfully enter; by Robinson and Passow, go in, enter in. It is not certain that the idea of deceit or cunning is contained in this word, yet the whole complexion of the passage implies that they made their way by art and deceitful tricks. ¶ And lead captive silly women. One of the tricks always played by the advocates of error, and one of the ways by which they seek to promote their purposes. Satan began his work of temptation with Eve rather than with Adam, and the advocates of error usually follow his example. There are always weak-minded women enough in any community to give an opportunity of practicing these arts, and often the aims of the impostor and deceiver can be best secured by appealing to them. Such women are easily flattered; they are charmed by the graceful manners of religious instructors; they lend a willing ear to any thing that has the appearance of religion, and their hearts are open to any thing that promises to advance the welfare of the world. At the same time, they are just such persons as the propagators of error can rely on. They have leisure; they have wealth; they are busy; they move about in society, and by their activity they obtain an influence to which they are by no means entitled by their piety or talents. There are, indeed, very many women in the world who can not be so easily led away as men; but it can not be denied also that there are those who are just adapted to the purposes of such as seek to spread plausible error. The word rendered silly women, means, properly, little women, and then weak women. ¶ Laden with sins. With so many sins that they seem to be burdened with them. The idea is, that they are under the influence of sinful desires and propensities, and hence are better adapted to the purposes of deceivers. ¶ Led away with divers lusts. With various kinds of passions or desires — ἐπιθυμίας — such as pride, vanity, the love of novelty, or a susceptibility to flattery, so as to make them an easy prey to impostors.

7 Ever learning, and never able to come to the knowledge of the truth.

8 Now as Jannes and Jambres^a withstood Moses, so do these also resist the truth: men^b of corrupt minds,¹ reprobate concerning the faith.

^a Exod. 7. 11.

9 But they shall proceed no further: for their folly shall be man-

^b 1 Tim. 6. 5.

¹ or, of no judgment.

7. Ever learning. That is, these "silly women:" for so the Greek demands. The idea is, that they seem to be disciples and learners. They put themselves wholly under the care of these professedly religious teachers, but they never acquire a true knowledge of the way of salvation. ¶ And never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. They may learn many things, but the true nature of religion they do not learn. There are many such persons in the world, who, whatever attention they may pay to religion, never understand its nature. Many obtain much speculative acquaintance with the doctrines of Christianity, but never become savingly acquainted with the system; many study the constitution and government of the Church, but remain strangers to practical piety; many become familiar with the various philosophical theories of religion, but never become truly acquainted with what religion is; and many embrace visionary theories, who never show that they are influenced by the spirit of the Gospel. Nothing is more common than for persons to be very busy and active in religion, and even to learn many things about it, who still remain strangers to the saving power of the Gospel.

8. Now as Jannes and Jambres withstood Moses. The names of these two men are not elsewhere mentioned in the Bible. They are supposed to have been two of the magicians who resisted Moses (Exod. vii. 11, et al.), and who opposed their miracles to those of Moses and Aaron. It is not certain where the apostle obtained their names; but they are frequently mentioned by the Hebrew writers, and also by other writers; so that there can be no reasonable doubt that their names were correctly handed down by tradition. Nothing is more probable than that the names of the more distinguished magicians who attempted to imitate the miracles of Moses would be preserved by tradition; and though they are not mentioned by Moses himself, and the Jews have told many ridiculous stories respecting them, yet this should not lead us to doubt the truth of the tradition respecting their names. A full collection of the Jewish statements in regard to them may be found in Wetstein, in loc. They are also mentioned by Pliny, Nat. Hist. xxx., 7; and by Numenius, the philosopher, as quoted by Eusebius, ix., 8, and Origen, against Celsus, p. 199. See Wetstein. By the rabbinical writers, they are sometimes mentioned as Egyptian magicians who opposed Moses in Egypt, and sometimes as the sons of Balaam. The more common account is, that they were the princes of the Egyptian magicians. One of the Jewish rabbins represents them as having been convinced by the miracles of Moses, and as having become converts to the Hebrew religion. There is no reason to doubt that these were in fact the leading men who opposed Moses in Egypt, by attempting to work counter miracles. The point of the remark of the apostle here is that they resisted Moses by attempting to imitate his miracles, thus neutralizing the evidence that he was sent from God. In like manner, the persons here referred to opposed the progress of the Gospel by setting up a similar claim to that of the apostles; by pretending to have as much authority as they had; and by thus neutralizing the claims of the true religion, and leading off weak-minded persons from the truth. This is often the most dangerous opposition that is made to religion. ¶ Men of corrupt minds. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 5. ¶ Reprobate concerning the faith. So far as the Christian faith is concerned. On the word rendered reprobate, see Notes on Rom. i. 28. Comp. 1 Cor. ix. 27, rendered cast-away; and 2 Cor. xiii. 5. The margin here is, "of no judgment." The meaning is, that in respect to the Christian faith, or the doctrines of religion, their views could not be approved, and they were not to be regarded as true teachers of religion.

9. But they shall proceed no further. There is a certain point beyond which ifest unto all men, as their's also was.

they will not be allowed to go. Their folly will become manifest, and the world will understand it. The apostle does not say how far these false teachers would be allowed to go, but that they would not be suffered always to prosper and prevail. They might be plausible at first, and lead many astray; they might, by art and cunning, cover up the real character of their system; but there would be a fair development of it, and it would be seen to be folly. The statement here may be understood as a general truth in regard to error. It is often so plausible at first that it seems to be true. It wins the hearts of many persons, and leads them astray. It flatters them personally, or it flatters them with the hope of a better state of things in the Church and the world. But the time will always come when men will see the folly of it. Error will advance only to a certain point, when it will be seen to be falsehood and folly, and when the world will arise and cast it off. In some cases, this point may be slower in being reached than in others; but there is a point beyond which error will not go. At the reformation under Luther that point had been reached, when the teachings of the great apostasy were seen to be "folly," and when the awakened intellect of the world would allow it to "proceed no further," and aroused itself and threw it off. In the workings of society, as well as by the direct appointment of God, there is a point beyond which error can not prevail; and hence there is a certainty that truth will finally triumph. ¶ For their folly shall be manifest unto all men. The world will see and understand what they are and what they teach. They will not be able always to deceive mankind by smooth sophistry and cunning arts. ¶ As their's also was. That of Jannes and Jambres. That is, it became manifest to all that they could not compete with Moses and Aaron; that their claims to the power of working miracles were the mere arts of magicians, and that they had set up pretensions which they could not sustain. Comp. Exod. viii. 18, 19. In regard to the time to which the apostle referred in this description, it has already been observed (see Notes on ver. 1) that it was probably to that great apostasy of the "latter days" which he has described in 2 Thess. ii., and 1 Tim. iv. But there seems to be no reason to doubt that he had his eye immediately on some persons who had appeared then, and who had evinced some of the traits which would characterize the great apostasy, and whose conduct showed that the great "falling away" had already commenced. In 2 Thess. ii. 7, he says that the "mystery of iniquity" was already at work, or was even then manifesting itself; and the apostle undoubtedly saw that there had then commenced what he knew would yet grow up into the great defection from the truth. In some persons, at that time, who had the form of godliness but who denied its power; who made use of insinuating arts to proselyte the weak and the credulous; who endeavored to imitate the true apostles, perhaps by attempting to work miracles, as Jannes and Jambres did, he saw the germ of what was yet to grow up into so gigantic a system of iniquity as to overshadow the world. Yet he consoled Timothy with the assurance that there was a point beyond which the system of error would not be allowed to go, but where its folly must be seen, and where it would be arrested.

10 But thou hast ¹ fully known my doctrine, manner of life, pur-

1 or, been a diligent follower of.

10. But thou hast fully known my doctrine, etc. Marg., been a diligent follower of. The margin is more in accordance with the usual meaning of the Greek word, which means, properly, to accompany side by side; to follow closely; to trace out; to examine (Luke i. 3), and to conform to. The meaning here, however, seems to be, that Timothy had an opportunity to follow out; that is, to examine closely the manner of life of the apostle Paul. He had been so long his companion that he had had the fullest opportunity of knowing how he had lived and taught, and how he had borne persecutions. The object of this reference to his own life and sufferings is evidently to encourage Timothy to bear persecutions and trials in the same manner. Comp. ver. 14. He saw in the events which began already to pose, faith, long-suffering, charity, patience,

11 Persecutions, afflictions, which came unto me at Antioch, ^a at Ico-

^a Acts 13. 45, 50.

develop themselves, that trials must be expected; he knew that all who would live holy lives must suffer persecution; and hence he sought to prepare the mind of Timothy for the proper endurance of trials by a reference to his own case. The word doctrine, here, refers to his teaching, or manner of giving instruction. It does not refer, as the word now does, to the opinions which he held. See Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 16. In regard to the opportunities which Timothy had for knowing the manner of Paul's life, see the Introduction to the Epistle, and Paley, Hor. Paul., in loc. Timothy had been the companion of Paul during a considerable portion of the time after his conversion. The persecutions referred to here (ver. 11) are those which occurred in the vicinity of Timothy's native place, and which he would have had a particular opportunity of being acquainted with. This circumstance, and the fact that Paul did not refer to other persecutions in more remote places, is one of the "undesigned coincidences" of which Paley has made so much in his incomparable little work—the Horæ Paulineæ. ¶ Manner of life. Literally, leading, guidance; then, the method in which one is led—his manner of life. Comp. Notes on 1 Thess. ii. 1. ¶ Purpose. Plans, or designs. ¶ Faith. Perhaps fidelity, or faithfulness. ¶ Long-suffering. With the evil passions of others, and their efforts to injure him. See the word explained in the Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. 4. ¶ Charity. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. ¶ Patience. "A calm temper, which suffers evils without murmuring or discontent." —Webster.

11. Persecutions. On the meaning of this word, see Notes on Matt. v. 10. ¶ Afflictions. Trials of other kinds than those which arose from persecutions. The apostle met them every where. Comp. Notes on Acts xx. 23. ¶ Which came unto me at Antioch. The Antioch here referred to is not the capital of Syria (see Notes on Acts xi. 19), but a city of the same name in Pisidia, in Asia Minor. See Notes on Acts xiii. 14. Paul there suffered persecution from the Jews. Acts xiii.

nium, ^b at Lystra; what persecutions I endured: but out of them all ^c the Lord delivered me.

12 Yea, and all that will live

^b Acts 14. 5, 6, 19.

^c Psa. 34. 19.

45. ¶ At Iconium. See Notes on Acts xiii. 50. On the persecution there, see Notes on Acts xiv. 3-6. ¶ At Lystra. Acts xiv. 6. At this place Paul was stoned. Acts xiv. 19. Timothy was a native of either Derbe or Lystra, cities near to each other, and was doubtless there at the time of this occurrence. Acts xvi. 1. But out of them all the Lord delivered me. See the history in the places referred to in the Acts.

12. Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Paul takes occasion, from the reference to his own persecutions, to say that his case was not peculiar. It was the common lot of all who endeavored to serve their Redeemer faithfully; and Timothy himself, therefore, must not hope to escape from it. The apostle had a particular reference, doubtless, to his own times; but he has put his remark into the most general form, as applicable to all periods. It is undoubtedly true at all times, and will ever be, that they who are devoted Christians; who live as the Saviour did; and who carry out his principles always, will experience some form of persecution. The essence of persecution consists in subjecting a person to injury or disadvantage on account of his opinions. It is something more than meeting his opinions by argument, which is always right and proper; it is inflicting some injury on him; depriving him of some privilege or right; subjecting him to disadvantage, or placing him in less favorable circumstances, on account of his sentiments. This may be either by an injury done to his feelings, his family, his reputation, his property, his liberty, his influence; it may be by depriving him of an office which he held, or preventing him from obtaining one to which he is eligible; it may be by subjecting him to fine or imprisonment, to banishment, to torture, or to death. If, in any manner, or in any way, he is subjected to disadvantage on account of his religious opinions, and deprived of any immunities and rights to which he would be otherwise entitled, this is persecution. It godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution.

13 But evil men and seducers

a 2 Thess. 2. 11.

is doubtless as true at the present time as it ever was, that a man who will live as the Saviour did, will, like him, be subjected to some such injury or disadvantage. On account of his opinions he may be held up to ridicule, or treated with neglect, or excluded from society to which his attainments and manners would otherwise introduce him, or shunned by those who might otherwise value his friendship. These things may be expected in the best times, and under the most favorable circumstances; and it is known that a large part of the history of the world, in its relation to the Church, is nothing more than a history of persecution. It follows, from this, (1.) that they who make a profession of religion should be prepared to be persecuted. It should be considered as one of the proper qualifications for membership in the Church, to be willing to bear persecution, and to resolve not to shrink from any duty in order to avoid it. (2.) They who are persecuted for their opinions, should consider that this may be one evidence that they have the spirit of Christ, and are his true friends. They should remember that, in this respect, they are treated as the Master was, and are in the goodly company of the prophets, apostles, and martyrs; for they were all persecuted. Yet, (3.) if we are persecuted, we should carefully inquire, before we avail ourselves of this consolation, whether we are persecuted because we "live godly in Christ Jesus," or for some other reason. A man may embrace some absurd opinion, and call it religion; he may adopt some mode of dress irresistibly ludicrous, from the mere love of singularity, and may call it conscience; or he may be boorish in his manners, and uncivil in his deportment, outraging all the laws of social life, and may call this "deadness to the world;" and for these, and similar things, he may be contemned, ridiculed, and despised. But let him not infer, therefore, that he is to be enrolled among the martyrs, and that he is certainly a real Christian. That persecution which will properly furnish any evidence that we are the friends of shall wax worse and worse, deceiving, and being ^a deceived.

14 But continue ^b thou in the

b c. 1. 13.

Christ, must be only that which is "for righteousness sake" (Matt. v. 10), and must be brought upon us in an honest effort to obey the commands of God. (4.) Let those who have never been persecuted in any way inquire whether it is not an evidence that they have no religion. If they had been more faithful, and more like their Master, would they have always escaped? And may not their freedom from it prove that they have surrendered the principles of their religion where they should have stood firm, though the world were arrayed against them? It is easy for a professed Christian to avoid persecution, if he yields every point in which religion is opposed to the world. But let not a man who will do this suppose that he has any claim to be numbered among the martyrs, or even entitled to the Christian name.

13. But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse. That is, it is the character of such men to do this; they may be expected to do it. This is the general law of depravity—that if men are not converted they are always growing worse, and sinking deeper into iniquity. Comp. Matt. xii. 43–45. Their progress will be certain, though it may be gradual, since nemo repente turpissimus. The connection here is this: that Timothy was not to expect that he would be exempt from persecution (ver. 12) by any change for the better in the wicked men referred to. He was to anticipate in them the operation of the general law in regard to bad men and seducers—that they would grow worse and worse. From this fact, he was to regard it as certain that he, as well as others, would be liable to be persecuted. The word rendered seducers—γῶνις—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, a juggler, or diviner; and then, a deceiver, or impostor. Here it refers to those who, by seductive arts, lead persons into error. ¶ Deceiving. Making others believe that to be true and right which is false and wrong. This was, of course, done by seductive arts. ¶ And being deceived. Under delusion themselves. The advocates of error are often themselves things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of, knowing of whom thou hast learned them ;

15 And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures, which ^a are able to make thee wise

^a John 5. 39.

as really under deception as those whom they impose upon. They are often sincere in the belief of error, and then they are under a delusion ; or, if they are insincere, they are equally deluded in supposing that they can make error pass for truth before God, or can deceive the Searcher of hearts. The worst victims of delusion are those who attempt to delude others.

14. But continue thou in the things which thou hast learned and hast been assured of. To wit, the truths of religion. Timothy had been taught those truths when a child, and he had been confirmed in them by the instructions of Paul. Amid the errors and seductions of false teachers, Paul now exhorts him to hold fast those doctrines, whoever might oppose them, or whatever might be the consequence. Comp. Notes on ch. i.

13. ¶ Knowing of whom thou hast learned them. To wit, of his mother (ch. i. 5), and of Paul. Ch. i. 13. The reference seems to be particularly to the fact that he had learned these truths first from the lips of a mother (see ver. 15) ; and the doctrine taught here is, that the fact that we have received the views of truth from a parent's lips is a strong motive for adhering to them. It is not to be supposed, indeed, that this is the highest motive, or that we are always to adhere to the doctrines which have been taught us, if, on maturer examination, we are convinced they are erroneous ; but that this is a strong reason for adhering to what we have been taught in early life. It is so, because (1.) a parent has no motive for deceiving a child, and it can not be supposed that he would teach him what he knew to be false ; (2.) a parent usually has had much more experience, and much better opportunities of examining what is true, than his child has ; (3.) there is a degree of respect which nature teaches us to be due to the sentiments of a parent. A child should depart very slowly from the opinions held by a father or mother ; and, when it is done, it should be only as the result of prolonged examination and prayer. These considerations should have the greater weight if a parent has been eminent for piety, and especially if that parent has been removed to heaven. A child, standing by the grave of a pious father or mother, should reflect and pray much before he deliberately adopts opinions which he knows that father or mother would regard as wrong.

15. And that from a child thou hast known the holy Scriptures. That is, the Old Testament ; for the New Testament was not then written. Comp. Notes on John v. 39. The mother of Timothy was a pious Hebrewess, and regarded it as one of the duties of her religion to train her son in the careful knowledge of the Word of God. This was regarded by the Hebrews as an important duty of religion, and there is reason to believe that it was commonly faithfully performed. The Jewish writings abound with lessons on this subject. Rabbi Judah says, "The boy of five years of age ought to apply to the study of the sacred Scriptures." Rabbi Solomon, on Deut. xi. 19, says, "When the boy begins to talk, his father ought to converse with him in the sacred language, and to teach him the law ; if he does not do that, he seems to bury him." See numerous instances referred to in Wetstein, in loc. The expression used by Paul — from a child (ἀπὸ βρέφους) — does not make it certain at precisely what age Timothy was first instructed in the Scriptures, though it would denote an early age. The word used — βρέφος — denotes, (1.) a babe unborn, Luke i. 41, 44 ; (2.) an infant, babe, suckling. In the New Testament, it is rendered babe and babes, Luke i. 41, 44 ; ii. 12, 16 ; 1 Pet. ii. 2 ; infants, Luke viii. 15 ; and young children, Acts vii. 19. It does not elsewhere occur, and its current use would make it probable that Timothy had been taught the Scriptures as soon as he was capable of learning any thing. Dr. Doddridge correctly renders it here "from infancy." It may be remarked then, (1.) that it is proper to teach the Bible to children at as early a period of life as possible. (2.) That there is reason to hope that such instruction will not be forgotten, but that it will have a salutary influence on their future lives. The piety of Timothy is traced by the apostle to unto salvation through faith which is in Christ Jesus.

a 2 Pet. i. 21.

the fact that he had been early taught to read the Scriptures. This is also true now, that a large proportion of those who are in the Church have been early made acquainted with the Bible. (3.) It is proper to teach the Old Testament to children—since this was all that Timothy had, and this was made the means of his salvation. (4.) We may see the utility of Sabbath-schools. The great, and almost the sole object of such schools is to teach the Bible, and from the views which Paul had of the advantage to Timothy of having been early made acquainted with the Bible, there can be no doubt that if Sunday-schools had then been in existence, he would have been their hearty patron and friend. ¶ Which are able to make thee wise unto salvation. So to instruct you in the way of salvation that you may find the path of life. Learn, hence, (1.) that the plan of salvation may be learned from the Old Testament. It is not as clearly revealed there as it is in the New, but it is there; and if a man had only the Old Testament, he might find the way to be saved. The Jew, then, has no excuse if he is not saved. (2.) The Scriptures have power. They are “able to make one wise to salvation.” They are not a cold, tame, dead thing. There is no book that has so much power as the Bible; none that is so efficient in moving the hearts, the consciences, and the intellects of mankind. There is no book that has moved so many minds; none that has produced so deep and permanent effects on the world. (3.) To find the way of salvation is the best kind of wisdom, and none are wise who do not make that the great object of life. ¶ Through faith which is in Christ Jesus. See Notes on Mark xvi. 16; Rom. i. 17. Paul knew of no salvation except through the Lord Jesus. He says, therefore, that the study of the Scriptures, valuable as they are, will not save the soul unless there is faith in the Redeemer; and it is implied, also, that the proper effect of a careful study of the Old Testament will be to lead one to put his trust in the Messiah.

16. All Scripture. This properly refers to the Old Testament, and should not be applied to any part of the New Testament, unless it can be shown that

16 All ^a Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and ^b is profitable

δ Rom. 15. 4.

that part was then written, and was included under the general name of the Scriptures. Compare 2 Pet. iii. 15, 16. But it includes the whole of the Old Testament, and is the solemn testimony of Paul that it was all inspired. If now it can be proved that Paul himself was an inspired man, this settles the question as to the inspiration of the Old Testament. ¶ Is given by inspiration of God. All this is expressed in the original by one word—θεόπνευστος—theopneustos. This word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It properly means, God-inspired—from θεός, God, πνέω, to breathe, to breathe out. The idea of breathing upon, or breathing into the soul, is that which the word naturally conveys. Thus God breathed into the nostrils of Adam the breath of life (Gen. ii. 7), and thus the Saviour breathed on his disciples, and said, “receive ye the Holy Ghost.” John xx. 22. The idea seems to have been that the life is in the breath, and that an intelligent spirit was communicated with the breath. The expression was used among the Greeks, and a similar one was employed by the Romans. Plutarch, ed. R., ix., 583, 9: τοὺς δυνέρου τοὺς θεοπνεύστους. Phocylid., 121: τῆς δὲ θεοπνεύστου σοφίης λόγος ἐστὶν ἄριστος. Perhaps, however, this is not an expression of Phocylides, but of the pseudo Phocylides. So it is understood by Bloomfield. Cicero, pro Arch., 8: poetam—quasi divino quodam spiritu inflari. The word does not occur in the Septuagint, but is found in Josephus, C. Ap., i., 7: “The Scripture of the prophets who were taught according to the inspiration of God”—κατὰ τὴν ἐπίπνοιαν τὴν ἀπὸ τοῦ θεοῦ. In regard to the manner of inspiration, and to the various questions which have been started as to its nature, nothing can be learned from the use of this word. It asserts a fact—that the Old Testament was composed under a divine influence which might be represented by breathing on one, and so imparting life. But the language must be figurative; for God does not breathe, though the fair inference is that those Scriptures are as much the production of God, or are as much to be traced to him, as life is. Comp. Matt. xxii. 43; 2 Pet. i. 21. The question as to the degree of inspiration, and whether it extends to the words of Scripture, and how far the sacred writers were left to the exercise of their own faculties, is foreign to the design of these Notes. All that is necessary to be held is, that the sacred writers were kept from error on those subjects which were matters of their own observation, or which pertained to memory; and that there were truths imparted to them directly by the Spirit of God which they could never have arrived at by the unaided exercise of their own minds. Comp. Introd. to Isaiah and Job. ¶ And is profitable. It is useful; it is adapted to give instruction, to administer reproof, etc. If "all" Scripture is thus valuable, then we are to esteem no part of the Old Testament as worthless. There is no portion of it, even now, which may not be fitted, in certain circumstances, to furnish us valuable lessons, and, consequently, no part of it which could be spared from the sacred canon. There is no part of the human body which is not useful in its place, and no part of it which can be spared without sensible loss. ¶ For doctrine. For teaching or communicating instruction. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 16. ¶ For reproof. On the meaning of the word here rendered reproof—ἐλεγχος—see Notes on Heb. xi. 1. It here means, probably, for convincing; that is, convincing a man of his sins, of the truth and claims of religion, etc. See Notes on John xvi. 8. ¶ For correction. The word here used—ἐπανόρθωσις—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, a setting to rights, reparation, restoration from (ἐπανορθώω, to right up again, to restore); and here means the leading to a correction or amendment of life—a reformation. The meaning is, that the Scriptures are a powerful means of reforming mankind, or of putting them into the proper condition in regard to morals. After all the other means which are employed to reform the world—all the appeals which are made to men on the score of health, happiness, respectability, property, and long life—the Word of God is the most powerful and the most effectual means of recovering those who have fallen into vice. No reformation can be permanent which is not based on the principles of the Word of God. ¶ For instruction in righteousness. Instruction in regard to the principles of justice, or what is right. Man needs only to be made acquainted with truth to be convinced of his error, and to be reformed; but he needs to be taught what is right, or what is required of him, in order that he may lead a holy life. Every reformed and regenerated man needs instruction, and should not be left merely with the evidence that he is reformed, or converted. He should be followed with the principles of the Word of God, to show him how he may lead an upright life. The Scriptures furnish the rules of holy living in abundance, and thus they are adapted to the whole work of recovering man, and of guiding him to heaven.

for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness;

a Psa. 119. 98-100.

17 That the man of God may be perfect, ^a thoroughly ¹ furnished unto all good works.

1 or, perfected.

17. That the man of God may be perfect. The object is not merely to convince and to convert him; it is to furnish all the instruction needful for his entire perfection. The idea here is, not that any one is absolutely perfect, but that the Scriptures have laid down the way which leads to perfection, and that, if any one were perfect, he would find in the Scriptures all the instruction which he needed in those circumstances. There is no deficiency in the Bible for man in any of the situations in which he may be placed in life; and the whole tendency of the book is to make him who will put himself fairly under its instructions absolutely perfect. ¶ Thoroughly furnished unto all good works. Marg., "or perfected." The Greek means, to bring to an end; to make complete. The idea is, that whatever good work the man of God desires to perform, or however perfect he aims to be, he will find no deficiency in the Scriptures, but will find there the most ample instructions that he needs. He can never advance so far as to become forsaken of his guide. He can never make such progress as to have gone in advance of the volume of revealed truth, and to be thrown upon his own resources in a region which was not thought of by the Author of the Bible. No new phase of human affairs can ap-

CHAPTER IV.

I CHARGE ^a thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ,

^a 1 Tim. 5. 21 ; 6. 13.

who shall judge ^b the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom ;

^b Rev. 20. 12, 13.

pear in which it will not direct him ; no new plan of benevolence can be started for which he will not find principles there to guide him ; and he can make no progress in knowledge or holiness where he will not feel that his holy counselor is in advance of him still, and that it is capable of conducting him even yet into higher and purer regions. Let us, then, study and prize the Bible. It is a holy and a safe guide. It has conducted millions along the dark and dangerous way of life, and has never led one astray. The human mind, in its investigations of truth, has never gone beyond its teachings ; nor has man ever advanced into a region so bright that its light has become dim, or where it has not thrown its beams of glory on still far distant objects. We are often in circumstances in which we feel that we have reached the outer limit of what man can teach us ; but we never get into such circumstances in regard to the Word of God.

How precious is the book divine,

By inspiration given !

Bright as a lamp its doctrines shine,

To guide our souls to heaven.

It sweetly cheers our drooping hearts

In this dark vale of tears ;

Life, light, and joy, it still imparts,

And quells our rising fears.

This lamp, through all the tedious night

Of life, shall guide our way ;

Till we behold the clearer light

Of an eternal day.

CHAPTER IV.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter comprises the following subjects :

1. A solemn charge to Timothy to be faithful in preaching the Gospel, and in the whole work of the ministry. Ver. 1-5. The particular reason given for this charge was, that the time was approaching when men would not endure sound doctrine, but would turn away from the truth. Hence, Timothy is exhorted to be faithful in his work, and to be prepared to endure the trials which, in such circumstances, a faithful minister must be expected to meet.

2. A statement of Paul that his own work was nearly done, and that the hour of his departure drew near. Ver. 6-8. This statement, also, seems to be made in order to excite Timothy to increased fidelity in the ministry. His teacher, guide, father, and friend, was about to be withdrawn, and the great work of preaching was to be committed to other hands. Hence, in view of his own departure, Paul exhorts Timothy to fidelity when he himself should be removed.

3. An exhortation to Timothy to come to him as soon as practicable. Ver. 9-15. Paul was then in bonds, and was expecting soon to die. He was alone. For various reasons, those who had been with him had left him, and he needed some companion and friend. He therefore exhorts Timothy to come to him as soon as possible.

4. Paul refers now to his first trial before the emperor, and to the fact that then no one stood by him. Ver. 16-19. The reason of his referring to this seems to be to induce Timothy to come to him in view of his anticipated second trial. The Lord, he says, then stood by him, and he had confidence that he would continue to do it ; yet who is there that does not feel it desirable to have some dear earthly friend to be with him when he dies ?

5. The epistle is closed, in the usual manner, with various salutations, and with the benediction. Ver. 19-22.

1. I charge thee therefore before God. See Notes on 1 Tim. v. 21. ¶ Who shall judge the quick and the dead. That is, the Lord Jesus ; for he is to be the judge of men. Matt. xxv. 31-46 ; 2 Cor. v. 10. The word quick means living (See Notes on Acts x. 42 ; Eph. ii. 1) ; and the idea is, that he would be alike the judge of all who were alive when he should come, and of all who had died. See Notes on 1 Thess. iv. 16, 17. In view of the fact that all, whether preachers or hearers, must give up their account to the final Judge, Paul charges Timothy to be faithful ; and what is there which will more conduce to fidelity in the discharge of duty, than the thought that we must soon give up a solemn account of the manner in which we have performed

2 Preach the word; be instant in season, out of season; reprove, ^a

^a Tit. 2. 15.

it? ¶ At his appearing. That is, the judgment will then take place. This must refer to a judgment yet to take place, for the Lord Jesus has not yet "appeared" the second time to men; and, if this be so, then there is to be a resurrection of the dead. On the meaning of the word rendered appearing, see Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 8. It is there rendered brightness. Comp. 1 Tim. vi. 14; 2 Tim. i. 10; Titus ii. 13. ¶ And his kingdom. Or, at the setting up of his kingdom. The idea of his reigning, or setting up his kingdom, is not unfrequently associated with the idea of his coming. See Matt. xvi. 28. The meaning is, that, at his second advent, the extent and majesty of his kingdom will be fully displayed. It will be seen that he has control over the elements, over the graves of the dead, and over all the living. It will be seen that the earth and the heavens are under his sway, and that all things there acknowledge him as their sovereign Lord. In order to meet the full force of the language used by Paul here, it is not necessary to suppose that he will set up a visible kingdom on the earth, but only that there will be an illustrious display of himself as a king, and of the extent and majesty of the empire over which he presides. Comp. Notes on Rom. xiv. 11; Phil. ii. 10.

2. Preach the word. The Word of God; the Gospel. This was to be the main business of the life of Timothy, and Paul solemnly charges him, in view of the certain coming of the Redeemer to judgment, to be faithful in the performance of it. ¶ Be instant. See Notes on Rom. xiii. 12. Literally, to stand by, or to stand fast by; that is, he was to be pressing or urgent in the performance of this work. He was always to be at his post, and was to embrace every opportunity of making known the Gospel. What Paul seems to have contemplated was not merely that he should perform the duty at stated and regular times; but that he should press the matter as one who had the subject much at heart, and never lose an opportunity of making the Gospel known. ¶ In season. ἐν-καίρως. In good time; opportunely. Comp. Matt. xxvi. 16; Luke xxii. 6; rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine.

Mark xiv. 11. The sense is, when it could be conveniently done; when all things were favorable, and when there were no obstructions or hinderances. It may include the stated and regular seasons for public worship, but is not confined to them. ¶ Out of season. ἀκαίρως. This word does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It is the opposite of the former, and means that a minister is to seek opportunities to preach the Gospel even at such periods as might be inconvenient to himself; or when there might be hinderances and embarrassments; or when there was no stated appointment for preaching. He is not to confine himself to the appointed times of worship, or to preach only when it will be perfectly convenient for himself, but he is to have such an interest and earnestness in the work that it will lead him to do it in the face of embarrassments and discouragements, and whenever he can find an opportunity. A man who is greatly intent on an object will seek every opportunity to promote it. He will not confine himself to stated times and places, but will present it every where, and at all times. He, therefore, who confines himself to the stated seasons of preaching the Gospel, or who merely preaches when it is convenient to himself, should not consider that he has come up to the requirement of the rule laid down by the apostle. He should preach in his private conversation; in the intervals of his public labors; at the side of the sick-bed, and wherever there is a prospect of doing good to any one. If his heart is full of love to the Saviour and to souls, he can not help doing this. ¶ Reprove. Or convince. See Notes on ch. iii. 16. The meaning is, that he was to use such arguments as would convince men of the truth of religion, and of their own need of it. ¶ Rebuke. Rebuke offenders. Titus ii. 15. See the use of the word in Matt. viii. 26; xii. 16 (rendered charged); xvi. 22; xvii. 18; xix. 13; xx. 31; Luke iv. 35, 39; xvii. 13; xviii. 15; Jude 9. In the New Testament the word is used to express a judgment of what is wrong in one's judgment, or contrary to one's will, and hence to admonish or re-

3 For the time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears; 4 And they shall turn away their prove. It implies our conviction that there is something evil, or some fault in him who is rebuked. The word in this verse which is rendered reprove does not imply this, but merely that one may be in error, and needs to have arguments presented to convince him of the truth. That word also implies no superior authority in him who does it. He presents reasons, or argues the case, for the purpose of convincing. The word here rendered rebuke implies authority or superiority, and means merely that we may say that a thing is wrong, and administer a rebuke for it, as if there were no doubt that it was wrong. The propriety of the rebuke rests on our authority for doing it, not on the arguments which we present. This is based on the presumption that men often know that they are doing wrong, and need no arguments to convince them of it. The idea is, that the minister is not merely to reason about sin, and convince men that it is wrong, but he may solemnly admonish them not to do it, and warn them of the consequences. ¶ Exhort. See Notes on Rom. xii. 8. ¶ With all long-suffering. That is, with a patient and persevering spirit if you are opposed. See Notes on ch. ii. 25. Comp. Notes on Rom. ii. 4. See also Rom. xi. 22; 2 Cor. vi. 6; Gal. v. 22; Eph. iv. 2; Col. i. 11; iii. 12; 1 Tim. i. 16. ¶ And doctrine. Teaching, or patient instruction.

3. For the time will come, etc. Probably referring to the time mentioned in ch. iii. 1, seq. ¶ When they will not endure sound doctrine. Greek, healthful doctrine; that is, doctrine contributing to the health of the soul, or to salvation. At that time they would seek a kind of instruction more conformable to their wishes and feelings. ¶ But after their own lusts. They will seek such kind of preaching as will accord with their carnal desires; or such as will apologize for their evil propensities, and deal gently with their vices. Comp. Isa. xxx. 10, "Speak unto us smooth things; prophesy deceits." ¶ Shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears. The word rendered heap—ἐπισωρεύω—does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. It means to heap up upon, to accumulate; and here to multiply. The word rendered itching—κνίθω—also occurs only in this place in the New Testament. It means to rub, to scratch; and then to tickle; and here to feel an itching for something pleasing or gratifying. The image is derived from the desire which we have, when there is an itching sensation, to have it rubbed or scratched. Such an uneasiness would these persons have to have some kind of instruction that would allay their restless and uneasy desires, or would gratify them. In explanation of this passage we may observe, (1.) that there will always be religious teachers of some kind, and that in proportion as error and sin abound, they will be multiplied. The apostle here says, that by turning away from Timothy, and from sound instruction, they would not renounce all religious teachers, but would rather increase and multiply them. Men often declaim much against a regular ministry, and call it priestcraft; and yet, if they were to get rid of such a ministry, they would by no means escape from all kinds of religious teachers. The deeper the darkness, the more gross the errors, and the more prevalent the wickedness of men, the more will a certain kind of religious teachers abound, and the more it will cost to support them. Italy and Spain swarm with priests, and in every heathen nation priests constitute a very numerous class of the population. The cheapest ministry on the earth is a well-educated Protestant clergy; and if society wishes to free itself from swarms of preachers, and prophets, and exhorters, it should secure the regular services of an educated and pious ministry. (2.) In such classes of persons as the apostle here refers to, there is a restless, uneasy desire to have some kind of preachers. They have "itching ears." They will be ready to run after all kinds of public instructors. They will be little pleased with any, and this will be one reason why they will have so many. They are fickle, unsettled, and never satisfied. A desire to hear the truth, and to learn the way of salvation, is a good desire. But this can be better gratified by far under the patient and intelligent labors of a single religious ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables.^a

5 But watch thou in all things,^b

^a 1 Tim. 1. 4.

^b c. 2. 3.

teacher, than by running after many teachers, or by frequent changes. How much would a child learn if he was constantly running from one school to another? (3.) Such persons would have teachers according to "their own lusts;" that is, their own tastes or wishes. They would have those who would coincide with their whims; who would foster every vagary which might enter their imagination; who would countenance every wild project for doing good; who would be the advocates of the errors which they held; and who would be afraid to rebuke their faults. These are the principles on which many persons choose their religious teachers. The true principle should be, to select those who will faithfully declare the truth, and who will not shrink from exposing and denouncing sin, wherever it may be found.

4. And they shall turn away their ears from the truth. That is, the people themselves will turn away from the truth. It does not mean that the teachers would turn them away by the influence of their instructions. ¶ And shall be turned unto fables. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 4.

5. But watch thou in all things. Be vigilant against error and sin, and faithful in the performance of duty. See Notes on Matt. xxv. 13; 1 Cor. xvi. 13. ¶ Endure afflictions. See Notes on ch. ii. 3. The Greek word here is the same which is there rendered "endure hardness." ¶ Do the work of an evangelist. On the word evangelist, see Notes on Acts xxi. 8. The phrase here means, do the work of preaching the Gospel, or of one appointed to proclaim the glad tidings of salvation. This is the proper business of all ministers, whatever other rank they may maintain. Whether it was ever regarded as the proper duty of a separate class of men to do this, see Notes on Eph. iv. 11. ¶ Make full proof of thy ministry. Marg., fulfill. Comp. Notes on Rom. xiv. 5. The word here used denotes, properly, to bear or bring fully; then to persuade fully; and then to make fully assured of, to give full proof of. The meaning here seems to be, to furnish full evidence of endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make ¹ full proof ^c of thy ministry.

¹ or, fulfill.

^c 1 Tim. 4. 12, 15.

what is the design of the Christian ministry, and of what it is adapted to accomplish, by the faithful performance of all its duties. Timothy was so to discharge the duties of his office as to furnish a fair illustration of what the ministry could do, and thus to show the wisdom of the Saviour in its institution. This should be the aim of all the ministers of the Gospel. Each one should resolve, by the blessing of God, that the ministry, in his hands, shall have a fair trial, so as to show to the utmost what it is adapted to do for the welfare of mankind.

6. For I am now ready to be offered.

This conviction of the apostle that he was about to die is urged as a reason why Timothy should be laborious and faithful in the performance of the duties of his office. His own work was nearly done. He was soon to be withdrawn from the earth, and whatever benefit the world might have derived from his experience or active exertions, it was soon to be deprived of it. He was about to leave a work which he much loved, and to which he had devoted the vigor of his life, and he was anxious that they who were to succeed him should carry on the work with all the energy and zeal in their power. This expresses the common feeling of aged ministers as death draws near. The word "ready," in the phrase "ready to be offered," conveys an idea which is not in the original. It implies a willingness to depart, which, whether true or not, is not the idea conveyed by the apostle. His statement is merely of the fact that he was about to die, or that his work was drawing to a close. No doubt he was "ready," in the sense of being willing and prepared, but this is not the idea in the Greek. The single Greek word rendered "I am ready to be offered"—σπένδομαι—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, except in Phil. ii. 17, where it is translated "if I be offered." See it explained in the Notes on that place. The allusion here, says Burder (in Rosenmüller's A. u. n. Morgenland), is to the custom which prevailed among the heathen generally, of pouring wine and oil on the head of a victim when it was about to be 6 For I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure^a is at hand.

7 I have fought^b a good fight, I

^a Phil. 1. 23. ² Pet. 1. 14.

^b 1 Tim. 6. 12.

offered in sacrifice. The idea of the apostle then is, that he was in the condition of the victim on whose head the wine and oil had been already poured, and which was just about to be put to death; that is, he was about to die. Every preparation had been made, and he only awaited the blow which was to strike him down. The meaning is not that he was to be a sacrifice; it is that his death was about to occur. Nothing more remained to be done but to die. The victim was all ready, and he was sure that the blow would soon fall. What was the ground of his expectation, he has not told us. Probably there were events occurring in Rome which made it morally certain that though he had once been acquitted, he could not now escape. At all events, it is interesting to contemplate an aged and experienced Christian on the borders of the grave, and to learn what were his feelings in the prospect of his departure to the eternal world. Happily, Paul in more places than one (comp. Phil. i. 23) has stated his views in such circumstances, and we know that his religion then did not fail him. He found it to be in the prospect of death what he had found it to be through all his life—the source of unspeakable consolation; and he was enabled to look calmly onward to the hour which should summon him into the presence of his Judge. ¶ And the time of my departure is at hand. Gr., dissolving, or dissolution. So we speak of the dissolution of the soul and body. The verb from which the noun (ἀνάλυσις) is derived (ἀναλύω), means to loosen again; to undo. It is applied to the act of unloosing or casting off the fastenings of a ship, preparatory to a departure. The proper idea in the use of the word would be that he had been bound to the present world, like a ship to its moorings, and that death would be a release. He would now spread his sails on the broad ocean of eternity. The true idea of death is that of loosening the bands that confine us to the present world; of setting us free, and permitting the soul to go forth, as with have finished^c my course, I have kept^d the faith:

8 Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown^e of righteousness,

^c Acts 20. 24.

^d Prov. 23. 23. Rev. 3. 10.

^e 1 Cor. 9. 25. 1 Pet. 5. 4. Rev. 2. 10.

expanded sails, on its eternal voyage. With such a view of death, why should a Christian fear to die?

7. I have fought a good fight. More literally, “I have completed the contest”—the strife—the race—the struggle—as in the public games. The struggle is over. The Christian life is often represented as a conflict, or warfare. See Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 12. That noble conflict with sin, the world, the flesh, and the devil, Paul now says he had been able to maintain. ¶ I have finished my course. The Christian life, too, is often represented as a race to be run. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24–26. ¶ I have kept the faith. I have steadfastly maintained the faith of the Gospel; or, have lived a life of fidelity to my Master. Probably the expression means that he had kept his pledged faith to the Redeemer, and had spent a life in faithfully endeavoring to serve his Lord.

8. Henceforth there is laid up for me. At the end of my race, as there was a crown in reserve for those who had successfully striven in the Grecian games. Comp. Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 25. The word henceforth—λοιπόν—means what remains, or as to the rest; and the idea is, that this was what remained of the whole career. The race had been run; the conflict had been waged; and all which was now necessary to complete the whole transaction was merely that the crown be bestowed. ¶ A crown of righteousness. That is, a crown won in the cause of righteousness, and conferred as the reward of conflicts and efforts in the cause of holiness. It was not a crown of ambition; it was not a garland won in struggles for earthly distinction; it was that which was the appropriate reward of efforts to be personally holy, and to spread the principles of holiness as far as possible through the world. ¶ Which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me. The Lord Jesus, appointed to judge the world, and to dispense the rewards of eternity. It will be seen in the last day that the rewards of heaven are not conferred in an arbitrary manner, but that they which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them^a also that love his appearing.

^a 1 Cor. 2. 9.

are bestowed because they ought to be, or that God is righteous and just in doing it. No man will be admitted to heaven who ought not, under all the circumstances of the case, to be admitted there; no one will be excluded who ought to have been saved. ¶ At that day. That is, the time when he will come to judge the world. Matt. xxv. ¶ And not to me only. "Though my life has been spent in laboriously endeavoring to spread the true religion; though I have suffered much, and labored long; though I have struggled hard to win the prize, and now have it full in view, yet I do not suppose that it is to be conferred on me alone. It is not like the wreath of olive, laurel, pine, or parsley (see Notes on 1 Cor. ix. 24, 25), which could be conferred only on one victor; but here every one may obtain the crown who strives for it. The struggle is not between me and a competitor in such a sense that, if I obtain the crown, he must be excluded; but it is a crown which he can obtain as well as I. As many as run—as many as fight the good fight—as many as keep the faith—as many as love his appearing, may win the crown as well as I." Such is religion, and such is the manner in which its rewards differ from all other rewards. At the Grecian games, but one could obtain the prize. All the rest who contended in those games, no matter how numerous they were, how skillfully they contended, or how much effort they made, were of course subjected to the mortification of a failure, and to the ill-feeling and envy to which such a failure might give rise. So it is in respect to all the prizes which this world can bestow. In a lottery, but one can obtain the highest prize; in a class in college, but one can secure the highest honor; in the scramble for office, no matter how numerous the competitors may be, or what may be their merits, but one can obtain it. All the rest are liable to the disappointments and mortifications of defeat. Not so in religion. No matter how numerous the competitors, or how worthy any one of them may be, or how pre-eminent he may be above his brethren, yet all may obtain the prize; all may be crowned with a diadem of life of equal brilliancy. No one is excluded because another is successful; no one fails of the reward because another obtains it. Who, then, would not make an effort to win the immortal crown? ¶ Unto all them also that love his appearing. That is, all who desire his second coming. Faith in the second advent of the Lord Jesus as coming to judge the world, and a desire for his return, became a kind of criterion by which Christians were known. No others but true Christians were supposed to believe in his return to our world, and no others truly desired it. Comp. Rev. i. 7; xxii. 20. It is so now. It is one of the characteristics of a true Christian that he believes that Christ will come again to judge the world; that he sincerely desires his return, and that he would welcome his appearing in the clouds of heaven.

9 Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me:

10 For Demas hath forsaken me, having loved^b this present world,

^b 1 John 2. 15.

9. Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. As soon as possible. Timothy had been Paul's traveling companion, and was his intimate friend. The apostle was now nearly forsaken, and was about to pass through severe trials. It is not certainly known for what purpose he wished him to come to him, but perhaps he desired to give him some parting counsels; perhaps he wished him to be near him when he died. It is evident from this that he did not regard him as the prelatial "bishop of the Church of the Ephesians," or consider that he was so confined to that place in his labors that he was not also to go to other places if he was called in the providence of God. It is probable that Timothy would obey such a summons, and there is no reason to believe that he ever returned to Ephesus.

10. For Demas hath forsaken me. Demas is honorably mentioned in Col. iv. 14; but nothing more is known of him than what can be gathered from that place and this—that he was at first a friend and fellow-laborer of Paul, but that, under the influence of a desire to live, he afterward forsook and is departed unto Thessalonica; Crescens to Galatia, Titus unto Dalmatia.

11 Only Luke is with me. Take Mark, and bring him with thee; him, even in circumstances where he greatly needed the presence of a friend.

¶ Having loved this present world. This does not mean, necessarily, that he was an avaricious man, or that, in itself, he loved the honors or wealth of this world; but it means that he desired to live. He was not willing to stay with Paul, and subject himself to the probabilities of martyrdom; and, in order to secure his life, he departed to a place of safety. The Greek is, ἀγαπήσας τὸν νῦν αἰῶνα—having loved the world that now is; that is, this world as it is, with all its cares, and troubles, and comforts; having desired to remain in this world, rather than to go to the other. There is, perhaps, a slight censure here in the language of Paul—the censure of grief; but there is no reason why Demas should be held up as an example of a worldly man. That he desired to live longer; that he was unwilling to remain and risk the loss of life, is indeed clear. That Paul was pained by his departure, and that he felt lonely and sad, is quite apparent; but I see no evidence that Demas was influenced by what are commonly called worldly feelings, or that he was led to this course by the desire of wealth, of fame, or of pleasure. ¶ And is departed unto Thessalonica. Perhaps his native place.—Calmet. ¶ Crescens. Nothing more is known of Crescens than is here mentioned. “He is thought by Eusebius and others to have preached in Gaul, and to have founded the Church in Vienne, in Dauphny.”—Calmet. ¶ To Galatia. See Intro. to the Epistle to the Galatians, § 1. It is not known to what part of Galatia he had gone, or why he went there. ¶ Titus unto Dalmatia. Dalmatia was a part of Illyricum, on the Gulf of Venice, or the Adriatic Sea. On the situation of Illyricum, see Notes on Rom. xv. 19. Paul does not mention the reason why Titus had gone there; but it is not improbable that he had gone to preach the Gospel, or to visit the churches which Paul had planted in that region. The apostle does not for he is profitable to me for the ministry.

12 And Tychicus ^a have I sent to Ephesus.

13 The cloak that I left at Troas

^a Tit. 3. 12.

suggest that he was deserving of blame for having gone, and it can hardly be supposed that Titus would have left him at this time without his concurrence. Perhaps, when he permitted him to go, he did not know how soon events would come to a crisis with him; and as a letter would more readily reach Timothy at Ephesus than Titus in Dalmatia, he requested him to come to him, instead of directing Titus to return.

11. Only Luke is with me. Luké, the author of the Gospel which bears his name, and of the Acts of the Apostles. For a considerable part of the ministry of Paul, he was his traveling companion (comp. Notes on Acts xvi. 10), and we know that he went with him to Rome. Acts xxvii. 1. ¶ Take Mark. John Mark. See Notes on Acts xv. 37. He was the son of a sister of Barnabas, and had been the traveling companion of Barnabas and Paul. There had been a temporary alienation between him and Paul (Acts xv. 38); but this passage proves that that had been removed, and that they were reconciled. ¶ For he is profitable to me for the ministry. In what way he would be profitable, he does not say; nor is it known why Mark was at that time with Timothy. It may be observed, however, that this is such language as Paul might be expected to use of Mark, after what had occurred, as recorded in Acts xv. 38. He felt that he was now about to die. If he suspected that there was on the part of Mark any lingering apprehension that he was not entirely reconciled to him, or that he retained a recollection of what had formerly occurred, nothing would be more natural than that, at this trying time of his life, Paul should summon him to his side, and express toward him the kindest emotions. It would soothe any lingering irritation in the mind of Mark to receive such a message.

12. And Tychicus. See Acts xx. 4. In Eph. vi. 21, Paul calls him “a beloved brother, and faithful minister in the Lord.” But it may be asked why with Carpus, when thou comest, bring with thee, and the books, but especially the parchments.

he did not retain him with him, or why he should have sent him away, and then call Timothy to him? The probability is, that he had sent him before he had seen reason to apprehend that he would be put to death; and now, feeling the need of a friend to be with him, he sent to Timothy, rather than to him, because Tychicus had been employed to perform some service which he could not well leave, and because Paul wished to give some special instructions to Timothy before he died. ¶ Have I sent to Ephesus. Why, is not certainly known. Comp. Introd., § 2.

13. The cloak that I left at Troas. On the situation of Troas, see Notes on Acts xvi. 8. It was not on the most direct route from Ephesus to Rome, but was a route frequently taken. Comp. the Map in the Notes on the Acts of the Apostles. See also the Introd., § 2. In regard to what the "cloak" here mentioned was, there has been considerable difference of opinion. The Greek word used (φελώνης—variously written φαιλώνης, φελώνης, and φελώνης), occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It is supposed to be used for a similar Greek word (φαινόλης), to denote a cloak, or great-coat, with a hood, used chiefly on journeys, or in the army. Latin, penula. It is described by Eschenberg (Man. Class. Lit., p. 209) as a "cloak without sleeves, for cold or rainy weather." See the uses of it in the quotations made by Wetstein, in loc. Others, however, suppose that the word means a traveling-case for books, etc. So Hesychius understands it. Bloomfield endeavors to unite the two opinions by suggesting that it may mean a cloak-bag, and that he had left his books and parchments in it. It is impossible to settle the precise meaning of the word here, and it is not material. The common opinion that it was a wrapper or traveling-cloak is the most probable, and such a garment would not be undesirable for a prisoner. It should be remembered, also, that winter was approaching (ver. 21), and such a cloak would be particularly needed. He had probably passed through Troas in summer, and, not needing the cloak, and not choosing to encumber himself with it, had left it at the house of a friend. On the meaning of the word, see Wetstein, Robinson, Lex., and Schleusner, Lex. Comp. also, Suic., Theol., ii., 1422. The doubt in regard to what is here meant is as old as Chrysostom. He says (Hom. x. on this epistle) that "the word (φαιλώνην) denotes a garment—τὸ ἱματίον. But some understood by it a capsula, or bag—γλωσσόκομον" (comp. Notes on John xii. 6), "in which books, etc., were carried." ¶ With Carpus. Carpus is not elsewhere mentioned. He was evidently a friend of the apostle, and it would seem probable that Paul had made his house his home when he was in Troas. ¶ And the books. It is impossible to determine what books are meant here. They may have been portions of the Old Testament, or classic writings, or books written by other Christians, or by himself. It is worthy of remark that even Paul did not travel without books, and that he found them in some way necessary for the work of the ministry. ¶ Especially the parchments. The word here used (μεμβράνας, whence our word membrane) occurs only in this place in the New Testament, and means skin, membrane, parchment. Dressed skins were among the earliest materials for writing, and were in common use before the art of making paper from rags was discovered. These "parchments" seem to have been something different from "books," and probably refer to some of his own writings. They may have contained notes, memoranda, journals, or unfinished letters. It is, of course, impossible now to determine what they were. Benson supposes they were letters which he had received from the churches; Macknight, that they were the originals of the letters which he had written; Bishop Bull, that they were a kind of commonplace-book, in which he inserted hints and extracts of the most remarkable passages in the authors which he read. All this, however, is mere conjecture.

14 Alexander the coppersmith did me much evil; the Lord^a reward him according to his works:

^a Psa. 28. 4.

14. Alexander the coppersmith. Or, rather, the brazier—ὁ χαλκεύς. The 15 Of whom be thou ware also; for he hath greatly withstood our words.

16 At my first answer no man

1 or, preachings.

a c. 1. 15.

word is used, however, to denote a worker in any kind of metals. This is probably the same person who is mentioned in 1 Tim. i. 20, and perhaps the same as the one mentioned in Acts xix. 33. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 20. ¶ Did me much evil. In what way this was done is not mentioned. If this is the same person who is referred to in 1 Tim. i. 20, it is probable that it was not evil to Paul personally, so much as embarrassment to the cause of religion which he advocated. Comp. 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18. ¶ The Lord reward him according to his works. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. i. 20. This need not be regarded as an expression of private feeling; still less should it be understood as expressing a desire of revenge. It is the language of one who wished that God would treat an offender exactly as he ought to be treated, and might be in accordance with the highest benevolence of any heart. It is the aim of every just government that each one under that government should be treated exactly as he deserves; and every good citizen should desire and pray that this may be done, and that exact justice may be done to all. It is the business of a police officer to ferret out the guilty, to bring them to trial, to secure a just sentence; and any police officer may pray, with the utmost propriety, that God will assist him in his endeavors, and enable him to perform his duty. This may be done with no malevolent feeling toward any human being, but with the purest love of country, and the most earnest desire for the welfare of all. If such a police officer, or if a judge, or a jurymen, were heard thus to pray, who would dare to accuse him of having a vindictive spirit or a malevolent heart? And why should Paul be so charged, when his prayer amounts to no more than this? For it remains yet to be proved that he refers to any private wrong which Alexander had done him, or that he was actuated by any other desire than that the sacred interests of truth should be guarded, and equal justice done to all. Why is it wrong to desire or to pray that stood with me, but all ^a men forsook me: I pray God that it may not be laid ^b to their charge.

17 Notwithstanding the Lord ^c

b Acts 7. 60.

c Matt. 10. 19. Acts 23. 11.

universal justice may be done, and that every man may be treated as, under all the circumstances of the case, he ought to be treated? On the subject of the "Imprecations in the Scriptures," the reader may consult an article in the Bibliotheca Sacra, i., 97-110. It should be added, here, that some manuscripts, instead of ἀποδώ, "may the Lord reward," read it in the future—ἀποδώσει, "will reward." See Wetstein. The future is also found in the Vulgate and Coptic versions, and in Augustine, Theodoret, and Chrysostom. Augustine says (on the Sermon on the Mount), "He does not say, may he reward (reddat); but, he will reward (reddet), which is a verb of prophecy, not of imprecation." The authority, however, is not sufficient to justify a change in the present reading. These variations have doubtless arisen from a belief that the common reading expresses a sentiment inconsistent with the true spirit of a Christian, and a desire to find a better. But there is no reason for desiring a change in the text.

15. Of whom be thou ware also. It would seem from this that Alexander was still a public teacher, and that his discourses were plausible and artful. The best and the wisest of men need to be on their guard against the efforts of the advocates of error. ¶ For he hath greatly withstood our words. Marg., preachings. The Greek is, words; but the reference is doubtless to the public teachings of Paul. This verse makes it clear that it was no private wrong that Paul referred to, but the injury which he was doing to the cause of truth as a professed public teacher.

16. At my first answer. Gr., apology (ἀπολογία), plea, or defense. This evidently refers to some trial which he had had before the Roman emperor. He speaks of a first trial of this kind; but whether it was on some former occasion, and he had been released and permitted again to go abroad, or whether it was a trial which he had already had during his second imprisonment, it is not easy to determine. The former is the most natural supposition; for, if he had had a trial during his present imprisonment, it is difficult to see why he was still held as a prisoner. See this point examined in the Introd., §1. ¶ No man stood with me. Paul had many friends in Rome (ver. 21; comp. Rom. xvi.); but it seems that they did not wish to appear as such when he was put on trial for his life. They were doubtless afraid that they would be identified with him, and would endanger their own lives. It should be said that some of the friends of the apostle mentioned in Rom. xvi., and who were there when that epistle was written, may have died before the apostle arrived there, or, in the trials and persecutions to which they were exposed, may have left the city. Still it is remarkable that those who were there should have all forsaken him on so trying an occasion. But to forsake a friend in the day of calamity is not an uncommon thing, and Paul experienced what thousands before and since have done. Thus Job was forsaken by friends and kindred in the day of his trials. See his pathetic description in Job xix. 13-17:

He hath put my brethren far from me,
And mine acquaintance verily are estranged from me.

My kinsfolk have failed,
And my familiar friends have forgotten me.

They that dwell in my house, and my maids, count me for a stranger,
I am an alien in their sight.

I called my servant, and he gave me no answer;
I entreated him with my mouth.

My breath is strange to my wife,
Though I entreated for the children's sake of mine own body.

Thus the Psalmist was forsaken by his friends in the time of calamity. Psa. xxxv. 12-16; xxxviii. 2; xli. 9; lv. 12. And thus the Saviour was forsaken in his trials. Matt. xxvi. 56. Comp., for illustration, Zech. xiii. 6. The world is full of instances in which those who have been overtaken by overwhelming calamities have been forsaken by professed friends, and have been left to suffer alone. This has arisen, partly, from the circumstance that many sincere friends are timid, and their courage fails them when their attachment for another would expose them to peril; but more commonly from the circumstance that there is much professed friendship in the world which is false, and that calamity becomes a test of it which it can not abide. There is professed friendship which is caused by wealth (Prov. xiv. 20; xix. 4); there is that which is cherished for those in elevated and fashionable circles; there is that which is formed for beauty of person, or graceful manners, rather than for the solid virtues of the heart; there is that which is created in the sunshine of life—the affection of those “swallow friends who retire in the winter and return in the spring.” Compare the concluding remarks on the book of Job. Such friendship is always tested by calamity; and when affliction comes, they who in the days of prosperity were surrounded by many flatterers and admirers, are surprised to find how few there were among them who truly loved them.

In the wind and tempest of his frown,
Distinction, with a broad and powerful fan,

Puffing at all winnows the light away;
And what hath mass or matter by itself,
Lies, rich in virtue and unmingled.

Troilus and Cressida.

So common has this been—so little confidence can be placed in professed friends in time of adversity, that we are sometimes disposed to believe that there is more truth than fancy in the representation of the poet—

And what is friendship but a name,
A charm that lulls to sleep;
A shade that follows wealth or fame,
But leaves the wretch to weep?

Yet there is true friendship in the world. It existed between Damon and Pythias, and its power and beauty were still more strikingly illustrated in the warm affection of David and Jonathan. In the trials of David—though raised from the condition of a shepherd boy—and though having no powerful friends at court, the son of Saul never forsook him, and never gave him occasion to suspect the sincerity or the depth of his affection. With what exquisite beauty David sang of that attachment when Jonathan was dead!

I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan!

Very pleasant hast thou been unto me!
Thy love to me was wonderful,
Passing the love of women!

2 Sam. i. 26.

True friendship, founded on sincere love, so rare, so difficult to be found, so little known among the gay and the great, is one of the richest of Heaven's blessings to man, and when stood with me, and strengthened me; that by me the preaching enjoyed, should be regarded as more than a compensation for all of show, and splendor, and flattery that wealth can obtain.

Though choice of follies fasten on the great,
None clings more obstinate, than fancy fond

That sacred friendship is their easy prey;
Caught by the wafture of a golden lure,
Or fascination of a high-born smile.
Their smiles the great and the coquette throw out

For other's hearts, tenacious of their own,
And we no less of ours, when such the bait.
Ye fortune's cofferers! ye powers of wealth!
Can gold gain friendship? Impudence of hope!

As well mere man an angel might beget.
Love, and love only, is the loan for love.
Lorenzo! pride repress; nor hope to find A friend, but what has found a friend in thee.

All like the purchase; few the price will pay,
And this makes friends such miracles below.

A friend is worth all hazards we can run.
Poor is the friendless master of a world;
A world in purchase of a friend is gain.

Night Thoughts, Night 2.

¶ I pray God that it may not be laid to their charge. That it may not be reckoned, or imputed to them—λογισθεῖν. On the meaning of this word, see Notes on Rom. iv. 3, and Philem. 18. The prayer of the apostle here breathes the very spirit of Christ. See Notes on Luke xxiii. 34. Comp. Acts vii. 60.

17. Notwithstanding the Lord stood with me. Though all men forsook me, yet God did not. This expresses a universal truth in regard to the faithfulness of God. See Psalm xxvii. 10. Comp. Job v. 17-19; Isa. xliii. 1, 2. ¶ That by me the preaching might be fully known. The word preaching here probably means the Gospel as preached by him. The word rendered "might be fully known"—πληροφορηθῆναι—means, might obtain full credence; that is, might be fully confirmed, so that others might be assured of its truth. The apostle doubtless means that on his trial, though forsaken by all men, he was enabled to be so steadfast in his profession of the truth, and so calm in the prospect of death, that all who witnessed his trial saw that there was a reality in religion, and that the Gospel was founded in truth. He had af-might be fully known, and that all the Gentiles might hear: and I firmed, as a preacher, that the Gospel was able to support the soul in trial, and he was now able to illustrate its power in his own case. He had proclaimed the Gospel as the true system of religion, and he was now able to bear testimony to it with the prospect of approaching martyrdom. The sentiment of this passage then is that the truth of the Gospel is made known, or that men may become fully assured of it, by the testimony which is borne to it by its friends in the near prospect of death. One of the most important means of establishing the truth of the Gospel in the world has been the testimony borne to it by martyrs, and the spirit of unwavering confidence in God which they have evinced. And now one of the most important methods of keeping up the knowledge of religion in the world, and of convincing men of the truth of Christianity, is the spirit evinced by its friends when they are about to die. Men judge much, and justly, of the worth of a system of religion by its power to impart comfort in the day of calamity, and to sustain the soul when about to enter on an untried state of being. That system is of little value to mankind which leaves us in the day of trial; that is of inestimable worth which will enable us to die with the firm hope of a brighter and better world. A Christian, having served his God faithfully in life, may, therefore, be eminently useful when he comes to die. ¶ And that all the Gentiles might hear. Paul was at this time in Rome. His trial was before a heathen tribunal, and he was surrounded by Pagans. Rome, too, was then the centre of the world, and at all times there was a great conflux of strangers there. His trial, therefore, gave him an opportunity of testifying to the truth of Christianity before Gentile rulers, and in such circumstances that the knowledge of his sufferings, and of the religion for which he suffered, might be conveyed by the strangers who witnessed it to the ends of the world. His main object in life was to make the Gospel known to the Gentiles, and he had thus an opportunity of furthering that great cause, even on the trial which he supposed would determine with him was delivered out of the mouth ^a of the lion.

18 And the Lord ^b shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory forever and ever. Amen.

^a Psa. 22. 21.

the question of life or death. Comp. Notes on Rom. i. 10. ¶ And I was delivered out of the mouth of the lion. This may either mean that he was delivered from Nero, compared with a lion, or literally that he was saved from being thrown to lions in the amphitheatre, as was common in Rome. See Notes on 1 Cor. xv. 32 (3). It is not uncommon in the Scriptures to compare tyrants and persecutors with ravenous wild beasts. Comp. Psa. xxii. 13, 21; Jer. ii. 30. Nero is called a lion by Seneca, and it was usual among heathen writers to apply the term in various senses to princes and warriors. See Grotius, in loc. The common interpretation of this passage has been that it refers to Nero, and there is no improbability in the interpretation. Still, it is quite as natural to suppose that the punishment which had been appointed for him, or to which he would have been subjected, was to be thrown to lions, and that in some way, now unknown to us, he had been delivered from it. Paul attributes his deliverance entirely to the Lord; but what instrumental agency there may have been he does not specify. It seems probable that it was his own defense; that he was enabled to plead his own cause with so much ability that he found favor even with the Roman emperor, and was discharged. If it had been through the help of a friend at court, it is hardly to be supposed that he would not have mentioned the name of him to whom he owed his deliverance.

18. And the Lord shall deliver me from every evil work. He does not say from death, for he expected now to die. See ver. 6. But he was assured that God would keep him from shrinking from death when the hour approached; from apostasy, and from the manifestation of an improper spirit when he came to die. ¶ And will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom. So keep me from evil that I shall reach his heavenly kingdom. See ver. 8. ¶ To 19 Salute Prisca and Aquila, and the household of Onesiphorus.

20 Erastus abode at Corinth: but Trophimus have I left at Miletum sick.

21 Do thy diligence to come before winter. Eubulus greeteth whom be glory forever and ever. Paul was accustomed to introduce a doxology in his writings when his heart was full (comp. Rom. ix. 5), and in no place could it be more appropriate than here, when he had the fullest confidence that he was soon to enter heaven. If man is ever disposed to ascribe glory to God, it is on such an occasion.

^b Psa. 121. 7.

19. Salute Prisca and Aquila. Prisca, or Priscilla, was the wife of Aquila, though her name is sometimes mentioned first. In regard to their history, see Notes on Rom. xvi. 3. They were at Rome when Paul wrote his epistle to the Romans, but afterward went into Asia Minor, which was the native place of Aquila (Acts xviii. 2), and where they probably died. ¶ And the household of Onesiphorus. See Notes on ch. i. 16.

20. Erastus. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 23. ¶ Abode at Corinth. This was his home, where he filled an important office. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 23. It would seem that when Paul went to Rome, there was some expectation that he would accompany him, but that reasons had occurred for his remaining in Corinth. His doing so is referred to without blame. ¶ But Trophimus. See Acts xx. 4. He was a native of Asia Minor. ¶ Have I left at Miletum sick. Probably he designed to accompany him to Rome, as he had been often with him in his journeys. On the situation of Miletus, or Miletum, see Notes on Acts xx. 15.

21. Do thy diligence. Ver. 9. ¶ To come before winter. Probably because of the dangers of the navigation then, and because the circumstances of the apostle were such as to demand the presence of a friend. ¶ Eubulus, etc. These names are of common occurrence in the classic writers, but of the persons here referred to we know nothing.

22. The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. See Gal. vi. 18; Rom. xv. 20. The subscription to this epistle was not added by Paul himself, nor is there thee, and Pudens, and Linus, and Claudia, and all the brethren.

22 The Lord Jesus Christ be with thy spirit. Grace be with you. Amen.

any reason to believe that it was by an inspired man, and it is of no authority. There is not the slightest evidence that Timothy was "ordained the first bishop of the Church of the Ephesians," or that he was a "bishop" there at all. There is no reason to believe that he was even a pastor there, in the technical sense. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 3. Compare the remarks on the subscriptions to the Epistle to the Romans, 1 Corinthians, and especially Titus.

The second epistle unto Timothy, ordained the first bishop of the Church of the Ephesians, was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before ¹ Nero the second time.

¹ Cæsar Nero, or the Emperor Nero.

NOTES,
EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,
ON THE
EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TITUS.

By ALBERT BARNES.

INTRODUCTION

§ 1. The History of Titus.

OF Titus nothing more is certainly known than what we find in the epistles of Paul. It is somewhat remarkable that there is no mention of him in the Acts of the Apostles, nor does his name occur in the New Testament any where except in the writings of the apostle Paul. From his incidental allusions to him, we learn the following particulars respecting him.

(1.) He was by birth a Gentile. In Gal. ii. 3 he is called a Greek, and it is certain from that passage that he had not been circumcised; and the probability is that up to the time of his conversion he had lived as other Gentiles, and had not been converted to the Jewish faith. His father and mother were, doubtless, both Greeks, and thus he was distinguished from Timothy, whose mother was a Jewess, but whose father was a Greek. Acts xvi. 3. Compare Notes on Gal. ii. 3. If Titus had been proselyted to the Jewish faith, it is to be presumed that he would have been circumcised.

(2.) He had been converted to Christianity by the instrumentality of Paul himself. This is clear from the epistle, chap. i. 4: "To Titus, mine own son, after the common faith." Compare Notes on 1 Tim. i. 2. This is the language which the apostle would not have used of one who had been converted by the instrumentality of another. But where he lived, and when or how he was converted, is wholly unknown. As to the time when he was converted, it is only known that this occurred before the fourteenth year after the conversion of Paul, for at that time Titus, a Christian, was with Paul at Jerusalem. Gal. ii. 1. As to the place where he lived, there is some reason to suppose that it was in some part of Asia Minor—for the Greeks abounded there; Paul labored much there; and there were numerous converts made there to the Christian faith. Still this is not by any means certain.

(3.) Titus went with Paul to Jerusalem when he was deputed by the Church at Antioch, with Barnabas, to lay certain questions before the apostles and elders there in reference to the converts from the Gentiles. Acts xv. Comp. Gal. ii. 1. It is not known why he took Titus with him on that occasion, and the reasons can be only conjectural. See Notes on Gal. ii. 1. It is possible that he was taken with him because his was a case in point in regard to the question which was to come before the apostles and elders of the Church. It is not improbable, from an expression which Paul uses in describing his visit there—"neither was Titus compelled to be circumcised"—that the case came up for discussion, and that strenuous efforts were made by the Judaizing portion (comp. Gal. ii. 4) to have him circumcised. Paul and Barnabas, however, so managed the cause that the principle was settled that it was not necessary that the converts from the heathen should be circumcised. Acts xv. 19, 20.

(4.) After the council at Jerusalem, it seems probable that Titus returned with Paul and Barnabas, accompanied by Silas and Judas (Acts xv. 23), and afterward he attended the apostle for a considerable time in his travels and labors. This appears from a remark in 2 Cor. viii. 23: "Whether any do inquire of Titus, he is my partner and fellow-helper concerning you." From this it would seem that he had been with Paul; that he was as yet not well known; and that the fact that he had been seen with him had led to an inquiry who he was, and what was the office which he sustained. That he was also a companion of Paul, and quite essential to his comfort in his work, is apparent from the following allusions to him in the same epistle (2 Cor. vii. 6): "God, that comforteth those who are cast down, comforted us by the coming of Titus" (ii. 13); "I had no rest in my spirit because I found not Titus my brother" (vii. 13); "Yea, and exceedingly the more joyed we for the joy of Titus." Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 10; 2 Cor. xii. 18.

(5.) There is reason to believe that Titus spent some time with the apostle in Ephesus. For the First Epistle to the Corinthians was written at Ephesus, and was sent by the hand of Titus. Intro. to 1 Cor., § 3, 6. It is to be presumed, also, that he would on such an occasion send some one with the epistle in whom he had entire confidence, and who had been so long with him as to become familiar with his views. For Titus, on this occasion, was sent not only to bear the epistle, but to endeavor to heal the divisions and disorders there, and to complete a collection for the poor saints in Jerusalem which the apostle had himself commenced. Comp. Notes on 2 Cor. ii. 13; vii. 6; viii. 6. After this he met Paul in Macedonia (2 Cor. vii. 5, 6), but whether he was with him when he went with the collection to Jerusalem, and during his imprisonment in Cæsarea, or on his voyage to Rome, we have no information.

(6.) We next hear of him as being left by the apostle in the island of Crete, that he might "set in order the things that were wanting, and ordain elders in every city." Titus i. 5. This is supposed to have occurred about the year 62, and after the first imprisonment of the apostle at Rome. It is evidently implied that the apostle had been himself there with him; that he had undertaken to accomplish some important object there, but that something had prevented his completing it, and that he had left Titus to finish it. This was clearly a temporary arrangement, for there is no evidence that it was designed that Titus should be a permanent "bishop" of Crete, or that he remained there long. That he did not design that he should be a permanent bishop of that island is clear from chap. iii. 12, where the apostle directs him, when he should send Artemas to take his place, to come to him to Nicopolis. If Titus was a prelatical bishop, the apostle would not in this summary manner have superseded him, or removed him from his diocese.

(7.) He was with Paul in Rome during his second imprisonment. He did not, however, remain with him until his trial, but left him and went into Dalmatia. 2 Tim. iv. 10. For the probable reason why he had gone there, see Notes on that place. What became of him afterward, we are not informed. The tradition is, that he returned to Crete, and preached the Gospel there and in the neighboring islands, and died at the age of 94. But this tradition depends on no certain evidence.

§ 2. Island of Crete.

As Paul (chap. i. 5) says that he had left Titus in Crete to perform an important service there, and as the instructions in this epistle doubtless had some peculiar applicability to the state of things existing in that island, it is of importance, in order to a correct understanding of the epistle, to have some knowledge of the island, and of the circumstances in which the Gospel was introduced there.

The island of Crete, now Candia, is one of the largest islands in the Mediterranean, at the south of all the Cyclades. See the Map of Asia Minor prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles. Its name is said by some to have been derived from the Curetes, who are supposed to have been its first inhabitants; by others, from the nymph Crete, daughter of Hesperus; and by others, from Cres, a son of Jupiter and the nymph Idæa. The ancient authors in general say that Crete was originally peopled from Palestine. According to Bochart (Lib. 5, c. 15), that part of Palestine which lies by the Mediterranean was called by the Arabs Keritha, and by Syrians Creth; and the Hebrews called the inhabitants Crethi, or Crethim, which the Sept. has rendered κρητας—Cretans. Ezek. xxv. 16; Zeph. ii. 5. It would be easy to pass from Palestine to the island of Crete. Sir Isaac Newton, also, is of opinion that Crete was peopled from Palestine. He says, "Many of the Phœnicians and Syrians, in the year before Christ 1045, fled from Zidon, and from king David, into Asia Minor, Crete, Greece, and Libya, and introduced letters, music, poetry, the Octæteris, metals and their fabrication, and other arts, sciences, and customs of the Phœnicians. Along with these Phœnicians came a sort of men skilled in religious mysteries, arts, and sciences of Phœnicia, and settled in several places, under the names of Curetes, Idæi, Dactyli," etc. According to Pliny, the extent of Crete from east to west is about 270 miles, but its breadth nowhere exceeds fifty miles. The early inhabitants are generally supposed to be the Eteocretes of Homer; but their origin is unknown. Minos, who had expelled his brother Sarpedon from the throne, first gave laws to the Cretans, and, having conquered the pirates who infested the Ægean Sea, established a powerful navy. In the Trojan war, Idomeneus, sovereign of Crete, led its forces to war in eighty vessels—a number little inferior to those commanded by Agamemnon himself. At this period the island appears to have been inhabited by a mixed population of Greeks and barbarians. After the Trojan war the principal cities formed themselves into several republics, for the most part independent, while some of them were connected with federal ties. The Cretan code of laws was supposed by many to have furnished Lycurgus with the model of his most salutary regulations. It was founded on the just basis of liberty and an equality of rights, and its great aim was to promote social harmony and peace, by enforcing temperance and frugality. In regard to this code, see Anthon's Class. Dic., Art. Creta. In the time of Polybius (B. C. 203), the Cretans had much degenerated from their ancient character; for he charges them repeatedly with the grossest immorality and the basest vices. Polyb., 4, 47, 53; Id., 6, 46. We know, also, with what severity they are reprov'd by Paul, in the words of Epimenides. See Notes on chap. i. 12. Crete was subdued by the Romans, and became a part of a Roman province. The interior of the island is very hilly and woody, and intersected with fertile valleys. Mount Ida, in the centre of the island, is the principal mountain, and surpasses all the others in elevation. The island contains no lakes, and its rivers are mostly mountain torrents, which are dry during the summer season. The valleys, or sloping plains, in the island are represented as very fertile. The greater portion of the land is not cultivated; but it might produce sugar-cane, excellent wine, and the best kind of fruit. It has a delightful climate, and is remarkably healthful. The ancients asserted that this delightful island, the birthplace of Jupiter, was freed, by the indulgence of the gods, from every noxious animal. No quadrupeds of a ferocious character belong to it. The wild goat is the only inhabitant of the forest and the lofty mountains, and sheep overspread the plains, and graze undisturbed by ravenous enemies. The island is now under Turkish rule, and is divided into three pachaliks; but the inhabitants are mostly Greeks, who are kept in a state of great depression. The native Candians are of the Greek Church, and are allowed the free exercise of their religion. The island is divided into twelve bishoprics, the bishop of one of which assumes the title of archbishop, and is appointed by the patriarch of Constantinople. The situation of this island for commerce can scarcely be surpassed. It is at an almost equal distance from Asia, Europe, and Africa, and might be made the emporium for the manufactures and agricultural productions of each; but, from the oppressive nature of the government, the indolence of the Turks, and the degraded state of the Greeks, those advantages are not improved, and its condition partakes of that of the general condition of the Turkish empire.

This island was formerly famous for its hundred cities; it is distinguished in the ancient fabulous legends for the arrival there of Europa, on a bull, from Phœnicia; for the laws of Minos; for the labyrinth, the work of Dædalus; and, above all, as the place where Jupiter was born and was buried. According to the fables of mythology, he was born in a cavern near Lyctus, or Cnosus; was rocked in a golden cradle; was fed with honey, and with the milk of the goat Amalthea, while the Curetes danced around him, clashing their arms to prevent his cries from being heard by Saturn. He became, according to the legend, the king of Crete, and was buried on the island. See Anthon, Class. Dic., Art. Jupiter.

§ 3. The Introduction of the Gospel into Crete.

We have no certain information in regard to the time when the Gospel was first preached in Crete, or by whom it was done. There are some circumstances mentioned, however, which furnish all the light which we need on this point in order to an understanding of the epistle before us. Among the persons who were in Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, and who were converted there, Cretans are mentioned (Acts ii. 11); and it is highly probable that, when they returned to their homes, they made the Gospel known to their countrymen. Yet history is wholly silent as to the method by which it was done, and as to the result on the minds of the inhabitants. As no visit of any of the apostles to that island is mentioned by Luke in the Acts of the Apostles, it may be presumed that the Gospel there had not produced any very marked success; and the early history of Christianity there is to us unknown.

It is clear from the epistle before us (chap. i. 5), that the apostle Paul was there on some occasion, and that the Gospel, either when he was there or before, was attended with success. "For this cause I left thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain elders in every city." Here it is manifest that Paul had been there with Titus; that he had commenced some arrangements which he had not been able himself to complete; and that the Gospel had had an effect extensively on the island, since he was to ordain elders "in every city."

It is not certainly known, however, when Paul was there. There is no mention in the Acts of the Apostles of his having been there, except when he was on his way to Rome (Acts xxvii. 7, 8), and this was in such circumstances as to preclude the supposition that that was the time referred to in this epistle:—for (1.) Titus was not then with him; (2.) there is no reason to suppose that he remained there long enough to preach the Gospel to any extent, or to establish churches. He was sailing to Rome as a prisoner, and there is no probability that he would be permitted to go at large and preach for any considerable time. There is, therefore, a moral certainty that it must have been on some other occasion. "It is striking," says Neander (History of the Planting of the Christian Church, vol. i., p. 400, 401), "that while Luke in the Acts reports so fully and circumstantially the occurrences of the apostle's last voyage to Rome, and mentions his stay in Crete, he says not a word (contrary to his usual practice in such cases) of the friendly reception given to him by the Christians there, or even of his meeting them at all. Hence we may conclude that no Christian churches existed in that island, though that transient visit would naturally give rise to the intention of planting the Gospel there, which he probably fulfilled soon after he was set at liberty, when he came into these parts."

There is reason to believe that Paul, after his first imprisonment at Rome, was released, and again visited Asia Minor and Macedonia. See Intro. to 2 Timothy. On this journey, it is not improbable that he may have visited Crete, having, as Neander supposes, had his attention called to this island as a desirable place for preaching the Gospel, when on his way to Rome. "If we may be allowed to suppose," says Dr. Paley (Hor. Paul.), "that St. Paul, after his liberation at Rome, sailed into Asia, taking Crete in his way; that from Asia, and from Ephesus, the capital of that country, he proceeded into Macedonia, and, crossing the peninsula in his progress, came into the neighborhood of Nicopolis, we have a route which falls in with every thing. It executes the intention expressed by the apostle of visiting Colosse and Philippi, as soon as he should be set at liberty at Rome. It allows him to leave 'Titus at Crete,' and 'Timothy at Ephesus,' as he went into Macedonia,' and to write to both, not long after, from the peninsula of Greece, and probably from the neighborhood of Nicopolis, thus bringing together the dates of these two letters" (1 Tim. and Titus), "and thereby accounting for that affinity between them, both in subject and language, which our remarks have pointed out. I confess that the journey which we have thus traced out for St. Paul is in a great measure hypothetical; but it should be observed that it is a species of consistency which seldom belongs to falsehood, to admit of an hypothesis which includes a great number of remote and independent circumstances without contradiction." See Neander, History of the Planting of the Christian Church, vol. i., p. 401. Comp., however, Intro. to 1 Tim. § 2.

Why Paul left Crete without completing the work which was to be done, and especially without ordaining the elders himself, is not certainly known. There is evidently a striking resemblance between the circumstances which induced him to leave Titus there, and those which existed at Ephesus when he left Timothy there to complete an important work. 1 Tim. i. 3, 4. We know that Paul was driven away from Ephesus before he had finished the work there which he had purposed to accomplish (Acts xix., xx. 1); and it is not at all improbable that some such disturbance took place in Crete. Comp. Koppe, Proleg., p. 194. When he thus left, he committed to Titus the work which he had designed to accomplish, with instructions to finish it as soon as possible, and then to come to him at Nicopolis. Chap. iii. 12.

§ 4. The Place, Time, and Occasion of Writing the Epistle.

There has been much diversity of opinion as to the time and place of writing this epistle.

In regard to the place, there can be little doubt that it was at a Nicopolis; for the apostle, in chap. iii. 12, directs Titus to come to him at that place. But it is not easy to determine what Nicopolis is meant, for there were many cities of that name. The person who affixed the subscription at the end of the epistle, affirms that it was the "Nicopolis of Macedonia;" but, as has been frequently remarked in these Notes, these subscriptions are of no authority. The name Nicopolis (meaning, properly, a city of victory—νίκη and πόλις) was given to several places. There was a city of this name in Thrace, on the river Nessus, now called Nikopi. There was also a city of the same name in Epirus, two in Mæsia, another in Armenia, another in Cilicia, and another in Egypt, in the vicinity of Alexandria. It is by no means easy to ascertain which of these cities is meant, though, as Paul was accustomed to travel in Greece and Asia Minor, there seems to be a probability that one of these cities is intended. The only way of determining this with any degree of probability is to ascertain what city was best known by that name at the time when the epistle was written, or what city one would be likely to go to, if he were directed to go to Nicopolis, without any further specification—as if one were directed to go to Philadelphia, London, or Rome. In such a case, he would go to the principal city of that name, though there might be many smaller places of that name also. But even this would not be absolutely certain, for Paul may have specified to Titus the place where he himself expected to go before he left him, so that he would be in no danger of doubt where the place was. But if we were to allow this consideration to influence us in regard to the place, there can be little doubt that the city which he meant was Nicopolis in Epirus, and the common opinion has been that the apostle alludes to this city. This Nicopolis was situated in Epirus, in Greece, north-west of Corinth and Athens, on the Ambracian gulf, and near its mouth. See the Map prefixed to the Acts of the Apostles. On the same gulf, and directly opposite to Nicopolis, is Actium, the place where Augustus achieved a signal victory over Mark Anthony; and the city of Nicopolis he built in honor of that victory. Augustus was anxious to raise this city to the highest rank among the cities of Greece, and caused games to be celebrated there, with great pomp, every few years. Having afterward fallen into decay, the city was restored by the emperor Julian. Modern travelers describe the remains of Nicopolis as very extensive; the site which they now occupy is called Prevesa Vecchia. See Anthon's Class. Dic. It should be said, however, that there is no absolute certainty about the place where the epistle was written. Mac-knight and Benson suppose it was at Colosse; Lardner supposes it was in or near Macedonia; Hug, at Ephesus.

If the epistle was written from the Nicopolis referred to, then it was probably after Paul's first imprisonment at Rome. If so, it was written about the year 63 or 64. But there is a great diversity of opinion as to the time. Lardner and Hug place it in the year 56. It is of no material importance to be able to determine the exact time.

The occasion on which it was written is specified by the apostle himself, with such clearness that there can be no doubt on that point. Paul had left Titus in Crete, to "set in order the things that were wanting, and to ordain elders in every city" (chap. i. 5); and as he had himself, perhaps, been called to leave suddenly, it was important that Titus should have more full instructions than he had been able to give him on various points of duty, or, at any rate, that he should have permanent instructions to which he could refer. The epistle is occupied, therefore, mainly with such counsels as were appropriate to a minister of the Gospel engaged in the duties which Titus was left to discharge.

The principal difficulties which it was apprehended Titus would meet with in the performance of his duties there, and which, in fact, made his labors there desirable, arose from two sources; (1.) the character of the Cretans themselves; and (2.) the influence of Judaizing teachers.

(1.) The character of the Cretans themselves was such as to demand the vigilance and care of Titus. They were a people characterized for insincerity, falsehood, and gross living. Chap. i. 12. There was great danger, therefore, that their religion would be hollow and insincere, and great need of caution lest they should be corrupted from the simplicity and purity required in the Gospel. Chap. i. 13.

(2.) The influence of Judaizing teachers was to be guarded against. It is evident from Acts ii. 11 that there were Jews residing there; and it is probable that it was by those who had gone from that island to Jerusalem to attend the feast of the Pentecost, and who had been converted on that occasion, that the Gospel was first introduced there. From this epistle, also, it is clear that one of the great dangers to piety in the churches of Crete arose from the efforts of such teachers, and from the plausible arguments which they would use in favor of the Mosaic law. See chap. i. 10, 14-16; iii. 9. To counteract the effect of their teaching, it was necessary to have ministers of the Gospel appointed in every important place, who should be qualified for their work. To make these arrangements was the great design for which Titus was left there; and to give him full information as to the kind of ministers which was needed, this epistle was written.

There is a very striking resemblance between this epistle and the first epistle to Timothy. See Paley's Horæ Paulinæ. "Both letters were addressed to persons left by the writer to preside in their respective churches during his absence. Both letters are principally occupied in describing the qualifications to be sought for in those whom they should appoint to offices in the Church; and the ingredients of this description are, in both letters, nearly the same. Timothy and Titus, likewise, are cautioned against the same prevailing corruptions, and, in particular, against the same misdirection of their cares and studies." —Paley. This similarity is found, not only in the general structure of the epistles, but also in particular phrases and expressions. Comp. 1 Tim. i. 2, 3, with Titus i. 4, 5; 1 Tim. i. 4, with Titus i. 14, iii. 9; 1 Tim. iv. 12, with Titus ii. 7, and ii. 15; 1 Tim. iii. 2-4, with Titus i. 6-8.

It is evident from this that the epistles were written by the same person, and to those who were in substantially the same circumstances. These coincidences are incidental proofs that they are genuine, and that they were written by the person and to the persons whose names appear, and on the occasions which are said in the epistle to have existed. On the subjects in this introduction, the reader may consult Macknight's Introduction to the Epistle; Michaelis's Introduction; Benson, Koppe, and especially Paley's Horæ Paulinæ—a work which will never be consulted without profit.

EPISTLE OF PAUL TO TITUS

CHAPTER I.

PAUL, a servant of God, and an apostle of Jesus Christ, ac-

a 2 Tim. 2. 25.

CHAPTER I.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter embraces the following points:

1. The usual inscription and salutation. Ver. 1-4. In this Paul declares himself to be the author of the epistle, and asserts in the strongest manner his claims to the apostleship. He alludes to the great cause in which, as an apostle, he was engaged—as acting under the eternal plan of God for the salvation of the elect, and as appointed to communicate the glorious truths of that system which had been now revealed to mankind. The object of this seems to be to impress the mind of Titus with his right to give him instruction.

2. A statement of the object for which Titus had been left in Crete, and the general character of the work which he was to perform there. Ver. 5.

3. The qualifications of those who were to be ordained to the ministry. Ver. 6-9. The characteristics laid down are substantially the same as in 1 Tim. iii.

4. Reasons for great caution and prudence in thus appointing elders over the churches. Ver. 10-13. Those reasons arose from the character of the Cretans. There were many deceivers there, and the character of the Cretans was such that there was danger that they who professed to be Christians would be hypocritical, and that, if put into the eldership, they would do great injury to the cause.

5. A solemn charge to Titus to rebuke them faithfully for their prevailing and characteristic vices, and to avoid giving any countenance to the vice for which they were so much distinguished. Ver. 13-16.

1. Paul, a servant of God, and an apos- cording to the faith of God's elect, and the acknowledging ^a of the truth which ^b is after godliness;

b 1 Tim. 6. 3.

tle of Jesus Christ. See Notes on Rom. i. 1; 1 Cor. ix. 1-5. ¶ According to the faith of God's elect. See Notes on Rom. viii. 33; Eph. i. 4; 2 Tim. ii. 10. The meaning of the word rendered here, "according to"—κατά—is, probably, with reference to; that is, he was appointed to be an apostle with respect to the faith of those whom God had chosen, or, in order that they might be led to believe the Gospel. God had chosen them to salvation, but he intended that it should be in connection with their believing, and, in order to that, he had appointed Paul to be an apostle that he might go and make known to them the Gospel. It is the purpose of God to save his people, but he does not mean to save them as infidels or unbelievers. He intends that they shall be believers first—and hence he sends his ministers that they may become such. ¶ And the acknowledging of the truth. In order to secure the acknowledgment or recognition of the truth. The object of the apostleship, as it is of the ministry in general, is to secure the proper acknowledgment of the truth among men. ¶ Which is after godliness. Which tends to promote piety toward God. On the word rendered godliness, see Notes on 1 Tim. ii. 2; iii. 16. The truth, the acknowledgment of which Paul was appointed to secure, was not scientific, historical, or political truth: it was that of religion—that which was adapted to lead men to a holy life, and to prepare them for a holy heaven.

2. In hope of eternal life. Marg., for. Gr., 'Επ' ἐλπίδι. This does not mean that Paul himself cherished the hope of eternal life, but that the "faith of the elect" which he aimed to secure was in order that men might have the hope of eternal life. The whole system which he was appointed to preach was designed to secure to man a well-founded hope of salvation. Comp.

2¹ In hope of eternal life, which God, that ^a can not lie, promised before ^b the world began;

3 But ^c hath in due times manifested his word through preaching, ^d which is committed unto me, according to the commandment of God our Saviour;

¹ or, For.

^b Matt. 25. 34.

^a 1 Sam. 15. 29.

^c 2 Tim. 1. 10. Heb. 6. 18.

4 To Titus, mine own son ^e after the common faith: Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father and the Lord Jesus Christ our Saviour.

5 For this cause left I thee in Crete, that thou shouldst set in order ^f the things that are ² want-

^d Rom. 10. 14, 15.

^f 1 Cor. 11. 34.

^e 1 Tim. 1. 1, 2.

² or, left undone.

Notes on 2 Tim. i. 10. ¶ Which God, that can not lie. On the phrase "can not lie," see Notes on Heb. vi. 18. The fact that God can not lie; that it is his nature always to speak the truth; that no circumstances can ever occur in which he will depart from it, is the foundation of all our hopes of salvation. ¶ Promised. The only hope of salvation is in the promise of God. It is only as we can have evidence that he has assured us that we may be saved, that we are authorized to cherish any hope of salvation. That promise is not made to us as individuals, or by name, but it becomes ours, (1.) because he has made a general promise that they who repent and believe shall be saved; and (2.) because we may have evidence that we have actually repented, and do believe the Gospel. If this is so, we fairly come under the promise of salvation, and may apply it to ourselves. ¶ Before the world began. That is, the purpose was then formed, and the promise may be considered as in fact then made; for a purpose in the mind of God, though it is not as yet made known, is equivalent to a promise. Comp. Notes on Matt. xxv. 34; 2 Tim. i. 9.

3. But hath in due times. At the proper time; the time which he had intended; the best time. See Notes on 1 Tim. ii. 6. Comp. Notes on Matt. ii. 2. Manifested his word through preaching. See Notes on 2 Tim. ii. 10. The meaning here is, that he has made known his eternal purpose through the preaching of the Gospel. Comp. Notes on Rom. x. 14, 15. Which is committed unto me. Not exclusively, but in common with others. See Notes on 2 Tim. i. 11. ¶ According to the commandment of God our Saviour. Paul always claimed to be divinely commissioned, and affirmed that he was engaged in the work of preaching by the authority of God. See Gal. i. 1-12; 1 Cor. i. 1; Rom. i. 1-4.

4. To Titus. See the Introd., § 1. ¶ Mine own son. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 2. ¶ After the common faith. The faith of all Christians; equivalent to saying "my son in the Gospel." That is, Paul had been the means of converting him by preaching that Gospel which was received by all who were Christians. ¶ Grace, mercy, and peace, etc. See Notes on Rom. i. 7.

5. For this cause left I thee in Crete. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. i. 3. On the situation of Crete, see the Introd., § 2. ¶ That thou shouldst set in order the things that are wanting. Marg., left undone. The Greek is, "the things that are left;" that is, those which were left unfinished; referring, doubtless, to arrangements which had been commenced, but which for some cause had been left incomplete. Whether this had occurred because he had been driven away by persecution, or called away by important duties demanding his attention elsewhere, can not now be determined. — ἑπιδιορθώσῃ — occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, to make straight upon, and then to put further to rights, to arrange further. — Robinson, Lex. There were things left unfinished which he was to complete. One of these things, and perhaps the principal, was to appoint elders in the various cities where the Gospel had been preached. ¶ And ordain. The word ordain has now acquired a technical signification which it can not be shown that it has in the New Testament. It means, in common usage, to "invest with a ministerial function or sacerdotal power; to introduce, and establish, and settle in the pastoral office with the customary forms and solemnities" (Webster); and, it may be added, with the idea always connected with it, of the imposition of hands. But the word used here does not necessarily convey this ing, and ordain "elders in every city as I had appointed thee :

a Acts 14. 23. 2 Tim. 2. 2.

meaning, or imply that Titus was to go through what would now be called an ordination service. It means to set, place, or constitute; then, to set over any thing, as a steward or other officer (see Matt. xxiv. 45; Luke xii. 42; Acts vi. 3), though without reference to any particular mode of investment with an office. See the word ordain explained in the Notes on Acts i. 22; xiv. 23. Titus was to appoint or set them over the churches, though with what ceremony is now unknown. There is no reason to suppose that he did this except as the result of the choice of the people. Comp. Notes on Acts vi. 3. ¶ Elders. Gr., presbyters. See the word explained in the Notes on Acts xiv. 23. These elders, or presbyters, were also called bishops (comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 1), for Paul immediately, in describing their qualifications, calls them bishops: "Ordain elders in every city—if any be blameless—FOR a bishop must be blameless," etc. If the elders and bishops in the times of the apostles were of different ranks, this direction would be wholly unmeaning. It would be the same as if the following direction were given to one who was authorized to appoint officers over an army: "Appoint captains over each company, who shall be of good character, and acquainted with military tactics, FOR a brigadier-general must be of good character, and acquainted with the rules of war." That the same rank is denoted also by the terms presbyter and bishop here is further apparent because the qualifications which Paul states as requisite for the "bishop" are not those which pertain to a prelate or a diocesan bishop, but to one who was a pastor of a Church, or an evangelist. It is clear, from ver. 7, that those whom Titus was to appoint were "bishops," and yet it is absurd to suppose that the apostle meant prelatical bishops, for no one can believe that such bishops were to be appointed in "every city" of the island. According to all modern notions of Episcopacy, one such bishop would have been enough for such an island as Crete, and indeed it has been not unfrequently maintained that Titus himself was in fact the bishop of that diocese. But if these were not prelates who were to be ordained by Titus, then it is clear that the term "bishop" in the New Testament is given to the presbyters or elders; that is, to all ministers of the Gospel. That usage should never have been departed from. ¶ In every city. Crete was anciently celebrated for the number of its cities. In one passage Homer ascribes to the island a hundred cities (Il., ii., 649), in another ninety (Od., xix., 174). It may be presumed that many of these cities were towns of no very considerable size, and yet it would seem probable that each one was large enough to have a Church, and to maintain the Gospel. Paul, doubtless, expected that Titus would travel over the whole island, and endeavor to introduce the Gospel in every important place. ¶ As I had appointed thee. As I commanded thee, or gave thee direction—διεταξάμην. This is a different word from the one used in the former part of the verse, and rendered ordain—καθίστημι. It does not mean that Titus was to ordain elders in the same manner as Paul had ordained him, but that he was to set them over the cities as he had directed him to do. He had, doubtless, given him oral instructions, when he left him, as to the way in which it was to be done.

6 If any be blameless, the husband of one wife, having faithful

6. If any be blameless, the husband of one wife. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. ¶ Having faithful children. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 4, 5. That is, having a family well-governed, and well-trained in religion. The word here—πιστὰ—applied to the children, and rendered faithful, does not necessarily mean that they should be truly pious, but it is descriptive of those who had been well-trained, and who were in due subordination. If a man's family were not of his character; if his children were insubordinate, and opposed to religion; if they were decided infidels or scoffers, it would show that there was such a deficiency in the head of the family that he could not be safely intrusted with the government of the Church. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 5. It is probably true, also, that the preachers at that time would be selected, as far as practicachildren, not accused of riot, or unruly.

7 For a bishop ^a must be blameless, as the steward of God; not self-willed, not soon angry, not

^a 1 Tim. 3, 2, etc.

ble, from those whose families were all Christians. There might be great impropriety in placing a man over a Church, a part of whose family were Jews or heathens. ¶ Not accused of riot. That is, whose children were not accused of riot. This explains what is meant by faithful. The word rendered riot—ἀσωτίας—is translated excess in Eph. v. 18, and riot in Tit. i. 6; 1 Pet. iv. 4. It does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament, though the word riotous is found in Luke xv. 13. See it explained in the Notes on Eph. v. 18. The meaning here is, that they should not be justly accused of this; that this should not be their character. It would, doubtless, be a good reason now why a man should not be ordained to the ministry, that he had a dissipated and disorderly family. ¶ Or unruly. Insubordinate; ungoverned. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 9; and iii. 4.

7. For a bishop must be blameless. 1 Tim. iii. 2. ¶ As the steward of God. See Notes on 1 Cor. iv. 1, 2. A man, in order to perform the duties of such an office, should be one against whom no accusation could lie. ¶ Not self-willed. Comp. 2 Pet. ii. 10. The word—αὐθαδέης—does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means, properly, self-complacent; and then, assuming, arrogant, imperious.—Rob., Lex. The gist of the offense—the very “head and front”—is that of being self-complacent; a trait of character which, of necessity, makes a man imperious, dogmatical, impatient of contradiction, and unyielding. Such a man, evidently, is not fit for the office of a minister of the Gospel. ¶ Not soon angry. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2, and the margin there. ¶ Not given to wine. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3. ¶ No striker. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3. ¶ Not given to filthy lucre. In 1 Tim. iii., “Not greedy of filthy lucre.” The same Greek word is used.

8. But a lover of hospitality. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2. ¶ A lover of good men. Marg., “or things.” The Greek (φιλάγαθος) means, a lover of good, and given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre;

8 But a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate;

1 or, things.

may apply to any thing that is good. It may refer to good men, as included under the general term good; and there is no more essential qualification of a bishop than this. A man who sustains the office of a minister of the Gospel should love every good object, and be ever ready to promote it; and he should love every good man, no matter in what denomination or country he may be found—no matter what his complexion, and no matter what his rank in life. Comp. Notes on Phil. iv. 8. ¶ Sober. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 2. ¶ Just. Upright in his dealings with all. A minister can do little good who is not. Comp. Notes on Phil. iv. 8. ¶ Holy. Pious, or devout. Faithful in all his duties to God. See Notes on 1 Tim. ii. 8. ¶ Temperate. ἐγκρατῆ. Having power or control over his passions. We apply the term now to abstinence from intoxicating liquors. In the Scriptures, it includes not only that, but also much more. It implies control over all our passions and appetites. See it explained in the Notes on Acts xxiv. 25. Comp. 1 Cor. vii. 9; ix. 25; Gal. v. 23.

9. Holding fast the faithful word. That is, the true doctrines of the Gospel. This means that he is to hold this fast in opposition to one who would wrest it away, and in opposition to all false teachers, and to all systems of false philosophy. He must be a man who is firm in his belief of the doctrines of the Christian faith, and a man who can be relied on to maintain and defend those doctrines. Comp. Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 15. ¶ As he hath been taught. Marg., in teaching. Gr., “According to the teaching.” The sense is, according to that doctrine as taught by the inspired teachers of religion. It does not mean as he had individually been taught; but he was to hold the faith as it was delivered by those whom the Saviour had appointed to make it known to mankind. The phrase “the doctrine,” or “the teaching,” had a sort of technical meaning, denoting the Gospel,

9 Holding ^a fast the faithful word, ¹ as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers.

10 For there are many unruly and

^a 2 Thess. 2. 15.

1 or, in teaching.

vain talkers ^b and deceivers, specially they of the circumcision :

11 Whose mouths must be stopped; who subvert ^c whole houses, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake.

^b James 1. 26.

^c Matt. 23. 14.

as that which had been communicated to mankind, not by human reason, but by teaching. ¶ That he may be able by sound doctrine. By sound teaching or instruction. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 10; iv. 16. He was not to dictate or to denounce, but to seek to convince by the statement of the truth. See Notes on 2 Tim. ii. 25. ¶ Both to exhort and to convince. To persuade them, or to bring them over to your views by kind exhortation, and by the instruction which will convince. The former method is to be used where men know the truth, but need encouragement to follow it; the latter, where they are ignorant, or are opposed to it. Both exhortation and argument are to be used by the ministers of religion. ¶ The gainsayers. Opposers. Literally, those who speak against; that is, against the truth. See Notes on Rom. x. 21.

10. For there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers. There are many persons who are indisposed to submit to authority (see the word unruly in ver. 6); many who are vain talkers—who are more given to talk than to the duties of practical religion (see the character of “Talkative,” in the Pilgrim's Progress); and many who live to deceive others under the mask of religion. They make great pretensions to piety; they are fluent in argument, and they urge their views in a plausible manner. ¶ Specially they of the circumcision. Jews, spoken of here as “of the circumcision” particularly, because they urged the necessity of circumcision in order that men might be saved. See Notes on Acts xv. 1. This proves that there were not a few Jews in the island of Crete.

11. Whose mouths must be stopped. The word here rendered stopped—επι-στρομίζω—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, to check or curb, as with a bridle; to restrain, or bridle in; and then to put to silence. It is, of course, implied here that this was to be done in a proper way, and in accordance with the spirit of the Gospel. The apostle gives Timothy no civil power to do it, nor does he direct him to call in the aid of the civil arm. All the agency which he specifies as proper for this is that of argument and exhortation. These are the proper means of silencing the advocates of error; and the history of the Church shows that the ministers of religion can be safely intrusted with no other. Comp. Psa. xxxii. 8, 9. ¶ Who subvert whole houses. Whole families. Comp. Matt. xxiii. 14; 2 Tim. iii. 6. That is, they turn them aside from the faith. ¶ Teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake. For gain. That is, they inculcate such doctrines as will make them popular, and as will give them access to the confidence of the people. They make it their first object to acquire influence as ministers of religion, and then abuse that influence in order to obtain money from the people. This they would doubtless do under many pretenses; such as that it was needful for the support of the Gospel, or for the relief of the poor, or perhaps for the assistance of distant Christians in persecution. Religion is the most powerful principle that ever governs the mind; and if a man has the control of that, it is no difficult thing to induce men to give up their worldly possessions. In all ages, there have been impostors who have taken advantage of the powerful principle of religion to obtain money from their deluded followers. No people can be too vigilant in regard to pretended religious teachers; and while it is undoubtedly a duty to contribute liberally for the support of the Gospel and the promotion of every good cause, it is no less a duty to examine with care every proposed object of benevolence, and to watch with an eagle eye those who have the disbursement of the charities of the Church. It is very rare that ministers ought to have much to do with disposing of the funds given for benevolent purposes; and when they do, they should in all cases be associated with their lay brethren. See Paley's Horæ Paulinæ, ch. iv., No. 1, 3, note. Comp. 1 Cor. xvi. 3. On the phrase "filthy lucre," see Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3.

12 One ^a of themselves, even a prophet of their own, said, The

a Acts 17. 28.

12. One of themselves. That is, one of the Cretans. The quotation here shows that Paul had his eye not only on the Jewish teachers there, but on the native Cretans. The meaning is, that, alike in reference to Jewish teachers and native-born Cretans, there was need of the utmost vigilance in the selection of persons for the ministry. They all had well-known traits of character, which made it proper that no one should be introduced into the ministry without extreme caution. It would seem, also, from the reasoning of Paul here, that the trait of character here referred to pertained not only to the native Cretans, but also to the character of the Jews residing there; for he evidently means that the caution should extend to all who dwelt on the island. ¶ Even a prophet of their own. Or, a poet; for the word prophet—προφήτης—like the Latin word vates, was often applied to poets, because they were supposed to be inspired of the muses, or to write under the influence of inspiration. So Virgil, Ecl., 9, 32: "Et me fecere pœtam Pierides . . . me quoque dicunt vatem pastores." Varro, Ling. Lat., 6, 3: "Vates pœtæ dicti sunt." The term prophet was also given by the Greeks to one who was regarded as the interpreter of the gods, or who explained the obscure responses of the oracles. As such an interpreter—as one who thus saw future events—he was called a prophet; and as the poets claimed much of this kind of knowledge, the name was given to them. It was also given to one who was regarded as eminently endowed with wisdom, or who had that kind of sagacity by which the results of present conduct might be foreseen, as if he was under the influence of a kind of inspiration. The word might have been applied to the person here referred to—Epimenides—in this latter sense, because he was eminently endowed with wisdom. He was one of the seven wise men of Greece. He was a contemporary of Solon, and was born at Phæstus, in Cretians are always liars, evil beasts, slow bellies.

the island of Crete, B.C. 659, and is said to have reached the age of 157 years. Many marvelous tales are told of him (see Anthon, Class. Dic.), which are commonly supposed to be fabulous, and which are to be traced to the invention of the Cretans. The event in his life which is best known is that he visited Athens, at the request of the inhabitants, to prepare the way by sacrifices for the introduction of the laws of Solon. He was supposed to have intercourse with the gods, and it was presumed that a peculiar sacredness would attend the religious services in which he officiated. On this account, also, as well as because he was a poet, the name prophet may have been given him. Feuds and animosities prevailed at Athens, which it was supposed such a man might allay, and thus prepare them for the reception of the laws of Solon. The Athenians wished to reward him with wealth and public honors; but he refused to accept of any remuneration, and only demanded a branch of the sacred olive-tree, and a decree of perpetual friendship between Athens and his native city. After his death, divine honors were paid to him by the Cretans. He wrote a poem on the Argonautic expedition, and other poems, which are now entirely lost. The quotation here is supposed to be made from a treatise on oracles and responses, which is also lost. ¶ The Cretians are always liars. This character of the Cretans is abundantly sustained by the examples adduced by Wetstein. To be a Cretan became synonymous with being a liar, in the same way as to be a Corinthian became synonymous with living a licentious life. Comp. Introd. to 1 Cor., § 1. Thus the scholiast says, παροιμία ἐστὶ τὸ κρητίζειν ἐπὶ τοῦ ψεύδεσθαι—to act the Cretan is a proverb for to lie. The particular reason why they had this character abroad, rather than other people, is unknown. Bishop Warburton supposes that they acquired it by claiming to have among them the tomb of Jupiter, and by maintaining that all the gods, like Jupiter, were only mortals who had been raised to divine honors. Thus the Greeks maintained that they always proclaimed a false-

13 This witness is true. Wherefore rebuke them ^a sharply; that they may be sound in the faith,

14 Not giving heed to Jewish fa-

^a 2 Tim. 4. 2.

hood by asserting this opinion. But their reputation for falsehood seems to have arisen from some deeper cause than this, and to have pertained to their general moral character. They were only more eminent in what was common among the ancient heathen, and what is almost universal among the heathen now. Comp. Notes on Eph. iv. 25. ¶ Evil beasts. In their character, beasts or brutes of a ferocious or malignant kind. This would imply that there was a great want of civilization, and that their want of refinement was accompanied with what commonly exists in that condition—the unrestrained indulgence of wild and ferocious passions. See examples of the same manner of speaking of barbarous and malicious men in Wetstein. ¶ Slow bellies. Two vices seem here to be attributed to them, which indeed commonly go together—gluttony and sloth. An industrious man will not be likely to be a gormandizer, and a gormandizer will not often be an industrious man. The mind of the poet, in this, seems to have conceived of them first as a race of gluttons—a people whose only concern was the stomach (in the word γαστρεές, bellies)—a people devoted to the stomach, gluttons, gormandizers; and then, as a consequence of this, lazy, dull, indolent, worthless, in the word slow—αργαί. Comp. Phil. iii. 19. On the connection between gluttony and sloth, see the examples in Wetstein. Seldom have more undesirable, and, in some respects, incongruous qualities, been grouped together in describing any people. They were false to a proverb, which was, indeed, consistent enough with their being ferocious—though ferocious and wild nations are sometimes faithful to their word; but they were at the same time ferocious and lazy, fierce and gluttonous—qualities which are not often found together. In some respects, therefore, they surpassed the common depravity of human nature, and blended in themselves ignoble properties which, among the worst people, are usually found existing alone. To mingle apparently contradictory qualities of wickedness bles, ^b and commandments of men that turn from the truth.

15 Unto ^c the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are de-

^b 1 Tim. 1. 4.

^c Rom. 14. 14, 20.

in the same individual or people is the height of depravity; as to blend in the same mind apparently inconsistent traits of virtuous character, or those which exist commonly, in their highest perfection, only alone, is the highest virtue.

13. This witness is true. That is, this testimony, long before borne by one of their own number, was true when the apostle wrote to Titus. The fact that this was the general character of the people was a reason why he should be on his guard in introducing men into the ministry, and in the arrangement of affairs pertaining to the Church. That it was true, see proofs in Wetstein. ¶ Wherefore rebuke them. See Notes on 2 Tim. iv. 2. ¶ Sharply. ἀποτόμως—cuttingly, severely—from ἀποτέμνω, to cut off. The word is used here in the sense of severity, meaning that the reproof should be such as would be understood, and would show them plainly the wickedness of such traits of character. He was not to be mealy-mouthed, but he was to call things by their right names, and not to spare their faults. When men know that they are doing wrong, we should tell them so in few words; if they do not know it, it is necessary to teach them, in order to convince them of their error. ¶ That they may be sound in the faith. That they may not allow the prevailing vices to corrupt their views of religion.

14. Not giving heed to Jewish fables, etc. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 4. ¶ And commandments of men that turn from the truth. See Notes on Matt. xv. 3-5.

15. Unto the pure all things are pure. See Notes on Rom. xiv. 14, 20. There is probably an allusion here to the distinctions made in respect to meats and drinks among the Jews. Some articles of food were regarded as “clean,” or allowed to be eaten, and some as “unclean,” or forbidden. Paul says that those distinctions ceased under the Christian dispensation, and that to those who had a conscience not easily troubled by nice and delicate questions about ceremonial observances, all kinds of food might be regarded as lawful and proper. Comp. Notes on fled and unbelieving is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled.

1 Tim. iv. 4, 5. If a man habitually maintains a good conscience in the sight of God, it will be accepted of him whether he do or do not abstain from certain kinds of food. See Notes on Col. ii. 16. This passage, therefore, should not be interpreted as proving that all things are right and lawful for a Christian, or that whatever he may choose to do will be regarded as pure, but as primarily referring to distinctions in food, and meaning that there is no sanctity in eating one kind of food, and no sin in another, but that the mind is equally pure whatever is eaten. The phrase has a proverbial cast, though I know not that it was so used. The principle of the declaration is, that a pure mind—a truly pious mind—will not regard the distinctions of food and drink; of festivals, rites, ceremonies, and days, as necessary to be observed in order to promote its purity. The conscience is not to be burdened and enslaved by these things, but is to be controlled only by the moral laws which God has ordained. But there may be a somewhat higher application of the words—that every ordinance of religion, every command of God, every event that occurs in divine providence, tends to promote the holiness of one who is of pure heart. Such a one can see a sanctifying tendency in every thing, and can derive from all that is commanded, and all that occurs, the means of making the heart more holy. While a depraved mind will turn every such thing to a pernicious use, and make it the means of augmenting its malignity and corruption, to the pure mind it will be the means of increasing its confidence in God, and of making itself more holy. To such a mind every thing may become a means of grace. ¶ But unto them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure. Every thing is made the means of increasing their depravity. No matter what ordinances of religion they observe, what distinctions of meats, or drinks, or days they regard, and what events of Providence may occur, all are the occasion of augmented depravity. Such distinctions in food they make the means of fostering their pride and of producing self-righteousness; the mercies of God they abuse to pamper their lusts, and the afflictive events of divine Providence they make the occasion of murmuring and rebellion. Naturally corrupt at heart, no ordinances of religion and no events of Providence make them any better, but all tend to deepen their depravity. A sentiment similar to this is found in the classic writers. Thus Seneca, Epis. 98: “Malus animus omnia in malum vertit, etiam quæ specie optimi venerunt.” So again (De Beneficiis, v., 12): “Quemadmodum stomachus morbo vitiatus et colliques bilem, quoscunque acceperit cibos mutat—itā animus cæcus quicquid illi commiserit, id onus suum et perniciem facit.” ¶ But even their mind and conscience is defiled. It is not a mere external defilement, a thing which they so much dread, but a much worse kind of pollution—that which extends to the soul and the conscience. Every thing which they do tends to corrupt the inner man more and more, and to make them really more polluted and abominable in the sight of God. The wicked, while they remain impenitent, are constantly becoming worse and worse. They make every thing the means of increasing their depravity, and even those things which seem to pertain only to outward observances are made the occasion of the deeper corruption of the heart.

16 They profess ^a that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobe-

^a 2 Tim. 3. 5, 7.

16. They profess that they know God. That is, the Jewish teachers particularly, who are referred to in ver. 14. All those persons were professors of religion, and claimed that they had a peculiar knowledge of God. ¶ But in works they deny him. Their conduct is such as to show that they have no real acquaintance with him. ¶ Being abominable. In their conduct. The word here used—βδελυκτοί—occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means that which is detestable, or to be held in abhorrence. ¶ And disobedient, and unto every good work reprobate. Marg., void of judgment. On the word here used—ἀδοκίμος—see Notes on Rom i. 28; 2 Cor. xiii. 5. It means here that in reference to every thing that is good their conduct was such dient, and unto every good work ¹ reprobate.

CHAPTER II.

BUT speak thou the things which become sound doctrine:

¹ or, void of judgment.

a Prov. 16. 31.

that could not be approved, or that deserved disapprobation. It was for this reason—from the character of the people of the island of Crete, and of those who claimed to be teachers there enforcing the obligation of the Mosaic law—that it was so important for Titus to exercise special care in introducing men into the ministry, and in completing the arrangements contemplated in the organization of the churches there. Yet is this character confined to them? Are there none now who profess that they know God, but in works deny him; whose conduct is such that it ought to be abhorred; who are disobedient to the plain commands of God, and whose character in respect to all that pertains to true religion is to be disapproved by men, and will be by God at the last day? Alas, taking the Church at large, there are many such, and the fact that there are such persons is the grand hinderance to the triumphs of religion on the earth. “The way to heaven is blocked up by dead professors of religion.”

CHAPTER II.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

In the previous chapter, the apostle had directed Titus what to do in the organization of churches in the various cities of Crete, and had put him on his guard in doing it, by showing the character of the people he had to deal with. In this chapter he gives him various instructions as to his own method of teaching, showing what kind of doctrines he should inculcate, and what kind of instructions he should give to the various classes of his hearers. He was, in general, to speak only such things as became sound doctrine. Ver. 1. In particular, he was to instruct the aged men to be sober, grave, and temperate—acting in a manner that became their time of life, ver. 2; the aged women to be a proper example to the younger females, and to exercise a proper care over them, ver. 3-5; the young men to be sober-minded, ver. 6; Titus him-

2 That the aged ^a men be ² sober, grave, temperate, sound in faith, in charity, in patience.

3 The aged women likewise, that they be in behaviour as becometh ³

² or, vigilant.

³ or, holy women.

self, who evidently came under the class of young men, was to be an example to them in all things, vs. 7, 8; and servants were to be instructed to perform their duty to their masters with fidelity, vs. 9, 10. The duty of giving these instructions is then enforced by a reference to the nature and design of the Gospel. Ver. 11-15. That grace which brings salvation has appeared to all mankind, and its design is to make all holy who embrace it, and to teach all to live for a higher and a better world.

1. But speak thou. In thine own ministry. In the previous chapter Paul had given Titus instructions as to the kind of persons who were to be put into the sacred office. Here he gives him special instructions in regard to his own preaching. ¶ The things which become sound doctrine. To wit, those which he proceeds immediately to specify. On the phrase sound doctrine, see Notes on 1 Tim. i. 10. Comp. 2 Tim. iv. 3.

2. That the aged men. All aged men—for there is no reason to suppose that the apostle refers particularly to those who were in office, or who were technically elders or presbyters. If he had, he would have used the common word, πρεσβύτερος, presbyter (see Matt. xv. 2; xvi. 21; xxi. 23; xxvi. 3, 47, 57, 59; 1 Tim. v. 1, 17, 19; Titus i. 5; James v. 14; 1 Pet. v. 1), instead of the unusual word, πρεσβύτης, an old or aged man—a word which occurs nowhere else in the New Testament except in Luke i. 18, “For I am an old man,” and Philem. 9, “being such a one as Paul the aged.” It is in no instance applied to an office. Besides, the instructions which Titus was to give to such men was not that which peculiarly pertained to elders as officers in the Church, but to all aged men. The idea is, that he was to adapt his instructions to the peculiar character of different classes of his hearers. The old needed special instructions, and so did the young. ¶ Be sober. Marg., vigilant. See the word explained holiness, not¹ false accusers, not given to much wine, teachers of good things;

4 That they may teach the^a young

1 or, makebates.

a 1 Tim. 5. 14.

in the Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2, where it is rendered vigilant. In 1 Tim. iii. 11, the same word is rendered sober. ¶ Grave. Serious. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 8. Comp. Notes on Phil. iv. 8, where the same word is rendered honest. ¶ Temperate. σώφρονος. Rather, prudent or sober-minded. See the word explained in the Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 2, where it is rendered sober. Also, Titus i. 8. ¶ Sound in faith. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 10; Titus i. 13. ¶ In charity. In love. See Notes on 1 Cor. xiii. The meaning is, that an old man should evince love for all, especially for those who are good. He should have overcome, at his time of life, all the fiery, impetuous, envious, wrathful passions of his early years, and his mind should be subdued into sweet benevolence to all mankind. ¶ In patience. In the infirmities of old age; in the trials resulting from the loss of the friends of their early years; in their loneliness in the world, they should show that the effect of all God's dealings with them has been to produce patience. The aged should submit to the trials of their advanced years, also, with resignation—for those trials will soon be over. A few more sighs, and they will sigh no more; a little longer bearing up under their infirmities, and they will renew their youth before the throne of God.

3. The aged women likewise. Not only those who may have the office of deaconesses, but all aged females. ¶ That they be in behavior as becometh holiness. Marg., holy women. The Greek word is not found elsewhere in the New Testament. It means appropriate to a certain place or person, or becoming to religion. Their conduct should be such as the Gospel requires. ¶ Not false accusers. Marg., makebates. Gr., διαβόλους—the word commonly applied to the devil—as the accuser. See it explained in the Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 11, where it is rendered slanders. ¶ Not given to much wine. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3. ¶ Teachers of good things. That is, instructing the younger—whether their own children, or whether they sustain the office of deaconess, and are appointed to give instruction to women to be² sober, to love their husbands, to love their children,

5 To be discreet, chaste, keepers at home, good, obedient to their younger females. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. v. 2-6.

2 or, wise.

4. That they may teach the young women to be sober. Marg., wise—a word similar to that which in ver. 2 is rendered temperate, and in 1 Tim. iii. 2, sober. The meaning is, that they should instruct them to have their desires and passions well regulated, or under proper control. ¶ To love their husbands. φιλάδρους. This word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. In Eph. v. 25, Paul directs husbands to love their wives, and in ver. 33, the wife to reverence her husband, and here he says that it should be one of the first duties enjoined on the wife that she should love her husband. All happiness in the marriage relation is based on love. When that departs, peace departs. No wealth or splendor in a dwelling, no gorgeousness of equipage or apparel, no magnificence of entertainment or sweetness of music, no forms of courtesy and politeness can be a compensation for the want of affection. Mutual love between a husband and wife will diffuse comfort through the obscurest cottage of poverty; the want of it can not be supplied by all that can be furnished in the palaces of the great. ¶ To love their children. Nature prompts to this, and yet there are those so depraved that they have no maternal affection. See Notes on Rom. i. 31. Religion reproduces natural affection when sin has weakened or destroyed it, and it is the design of Christianity to recover and invigorate all the lost or weakened sensibilities of our nature.

5. To be discreet. The same word which is rendered temperate in ver. 2, and explained in ver. 4. ¶ Chaste. Pure—in heart and in life. ¶ Keepers at home. That is, characteristically attentive to their domestic concerns, or to their duties in their families. A similar injunction is found in the precepts of the Pythagoreans—τὴν γὰρ γυναῖκα δεῖ οἰκοῦρὲν καὶ ἐνδὸν μένειν. See Creuzer's Symbolik, iii., 120. This does not mean, of course, that they are never to go abroad, but they are not to neglect their domestic affairs; own husbands, that the word of God be not blasphemed.

6 Young men likewise exhort to be sober¹ minded :

¹ or, discreet.

that they are not to be better known abroad than at home; that they are not to omit their own duties and become "busybodies" in the concerns of others. Religion is the patron of the domestic virtues, and regards the appropriate duties in a family as those most intimately connected with its own progress in the world. It looks benignly on all which makes home a place of contentment, intelligence, and peace. It does not flourish when domestic duties are neglected; and whatever may be done abroad, whatever self-denial and zeal in the cause of religion may be evinced there, whatever call there may be for the labors of Christians there, or however much good may be actually done abroad, religion has gained nothing, on the whole, if, in order to secure these things, the duties of a wife and mother at home have been disregarded. Our first duty is at home, and all other duties will be well performed, just in proportion as that is. ¶ Good. In all respects, and in all relations. To a wife, a mother, a sister, there can be no higher characteristic ascribed than to say that she is good. What other trait of mind will enable her better to perform her appropriate duties of life? What other will make her more like her Saviour? ¶ Obedient to their own husbands. See Notes on Eph. v. 22-24; Col. iii. 18. ¶ That the Word of God be not blasphemed. That the Gospel may not be injuriously spoken of (see Notes on Matt. ix. 3) on account of the inconsistent lives of those who profess to be influenced by it. The idea is, that religion ought to produce the virtues here spoken of, and that when it does not, it will be reproached as being of no value.

6. Young men likewise exhort to be sober-minded. Marg., discreet. On the meaning of the Greek word used here (σωφρονεῖν), see Notes on vs. 2 and 4. The idea is, that they should be entreated to be prudent, discreet, serious in their deportment; to get the mastery over their passions and appetites; to control the propensities to which youth are subject; that there should be such self-government, under the influence of religion, as to avoid excess in every thing. A well-governed mind, superior to the indulgence of those passions to which the young are prone, will express the meaning of the word here. They should be "steady in their behavior, superior to sensual temptations, and constant in the exercise of every part of self-government."—Doddridge. The reasons for this are obvious: (1.) The hopes of the Church depend much on them. (2.) A young man who can not govern himself gives little promise of being useful or happy. (3.) Indulgence in the propensities to which young men are prone will, sooner or later, bring ruin to the body and the soul. (4.) They are just at the period of life when they are exposed to peculiar temptations, and when they need to exercise a peculiar guardianship over their conduct. (5.) Like others, they may soon die; and they should be habitually in such a frame of mind as to be prepared to stand before God. A young man who feels that he may be soon in the eternal world can not but be sensible of the propriety of having a serious mind, and of living and acting as in the immediate presence of his Maker and Judge.

7 In all things shewing thyself^a a pattern of good works: in doctrine showing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity,

^a 1 Tim. 4. 12.

7. In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works. Not merely teaching others, but showing them by example how they ought to live. On the word rendered pattern (τύπος, type), see Notes on Heb. ix. 5. Comp. 1 Cor. x. 6; Phil. iii. 17. ¶ In doctrine. In your manner of teaching. See Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 16. ¶ Showing uncorruptness. The word here used does not occur elsewhere in the New Testament. It means, here, the same as purity—that which is not erroneous, and which does not tend to corrupt or vitiate the morals of others, or to endanger their salvation. Every thing in his teaching was to be such as to make men purer and better. ¶ Gravity. See this word explained in the Notes on 1 Tim. ii. 2, where it is rendered honesty. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 4, where it is rendered gravity. It does not elsewhere occur. See the use of the adjective,

8 Sound^a speech, that can not be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

9 Exhort servants^b to be obedient

^a 1 Tim. 6. 3.

^b Eph. 6. 5, etc.

unto their own masters, and to please them well in all things; not¹ answering again;

10 Not purloining, but shewing all good fidelity; that^c they may

¹ or, gainsaying.

^c Matt. 5. 16.

however, in Phil. iv. 8; 1 Tim. iii. 8, 11. Titus ii. 2. The word properly means venerableness; then, whatever will insure respect, in character, opinions, deportment. The sense here is, that the manner in which a preacher delivers his message should be such as to command respect. He should evince good sense, undoubted piety, an acquaintance with his subject, simplicity, seriousness, and earnestness in his manner. ¶ Sincerity. See this word (ἀφθαρσία) explained in the Notes on Eph. vi. 24. It is rendered immortality in Rom. ii. 7; 2 Tim. i. 10; incorruption in 1 Cor. xv. 42, 50, 53, 54; and sincerity, Eph. vi. 24, and in the place before us. It does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means incorruption, incapacity of decay; and, therefore, would be here synonymous with purity. It should be said, however, that it is wanting in many MSS., and is rejected in the later editions of the New Testament by Wetstein, Tittman, and Hahn.

8. Sound speech. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 10. He was to use language that would be spiritually healthful (ὀψιμή); that is, true, pure, uncorrupted. This word, and its correlatives, is used in this sense, in the New Testament, only by the apostle Paul. It is commonly applied to the body, meaning that which is healthful, or whole. See Luke v. 31; vi. 10; vii. 10; xv. 27; Matt. xii. 13; xv. 31; Mark iii. 5; v. 34; John v. 4, 6, 9, 11, 14, 15; vii. 23; Acts iv. 10; 3 John, 2. For Paul's use of the word, see 1 Tim. i. 10; vi. 3; 2 Tim. i. 13; iv. 3; Tit. i. 9, 13; ii. 1, 2, 8. It does not elsewhere occur. ¶ That can not be condemned. Such as can not be shown to be weak or unsound; such that no one could find fault with it, or such as an adversary could not take hold of and blame. This direction would imply purity and seriousness of language, solidity of argument, and truth in the doctrines which he maintained. ¶ That he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, etc. Ashamed that he has opposed such views.

9. Exhort servants to be obedient to their own masters. See this explained in the Notes on Eph. vi. 5, seq., and 1 Tim. vi. 1-4. ¶ And to please them well in all things. That is, so far as they lawfully may, or in those things which are not contrary to the will of God. Comp. Eph. vi. 6. It should be an object with one who is a servant to meet the approbation of his master, as long as this relation continues. This rule would not, however, go to the extent to require him to please his master in doing any thing that is contrary to the law of God, or that is morally wrong. ¶ Not answering again. Marg., gainsaying. Not contradicting, or not disobeying. They were to do what the master required, if it did not interfere with the rights of conscience, without attempting to argue the matter—without disputing with the master—without advancing their own opinions. Where this relation exists, no one can doubt that this is a proper frame of mind for a servant. It may be observed, however, that all that is here said would be equally appropriate, whether the servitude was voluntary or involuntary. A man who becomes voluntarily a servant, binds himself to obey his master cheerfully and quietly, without gainsaying, and without attempting to reason the matter with him, or propounding his own opinions, even though they may be much wiser than those of his employer. He makes a contract to obey his master, not to reason with him, or to instruct him. Comp. Rom. vi. 16.

10. Not purloining. Not to appropriate to themselves what belongs to their masters. The word purloin means, literally, to take or carry away for one's self; and would be applied to an appropriation to one's self of what pertained to a common stock, or what belonged to one in whose employ we are—as the embezzlement of public funds. Here it means that the servant was not to apply that to his own use which belonged to his master; that is, he was not to pilfer—a adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

11 For the grace ^a of God that

^a Rom. 5. 15.

vice to which, as all know, servants, and especially slaves, are particularly exposed. See the word explained in the Notes on Acts v. 2. ¶ But showing all good fidelity. In laboring, and in taking care of the property intrusted to them. ¶ That they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things. That they may show the fair influence of religion on them, in all respects, making them industrious, honest, kind, and obedient. They were to show that the effect of the religion which they professed was to make them better fitted to discharge the duties of their station in life, however humble; or that its influence on them was desirable in every respect. In this way, they might hope also that the minds of their masters might be reached, and that they might be brought to respect and love the Gospel. Learn, hence, (1.) that one in the most humble walk of life may so live as to be an ornament to religion, as well as one favored with more advantages. (2.) That servants may do much good, by so living as to show to all around them that there is a reality in the Gospel, and to lead others to love it. (3.) If, in this situation of life, it is a duty so to live as to adorn religion, it can not be less so in more elevated situations. A master should feel the obligation not to be surpassed in religious character by his servant.

11. For the grace of God. The favor of God, shown to the undeserving. See Notes on Rom. i. 7. ¶ That bringeth salvation. Marg., to all men hath appeared. That is, in the margin, "the grace which brings salvation to all men has been revealed." The marginal reading is most in accordance with the Greek, though it will bear either construction. If that which is in the text be adopted, it means that the plan of salvation has been revealed to all classes of men; that is, that it is announced or revealed to all the race that they may be saved. Comp. Notes on Col. i. 23. If the other rendering be adopted, it means that that plan is fitted to secure the salvation of all men; that none are excluded from the offer; that provision has been made for all, bringeth salvation ¹ hath appeared to all men,

12 Teaching us that, denying ^b

¹ or, to all men hath appeared.

^b Rom. 8. 13.

and that all may come and be saved. Whichever interpretation be adopted, the sense will not be essentially varied. It is, that the Gospel is adapted to man as man, and therefore may include servants as well as masters; subjects, as well as kings; the poor, as well as the rich; the ignorant, as well as the learned. See Notes on 1 Tim. ii. 1, 2; Acts xvii. 26.

12. Teaching us. That is, "the grace of God" so teaches us; or that system of religion which is a manifestation of the grace of God so teaches us, by inculcating the great and important duties which Paul proceeds to state. ¶ That, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts. "That by denying ourselves of these, or refusing to practice them, we should lead a holy life." The word ungodliness here means all that would be included under the word impiety; that is, all failure in the performance of our proper duties toward God. See Notes on Rom. i. 18. The phrase "worldly lusts" refers to all improper desires pertaining to this life—the desire of wealth, pleasure, honor, sensual indulgence. It refers to such passions as the men of this world are prone to, and would include all those things which can not be indulged in with a proper reference to the world to come. The gross passions would be of course included, and all those more refined pleasures also which constitute the characteristic and peculiar enjoyments of those who do not live unto God. ¶ We should live soberly. See the word soberly (σοφρόνως) explained in the Notes on vs. 2, 4. It means that we should exercise a due restraint on our passions and propensities. ¶ Righteously. Justly—δικαίως. This refers to the proper performance of our duties to our fellow-men; and it means that religion teaches us to perform those duties with fidelity, according to our relations in life; to our promises and contracts; to our fellow-citizens and neighbors; to the poor, the needy, the ignorant, and the oppressed; to all those who are providentially placed in our way who need our kind offices. Justice to them would lead us to act as we would wish that ungodliness and worldly lusts, ^a we ^b should live soberly, righteously, and godly, in this present world; they would act toward us. ¶ And godly. Piously; that is, in the faithful performance of our duties to God. We have here, then, an epitome of all that religion requires: (1.) Our duty to ourselves—included in the word “soberly,” and requiring a suitable control over our evil propensities and passions; (2.) our duty to our fellowmen in the relations we sustain in life; and (3.) our duty to God—evinced in what will be properly regarded as a pious life. He that does these things, meets all the responsibilities of his condition and relations; and the Christian system, requiring the faithful performance of these duties, shows how admirably it is adapted to man. ¶ In this present world. That is, as long as we shall continue in it. These are the duties which we owe in the present life.

^a 1 Pet. 2. 11.

^b Luke 1. 75.

13. Looking for. Expecting; waiting for. That is, in the faithful performance of our duties to ourselves, to our fellow-creatures, and to our God, we are patiently to wait for the coming of our Lord. (1.) We are to believe that he will return; (2.) we are to be in a posture of expectation, not knowing when he will come; and (3.) we are to be ready for him whenever he shall come. See Notes on Matt. xxiv. 42-44; 1 Thess. v. 4; Phil. iii. 20. ¶ That blessed hope. The fulfillment of that hope so full of blessedness to us. ¶ The glorious appearing. See Notes on 2 Thess. ii. 8. Comp. 1 Tim. vi. 14; 2 Tim. i. 10; iv. 1, 8. ¶ Of the great God. There can be little doubt, if any, that by “the great God” here, the apostle referred to the Lord Jesus, for it is not a doctrine of the New Testament that God himself as such, or in contradistinction from his incarnate Son, will appear at the last day. It is said, indeed, that the Saviour will come “in the glory of his Father, with his angels” (Matt. xvi. 27), but that God as such will appear is not taught in the Bible. The doctrine there is, that God will be manifest in his Son; that the divine approach to our world will be through him to judge the race; and that though he will be accompanied with the appropriate symbols of the 13 Looking ^c for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing ^d of the great God and our Saviour Jesus Christ;

^c 2 Pet. 3. 12.

^d Rev. 1. 7.

divinity, yet it will be the Son of God who will be visible. No one, accustomed to Paul's views, can well doubt that when he used this language he had his eye throughout on the Son of God, and that he expected no other manifestation than what would be made through him. In no place in the New Testament is the phrase ἐπιφάνειαν τοῦ Θεοῦ—“the manifestation or appearing of God”—applied to any other one than Christ. It is true that this is spoken of here as the “appearing of the glory”—τῆς δόξης—of the great God,” but the idea is that of such a manifestation as became God, or would appropriately display his glory. It is known to most persons who have attended to religious controversies, that this passage has given rise to much discussion. The ancients, in general, interpreted it as meaning, “The glorious appearing of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ.” This sense has been vindicated by the labors of Beza, Whitby, Bull, Matthæi, and Middleton (on the Greek article), and is the common interpretation of those who claim to be orthodox. See Bloomfield, Rec. Syn., and Notes, in loc. He contends that the meaning is, “the glorious appearance of that GREAT BEING who is our GOD AND SAVIOUR.” The arguments for this opinion are well summed up by Bloomfield. Without going into a critical examination of this passage, which would not be in accordance with the design of these Notes, it may be remarked in general, (1.) that no plain reader of the New Testament, accustomed to the common language there, would have any doubt that the apostle referred here to the coming of the Lord Jesus. (2.) That the “coming” of God, as such, is not spoken of in this manner in the New Testament. (3.) That the expectation of Christians was directed to the advent of the ascended Saviour, not to the appearing of God as such. (4.) That this is just such language as one would use who believes that the Lord Jesus is divine, or that the name God may properly be applied to him. (5.) That it would naturally and obviously convey the idea that he was 14 Who gave ^a himself for us, that he might redeem us from all ^b iniquity, and purify ^c unto himself a divine to one who had no theory to defend. (6.) That if the apostle did not mean this, he used such language as was fitted to lead men into error. And (7.) that the fair construction of the Greek here, according to the application of the most rigid rules, abundantly sustains the interpretation which the plain reader of the New Testament would affix to it. The names above referred to are abundant proof that no violation is done to the rules of the Greek language by this interpretation, but rather that the fair construction of the original demands it. If this be so, then this furnishes an important proof of the divinity of Christ.

^a Eph. 5. 2.

^b Psa. 130. 8.

^c Heb. 9. 14.

14. Who gave himself for us. See Notes on Eph. v. 2. ¶ That he might redeem us from all iniquity. The word here rendered redeem—λυτρόω, lutroō—occurs only here and in Luke xxiv. 21; 1 Pet. i. 18. The noun, however—λύτρον, lutron—occurs in Matt. xx. 28, and Mark x. 45, where it is rendered ransom. See it explained in the Notes on Matt. xx. 28. It is here said that the object of his giving himself was to save his people from all iniquity. See this explained in the Notes on Matt. i. 21. ¶ And purify unto himself. (1.) Purify them, or make them holy. This is the first and leading object. See Notes on Heb. ix. 14. (2.) Unto himself; that is, they are no longer to be regarded as their own, but as redeemed for his own service, and for the promotion of his glory. See Notes on 1 Cor. vi. 19, 20. ¶ A peculiar people. 1 Pet. ii. 9. The word here used (περιούσιος) occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. It means, properly, having abundance; and then one's own, what is special or peculiar (Rob., Lex.), and it here means that they were to be regarded as belonging to the Lord Jesus. It does not mean, as the word would seem to imply—and as is undoubtedly true—that they are to be a peculiar people in the sense that they are to be unlike others, or to have views and principles peculiar to themselves; but that they belong to the Saviour in contradistinction from belonging to themselves—“peculiar,” or his own, in the sense that a man's property is his own, and does not belong peculiar ^d people, zealous ^e of good works.

15 These things speak, and ex-

^d Deut. 7. 6. 1 Pet. 2. 9.

^e Eph. 2. 10.

to others. This passage, therefore, should not be used to prove that Christians should be unlike others in their manner of living, but that they belong to Christ as his redeemed people. From that it may indeed be inferred that they should be unlike others, but that is not the direct teaching of the passage. ¶ Zealous of good works. As the result of their redemption; that is, this is one object of their having been redeemed. See Notes on Eph. ii. 10.

15. These things speak and exhort. See Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 2. ¶ And rebuke with all authority. See Notes on 1 Tim. v. 1, 20; 2 Tim. iv. 2. The word authority here means command—ἐπιταγή. 1 Cor. vii. 6, 25; 2 Cor. viii. 8; 1 Tim. i. 1; Tit. i. 3. The sense here is that he was to do it decidedly, without ambiguity, without compromise, and without keeping any thing back. He was to state these things not as being advice or counsel, but as the requirement of God. ¶ Let no man despise thee. That is, conduct yourself, as you may easily do, so as to command universal respect as a minister of God. See Notes on 1 Tim. iv. 12.

CHAPTER III.

ANALYSIS OF THE CHAPTER.

This chapter comprises the following subjects:

(1.) Titus was to instruct his hearers to be subject to lawful authority, and in general to manifest meekness and gentleness toward all classes of men. Vs. 1, 2.

(2.) A reason is assigned why they should do this. Ver. 3-8. They who were Christians were once, indeed, like others, disobedient and unholy; they were regardless of law, and gave free indulgence to their evil propensities, but they had been redeemed for a better purpose, and it was the design of God in redeeming them that they should manifest every kind of virtue.

(3.) Titus was to avoid foolish questions, and contentions, and strifes about the law. Ver. 9.

(4.) He who was a heretic was to be rejected after suitable admonitions. Vs. 10, 11.

(5.) Paul directs Titus to come to hort; and rebuke with all authority. Let ^a no man despise thee.

CHAPTER III.

PUT them in mind to be subject ^b to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work.

^a 1 Tim. 4. 12.

^b Rom. 13. 1.

him at Nicopolis, and to bring Zenas and Apollos with him. Ver. 12-14.

(6.) He closes with the customary salutations. Ver. 15.

1. Put them in mind to be subject, etc. See the duty here enjoined explained in the Notes on Romans xiii. 1, seq. ¶ Principalities and powers. See these words explained in the Notes on Rom. viii. 38. The word here rendered powers (ἐξουσίαις) is not, indeed, the same as that which is found there (δυνάμεις), but the same idea is conveyed. Comp. Notes on Eph. i. 21. ¶ To obey magistrates. That is, to obey them in all that is not contrary to the Word of God. See Notes on Rom. xiii. 1, seq.; Acts iv. 19, 20. ¶ To be ready to every good work. To be prepared for (ἑτοιμός); prompt to perform all that is good. See Notes on Phil. iv. 8. A Christian should be always ready to do good as far as he is able. He should not need to be urged, or coaxed, or persuaded, but should be so ready always to do good that he will count it a privilege to have the opportunity to do it.

2. To speak evil of no man. Gr. "to blaspheme (βλασφημεῖν, comp. Notes on Matt. ix. 3) no one." Doddridge renders it, "calumniate no one." The idea is, that we are not to slander, revile, or defame any one. We are not to say any thing to any one, or of any one, which will do him injury. We are never to utter any thing which we know to be false about him, or to give such a coloring to his words or conduct as to do him wrong. We should always so speak to him and of him in such a way that he will have no reason to complain that he is an injured man. It may be necessary, when we are called to state what we know of his character, to say things which are not at all in his favor, or things which he has said or done that were wrong; but (1.) we should never do this for the purpose of doing him an injury, or so as to find a pleas-

2 To speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all ^c meekness unto all men.

3 For we ^d ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and ure in it; and (2.) where it is necessary to make the statement, it should be so as to do him no injustice. We should give no improper coloring. We should exaggerate no circumstance. We should never attempt to express ourselves about his motives, or charge on him bad motives—for we know not what his motives were. We should state every palliating circumstance of which we have knowledge, and do entire justice to it. We should not make the bad traits of his character prominent, and pass over all that is good. In a word, we should show that we would rather find him to be a good man than a bad man—even if the result should be that we had been mistaken in our opinions. It is better that we should have been mistaken than that he should be a bad man. ¶ To be no brawlers. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3. The same Greek word occurs in both places. It is not elsewhere found in the New Testament. ¶ But gentle. The word here used is rendered moderation in Phil. iv. 5, patient in 1 Tim. iii. 3, and elsewhere gentle. See Notes on 1 Tim. iii. 3. ¶ Showing all meekness unto all men. In the reception of injuries. See Notes on Matt. v. 5; Eph. iv. 2.

^c Eph. 4. 2.

^d 1 Cor. 6. 11. 1 Pet. 4. 3.

3. For we ourselves. We who are Christians. There is no reason for supposing, as Benson does, that this is to be understood as confined to Paul. There are some things mentioned here which were not probably true of him before his conversion, and the connection does not require us to suppose that he referred particularly to himself. He is stating a reason why those to whom Titus was to preach should be urged to lead holy lives, and especially to manifest a spirit of order, peace, kindness, and due subordination to law. In enforcing this, he says that those who were now Christians had formerly been wicked, disorderly, and sensual, but that under the influence of the Gospel they had been induced to lead better lives. The same Gospel which envy, hateful, and hating one another.

4 But after that the kindness and had been effectual in their case might be in others. To others it would be an encouragement to show that there were instances in which the Gospel had been thus efficacious, and they who were appointed to preach it might refer to their own example as a reason why others should be persuaded to lead holy lives. In preaching to others, also, they were not to be proud or arrogant. They were to remember that they were formerly in the same condition with those whom they addressed, and whom they exhorted to reformation. They were not to forget that what they had that was superior to others they owed to the grace of God, and not to any native goodness. He will exhort the wicked to repentance most effectually who remembers that his own former life was wicked; he will evince most of the proper spirit in doing it who has the deepest sense of the error and folly of his own past ways. ¶ Foolish. See this word explained in the Notes on Luke xxiv. 25, where it is rendered fools. Comp. Rom. i. 14, where it is rendered unwise; and Gal. iii. 1, 3; 1 Tim. vi. 9, where it is rendered foolish. ¶ Disobedient. To law, to parents, to civil authority, to God. This is the natural character of the human heart. See Luke i. 17; Rom. i. 30; 2 Tim. iii. 2; Tit. i. 16, where the same word occurs. ¶ Deceived. By the great enemy, by false teachers, by our own hearts, and by the flattery of others. It is a characteristic of man by nature that he sees nothing in its true light, but walks along amid constant though changing and very beautiful illusions. Comp. Matt. xxiv. 4, 5, 11; 2 Tim. iii. 13; 1 Pet. ii. 25; Rev. xii. 9; xviii. 23, where the same word occurs. See also Rev. xx. 3, 8, 10, where the same word is applied to that great deceiver who has led the world astray. Every one who is converted feels, and is ready to confess, that before conversion he was deceived as to the comparative value of things; as to the enjoyment which he expected to find in scenes of pleasure and riot; and often in what seemed to him well-formed plans. ¶ Serving divers lusts and pleasures. Indulging in the various corrupt passions and propensities of the soul. We were so under their influence that it might be said we were their servants, or were slaves to them (δουλεύουτες); that is, we implicitly obeyed them. See Notes on Rom. vi. 16, 17. ¶ Living in malice. Gr., in evil—ἐν κακία; that is, in all kinds of evil. See Notes on Rom. i. 29, where the word is rendered maliciousness. ¶ And envy. Displeasure at the happiness and prosperity of others. See Notes on Rom. i. 29. ¶ Hateful. στυγητοί. This word does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. It means that their conduct was such as to be worthy of the hatred of others. Of whom, before his conversion, is not this true? ¶ And hating one another. There was no brotherly love; no true affection for others. There was ill-will felt in the heart, and it was evinced in the life. This is an apt description of the state of the heathen world before the Gospel shined on it, and it may be regarded as the characteristic of all men before conversion. They have no true love for one another, such as they ought to cherish, and they are liable constantly to give indulgence to feelings which evince hatred. In contentions, and strifes, and litigations, and wars, this feeling is constantly breaking out. All this is suggested here as a reason why Christians should now be gentle and mild toward those who are evil. Let us remember what we were, and we shall not be disposed to treat others harshly. When a Christian is tempted to unkind thoughts or words toward others, nothing is more appropriate for him than to reflect on his own past life.

¹ or, pity.

¹ love of God our Saviour toward man appeared,

5 Not^a by works of righteousness

^a Eph. 2. 4, 8, 9.

4. But after that. Gr., when—ὅτε. The meaning is, that "when the love of God was manifested in the plan of salvation, he saved us from this state by our being washed and purified." The idea is not that "the love of God appeared" after we had sinned in this way, but that when his mercy was thus displayed we were converted from our sins, and made pure in his sight. ¶ The kindness. ἡ χρηστότης—the goodness, or the benignity. The word is rendered goodness and good in Rom. ii. 4; which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost;

iii. 12; xi. 22, thrice; kindness, 2 Cor. vi. 6; Eph. ii. 7; Col. iii. 12; Titus iii. 4; and gentleness, Gal. v. 22. The act of redeeming us was one of great kindness, or goodness. ¶ And love of God. Marg., pity. The Greek word is φιλανθρωπία—philanthropy—the love of man. The plan of salvation was founded on love to man, and was the highest expression of that love. See Notes on John iii. 16. The Greek of this verse is, "When the kindness and love of God our Saviour to man was manifested, he saved us" (ver. 5), to wit, from those sins of which we had before been guilty.

5. Not by works of righteousness which we have done. The plan was not based on our own good works, nor are our own good works now the cause of our salvation. If men could have been saved by their own works, there would have been no need of salvation by the Redeemer; if our own deeds were now the basis of our title to eternal life, the work of Christ would be equally unnecessary. It is a great and fundamental principle of the Gospel that the good works of men come in for no share in the justification of the soul. They are in no sense a consideration on account of which God pardons a man and receives him to favor. The only basis of justification is the merit of the Lord Jesus Christ, and in the matter of justification before God all the race is on a level. See Notes on Eph. ii. 8, 9. ¶ But according to his mercy. (1.) It had its origin in mercy; (2.) it is by mere mercy or compassion, and not by justice; (3.) it is an expression of great mercy; and (4.) it is now in fact conferred only by mercy. Whatever we have done or can do, when we come to receive salvation from the hand of God, there is no other element which enters into it but mercy. It is not because our deeds deserve it; it is not because we have by repentance and faith wrought ourselves into such a state of mind that we can claim it; but, after all our tears, and sighs, and prayers, and good deeds, it is a mere favor. Even then God might justly withhold it if he chose, and no blame would be attached to him if he should suffer us to sink down to ruin. ¶ He saved us. That is, he began that salvation in us which is to be completed in heaven. A man who is already renewed and pardoned may be spoken of as saved—for (1.) the work of salvation is begun, and (2.) when begun it will certainly be completed. See Notes on Phil. i. 6. ¶ By the washing of regeneration. In order to a correct understanding of this important passage, it is necessary to ascertain whether the phrase here used refers to baptism, and whether any thing different is intended by it from what is meant by the succeeding phrase—"renewing of the Holy Ghost." The word rendered washing (λουτρόν, loutron) occurs in the New Testament only in this place and in Eph. v. 26, where also it is rendered washing—"That he might sanctify and cleanse it [the Church] with the washing of water by the word." The word properly means a bath—a place for bathing; then water for bathing; then the act of bathing, washing, ablution.—Passow and Robinson. It is used by Homer to denote a warm or cold bath; then a washing away, and is thus applied to the drink-offerings in sacrifice, which were supposed to purify or wash away sin.—Passow. The word here does not mean laver, or the vessel for washing in, which would be expressed by λουτήρ, loutēr, and this word can not be properly applied to the baptismal font. The word in itself would naturally be understood as referring to baptism (comp. Notes on Acts xxii. 16), which was regarded as the emblem of washing away sins, or of cleansing from them. I say it was the emblem, not the means of purifying the soul from sin. If this be the allusion, and it seems probable, then the phrase "washing of regeneration" would mean "that outward washing or baptism which is the emblem of regeneration," and which is appointed as one of the ordinances connected with salvation. See Notes on Mark xvi. 16: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." It is not affirmed in this phrase that baptism is the means of regeneration, or that grace is necessarily conveyed by it; and still less that baptism is regeneration, for no one of these is a necessary interpretation of the passage, and should not be assumed to be the true one. The full force of the language will be met by the supposition that it means that baptism is the emblem or symbol of regeneration, and, if this is the case, no one has a right to assume that the other is certainly the meaning. And that this is the meaning is further clear, because it is nowhere taught in the New Testament that baptism is regeneration, or that it is the means of regeneration. The word rendered regeneration (παλιγγενεσία, palingenesia) occurs in the New Testament only here and in Matt. xix. 28—"in the regeneration when the Son of man," etc. It means, properly, a new birth, reproduction, renewal. It would properly be applied to one who should be begotten again in this sense, that a new life was commenced in him in some way corresponding to his being made to live at first. To the proper idea of the word, it is essential that there should be connected the notion of the commencement of life in the man, so that he may be said to live anew; and as religion is in the Scriptures represented as life, it is properly applied to the beginning of that kind of life by which man may be said to live anew. This word, occurring only here and in Matt. xix. 28, and there indubitably not referring to baptism, should not be here understood as referring to that, or be applied to that, for (1.) that is not the proper meaning of the word; (2.) there is no Scripture usage to sanction it; (3.) the connection here does not demand it; (4.) the correlatives of the word (see John iii. 3, 5, 6, 8; 1 Pet. i. 3) are applied only to that great moral change which is produced by the Holy Ghost; and (5.) it is a dangerous use of the word. Its use in this sense leaves the impression that the only change needful for man is that which is produced by being regularly baptized. On almost no point has so much injury been done in the Church as by the application of the word regeneration to baptism. It affects the beginning of religion in the soul, and if a mistake is made there, it is one which must pervade all our views of piety. ¶ And renewing of the Holy Ghost. This is an important clause, added by Paul apparently to save from the possibility of falling into error. If the former expression, "the washing of regeneration," had been left to stand by itself, it might have been supposed, possibly, that all the regeneration which would be needed would be that which would accompany baptism. But he avoids the possibility of this error by saying that the "renewing of the Holy Ghost" is an indispensable part of that by which we are saved. It is necessary that this should exist in addition to that which is the mere emblem of it—the washing of regeneration—for without this the former would be unmeaning and unavailing. It is important to observe that the apostle by no means says that this always follows from the former, nor does he affirm that it ever follows from it—whatever may be the truth on that point—but he asserts that this is that on which our salvation depends. The word rendered renewing (ἀνακαινώσις, anakainosis) occurs only here and in Rom. xii. 2, where it is also rendered renewing. Comp. Notes on that place. The verb (ἀνακαινώω, anakainōō) occurs in 2 Cor. iv. 15, and Col. iii. 19, in both of which places it is rendered renewed, and the corresponding word, ἀνακαινίζω—anakainizo—in Heb. vi. 6. The noun properly means making new again; a renewing; a renovation. Comp. H. Planck, in Bib. Repos., i., 677. It is a word which is found only in the writings of Paul and in ecclesiastical Greek writers. It would be properly applied to such a change as the Holy Spirit produces in the soul, making one a new man; that is, a man new, so far as religion is concerned: new in his views, feelings, desires, hopes, plans, and purposes. He is so far different from what he was before that it may be said he enters on a new life. See Notes on Eph. iv. 23, 24. The "renewing of the Holy Ghost" of course means that which the Holy Ghost produces, recognizing the fact, every where taught in the Scriptures, that the Holy Spirit is the Author of the new creation. It can not mean, as Koppe supposes, the renewing of the mind itself, or producing a holy spirit in the soul.

6. Which he shed on us. Gr., "Which he poured out on us"—ἐξέχευ. See Notes on Acts ii. 17. The same Greek word is used there as here. It occurs also in the same sense in Acts ii. 18, 33. ¶ Abundantly. Marg., as in Gr., richly. The meaning is, that the Holy Spirit had been imparted in copious measure in order to convert them from their former wickedness. There is no particular allusion here to the

6 Which he shed on us ¹ abundantly, through Jesus Christ our Saviour;

7 That, being justified ^a by his grace, we should be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.

8 This is a faithful saying; and these things I will that thou affirm constantly; that they which have believed in God might be careful ^b to maintain good works. These things are good and profitable unto men.

¹ or, richly.

^a Rom. 3. 24.

9 But ^c avoid foolish questions, and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

10 A man that is a heretic, after

^b ver. 1, 14.

^c 2 Tim. 2. 23.

day of Pentecost, but the sense is that the Holy Spirit had been imparted richly to all who were converted, at any time or place, from the error of their ways. What the apostle says here is true of all who become Christians, and can be applied to all who become believers in any age or land. ¶ Through Jesus Christ our Saviour. See Notes on Acts ii. 33.

7. That, being justified by his grace. Not by our own works, but by his favor or mercy. See Notes on Rom. iii. 24. ¶ We should be made heirs. See Notes on Rom. viii. 15, 17. ¶ According to the hope of eternal life. In reference to the hope of eternal life; that is, we have that hope in virtue of our being adopted into the family of God, and being made heirs. He has received us as his children, and he permits us to hope that we shall live with him forever.

8. This is a faithful saying. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 15. The reference here is to what he had been just saying, meaning that the doctrine which he had stated about the method of salvation was in the highest degree important, and entirely worthy of belief. ¶ And these things I will that thou affirm constantly. Make them the constant subject of your preaching. ¶ That they which have believed in God might be careful to maintain good works. This shows that Paul supposed that the doctrines of the Gospel were fitted to lead men to holy living. Comp. ver. 1, and Notes on Phil. iv. 8. The "good works" here refer not merely to acts of benevolence and charity, but to all that is upright and good—to an honest and holy life. ¶ These things are good and profitable unto men. That is, these doctrines which he had stated were not mere matters of speculation, but they were fitted to promote human happiness, and they should be constantly taught.

9. But avoid foolish questions and genealogies. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 4; 2 Tim. ii. 16, 23. And contentions, and strivings about the law. Such as the Jews started about various matters connected with the law—about meats and drinks, etc. See Notes on 1 Tim. i. 4. Comp. Notes on Acts xviii. 15. ¶ For they are unprofitable and vain. They disturb and embitter the feelings; they lead to the indulgence of a bad spirit; they are often difficult to be settled; and they are of no practical importance if they could be determined. The same thing might be said of multitudes of things about which men dispute so earnestly now.

10. A man that is a heretic. The word heretic is now commonly applied to one who holds some fundamental error of doctrine, "a person who holds and teaches opinions repugnant to the established faith, or that which is made the standard of orthodoxy."—Webster. The Greek word here used (αἰρετικός, haireticos) occurs nowhere else in the New Testament. The corresponding noun (αἵρεσις, hairesis) occurs in the following places: Acts v. 17; xv. 5; xxiv. 5; xxvi. 5; xxviii. 22, where it is rendered sect; and Acts xxv. 14; 1 Cor. xi. 19; Gal. v. 20; 2 Pet. ii. 1, where it is rendered heresy and heresies. See Notes on Acts xxiv. 14. The true notion of the word is that of one who is a promoter of a sect or party. The man who makes divisions in a Church, instead of aiming to promote its unity, is the one who is intended. Such a man may form sects and parties on some points of doctrine on which he differs from others; or some custom, religious rite, or peculiar practice, he may make a ground of distinction from his brethren, and may refuse to have fellowship with them, and endeavor to get up a new organization. Such a man, according to the Scripture usage, is the first and second admonition,^a reject;

11 Knowing that he that is such a heretic, and not merely one who holds a different doctrine from that which is regarded as orthodox. The spirit of the doctrine here is the same as in Rom. xvi. 17, and the same class of persons is referred to: "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have received; and avoid them." See Notes on that passage. The word here used is defined by Robinson (Lex.), "one who creates dissensions, introduces errors; a factious person." It is not found in classic Greek, but often in ecclesiastical writers. See Suicer's Thesaur. ¶ After the first and second admonition. Comp. Matt. xviii. 15-17. That is, do not do it hastily or rashly. Give him an opportunity to explain himself, to repent, and to abandon his course. No man is to be cut off without giving him a proper opportunity to vindicate his conduct, and to repent if he has done wrong. If, after the first and second admonition, a man, who is undoubtedly doing wrong, will not repent, then he is to be cut off. The apostle does not say in what way this admonition is to be given, or whether it should be public or private. The language which he uses would justify either, and the method which is to be adopted is doubtless to be determined by circumstances. The thing which is to be reached is, that his fault is to be fairly set before his mind. ¶ Reject. παραιτού. This word is rendered excuse in Luke xiv. 18, 19; refuse, Acts xxv. 11; 1 Tim. iv. 7; v. 11; Heb. xii. 25; avoid, 2 Tim. ii. 23; and entreated, Heb. xii. 19. Its prevailing meaning, as used in connections like the one before us, is to reject in relation to an office; that is, to decline appointing one to an office. It probably had a primary reference to that here, and meant that a man who was given to making dissensions, or who was a factious person, should not be admitted to an office in the Church. The general direction would also include this—that he should not be admitted to the Church. He is neither to be owned as a member nor admitted to office. Comp. Matt. xviii. 17: "Let him be unto thee as a heathen man and a publican." In regard to this passage, then, we may observe, is subverted, and sinneth, being condemned of himself.

12 When I shall send Artemas

(1.) that the utmost limit which this allows is mere exclusion. It does not allow us to follow the offender with injury. (2.) It does not authorize us to oppose one on account of his mere private opinions. The essential idea is that of a factious, division-making man; a man who aims to form sects and parties, whether on account of opinions or from any other cause. (3.) It does not make it right to deliver such a man over to the "secular arm," or to harm him in body, soul, property, or reputation. It gives no power to torture him on the rack, or with thumb-screws, or to bind him to the stake. It does authorize us not to recognize him as a Christian brother, or to admit him to an office in the Church—but beyond this it gives us no right to go. He has a right to his own opinion still, as far as we are concerned, and we are not to molest him in the enjoyment of that right. (4.) It demands that, when a man is undoubtedly a heretic in the sense here explained, there should be the utmost kindness toward him, in order if possible to reclaim him. We should not begin by attacking and denouncing his opinions; or by formally arraigning him; or by blazoning his name abroad as a heretic; but he is to be dealt with in all Christian kindness and brotherly fidelity. He is to be admonished more than once by those who have the right to admonish him; and then, and then only, if he does not repent, he is to be simply avoided. That is to be an end of the matter so far as we are concerned. The power of the Church there ceases. It has no power to deliver him over to any one else for persecution or punishment, or in any way to meddle with him. He may live where he pleases; pursue his own plans; entertain his own opinions or company, provided he does not interfere with us; and though we have a right to examine the opinions which he may entertain, yet our work with the man is done. If these plain principles had been observed, what scenes of bloody and cruel persecution in the Church would have been avoided!

11. Knowing that he that is such is subverted. Literally, is turned out; or, is changed, that is, for the worse. He unto thee, or Tychicus, be diligent to come unto me to Nicopolis: for I have determined there to winter.

13 Bring Zenas the lawyer and Apollos on their journey diligent-has gone from the right way, and therefore he should be rejected. ¶ And sinneth, being condemned of himself. His own conscience condemns him. He will approve the sentence, for he knows that he is wrong; and his self-condemnation will be punishment sufficient. His own course, in attempting a division or schism in the Church, shows him that it is right that he should be separated from the communion of Christians. He that attempts to rend the Church, without a good reason, should himself be separated from it.

1 or, profess honest trades.

12. When I shall send Artemas unto thee. This person is not elsewhere mentioned in the New Testament, and nothing more is known of him. ¶ Or Tychicus. See Notes on Acts xx. 4. ¶ Be diligent. See Notes on 2 Tim. iv. 9. ¶ To come unto me to Nicopolis. It was at this place, probably, that this epistle was written. In regard to its situation, see Introd., § 4. ¶ For I have determined there to winter. Why Paul designed to spend the winter there, or what he purposed to do there, are questions on which no light can now be thrown. There is no evidence that he organized a Church there, though it may be presumed that he preached the Gospel, and that he did not do it without success. His requesting Titus to leave his important post and come to him, looks as if his aid were needed in the ministry, and as if Paul supposed there was a promising field of labor there.

13. Bring Zenas the lawyer. This person is not elsewhere mentioned in the New Testament, and nothing more is known of him. He belonged doubtless to that class of persons so often mentioned in the New Testament as lawyers; that is, who were regarded as qualified to expound the Jewish laws. See Notes on Matt. xxii. 35. It does not mean that he practiced law, in the modern sense of that phrase. He had doubtless been converted to the Christian faith, and it is not improbable that there were Jews at Nicopolis, and that ly, that nothing be wanting unto them.

14 And let ours also learn to¹ maintain good^a works for necessary uses, that they be not unfruitful.

a ver. 8.

Paul supposed he might be particularly useful among them. ¶ And Apollos. See Notes on Acts xviii. 24. He was also well-skilled in the laws of Moses, being "mighty in the Scriptures" (Acts xviii. 24), and he and Zenas appear to have been traveling together. It would seem that they had been already on a journey, probably in preaching the Gospel, and Paul supposed that they would be in Crete, and that Titus could aid them. ¶ Diligently. 2 Tim. iv. 9. Gr., speedily; that is, facilitate their journey as much as possible. ¶ That nothing be wanting unto them. Nothing necessary for their journey. Paul desired that they might meet with hospitable treatment from Christians in Crete, and might not be embarrassed for the want of that which was needful for their journey. It would seem most probable that they had been sent by Paul on a visit to the churches.

14. And let ours. Our friends; that is, those who were Christians. Paul had just directed Titus to assist Zenas and Apollos on their journey, and he here adds that he wished that others who were Christians would be characterized by good works of all kinds. ¶ To maintain good works. Marg., profess honest trades. The Greek will admit of the interpretation in the margin, or will include that, but there is no reason why the direction should be supposed to have any peculiar reference to an honest mode of livelihood, or why it should be confined to that. It rather means that they should be distinguished for good works in general, including acts of charity, honest toil, and whatever would enter into the conception of an upright life. See Notes on ver. 8. ¶ For necessary uses. Such as are required by their duty to their families, and by the demands of charity. See ver. 8. ¶ That they be not unfruitful. That it may be seen that their religion is not barren and worthless, but that it produces a happy effect on themselves and on society. Comp. Notes on John xv. 16; Eph. iv. 27.

15 All that are with me salute thee. Greet them that love us in the faith. Grace be with you all. Amen.

15. All that are with me salute thee. See Notes on Rom. xvi. 3. Paul, at the close of his epistles, usually mentions the names of those who sent affectionate salutations. Here it would seem to be implied that Titus knew who were with Paul, and also that he himself had been traveling with him. He evidently refers not to those who were residing in the place where he was, but to those who had gone with him from Crete as his companions. ¶ Greet them that love us in the faith. In the faith of the Gospel, or as Christians. No names are mentioned. Comp. 1 Thess. v. 26; Col. iv. 15. ¶ Grace be with you all. See Notes on Rom. i. 7; xvi. 20.

The subscription, "It was written to Titus," etc., is, like the other subscriptions at the close of the epistles, of no authority whatever. See the close of the Notes on 1 Cor. In this subscription there are probably two errors: (1.) In the statement that Titus was "ordained the first bishop of the Church of the Cretians;" for (a) there is no evidence that there was a Church there called "the Church of the Cretians," as there were doubtless many churches on the island; (b) there is no evidence that Titus was the first bishop of the Church there, or that he was the first one there to whom might be properly applied the term bishop in the scriptural sense. Indeed, there is positive evidence that he was not the first, for Paul was there with him, and Titus was "left" there to complete what he had begun. (c) There is no evidence that Titus was "bishop" there at all in the prelatial sense of the term, or even that he was a settled pastor. See Notes on vs. 1, 5. (2.) That the epistle was written "from Nicopolis of Macedonia;" for (a) there is no certain evidence that it was written at Nicopolis at all, though this is probable; (b) there is no reason to believe that the Nicopolis referred to was in Macedonia. See Intro., § 4. These subscriptions are so utterly destitute of authority, and are so full of mistakes, that it is high time they were omitted in the editions of the Bible. They form no part of the inspired writings, but are of the nature of "notes and comments," and are constantly doing something, perhaps much, to perpetuate error. The opinion that Timothy and Titus were prelatial bishops, the one of Ephesus and the other of Crete, depends far more on these worthless subscriptions than on any thing in the epistles themselves. Indeed, there is no evidence of it in the epistles; and, if these subscriptions were removed, no man from the New Testament would ever suppose that they sustained this office at all.

It was written to Titus, ordained the first bishop of the Church of the Cretians, from Nicopolis of Macedonia.

NOTES,
EXPLANATORY AND PRACTICAL,
ON THE
EPISTLE OF PAUL TO PHILEMON.
BY ALBERT BARNES.

INTRODUCTION.

§ 1. The History of Philemon.

OF Philemon, to whom this epistle was addressed, almost nothing more is known than can be ascertained from the epistle itself. It is short, and of a private character; but it is a bright and beautiful gem in the volume of inspiration.

From Col. iv. 9, it may be inferred that the person to whom it was addressed was an inhabitant of Colosse, since Onesimus, concerning whom this epistle was written, is there mentioned as "one of them." See Notes on that verse. Comp. the ingenious remarks of Paley, Hor. Paul., on Colossians, No. IV. He is said by Calmet and Michaelis to have been wealthy; but this can not be determined with certainty, though it is not improbable. The only circumstances which seem to indicate this are that Onesimus had been his "servant," from which it has been inferred that he was an owner of slaves; and that he appears to have been accustomed to show hospitality to strangers, or, as Michaelis expresses it, "traveling Christians." See ver. 22 of the epistle. But these circumstances are not sufficient to determine that he was a man of property. There is no evidence, as we shall see, that he was a slaveholder; and Christians in moderate circumstances were accustomed to show hospitality to their brethren. Besides, it is not said in ver. 22 that he was accustomed to show general hospitality; but Paul merely asks him to provide for him a lodging. It is probable that he had been accustomed to remain with him when he was in Colosse.

It is quite clear that he had been converted under the ministry of the apostle himself. This appears from what is said in ver. 19: "I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self." This can not be understood otherwise than as implying that he had been converted under his preaching, unless the apostle, on some former occasion, had been the means of saving his life, of which there is no evidence. Indeed, it is manifest, from the general tone of the epistle, that Philemon had been converted by the labors of the author. It is just such a letter as it would be natural and proper to write on such a supposition; it is not one which the apostle would have been likely to write to any one who did not sustain such a relation to him. But where and when he was converted is unknown. It is possible that Paul may have met with him at Ephesus; but it is much more probable that he had himself been at Colosse, and that Philemon was one of his converts there. See Introd. to the epistle to the Colossians.

It is evident from the epistle that Paul regarded him as a sincere Christian; as a man of strict integrity; as one who could be depended on to do right. Thus (ver. 5-7) he says that he had heard of his “love and faith toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;” thus he confidently asks him to provide for him a lodging when he should come (ver. 22); and thus he expresses the assured belief that he would do what was right toward one who had been his servant, who, having been formerly unfaithful, was now converted, and, in the estimation of the apostle, was worthy of the confidence and affection of his former master.

In regard to his rank in the Christian Church, nothing whatever is known. Paul calls him (ver. 1) his “fellow-laborer;” but this appellation is so general that it determines nothing in regard to the manner in which he co-operated with him in promoting religion. It is a term which might be applied to any active Christian, whether a preacher, an elder, a deacon, or a private member of the Church. It would seem clear, however, that he was not a traveling preacher, for he had a home in Colosse (vs. 2, 22); and the presumption is, that he was an active and benevolent member of the Church who did not sustain any office. There are many private members of the churches to whom all that is said of Philemon in the epistle would apply. Yet there have been various conjectures in regard to the office which he held. Hoffmann (Introd. ad Lectio. Ep. ad Colossenses, § 18) supposes that he was bishop of Colosse; Michaelis supposes that he was a deacon in the Church; but of the truth of either of these opinions there is no evidence whatever.

Nothing is known of his age, his profession, or of the time and circumstances of his death. Neither is it certainly known what effect this epistle had on him, or whether he again received Onesimus under his roof. It may be presumed, however, that such a letter, addressed to such a man, would not fail of its object.

§ 2. The Occasion on which the Epistle was written.

This can be learned only from the epistle itself, and there the circumstances are so marked as to make a mistake impossible.

(1.) Philemon had had a servant of the name of Onesimus. Of the character of this servant, before Paul became acquainted with him, nothing more is known than that he had been “unprofitable” to Philemon (ver. 11), and that he had probably done him some wrong, either by taking his property, or by the fact that he had escaped from him. Ver. 18. It is not necessary to suppose that he was a slave; for all that is implied of necessity in the word which is employed to designate his condition in ver. 16 (δοῦλος), and all that is stated of him in the epistle, would be met by the supposition that he was bound to Philemon, either by his parents or guardians, or that he had bound himself to render voluntary service. See Notes on ver. 16.

(2.) For some cause, this servant had fled from his master, and had gone to Rome. The cause of his escaping is unknown. It may be that he had purloined the property of his master, and dreaded detection; or that he had, by his base conduct in some other way, exposed himself to punishment; or that he merely desired freedom from oppression; or that he disregarded the bonds into which he himself, or his parents or guardians, had entered, and therefore escaped. Nothing can be inferred about his condition, or his relation to Philemon, from the fact that he ran away. It is perhaps quite as common for apprentices to run away as it is for slaves; and they who enter into voluntary bonds to render service to another do not always regard them.

(3.) In some way, when at Rome, this servant had found out the apostle Paul, and had been converted by his instrumentality. Paul says (ver. 10) that he had "begotten him in his bonds"—ἐν τοῖς δεσμοῖς μου; which seems to imply that Onesimus had come to him, and not that Paul had searched him out. It does not appear that Paul, when a prisoner at Rome, was allowed to go at large (comp. Acts xxviii. 30), though he was permitted to receive all who came to him. Why Onesimus came to the apostle is not known. It may have been because he was in want, and Paul was the only one in Rome whom he had seen; or it may have been because his mind had become distressed on account of sin, and he sought him out to obtain spiritual counsel. Conjecture on these points is useless, where there is not even a hint that can serve as a clew to find out the truth.

(4.) From some cause, equally unknown, Onesimus, when converted, was desirous of returning to his former master. It is commonly assumed that his returning again was at the instigation of the apostle, and that this furnishes an instance of his belief that runaway slaves should be sent back to their masters. But, besides that there is no certain evidence that he ever was a slave, there is as little proof that he returned at the instigation of Paul, or that his return was not wholly voluntary on his part. For the only expression which the apostle uses on this subject (ver. 12), "whom I have sent again"—ἀπέπεμψα—does not necessarily imply that he even proposed it to him, still less that he commanded it. It is a word of such general import that it would be employed on the supposition that Onesimus desired to return, and that Paul, who had a strong wish to retain him in order to assist him in the same way that Philemon himself would do if he were with him (comp. ver. 13), had, on the whole, concluded to part with him, and to send him again, with a letter, to his friend Philemon. It is just such language as he would have used of Timothy, Titus, or Epaphroditus, if employed on an important embassy at the request of the apostle. Comp. Luke vii. 6, 10, 19; xx. 13; Acts x. 5; xv. 22; 1 Cor. iv. 17; 2 Cor. ix. 3; Eph. vi. 22; Phil. ii. 19, 23, 25, 28; 1 Thess. iii. 2, 5; Titus iii. 12, for a similar use of the word send (πέμπω). There is nothing in the statement which forbids us to suppose that Onesimus was himself disposed to return to Philemon, and that Paul "sent" him at his own request. To this Onesimus might have been inclined from many causes. He may have repented that he left his master, and had forsaken the comforts which he had enjoyed under his roof. It is no uncommon thing for a runaway apprentice, when he has seen and felt the misery of being among strangers and in want, to wish himself back again in the house of his master. Or he may have felt that he had wronged his master in some way (comp. Notes on ver. 18), and, being now converted, was desirous of repairing the wrong. Or he may have had friends and kindred in Colosse whom he was desirous of seeing again. Since any one of these, or of many other supposable causes, may have induced him to desire to return to his master, it should not be assumed that Paul sent him against his will, and thence be inferred that he was in favor of sending back runaway slaves to their masters AGAINST their will. There are many points to be proved, which can not be proved, to make that a legitimate inference. See Notes on ver. 12.

(5.) Whatever were the reasons why Onesimus desired to return to Philemon, it is clear that he was apprehensive of some trouble if he went back. What his grounds of apprehension were it is impossible now to determine with absolute certainty, but it is not difficult to conjecture what they may have been, and any of the following will account for his fears:—either (a) that he had done his master wrong by the mere act of leaving him, depriving him of valuable services which he was bound to render; or (b) that he may have felt that the act of running away had injured the character of his master, for such an act always implies that there is something in the dealings of a master which makes it desirable to leave him; or (c) that he had in some way injured him in respect to property, by taking that which did not belong to him, ver. 18; or (d) that he owed his master, and that he may have inferred from his leaving him that he meant to defraud him, ver. 18; or (e) that the laws of Phrygia were such that Onesimus apprehended that if he returned, even penitent, it would be judged by his master necessary to punish him, in order to deter others from committing a similar offense. The laws of Phrygia, it is said, allowed the master to punish a slave without applying to a magistrate. See Macknight. It should be said, also, that the Phrygians were a severe people (Curtius, lib. v., c. 1), and it is not improbable that, from the customs there, Onesimus may have apprehended harsh treatment if he returned. It is not proper to assume that any one of these was certainly the reason why he feared to return, for this can not be absolutely determined. We should not take it for granted that he had defrauded his master—for that is not necessarily implied in what is said in ver. 18, and we should not impute crimes to men without proof; nor should we take it for granted that he feared to be punished as a runaway slave—for that can not be proved; but some one or more of these reasons doubtless operated to make him apprehensive that if returned he would meet with, at least, a cold reception.

(6.) To induce his master to receive him kindly again was the main object of this courteous and kind epistle. For a view of the arguments on which he urges this, see the Analysis of the epistle. The arguments are such that we should suppose they could not be resisted, and we may presume, without impropriety, that they had the desired effect on the mind of Philemon—but of that we have no evidence.

§ 3. The Time and Place of Writing the Epistle.

There can be no doubt that this letter was written from Rome about the time when the epistle to the Colossians was written. Compare Introduction to that epistle. The circumstances which conduct to this conclusion are such as the following: (1.) Paul, at the time when it was written, was a prisoner. Ver. 1: "Paul a prisoner of Jesus Christ." Ver. 10: "Whom I have begotten in my bonds." Comp. ver. 23: "Epaphras my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus." (2.) It was written when he had a hope of obtaining his liberty, or when he had such a prospect of it that he could ask Philemon, with confidence, to "prepare him a lodging." Ver. 22. (3.) Timothy was with him at the time when it was written. Ver. 1. (4.) We know that Onesimus was actually sent by Paul to Colosse while he was a prisoner at Rome, and it would be morally certain that, under the circumstances of the case, he would send the letter to his master at that time. No other instance is mentioned in which he sent him to Colosse, and the evidence is as certain as the nature of the case admits that that was the time when the epistle was written. See Col. iv. 9. (5.) The same persons are mentioned in the salutations in the two epistles, at least they are so far the same as to make it probable that the epistles were written at the same time, for it is not very probable that the same persons would, in another place and on another occasion, have been with the apostle. Thus Aristarchus, Mark, Epaphras, Luke, and Demas join in the salutations both to the Church at Colosse and to Philemon. Probably at no other time in the life of Paul were all these persons with him, except when he was a prisoner at Rome. These considerations make it clear that the epistle was written while Paul was a prisoner at Rome, and at about the same time as the epistle to the Colossians. If so, it was about A.D. 62.

§ 4. The Character of this Epistle.

This letter is almost wholly of a private character, and yet there is scarcely any portion of the New Testament of equal length which is of more value. It is exquisitely beautiful and delicate. It is a model of courtesy and politeness. It presents the character of the author in a most amiable light, and shows what true religion will produce in causing genuine refinement of thought and language. It is gentle and persuasive, and yet the argument is one that we should suppose would have been, and probably was, irresistible. It is very easy to conceive that the task which the apostle undertook to perform was one which it would be difficult to accomplish—that of reconciling an offended master to a runaway servant. And yet it is done with so much kindness, persuasiveness, gentleness, and true affection, that it is easy to imagine that, as the letter was read, all the hostility of the master was disarmed, and we can almost see him desiring to embrace him who bore it, not now as a servant, but as a Christian brother. Ver. 16. "It is impossible," says Doddridge, "to read over this admirable epistle without being touched with the delicacy of sentiment and the masterly address that appear in every part of it. We see here, in a most striking light, how perfectly consistent true politeness is—not only with all the warmth and sincerity of a friend, but even with the dignity of the Christian and the Apostle. And if this letter were to be considered in no other view than as a mere human composition, it must be allowed to be a masterpiece in its kind. As an illustration of this remark, it may not be improper to compare it with an epistle of Pliny, that seems to have been written on a similar occasion (Book ix., Let. 21); which, though penned by one that was reckoned to excel in the epistolary style, though it has undoubtedly many beauties, yet must be acknowledged by every impartial reader vastly inferior to this animated composition of the apostle." As a specimen of the courtesy and politeness which the Christian ought to practice at all times, as well as furnishing many valuable lessons of Christian duty (see the Remarks at the close), it deserves a place in the volume of inspiration; and a material chasm would be produced in the instructions which are needful for us if it were withdrawn from the sacred canon.

EPISTLE OF PAUL TO PHILEMON.

ANALYSIS OF THE EPISTLE.

The epistle embraces the following subjects:

I. The salutation. Ver. 1-3.

II. A mention of the gratifying account which the apostle had heard of Philemon, and the occasion which he had for thankfulness on his behalf. Ver. 4-7.

(a) He always remembered him in his prayers. Ver. 4.

(b) He had heard of his faith and love, and of his kindness toward those who bore the Christian name. Ver. 5.

(c) He desired that his goodness in making others, in common with himself, partakers of the expression of his faith, might be more effectual in securing the proper acknowledgment of it wherever it might be known. Ver. 6.

(d) He says that he himself had great joy and consolation from the happiness which Philemon had conferred on Christians who needed his aid. Ver. 7.

III. The main subject of the epistle—the desire that Philemon would receive his servant Onesimus again, and the arguments to persuade him to do it. Ver. 8-21.

(1.) Paul places it on the ground of entreaty, not of command. He might, in virtue of his apostolic office, enjoin many things on him, and possibly this, yet he chooses to place it wholly on other grounds, and to make it a matter of personal friendship. Ver. 8.

(2.) Particular reasons why he should do it:—

(a) For love's sake—love to Paul—now an old man, and in prison on account of their common religion. Ver. 9.

(b) Paul regarded Onesimus as his own son, and asked that he might be received and treated as such. Ver. 10.

(c) He assures Philemon that, whatever he might have been formerly, he would now find him to be profitable to himself. Ver. 11.

(d) He assures him that Onesimus was especially dear to him, and that he would have been very useful to him in his circumstances, but that he did not think it proper to retain him with him without the consent of Philemon. Onesimus, therefore, was not sent back as a worthless vagabond, and Philemon, in receiving him, might be sure that he was receiving one who Paul believed was fitted to be eminently useful. Ver. 12-14.

(e) He suggests to Philemon that probably it was arranged by divine Providence that Onesimus should depart, in order that he might receive him again in a far more tender and endearing relation, not as a servant, but as a Christian brother. Vs. 15, 16.

(f) He appeals to the personal friendship of Philemon, and asks that if he regarded him as a participator with him in the hopes of the Gospel, or as a fellow-laborer in a common cause, he would receive Onesimus as he would himself. Ver. 17.

(g) He says that he would himself become security for Onesimus if he owed Philemon any thing, or had in any way wronged him. Vs. 18, 19.

(h) He concludes the argument by referring to the happiness which it would give him if Philemon would receive his former servant again; and with the expression of his conviction that he would do more than he asked in the matter; and he then asks that, while he showed favor to Onesimus, he would also prepare a lodging for him, for he hoped soon to be with him. Ver. 20-22. Perhaps by this last suggestion he hoped also to do much to favor the cause of Onesimus—for Philemon could hardly turn him away when he expected that Paul himself would soon be with him. Such an argument would be likely to be effectual in the case. We do not

PAUL, a prisoner ^a of Jesus Christ, and Timothy our brother, unto Philemon our dearly beloved, and fellow-labourer.^b

2 And to our beloved Apphia, and Archippus ^c our fellow-soldier, and to the Church ^d in thy house :

^a Eph. 3. 1.

^b Phil. 2. 25.

^c Col. 4. 17.

like to deny the request which a friend makes in a letter, if we expect soon to see the writer himself. It would be much more easy to do it if we had no expectation of seeing him very soon.

IV. The epistle closes with affectionate salutations from certain persons who were with Paul, and who were probably well known to Philemon, and with the customary benediction. Ver. 23-25.

1. Paul, a prisoner of Jesus Christ. A prisoner at Rome in the cause of Jesus Christ. See Notes on Eph. iii. 1; 2 Tim. i. 8. And Timothy our brother. Timothy, it seems, had come to him agreeably to his request. 2 Tim. iv. 9. Paul not unfrequently joins his name with his own in his epistles. 2 Cor. i. 1; Phil. i. 1; Col. i. 1; 1 Thess. i. 1; 2 Thess. i. 1. As Timothy was of that region of country, and as he had accompanied Paul in his travels, he was doubtless acquainted with Philemon. ¶ Unto Philemon our dearly beloved and fellow-laborer. See Introduct., § 1. The word rendered fellow-laborer (συνεργός) does not determine what office he held, if he held any, or in what respects he was a fellow-laborer with Paul. It means a co-worker or helper, and doubtless here means that he was a helper or fellow-worker in the great cause to which Paul had devoted his life, but whether as a preacher, a ruling elder, a deacon, or a private Christian, can not be ascertained. It is commonly, in the New Testament, applied to ministers of the Gospel, though by no means exclusively, and in several instances it can not be determined whether it denotes ministers of the Gospel, or those who furthered the cause of religion, and co-operated with the apostle in some other way than by preaching. See the following places, which are the only ones where it occurs in the New Testament. Rom. xvi. 3, 9, 21; 1 Cor. iii. 9; 2 Cor. i. 24; viii. 23; Phil. ii. 25; iv. 3; Col.

3 Grace ^e to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ.

4 I thank ^f my God making mention of thee always in my prayers,

5 Hearing of thy love and faith,

^d Rom. 16. 5.

^e Eph. 1. 2.

^f Eph. 1. 16.

iv. 11; 1 Thess. iii. 2; Philem. i. 24; 3 John, 8.

2. And to our beloved Apphia. This was a female (Gr., ἀγαπητή), and was probably the wife of Philemon. ¶ And Archippus our fellow-soldier. See Notes on Col. iv. 17. It has been supposed that he was a son of Philemon, and this would appear not to be improbable, as he was one of his family. On the term "fellow-soldier," see Notes on Phil. ii. 25. It is applied here to one who was a minister of the Gospel, and who is spoken of in connection with Paul as enlisted under the banners of the Captain of salvation, and waging a warfare with the wickedness of the world. Comp. Notes on 2 Tim. ii. 3, 4. That Archippus was a minister of the Gospel is clear from Col. iv. 17. ¶ And to the Church in thy house. Either the Church that commonly met in his house, or more probably that was composed of his own family. Comp. Notes on Rom. xvi. 5.

3. Grace to you, and peace, etc. See Notes on Rom. i. 7.

4. I thank my God. That is, for what I hear of you. ¶ Making mention of thee always in my prayers. See a similar declaration respecting the Church at Ephesus. Eph. i. 16. It would appear from this that Paul, in his private devotions, was in the habit of mentioning churches and individuals by name. It would seem, also, that though he was a prisoner, yet he somehow found opportunity for secret devotion. And it would appear further that, though encompassed with many cares and sorrows, and about to be put on trial for his life, he did not forget to remember a Christian brother though far distant from him, and to bear him on his heart before the throne of grace. To remember with affectionate concern these churches and individuals, as he did, Paul must have been a man of much prayer.

5. Hearing of thy love and faith. Either by Onesimus, who, after his couwhich thou hast toward the Lord Jesus, and toward all saints;

6 That^a the communication of thy faith may become effectual^b

^a Phil. 1. 9-11.

^b James 2. 14, 17.

version, would be disposed to state all that he knew that was favorable of Philemon, or hearing it by some other persons who had come from Colosse to Rome. The faith which is mentioned here refers, to the Lord Jesus; the love, to the saints. The order in the Greek is indeed the same as in our version, but it is not unusual by synthesis, or uniting two or more things together, to arrange words in that manner. Thus Matt. xii. 22, "The blind and dumb both spake and saw;" that is, the blind saw, and the dumb spake. The meaning is, that he had strong faith in the Lord Jesus, and ardent love toward all who were Christians. See a similar declaration in Col. i. 4.

6. That the communication of thy faith. That is, this was a subject of prayer on the part of the apostle, that the "communication of his faith" might receive from all the proper acknowledgment of the good which he did in the Christian cause. The phrase translated "communication of thy faith," means the making of thy faith common to others; that is, enabling others to partake of the fruits of it, to wit, by good deeds. On the meaning of the word here rendered "communication" (κοινωνία, κοινῶνία); see Notes on Eph. iii. 9. Comp. Phil. ii. 1; iii. 10. Calvin has well expressed the sense of this passage. "It is to be observed that the apostle here does not proceed in the commendation of Philemon, but rather expresses what he desires for him from the Lord. These words are connected with those in which he says that he remembered him in his prayers. What, therefore, did he desire for Philemon? That his faith, expressing itself by good fruits, might be shown to be true and not vain. For he calls that the communication of his faith when it does not remain inoperative within, but bears itself forth to benefit men by its proper effects. For although faith has its proper seat in the heart, yet it communicates itself to men by good works." The meaning is, that he desired that Philemon would so make common the proper fruits of faith by by the acknowledging of every good thing which is in you in Christ Jesus.

7 For we have great joy and con-

^c Phil. 4. 8. 2 Pet. 1. 5-8.

his good deeds toward others, that all might acknowledge it to be genuine and efficacious. ¶ May become effectual. Gr., "May be energetic" (ἐνεργής); may become operative, active, effective. ¶ By the acknowledging. That is, so as to secure from others the proper recognition of the existence of faith in your heart. In other words, so that others may see that you are truly pious, and understand to what extent you have faith. ¶ Of every good thing which is in you. Of every good principle, and of every benevolent trait, which is in your character. That is, the proper outward expression of his faith in Christ, by doing good to others, would be a development of the benevolence which existed in his heart. ¶ In Christ Jesus. Or "toward (eis) Christ Jesus." The goodness in his heart had respect to the Lord Jesus as its proper object, but would be made manifest by his kindness to men. The truth which is taught in this passage, therefore, is that when faith exists in the heart, it is very desirable that it should impart its proper fruits toward others in such a way that all may see that it is operative, and may recognize its power; or in other words, it is desirable that when true religion exists it should be fairly developed, that its possessor may be acknowledged to be under its influence. We should wish that he may have all the credit and honor which the goodness of his heart is entitled to. Paul supposed that a case had now occurred in which an opportunity was furnished to Philemon to show the world how much he was governed by the faith of the Gospel.

7. For we have great joy and consolation in thy love. In thy love toward Christians. The word here rendered joy (χαρά) properly means grace. A large number of manuscripts, however, instead of this word, have χαρὰν, charan, joy. See Wetstein. This reading has been adopted by Griesbach, Tittman, and Hahn. ¶ Because the bowels of the saints are refreshed by thee, brother. For your kindness to them. The word bowels here proba-solation in thy love, because the bowels of the saints are refreshed^a by thee, brother.

8 Wherefore, though^b I might be

^a 2 Cor. vii. 13. ^b 2 Tim. i. 16.

bly means minds, hearts, for it is used in the Scriptures to denote the affections. The sense is, that the kindness which he had shown to Christians had done much to make them happy. On the word refreshed, see 2 Cor. vii. 13; 2 Tim. i. 16.

8. Wherefore, though I might be much bold in Christ. Though I might have much boldness as an apostle of Christ. He means that he was invested with authority by the Lord Jesus, and would have a right, as an apostle, to enjoin what ought to be done in the case which he is about to lay before him. Comp. 1 Thess. ii. 6, 7. ¶ To enjoin thee that which is convenient. To command what is proper to be done. The word convenient here (τὸ ἀνῆκον) means that which would be fit or proper in the case. Comp. Notes on Eph. v. 4. The apostle implies here that what he was about to ask was proper to be done in the circumstances, but he does not put it on that ground, but rather asks it as a personal favor. It is usually not best to command a thing to be done, if we can as well secure it by asking it as a favor. Comp. Dan. i. 8, 11, 12.

9. Yet for love's sake. For the love which you bear me, and for the common cause. ¶ I rather beseech thee. Rather than command thee. ¶ Being such a one as Paul the aged. πρεσβύτης—an old man. We have no means of ascertaining the exact age of Paul at this time, and I do not recollect that he ever alludes to his age, though he often does to his infirmities, in any place except this. Doddridge supposes that at the time when Stephen was stoned, when he is called "a young man" (νεανίας, Acts vii. 58), he was twenty-four years of age, in which case he would now have been about fifty-three. Chrysostom supposes that he may have been thirty-five years old at the time of his conversion, which would have made him about sixty-three at this time. The difficulty of determining with any degree of accuracy the age of the apostle at this time, arises from the indefinite nature of the word used by Luke (Acts vii. 58), and rendered a young much bold in Christ to enjoin thee that which is convenient, .

9 Yet for love's sake I rather beseech thee, being such a one as

^b 1 Thess. 2. 6.

man. That word, like the corresponding word νεανίσκος, neaniskos, was applied to men in the vigor of manhood up to the age of forty years.—Robinson, Lex. Phavorinus says a man is called νεανίσκος, neaniskos, a young man, till he is twenty-eight; and πρεσβύτης, presbytēs, from forty-nine till he is fifty-six. Varro says that a man is young (juvenis) till he is forty-five, and aged at sixty.—Whitby. These periods of time, however, are very indefinite, but it will accord well with the usual meaning of the words to suppose that Paul was in the neighborhood of thirty when he was converted, and that he was now not far from sixty. We are to remember, also, that the constitution of Paul may have been much broken by his labors, his perils, and his trials. Not advanced probably to the usual limit of human life, he may have had all the characteristics of a very aged man. Comp. the Note of Benson. The argument here is, that we feel that it is proper, as far as we can, to grant the request of an old man. Paul thus felt that it was reasonable to suppose that Philemon would not refuse to gratify the wishes of an aged servant of Christ, who had spent the vigor of his life in the service of their common Master. It should be a very strong case when we refuse to gratify the wishes of an aged Christian in any thing, especially if he has rendered important services to the Church and the world. ¶ And now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ. In the cause of Jesus Christ; or a prisoner for endeavoring to make him known to the world. Comp. Notes on Eph. iii. 1; iv. 1; vi. 20; Col. iv. 10. The argument here is, that it might be presumed that Philemon would not refuse the request of one who was suffering in prison on account of their common religion. For such a prisoner we should be ready to do all that we can to mitigate the sorrows of his confinement, and to make his condition comfortable.

10. I beseech thee for my son Onesimus. That is, my son in the Gospel; one to whom I sustain the relation of a spir-

Paul the aged, and now also a prisoner of Jesus Christ;

10 I beseech thee for my son a Col. 4. 9.

b 1 Cor. 4. 15.

Onesimus, ^a whom I have begotten
^b in my bonds:

11 Which ^c in time past was to

c 1 Pet. 2. 10.

itual father. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. i. 2. The address and tact of Paul here are worthy of particular observation. Any other mode of bringing the case before the mind of Philemon might have repelled him. If he had simply said, "I beseech thee for Onesimus," or, "I beseech thee for thy servant Onesimus," he would at once have reverted to his former conduct, and remembered all his ingratitude and disobedience. But the phrase "my son" makes the way easy for the mention of his name, for it may be presumed that the appeal had already found the way to his heart before his eye lighted on the name of his former servant, by the mention which Paul makes of the relation which he now sustained to himself. Who could refuse to such a man as Paul—a laborious servant of Christ—an aged man, exhausted with his many sufferings and toils—and a prisoner—a request which he made for one whom he regarded as his son? It may be added that the delicate address of the apostle in introducing the subject is better seen in the original than in our translation. In the original, the name Onesimus is reserved to come in last in the sentence. The order of the Greek is this: "I entreat thee concerning a son of mine, whom I have begotten in my bonds—Onesimus." Here the name is not suggested until he had mentioned that he sustained to him the relation of a son, and also till he had added that his conversion was the fruit of his labors while he was a prisoner. Then, when the name of Onesimus is mentioned, it would occur to Philemon not primarily as the name of an ungrateful and disobedient servant, but as the interesting case of one converted by the labors of his own friend in prison. Was there ever more delicacy evinced in preparing the way for disarming one of prejudice, and carrying an appeal to his heart? ¶ Whom I have begotten in my bonds. Who has been converted by my efforts while I have been a prisoner. On the phrase "whom I have begotten," see 1 Cor. iv. 15. Nothing is said of the way in which he had become acquainted with Onesimus, or why he had put himself under the teaching of Paul. See the Introd., § 2 (3).

11. Which in time past was to thee unprofitable. Either because he was indolent, or because he had wronged him (comp. Notes on ver. 18), or because he had run away from him. It is possible that there may be an allusion here to the meaning of the name Onesimus, which denotes profitable (from ὀνίσμι, ονιδέμι, fut. ὀνήσω, onēso, to be useful, to be profitable, to help), and that Paul means to say that he had hitherto not well answered to the meaning of his own name, but that now he would be found to do so. ¶ But now profitable to thee. The Greek here is εὐχρηστον, euchrēston, but the meaning is about the same as that of the word Onesimus. It denotes very useful. In 2 Tim. ii. 21, it is rendered meet for use; in 2 Tim. iv. 11, and here, profitable. It does not elsewhere occur in the New Testament. ¶ And to me. Paul had doubtless found him useful to him as a Christian brother in his bonds, and it is easy to conceive that, in his circumstances, he would greatly desire to retain him with him.

12. Whom I have sent again. That is, to Philemon. This was, doubtless, at his own request, for (1.) there is not the slightest evidence that he compelled him, or even urged him to go. The language is just such as would have been used on the supposition either that Paul requested him to go and bear a letter to Colosse, or that Onesimus desired to go, and that Paul sent him agreeably to his request. Comp. Phil. ii. 25: "Yet I supposed it necessary to send to you Epaphroditus my brother, and companion in labor," etc. Col. iv. 7, 8: "All my state shall Tychicus declare unto you, who is a beloved brother, and a faithful minister and fellow-servant in the Lord: whom I have sent unto you for the same purpose, that he might know your estate," etc. But Epaphroditus and Tychicus were not sent against their own will—nor is there any more reason to think that Onesimus was. See Introd., § 2 (4). (2.) Paul had no power to send Onesimus back to his master thee unprofitable, but now profitable to thee and to me:

12 Whom I have sent again: thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels;

unless he chose to go. He had no civil authority; he had no guard to accompany him; he could intrust him to no sheriff to convey him from place to place, and he had no means of controlling him if he chose to go to any other place than Colosse. He could indeed have sent him away from himself; he could have told him to go to Colosse, but there his power ended. Onesimus then could have gone where he pleased. But there is no evidence that Paul even told him to go to Colosse against his own inclination, or that he would have sent him away at all unless he had himself requested it. (3.) There may have been many reasons why Onesimus desired to return to Colosse, and no one can prove that he did not express that desire to Paul, and that his "sending" him was not in consequence of such a request. He may have had friends and relatives there; or, being now converted, he may have been sensible that he had wronged his former master, and that he ought to return and repair the wrong; or he may have been poor, and a stranger in Rome, and may have been greatly disappointed in what he had expected to find there when he left Philemon, and may have desired to return to the comparative comforts of his former condition. (4.) It may be added, therefore, (a) that this passage should not be adduced to prove that we ought to send back runaway slaves to their former masters against their own consent; or to justify the laws which require magistrates to do it; or to show that they who have escaped should be arrested and forcibly detained; or to justify any sort of influence over a runaway slave to induce him to return to his former master. There is not the least evidence that any of these things occurred in the case before us, and if this instance is ever appealed to, it should be to justify what Paul did—AND NOTHING ELSE. (b) The passage shows that it is right to aid a servant of any kind to return to his master if he desires it. It is right to give him a "letter," and to plead ear-

13 Whom I would have retained with me, that^a in thy stead he might have ministered unto me in the bonds of the Gospel:

14 But without thy mind would

a 1 Cor. 16. 17. Phil. 2. 30.

nestly for his favorable reception if he has in any way wronged his master—for Paul did this. On the same principle it would be right to give him pecuniary assistance to enable him to return—for there may be cases where one who has fled from servitude might wish to return. There may be instances where one has had a kind master, with whom he would feel that on the whole he could be more happy than in his present circumstances. Such cases, however, are exceedingly rare. Or there may be instances where one may have relatives that are in the neighborhood or in the family of his former master, and the desire to be with them may be so strong that on the whole he would choose to be a servant as he was before, rather than to remain as he is now. In all such cases it is right to render aid—for the example of the apostle Paul goes to sustain this. But it goes no further. So far as appears, he neither advised Onesimus to return; nor did he compel him; nor did he say one word to influence him to do it; nor did he mean or expect that he would be a slave when he should have been received again by his master. See Notes on ver. 16. ¶ Thou therefore receive him, that is, mine own bowels. There is great delicacy also in this expression. If he had merely said "receive him," Philemon might have thought only of him as he formerly was. Paul therefore adds, "that is, mine own bowels"—"one whom I so tenderly love that he seems to carry my heart with him wherever he goes."—Doddridge.

13. Whom I would have retained with me, that in thy stead. "That he might render me the service which I know you would if you were here." The Greek is, "for thee" (ὕπὲρ σοῦ); that is, what he would have done for Paul might be regarded as done by Philemon himself. ¶ He might have ministered unto me. He might have rendered me assistance (διακονῆς); to wit, in such a way as one who was in bonds would need.

14. But without thy mind would I do

I do nothing; that thy benefit should not be as it were of necessity, but willingly.^a

^a 2 Cor. 9. 7.

nothing. Nothing in the matter referred to. He would not retain Onesimus in his service, much as he needed his assistance, without the cordial consent of Philemon. He would not give him occasion for hard feeling or complaint, as if Paul had induced him to leave his master; or as if he persuaded him to remain with him when he wished to return; or as if he kept him away from him when he owed him or had wronged him. All that is said here is entirely consistent with the supposition that Onesimus was disposed to return to his master, and with the supposition that Paul did not compel or urge him to do it. For it is probable that if Onesimus had proposed to return, it would have been easy for Paul to have retained him with him. He might have referred to his own want of a friend. He might have appealed to his gratitude on account of his efforts for his conversion. He might have shown him that he was under no moral obligation to go back. He might have refused to give him this letter, and might have so represented to him the dangers of the way, and the probability of a harsh reception, as effectually to have dissuaded him from such a purpose. But, in that case, it is clear that this, if it should be known, might have caused hard feeling in the bosom of Philemon, and rather than do that he preferred to let him return to his master, and to plead for him that he might have a kind reception. It is, therefore, by no means necessary to suppose that Paul felt that Onesimus was under obligation to return, or that he was disposed to compel him, or that Onesimus was not inclined to return voluntarily; but all the circumstances of the case are met by the supposition that, if Paul retained him, Philemon might conceive that he had injured him. Suppose, as seems to have been the case, that Onesimus "owed" Philemon (ver. 18), and then suppose that Paul had chosen to retain him with himself, and had dissuaded him from returning to him, would not Philemon have had reason to complain of it? There was, therefore, on every account, great propriety in his saying that he did not wish to use any influence over him to retain him with him when he proposed to return to Colosse, and that he felt that it would be wrong for him to keep him, much as he needed him, without the consent of Philemon. Nor is it necessary, by what is said here, to suppose that Onesimus was a slave, and that Paul believed that Philemon had a right to him and to his services as such. All that he says here would be met by the supposition that he was a hired servant, and would be in fact equally proper even on the supposition that he was merely an apprentice. In either case, he would feel that he gave just ground of complaint to Philemon if, when Onesimus desired to return, he used any influence to dissuade him from it, and to retain him with himself. It would have been a violation of the rule requiring us to do to others as we would wish them to do unto us, and Paul therefore felt unwilling, much as he needed the services of Onesimus, to make use of any influence to retain him with him without the consent of his master. ¶ That thy benefit. The favor which I might receive from thee by having the services of Onesimus. If Onesimus should remain with him and assist him, he would feel that the benefit which would be conferred by his services would be in fact bestowed by Philemon, for he had a right to the service of Onesimus, and, while Paul enjoyed it, he would be deprived of it. The word rendered benefit here—ἀγαθόν—means good, and the sense is, "the good which you would do me;" to wit, by the service of Onesimus. ¶ Should not be as it were of necessity. As it would be if Paul should detain Onesimus with him without affording Philemon an opportunity of expressing his assent. Paul would indeed have felt that he was in fact receiving a "good" at the expense of Philemon, but it would not be a voluntary favor on his part. ¶ But willingly. As it would be if he had given his consent that Onesimus should remain with him.

15 For^b perhaps he therefore departed for a season, that thou shouldest receive him forever;

^b Gen. 45. 5-8.

15. For perhaps he therefore departed for a season. Perhaps on this account, or for this reason—διὰ τοῦτο—he left

16 Not now as a servant, but above a servant, a brother^a beloved, specially to me, but how you for a little time. Greek, "for an hour"—πρὸς ὥραν. The meaning is, that it was possible that this was permitted, in the providence of God, in order that Onesimus might be brought under the influence of the Gospel, and might be far more serviceable to Philemon as a Christian than he could have been in his former relation to him. What appeared to Philemon, therefore, to be a calamity, and what seemed to him to be wrong on the part of Onesimus, might have been suffered to occur in order that he might receive a higher benefit. Such things are not uncommon in human affairs. ¶ That thou shouldst receive him forever. That is, in the higher relation of a Christian friend and brother—that he might be united to thee in eternal affection; that he might not only be with thee in a far more endearing relation during the present life than he was before, but in the bonds of love in a world that will never end.

^a Matt. 23. 8. 1 Tim. 6. 2.

16. Not now as a servant. The adverb rendered "not now" (οὐκέτι), means no more, no further, no longer. It implies that he had been before in this condition, but was not to be now. Comp. Matt. xix. 6, "They are no more twain." They were once so, but they are not to be regarded as such now. Matt. xxii. 46, "Neither durst any man from that day forth ask him any more questions." They once did it, but now they did not dare to do it. Luke xv. 19, "And am no more worthy to be called thy son," though I once was. John vi. 66, "And walked no more with him," though they once did. See also John xi. 54; xiv. 19; xvii. 11; Acts viii. 39; Gal. iv. 7; Eph. ii. 19. This passage then proves that he had before been a servant—δούλος, doulos. But still it is not certain what kind of a servant he was. The word does not necessarily mean slave, nor can it be proved from this passage, or from any other part of the epistle, that he was at any time a slave. See Notes on Eph. vi. 5, and 1 Tim. vi. 1. The word denotes servant of any kind, and it should never be assumed that those to whom it was applied were slaves. It is true that slavery existed in the much more unto thee, both in the flesh,^b and in the Lord?

17 If thou count me therefore

^b Col. 3. 22.

heathen nations when the Gospel was first preached, and it is doubtless true that many slaves were converted (comp. Notes on 1 Cor. vii. 21); but the mere use of the word does not necessarily prove that he to whom it is applied was a slave. If Onesimus was a slave, there is reason to think that he was of a most respectable character (comp. Notes on Col. iv. 9), and indeed all that is implied in the use of the term here, and all that is said of him, would be met by the supposition that he was a voluntary servant, and that he had been in fact intrusted with important business by Philemon. It would seem from ver. 18 ("or oweth thee ought") that he was in a condition which made it possible for him to hold property, or at least to be intrusted with the care of property. ¶ But above a servant, a brother beloved. A Christian brother. Comp. Notes on 1 Tim. vi. 2. He was especially dear to Paul himself as a Christian, and he trusted that he would be so to Philemon. ¶ Specially to me. That is, I feel a special or particular interest in him and affection for him. This he felt not only on account of the traits of character which he had evinced since his conversion, but because he had been converted under his instrumentality when he was a prisoner. A convert made in such circumstances would be particularly dear to one. ¶ But how much more unto thee. Why, it may be asked, would he then be particularly dear to Philemon? I answer, because (1.) of the former relation which he sustained to him—a member of his own family, and bound to him by strong ties; (2.) because he would receive him as a penitent, and would have joy in his returning from the error of his ways; (3.) because he might expect him to remain long with him, and be of advantage to him as a Christian brother; and (4.) because he had voluntarily returned, and had thus shown that he felt a strong attachment to his former master. ¶ In the flesh. This phrase is properly used with reference to any relation which may exist pertaining to the present world, as contradistinguished from that which is formed primarily by religion, and which would be expressed by the subjoined phrase, "in the Lord." It might, in itself, refer to any natural relation of blood, or to any formed in business, or to any constituted by mere friendship, or to a family alliance, or to any relation having its origin in voluntary or involuntary servitude. It is not necessary to suppose, in order to meet the full force of the expression, either that Onesimus had been a slave, or that he would continue to be regarded as such.

Whatever relation of the kind referred to above may have existed between him and Philemon, would be appropriately denoted by this phrase. The new and more interesting relation which they were now to sustain to each other, which was formed by religion, is expressed by the phrase "in the Lord." In both these, Paul hoped that Onesimus would manifest the appropriate spirit of a Christian, and be worthy of his entire confidence. ¶ In the Lord. As a Christian. He will be greatly endeared to your heart as a consistent and worthy follower of the Lord Jesus. On this important verse then, in relation to the use which is so often made of this epistle by the advocates of slavery, to show that Paul sanctioned it, and that it is a duty to send back those who have escaped from their masters that they may again be held in bondage, we may remark, (1.) that there is no certain evidence that Onesimus was ever a slave at all. All the proof that he was is to be found in the word δοῦλος—doulos—in this verse. But, as we have seen, the mere use of this word by no means proves that. All that is necessarily implied by it is that he was in some way the servant of Philemon—whether hired, or bought, or apprenticed can not be shown. (2.) At all events, even supposing that he had been a slave, Paul did not mean that he should return as such, or be regarded as such after he had returned. He meant, whatever may have been his former relation, and whatever subsequent relation he may have sustained, that he should be regarded as a beloved Christian brother; that the leading conception in regard to him should be that he was a fellow-heir of salvation, a member of the same redeemed Church, a candidate for the same heaven. (3.) Paul did not send him back in order that he might be a slave, or with a view that the shackles of servitude should be riveted on him. There is not the slightest evidence that he forced him to return, or that he advised him to do it, or even that he expressed a wish that he would; and when he did send him, it was not as a slave, but as a beloved brother in the Lord. It can not be shown that the motive for sending him back was in the slightest degree that he should be a slave. No such thing was intimated, nor is any such thing necessary to be supposed in order to a fair interpretation of the passage. (4.) It is clear that, even if Onesimus had been a slave before, it would have been contrary to the wishes of Paul that Philemon should now hold him as such. Paul wished him to regard him "not as a servant," but as a "beloved brother." If Philemon complied with his wishes, Onesimus was never afterward regarded or treated as a slave. If he did so regard or treat him, it was contrary to the expressed intention of the apostle, and it is certain that he could never have shown this letter in justification of it. It can not fail to strike any one that if Philemon followed the spirit of this epistle, he would not consider Onesimus to be a slave, but if he sustained the relation of a servant at all, it would be as a voluntary member of his household, where, in all respects, he would be regarded and treated, not as a "chattel" or a "thing," but as a Christian brother. (5.) This passage, therefore, may be regarded as full proof that it is not right to send a slave back, against his will, to his former master to be a slave. It is right to help one if he wishes to go back; to give him a letter to his master, as Paul did to Onesimus; to furnish him money to help him on his journey if he desires to return; to commend him as a Christian brother, if he is such; but beyond that the example of the apostle Paul does not go. It is perfectly clear that he would not have sent him back to be regarded and treated as a slave, but being able to commend him as a Christian, he was willing to do it, and he expected that he would be treated, not as a slave, but as a Christian. The case before us does not furnish the slightest evidence that Paul would have ever sent him back to be a chattel or a thing. If, with his own consent, and by his own wish, we can send a slave back to his master to be a partner,^a receive him as myself.

18 If he hath wronged thee, or

a 2 Cor. 8. 23.

treated as a Christian and as a man, the example of Paul shows that it would be right to do it, but it does not go beyond that. (6.) In confirmation of this, and as a guide in duty now, it may be observed that Paul had been educated as a Hebrew; that he was thoroughly imbued with the doctrines of the Old Testament; and that one of the elementary principles of that system of religion was that a runaway slave was in no circumstances to be returned by force to his former master. "Thou shalt not deliver unto his master the servant that is escaped from his master unto thee." Deut. xxiii. 15. It can not be supposed that, trained as he was in the principles of the Hebrew religion—of which this was a positive and unrepealed law—and imbued, as he was, with the benevolent spirit of the Gospel—a system so hostile to oppression—the apostle Paul would have constrained a slave who had escaped from bondage to return to servitude against his will. (7.) It may be added that, if the principles here acted on by Paul were carried out, slavery would speedily cease in the world. Very soon would it come to an end if masters were to regard those whom they hold, "not as slaves," but as beloved Christian brothers; not as chattels and things, but as the redeemed children of God. Thus regarding them, they would no longer feel that they might chain them, and task them, and sell them as property. They would feel that as Christians and as men, they were on a level with themselves, and that they who were made in the image of God, and who have been redeemed with the blood of his Son, ought to be FREE.

17. If thou count me therefore a partner. The word rendered partner (κοινωνός) means a partaker, a companion. The idea in the word is that of having something in common (κοινός) with any one—as common principles; common attachments; a common interest in an enterprise; common hopes. It may be applied to those who hold the same principles of religion, who have the same hope of heaven, who have the same views of things, etc. Here the meaning is,

oweth thee aught, put that on mine account;

19 I Paul have written it with that if Philemon regarded Paul as sharing with him in the principles and hopes of religion, or as a brother in the Gospel, so that he would receive him, he ought to receive Onesimus in the same way. He was actuated by the same principles, he had the same hopes, and he had a claim to be received as a Christian brother. His receiving Onesimus would be interpreted by Paul as proof that he regarded him as a partaker of the hopes of the Gospel, and as a companion and friend. For a plea in behalf of another, strongly resembling this, see Horace, Epis., lib. i, Ep. 9.

18. If he hath wronged thee. Either by escaping from you, or by failing to perform what he had agreed to, or by unfaithfulness when he was with you as a servant, or by taking your property when he went away. Any of these things would meet all that is said here, and it is impossible to determine in which of them he had done Philemon wrong. It may be observed, however, that the apostle evinces much delicacy in this matter. He does not say that he had wronged him, but he makes a supposition that he might have done it. Doubtless Philemon would suppose that he had done it, even if he had done no more than to escape from him, and, whatever Paul's views of that might be, he says that, even if it were so, he would wish him to set that over to his account. He took the blame on himself, and asked Philemon not to remember it against Onesimus. ¶ Or oweth thee aught. It appears from this that Onesimus, whatever may have been his former condition, was capable of holding property and of contracting debts. It is possible that he might have borrowed money of Philemon; or he may have been regarded as a tenant, and may not have paid the rent of his farm; or the apostle may mean that he had owed him service which he had not performed. Conjecture is useless as to the way in which the debt had been contracted. ¶ Put that on mine account. Reckon or impute that to me—ἐμοὶ ἐλλόγει. This word occurs nowhere else in the New Testament, except in mine own hand, I will repay it: albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me even thine own self besides.

Rom. v. 13, where it is rendered imputed. See Notes on that passage. It means to reckon, to put to one's account; to wit, either that which he has himself done, or that which he assumes as his own. It never implies that that is to be charged on one which does not properly belong to him, either as his own act, or as that which he has assumed. In this case, it would have been manifestly unjust for Philemon to charge the wrong which Onesimus had done, or what he owed him, to the apostle Paul without his consent; and it can not be inferred from what Paul says here that it would have been right to do so. The steps in the case were these: (1.) Onesimus, not Paul, had done the wrong. (2.) Paul was neither guilty of it, nor blameworthy for it, and never in any way, or by any process, could be made to be, or conceived to be. It would be true forever that Onesimus and not he had done the wrong. (3.) Paul assumed the debt and the wrong to himself. He was willing, by putting himself in the place of Onesimus, to bear the consequences, and to have Onesimus treated as if he had not done it. When he had voluntarily assumed it, it was right to treat him as if he had done so; that is, to hold him responsible. A man may assume a debt if he pleases, and then he may be held answerable for it. (4.) If he had not assumed this himself, it never could have been right for Philemon to charge it on him. No possible supposition could make it right. No agency which he had in the conversion of Onesimus; no friendship which he had for him; no favor which he had shown him, could make it right. The consent, the concurrence, on the part of Paul, was absolutely necessary in order that he should be in any way responsible for what Onesimus had done. (5.) The same principle prevails in imputation every where. (a) What we have done is chargeable upon us. (b) If we have not done a thing, or have not assumed it by a voluntary act, it is not right to charge it upon us. (c) In the work of redemption the Saviour voluntarily assumed the place of man, and God reckoned, or considered it so. He did not hold him guilty or blameworthy in the case; but as he had voluntarily taken the place of the sinner, he was treated as if he had been a sinner. God, in like manner, does not charge on man crimes of which he is not guilty. He does not hold him to be blameworthy or ill-deserving for the sin of Adam, or for any other sin but his own. He reckons things as they are. Adam sinned, and he alone was held to be blameworthy or ill-deserving for the act. By a divine constitution (comp. Notes on Rom. v. 12, seq.), he had placed Adam in such a relation to the race that if he sinned, the consequences or results would pass over and terminate on his posterity—as the consequences of the sin of the drunkard pass over and terminate on his sons, and God reckons this to be so—and treats the race accordingly. He never reckons those to be guilty who are not guilty; or those to be ill-deserving who are not ill-deserving; nor does he punish one for what another has done. When Paul, therefore, voluntarily assumed a debt or an obligation, what he did should not be urged as an argument to prove that it would be right for God to charge on all the posterity of Adam the sin of their first father, or to hold them guilty for an offense committed ages before they had an existence. The case should be adduced to demonstrate one point only—that when a man assumes a debt, or voluntarily takes a wrong done upon himself, it is right to hold him responsible for it.

19. I Paul have written it with mine own hand. It has been inferred from this that Paul wrote this entire epistle with his own hand, though this was contrary to his usual practice. Comp. Notes on Rom. xvi. 22; 1 Cor. xvi. 21; Gal. vi. 11. He undoubtedly meant to refer to this as a mark of special favor toward Philemon, and as furnishing security that he would certainly be bound for what he had promised. ¶ I will repay it. I will be security for it. It is not probable that Paul supposed that Philemon would rigidly exact it from him, but if he did, he would feel himself bound to pay it. ¶ Albeit I do not say to thee how thou owest unto me thine own self besides. Paul had doubtless been the 20 Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord: refresh ^a my bowels in the Lord.

21 Having confidence ^b in thy obedience I wrote unto thee, knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say.

^a ver. 7.

^b 2 Cor. 7. 16.

means of the conversion of Philemon, and whatever hope he cherished of eternal life was to be traced to his instrumentality. Paul says that this was equivalent to his owing himself to him. His very life—his eternal welfare—was to be traced to his labors. What he asked now of him was a small matter compared with this, and he seems to have supposed—what was probably true—that for this consideration Philemon would not think of exacting of him what he had voluntarily bound himself to pay.

20. Yea, brother, let me have joy of thee in the Lord. “By showing me this favor in receiving my friend and brother as I request.” The phrase “in the Lord” here seems to mean that, if this request was granted, he would recognize the hand of the Lord in it, and would receive it as a favor from him. ¶ Refresh my bowels in the Lord. The bowels, in the Scriptures, are uniformly spoken of as the seat of the affections—meaning commonly the upper viscera, embracing the heart and the lungs. Comp. Notes on Isa. xvi. 11. The reason is, that in any deep emotion this part of our frame is peculiarly affected, or we feel it there. Comp. Robinson’s Lex. on the word σπλάγχον. See this illustrated at length in Sir Charles Bell’s Anatomy of Expression, p. 85, seq., ed. London, 1844. The idea here is, that Paul had such a tender affection for Onesimus as to give him great concern and uneasiness. The word rendered “refresh” — ἀνάπαυσόν—means to give rest to, to give repose, to free from sorrow or care; and the sense is, that by receiving Onesimus, Philemon would cause the deep and anxious feelings of Paul to cease, and he would be calm and happy. Comp. Notes on ver. 7.

21. Having confidence in thy obedience. That you would comply with all my expressed desires. ¶ I wrote unto thee. “I have written to you;” to wit, in this epistle. ¶ Knowing that thou wilt also do more than I say. In all the re-

22 But withal prepare me also a lodging: for I ^c trust that through ^d your prayers I shall be given unto you.

23 There salute thee Epaphras, ^e my fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus;

^c Phil. 2. 24.

^d 2 Cor. 1. 11.

^e Col. 1. 7.

spects which he had mentioned—in receiving Onesimus, and in his kind treatment of him. He had asked a great favor of him, but he knew that he would go even beyond what he had asked.

22. But withal. Or, at the same time—Ἄμα. While you are granting this favor, do me also another by preparing a lodging for me. ¶ Prepare me also a lodging. Philemon had been accustomed to show kindness to the saints (ver. 5), and not improbably Paul had before shared his hospitality. The word rendered lodging (ξενία) means, properly, guest-right, hospitality, entertainment; and then, a place for a guest. Comp. Acts xxviii. 23. ¶ For I trust. Paul had some hope of being released—an event which probably occurred. See Notes on Phil. i. 25; ii. 23, 24. Comp. Intro. to 2 Timothy. ¶ Through your prayers. See Notes on 2 Cor. i. 11. He expected release in answer to the petitions of those who loved him, and the cause in which he was engaged. Comp. Notes on Acts xii. 5. ¶ I shall be given unto you. I shall be permitted to return to you, as a favor—χαρισθήσομαι. Paul had no doubt that Philemon would so regard it, and he had no apprehension that his abiding with him would be considered as a burden.

23. There salute thee Epaphras. The same persons who are here mentioned as greeting Philemon are mentioned in the close of the epistle to the Colossians—furnishing a high degree of evidence that Philemon resided at Colosse. Epaphras was a member of the Church there. See Notes on Col. iv. 12. ¶ My fellow-prisoner in Christ Jesus. In the cause of Christ. See Notes on ver. 1. The circumstance of his being a prisoner is not mentioned in the parallel place in the epistle to the Colossians, but nothing is more probable.

24. Marcus, Aristarchus, Demas, and Lucas. See Notes on the Epistle to the Colossians, iv. 10-14.

24 Marcus, ^a Aristarchus, ^b Demas,
^c Lucas, my fellow-labourers.

25 The ^d grace of our Lord Jesus Christ ^{be} with your spirit. Amen.

^a Acts 12. 12, 25.

^b Acts 19. 29.

Written from Rome to Philemon, by Onesimus a servant.

^e 2 Tim. 4. 11.

^d 2 Tim. 4. 22.

25. The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ,
 etc. See Notes 2 Tim. iv. 22.

The subscription to the epistle is of no authority, but in this case is undoubtedly correct. Compare the Remarks at the close of 1 Corinthians and Titus.

REMARKS.

Having now passed through with the exposition of this epistle, it may be proper to copy, for comparison with it, one of the most beautiful specimens of epistolary composition to be found in profane literature, an epistle of Pliny, written on a similar occasion, and having a strong resemblance to this. As a matter of taste, it is of importance to show that the sacred writers do not fall behind the most favorable specimens of literary composition to be found in uninspired writings. The epistle of Pliny was directed to his friend Sabinianus, in behalf of his manumitted slave who had offended him, and who was consequently cast out of his favor. It is in the following words:

C. Plinius Sabiniano, S.

Libertus tuus, cui succensere te dixeras, venit ad me advolutusque pedibus meis, tanquam tuis, hæsit. Flevit multùm, multùm rogavit, multùm eti-am tacuit: in summâ, fecit mihi fidem penitentiaë. Verè credo emendatum, quia deliquisse sentit. Irasceres scio;
 et irasceres meritò, id quoque scio:
 sed tunc præcipua mansuetudinis laus, cum iræ causa justissima est. Amâsti hominem; et spero amabis: interum sufficit ut exorari te sinas. Licebit rursus irasci, si meruerit: quod exoratus excusatiùs facies.

Remitte aliquid adolescentiaë ipsius;
 remitte lachrymis; remitte indulgentiaë tuæ; ne torseris illum, ne torseris etiam te. Torqueris enim cùm tam lenis irasceres. Vereor, ne videar non rogare, sed cogere, si precibus ejus meas junxero. Jungam tamen tanto plenius et effusius, quanto ipsum acrius severiusque corripui, dèstrictè minatus, nunquam me postea rogaturum.
 Hoc illi, quem feteri oportebat; tibi non idem. Nam fortasse ite-rùm rogabo, impetrabo iterùm: sit mode tale, ut rogare me, ut præstare te deceat. Vale. Epistolar., lib. ix., Ep. 21.

“Caius Pliny to Sabinianus, health:

“Thy freedman, with whom thou didst say thou wert incensed, came to me, and, having thrown himself at my feet, grasped them as if they had been thine. He wept much; plead much; and yet pleaded more by his silence. In short, he fully convinced me that he was a penitent. I do sincerely believe that he is reformed, because he perceives that he has done wrong. I know that thou art incensed against him; and I know also that thou art justly so; but then clemency has its chief praise when there is the greatest cause for anger. Thou hast loved the man; and I hope that thou wilt love him again. In the mean time; it may suffice that thou dost suffer thyself to be entreated for him. It will be right for thee again to be offended if he deserves it; because, having allowed thyself to be entreated, you will do it with greater propriety.

“Forgive something for his youth; forgive on account of his tears; forgive on account of thine own kindness: do not torment him; do not torment thyself—for thou wilt be tormented when thou, who art of so gentle a disposition, dost suffer thyself to be angry. I fear, if I should unite my prayers to his, that I should seem not to ask, but to compel. Yet I will write them, and the more largely and earnestly, too, as I have sharply and severely reproved him; solemnly threatening him, should he offend again, never more to intercede for him. This I said to him, because it was necessary to alarm him; but I will not say the same to thee. For perhaps I may again entreat thee, and again obtain, if now that shall be done which it is fit that I should ask and you concede.
 Farewell.”

Those who compare these two epistles, much as they may admire that of Pliny as a literary composition, and as adapted to secure the end which he had in view, will coincide with the remark of Doddridge, that it is much inferior to the letter of Paul. There is less courtesy—though there is much; there is less that is touching and tender—though there is much force in the pleading; and there is much less that is affecting in the manner of the appeal than in the epistle of the apostle.

The epistle to Philemon, though the shortest that Paul wrote, and though pertaining to a private matter in which the Church at large could not be expected to have any direct interest, is nevertheless a most interesting portion of the New Testament, and furnishes some invaluable lessons for the Church.

I. It is a model of courtesy. It shows that the apostle was a man of refined sensibility, and had a delicate perception of what was due in friendship, and what was required by true politeness. There are turns of thought in this epistle which no one would employ who was not thoroughly under the influence of true courtesy of feeling, and who had not an exquisite sense of what was proper in a Christian gentleman in his intercourse with others.

II. The epistle shows that he had great tact in argument, and great skill in selecting just such things as would be adapted to secure the end in view. It would be hardly possible to accumulate, even in a letter of fiction, more circumstances which would be fitted to accomplish the object which he contemplated, than he has introduced into this short letter, or to arrange them in a way better fitted to secure the desired result. If we remember the state of mind in which it is reasonable to suppose Philemon was in regard to this runaway servant, and the little probability that a man in his circumstances would receive him with kindness again, it is impossible not to admire the address with which Paul approaches him. It is not difficult to imagine in what state of mind Philemon may have been, or the obstacles which it was necessary to surmount in order to induce him to receive Onesimus again—and especially to receive him as a Christian brother. If, as has been commonly supposed, Onesimus had been a slave; if he had run away from him; if he had been intractable and disobedient; if he had wronged him by taking property with him that did not belong to him, or if he had owed him, and had run off without paying him, it is not difficult for any one to imagine how great was the difficulty to be overcome in his mind before the object of Paul could be accomplished. This will be felt to be especially so if we bear in remembrance the repugnance necessarily felt by a slaveholder to receive one who has been a slave as an equal in any respect, or to regard and treat such a one as a Christian brother on the same level with himself. Or if we suppose that Onesimus had been a voluntary servant employed by Philemon, and had failed to render the service which he had contracted to perform, or had embezzled property, or had gone off in debt, greatly irritating the mind of his master, the difficulty to be overcome before he received him again would be little less. In either case it would be necessary to soothe his irritated feelings, and to inspire confidence in one who hitherto had evinced little claim to it, and to persuade him now to receive one who had shown, in his former relation to him, that he was not to be trusted as a Christian brother. If the epistle be examined with reference to either of these suppositions, it will be found to be composed with the most finished tact and art.

III. This epistle has been frequently appealed to by the friends and advocates of slavery as furnishing a support or apology for that institution. Indeed, it would seem to be regarded by the advocates of that system as so clear on the point that all that they need to do is to name it as settling the whole matter in debate. The points which it is supposed by the advocates of that system to prove, are two: first, that slavery is right—since it is assumed that Onesimus was a slave, and that Paul does not intimate to Philemon that the relation was contrary to the spirit of Christianity; and second, that it is our duty to send back a runaway slave to his master—since it is assumed that Paul did this in the case of Onesimus. It can not be denied that this view of the matter would be sustained by most of the commentaries on the epistle, but it is time to inquire whether such an exposition is the true one, and whether the epistle really gives countenance to slavery in respect to these points. In order to this, it is important to know exactly what was the state of the case; for in interpreting the New Testament it should not be assumed that any thing is in favor of slavery, nor should any thing be admitted to be in favor of it without applying the most rigid principles of interpretation, any more than in the case of profaneness, adultery, or any other sin. As the result of the examination of the epistle, we are now prepared to inquire what countenance the epistle gives to slavery in these respects, and whether it can be fairly appealed to either in justification of the system, or in showing that it is a duty to return a runaway slave against his consent to his former master. To make out these points from the epistle, it would be necessary to demonstrate that Onesimus was certainly a slave; that Paul so treats the subject as to show that he approved of the institution; that he sent back Onesimus against his own will; that he returned him because he supposed he had done wrong by escaping from servitude; and that he meant that he should continue to be regarded as a slave, and held as a slave, after his return to Philemon. Now, in regard to these points, I would make the following remarks in view of the exposition which has been given of the epistle:

(1.) There is no positive evidence that Onesimus was a slave at all. See Notes on ver. 16. Even if it should be admitted to be probable that he was, it would be necessary, in order that this epistle should be adduced in favor of slavery, that that fact should be made out without any ground of doubt, or the argument is worthless. It is clear that the epistle, under any circumstances, can be adduced in favor of slavery only so far as it is certain that Onesimus was a slave. But that is not certain. It can not be made to be certain. It should not be taken for granted. Either of the suppositions, that he was bound to service till he was of age by a parent or guardian, or that he had voluntarily bound himself to service for wages, will meet all that is necessarily implied in the epistle.

(2.) There is not the least evidence that Paul used any force, or even persuasion, to induce him to return to his master. It can not be proved from the epistle that he even advised him to return. It is certain that he did not compel him to do it—for Paul had no power to do this, and no guard or civil officer accompanied Onesimus to secure him if he attempted to escape. Every one of the circumstances mentioned in the epistle will be met by the supposition that Onesimus desired to return, but that there were circumstances which made him apprehensive that if he did he would not be kindly received, and that at his request Paul wrote the epistle to induce Philemon to receive him kindly. Nothing more can be proved; nothing more is necessary to be believed, in order to a fair interpretation of the epistle. Nothing is more natural than the supposition that when Onesimus was truly converted, he would desire to return to Philemon if he had in any way done him wrong. But to make it proper to adduce this epistle to show that it is a duty to return a runaway slave to his master, even on the supposition that Onesimus was a slave, it is necessary to prove either that Paul advised him to return, or that he compelled him to do it against his will. No one doubts that it would be right to help one who had escaped from slavery, if, on any proper account, he should wish to go back to his former master: if he felt that he had wronged him, or if he had a wife and children in the neighborhood, or if he was satisfied that he could be more happy in his service than he could be elsewhere. To this point, and this only, this epistle goes.

(3.) There is no evidence that Paul meant that Onesimus should return as a slave, or with a view to be retained and treated as a slave. Even supposing that he had been so formerly, there is not the slightest intimation in the epistle that when he sent him back to his master he meant that he should throw himself into the chains of bondage again. Nor is there the slightest evidence that if he had supposed that this would be the result, he would have even consented that he should return to his master. No man can take this epistle and prove from it that Paul would have sent him at all if he had supposed that the effect would be that he would be reduced to slavery and held in bondage. If such had been his expectation, he would never have written such a letter as this. The expression of such a desire would have found a place in the epistle; or at least the epistle would not have been so framed as almost of necessity to lead to a different result.

(4.) There is very satisfactory evidence, besides this, that he did not mean that Onesimus should be regarded and treated by Philemon as a slave. It would be impossible for Philemon to comply with the wishes breathed forth in this letter, and meet exactly the desires of Paul in the case, and yet retain him as a slave, or regard him as property—as a “chattel”—as a “thing.” For (a) if he had been formerly a slave; if this is the fair meaning of the word δοῦλος—doulos—then this is expressly declared. Thus, in ver. 16, he is commanded to receive him “NOT now as a servant”—οὐκ ἐτι ὡς δοῦλον. If he had been a slave before, he did not wish that he should be received as such now, or regarded as such any longer. How could Philemon comply with the wish of the apostle, and yet regard Onesimus as a slave? The very attempt to do it would be directly in the face of the expressed desire of Paul, and every moment he held him as such he would be disregarding his wishes. (b) He desired him to receive and treat him, in all respects, as a Christian brother—as one redeemed—as a man — “Above a servant, a brother beloved.” How could he do this, and yet regard and treat him as a slave? Is it treating one as a Christian brother to hold him as property; to deprive him of freedom; to consider him an article of merchandize; to exact his labor without compensation? Would the man himself who makes another a slave suppose that he was treated as a Christian brother if he were reduced to that condition? Would he feel that his son was so regarded if he was made a slave? There is no way of reconciling these things. It is impossible for a master to regard his slave as, in the proper and full sense of the phrase, “a Christian brother.” He may, indeed, esteem him highly as a Christian; he may treat him with kindness; he may show him many favors; but—he regards him also AS HIS SLAVE; and this fact makes a difference wide “as from the centre thrice to the utmost pole” in his feelings toward him and other Christians. He is not on a level with them as a Christian. The notion of his being his slave mingles with all his feelings toward him, and gives a coloring to all his views of him. He can not but feel, if he himself is under the influence of religion, that that slave, if he were treated in all respects as a Christian, would be as free as himself; would have a right to his time, and skill, and liberty; would be permitted to form his own plans, and to enjoy the avails of his own labor; and would be secure from the possibility of being sold. (c) Suppose now that Paul, after a short interval, had actually come to the residence of Philemon, as he expected to (ver. 22), and had found him regarding and treating Onesimus as a slave; would he have felt that Philemon had complied with his wishes? Did he ask this of him? Did he not request just the contrary? Ver. 16. Would it not be natural for him to say to him that he had NOT received him as he wished him to? And how would Philemon reply to this?

(5.) The principles laid down in this epistle would lead to the universal abolition of slavery. If all those who are now slaves were to become Christians, and their masters were to treat them “not as slaves, but as brethren beloved,” the period would not be far distant when slavery would cease. This probably will be admitted by all. But a state of things which would be destroyed by the widest prevalence of Christianity, is not right at any time. Christianity, in its highest influences, interferes with nothing that is good, and would annihilate nothing which is not wrong. That which is true and best for the welfare of man will survive when the true religion spreads over all the world; and to say, as is commonly admitted even by the advocates of slavery, that Christianity will ultimately destroy the system, is to say that it is now wrong—for Christianity destroys nothing which is in itself right, and nothing which is desirable for the highest good of man. It will destroy intemperance and idolatry, and superstition and war—because they are evil and wrong—and only because they are wrong; and for the same reason, and that only, will it abolish slavery. When a man, therefore, admits that the Gospel will ultimately destroy slavery, he at the same time admits that it is now an evil and a sin. The Gospel is adapted and designed to put an end to the system. It did annihilate it in the Roman empire, and its tendency every where is to secure its final abolition. The system, therefore, is evil. It is opposed to the spirit of religion. It is destructive of the welfare of society. It is a violation of human rights. It is contrary to the will of God. The Gospel every where teaches us to regard the slave "no longer as a slave, but as a brother;" and when this is secured, the system must speedily come to an end. For this, and for all its other anticipated influences, we should labor and pray that the Gospel may be diffused as speedily as possible all over the world; that it may raise man every where from his degradation, and invest every human being with the dignity of a freeman; that it may "loose the bands of wickedness, undo the heavy burdens, let the oppressed go free, and break every yoke." Isa. lviii. 6.

THE END.

Deacidified using the Bookkeeper process.
Neutralizing agent: Magnesium Oxide Treatment Date: June 2005

PreservationTechnologies

A WORLD LEADER IN PAPER PRESERVATION

111 Thomson Park Drive
Cranberry Township, PA 16066
(724) 779-2111

PS
2341
13262

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 014 383 024 A

