PREFACE

8. 11. 55

THE work of editing Volume IV of the Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum entitled Inscriptions of the Kalachuri-Chēdi Era was offered to me by the Director General of Archæology in India in his letter of the 7th March 1935. As I was already interested in the study of these records for a long time and had also edited some of them, I gladly accepted the offer, though not without some diffidence; for my official duties as Professor of Sanskrit at the Morris College, Nagpur, left me little leisure, and I knew full well 'how easy it is to glean a few straws, and how laborious to mow a whole field.' After spending most of my spare time during nine years on this work, I made over the typescript of it to the Director General of Archæology on the 6th March 1944. Its printing could not, however, be taken up immediately on account of war conditions then prevailing. The delay was not without an advantage; for it enabled me to include in the present Volume some important records which were discovered subsequently, and to shed some more light on the epoch of the Kalachuri era. At last, the work of printing commenced in June 1949. It was again delayed for some time for want of matrices with the necessary diacritical marks, but was ultimately completed in December 1954.

The present Volume has been planned to contain all inscriptions of the Kalachuri-Chēdi era, by whatever dynasty they may have been issued. It therefore includes, inter alia, records of the Ābhīras and their feudatories, the Traikūṭakas, the Early Gurjaras, the Sēndrakas and the Early Chālukyas of Gujarat, the Hariśchandṛīyas as well as the Kalachuris of Māhishmatī, Tripurī and Ratanpur, and their feudatories. For completing the sources of the history of the Kalachuris it was found desirable to include a few more records of the rulers of Tripurī, Sarayūpāra, Ratanpur and Raipur, though they are dated in other eras. The inscriptions of the Kalachuris of Kalyāṇa have, however, been excluded as none of them are dated in the Kalachuri era. The records have been arranged dynasty-wise in the chronological order, and named uniformly after the reigning kings. Some more inscriptions, because of their being spurious, or for not mentioning the name of any particular king, or due to some other reasons, have been grouped under the heading Miscellaneous Inscriptions and, for convenience of reference, have been inserted in three places where they were chronologically and territorially connected. As the Volume was going through the press, some more records, either dated in the Kalachuri era or allied to those already included, came to light. They have been inserted at the end under the heading Additional Inscriptions. All these inscriptions have been edited from their originals or mechanical ink impressions. In the case of a few other inscriptions, however, the original stones or copper-plates have since been lost and their facsimiles have not been published. Their texts, where possible, have therefore been given from previous editions or notices, with translations added, in an Appendix under the heading Supplementary Inscriptions. As this matter was being composed, one of these records which had been very briefly noticed before and had long been given up for lost, viz., the Gōpālpur stone inscription of Vijayasīmha, was rediscovered at Jabalpur. I was consequently able to include its text from an excellent inked estampage kindly supplied by Dr. Chhabra, though it was too late to have its plate prepared for the present Volume.

From the D. G. A.

The Introduction discusses first the important question of the epoch of the Kalachuri-Chēdi era which has been at issue among scholars for nearly a hundred years. When Dr. Kielhorn attempted to fix it in 1888, he had only fourteen dated records with the necessary details available to him, on which he based his conclusion. Since then twenty-six more dated inscriptions containing details necessary for computation have come to light, which have enabled me to fix the epoch of the era more accurately. The Introduction next gives the political history of the dynasties that used the era, and an account of the administration as well as the religious, social and economic conditions of the times as gleaned from the inscriptions. The next two sections deal with the literature of the age and the coins of the Traikūṭakas and the Kalachuris.

In my editions of inscriptions I usually give their texts in the Nāgarī characters. The same method is followed here. As the book is printed in monotype, some of the conjunct letters could not be displayed exactly as in the original records. As regards diacritical marks, I have used them in all ancient names, whether of persons or of places, and also in some modern place-names which were not sufficiently well-known. They were not considered necessary in the case of such well-known modern place-names as Nasik, Banaras or Allahabad.

The Volume became too bulky to be issued in one part. It has therefore been divided into two parts: the first part containing the Introduction, early inscriptions of the Kalachuri era and inscriptions of the Kalachuris of Tripurī, and the second, the remaining records of the era, additional and supplementary inscriptions and the Index to both the parts.

For some years past I have been suffering from a recurring eye-disease which makes reading difficult and painful. At one time it was even apprehended that I might lose my eye-sight altogether. Though this has, fortunately, not come to pass, my sight is still far from normal. The first 374 pages of the Texts and Translations, which were rushed through the press during 1950-51, when the disease was very troublesome, contain a considerable number of typographical and other errors, for which I crave the indulgence of the reader. The Additions and Corrections are inserted at the beginning of both the parts, which the reader is requested to notice.

I gratefully acknowledge my indebtedness to the distinguished scholars who previously edited many of the records included here, though I have had occasion to differ from them in some places. For the verification of dates I have used throughout S. K. Pillai's indispensable Indian Ephemeris. With the help of the tables given in that work I have myself calculated some early dates, the equivalents of which in the Christian era have not been given therein. To the late Rao Bahadur K. N. Dikshit, Director General of Archæology, who first turned my attention to the editing of epigraphic records, encouraged and helped me in various ways, I owe a deep debt of gratitude which I cannot adequately express in words. I am obliged to Mr. Amalanand Ghosh, the present Director General of Archæology, for kind consideration and help. My thanks are also due to Dr. N. P. Chakravarti and Dr. B. Ch. Chhabra, who, as Government Epigraphists, supplied excellent ink impressions of several records and got illustrative plates prepared for the Volume. Dr. Chhabra, Dr. G. S. Gai, Prof. M. N. Mitra, and Prof. N. R. Navalekar went through parts of my typescript and made some useful suggestions, for which I feel very grateful. I must also thank Mr. G. S. Ramanathan of the Office of the Government Epigraphist for India for the help he rendered me in the correction of proofs when my eye-sight became very defective. I am obliged to Dr. S. S. Patwardhan, Curator of the Central Museum, Nagpur, who supplied casts of the gold coins of the Kalachuris from the cabinet of the Museum, and to Pandit L. P. Pandeya, who placed at my disposal the copper coins of the Kalachuris from the cabinet of the Mahakoshal Historical Society. Mr. N. H. Kulkarni, Artist of the Social Welfare Department, Madhya Pradesh, kindly drew the three maps showing places mentioned in the inscriptions, for which my thanks are due to him. I am also obliged to Mr. L. R. Kulkarni, Mr. V. P. Rode, Mr. J. K. Abhyankar and several other friends for the help they rendered me in various ways. Finally, I thank the Director, Eastern Circle, Survey of India, for the excellent plates which illustrate the records, and the Manager, Allahabad Law Journal Co., Ltd., for the consideration he showed to me while the work was going through the press.

- „ lviii, f. n. 2—The Nāgad and Kāsārē plates have since been edited by Mr. G. H. Khare in Ep. Ind., Vol. XXVIII, pp. 195 ff. He takes Nikumbhallaśakti to mean Allaśakti of Nikumbha, and apparently understands Nikumbha as a family name. The Kāsārē plates show, however, that Nikumbha was another name of Bhānuśakti, the founder of the family. It was used by his descendants as a biruda. Their family name was Sēndraka.
- „ lix, f. n. 2—The facsimile of the Mundakhēḍē plates has since been noticed in a subsequent issue of the same Marathi journal Prabhāta (Vol. II). I have edited the plates in Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIX from that facsimile.
- „ lxiv, line 10—For 740 A. C. read 739 A. C.
- „ lxv, para. 2, line 5—For Anivartakānivartayitṛi read Anivartakanivartayitṛi.
- „ lxxi, para. 2, line 1—One more record of the reign of this Śaṅkaragaṇa has recently been discovered at Muriā, 3½ miles from Bōriā on the Jabalpur-Saugor road. It is fragmentary and records the construction of some meritorious work (kīrti) by one Bhattikaradēva during the reign of the illustrious Śaṅkaragaṇa. I have edited the record with a facsimile in A. B. O. R. I., Vol. XXXV, pp. 20 ff.

- „ lxxxvi, para. 4, line 5—For Sōmēśvara read Sōmasvāmin.
- „ lxxxvi, para. 5, line 1—Recently a fragmentary stone inscription of Śaṅkaragaṇa III has come to notice at Jabalpur. It opens with a verse in praise of Chakrapāṇi (Vishṇu). Line 8 of the inscription states that Śaṅkaragaṇa defeated with ease a Gurjara king. The latter was probably the Pratihāra king Vijayapāla whose Rājōrgaḍh inscription is dated V. 1016 (959 A. C.). The inscription has been edited by me with a facsimile in A. B. O. R. I., Vol. XXXV, pp. 23 ff.
- „ lxxxvii, line 6—Mr. M. Venkataramayya has recently discussed the identification of Vāchaspati, the minister of Kṛishṇa, mentioned in the Bhilsā inscription. J. O. R., Vol. XXII, pp. 56 ff. He identifies this Kṛishṇa with the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III and thinks that his minister Vāchaspati defeated the Chēdi king Lakshmaṇarāja II, as the latter had set at nought the authority of the Rāshtrakūṭas over Malwa and Lāṭa in marching across those territories as far as Sōmanāth Pāṭan. He further says that these raids of Lakshmaṇarāja were undertaken at the instigation of the Gurjara-Pratihāras. This view does not appear to be correct. There is no basis for the supposition that the Rāshtrakūṭas and the Kalachuris, who had been matrimonially connected for several generations, became hostile to each other during the reign of Lakshmaṇarāja II. Far from assisting the Gurjara-Pratihāras by his raids in Gujarat and Saurashtra, Lakshmaṇarāja II is known to have fought with them. His son Śaṅkaragaṇa III continued the hostilities as stated in the preceding note.

- Page lxxxvii, line 8—The Māsēr inscription has since been edited by Mr. M. Venkataramayya in Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIX, pp. 18 ff. He thinks that Narasiṃha of the Śulki family, who fought with the Kalachuris, held sway over the Bilhāri region. He identifies the territory Viḍa-dvādaśa (Viḍa-12) which he held with the village Viḍā donated by the Kalachuri queen Nōhālā to the god Śiva. Kṛishṇarāja at whose command Narasiṃha fought against the Kalachuris was, according to Mr. Venkataramayya, the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III. It is difficult to accept these identifications. Viḍa-12 was probably a fairly large territory. It must have been situated somewhere outside the Kalachuri dominion, and cannot therefore be identified with the small village Viḍā near Bilhāri. Again, the Māsēr inscription shows that Narasiṃha not only fought with the Kalachuris but killed a Kalachuri king; for he is said to have initiated the wives of a Kalachuri king into widowhood. Kṛishṇarāja at whose command he did this is not likely to have been the Rāshtrakūṭa Kṛishṇa III, who is known to have married a Kalachuri princess.

- .. xcvi, para. 2, line 2—Two earlier dates of the reign of Kirtivarman are also known, viz., V. 1132 (1073 A. C.) of the Darbat image inscription (Ind. Hist. Quart., Vol. XXX, pp. 183 ff.) and V. 1147 (1090 A. C.) of the Kālāñjar stone inscription (A. R. A. S. I. for 1936-37, pp. 92 ff.).
- .. ci, lines 3-6—In the Kudlur plates of Mārasimha II the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III is called Narapati (lord of men). So the reference to Narapati in Karṇa's title may signify his victory over the Later Chālukya king Sōmēśvara I—Āhavamalla. As stated before (p. xcvi), an Apabhraṃśa verse mentions Karṇa's defeat of Sōmēśvara I's son Vikramāditya VI.

From the extracts of its Prastāvanā and Bharatavākya, which Dr. Raghavan has favoured me with, it appears that its author was identical with that of the Sanskrit play Tāpasavatsarāja. Like the latter work, this MS. gives his name as Mātrarāja alias Anaṅgaharsha, the son of Narēndravardhana. How Mātrarāja came to be known as Māyurāja is not known. If Rājasēkhara's statement that he belonged to the Kalachuri family is correct, we have two more names in the Kalachuri genealogy, viz., Narēndravardhana and his son Mātrarāja alias Anaṅgaharsha.

- .. 158, f. n. 11—Umura-bhāda in Text-line 33 is probably identical with ummara-bhāda which occurs in the expression उन्मरभेदी न करणीयो राजपुरुषेण in the grant of Vishnushēga, dated V. 649. See P. T. A. I. O. C., Vol. XV, p. 272. It probably means the forcible breaking of a house-door. Umura is probably the same as Marathi umbarā meaning a threshold. The intended meaning seems to be that the royal officers were forbidden to break open the doors of houses for the recovery of stolen property in the resettled village.

INTRODUCTION

THE KALACHURI-CHEDI ERA

ALTHOUGH some of the inscriptions dated in the Kalachuri-Chēdi era were discovered in the early decades of the nineteenth century, it was not suspected till about half a century later that their dates must be referred to an era different from the Vikrama and Saka eras which were then current in different parts of India, or from the Gupta era which had become known from inscriptions. For instance, the date of the Banaras plates of Kaṇa discovered in 1801, which was evidently misread by Captain Wilford, was taken by him to correspond to 192 A. C.<sup>1</sup> The date Samvat 932 of the Kumbhī plates published in 1839<sup>2</sup> was referred by the editors of the grant to the Vikrama Samvat and taken to be equivalent to 876 A. C.<sup>3</sup> The Kaṇhēri plate was discovered by Dr. Bird in 1839, but the earliest attempt to date it approximately was that of Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji, who, on considerations of palæography, referred the inscription to about the sixth century A. C.<sup>4</sup> But he then made no conjecture about the era to which its date 245 should be referred, beyond stating that it could not be the same as that employed by the Kshatrapas, as the characters on their coins are of a much earlier type, and that it could not be the Gupta era in the absence of such expressions as Gupta-kāla, Guptasya kāla, Gupta-nṛpa-rājya-bhukti or Samv. Dr. Burgess, however, in a note on Bhagvanlal's article observed as follows: "From the form of the characters, I incline to think that this inscription may be dated in the Gupta era; the Trikūṭakas, like the Valabhī Sēnāpatis, may have continued to use the Gupta era on assuming independence; or it may have been adopted from Gujarat."<sup>5</sup> The first and approximately correct conjecture about the epoch of the era was made in 1859 by Prof. Fitz-Edward Hall in his article on the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Alhaṇadēvī, dated Samvat 907, and the Tewar inscription of Jayasimhadēva, dated Samvat 928.<sup>6</sup> Finding that Alhaṇadēvī was mentioned in the former inscription as the grand-daughter of Udayāditya, Dr. Hall conjectured that she might have been born about 1100 A. C., as her grandfather Udayāditya, who reigned between Bhōja (circa 1050 A. C.) and Naravarman (1104 A. C.), might have flourished about 1075 A. C. Now, Alhaṇadēvī's sons, Narasimha and Jayasimha, were reigning in the years 907 and 928 respectively, and her great-grandson was a minor<sup>7</sup> in the year 932 of an unspecified era. Dr. Hall, therefore, thought that her birth might have taken place about the year 850 of the era to which the aforementioned dates refer. He thus suggested that the unspecified era used in the Kalachuri records might have commenced about 250 A. C. He had no doubt that the numbers did not refer either to the era of Śālivāhana or to that of Vikramāditya. But he left it an open question whether the era was that of Valabhī with some epoch other than 319 A. C., or some other era till then unknown.

<sup>1</sup> A. R., Vol. IX, p. 108. On this General Cunningham remarked, "I suspect that the date was read by Wilford as 193; and that he afterwards forgot that he had obtained it from the plate, as he states, 'the grant is dated in the second year of his new era, and also of his reign, answering to the Christian year 192'." *C. <sup>7</sup> The Kumbhī plates, dated K. 932 (Appendix, No. 4), record a grant made by Gōsaladēvī, mother of Vijayasimha, not his wife as Hall wrongly stated. Again, the grant was made by Gōsaladēvī during the reign of her son Vijayasimha and with his consent as explicitly stated therein. It was not made by her for her minor son Ajayasimha as Hall thought. Among the persons to whom the royal order is addressed is mentioned Mahākumāra Ajayasimha. He had not ascended the throne then, but there is nothing to show that he was a minor at the time.

In 1878, Cunningham announced in the Introduction (p. vi) to his Reports of the Archaeological Survey of India, Vol. VII, that he had found, among the inscriptions collected by his assistant Beglar in the eastern part of the Central Provinces in 1873-74, two<sup>1</sup> which were actually dated in the Chēdi Saṁvat, and two others<sup>2</sup> in the Kalachuri Saṁvat. He identified the two eras, as 'the princes of Chēdi were of the Kalachuri branch of the Haihaya tribe.' He further stated that he had examined some eight verifiable dates of the era and had found by calculation that the era began in 249 A. C., the year 250 A. C. being the year 1 of the Chēdi Saṁvat.

In his Reports of the Archaeological Survey of India, Vol. IX (A tour in the Central Provinces in 1873-74 and 1874-75), pp. 111 ff., Cunningham reiterated his conclusion that 249 A. C. was the initial point of the Chēdi or Kalachuri Saṁvat, the year 250 being the year 1 of the era, 'the Hindu reckoning being invariably recorded in complete or expired years, in the same way as a person's age is reckoned.' He then gave details of the aforementioned eight dates together with the corresponding week-days obtained by calculation in the following form<sup>3</sup> :—

| Chēdi Saṁvat | A. C. | Month and day              | Calculated Weekday |
|--------------|-------|----------------------------|--------------------|
| 793          | 1042  | Phālguna vadi 9, Monday    | .. Sunday          |
| 896          | 1145  | Māgha sudi 8, Wednesday    | .. *Wednesday      |
| 898          | 1147  | Āśvina sudi 7, Monday      | .. Saturday        |
| 902          | 1151  | Āshāḍha sudi 1, Sunday     | .. *Sunday         |
| 907          | 1156  | Mārgaśiras sudi 11, Sunday | .. *Sunday         |
| 909          | 1158  | Śrāvaṇa sudi 5, Wednesday  | .. Thursday        |
| 928          | 1177  | Śrāvaṇa sudi 6, Sunday     | .. Monday          |
| 928          | 1177  | Māgha vadi 10, Monday      | .. *Monday         |

Cunningham's calculations did not yield quite satisfactory results, as only in four out of the above eight cases<sup>4</sup> the dates were found to be regular. In three other cases, the dates agreed within one day—an amount of deviation which, he thought, was not uncommon in Hindu dates. Cunningham's calculations are not, however, found to be correct in all cases<sup>5</sup>. Even with his epoch, the first date regularly corresponds to Monday, the 18th January, 1042 A. C., and the sixth, for intercalary Śrāvaṇa, to Wednesday, the 2nd July, 1158 A. C.<sup>6</sup> Secondly, in order to get the corresponding year of the Christian era, he added

<sup>5</sup> On p. 86 of the same Volume (IX) Cunningham, says, "By calculation, also, I find that in the year 1041 A. D. or 793 of the Chēdi Saṁvat, according to this reckoning, the 9th day of Phālgun badi was a Monday."

<sup>6</sup> Cunningham seems to have taken the month to be nija Śrāvaṇa; for, the 5th tithi of the bright fortnight of nija Śrāvaṇa commenced 5 h. 20 m. on Thursday.

249 to the Chēdi date in all cases, whether the latter fell in Ashāḍha or in Phālguna, as if the Chēdi year completely coincided with the Christian year. Thirdly, he took all dates without exception to be in expired years. As regards the general correctness of Cunningham's epoch, however, there was no doubt; for, the dates he assigned to the Kalachuri kings on its basis were generally corroborated by the synchronisms known from the inscriptions of the Kalachuri, Rāshtrakūṭa, Chālukya, Paramāra and Pratihāra dynasties.<sup>1</sup> In the Introduction (pp. vii-viii) to the same volume, Cunningham adduced further evidence to support his conclusion about the epoch of the era. He pointed out that Abū Rihān,<sup>2</sup> writing about 1030-31 A. C., referred to Gāngēya as a contemporary king of Ḍāhala and that from his Vikramāṅkacharita Bilhaṇa seemed to have resided at the court of Rājā Karṇa of Ḍāhala from 1070 A. C. to 1075 A. C. These dates, he showed, agreed with the approximate periods which he had assigned to the Kalachuri kings by the genealogical reckoning of his chronology.

In the meanwhile, some inscriptions of the Gurjara dynasty were discovered in Western India. The dates Samvat 380 and 385 of two of them, viz., the two sets of Kairā plates of Dadda II,<sup>3</sup> were at first referred to the Vikrama era; but after the discovery of a third grant, viz., the Ilaḷ plates of Dadda-Prasāntarāga<sup>4</sup>, which was explicitly dated in the year 417 of the Saka era, the dates of the aforementioned two Kairā grants and also the date 486 of the odd Kāvī plate<sup>5</sup> of Jayabhāṭa subsequently discovered, in all of which the era was unspecified, were referred to the Saka era.

In 1884, Dr. Bhagvanlal Indraji published the Navsāri grant of Jayabhāṭa (III),<sup>6</sup> dated Monday or Tuesday, the full-moon day of Māgha, Samvat 456, on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon. This grant mentions in connection with Dadda, the great-grandfather of the donor Jayabhāṭa, that he protected a prince of Valabhī against the Emperor (Paramēśvara) Śrī-Harshadēva. Dr. Bhagvanlal naturally identified the latter with Harshavardhana of Thānēśvar and Kanauj, who ruled from 606 A. C. to 648 A. C. As Dadda, the first prince mentioned in the Navsāri grant, was thus proved to have flourished in the first half of the seventh century A. C., it was clear that the date 456 of the Navsāri grant of that Dadda's great-grandson Jayabhāṭa could not be referred to the Saka era. Dr. Bhagvanlal had again obtained four other grants of the Chālukya dynasty discovered in Gujarat, two of which, made by Sryāśraya-Silāditya, were found to be dated in Samvat 421 and 423, the third, made by Maṅgalarāja, in Saka 653, and the fourth, by Pulakēśivallabha Janāśraya, in Samvat 490. From the genealogical portions of these grants it was clear that all these princes were sons of Jayasīmhavarman, who was himself a son of Pulakēśin II, the famous king of the Early Chālukya Dynasty. From these data Dr. Bhagvanlal concluded that the dates 456 and 486 of the Gurjara grants and 421, 443 and 490 of the Chālukya grants referred to an era, different from the Saka era, which was used in Gujarat in the seventh and eighth centuries A. C. He conjecturally fixed 244-45 A. C. as the initial year and 245-46 A. C. as the year 1 of that era, and identified it with 'the era of the Trikūṭakas, of which the two hundred and forty-fifth year is mentioned in Dr. Bird's Kaṇhēri plate.'<sup>1</sup>

The nearness of the epoch 244-45 A. C. suggested by Bhagvanlal to the epoch of the Chēdi era (249 A. C.) led General Cunningham to suspect that the two eras might be identical. Calculating on this supposition, he found that the date of the Navsāri grant, 'Monday or Tuesday, the 15th day of the bright fortnight of Māgha of Samvat 456, on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon,' corresponded to the 2nd February 706 A. C., which was a Tuesday and on which occurred an eclipse of the moon. He also found that the date of the Kāvī plate 'Sunday, the 10th day of the bright fortnight of the month Ashāḍha of Samvat 486' regularly corresponded to Sunday, the 24th June 736 A. C.<sup>2</sup> In both these cases the corresponding Christian year was obtained by adding 250 to the (Chēdi) year showing clearly that the epoch of the Chēdi era was not 249 A. C., but 249-50 A. C.

In 1884, in his article on the Pārḍi plates of Dahrasēna, published in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society (Vol. XVI, p. 346), Dr. Bhagvanlal Indrajī accepted the view that the era used by the Gurjaras and the Chālukyas of Gujarat commenced in 249 A. C., but he pointed out that it was distinctly called the era of the Traikūṭakas in Dr. Bird's Kaṇhēri plate. He referred the date 207 of the Pārḍi plates of the Traikūṭaka king Dahrasēna to the same era and observed that the grant afforded indisputable corroboration of the existence of the Traikūṭaka dynasty which he had deduced from Dr. Bird's plate.

In the same year, Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar published his Early History of the Deccan (first ed.), in which he questioned the correctness of Dr. Bhagvanlal's view that the date 421 of Sryāśraya Silāditya's grant is in an era with 250 A. C. as its initial date, on the ground that the interval between the two brothers—Maṅgalarāja and Sryāśraya—becomes 60 years, which unquestionably is too long.<sup>3</sup> He further suggested that the date was in the Gupta era 'which was one of those in ordinary use in Gujarat.'

In 1886, Dr. Bhagvanlal contributed a paper entitled 'Two New Grants of the Chālukya Dynasty' to the International Oriental Congress, Vienna, in which he pointed out that Dr. Bhandarkar's view—that the grants of the Gujarat Chālukyas are dated in the Gupta era—would lead to the conclusion that Sryāśraya reigned as Ymvarāja from 10 to 32 years later than his younger brother Maṅgalarāja who was a 'king'—which was clearly impossible. He further made some ingenious conjectures about the circumstances which led to the foundation of the era. The founder of the era, according to him, was king Iśvaradatta who interrupted the rule of the Western Kshatrapas and whose coins, dated in the first and second years of his reign, show that he assumed the titles Rājan and Kshatrapa. "Other kings", he proceeded to state, "bearing names which end in datta, have left their records in the caves of Nasik, and state that they are Ābhīras by caste. This circumstance permits us to infer that they belong to the Ābhīra dynasty which, probably coming by sea from Sindh, conquered the western coast and made Trikūṭa its capital. Iśvaradatta whom I consider to belong to it probably attacked and obtained a victory over the Kshatrapas. After he had consolidated his power, he issued his own coins, copying the Kshatrapa currency of the district. His coins particularly resemble those of the Kshatrapa Vīradāman and his brother Vijayasēna. The end of the reign of the latter falls, as the coins show, in the year 170 of the Kshatrapa era. If we take this to be the Śaka era, the time of Īśvaradatta's conquest will fall just about the same time as the foundation of the Traikūṭaka or Kalachuri era. This agreement induces me to consider Īśvardatta as its founder. It seems further that the reign of the Traikūṭakas did not last long, as Viradāman's son Rudrasēna appears to have regained power and to have driven his foe out of the country. The Traikūṭakas then probably retired to the Central Provinces and there assumed the name Haihaya and Kalachuri. Afterwards the kings of this dynasty appear to have taken possession of their former capital Trikūṭa at the time of the final destruction of the Kshattrapa power. Dahrasēna must have ascended the throne just about this time which was the year 207+170 or 377 of the Saka era."<sup>1</sup>

Till 1887, scholars were engaged in pointing out in a general way the epoch of the Chēdi or Traikūṭaka era. A definite suggestion about the month and the tithi of its actual commencement was first made by Prof. Kielhorn,<sup>2</sup> who, in his letters published in the Academy of December 10 and 24, 1887, and January 14, 1888,<sup>3</sup> announced that his calculations of numerous week-days of later Chēdi inscriptions showed that the Chēdi era began not in 249, but in 248 A. C. Later on, in an article published in the Nachrichten der Ges. d. Wissenschaften, Göttingen (1888), pp. 31-41 and another in the Indian Antiquary (Vol. XVII, pp. 215 ff.) of August 1888, Dr. Kielhorn showed, from an examination of twelve dates of the Kalachuris and their feudatories and two of the Gurjaras, that the only equation which yields correct week-days for those Chēdi inscriptions in which the week-day is mentioned is Chēdi Saṃvat 0=248-49 A. C. and Chēdi Saṃvat 1=249-50 A. C., and that, if we wish to work out the dates by a uniform process, we must take the Chēdi year to commence with the month Bhādrapada, and must, accordingly, start from July 28, 249 A. C.=Bhādrapada śu. di. 1 of the northern Vikrama year 307 current, as the first day of the first current year of the Chēdi era. In a note Kielhorn remarked that a year beginning with the month Āśvina would suit the dates examined by him as well as one beginning with Bhādrapada, and if the dates were to be worked out by a uniform process, the former would appear to be even more suitable than the latter. He preferred, however, the Bhādrapadādi year because 'Albērūnī does mention a year beginning with Bhādrapada'.<sup>4</sup> As regards the arrangement of the fortnights, Kielhorn showed from three dates that it was the puṇimānta one in which the dark half of a month precedes the bright half.

Kielhorn's calculations, made on the basis of the epoch of 248-49 A. C., showed that of the fourteen dates examined by him, in none of which the year is specified either as current or as expired, eleven were found recorded in current years, two in expired years and one in a year which may be taken as current if the Chēdi year was Āśvinādi, and expired if it was Bhādrapadādi.

This proportion of the current and expired years of the Chēdi era was, however, the reverse of what Kielhorn himself found in the case of other eras such as the Vikrama, Saka and Nēwār eras. It was pointed out by Dr. Bhandarkar<sup>5</sup> and others in connection with the question of the epoch of the Gupta-Valabhī era that the Hindu's usual, though not invariable, way of expressing a date was not 'in the year so and so', but 'after so many years had elapsed since such and such an event had taken place'. The case of the Chēdi era, which seemed to be an exception to the general rule, was cited by Dr. Fleet<sup>1</sup> in support of his view that the years of the Gupta era which are not qualified either as current or as expired should be taken as current. This controversy about the general custom of the Hindus in dating their records during the middle ages led Kielhorn to revise his conclusions about the epoch of the Chēdi era. In his article 'Die Epoche der Cedi Aera' in the Festgruss an Roth and in another on the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Alhaṇadēvi in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, both of which were published in 1893,<sup>2</sup> Kielhorn expressed his opinion that in conformity with the common usage observed in the case of other eras, the epoch of the Chēdi era should be fixed in such a way that all or at least a great majority of the available verifiable dates would be in expired years. He, therefore, proposed 247-48 A. C. as the epoch of the era. As regards the beginning of the year, he drew attention to the following remark in Colebrooke's letter written at Nagpur on the 30th October, 1799— "The new year begins here with the light fortnight of Āśvina, but opening in the midst of Durgā's festival, New Year's Day is celebrated on the 10th lunar day." Kielhorn thought that the Āśvinādi year which was current down to Colebrooke's time in a part of the country previously included in the Chēdi kingdom might be reminiscent of the Chēdi year, and as such a year suited all the twelve Chēdi dates known till then, he fixed the 5th September (Āśvina śu. di. 1) 248 A. C. as the first day of the first current year, and the 26th August (Āśvina śu. di. 1) 249 A. C. as the first day of the first expired year of the Chēdi era. He next showed that all the twelve verifiable dates of the Later Kalachuris which were known till then were, without exception, in expired years.<sup>3</sup> The two dates of the Navsārī and Kāvī plates of Jayabhāṭa III, however, presented difficulties which Kielhorn acknowledged in the foot-notes to his List of Northern Inscriptions, published in 1898-99 as an Appendix to the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. V.<sup>4</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Sh. B. Dikshit had earlier come to the conclusion that nearly all of the ten Kalachuri or Chēdi dates, given by General Cunningham, would work out correctly with the epoch of 248-49 A.C., but his results were not published for the reasons stated by Fleet in the Introduction to C. I. I., Vol. III, p. 9 (published in 1888). The dates of the grants of the Uchchakalpa kings, which Fleet referred to the Kalachuri era (ibid., introduction, pp. 8 ff.), are probably recorded in the Gupta era. See my article on the subject in Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, pp. 171 ff.

Three more Chēdi dates containing sufficient data for verification, which were discovered subsequently, were calculated by Kielhorn before his death, viz., (1) the Sārnāth fragmentary Buddhist stone inscription of the time of Karṇa, dated 'samva[tsarē] 8]10 Asvina (Āśvina) sudī 15 Ravau (corresponding, for the expired Kalachuri year 810, to Sunday the 4th October 1058 A. C.<sup>5</sup>), (2) Tahankāpār (first plate) of Pamparāja, dated Samvata(t) 965, Bhādrapadē vadi 10 Mṛiga-ri(ri)kshē So[ma]-dinē (corresponding, for the current year 965, to Monday, the 12th August 1213 A. C.<sup>6</sup>) and (3) Tahankāpār (second plate) of Pamparāja dated Samvat 966 . . . . Īsva(śva)ra-samvatsarē Kārti(tti)ka-māsē Chitrā-ri(ri)kshē Ravi-dinē Sūry-ōpa-rāgē (corresponding, for the expired Chēdi year 966, to Sunday, the 5th October 1214 A. C.<sup>7</sup>). Besides, he found it necessary to change his reading and the corresponding Christian date in the case of one of the previously known twelve Chēdi dates, viz. (4) that of the Shēorinārāyaṇ image inscription, which he now read as Kalachuri-samvatsarē 1189811 Asvina-sudī 7 Sōma-dinē from a photograph supplied by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar, and which he found by calculation to correspond, for the current Chēdi year 898, to Monday, the 24th September 1145 A. C.<sup>8</sup>

Kielhorn's final view that the epoch of the Chēdi era is 247-48 A. C. was confirmed by these new dates; for, while two of them (viz., 1 and 3) might have been taken as current years with the epoch of 248-49 A. C., the other two (viz., 2 and 4) would have appeared irregular according to that epoch. The latter dates again showed that 'Kalachuri years, occasionally and exceptionally, are quoted as current years'.

Since 1893, scholars have generally accepted Kielhorn's conclusion that the Chēdi era commenced on Āśvina śu. di. 1 (corresponding to the 5th September) in 248 A. C. Mr. Sh. B. Dikshit alone, differing from Kielhorn, suggested that the Chēdi year might have commenced on the first tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Āśvina.<sup>1</sup>

Pandit Bhagvanlal's theory—that the Chēdi era owed its origin to the dynasty of the Traikūṭakas and was actually founded by a king named Īśvaradatta whom the Pandit considered to be an Ābhīra, and who, as shown by his coins, reigned sometime about 248-49 A. C. in Saurashtra—held the field for a long time. But in 1905, in his article 'Trikuṭa and the so-called Kalachuri or Chēdi era',<sup>2</sup> Dr. Fleet pointed out that all the early dates of the era came from Gujarat and the Thana District in Bombay and none from Saurashtra and that there was nothing to stamp the era as the Traikūṭaka era; for, the expression in Dr. Bird's Kaṇhēri plate on which Pandit Bhagvanlal relied might, in accordance with the early Hindu method of expressing dates, just as well mean 'during the augmenting sovereignty of the Traikūṭakas and in the year 245 of (an unspecified era).' Dr. Fleet proposed to identify the founder of the era with the Ābhīra Īśvarasēna (not to be confused with, or identified with, the Īśvaradatta mentioned above) or with his father, the Ābhīra Sivadatta, if he did reign.

In 1908, in his Catalogue of the Coins of the Andhra Dynasty, the Western Kshatrapas, the Traikūṭaka Dynasty, etc., Prof. Rapson considered the question of the Traikūṭaka era in connection with the coins of the Western Kshatrapas and the Traikūṭakas. He pointed out that the dates assigned by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī to the coins of Īśvaradatta rested on a mistaken observation, that the dates from 171 to 176 were quite continuous on the coins of the Western Kshatrapas, and that the evidence of coins and coin-legends showed that the only interval to which the coins of Īśvaradatta could be assigned was that between 158, the last recorded date of Mahākshatrapa Dāmasēna, and 161, the year in which his son Yaśōdāman I appears as Mahākshatrapa, i.e., between 236 and 239 A. C.<sup>3</sup> He further drew attention to the fact that the Ābhīra Sivadatta bears no royal title in the Nāsik inscription of his son Īśvarasēna, which seems to indicate that the latter was the founder of the dynasty and presumably preceded Īśvaradatta. He thus placed both Īśvarasēna and Īśvaradatta before 249 A. C. As regards the circumstances which led to the foundation of the era, he observed, "It is of course quite possible that the establishment of the era may mark the consolidation of the Ābhīra kingdom during the reign of one of their successors. There can be no doubt that the political conditions which admitted of the growth of a strong power in this part of India were due to the decline and fall of the Andhra Empire; but the foundation of an era must be held to denote the successful establishment of the new power rather than its first beginnings or the downfall of the Andhras."<sup>4</sup>

In 1911, a large hoard of Kshatrapa coins was discovered at Sarvāṇīā in the former Bānswārā State of Rajputana. In his detailed account of it published in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India for 1913-14, pp. 227 ff., Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar examined

Prof. Rapson's view that Īśvaradatta flourished in the gap between the years 158 and 161. He pointed out that the Sarvāṇiā hoard contained a coin of Yaśōdāman dated in the year 160. This date lessens the gap between Yaśōdāman and his predecessor by one year. "It is still not impossible", wrote Dr. Bhandarkar, "to adjust the two years of Īśvaradatta's reign even in this lessened gap, viz., between 158 and 160, but just as the gap between 171 and 176, which was imagined by Bhagvanlal, no longer exists, a day will, no doubt, come when with the further find of coins the gap between 158 and 160, now existing, will also be completely filled."<sup>1</sup> Dr. Bhandarkar placed the rise of Īśvaradatta in the period 110-112 (188-190 A. C.) when the Mahākshatrapa Rudrasimha suffered a diminution of power and was reduced to the rank of Kshatrapa. He pointed out that the Ābhīras had acquired great predominance about this time; for, the Nāsik inscription of the Ābhīra Īśvarasēna can, on the evidence of palaeography, be referred to about the year 100 and the Gunda inscription<sup>2</sup> shows that in the year 103 and during the regime as Kshatrapa of Rudrasimha himself the post of Sēnāpati or Commander-in-Chief was held by an Ābhīra called Rudrabhūti.

In 1920, in an article entitled 'the Kushāṇa Chronology' published in the Journal of the Department of Letters (Calcutta University), Vol. I, pp. 65 ff., Dr. R. C. Majumdar, after detailed examination of the evidence afforded by the Chinese works Hou Han Chou of Fan-Ye and Wei-lie of Yu Houan, came to the conclusion that the dates ranging from 72 to 136, found in the inscriptions of the Northern Satraps, Gondophares, Kujula Kadphises and Wema Kadphises, must be referred to the Saka era beginning in 78 A. C. Kanishka who flourished after Wema Kadphises must, therefore, be placed after 214 A. C. Following the principle that 'we should, whenever practicable, avoid the assumption of a brand-new era for the existence of which there is no evidence at all', Dr. Majumdar put forward the view that Kanishka founded the so-called Kalachuri era of 248-49 A. C. He referred to Prof. Rapson's conclusion based on a critical examination of Kshatrapa coinage that from the year 167 or 168 (245-46 A. C.) the Western Kshatrapas had to face troublous times and that their dominions were probably subject to some foreign invasion. Dr. Majumdar attributed this to the establishment, by the Kushāṇa Emperor, of a rival dynasty in the south to hold in check the power of the Western Kshatrapas, and suggested that this ultimately became instrumental in preserving the era of the Kushāṇas long after it had become extinct in the province of its origin.

The main objection to Dr. Majumdar's theory is that there is no evidence of the establishment, by the Kushāṇas, of such a rival dynasty in the south, which curtailed the power of the Western Kshatrapas. Again, Prof. Jouveau-Dubreuil has pointed out that the reign of Vāsudēva, the last of the Kushāṇas, came to an end 100 years after the beginning of the reign of Kanishka. Numerous inscriptions prove that Vāsudēva reigned at Mathurā. It is certain that this country, over which extended the empire of Vāsudēva, was occupied about 350 A. C. by the Yaudhēyas and the Nāgas, and it is probable that they reigned in this place nearly one century before they were subjugated by Samudragupta. The capitals of the Nāgas were Mathurā, Kāntipura and Padmāvati (or Pawāyā, at the confluence of the Sindhu and the Pārā).<sup>3</sup> The finds of Nāga coins as well as scattered references in Sanskrit literature indicate that the Nāgas, not the Kushāṇas, were powerful in Central India before the rise of the Guptas.<sup>4</sup>

In 1928, in his article entitled 'The Kalachuris of Tripuri', published in the Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Vol. IX, pp. 281 ff., Rai Bahadur Dr. Hiralal tried to revive Pandit Bhagvanlal's theory that the era owed its origin to the dynasty of the Traikūṭakas, by identifying the Traikūṭakas with the Kalachuris. He suggested that Trikūṭa from which the dynasty derived its name was the Vindhya mountain which was so called because of its three peaks—Āmrakūṭa or Amarakāṇṭak, the Sālakūṭa or Sālēṭekri in the Balaghat District and the Madhukūṭa or Mōhtur in the Chhindwara district. But the fact that all the early dates of the era are found in Western India—in Southern Gujarat and Western Maharashtra—is fatal to Dr. Hiralal's theory. Besides, there is no evidence to show that the Vindhya mountain was called Trikūṭa in ancient times. On the other hand, Kālidāsa clearly indicates in the Raghuvamśa that the mountain is situated in the Aparānta or North Konkan,<sup>1</sup> and this is corroborated by the discovery of the Anjaneri plates of Pṛithivīchandra Bhōgaśakti of the (Chēdi) year 461, in which a Trikūṭa visbaya is mentioned as situated in the kingdom of Purī-Koṅkaṇa (i. e., North Konkan).<sup>2</sup>

In 1933, in his History of India, 150 A. D. to 350 A. D., Dr. K. P. Jayaswal attempted to prove that the Chēdi era was started by the Vākāṭakas. "The Purāṇas," he observed, "after the fall of the Sātavāhanas register the rise of Vindhyaśakti as the next great power or as the imperial power succeeding the Sātavāhanas. An era will be naturally counted from the rise of a new power, whether at once or subsequently . . . . Then the second fact to take note of in this connection is that Pravarasēna I became an Emperor and the previous Emperors, i. e., the Kushāṇas, had in fact an imperial era. To start an era had become a chief symbol of imperial position."<sup>3</sup> Jayaswal, therefore, concluded that Pravarasēna I of the Vākāṭaka dynasty, who became Emperor, must have started the era, dating it from the coronation of his father. He read the dates on two coins which he ascribed to Pravarasēna I and Rudrasēna I as 76 and 100 respectively, and referred these dates together with the date 52 of the Giñjā inscription of Mahārāja Śrī-Bhīmasēna to the Chēdi era dating from the rise of the Vākāṭaka power. But Jayaswal's readings of the legends and figures on these coins are extremely doubtful.<sup>4</sup> Besides, his theory that the Chēdi era was really founded by the Vākāṭakas is disproved by the fact that the Vākāṭakas themselves never used it, but dated all their records in regnal years.<sup>5</sup>

In 1936, while editing the Kōsam stone inscription of Mahārāja Bhīmavarman, dated in the year 130, in the Indian Culture, Vol. III, pp. 177 ff., Mr. A. Ghosh drew attention to certain palaeographical peculiarities noticed in the record, such as the round and narrow-headed ś, the unlooped sh and s, and the undeveloped curves representing medial i—peculiarities which are known to be characteristic of Kushāṇa rather than Gupta inscriptions. He, therefore, referred the date 130 of that inscription to the Chēdi era. Subsequently, some more inscriptions of Praushthasriya, Bhadrāmagha, Vaiśravaṇa and Bhīmavarman were found at Kōsam and Bāndhōgarh, and some of them were published in the Epigraphia Indica and elsewhere.<sup>6</sup> These records exhibited the same palaeographic peculiarities which indicated that they belonged to the period of transition between the Kushāṇa and the Gupta age. The system of dating and the mixed nature of the language used in them were also believed to point to the same conclusion. Their dates also were, therefore, referred by some scholars to the Chēdi era. The fact that some of these records came from that part of the country which in ancient times was known as Chēdi lent colour to this view.

It was, therefore, believed that these records of the Magha kings found at Giñjā, Kōsam and Bāndhōgarh supplied the early dates of the Chēdi era which had been missing till then.

This view was criticised by the present writer in an article entitled 'Dates of some Early Kings of Kauśāmbī' which, though written as early as 1941, was, on account of the Second Great War and other reasons, not published till 1952.<sup>1</sup> In this article it was pointed out that if the dates of the Magha records are referred to the Chēdi era, Bhadramagha, Vaiśravaṇa and Bhīmavarman become contemporaries of the Gupta Emperors Chandragupta I, Samudragupta and Chandragupta II. If these rulers were ruling at Kauśāmbī, they must have acknowledged the suzerainty of the Guptas. But, strange as it may seem, none of them mentions any Gupta overlord. Besides, they issued coins in their own names, indicating their independence.<sup>2</sup> They must, therefore, have flourished before the rise of the Guptas. The dates of their records have consequently to be referred to the era of Kanishka. As for the palæographic peculiarities noticed in these records, it was pointed out that all of them can be traced in several records of the Kushāṇa age.

Till 1937, Dr. Kielhorn's view that the Chēdi year commenced on Āśvina śu. di. 1 was generally accepted. In an article entitled 'The Epoch of the Kalachuri-Chēdi Era', which the present writer read at the ninth session of the All-India Oriental Conference held at Trivandrum in 1937, he examined thirteen later dates of the era discovered since Kielhorn's time and showed that, though they verified the epoch of 247-48 A. C. fixed by Kielhorn, they clearly showed that the Chēdi year could not have commenced in Āśvina. It must have begun on some day between Āśvina śu. di. 15 and Phālguna va. di. 7. And since we do not know of any Hindu year beginning in any of the months from Mārgaśirsha to Phālguna, it appeared probable that, like the Southern Vikrama year, the Chēdi year also commenced on Kārttika śu. di. 1. As regards Colebrooke's statement on which Kielhorn relied for his view that the Chēdi year commenced on Āśvina śu. di. 1, it was pointed out that the statement in question referred to the festival of Durgā which is, to this day, celebrated with great éclat not only in Madhya Pradesh but in other parts of India also. Colebrooke was clearly mistaken when he thought that the festival marked the beginning of the new year. Besides, the Chēdi year could not have been current in Nagpur as that part of the country was, except in very early times, not included in the kingdom of the Kalachuris.<sup>3</sup>

In 1944, the present writer showed from an examination of the so-called Indore plates of the Mahārājas Svāmidāsa and Bhuluṇḍa that they originally belonged to Khandesh and that their dates and also the date 117 of the Sirpur plate of Mahārāja Rudradāsa should be referred to the era founded by the Ābhīra king Iśvarasēna. These princes of Khandesh explicitly mention their own feudatory status in their grants. They must, therefore, have owned the suzerainty of the contemporary Ābhīra kings ruling over Northern Maharashtra.<sup>4</sup>

In 1945, the present writer further showed that the date 167 of the Barwāni plate of Mahārāja Subandhu also must be referred to the same reckoning.<sup>5</sup>

In 1946, the present writer, again, showed that the date of the Kānākherā stone inscription of the Śaka Śrīdharavarman, which he read as 102, also refers to the so-called Kalachuri-Chēdi era.<sup>6</sup>

In 1949, in an article entitled 'New Light on the Epoch of the Kalachuri Era' published in the Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. XXV, pp. 81 ff., the present writer showed that the date 322 of the Nagardhan plates of Svāmīrāja, which had been discovered in the preceding year, probably referred to the Kalachuri era, and that the details of the date recorded in the grant indicated a new epoch of the era, viz., 250-51 A. C.<sup>1</sup>

We have so far seen how our knowledge about the epoch of the Kalachuri-Chēdi era has advanced step by step since 1859 when Dr. Fitz-Edward Hall first made his ingenious conjecture on the subject. We shall next examine such dates of the era as furnish details for computation in order to determine the exact epoch of the era.

Leaving aside the date of the Nagardhan plates which appears exceptional, we find that the dates of the Kalachuri era fall into two groups, viz.—(1) the earlier ones down to the year 490 which come from Gujarat and Maharashtra where, as shown below, the era had its origin, and (2) the later ones from the year 722 to the year 969 which come from Vindhya Pradesh, Uttar Pradesh and Madhya Pradesh including Chhattisgarh, where the era was introduced with the extension of the Kalachuri power. It has already been pointed out by Kielhorn<sup>2</sup> that the same epoch does not suit these two groups of dates. In regard to the first, the only equation which yields satisfactory results is Kalachuri-Samvat 0=248-49 A. C., while in regard to the second, the equation is Kalachuri-Samvat 0=247-48 A. C. In both the periods the Kalachuri year commenced on Kārttika śu. di. 1, but in the earlier period the months were generally amānta, while in the later one they were generally pūrṇimānta.

EARLY DATES OF THE KALACHURI ERA

As the epoch for these dates is 248-49 A. C., the first day of the first current year of that era is the amānta Kārttikā śu. di. 1 (25th September) in 249 A. C. (corresponding to the expired Saka year 171). Therefore, to convert a current Kalachuri year into an expired Saka year we have to add 170 when the date falls in any of the months from Kārttika to Phālguna, and 171 in all other cases. Similarly to convert an expired Kalachuri year into an expired Saka year we have to add 171 and 172 respectively in the same circumstances.

Among early dates of the era, there are only five which contain the details necessary for computation. Three of these are in expired years, and the remaining two, in current ones, as shown below :—

Dates in Expired Years

1. Navsāri plates of Jayabhaṭa III (No. 21, p. 82)—Lines 30-31—Māgha-suddha-pañchadaśyām candra-ōparāgē, 'on the 15th tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha, on the occasion of a lunar eclipse.' Lines 41-42 give the year 456 (expressed in both words and numerical symbols). The plates mentioned also in l. 43 the tithi (now completely lost) and the week-day (which, judging from the traces left, was either Monday or Tuesday) on which the grant was recorded. Assuming that the grant was recorded on the same day on which it was made, i. e., Māgha śu. di. 15, Monday or Tuesday, we find that according to the epoch of 248-49 A. C., the corresponding Christian date for the expired year 456 (i. e., for the expired Saka year 456+171=627) is Tuesday, the 2nd February 706 A. C. On that day, the aforementioned tithi ended 16 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise, and there was a lunar eclipse as stated in the grant.

If the year 456 is applied as current, the tithi falls on the 14th January 705 A. C., which was a Wednesday (not Monday or Tuesday as required). Besides, there was no lunar eclipse on that day. In 704 A. C. also there was no lunar eclipse on the stated tithi. This shows that the epoch 247-48 A. C. which suits later dates of the era is wholly inapplicable in this case.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> The same epoch appears to be applicable in the case of the date of the Ellora plates of Dantidurga, which should be read as Sam. 465, not as Sam. 665, J. B. B. R. A. S. (N. S.), Vol. XXVI, pp. 163 ff.

2. Anjanēri plates of Jayabhāṭa III (No. 22, p. 90)—Line 30—Āsvayuja-babul-aikādaśyāni Tulā-saṅkrāntē ravau, 'on the eleventh tithi of the dark fortnight of Āśvina, on the occasion of the sun's entering into the Tulā-rāśi (the zodiacal sign of Libra).' Line 39 gives the same tithi together with the year 460 (expressed in numerical symbols). The occurrence of the Tulā-saṅkrānti in the dark fortnight of Āśvina shows that the month was amānta. According to the epoch of 248-49 A. C. with the year commencing on the amānta Kārttika śu. di. 1, the date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 460 (i. e., for the expired Saka year  $460 + 172 = 632$ ), to Tuesday, the 23rd September 710 A. C. On that day the 11th tithi of the dark fortnight of Āśvina commenced 45 m. after mean sunrise, and ended 22 h. 45. m. after mean sunrise on the same day. Like the tithi of the Kāvī plate of K. 486 (No. 23) this was, therefore, a kṣhaya-tithi; but as the Tulā-saṅkrānti occurred 15 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on that day while the 11th tithi of the dark fortnight of Āśvina was current, it is coupled with the latter.

If the year is applied as current, the Tulā-saṅkrānti falls on Āśvina pūrṇimā (the 23rd September 709 A. C.), not on Āśvina va. di. 11 as required. In 708 A. C. also, the Tulā-saṅkrānti did not occur on the stated tithi. This shows that the other epoch of 247-48 A. C. is wholly inapplicable in this case also.

3. Kāvī plate of Jayabhāṭa IV (No. 23, p. 96)—Lines 15-16—Aśhāḍha-śuddha-daśamyāni Karkkaṭaka-rāśau saṅkrāntē ravau, 'on the tenth tithi of the bright half of Āśhāḍha on the occasion of the sun's entering into the zodiacal sign of Karkkaṭaka.' Lines 24 and 25 give the year 486, Āśhāḍha śu. 12,<sup>2</sup> Sunday, as the date of the recording of the grant. According to the epoch of 248-49 A. C., the Karkkaṭa-saṅkrānti in the expired year 486 (i. e., in the expired Saka year  $486 + 172 = 658$ ) occurred about 8 h. after mean sunrise on the 22nd June 736 A. C. The tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āśhāḍha commenced 21 m. after mean sunrise of the 22nd June and ended 1 h. 21 m. before mean sunrise of the following day. It was, therefore, a kṣhaya-tithi; but as the Karkkaṭa-saṅkrānti took place during the tenth tithi, it is coupled with it. Again the 12th tithi of the bright fortnight of the same lunar month fell on Sunday (the 24th June 736 A. C.) as required. The date is thus perfectly regular.

In the current year 486, on the other hand, the saṅkrānti occurred on Thursday, the 23rd June 735 A. C., which was the 13th of the dark fortnight of Āśhāḍha (not the 10th of the bright fortnight of that month as required).

In 734 A. C. also, the saṅkrānti did not occur on Āśhāḍha śu. di. 10. This shows that the other epoch of 247-48 A. C. is wholly inapplicable in this case too.

Dates in Current Years

4. Kāsārē plates of Allāśakti (No. 25, p. 110)—Lines 31-33—Samī 404, Āśhāḍha ba Ā(A)māvāsya[ni] sūrya-grah-ōparāgē, 'in the year 404, on the new-moon day of the dark fortnight of Āśhāḍha, on the occasion of a solar eclipse'. According to the epoch of 248-49 A. C., the amāvāsya of the pūrṇimānta Āśhāḍha in the current year 404 (i. e., in the expired Saka year  $404 + 171 = 575$ ) fell on the 1st June 653 A. C., on which day there was a solar eclipse as stated in the plates. There was no solar eclipse on the amānta Āśhāḍha of this year.

<sup>1</sup> According to this epoch of 247-48 A. C., the date should fall in 704 A. C. if the year 456 was a current year, and in 705 A. C. if it was an expired one.

If the year is applied as expired, the date would fall in 654 A. C., but there was no solar eclipse on the pūrṇimānta or amānta Āshāḍha of that year.

According to the other epoch of 247-48 A. C., the tithi should fall in 652 A. C. or 653 A. C., according as the year 404 was current or expired. In 652 A. C. there was no solar eclipse at all. In 653 A. C., of course, the eclipse did occur on the stated tithi as shown above and so the date may be said to be in an expired year according to that epoch. But if we have to explain all early dates according to a uniform process, this date will have to be regarded as recorded in a current year according to the epoch of 248-49 A. C. rather than in an expired year according to the epoch of 247-48 A. C.

5. Nasik plates of Dharāśraya-Jayasīrha (No. 28, p. 127)—L. 19—Chaitra-māsa-śuddha-daśamyām Viśuvā (Viśuvā), 'on the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Chaitra, on the occasion of the vernal equinox.' Line 28 gives the date Sam 436 Chai su 10, i. e., the 10th tithi of the bright fortnight of Chaitra in the year 436. According to the epoch of 248-49 A. C., the corresponding Christian date for the current year 436 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $436+171=607$ ) is the 21st March 685 A. C. On that day the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Chaitra ended 12 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise. The Vishuva or Mēsha-saṅkrānti had occurred 5 h. 15 m. after mean sunrise on the previous day. The saṅkrānti did not thus take place during the 10th tithi, but as the puṇya-kāla of the Mēsha-saṅkrānti extends to as many as 15 ghaṭikās before and after the saṅkrānti, the tithi seems to be coupled with the saṅkrānti.

If the year is applied as expired, the tithi would fall on the 10th March 686 A. C., but the Mēsha-saṅkrānti took place 10 days later, on the 20th March 686 A. C.

According to the other epoch of 247-48 A. C., the date would be expected to fall in 684 A. C. if the year 436 was current, and in 685 A. C. if it was expired. But in 684 A. C. the tithi fell on the 3rd March, while the Mēsha-saṅkrānti occurred 16 days later on the 19th March. In 685 A. C. the saṅkrānti occurred on the same day as the mentioned tithi, but in view of the other early dates for which the epoch of 247-48 A. C. appears wholly inapplicable, it seems better to take this date as recorded in a current year according to the epoch of 248-49 A. C.

A careful examination of these five early dates of the Kalachuri era will show that—

- (1) All these dates can be shown to be regular according to the epoch of 248-49 A. C.; for, though the dates 4 and 5 can also be explained as dates in expired years according to the epoch of 247-48 A. C., that epoch will not at all suit the first three dates.
- (2) Date 2 shows that the month of Āśvina stood at the close of the Kalachuri year; i. e., the Kalachuri year commenced in some month later than Āśvina, probably in Kārttika.
- (3) Among the five dates there are only two (2 and 4) which fell in the dark fortnight. As shown above, one of them (2) shows that the month cited in it was amānta, and the other date (4) indicates that it was pūrṇimānta. From this, one cannot, of course, draw any definite conclusion. But it is noteworthy that the months of the Saka era, which was current in Maharashtra both before the rise and after the disappearance of the Kalachuri era, were almost invariably amānta.<sup>1</sup> Besides, the date 4 comes from Khandesh and belongs to the reign of the Sēndraka prince Allaśakti. Another date from Khandesh which occurs in a record of this same Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti mentions that the Mīna-saṅkrānti in the Saka year 602 (680-81 A. C.)

occurred on the 10th tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna.<sup>1</sup> This clearly shows that the month Phālguna was amānta. We may, therefore, conclude that the months of the Kalachuri year as current in Maharashtra and Gujarat were generally amānta and only exceptionally pūrṇimānta.

(4) The proportion of expired years to current ones is 3 : 2. This is in keeping with that observed in the case of other eras. Most of the early dates of the Kalachuri era are not verifiable for want of the necessary details. Otherwise, the proportion of expired years would have been still higher.

According to the testimony of these five dates, therefore, the Kalachuri era commenced on the amānta Kārttika śu. di. 1 (the 25th September) in 249 A. C.

LATER DATES OF THE KALACHURI ERA

We shall next take the later dates of the Kalachuri era. As stated before, these dates come from North India and Chhattisgarh where the era was introduced by the Kalachuris. The epoch which suits these dates is that of 247-48 A. C., the year commencing on the pūrṇimānta Kārttika śu. di. 1. The first day of the first current year of the Kalachuri era, according to this epoch, was pūrṇimānta Kārttika śu. di. 1 (the 6th October) in 248 A. C. Therefore, to convert a current Kalachuri year into an expired Saka year we have to add 169 when the date falls in the bright fortnight of Kārttika or in any of the months from Mārgaśīrsha to Phālguna and 170 in other cases. Similarly, to convert an expired Kalachuri year into an expired Saka year we have to add 170 and 171 respectively in the same circumstances.

Dates in Expired Years

1. Banaras plates of Karṇa (No. 48, p. 236)—Lines 39-40—Srīmad-Gāṅgēyadēvasya samvatsarē(a)-srā(śrā)ddhē Phālguna-va(va)bula-pakṣa-dvītyāyām Sa(śa)naischa(śchā)ra-vāsarē, 'On the occasion of the first annual śrāddha of the illustrious Gāṅgēyadēva, on Saturday, the second tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna.' Line 48—Samvat 793 Phālguna va di 9 Sōmē, 'on Monday, the 9th tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna in the year 793.'

Of the two dates mentioned in this record, the second regularly corresponds, for the expired year 793 (i. e., Saka 793 + 170 = 963), to Monday, the 18th January 1042 A. C., on which day the 9th tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Phālguna ended 18 h. after mean sunrise. In 1041 A. C. the tithi fell on a Thursday. So the year cannot be applied as current.

The first date is irregular; for, the second tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Phālguna fell on Monday (the 11th January 1042 A. C.), not on Saturday, but the apparent irregularity can be satisfactorily explained as shown elsewhere.<sup>2</sup>

2. Goharwa plates of Karṇa (No. 50, p. 252)—Line 41-42—Srīmat-Karṇa-prakāśē vyavaharāṇē saptama-samvatsarē Kārttikē māsi su(śu)kla-pakṣa-Kārttikē-paurṇamāsyām tithau Guru-dinē, 'During the seventh year of administration rendered glorious by the illustrious Karṇa, on Thursday, the full-moon day of Kārttika.' As shown elsewhere, Karṇa came to the throne some time after Phālguna va. di. 2 in the expired Kalachuri year 792. If the Kalachuri year was Kārttikādi, the month Kārttika in the first year of Karṇa's reign would fall in the expired year 793. The same month in the seventh regnal year would fall in the expired year 799 (i. e., in the expired Saka year 799 + 170 = 969). The full-moon tithi in this year ended 13 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise on Thursday, the 5th November 1047 A. C. The date is thus quite regular. It shows that the Kalachuri year commenced on some tithi before Kārttika paurṇimā.

If the Kalachuri year commenced in some month later than Kārttika, the date would fall in 1046 A. C. But in that year the full-moon day of Kārttika fell on a Friday (the 17th October), not on a Thursday as required.

3. Rewa stone inscription of Karṇa (No. 51, p. 263)—Line 31—[Kha*]ra-[nāmnā(mnī) mahā-maṅgala-samvatsarē] ॥800॥ 'In the very auspicious year 800, named Khara.' The date does not give any details for verification except the name of the Jovian year Khara. Now, the expired Kalachuri year 800 corresponded to 1048-49 A.C. The corresponding Jovian year was Khara according to the northern luni-solar system. The date is thus regular. If the year 800 had been a current year, the Jovian year would have been Vikṛita.
4. Rewa stone inscription of Karṇa (No. 53, p. 278)—Line 20—Samvatsata(ṛa) 812 śrīmat-Karṇa-prakāśa(śa)-vyavaharāṇayā navama-sam(ni)vatsarē Māgha-sudī 10 Guraṇ, 'In the year 812, the ninth year of administration rendered glorious by Karṇa, on the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha, on Thursday.' The corresponding Christian date for the expired year 812 (i. e., for the expired Saka year  $812 + 170 = 982$ ) is Thursday, the 4th January 1061 A. C., when the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha ended 3 h. 10 m. after mean sunrise. The date is thus regular.

In the current year 812, the tithi fell on Saturday, the 15th January 1060 A. C.

5. Ratanpur stone inscription of Jājalladēva I (No. 77, p. 409)—Line 31—Samvat 866 Mārgga sudī 9 Ravaṇ, 'In the year 866, on Sunday, the 9th tithi of the bright fortnight of Mārgaśīrṣha.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 866 (i. e., for the expired Saka year  $866 + 170 = 1036$ ), to Sunday, the 8th November 1114 A. C. On that day the 9th tithi of the bright fortnight of Mārgaśīrṣha ended 20 h. after mean sunrise. In the current year 866, the tithi fell on Wednesday, the 19th November 1113 A. C.
6. Shēorinārāyaṇ plates of Ratnadēva II (No. 82, p. 419)—Line 26—Samvata(t) 878, Bhādra sudī 5 Ravaṇ, 'In the year 878, on Sunday, the 5th tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 878 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $878 + 171 = 1049$ ), to Sunday, the 14th August 1127 A. C. On that day, the fifth tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada ended 8 h. 50 m. after mean sunrise.

In the current year 878, the tithi fell on Tuesday, the 24th August 1126 A. C.

7. Sarkho plates of Ratnadēva (No. 83, p. 423)—Lines 23-24—Tēn-āsī(śī)ty-adhik-āshṭa-vatsara-śatē jā(yā)tē dinē Gīḥpatēḥ Kārttikyām=atha Rōhiṇ-ībha-samayē rātreś=cha yāma-trayē Śrīmad-Ratna-narēśvarasya sadasi jyōtir-vvidām-agrataḥ sarvvagrāsam-anushṅgōḥ pravadatā tīrṇṇā pratijñā-nadī ॥ 'The expired year 880, the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika, Thursday, with a total eclipse of the moon when she was in the constellation of Rōhiṇī.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 880 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $880 + 170 = 1050$ ), to Thursday, the 8th November 1128 A. C., when the moon was totally eclipsed in the third quarter of the night. The nakṣatra Rōhiṇī commenced 13h. 30 m. after mean sunrise on that day. The date is thus perfectly regular.

The explicit statement that the year 880 was expired is important. It shows that, with the epoch of 247-48 A. C. which suits all later dates, the Kalachuri year must have commenced before Kārttika pūrṇimā.

8. Pāragaon plates of Ratnadēva II (No. 122, p. 622)—Lines 22-23—Rāhu-grastē Kārttikē māsi bhānau, 'When the sun was devoured by Rāhu in the month of Kārttika'; l. 30—Kalachuri samvatsarē 885 Āsvi(śvi)na sudī 1 Vu(Bu)dbē, 'In the Kalachuri year 885, on the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Āśvina, on Wednesday.' This date corresponds, for the expired year 885 (i. e., for the expired Saka year  $885 + 171 = 1056$ ), to Wednesday, the 19th September 1134 A. C. On that day the tithi Āśvina śu. di. 1 commenced 19 h. 40 m. after mean sunrise.

This date shows that the Kalachuri year commenced on some day after Āśvina śu. di. 1.

There was, however, no solar eclipse in the month of Kārttika (amānta or pūrṇimānta) in K. 885 or even in K. 884. Perhaps Kārttikē māsi in ll. 22-23 is a mistake for Srāvaṇē māsi; for, there was a solar eclipse in the month of pūrṇimānta Srāvaṇa in K. 885, on the 23rd July 1134 A. C.

In the current Kalachuri year 885, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Friday (the 1st September 1133 A. C.), not on Wednesday as required. As stated before, there was no solar eclipse in the month of Kārttika, amānta or pūrṇimānta in that year.

9. Daikoni plates of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 86, p. 443)—Line 23—Rāhu-grastē rajani-tilakē Kārttikē pañchadasyā(śyā)ni, 'When the ornament of the night (i. e., the moon) was devoured by Rāhu on the fifteenth tithi of Kārttika; ll. 26-27—Samvat 890, Mārgga vadi 11 Ravan, 'In the year 890, on Sunday, the 11th tithi of the dark fortnight of Mārggaśirsha.' This date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 890 (i. e., for the expired Saka year  $890 + 170 = 1060$ ), to Sunday, the 30th October 1138 A. C. On that day the eleventh tithi in the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Mārggaśirsha commenced 9 h. 10 m. after mean sunrise. There was a lunar eclipse on the preceding Kārttika pūrṇimā (the 19th October 1138 A. C.).

In the current Kalachuri year 890, on the other hand, the tithi in the pūrṇimānta Mārggaśirsha fell on Thursday (the 11th November 1137 A. C.). Besides, there was no lunar eclipse in the preceding Kārttika.

10. Rājīm stone inscription of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 88, p. 450)—Lines 18-19—Kalachuri-samvat-sara(rē) 896 Māghē māsi su(śu)kla-pakṣhē rath-āshṭamyāni Vu(Bu)dhavādinē, 'In the Kalachuri year 896, on Wednesday, the eighth tithi (called Rathāshṭami) of the bright fortnight of the month Māgha.' This date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 896 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $896 + 170 = 1066$ ), to Wednesday, the 3rd January 1145 A. C. On that day the eighth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha ended 10 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise.

In the current year 896, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Saturday, the 15th January 1144 A. C.

11. Bilaigarh Plates of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 89, p. 458)—Line 27—Sūrya-grahaṇa-parvvaṇi, 'On the occasion of a solar eclipse'; l. 36—Samvat 896 Aminē 5 (Āśvinē 15) 'In the year 896, on the 15th tithi of Āśvina'. The date does not admit of verification, but it may be noted that in the expired year 896 (i. e., in the expired Saka year  $896 + 170 = 1066$ ) there were two solar eclipses, one in the pūrṇimānta Māgha (on the 26th December 1144 A. C.), and the other in the pūrṇimānta Āshāḍha (on the 22nd June 1145 A. C.). The latter is probably intended here.

In the current year 896, there was no solar eclipse.

12. Pāragaon plates of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 123, p. 626)—Line 37—Samvat 897 Phālguna su di 15 Vu(Bu)dhavārē, 'In the year 897, on the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Phālguna, on Wednesday.' This date corresponds, for the expired year 897 (i. e., for the expired Saka year  $897 + 170 = 1067$ ), to Wednesday, the 27th February 1146 A. C. On that day the tithi Phālguna śu. di. 15 commenced 8 h. 25 m. after mean sunrise.

In the current Kalachuri year 897, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Friday (the 9th February 1145 A. C.), not on Wednesday as required.

13. Amōdā plates (first set) of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 91, p. 474)—Line 24—Chaitrē sōma-grahē sati; l. 32—Samvat 900, 'The year 900, with a lunar eclipse in the month of Chaitra.' The corresponding Christian date for the expired year 900 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $900+171=1071$ ) is Friday, the 25th March 1149 A. C. On that day there was a lunar eclipse visible at Ratanpur.

In the current year 900 (1148 A. C.), on the other hand, there was no lunar eclipse in Chaitra.

14. Tewar stone inscription of Gayākarnādēva (No. 58, p. 305)—Lines 20-22—*Navasa-(śa)ta-yugal-ābd-ādhibikya-gē Chēdi-dishṭa(tē) | ja[na*]padam-avat-īmam śrī-Gayākarnādēva | Pratipadi śuchi-māsa-śvēta-pakṣhē-rkka-vārē.. ||*, 'In the year 902 of the Chēdi era, on Sunday, the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha, during the reign of the illustrious Gayākarna.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 902 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $902+171=1073$ ), to Sunday, the 17th June 1151 A. C., on which day the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha ended 2 h. after mean sunrise.

In the current year 902, on the other hand, there were two Āshāḍhas. In the adbika Āshāḍha, the tithi fell on Monday, the 29th May 1150 A. C., and in the nija Āshāḍha, on Tuesday, the 27th June 1150 A. C.

15. Amōdā plates (second set) of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 94, p. 491)—Line 35—Mam(Sam)-vata(t) 905 Āsvi(śvi)na su di 6 Bbaumē, 'In the year 905, on Tuesday, the 6th tithi of the bright fortnight of Āśvina.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 905 (i. e., Saka year  $905+171=1076$ ), to Tuesday, the 14th September 1154 A. C. On that day the sixth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āśvina commenced 1 h. 15 m. after mean sunrise. If the Kalachuri era commenced on Āśvina śu. di. 1 in 248 A. C., this date should fall in 1152 A. C. if the Kalachuri year 905 is taken as current, and in 1153 A. C. if it is taken as expired. But in 1152 A. C. the tithi ended 7 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise on Saturday (the 6th September), and in 1153 A. C. it ended 7 h. after mean sunrise on Friday (the 25th September). In either case it would have to be regarded as irregular.

16. Bhērā-Ghāt stone inscription of Narasimha (No. 60, p. 312)—Line 29—Samvat 907 Mārgga sudi 11 Ravau, '(in) the year 907, on Sunday, the 11th tithi of the bright fortnight of Mārgaśirsha.' This date corresponds, for the expired year 907 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $907+170=1077$ ), to Sunday, the 6th November 1155 A. C., on which day the tithi commenced 2 h. 10 m. after mean sunrise. It ended 45 m. after mean sunrise on the next day. Though not current at sunrise, the tithi must have been joined to the week-day 'which was almost entirely filled by it.' In the current year 907, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Wednesday, the 17th November 1154 A. C.

17. Lāl-Pahād rock inscription of Narasimha (No. 61, p. 321)—Line 7—[Sam]vat 909 Srā(Srā)vaṇa su di 5 Vuddhē (Budhē), 'In the year 909, on Wednesday, the 5th tithi of the bright fortnight of Srāvaṇa.' In the expired Kalachuri year 909 (corresponding to the expired Saka year  $909+171=1080$ ) there were two Srāvaṇas. The first or adbika Srāvaṇa is evidently meant here;<sup>1</sup> for, the fifth tithi of the bright fortnight of it ended 16 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on Wednesday, the 2nd July 1158 A. C.

In the current year 909, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Saturday, the 13th July 1157 A. C.

18. Jabalpur plates of Jayasimha (No. 63, p. 324)—Lines 25-26—Samvat 918 Āsvina su di paurṇamāsyāṃ tithau sa(śa)ni-dinē.....Sōma-grahaṇē, 'In the year 918, on Saturday, the full-moon tithi of Āśvina, on the occasion of a lunar eclipse.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 918 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $918+171=1089$ ), to Saturday, the 30th September 1167 A. C. On that day the full-moon tithi ended 13 h. after mean sunrise and there was a lunar eclipse. If the Kalachuri era commenced on Āśvina śu. di. 1 in 248 A. C., this date should fall in 1165 A. C. if the year was current, and in 1166 A. C. if it was expired. But in 1165 A. C. the tithi fell on Tuesday (the 21st September), and in 1166 A. C. it fell on Monday (the 10th October). Again, in neither year was there a lunar eclipse on the given tithi.

If the year 918 is applied as current, the tithi should fall in 1166 A. C., but as shown above, it would not be regular.

19. Rewa plate of Jayasimha (No. 65, p. 340)—Line 14—Samvat 926, Bhādrapada-māsē sukla-pakṣbē [Cha]turthyām tithau Guru-dinē Rāṇaka-śrī-Vatsarājaśya(nya) nimittē pīṇḍ-ārchana-sthānē, 'In the year 926, on Thursday, the fourth tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada at the place of worshipping the balls (of rice) offered in honour of the Rāṇaka, the illustrious Vatsarāja'. The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 926 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $926+171=1097$ ), to Thursday, the 21st August 1175 A. C. On that day, the tithi commenced 9 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise. Though not current at sunrise, it is coupled with the week-day as it was current in the afternoon at the time of the performance of the śrāddha.

In the current year 926, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Saturday, the 3rd August 1174 A. C.

20. Tewar stone inscription of Jayasimha (No. 66, p. 344)—Line 7—Samvat 928 Srāvaṇa su di 6 Ravan Hastē, 'In the year 928, on Sunday, the 6th tithi of the bright fortnight of Srāvaṇa when the moon was in conjunction with the asterism of Hasta.' There were two Srāvaṇas in the expired Kalachuri year 928 (i. e., in the expired Saka year  $928+171=1099$ ). Of these, the first or adbika Srāvaṇa is intended here;<sup>1</sup> for, the 6th tithi of the bright fortnight of that month ended 7 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise on Sunday, the 3rd July 1177 A. C. and the nakṣatra Hasta also ended 16 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on that day. In the nija Srāvaṇa of that year, the tithi fell on Monday, the 1st August, and the nakṣatra was Chitrā.

In the current year 928, the tithi fell on Wednesday, the 14th July 1176 A. C., and the nakṣatra was Chitrā.

21. Sāhaspur statue inscription of Yaśōrāja (No. 115, p. 595)—Line 5—Samvat 934, Kārttika su di 15 Vu(Bu)dhe, 'In the year 934, on Wednesday, the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika.' The date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 934 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $934+170=1104$ ), to Wednesday, the 13th October 1182 A. C. On that day, the 15th tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika ended 14 h. after mean sunrise.

In the current year 934, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Saturday, the 24th October, 1181 A. C.

22. Rewa stone inscription of Vijayasimha (No. 68, p. 346)—Line 26—Chatvāriṃśaty-ādhikē-vdē(bdē) caturbbir-mavamē satē 1 Sukrē Sāhasamall-āṅkē Nābhasye pratbamē dinē 11 Samvat 944 Bhādrapada su di 1, Sukrē, 'In the year 944 called Sāhasamallāṅka, on Friday, the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada.' This date corresponds, for the expired year 944 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $944+171=1115$ ), to Friday, the 30th July 1193

A.C. On that day, the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada ended 22 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise.

In the current year 944, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Monday, the 10th August 1192 A. C.

23. Bēsāni stone inscription (No. 71, p. 368)—Line 1—Samvata(t) [9]58 prathama-Āsha(shā)-ḍbā sudi 3—The expired Kalachuri year 958 corresponds to 1206-07 A. C. In 1207 A. C. there were two Āshāḍhas, of which the first or intercalary Āshāḍha lasted from the 14th May to the 11th June.

In the current year 957, on the other hand, there was no intercalary Āshāḍha.

24. Dhurēti plates of Trailōkyamalla (No. 72, p. 369)—Line 7—Samma(va)t 963 Jyēshṭha su di 7 Sōmē dinanī(nē), 'In the year 963 on Monday, the 7th tithi of the bright fortnight of Jyēshṭha.' The details do not work out satisfactorily; for, according to the epoch of 247-48 A. C., the tithi fell on Friday (the 20th May 1211 A. C.), if the year 963 was current, and on Wednesday (the 9th May 1212 A. C.) if it was expired. In view of the slovenly manner in which the record has been written throughout, it is not unlikely that Sōmē (Monday) is a mistake for Saumyē (Wednesday), in which case the date would regularly correspond, for the expired year 963, to Wednesday, the 9th May 1212 A.C.

25. Penḍrābandha plates of Pratāpamalla (No. 101, p. 543)—Line 26—grāmō Makara-saṅkṛāntau dattabh samikalpa-pūrvakab; l. 35—Samvata(t) 965 . . . . . Māgha su di 10 Maṅgaladinē. The details of the date are 'Makara-saṅkṛānti; the year 965, Tuesday, the 10th of the bright fortnight of Māgha.' As it stands, the date is irregular; for, in none of the years 1212-1215 was the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of 'Māgha connected with a Tuesday'. If, however, sudi is taken to be a mistake for vadi, the date corresponds, for the expired year 965 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $965 + 170 = 1135$ ), regularly to Tuesday, the 7th January 1214 A. C. On that day, the 10th tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Māgha ended 10 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise. The Makara-saṅkṛānti had taken place about a fortnight earlier on the 25th December 1213 A. C.

In the current year 965, the tithi Māgha śu. di. 10 fell on Saturday, the 2nd February 1213 A. C.

26. Tahankāpār plate of Pamparājadēva (No. 117, p. 599)—Lines 7 and 8—Isva(śva)rasamvatsarē Kārti(tti)ka-māsē Chitrā-ri(ri)kshē Ravi-dinē su(sū)ry-ōparāgē; l. 10—Samvat 966, 'On the occasion of a solar eclipse on Sunday in the nakshatra Chitrā in the month of Kārttika in the cyclic year Īśvara, in the year 966'. The date corresponds, for the expired year 966 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $966 + 170 = 1136$ ), to Sunday, the 5th October 1214 A. C., when there was a solar eclipse visible at Kānkēr, the tithi being the new-moon day of the pūrṇimānta Kārttika, and nakshatra Chitrā. The cyclic year, however, does not agree. According to the southern luni-solar system it was Bhāva, and according to the northern system it was Bahudhānya. The discrepancy is evidently due to the writer's carelessness.

In the current year 966, on the other hand, there was no solar eclipse in the pūrṇimānta or amānta Kārttika.

27. Bilaigarh plates of Pratāpamalla (No. 102, p. 549)—Line 28—Āshāḍhyām Sōma-parvvaṇi; l. 38—Samvat 969, 'A lunar eclipse on the full-moon day of Āshāḍha; in the year 969.' This date regularly corresponds, for the expired year 969 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $969 + 171 = 1140$ ), to the 9th July 1218 A. C. On that day the full-moon tithi of Āshāḍha ended 18 h. 15 m. after mean sunrise and there was also a lunar eclipse as stated in the grant.

In the current year 969 (corresponding to 1217 A. C.), there was no lunar eclipse on the full-moon tithi of Āshāḍha.

Dates in Current Years

28. Makundpur stone inscription of Gāṅgāyādēva (No. 47, p. 234)—Line 1—Samvat 772, Kārttika su di 12 Vu(Bu)dba-dinē, 'on Wednesday, the 12th tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika in the year 772.'

This date, occurring in the month of Kārttika, should fall in 1019 A. C. if the year 772 was current, and in 1020 A. C. if it was expired; but in 1019 A. C., the aforementioned tithi ended 11 h. after mean sunrise on Tuesday (the 13th October), and in 1020 A. C., 5 h. after mean sunrise on Monday (the 31st October). In neither case was it connected with a Wednesday. But if the deviation of one day is overlooked, it may be taken to correspond to the 13th October 1019 A. C.

29. Sārnāth stone inscription of Kaṛṇa (No. 52, p. 275)—Line 6—*Samva[tsarē*][8*]10* Āsvina (Āsvina) [su] di 15 Ravan 'In the year 810, on Sunday, the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āsvina.' The date corresponds, for the current year 810 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $810 + 170 = 980$ ), to Sunday, the 4th October 1058 A. C. On that day the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āsvina ended 15 h. 50 m. after mean sunrise.

In the expired year 810, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Friday, the 24th September 1059 A. C.

30. Raipur Plate of Pṛithvidēva I (No. 75, p. 398)—Line 7—Uttarāyaṇa-sakrau (saṅkrāntau), 'On the Uttarāyaṇa-saṅkrānti'; l. 17—Samvat 821, Magha va di 8 Ravan, 'In the year 821 on Sunday, the 8th tithi of the dark fortnight of Māgha.' This date regularly corresponds, for the current year 821, to Sunday, the 18th January 1069 A. C. On that day the eighth tithi of the dark fortnight of the amānta Māgha ended at 20 h. 50 m. after mean sunrise. The Uttarāyaṇa- or Makara-saṅkrānti had occurred more than a fortnight before, on the 23rd December 1068 A. C.

According to the pūrṇimānta scheme, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Saturday, the 20th December 1068 A. C., and the Uttarāyaṇa-saṅkrānti occurred three days after, on the 23rd December.

If the year is applied as expired, the tithi in the pūrṇimānta Māgha fell on Thursday (the 7th January 1070 A. C.) and in the amānta Māgha on Saturday (the 6th February 1070 A. C.). In both the cases it would have to be regarded as irregular.

31. Amōdā plates of Pṛithvidēva I (No. 76, p. 401)—Lines 27-28—Gba(Phā)lguna-kriṣṇa-saptamyāni Ravi-dinē; l. 41—Chēd-isa(sa)sya Sanī 831, 'In the year 831, on Sunday, the seventh tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna.' This date regularly corresponds, for the current year 831 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $831 + 169 = 1000$ ), to Sunday, the 27th January 1079 A. C. On that day, the seventh tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Phālguna ended 7 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise.

In the expired year 831, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Thursday, the 16th January 1080 A. C.

32. Shēorinārāyaṇ statue inscription (No. 110, p. 582)—Line 5—Kalachuri-saṁvatsarē 898 11 Āsvini (Āsvina) su di 2 Sōma-dinē. This date regularly corresponds, for the current year 898 (i. e., the expired Saka year  $898 + 170 = 1068$ ), to Monday, the 9th September 1146 A. C. On that day, the second tithi of the bright fortnight of Āsvina ended 21 h. 50 m. after mean sunrise.

In the expired year 898, on the other hand, the tithi fell on Sunday, the 28th September 1147 A. C.

33. Kōni stone inscription of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 90, p. 463)—Line 25—Rāhu-mukha-sthē bhānan, 'When the sun was in the mouth of Rāhu'; l. 28—Sam(m)vat 900, 'In the year 900.' In the current year 900, there was a solar eclipse in the pūrṇimānta Vaiśākha (on the 20th April 1148 A. C.), but none at all in the expired year.
34. Tahankāpār plate of Pamparāja (No. 116, p. 396)—Line 9—Sanivata(ṛ) 965 Bhādrapadē va di 10, Mṛiga-ri(ṛ)kṣhē Sōdma(ma)-dinē, 'In the year 965, on Monday, the 10th titthi of the dark fortnight of Bhādrapada, the nakṣatra being Mṛiga.' This date corresponds, for the current year 965 (or the expired Śaka year  $965 + 170 = 1135$ ), to Monday, the 12th August 1213 A. C. On that day, the 10th titthi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Bhādrapada commenced 6 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise and the nakṣatra Mṛiga ended 14 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise. Though the titthi was not current at sunrise on Monday, it is coupled with that week-day probably because it was current at the time when the transaction recorded in the plate was made.

If the year is applied as expired, the titthi would fall on Saturday (the 2nd August 1214 A. C.).

A careful examination of these 34 later dates<sup>1</sup> of the Kalachuri era will show that—

- (1) All of them can be shown to be regular only according to the epoch of 247-48 A. C.; for, though the first twenty-seven dates can also be explained as dates in current years with the epoch of 248-49 A. C., that epoch will not at all do for the remaining seven dates 28-34.
- (2) The dates 6, 19 and 22 clearly show that, with the epoch of 247-48 A. C., the Kalachuri year must have begun in some month later than Bhādrapada. Kielhorn's earlier view that the Kalachuri year was Bhādrapadādi is, therefore, wholly untenable.
- (3) The dates 8, 15 and 18 indicate that the month Āśvina stood at the close, and not in the beginning, of the Kalachuri year. Kielhorn's final view that the Kalachuri year was Āśvinādi is clearly disproved by these three dates.
- (4) From the date 18 it appears that the Kalachuri year commenced some time after Āśvina śu. di. 15, while the dates 2 and 7 plainly indicate that the year began before Kārttika śu. di. 15. Between these two limits the only titthi which suggests itself for the commencement of the Kalachuri year is Kārttika śu. di. 1. This conjecture may be said to be corroborated by the date 28, though its testimony is somewhat weakened by a slight error in the specification of the week-day.
- (5) Among the later dates examined above, there are only seven, viz., 1, 9, 25, 26, 30, 31 and 34, which fell in the dark fortnight. Six of these, viz., 1, 9, 25, 26, 31 and 34 work out satisfactorily only with the pūrṇimānta scheme of lunar months and only one, viz. 30, with the amānta scheme. We may, therefore, conclude that the months of the Kalachuri year generally ended on the full-moon day.

<sup>1</sup> Among these 34 dates there are only three, viz., Nos. 24, 25 and 28, which are slightly irregular. The others work out quite satisfactorily with the epoch of 247-48 A. C. The following dates have been omitted for the reason stated in each case:—(1) The Khairhā plates of Yaśaḥkarna (No. 36), because the year of the date is manifestly wrong. See below, pp. 301-02. (2) The Ghoṭiā plates of Pṛithvidēva II (No. 92), because the numerals of the date are evidently incorrect. See below, p. 479. (3) The Amōdā plates of Jājalladēva II (No. 99), because the last figure of the date is uncertain. See below, p. 529. (4) The Jabalpur stone inscription of Jayasimha (No. 64), because its evidence is not conclusive; the date can be taken as recorded either in a current or in an expired year. See below, p. 332, n. 2. All these dates have, however, been fully discussed in the introductory articles of these inscriptions. I have omitted one more date, viz., K. 928, Māgha-vadi 10, Monday, though it regularly corresponds, for the expired year 928, to Monday, the 27th December 1176 A. C.; for, it is known only from a statement of Cunningham. See his A. S. I. R., Vol. IX, p. 111 and Indian Eras, p. 61.

(6) The proportion of expired years to current ones is 27 : 7, which is in accordance with the general usage of quoting expired years, noticed in the case of the other Indian eras.

The uniform agreement of these 34 later dates of the Kalachuri era clearly establishes that the era commenced on the pūrṇimānta Kārttika śu. di. 1 (the 6th October) in 248 A. C.

Now, this conclusion conflicts with the result already obtained from an examination of the available five early dates of the era which contained the necessary details for computation, viz., that the era commenced on the amānta Kārttika śu. di. 1 (the 25th September) in 249 A. C. It may be noted in this connection that the two types of dates do not come from the same part of the country. The earlier dates come from Gujarat and Maharashtra, while the later ones are obtained from North India and the Chhattisgarh Division of Madhya Pradesh. It seems to me that the only way in which we can reconcile these two epochs of the era is to suppose that when the era was introduced by the Kalachuris in North India, its current years were erroneously supposed to be expired ones. The commencement of the era came consequently to be antedated by one year.<sup>1</sup> Again, though the year continued to be Kārttikādi, its months became pūrṇimānta in accordance with the general usage prevailing in North India.

The Kalachuri-Chēdi era, therefore, originally commenced on Kārttika śu. di. 1 (the 25th September) in 249 A. C.

THE ORIGIN OF THE ERA

We shall next turn to the question, 'What historical event does this era commemorate?' For a correct answer to this question we must take the following points into consideration.

(1) Though in some later records, the years of the era are specified as Chēdi-saṁvat or Chēd-īśasya saṁvat and Kalachuri-saṁvat, it by no means follows that the era was known by either of these names from early times; for, in the early records of the Māhārājās of Khandesh, the Traikūṭakas, the Kalachuris, the Gurjaras, the Sēndrakas and the Chālukyas, the years of the era are introduced simply by the word saṁvat. The name Chēdi-saṁvat, Chēdi-dishṭa (or Chēd-īśasya saṁvat) and Kalachuri-saṁvat occur in only nine records,<sup>2</sup> eight of which come from Chhattisgarh. The earliest of them belongs to the last quarter of the eleventh century A. C. The reason why this era came to be known by these names in Chhattisgarh is not far to seek. Before the advent of the Kalachuris, the general custom prevailing in Chhattisgarh, as in several other parts of India, was to date events in the regnal years of the ruling king.<sup>3</sup> When the Kalachuris established themselves in Chhattisgarh, they introduced there the era which they had been using in their home province of Dāhala for several centuries. It, therefore, came to be designated as Kalachuri-saṁvat. The other name Chēdi-saṁvat or Chēd-īśasya saṁvat was also appropriate; for, the Imperial family to which the Tummāṇa branch owed allegiance was then ruling over the Chēdi country.

<sup>3</sup> See, for instances, the dates of the records of the kings of Śarabhapura and those of the Sōmavāṁśī dynasty. The only early record from Chhattisgarh which is dated in any era is the Āraṅg plate of Bhīmasēna. Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, pp. 342 ff. It contains the date 182 of the Gupta era. Ibid., Vol. XXVI, p. 228.

It is noteworthy in this connection that the contemporary ruler of Tripurī is invariably referred to as Chēd-īśa, Chēdi-narēndra or Chaidya (the lord of Chēdi) in the records from Chhattisgarh.<sup>1</sup> These names of the era do not, therefore, indicate that the era was started by the Kalachuris or that it originated in the Chēdi country.

The other name Traikūṭaka, which is sometimes used to designate the era, is due to a wrong interpretation of an expression occurring in the Kaṅhēri plate, dated K. 245, as already pointed out by Dr. Fleet.<sup>2</sup>

Like several other eras, the era of 249-50 A. C. also had no special name in the beginning. Its years were introduced by the simple word saṁ or saṁvat.

(2) The earliest records dated in this era come from Central India, Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra including the districts of Nagpur, Nasik and Khandesh. No certain dates of this era come from North India until the middle of the ninth century A. C., i. e., until after its introduction in the Chēdi country by the Kalachuris. We have already seen that the theories that the records of Kanishka and his successors, the so-called Kushānaputras, the Maghas of Kauśāmbī and the Uchchakalpas of Central India are dated in the so-called Kalachuri-Chēdi era are untenable.<sup>3</sup> The era must, therefore, have originated south of the Narmadā.

These considerations point to Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra as the original home of the era. Let us next consider the political condition in circa 250 A. C. in this part of the country which led to its foundation.

The Purāṇas say that when the kingdom of the Andhras will come to an end, there will be kings belonging to the lineage of their servants.<sup>4</sup> Among these latter are mentioned ten Ābhīra kings who are said to have ruled for 67 years. Scholars are not unanimous as to when the kingdom of the Andhras came to an end. The duration of the Andhra or Sātavāhana rule is variously given by the Purāṇas, viz., as 460 years by the Matsya, 411 by the Vāyu and 456 by the Brahmāṇḍa, the Viṣṇu and the Bhāgavata.<sup>5</sup> The date of the commencement of their rule is also uncertain. Inscriptions afford, however, some basis for calculation. It is well known that there was an interruption in the Sātavāhana rule over Gujarat and Maharashtra. The Saka Satrap Bhūmaka established himself in Gujarat and Nahapāna in Maharashtra. The Sātavāhanas, who were ousted from this part of the country, seem to have retired to Vidarbha.<sup>6</sup> They attempted to reconquer their lost territory during the reign of Gautamīputra Sātakarṇi. This Sātavāhana king is said to have exterminated the Kshaharāta family to which Nahapāna belonged.<sup>7</sup> The decisive battle seems to have been fought in the eighteenth year of Gautamīputra's reign; for, soon after

<sup>3</sup> See above, pp. viii ff.; also Ep. Ind. XXIII, pp. 171 ff. As for the theory that the era was started by Vamataksha of the Kushānaputra dynasty (Ind. Cul., Vol. VIII, pp. 191 ff.), it is in the first place not clear that there was such a dynasty; for, the expression Kushānaputra occurs only in one record, viz., that of Vamataksha himself and may simply mean 'a scion of the Kushāna family'.

the victory he donated a field to the Buddhist monks living in the caves near Nasik.<sup>1</sup> The Kshaharāta Satrap defeated by Gautamīputra is not named, but he was probably Nahapāna himself; for we know of no successor of the latter. Besides, Gautamīputra is known to have called back and restruck Kshatrpa coins in order to proclaim the establishment of his rule. The Jogaltembhi hoard, discovered in 1906, contained hundreds of coins of this type. But among them there was not a single coin of any successor of Nahapāna, which shows that Gautamīputra came immediately after Nahapāna.<sup>2</sup>

Now, the last known date of Nahapāna is 46, which it seems best to refer to the Śaka era. It is thus equivalent to circa 124 A. C. Supposing that Nahapāna suffered a defeat in this very year, 124 A. C. becomes the 18th year of Gautamīputra's reign. Gautamīputra may, therefore, have come to the throne in circa 107 A. C. The Purāṇas name the successors of Gautamīputra and give their reign-periods as follows :—

|                      |    |           |              |               |

The find of potin coins at Tarhālā in the Akola District of Berar plainly indicates that all these kings<sup>3</sup> continued to hold Maharashtra to the end of the Sātavāhana age. The reign-periods mentioned in the Purāṇas are not, however, absolutely trustworthy. In the first place, there are many variants, and even if we take the readings supported by the best MSS., their statements are in some cases contradicted by contemporary inscriptions. The Purāṇas, for instance, assign a reign-period of only 21 years to Gautamīputra, but from a Nasik cave inscription<sup>4</sup> he is known to have reigned for at least 24 years. There may, therefore, be similar discrepancies in other reign-periods also. Besides, it is not certain that the battle between Gautamīputra and Nahapāna was fought in the Śaka year 46 and not later. Notwithstanding these circumstances which render the accuracy of the dates doubtful, we may say that the Sātavāhanas continued to rule in Maharashtra till the middle of the 3rd century A. C. The Purāṇas say that the successors of the Andhras (i. e., the Sātavāhanas) were the Ābhīras. And it is worthy of note that we do find an inscription of the reign of the Ābhīra king Īśvarasēna, the son of the Ābhīra Śivadatta, at Nasik.<sup>5</sup> Its characters and the predominance of Sanskrit in its language suggest that Īśvarasēna flourished later than the Sātavāhanas, all of whose records are in Prakrit. Īśvarasēna's father Śivadatta bears no princely title. This indicates that Īśvarasēna was the founder of the Ābhīra dynasty. Perhaps, he was previously a military officer of the Sātavāhanas.<sup>1</sup> From the Gunda inscription<sup>2</sup> we know of another Ābhīra Sēnāpati named Rudrabhūti, the son of the commander Bāhaka, who was in the service of the Western Kshatrapa Rudrasīmha I in 181 A. C. Īśvarasēna may have held a similar office under the last Sātavāhana king Puṣumāvi IV. In that case his military power and the influence he commanded may have helped him in usurping the throne after Puṣumāvi IV.

Several scholars identify this Īśvarasēna with Īśvaradatta whose silver coins dated in the first and second regnal years have been discovered at several places in Saurashtra and Southern Rajputana. About the exact period in which he flourished, there has, however, been a great divergence of opinion.<sup>3</sup> Pandit Bhagvanlal placed him in the gap of the years 171-176, for which no coins of the Western Kshatrapas were available in his time. Later on, Prof. Rapson showed that the gap did not exist, as he discovered coins of the dates from 171 to 176. Rapson himself assigned him to the gap between the years 158 and 161, but Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar pointed out that that gap too was virtually non-existent, as he found a coin dated 160 in the Sarvāñiā hoard. Īśvaradatta may, of course, have been an Ābhīra, though his coins do not say so explicitly; for, the Nasik inscription shows that the Ābhīras bore names ending in datta as well as in sēna. But it is doubtful if he was identical with Īśvarasēna, the founder of the Ābhīra dynasty; for, his coins are dated only in the first and second years of his reign<sup>4</sup> and are found only in Saurashtra and Southern Rajputana.<sup>5</sup> This plainly indicates that he had a meteoric rise in that part of the country, but was promptly subdued by the Western Kshatrapas. If he later on retired to Maharashtra and established himself there, his coins dated in subsequent years should have been found there; for, the Nāsik inscription shows that Īśvarasēna continued to hold Maharashtra at least till the ninth regnal year.

Prof. Rapson, who placed Īśvaradatta in the gap of Saka 159-160, suggested that the era of 249-50 A. C. might have marked the consolidation of the Ābhīra kingdom during one of the successors of Īśvardatta rather than its first beginnings.<sup>6</sup> But the history of other Indian eras shows that they generally originated in an extension of regnal dates. The Kushāṇa era, for instance, owed its use to the continuation of Kanishka's regnal dates by his successors Vāsishka, Huvishka, Kanishka II and Vāsudēva. The same may have happened in the case of the era of 249-50 A. C. It seems to have commenced with the reign of the Ābhīra Īśvarasēna, and was apparently continued by his successors, of whom as many as nine reigned according to the Purāṇas. The Purāṇas unfortunately do not name these Ābhīra kings, but they state that their rule lasted for 67 years. Judging by the extent of the use of their era, their kingdom seems to have comprised parts of Central India as well as Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra including the districts of Nasik and Khandesh.

It has been suggested that the Ābhīras and the Traikūṭakas were identical, Ābhīra being a racial name, and Traikūṭaka, a regional one. The names of the princes belonging to these two dynasties end in either datta or sēna, which lends colour to this identification.

But the Chandravalli inscription of the Kadamba king Mayūrasarman,<sup>1</sup> which may be referred to the fourth century A.C., mentions the Ābhīras separately from the Traikūṭakas. This suggests that the two dynasties, though contemporary, were not identical. The Ābhīras, who probably had their stronghold in Khandesh,<sup>2</sup> held imperial sway, while the Traikūṭakas, who rose to power in the Nasik District, may have been a feudatory family owing allegiance to the Ābhīras. As stated before, the Purāṇas assign a period of only 67 years to the reign of ten Ābhīra kings. This is abnormally low. Perhaps the expression sapta-shashṭi satān-īha,<sup>3</sup> stating the period of Ābhīra rule, which occurs in a manuscript of the Vāyupurāṇa, is a mistake for sapta-shashṭim satān-ch-ēba.<sup>4</sup> In that case the Ābhīra rule may have lasted for 167 years or till 415 A. C. After the fall of the Ābhīra dynasty the Traikūṭakas attained imperial position. As shown elsewhere, Mahārāja Indradatta, the first known Traikūṭaka king, seems to have flourished in the period circa 415—440 A. C.<sup>5</sup> He and his successors continued the era started by the Ābhīra Īśvarasēna, as it had by that time become 'the habitual and well-established reckoning of the country.' The history of other Indian eras shows that once an era becomes current in a part of the country and the people become accustomed to it, it continues to be used long after the founder or his family has ceased to rule. The era of Harsha, for instance, continued to be used long after him though his empire crumbled to pieces almost immediately after his death. It is, therefore, not surprising that the era of the Ābhīras also remained current in Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra long after the downfall of the Ābhīra dynasty.

LOCALITY OF THE ERA

The earliest date of the era is K. 9, which belongs to the reign of the founder, the Ābhīra king Īśvarasēna. The next three dates, viz., K. 67, 107 and 117 come from Khandesh and are furnished by the grants of a feudatory family which plainly owed allegiance to the contemporary Ābhīra Emperors. We have then the dates K. 102 and 167, the first from Kānākhērā near Sānchī and the second from the former Barwāni State, which belong to the reigns of the Saka king Śrīdharavarman and Subandhu of Māhishmatī respectively and clearly show that the era had spread beyond the Narmadā in the North. The three following dates K. 207, 241 and 245 belong to the Traikūṭakas who succeeded the Ābhīras in Gujarat, Konkan and the Nasik District. Following upon these is the date K. 292 of No. 11. It belongs to the reign of Mahārāja Saṅgamasimha, who seems to have occupied Central Gujarat after the fall of the Traikūṭakas. The next date K. 322 of No. 120 comes from the Nagpur District of Madhya Pradesh, and belongs to the reign of Svāmīrāja, who was probably a feudatory of the Kalachuri Kṛishnarāja.

Of the Kalachuris of Māhishmatī who succeeded the Traikūṭakas in Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra, we have the next three dates, viz., K. 347, 360 and 361 of Nos. 12, 14 and 15, one of which belong to Gujarat and the other two to the Nāsik District of Maharashtra. The inscriptions of the Gurjara kings who held Gujarat north of the Kīm after the fall of the Kalachuris furnish the next eight dates, viz., K. 380, 385, 391 392 (in two grants) 427, 456, 460 and 486 (in two grants) of Nos. 16-20, 121 and 21-24. Contemporaneously with these, we have two dates, viz., K. 404 and 406 of Nos. 25 and 26, belonging to the Sēndrakas, who held Southern Gujarat and Khandesh as feudatories of the Western Chālukyas, and four more, viz., K. 421, 436, 443 and 490 of Nos. 27-30, furnished by the records of a feudatory Chālukya family which was at first ruling over the Nasik District, but later on supplanted the Sēndrakas in Southern Gujarat. Finally, the Hariśchandriyas, whom the Western Chālukyas placed in charge of Konkan and the Nasik District, furnish only one date, viz., K. 461 of No. 31.

After K. 461 (709-10 A. C.) we have no dates of this era from Konkan or Maharashtra. Even before this date we find that the era was yielding ground to its rival, the Saka era. The Western Chālukyas and their feudatories, the Sēndrakas, who came from the Kanarese country, were using the Saka era in their home province. When they conquered and established themselves in Gujarat and Maharashtra, they continued to use the Kalachuri era evidently because it had become the habitual reckoning of that part of the country, but they gradually introduced there the Saka era which was current in their home province. The Sēndraka prince Allaśakti, for instance, issued two charters in 656 A. C. Both of them were granted in Gujarat, but while one of them (No. 26) which records the gift of a village in Gujarāt is dated in the year 406 of the Kalachuri era, the other which registers the donation of another village situated in Khandesh bears the date 577 of the Saka era.<sup>1</sup> Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti also, who was ruling over Khandesh, dates his Mundkhēḍē plates in the Saka era.<sup>2</sup> The Gujarat branch of the Chālukyas generally used the Kalachuri era in dating their land-grants in Gujarat. But Maṅgalārāja, who succeeded Dharāśraya-Jayasīma, is known to have issued a charter, dated in the year 653 of the Saka era.<sup>3</sup> The charter is not forthcoming now, but in view of another record of the same prince from the Thana District<sup>4</sup> it may be conjectured that it registered a grant of land in North Konkan.

In the Nasik District and Gujarat the Kalachuri era lingered a little longer. The latest date of that era from the Nasik District is K. 461 (710-11 A. C.).<sup>5</sup> The Saka era, which had already penetrated into Southern Maharashtra before 687 A. C., the date of the Jejuri plates of Vinayāditya,<sup>6</sup> soon ousted the Kalachuri era from Northern Maharashtra also. In Gujarat the era was current for at least 30 years more till 740 A. C.; for, the Navsāri plates of Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin are dated K. 490 (740 A. C.). After Pulakēśin's death, the country to the north of the Kīm was occupied by the Chāhamānas, who, coming as they did from the north, had a predilection for the Vikrama era. Their Hansot grant found in Gujarat is dated V. 814 (756 A. C.).<sup>7</sup> Southern Gujarat was held by a feudatory Rāshtrakūṭa family which for the first time introduced the Saka era in that part of the country. Their earliest grant from Gujarat is dated Saka 679 (757 A. C.).<sup>8</sup> After the middle of the 8th century A. C. we have no date of the Kalachuri era from Konkan, Gujarat and Maharashtra, the provinces where it had originated five centuries before.

When the Kalachuris migrated to Central India and shifted their capitals to Kālañjara and Tripurī, they took with them the era which they had habitually used in their earlier kingdom and made it current throughout their dominions.<sup>1</sup> Unfortunately, the earliest records of this era found at Saugor and Chhoti-Deori are undated. The first date of the Kalachuri era obtained from North India is K. 593 (841-42 A. C.) of No. 37, furnished by a record from Kāritalāi in the Jabalpur District. It is followed by twenty dates ranging from K. 724 to K. 963. Most of them are from the inscriptions of the Imperial Kalachuri dynasty of Tripurī. Among these, seven dates, viz., K. 724, 772, 789, 800, 812, 823 (?) and 961 (or 962) of Nos. 44, 47, 1 (App.), 51, 53, 56 and 70 respectively, come from the former Rewa State in Vindhya Pradesh; two dates, viz., K. 909 of No. 61 and K. 958 of No. 71, are furnished by the former States of Nāgōd and Pannā; two more dates, viz., K. 793 of No. 48 and K. 810 of No. 52, are obtained from Uttar Pradesh and the remaining six, viz., 529 (?), 902, 907, 918, 926 and 928 of Nos. 2 (App.), 58, 60, 63, 64 and 66 respectively, are supplied by the Jabalpur, Damoh and Saugor Districts of Madhya Pradesh. Two dates, viz., K. 926 of No. 65 and K. 944 of No. 67, belong to the feudatories of the Kalachuris, viz., Kirtivarman and Malayasimha, who were holding parts of the former Rewa State. The territory round Rewa passed into the possession of the Chandēlla Trailōkyamalla (or Trailōkyavarman) in circa K. 962. The Chandēllas were using the Vikrama era in their own records, but in the Dhureti plates which record a transaction made in the beginning of Trailōkyamalla's rule in the Chēdi country the Kalachuri era, not the Vikrama saṁvat, is used for the purpose of dating.

K. 963 (1212 A. C.) is the last date of the Kalachuri era which comes from North India. With the contraction of Kalachuri power during the reigns of the weak successors of Yaśaḥkarṇa, the era gradually lost ground to its rival, viz., the Vikrama saṁvat which was current in the adjoining provinces ruled by the Paramāras, the Chandēllas and the Gāhaḍavālas. The gradual encroachment made by the Vikrama era is illustrated by two dates, V. 1216 (1159 A. C.) of No. 62 and V. 1253 (1195 A. C.) of No. 68. Both of them come from the northern parts of the Rewa State, and mention the contemporary Kalachuri Suzerains Narasimha and Vijayasimha. But instead of being dated in the era of the Imperial family, they refer themselves to the Vikrama saṁvat. With the downfall of the Kalachuris of Tripurī, the era vanished from North India.

As stated above, the earlier North-Indian dates of the era are not forthcoming, but speaking generally, in the period 750 to 1215 A. C. the era was current some time or other in that portion of India which would be bounded by straight lines drawn from Saugor to Allahabad, then to Banaras, from there through Bandhogarh to the Narmadā and then along the bank of the river to the western boundary of the Jabalpur District.

When a branch of the Kalachuri family established itself at Tummāṇa towards the close of the ninth century A. C., it introduced the era in Dakṣiṇa Kōsala. But here too, as in the other parts of India, the earlier dates of the era are not available. The first date which comes from Chhattisgarh is K. 821 (1069 A. C.) of No. 75. This is followed by 24 other dates ranging from K. 831 to K. 969. They are furnished by the inscriptions of the Kalachuris of Ratanpur and their feudatories, ruling in Chhattisgarh including the former States of Kawardhā and Kānkēr. Down to 1220 A. C. the era was current in that portion of South India which stretched from the eastern boundary of the Balaghat, Bhandara and Chanda districts in the west to that of the Raigarh District in the east and from the Narmadā in the north to the northern part of the Bastar District in the south.<sup>2</sup> After 1220

A.C. the era began to lose ground in this part of the country also. The later records of the Kalachuris themselves came to be dated in the Vikrama saṁvat. The earliest of such dates is V. 1458 (1402 A.C.) of No. 107, which belongs to the reign of the later Kalachuri king Brahmadēva, who ruled at Raipur and Khalvāṭikā (modern Khalāri) in the Raipur District. As the memory of the Kalachuri era soon faded from the public mind, it was found necessary to change the Kalachuri date 900 of No. 93 to 1207 of the Vikrama saṁvat.

SOME DETAILS ABOUT THE CALCULATED DATES

Jovian years—Only three Kalachuri dates, viz., K. 322 of No. 120, K. 800 of No. 51, and K. 966 of No. 117 cite Jupiter's years. The first of these is of the twelve-year cycle, and the other two, of the sixty-year cycle. The first date is regular, but suggests a new epoch of the era, viz., 250-51 A.C. The second date works out regularly according to the northern luni-solar system; for, the cyclic year Khara was current during the Kalachuri year 800. The third date has quoted the cyclic year Īsvara incorrectly; for, according to the northern mean-sign system, the Jovian year had ended more than a year before the commencement of the cited Kalachuri year.<sup>1</sup>

Intercalary months—Only one date, K. 958 of No. 71 cites an intercalary month, viz., Āshāḍha which is specified as prathama Āshāḍha. It works out quite regularly. In two other cases also, viz., K. 909 of No. 61 and K. 928 of No. 66, the month Śrāvaṇa was intercalary, though it is not so specified. Prof. Kielhorn has noticed several similar cases of the Vikrama and Śaka dates in which the months were intercalary, though they were not so indicated by the wording of the dates.<sup>2</sup>

Irregular tithis—The only cases of irregular tithis noticed among the dates of the Kalachuri era which contain the necessary details for verification are five, viz., K. 772 of No. 47, K. 823 of No. 56, K. 885 of No. 122, K. 963 of No. 72 and K. 965 of No. 101. The first of these shows deviation of only one day in the specification of the week-day, which is not rare in inscriptional dates. In the second case the numerals of the date have been wrongly written as appears plain from other evidence. The irregularities in the remaining three cases can be clearly attributed to the carelessness of the scribes. Besides these, there is one more date, viz., K. 1000 of No. 92, in which the mistake is of the copyist who transcribed the record on the present plates from others which had probably suffered damage by corrosion.

Current tithis—In ten dates (viz., K. 460 of No. 22, K. 436 of No. 28, K. 486 of No. 23, K. 885 of No. 122, K. 890 of No. 86, K. 897 of No. 123, K. 905 of No. 94, K. 907 of No. 60, K. 926 of No. 65 and K. 965 of No. 116) the tithi is joined with the week-day on which it commenced, and not, as is usual, with the week-day on which it ended. In the first and third of these cases the reason is obvious; for, they are cases of saṅkrāntis which occurred during the particular tithis, though the latter were not current at sunrise. The second case is similar to that of Śaka 996 (in the Bijāpur stone inscription of the Western XXIII, pp. 197 ff., and Vol. IX, pp. 287 ff). They refer themselves to the reign of Mahārāja Sambhuyāsa, the ruler of Tōsalī. These dates have been referred to the Kalachuri era on the evidence of palaeography. Apart from these doubtful cases, no records of this era have been found in Orissa. On the other hand, the Āraṅ plates of Bhīmasēna, dated in the year 182, and the Ganjām plates of Śasāṅka, dated in the year 300, expressly refer themselves to the Gupta era, which clearly shows that the Gupta era was current in Chhattisgarh and Ganjām in the sixth and seventh centuries A.C. As for the early forms of the test letters noticed in the aforementioned records, they can be satisfactorily accounted for, as these records fall in the period 580-605 A.C. if their dates are referred to the Gupta era.

Chālukya Sōmēśvara II) which Prof. Kielhorn has taken to be regular.<sup>1</sup> In the seventh and eighth cases the tithis which commenced within about two hours after mean sunrise have been cited probably because they were current almost throughout the day. The sixth and ninth are śrāddha-tithis, and it is well-known that for the performance of a śrāddha the particular tithi is required to be current in the afternoon. In the remaining cases the tithi may have been cited, because it was current at the time of the transaction.

Special names of tithis—The third tithi of the bright fortnight of Vaiśākha is called akshaya-tritīyā in the date K. 905 of No. 94. Several grants dated in this era were made on the full-moon tithi of Kārttika, but only in two records (viz., Nos. 11 and 30) the tithi is called Mubā-Kārttikī. The eighth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha is called Rathāśṭamī in No. 88. This tithi goes now by the name of Bhīṣm-āśṭamī, the preceding tithi being called Ratha-saptamī. The latter is correctly named in No. 121. Appendix, No. 4 mentions a yugādi as a holy tithi on which Gōsaladēvī, the mother of the king Vijaya-sirīha, bathed in the Narmadā, but it is not further specified.

Nakshatras—No early record of the era mentions any nakshatra. The first inscription in which a nakshatra is referred to is No. 83. It states that the moon was in conjunction with the nakshatra Rōhiṇī at the time of her eclipse on the Kārttika paurṇimā in K. 880. Nakshatras are correctly quoted in three other records, viz., Hasta in K. 928 of No. 66, Mṛiga in the date K. 965 of No. 116 and Chitrā in K. 966 of No. 117. There is no mention of karaṇas, yōgas or lagnas anywhere in the records of this era.

Eclipses—Lunar eclipses are quoted in six dates, viz., K. 456 of No. 21; K. 880 of No. 83; K. 890 of No. 86; K. 900 of No. 91; K. 918 of No. 63 and K. 969 of No. 102. Of these, the lunar eclipse of K. 880 is noteworthy; for, it was predicted by an astrologer in opposition to others who held a divergent opinion at the court of Ratnadēva II. When his prediction came true, he was rewarded with the grant of a village. Solar eclipses are cited in seven dates, viz., K. 322 of No. 120; K. 404 of No. 25; K. 885 of No. 122; K. 896 of No. 89; K. 900 of No. 90; K. 926 of No. 64 and K. 966 of No. 117. All these eclipses, except that in K. 885, occurred on the days and in the years mentioned and were visible in India. As regards the eclipse in K. 885, there is probably a mistake in the specification of the month in which it occurred.

Saṅkrāntis—Three early dates, viz., K. 436 of No. 28, K. 460 of No. 22 and K. 486 of No. 24, mention saṅkrāntis. The first of these—the Vishuva or Mēsha-saṅkrānti—took place about seven hours before the commencement of the tithi with which it is coupled.<sup>2</sup> The other two saṅkrāntis, viz., the Tulā and the Karkaṭaka, occurred during the respective tithis. Among later dates, only three, viz., K. 821 of No. 75, K. 823 of No. 56, and K. 965 of No. 101, record grants made on the occasion of saṅkrāntis. In the first of these, the saṅkrānti was the Uttarāyaṇa or Makara; in the second, it is not specified, but as it is said to have occurred on the fourteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Phālguna, it must have been Mīna. This saṅkrānti does not work out regularly. There is apparently some mistake in the numerals of the year which should be 827. The third saṅkrānti was again Makara, but it is not coupled with any tithi or week-day and, therefore, does not admit of verification.<sup>3</sup>

POLITICAL HISTORY

THE ABHIRAS

The Ābhīras were an ancient race which, according to the Mahābhārata, Harivaṃśa and the Purāṇas, had spread in the western provinces of India from the Panjab in the north to Maharashtra in the south. They are, in many passages, conjoined with the Sūdras, with whom they appear to be conterminous in the north-western parts of India.<sup>1</sup> They spoke a language which, according to Daṇḍin's Kāvyaḍarśa<sup>2</sup>, was called Apabhraṃśa. The Mahābhārata<sup>3</sup> and the Vāyupurāṇa<sup>4</sup> call them Mlēcchhas. This term, according to Patañjali, signifies those who could not pronounce the Āryan language correctly.<sup>5</sup> Like the Sūdras, therefore, the Ābhīras were probably the aboriginal inhabitants of the country who were gradually admitted to the Hindu fold.

The Mahābhārata mentions three divisions of the Ābhīras dwelling in the north-west of India, viz., those who lived on the bank of the Sarasvatī, fishermen and mountaineers.<sup>6</sup> In another passage the epic states that the tīrtha Vinaśana lay in the country of the Ābhīras as the sacred river Sarasvatī disappeared at the place through hatred of the Sūdras and the Ābhīras living there.<sup>7</sup> Elsewhere, Pañchanada, the land of the five rivers, is described as the stronghold of the Ābhīras.<sup>8</sup> We are told that while Arjuna was encamped in that fertile country together with the women of the Vṛishṇis and the Andhakas, whom he was escorting from Dvārakā to Hastināpura after the internecine fight amongst the Yādavas, he was attacked by the Ābhīras. All these references indicate the eastern part of the Panjab between the Satlaj and the Yamunā as the original home-land of the Ābhīras. From there they appear to have spread beyond Mathura in the east and to Saurashtra, Gujarat and Maharashtra in the south. Ptolemy mentions Abiria, which was evidently the country of the Ābhīras. It was situated above Pattalene on the Sindhu and probably corresponds to the central portion of Sindh above the delta of that river.<sup>9</sup> According to the Vishṇupurāṇa, the Sūdras and the Ābhīras inhabited the provinces of Saurāshṭra, Avanti (Western Malwa), Sūra (Mathurā), Arbuda (Aravali) and Marubhūmi (Marwad).<sup>10</sup> The Bṛihatsamhitā of Varāhamihira mentions the Ābhīra country with Kōṅkaṇa among the janapadas of the south.<sup>11</sup> Parāśara, cited in the commentary of the Bṛihatsamhitā, also groups the Sūdra-Ābhīra country with Saurāshṭra, Mahārāshṭra, Sindhu-Sauvīra and other countries of the south-west.<sup>12</sup> The Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas mention in one passage that the Ābhīras dwelt in the north-west region, but in another passage they place them in the south together with the inhabitants of Mahārāshtra, Vidarbha, Āsmaka, Kuntala and others.<sup>1</sup> In a third passage the Mārkaṇḍēyapurāna groups the Ābhīras with the people of Bhṛigukachchha, Kōṅkaṇa, Mahārāshtra, Karṇāta, the country on the banks of the Vēṅī (Waingāngā), Nāsikya and others.<sup>2</sup> These passages seem to point to the modern district of Khandesh as their stronghold in the south. Even now the Ābhīras or Ahīrs predominate in that district of the Bombay State.

From ancient times the Ābhīras have followed the profession of cowherds. Their settlement was called ghōṣha.<sup>3</sup> The Harivaṁśa describes how Kṛishṇa, the incarnation of Viṣṇu, was brought up, since his birth, in a ghōṣha or settlement of cowherds.<sup>4</sup> From certain similarities between the early lives of Kṛishṇa and Christ, such as the worship of the boy-god, his reputed father's knowledge that he was not his son and the massacre of innocents, Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar inferred that the Ābhīras must have brought these stories with them when they migrated to India in the first century of the Christian era.<sup>5</sup> This theory has since been shown to be untenable. The Harivaṁśa nowhere states that the cowherds among whom Kṛishṇa was brought up belonged to the Ābhīra race. The main incident of Kṛishṇa's early life, viz., his killing of Kāṁsa, was well-known long before the time of Patañjali (circa 150 B. C.); for, we learn from the Mahābhāshya that it was dramatised and represented on the stage.<sup>6</sup> Moreover, Patañjali specifically mentions the Ābhīras. While discussing the nature of the compound Sūdr-Ābhīram, he mentions the prima facie view that Ābhīra is a sub-caste under Sūdra and ultimately states his siddhānta that it is an altogether different caste.<sup>7</sup> The discussion makes it plain that if the Ābhīras were foreigners, they must have migrated to India long before the second century B. C., in which we find them not only admitted to the Hindu fold but given a definite place in the caste system.

The status of the Ābhīras seems to have undergone changes in the course of ages. We have seen that in the time of Patañjali they were generally associated with the Sūdras, but were relegated to a different caste. According to the Manusmṛiti, the son of a Brāhmaṇa from an Ambashṭha woman belongs to the Ābhīra caste.<sup>8</sup> Another smṛiti, cited by Kaiyaṭa, states that the woman should be of the Ugra caste.<sup>9</sup> These are, of course, theories of Brahmanical writers. In practical life the Ābhīras generally resembled the Sūdras. The Kāśikā, a well-known commentary on Pāṇini's Aṣṭādhyāyī, says that the Ābhīras were Mahāsūdras, i. e., superior Sūdras<sup>10</sup> and this view is adopted in the Amarakōśa. As

A commentator explains the term as Sūdrāṇām bal-ādhibikṛitab, 'a commander of the Sūdra army'. The paddhati of Kēśava also explains Mahāsūdra as 'a royal officer' (Rājakṛyo mahāsūdraḥ). *J. shown below, some Ābhīras attained royal position, which seems to have raised the status of their caste. Kshīrasvāmin, a commentator of the Amarakośa, remarks that an Ābhīra belongs to the Vaiśya caste.<sup>1</sup> This view was probably based on the fact that the Ābhīras generally followed the profession of cattle-breeding, which, from ancient times, has been regarded as the privilege of the Vaiśyas.

The Mahābhārata states that there were Ābhīra gaṇas dwelling in the north-west.<sup>2</sup> Like the Mālavas and the Kshudrakas mentioned by Alexander's historians, they also had probably a republican constitution. In the Allahabad stone pillar inscription of Samudragupta, the Ābhīras are grouped with the Mālavas, Ārjunāyanas, Yaudhēyas, Mādrakas and others who submitted and paid tribute to the great Gupta Emperor.<sup>3</sup> These tribes are mentioned separately from the kings of Āryāvarta (i. e., North India) whom Samudragupta forcibly uprooted. It is well-known that the Mālavas and the Yaudhēyas had republican organisations, as coins mentioning their gaṇas have been discovered.<sup>4</sup> The inference, therefore, seems justifiable that like them the Ābhīras too had a republican form of government. When the Bactrian Greeks, Sakas and Kushāṇas invaded the north-western parts of India, the Ābhīras, like the Mālavas, Yaudhēyas, Sibis and others, migrated to the south and settled in Rajputana, Sindh and Maharashtra.<sup>5</sup> They seem to have continued to hold their own in North India down to the Gupta age. We have, however, no further information about them as no inscriptions or coins of this tribe have been found in North India.

The Ābhīras did not exclusively follow the profession of cowherds. Some took to other callings. Even now in the states of Bombay and Madhya Pradesh there are some Ābhīra Brāhmaṇas. In Khandesh, which is still their stronghold, they have adopted various professions such as those of goldsmiths and carpenters. On their migration to the south, some Ābhīras seem to have occupied high political position under the Kshatrapa rulers of Western India. A stone inscription<sup>6</sup> found at Gunda in Saurashtra mentions an Ābhīra general named Rudrabhūti, who served under the western Kshatrapa Rudrasimha. This inscription is dated Saka 102 (180 A. C.). Īśvaradatta, who seems to have ousted the Western Kshatrapas, though for a very brief period, may have been an Ābhīra as supposed by some scholars.<sup>7</sup> Other Ābhīras may have held similar positions of power and vantage under the Sātavāhanas. The Purāṇas say that the Ābhīras who succeeded the Andhras (i. e., the Sātavāhanas) in the Deccan were Andhrabhṛityas, i. e., servants of the Andhras.<sup>8</sup> One of them, Īśvarasēna, seems to have usurped power after Puṣumāvi, the last king of the Sātavāhana dynasty.

From the Nasik cave inscription, which is the only early record of the Ābhīra dynasty, we learn that this Īśvarasēna was an Ābhīra and bore the title of Rājan.<sup>9</sup> As his father Śivadatta bears no royal title, Īśvarasēna was plainly the founder of the Ābhīra dynasty. As shown before,<sup>10</sup> he flourished about 250 A. C. and was probably the originator of the so-called Kalachuri-Chēdi era. Like his predecessors, the Sātavāhanas, he also used a metronymic and called himself Māḍharīputra. This clearly indicates that he took pride in tracing his descent on the mother's side from a Vedic sage. Though the Ābhīras themselves spoke an Apabhraṃśa or corrupt language, they, unlike the Sātavāhanas, seem to have patronised Sanskrit. It is worthy of note that the Nasik cave inscription of Īśvarasēna's reign is written in a language which is predominantly Sanskrit. It is, of course, not an official document, but it clearly shows that Sanskrit was slowly asserting itself under the rule of the Ābhīras.

Judging by the extent of his era, Īśvarasēna appears to have ruled over a large territory comprising Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra. He was followed by nine other kings, whose names have, unfortunately, not come down to us.<sup>1</sup> The Ābhīras seem to have ruled for 167 years<sup>2</sup> and were supplanted by their feudatories, the Traikūṭakas, in circa 415 A.C.

As stated above, Khandesh was the stronghold of the Ābhīras. Petty princes of the Ābhīra dynasty appear to have continued to rule in Khandesh till the 13th century A. C. A stone inscription at Āmbē in the Hyderabad State records that Khōlēśvara, a general of the Yādava king Simhaṇa, exterminated Lakshmīdēva, the lord of Bhambhāgiri, who belonged to the Ābhīra dynasty.<sup>3</sup> Bhambhāgiri is probably identical with Bhāmēr, four miles south of Nizampur in the Pimpalner tālukā of the West Khandesh District. Near Bhāmēr is a great fortified hill which has many ruined gateways, gates, towers and also some old caves locally known as 'Rājā's houses.'<sup>4</sup> This fort was probably known as Bhambhāgiri. The aforementioned Āmbē inscription describes Khōlēśvara as a very wild fire which burned the forest of the family of Lakshmīdēva, the Ābhīra king of Bhambhāgiri, and a similar statement occurs about Simhaṇa in the Uddari stone inscription.<sup>5</sup> This plainly indicates that the whole family of Lakshmīdēva was exterminated, and his kingdom was annexed by the Yādava king Simhaṇa.

Another king named Kāmapāla, who was vanquished by Kṛishṇa, the grandson and successor of Simhaṇa, probably belonged to the Ābhīra dynasty; for, his defeat is said to have delighted the cowherds, who may have been oppressed by him.<sup>6</sup> The Tāsgaon plates of Kṛishṇa's reign intimate that Kṛishṇa's feudatory Kēśava obtained a victory over a chief of the cowherds, who may have been identical with the aforementioned Kāmapāla.<sup>7</sup> He also may have been ruling in some part of Khandesh. After the thirteenth century we do not hear of the Ābhīra kings.

Judging by their names, both Īśvarasēna and his father Sivadatta were followers of the Hindu religion and devotees of Śiva. But like their predecessors, the Sātavāhanas, the Ābhīras seem to have extended their patronage to the followers of other faiths also. That Buddhism was flourishing during their rule is clearly indicated by the Nasik cave inscription of Īśvarasēna's reign. Even foreigners like the Śakas embraced it and made munificent donations for the benefit of the Buddhist monks. Several guilds were flourishing in their kingdom, in which people invested large amounts for making permanent endowments. This indicates that peace, order and a general sense of security prevailed in the country during their rule.

FEUDATORIES OF THE ABHIRAS

Mahārājas of Valkha—Until recently we had no knowledge of any feudatories of the Ābhīras. This was due to the circumstance that certain grants<sup>1</sup> which originally belonged to Khandesh and were dated in the Kalachuri era were relegated to North India and were supposed to be dated in the Gupta era as they were discovered at Indore. The close similarity which these grants bear in respect of characters, phraseology and mode of dating to a fragmentary grant found at Sirpur<sup>2</sup> in the West Khandesh District leaves no doubt that they also originally came from Khandesh.<sup>3</sup> These grants give the following genealogy :—

Mahārāja Svāmidāsa (Year 67)

Mahārāja Bhulūṇḍa (Year 107)

Mahārāja Rudradāsa (Year 117)

As these grants do not mention any royal genealogy, the relation of these princes inter se is not known. All of them are described as parama-bhaṭṭāraka-pād-ānudhyāta 'meditating on the feet of the lord paramount', which clearly shows that they acknowledged the suzerainty of some other power. The dates of their grants must plainly be referred to the so-called Kalachuri-Chēdi era founded by the Ābhīra Śvarasēna. The years 67, 107 and 117 mentioned in these records correspond to 316-17, 356-57 and 366-67 A. C. respectively. These princes were, therefore, probably feudatories of the Ābhīra Emperors.

These princes ruled from Valkha which is probably identical with Vāghli, now a small village, 6 miles north by east of Chalisgaon in the East Khandesh District.<sup>4</sup> Most of the places mentioned in their grants can be identified in the vicinity of Vāghli.<sup>5</sup>

No copper-plates or stone inscriptions of any successors of Rudradāsa have been discovered, but in an inscription in Cave XVII at Ajaṅṭā<sup>6</sup> we find similar names ending in dāsa which may have belonged to the same dynasty. This inscription gives the following genealogy :—

<sup>4</sup> Rao Bahadur K. N. Dikshit has suggested that Valkha may be identical with Bāhaḷ in the Chalisgaon tāluka of East Khandesh, where a large hoard of punch-marked coins was recently discovered. J. N. S. I., Vol. VIII, p. 3.

Vidarbha. After the fall of the Vākātakas, this feudatory family of Khandesh was overthrown by the Kalachuris who occupied Northern Maharashtra in circa 550 A. C.

Īśvararāta—Another feudatory who probably owed allegiance to the Ābhīras was ruling in Central Gujarat. He is known from a fragmentary copper-plate grant discovered at Kalachhala near Chhota Udaipur in the Bombay State. Only the first plate of this grant, which originally must have consisted of two or three plates, has been found. It mentions one Īśvararāta, who meditated on the feet of a lord paramount (Paramabhaṭṭāra-kapād-ānudhyāta). Īśvararāta, though he bears no royal title, was plainly a feudatory of some imperial power. He appears to have ruled over a fairly extensive territory; for, among the persons to whom he addressed his order are included such high officers of the State as Kumārāmātya and Uparika.<sup>1</sup> The extant portion of the grant contains no date, but its palaeography and wording, which closely resemble those of the aforementioned grants from Khandesh, indicate that Īśvararāta flourished in the 4th century A. C. Like the Mahārājas of Valkha, he was probably a feudatory of the Ābhīras.

Īśvararāta's grant was made at Prachakāsā. This place may be identical with Prakāsha on the Tāpī in North Khandesh. The village Kupikā granted by the charter cannot now be traced, but Vañkikā, the headquarters of the territorial division in which it was situated, may be represented by the modern village Vānkaḍ, about 20 miles from Chhota Udaipur. Īśvararāta, therefore, appears to have held Central Gujarat and some portion of the Khandesh District.

No successor of Īśvararāta is known; but his family may have continued to hold Central Gujarat until it was ousted by Sarva Bhaṭṭāraka who appears to have risen to power in circa 400 A. C. As shown elsewhere,<sup>2</sup> the latter's coins, imitated from those of the Western Kshatrapas, are found in abundance in Central Gujarat and Saurashtra.

The Kings of Māhishmatī—The Ābhīras appear to have soon extended their rule to Anūpa (the country around Māhishmatī) and Ākarāvanti (Malwa) also. It has been noticed that the potin coins of the Western Kshatrapas, which were intended for circulation in Malwa, suddenly come to an end in 240 A. C.<sup>3</sup> The reason for this contraction of Kshatrapa power is supposed to be the rise of the Vākātika Vindhyaśakti. We have, however, no indication of the extension of the Vākātika power north of the Narmadā in this early period,<sup>4</sup> while we have evidence of the spread of the Ābhīra kingdom in the use of the Ābhīra era in the countries of Anūpa and Ākarāvanti in the fourth and fifth centuries A. C. The era must have been introduced there by the Ābhīras or their feudatories.

One of these feudatories was Mahādandanāyaka Saka Śrīdharavarman, the son of Saka Nanda, whose stone inscription,<sup>5</sup> recording the excavation of a well, was found at Kānākhērā near Sānchī in the Bhopal State. Though a Saka by extraction, Śrīdharavarman did not probably belong to the house of Chasṭana; for unlike the Western Kshatrapas, he dated his record in the era of the Ābhīras, not in that of the Sakas. The title Mahādandanāyaka prefixed to his name in the Kānākhērā inscription indicates that he began his career as a military officer, probably of the contemporary Ābhīra king. Later, he may have risen to the status of a feudatory.<sup>1</sup> As the power of the Ābhīras declined, he appears to have declared his independence and begun to date his records in his regnal years, though he did not, for some years, discard his previous military title<sup>2</sup> or the Ābhīra era which had become well established in the country under his rule.

The Kānākhērā inscription is dated in the thirteenth year of Śrīdharavarman's reign. It contains another date at the end, the reading and interpretation of which are, unfortunately, not quite certain. As shown elsewhere,<sup>3</sup> the correct reading of the date appears to be 102, which, being referred to the Ābhīra era, becomes equivalent to 351-52 A. C. Śrīdharavarman seems, therefore, to have declared his independence in circa 339 A. C.

Another inscription<sup>4</sup> of Śrīdharavarman has recently come to light at Ēraṇ in the Saugor District of Madhya Pradesh. In this record Śrīdharavarman is seen to have discarded his previous military title and assumed instead the titles Rājān and Mahākshatrapa which, as in the inscriptions and coins of the Western Kshatrapas, signified complete independence. He has also omitted therein all reference to the Ābhīra era, perhaps because it recalled his previous submission to another power. The Ēraṇ inscription is dated in the 27th regnal year. It seems, therefore, to have been put up in 365 A. C. Śrīdharavarman may have flourished from 339 A. C. to 368 A. C.

Neither of these two inscriptions mentions any capital of Śrīdharavarman. That he held the Vidiśā-Ērikiṇa territory is certain; for, his records have been found in that part of the country. It is, however, not unlikely that his rule extended farther west to the Anūpa country also, where the Ābhīra era continued in use for at least 50 years more; for, no other ruler of his power and prestige is known to have flourished in Central India in that period. If this supposition is correct, Māhishmatī may have been his capital.<sup>5</sup>

The Ēraṇ record is incised on a pillar, called yashṭi, erected by Satyanāga, the Arakshika and Sēnāpati of Śrīdharavarman, as a memorial to the Nāga soldiers who met with a hero's death in a battle fought at the adhishṭhāna of Ērikiṇa (modern Ēraṇ). In that record Satyanāga, who hailed from Maharashtra, expressed the hope that the yashṭi, raised by the Nāgas themselves, would inspire future generations of warlike people to perform similar heroic deeds; for, it was a place where friends and foes met together in a spirit of service and reverence. Unfortunately, no particulars of the battle in which these Nāga soldiers laid down their lives have been preserved in the inscription. Perhaps the enemy was the ruler of some neighbouring country like Mēkalā.

The Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta mentions the Sakas and the Muruṇḍas as border chiefs who submitted to the mighty Gupta Emperor and solicited his charters confirming them in the enjoyment of their own territories.<sup>6</sup> The Saka chief is usually taken to be one of the Western Kshatrapas; but the kingdom of the Kshatrapas lay far in the west. Besides, their rule in Malwa seems to have come to an end about the middle of the third century A. C. with the rise of the Ābhīras. The Saka king who submitted to Samudragupta must, therefore, be identified with Śrīdharavarman. He may have paid homage to the Gupta Emperor some time after 365 A. C.,

<sup>2</sup> Other instances of a similar type are the Sēnāpati Pushyamitra, the founder of the Śunga dynasty, who retained his military title even after performing two Aśvamūḍhas (Ep. Ind., Vol. XX, p. 57), and the Mahāsēnāpati Śaka Māna who issued his coins mentioning the military title (J. N. S. I., Vol. XII, pp. 90 ff.).

when he heard reports of the latter's brilliant victories in North and South India. Later, Samudragupta, on some provocation, appears to have attacked the Saka king's territory and obtained a decisive victory over him in the battle of Ērikiṇa. He then annexed the territory round Ērikiṇa<sup>1</sup> which had strategic importance, and erected a monument there 'for augmenting his own fame.' He appears, however, to have allowed the Saka king to continue in possession of the rest of his kingdom as he did in the case of some republican tribes such as the Sanakānikas and the Kharaparikas.<sup>2</sup> It is well known that it was Samudragupta's son Chandragupta II, who first conquered Eastern and Western Malwa in the course of his 'conquest of the whole earth', some time in the last decade of the 4th century A. C. The earliest dated record of the Guptas found in Malwa is the Udayagiri cave inscription of Chandragupta II, dated G. 82 (401-2 A. C.)

Śrīdharavarman, though he belonged to the Saka race, was a follower of the Hindu religion. Both he and his father Nanda bear Hindu names. He was a devout worshipper of Kārttikēya and, like an orthodox Hindu, believed that he could secure permanent residence in heaven by means of charitable works like the excavation of a well. In both the records of his reign he is described as dharmavijayin or a righteous conqueror, which implies that he did not wage any war for self-aggrandizement. His liberal policy attracted able men from distant countries like Maharashtra. He trusted them and appointed them to important military posts. His inscriptions are written in a good Sanskrit kāvyā style. They show that the revival of the classical language had already commenced before the age of the Guptas. Like the Western Kshatrapas and the Ābhīras, the Sakas of Central India also appear to have given liberal patronage to Sanskrit poets at their court.

We do not know how long the Sakas continued to rule in Central India. They were probably overthrown when they suffered a defeat at the hands of Chandragupta II towards the close of the 4th century A. C. Thereafter, we have two copper-plate grants of Mahārāja Subandhu, both made at Māhishmatī, one of which was found somewhere in the former Barwāni State and the other in one of the famous Bāgh caves.

These grants of Subandhu bear close resemblance in respect of characters, phraseology and royal sign-manual to the aforementioned grants of the Mahārājas of Khandesh. All of them probably belong to the same period. The era in which they are dated must therefore be identical. The date of the Bāgh cave plate is lost, but that of the Barwāni plate which is well preserved is the year 167. If this is referred to the Ābhīra era, it becomes equivalent to 416-17 A. C. Subandhu, therefore, flourished in the first quarter of the fifth century A. C.

Unlike the Mahārājas of Valkha, Subandhu does not refer to any suzerain even in a general manner, which shows that he was an independent ruler. In 416-17 A. C. the Gupta power had, no doubt, reached its peak. Chandragupta II was dead at the time and was succeeded by his son Kumāragupta I; but there is no reason to suppose that the Gupta dominion had suffered any diminution at the beginning of the latter's reign. It may, therefore, be asked how Kumāragupta allowed Subandhu to enjoy independence just on the border of the Avanti province which was undoubtedly under Gupta rule at the time. The reason is not far to seek. The Anūpa country, where Subandhu was ruling, comprised the territory along both the banks of the Narmadā, now included in the Nemad Districts of Madhya Pradesh and Madhya Bharat as well as the adjoining territory. Just about this time there was rising the powerful State of the Traikūṭakas across the Narmadā.<sup>1</sup> According to the Purāṇas, the Ābhīra rule lasted for 167 years. The Ābhīras were succeeded by the Traikūṭakas, who soon extended their sway to Northern Maharashtra, Konkan and Gujarat. The kingdom of Māhishmatī may, therefore, have been allowed to continue as a buffer state between the dominions of the Traikūṭakas and the Guptas.

Subandhu's descendants may have continued to rule from Māhishmatī for some years more; but when the Vākāṭaka Narēndrasēna (circa 450-470 A. C.) extended his suzerainty to Malwa, he must have annexed the intervening kingdom of Anūpa. Thereafter, the country was governed by a scion of the Vākāṭaka family. The narrative in the eighth chapter of the Daśakumāracharita, which appears to have a historical basis,<sup>2</sup> shows that the last Vākāṭaka Emperor (probably Harishēṇa) had placed one of his sons on the throne of Māhishmatī. Soon thereafter, the country was occupied by the Kalachuris in circa 525 A. C.

THE TRAIKUTAKAS

This royal dynasty derived its name from Trikūṭa or a three-peaked mountain or the district in which it was situated. This was evidently the home of the royal family. Several mountains named Trikūṭa situated in all the four directions of India are known from Sanskrit literature and lexicons. According to the Vishṇu<sup>3</sup> and Mārkaṇḍeya<sup>4</sup> Purāṇas, Trikūṭa was the name of the southern ridge of the mythical Mēru mountain. It was, therefore, situated in the north. Hēmachandra<sup>5</sup> and Mahēśvara,<sup>6</sup> who in their lexicons give Suvēla as its synonym, evidently place it in Ceylon. An ancient commentator of Bhartṛihari's Vākya-padīya<sup>7</sup> states that Trikūṭa was the name of a mountain in the Trikalīṅga or Andhra country. Finally, Kālidāsa places Trikūṭa in Aparānta<sup>8</sup> or North Konkan, and his view receives confirmation from Kēśava's Kalpadrūkōśa<sup>9</sup> which gives it as a name of the Sahyādri range. In recent times, R. B. Hiralal, who identified the Traikūṭakas with the Kalachuris, has expressed the view that Trikūṭa is identical with the Sātpurā mountain which was so called on account of its three prominent peaks, viz., the

Āmrakūṭa or Amarakaṇṭaka in the former Rewa State, Sālakūṭa in the Balaghat District and Madhukūṭa in the Chhindwara District.<sup>1</sup> As shown below, the inscriptions and coins of the Traikūṭakas have been found only in South Gujarat, North Konkan and Maharashtra. Traikūṭa, from which they derived their name, cannot, therefore, be located in the north, east, south or centre of India, but must be looked for in the west. Kālidāsa's description, which, as already stated, is supported by a lexicon, clearly indicates that it was situated in Aparānta or North Konkan. Bhagvanlal Indrajī suggested its identification with Junnar, in the Poona District, which is encircled by three ranges of hills.<sup>2</sup> The matter is now placed beyond doubt by the mention of the Pūrva-Trikūṭa viśaya (East Trikūṭa District) in the Anjaneri plates of Bhōgaśakti,<sup>3</sup> which shows that there was a district named after the mountain which divided it into two parts. A tax levied on the inhabitants of the eastern sub-division was assigned for the worship of the god Bhōgēśvara at Jayapura near Nasik. This clearly shows that Trikūṭa was probably the name of the range of hills that borders the Nasik District on the west.<sup>4</sup> This identification squares with the provenance of Traikūṭaka inscriptions and coins.

The earliest mention of the Traikūṭakas occurs in the Chandravalli inscription of Mayūraśarman.<sup>5</sup> This record includes Trēkūṭa (i. e., the Traikūṭakas) among the contemporaries of Mayūraśarman, the founder of the Kadamba dynasty, which shows that the Traikūṭakas were a power of some importance in the beginning of the fourth century A. C., to which period the Chandravalli inscription can be referred on palæographic grounds. The country of Trikūṭa had previously been included in the Sātavāhana kingdom. The Traikūṭakas seem, therefore, to have risen into prominence on the decline of the Sātavāhana power in Konkan and Maharashtra. The coins of the Traikūṭakas are closely imitated from those of the Western Kshatrapas which were current in Maharashtra. On the obverse, there is the king's face to the right as on Kshatrapa coins, but without any date, while on the reverse, inside a circle of dots and a circularly written legend, appear the usual Kshatrapa symbols, the chaitya, the sun and the moon.<sup>6</sup> This close resemblance suggests, as Rapson has remarked,<sup>7</sup> that the coins were intended for circulation in the districts which had previously been under the rules of the Kshatrapas.

Though the Traikūṭakas rose into prominence about the middle of the third century A. C., we have no Traikūṭaka records during the first two centuries of their rule. On the other hand we find an Ābhīra record of about the middle of the third century A. C. in the Nasik District,<sup>8</sup> which, as we have seen above, was the home province of the Traikūṭakas. The names of the two Ābhīras, Sivadatta and his son Rājjan Īśvarasēna, resemble those of the later Traikūṭaka kings, which end in either datta or sēna. Pandit Bhagvanlal, therefore, first propounded the theory that the Traikūṭakas were identical with the Ābhīras.<sup>9</sup> The Chandravalli inscription, however, mentions the Traikūṭas separately from the Ābhīras, thus indicating that the two royal families, though contemporary, were not identical. <sup>4</sup> In this connection it may be noted that the Pāṇḍu Lēṇa hill near Nasik is called Triraśmi (three-rayed) in the cave inscriptions there, and that the range of hills to the south of the Nasik District is still called Trimbak hill.

similarity of their names suggests some sort of connection between them. The Traikūṭakas were probably at first the feudatories of the Ābhīras whose era they adopted in their records. On the decline of the Ābhīra power, they seem to have asserted their independence. None of the three Traikūṭaka kings, known from inscriptions and coins, seems to have assumed a higher title than Mahārāja. But two of them are known to have issued coins, while one of them, Dahrasēna, explicitly mentions in his copper-plate inscription that he had performed an Aśvamēdha sacrifice. The later Traikūṭakas were, therefore, probably independent monarchs, though, as we shall see below, the last of them was ultimately defeated and forced to pay tribute by the Vākāṭaka king Harishēna.

The mention of Trikūṭa in the description of Raghu's digvijaya suggests that Kālidāsa, who flourished about 400 A. C. during the reign of Chandragupta II-Vikramāditya, knew of a Traikūṭaka kingdom on the western coast. The three copper-plate inscriptions of the dynasty edited here belong to a later date. From them and from coins, we get the following genealogy of the Traikūṭakas:—

Mahārāja Indradatta

Mahārāja Dahrasēna (K. 207=456-57 A. C.)

Mahārāja Vyāghrasēna (K. 241=490-91 A. C.)

The first of these, Indradatta, is known only from the coins of his son Dahrasēna. He is therein given the title Mahārāja. As his son was ruling in the Kalachuri year 207 (=456-57 A. C.), he may be assigned to the period 415-440 A. C.

The second king Dahrasēna is known from his Pārdī plates and silver coins<sup>1</sup> found at Daman in South Gujarat,<sup>2</sup> Karhad in the Satara District,<sup>3</sup> Kazad in the Indapur tālukā of the Poona District<sup>4</sup> and some other places.<sup>5</sup> Like his father, he calls himself Mahārāja both in the copper-plate inscription and coin-legends. The former supplies the additional information that he performed an Aśvamēdha sacrifice. On his coins he called himself paramavaishṇava, 'a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu', and in his copper-plate inscription, Bhagavat-pāda-karmakara, 'a servant of the feet of Bhagavat'. The Pārdī plates were issued from the victorious royal camp at Āmrakā, and record the donation of a village in the Antarmaṇḍalī viśhaya, which, on the analogy of the Antar-Narmadā viśhaya mentioned in inscription No. 11, seems to have comprised the territory on both the banks of the Maṇḍalī or modern Miṇḍhōlā river. The places mentioned in the grant can be identified in the country between the Pūrṇā and the Miṇḍhōlā in South Gujarat. As shown elsewhere, the date of the plates, the year 207, refers to the Kalachuri era, and corresponds to 456-57 A. C. Dahrasēna may, therefore, have reigned from circa 440 A. C. to 465 A. C.

Vyāghrasēna, the son and successor of Dahrasēna, is known from his Surat plates and silver coins found at Kazad in the Indapur tālukā and other places. His coins<sup>6</sup>, which resemble those of his father, are, however, rare and of one variety only. Like his father, he calls himself Mahārāja, and describes himself as paramavaishṇava as well as Bhagavat-pāda-karmakara. His Surat plates were issued from the victorious Aniruddhapura. As no affix like vāsakāt is added to it, the place may have been the royal capital. The plates record the grant of a village in the Iksharakī ābhāra. Iksharakī may be identical with Achchhāran, about 9 m. north of Surat. The date of the plates, the year 241, must be referred to the Kalachuri era, and corresponds to 490-91 A. C. Vyāghrasēna may, therefore, be assigned to the period from circa 465 A. C. to 492 A. C.

One more inscription, consisting of a single plate, was found inside a Buddhist stūpa at Kaṅhēri in North Konkan. It records the construction of a chaitya (i.e., the stūpa in which the inscription together with some relics was found) dedicated by a pilgrim from Sindh to the venerable Śāradvatīputra, the foremost disciple of the Buddha. The inscription mentions only the increasingly victorious reign of the Traikūṭakas, but does not name any reigning king. It is dated in the year 245 (494-95 A. C.). As a period of as many as 36 years intervenes between the date of the Pārḍī plates of Dahrasēna and that of the Surat plates of his son Vyāghrasēna, it seems that the latter were probably issued towards the close of Vyāghrasēna's reign. The Traikūṭaka king during whose reign the Kaṅhēri plate was issued may, therefore, have been the successor of Vyāghrasēna. During his reign the Trikūṭa country was invaded by Harishēṇa, the last known Vākāṭaka king who flourished in circa 475-500 A. C. In the inscription in the Ajaṅṭā cave XVI, Harishēṇa is credited with a victory over Trikūṭa,<sup>1</sup> but it is not known if he supplanted the ruling dynasty. He was possibly content with exacting a tribute from it as he must have done from the other countries mentioned in the same inscription, viz., Kuntala, Avanti, Kaliṅga, Kōsala, Lāṭa and Andhra.

After the Vākāṭakas, the Kalachuris became supreme in Gujarat, North Konkan and Maharashtra. The coins of Kṛishṇarāja, the earliest known king of the Kalachuri dynasty, have been found in the islands of Bombay and Sāshtī as well as the districts of Nasik and Satara.<sup>2</sup> Copper-plate inscriptions of the Early Kalachuris recording grants of villages in South Gujarat and the Nasik District have also been discovered. In the Kalachuri inscriptions Saṅkaragaṇa, the son of Kṛishṇarāja, is described as the lord of the countries between the eastern and western seas.<sup>3</sup> Konkan also must, therefore, have been included in the Kalachuri Empire. But no grants of land made by the Kalachuris have yet been discovered in Konkan, which seems to have been ruled by a feudatory family. For about a century after the date of the Kaṅhēri plate, however, we have no definite information about the history of Konkan.<sup>4</sup> From the Aihōḷe inscription<sup>5</sup> of Pulakēśin II we learn that his father Kirtivarman was 'the night of destruction to the Mauryas', and that Pulakēśin himself stormed their capital Purī and probably annexed their kingdom. As the Traikūṭakas vanish from history in the beginning of the sixth century A. C. and the Mauryas come on the scene within about fifty years, it has been conjectured that the Traikūṭakas themselves came in course of time to be known as the Mauryas.<sup>1</sup> But if the Traikūṭakas were descended from the imperial family of Magadha, it looks strange that they make no mention of their proud lineage in their records. It would appear, therefore, that when the Kalachuris conquered Konkan, they supplanted the Traikūṭakas by the Mauryas, who continued as their feudatories until both the royal families were ousted by Palakēsin II. The downfall of the Traikūṭakas may thus be dated in the first quarter of the sixth century A. C.

The Traikūṭaka kingdom at its largest extent seems to have extended from the Kīm in the north to the Kṛishṇā in the south, and to have comprised South Gujarat, North Konkan, and the Nasik, Poona and Satara Districts of Maharashtra. It is interesting to note that the Traikūṭakas maintained a fleet for the protection of their maritime provinces. During their regime Trikūṭa seems to have become famous as an emporium of salt. Their capital has not yet been definitely located. As observed already, Aniruddhapura seems to have been the capital at least during the reign of Vyāghrasēna. Dr. Hultzsch, on the authority of a statement of the lexicographer Yādava, identifies Aniruddhapura with Sūrpāraka, modern Sōpārā, in the Thana District. But Yādava merely states that the Aparānta country included Sūrpāraka.<sup>2</sup> Aniruddhapura, mentioned as the place of issue in the Surat plates, is probably identical with the victorious Aniruddhapurī, a Brāhmaṇa resident of which received a grant of land in the Surat District from the Sēndraka prince Allaśakti. It would, therefore, appear that Aniruddhapura was situated somewhere in the Surat District, but its exact location cannot be fixed.

The Traikūṭakas were followers of Hinduism and devotees of the god Viṣṇu. Both their copper-plate grants were made to Brāhmaṇas for the increase of religious merit of their parents and themselves. That Buddhism also flourished in their kingdom is shown by the Kaṇhēri plate which records the erection of a chaitya dedicated to Śāradvatīputra. The pilgrim who got it built came from the distant province of Sindh. This testifies to the peace and order which generally prevailed in the kingdom of the Traikūṭakas.

THE EARLY KALACHURIS OF MAHISHMATI

We have no definite information about the capital of the Kaṭachchuris or Early Kalachuris. All their known copper-plate grants were issued from their camps fixed at different places such as Ujjayinī and Vidiśā in Malwa and Ānandapura in Gujarat. It appears probable, however, that they ruled from Māhishmatī, modern Onkār Māndhātā,<sup>3</sup> which from very early times has been famous as a holy city. Even in later times when it had ceased to be their capital, the memory of its past glory was fresh in the mind of the people; for Rājasekhara in his Bālarāmāyaṇa<sup>4</sup> and Murāri in his Anargharāghava<sup>5</sup> mention it as the common or family capital of the Kalachuri kings. Besides, some later princes of the Haihaya dynasty, who ruled in the south as feudatories of the Chālukyas, mention with pride their title Māhishmatī-puravar-ēśvara 'the lord of Māhishmatī, the best of towns.'<sup>6</sup>

The mention of the Ārjunāyanas in the list of frontier tribes who submitted to Samudragupta<sup>1</sup> has been taken by some<sup>2</sup> to refer to the Kalachuris who trace their descent from Arjuna, the son of Kṛitavīrya. The Ārjunāyanas were indeed an ancient tribe. Their coins bearing the tribal name in Sanskrit are known in several varieties and on the evidence of palæography are ascribed to 100 B. C. Prof. Rapson dates their rise as a political community as early as the fourth century B. C.<sup>3</sup> They are included in the rājanyādi gaṇa (mentioned in Pāṇini, IV, 2, 53), which shows that their country was called Ārjunāyanaka. Varāhamihira places them in the northern division, and the provenance of their coins indicates that their homeland lay within the triangle Delhi-Jaipur-Āgrā.<sup>4</sup> This shows, however, that they were distinct from the Kalachuris who dwelt in the valley of the Narmadā. Besides, according to the Kāśikā<sup>5</sup> on Pāṇini, II, 4, 66, the Ārjunāyanas were the descendants of Arjuna who belonged to the Bhārata clan, and were, therefore, different from the Kalachuris who claimed their descent from Arjuna, the son of Kṛitavīrya.

Though the Early Kalachuris do not call themselves Haihayas in their grants, they soon came to be referred to by that name; for we learn from some inscriptions of the Early Chālukyas that Vinayāditya, the son of Vikramāditya I (680-697 A. C.), subjugated the Haihayas,<sup>6</sup> and Vikramāditya II (733-747 A. C.) married two Haihaya princesses, Lōkamahādēvī and her younger sister Trailōkyamahādēvī.<sup>7</sup> The Eastern Chālukya prince Vishṇuvardhana IV (764-799 A. C.) similarly espoused a princess of the Haihaya lineage whose son Nṛiparudra is mentioned as Dūtaka in a grant of Vijayāditya II.<sup>8</sup> These Haihayas were evidently identical with the Early Kalachuris.

It is not known whether the Early Kalachuris were descended from Mahārāja Subandhu who ruled from Māhishmatī in an earlier age; for there is a long period of nearly 150 years which separates them and for which no records have yet been discovered. The Early Kalachuris rose into prominence on the downfall of the Traikūṭaka dynasty. After the year 245 of the Kanḥēri plate<sup>9</sup> incised during the sovereignty of the Traikūṭakas, the next known date of the Kalachuri era is the year 292 furnished by the Sunao Kala grant of Saṅgamasimha.<sup>10</sup> He seems to have come to power after the Traikūṭakas; for the phraseology of the formal part of his grant bears close resemblance to that of the Traikūṭaka records, especially the Surat plates of Vyāghrasēna.<sup>11</sup> Saṅgamasimha issued the plates from Bharukachchha. Sōṇavvā, the village granted by him, is only two miles north of the Kīm and 18 miles north of Surat. It is, therefore, not unlikely that Saṅgamasimha had under his sway some territory which was previously included in the Traikūṭaka kingdom. But Saṅgamasimha, though he calls himself Mahārāja, was in reality a Mahāsāmanta (i. e., a great feudatory) of some other power. The only powerful contemporary dynasty to which he may have owed allegiance was that of the Kalachuris. We have unfortunately no records of the Early Kalachuris who were the real founders of the Kalachuri Empire of the sixth century A. C. The earliest dated record of the Kalachuris is Saṅkaragaṇa's Ābhōṇa grant of K. 347 (596-97 A. C.). As shown below, Saṅkaragaṇa's son Buddharāja was defeated by Maṅgalēśa in circa 601 A. C. Saṅkaragaṇa can, therefore, be referred to circa 575-600 A. C., and his father Krishṇarāja, to circa 550-575 A. C. Saṅgamasimha, who made his grant in 541 A. C., was, therefore, probably a feudatory of Krishṇarāja's father whose name<sup>1</sup> unfortunately has not come down to us.

This Kalachuri prince must have found a favourable opportunity for the extension of his power in the political conditions of the second quarter of the sixth century A. C. The Vākāṭaka dynasty seems to have come to an end with Harishēṇa's son. In Central India the meteoric rise of Yaśōdharman was followed by confusion and chaos. In the west the Maitrakas, who had founded a kingdom at Valabhī about half a century before, were not yet powerful enough to pursue an aggressive policy. In the south, though Pulakēśin I is said to have performed an Aśvamēdha, his power was probably confined to the northern Kanarese districts. Krishṇarāja's father seems to have extended his power in the east, west and south. In the west he supplanted the Traikūṭakas and divided their extensive kingdom among his feudatories. The Mauryas, as we have already seen, were placed in charge of Aparānta or North Konkan, while Gujarat or at least the central part of it was given in charge of Saṅgamasimha. We do not know whether Maharashtra including ancient Vidarbha was annexed to the Kalachuri kingdom during his reign or during that of his son Krishṇarāja.

Krishṇarāja seems to have still further extended the kingdom inherited from his father. His silver coins,<sup>2</sup> which are imitated from those of the Traikūṭakas, were at first intended for circulation in Gujarat, North Konkan and Maharashtra. Like the latter coins, they have on the obverse the bust of the king facing right, and on the reverse inside a circle of dots, runs the legend Paramamāhēśvara-mātā-pitri-pād-ānudhyāta-sri-Krishṇarājajah. In the middle, in place of the chaitya, the sun and the moon which figure on the Kshatrapa and Traikūṭaka coins, the king, who was a devotee of Śiva, inserted the figure of the recumbent bull, Nandī, facing right. These coins, which in their weight<sup>3</sup> and fabric, approximated to the Kshatrapa, Gupta and Traikūṭaka coins, were in circulation over a very wide country. They have been discovered in such distant parts as Rajputana<sup>4</sup> and Malwa<sup>5</sup> in the north, the districts of Satara<sup>6</sup> and Nasik<sup>7</sup> in the south, the islands of Bombay<sup>8</sup> and Sāshtī<sup>9</sup> in the west, and the districts Betul<sup>10</sup> and Amaravati<sup>11</sup> of Madhya Pradesh in the east. As these coins were in circulation for at least a hundred and fifty years after the time of Krishṇarāja,<sup>12</sup> be-

ing used by several later dynasties, it is not possible to say if the Kalachuri Empire in the time of Krishnarāja comprised all these distant territories. But that Gujarat, Konkan, and Maharashtra including Vidarbha were in any case comprised in it, seems beyond all doubt.

Krishnarāja's suzerainty over Vidarbha is also indicated by the recently discovered Nagardhan plates of the reign of Svāmirāja.<sup>1</sup> They were issued by his brother Nannarāja from Nandivardhana, modern Nagardhan near Ramtek in the Nagpur District, which is well known in history as one of the early capitals of the Vākāṭaka dynasty. The royal family to which Svāmirāja and Nannarāja belonged is not mentioned in the grant, but as similar names occur in some Rāshtrakūṭa grants found in Vidarbha,<sup>2</sup> these princes probably belonged to the Rāshtrakūṭa lineage. In the initial portion of this grant, Svāmirāja is described as 'meditating on the feet of the lord paramount.' The plates are dated in the year 322, which must be referred to the Kalachuri era and corresponds to 573-74 A. C. This is the only record of the Kalachuri era found in Vidarbha.<sup>3</sup> The use of this era indicates that the unnamed suzerain of Svāmidāsa was some Kalachuri king, probably Krishnarāja who flourished from circa 550 A. C. to 575 A. C.; for the era evidently spread to Vidarbha with the extension of the Kalachuri power.

The Nagardhan plates record two gifts—(i) one of 12 nivartanas of land in the village Chiñchapattikā, made by a Corporation of Mahāmātras (Elephant-drivers) and (ii) the other of the village Anikōllikā made by the ruling king at Prayāga. It is noteworthy that the seal of the plates has the figure of a goad as the emblem of the Corporation, with the legend gaṇa-dattib, meaning 'a gift of the Corporation.'

The descendants of Svāmirāja probably ruled in Vidarbha for a long time. On the downfall of the Kalachuris, they transferred their allegiance to the Early Chālukyas, and like them, dated their records in the Saka era.

Krishnarāja's son Saṅkaragaṇa is known from several records. His own Ābhōṇa plates<sup>4</sup> were issued from his camp at Ujjayinī, and record the donation of land in a village situated in the northern part of the Hyderabad State. It is not known if Western Malwa was permanently annexed to the Kalachuri Empire; but that Saṅkaragaṇa first conquered it and held it for some time is indicated by the fact that the epithets, employed to describe him in the Ābhōṇa plates and repeated in subsequent Kalachuri charters, were borrowed from or suggested by Gupta records, with which the drafter must have been acquainted in Ujjayinī. It is noteworthy that no such epithets occur in the description of his father Krishnarāja.

The Ābhōṇa plates show that Saṅkaragaṇa ruled over a vast empire which extended from Malwa in the north to Maharashtra in the south. That it comprised Gujarat is shown by the Saṅkheḍā plate of the general Śāntilla, which mentions Nirihullaka as his governor in Central Gujarat.<sup>5</sup> Saṅkaragaṇa is probably referred to as Gaṇa Saṅkara in the Mañjuśrīmūlakalpa as shown by Dr. Jayaswal.<sup>6</sup> His Ābhōṇa plates are dated in K. 347 (597 A. C.). His reign must have ended soon thereafter, as his son Buddharāja was defeated by Maṅgalarāja in circa 601 A. C. Saṅkaragaṇa may, therefore, be assigned approximately to the period 575-600 A. C.

Soon after his accession, Buddharāja found himself involved in a fight on the southern frontier of his kingdom. Several Chālukya inscriptions mention his defeat by the Early Chālukya king Maṅgalēśa or Maṅgalarāja. We learn, for instance, from Maṅgalēśa's Mahākūṭa inscription<sup>1</sup> (602 A.C.) that Maṅgalēśa, having set his heart on the conquest of the northern regions, defeated king Buddha and captured his whole treasure. The Nerur plates<sup>2</sup> add further details that this Buddharāja was the son of Saṅkaragaṇa and was possessed of the power of elephants, horses and footsoldiers. Finally, the Aihōlē stone inscription of Pulakēśin II describes in a figurative language that Maṅgalēśa, 'in that house which was the battlefield, took in marriage the damsel viḥ, the Fortune of the Kaṭachchuris, having scattered the gathering gloom, viḥ, the array of elephants (of the adversary), with hundreds of bright lamps which were the swords of his followers.'<sup>3</sup> These references leave no doubt about the identity of Buddharāja. Maṅgalēśa obtained a decisive victory over him. Buddharāja was completely routed and fled away, leaving his whole treasure behind which was captured by Maṅgalēśa. The latter could not, however, follow up the victory; for, just then Svāmīrāja of the Chālikya family, a redoubtable warrior who had attained victory in eighteen battles and who was probably ruling in Rēvatīdvīpa<sup>4</sup> (modern Rēḍi) in South Konkan as a feudatory of the Chālukyas, rose in rebellion, seemingly at the instigation of Buddharāja. Maṅgalēśa had, therefore, to abandon his original plan of making an expedition of conquest in the north, and rushed to Konkan to chastise the rebellious chieftain. In the fight which ensued, he killed Svāmīrāja and by way of thanksgiving made the grant of a village in South Konkan on the twelfth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika after observing a fast on the preceding day. The Nerur plates, in which this grant is recorded, are not dated, but the Mahākūṭa inscription, in which also the victory over Buddharāja is mentioned, is dated in the fifth regnal year, the cyclic year being Siddhārtha. As Fleet has shown, the inscription was probably incised in 601-2 A. C. Its contents show that it was put up soon after the defeat of Buddharāja,<sup>5</sup> which may, therefore, be dated approximately in 601 A. C.

<sup>1</sup> Ind. Ant., Vol. XIX, pp. 17-18. R. G. Bhandarkar, who did not accept Fleet's reading of the date in l. 15 of the Mahākūṭa inscription, placed Maṅgalēśa's accession in 591 A. C. (E. H. D., p. 69). In the Mahākūṭa inscription the reading rājya-pañcama-srīvarasē pravartamānē in l. 15 is clear. So the inscription belongs to the fifth year of Maṅgalēśa's reign. If we accept Bhandarkar's view that he came to the throne in 591 A.C., his fifth year would fall in 595-596 A.C. But the Ābhōṇa plates show that in 595-596 A.C. Saṅkaragaṇa, not Buddharāja, was reigning. Fleet's view about the accession of Maṅgalēśa presents no chronological difficulty.

<sup>4</sup> The Nerur plates, which mention the defeat and death of Svāmīrāja at the hands of Maṅgalēśa, do not explicitly say that he was ruling over Rēvatīdvīpa, but they state that the event occurred after the defeat of Buddharāja. The Aihōlē inscription describes Maṅgalēśa's capture of the island of Rēvatī after the defeat of the Kalachuri king. Svāmīrāja was, therefore, probably the ruler of the island of Rēvatī, modern Rēḍi. Nerur is only 16 miles south of Rēḍi. The village Kuṇḍivāṭaka granted by the plates is probably identical with the modern Kuḍāl, about 3½ m. north-east of Nerur. After killing Svāmīrāja, Maṅgalēśa seems to have placed the island in charge of his relative Satyāśraya Dhruvarāja Indravarman, who was the ruler of the adjoining territory. See his Goa plates issued from the Revatīdvīpa in the twentieth year of his reign. J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. X, p. 365.

<sup>5</sup> Fleet translates Kalatsūri-ībanamē sva-grība-dēva-drōṇyām gatam in the Mahākūṭa inscription by 'the wealth of the Kalachuris has been expended in the idol procession of the temple of our own god.' The sense, however, seems to be 'the wealth of the Kalachuris has been deposited in the treasury (drōṇā) of the temple of our own god.' Maṅgalēśa seems to have assigned the ten villages mentioned in the inscription to the god Makuṭēśvaranātha, having acquired them with the wealth of the Kalachuri king as well as that donated by his father and eldest brother.

For some reason Maṅgalēśa could not execute his original plan of making conquests in the north and planting a pillar of victory on the bank of the Bhāgirathī. He seems to have been fully occupied in his own country in ensuring the succession of his son after himself and in thwarting the legitimate ambition of his nephew Pulakēśin II. These internal dissensions of the Chālukyas gave the necessary respite to Buddharāja, who seems to have soon consolidated his position. Only two grants of this king have come to light so far. Both of them are dated after his defeat by Maṅgalēśa. The earlier of them, recorded in the Vaḍnēr plates<sup>1</sup>, was made in K. 360 (610 A.C.) at the royal camp fixed at Vidiśā (modern Besnagar near Bhilsa in Central India). The donated village was situated in the Nasik district. The later or Sarsavṇī grant<sup>2</sup> was made in K. 361 (610 A.C.) at the royal camp fixed at Ānandapura (probably modern Vaḍnagar in North Gujarat). The village granted was situated in the Broach District. These grants are separated by the short interval of about two months and a half<sup>3</sup>, during which Buddharāja had to march from Vidiśā to Ānandapura. Again, the villages granted are not situated in Eastern Malwa and Northern Gujarat but in the Nasik and Broach Districts. It seems plain, therefore, that the grants were made during the victorious campaigns of Buddharāja, and that Malwa and Northern Gujarat were not permanently annexed to the Kalachuri empire. This surmise receives confirmation from Yuan Chwang's mention of Silāditya as a former king of Malwa.<sup>4</sup> This king is evidently identical with Silāditya I-Dharmāditya, whose known dates range from G. 286 to G. 292 (i. e., from 605 A. C. to 611 A. C.). It will be noticed that they are subsequent to the date K. 347 (597 A.C.) of the Ābhōṇa plates issued by Saṅkaragaṇa from his camp at Ujjayinī. Again, within six years of the date of Buddharāja's Sarsavṇī plates, we find Silāditya's brother Kharagraha I making two grants<sup>5</sup> (dated G. 297) from his camp at Ujjayinī. Malwa conquered by Saṅkaragaṇa does not, therefore, seem to have remained under the sway of the Kalachuris for a long time. Buddharāja probably lost it to the king of Valabhī in the beginning of his reign when he suffered a defeat at the hands of Maṅgalēśa.

It has been suggested<sup>6</sup> that Buddharāja was the Mālava king who, according to Bāṇa's account, marched on Kanauj when he heard of the death of Prabhākaravardhana, the mighty king of Thaneshvar, and killing his son-in-law, the young Maukhari prince Grahavarman, threw the latter's wife Rājyaśrī into prison 'like a brigand's wife with a pair of fetters kissing her feet.' Buddharāja's army was subsequently routed by Rājyavardhana, who captured thousands of elephants and horses as well as a large treasure. There are several difficulties in the way of accepting this theory. The inscriptions of Harsha do not mention Buddharāja as an adversary of Rājyavardhana. On the other hand, they name Dēvagupta as the leader of the confederacy whom, together with all his allies, Rājyavardhana subdued and turned away like a wild horse. That in the time of Prabhākaravardhana, Malwa—probably the eastern part of it—was held by a king whose name ended in gupta seems certain; because Bāṇa mentions as Mālava princes the brothers Kumāragupta and Mādhavagupta who were asked to attend on Rājyavardhana and Harsha.<sup>7</sup> Bühler, therefore, conjectured<sup>8</sup> that the

<sup>8</sup> Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 70. Bühler suggested, however, that the word Mālava perhaps referred to the country of Mālava in the Panjab, which was much nearer to Thaneshvar than Malwa in Central India.

Mālava king who killed Grahavarman was Dēvagupta, and Hoernle thought that the latter was a brother of Kumāragupta and Mādhavagupta, and had usurped the throne of Malwa.<sup>1</sup> It is not unlikely that Dēvagupta was responsible for the destruction of Grahavarman. He was probably ruling over Eastern Malwa with Vidiśā as his capital; for, according to Yuan Chwang's testimony, Western Malwa was then under the rule of Silāditya I-Dharmāditya. Buddharāja cannot, therefore, be identified with the Mālava king mentioned by Bāṇa. Besides, in 605 A. C. when the aforementioned events took place, Maṅgalēśa was still supreme in the south. Only four years before, Buddharāja had sustained a crushing defeat at his hands and though for some reason Maṅgalēśa did not follow up the victory, the danger of his invasion could not have passed altogether. It is, therefore, doubtful if Buddharāja would have dared to carry his arms as far north as Kanauj, leaving the southern frontier of his own kingdom exposed to the attack of his powerful neighbour.

When Harsha swore to avenge the treacherous murder of his brother Rājyavardhana by Saśāṅka, the king of Gauḍa, he must have proceeded to make political alliances to achieve his object. His two powerful foes were Saśāṅka, the king of Gauḍa, and the king of Mālava. His alliance with Bhāskaravarman, the prince of Kāmarūpa (Assam), was obviously intended to hold the Gauḍa king in check on his eastern frontier. Unfortunately, Bāṇa's narrative comes to an abrupt close. It does not, therefore, tell us what measures Harsha adopted against the Mālava king, who, though defeated by Rājyavardhana, was not completely crushed. It is possible to conjecture that he sought the help of Buddharāja, who was the southern neighbour of the king of Malwa. Buddharāja's victorious campaigns in Eastern Malwa and Northern Gujarāt were evidently directed against Dēvagupta and Silāditya I. The latter may have been one of Dēvagupta's allies who are referred to in a general way in the inscriptions of Harsha. These expeditions were undertaken in 610 A. C. when, owing to the civil war in the Chālukyan kingdom, there was no danger of Buddharāja's territory being invaded by the Chālukyas. As we shall see later on, Harsha himself made war on the king of Valabhī probably after he had subdued the kings of the North.

The Vaḍṇēr and Sarsavṇī grants of Buddharāja indicate that notwithstanding the crushing defeat he sustained at the beginning of his career, Buddharāja retained his hold over the whole country from Gujarat to Maharashtra. With the accession of Pulakēśin II, however, matters took a different turn. After consolidating his position in the Kanarese country and subjugating his immediate southern neighbours, the Gaṅgas and the Ālupas, Pulakēśin seems to have turned his attention to the north. He stormed Purī, the capital of the Mauryas, which he captured after a hard-fought battle. He also became the lord of the three Mahārāshṭras<sup>2</sup>, comprising the Marathi-speaking districts in the States of Bombay, Madhya Pradesh and Hyderabad. The Aihōlē inscription does not name his adversary, but there can be little doubt that he was Buddharāja. The record says that Pulakēśin used all the three royal powers (viz., energy, counsel and royal position) to gain his object. Diplomacy seems, therefore, to have played as great a part as actual fight in the defeat of Buddharāja, which may have taken place about 620 A. C.

History does not know the names of Buddharāja's successors. They probably continued to rule at Māhishmatī with more or less independence. It seems that one of them made a last effort to regain the kingdom of his ancestors, but the attempt was not crowned with success, and the Haihayas were reduced to a state of servitude similar to that of the Ālupas (i. e., Ālupas), Gaṅgas and others who had already become the hereditary servants of the Chālukyas. As this event is referred to in Vinayāditya's grant<sup>3</sup> of Śaka 609, the defeat of the Haihayas must have occurred before 687 A. C. Thereafter, we do not hear of the Haihayas till the 8th century A. C., except in connection with the marriages of the princesses of the family with the scions of the Eastern and Western Chālukya dynasties.<sup>1</sup> The Haihayas, therefore, seem to have remained loyal to their overlords, the Chālukyas, until the latter's overthrow by the Rāshtrakūṭas. The rise of the Rāshtrakūṭas led to a change in the political fortune of the Haihayas or Kalachuris, to which we shall turn in a subsequent section.

THE EARLY GURJARAS

Several inscriptions<sup>2</sup> of the Gurjaras, all of them on copper-plates, dated in the Kalachuri era have been discovered in Western India between the Kīm and the Mahī. They range in dates from K. 380 to K. 486. This country was under the direct rule of the Kalachuris till K. 361 at least; for, in that year Buddharāja made the grant of a village in the Broach District.<sup>3</sup> After the overthrow of the Kalachuris, Pulakēśin II extended the northern limit of his empire to the Kīm, adding to it the provinces of Konkan, the three Maharashtras and southern Gujarat. Just about that time Harsha, the mighty ruler of Kanauj, was making extensive conquests in the north, and countries far and near were submitting to him. It must have seemed very likely that he would soon press to the south. Pulakēśin, therefore, wisely decided to create a buffer state in Central Gujarat under Dadda II of the Gurjara race, who had probably acquired already some portion of it during the hostilities of the Kalachuris and the Chālukyas in the south. Dadda II on his part was only too glad to acknowledge the suzerainty and get the support of his powerful southern neighbour. The Aihōlē inscription<sup>4</sup> tells us that the king of Lāṭa, who was none other than this Dadda, as well as the Mālava and the Gurjara, being impressed by Pulakēśin's valour, became, as it were, teachers of how feudatories subdued by force ought to behave. The grants of Dadda II are the earliest Gurjara records so far discovered in Gujarat. Kielhorn has shown that both in their eulogistic and formal parts they were drafted on the model of the earlier Kalachuri grants, and from this he rightly conjectured that 'the family of these chiefs (i. e., the Gurjaras) rose to independence only after the time of the Kaṭachchuri Buddharāja.'<sup>5</sup>

The Kairā grants of Dadda II mention two earlier princes of the dynasty, viz., his grandfather Dadda I and father Jayabhaṭa I alias Vitarāga. The former, who is styled Sāmanta, was only a feudal lord. As regards the suzerain to whom he owed allegiance, Fleet conjectured that he and also his son Jayabhaṭa I must have been vassals of the Kaṭachchuri king Buddharāja.<sup>6</sup> As the known dates of Dadda II range from K. 380 to K. 392, he probably flourished from circa K. 370 to K. 395. His grandfather Dadda I must, therefore, be referred to the period from circa K. 320 to K. 345 or from 570 A. C. to 595 A. C. The contemporary Kalachuri emperors were Kṛishṇarāja and his son Saṅkaragaṇa,<sup>7</sup> and not Buddharāja. It is again doubtful if Dadda I was at all ruling in Gujarat. From a copper-plate found at Saṅkhēḍā<sup>8</sup> we learn that Nirihullaka was ruling over the lower Narmadā valley, later on the heart of the Gurjara kingdom, as a feudatory of the Kalachuri Saṅkaragaṇa. Subsequently the country was under the direct rule of the Kalachuris as shown by Buddharāja's Sarsavṇī grant. The Gurjaras, therefore, came into possession of it after the Kalachuris. The sign-manuals of the Gurjara princes are in northern characters, though their grants are written in the southern script. This clearly indicates their northern origin. Dr. R. C. Majumdar has shown that Dadda I was probably identical with the homonymous son of the Brāhmaṇa Harichandra from his Kshatriya wife Bhadrā, who is mentioned in the Jodhpur inscription of the Pratihāra Bāuka<sup>1</sup> and who probably flourished about 575 A. C.<sup>2</sup> He was apparently ruling somewhere in the vicinity of Māṇḍavyapura (modern Māṇḍōr near Jodhpur), which he and his brothers are said to have conquered. The connection of the two families is also indicated by the similarities of some names noticed in them.<sup>3</sup>

No records of Dadda I have yet been discovered, but from the Kairā grants<sup>4</sup> of his grandson we learn that he was a devotee of the Sun. We are again told that the lands at the foot of the Vindhya mountain delighted him, which seems to suggest that he raided the country up to the Vindhya mountain from his base in Rajputana. He may be referred to the period 570-595 A. C.

About his son and successor Jayabhāṭa I, we know very little. From the biruda Vitarāga, 'one whose passion has vanished', applied to him, he seems to have been a man of tranquil nature. He had two sons, Dadda II who succeeded him and Raṇagraha who was apparently placed by his brother in charge of the eastern part of his kingdom. Jayabhāṭa I may have flourished from circa 595 A. C. to 620 A. C.

Dadda II alias Praśāntarāga, 'one whose passion has subsided', is known from several inscriptions. He was the real founder of the Gurjara kingdom in the Lāṭa country. His Kairā plates (two sets) are dated in K. 380 (629-30 A. C.) and K. 385 (634-35 A. C.), and record the grant of Sirīshapadraka (modern Sisōdrā, 11 miles from Anklēśvar in the Broach District) to certain Brāhmaṇas. Two other sets of plates,<sup>5</sup> issued on the same day in K. 392 (641-2 A. C.), register the grant of two fields in the village Kshīrasara in the vishaya (district) of Saṅgamakhēṭaka (modern Saṅkhēḍā prānt of the Baroda District). He is also mentioned in a fragmentary Saṅkhēḍā grant<sup>6</sup> of his brother Raṇagraha, dated K. 391. As stated above, he was obliged to acknowledge the suzerainty of Pulakēśin II soon after he carved out a kingdom for himself in the lower Narmadā valley. On the seals of his plates he is styled Sāmanta or a feudal lord, while in his grants he is said to have won the pañchamahāśabda (the right to use the five great sounds). Like his grandfather, he was a devotee of the Sun.

Dadda II heads the genealogy in all later records. His descendants took pride in describing him as one 'who had a canopy of glory, possessing the grace of a moving large and white cloud, which had sprung from his protection of the king of Valabhī when he was attacked by the Emperor, the illustrious Harshadēva.'<sup>7</sup> It has been recognized that Dadda II, the ruler of a petty state, a mere Sāmanta, could not have, unaided, given protection to the ruler of Valabhī against the armies of the most powerful ruler of the time with the resources of a vast empire at his command. Besides, it is noteworthy that Dadda himself is silent about this glorious achievement ascribed to him;<sup>1</sup> for there is no mention of it even in his grants of K. 392 (641-42 A. C.), which were made towards the end of his reign and before which the event must certainly have happened. Scholars are, however, not agreed about the power that supported him. According to Dr. R. C. Majumdar, Dadda II was at the time a feudatory of the dynasty of Harichandra which bore hereditary enmity to the royal house of Thaneshvar.<sup>2</sup> It is, however, doubtful if the Pratihāras of Māṇḍavyapura were then so powerful as to resist the victorious march of the mighty Emperor of North India. From the Aihōlī inscription<sup>3</sup> and the account of Yuan Chwang,<sup>4</sup> on the other hand, we learn that gathering troops from the five Indias and the best generals from all countries, Harsha advanced in person relying on his formidable elephant force. He was opposed by Pulakēśin II, the great king of Maharashtra. The battle was probably fought on the bank of the Narmadā<sup>5</sup> in the heart of the Gurjara kingdom. Harsha's huge elephants fell in the fight and turned the scales in favour of his enemy. In this war the Gurjara Dadda was probably fighting on behalf of his liege lord Pulakēśin II. Though he himself did not claim credit for the victory, his descendants who were less punctilious in this regard ascribed it solely to his arms.

One of the causes of this war may have been the protection that Dadda gave to the king of Valabhī when he was attacked by Harsha. Dr. Altekar<sup>6</sup> points out that the war could not have been fought during the first two or three decades of the seventh century A.C. when Harsha and Pulakēśin, both of whom aspired for the most enviable position of Chakravartin, were increasing their power and consolidating their position by conquering small kingdoms in the north and the south respectively. Pulakēśin's victory is mentioned in the Aihōlī inscription of 634 A.C., while the earlier Lōhaṇēr plates<sup>7</sup> issued by him in 630 A. C. are altogether silent about it. The war seems, therefore, to have been fought between 630 A. C. and 634 A. C. The Valabhī ruler who sought Dadda's protection was Dhruvabhāta II alias Bālāditya, whose earliest grant is dated in G. 310 (629-30 A. C.). From Yuan Chwang's account we learn that Harsha later<sup>8</sup> made peace with the Valabhī ruler and cemented the alliance by giving his daughter in marriage to him. As stated above, Dadda II probably flourished from 620 A. C. to 645 A. C.

Dadda II was succeeded by his son Jayabhāta II, who is known only from the grants of his successors. He is praised therein in general terms, altogether devoid of historical information. Soon after his accession, his country seems to have been invaded by the Valabhī ruler Dharaśēna IV, the son and successor of Dhruvasēna II, who from his grants is known to have assumed the imperial titles Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārōjādhirōja, Paramēśvara

and Chakravartin, and appears to have been the most powerful ruler of the time. Dharasēna advanced to and occupied Broach, which was probably the Gurjara capital at the time.<sup>1</sup> From his victorious camp at Broach, Dharasēna issued two sets of plates<sup>2</sup> in the same year G. 330 (648 A. C.). The villages granted by him lay, however, in the Khēṭakāhāra visbaya (modern Kairā District) which was outside the Gurjara kingdom. It has, therefore, been suggested that Dharasēna IV was enjoying the hospitality of the Gurjara king.<sup>3</sup> The argument does not, however, appear convincing; for though in ancient times kings sometimes made grants of land situated in the territory which they had recently conquered, they did not do so invariably—especially when the country was only raided and not permanently occupied.<sup>4</sup> Again, the adjective 'victorious' prefixed to Dharasēna's camp in these grants indicates that he had gone to Bharukachchha in the course of a military campaign. Dharasēna seems to have soon retired to his country, perhaps after exacting a heavy tribute from Jayabhaṭa II.

Like his father, Jayabhaṭa II was probably a devotee of the Sun, though there is no express mention of it in Gurjara records. A temple of the Sun called Jayāditya situated at Kōṭipura near Kāpikā (modern Kāvī in the Jambusar tāluka of the Broach District) was probably built by him.<sup>5</sup> It is known from a grant made several years later (in 827 A. C.) for its repairs by Gōvinda of the Gujarat Rāshtrakūṭa branch.<sup>6</sup> Jayabhaṭa II may be referred to the period 645—665 A. C.

Jayabhaṭa was followed by Dadda III, who was the first Gurjara prince to become a devotee of Śiva. Only one grant of his has been discovered so far, viz. that recorded on the Prince of Wales Museum plates, dated K. 427 (675 A. C.).<sup>7</sup> He is also mentioned in the grants of his successors. He had the biruda Bābusabhāya (one whose sole helper is his arm) and attained the pañchamahāśabda. He seems to have pursued a more vigorous policy than his predecessor; for, he is said to have obtained victories over the kings of the east and the west. The king of the west was probably the Valabhī ruler Śilāditya III (circa 660-685 A. C.) who was his contemporary. It seems that soon after his accession Dadda made an incursion into the Valabhī kingdom in retaliation for the previous invasion by the Maitrakas. He seems to have attained some success as suggested by the aforementioned statement. This occurred some time before 675 A. C., the date of his Prince of Wales Museum plates.<sup>7</sup>

During the reign of Dadda III the Gurjara kingdom was invaded by a ruler named Vajraṭa or Vajjaḍa as stated in the Nasik plates of Dharāśraya-Jayasimha. Like the earlier invasion of Harsha, this attack also was repelled with the help of the Chālukya suzerain. The whole army of Vajjaḍa was annihilated in the country between the Mahī and the Narmadā by Jayasimha, a younger son of Pulakeśin II.<sup>8</sup> This victory of the Chālukyas was regarded

as memorable as it was decisive; for, like the earlier one over Harsha, it is mentioned in many records of the Rāshtrakūṭas as the most glorious achievement of their enemies, the Early Chālukyas.<sup>1</sup> The identification of Vajjaḍa and the approximate date of this victory will be discussed later on.<sup>2</sup> Dadda III flourished from circa 665 A. C. to 690 A. C.

Dadda III's son and successor Jayabhāṭa III is known from two records.<sup>3</sup> His Navsāri plates were issued from his camp at Kāyāvātāra (the modern Kārwan, about 15 m. south of Baroda). They record the grant of the village Samīpadraka near Kārwan on the occasion of a lunar eclipse in K. 456 (706 A. C.). The second set of plates, though discovered at Anjaneri near Nasik, registers the grant of a village near Nāndipurī (Nāndōd in the former Rajpipla State) on the occasion of the sun's entering the sign of Libra in K. 460 (710 A. C.). The plates were issued from Bharukachchha.

In both the grants we find the old racial name Gurjara of the family discarded, and the claim made instead that the royal family was descended from Karṇa, evidently the hero of the Bhārata war.<sup>4</sup> Like his father, Jayabhāṭa III was a Saiva and won the pañchamābāśabda. His descendants give him a higher title Mabāsāmantādhipati 'the lord of the great feudatories', but it is not noticed in his own records. Jayabhāṭa III probably flourished from circa 690 A. C. to 715 A. C.

The next prince Ahirōla, the son of Jayabhāṭa III, is known only from the grants of his son Jayabhāṭa IV. He had the same titles as his father, and was, like him, a devotee of Siva. If the description given of him is not altogether conventional, he seems to have been a learned, pious and self-controlled prince. His reign was altogether uneventful and probably very short. He may be referred to the period 715-720 A. C.

Ahirōla's son and successor was Jayabhāṭa IV. He is known from two copper-plate records.<sup>5</sup> The earlier one which is fragmentary was discovered at Kāvī. It registers the grant of some land in favour of the god Āśramadēva installed at Kēmajju, not far from Kāvī in the Broach District. The grant was made on the occasion of the sun's entering the sign of Cancer in K. 486 (736 A. C.). The second record, which was incised nearly three months and a half later in the same year, registers the grant of the village Mannātha in the same district to a Brāhmaṇa of the Hētāvuka sub-caste.

The description of Jayabhāṭa IV in both these records is given generally in conventional terms. Like his father, he was a Saiva and Mabāsāmantādhipati. There is, however, one verse in a rather corrupt form which refers to an important historical event.<sup>6</sup> We learn from it that Jayabhāṭa, by the edge of his sword, forcibly vanquished in the city of the lord of Valabhī the Tājikas who oppressed all people. This verse which occurs in the Kāvī plate also had been known for a long time; but several letters of it were lost by the breaking off of its right and left upper edges. Bühler, who edited the Kāvī plate, had, therefore, no complete text of the verse before him. One of his readings was also incorrect. His translation, 'who (i.e., Jayabhāṭa) by the edge of his sword quieted in battle the impetuosity of the lord of Valabhī,'<sup>7</sup> was responsible for the conclusion, drawn by him and others who followed him, that this Jayabhāṭa inflicted a defeat on the contemporary ruler of Valabhī.

<sup>3</sup> The Kāvī plate dated K. 486 was for a long time ascribed to Jayabhāṭa III, whose reign was supposed to have begun shortly before K. 456. But the Prince of Wales Museum plates (No. 24), recently discovered, show that it belongs to his grandson Jayabhāṭa IV.

The correct reading of the verse which can now be restored with the help of the better preserved Prince of Wales Museum plates shows, on the other hand, that Jayabhāṭa went to the rescue of the king of Valabhī, when his capital was attacked by the Tājikas or Arabs, and inflicted a defeat on the enemy.

Jayabhāṭa IV may have come to the throne in circa 720 A. C. His Kāvī and Prince of Wales Museum grants are both dated in 736 A.C. The first encounter with the Arabs, in which Jayabhāṭa obtained a decisive victory, must, therefore, be placed between 720 A.C. and 735 A.C. The only period during this interval when the Arabs followed a vigorous policy was that of the governorship of Junaid. Al Bilāduri<sup>1</sup> tells us that after defeating Jaishiya and storming Kiraj, Junaid sent his officers against Marmad, Mandal, Dahanaj and Barūs. He also sent forces against Ujain, Māliba and Baharimad, and conquered Bailaimān and Jurz. During one of these raids, his forces must have attacked Valabhī.<sup>2</sup> Jayabhāṭa IV, realizing the common danger, seems to have gone to the help of the king of Valabhī and defeated the Arabs. Now, Junaid was appointed Governor of Sindh by Umar and confirmed by Khalif Hasham (724-743 A. C.). As he was succeeded about 726 A. C. by Tamim,<sup>3</sup> we may place the raid of Valabhī in circa 725 A. C. The contemporary king of Valabhī who was thus saved by Jayabhāṭa IV was probably Silāditya V.<sup>4</sup>

But the Arabs were not completely vanquished. Before long they overran the kingdom of Jayabhāṭa himself, and pressed forward as far as Navasārikā. At this point their further advance was checked by Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin,<sup>5</sup> who inflicted a crushing defeat on them some time before 740 A. C., the date of his Navsāri plates. The Gurjara kingdom was thereafter probably annexed by the Gujarat Chālukyas. After the overthrow of the latter by the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Dantidurga, the country to the north of the Kīm was occupied by a feudatory Chāhamāna family with its capital at Bharukachchha. The Hānsōṭ plates<sup>6</sup> of Bhartrivāḍḍha, a feudatory of the Gurjara-Pratihāra Nāgabhaṭa, were issued from Bharukachchha in V. 813 (756 A. C.).

The Gurjara kingdom seems to have been bounded by the Kīm in the south and the Arabian sea in the west. Northward it followed the course of the Mahī up to the former Rewakantha Agency, from where the boundary line ran along the eastern limit of the Panch-Mahals District to Chhota-Udaipur in the east. Over this country the Gurjaras ruled almost continuously for six generations comprising about a hundred and twenty years. Their capital was at first Nāndīpurī (Nāndōd in the former Rajpipla State), as all the records of Dadda II are issued from it. After him it seems to have been shifted to the prosperous emporium Bharukachchha (Broach). Of the five later records—one of Dadda III, two of Jayabhāṭa III and two of Jayabhāṭa IV—one was issued from the royal camp at Kāyāvātāra (modern Kārwan) south of Baroda, and two from Bharukachchha (without the addition of a word like vāsakāt), while the place of issue in the case of the other two is not known. It is again noteworthy that the expeditions of Dharasēna IV, Silāditya III and later on of the Arabs were directed against Broach itself. It was, therefore, probably the later capital of the Gurjaras.

The Gurjaras were staunch adherents of Hinduism. Nearly all their grants were made to Brāhmaṇas for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices. The earlier rulers down to Jayabhāṭa II were worshippers of the Sun, while the later ones were, without exception, devotees of Siva.

THE SENDRAKAS OF GUJARAT

The Sēndrakas first appear on the political horizon of South India as feudatories of the Rāshtrakūṭas and the Kadambas. The Gokak plates,<sup>1</sup> dated in circa 532-33 A.C., mention the Sēndraka prince Indraṇanda as a feudatory of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Dējja-Mahārāja. He was ruling over the territory round Jamkhandi, about 80 miles south by east of Kolhapur. Some other records mention the Sēndrakas in connection with the Kadambas. A copper-plate inscription<sup>2</sup> of the Kadamba king Harivarman records the royal grant of the village Maradē at the request of Bhānuśakti who is described therein as 'the ornament of the family of the Sēndrakas.' Another Kadamba inscription<sup>3</sup> mentions the Sēndraka-vishaya or the home province of the Sēndrakas. After the fall of the Kadambas, the Sēndrakas transferred their allegiance to the Chālukyas of Bādāmi, with whom some of them became matrimonially connected. From the Chiplun plates of Pulakēśin II<sup>4</sup> we learn that his maternal uncle Śrīvallabha Sēnānanda was 'an ornament of the Sēndrakas.' He was probably ruling over South Konkan as a feudatory of Pulakēśin II as the latter sanctioned his grant of the village Āmravāṭaka and some allotment at another village Avañchapāli in the Avarētika vishaya.<sup>5</sup> These villages were evidently situated in the vicinity of Chiplun, the former being probably identical with Āmbōli, 15 m. north of Chiplun. Another Sēndraka chief seems to have been appointed to govern some part of the Banavāsi kingdom which had been conquered from the Kadambas; for, a later inscription of the time of Pulakēśin II's grandson Vinayāditya<sup>6</sup> mentions the Mahārāja Pōgilli of the Sēndraka family ruling over the Nagarkhaṇḍ District, which, as we know from other records, was comprised in the Banavāsi Twelve-thousand. Again, the Sēndraka feudatory Dēvaśakti is mentioned in a record of the tenth year of Vikramāditya I, found in Karnul District of the Madras State.<sup>7</sup> The Sēndrakas claimed to be of the Bhujagēndra anvaya<sup>8</sup> or Phaṇḍra vaṃśa.<sup>9</sup> They, therefore, belonged to the Nāga race. Their modern representatives are the Sīndēs, whose crest contains the Nāga emblem.

After the overthrow of the Kalachuris, Pulakēśin II divided their extensive kingdom among his relatives and trusted chiefs. Southern Gujarat extending from the Kīm in the north to the Damangaṅgā in the south was placed in charge of a Sēndraka chief. The Sēndrakas ruled over this territory for three generations. They seem to have made numerous grants; for, Pandit Bhagvanlal once informed Dr. Bühler that he had in his possession several sets of Sēndraka plates from Southern Gujarat.<sup>1</sup> It is very unfortunate that they are not forthcoming now.

Only four grants<sup>2</sup> of the family have been published so far. Of these, three were made by Allaśakti. The earliest of them was discovered at Kāsārē in West Khandesh. Before its publication it was thought that the rule of the Sēndrakas was confined to Southern Gujarāt. The Kāsārē plates of Allaśakti<sup>3</sup> which register his donation of some land in the village Pippalikhēṭa, modern Pimpalner,<sup>4</sup> about 45 miles west of Dhulia, clearly show that the Sēndrakas held Khandesh also. The plates are dated in the year 404 of the Kalachuri era (653 A. C.). Another inscription of Allaśakti was found at Bagumrā<sup>5</sup> in the Surat District. It is dated in the Kalachuri year 406 (656 A. C.), and registers the grant of the village Balisa, the modern Wanesa in the Bārḍoli tālukā of the Surat District.

From these grants we learn that Bhānuśakti, who is called Nikumbha in the Kāsārē plates, was the founder of the family. As his grandson Allaśakti was ruling in 653 and 656 A. C., Bhānuśakti has to be referred to the first quarter of the seventh century A. C. He seems, therefore, to have been invested by Pulakēśin II with the government of Southern Gujarat and Khandesh after the defeat of the Kalachuri Buddharāja. In his grants he is said to have attained victory in the clash of many battles with the onslaught of four-tusked elephants. His son was Ādityaśakti, and the latter's son, Allaśakti.<sup>6</sup> In his grants Allaśakti claims to have won the pañchamabāśabda and assumes the birudas Pṛithivivallabha and Nikumbha.

The Sēndrakas, though they were raised to power by the Western Chālukyas of Bādāmi, make no mention of their liege lords in their grants. From this Dr. Fleet inferred that the Bagumrā grant 'belongs to the period when the Western Chālukya sovereignty was in abeyance'.<sup>7</sup> When Fleet wrote, this inference appeared quite justified; because in other inscriptions of that period such as the Navsāri and Surat plates of Śrīyāśraya Śilāditya, the reigning sovereign was invariably mentioned.<sup>8</sup> Since then several other grants of the period have come to light, e.g., the Nasik plates of Dharāśraya-Jayasimha, the Anjaneri plates of Bhōgaśakti and the Mundakhēḍē plates of Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti, in which the reigning suzerain is not specifically mentioned, but which were made after the

<sup>2</sup> Two of these, viz., the Nāgad plates of Allaśakti and the Mundakhēḍē plates of Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti bear dates of the Śaka era, and are, therefore, not included in this Volume. The Nāgad plates dated in Śaka 577 (656 A.C.) were issued from Allaśakti's camp near Kāyāvatāra (modern Kārwan in Gujarat) and record his grant of a village near Nāndipuradvāri (modern Nandurbar in West Khandesh). <sup>4</sup> Some lines originally engraved on the second plate were cancelled and others incised over them. The statement refers to the later record.

<sup>6</sup> His name is given as Nikumbhallaśakti by Bühler, but that Nikumbha was only a biruda is evident from the seal of the Kāsārē plates which has the legend Allaśakti. The same name occurs in l. 17 of the Kāsārē plates. Nikumbha is prefixed as a biruda to the name of Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti also. See his Mundakhēḍē plates, A. R. B. I. S. M. for Śaka 1834, pp. 169 ff.

<sup>8</sup> Fleet pointed out that no paramount sovereign is mentioned in the Kairā plates of Vijayarāja (No. 34) which he referred to the same period. But the record is spurious.

re-establishment of Chālukya suzerainty even according to Fleet's view. There is, therefore, no reason to doubt the loyalty of the Sēndrakas, though there was undoubtedly much disturbance and disorder in the Chālukya dominion owing to Pallava invasions in the beginning of Vikramāditya I's reign.

After the issue of the Bagumrā plates, however, the Sēndrakas seem to have been ousted from Southern Gujarat; for within fifteen years from the date of that grant we find a subordinate branch of the Western Chālukyas established in the lower Tāpī valley. The next date of the Kalachuri era that comes from Gujarat, viz., K. 421, is furnished by the grant<sup>1</sup> which the prince-regent Śryāśraya-Śilāditya made on behalf of his father Dharāśraya-Jayasimha. As we shall see later, it records the gift of a village situated within twenty miles of Balisa or Wanesa which was granted by the Bagumrā plates of the Sēndraka Allaśakti. It is plain, therefore, that Śryāśraya-Śilāditya was ruling over the same territory which was previously held by the Sēndrakas. The Sēndrakas then removed their seat of government to Khandesh, where we find Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti granting the village Sēṇāṇā by his Mundakhēḍē plates<sup>2</sup> dated Śaka 602 (680 A. C.). The donated village is now represented by Saundaṇē near the western border of the Khandesh District. The use of the Śaka era in dating the record also shows that the grant was made outside Gujarat where the Kalachuri era remained current for more than half a century afterwards.<sup>3</sup>

THE EARLY CHALUKYAS OF GUJARAT

After the overthrow of the Kalachuris, Pulakēśin II seems to have annexed Maharashtra to the country under his direct rule.<sup>4</sup> In the Aihōlē inscription<sup>5</sup> he is called the lord of the three Mahārāshṭras comprising ninety-nine thousand villages. Yuan Chwang, who travelled in South India during his reign, also mentions him as the king of Mo-ha-la-ch'a (Maharashtra).<sup>6</sup> Pulakēśin seems to have placed the southern districts, viz., Satara, Panadharpur and perhaps also Sholapur under his younger brother Vishṇuvardhana; for, the Satara plates<sup>7</sup> of the latter prince record the grant of a village on the southern

<sup>2</sup> These plates have been edited twice in Marāṭhī, first in the Marāṭhī journal Prabbāta (Vol. I) of Dhulia and then in A. R. B. I. S. M. (Śaka 1834), but unfortunately they are not forthcoming now. The plates were found in the possession of the Patel of Mundakhēḍē, not far from Dhulia. They were issued by Jayaśakti, son of Allaśakti, of the Sēndraka family from Jayapuradvārī and record the grant of the village Sēṇāṇā in the viśhaya of Kundalikāmala to a Brāhmaṇa residing at Kallivana. I have elsewhere identified these places. Thus, Jayapuradvārī, which was so called probably because it was situated at the entrance to a defile, is modern Jēur, 6 m. north of Nāndgaon, which lies at the entrance to the valley between the Sātmālā and Ajaṅṭā ranges. Kundalikāmala is Kundalgaon, 11 m. south-west of Jeur. Sēṇāṇā, the donated village, is the modern Saundaṇē near Kundalgaon. The grant, therefore, undoubtedly belongs to Khāndesh. The Nasik District was then under Dharāśraya-Jayasimha. See No. 28.

<sup>4</sup> The Nirpaṇ grant of Nāgavardhana mentions Dharāśraya-Jayasimha as a younger brother of Pulakēśin apparently as the ruler of the Nasik District, but the grant is probably spurious; for, Dharāśraya-Jayasimha was Pulakēśin's son, not brother. bank of the Bhīmā. The districts in Northern Maharashtra together with the country near the western coast seem to have been under Pulakēśin's direct rule.<sup>1</sup> His second capital was probably Nasik. This city, as Fleet has shown,<sup>2</sup> answers to the description of Pulakēśin's capital given by the Chinese traveller.

Vikramāditya I, who succeeded Pulakēśin II, appointed his younger brother Dharāśraya-Jayasimha to govern South Gujarat, parts of North Konkan and the Nasik District. The Navasāri plates of Jayasimha's son Śryāśraya-Śilāditya, which were evidently issued soon after this appointment, state explicitly that the prosperity of Jayasimha was augmented by his elder brother Vikramāditya I.<sup>3</sup> The Sēndrakas who were previously ruling over South Gujarat moved to Khandesh. This change seems to have occurred in 671 A. C.; for, the recently discovered Manor plates state that Śaka 613 (691-92) was the twenty-first regnal year of Jayasimha.<sup>4</sup>

Jayasimha seems to have himself ruled over only the Nasik District. The Nasik plates dated in K. 436 (685 A. C.) record his grant of a village in that district. He placed his two sons in charge of the other parts of his kingdom, investing them with power to make grants of land in their own name. His elder son Yuvārāja Śryāśraya-Śilāditya, who ruled over South Gujarat, is known to have made two grants of land recorded in the Navsāri and Surat plates.<sup>5</sup> These are dated in the Kalachuri era which was then current in Gujarat. His second son Jayāśraya-Maṅgalarasa also made two land-grants recorded in the Manor and Balsar plates.<sup>6</sup> These are dated in the Śaka era which was apparently current in parts of North Konkan where Jayāśraya-Maṅgalarasa was ruling. The Nasik plates state that with his bright-tipped arrows Jayasimha defeated and exterminated the whole army of Vajjaḍa in the country between the Mahī and the Narmadā.<sup>7</sup> As we have already seen, this country was under the rule of the Gurjara princes who called themselves Sāmantas and evidently owed allegiance to the Western Chālukyas of Bādāmi. It seems that some king named Vajjaḍa invaded the country of the Gurjaras, evidently from the North. The Gurjara ruler sought the help of his suzerain, the Chālukya Emperor Vikramāditya I, who ordered Jayasimha to proceed to the north to the rescue of the Gurjara feudatory. He won a decisive victory which is placed on a par with Pulakēśin II's brilliant victory over Harsha and mentioned as one of the most glorious achievements of the Western Chālukyas in many records of their political successors, the Rāshtrakūṭas.<sup>8</sup>

Before the discovery of Jayasimha's Nasik plates, no reference to this victory over Vajjaḍa was known to occur in any record of the Western Chālukyas. Fleet, however, conjectured<sup>9</sup> that this victory was identical with the one obtained by Vinayāditya over some paramount king of North India, which is mentioned in the records of his son and successor Vijayāditya.<sup>10</sup> Thus from the Nerur plates of the latter, dated Śaka 622 and 627, we

learn that Vinayāditya acquired the pālidhvaja banner and all other insignia of sovereignty by vanquishing the lord of the whole Uttarāpatha (North India).<sup>1</sup> The Nasik plates, however, clearly show that the two victories were not identical. For, Jayasīnha's victory was decisive; he is said to have completely exterminated the whole army of Vajjaḍa in the territory between the Mahī and the Narmadā. On the other hand, Vinayāditya did not emerge completely triumphant in his encounter with the lord paramount of North India; for, though with the help of his valiant son Vijayāditya, he won the pālidhvaja banner, the signs of the rivers Gaṅgā and Yamunā, the insignia of dhakkā, elephants, etc., he was not altogether happy, as his son Vijayāditya was taken captive by the retreating hostile forces. Secondly, Jayasīnha's success was attained sometime before K. 436 (685 A. C.), the date of the Nāsik plates, while Vinayāditya's battle with the emperor of the North was not fought till Saka 616 (694 A.C.) at least, since it is not referred to in his Harihar plates<sup>2</sup> issued in that year. It is mentioned for the first time in the Nerur plates of his son Vijayāditya, dated Saka 622. The war seems to have been fought towards the end of Vinayāditya's reign; for, he died soon thereafter while his son was in captivity. There was anarchy in the kingdom, which Vijayāditya suppressed when he effected his escape.<sup>3</sup> We may, therefore, date it in circa 695 A. C. Jayasīnha was probably living at the time; for, only two years before this date his son Yuvarāja Śryāśraya-Silāditya made a grant in his name;<sup>4</sup> but he was then probably too old to take the field. Vajjaḍa is, therefore, not identical with the lord paramount of North India defeated by Vinayāditya.

Who was then this king Vajjaḍa? The name is clearly a corrupt form of some Sanskrit name like Vajraṭa or Vajrabhaṭa. As stated above, the Rāshtrakūṭa records name the king as Vajraṭa, but they belong to a much later age. Besides, no name like Vajraṭa occurs in any genealogical list of the period.<sup>5</sup> Even if we take the name to be Vajrabhaṭa, we get no better result. Similar names ending in bhaṭa no doubt occur in the dynastic lists of the Gurjara-Pratihāras<sup>6</sup> and the Maitrakas of Valabhī,<sup>7</sup> but there is no name in them corresponding to Vajjaḍa. The Vasantagadh inscription<sup>8</sup> dated V. 682 indeed mentions one Vajrabhaṭa as a feudatory of Varmalāta; but he flourished too early for this invasion which, as we have seen, took place between K. 406 and K. 436 (656 A.C. and 685 A. C.); for his son Rajjila was on the throne in V. 682 (625 A. C.). The history of North India between the death of Harsha and the rise of Yaśovarman is shrouded in obscurity. So the problem of the identity of Vajraṭa is likely to remain unsolved until more records bearing upon it come to light. But the conjecture may be hazarded that he was Silāditya III, the king of Valabhī (circa 660-685 A. C.).<sup>9</sup> He was a very powerful ruler; for he assumed the imperial titles Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādbhirāja and Paramē-

<sup>5</sup> Two princes of this name are mentioned in I. N. I., Nos. 1657 and 1664, but they belong to much later periods.

svara. From a copper-plate inscription<sup>1</sup> recently published by Mr. A. S. Gadre, it seems that Śilāditya III occupied the Gurjara country for some time during this very period; for the inscription records his grant of a field in the village Antikā situated in the visbaya of Bharukachchha (modern Broach) to a Brāhmaṇa who had emigrated from Girinagara and was then residing at Śraddhikā, modern Sādhi, about 5 miles south by west of Padra in the Baroda District. The grant is dated in G. 357 (676-77 A. C.), i. e., only about 9 years before Jayasimha's Nasik grant which records his victory over Vajraḍa. Now, Bharukachchha was not only included in the country of the Gurjaras, but was their capital in this period. When a foreign ruler makes a grant in this district, it clearly indicates that the Gurjaras had lost their hold over that territory. The dates of the Gurjara kings also suggest that they had suffered reverses in this period. Between K. 392 (642 A. C.), the last known date of Dadda II-Prasāntarāga and K. 456 (706 A. C.), the next known date of his great-grandson Jayabhata III, there is a gap of 64 years. Two Gurjara princes Jayabhata II and Dadda III ruled in this period, but only one record of this period has been discovered.<sup>2</sup> These were troublous times for the Gurjaras; for, their country was invaded twice by the Maitrakas of Valabhī, their powerful neighbours on the west. The first invader was Dharasēna IV. This king, who assumed the imperial titles Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādbirāja, Paramēśvara and Chakravartin, issued two grants from his victorious camp at Bharukachchha in G. 330 (649-50 A. C.).<sup>3</sup> The villages granted lay, however, in the Khetaka visbaya outside the Gurjara kingdom. Dharasēna IV seems, therefore, to have only raided the Gurjara territory. He did not annex it to his kingdom. This invasion took place during the reign of Jayabhata II (circa 645-665 A. C.). Twenty-seven years later Śilāditya III tried to emulate the achievement of his ancestor. He invaded the Gurjara kingdom and occupied the territory round Broach for some time as is indicated by his aforementioned grant of G. 357 (676-77 A. C.).<sup>4</sup> Dadda III-Bāhusahāya then sought the aid of the Chālukya Emperor, by whose command Dharāśraya-Jayasimha, who was ruling over the adjoining territory, proceeded to the north and drove the enemy out of the Gurjara kingdom. It is noteworthy that the Navsāri plates of Jayabhata III, son and successor of Dadda III, record his grant of land to a Brāhmaṇa who also, like the donee of Śilāditya III's grant, had emigrated from Girinagara and was then residing at the same village Śraddhikā. This clearly shows that the Gurjaras had recovered possession of the Bharukachchha visbaya before K. 456.

It may, however, be objected that Śilāditya III is not known by the name Vajraḍa. This objection has not much force; for from the middle of the seventh century A. C. Śilāditya became the conventional name of all kings of Valabhī. Śilāditya III was followed by four other kings, all of whom were known by the same name Śilāditya. As in the case of the Daddas and the Jayabhata of the Gurjara dynasty, they must have had other personal names by which they were distinguished from one another. Some of the predecessors of Śilāditya III had personal names in addition to those ending in āditya. See, e. g., the names of Dhruvasēna II-Bālāditya and Kharagraha II-Dharmāditya. Some of these names again ended in ṭa. The inference seems, therefore, justifiable that Vajraḍa was another name of Śilāditya III. His defeat by Dharāśraya-Jayasimha may have occurred some time between 677 A. C. and 685 A. C.

<sup>4</sup> This is the only grant of land in the Broach District made by Śilāditya III. He did not make four such grants as incorrectly stated by Gadre. Important Inscriptions etc., p. 18.

Two inscriptions of the time of Dharāśraya-Jayasimha have been found in Southern Gujarat. The earlier one, dated K. 421 (671 A. C.), records the grant of the village Āsatti-grāma, which Bühler has identified with Astgaon, 7 miles south-east of Navasāri.<sup>1</sup> The second inscription,<sup>2</sup> dated K. 443 (693 A. C.), which was found at Surat, registers the grant of a field in the village of Ōsumbhalā, modern Umbhēl, 7 miles south of Kamrej. Both these grants were made by the prince-regent Śryāśraya-Silāditya—the former from Navasārikā and the latter from his victorious camp at Kusumēśvara (modern Kōsmārā, 3 m. north-west of Umbhēl). That he was ruling on behalf of his father Dharāśraya-Jayasimha is indicated not only by his title Yuvarāja, but also by the seal of the latter grant which bears the legend Śrī-Dharāśraya. Jayasimha seems to have lived for a few years after K. 443; for, his son Śryāśraya-Silāditya apparently predeceased him, since his name is omitted in the later records of the dynasty.

Jayasimha's younger son Maṅgalarasa who succeeded him<sup>3</sup> was ruling in North Konkan. He is known to have made two land grants. The Manor plates recently discovered in the Thana District, Bombay State, are dated in the Śaka year 613 (691 A. C.). They mention the prince's name with the birudas, Vinayāditya, Prithivivallabha, Yuddhamalla and Jayāśraya, and record his grant of some villages and hamlets for the worship of the Sun-god and the repairs of his temple at Mānapura, modern Manor in the Palghar tālukā of the Thana District. Another copper-plate grant of this prince was found at Balsar in the Surat District.<sup>4</sup> It was made at Maṅgalapurī which was probably founded by Maṅgalarasa himself and was evidently his capital. This grant mentions the same birudas of Maṅgalarasa. It is dated in the Śaka year 653 (731-32 A. C.). Maṅgalapurī has not been identified, but the dating of the record in the Śaka era suggests that the grant must have been made outside Gujarat,<sup>5</sup> probably in North Konkan where the Śaka era was then current. The plates, though granted in Konkan, seem to have been taken over to Gujarat just as the Anjanerī plates of Jayabhaṭa, issued in Central Gujarat, were found in the Nasik District and the Kāsāre plates of Allaśakti, also issued in Gujarat, were discovered in West Khandesh. Besides, if the grant had been made in Gujarat, Navasārikā, which was the Chālukya capital in South Gujarat, would in all probability have been mentioned as the place of issue. Maṅgalarasa is also mentioned with only one biruda Jayāśraya in the Navsāri plates<sup>6</sup> of his younger brother Avānijanāśraya-Pulakēśin. From the description given therein it appears that Maṅgalarasa regained by the might of his arm the territory which had previously been lost. The name of the enemy from whom he wrested it has, however, not been specified.

It has been generally held that Avānijanāśraya-Pulakēśin succeeded Maṅgalarasa in Southern Gujarat; for, in his Navsāri plates dated K. 490, he mentions himself as medi-

<sup>3</sup> If the date of the Kairā plates of the Chālukya Vijayarāja is referred to the Gupta era, Vijayarāja will have to be placed between Śryāśraya-Silāditya and Maṅgalarasa, but the plates are probably spurious. See below, pp. 168-69.

<sup>4</sup> This record is known only from the account given by Pandit Bhagvanlal in J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. XVI, p. 5. The original plates have not been published. From Bhagvanlal's account it appears that the name of the donor is given therein as Maṅgalarāja.

<sup>5</sup> It must, however, be admitted that the Nāgad plates of Allaśakti, though issued from his camp at Kāyāvātāra (modern Kārwan) in Gujarat, are dated in the Śaka era. This was probably because the grant was of a village in Khandesh where the Śaka era was current. The Mundakhēḍē plates of Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti are likewise dated in the Śaka era.

tating on his feet. But a careful study of the record shows that while the expression denoting succession which occurs as many as three times in that record is tat-pād-ānudhyāta (meditating on his feet), that used to express Pulakēśin's relation to his brother is tat-pāda-pānkaj-ārādhān-ānudhyāta<sup>1</sup> (meditating on the propitiation of his lotus-like feet). The difference in the two expressions is certainly striking and seems to suggest that Pulakēśin was ruling in Gujarat contemporaneously with his brother who was governing parts of North Konkan.

The Navsāri plates of Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin record his grant of a village in the ābhāra and vishaya of Kārmaṇēya (modern Kamrej, 10 m. north-east of Surat). They are dated in K. 490 (740 A. C.). Their historical importance lies in the graphic account they furnish of Pulakēśin's victory over the Tājikas or Arabs. The Arabs, we are told, had already conquered the Saindhava, Kachchhēlla, Saurāshtra, Chāvōṭaka, Maurya, Gurjara and other kings before they invaded the district of Navasārikā in the course of their campaign to conquer all the kings of the Dakṣiṇāpatha. We find this description fully corroborated by the account of Muhammadan chroniclers. Of the princes named above, Saindhava is generally identified with the king of Sindh. From Futu-hu-l Buldān<sup>2</sup> of Al Bilāduri also we know that during the Khalifat of Walid I, Muhammad, son of Kāsim, crossed the Sindhu and defeated and killed Dāhir, the king of Sindh. Sulaimān, the successor of Walid I, called back Muhammad. Jaisingh, son of Dāhir, took advantage of this opportunity to regain his territory; but when Junaid was appointed Governor of Sindh during the Khalifat of Hashām (724-743 A. C.), he again pursued a vigorous policy and defeated and killed Jaisingh.<sup>3</sup> It appears, however, from the Ghumli plates recently discovered, that the Saindhava king defeated by the Arab army was probably Pushyadēva (circa 734-754 A. C.), the founder of the Saindhava feudatory family which ruled in North Saurāshtra.<sup>4</sup> Kachchhēlla is the king of Cutch. One of the Arab raids during the governorship of Junaid was directed against Kīraj which Elliot identified with Cutch.<sup>5</sup> Saurāshtra was under the Maitrakas of Valabhī. Though their territory was invaded by the Arabs, they repelled the attack with the help of the Gurjara prince Jayabhāṭa IV.<sup>6</sup> Perhaps in a later raid the Arabs were more successful. The Chāvōṭaka king was plainly of the Chāpa dynasty which was ruling at Bhilmal. This can be inferred from the statement in the Brahmagupta-siddhānta that the astronomer Brahmagupta, the Bhillamalākāchārya or the teacher residing at Bhilmal, wrote the Siddhānta in the Śaka year 550 (628 A. C.) under Vyāghramukha of the Chāpa dynasty.<sup>7</sup> From Al Bilāduri's work also we learn that Junaid raided Bailamān which is probably identical with Bhilmāl. The Maurya king was probably Dhavala who is known from the Kaṇaswa inscription of his friend Śivagaṇa,<sup>8</sup> dated V. 795 (738-39 A. C.). He was probably ruling over the country corresponding to modern Mewad.<sup>9</sup> Finally, the Gurjara king was probably <sup>1</sup> This expression clearly shows that pād-ānudhyāta which occurs frequently in Sanskrit inscriptions means 'meditating on the feet of' and not 'blessed or favoured by the feet of' as suggested by some scholars. See my note on the expression in Ind. Hist. Quart., Vol. XX, pp. 288 ff.

Jayabhaṭa IV whose kingdom the Arabs must have overrun before they advanced as far as Navsāri.

The Navsāri plates record that Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin inflicted a defeat on the invading Arab army. This raid is evidently later than that which was directed against Broach during the governorship of Junaid; for, as we have seen, the latter must have taken place in circa 725 A. C., as Junaid was succeeded by Tamīm about 726 A. C. The raid against Navsāri is not recorded by Muslim chroniclers probably because the Arabs this time sustained a crushing defeat.<sup>1</sup> The graphic and detailed description of the fight, which for its vigour is unsurpassed in inscriptional literature, suggests that it must have been composed soon after the fight. Again, the wording of the eulogistic part of the grant shows that it must have been drafted after the annexation of the Gurjara principality.<sup>2</sup> We may, therefore, date the Arab raid about 739 A. C.

The Chālukya suzerain of Bādāmi, whose name has not been specifically mentioned, but who must have been Vikramāditya II (733-747 A. C.), was so much pleased with Pulakēśin's heroism that he conferred on him the four titles Dakṣiṇāpathasādhāra (the Pillar of Dakṣiṇāpatha), Chalukkekulālakāra (the Ornament of the Chālukya family) Prithivīvallabha (the dear Lord of the Earth) and Anivartakānivartayitṛi (the Repeller of the unrepellable). Pulakēśin seems to have annexed the territory to the north of the Kīm after this Arab raid.

Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin is the last known ruler of the Gujarat branch of the Chālukyas. Within eighteen years after the date of the Navsāri plates we find a Rāshtrakūṭa family established in the Surat District. The Antroli-Chharoli plates<sup>3</sup> of the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Karka II, dated Śaka 679 (757 A. C.), record the grant of the village Sthāvarapallikā (the modern Chharoli in the Surat District). The country to the north of the Kīm was occupied by a feudatory Chāhamāna family<sup>4</sup> which owed allegiance to the Imperial Pratihāra dynasty of Jābālipura (modern Jālōr).<sup>5</sup>

The country under the rule of the Gujarat Chālukyas originally extended along the western coast from the Kīm in the north to the Thana District in the South. Eastward it stretched up to the Ghāṭs. This kingdom was extended by Pulakēśin who annexed the Gurjara territory to it.<sup>6</sup> Maṅgalapurī, not yet identified, was the capital of Maṅgalarasa,

<sup>6</sup> Some scholars suppose that the Chālukya rule extended to Kairā in North Gujarat; for, it was from a marriage pandal at Khetaka (modern Kairā) that a Chālukya princess was abducted by the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Indrarāja, father of Dantidurga. See Ep. Ind., Vol. XVIII, p. 243. The princess is supposed to be the daughter of either Maṅgalarasa or Pulakēśin. This view is open to several objections. If the Ellora plates of Dantidurga are dated in Śaka 663, they would show that the marriage must have taken place in any case not later than 720 A. C. Kairā was not then included in the dominion of the Gujarat Chālukyas. Besides, it is doubtful if khetaka-maṅḍapa in that passage refers to any place-name at all. It appears there as an adjective of raṇḍ and means '(in the battle) in which there was a pandal made by the shields (of the fighting men)'. Even if Khetaka is taken as a place-name, it cannot refer to Kairā: for (i) it was not included in the kingdom of the Gujarat Chālukyas; and (ii) it was far away from the principality of Indra II. It is doubtful if he was then powerful enough to penetrate so far to the north. Besides, there were other places of that name in the dominion of the Chālukya Emperor where the incident could have happened. See my article on Dantidurga in J. M. S. G. U., Vol. I, p. 36, n. 22.

while Navasārikā, modern Navsāri in the Surat District, was the capital of Śryāśraya-Silāditya and Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin. The grant of K. 421 was made by Śryāśraya Silāditya while residing at Navasāri. This was also probably the place of issue in the case of Pulakēśirāja's Navsāri plates, though there is no specific mention to that effect.

The Gujarat Chālukyas were patrons of Hinduism. They were devout worshippers of Mahēśvara. All their known grants were made to Brāhmaṇas for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices and such other rites.

THE DYNASTY OF HARISCHANDRA

Two sets of Anjaneri plates<sup>1</sup> recently discovered have brought to light a new feudatory family which ruled over Northern Konkan and the Nasik District in the seventh and eighth centuries A. C. This family claimed descent from Hariśchandra, doubtless the famous legendary king of the solar race. Svāmichandra, who heads the genealogical list in both the Anjaneri grants, rose to power during the reign of Vikramāditya I. The Anjaneri plates inform us that the Chālukya Emperor loved him as his own son, and it was doubtless by his favour that he became the ruler of 'the entire Konkan country consisting of fourteen thousand villages.' As one of the Anjaneri grants of his grandson Bhōgaśakti is dated in 710-11 A. C., Svāmichandra must have flourished about 660 A. C. Vikramāditya I seems to have appointed him first to rule over Konkan.<sup>2</sup> Svāmichandra's descendants continued to mention gratefully this favour of Vikramāditya I, though they made no reference to the contemporary Chālukya suzerain of Bādāmi.<sup>3</sup>

Three generations of this family are known from the Anjaneri plates—Svāmichandra, his son Simhavarman and the latter's son Bhōgaśakti alias Pṛithivichandra (the Moon on the earth) who made the two grants. The name of the last prince recalls similar names of Sēndraka princes which also end in śakti. The question, therefore, arises if these princes belonged to the same clan as the Sēndrakas. It must, however, be noted that as Bhōgaśakti traced his descent from Hariśchandra, he could not have belonged to the Sēndraka family which claimed connection with the Nāga race. The lion seal of the Anjaneri plates and the use of small circles to embellish the tops and corners of the letters incised on them indicate some sort of connection with the Kadambas; for we find these peculiarities in the Bannahaḷli plates of the Kadamba king Kṛishṇavarman II.

Of the two copper-plate inscriptions of this family edited here, that which is dated K. 461 (710-11 A. C.) records the grant of eight villages and certain rights, dues and taxes

<sup>2</sup> The Sanjān plates, edited by Mr. Jackson in J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. XX, pp. 40 ff., purport to record the grant of Buddhavarasatāja, a younger brother of Pulakēśin II, on the occasion of a solar eclipse in the month of Pausha. The plates are not dated, but as the genealogy of the Imperial family is carried down to Vikramāditya I, they purport to belong to his reign. The only year during the period from 645 A. C. to 680 A. C. in which there was a solar eclipse in the amānta Pausha was 660 A. C. Buddhavarasa may, therefore be regarded as a predecessor of Svāmichandra in Northern Konkan; but the plates are probably spurious; because (1) though Buddhavarasatāja claims to be a Chālukya, the emblem on his seal is the figure of a lion and not that of a boar; (2) the grant is very incorrectly written and contains two long expressions borrowed verbatim from ll. 10-11 of the Bagumrā grant of Allaśakti. The record seems to have been fabricated with the help of Chālukya and Sēndraka grants, and the seal was formed on the model of that of Bhōgaśakti's grants. Prof. Steu Konow also, who has re-edited the grant in Ep. Ind., Vol. XIV, pp. 144 ff., regards the plates as spurious.

in favour of the god Nārāyaṇa who was named Bhōgēśvara evidently after the donor, and was installed in a temple at Jayapura, modern Jarwar Budrukh near Anjaneri in the Nasik District. In the eulogistic portion of the record Bhōgaśakti is said to have brought by his valour the whole territory of his dominion under his sway. As we have seen above, a similar statement is also made about the Chālukya prince Maṅgalarasa who flourished in the same period. This suggests that the two families had experienced a disaster from which they recovered by the valour of Bhōgaśakti and Maṅgalarasa respectively. This was probably at the time of Vinayāditya's death (696 A. C.) when owing to the captivity of his son Vijayāditya there was anarchy in the kingdom.<sup>1</sup> The devastation which the country suffered is reflected in the second set of the Anjaneri plates. From it we learn that Bhōgaśakti granted certain rights, privileges and exemptions to the merchants of Samagiripaṭṭana when he resettled the town and the neighbouring villages some time after their devastation.

The successor of Bhōgaśakti was probably overthrown by the Rāshtrakūṭa king Dantidurga; for, from the Ellorā plates the latter appears to have occupied the Nasik District some time before 715 A. C.<sup>2</sup>

Svāmichandra, the grandfather of Bhōgaśakti, is said to have ruled over the whole Kōṅkaṇa country consisting of fourteen thousand villages. The country under his sway probably extended along the western coast from the southern limit of the Thana District in the north to the river Vāsishṭhī in the south. Some time after Jayasīma's death in circa 695, Bhōgaśakti seems to have extended his sway to the Nasik District above the Ghāṭs. The capital of this country was probably Purī as it is said to be the chief city of the Kōṅkaṇa of fourteen thousand villages. This city, as we have seen, was also the capital of the Mauryas. It has not yet been definitely located, but may be identical with Rājpurī in the former Janjira State.<sup>3</sup>

THE KALACHURIS OF TRIPURI

Until recently there was a perfect blank in the history of the Kalachuris for more than two centuries after the overthrow of Buddharāja. Kōkalla I (circa 850-885 A. C.), mentioned at the head of the genealogical lists in the Bilhāri stone inscription<sup>4</sup> and the Banaras plates of Karṇa,<sup>5</sup> was believed to be the founder of the Tripurī branch of the Kalachuri dynasty. The discovery of two lithic records, one at Saugor,<sup>6</sup> the headquarters of the Saugor District, and the other at Kārītalāi<sup>7</sup> in the Murwārā tabsil of the Jabalpur District, has carried back the genealogy of the Tripurī branch by a few generations. The Saugor inscription was put up during the reign of Saṅkaragaṇa who meditated on the feet of <sup>6</sup> No. 35. This inscription has been known for a long time. It was listed by Hiralal in the first edition (published in 1916) of his Inscriptions in C. P. and Berar, but he gave no account of it then. In the second edition also of that work he gave no detailed description of its contents. He, however, called it the oldest Kalachuri record and referred it to the ninth century A. C. He doubtfully read in it the name Vāgharāja in place of Vāmarāja. The contents of the record were for the first time discussed by the present writer in his article entitled 'Vāmadēva, An Early Kalachuri King', published in A Volume of Eastern and Indian Studies presented to Prof. F. W. Thomas, pp. 152 ff.

Vāmarājadēva. Both Saṅkaragaṇa and Vāmarājadēva are mentioned in this record with the imperial titles Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara. This Vāmarājadēva is plainly identical with Vāmadēva who is invariably mentioned with the same imperial titles in the beginning of the formal portion of all official records of the Later Kalachuris of Tripurī and on whose feet they are described as meditating.<sup>1</sup> Vāmarāja<sup>2</sup> was held in such a veneration by all Kalachuri kings of Tripurī probably because he was the founder of the northern Kalachuri power.<sup>3</sup>

When did this Vāmarāja flourish? The aforementioned Saugor inscription is the earliest record which names him. It is not dated; but on the evidence of palæography, it can be referred to the middle of the eighth century A.C. Though this inscription states that Saṅkaragaṇa, during whose reign it was put up, meditated on the feet of Vāmarāja, it would be rash to assert that the latter was his immediate predecessor; for, we find the expression Vāmadēva-pād-ānudhyāta repeated in connection with the names of as many as five other kings. But it would not perhaps be wrong to refer Vāmarāja to the end of the seventh century A.C.<sup>4</sup>

We have seen above how after the overthrow of Buddharāja, the Kalachuris had to remain in obscurity and acknowledge the suzerainty of the Chālukya Emperors. But their stubborn spirit and the memory of their past achievements did not allow them to remain in a subordinate position for a long time. As the Chālukyas were then supreme in the south, the Kalachuris turned their attention to the north where they found a favourable field for the expansion of their power in the latter half of the seventh century A.C. After the death of Harsha, his extensive kingdom crumbled to pieces. In the consequent confusion and scramble for power, Vāmarāja seems to have found the opportunity he was seeking. He overran Bundelkhand and Baghelkhand and established himself at Kālanjara, the impregnable fort in the Bāndā District, 90 miles west-south-west of Allahabad.<sup>5</sup> From very ancient times this fort has been sacred to Śiva. It is mentioned as one of the nine holy places in North India.<sup>6</sup> In the beginning of the sixth century A.C., it was in the occupation of Udayana of the Sōmavāṃśi dynasty.<sup>7</sup> The subsequent history of the fort is not clear until its occupation by the Kalachuris. It seems to have remained in their

<sup>5</sup> The fort of Chitrakūṭa near Kāmtā in Bundelkhand may also have been occupied by Vāmarāja. The Kanarese poet Pampa says that it was situated in the Chēḍī country. J. R. A. S. for 1882, p. 19. In some Rāshtrakūṭa records, its name is coupled with Kālanjara and the two are described as important outposts of the Rāshtrakūṭas. See, e. g., Ep. Ind., Vol. IV, p. 284.

<sup>7</sup> A stone inscription of this king recording the erection of a temple of Viṣṇu has been found at Kālanjara. C. A. S. I. R., Vol. XXI, p. 40 and Plate IX. His descendants moved to Chhattisgarh where we find them ruling in the sixth and seventh centuries A.C. See Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, pp. 116. ff.

possession up to the end of the eighth century A.C. Afterwards it was occupied successively by the Pratihāras,<sup>1</sup> Rāshtrakūṭas,<sup>2</sup> Chandēllas<sup>3</sup> and Muhammadans,<sup>4</sup> but the Kalachuris' occupation of the fort was remembered for a long time. The Kalachuryas of South India mention with pride in their records the title Kālañjarapuravarādbīśvara, 'the lord of Kālañjara, the best of cities'.<sup>5</sup> This, like other similar titles, must be interpreted to mean that these princes were descended from a Kalachuri king who formerly ruled at Kālañjara.

The Kahla plates of Sōḍhadēva<sup>6</sup> state that an illustrious Kalachuri prince established himself at Kālañjara, from where he raided and conquered Ayōmukha (modern Partapgarh and Rai Bareli Districts, U. P.). We are further informed that after having defeated his enemies, he gave the kingdom to his younger brother Lakshmaṇarāja, who, in turn, conquered Svētapada. As shown below, this Lakshmaṇarāja is identical with Lakshmaṇarāja I, mentioned in the Kasiā stone inscription. Like the former, the latter also had a uterine brother. Besides, he is said to have first occupied a fort (Kālañjara) and later on established himself at Saivaya<sup>7</sup> which may be identical with Svētapada.<sup>8</sup> As shown below, Lakshmaṇarāja I's great-grandson Lakshmaṇarāja II alias Rājaputra flourished about 775 A.C. Lakshmaṇarāja I can, therefore, be placed in circa 700 A.C. The elder brother who placed him in charge of the territory round Kālañjara is unfortunately not named in the Kahla plates. His name is, again, lost in the Kasiā stone inscription, but in view of what is said above, he may be identified with Vāmarāja. As his younger brother Lakshmaṇarāja I was probably ruling in 700 A.C., Vāmarāja may have flourished from circa 675 A.C. to 700 A.C.

The Kasiā inscription names two ancestors of Lakshmaṇarāja I, viz., his grandfather Saṅkaragaṇa and his father Nannarāja. Saṅkaragaṇa may have flourished from 625 A.C. to 650 A.C., and Nannarāja, from 650 A.C. to 675 A.C. It is not stated where they were ruling, but if Vāmarāja was the first prince who conquered and established himself at Kālañjara, his father and grandfather might have been reigning at Māhishmatī, the old Kalachuri capital. In that case, Saṅkaragaṇa may have been a son of Buddharāja (circa 600-625 A.C.) who was defeated by Pulakēśin II. In India a grandson is often named after his grandfather. So Saṅkaragaṇa of the Kasiā inscription may have been named after Buddharāja's father Saṅkaragaṇa. The connection of the Earlier and the Later Kalachuris may, therefore, be stated in the following genealogical table<sup>9</sup>:—

<sup>2</sup> In the tenth century, the Pratihāras seem to have lost both Chitrakūṭa and Kālañjara which were occupied by the Rāshtrakūṭas probably during the northern campaign of Indra III. The two forts were in the occupation of the Rāshtrakūṭas till the time of Kṛishṇa III. Ibid., Vol. IV, p. 284.

<sup>9</sup> The identification of Vāmarāja with the elder brother of Lakshmaṇarāja I, mentioned in the Kasiā and Kahla inscriptions, on which the table is based, is probable, though not quite certain.

of the Parivrājaka kings down to 528 A.C. at least. It is, however, not known who was holding that country when Vāmarāja invaded it and annexed it to his kingdom.

Two or three generations seem to have separated Vāmarāja from Saṅkaragaṇa I of Tripurī. We do not know even the names of the princes who ruled in this period. Perhaps Māyurāja, the author of the Sanskrit play Udāttarāghava, was one of them. He is described by Rājaśekhara as a Karachuli (i.e., Kalachuri) poet.<sup>1</sup> Another Sanskrit poet, Bhīmaṭa, whom Rājaśekhara mentions as the lord of Kālañjara, perhaps belonged to the same royal family. Rājaśekhara tells us that he composed five Sanskrit plays, of which Svapnadaśānana was judged to be the best.

Saṅkaragaṇa I is the next known Kalachuri prince. Only two records of his reign have so far been discovered. The one discovered at Saugor registers some religious or charitable work done by a woman for the spiritual merit of her father and mother. In this record Saṅkaragaṇa is mentioned with the imperial titles of Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājā-dhīrāja and Paramēśvara, which show that he must have been ruling over a fairly large territory. The second inscription is incised on the pillar of a temple at Chhōṭī Dēori, about a hundred miles to the east of Saugor. It records the donation of a granary in two villages in the neighbourhood, apparently to the god Siva enshrined in the temple. This record also is not dated; but on palæographic grounds it can be referred to the same age as the aforementioned Saugor stone inscription, viz., about the middle of the eighth century A.C.

The names of the successors of this Saṅkaragaṇa are not known until we come to Lakshmaṇarāja I of the Kārītalāi stone inscription dated K. 593 (841-42 A.C.). In the century that intervened between the reigns of these two kings, several important events took place in the political history of North India. In the second half of the eighth century A.C., the Pratīhāras and the Pālas were contending for supremacy at Kanauj; but they were both vanquished by the Rāshtrakūṭa kings Dhruva and Gōvinda III. The Sañjān plates<sup>2</sup> of Amōghavarsha I tell us that Gōvinda III, after defeating Nāgabhaṭa II and Chandragupta, both of whom were evidently rulers of Central India, marched to the foot of the Himālayas, where Dharmapāla and his protégé Chakrāyudha, the king of Kanauj, submitted to him. Then he returned to the bank of the Narmadā, and acquiring Mālava, Kōsala, Kaliṅga, Vēṅgī, Dāhala and Oḍraka countries, made his servants rule them. This suggests that Gōvinda III raided these countries and either exacted tributes from the ruling princes, or after deposing them, placed his own nominees in charge of their territories. That he did so in one case at least is known from other records. The Baroda plates<sup>3</sup> of Karka, dated Śaka 734, state that Karka was made a door-bolt to protect the king of Malwa from the Gurjara king who had become puffed up by conquering the lords of Gauḍa and Vaṅga. In some other records of the Gujarat Rāshtrakūṭas, we find references to battles fought by them with the Gurjara-Pratīhāras in Ujjayinī. Malwa was, therefore, made a protectorate, and a subordinate branch of the Rāshtrakūṭas was established in Gujarat to check the advance of the Pratīhāras. In the case of the Kalachuris also, he followed a similar policy. He did not, of course, supplant the ruling prince, but he made him acknowledge his suzerainty.<sup>4</sup> The subordinate position of the Kalachuri king Lakshmaṇarāja I is indicated by the Kārītalāi inscription<sup>5</sup> of his reign, which, even in its present fragmentary condition, clearly shows that it eulogized the achievements, not of Lakshmaṇarāja, but of his suzerain's father Gōvinda III.<sup>1</sup> It is noteworthy that the line containing the name of the reigning Kalachuri king is relegated to the margin. Later on, the Rāshtrakūṭas, from time to time, entered into matrimonial alliances with the Kalachuris of Tripurī<sup>2</sup> and thus made the Kalachuri kingdom a bulwark on the north of the Narmadā against any possible invasion of their territory by the Gurjara-Pratihātas.

The Kārītalāi inscription of the reign of Lakshmaṇarāja I is dated K. 593 (841-42 A.C.). We may, therefore, place the Kalachuri king from circa 825 A.C. to 850 A.C.

Lakshmaṇarāja I was probably succeeded by Kōkalla I, who may have been his son. No inscription of this king has yet been found; but we get some account of him in two later records, the Bilhāri stone inscription<sup>3</sup> and the Banaras plates of Karṇa.<sup>4</sup> Kōkalla made some matrimonial alliances which increased his power and prestige. He himself married a Chandēlla princess named Naṭṭādēvi.<sup>5</sup> From the Cambay plates we learn that the king Akālavarsha (i.e., the Rāshtrakūṭa Kṛishṇa II) married the daughter of Kōkalla, an ornament of the dynasty of Sahasrārjuna.<sup>6</sup> She became his chief queen and bore him a son named Jagattuṅga. This latter prince also, as we shall see later, married two Kalachuri princesses.

The Bilhāri stone inscription and the Banaras plates describe the help that Kōkalla rendered to a number of his contemporaries. The former says that Kōkalladēva, after having conquered the whole earth, set up two pillars of victory, the well-known Kṛishṇarāja in the south and Bhōjadēva, the store of royal fortune, in the north.<sup>7</sup> The statement evidently means that Kōkalla established these princes firmly on their thrones. The Banaras plates state that Kōkalla's hand gave freedom from fear to Bhōja, Vallabharāja, Sri-Harsha, the lord of Chitrakūṭa, and the king Saṅkaragaṇa.<sup>8</sup> That this is no empty boast is shown by the records of the other dynasties also.

Kṛishṇarāja who is figuratively called Kōkalla's pillar of victory in the south is none other than the Rāshtrakūṭa king, Krishna II-Akālavarsha. He is identical with the Vallabharāja who received protection from Kōkalla; for, Vallabha or Sri-vallabha was a title assumed by many Rāshtrakūṭa kings.<sup>9</sup> The Arabs called the Rāshtrakūṭas by the name of Balbarā,<sup>10</sup> which is admittedly a corrupt form of Vallabharāja. As already shown, Kṛishṇa II was the son-in-law of Kōkalla. He must have sought his father-in-law's help when he was engaged in a conflict with the contemporary Eastern Chālukya king Vijayāditya III (844-88 A.C.). We find references to these hostilities in many inscriptions of the Eastern Chālukyas. Thus the Ederu plates of Amma<sup>1</sup> tell us that Vijayāditya frightened Kṛishṇa and Saṅkila and burnt their city completely. The Piṭhāpuram inscription of Mallapadēva<sup>2</sup> states that Vijayāditya III burnt Chakrakūṭa and terrified Saṅkila, residing in Kiraṇapura and joined by Kṛishṇa. The Maliapuṇḍi inscription of Ammaraja II<sup>3</sup> gives the further detail that this Saṅkila was the lord of the excellent Ḍāhala (country). He was, therefore, a Kalachuri prince and is evidently identical with Saṅkuka<sup>4</sup> (called also Saṅkaragaṇa in the Karḍā plates), the son of Kōkalla, whose younger sister was married to Kṛishṇa II. Success seems at first to have attended the arms of Vijayāditya; for, he is said to have burnt Chakrakūṭa and also Kiraṇapura where Kṛishṇa II and Saṅkila were then encamped. The former of these two places has been identified with the central portion of the Bastar District<sup>5</sup> and the latter with a place of that name in the Balaghat District of Madhya Pradesh.<sup>6</sup> Pāṇḍaraṅga, the general of Vijayāditya, pressed as far as Achalapura in Berar, which he is said to have stormed and burnt.<sup>7</sup> Later, on however, Kṛishṇa II won notable successes as implied in the Kalachuri records. The Eastern Chālukyas themselves admit in their records that on the death of Vijayāditya III, their country was overrun by the forces of a kinsman of the Raṭṭa king<sup>8</sup> and that the diadem of Chālukya-Bhīma I, the successor of Vijayāditya III, was struck at by Vallabha.<sup>9</sup> These wars must have been waged during the period 880-890 A.C. Saṅkila or Saṅkaragaṇa, though described in some Chālukya records as the lord of the Ḍāhala country, was probably the crown prince at the time and was sent by his father to help his son-in-law in his wars with the Eastern Chālukyas.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>2</sup> The aforementioned Kārītalāi inscription indicates that the Rāshtrakūṭa Emperor Amōghavarsha used to visit the place to pay his respects to a saintly person there. Though Amōghavarsha I was forty-two years old at the time of this Kārītalāi inscription, it is doubtful if his son Kṛishṇa II was already married to Kōkalla's daughter at the time; for, the son is known to have reigned till 914 A.C. The inscription does not state when Amōghavarsha had gone to Kārītalāi. Perhaps, one of the objects of his visit was to seek Kōkalla I's help when he was deposed by his kinsman in the early part of his reign.

Another son of Kōkalla I, named Arjuna, seems to have helped Kṛishṇa II's son Jagattuṅga with a large army probably during his wars with the Gurjara-Pratīhāras on the northern frontier of the Rāshtrakūṭa kingdom.<sup>11</sup>

The identification of Bhōja, the second prince helped by Kōkalla I, is more difficult. Kielhorn was of opinion that this Bhōja was the first prince of that name in the Gurjara-Pratīhāra dynasty,<sup>12</sup> who flourished from circa 835 to 885 A.C. Some scholars<sup>13</sup> have, however, latterly advanced the view that the protégé of Kōkalla I was Bhōja II, the son and successor of Mahēndrapāla and grandson of Bhōja I. According to these scholars, there was a war of succession after the death of Mahēndrapāla. Kōkalla espoused the

He seems, therefore, to have been a Rāshtrakūṭa prince, perhaps of the Gujarat branch. It is noteworthy that the Masulipatam grant of Chālukya-Bhīma I mentions his defeat of a king of Lāṭa who was an ally of Kṛishṇavallabha. A. R. S. I. E. (1914), p. 84. cause of Bhōja II and succeeded in placing him on the throne of Kanauj. This prince, however, ruled only for a short time; for, we find Mahīpāla I succeeding him within two or three years of his accession.<sup>1</sup> It is, therefore, doubtful if Kōkalla's achievement in this case would at all be glorified by his successors as the erection of a column of victory in the north. Besides, there does not seem to be sufficient evidence to prove that there was a war of succession. Bhōja II is known only from one record, namely, the Asiatic Society of Bengal plate (dated V. 988) of Vināyakapāla, who is described therein as meditating on his feet. If Vināyakapāla is identical with Mahīpāla, as is generally held,<sup>2</sup> it looks strange that he should reverentially mention his predecessor Bhōja II, whom he is said to have dethroned. Besides, it is doubtful if Kōkalla I was living at the time of this supposed war of succession. As we have seen, he was fairly advanced in age in 880 A.C., as his son Saṅkaragaṇa was then sufficiently grown up to take the field against Vijayāditya III. It is, therefore, doubtful if he lived to meddle in the matter of succession to the Pratihāra throne thirty years later. As shown below,<sup>3</sup> his grandson Yuvarājadēva I was a contemporary of Mahīpāla, and he was preceded by two other princes on the Chēdi throne. Kōkalla, therefore, seems to have died some time during the reign of the Pratihāra king Mahēndrapāla. The Bhōja whom he rendered help must consequently be identified with Bhōja I.

When did Bhōja I require the help of the Kalachuri king? This must plainly have been in the early part of his reign when he had to contend against the mighty Dēvapāla of Bengal (circa 810-855 A.C.). We know that Rāmabhadra, the father of Bhōja, was a weak king. That he lost a large part of his kingdom is clear from the Barah plate of Bhōja I, which confirms a grant in the Kālāñjara maṇḍala which had been interrupted during the reign of Rāmabhadra,<sup>4</sup> evidently due to the inroads of Dēvapāla. According to the Monghyr plates, the elephants of this Pāla king reached the Vindhya and his cavalry roamed in the Kāmbōja country.<sup>1</sup> The Bādal pillar inscription states that Dēvapāla humbled the arrogance of the lord of the Gurjaras.<sup>2</sup> Bhōja seems to have ultimately succeeded in retrieving his position towards the end of Dēvapāla's reign.<sup>3</sup> Like Guṇāmbhōdhi of the Sarayūpāra branch of the Kalachuri family,<sup>4</sup> Kōkalla I apparently rendered help to the Gurjara Pratihāra king in these wars. The relations between the Rāshtrakūṭas and the Pratihāras seem to have been more or less amicable during the reign of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Amōghavarsha I, since much of the latter's time and energy was spent in quelling internal rebellions and in fighting with his eastern neighbours, the Chālukyas of Vēngī, as well as with his kinsmen who were probably the Rāshtrakūṭas of Gujarat.<sup>5</sup> Notwithstanding his matrimonial alliance with Amōghavarsha I, therefore, Kōkalla I could render help to Bhōja I in strengthening his position in the north. It is also not unlikely that the help he gave to the mighty king of Kanauj has been exaggerated in the aforementioned inscriptions of his descendants.

<sup>1</sup> The last known date of Mahēndrapāla is V. 964 (907-8 A.C.), mentioned in the Sīyaḍōṇī stone inscription. He may, therefore, have closed his reign about 910 A.C. The earliest known date of Mahīpāla is Ś. 836 (914 A.C.), furnished by the Haḍḍālā plates. So Bhōja II could have reigned only for two or three years.

<sup>2</sup> This identification is open to doubt; for, Mahīpāla nowhere in his inscriptions mentions Bhōja as his predecessor. It is more likely that Mahēndrapāla had three sons Mahīpāla, Bhōja II and Vināyakapāla, who succeeded him one after another. As Mahāmahōpādhyāya G. S. Ojha has pointed out, the dates of Mahīpāla and Vināyakapāla do not overlap. Besides, it seems clear from Āryakshēmiśvara's Chaṇḍakauśika that Mahīpāla bore the name of Kārttikēya; for, the poet refers to his patron as Mahīpāla in the prologue of his play and as Kārttikēya in the last verse of the fifth Act. Mahīpāla is, therefore, not likely to have been known also by the name of Vināyakapāla or Hērampapāla. On the other hand, Vināyakapāla seems to have been a younger brother of Mahīpāla, as Gaṇēśa was of Kārttikēya. The only possible objection to this view is that unless we identify Mahīpāla with Vināyakapāla (or Hērampapāla), the statement in the Sīyaḍōṇī inscription that Dēvapāla meditated on the feet of Mahīpāla would conflict with that in the Khajuraho inscription of Dhaṅga that Dēvapāla was the son of Hērampapāla. Ojha tries to solve this difficulty by taking the two Dēvapālas as distinct persons. He says that Dēvapāla who is called Hayapati (lord of horses) in the Khajuraho inscription could not have been a Pratihāra prince as Hayapati was never the accepted title of the Pratihāras of Kanauj. We have, however, to remember that according to the testimony of the Arab writer Sulaiman, the Pratihāras maintained a fine cavalry, and in contemporary records Bhōja is described as having an army of excellent and controllable horses (sad-vafya-sūb-ānvītaḥ); Ind. Ant., Vol. XII, p. 184. The Kuḍlur plates of the Gaṅga king Mārasīmha state that the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III crowned Mārasīmha king before proceeding to the north to conquer Aśvapati who was proud of his horses (A. R. A. S. M. for 1921, p. 23). This passage also seems to use Aśvapati as a title of the Gurjara-Pratihāras. Perhaps the word śinnu, used in the Khajuraho inscription to state the relation of Dēvapāla to Hērampapāla, is employed in the wider sense of a nephew, just as śāta (father) sometimes denotes 'an uncle'.

After the conclusion of his war with the Pāla king, Kōkalla seems to have entered into a matrimonial alliance with him. From the Bhāgalpur grant of Nārāyaṇapāla, we learn that his father Vighrahapāla, the son of Jayapāla, married a princess named Lajjā who had adorned the family of the Haihayas.<sup>6</sup> The inscription does not name any ancestors of Lajjā; but in view of Kōkalla's policy of making matrimonial alliances, it is not unlikely that she was his daughter or some near relative.

Srī-Harsha and the lord of Chitrakūṭa, who also are said to have received protection from Kōkalla, are usually taken to be identical. Kielhorn identified this Harsha with the homonymous prince of the Chandēlla dynasty;<sup>7</sup> but it is doubtful if his rule had at this time extended in the north as far as Chitrakūṭa. From the Khajuraho inscription dated V. 1011 (954 A.C.), we learn that it was Yaśōvarman, the son of Harsha, who first annexed the hill of Kālānjara.<sup>8</sup> Chitrakūṭa, which lies 25 miles north-east of Kālānjara, seems then to have been, like the latter, held by the Gurjaras. It has, therefore, been suggested that the Harsha who received protection from Kōkalla was the Guhīla prince of that name whose rule might have extended to Chitrakūṭa (modern Chitor in Mewad).<sup>9</sup> According to the Chātsū inscription of Bālāditya, this Harsha conquered the kings of the north and presented horses to Bhōja who can be none other than the great Pratihāra Emperor. The identification, therefore, appears quite plausible in view of the alliance of both this Harsha and Kōkalla with Bhōja I.

Finally, Saṅkaragaṇa was identified by Kielhorn with Kōkalla's own son. There is, however, no point in saying that Kōkalla gave protection from fear to his own son. Saṅkaragaṇa is more likely to be the homonymous prince of the subordinate branch of the Kalachuri dynasty which had settled in the Gōrakhpur District of Uttar Pradesh. The Kahla plates of Sōḍhadēva state that this Saṅkaragaṇa was the father of Guṇāmbhōdhi. The same record tells us further that Guṇāmbhōdhi took away the fortune of the Gauḍa king, for which he received some territory from Bhōja. His father Śaṅkaragaṇa may, therefore, have received some help from Kōkalla I during the early part of the latter's reign.

The Amōdā plates<sup>1</sup> of Prīthvidēva I, dated K. 831 (1079 A.C.), state that Kōkalla, an ancestor of Prīthvidēva I, forcibly dispossessed the rulers of Karṇāṭa, Vaṅga, Gurjara, Kōṅkaṇa and Śākambharī, the Turushkas and a descendant of Raghu, of treasures, horses and elephants, and erected a column of victory on the earth.<sup>1</sup> As shown below, this Kōkalla was probably the first king of that name who ruled at Tripurī; but it is doubtful how far the description of his conquests contained in this record, dated nearly two centuries after him, can be taken to be correct; for, we have no corroboration of it in other records of the Kalachurīs of Ratanpur or even of Tripurī. Besides, we find that Kōkalla I formed alliances with the Rāshtrakūṭas and the Gurjara-Pratihāras, who are probably referred to here as the lord of Karṇāṭa and a descendant of Raghu respectively. His hostility with these kings is, therefore, not likely.

Kōkalla I was succeeded by his son, who is called Mugdhatuṅga in the Bilhāri inscription and Prasiddhadhavalā in the Banaras grant. Both these appear to be birudas rather than personal names. The former of them was evidently suggested by his association with the Rāshtrakūṭas, who were fond of names ending in tuṅga. The personal name of Kōkalla's son and successor was probably Śaṅkaragaṇa. As we have already seen, the Maliapuṇḍi inscription calls Saṅkila (i.e., Śaṅkaragaṇa) the lord of the excellent Ḍāhala country.<sup>2</sup> The Karḍā plates state that Śaṅkaragaṇa was the lord of Chēdi.<sup>3</sup> There is no doubt, therefore, that Śaṅkaragaṇa ascended the Kalachurī throne; but no prince of this name is mentioned as Kōkalla I's successor either in the Bilhāri inscription or in the Banaras grant—the two records which are our main authorities for the early history of the Tripurī branch. Śaṅkaragaṇa must, therefore, be identified with Mugdhatuṅga-Prasiddhadhavalā. A third biruda of his, viz., Raṇavighraha is mentioned in some Rāshtrakūṭa records<sup>4</sup>, and is also known from a subhāshita of Rājaśekhara cited in the Sūktimuktāvali of Jalhaṇa.<sup>5</sup>

The Bilhāri inscription states that Mugdhatuṅga conquered the lines of countries along the sea-shore and took away (the country of) Pāli from the lord of Kōsala.<sup>6</sup> This statement is corroborated by a Prakrit gāthā about Prasiddhadhavalā, cited in the Banaras grant. It states that Prasiddhadhavalā took possession of Pāli, thinking that there would be born in his family (many) men eminent on account of their greatness in this world.<sup>7</sup> This apparently means that the Kalachurī king conquered Pāli to provide an adequate field for the activities of the illustrious princes who would be born in his family. Several inscriptions<sup>8</sup> of the Ratanpur branch of the Kalachurī dynasty state that Kōkalla had eighteen sons, of whom the eldest became the lord of Tripurī, and that he made his younger brothers the lords of maṇḍalas in the neighbourhood. If this Kōkalla is identified with Ant.*, Vol. XII, p. 250), while the Karḍā plates say that she was the daughter of Śaṅkaragaṇa, the lord of Chēdi (Ind. Ant., Vol. XII, p. 264). Kōkalla I, it becomes clear that Mugdhatuṅga-Prasiddhadhavaḷa conquered Pāli from the lord of Kōsala and placed one of his brothers in charge of it. This Kōsala is probably Dakṣhiṇa or Southern Kōsala, comprising modern Chhattisgarh and the adjoining country on the east. There is still a village named Pāli in the Bilaspur District, about 12 miles north of Ratanpur, which was no doubt situated in Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala. There is even now an exquisitely carved temple at Pāli, which testifies to its past importance. The surrounding territory was evidently called the country of Pāli, which was wrested by Mugdhatuṅga from the lord of Kōsala. The latter, as shown below,<sup>1</sup> must have been a prince of the Bāṇa dynasty, probably Vikramāditya I, called also Jayamēru, the son of Malladēva, who built the aforementioned temple of Siva and has left an inscription incised over the door of its garbhagriha. As he flourished in the last quarter of the 9th century A.C.,<sup>2</sup> his date squares with that of Saṅkaragaṇa II alias Mugdhatuṅga who probably reigned from 890 A.C. to 910 A.C.

Saṅkaragaṇa II had a son named Bālaharsha, who succeeded him, and two daughters, Lakshmī and Gōvindāmbā, both of whom married the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Jagattuṅga, the son of Saṅkaragaṇa's brother-in-law Kṛishṇa II. Jagattuṅga had, from Lakshmī, a son named Indra III, who succeeded Kṛishṇa II,<sup>3</sup> and from Gōvindāmbā, another named Baddiga-Amōghavarsha III, who also later on sat on the Rāshtrakūṭa throne.<sup>4</sup> Some Rāshtrakūṭa records<sup>5</sup> further mention Saṅkaragaṇa's brother Arjuna, who must have been ruling over a maṇḍala of the Chēdi kingdom. The latter's son Ammaṇadēva had a daughter named Vijāmbā, who married Indra III and bore him two sons, Amōghavarsha II and Gōvinda IV, both of whom succeeded their father, one after the other.

Saṅkaragaṇa II was followed by his son Bālaharsha. He is mentioned only in the Banaras plates, which give him a merely conventional praise. The Bilhāri inscription omits his name probably because he was a collateral. Bālaharsha sounds like a viruda, but we have now no means of knowing the personal name of this prince.

Bālaharsha had probably a very short reign (circa 910-915 A.C.). He seems to have died sonless; for, he was succeeded by his younger brother Yuvarājadēva I. No inscriptions of this prince also have yet been discovered; but from the records of other dynasties and especially from a play of his court-poet Rājaśekhara, we have more information about him than about any other early member of the Tripurī house.

The Bilhāri inscription states that Yuvarājadēva I fulfilled the ardent desires of the minds of the women of Gauḍa, sported with the ladies of Karṇāṭa, applied the ornamental mark to the foreheads of the women of Lāṭa, enjoyed the pleasures of love with the women of Kāśmīra, and was fond of the excellent songs of the women of Kaliṅga.<sup>6</sup> This implies that Yuvarājadēva raided Bengal, Karnatak, Gujarat, Kashmir and Orissa, and married beautiful and accomplished ladies from these provinces. Curious as it might seem, the foregoing description in the Bilhāri inscription is corroborated by a passage in the Sanskrit play Viddhaśālabbhañjikā of Rājaśekhara, which was staged at Tripurī. Yuvarājadēva I himself is the hero of this play. From the fourth Act of it, we learn that the king had married the princesses of Magadha, Mālava, Pāñchāla, Avanti, Jālandhara and Kērala.<sup>1</sup> In another Act of the same play, he is called Ujjayinī-bhujāṅga, which suggests his victorious raid on Malwa.<sup>2</sup> Even in an inscription of his enemies, Yuvarājadēva I is described as one who had planted his foot on the heads of famous kings.<sup>3</sup> There is not, therefore, much exaggeration in what the Bilhāri inscription says of him—"Up to the Kailāsa mountain, where Pārvatī is constantly engaged in sport, up to the excellent eastern mountain from where rises the lustre of the sun, near the bridge (of the south) and then up to the western ocean, the valour of his armies caused unending oppression to his enemies."<sup>4</sup> Yuvarājadēva assumed imperial titles. He is called Paramēśvara in the Bilhāri inscription and Chakravartin in the aforementioned play of Rājasēkhara. Another title Trikaliṅgādhipati<sup>5</sup> which indicates his supremacy in the north-east Deccan is known from the same play of Rājasēkhara.

Yuvarājadēva married Nōhalā, who became his chief queen. She belonged to the Chaulukya lineage and was the daughter of Avanivarman, who was the son of Sadhanva and grandson of Simhavarman. We have no information about the country where these princes were ruling. Perhaps Avanivarman was related to the king Avantivarman mentioned in the Ranōd inscription. As the latter is said to have donated certain places such as Raṇipadra (modern Ranōd in Madhya Bharat) to the Śaiva ascetic whom he invited to his country, it is plain that he was ruling in Central India. If Avanivarman, the father of Nōhalā, was related to Avantivarman, he also might have been ruling somewhere in the same part of the country.<sup>6</sup>

The Karḍā plates<sup>7</sup> of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Karka II state that Yuvarājadēva gave his daughter Kandakadēvī in marriage to Baddiga alias Amōghavarsha III, the Rāshtrakūṭa king of Mānyakhēṭa. Baddiga was an old man when he ascended the throne after his nephew Gōvinda IV. As he was reigning from circa 935 A.C. to 939 A.C., his father-in-law Yuvarājadēva I might have flourished in the period 915-945 A.C.

Yuvarājadēva was a patron of men of letters. Rājasēkhara, a well-known Sanskrit poet, flourished in his court. In his early days Rājasēkhara was attracted by the more prosperous court of Kanauj, where he wrote his two Sanskrit plays Bālarāmāyaṇa and Bālabhārata (or Prachandapāṇḍava) and the Prakrit drama Karpūramañjarī during the reigns of the Gurjara Pratihāra Emperors Mahēndrapāla I and his son Mahīpāla. But as the glory of the latter prince declined owing to the invasion of his kingdom by the Rāshtrakūṭa king Indra III and later on due to the raids of Yuvarājadēva I, Rājasēkhara seems to have returned to Tripurī, the home of his ancestors Akālalajada and others, in the train of the victorious Kalachuri king. There he composed his third Sanskrit play Viddhaśālabhañjikā and the rhetorical work Kāvyamīmāṃsā.<sup>8</sup> As already stated, the former was staged at the Kalachuri court and contains a poetic account of certain political events of Yuvarājadēva I's reign, to which we may now turn. Its plot may be summarised as follows :—

<sup>6</sup> It is not, however, known if Avantivarman belonged to the Chaulukya dynasty. The Ūnā plates dated Vikrama Saṁvat 956 (Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, pp. 6 ff.) were issued by a Chālukya prince named Avani-varman II. He was thus a contemporary of Yuvarājadēva I; but he cannot be identified with Nōhalā's father, because his father and grandfather were Balavarman and Avanivarman I respectively.

“The king Vidyādharamalla alias Karpūrararsha of Tripurī receives at his court Virapāla alias Chaṇḍamahāsēna, the lord of Kuntala, who has been deprived of his kingdom by his relatives and falls in love with his daughter Kuvalayamālā. His minister Bhāgurāyaṇa, however, comes to know from astrologers that the king who would marry Mṛigānkāvalī, the daughter of the king Chandravarman of Lāṭa, would be the sovereign of the whole world. He, therefore, contrives to bring about the marriage of his lord Karpūrararsha with Mṛigānkāvalī. Chandravarman, her father, has no son, and so, since her childhood he has brought her up as a boy under the name Mṛigānkavarman. None but Bhāgurāyaṇa knows of this secret. He manages to have the pretended crown prince of Lāṭa brought to Tripurī to stay at the Kalachuri court. Karpūrararsha's chief queen Madanasundarī, who, though related to Chandravarman, is shown to be ignorant of the personation, used to dress occasionally the pretended boy in a female garb. When the king sees her once in a dream, he falls in love with her. The queen, in order to play a practical joke on the king, induces him to marry a sister of the pretended boy. This sister is none other than Mṛigānkāvalī herself, though the queen, who is ignorant of her real sex, takes her to be Mṛigānkavarman in a female garb. The king agrees and the marriage is performed. In the meanwhile, news comes from Chandravarman that a son has been born to him. He, therefore, requests his niece, the queen of Karpūrararsha, to bestow his daughter Mṛigānkāvalī, whom he has brought up as a son, on a worthy consort. The queen realizes her mistake when it is too late. To make the best of the situation, however, she bestows both Mṛigānkāvalī and Kuvalayamālā, the Kuntala princess, on the king. Just then comes a messenger bearing the following letter from the king's General Śrī-Vatsa :—

“Through the power of Your Majesty who is an ornament of the Karachulis, through the clear intellect of the great minister Bhāgurāyaṇa as well as through the execution of Your Majesty's orders by insignificant soldiers like myself, all the mighty kings of the east, the west and the north have already been subdued. Only those of the south did not submit. Virapāla, the lord of Kuntala, who had been deprived of his kingdom by his kinsmen, sought Your Majesty's protection. As Your Majesty ordered, we placed him at our head and encamped on the bank of the Payōshṇī.”

The General then describes how his forces fought with a confederacy of several kings, viz., those of Karṇāṭa, Siṃhala, Pāṇḍya, Murala, Āndhra, Kuntala, Kōṅkaṇa and others, defeated them and placed Virapāla on the throne. Finally, Bhāgurāyaṇa declares that the Karachuli king reigns supreme over the whole country ‘from the milky ocean in the north to the sea filled with the water of the Tāmraparṇī in the south, from the western ocean, which receives the Narmadā, to the eastern sea, the shore of which is sanctified by the fall of the Gaṅgā.’

The Viddhasālabhaṅjikā is a drama of harem-intrigue. The plot summarised above resembles in some respects those of the Mālavikāgnimitra of Kālidāsa, and the Priyadarśikā and the Ratnāvalī of Harsha. Still it is likely to have a historical basis. The play was staged at Tripurī before the court of Yuvarājadēva, who is none other than the first Kalachuri king of that name. He is also identical with the hero of the play, Vidyādharamalla, whose alternative name Karpūrararsha recalls Kēyūrararsha, the viruda of Yuvarājadēva I. Besides, Vidyādharamalla is called Karachuli-tilaka, an ornament of the Karachulis (i.e., Kalachuris) and is represented as ruling at Nṛipurī which is plainly a mistake for Tripurī. He is again called Trilingādbhipati. This title corresponds to Trikaliṅgādbhipati assumed by several later Kalachuri kings. Like the Pārijātamañjarī of Madana<sup>1</sup> and the Karṇasundarī of Bilhaṇa, the Viddhaśālabhañjikā also seems to have been based on historical events in the career of the contemporary king. From the analysis of the play given above, it will be noticed that it mentions the following events :—

(1) Yuvarājadēva married the daughter of Chandravarman, the king of Lāṭa, and this matrimonial alliance apparently strengthened his position.

(2) He espoused the cause of Virapāla, the king of Kuntala, who had been dethroned by his kinsmen, and sent an army which fought with a confederacy of kings on the bank of the Payōshṇī, defeated it and placed Virapāla on the throne of Kuntala.

It is not possible to say definitely if the first of these was a historical event. It is not stated to which royal family Chandravarman of Lāṭa belonged. In the Bālarāmāyana, Rājaśekhara represents a Chaulukya king as ruling over Lāṭa and attending the svayamvara of Sītā (Act III, verse 57). From the description of the several kings who attended the svayamvara, which is full of anachronisms, it is plain that Rājaśekhara is referring to the state of affairs in his own times. So Chandravarman of Lāṭa may have been intended to be represented as a prince of the Chaulukya dynasty. From some inscriptions<sup>2</sup> and literary references<sup>3</sup> we know that a Chaulukya chief named Bārappa was ruling over Lāṭa in the third quarter of the 10th century A.C. He was the son of Nimbārka. Earlier members of this line are not known. Perhaps Chandravarman was intended to represent the predecessor of Nimbārka. He would, in that case, be a contemporary of Yuvarājadēva I. This must, of course, remain a conjecture until positive evidence of the earlier rule of this family in Lāṭa becomes available.

The second event described in the Viddhaśālabhañjikā seems to have a foundation in fact. Virapāla whose cause was espoused by Yuvarājadēva I is called the king of Kuntala. Kuntala was the name of the country between the Bhīmā and the Vēdavati, comprising the Southern Maratha Country as well as some Kanarese districts of the Bombay, Madras and Mysore States. In many records the Rāshtrakūṭas are referred to as the kings of Kuntala. Virapāla was, therefore, apparently a claimant for the Rāshtrakūṭa throne. His claim seems to have been superseded, and so he sought Yuvarājadēva's help to gain his kingdom.

Was there such a war of succession about this time in the history of the Rāshtrakūṭas? The Karhad<sup>4</sup> and Deoli<sup>5</sup> plates of Kṛishṇa III tell us that Gōvinda IV, whose known dates range from 930 A.C. to 933 A.C., was the source of the sportive pleasures of love, his mind was enchained by the eyes of women, he displeased all men by his vicious courses, and when his health was undermined, he ultimately met with death. From some other records, however, we learn that Amōghavarsha III, the uncle of Gōvinda IV, fomented a rebellion among the feudatories of Gōvinda IV which resulted in the king's death. The Prince of Wales Museum plates<sup>6</sup> of the Śilāhāra prince Chhadvaidēva say that Amōghavarsha completely uprooted Gōvinda IV, who was acting unjustly. There was thus a civil war in the Rāshtra-kūṭa kingdom at the close of Gōvinda's reign. The aforementioned Deoli and Karhad plates further tell us that after the death of Gōvinda IV, the feudatory princes entreated Baddiga alias Amōghavarsha III to ascend the throne. This clearly indicates that there was some trouble about succession to the Rāshtrakūṭa throne at that time. Vīrapāla of the Viddhaśālabhañjikā was apparently a claimant for the throne, and when he failed to get it, he sought Yuvarājadēva's help. The latter had by that time made extensive conquests in the north, east and west, but as the play states, he could not, for some time, gain a footing in the south. This was evidently due to the increasing power of the Rāshtrakūṭas. Yuvarājadēva apparently thought that the civil war at the close of Gōvinda IV's reign afforded him an excellent opportunity to place his own protégé on the Rāshtrakūṭa throne. He sent a large army under his able general, who defeated the Kuntala king and his allies in the battle of the Payōshṇī, and placed Vīrapāla on the throne of Kuntala.

<sup>3</sup> Bārappa is called the king of Lāṭa in Hēmachandra's Dvyāstrayakāvya, and the general of Tailapa, the sovereign of Tilingaṇa, in the Prabandhacintāmaṇi and the Rāsamālā. In the Sukṛitasankīrtana (Canto II, v. 5), however, he is said to have been the general of the lord of Kānyakubja.

This Vīrapāla is probably Baddiga-Amōghavarsha III.<sup>1</sup> The latter, we know, was Yuvarājadēva's own son-in-law. The Kudlur<sup>2</sup> and Sudi plates<sup>3</sup> further tell us that he was staying for some time at Tripurī where he celebrated the marriage of his daughter Rēvakanimmaḍī with the Gaṅga prince Pērmāḍī Būtuga II. Baddiga's son Kṛishṇa III also had married a Kalachuri princess. It is not, therefore, surprising that Yuvarājadēva espoused the cause of Baddiga.<sup>4</sup> Rājaśekhara has changed the names of the historical persons who figure as characters in the Viddhaśālabhañjikā. Kēyūravarsha, for instance, appears as Karpūravarsha, and his minister Bhākamiśra, as Bhāgurāyaṇa. So Baddiga may have been represented as Vīrapāla alias Chaṇḍamahāsēna.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Gōvinda IV also was a relative of Yuvarājadēva, but he was more distantly related to him than Amōghavarsha III; for, he was a grandson of his niece. The following table shows the matrimonial alliances of the Rāshtrakūṭas and the Kalachuris :—

<sup>5</sup> I previously proposed to identify Vīrapāla with some other claimant for the Rāshtrakūṭa throne (e.g., Bappuva) on the following grounds—(i) The Viddhaśālabhañjikā represents that Yuvarājadēva afterwards married Vīrapāla's daughter. This would evidently be impossible if Vīrapāla represented Baddiga. (ii) The Karhad plates dated Ś. 880 (958 A.C.), state in verse 25 that Kṛishṇa III, while he was Yuvarāja, defeated Sahasrārjuna who was an elderly relative of his mother and wife. R. G. Bhandarkar first suggested that this Sahasrārjuna was a Kalachuri king as the Kalachuris traced their descent from the mythical hero Kārtavīrya-Sahasrārjuna. Ep. Ind., Vol. IV, p. 284. This king could be none other than Yuvarājadēva I, who was the father-in-law of Amōghavarsha III, the father of Kṛishṇa III. As Amōghavarsha ruled only for about four years, this defeat of the Kalachuri king must have occurred within a year of the former's

The recently published Muruḍ plates of the Silāhāra prince Aparājita state that Amōghavarsha III exterminated his wicked enemies in a fierce battle fought at the capital of the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Karkara.<sup>1</sup> The latter is probably identical with Karkarāja, the lord of Achalapura, mentioned in the Sudi and Kudlur plates as an antagonist of Būtuga, the son-in-law of Baddiga-Amōghavarsha III.<sup>2</sup> Achalapura, which is identified with Ellichpur<sup>3</sup> in the Amaravati District of Madhya Pradesh, was, therefore, the scene of the battle. This town lies only about 10 miles west of the Pūrṇā (ancient Payōshṇī). Rājasēkhara's statement that the battle was fought on the bank of the Payōshṇī is thus corroborated by independent inscriptional evidence.

This Karkara and his younger brother Bappuva were probably relatives and staunch supporters of Gōvinda IV. The Rāshtrakūṭa Emperor had made Bappuva the ruler of North Karṇāṭaka, and placed Karkara in charge of Vidarbha. From the Mahākūṭa temple inscription<sup>4</sup> we learn that Bappuvarasa (who is plainly identical with the aforementioned Bappuva) granted three rice-fields to Nandikēśvara in 933 A.C. In this inscription he is called Mabāsāmanta and is said to have attained the pañchamabāśabda. He is further described as a very Bhairava on a minor scale to the assemblage of the enemies of the brave Gōpāla. This Gōpāla is probably identical with the Rāshtrakūṭa Emperor Gōvinda IV. Bappuva seems to have taken a leading part in the civil war which raged in the Rāshtrakūṭa kingdom towards the end of Gōvinda IV's reign. He at first won some successes for his lord, but was afterwards defeated by the Chālukya chief Arikēsarin II, who, as stated in Pampa's Vikramārjunavijaya,<sup>5</sup> fought for Baddiga. Arikēsarin and other allies of Baddiga then seem to have marched on the imperial capital Mānyakhēṭa where they killed Gōvinda IV.<sup>6</sup>

In the meantime, Yuvarājadēva's army under his able general invaded the Rāshtrakūṭa kingdom from the north. Baddiga<sup>7</sup> and probably his valiant son Kṛishṇa III also accession; for, it is placed first among the achievements of Kṛishṇa III as crown prince. For these and some other reasons, it appeared plausible that Yuvarājadēva, on political grounds, backed up some other claimant than Baddiga, and fought with the latter. A. B. O. R. I., Vol. XI, pp. 369 ff. Prof. Nilkanta Sastri has, however, recently pointed out that the aforementioned verse in the Karhad plates does not record any defeat of the Kalachuri king, but only glorifies Kṛishṇa III by stating that he excelled even Sahasrārjuna, the progenitor of the royal family in which his mother and wife were born. The passage from an unpublished manuscript cited below, p. lxxxiii, note 4, which has recently come to my notice, leaves no room for doubt that Prof. Sastri's interpretation is correct; for, it states that Amōghavarsha continued to stay at the Chēdi capital even after his enemies were exterminated, while Kṛishṇa was governing the kingdom by his command. The difficulty presented by Rājasēkhara's statement that Yuvarājadēva married Virapāla's daughter still remains. Perhaps, that incident, as suggested by Dr. Altekar, is a mere poetic invention intended to complicate the love affairs in the drama. See his Rāshtrakūṭas, etc., p. 110.

The Prince of Wales Museum plates recently edited by me (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXVI, pp. 282 ff.) state that Amōghavarsha III completely uprooted Gōjjiga (i.e., Gōvinda IV) who had acted unjustly.

accompanied the forces. They marched on Achalapura, the capital of Karkara.<sup>1</sup> If the description in the Viddhaśālabhañjikā is correct, a large number of Gōvinda's feudatories and allies had assembled at Achalapura to oppose the invading forces.<sup>2</sup> A sanguinary battle was fought on the bank of the Payōshñī (modern Pūrṇā), which flows only about 10 miles east of the town. Karkara and other allies of Gōvinda were defeated. The Kalachuri army then marched on to Mānyakhēṭa, which Arikēsarin had already stormed and taken. He had also killed the Emperor Gōvinda IV. The feudatories that had gathered at Mānyakhēṭa then offered the crown to Baddiga and 'entreated him to accept it to maintain the greatness of the sovereignty of the Raṭṭas, and he too, being prompted by the god Śiva, ascended the glorious throne of heroes'.<sup>3</sup> The last known date of Gōvinda IV is 933 A.C. and the earliest date of Baddiga-Amōghavarsha III is 937 A.C. The battle of the Payōshñī may, therefore, have been fought in 935 A.C. The Viddhaśālabhañjikā seems to have been staged at Tripurī in jubilation at this great victory over a formidable confederacy of southern kings. Yuvarājadēva I was now at the height of his power; for, he had attained the enviable position of Chakravartin.

The cordial relations of the Kalachuris and the Rāshtrakūṭas continued as before. Although some of the feudatories of Gōvinda IV had been defeated and the imperial capital had been occupied, peace and order were not established for some time in the Rāshtrakūṭa dominion. Baddiga, who was a man of quiet and saintly nature, preferred to return to the Kalachuri capital,<sup>4</sup> while his son Kṛishṇa III, who was appointed Yuvarāja, subdued the rebellious feudatories. He killed Bappuva and his ally Dantiga,<sup>5</sup> and governed the Rāshtrakūṭa empire in the name of his father, who continued to stay at Tripurī.

Soon after this, Yuvarājadēva I suffered a defeat, at the hands of Yaśōvarman, the Chandēlla king, who was ruling over the neighbouring kingdom of Jejābhukti. The Khajuraho inscription<sup>6</sup> says that Yaśōvarman vanquished in battle a Chēdi king who had countless forces, who had planted his lotus-like foot on rows of diadems of famous kings and who was being protected by a multitude of angry and invincible bowmen riding elephants in rut that were marching along like huge mountains of collyrium. R. B. Hiralal thought that this battle took place at the time of the accession of Yuvarājadēva I.<sup>7</sup> The latter was, however, a senior contemporary of Yaśōvarman. Besides, he is described in the aforementioned record as having already defeated a number of famous kings. The battle must, therefore, be dated towards the close of his reign.

<sup>2</sup> It is not unlikely that the names of some of them were inserted for the sake of alliteration.

Yuvarājadēva was a fervent devotee of Śiva. He invited a Śaiva ascetic named Prabhāvaśiva from Madhumatī which still survives as a small village under the name Mahuā, about a mile to the south of Tērahi in Madhya Bharat. He built for him a monastery at the expense of an enormous amount of money at Gurgi in the former Rewa State and donated several villages for the maintenance of the Śaiva ascetics residing there.<sup>1</sup> He also erected a temple of Śiva nearby. At Bhērā-Ghāt near his own capital Tripurī, he built a round hypæthral structure dedicated to the sixty-four Yōginīs.<sup>2</sup> From the characters of the short inscriptions on their pedestals, it appears that most of the images of the Yōginīs installed in the cells of this temple belong to the time of Yuvarājadēva I. This temple, therefore, is of the same age as the hypæthral granite structure at Khajuraho, which also was similarly dedicated to the sixty-four Yōginīs. From its round shape, the temple was known as the Gōlakī Maṭha (Circular Temple). It became in its turn an important seat of Śaiva Āchāryas and spread its branches in Cudappah, Kurnool, Guntur and North Arcot Districts of the Madras State. In an inscription<sup>3</sup> discovered at Malkāpuram in the Guntur District, it is stated that Yuvarājadēva gave, as bhikṣhā, three lakhs of villages to his guru Sadbhāvaśambhu of the Gōlakī Maṭha. This means that he assigned one third of the revenue of the Dāhala country which contained nine lakhs of villages.<sup>4</sup> His queen Nōhalā was also equally devoted to the same Śaiva sect. She called another Śaiva ascetic named Īśvaraśiva and donated two villages to him as a reward for learning (vidyā-dhana). She erected a lofty temple of Śiva under the name of Nōhalēśvara<sup>5</sup> and endowed it with the grant of seven villages situated in the neighbourhood.

Yuvarājadēva had a very learned, pious and capable Brāhmaṇa minister, named Bhākamiśra. He is probably the prototype of Bhāgurāyaṇa who figures as the counsellor of the hero in the Viddhaśālabhañjikā. Another minister of his, who probably belonged to the Kāyastha caste, was Gōllāka, also known as Gauḍa, the son of Bhānu. He was a devotee of Viṣṇu, and caused colossal images of the Fish, Tortoise, Boar, Balarāma and Paraśurāma incarnations of Viṣṇu to be carved out of rocks at Bāndhōgarh where he has left his own inscriptions.

Yuvarājadēva I was one of the most powerful rulers of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty. He raided distant countries and made even famous kings feel the weight of his arm. It is difficult to say if his raids resulted in the permanent annexation of any territory; for, no inscriptions of his reign have been discovered outside the Chēdī country. But his titles Chakravartin and Trikaliṅgādhipati indicate that he occupied for a time the leading position among the powers of North and South India. This was evidently when the power of the Pratihāras declined in the north owing to the raids of Indra III and that of the Rāshtrakūtas was on the wane in the south owing to dissensions in the royal family during the reign of Gōvinda IV. Yuvarājadēva was a pious man, a great builder, and a patron of religion and literature.

<sup>2</sup> Though the temple is called Chausaṭh Jōginī Temple, there are in all 81 cells, one of which contains an image of Gaṇapati, and the rest, those of Yōginīs. Five of these are of an earlier, perhaps Kushāṇa, age. H. T. M., p. 78.

<sup>5</sup> It is not known where this temple was situated. It is perhaps identical with the temple at Nōhatā on the main road between Jabalpur and Damoh. According to Cousens, it belongs at the latest to the 10th century A.C. See A. R. A. S. I. for 1903-4, p. 58.

Yuvarājadēva I was succeeded by Lakshmaṇarāja II, who was his son by his favourite wife Nōhalā. In the early part of his reign, Lakshmaṇarāja seems to have taken part in the northern campaign of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa III. A Kanarese inscription<sup>1</sup> recently discovered at Jurā, 12 miles from the Maihar railway station, shows that Kṛishṇa III led an expedition in the north after he ascended the throne, and set up a monument in the Chēdī country. It is not dated; but as it mentions Kṛishṇa's extermination of the Chōla king, it must have been put up after 947 A.C.<sup>2</sup> It has been suggested that the erection of this monument implies defeat of the Chēdī king; but since there is no mention or even suggestion of it in the Jurā inscription, it seems that Kṛishṇa III set up the monument as he marched through the Chēdī kingdom. His relations with Lakshmaṇarāja II seem to have been as cordial as those of his father with Yuvarājadēva I.

Like his father, Lakshmaṇarāja also raided distant countries. The Kārīṭalāi inscription<sup>3</sup> of his reign, which must have contained an account of his conquests, has unfortunately lost its initial historical portion; but in the records of his successors, he is described as one 'who was clever in routing the king of Bengal, who defeated Pāṇḍya, who was an adept in despoiling the king of Lāṭa, who vanquished the Gurjara king and whose foot-stool was honoured by the heroes of Kāśmīra.'<sup>4</sup> There is no corroboration of Lakshmaṇarāja's raid in Bengal and Kashmir; but the Bilhāri inscription<sup>4</sup> states that he defeated the lord of Kōsala (i.e., South Kosala or Chhattisgarh) and pressed on as far as Orissa. He vanquished the ruler of this latter country also, and obtained from him an effigy of the (Nāga) Kāliyā, wrought with jewels and gold. As regards his victory in Lāṭa or Gujarat, we have the statement in the same inscription that Lakshmaṇarāja, in the course of his expedition in the west, worshipped the god Sōmēśvara, evidently identical with Sōmanātha near Verāval in Saurashtra and dedicated to the deity the aforementioned effigy of Kāliyā. His invasion of the Pāṇḍya country also seems to be corroborated by a mutilated line<sup>5</sup> in the contemporary Kārīṭalāi inscription which mentions his forces encamped on the bank of the Tāmraparṇī. It seems rather strange that there should be no reference to Lakshmaṇarāja's victory over the Chōlas, who, and not the Pāṇḍyas, were supreme in the south in the latter half of the tenth century A.C., and who must have been attacked and defeated by Lakshmaṇarāja before he could press as far south as Tāmraparṇī in the Pāṇḍya country. We have, therefore, to suppose that the Chōlas had not recovered from the attack of the Rāshtrakūṭa prince Kṛishṇa III and that the Pāṇḍya king was raising his head and trying to re-establish his power with the help of the Rāshtrakūṭas,<sup>6</sup> when his country was raided by Lakshmaṇarāja. Perhaps the object of the panegyrist was not to enumerate all kings defeated by Lakshmaṇarāja, and the Pāṇḍya king finds a mention because he was ruling in the extreme south.

The Gurjara king defeated by Lakshmaṇarāja must have been one of the weak successors of Mahīpāla, as pointed out by R. D. Banerji.<sup>7</sup> The same scholar found corroboration of this victory in the statement of the Bilhāri inscription that Lakshmaṇarāja defeated the lord of Kōsala. He further identified this prince with his namesake mentioned at the head of the genealogy in the Kahla plates of Sōḍhadēva, and conjectured that he must have placed one of his sons in charge of the country conquered from the Gurjaras. But these suppositions do not appear to be correct. As stated before, Lakshmaṇarāja's victory over the king of Kōsala is mentioned in connection with the despoilment of the lord of Odra (Orissa). This Kōsala appears, therefore, to be Dakṣiṇa Kōsala or Chhattisgarh and the adjoining country. Besides, Lakshmaṇarāja who founded the dynasty ruling in the Gōrakhpur District of the United Provinces must have flourished long before Lakshmaṇarāja II of the Tripurī house.<sup>1</sup>

Lakshmaṇarāja sought to strengthen his position by a matrimonial alliance with the Chālukyas, who were the rivals of the Rāshtrakūṭas in the Deccan. He gave his daughter Bonthādēvī in marriage to Vikramāditya IV, whose son Tailapa II (circa 956-997 A.C.) later on overthrew the last Rāshtrakūṭa king Karka II in 973 A.C.

Like his father and mother, Lakshmaṇarāja was a devout Śaiva. The Bilhāri inscription states that he showed his devotion by presents sent by well-conducted messengers, and invited to his country the Śaiva pontiff Hṛidayaśiva, the spiritual successor of Chūḍāśiva. The latter ascetic seems to be identical with Sikhāśiva, whose disciple Prabhāvaśiva had already been invited by Yuvarājadēva I. Hṛidayaśiva received from Lakshmaṇarāja the monastery of the holy Vaidyanātha at Bilhāri. He then placed his disciple Aghōraśiva in charge of the aforementioned temple of Nōhalēśvara. Another Śaiva ascetic of the time was Praśāntaśiva,<sup>2</sup> the spiritual successor of Prabhāvaśiva. He became the head of the monastery at Gurgi in the former Rewa state. He built there a temple of Śiva near another built by Yuvarājadēva I, and installed in the shrines attached to it the images of Umā, Hara-Gaurī, Kārttikēya, Gaṇapati and Sarasvatī. He also built a monastery on the bank of the Sōṇa for the practice of Yōga, and another at Vārāṇasī (Banaras) for the performance of austerities.

The only record of Lakshmaṇarāja's reign discovered so far is the Kārītalāi stone inscription. It is not dated, but in view of the date of Yuvarājadēva I fixed above, we may place Lakshmaṇarāja II in the period 945-970 A.C.

Lakshmaṇarāja had a very learned, accomplished and pious minister named Sōmēśvara, the son of Bhākamiśra who had served his father in the same capacity. He is highly glorified in the aforementioned Kārītalāi inscription. He is said to have mastered the Vēdas, logic, tantra and kāvya, and to have been proficient in music and other fine arts. He built at Kārītalāi a temple of the Boar incarnation of Viṣṇu under the name Sōmēśvara and established eight Brāhmaṇas there, for whose maintenance he donated the village Dīrghaśākhika, modern Dighi, 6 miles south-east of Kārītalāi. The king Lakshmaṇarāja, his queen Rāhaḍā and the prince Saṅkaragaṇa, who is described as a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu, endowed the temple with gifts of several villages. Another minister of the king, who belonged to the Kāyastha caste, was mentioned in the Rewa stone inscription dated 1048-49 A.C., but his name is lost in the lower mutilated portion of it.

Lakshmaṇarāja II was succeeded by Saṅkaragaṇa III, who was his son probably from the queen Rāhaḍā. He is mentioned in both the Bilhāri inscription and the Banaras plates; but later inscriptions omit him, probably because he was a collateral. A stone inscription at Bargaon, 27 miles from Murwārā, records certain gifts in honour of the god Saṅkaranārāyaṇa. The deity was probably installed by Saṅkaragaṇa III and named after himself.<sup>3</sup> It is noteworthy in this connection that he is called parama-vaishṇava or a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu in the Kārītalāi inscription.

<sup>3</sup> Compare the name Indranārāyaṇa of the deity installed in a temple erected by the Rāshtrakūṭa king Indra III, as stated in the Bodhan stone inscription dated 1036 A.C. H. A. S., No. 7.

Saṅkaragaṇa seems to have been involved in a conflict with the Chandēllas, whose kingdom was conterminous with his on the west. Kṛishṇa or Kṛishṇapa, son of Yaśōvarman and brother of Dhaṅga, was ruling over the south-western portion of the Chandēlla kingdom extending from Dudahi in the north to Bhilsā in the south.<sup>1</sup> From a stone inscription discovered by Dr. F. E. Hall many years ago at Bhilsa, we learn that Vāchaspati of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra, who was the chief minister of Kṛishṇa, conquered the lord of Chēdi and a Śabara chief named Simha and placed the kings of Rālā maṇḍala and Rōdapādi on their thrones.<sup>2</sup> Another stone inscription discovered by Mr. M. B. Garde at Maser, 25 miles north of Bhilsā in the Gwalior State, mentions that Narasimha of the Sulkī (i.e., Chālukya) family initiated the wives of a Kalachuri king into widowhood by the command of Kṛishṇarāja.<sup>3</sup> As the Chandēlla prince Kṛishṇa was a younger brother of Dhaṅga, for whom we have dates ranging from 952 to 1002 A.C., he can be referred to the period 960-985 A.C. The Kalachuri king, defeated and perhaps slain by his ministers, was probably Saṅkaragaṇa. It is significant that both the Bilhāri inscription and the Banaras plates have nothing but conventional praise for him. As his brother Yuvarājadēva II, who succeeded him, was a contemporary of Vākpati-Muñja (circa 974-994 A.C.), Saṅkaragaṇa III seems to have had a short reign of about 10 years from circa 970 A.C. to 980 A.C.

Saṅkaragaṇa III probably left no issue; for, he was succeeded by his brother Yuvarājadēva II. About the political events of his reign we have very little information; for, though he is named in many later inscriptions, they bestow only conventional praise on him. The Karaṅbēl inscription<sup>4</sup> alone states that he raided the countries in all quarters, and with great devotion, presented the wealth he obtained from their rulers to the god Sōmēśvara. As no other inscription mentions this achievement of Yuvarājadēva II, and as a similar one is described in connection with his father Lakshmaṅarāja II,<sup>5</sup> one is inclined to look with suspicion on this description.

The prestige of the Kalachuris seems to have sunk very low during the reign of Yuvarājadēva II. From the Udaipur prastāvi<sup>6</sup> we learn that the Paramāra king Vākpati Muñja defeated Yuvarāja, slew his generals, and held his sword on high at Tripurī. Vākpati could not have occupied the Kalachuri capital for a long time; for, he soon found himself involved in a prolonged struggle with the Chālukyas on the southern border of his kingdom. He seems, therefore, to have made peace with the Kalachuri king and returned to his kingdom.

From a verse<sup>7</sup> which occurs in some inscriptions of the Later Chālukyas of Kalyāṇī, it has long been believed that Tailapa II, the founder of the Later Chālukya dynasty, defeated a king of Chēdi.<sup>8</sup> Rai Bahadur Hiralal went so far as to identify the Chēdi ruler with Yuvarājadēva II.<sup>9</sup> As Yuvarājadēva's sister Bōnthādēvī was the mother of Tailapa,<sup>10</sup>

there is, of course, no chronological difficulty in this identification; but in view of Tailapa's close relationship with the Kalachuri king, his invasion of the Chēdi country appears improbable. As a matter of fact, the aforementioned verse describes the exploits, not of Tailapa II, but of a king named Utpala, whom he subjugated and threw into prison.<sup>1</sup> Dr. Fleet identified this Utpala who defeated a Chēdi king with Pāñchāla, a western Gaṅga prince, whom, according to some other inscriptions, Tailapa killed in battle.<sup>2</sup> From the Navasāhasāṅkacharita,<sup>3</sup> however, we learn that Utpala was a name of the Paramāra king Vākpati-Muñja. So this defeat of the Chēdi king by Utpala is not different from that mentioned in the Udaipur prāśasti, to which we have already referred.

As Yuvarājadēva II's grandson Gāṅgēyadēva closed his reign in 1041 A.C., we have to accommodate two reigns, viz., those of Yuvarājadēva II and Kōkalla II in the period 980-1015 A.C. Of these, Yuvarājadēva II had probably a shorter reign of about 10 years (circa 980-990 A.C.); for, his son Kōkalla II was very young when he came to the throne. The Jabalpur and Khairhā plates state that Kōkalla was placed on the throne by the chief ministers of Yuvarājadēva. This seems to suggest that he was a minor, when he began to rule. He may, therefore, have flourished from circa 990 to 1015 A.C.

The only record of Kōkalla II's reign is the Gurgi stone inscription,<sup>4</sup> which is besides very much mutilated just where a prāśasti of the Chēdi kings begins. Verse 34 of this inscription, which refers to the exploits of Kōkalla II, is somewhat better preserved. It intimates that the Gurjara king and the rulers of Gauḍa and Kuntala, being panic-stricken, evidently when they heard of Kōkalla's advance,<sup>5</sup> deserted their kingdoms. The Gurjara king, who is said to have sought shelter in the Himālayas, must have been a ruler of the Pratihāra dynasty of Kanauj, probably Rājyapāla. The Gauḍa king was probably Mahipāla I (circa 992-1040 A.C.). The king of Kuntala, who was forced to leave his kingdom,<sup>6</sup> was perhaps Vikramāditya V of the Later Chālukya Dynasty. The Jabalpur and Khairhā plates of Yaśaḥkarna describe that the progress of Kōkalla's four-membered army was checked only by their encountering the masses of waves of the four oceans. The vagueness of this description, however, makes it difficult to say if Kōkalla actually made successful incursions into the territories of the aforementioned kings.

That the Kalachuris had lost their place among the leading political powers of North India, during the reigns of Yuvarāja II and Kōkalla II, is also clear from the absence of any reference to them in the list of the prominent Hindu states which opposed Sabuktigin and Mahmud of Ghazni towards the close of the tenth and the beginning of the eleventh century A.C. When in about 989 A.C. Jayapāla resolved to make a supreme effort to save India from the aggressions of Sabuktigin, he summoned to his aid the rulers of Delhi, Ajmer, Kālañjar and Kanauj.<sup>7</sup> Again in 1008 A.C. when Jayapāla's son, Ānandapāla, thought of invoking the aid of his Hindu compatriots to stem the tide of Mahmud's invasion, he sent emissaries to the Rājās of Ujjain, Gwalior, Kālañjar, Delhi and Ajmer. In neither of these lists do we find any mention of the Kalachuris,<sup>1</sup> which shows that in this period they had ceased to count as a great political power in North India.

Kōkalla II was succeeded by his son Gāṅgēya in circa 1015 A.C. He was an aggressive and able king, and by his conquests raised his family to a high level of glory and prosperity. In the beginning of his reign, however, he occupied a comparatively subordinate position. This is indicated by the modest titles Mabārba-mabā-mabattaka and Mabārāja, with which he is mentioned in the Makundpur stone inscription, dated 1019 A.C. A Chandēlla inscription<sup>2</sup> at Mahōbā states that Bhōja and Kalachuri-chandra (the Moon of the Kalachuris) waited upon the Chandēlla prince Vidyādhara, the master of warfare, who had caused the destruction of the king of Kānyakubja, and who was lying on a couch. The Kalachuri-chandra is probably Gāṅgēya.<sup>3</sup> The reference here is evidently to the attack on Rājyapāla for his abject submission to Mahmud, in which the Chandēlla prince Vidyādhara took a leading part. He was aided by some princes, one of whom, we know, was the Kachchhapaghāta ruler Arjuna.<sup>4</sup> The Paramāra Bhōja and the Kalachuri Gāṅgēya also seem to have fought under the leadership of Vidyādhara in this expedition against Rājyapāla.<sup>5</sup>

In the south Gāṅgēya carried on the war with the Chālukyas, which had been commenced by his father. He seems to have achieved success for a time. In some records of his son Karṇa,<sup>6</sup> Gāṅgēya is described as fond of defeating the king of Kuntala in a clever manner. The Khairhā and Jabalpur plates of Yaśaḥkarṇa state that wishing to run away in haste from Gāṅgēya, the king of Kuntala ceased to wield his spear. The king of Kuntala must, of course, be taken to mean the contemporary ruler of the Later Chālukya Dynasty, namely, Jayasīṃha, who ruled from about 1015 A.C. to 1042 A.C. From the

<sup>2</sup> Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 222. Prof. S. H. Hodivala has recently made the ingenious suggestion that Kulchand, mentioned by the Muhammadan historians as 'a Satanic leader who had assumed superiority over all other rulers, defeated, put to flight every one he had fought with, and possessed a great army, numerous elephants and strong forts which were secure from attack and capture, and who defended Mahāvan near Mathurā against Mahmud of Ghazni in 1018 A.C. is really Kōkalla Chid or Kōkalla II of Chēdi. J. I. M. H., p. 146. This is, chronologically, not impossible; because the earliest known date of Gāṅgēya's reign is 1019 A.C. But Prof. Hodivala's other suggestion that he is identical with the Kalachuri-kula-chandra who helped the Chandēlla prince Vidyādhara in defeating the pusillanimous Rājyapāla does not seem to be correct for two reasons: (i) the Muhammadan historians say that Kulchand committed suicide after his defeat at Mahāvan, and (ii) in 1019 A.C. when Rājyapāla was defeated, Gāṅgēya, not Kōkalla II, was on the throne. See the Makundpur stone inscription, dated K. 772 (1019 A.C.).

<sup>5</sup> The colophon of a Rāmāyana Ms., discovered by Prof. Bendall in the Nepal Durbar Library, mentions Mabārājādhirāja Puṅyāvalōka Gāṅgēyadēva, born in the lunar family, as ruling over Tirabhukti in śamvat 1076. Prof. Bendall referred the date to the Vikrama era and took it as equivalent to 1019-20 A.C. He identified Gāṅgēyadēva with the homonymous Kalachuri king, as the date falls in his reign. On the strength of this reference, it was believed for a long time that Gāṅgēya extended his sway to Tirhut early in his reign. The epithet Puṅyāvalōka, however, made this identification doubtful; for, Kalachuri kings are not known to have assumed such epithets ending in avalōka. I have recently drawn attention to another epithet Garudābhvaja (previously misread by Bendall as Gaṇḍābhvaja) applied to Gāṅgēya in the same colophon. It clearly shows that this king of Tirhut was different from the Kalachuri Gāṅgēyadēva who was paramāmbēśvara, i. e., a devout worshipper of Śiva. For the identification of this Gāṅgēyadēva of Tirabhukti, see my article in A. B. O. R. I., Silver Jubilee Vol., pp. 291 ff.

Kulener inscription<sup>1</sup> it seems that Gāṅgēyadēva had formed a confederacy with the Paramāra Bhōja and the Chōla Rājendra to attack Jayasimha from three sides. Victory does not, however, appear to have always attended the arms of the allies; for, the Kulener inscription records the defeat of their elephant squadrons by Jayasimha's cousin Chattadēva alias Kandarāja. From another inscription we learn that the battle was fought on the bank of the Gautama-Gaṅgā or Gōdāvarī.<sup>2</sup> Bhōja and his allies appear to have sustained a disastrous defeat; for, the Balagamve inscription states that Jayasimha searched out, beset, pursued, ground down and put to flight the confederacy of the Mālava king.<sup>3</sup>

The alliance between the Kalachuris and the Paramāras seems to have been of short duration; for, we find that Bhōja soon attacked and defeated Gāṅgēya. In one of the Nāndī verses of the inscribed Sanskrit play Pārijātamañjarī, Bhōja is said to have had his desires speedily fulfilled for a long time at the festive defeat of Gāṅgēya.<sup>4</sup> The Udaipur prasasti<sup>5</sup> and the Kalwan plates<sup>6</sup> also refer to Bhōja's victory over a Chēdi king who can be none other than Gāṅgēyadēva.

Verse 19 of the Rewa stone inscription of Karṇa<sup>7</sup> describes in a conventional manner Gāṅgēya's victory near the sea-coast. This may refer to his campaign in Orissa, which is specifically mentioned in the preceding verse. This latter verse says that Gāṅgēyadēva, strong as he was in the action of breaking open the frontal globes of the best of elephants, made his own arm the pillar of victory on the shore of the (eastern) ocean after vanquishing the king of Utkala. In this war Gāṅgēya was helped by the subordinate branch of the Kalachuri family established at Tummāṇa. The Amōdā plates of Pṛithivīdēva I<sup>8</sup> record that Kamalarāja, an early prince of the Tummāṇa branch, vanquished the king of Utkala and gave his wealth to his lord Gāṅgēyadēva. The king of Utkala was, it seems, a member of the Kara dynasty, perhaps Subhākara II, as shown below. During this campaign Gāṅgēya seems to have also defeated Mahāśivagupta—Yayāti, the ruler of South Kōsala. In one of his grants Yayāti is said to have obtained a victory over the Chaidyas, i.e., the people of the Chēdi country, and carried fire and sword into their home province of Ḍāhala.<sup>9</sup> The war seems to have continued for some time, and victory sometimes leaned to one side and sometimes to the other. If Gāṅgēyadēva was ultimately victorious, he might have assumed the title of Trikalingādbipati after his success. We know that his son Karṇa mentions this title in his first known grant<sup>10</sup> issued just a year after Gāṅgēya's death.

The invasions of Mahmud of Ghazni had shattered the power and prestige of the Pratihāras of Kanauj. Trilōchanapāla is the last known Pratihāra king who was exercising some loose authority over the Gangetic Doab till 1027 A.C.; for, his Jhusi grant<sup>11</sup> of that year records the donation of a village to the Brāhmaṇas of Pratiṣṭhāna. The power of the Chandēllas, the only other ruling family of Central India capable of thwarting the ambition of Gāṅgēya, was waning after the death of Gaṇḍa. Some time after 1027 A.C. Gāṅgēya seems to have embarked on a bold policy of conquest and annexation. Throwing off the yoke of Chandēlla suzerainty, he overran the Doab and even carried his arms as far as the Kāngrā valley; for, he is said to have thrown into the cage of a prison the king of the Kīra country.<sup>1</sup> Gāṅgēya's conquest of the Doab is corroborated by the find of his coins in Uttar Pradesh. He then fixed his residence in the holy city of Prayāga, which, with some interruption,<sup>2</sup> he held to the last.

Gāṅgēya next extended his sway to Banaras. Several powerful rulers seem to have vied with one another for the occupation of this ancient city, which was regarded as holy by the Buddhists as well as the Brāhmaṇas. Towards the close of the 10th century, it was in the occupation of the Chandēllas; for, a copper-plate inscription dated V. 1055 (998 A.C.) records the grant of a village which the powerful king Dhaṅga made at Kāśikā or Banaras.<sup>3</sup> Thereafter, the city seems to have passed into the possession of the Pālas. The Sārnāth stone inscription<sup>4</sup> dated V. 1083 (1026 A.C.) records that by the order of the Pāla Mahipāla I of Bengal, Sthirapāla and Vasantapāla established hundreds of precious monuments of glory in Kāśī. Some time after this date, the city seems to have again changed hands. The Tārīkh-i-Baihaqi describes a swift raid of Ahmad Niyal Tigīn, the Governor of the Panjab, which he carried out in the summer of H. 424 (1033 A.C.).<sup>5</sup> This raid was directed against the city of Banaras which belonged to the territory of Gaṅg. This Gaṅg is none other than Gāṅgēya, for, the date falls in his reign. The Muhammadan army plundered the city from morning to mid-day; but it could remain there no longer 'because of the peril.' This seems, therefore, to have been a surprise raid, and the invaders knew full well what risk they would run if they stayed there longer. They, therefore, left the city in haste and got back in safety.

After these conquests Gāṅgēya seems to have assumed the imperial titles of Mabārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara. These titles appear in the Piawan rock inscription of his reign dated K. 789 (1037-38 A.C.). His fame spread far and wide. Albērūnī, writing in 1030 A.C., mentions in his work that Gāṅgēya was the ruler of the Ḍāhala country, the capital of which was Tiaurī (Tripurī).<sup>6</sup>

Gāṅgēya's conquests brought him into conflict with the Chandēllas. An inscription from Mahōbā<sup>7</sup> states that when Gāṅgēya thought of the impending fierce fight (with the Chandēlla Vijayapāla), even he who had slighted and conquered the whole world felt that the lotus of his heart had the knot of martial pride closed. This seems to imply that the redoubtable Gāṅgēya submitted to the Chandēlla king. Judging by subsequent events, however, victory seems ultimately to have rested with the Kalachuri king.

In the east Gāṅgēya carried his arms as far as Aṅga and Magadha. The copperplate grants of his son Karṇa record that he looked radiant with the mass of wealth of the king of Aṅga<sup>8</sup> (modern Bhagalpur and Monghyr Districts). The expedition against Magadha seems to have occurred towards the close of Gāṅgēya's reign. It was led by his son Karṇa. From the Tibetan accounts we learn that the army of Karṇa advanced as far as Gayā. The Pāla king Nayapāla was then ruling over Magadha. Karṇa's troops sacked some of the sacred Buddhist institutions and killed altogether five men, out of whom four were ordained monks and one an upāsaka. Ultimately, through the efforts of the renowned Buddhist monk Atiśa Dīpaṅkara, who risked his life several times in crossing the rivers that lay between the contending parties, a treaty was signed, by which friendship was established between the two kingdoms.<sup>1</sup> This expedition seems to have taken place some time before 1040 A.C., which is the approximate date of Atiśa's departure for Tibet. As Gāṅgēya was ruling till the beginning of 1041 A.C., the invasion of Magadha cannot be placed in the reign of Karṇa himself. It seems to have occurred towards the end of Gāṅgēya's reign. In that case Karṇa may have been obliged to patch up a peace with the king of Magadha as his presence was required elsewhere by the approaching end of Gāṅgēya.

Gāṅgēya was fond of residing at the foot of the holy banyan tree at Prayāga,<sup>2</sup> which became his second capital. He died at the same place. His hundred wives are said to have immolated themselves on his pyre. The date of his death can be accurately determined from that of his first annual śrāddha which was performed by his son Karṇa at Prayāga. According to Karṇa's Banaras grant, which was made on the occasion, the śrāddha was performed on the second tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna in the Kalachuri year 793. Gāṅgēya must, therefore, have died on Phālguna va. di. 2 of the Kalachuri year 792, corresponding to the 22nd January 1041 A.C.

Gāṅgēya was one of the most illustrious members of the Kalachuri dynasty. When he ascended the throne, Kalachuri power was weak and effete. By his valour and diplomacy, he revived the imperial glory of his family. He extended his kingdom so far in the north as to include a major part of the modern Uttar Pradesh. As the Pratihāras were too weak to defend the holy places of the north against the attacks of the Muslim iconoclasts, he took them under his own protection, and to guard them effectively, he made Prayāga his second capital.<sup>3</sup> From the grants of his grandson Yaśaḥkarṇa, we learn that he assumed the coveted title of Vikramāditya.<sup>4</sup> Even in the records of his enemies he was called a world-conqueror (jita-viśva).<sup>5</sup> At his death, he left a fairly large empire, which was further extended by his son Karṇa.

Gāṅgēya was an ardent Saiva. According to the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Nara-simha,<sup>6</sup> he erected a matchless temple of the Mēru type, which was probably dedicated to Siva. His Piawan rock inscription also seems to have recorded the installation of a Siva-linga.<sup>7</sup>

Gāṅgēya introduced the Lakshmī type of coinage, which became very popular in North India. The obverse of these coins is wholly occupied by the king's name in bold Nāgarī characters in three lines, and the reverse, by the figure of Lakshmī sitting cross-legged. Gāṅgēya's coins exist in all the three metals, gold, silver and copper, and in four denominations which Smith calls drama, half-drama, quarter-drama and one-eighth drama.<sup>8</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Kalachuri inscriptions make no mention of Gāṅgēya's encounter with Mahmud of Ghazni, whose contemporary he was. Prof. Hodivala makes the ingenious suggestion that Kābakan, who ruled the country bordering on the territory of Nanda (i.e., the Chandēlla Gaṇḍa) and who sent some wonderful presents to Mahmud after the latter's generous treatment of the Chandēlla ruler, was Gāṅgēya. He is said to have been a master of 1000 elephants. S. I. M. H., pp. 73 ff.

The Lakshmi type introduced by Gāṅgēya was subsequently copied by the Chandēllas, the Gāhaḍavālas and the Tomars, and was introduced even in distant Kashmir.<sup>1</sup>

As stated above, Gāṅgēyadēva was succeeded by his son Karṇa in 1041 A.C. From several inscriptions of his reign as well as from references in literary records, Sanskrit and Prakrit, we can form a general idea of the main political events of his reign.

The Rewa stone inscription<sup>2</sup> dated in K. 800 (1048-49 A.C.) shows that in the first seven years of his reign, Karṇa attained remarkable victories in the east, south and west. He seems to have first proceeded to the east. Verse 26 of the aforementioned inscription states that the ship of the king of the eastern country, being driven by the storm of unparalleled arrogance, was submerged in the ocean of Karṇa's forces, its joints being rent by dashing against the promontories of the mountains which were his elephants. This verse clearly implies that Karṇa obtained a decisive victory over the king of the eastern country, who lost his life in the encounter. Who was this king of the eastern country? He could scarcely have been the contemporary Pāla king; for, the kingdom of the Pālas, as shown by their own inscriptions and those of their contemporaries, was restricted to parts of Bihar and North-West Bengal. From the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Narasimha,<sup>3</sup> on the other hand, we learn that when Karṇa gave a full play to heroism, the Vaṅga trembled with the Kaliṅga. Karṇa's victory seems, therefore, to have been obtained over the king of Vaṅga or Eastern Bengal. The tenour of the description suggests that the ruling family was supplanted and the kingdom was either annexed by Karṇa or placed in charge of his own nominee. As a matter of fact, we find the Vermans supplanting the Chandras in Eastern Bengal in the eleventh century A.C. Gōvindachandra, the last king of the Chandra dynasty known from inscriptions found in Bengal,<sup>4</sup> is also mentioned in the Tirumalai rock inscription<sup>5</sup> of Rājendra Chōla I as the ruler of Vaṅgāla-dēśa. He was defeated in circa 1021 A.C. by Rājendra I, the illustrious Chōla Emperor (1014—1044 A.C.). When Karṇa invaded Eastern Bengal, either this prince or his successor was on the throne. After the overthrow of the Chandra king, Karṇa placed Vajravarma in charge of the newly acquired territory and gave his daughter Vīraśrī in marriage to his son Jātavarman to cement the political alliance. The latter distinguished himself in one of the later campaigns of Karṇa in the country of Aṅga.<sup>6</sup> The Rewa inscription shows that the dynastic revolution must have been effected in any case before 1048-49 A.C.

Karṇa next turned his attention to the south. Verse 25 of the aforementioned Rewa inscription describes Karṇa's southern campaigns in a figurative style. It states that 'over-running the district of Kāñchī, he thoroughly enjoyed the southern direction in which the fortune of the Kuntala was shaken by forcible seizure and the low Pallavas were destroyed, as though covering the hips of a woman he was ravishing her, the beauty of whose hair was marred by forcible seizure and whose tender lower lip was wounded (by kissing).'<sup>7</sup> It is difficult to say how far this figurative description correctly represents historical facts. Besides, the Pallavas, over whom a decisive victory is claimed for Karṇa in this verse, had long ceased to be supreme in the south, their kingdom having been annexed by the Chōlas in 890 A.C.<sup>7</sup> A branch of the Pallavas, no doubt, continued to rule in the Nōlamba-vāḍī 32000 down to the eleventh century A.C.;<sup>1</sup> but they had no control over the territory round Kāñchī and a victory over them would not have brought much glory to Karṇa's arms. Besides, Karṇa's victory over the Pallavas is not referred to in the fairly long list of his conquests in the records of his descendants. So far as the reference to the Pallavas is concerned, the description in the verse appears to be more fanciful than real.

The reference to the invasion of the district of Kāñchī is perhaps intended to signify the defeat of the Chōlas; for, though the capital of the Chōlas had been removed to Gaṅgā-purī or Gāṅgaikōṇḍachōlapuram since its foundation by Rājendra Chōla I, Sanskrit poets continued to mention Kāñchī as the Chōla capital.<sup>2</sup> Karṇa's victory over a Chōla king is intimated in a verse in the Karaṅbēl inscription of Jayasimha.<sup>3</sup> R. D. Banerji conjecturally identified the Chōla king defeated by Karṇa with Vīrarājendra Rājakēsarivarman, who was reigning between 1062 and 1067 A.C. The reference to the invasion of Kāñchī in verse 25 of the Rewa inscription, if historically true, would show that the victory had already been attained in 1048-49 A.C. Karṇa's adversary must, therefore, be identified with Rājādhirāja I, the son and successor of Rājendra Chōla I, who ruled from 1044 to 1054 A.C.

While Karṇa was in the south, he seems to have encountered the king of Kuntala. As already observed, Kuntala was then under the rule of the Later Chālukyas of Kalyāṇī. The battle does not seem to have ended in a decisive victory for either side; for, both the belligerents claimed success for themselves. As stated above, the Rewa inscription speaks of the fortune of the Kuntala king being seized by Karṇa. Bilhaṇa, on the other hand, records in his Vikramāṅkadēvacharita that Āhavamalla (i.e., Sōmēśvara I) utterly destroyed the power of Karṇa, after which glory never embraced the country of Dāhala.<sup>4</sup>

Karṇa seems to have come into conflict with the king of the Gurjara country also. Verse 27 of the Rewa inscription says that when Karṇa approached the Gurjara country, tears mixed with collyrium flowed on the cheeks of Gurjara women living in the neighbourhood and colour-marks indicative of their non-widowhood slipped, as it were, from their foreheads. This description indicates that Karṇa had raided Gujarat before 1048 A.C. This is also corroborated by an Apabhraṃśa verse in the Prākṛita-Paiṅala which states that Karṇa had exterminated the forces of a Gurjara king. This may have been followed by negotiations for peace as subsequent events show.

Though Karṇa had thus raided different parts of India in the first seven years of his reign, he was not yet able to annex any territory to his kingdom. His success during the next two or three years was much greater. His contemporary on the throne of Malwa was the illustrious Bhōja, who was as much distinguished for valour as for learning. He had also raided different countries and defeated the rulers of Karṇāṭa, Lāṭa, Gurjara, Kōṅkaṇa and others. The defeat he had inflicted on Gāṅgēyadēva must have been rankling in Karṇa's mind. The latter, therefore, formed an alliance with Bhīma of Gujarat.<sup>5</sup> The allied forces invaded Malwa from the east and the west. Just about this time Bhōja died, and as he did not leave any son, the kingdom was in a state of disturbance owing to the risings of the scions of the Paramāra family. It fell an easy prey to the invaders, who soon captured Dhārā, the capital of Malwa,<sup>1</sup> and dethroned Jayasīma, the successor of Bhōja.<sup>2</sup> According to Merutuṅga's account, Karṇa violated the previous agreement and annexed the whole of Malwa.<sup>3</sup> This enraged Bhīma, who invaded the Chēdi country. Hēma-chandra in his Dvyāśrayakāvya states that Bhīma, penetrated to the capital of the Chēdi country; but Karṇa made peace with him by presenting him horses, elephants and the golden maṇḍapikā of Bhōja which he had carried away.<sup>4</sup>

Karṇa next turned his attention to the Chandēlla kingdom. The Chandēlla dynasty had produced several powerful princes, some of whom such as Yaśōvarman, Vidyādhara and Vijayapāla had exacted submission from the Kalachuris. But at this time the throne was occupied by a weak ruler named Dēvavarman, son of Vijayapāla. The only inscription of his reign is a copper-plate record<sup>5</sup> discovered at Nanyaurā in the Hamirpur District of Uttar Pradesh. It registers the grant of a village which Dēvavarman made in V. 1107 (1051 A.C.) on the occasion of the anniversary of his mother's death. Soon after this, he seems to have succumbed to an attack by Karṇa. Bilhaṇa, in his Vikramāṅka-dēvacharita (Canto XVIII, v. 93), speaks of Karṇa as 'Death to the lord of Kālañjara' who was evidently Dēvavarman.<sup>6</sup> After this victory, Karṇa incorporated the country of Jajjhauti into his own dominion.

About this time Karṇa also invaded North-Western Bengal. This was his second invasion of the Pāla kingdom. On this occasion he pressed as far as Paikore in the Birbhum District of Bengal. His route must have lain through South Bihar. The Pāla king, who must have been Vīgrahapāla III, seems to have soon capitulated to the invader. Karṇa's invasion of the Pāla dominion is attested to by the discovery of an inscribed decorative pillar which the Chēdi king dedicated to a goddess during his stay at Paikore.<sup>7</sup> The Karaṇbēl stone inscription<sup>8</sup> intimates that the king of Gauḍa submitted to Karṇa. Hēma-chandra<sup>9</sup> records that the king of Gauḍa entreated Karṇa to save his life and throne in return for a large treasure which he presented to him. The Rāmacharita of Sandhyākara-nandin (Canto I, v. 9), however, claims a victory for the Pāla king Vīgrahapāla. Whatever may have been the actual result of the war, the two families were afterwards united by a matrimonial alliance. Karṇa gave his daughter Yauvanaśrī in marriage to Vīgrahapāla and thus turned the Pāla adversary into a faithful ally.<sup>10</sup>

<sup>4</sup> DK., Canto IX, v. 57. Mērutuṅga also quotes a traditional verse which states that Bhīma received from Karṇa, inter alia, a golden maṇḍapikā. See PCH., p. 52. The words rājñā Rēvā na laṅghy-ēti, which occur in v. 54 of Canto IX in DK., have been taken by Mr. A. Ghosh to mean that the king (Karṇa or Bhīma) promised not to cross the Narmadā. Ind. Cul., Vol. VII, p. 17. This is incorrect. The words occur in the speech of Karṇa addressed to Dāmōdara, the ambassador of Bhīma. Karṇa says that he would have gone forth to meet and receive Bhīma, but the astrologers had advised him not to cross the Rēvā.

<sup>6</sup> V. Smith thought that it was Kīrtivarman, the brother of Dēvavarman, who was driven by Karṇa from the throne. But the description in the VDCH. and the PCHU. clearly indicates that Karṇa not only drove the lord of Kālañjara from the throne but also exterminated him. He could, therefore, be none other than Dēvavarman; for, Kīrtivarman lived to regain his throne as described below.

<sup>10</sup> RCH., Canto I, v. 9. This kāvya states that Vīgrahapāla vanquished Karṇa, but saved him by making with him a treaty of peace which an old commentator of the work calls kapālasandhi. In this sandhi a large sum of money is required to be paid the conqueror. See RCH., Introd., p. x.

In 1052 A.C. Karṇa was thus at the height of his power. He had under his sway practically the whole of Central India including the erstwhile kingdoms of the Pratihāras, the Paramāras and the Chandēllas. In the east the Pāla and Varman kings were matrimonially allied with him. In the north his authority was recognized as far as the Kāngrā valley,<sup>1</sup> the ruler of which had submitted to him. In the west, the only foe worthy of his steel was Bhīma of Gujarāt; but as stated already, Karṇa had made peace with him. In the south, he had inflicted a defeat on the Chōlas and the Chālukyas, though his campaigns do not seem to have resulted in the permanent annexation of any territory. His authority was in any case unquestioned in North India,<sup>2</sup> and if Bilhaṇa's account can be believed, the mere sound of his horses' hoofs routed the forces of his enemies.<sup>3</sup>

To proclaim his attainment of the position of Chakravartin or Universal Emperor, Karṇa seems to have crowned himself again in the Kalachuri year 804 (1052-53 A.C.). His regnal year, mentioned in the Rewa stone inscription<sup>4</sup> of his general Vappulla, is counted from this second coronation.

On account of his ambition and successful military campaigns, Karṇa is called Hindu Napoleon. And like the great French Emperor, he suffered serious reverses in the latter part of his career. He could not retain his hold on Malwa for a long time. Jayasīmha, the successor of Bhōja, who was dethroned and driven out of Malwa, sought the Chālukya king Somēśvara I-Āhavamalla's aid against the powerful confederacy of Bhīma and Karṇa. The Chālukyas and Paramāras were inveterate foes, and their hostilities continued for several generations. Āhavamalla had himself previously stormed Dhārā, from which the king Bhōja had to flee.<sup>5</sup> But on this occasion Āhavamalla thought it politic to reverse his policy towards the Paramāra house; for, he realized that if Karṇa was allowed to retain possession of the Paramāra territory, he would become a menace to the northern frontier of the Chālukya kingdom. He, therefore, resolved to support the cause of Jayasīmha, and directed his valiant son Vikramāditya to lend his aid to Jayasīmha to regain his throne.<sup>6</sup> It would appear that in his northern campaigns, Vikramāditya was not always successful; for, an Apabhramśa verse mentions Karṇa's victory over the mighty Vikrama, evidently

<sup>2</sup> In his DK. (Canto IX, vv. 33 ff), Hēmachandra makes Bhīma's ambassador Dāmōdara refer to several other victories of Karṇa, viz., those over the rulers of Daśārṇa and Kaliṅga and the kings Bhadrabhaṭa, Yanti, Nanti, Ganti, Hanti, Vanti and Manti. Hēmachandra seems to have distorted the names of kings to illustrate grammatical rules. It is also not unlikely that these are altogether fictitious names.

<sup>3</sup> VDCH., Canto XVIII, v. 93. As Mr. A. Ghosh has already pointed out, tukkāra in this verse does not mean any race, but denotes a particular breed of superior horses, probably the Tokharian horses. Ind. Cult., Vol. VII, p. 19.

<sup>4</sup> No. 53. The date of this inscription is Sativat 812, Thursday, the tenth day of the bright fortnight of Māgha in the ninth regnal year. This date regularly corresponds to Thursday, January 4th, 1061 A.C. As this date fell in the ninth regnal year, Karṇa must have been crowned a second time in 1052 A.C. Some scholars have attempted to reconcile this date with the first coronation which occurred in 1041 A.C. (See below, pp. 239 ff.) D.R. Bhandarkar thought that navame in the Rewa inscription of Vappulla was a mistake for navadase and that the inscription was put up in the nineteenth regnal year. But the month of Māgha in the nineteenth regnal year should fall in K. 811, not in K. 812; for Māgha of the first regnal year fell in K. 793, as the Kalachuri year began in Kārttika. A. Ghosh has suggested that the regnal year is correctly mentioned, but the figures of the sativat were wrongly written as 812 instead of 802. This explanation also is not of any help; for, the month of Māgha in the ninth regnal should fall in K. 801, not in K. 802. We must, therefore, suppose that the second coronation of Karṇa did take place some time in 1052 A.C.

Vikramāditya VI, the son of Somēśvara I-Āhavamalla.<sup>1</sup> However, Vikramāditya eventually succeeded in placing Jayasīnha on the throne of Malwa. He carried his victorious arms even as far as Gauḍa and Kāmarūpa,<sup>2</sup> for which he must have overrun the Chēdi country. These encounters must have occurred before 1055 A.C.; for, we find Jayasīnha secure on the throne in the month Āshāḍha of that year.<sup>3</sup>

The Chandēlla kingdom also soon slipped out of Karṇa's hands. Kīrtivarman, the brother of Dēvavarman, soon succeeded in regaining his ancestral territory. Verse 26 of a Chandēlla inscription discovered at Mahōbā<sup>4</sup> records the victory of Kīrtivarman over Lakshmīkarṇa in the following words—"Just as Purushōttama (Vishṇu), having produced the nectar by churning, with the mountain (Mandara), the rolling (milk) ocean, whose high waves had swallowed many mountains, obtained (the goddess) Lakshmī together with the elephants (of the eight regions),—he (viz., Kīrtivarman), having acquired fame by crushing with his strong arm the haughty Lakshmīkarṇa, whose armies had destroyed many princes, obtained splendour in this world together with elephants." Lakshmīkarṇa is, no doubt, identical with the Kalachuri Karṇa. In the Ajayagaḍh rock inscription<sup>5</sup> of the Chandēlla Vīravarman (dated V. 1317), Kīrtivarman is described as the pitcher-born (Aga-stya) in swallowing the ocean in the form of Karṇa, and as the lord of Creatures (Brahmā) in creating anew (his) kingdom. The Prabōḍbachandrōdaya, which also refers to this event in its prologue, calls this Karṇa Chēdīpati (Lord of the Chēdi country). From this work we learn that Kīrtivarman's victory was mainly due to the bravery of his Brāhmaṇa general, Gōpāla. The play was performed before Kīrtivarman to commemorate this brilliant victory of the Chandēllas. In the prologue of the play, Gōpāla is eulogised as the Great Boar who raised the earth which was submerged in the great ocean of world-destruction in the form of a multitude of powerful kings.<sup>6</sup> In another passage he is said to have obtained the goddess of victory after exterminating the army of Karṇa, even as Vishṇu obtained Lakshmī by churning the ocean of milk.<sup>7</sup> In a third passage, Gōpāla's anger is said to have been roused to re-establish on the earth the sovereignty of the kings of the lunar race, which (sovereignty) had been uprooted by the lord of Chēdi who was Rudra and Kālāgni (the Fire of world-destruction) to the families of all kings.<sup>8</sup> In a subsequent passage of the same prologue, Gōpāla is said to have caused the rise of the illustrious Kīrtivarman after vanquishing the powerful Karṇa, even as discrimination leads to right knowledge after dispelling strong delusion.<sup>9</sup> The multiplicity of references to this victory suggests the stupendous nature of the task accomplished by Gōpāla. Another chief who also claimed credit for saving Kīrtivarman from Karṇa was mentioned in a fragmentary inscription<sup>10</sup> found at Jhānsi; but, unfortunately, his name is lost.

The date of the restoration of Chandēlla power cannot be definitely fixed; for, the only known date of Kīrtivarman's reign is that furnished by a rock inscription at the Deogarh Fort, viz., V. 1154 (1098 A.C.).<sup>11</sup> This inscription states that Vatsarāja, the chief minister of Kirtivarman, wrested the surrounding district from the enemy and built the fort which he named Kirtigiri, evidently in honour of his lord Kirtivarman. The unnamed enemy is probably Karṇa himself. Karṇa's defeat must, however, have occurred long before the date of this inscription. Vincent Smith approximately dates the accession of Kirtivarman in 1060 A.C.<sup>1</sup> If this date is correct, Karṇa must have been in occupation of the Chandēlla kingdom for seven or eight years.

Towards the close of his reign, Karṇa made another attempt to wipe out the neighbouring state of Malwa. The political situation in the Deccan had considerably changed in the meanwhile. Āhavamalla was dead and was succeeded by his eldest son Sōmēśvara II. The latter was afraid of his ambitious younger brother, Vikramāditya VI, and, therefore, must have readily allied himself with the powerful Kalachuri Emperor and helped him in his invasion of Malwa. This time the allied arms attained a greater success. The Nagpur Museum stone inscription very graphically describes in verse 32 the terrible disaster that befell the Mālava country at the time. It says that when Bhōja had become Indra's companion and when the realm was overrun by floods in which the sovereign was submerged, his brother Udayāditya became king. Delivering the earth which was troubled by kings such as the lord of Karṇāṭa and Karṇa, who swept over it like great oceans, this (prince) did indeed act like the holy Boar.<sup>2</sup> The expression rājyē cha kuly-ākulē in this verse is significant. Besides the meaning given above, it signifies another, viz., that the kingdom was in a state of disturbance owing to the rising of the scions of the (Paramāra) family. Even though Jayasīṃha had ascended the throne with the help of the Chālukya king Āhavamalla, it seems that there were some members of the Paramāra family (kulyas) who did not acquiesce in it. It is not known how Jayasīṃha was related to Bhōja. In his records he, no doubt, describes himself as meditating on the feet of Bhōja, but this does not necessarily indicate that he was his son. Perhaps he was his brother as conjectured by Dr. Altekar.<sup>3</sup> In that case there may have been other members of the Paramāra family who thought that they had an equal or even a better claim to the throne. So long as Jayasīṃha had the support of the powerful Chālukya Emperor, Sōmēśvara I-Āhavamalla, they could not do anything; but on the death of the Emperor, they must have risen in revolt. Perhaps these risings were fomented by the ambitious Kalachuri Emperor Karṇa, who had so far been foiled in his attempt to annex Malwa permanently. When he found that the Malwa kingdom was torn by a civil war, he made his alliance with Sōmēśvara II, the son of Āhavamalla, and invaded Malwa. The wording of the aforementioned verse of the Nagpur Museum inscription shows that the invaders were more than two. This is corroborated by a stone inscription of the Paramāra prince Jagaddēva, recently discovered at Dōṅgargaon in the Yeotmal District of Berar, which states that Malwa was invaded by a confederacy of three kings.<sup>4</sup> Two of these were, of course, the Kalachuri

Vaidya ingeniously conjectured that the correct reading should be कर्णप्रभुमुर्वीपाल- and I find from the original stone deposited in the Nagpur Museum that this is the actual reading. This reading suits the metre and yields a better sense. It shows that Malwa was invaded at that time by a confederacy of more than two kings. This is corroborated by the Dōṅgargaon inscription of Jagaddēva (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXVI, p. 183), as stated above.

Karṇa<sup>1</sup> and the Karṇāṭa king (Sōmēśvara II)<sup>2</sup> as stated in the Nagpur Museum inscription. The third member of the confederacy was probably the Western Gaṅga king Udayāditya. From several records in the Kanarese country, we know that this Udayāditya and his feudatory, the valiant Hōysaḷa prince Eṅṅyaṅga joined Sōmēśvara II in his attack on Malwa. Eṅṅyaṅga, in particular, is said to have trampled down the Mālava army, plundered the Mālava king's fort, and burnt and devastated Dhārā.<sup>3</sup>

Jayasimha succumbed to this attack, and for a time it seemed as if the Paramāra kingdom had been completely wiped out. The terrible disaster which befell the Mālava country at this time is graphically described in the Nagpur Museum inscription, which likens it to the catastrophe of the destruction of the world when mighty oceans sweep over and submerge the earth. The Udaipur prastiti compares it to the dense darkness which envelopes the world when the sun sets.<sup>4</sup> Both the similes indicate the gloom of despondency which had then overpowered the adherents of the Paramāra family. This invasion of Malwa occurred early in the reign of Sōmēśvara II (1069-1075 A.C.), in circa 1070 A.C.

It is not known how the invaders divided the spoils. Karṇa may have annexed Malwa and given the country to the south of the Narmadā to Sōmēśvara II.<sup>5</sup> The Kalachuri Emperor could not, however, retain his hold on Malwa for a long time. Udayāditya, one of the brothers of Bhōja,<sup>6</sup> rescued the country from the grip of Karṇa. The Nagpur Museum inscription compares him with the primeval Boar who uplifted the earth at the time of pralaya. The Udaipur prastiti describes him as another Sun, as it were, who, destroying the dense darkness, namely, the exalted foes, with the rays issuing from his strong sword, gladdened the hearts of the people by his splendour. In the latter half of the prastiti recently discovered at Udaipur, Udayāditya is credited with the total destruction (sambhāra) of the king of Dāhala (Dāhalādibhā), who is plainly the Kalachuri Karṇa.<sup>7</sup> The restoration of the Paramāra rule in Malwa may be dated in circa 1073 A.C.<sup>8</sup> The Jabalpur <sup>1</sup> Latterly the view has been advanced that he was the Chaulukya king Karṇa of Gujarat, the successor of Bhīma. Some late Sanskrit works, no doubt, state that the Chaulukya Karṇa defeated a king of Malwa, but they do not state that the latter was Jayasimha. On the other hand, the Kalachuri Karṇa's extermination of the royal family of Malwa is mentioned in an Apabhramṣa verse cited in the Prākṛita-Paiṅgala. This view is again corroborated by the latter part of the recently discovered Udaipur prastiti which states that Udayāditya inflicted a crushing defeat on the lord of Dāhala. D. C. Ganguli's statement that Udayāditya, by defeating Gurjara Karṇa, obtained Mālava (H. P. D., p. 132 and I. H. Q., Vol. XVIII, p. 266) is based on a wrong interpretation of a verse in the Pṛitvīrājaviṅaya.

<sup>5</sup> Siyaka seems to have extended his kingdom to the south of the Narmadā. In the time of Muñja the Gōdāvarī was the southern boundary of the Paramāra dominion, and though Tailapa may have annexed some territory to the north of this river, it was soon recovered by Sidhurāja as stated in the NSCH., Canto I, v. 74. A copper-plate inscription of Bhōja's feudatory Yaśovarman has been found at Kalvan in the Nasik District (Ep. Ind., Vol. XIX, pp. 69 ff), indicating that the country continued to be held by the Paramāras. After this time no records of the Paramāras except those of Jagaddēva have been found in Mahārāshṭra. Jagaddēva is now known to have been a feudatory of Vikramāditya VI. Ibid., Vol. XXVI, pp. 177 ff.

<sup>6</sup> It was believed for a long time that Udayāditya was a distant relative of Bhōja; but the Dōṅgar-gaon inscription, which calls him the bhrātā of Bhōja, has put the matter beyond doubt.

and Khairhā plates of Yaśaḥkarṇa state that Karṇa himself crowned his son Yaśaḥkarṇa.<sup>1</sup> We do not know why he abdicated the throne in favour of his son. It may be because of discomfiture at the failure of his schemes to bring the whole of India under one royal umbrella; or, he may have been forced to do so by the powerful rulers of Malwa, Jajjhauti and Gujarat, all of whom were now up in arms against him. His reign seems to have come to an end in 1073 A.C.; for, the earlier of the two known grants of his son Yaśaḥkarṇa was made in 1076 A.C.<sup>2</sup> As it mentions Yaśaḥkarṇa's expedition against an Andhra king, the Kalachuri emperor must have come to the throne at least two or three years earlier. We may, therefore, place his accession and the abdication of his father in circa 1073 A.C.

Karṇa was the greatest king of the Kalachuri dynasty. In the early part of his career, he seems to have carried everything before him and to have become the undisputed Chakravartin of North India.<sup>3</sup> In the Goharwa plates, which he issued in the seventh regnal year (1047 A.C.), he is seen to have assumed, besides the usual imperial titles, Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahāvājādbhirāja and Paramēśvara, two high-sounding ones, viz., Trikaliṅgādbhipati (Lord of the Three Kaliṅgas) and Nijabhuj-ōpārjit-āśvapati-gajapati-narapati-rāja-tray-ādbhipati(tya), (he who by his arms has acquired overlordship over the three rājās, viz., the lord of horses, the lord of elephants and the lord of men). Of these two titles, Trikaliṅgādbhipati seems to have been first assumed by his ancestor Yuvarājadēva I.<sup>4</sup> It may have been revived by Gāṅgēyadēva after his conquest of Utkala;<sup>5</sup> for, some contemporary kings of the Sōmavamśi dynasty ruling over Kōsala and Utkala proudly mention this title in their records.<sup>6</sup> The other title 'Overlord of the three Rājās etc.' was for the first time assumed by Karṇa.<sup>7</sup> It continued to be used not only by his descendants<sup>8</sup> but by several kings of other dynasties also, such as the Gāhaḍavālas,<sup>9</sup> the Sēnas<sup>10</sup> and the Chandēllas.<sup>11</sup> Originally, it seems to <sup>1</sup> Nos. 56 and 57, verse 16. This seems to conflict with the statement in the latter part of the Udaipur prafastī which speaks of the total destruction of Karṇa by Udayāditya. Karṇa may have been killed on the battlefield.

<sup>2</sup> The plates give the date (K.) 823; but the details do not work out satisfactorily, and it seems that their correct date is (K.) 827. Besides, if Yaśaḥkarṇa really made the grant in K. 823 (1172 A. C.), we shall have to suppose that Sōmēśvara II's accession, his alliance with Karṇa and invasion of Malwa, the devastation of Dhārā and killing of Jayasīnha, the defeat of the allies by Udayāditya, Karṇa's abdication of the throne, Yaśaḥkarṇa's coronation and subsequent invasion of the Andhra country—all these events happened in the brief period of four years from 1068 A.C. (the accession of Sōmēśvara II) to 1072 A.C. (the supposed date of the Khairhā plates). This seems to be extremely unlikely.

<sup>6</sup> See, e.g., the Sonpur grant of Mahāśivagupta (J. B. O. R. S., Vol. II, pp. 45 ff.). This grant describes the king as the self-chosen lord of Kaliṅga, Kōṅgōda, Utkala and Kōsala, and further as the lord of Trikaliṅga which he conquered with his own arms. This makes it clear that Trikaliṅga was different from the other countries named in it. According to R. C. Majumdar, Trikaliṅga denoted 'the hilly tract to the west of Kaliṅga.' Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, pp. 69-70. He has drawn attention to some passages in which Trikaliṅga (or Trikaliṅgāṭavī) has been coupled with Vēṅgī. A similar expression (viz., sa-Kaliṅga-trayāṇi Vēṅgīṭi) occurs in the Parbhāṇi plates (Ś. 888) of Arikēśarin (G. H. Khare's S. M. H. D., Vol. II, p. 49).

<sup>7</sup> Prof. Rapson, who has examined this question in detail (W. C. V., pp. 196 ff.), has come to the conclusion that 'during the period of its use from c. 1040 to 1240, it (i.e., the title) denoted the overlord of the Allahabad District, the region of the once famous kingdom of Kauśāmbī, and that it passed by conquest from one possessor of this region to the next.' It may, however, be noted that Karṇa's own Banaras plates, dated K. 1042, do not mention this title though he undoubtedly held Allahabad at the time.

have signified Karṇa's suzerainty over the Gurjara-Pratihāras of Kanauj, the Gaṅgas of Kālīṅga and the Pālas of Bengal. The Gurjara-Pratihāras maintained a fine cavalry and are sometimes referred to in inscriptions as Aśvapati or Hayapati.<sup>1</sup> Kālīṅga was known for its breed of elephants.<sup>2</sup> Its rulers are occasionally referred to as Gajādbīsas or Lords of Elephants.<sup>3</sup> The king of the east received, according to Yuan Chwang, the title of the lord of men.<sup>4</sup> As we have already seen, Karṇa had vanquished all these kings and in his case the title was significant; but in the case of his descendants and of some kings of the other dynasties who imitated him, it was clearly an empty boast.

According to the Rāsamālā, one hundred and thirty-six kings were in attendance upon Karṇa.<sup>5</sup> The Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Narasiṃha states that the Pāṇḍya and Hūṇa kings and the rulers of Murala, Kuṅga, Vaṅga, Kālīṅga and Kīra were panic-stricken when Karṇa gave a full play to his valour.<sup>6</sup> The Karaṇbēl stone inscription says that Chōḍa, Kuṅga, Hūṇa, Gauḍa, Gurjara and Kīra used to wait upon him.<sup>7</sup> It may be that the names of some of these kings have been inserted in the verses by the writers of the prastāvis for the sake of alliteration; but the foregoing account of Karṇa's conquests based on incontrovertible inscriptional and literary evidence testifies to the general correctness of the description. In the records of his enemies, Karṇa's whirl-wind campaigns are likened to the flooding waters of the oceans at the time of world-destruction. On account of the aggressive and ruthless policy which he pursued towards contemporary rulers, he is called Rudra and Kālāgni (Fire of world-destruction) in the Sanskrit play Prabōdhachandrōdaya. These similes and metaphors vividly portray the terror he struck in the hearts of his adversaries.

Great as Karṇa was in war, he was greater in peace. He gave a liberal patronage to religion and literature. At Banaras he built a high twelve-storeyed temple called Karṇamēru, which was probably dedicated to Siva;<sup>8</sup> for, he was himself a Saiva and called himself paramamāhēsvara in his grants. He built a ghāt called Karṇa-tīrtha at Prayāga where his Goharwa grant was made. He established a settlement of learned Brāhmaṇas, which he named Karṇāvati after himself. This place is generally identified with Karaṇbēl, now a small village adjoining Tewar; but from the description in the grants of Yaśaḥkarṇa that it was, as it were, the crown of the heavenly river (Gaṅgā), it would appear that it was situated somewhere on the bank of the Gaṅgā. Though Karṇa thus extended his patronage to the Vedic and Puraṇic Hinduism, he was no sectarian. There was religious toleration in his kingdom. The Sārnāth stone inscription<sup>9</sup> dated K. 810 shows that Buddhist monasteries continued to flourish during his reign.

Karṇa made the holy city of Banaras his capital. It was at Banaras that the Sanskrit poet Bilhaṇa met him.<sup>10</sup> Learned Brāhmaṇas received liberal gifts at his hands. A verse which is repeated in both of his known grants states that the world was deafened by the engraving of copper-plates which he granted to Brāhmaṇas.<sup>11</sup> Even now stories about the munificence of Karṇa Ḍahārīā are current in Banaras.<sup>1</sup> Bilhaṇa, the well-known Sanskrit poet of Kashmir, received a great honour in his court. He says that he defeated one Gaṅgādhara and composed a beautiful kāvya in praise of Rāma while at Karṇa's court.<sup>2</sup> Other poets of Karṇa's court, known from Sanskrit anthologies, are Vallāṇa, Nāchirāja, Karpūra and Vidyāpati. Several verses of these poets are included in the Kavindravachana-samuchchaya and other anthologies.<sup>3</sup> Karṇa patronised Prakrit poets also. Some anonymous Mahārāshṭrī and Apabhraṁśa verses in praise of him are cited in the Prākṛita-Paiṅgala.<sup>4</sup> Kanakāmara, the author of the Apabhraṁśa kāvya Karakaṇḍacharin, says in his concluding verses that he used to delight, by his verses, the mind of the king Karṇa.<sup>5</sup>

Karṇa married a Hūṇa princess named Āvalladēvi.<sup>6</sup> Hūṇa kings are known from references in the records of several kings. They appear to have been ruling somewhere in Central India; for, there are occasional references to defeats inflicted on them by Pratihāra, Paramāra, Pāla and Kalachuri kings or their feudatories. But the exact location of their kingdom has not been fixed. Karṇa had, from Āvalladēvi, a son named Yaśaḥkarṇa, who succeeded him. Two of his daughters Viraśrī and Yauvanaśrī are also known. The former, who is named in the Bēlavā plates of Bhōjavarman,<sup>7</sup> married Jātavarman of Eastern Bengal. Yauvanaśrī is mentioned as the wife of Vighrahapāla of North-East Bengal in the Rāmacharita of Sandhyākaranandin.<sup>8</sup>

Yaśaḥkarṇa succeeded his father in circa 1073 A.C. Only two records of his reign are known, viz., the Khairhā<sup>9</sup> and the Jabalpur plates.<sup>10</sup> Both contain an identical eulogistic portion which was first drafted in Banaras. The only historical event which they mention is Yaśaḥkarṇa's invasion of the Andhra country. Verse 23 of these grants says that 'extirpating with ease the lord of Andhra, the graceful movements of whose arms were flawless, he (i.e., Yaśaḥkarṇa) worshipped, with the offerings of many ornaments, the holy Bhīmēśvara, near whom the Gōdāvarī with her dancing eye-brows of waves sings his glory with the seven notes of her streams, sweet with the cries of intoxicated swans.' There are several temples of Bhīmēśvara in the Gōdāvarī District, but the foregoing description suits especially the temple at Drākshārām in the Rāmchandrapuram tālukā, which contains a particularly big Siva-linga, fourteen or fifteen feet high. The temple is not on the bank of the Gōdāvarī as suggested in the above verse, but the reference may be to the tank at Drākshārām which is called Sapta-Gōdāvarī and which is popularly supposed to contain the waters of the seven mouths of the Gōdāvarī. The Andhra king defeated by Yaśaḥkarṇa was probably Vijayāditya VII, who ruled from 1061 to 1076 A.C. In this campaign, Yaśaḥkarṇa seems to have been aided by Jājalladēva I of the Ratanpur branch of the Kalachuri dynasty ruling over Dakṣiṇa Kōśala; for, the latter in his Ratanpur inscription dated K. 866 boasts that the lord of Chēdi had sought his friendship by means of presents.<sup>1</sup>

Soon after Karṇa's death, Yaśahkarṇa seems to have lost Kanauj and the surrounding territory. The Basāhi plate says that when king Bhōja became a guest of the eyes of the celestial damsels and Karṇa existed only in renown, and when the earth was sorely troubled, the husband whom she chose from love and took with confidence as the protector was Chandradēva.<sup>2</sup> The aforementioned Ratanpur inscription of Jājalladēva dated K. 866 (1114 A.C.) mentions the king of Kānyakubja as different from the lord of Chēdi. This clearly indicates that the latter had lost his control over Kanauj, as it had passed into the possession of the Gāhaḍavālas.

As stated before, the eulogistic portion of the Jabalpur plates is an almost exact copy of that of the Khairhā plates. The date of the former is now lost as the second plate is not forthcoming, but there are grounds to suppose that it was K. 836 (1084 A.C.).<sup>3</sup> If the description in the plate could be relied on, Yaśahkarṇa was master of Banaras till that date. Soon thereafter, he seems to have lost that city also to the Gāhaḍavālas; for, the Chandravatī plates, which record the earliest grant of the Gāhaḍavālas found in the Banaras District, are dated V. 1148 (1090 A.C.).<sup>4</sup>

In the latter part of his career, Yaśahkarṇa seems to have made a supreme effort to regain his lost possessions in the north. He carried his arms as far as Champāraṇya (modern Champāran in Bihar) and devastated the country;<sup>5</sup> but he did not probably succeed in annexing any territory; for, after 1090 A.C. we have several grants of the Gāhaḍavālas from the Banaras District, which shows that they were securely established there.<sup>6</sup> This conclusion receives an additional support from a copper-plate inscription dated V. 1177 (1122 A.C.) which records the sanction of the Gāhaḍavāla king Govindachandradēva to the transfer of two villages in the Antarālapattalā (i.e., Antarvēdī or Gaṅgā-Yamunā Doab) which had been previously granted by Yaśahkarṇa to the Śaiva ascetic Rudraśiva.<sup>7</sup> This clearly shows that the Kalachuris did not succeed in regaining possession of the Doab during the reign of Yaśahkarṇa.

With the loss of the northern provinces, the kingdom of Yaśahkarṇa seems to have shrunk to the home province of Dāhala, and Tripurī again became his sole capital. From the Nagpur praśasti we learn that the city was stormed by the Paramāra king Lakshmadēva (circa 1086-1094 A.C.), who annihilated his warlike and spirited adversaries, and encamped on the bank of the Rēvā, his elephants allaying the fatigue of the battle by bathing in the stream of the river.<sup>8</sup>

Yaśahkarṇa seems to have suffered another defeat at the hands of the Chandēlla Sallakshaṇavarman (circa 1100-1110 A.C.); for, in an inscription of the latter's descendant Viravarman, Sallakshaṇavarman's sword is said to have robbed the Chēdis of their

It is difficult to state definitely the limits of Yaśaḥkaṛṇa's reign. The earlier of his two grants seems to have been issued in K. 827.<sup>3</sup> He must have been reigning then for about 3 years and, therefore, may have come to the throne in circa K. 824. The only date of his son and successor Gayākaṛṇa is K. 902. Gayākaṛṇa's reign seems to have closed soon thereafter; for, in K. 907 he was dead and his son Narasiṃha was on the throne. So the period of about 80 years (K. 824 to K. 904) is covered by only two reigns. It seems probable that Yaśaḥkaṛṇa had a longer reign than his son, of whose achievements very little is known. He may, therefore, be referred to the period K. 824 to K. 874 (1073-1123 A.C.).

Yaśaḥkaṛṇa assumed the same imperial titles as Kaṛṇa; but he had neither the ambition nor the military genius of his father. During his reign the Kalachuri kingdom lost the northern provinces of Kanauj, Prayāga and Banaras, and became very much circumscribed. He tried to regain his possessions by forming alliances<sup>4</sup> and even invaded northern and southern countries; but his raids produced no permanent effect and did not extend the limits of his dominion. The Paramāra invasion of his capital must have dealt a shattering blow to his power and prestige.

Yaśaḥkaṛṇa was succeeded by his son Gayākaṛṇa. Only two inscriptions of his reign are known. The earlier<sup>5</sup> of these, dated K. 902, which was discovered at Tewar, records the erection of a temple dedicated to Śiva by the Pāśupata ascetic Bhāvabrahman. The second inscription<sup>6</sup> is from Bahuribandh in the north of the Jabalpur District. It has partially lost its date.<sup>7</sup> It mentions Gōlhaṇadēva of the Rāshtrakūṭa family as the Mahāsāmantādhipati (Chief Feudatory) of Gayākaṛṇa. He was evidently a descendant of a scion of the Rāshtrakūṭa family which had settled in the Chēdi country in the 8th or 9th century A.C., when the Kalachuris and the Rāshtrakūṭas were matrimonially connected. The proper object of the inscription is to record the erection of a temple of the Jina Śāntinātha by a private individual named Mahābhōja.

These inscriptions, both of which come from the Jabalpur District, do not help us in determining the extent of Gayākaṛṇa's kingdom. The discovery<sup>8</sup> of a hoard of the Chandēlla Madanavarman's silver coins at Panwar in the Teonthal tabsil of the former Rewa state in 1910 seems to indicate that Gayākaṛṇa had lost the territory north of the Kaimur range. That he had come into a conflict with the Chandēllas is clear from an inscription found at Mau which says that 'the Chēdi king, being vanquished in a fierce fight, runs away in haste at the mention of Madanavarman's name.'<sup>9</sup> As Madanavarman was ruling from circa 1124 A.C. to 1164 A.C., the Chēdi king defeated by him was probably Gayākaṛṇa.

Gayākarna seems to have suffered another defeat at the hands of Ratnadēva II of Dakshina Kōsala. The latter belonged to an offshoot of the Kalachuri house of Dāhala. The early princes of this branch owed allegiance to the Kalachuri Emperors ruling at Tripurī and fought their battles. We have already seen that in his war against the king of Utkala (Orissa), Gāṅgēyadēva received valuable help from Kamalarāja of Tummāṇa.<sup>1</sup> Pṛithvidēva I, the earliest prince of this branch whose inscriptions have been found in Chhattisgarh, does not claim in his Amōdā plates a higher title than Mahāmaṇḍalēśvara.<sup>2</sup> He was plainly a feudatory of the contemporary ruler of Dāhala. But his descendants began gradually to assert their independence. Jājalladēva I, the son of Pṛithvidēva I, boasts in his inscription that the contemporary lord of Chēdi, who was Yaśaḥkarṇa, sought his friendship, and that the rulers of Kānyakubja and Jejābhukti honoured him with presents of wealth.<sup>3</sup> The crushing defeat that Ratnadēva II, the son and successor of Jājalladēva I, inflicted on the mighty Gaṅga king Anantavarman Chōḍagaṅga<sup>4</sup> increased his power and prestige. He seems to have openly renounced subordination to Gayākarna. The latter sent a large force against him; but it suffered an ignominious defeat. In a Ratanpur inscription dated V. 1207 (1149-50 A.C.), Ratnadēva II is described as the fierce submarine fire to the matchless ocean of the arrayed and hard-to-be-subdued hosts of the Chēdi king.<sup>5</sup> The latter must have been no other than Gayākarna.

Gayākarna married Alhaṇadēvī, the daughter of Vijayasimha, the Guhila prince of Prāgvāta or Mevad and Syāmaladēvī, who was herself the daughter of Udayāditya, the lord of the Mālava maṇḍala.<sup>6</sup> This alliance, which in a way united the royal families of the Kalachuris and the Paramāras, healed the sores of many generations. Alhaṇadēvī had two sons, Narasimha who succeeded his father, and Jayasimha who 'like Lakshmaṇa did marvellous service to his elder brother.' Gayākarna's spiritual preceptor was Śaktiśiva.<sup>7</sup>

As stated before, Gayākarna's reign seems to have come to a close soon after K. 902 (1151 A.C.); for, when the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription was incised in K. 907, he was already dead and his son Narasimha was on the throne.

Only three inscriptions of the reign of Narasimha have been discovered so far. The aforementioned Bherā-Ghāt inscription, dated K. 907 (1155 A.C.), records the construction, by Alhaṇadēvī, of a temple of Śiva under the name Vaidyanātha together with a monastery, a hall of study and a row of gardens attached to it. She endowed the temple with the gift of two villages and placed it in charge of the Pāsupata ascetic Rudrarāśi. The other two inscriptions were discovered north of the Kaimur range—one<sup>8</sup>, dated K. 909 (1158 A.C.), at Lāl Pahāḍ near Bharhut, and the other<sup>9</sup>, dated V.1216 (1159 A.C.), near the foot of Alha-Ghāt, 'which is one of the natural passes of the Vindhya hills by which the Tons river finds its way from the table land of Rewa to the plain of the Gaṅgā.' The former of these records the construction of a vaha or water-channel by one Ballāladēva, who was the son of an officer of Narasimha, while the second registers the erection of a temple of Ambikā and the construction of a ghāt by the Rāṇaka Chhijhula. The discovery of these lithic records north of the Kaimur range indicates that Narasimha succeeded in recovering from the Chandēllas a portion of his ancestral dominion which had been lost by his father. He continued to use the same high-sounding titles as his ancestors Karṇa and Yaśaḥkarṇa had done, though his kingdom had become very much circumscribed.

Like his ancestors, Narasiṃha was a devotee of Śiva. His spiritual preceptor was Kīrtiśiva, the disciple of Saktiśiva, who is said to have contributed to his prosperity.<sup>1</sup> A stone inscription from Jabalpur states that his fame had spread in all directions. He is identical with Kīrtiśambhu, the disciple of Saktiśambhu mentioned as the head of Gōḷakī Maṭha in an inscription discovered at Malkāpuram in the Guntur District.<sup>2</sup>

Narasiṃha was probably an old man when he came to the throne; for, his father Gayākarṇa and grandfather Yaśaḥkarṇa had unusually long reigns. He seems to have died without a son, as he was succeeded by his brother Jayasiṃha. As the earliest known date of the latter is K. 918, Narasiṃha seems to have ruled from K. 905 to K. 915 (1153-1163 A.C.).

Jayasiṃha seems to have been a brave and ambitious prince. The Jabalpur plates of his reign have the following verse about him which is also found repeated in the Kumbhī grant of his son Vijayasiṃha:—"On hearing of the coronation of the illustrious Jayasiṃhadēva, the Gurjara king disappeared, the Turushka lost the strength of (his) arms, the lord of Kuntala suddenly renounced all love-sports, and other kings also leaving the earth through apprehension crossed the ocean."<sup>3</sup> We have no means to ascertain whether Jayasiṃha actually raided the countries of these kings. But that he led at least one expedition is known from an inscription at Shēorinārāyaṇ.

This invasion was directed against Jājalladēva II, the contemporary ruler of Ratanpur. The Shēorinārāyaṇ inscription tells us that Ulhaṇadēva, who was descended from a collateral branch of the Ratanpur Kalachuris, routed with his arrows the army of the Chēdīking. Seeing that his forces were being exterminated, the Chēdī king Jayasiṃha, whose name is partially preserved in the inscription, advanced in person, being highly enraged like a serpent trodden under foot.<sup>4</sup> From the subsequent description it appears that Ulhaṇadēva lost his life in the fight. It is not stated how the battle ended. Probably Jayasiṃha was defeated and had to sue for peace; for, there is no mention of this battle in the subsequent records of the Kalachuris of Tripurī. The battle must have been fought soon after Jayasiṃha's accession which we have conjecturally placed in K. 915; for, the aforementioned Shēorinārāyaṇ inscription, which describes it, is dated K. 919.

Five inscriptions of the reign of Jayasiṃha have been found. The earliest of them is his Jabalpur grant.<sup>5</sup> It is dated K. 918 and records the gift of the village Agarā which Jayasiṃha made on the occasion of a lunar eclipse which occurred on the full-moon day of Āśvina (the 30th September 1167 A.C.). Another Jabalpur inscription<sup>6</sup> of his reign is dated K. 926 (1174-75 A.C.). The proper object of it is to record that Vimalaśiva, the spiritual preceptor of Jayasiṃha, erected a temple of Śiva under the name of Kīrtiśvara, and that Jayasiṃha endowed it with certain villages on the occasion of a solar eclipse.

Like his elder brother, Jayasiṃha continued to hold to the last the valley of the Tamasā or Tons; for, the Rewa plate of the Mahārāṇaka Kirtivarman, the ruler of Karkarēḍī, which is dated K. 926, mentions him as suzerain with full titles of paramountcy.<sup>7</sup>

The latest date of Jayasimha's reign is K. 928, which is furnished by a stone inscription at Tewar recording the erection of a temple of Siva by a private individual named Kēśava.<sup>1</sup> The next known date is K. 944, which belongs to the reign of his son and successor Vijayasimha.<sup>2</sup> Jayasimha, therefore, seems to have reigned from K. 915 to K. 940 (1163-1188 A.C.). Towards the close of his reign Jayasimha seems to have been forced to pay homage to the Chandēlla king Paramardin. In a fragmentary Mahōbā inscription dated V. 1240 (1184 A.C.), it is stated that the lord of Tripurī fainted whenever he heard the songs of the valour of Paramardin's arms.<sup>3</sup> Paramardin flourished from circa 1165 A.C. to 1203 A.C. The Kalachuri king who submitted to him was probably Jayasimha.

Like his predecessors, Jayasimha assumed the imperial titles Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara as well as 'Lord of Trikalinga' and 'Overlord of the three Rājās, the lord of horses etc.' These titles had then become quite conventional and meaningless. He was a devotee of Siva, and as stated before, made some gifts of villages to that deity. His spiritual preceptor was Vimalaśiva.<sup>4</sup>

Jayasimha had two queens—Kēlhaṇadēvī mentioned in his Jabalpur plates,<sup>5</sup> and Gōsaladēvī known from the Kumbhī plates<sup>6</sup> and the Bhērā-Ghāṭ inscription.<sup>7</sup> The village Gōsalapur, about 19 miles north by east of Jabalpur, was evidently founded in the name of the latter queen.

As stated before, Jayasimha was succeeded by his son Vijayasimha. It seems that in the beginning of his reign the ruler of Karkarēḍī attempted to throw off his yoke. As we have already seen, Kīrtivarman, who was ruling over Karkarēḍī in K. 926, was a vassal of Jayasimha. His brother Salakshaṇa, who succeeded him, revolted against his overlord, but he was promptly subdued by Malayasimha, another feudatory of Vijayasimha, in the battle of Karkarēḍī. This event is mentioned in the Rewa stone inscription<sup>8</sup> of Vijayasimha, dated K. 944 (1193 A.C.). In the Rewa plate, issued two years later in V. 1253 (1195 A.C.), Salakshaṇavarman acknowledges the suzerainty of Vijayasimha and names him with the usual Kalachuri titles of paramountcy.

The aforementioned Rewa stone inscription states that Malayasimha routed another chief named Vikrama; but the latter cannot be identified as no further details are given.

The last record of Vijayasimha's reign is the Rewa stone inscription, the date of which is partially effaced.<sup>9</sup> From the first two figures which are not altogether illegible, it seems that the record was incised in K. 96 (x). As the Dhurēti plates<sup>10</sup> show that the Chandēlla Trailōkyamalla or Trailōkyavarman was in occupation of the territory round Rewa in K. 963 (1212 A.C.), Vijayasimha seems to have lost the northern portion of Baghelkhand in K. 961 or K. 962.

Vijayasimha seems also to have submitted to the Yādava king Simhaṇa. In the

There is a play on the word mūrccbhānā used in the verse. It means (1) a swoon and (2) a melody. So the other meaning is that the king of Tripurī sings a melody in praise of Paramardin.

Puṣūṅja stone inscription<sup>1</sup>, which seems to be dated in 1200 A.C., Simhaṅga is called Ḍāhala-bṛit-kutūhala 'a very curiosity of the heart of (the people of) the Ḍāhala country'. The expression is perhaps intended to signify that when Simhaṅga invaded Ḍāhala, the people of the country flocked together out of curiosity to see him.

It is not known when Vijayasimha's reign came to an end. The Kumbhī plates<sup>2</sup> and the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription<sup>3</sup> mention Ajayasimha as Mabārājakumāra, or crown prince. He was plainly Vijayasimha's son, but whether he actually ascended the throne is not known. Vimalaśiva seems to have continued as Rājaguru during the reign of Vijayasimha.<sup>4</sup>

We have already seen that towards the close of his reign, Vijayasimha lost the northern portion of Baghelkhand. The western portion, consisting of the Saugor and Damoh districts, was also soon occupied by the Chandēllas.<sup>5</sup> A stone inscription<sup>6</sup> dated V. 1344 (1287 A.C.), found at Hindoria, 11 miles from Damoh, states that the local chief Vāghadēva owed allegiance to Bhōjavarma of Kālāñjara. Another stone inscription, found at Bamhani<sup>7</sup> in the same district and dated V. 1364 (1308 A.C.), mentions the same chief as a feudatory of Hammīravarman of Kālāñjara, who had in the meantime succeeded Bhōjavarman. No inscriptions of the Chandēllas have, however, been discovered in the Jabalpur District in which Tripurī, the Kalachuri capital, was situated.<sup>8</sup> If the Kalachuris retained their hold on this district, they must have owned the suzerainty of the Chandēllas.

The recently discovered Purushōttampurī plates<sup>9</sup> of the reign of the Yādava king Rāmachandra, dated Saka 1232 (1310 A.C.), state that Rāmachandra had defeated in a moment the king of the great and extensive Ḍāhala country. The inscription does not name the king, nor does it state to which royal family he belonged. Perhaps the Chandēlla king Hammīravarman who had a large part of Ḍāhala under his sway was the king defeated by Rāmachandra.

In the meanwhile, Muslim power was slowly penetrating Baghelkhand. Nāsīrud-dīn Mahmud (1246-66 A.C.) appointed Malik Julachī Governor of the Chēdi country. The latter's son Hisām-ud-dīn, placed Jallāla Khōjā in charge of the country now comprised in the Damoh District. An inscription of the latter, dated V. 1385 (1328 A.C.), has been discovered at Baṭihāgarh, 21 miles north-west of Damoh.<sup>10</sup> The discovery of this inscription in the vicinity of Damoh indicates how precarious was the hold of the Chandēlla rulers on Ḍāhala. After 1310 A.C. we have no records of the Chandēllas or the Kalachuris from the Chēdi or Ḍāhala country.

He was second in spiritual descent from Vimalaśiva, the Rājaguru of Vijayasimha. If the statement of the Malkāpuram inscription is correct, the Kalachuris may have been holding Tripurī and the surrounding territory till 1240 A.C. at least. ## THE KALACHURIS OF SARAYUPARA

A branch of the Kalachuri family which established itself in the Sarayūpāra country is known from two records. One of them is a stone inscription found in the Buddhist ruins at Kasiā (ancient Kuśīnagara) where Gautama Buddha entered the Mahāparinirvāṇa, while the other is a copper-plate grant discovered at Kahla, a few miles to the north of the Ghōgrā (ancient Sarayū) in the Dhuriāpār parganā of the Gorakhpur District. The copper-plate grant contains three dates, viz., 1031, 1077 and 1079 A.C., the details of which work out quite regularly. The stone inscription is, unfortunately, very sadly mutilated in the lower portion. If it contained any date, it is now lost for ever; but on the evidence of palæography, it can be referred to the 10th century A.C. The two places Kasiā and Kahla where these records were discovered are only about 40 miles distant from each other. Prima facie, therefore, the two Kalachuri ruling families mentioned in them should be related to each other, if not identical; but no points of contact have yet been noticed.<sup>1</sup> To facilitate comparison, the genealogies mentioned in the two records are given below—

Kasiā Stone InscriptionKahla Plates

<sup>1</sup> D. R. Sahnī remarked in his edition of the Kasiā inscription in the Ep., Ind., "This is the only record so far known of the branch of the Kalachuri family to which it belongs." Following him, H. C. Ray calls this branch 'Kasiā Kalachuris' to distinguish it from the other branch which he names 'Kahla Kalachuris'. See D. H. N. I., Vol. II, 741.

A careful examination of the two genealogical lists reveals some connecting links. The Kahla plates state that the ornament of the Kalachuris who had conquered Kālāñjara and Ayōmukha<sup>1</sup> gave the kingdom to his younger brother Lakshmaṇarāja, who, in his turn, conquered the country of Svētapada. The Kasiā stone inscription makes similar statements about the third king, Lakshmaṇarāja I, of its list. Verse 17 of the inscription which is sadly mutilated refers to two uterine brothers, of whom one, probably Lakshmaṇarāja I mentioned in the preceding verse, out of love made over a fortress (Kālāñjara?), evidently to his brother, and afterwards conquered the mountainous country of Saivaya, the home land of the famous legendary king Śibi. The similarity in the two descriptions is certainly striking. It suggests that the two Lakshmaṇarājas were identical. This Lakshmaṇarāja's brother, who is unfortunately not named in either record, was probably Vāmarāja as suggested before.

The genealogical lists show agreement in some other places also. Thus Rājaputra and his son Sivarāja I, mentioned in the Kahlā plates, are plainly identical with Lakshmaṇarāja II and his son Sivarāja II, described in the Kasiā inscription; for, the latter inscription says that Lakshmaṇarāja II was, on account of his merits, known by the other name of Rājaputra.<sup>2</sup> This Sivarāja's son is called Saṅkaragaṇa in the Kahlā plates; but his name her relationship to Lakshmaṇa III mentioned in the preceding verse is uncertain. But a comparison with the corresponding portion of the Kahla grant leaves no room for doubt that she was his wife.

is lost in Kasiā inscription. The latter does not, therefore, give any clue to identification. Sivarāja's grandson is named Lakshmaṇa in the Kasiā inscription and Guṇāmbhōdhi (or Guṇāsāgara I) in the Kahla plates. The latter is apparently a biruda. This conjecture receives support from the fact that the wives of both were named Kāñchanā. Bhīmaṭa II, the son of Lakshmaṇa III, mentioned in the Kasiā inscription, may not, therefore, be different from Ullabha, the son of Guṇāmbhōdhi, named in the Kahla plates. The names of Bhīmaṭa's successors are lost owing to the mutilation of the Kasiā inscription; but the agreements noticed above leave no room for doubt that the two royal families were identical. From the information derived from the two records, we can, therefore, form the following combined genealogy—

Lakshmaṇa I, the founder of this Sarayūpāra branch of the Kalachuri dynasty, was the thirteenth ancestor of Vyāsa. As the latter came to the throne in 1031 A.C., we may place the accession of Lakshmaṇarāja I in circa 700 A.C., taking 25 years as the average duration of each generation. Similarly, Lakshmaṇarāja III alias Guṇasāgara I, the seventh ancestor of Vyāsa, may have begun to reign in circa 850 A.C. This date is supported by the description in the Kahla plates that he defeated a Gauḍa king and obtained some territory from Bhōjadēva. This Bhōja is no other than the Pratihāra king Bhōja I, whose known dates range from 836 to 882 A.C. We know that he was engaged in a prolonged war with the contemporary Pāla king Dēvapāla (circa 810-850 A.C.). The dates conjecturally assigned to the members of this branch may, therefore, be taken to be substantially correct.<sup>1</sup>

We have reviewed before the political conditions in North India which led to the establishment of this branch so far to the north.<sup>2</sup> After consolidating his position in the hill-fort of Kālāñjara, Vāmarāja overran Ayōmukha, (modern Partāpgarh and Rai Barelli Districts of U. P.) which he afterwards made over to his younger brother Lakshmaṇarāja I. Using Ayōmukha as his base, Lakshmaṇarāja invaded the country to the north of the Sarayū, the home land of the legendary king Śibi, famous for his liberality.<sup>3</sup> There he ultimately established himself. The dynasty he founded reigned over the Sarayūpāra country for at least fifteen generations.

<sup>3</sup> The name of the country conquered by Lakshmaṇarāja is given as Śvētapada by the Kahla plates and as Śaivaya by the Kasiā inscription. The latter record again states that it was the home land of Śibi, the son of Uśīnara. From the Mahābhārata (Vanaparvan, adhyāya 130, v. 20) Śibi appears to have been ruling in the Panjab. The Buddhist Jātakas mention Ariṭṭhapura and Jeṭuttara as the capitals of the Śibi country. Elsewhere, the capital of Śibi is said to be Śivipura. As Dr. Vogel has shown, modern Shōrkōṭ in the Panjab marks the site of ancient Śivipura. Ep. Ind., Vol. XVI, p. 16. Śaivaya may be derived from Śvētapada through the intermediate stages of Seāvā and Senaya. The context shows that the province of Śvētapada was included in Sarayūpāra, and there may have been a tradition, wrong of course, associating it with the ancient king Śibi, 'the paragon of charity and self-sacrifice.'

The Kahla plates begin the royal genealogy with this Lakshmaṇarāja I; but the Kasiā inscription carries it two generations backward and names Saṅkaragaṇa and Nannarāja as the grandfather and father respectively of Lakshmaṇarāja I. We have already stated the reasons for our view that these two kings were ruling not in Sarayūpāra, but in their home province of Anūpa.

We have no knowledge of the political events in the reign of Sivarāja I and Bhīmaṭa I, who succeeded Lakshmaṇarāja I, one after the other. The description of them, given by the Kasiā inscription, is quite conventional.<sup>1</sup> Bhīmaṭa I was succeeded by Lakshmaṇa II, who, on account of his merits, was known by the second name of Rājaputra. About this prince the Kahla plates say that he took captive Vāhali, the Lord of horses, gave no respite to the king of the East and by his achievements lowered the fame of ancient princes like Arjuna.<sup>2</sup> Vāhali is not otherwise known. He was probably a feudatory of the Pratihāras of Kanauj, who were noted for their fine cavalry. The king of the East against whom Lakshmaṇa fought must have been a king of the Pāla dynasty, perhaps Dharmapāla, who was his contemporary.

About Sivarāja II, who succeeded Lakshmaṇa II, we have nothing but conventional praise in both the records. His son Saṅkaragaṇa II is mentioned in the Kahla plates. His name is lost in the Kasiā inscription, which, however, supplies the information that his wife was Bhūdā. This Saṅkaragaṇa is probably identical with the homonymous prince who received protection from Kōkalla I of Tripurī.<sup>3</sup> Perhaps his country was threatened at the time by his eastern neighbour, the Pāla king Dēvapāla. Saṅkaragaṇa wisely allied himself with the powerful kings of the time, Bhōja I of Kanauj and Kōkalla I of Tripurī, to stem the tide of the Pāla invasion. He sent his son Lakshmaṇa III alias Guṇāmbhōdhi (or Guṇasāgara I) to fight in the Pratihāra Emperor's campaigns against Dēvapāla. If the description in the Kahla plates can be relied upon, Lakshmaṇa took away the fortune of the Gauḍa king and received as reward some territory from Bhōjadēva who can be none other than Bhōja I of Kanauj.

From his wives Kānchanā and Madanadēvi, Lakshmaṇa III had the sons, Ullabha and Bhāmāna I respectively. The former, who was apparently elder, abdicated the throne in favour of Bhāmāna I. Bhāmāna came into conflict with the contemporary king of Dhārā and inflicted a crushing defeat on his forces. The Paramāra adversary is not named, but he may have been Muñja (circa 974-995 A. C.). Perhaps the Kalachuri king Yuvarājadēva II had asked for his help when his territory was invaded by the Paramāra king,<sup>4</sup> and it was now the turn of the Sarayūpāra family to go to the rescue of the main house.

From his queen Dēhattadēvi, Bhāmāna had a son named Saṅkaragaṇa III, who succeeded him. He had the viruda Mugdhatuṅga. From his wife Vidyā, Saṅkaragaṇa had a son named Guṇasāgara II. The latter's son from his queen Rājavā was Sivarāja III, also called Bhāmāna II. His son from Sūgalladēvi was Saṅkaragaṇa IV. The latter's son from Yaśōlēkhā was Bhīma (or Bhīmaṭa III). We have nothing but conventional praise in the case of all these kings.

<sup>1</sup> Kīrti which occurs in v. 16 was taken by Sahni as a proper name. Ep. Ind., Vol. XVIII, p. 137, n. 4. Ray has suggested that he might be the Chandēlla Kīrtivarman (D. H. N. I., Vol. II, p. 750); but the identification is impossible as Kīrtivarman flourished long after. Kīrti in that verse is not a proper name. It has the ordinary sense of 'fame' or 'glory'.

It seems that there was some trouble during the reign of Bhīma which caused him the loss of his throne. The nature of the trouble is, however, not known.<sup>1</sup> Perhaps, there was an invasion of the country by some enemy. When the enemy retired or was ousted from the country, Vyāsa, the son of Guṇasāgara, got himself crowned at the capital of Gōkulaghāṭṭa on the 31st May 1031 A.C.

Kielhorn identified Guṇasāgara, the father of Vyāsa, with Guṇasāgara II, who was the great-grandfather of Vyāsa's predecessor Bhīma.<sup>2</sup> Vyāsa would thus have come to the throne after his grand-nephew. This seems improbable. Besides, Vyāsa apparently began to reign when young; for, his successor Sōḍhadēva was ruling at least till 1079 A.C., which date is 48 years later than that of Vyāsa's accession. It seems better, therefore, to suppose that Guṇasāgara was a biruda of Bhīma, the predecessor of Vyāsa.<sup>3</sup> This conjecture receives support from the description in the plates that Vyāsa was established on his father's throne.

Vyāsa alias Maryādāsāgara was succeeded by Sōḍhadēva who issued the Kahla plates on the occasion of the Uttarāyaṇa-Saṅkrānti in 1077 A.C. In these plates both he and his father are mentioned with full imperial titles, viz., Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara. The period of their rule falls in the heyday of Kalachuri imperialism when the mighty emperors Gāṅgēyadēva and Karṇa had extended their dominion to the Banaras District, south of the Sarayū. The assumption of imperial titles by these rulers of Sarayūpāra plainly indicates that they did not owe allegiance even to Gāṅgēya and Karṇa. The use of the Vikrama instead of the Kalachuri Saṁvat in dating the Kahla grant points to the same direction. The relations of the two Kalachuri families may, however, have continued to be friendly and they may have gone to each other's rescue in times of difficulties.

Sōḍhadēva is the last known prince of this Sarayūpāra branch. Soon after the issue of his Kahla plates, he seems to have lost the support of the Tripurī Kalachuris; for, Yaśaḥkarṇa was then ousted from the Banaras District by the Gāhaḍavāla king Chandradēva. The Chandravatī plates dated V. 1148 (1090 A.C.), which are the earliest record of the Gāhaḍavālas discovered in the Banaras District, plainly indicate that Yaśaḥkarṇa had lost Banaras to Chandradēva before that date.<sup>4</sup> The Gāhaḍavālas may have next pressed further to the north and supplanted the Kalachuris in the Sarayūpāra country. Perhaps the Rāshtrakūṭas ruling on the other side of the Gaṇḍakī played<sup>5</sup> their part in the extermination of their neighbours. Yaśaḥkarṇa's raid against Champāraṇya, which was plainly directed against these Rāshtrakūṭas and in the course of which he devastated their country, may have been prompted by a feeling of vengeance. Yaśaḥkarṇa did not, however, succeed in restoring the Sarayūpāra country to his kinsmen. This Kalachuri family thus disappeared from history in the last decade of the eleventh century A.C.

<sup>1</sup> The Kahla plates ascribe the loss of the throne to the misfortune of Bhīma. If there was an invasion of the country, it may have been by Mahārājādhirāja Gāṅgēyadēva, a Rāshtrakūṭa king ruling over the neighbouring country of Tirabhukti on the other side of the Gaṇḍakī. A MS. of the Kishkindhā-kāṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa deposited in the Nepal Durbar Library mentions the date, V. 1076 (1019 A.C.), of this king's reign. For the identification of this Gāṅgēyadēva, see A. B. O. R. I. (Silver Jubilee Number), pp. 291 ff. and above, p. lxxxix, n. 5.

THE KALACHURIS OF SOUTH KOSALA

In ancient times Dakshiṇa Kōsala (South Kōsala) comprised modern Chattisgarh and the adjoining territory in the State of Orissa up to the boundary of the Katak District.<sup>1</sup> In the Purāṇas this country is mentioned with Traipura (the tract round Tripurī near Jabalpur), Kaliṅga (part of the State of Orissa) and Mēkala (the region near the source of the Narmadā).<sup>2</sup> These countries are further said to be situated on the back, i.e., the tableland of the Vindhya mountain. To distinguish this Kōsala from another territory of the same name, the capital of which was Ayōdhyā in the State of Uttar Pradesh, it was called Dakshiṇa Kōsala or South Kōsala. The feminine form of the name, viḥ., Kōsalā, is occasionally met with in literature and inscriptions.<sup>3</sup> The ancient capital of this country was Kuśāvati, founded by Kuśa, the elder son of Rāma, the hero of the Rāmāyaṇa. This city, the Purāṇas tell us, was situated on a peak of the Vindhya mountain, but its exact location has not yet been determined.

Our knowledge of the history of Chattisgarh before the advent of the Kalachuris is very meagre. In the beginning of the sixth century A.C., the country was ruled by Bhīmasēna II whose copper-plate grant dated in the Gupta year 182 (501-2 A.C.) has been discovered at Āraṅg.<sup>4</sup> He or his successor was ousted by a king of the Sarabhapura dynasty. Mahā-Pravararāja, the last known king of this family, was overthrown by Indrabala of the Sōmavamśis. The Sōmavamśis ruled in Chhattisgarh for some generations. Mahāśivagupta alias Bālārjuna, the last known king of this dynasty, flourished in the beginning of the seventh century A.C. He had a long reign of more than 57 years and was on the throne when the Chinese traveller Yuan Chwang visited Dakshiṇa Kōsala.<sup>5</sup>

About this time, Pulakēśin II of the Early Chālukya dynasty invaded Kōsala after conquering the three Mahārāshtras. The Aihōlī inscription of his reign, dated 634 A.C., states that the people of Kōsala, like those of Kaliṅga, were overawed by the invading forces.<sup>6</sup> The ruling king evidently submitted to the mighty emperor, who allowed him to govern his kingdom as his vassal.

Some time after Pulakesin II's invasion, the Sōmavamśis were ousted from the Raipur District by their southern neighbours, the Nala kings, who held the Bastar District of Madhya Pradesh and the adjoining parts of the Vishakhapatam District of the Madras State. A stone inscription of this dynasty, still existing at Rājim in the Raipur District, mentions three kings, viḥ., Prithvirāja, Virūparāja and Vilāsatuṅga. The last of these erected the temple of Rājivalōchana at Rājim for the religious merit of his son who had died. The inscription can be referred to about 700 A.C. on the evidence of palæography.<sup>7</sup>

We do not know how long the rule of the Sōmavamśis and the Nalas lasted in Chhattisgarh. An inscription on the architrave of the door of the sanctum in an exquisitely carved temple of Śiva at Pāli, about 12 miles north of Ratanpur in the Bilaspur District, records the construction of the temple by Vikramāditya, son of Malladēva. This inscription, which was deciphered by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar fifty years ago, has not received from scholars the attention it deserves.<sup>1</sup> As the names Malladēva and Vikramāditya occur in the dynastic list of Bāṇa kings, Dr. Bhandarkar made at the time the ingenious suggestion that this Vikramāditya might be one of the Bāṇa kings.<sup>2</sup> He could not, however, definitely identify him; for, no such Vikramāditya, son of Malladēva, was then known. From the Gudimallam plates<sup>3</sup> discovered later, Dr. Hultsch has shown that there were three Vikramādityas in the Bāṇa dynasty, of whom the first, also called Jayamēru, was the son of Malladēva. He is identical with the Bāṇa Vidyādhara mentioned in the Udayēndiram plates. As the known dates of his son Vijayāditya Prabhumēru range from Śaka 820 (898-99 A.C.)<sup>4</sup> to Śaka 831 (909-10 A.C.),<sup>5</sup> Vikramāditya I may be referred to the period 870-895 A.C.<sup>6</sup>

The Bāṇa kings are known from records found in the North Arcot District. The province over which they ruled is called Pērumbāṇappāḍi in later Tamil inscriptions.<sup>7</sup> As R. B. Venkayya has shown, this province extended from Puṅganūr in the west to Kālahasti in the east.<sup>8</sup> It is, however, surmised that the Bāṇas were originally settled further north in the Telugu country. From there they seem to have penetrated further to the north and carved out a kingdom for themselves in the Bilaspur District of Chhattisgarh, from where they ousted the Sōmavarīśis, who were obliged to move to the east and settle at Vinītapura (modern Binkā in the Sonpur State). This invasion of the country to the north of the Gōḍāvarī appears to have occurred in connection with the northern campaign of Udayachandra, a general of the Pallava king Nandivarman II—Pallavamalla (circa 710-775 A.C.)<sup>9</sup>. The Udayēndiram plates<sup>10</sup> state that Udayachandra pursued a Nishāda chief called Purushavyāghra, who, desiring to become very powerful, was running after the horse of the Aśvamēdha, defeated him and ordered him out of the district of Viṣṇurāja, which he subjected to the Pallava king. This Purushavyāghra may have been ruling over the country now comprised in the Bastar District.<sup>11</sup> Viṣṇurāja, whose country he had invaded, has been identified with Viṣṇuvarhdhana III (709-746 A.C.). The Bāṇa chiefs, who were feudatories of the Pallavas, seem to have pressed still further to the north and established themselves in the Bilaspur District with Pāli as their capital. We have no record of the early Bāṇa kings who founded this kingdom. Nandivarman is the earliest king known from the Udayēndiram plates.<sup>12</sup> As shown above, his great-grandson Vikramāditya I was ruling from circa 870 A.C. to 895 A.C. Nandivarman may, therefore, have flourished about 800 A.C. Either he or his father may have been the founder of the Bāṇa kingdom in

THE HISTORY OF THE
MOUNTAIN REGION

Chhattisgarh. His descendants seem to have held the country down to the time of Vikramāditya I, who built the aforementioned temple of Śiva at Pāli in the Bilaspur District.

In many records<sup>1</sup> of the Ratanpur branch of the Kalachuri dynasty, it is stated that Kōkalla had eighteen sons, of whom the eldest became the lord of Tripurī and made his brothers the lords of maṇḍalas in the neighbourhood. In the family of one of these younger brothers was born Kaliṅgarāja, the first known king of the Ratanpur branch. Kaliṅgarāja's son was Kamalarāja, who was a contemporary of Gāṅgēyadēva, whom he helped in his campaign against the king of Utkala. The wording<sup>2</sup> of the passage describing the relationship of Kaliṅgarāja to Kōkalla shows that the former was separated from the latter by some generations. This Kōkalla, therefore, is the first king of that name who ruled from circa 850 A.C. to 890 A.C. This conclusion receives confirmation from a statement in some inscriptions of the Tripurī branch. As we have already seen, the Bilhāri stone inscription states that Mugdhatuṅga, the son and successor of Kōkalla I, conquered the lines of countries along the eastern sea-shore and took (the country of) Pāli from the lord of Kōsala.<sup>3</sup> The Banaras plates of Karṇa say that Prasiddhadhavalā (who is none other than Mugdhatuṅga) took possession of Pāli, thinking that in his family there would be born men, eminent on account of greatness in this world.<sup>4</sup> This plainly means that the Kalachuri king conquered Pāli to provide an adequate field for the activities of the illustrious princes who would be born in his family. The country of Pāli which was conquered from the king of Kōsala was probably the territory round Ratanpur; for, the village of Pāli which contains the aforementioned exquisitely carved temple of Śiva with an inscription of the Bāṇa king Vikramāditya I lies only 12 miles to the north of Ratanpur.<sup>5</sup> The king of Kōsala from whom the country of Pāli was wrested is not named in the aforementioned Kalachuri inscription, but the foregoing discussion must have made it plain that he was probably a Bāṇa king. As Mugdhatuṅga-Prasiddhadhavalā flourished from circa 890 A.C. to 910 A.C., his Bāṇa adversary may have been Vikramāditya I (circa 870-895 A.C.).

After conquering the country round Ratanpur, Mugdhatuṅga placed it in charge of one of his younger brothers. There is a gap of nearly a century in the history of this Kalachuri branch, for which no records have come to light. We do not, therefore, know even the name of this founder of the Kalachuri branch of Dakṣiṇa Kōsala. But from a statement in the Ratanpur stone inscription<sup>6</sup> it seems that the Kalachuri capital in that age was Tummāṇa, which has been identified with Tumāṇ, a small village in the former

<sup>5</sup> It is supposed by some that this temple was erected by Jājalladēva I; for, there are five inscriptions of the king in the maṇḍapa of the temple. Two of these inscriptions are incised on the walls of the maṇḍapa, one on a stone built into the rebuilt doorway of the temple and another on a pilaster to support a broken beam. The inscriptions are identical in wording and purport to register some kīrti (meritorious work) of Jājalladēva. Their positions clearly indicate that they were meant to record the repairs, not the construction, of the temple by Jājalladēva I. As a period of more than two centuries had passed since the time of the Bāṇa king Vikramāditya I, it is not surprising that the temple had fallen into disrepair in the time of Jājalladēva I.

<sup>6</sup> Verse 7 of No. 77 says that Kaliṅgarāja chose Tummāṇa as his capital because it had been made the seat of their government by his forefathers.

Lāphā Zamindārī of the Bilaspur District. The Kalachuris seem to have reigned there for two or three generations (from circa 895 A.C. to 950 A.C.), but were ultimately ousted by some enemy, perhaps a Somavāṁśī king ruling over the eastern parts of Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala. The Kalachuri prince, when ousted from Chhattisgarh, apparently returned to his ancestral country of Dāhala. From the Bilhāri stone inscription we learn that Lakshmaṇarāja II (circa 945-970 A.C.) defeated the rulers of Kōsala and Odra. Lakshmaṇarāja's campaign may have been undertaken to punish the king of Kōsala and his ally, the king of Odra, for having ousted the scions of his family from Kōsala. His victory was not, however, a decisive one and does not seem to have led to the re-establishment of Kalachuri power in Chhattisgarh.

It was probably in the reign of Kōkalla II that the Kalachuris renewed their attempt to conquer Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala. The Ratanpur stone inscription of Jājalladēva I states that in order to augment his unimpeded prowess and treasure, Kaliṅgarāja, descended from a younger son of Kōkalla I, left his ancestral country (evidently Dāhala)<sup>1</sup> and conquered the country of Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala by the prowess of his arms.<sup>2</sup> As Kaliṅgarāja's son Kamalarāja was a junior contemporary of Gāṅgēyadēva (circa 1015-1040 A.C.), Kaliṅgarāja's conquest of Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala may be dated in circa 1000 A.C.

Kaliṅgarāja selected the old Kalachuri capital Tummāṇa as the seat of his government. As the Ratanpur inscription says, while staying there, he destroyed his enemies and increased his splendour. During his reign there was an invasion of the country by Sindhurāja, a well-known Paramāra king of Dhārā (circa 995-1015 A.C.). Some years later, he led a second expedition in connection with a love affair which forms the theme of the beautiful Sanskrit kāvya Navasāhasāṅkacharita of his court-poet Padmagupta alias Parimala.<sup>3</sup> The story of the kāvya briefly told is as follows:—

“Sindhurāja, while hunting on the slopes of the Vindhya mountain, sees and falls in love with Saśiprabhā, the daughter of the snake king Saṅkhapāla. After her meeting with the king, Saśiprabhā is carried away by invisible snakes to Bhōgavatī in the nether world. The king flings himself into the stream of the Narmadā to follow her and on the other side reaches a golden palace. The river goddess Narmadā receives him hospitably and tells him how he should win Saśiprabhā. When she was born, it was predicted that she would become the wife of a ruler of the middle world and bring about the death of Vajrāṅkuśa, a mighty enemy of the snakes. Her father had laid down the following condition for her marriage, viz., that her suitor should bring the golden lotus flowers, which grow in the pleasure garden of Vajrāṅkuśa. Narmadā tells Sindhurāja that at a distance of fifty gavyūtis lies the town of Ratnavatī built by Maya, the architect of Asuras, where reigns Vajrāṅkuśa, the prince of demons. Finally, Narmadā prophesies that the king will meet the sage Vaṅku on his way to Ratnavatī. Then the king, accompanied by his minister Yaśōbhata, also called Ramāṅgada, starts for Ratnavatī. On the way they reach the grove of the sage Vaṅku. There they converse with the sage and meet Saśikhāṇḍa, the son of Sikhaṇḍakētu, king of the Vidyādharas, who had been transformed into a monkey, but regained his original form by the favour of Sindhurāja. In gratefulness Śaśikhaṇḍa brings his troops to help the king in his expedition. The allied armies surround the town Ratnavatī. A battle is fought. Ramāṅgada, the minister of Sindhurāja, kills Viśvāṅkuśa, the son of Vajrāṅkuśa. The king himself kills Vajrāṅkuśa. The town Ratnavatī is stormed and taken. A snake youth named Ratnachūḍa is made the Governor of the kingdom of the Asura king. The king takes possession of the golden lotus flowers and proceeds towards Bhōgavatī. He presents the golden flowers to Śaśiprabhā and marries her. Sankhapāla makes the king the present of a crystal Śivaliṅga made by Tvaṣṭṛi. The king returns to Ujjayinī and then to Dhārā where he establishes the crystal Śivaliṅga."

<sup>1</sup> Owing to a wrong pada-ccbhāda in vv. 4 and 6 of No. 77, it was supposed by Kielhorn and other scholars who followed him that Kaliṅgarāja hailed from the country of Tritasaurya. But no such country is known. See Kane Festschrift, pp. 290 ff.

<sup>2</sup> The country under the rule of the Kalachuris is called Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala in some records and Tummāṇa-dēśa in others. See No. 77, v. 6; No. 93, v. 8; No. 100, v. 5, etc. Tummāṇa was, of course, included in Dakṣhiṇa Kōsala, but sometimes the latter denoted the eastern part of it under the rule of the Sōmavāṁśīs. See, e.g., No. 77, v. 23.

<sup>3</sup> For a detailed discussion of the historical data of this kāvya, see my article in the Ind. Ant., Vol. LXII, pp. 101 ff.

The foregoing brief analysis of the Navasāhasāṅkaccharita will show that the poem was intended to celebrate Sindhurāja's victory over Vajrāṅkuśa in which he was aided by a Vidyādhara prince and a Nāga chieftain, and his matrimonial alliance with the latter. This campaign of Sindhurāja must be placed late in his reign, probably towards the end of the first decade of the eleventh century A.C.; for, he is described in this work as having already vanquished the kings of Kuntala, Kachchha, Lāṭa, Aparānta and Kōsala as well as a Hūṇa prince.<sup>1</sup> The poet's description that he had to cross the Narmadā on the way shows that the country of Vajrāṅkuśa lay to the south of the river. Vajrāṅkuśa was not a prince of the demons, but a chief of the aborigines, perhaps Goṇḍs, whose capital Ratnavatī must be looked for in the hilly regions not far from the Narmadā; for, we have a valuable hint for its location in the speech of the river goddess that it lay at a distance of 50 gavyūtis or 100 krōśas, i.e., about 200 miles from the place where Sindhurāja crossed the river. Like Rājaśekhara, Padmagupta seems to have slightly altered the names of the historical characters and places that figure in his poem. Vajrāṅkuśa, the demon king, is, therefore, probably identical with Vajjūka<sup>2</sup> (also called Vajuvvarman in one record<sup>3</sup>), the lord of the Kōmō maṇḍala. He was a powerful chief, as his matrimonial alliance with the Kalachuris is mentioned in several Kalachuri records. He flourished in the same period as Sindhurāja; for, his daughter Nonallā was married to Ratnarāja, the son of Kamalarāja who, as we have seen, was a contemporary of the Kalachuri Gāṅgēyadēva.<sup>4</sup>

The identification of Vajjūka with Vajrāṅkuśa is rendered probable by the mention of the hermitage of the sage Vaṅku, which lay on the way to Ratnavatī, the capital of Vajrāṅkuśa. The name of the sage appears to be connected with that of the god Vaṅkēśvara whose temple was erected in Tummāṇa.<sup>5</sup> Knowing as we do that the names of deities are often derived from those of the individuals who instal them or erect temples in their honour, we can easily conjecture that Vaṅkēśvara may have been installed by some one named Vaṅku and that he may well have been a sage as stated in the Navasāhasāṅkaccharita.

Vajrāṅkuśa's capital was Ratnavatī, which it is tempting to identify with the Kalachuri capital Ratnapura, but the identification is open to the objection that Ratnapura was founded by Ratnadēva I<sup>6</sup> and hence it could not have been in existence in this period. According <sup>4</sup> The identification may be open to the objection that if Vajjūka was killed in battle as stated in the NSCH., canto XVII, v. 69, he could not have given his daughter to Ratnadēva I who flourished two generations later. Perhaps Vajrāṅkuśa is meant to represent the grandfather of Vajjūka, who may have borne the same name. In India grandsons are often named after their grandfathers.

to a tradition recorded by Mr. Beglar,<sup>1</sup> the ancient name of Ratnapura was Mañipura, which is mentioned in the Mahābhārata as the capital of a Nāga king.<sup>2</sup> As our poet has slightly changed the names of places, Ratnavatī in the Navasāhasānīkacarita may represent ancient Mañipura, which came to be known as Ratnapura when Ratnadēva made it his capital. If Sindhurāja crossed the Narmadā near Māndhātā,<sup>3</sup> Ratanpur would be about 200 miles from the place as described in Padmagupta's poem.

In his battle with Vajrānkuśa, Sindhurāja's ally was the Vidyādhara prince Sikhaṇḍakētu. He probably represents the Śilāhāra king Arikēsarin alias Kēśidēva, the ruler of North Konkan; for, the Śilāhāras traced their descent from Jimūtavāhana, the mythical prince of the Vidyādharas.<sup>4</sup> The similarity of the names Kēśidēva and Sikhaṇḍakētu confirms the identification.

Finally, the Nāga king Sañkhapāla, whose daughter was loved and ultimately married by Sindhurāja, was probably a ruler of Chakrakōṭya in the Bastar District. The princes of Chakrakōṭya call themselves Nāgavamsīs and lords of Bhōgavatī, the best of towns. This dynasty produced some powerful rulers towards the end of the eleventh and the beginning of the twelfth century A.C. Their capital Chakrakūṭa or Chakrakōṭya often figures in inscriptions and literature.<sup>5</sup> This shows the strategic importance of that territory.<sup>6</sup> These Nāga princes were often at war with the Kalachuris of Ratanpur. The existence of a Nāga chieftain, ruling in the Bastar District in the beginning of the tenth century A.C., who was hostile to Vajrānkuśa or Vajjūka of the Kōmō maṇḍala, is not, therefore, unlikely.

The historical basis of the Navasāhasānīkacarita thus seems to be that the Nāga ruler of Chakrakōṭya sought the powerful Paramāra king Sindhurāja's aid against Vajjūka of the Kōmō maṇḍala, with whom the Kalachuri prince Kaliṅgarāja was probably allied. Sindhurāja seems to have welcomed this opportunity to strengthen the south-eastern frontier of his kingdom against a possible Chōla invasion; for, owing to the debacle of the Later Chālukyas of Kalyāṇī after the death of Satyāśraya, the power of the Chōlas, their rivals for supremacy in the south, was increasing. As we shall see later, Rājendrachōla I's general did indeed attack Kōsala a few years later during his victorious march to the north. It was probably to check the Chōla power that Sindhurāja, with a commendable foresight, entered into a matrimonial alliance with the king of Chakrakōṭya. He marched against Vajjūka, whom he slew in battle. Afterwards he placed a Nāga prince in charge of Vajjūka's territory and married the daughter of the Nāga king of Chakrakōṭya.

The Kalachuri king Kaliṅgarāja, who was probably allied with Vajjūka, must have also suffered a defeat at the hands of Sindhurāja. But he seems to have soon rehabilitated himself by driving out Sindhurāja's protégé from the Kōmō maṇḍala. We have, however, no further knowledge of any political events of his reign. The description of him in the records of his successors is purely conventional.

Kaliṅgarāja was succeeded by his son Kamalarāja about 1020 A.C. He also ruled from the old capital Tummāṇa, and acknowledged the supremacy of the Emperor of Tripurī. During his reign, Gāṅgēyadēva of Tripurī undertook an expedition against the king of Utkala (Orissa). He seems to have marched through the territory of Kamalarāja, <sup>3</sup> It may be noted that some records of the Paramāras were issued after bathing in the Narmadā at this holy place. To the east of Māndhātā lay the country of Chēdi, which Sindhurāja does not seem to have entered on this occasion.

<sup>6</sup> It is worthy of note that the attack on Kōsala followed the victory at Sakkarakōṭtam (Chakrakōṭya).

whom he called on to join in the campaign. The latter fought for his overlord wholeheartedly. The Amōdā plates of Pṛithvidēva I state that like the Mandara mountain of yore, the brave Kamalarāja churned the milk-ocean which was the king of Utkala, and gave Lakshmī (royal fortune) as well as excellent elephants and horses to his lord Gāṅgēyadēva.<sup>1</sup> The description suggests that the vanquished king of Utkala had to pay a heavy tribute to Gāṅgēya. Some records of Gāṅgēya's son Karṇa also refer to this campaign. They say that Gāṅgēya defeated the king of Utkala and made his own arm the pillar of victory on the (eastern) sea-shore.

During this campaign, Gāṅgēyadēva and Kamalarāja must have come into conflict with the contemporary ruler of Eastern Kōsala, who was probably Mahāśivagupta-Yayāti. The latter claims in one of his grants<sup>2</sup> that he defeated the Chaidyas and devastated their country of Ḍāhala.<sup>3</sup> This may have been a reprisal raid on Ḍāhala during the absence of Gāṅgēya in the campaign against the king of Orissa.

The king of Utkala, in securing whose defeat Kamalarāja played a prominent part, was probably a king of the Kara dynasty, perhaps Subhākara II, ruling over Tōsala on the eastern seaboard of Orissa.<sup>4</sup> When Kamalarāja returned home after this victorious campaign, he was followed by Sāhilla,<sup>5</sup> a military adventurer who sought his fortune in Chhattisgarh. Sāhilla conquered Vivarabhūmī, evidently for his lord Kamalarāja. As we shall see later, Sāhilla's descendants settled down in Chhattisgarh and helped the Kalachuris of Tummāṇa to extend the limits of their kingdom.

It was probably during the reign of Kamalarāja that the mighty Chōla Emperor Rājendra I (1012-1044 A.C.) sent an expedition to the north under his Daṇḍanātha (General) in 1022 A.C. The Tirumalai prastāvi,<sup>6</sup> which was composed in the twelfth year of Rājendra's reign, states that Rājendra's general first seized Sakkarakōṭṭam which is plainly identical with Chakrakōṭṭya in the Bastar State. Thereafter, he captured or destroyed some other countries and places like Madurai-maṇḍalam and Namanaik-kōṇam and defeated and took Indraratha, the ruler of Ādinagara, prisoner. This victory led to the capture of 'the Oḍḍa-vishaya (Orissa) which was difficult of approach on account of its dense forest defence, and the good Kōśalai-nāḍu, where Brāhmaṇas assembled.' The prastāvi does not name the ruler of Kōsala. He may have been either Kamalarāja ruling over the western part, or Mahāśivagupta-Yayāti who held the eastern part of Kōsala. As Rājendra's general next proceeded against Daṇḍabhukti (parts of Midnapore and Balasore Districts), it would appear that the king he defeated was the ruler of Eastern Kōsala. In any case, this Chōla invasion did not produce any lasting effect; for, we have no evidence of the Chōla occupation of any part of Kōsala in this period. Perhaps, the vanquished king of Kōsala, whoever <sup>3</sup> The age of the Sōmavaṁśis of Kōsala is still undetermined as their records are singularly lacking in historical details and bear only regnal dates. The contemporaneity of Gāṅgēya and Mahāśivagupta-Yayāti suggested here would, if accepted, serve as a landmark in the history of the Sōmavaṁśis.

<sup>4</sup> Soon after this, the Karas seem to have been overthrown by the Sōmavaṁśi Uddyōtakēsarin, who transferred his capital to the eastern coast and gave the kingdom of Kōsala to Abhimanyu.

<sup>5</sup> The Rājim inscription of Jagapāla dated K. 896 (1145 A.C.) states that this Sāhilla was a spotless ornament of the family of the illustrious Rājamāla. I have suggested that this Rājamāla is identical with Rājamalladēva who had given valuable support in re-establishing the power of the Karas after the death of the ruling prince who was probably Subhākara's father Lalimbhara. If this identification is accepted, Sāhilla would be his son or possibly his grandson. This squares with the description of him given in the Rājim inscription as well as the period here assigned to him.

he was, was obliged to pay tribute to the Chōla Emperor for some years, as claimed in the Maṇimaṅgalam inscription<sup>1</sup> of Rājādhiraṅga, dated 1046 A.C.

Kamalarāja was succeeded by his son Ratnarāja I in circa 1045 A.C. He married Nōnallā, the daughter of Vajjūka or Vajjuvarman, the lord of the Kōmō maṅḍala. This maṅḍala seems to have comprised the territory round Kōmo-Chauki, about 24 miles west of Tummāṅga, the then Kalachuri capital. This marriage is mentioned in most of the subsequent Kalachuri records much in the same way as the marriage of Samudragupta with the Lichchhavi princess Kumāradēvi is mentioned in Gupta inscriptions. It seems to have considerably strengthened Ratnadēva's position in Chhattisgarh.<sup>2</sup> Judging by the conquests made by subsequent kings, the Kalachuri kingdom in Chhattisgarh was very much circumscribed during the reigns of Kaliṅgarāja and Kamalarāja. Ratnadēva made some conquests and annexed some territory to his dominion. The three sons of the aforementioned Sāhilla—Bhāyila, Dēsala and Svāmin—fought his battles and conquered the countries of Bhaṭṭavila and Viḥarā for him. These countries have not, however, been identified.

Ratnadēva beautified the capital Tummāṅga with gardens, mansions and temples. He erected a temple in honour of Vaṅkēśa, the tutelary deity, and another dedicated to the god Ratnēśvara whom he seems to have installed and named after himself. Ratnadēva founded a new city called Ratnapura, to which he shifted his seat of government. The Srēṣṭhin Yaśa is said to have been its Mayor.<sup>3</sup> This city was enlarged and beautified by his successors from time to time, and continued to be the capital of the royal family until its overthrow by the Marathas in the eighteenth century A.C.

Ratnadēva I may have closed his reign in circa 1065 A.C.<sup>4</sup> The earlier of the two grants of his son and successor Prithvidēva I is dated K. 821 (1069 A.C.)

Prithvidēva I is the earliest ruler of the Ratanpur branch whose inscriptions have been found in Chhattisgarh. In his Raipur and Amōdā plates he calls himself Mahāmaṅḍalēśvara and claims to have obtained the right to pañcamaḥāśabda.<sup>5</sup> Both these indicate his feudatory rank. Like his predecessors, he seems, therefore, to have acknowledged the suzerainty of the Kalachuri Emperor of Tripurī. In his grants he uses the Kalachuri era, which he calls the era of the Lord of Chēdi.<sup>6</sup> This also indicates his subordinate position. He seems to have considerably extended his small principality; for, he claimed to be the lord of the

<sup>3</sup> He continued to hold the same position during the succeeding reign of Prithvidēva I also. See No. 76, v. 16.

<sup>4</sup> Mr. Amalanand Ghosh has suggested the identification of Ratnadēva I with Siṅgan, (the king) of the warlike Kōsalai, who was cut to pieces by the Chōla king Vīrarājēndra in the battle of Kuḍālasaṅgama in circa 1066 A.C. He finds corroboration of this event in the passage Ratnarājē yudhi ripu-jayini svar-gatē in the Ratanpur inscription of Jājalladēva I (No. 77, v. 15), which he takes to mean 'When Ratnarāja went to heaven in a victorious battle.' B.V., p. 265. The proposed identification is very doubtful. Siṅgan is evidently a corruption of Siṅba. (Cf. Siṅgaṅga mentioned in the same inscription, who is identical with Jayasirīha.) Siṅgan may have belonged to the Sōmavaṅśī family. Some members of this family bore names ending in kāsarīn which is a synonym of siṅba. Besides, the construction of the above passage proposed by Mr. Ghosh is impossible, because in Sanskrit yudh (a fight) is feminine in gender.

entire Kōsala country.<sup>1</sup> It is, however, highly doubtful if his sway extended to the Sambalpur District and the former Sonpur and Patnā States which were previously under the rule of the Sōmavamśis; for, no inscriptions of him or even of his successors have been discovered in that part of the country. As we have already seen, this territory was included in Kōsala. The aforementioned title is, therefore, an empty boast. This does not, however, mean that he made no conquests. According to the Rājim inscription, Jayadēva, the son of Svāmin and grandson of the aforementioned military adventurer Sāhilla, conquered Dāṇḍōra. His younger brother Dēvasimha acquired the Kōmō maṇḍala. Jayadēva was a contemporary of Prīthvidēva I, for whom, we may suppose, these countries were conquered. Of them, the former has been identified with the District of Sarguja, north-east of the Bilaspur District, which was once called Bāis Dāṇḍōr (Dāṇḍōr 22), as it contained twenty-two Zamindārīs. The Kōmō maṇḍala, though situated close to the Kalachuri capital, seems to have maintained its independence since the time of Vajjūka. The latter's successors were either too weak or too overbearing to be allowed to remain independent. They were, therefore, subdued, and their maṇḍala was annexed to the Kalachuri kingdom.

Prīthvidēva I married Rājallā. She bore him a son named Jājalladēva I, who afterwards succeeded him. He had a younger brother named Sarvadēva, who obtained the territory round Sōṇṭhiva (Sōṇṭhi in the Bilaspur District) as his patrimony (dāyād-āṁśa).<sup>2</sup> Vigharāja, one of his ministers, and Yaśa, who continued to hold the post of the Mayor of Ratnapura, are named in his Amōdā plates.<sup>3</sup> Another minister Sōḍhadēva is mentioned in a later stone inscription.<sup>4</sup> Prīthvidēva was a devotee of Siva. At Tummāṇa he dedicated a temple to the god under the name Prīthvidēvśvara and also provided the old temple of Vaṅkēśvara with a chatushkikā or a hall resting on four pillars. On the occasion of its dedication, he made a land-grant dated K. 831 (1079 A.C.). At Ratnapura he constructed a large 'ocean-like' lake. He reigned from circa 1065 A.C. to 1090 A.C.

Jājalladēva I, who succeeded Prīthvidēva I, was one of the great kings of this family. Soon after his accession, he embarked on an ambitious scheme of conquest. He subdued the neighbouring chiefs of Vairāgara, Lañjikā, Bhāṇāra and Talahāri. Vairāgara is modern Vairāgarh in the Chāndā District. Lañjikā and Bhāṇāra correspond to Lanji and Bhandara in the Balaghat and Bhandara Districts respectively. Talahāri comprised probably the southern part of the Bilaspur District and the northern part of the Raipur District. The subjugation of these places shows that the kingdom of the Kalachuris in the previous reigns was very much circumscribed. Jājalladēva carried his arms even as far as Daṇḍakapura (Midnapur District) in South Bengal, Andhra and Kimiḍi in the Ganjam District. Dakshīṇa Kōsala, which also he is said to have conquered, seems to refer to the eastern portion of it comprising the Sambalpur District and the former States of Patna and Sonpur. The rulers of all these countries and also of Nandāvali and Kukkuṭa, which still remain unidentified, were made to pay him an annual tribute. His general Jagapāla, descended from the above-named Sāhilla, vanquished Māyūrikas<sup>5</sup> (perhaps rulers of the Bhañja dynasty) and Sāmantas (ancestors of the Sāontas in Bilaspur District). These conquests brought him into conflict with Sōmēśvara, the Nāgavaṃśī king of Chakrakōṭya. The latter was a foe worthy of his steel. He had defeated the rulers of Uḍra (Orissa) and Vēṅgī, and had carried fire and sword into Lāñjī and Ratnapura.<sup>1</sup> He is said to have captured six lacs of villages together with the tract called Shaṇṇavati (96 villages) of Kōsala and assumed the imperial titles Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara.<sup>2</sup> The Kuruspāl inscription describes him as a huge elephant which destroyed the lotuses namely the towns, Lāñjī and Ratnapura.

<sup>5</sup> A Māyūrika family is mentioned in the Bayānā (former Bharatpur State) inscription of Chitralēkhā (Ep. Ind., Vol. XXII, pp. 120 ff.). It was ruling in the north and does not seem to have been connected with the Māyūrikas defeated by Jagapāla.

Jājalladēva was not slow to take revenge. He marched against the Nāga king, slew his immense army and took him captive together with his wives and ministers. Ultimately, at the bidding of his mother, Jājalladēva set them free. His Ratanpur inscription proudly asks, "Have you seen or heard of another such prince on this earth?"<sup>3</sup> This event must have occurred some time before 1110 A.C., which is the approximate year of Sōmēśvara's death.<sup>4</sup>

Jājalladēva's fame spread to distant lands. The contemporary king of Chēdi, who was Yaśaḥkarna, the erstwhile suzerain of the Tummāṇa branch, had to court his friendship. He probably sought his aid in his campaign against an Andhra king, which, as we have seen, occurred early in his reign.<sup>5</sup> In the Ratanpur inscription Jājalla boasts that he was honoured as an ally by the rulers of Kānyakubja and Jajābhuktika with presents of wealth 'because he was valiant'. The ruler of Kānyakubja was probably the ambitious Gāhaḍavāla king Gōvindachandra, who, even while a yuvarāja, had wielded considerable authority. He came to the throne about 1110 A.C. and was thus a contemporary of Jājalla. The other ruler who sought Jājalla's alliance was plainly a king of the Chandēlla dynasty. Three Chandēlla princes Kirtivarman, Sallakshaṇavarman and Jayavarman ruled contemporaneously with Jājalla.<sup>6</sup> Of these, Sallakshaṇavarman was probably Jājalla's ally. This contact with the Chandēllas is reflected in the Kalachuri coinage as shown below.

These rulers of distant Northern countries sought Jājalla's friendship because his kingdom occupied a strategic position on the route of communication between the north and the south. Earlier conquerors from the north like Samudragupta and Išānavarman had to pass through Dakshiṇa Kōsala in the course of their southern digvijaya. Similarly, Rājendra Chōla's general had to conquer Kōsala before he penetrated into Bengal. The object of this alliance with Jājalla was probably to check the advance of the Chōla Emperor Kulōttuṅga I (1070-1122 A.C.). By his occupation of the Chōla throne, Kulōttuṅga had already united the kingdoms of the Eastern Chālukyas and the Chōlas. He entertained aggressive designs of North-Indian conquests, in pursuance of which he had subjugated Vairāgarh and Chakrakōṭṭa.<sup>7</sup> In some records he is said to have measured swords even with the Paramāra king of Malwa. The aforementioned northern powers must have regarded Jājalla as a bulwark against a possible Chōla invasion of North India.

We have seen above that Jājalla defeated the king of Dakshiṇa Kōsala. The latter is probably identical with Bhujabala, the lord of Suvarṇapura, modern Sonpur, the chief town of the former Sonpur State.<sup>1</sup> This king is not known from other records, but he probably belonged to the Sōmavamsī dynasty, and might be the son and successor of Abhimanyu who founded a feudatory state in that part of Dakṣiṇa Kōsala, when Uddyōtakēśarin conquered Utkala and removed his capital to the eastern seaboard.<sup>2</sup> Jājalladēva seems to have followed up this victory and also deposed the king of Utkala. But his cause was espoused by his neighbour, the mighty Anantavarman Chōḍagaṅga, who reinstated him. The earliest record which mentions the reinstatement of the Utkala king is the Kornī plates of Anantavarman, dated Saka 1034 (1113 A.C.).<sup>3</sup> This record does not mention the name of the enemy who had deposed the king of Utkala, but the foregoing discussion must have made it clear that he was probably Jājalladēva I.

<sup>4</sup> Sōmēśvara was living at the time of the Barsur inscription dated 1108 A.C. (Ep. Ind., Vol. III, p. 314; Vol. IX, p. 162) and had died when the Nārāyaṇpāl inscription was put up in 1111 A.C. (ibid., Vol. IX, pp. 161 ff.) So he seems to have died in circa 1110 A.C.

Jājalla seems to have repudiated the political subjection of his house to the Kalachuris of Tripurī and declared his independence. To announce his independent rank, he struck gold and copper coins in his own name. His gold coins are partially modelled on the issues of Gāṅgēya. They have the king's name in bold Nāgarī letters in three lines on the obverse as on Gāṅgēya's coins. The reverse, however, shows the figure of a lion attacking an elephant,<sup>4</sup> instead of Lakshmī sitting cross-legged. His copper coins are imitated from those of the Chandēlla Sallakṣhaṇavarman, with whom he was allied. They have the king's name on the obverse and the figure of Hanumān facing left on the reverse. Both these types were continued by his successors.

Jājalla founded a city in his own name, called Jājallapura, which is probably identical with modern Jānjgir (Jājallanagara). He constructed there a temple and a monastery, which he endowed with the gift of some villages. He also excavated there a large tank and raised a mango grove. He repaired the ancient temple of Śiva at Pāli by erecting cross-walls and giving supports to a broken beam.<sup>5</sup> These repairs are memorised by short inscriptions.

Jājalla married Lāchchhalladēvī,<sup>6</sup> from whom he had a son named Ratnadēva II, who succeeded him. His religious preceptor was Rudraśiva. It is interesting to note that the latter was conversant with the work of Dīnnāga, a famous Buddhist logician who flourished in the fifth century A.C. Vigharāja, who held the position of a mantrin in the previous reign, became his Sāndhivigrahika. Another minister of the Gauḍa race, who was descended from the Kāyastha minister of the illustrious Karṇa of Tripurī, was mentioned in the Ratanpur inscription of his reign, but his name is now lost. A third minister, who distinguished himself in all his wars, was Purushōttama, the son of Sōḍhadēva who had served Pṛithvidēva I in the same capacity.<sup>7</sup> The writer of his Ratanpur inscription was Kīrtidhara, the owner of the village Jaṇḍēra.<sup>8</sup> He and his descendants were the official scribes of the Ratanpur royal family.<sup>9</sup> They have written their records on copper-plates and stone-slabs in beautiful letters.

Ratnadēva II seems to have succeeded his father in circa 1120 A.C.; for, the earliest inscription of his reign is dated K. 878 (1127 A.C.). He followed his father's policy and struck gold and copper coins in his own name, indicating his independence. The Kalachuri Emperor of Tripurī could brook this impertinence no longer. He sent a large and powerful army against him, but Ratnadēva routed it completely. In the Ratanpur inscription dated V. 1207 (1149-50 A.C.), he is described as the fierce submarine fire to the matchless ocean of the arrayed and hard-to-be-subdued hosts of the Chēdi king. The Chēdi king, though not named in the record, was plainly Gayākarna, who ruled from circa 1123 A.C. to 1153 A.C., and was thus a contemporary of Ratnadēva II.

Another memorable event of Ratnadēva's reign which, though not referred to in his own inscriptions, is often mentioned in the records of his successors and their feudatories is the invasion of his country by Chōḍagaṅga.<sup>1</sup> The latter was evidently the mighty Gaṅga king Anantavarman-Chōḍagaṅga, who had a long reign of 70 years (1078-1147 A.C.). This aggressive Gaṅga king reinstated the deposed king of Utkala and raided the northern country up to the bank of the Gaṅgā. He is said to have laid under tribute all countries between the Gaṅgā and the Gōdāvarī.<sup>2</sup> In the course of his whirlwind campaign he seems to have attacked the Kalachuri kingdom in Kōsala. The Peṇḍrābandh plates mention Gōkarna as his ally in this campaign.<sup>3</sup> The latter was a feudatory of Chōḍagaṅga as stated in his inscription at Guḍiwāḍā in the Bimblipatam tāluka of the Vishakhapatam District.<sup>4</sup> Ratnadēva inflicted a crushing defeat on the invaders and obtained a large booty of gold, horses and elephants.<sup>5</sup> A Ratanpur stone inscription describes Ratnadēva II as 'Rāhu in seizing and swallowing the large lunar orb of the mighty warriors of Chōḍagaṅga'.<sup>6</sup> The Mallār inscription dated K. 919 speaks of Ratnadēva as 'a fierce cloud which extinguished the continuously raging flames of the spreading mighty fire of the valour of the king Chōḍagaṅga'.<sup>7</sup> The battle was a very fierce one and was fought in the Talahāri-maṇḍala, not very far from Shēorinārāyaṇ.<sup>8</sup> Jagapāla, a descendant of the aforementioned Sāhilla, distinguished himself in it by his bravery and became known as Jagatsirṅha (the Lion of the World).<sup>9</sup> Vallabharāja, another feudatory of Ratnadēva, also seems to have fought in it.<sup>10</sup> Anantavarman-Chōḍagaṅga, 'the lord of elephants', suffered an ignominious defeat and had to return home discomfited. Somehow this glorious achievement of Ratnadēva is not mentioned in any of his copper-plate grants, but it may have occurred in circa 1130 A.C.

This victory enhanced the power and prestige of Ratnadēva II and encouraged him to undertake distant campaigns. One of them, directed against the king of Gauḍa, is mentioned in several inscriptions of Vallabharāja. As stated before, this Vallabharāja was a feudatory of the Kalachuris. He belonged to the Vaiśya caste. His forefathers had loyally served the royal family as feudatories or ministers. Vallabharāja was treated by Lāchchhalladēvi, the mother of Ratnadēva II, as her adopted son. He was a contemporary of both Ratnadēva II and his son and successor Pṛithvidēva II. The earliest record in which the campaign in Gauḍa is mentioned belongs to the reign of Ratnadēva II, which shows that it was fought towards the end of it, in circa 1132. Vallabharāja fought very valiantly in the presence of his lord and captured a large number of elephants in the enemy's city. The king of Gauḍa defeated by Ratnadēva is not named. He was probably one of the weak successors of Rāmapāla, perhaps Madanapāla of the Pāla dynasty, who has been referred to the period circa 1130-1150 A.C.<sup>1</sup> Another minister who won laurels in this war against the Gauḍa king was Purushōttama, whom Ratnadēva II made his Sarvādhikārin. He is said to have threatened the ruler of Daṇḍabhukti and punished Daṇḍapura, which may have been its capital. He also conquered Khijjiṅga and killed Haravōhu, who was probably its ruler.<sup>2</sup> Khijjiṅga is probably identical with the homonymous capital of the Bhañja kings, but Haravōhu is not known from any other source.

Ratnadēva was a patron of religion and learning. He made some gifts to pious and learned Brāhmaṇas. His court attracted learned men from far off lands.<sup>3</sup> One of his gifts, recorded in the Sarkho plates, is worthy of note; for, it was made to an astronomer for accurate prediction of an eclipse.<sup>4</sup> There was a considerable building activity during this reign. Vallabharāja, the aforementioned feudatory of the Vaiśya lineage, excavated a large tank with a palace of pleasure in the centre of it, and erected a temple of Rēvanta at Vikarṇapura. He built another temple of Śiva at the same place and gave half the religious merit accruing from it to his liege lord Ratnadēva II.<sup>5</sup> The latter seems to have endowed the temple with some land-grant.

The aforementioned Purushōttama, the Sarvādhikārin of Ratnadēva II, made several benefactions, which are recorded in his stone inscription dated K. 900. He raised several groves, erected maḥas (monasteries) and maṇḍapas (temples), and excavated a deep tank at Ratnapura. He also built a five-shrined temple of Śiva at Kōni, about 10 miles south by east of Bilaspur.<sup>6</sup>

Ratnadēva had two sons. The elder of them, Pṛithvidēva II, succeeded him, while the younger Jayasimha is known only from the fragmentary Raipur Museum inscription of Vallabharāja. Ratnadēva was ruling at least till K. 885 (1134 A.C.). The earliest date of Pṛithvidēva's reign is K. 890 (1138 A.C.).<sup>7</sup> Ratnadēva II may, therefore, have closed his reign in circa 1135 A.C.

During the early part of his reign, Pṛithvidēva II subjugated the petty princes ruling on the borders of his kingdom and annexed their territories. In the Rājim inscription, his general Jagapāla is said to have won several victories. He took the strong forts of Sara-harāgaḍha (modern Sarangarh) and Machakā-Sihavā, south of Dhamtari in the Raipur District. Further, he conquered the countries of Bhramaravadra, Kāntāra, Kusumabhōga, Kāndā-ḍōṅgara and Kākayara.<sup>8</sup> Bhramaravadra may be identical with Bhramarakōtya maṇḍala in the Bastar District, Kākayara is modern Kānkēr in the same district. The extension of Kalachuri rule in this part is indicated by the use of the Kalachuri era in later records from Kānkēr.<sup>1</sup> The other places were probably situated in the Raipur District. These conquests seem to have brought a large part of modern Chhattisgarh under the direct rule of Pṛithvīdēva II.

After reducing his recalcitrant feudatories and making his home front secure, Pṛithvīdēva planned to take revenge on his Gaṅga adversary for having invaded the Kalachuri kingdom during the reign of his father. He first marched against Chakrakūṭa (which comprised the central part of the Bastar District) and devastated it. This is said to have so terrified the Gaṅga ruler of the adjoining country, probably Anantavarman-Chōḍagaṅga, that he realised that the only way to save his life was to cross the ocean.<sup>2</sup> Soon thereafter, Anantavarman died and was succeeded by his son Jaṭeśvara alias Madhukāmārṇava. Pṛithvīdēva then raided the Gaṅga territory, defeated Jaṭeśvara and took him captive. If the account in the Kharōd inscription<sup>3</sup> could be believed, the Gaṅga king had to pass some days in the Kalachuri prison before he was released. Gaṅga records are naturally silent about this defeat of Jaṭeśvara, but the account is corroborated by another contemporary Kalachuri record. The Ratanpur stone inscription dated K. 915 (1163-64 A.C.), now in a sadly mutilated condition, describes the fierce battle in which Brahmādēva, the ruler of the Talahāri maṇḍala and a feudatory of Pṛithvīdēva II, fought valiantly with Jaṭeśvara. Verse 17 of the inscription says that Brahmādēva became famous by imprisoning a mighty foe.<sup>4</sup> The reference is plainly to the capture of the Gaṅga king. The engagement seems to have occurred in circa 1150 A.C., soon after the accession of Jaṭeśvara. After this no Gaṅga king dared invade the Kalachuri territory.

Like his father and grandfather, Pṛithvīdēva II also struck gold and copper coins in his name. Some of his tiny silver coins are also known. He gave a liberal patronage to men of learning. As many as seven inscriptions of his reign record his grants of land to Brāhmaṇas.<sup>5</sup> A Ratanpur stone inscription of his time states that his rule followed the path of good policy and caused the people joy unattended by contact with troubles.<sup>6</sup> Several religious and charitable works were constructed in his reign. The aforementioned Vaiśya feudatory, Vallabharāja, excavated a lake to the east of Ratanpur, which still exists under the name of Khāruṅg. He dug two other tanks, one of which he named after his earlier lord Ratnadēva II, and constructed a temple of Śiva.<sup>7</sup> Another feudatory Brahmādēva, who has been mentioned above in another connection, erected several temples and excavated tanks at different places in the kingdom. He also raised a mango-grove and maintained a charitable feeding house at Kumarākōṭa.<sup>8</sup> Pṛithvīdēva's military commander Jagapāla repaired the temple of Rāmachandra at Rājim and endowed it with the gift of a village.<sup>9</sup> He also founded the city of Jagapālapura. Even private individuals constructed temples. The Kāyastha Dēvagaṇa, for instance, erected a temple of Śiva at Sāmbā as recorded in his Ratanpur inscription.

Brahmadēva was Pṛithvīdēva's trusted minister. He was previously ruling over the Talahāri maṇḍala. Prithvidēva II specially invited him to his capital, and entrusting the affairs of the state to him, obtained great peace of mind. The last known date of Prithvidēva's reign is K. 915 (1163-64 A.C.). The next known date K. 919 (1167-68 A.C.) belongs to the reign of his son and successor Jājalladēva II. Prithvidēva II may, therefore, have closed his reign in 1165 A.C.

Soon after his accession, Jājalladēva II came into conflict with Jayasimha, the Kalachuri Emperor of Tripurī. The cause of this conflict is not known. Perhaps Jayasimha thought that it would be easy to subdue the new king before he consolidated his power and that he would thus be able to re-establish the supremacy of his house in Chhattisgarh. He personally led the expedition. Jājalladēva was determined to vindicate his right to independence. He was ably assisted by his feudatories and especially by the members of the collateral branch established at Sōṅṭhiva. A fierce battle was fought. Ulhaṇadēva, a scion of the royal family, fought bravely and decimated Chēdi forces. Seeing this, Jayasimha, the Chēdi king, himself advanced to the forefront, being highly enraged like a serpent trodden under foot.<sup>1</sup> In the fight that ensued, Ulhaṇadēva lost his life, but the inscription does not state whether Jayasimha won a victory. Records of the Kalachuris of Tripurī are wholly silent about this campaign. Neither Jājalladēva nor his successors give any indication of their subordinate rank in their subsequent records. So the battle may not have ended unfavourably for Jājalladēva II. He treated Āmaṇadēva, the orphan son of Ulhaṇadēva, with special affection, as his father had died on the battlefield, fighting bravely for his lord, and as his mother had immolated herself as Satī.

Some time after this, Jājalladēva was caught by an alligator of the variety locally known as Thīrū.<sup>2</sup> He was fortunately able to extricate himself, and by way of thanksgiving gave the village Bundērā to two Brāhmaṇas, the astrologer Rāghava and the family-priest Nāmadēva, in the year K. 919 (1167 A.C.).

As in previous reigns, there was a considerable building activity during the time of Jājalladēva II. Sōmarāja, the son of Gaṅgādharma who had immigrated from Madhyadēsa, built a temple of Śiva at Mallāla. Several members of the collateral branch of the Kalachuri family, established at Sōṅṭhiva, constructed religious and charitable works in their territory. At Pathariā, Rājadēva, the grandson of Sarvadēva, built a temple of Śiva, raised a mango-grove and excavated a tank. His son Ulhaṇadēva, who, as stated above, died later fighting with the Emperor Jayasimha of Tripurī, built the temple of Chandrachūḍa. This temple still exists at Śhēorinārāyaṇ. Ulhaṇadēva's son Āmaṇadēva II donated the village Chīṅchēlī to provide materials for the worship of the god Chandrachūḍa installed by his father.

All the three inscriptions of Jājalla's reign are dated K. 919 (1167-68 A.C.).<sup>3</sup> It appears that there was some trouble towards the close of his reign. The Kharod inscription states that when Jājalladēva attained, through accursed fate, union with Brahman (i.e., died), the world became enveloped in darkness on all sides, the people being distressed through the loss of their discernment on account of the Kali Age. The cause of the trouble is not known. Perhaps the country was invaded by some enemy, in consequence of which there were confusion and disorder throughout the land. In this time of trouble Jagaddēva, the elder brother of Jājalla II, came hastily from the Eastern country and established peace, order and good government in the kingdom. As the Kharōd inscription says, under Jagaddēva's rule thieves disappeared, obstacles vanished, dangers departed and enemies took shelter in the corners of mountain caves.<sup>4</sup>

It has been suggested that Jagaddēva had been superseded by his younger brother Jājalla II and was ruling over some eastern districts during the latter's life time. But in that case the Kharōd inscription of his son Ratnadēva III's reign would not have bestowed high praise on the usurper.<sup>1</sup> The wording of the verses 13 and 14 of that inscription rather suggests that Jagaddēva had voluntarily relinquished his claim to the throne in order to fight with the Eastern Gaṅgas and that he had to return home hastily when the country was rent by disorder as a result of some foreign invasion.

Jagaddēva seems to have had a short reign of about 10 years (K. 920-930 or 1168-1178 A.C.). He had a queen named Sōmalladēvī, who bore him a son named Ratnadēva III.

Ratnadēva III came to the throne about 1178 A.C. The Kharōd stone inscription dated K. 933 (1181-82 A.C.), which is the only record of his reign, states that he was distinguished for a handsome form, learning and charity. During his reign too there was some trouble. As the Kharōd inscription states, the treasure was exhausted, the elephant force became weak, the people were scattered and the country was infested by a famine and reduced to a pitiable state. In this emergency Ratnadēva made the learned Brāhmaṇa Gaṅgādhara his Prime Minister. The latter, by his policy, vanquished the enemies of his lord everywhere, and freed the kingdom from all troublesome persons.<sup>2</sup> It would appear, therefore, that the trouble had been caused by some unnamed enemy.

Gaṅgādhara, the aforementioned minister of Ratnadēva III, erected religious and charitable works at several places in the kingdom. He repaired the maṇḍapa of the temple of Lakshmaṇēśvara at Kharōd. This temple had been erected by the Sōmavāṁśī king Iśānadēva more than six centuries before.<sup>3</sup> Its maṇḍapa may have fallen into disrepair owing to the passage of time. Gaṅgādhara constructed temples at several other places in honour of Viṣṇu, Śiva, Ēkavīrā, Durgā and Gaṇapati. Some of them, such as the temple of Ēkavīrā at Ratnapura, are still standing. He excavated tanks, raised a garden, and established a charitable feeding house at Nārāyaṇapura.<sup>4</sup>

Ratnadēva III was succeeded by his son Pratāpamalla in circa K. 950 (1198-99 A.C.). He is known from his two land-grants dated K. 965 and K. 969, and some copper coins which have the king's name on the obverse and the figure of a lion and a dagger on the reverse. From the description in the Penḍrābandh plates that though a boy, he was a second Bali in strength, it seems that he came to the throne while quite young. In other respects, the description of him given by the plates is quite conventional.

We have no records of the successors of Pratāpamalla until we come to the time of Vāharēndra towards the close of the fifteenth century A.C. In the records of other dynasties, there are occasional references to the defeats inflicted on the kings of Kōsala, but they rarely mention the names of the reigning kings. Hēmādri's Vratākhaṇḍa states in its Rājaprasasti that the Yādava king Simhaṇa took away troops of rutting elephants belonging to the king Jājalla.<sup>5</sup> The latter was probably a king of Ratanpur. As he was a contemporary of Simhaṇa (circa 1210-1247 A.C.), he seems to have succeeded Pratāpamalla. He suffered another defeat at the hands of Viṣṇu, the minister of the Gaṅga king Anaṅga-

<sup>1</sup> See No. 100, v. 11. It must, however, be noted that the Penḍrābandh plates of Ratnadēva III's son Pratāpamalla omit Jājalladēva II's name in the genealogical portion; but that may be because he was a collateral.

The next notice of the Kalachuri kings of Ratanpur that we get is from the stone inscriptions of the king Vāhara. The Kosgain inscription<sup>2</sup> of this king mentions the following pedigree.

The inscription mentions no political events of the reign of Vāhara's predecessors. For Vāhara, we have two dates, viz., V. 1552 (1494-95 A.C.), furnished by the Ratanpur inscription,<sup>3</sup> and V. 1570 (1513 A.C.), occurring in the Kosgain inscription.<sup>4</sup> He may, therefore, have reigned from circa 1480 A.C. to 1515 A.C. Taking twenty-five years as the average duration of a reign, the accession of Singhana, who flourished five generations before, may be dated in circa 1355 A.C. This Singhana is probably identical with Singha or Simhaṇa mentioned in the Raipur<sup>5</sup> and Khalāri<sup>6</sup> stone inscriptions, who also seems to have reigned in the same period; for, his grandson Brahmaḍēva was ruling at Raipur and Khalāri in V. 1458 (1402 A.C.) and V. 1471<sup>7</sup> (1415 A.C.). These inscriptions give the following pedigree—

It seems plain, therefore, that in the last quarter of the fourteenth century A.C., the Ratanpur family of the Kalachuris split into two branches. The elder branch continued to rule at Ratanpur, while the younger one founded a separate principality with Raipur<sup>8</sup> as its capital. Combining the two pedigrees, we get the following genealogy<sup>9</sup>—

<sup>9</sup> According to local tradition, Kēśava was the founder of the Raipur line and flourished in 1420 A. C. Raipur District Gazetteer, p. 51.

As stated before, the inscriptions give no historical information about the reign of Vāhara's predecessors. Vāhara's reign, however, was marked by skirmishes with the Pathans. The Kosgain inscriptions show that he had shifted his capital from Ratanpur to the stronghold of Kōsaṅga (modern Kosgain) probably owing to the forays of the Pathan adventurers.<sup>1</sup> From there he used to raid Pathan outposts. The Kosgain inscription states that when he attacked the Pathans, they, leaving their stations, used to flee to the Sōṇa. Mādhava, Vāhara's brave minister, is credited with a victory over the Pathans, whom he despoiled of gold and other metals, elephants, horses, cows and buffaloes. The Muslim chroniclers do not mention any incursions of the Afghans, who are evidently meant by the Pathans, into Chhattisgarh, which, being land-locked, must have been comparatively secure from their depredations. From the Tārīkh-i-Dāūdī of Abdulla, we learn that Sikandar Lodi invaded the territory of the Rājā of Bhata,<sup>2</sup> devastated the country and stormed the fort of Bāndhu (Bāndhōgarh in the Rewah State), 'the strongest castle of the district', which he, however, failed to reduce. Bāndhōgarh is about 125 miles north by west of Kosgain. Sikandar's invasion seems to have occurred about 1496 A.C., two years after the date of the Ratanpur inscription of Vāhara's reign. During this expedition or some time later, some Afghan adventurers from Jaunpur may have attempted to raid the Kalachuri territory, but they were turned back by Vāhara.

We have no inscriptions of the successors of Vāhara. Local tradition mentions twelve successors<sup>3</sup> of Bāhar Sahāi (evidently identical with Vāharēndra of the inscriptions) who ruled at Ratanpur until the country was conquered by Bhāskar Pant, the Brāhmaṇa General of the Bhonslas of Nagpur in 1740 A.C. The reigns of these princes were uneventful and inglorious. One of them Kalyāṇ Sahāi, the successor of Bāhar Sahāi, is said to have proceeded to Delhi to pay homage to the great Akbar.<sup>1</sup> He was absent for about eight years and returned to Ratanpur, being invested by the Emperor with the full rights of Rājā and confirmed in the possession of his territory. The Muslim chronicles, however, do not mention this event.

<sup>2</sup> E. D. H. I., Vol. IV, p. 462. According to General Briggs, he was Śālivāhan, the Rājā of Pannā. Loc. cit., n. 2. C. H. I., Vol. III, p. 239, states that he was the Rājā of Phaphamau.

<sup>3</sup> In his A. S. I. R. Vol. XVII, pp. 77 ff., Cunningham gives a list of these kings with approximate dates. He places Bāhar Sahāi in 1519 A.C., which is not wide of the mark. But the dynastic lists are, on the whole, unreliable; for, according to them, the five immediate ancestors of Bāhar Sahāi were Kamala Dēva, Śankara Sahāi, Mahāṇa Sahāi, Dādu Sahāi and Purushōttama Sahāi, but these names do not agree with those given by Vāhara's Kosgain inscription (No. 105).

The Raipur branch has left two inscriptions<sup>2</sup> dated 1402 and 1415 A.C., both of which belong to the reign of Brahmādēva. The only historical event recorded in them is the defeat which Rāmadēva (or Rāmachandra), the father of Brahmādēva, inflicted on Bhōṅga-dēva, who belonged to the Phaṇivāṁśa or Nāga dynasty.<sup>3</sup> Two Nāga families were ruling in Chhattisgarh during this period, one in the former Kawardhā State and the other in the former Bastar State. The last dated record of the Bastar family is of Hariśchandra, who was ruling in 1324 A.C.<sup>4</sup> The Kawardhā family also continued to rule till the fourteenth century, as its last dated inscription is of 1349 A.C.<sup>5</sup> In the absence of subsequent records, it is difficult to say to which family Bhōṅgadēva, defeated by Rāmachandra, belonged. Perhaps he was ruling over the former Bastar State; for, the Nāgavāṁśī chiefs of the Kawardhā state are known to have been feudatories of the Kalachuris, whose era they used in earlier times. Some of them were also matrimonially connected with the latter.<sup>6</sup>

The conditions in Chhattisgarh at the time of its annexation by the Marathas are very well described in the following extract.<sup>7</sup>—"The Haihayas merely stood at the head of a number of petty Rājās and official chiefs, each of whom was, to a large extent, independent, and among whom the whole country was divided. It was an essentially weak system, adapted only to an earlier stage of social development, and it would have fallen long ago, had any well organised foreign invasion ever been attempted. When the Marathas came, they marched through the whole country without any opposition, and demanded and obtained the allegiance of all the surrounding states." Thus ended the rule of the Kalachuris in Chhattisgarh after lasting for more than seven centuries from circa 1000 A.C. to 1740 A.C.

ADMINISTRATION

The records edited here belong to two main periods—the earlier one extending from about 250 A.C. to about 750 A.C., and the later from about 850 A.C. to about 1500 A.C. The earlier inscriptions mainly come from Western India comprising Gujarat, Konkan and Northern Maharashtra, and the later ones from Northern India and the Chhattisgarh Division of Madhya Pradesh. The administrative system, religion, and social and economic life in these two periods naturally show wide differences.

In the earlier period, the largest administrative unit was the dēśa, corresponding to the province of modern times. The kingdom of the Traikūṭaka Vyāghrasēna, for instance, comprised several dēśas or provinces, only one of which, viz., Aparānta (North Konkan), <sup>1</sup> According to Cunningham, he went to Delhi in consequence of a dispute with the Rājā of Maṇḍlā and returned in Śaṁvat 1628 or 1571 A.C.

<sup>2</sup> Nos. 107 and 108. A copper-plate inscription of Amarasīṁhadēva, who is said to have belonged to the Kalachuri family, was discovered at Āraṅg. But it gives no pedigree, contains no date and has no historical importance.

finds a specific mention in his grant.<sup>1</sup> The names of the other dēśas comprised in the Traikūṭaka kingdom, viḥ, Mahārāshṭra, Ṛishika (Khandesh) and Lāṭa (Central and Southern Gujarat) do not occur in the records of the Traikūṭakas. The next lower administrative unit was the vishaya corresponding to the modern district. This term was current over a very wide area, viḥ, Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra. Gujarat was, for instance, divided into a number of vishayas such as the Saṅgamakhēṭaka,<sup>2</sup> Antarnarmadā,<sup>3</sup> Nāndipura,<sup>4</sup> Antarmanḍalī,<sup>5</sup> Akrūrēśvara,<sup>6</sup> Bāhirikā,<sup>7</sup> Kārmaṇēya,<sup>8</sup> Trēyaṇṇa<sup>9</sup> and Kāśākula.<sup>10</sup> Some of the vishayas seem to have changed their names in course of time. Thus, when Broach attained a greater importance as the capital of the Gurjaras, the name of the Antarnarmadā vishaya was changed to the Bharukachchha vishaya.<sup>11</sup> From Konkan we have the vishayas Trikūṭa, Pallūḍhamba, Āmrarājī, Mairikā, Mahāgiriḥāra<sup>12</sup> etc. North Maharashtra had such vishayas as Nāsikya<sup>13</sup> and Bhōgavardhana.<sup>14</sup> Sometimes vishaya was used as a synonym for dēśa. The Kaṇhēri plate, for instance, mentions the Sindhu vishaya in the sense of the province of Sindh.<sup>15</sup> Similarly, the Puṛi-Koṅkaṇa vishaya, mentioned in the Anjanēri plates,<sup>16</sup> signified the province of Konkan. Our records do not state the extent of these vishayas except in the case of Puṛi-Koṅkaṇa, which is said to have comprised 14000 villages. Puṛi-Koṅkaṇa, however, was a dēśa rather than a vishaya. Other vishayas must have been much smaller in size. This is also indicated by the number of vishayas into which Gujarat and North Konkan were divided.

A vishaya was subdivided into smaller units which were generally called ābhāras in Central India<sup>17</sup> and Gujarat, and bhōgas in Maharashtra. Thus we find that the Nagēndra ābhāra comprised the territory round modern Ēraṇ.<sup>18</sup> Several more ābhāras are mentioned in the records from Gujarat, e.g., Iksharakī<sup>19</sup>, Lōhikaksha<sup>20</sup>, Trēyaṇṇa<sup>21</sup>, Kaṇhavalā<sup>22</sup> and Kārmaṇēya.<sup>23</sup> In the south the Nāsikya vishaya of Maharashtra probably comprised the Vaṭanagara Contrast, however, the statement Trēyaṇṇ-ābhār-āntarggata-vishayē in line 20 of No. 26, which seems to convey just the opposite. Perhaps the intended statement there was Trēyaṇṇ-ābhāra-vishay-āntarggata-. Cf. No. 29, l. 21 and No. 30, l. 38.

bbōga<sup>1</sup>; for, Vaṭanagara, modern Vadner, is not far from Nasik. The terms āhāra and bbōga are sometimes noticed outside the aforementioned limits also. We find, for instance, that Gōrajā bbōga was a subdivision of the Bharukachchha vishaya in Gujarat,<sup>2</sup> while Mahāgiri-hāra in Konkan was probably so called because Mahāgiri was the headquarters of that āhāra.<sup>3</sup> Some āhāras had the same name as the vishayas in which they were included, and so the two technical terms are often found combined; see, e.g., Kārmanēy-āhāra-vishaya<sup>4</sup> and Trēyaṇṇ-āhāra-vishaya.<sup>5</sup> Some sub-divisions of vishayas may have been known as rāshṭras. Kalachuri inscriptions mention the mabattaras of rāshṭras among persons to whom the royal order about a grant was to be communicated.<sup>6</sup> Some rāshṭras may have been large enough to be known as vishayas. Gōpa-rāshṭra, for instance, is mentioned as one of the vishayas of Purī-Kōṅkaṇa.<sup>7</sup> An āhāra contained smaller territorial units called pathakas. Very few pathakas have, however, found a mention in our records. Kōrillā pathaka<sup>8</sup> and Lohikaksha pathaka<sup>9</sup> lay in Gujarat, while Nagarikā pathaka<sup>10</sup> was in Khandesh. Bāhirikā,<sup>11</sup> which is mentioned in the Eraṇ inscription as a subdivision of Nagendra āhāra, was probably a pathaka. Bbōgas and pathakas contained several towns<sup>12</sup> (nagaras or puras) and villages (grāmas). Capital cities were called rājadhāni and were distinguished by prefixing srī or vijaya to their names.<sup>13</sup> Other towns were called nagaras, puras or adbishṭhānas.<sup>14</sup> The village was, of course, the smallest territorial unit. The names of villages generally ended in kbēṭa, padra, padraka or palli, as, for example, Pippalakhēṭa,<sup>15</sup> Sirīshapadraka<sup>16</sup> and Suvarṇārapalli.<sup>17</sup> Villages granted to Brāhmaṇas were known as agrahāras; see Śraddhik-āgrahāra<sup>18</sup> mentioned in the Navasāri plates. Some of the larger villages had hamlets attached to them; see, e.g., Śrīparṇakā<sup>19</sup> included in Taṇḍulapadraka, and the three pallikās<sup>20</sup> attached to Samagiripaṭṭana.

In the later period some of these technical terms fell into disuse and were supplanted by others. Dēśa continued to signify the largest territorial unit, viz., a country or a province.<sup>21</sup> Vishaya, which in the earlier period was the common term denoting a district, is rarely noticed in this period.<sup>22</sup> Its place was taken by maṇḍala in the south and pattalā in the north. The records from Chhattisgarh mention several maṇḍalas such as Kōmō-maṇḍala<sup>1</sup>, Aparā-maṇḍala,<sup>2</sup> Madhya-maṇḍala,<sup>3</sup> Sāmānta-maṇḍala,<sup>4</sup> Anarghavallī-maṇḍala<sup>5</sup> (called also Anargha-maṇḍala), Talahāri-maṇḍala<sup>6</sup> etc. Sometimes maṇḍala was used in the sense of dēśa. Notice Mālava-maṇḍala<sup>7</sup> in the sense of Mālava-dēśa in the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Narasiṃha, and Chēdi-maṇḍala in the Ratanpur stone inscription of Pṛithvī-dēva II.<sup>8</sup> A more common term denoting a district was pattalā, which was current over a wide country. We have, for instance, Kauśāmba-pattalā<sup>9</sup> from Uttar Pradesh, Devagrāma-pattalā,<sup>10</sup> Khaṇḍagahā-pattalā,<sup>11</sup> Kūyīsambapālisa-pattalā,<sup>12</sup> Dhanavāhi-pattalā<sup>13</sup> and Rēvā-pattalā<sup>14</sup> from Vindhya Pradesh, and Sambalā-pattalā<sup>15</sup>, Nava-pattalā<sup>16</sup> and Jāulī-pattalā<sup>17</sup> from the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. Subdivisions of a pattalā are rarely mentioned. In the records edited here, we have only two instances of Māladvādaśaka<sup>18</sup> and Kōrēlla-chaturaśīti,<sup>19</sup> which were evidently groups of villages of which Mālā and Kōrēlla were the principal ones. A pattalā may, therefore, have been divided into smaller territorial units of 10, 12, 40 or 100 villages, but they rarely find a mention in the inscriptions of this period. Names of towns ended in nagara or pura and those of villages in grāma or pāṭaka. See, e.g., Lavaṇanagara, Durlabhapura,<sup>20</sup> Hastigrāma, Nikhatigrāma, Thiulapāṭaka and Vanīā-pāṭaka.<sup>21</sup> Some towns were named after the kings or queens who settled them. See, e.g., Ratnapura founded by Ratnadēva I, Jājallapura by Jājalladēva I and Gōsalapura by Gōsaladēvi. All these are still known by their ancient names which, in some cases, are slightly changed.

The form of government was monarchical throughout the long period represented by the records edited here. At the head of the administrative machinery was the king whose authority was supreme. He appointed viceroys, governors, ministers, and important civil and military officers, and transferred them from one province to another according as he considered it desirable. The Chālukya Emperor Vikramāditya I, for instance, appointed his younger brother Jayasiṃha to govern Gujarat and the Nasik District<sup>22</sup> and placed the Hariśchandriya prince Svāmichandra in charge of the whole Puri-Koṅkaṇa.<sup>23</sup> The king usually conferred titles and other distinctions such as pañchamahāśabda for meritorious service.<sup>1</sup> He was also the Commander-in-chief of the army and himself led important campaigns. Some early grants were issued from the victorious camps of kings evidently in the course of military campaigns. The king was also the Supreme Judge, and, according to the Smṛitis, it was one of his principal duties to dispense justice either personally or through judges appointed for the purpose. His consent was necessary for the transfer of any immovable property in the State. The three early inscriptions from Khandesh,<sup>2</sup> for instance, record the royal assent to certain gifts of land made by private individuals.

The king's authority was thus, in theory, unfettered, but in practice there were several checks. The education of the princes was so designed as to make them self-controlled as well as learned and brave. The high ideals of self-restraint, charity, impartiality, liberal patronage to religion and learning, and respect to elders and learned people were constantly kept before their eyes and inculcated upon their minds. The princes who were brought up in such traditions did not generally belie the expectations of their educators. The earlier records of the Traikūṭakas, the Kalachuris and the Gurjaras give a glowing description of the ābbigāmika-guṇas (attractive qualities) and other merits of the reigning kings and their ancestors. The Surat plates state, for instance, that the Traikūṭaka king Vyāghrasēna shared his wealth with learned people, refugees, elders, relatives and good persons, and that his enviable fortune was allied with self-restraint worthy of his noble birth.<sup>3</sup> The Kalachuri records state that the illustrious king Kṛishṇarāja wielded his weapon for the protection of the distressed, fought to humble the arrogance of his enemies, acquired learning to attain humility, and wealth to spend it in charity, made gifts to acquire religious merit and accumulated religious merit to attain salvation.<sup>4</sup> The Gurjara grants say that Dadda III was an adept in performing his duty, as he had acquired discrimination by studying the sacred treatise of the great sage Manu.<sup>5</sup> Even foreigners were impressed by the high ideals preached by the Hindu Dharmaśāstras and Arthaśāstras. The Śaka king Śrīdharavarman is described in both the records of his reign as dharmavijayin, i.e., a righteous conqueror.<sup>6</sup> This means that he never waged any war for self-aggrandizement. There may be some exaggeration in the description of the princes given by their panegyrists, but it undoubtedly indicates the ideal set before the rulers, which many of them must have striven to reach. In later inscriptions, however, we do not find the same emphasis laid on the virtues of self-restraint, learning and humility. The later prastāvis abound in glowing descriptions of a king's bravery and liberality as well as his construction of religious and charitable works, but they rarely refer to his discipline, duties and responsibilities.

The king could not also oppress the people by means of harsh and unjust laws; for his legislative powers were extremely limited. He was enjoined to govern the people and to administer justice strictly in accordance with the civil and criminal laws laid down in the Smṛitis. He had no power to enact fresh laws and to issue orders except in matters not covered by these works. In ancient times when religion had a firm hold on the minds of the people, few kings dared to defy the dictates of the age-old sacred Dharmaśāstras. On the other hand, many took pride in stating in their records that they studied these works and implicitly followed their teaching in respect of the institutions of the varṇas (castes) and āśramas (orders of life).<sup>7</sup>

Besides, the counsellors (mantrins) whom the king was enjoined to consult, the Purōhita who, by his prayers and religious rites, propitiated gods and secured their help in warding off all calamities and attaining success,<sup>1</sup> and the Rājaguru who was greatly venerated must have wielded considerable influence in controlling the arbitrary actions of the king. There were, again, rich and powerful Śrēṇis (guilds) and Gaṇas (corporations) which maintained their own militia.<sup>2</sup> The kings were not loth to use this military force in times of difficulty. The existence of these powerful self-governing institutions must also have exercised a wholesome influence in curbing the oppressive tendencies of a despot.

Royal power must also have been considerably checked by the existence of powerful feudatories. The latter enjoyed considerable privileges. They could make grants of land in their own name without referring to the paramount power or even mentioning its name in their records.<sup>3</sup> The Gurjaras of Central Gujarat called themselves Sāmantas and undoubtedly owed allegiance to the Chālukyas of Bādāmi, to whom they must have paid an annual tribute; but in other respects they exercised independent authority and could wage war or make peace on their own initiative. The Sēndrakas, the Gujarat Chālukyas and the Harischandriyas originally obtained their principalities by the favour of the imperial Chālukya family of Bādāmi, but in their land-grants they generally make no mention of the contemporary Chālukya Emperor. In later times, however, as the power of the central authority increased, the feudatories became weak. Most of them were required to be in attendance in the Imperial court. The Prabandhabintāmaṇi states that as many as 136 kings were in attendance in the court of Karṇa.<sup>4</sup> It is significant that we have hardly any grants made by these numerous feudatories of the Kalachuris of Tripurī. The only instances known so far are those made by the princes of Karkarēḍī,<sup>5</sup> but they belong to the age when the power of the imperial family was declining.

Kingship was hereditary. The eldest son was generally made the heir-apparent. He is called Yuvarāja in earlier records, and Mahārājaputra or Mahākumāra in later ones. He helped the king in the administration of the kingdom and succeeded him after his death. Śrṃśraya-Śilāditya, for instance, was governing South Gujarat on behalf of his father. He could make grants of land in his own name and was also authorised to use his own seal for the charters he issued.<sup>6</sup> Sometimes a king himself in his old age crowned his son and himself retired from government. Karṇa, the illustrious Kalachuri king, is said to have himself performed the coronation of his son Yaśaḥkarṇa.<sup>7</sup> Junior princes were often appointed to govern outlying provinces. The Gurjara king Dadda II appointed his brother Raṇagraha to govern a province. The latter could, however, make a grant of land only with the consent of the reigning king.<sup>8</sup> Kōkalla I had eighteen sons, of whom the eldest succeeded him, while the younger ones were appointed rulers of the neighbouring maṇḍalas.<sup>9</sup>

Later records generally mention the Mahārājñi or crowned queen among the persons to whom the royal order about a grant of land was to be communicated. It is not known whether she took any part in the deliberation of state affairs. She had, in any case, no independent authority. The Kārītalāi inscription, while recording a gift of Rāhaḍā, the

Mahādēvi (queen) of Lakshmaṇarāja II, expressly states that it had been made by her with the consent of the king.<sup>1</sup> Similarly, the Kumbhī plates state clearly that the village Chōralāyī was granted by the queen-mother Gōsaladēvi with the consent of her son, the reigning king Vijayasīmha.<sup>2</sup> Still, some queens must have exercised a considerable political and religious influence. Nōhalā, the queen of Yuvarājadēva I, greatly influenced the religious policy of her husband and invited to the Chēdi country several ascetics of the Mattamayūra clan from her home country. She herself built a lofty temple of Śiva under the name of Nōhalēśvara, which she endowed with the gift of several villages.<sup>3</sup> The dowager queen Alhaṇadēvi also caused a temple of Śiva, a monastery and a lecture-hall to be constructed at Bhēār-Ghāt and herself granted two villages for their maintenance.<sup>4</sup> Both these gifts must have been made with the tacit approval of the ruling king. Gōsaladēvi also must have exercised a considerable influence during the reign of her son Vijayasīmha. She is mentioned prominently with her son and grandson in the Bhēār-Ghāt temple inscription.<sup>5</sup>

The king was assisted by counsellors (mantrins), ministers (amātyas) and heads of departments (adhyakshas). The Sukranītisōra emphasises the importance of the Crown Prince and the Council of Ministers by saying that they are the arms, eyes and ears of the king.<sup>6</sup> The Nītivākyāmrīta of Sōmadēva, who flourished in the 10th century A.C., recommends the appointment of three, five or seven counsellors.<sup>7</sup> We have, however, no definite information about the existence of a mantri-parishad either in the earlier or in the later age. The Khairhā and Jabalpur plates<sup>8</sup> mention chief counsellors (mantri-mukyas), but whether they formed a mantri-parishad, it is difficult to say. Earlier records mention very few ministers and high State functionaries. Later records, no doubt, enumerate a number of them, but they do not state whether any of them were regularly consulted by the reigning king in the important affairs of the State. Again, divergent views were held by the authors of the Smṛitis and the Arthasāstras about the number of ministers. According to Manu, the king should have seven or eight ministers.<sup>9</sup> Sukra mentions a council of eight or ten ministers.<sup>10</sup> Sōmadēva tells us that the departments entrusted to the ministers (amātyas) were those of revenue, expenditure, protection of the king's person and the army.<sup>11</sup> If there was a council of eight ministers in the age of the Later Kalachuris, it may have consisted of the following who are generally mentioned in their records:—Mahāmantrin, Mahāmātya, Mahāsāndhivigrahika, Mahādharmādbikaraṇika (or Mahāpurōhita as stated in some records), Mahākshapaṭalika, Mahāpratibāra, Mahāsāmanta and Mahāpramaṭri. The ministers wielded a considerable power. In cases of emergency they carried on the administration of the State and placed their nominee from among the princes on the royal throne.<sup>12</sup> The Jabalpur and Khairhā plates state, for instance, that the Chief Counsellors placed Kōkalla II on the throne of his father Yuvarājadēva II evidently in an emergency caused probably by the latter's sudden death.<sup>13</sup>

The chief among these ministers was called Mahāmantrin (Chief Counsellor). He was the right-hand man of the king and wielded a great power. We have no information about the Mahāmantrins of the early kings such as the Kalachuris, the Gurjaras, the Sēndrakas and the Chālukyas ; for, no grants made by them have yet come to light. For the later period, however, we have some inscriptions recording their construction of religious and charitable works, from which we can glean some information about their abilities and achievements. The Kalachuri king Yuvarājadēva I had an able Counsellor named Bhākamiśra, who was a Brāhmaṇa of the Bharadvāja gōtra.<sup>1</sup> He was very learned and pious. His son Sōmēśvara, who served Lakshmaṇarāja II, is highly eulogised in the Kārītālāi inscription. We are told that once when the palanquin of the Mahāmantrin was about to fall owing to the exhaustion of the bearer, the king Lakshmaṇarāja himself put his shoulder to it.<sup>2</sup> This plainly indicates in what high esteem the king held him. The Mahāmātya who was next in rank was also a very influential minister.<sup>3</sup> He was probably in charge of the administration of the State. From the Rewa inscription we know of a highly cultured and valiant Kāyastha family which served the Kalachuris of Tripurī for several generations. Its founder was Gōllāka, also known as Gauḍa, who was the Amātya of Yuvarājadēva I.<sup>4</sup> The Mahādhyakṣha, who is mentioned in some records, was the General Superintendent of Administration.<sup>5</sup> Sometimes a Sarvādhikārin was appointed and invested with supreme powers of direction and administration.<sup>6</sup> The Mahāpratibhāra was also an important officer.<sup>7</sup> He was in constant attendance on the king. He ushered people into the royal presence and communicated royal orders to the officers concerned.<sup>8</sup>

The Rājaguru, though not included among the ministers, exercised a great influence in the court of the Kalachuri kings. He was consulted in important matters and was often entrusted with various kinds of work befitting his position.<sup>9</sup>

The earliest records included here, viz., the grants of the Mahārājas of Khandesh, do not mention any royal officers specifically. They refer to them in general terms as Ayuktakas.<sup>10</sup> The Kalachhala plate, however, mentions Kumārāmātya, Uparika, Dāṇḍika and Dāṇḍapāsika, besides those in charge of elephants, horses and men, as well as chāṭas and bhaṭas.<sup>11</sup> The mention of the first two officers is noteworthy ; for, till now they were known to occur first in the records of the Gupta age. The Kānākhērā inscription mentions Mahādāṇḍanāyaka,<sup>12</sup> and the Ēraṇ inscription Ārakṣhika and Sēnāpati.<sup>13</sup> These three records, which are of the pre-Gupta or early Gupta age, show that the Sanskrit technical terms signifying a hierarchy of officers in the different departments of the State had already been evolved before the rise of the Guptas. Later inscriptions such as the Bāgh cave plate of Subandhu, the Surat plates of Vyāghrasēna and the Sunao Kala plates of Saṅgamasimha mention several more functionaries. From these and other records we can form a general idea of the administration of the different departments of the State.

General Administration—Early records mention several officers of different grades. The Rājasthānīya, who heads the list in the Sunao Kala plates, was probably the highest officer.<sup>1</sup> As the term signifies a Viceroy, he may have been in charge of a province. Under him were the Uparikas, who administered smaller territorial units like the modern Commissioners' Divisions. The Vishayapatis corresponded to the modern Collectors or Deputy Commissioners and were in charge of vishayas (districts). Kumārāmātya was a general term denoting officers of different grades. Some of these terms fell into disuse and were supplanted by others in course of time. Uparika and Kumārāmātya do not occur in the later records of the Gurjaras, the Kalachuris and the Chālukyas. Rājasthānīya continued for a longer time, as it occurs in the Bagumrā plates of Allaśakti.<sup>2</sup> The new terms which generally replaced Rājasthānīya and Uparika were Rājan and Sāmanta.<sup>3</sup> They administered larger territorial units like the modern province or the Commissioner's Division. The Vishayapatis continued to be in charge of the districts. Under them were the Bhōgikapālakas, who probably supervised the work of the Bhōgikas.<sup>4</sup> The latter were in charge of smaller territorial divisions like the bhōgas, pathakas and grāmas. The Navsāri plates mention a grāmabhōgika.<sup>5</sup> Other records mention the Rāshtrakūṭa and the Grāmakūṭa, who were evidently the heads of a rāshtra and a village respectively.<sup>6</sup> The Sthānalaka, who finds a mention in one record,<sup>7</sup> was probably a local officer. Similarly, the Drāṅgika was the Mayor of a town.<sup>8</sup> Subordinate officers were referred to as āyuktakas and viniyuktakas.<sup>9</sup> Later they came to be known as ādbikārikas.<sup>10</sup>

Revenue Department—The head of this department was probably the Mahāpramātri who is mentioned in the later Kalachuri records.<sup>11</sup> He surveyed all land and fixed its assessment. The Mahākshapāṭalika was the head of the Records Department.<sup>12</sup> The officer who collected the land revenue was called Dityōdgrābaka.<sup>13</sup> Villages and lands granted to the Brāhmaṇas for the maintenance of temples were exempt from ditya or land-tax.<sup>14</sup> The officer who collected other taxes was known as Vishayādānika.<sup>15</sup>

There were different sources of state revenue. Udraṅga and uparikara are generally mentioned in early inscriptions. They probably correspond to klṛipta and upklṛipta mentioned in the Vākāṭaka grants, and to bhāga and bhōga of later records.<sup>16</sup> Udraṅga may have been a land-tax. As for uparikara which seems to signify an additional tax, it may have included the miscellaneous taxes in kind which traders and artisans had to pay. Besides these, salt and iron mines, forests, pasture-lands, mango and mabuā trees, threshing floors, fines imposed for offences, etc. were the other sources of revenue.<sup>17</sup> Rates were levied for the salary of the Paṭṭakila and the apprehension of criminals (dussādhyas).<sup>1</sup> Octroi and excise duties were another good source of income.<sup>2</sup> They were collected by the officers called Saukikas.<sup>3</sup> The Ghaṭṭapati and Tarapati, mentioned in the Kahla plates, looked after the ghāts and ferries, and collected a small cess levied for their use.<sup>4</sup>

There were various other taxes. The Anjanēri plates of Bhōgāsakti mention the tax levied on shops in market-places.<sup>5</sup> Another tax called kōvēra, imposed on written documents (karaṇas), may have been a fee for registration. Each cart of a caravan had to pay a certain octroi duty while entering and leaving a village or a town.<sup>6</sup> There was also a sales tax levied in money or kind on the articles sold in the market-places. The Bilhāri inscription mentions that for every elephant sold in the market in a particular town, a tax of four pauras, and for every horse, that of two pauras were required to be paid. A small tax was also levied on the sale of other commodities, such as salt, oil, betel-nuts, black pepper, ginger, bundles of grass, vegetables and egg-plants.<sup>7</sup> Some of these taxes were paid in kind. In some cases these taxes were assigned to temples for their maintenance. Otherwise, they were collected for the State.

Judicial Department—There are very few references to Judicial Officers in inscriptions. Perhaps Dāṇḍika who is mentioned in the Kalachhala plate<sup>8</sup> separately from Daṇḍapāsika was a Magistrate. Daṇḍanāyaka, however, was probably a military officer.<sup>9</sup>

Religious Department—This department is not mentioned in any early record edited here. Later, it seems to have attained a greater importance. Its head, the Mahadbarmādhikaraṇika or Mahāpurōhita, is invariably mentioned among the officers to whom the royal order about a land-grant was to be communicated.<sup>10</sup> In one record he is called Dharmakarmādhikārin, i.e., the Officer in charge of religious works.<sup>11</sup> The Mahādānika mentioned in the Kahla plates<sup>12</sup> probably belonged to this very department and arranged for the mahādānas (great gifts) when the king desired to make them. The scribe who recorded the royal order about a grant was called Dharmalēkin.<sup>13</sup> He was also known as Daśamūlin.<sup>14</sup>

Military and Police Departments—The army was traditionally divided into four members—chariots, elephants, horses and foot-soldiers.<sup>15</sup> Each of these must have been under a head, but it is significant that the Kalachhala plate, which is the earliest record referring to them, mentions only the heads of the elephant-force, cavalry and infantry (bastya-aśva-jana-vyāpṛita).<sup>16</sup> Chariots had perhaps lost their importance. The elephant force was an important constituent of the army. The strength of the latter was generally measured by the number of elephants in it. The elephant-drivers also had a considerable importance and had their own gaṇa or corporation.<sup>1</sup> The head of the elephant force was called Mahāpīlupati in early times. Later, he came to be known as Mahāpramattavāra. He occupied an influential position in early times and was sometimes appointed even the head of a territorial division. Nirihullaka, for instance, who was Mahāpīlupati, is described as Bhōgikapālaka and had a military officer under him.<sup>2</sup> Later Kalachuri inscriptions mention the Mahāśvasādbanika,<sup>3</sup> who was the head of the cavalry, which as a mobile force may have attained a great importance in the later age. It is noteworthy that the Rewa stone inscription mentions a Ghōṭaka-vigraba or Battle of Horses, fought and won by Vappulla, a general of the Kalachuri Emperor Karṇa.<sup>4</sup>

Balādbikṛita<sup>5</sup> and Sēnāpati<sup>6</sup> were the general terms denoting a military officer. Later, Sādbanika was used in the same sense. Gaulmikas were officers in charge of a troop of soldiers or a battalion of the army. The Commander-in-chief is called Mahābalādbikṛita<sup>7</sup> in earlier records and Mahāsēnāpati<sup>8</sup> in later ones. It is curious that the Commander-in-chief of the whole army is generally not mentioned among the officers named in later Kalachuri grants.<sup>9</sup> On the other hand, we find that the Mahāpramattavāra and the Mahāśvasādbanika, who were the chief commanders of the elephant force and cavalry, are mentioned specifically. The reason may be that the kings themselves were the Commanders-in-chief of their armies. Military officers are generally mentioned as Dūtakas in early land-grants.

The Daṇḍapāsika<sup>10</sup> was a Police Officer. The Superintendent of the Police was called Āraṅshika.<sup>11</sup> He was generally a military officer. Thus, Satyanāga who erected the yashṭi at Ērikiṇa was both Sēnāpati and Āraṅshika. The Police Officers who were specially charged with the investigation of thefts and apprehension of thieves and other criminals were called Chōrōddharānikas.<sup>12</sup> The Duṣṭasādbaka mentioned in the Kahla plates<sup>13</sup> was probably a Police Officer of the same type. The chāṭas and bhaṭas, who are frequently mentioned in early land-grants, were policemen and soldiers whose duty it was to maintain peace and order in the country and to apprehend criminals. They were often harsh and exacting in their ways and were, therefore, forbidden to enter agrabāra villages except for apprehending thieves and persons accused of high treason.<sup>14</sup>

Foreign Department—In ancient times this was called Sandbi-vigraba-ādbikaraṇa (the Department of Peace and War). Its head Mahāsāndhivigrabika figures in several early grants as the writer of copper-plate charters.<sup>15</sup> In fact, it was laid down that such charters should be written only by this officer and none else, in accordance with the instructions received from the king.<sup>16</sup> The reason was that of all the departments of the State, the Department of Peace and War was most likely to have an accurate information about the conquests of the king and his ancestors which were generally described in the initial part of such charters.

Other Officers—Several other officers are mentioned in later inscriptions. The Bhāṅḍāgārika was the Treasurer. The Mabābbāṅḍāgārika corresponded to the modern Chancellor of the Exchequer.<sup>1</sup> The Mabāsāmanta was the head of the feudatory princes. The Mabākarānika was the head of the Secretariat.<sup>2</sup> The Vāsūaka or Vāsāpvaka arranged for the residence of strangers and officers on tour.<sup>3</sup> Mabākōṣṭapāla was the head of the guardians of forts.<sup>4</sup> The exact significance of some technical terms denoting officers such as Khaṅḍavāla, Balādhīra and Mākutika<sup>5</sup> is not known.

The records do not show that any of these officers' posts were held on the principle of heredity. For instance, Kēsava, the Mabābalādhīkṛita of Jayabhata III, was the son of a mere Bhōgika.<sup>6</sup> He must have risen to his high post by merit. If in some families the same post was held for more than one generation, it must also have been due to merit. Thus Sahabhata, the writer of the Anjanēri plates of Jayabhata III, who held the post of Balādhīkṛita, was the son of the Balādhīkṛita Durgabhata.<sup>7</sup> Similarly, Sōmēśvara, the capable Prime Minister of Lakshmaṅarāja II of Tripurī, was the son of Bhākamiśra who had served the royal family in the previous generation in the same capacity.<sup>8</sup> There are some other instances of the same type in the history of the Ratanpur branch also. We have no reason to suppose that any of these posts were monopolised by these families on the principle of heredity. In some minor offices, the posts may have been held hereditarily. The post of the scribe of copper-plate grants in the Secretariat at Ratanpur was, for instance, held by a Kāyastha family of the village Janḍēra for several generations.<sup>9</sup>

In towns and villages, the administration seems to have been carried on by royal officers with the assistance of the committees called pañchakulas. The Sukranītīsāra states that the officers appointed by the king in every town and village should be six, viz., the head of the town or the village, the collector of land revenue, the collector of taxes, the magistrate, the scribe (or accountant) and the Pratihāra who was probably the head of the town or village police.<sup>10</sup> Some of these officers are mentioned in our records. The mayor of a town is called Drāṅgika<sup>11</sup> in early records and Purapradhāna<sup>12</sup> in later ones. The head of a village was Grāmakaṣṭa or Grāmabhōgika.<sup>13</sup> The Saulkika who collected taxes and the Danḍapāśika who inflicted punishment are also named in some records.<sup>14</sup> The other officers were generally mentioned as āyuktakas in early records. The pañchakulas were committees of persons elected by the residents of a town or a village for the management of the several departments.<sup>15</sup> The Dhurēti plates mention a pañchakula-dharmādhīkaraṇa which was probably the Judicial Department managed by a pañchakula.<sup>1</sup> The description shows that the merchant community had a preponderating representation on it. Other departments also must have had similar pañchakulas elected for their administration. The Anjanēri plates state that when the king Bhōgaśakti assigned certain taxes etc. for the maintenance of the temple of Bhōgēśvara in the town of Jayapura, he laid down that the festival of the god should be celebrated by five or even ten merchants in accordance with the custom of the town.<sup>2</sup> The wording of the passage shows that five was the usual number of the members of such committees, on account of which they were usually known as pañchakulas. In special circumstances, however, a larger number up to ten was elected. The pañchakulas decided also civil and criminal cases and imposed fines. Some rules for their guidance were laid down by the central government.<sup>3</sup> In other cases, the Anjanēri plates state, whatever eight or sixteen Maballakas would declare after due deliberation would be the right standard of punishment.<sup>4</sup> This shows that sometimes the committees consisted of as many as sixteen members. Generally appeals were allowed on the decisions of the pañchakulas, except in the case of agrabāra villages which were donated with full powers of adjudication.<sup>5</sup>

The members of the pañchakulas were called Mabattaras (Prakrit, Maballakas). There were evidently elected, but we have no information about the mode of election or the manner of voting. Their head or President was probably called Mabattama. The Smṛitis lay down special qualifications for the post of the Mabattama. A Mabattama should be honest, conversant with religion, vigilant, self-controlled and high-born. Mabattamas were also called Pāñchakulikas, heads of pañchakulas. The chief of them, called Mahāpāñchakulika, is mentioned in the Kahla plates.<sup>6</sup> He evidently resided in the capital, but what department he exactly represented we do not know.

Another officer who was common to both the town and the village was Gamāgamika.<sup>7</sup> He is mentioned in the grants of Subandhu and the Sēndrakas. His function evidently was to keep a watch on persons coming into or going out of the town or the village. It is interesting to note that the Sukranītisāra also mentions a similar officer. He was specially in charge of the pañthasālā or sarai of the village. He made inquiries about the caste, family, name and residence of the traveller, the places he came from and was going to, and after taking away his arms if he had any, made arrangements for guarding the sarai at night. In the morning the traveller's arms were returned to him and he was escorted to the limit of the village.<sup>8</sup>

RELIGION

We shall next proceed to consider the state of religion in the periods represented by our records. In the beginning of the earlier period, Buddhism was in the ascendant in Gujarat, Konkan and Maharashtra, and claimed many votaries—especially among the lower classes as also among the foreigners who were attracted by its catholic spirit. It is significant that the first record of the period included here, which belongs to the reign of the Ābhīra king Īsvarasēna, registers certain endowments made by a woman of the Saka race to provide medicines for the sick among the Community of the Buddhist monks living in the vihāra on the Tiraśmi hill near Nasik. Later, during the time of the Traikūṭakas we find an inhabitant of distant Sindh coming to Kṛishṇagiri in North Konkan and erecting a stūpa dedicated to Śāradvatīputra, one of the foremost disciples of the Buddha.<sup>1</sup> At Bāgh in the former Barwāni State, a private individual named Dattaṭaka caused a cave to be excavated and decorated with beautiful paintings for use by the followers of the Mahāyāna Buddhism. The ruler of the country, though himself a follower of the Vēdic religion, made a liberal grant for the worship of the Buddha image, the repairs of the vihāra and provision of food, clothing, medicines etc. for the Buddhist monks living there.<sup>2</sup> Yuan Chwang, who visited India in the first half of the seventh century A.C., states that there were about 100 monasteries in Maharashtra with more than 5000 monks of the Hinayāna and the Mahāyāna living in them. In the country of Bharukachchha (i.e., Central Gujarat) he found more than ten Buddhist monasteries with 300 monks, all adherents of the Mahāyānist Sthavira school.<sup>3</sup> Later, Buddhism seems to have gradually declined in strength for want of royal patronage.

On the other hand, Hinduism which had been lying dormant for some centuries began to assert itself with the rise of the Gupta and Vākāṭaka dynasties in North and South India respectively. This revival of Hinduism was marked by the performance of the Srauta sacrifices which had been in abeyance for a long time. In North India Samudragupta is credited with the revival of the Aśvamēdha sacrifice.<sup>4</sup> In South India the Ikshvāku king Śāntamūla I and the Vākāṭaka king Pravarasēna I performed several Vēdic sacrifices such as Agnishōma, Vājapēya and Aśvamēdha.<sup>5</sup> Unfortunately we have no official records of the Ābhīras wherein we could have expected positive information about their religious activities. Perhaps on account of their low social status, they were not keen on the performance of the Vēdic sacrifices. The Traikūṭakas, who followed them, showed a greater regard for the Vēdic religion. Dahrasēna performed an Aśvamēdha sacrifice to proclaim his independent status.<sup>6</sup> It is noteworthy that this is the first known mention of the performance of this sacrifice by a king of Northern Maharashtra after a lapse of nearly seven centuries. The Vedic sacrifices were, however, costly and could, therefore, be performed by rich persons only. The Smṛitis also lay down that great Vedic sacrifices such as the Sōmayāga should be performed by such householders only as have in stock food-grains sufficient for the maintenance of their dependants for at least three years.<sup>7</sup> Even among kings, few emulated the example of Samudragupta and Pravarasēna I. The tendency to perform great Vēdic sacrifices did not strike deep root, and after the sixth century A.C., we have hardly any record mentioning them.

Though the Srauta sacrifices were rarely performed, the grihya rites such as the pañchamahāyajñas continued unabated in Brāhmaṇa families. The State also encouraged them. Most of the grants<sup>8</sup> of the Early Kalachuris, the Sēndrakas, the Gurjaras and the Chālukyas were made for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices, viz., dēvayajña (offerings to gods), <sup>8</sup> The earlier records of the Mahārājas of Valkha registered only the royal consent to certain gifts made by private persons. The Barwāni plate of Subandhu and the Pārṇī and Surat plates of the Traikūṭakas do not mention any specific purpose for the royal grant.

pitṛiyajña (offerings to manes), bhūtayajña (offerings to creatures), manuṣhyajajña (reception to guests) and brahmayajña (study of one's Vēdic texts). It was believed that the regular performance of such rites by pious Brāhmaṇas conduced to the well-being of the State.<sup>1</sup>

We find that the Purāṇic Hinduism was making a much greater headway in the earlier period. The doctrine of bhakti (devotion) preached in the Bhagavadgītā appealed more to the popular mind than the cult of the sacrifice. Again, the teaching of that sacred work that all worship, whatever may be its object, ultimately reaches the same Supreme Being, led to religious eclecticism. Of the several gods of the Hindu pantheon, Viṣṇu, Śiva, Kārttikēya and Āditya attained a great importance in this period. The Traikūṭakas were Vaiṣṇavas. They describe themselves as Bhagavat-pāda-karmakara (servants of the feet of Bhagavat) in their grants<sup>2</sup> and as paramavaishṇava (fervent devotees of Viṣṇu) on their coins. Again, the Hariśchandrīya king Bhōgaśakti believed that there was no pre-eminent god except Vāsudēva (Viṣṇu), who was the cause of the creation, preservation and destruction of the universe. He built a temple dedicated to that god under the name of Bhōgēśvara in the merchant-town of Jayapura, and granted some villages and assigned certain taxes for the worship of the deity, the repairs of the temple and the maintenance of a charitable feeding house attached to it. The Yātrā festival of the god was to continue for a full fortnight in the month of Mārgaśirsha. The management of the temple was entrusted to a committee of five or ten members elected by the merchants of the town. In return for this, the merchants living there enjoyed certain immunities and exemptions.<sup>3</sup>

Śiva was also an equally popular god—perhaps more so with the aborigines and foreigners who embraced Hinduism. The cult of this god received even a greater royal patronage than that of Viṣṇu. In the absence of the official records of the Ābhīras we have no definite information about their religious inclinations, but judging by their names Sivadatta and Īśvarasēna, they seem to have been devotees of Śiva. The same appears to be true of their feudatories ruling in Khandesh and Central Gujarat; for, their names Svāmīdāsa, Rudradāsa and Īśvararāta unmistakably point to their predilection for the Śaiva faith. The Kaṭachchuris or Early Kalachuris also were adherents of Śaivism. All the three Early Kalachuri kings, Kṛishṇarāja, Saṅkaragaṇa and Buddharāja, are described in the Kalachuri grants as paramamāhēśvara, i.e., fervent devotees of Mahēśvara (Śiva). That they belonged to the Pāśupata sect of Śaivism is shown by the description of Kṛishṇarāja as devoted to Paśupati from his very birth.<sup>4</sup> Anantamahāyī, the queen of Buddharāja, is specifically mentioned as a follower of the Pāśupata sect.<sup>5</sup> The Dūtaka of the Ābhōṇa plates bore the name Pāśupata itself.<sup>6</sup> All this is a clear indication of the influence the Pāśupatas exercised in the court of the Early Kalachuris.

The Early Kalachuris must have erected splendid temples for the worship of their iṣṭa-dēvatā, but none have been discovered so far. The magnificent temple of Śiva, however, carved out of a living rock, now known as Elephanta near the island of Bombay, probably belongs to their age. There has been a considerable difference of opinion about the age of the Elephanta caves. Burgess placed them about 800 A.C.,<sup>7</sup> while Hiranand Sastri thought that the sculptures therein were, in all probability, wrought in the Gupta period of Indian history.<sup>1</sup> Gupte, on the other hand, who finds certain resemblances between the sculptures at Elephanta and those at Bādāmi, would place them in the first half of the seventh century A.C.<sup>2</sup> The last view seems to be nearest to the truth. Now, the only great royal family ruling in Maharashtra and Konkan in the sixth and seventh centuries A.C. which could have financed such a magnificent work of art was that of the Kalachuris. The Mauryas, who held North Konkan in that period, were only a feudatory family which could hardly have commanded the resources necessary for such a great work. There is another circumstance which supports this conjecture. The cave temple was caused to be carved by the Pāśupatas. This is indicated by the figure of Lakulīsa, the founder of the Pāśupata sect, in the recess at the north end of the shrine in the Western Court of the caves.<sup>3</sup> We have seen above that the Kalachuri Emperors were followers of the Pāśupata sect, which exercised a considerable influence in their court. It would seem, therefore, that the Elephanta caves were excavated in the second half of the sixth century A.C. when the Kalachuri power was at its peak.

Saivism must have received further support from the Sēndrakas and the Early Chālukyas, who succeeded the Kalachuris in Gujarat and Maharashtra; for, they also were votaries of that cult. The Sēndraka prince Allaśakti made a grant of some nivartanas of land in favour of the god Alaṅghyēśvara whose temple was situated at Pippalakhēṭa, modern Pimpalner in the West Khandesh District.<sup>4</sup> This Alaṅghyēśvara appears to be a name of Śiva. The object of worship in this temple was probably his phallic emblem.<sup>5</sup> The Chālukya prince Dharāśraya-Jayasimha as well as his two sons, Śryāśraya-Silāditya and Avānijanāśraya-Pulakēśin, were also worshippers of Śiva. In the Nasik plates Jayasimha is described as meditating on the feet of a holy sage whose name ended in śiva<sup>6</sup> and who therefore probably belonged to the Śaiva, not the Pāśupata, sect.

Of the two sons of Śiva, Kārttikēya and Gaṇēśa, the former seems to have risen into prominence earlier. He is mentioned in the Mahābhārata<sup>7</sup> and the Mahābhāshya of Patañjali<sup>8</sup> and is adored in the beginning of the great Nānāghāṭ cave inscription.<sup>9</sup> He was, it seems, a favourite god of the foreigners like the Śakas and the Kushānas who embraced Hinduism. The Saka king Śrīdharavarman was his devotee. In the Kānākhērā inscription, this god is called Mahāsēna and Mahākumāra and is described as the Commander-in-chief of the heavenly army. The Early Chālukyas believed that they owed their continuous prosperity to his grace. Gaṇapati, though sculptured in the panel of the Mātṛikas (Divine Mothers) in the Elephanta caves,<sup>10</sup> does not appear to have been separately worshipped in this period. Needless to say that there is no obeisance to him in the beginning of the inscriptions of this age.

The Sun also was a popular god in this period. Many of the Early Gurjara kings were his worshippers. They are described as devoted to the feet of the Sun.

Their copper-plate grants have an emblem of solar worship, perhaps an agnikuṇḍa, on their seals. Some of their grants were made on the occasion of a saṅkrānti, i.e., the sun's crossing a sign of the zodiac.<sup>1</sup> (The later kings of this dynasty from Dadda III onwards were worshippers of Mahēśvara, but they continued the old emblem of the dynasty and made grants on the tithis sacred to the Sun. Dadda III, for instance, made a grant on Magha śu. di. 7, known as the Ratbasaptamī.<sup>2</sup>

There must have been several temples of the Sun built by the Gurjara princes and others in the country of Lāṭa, but none are mentioned in Gurjara grants. We know, however, of a temple of the Sun under the name of Jayāditya from a reference in a later grant of the Gujarat Rāshtrakūṭas.<sup>3</sup> It was situated at Kōṭipura in the territorial division of Kāpikā (modern Kāvī) and was probably erected by the Gurjara king Jayabhāṭa II.

An analysis of the grants of this period would shed an interesting light on the religious tendencies of the age. Of the thirty-one grants<sup>4</sup> of this period, two were made to Buddhist vihāras<sup>5</sup> and three to Hindu temples.<sup>6</sup> The remaining twenty-six grants were made to Brāhmaṇas, most of them being intended for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices. As for the auspicious occasions on which grants were made, we find that no particular tithis were observed in the grants to Buddhist vihāras. Those to Hindu temples and Brāhmaṇas were generally made on some sacred tithi or parvan. Of the twenty-five grants, in which a tithi is mentioned, we find that three were made at the time of a solar eclipse<sup>7</sup> and one on that of a lunar eclipse.<sup>8</sup> The pūrṇimā was generally regarded as an auspicious tithi; for eleven grants were made on a pūrṇimā. The Kārttikī pūrṇimā or the full-moon day of Kārttika was regarded as specially holy, probably because Śiva killed Tripurāsura on that tithi. Donations on this tithi are specially enjoined when it is joined with the nakṣatra Kṛttikā.<sup>9</sup> Of the eleven grants made on pūrṇimās, as many as five were on the Kārttikī pūrṇimā.<sup>9</sup> In two grants it is called Mahākārttikī.<sup>10</sup> Some grants were recorded on the thirteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of a month, probably after the completion of the Ekādaśi-vrata.<sup>11</sup> Grants were rarely made on an amāvāsyā unless it was the day of a solar eclipse. Only three such occur in the records of this period.<sup>12</sup> The holy tithi Ratbasaptamī, sacred to the Sun, has already been mentioned. Finally, three grants are known to have been made on the occasion of saṅkrāntis, namely Mēṣa, Karkaṭaka and Tulā.<sup>13</sup>

This analysis will show that though the Vedic religion had not lost its hold on the people of the age, the Pauranic Hinduism, which laid a stress on the construction of the temples of gods as a specially meritorious act, was gradually gaining ground. Buddhism, on the other hand, was losing the popular support.

We shall next turn to the later period and first take up the countries of Chēdi and Sarayūpāra. In the fragmentary Kārītalāi stone inscription which is the earliest official record of the Kalachuris of Tripurī, all the three members of the Hindu Trinity, Brahmā,

Vishṇu and Rudra, are revered<sup>1</sup> and praised, a fact which indicates the eclectic spirit of the age. Temples dedicated to Brahmā are, however, very rare and none have yet been discovered in any part of the Kalachuri dominion;<sup>2</sup> but that the cult of Vishṇu was widely prevalent and had influential followers in the Chēdi country is shown by several inscriptions of the 10th and later centuries. At Bāndhōgarh and the adjoining village of Gōpālpur, Gollāka alias Gauḍa, the Amātya of Yuvarājādēva I, caused to be carved out of the rocks huge images of several incarnations of Vishṇu such as the Fish, the Tortoise, the Boar, Paraśurāma and Haladhara (i.e., Balarāma), besides one of Śēshaśāyin (Vishṇu reclining on the serpent Śēsha).<sup>3</sup> It is noteworthy that as in some early panels, Balarāma, not Kṛishṇa, is included among the incarnations of Vishṇu.<sup>4</sup> Sōmēśvara, the Brāhmaṇa minister of Lakshmaṇarāja II, who performed several Vēdic sacrifices, erected a lofty and magnificent temple dedicated to the Boar incarnation of Vishṇu under the name of Sōma-svāmin at Kāritalāi in the Jabalpur District.<sup>5</sup> The remains of this temple are still extant at the place. The contemporary Kalachuri king Lakshmaṇarāja II was himself a devotee of Śiva; but he granted a village for the maintenance of the eight Brāhmaṇas whom he settled there for the worship of the god. His queen Rāhaḍā and son Saṅkaragaṇa III also made grants in favour of the god.<sup>6</sup> This prince is described as paramavaishṇava. Contrary to the general tendency of the Kalachuris, he was a devotee of Vishṇu and erected a temple dedicated to that god under the name of Saṅkaranārāyaṇa at Bargaon in the Jabalpur District.<sup>7</sup> At Makundpur in the Rewa District of Vindhya Pradesh, there was another temple dedicated to Vishṇu under the name of Jalāśayana (the god who reposes on water) by a private individual, viz., the Srēshṭhin Dāmōdara.<sup>8</sup>

Though the cult of Vishṇu was thus prevalent in the Chēdi country and received a considerable patronage from the royal family, it was far outshone by that of Śiva, the tutelary deity of the Kalachuris. Vāmarāja, the founder of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty, was a devout worshipper of Śiva. No inscription of his reign has been discovered so far, but in some records of his successors<sup>9</sup> he receives the epithet paramamāhēśvara indicative of his devotion to Śiva. He first established himself at Kālāñjara, the impregnable fort in the Banda District, which from very early times has been sacred to Śiva. Later, the family divided itself into two branches, one establishing itself in the country of Sarayūpāra and the other in that of Chēdi.<sup>10</sup> Both of them were devoted to Śiva. The Kalachuris of Sarayūpāra had Nandin, the vāhana of Śiva, as their emblem on the seals of their copper-plate charters. Though the Kalachuris of Tripurī adopted the Gaja-Lakshmi as their distinctive emblem, they did not omit Nandin from the seals of their charters.

Saivism became the paramount cult throughout the extensive dominion of the Kalachuris from the 8th to the 12th century A.C. It received a great fillip during the reign of Yuvarājadēva I, who, under the influence of his queen Nōhalā, invited several Āchāryas of the Mattamayūra clan to the Chēdi country and built magnificent temples of Siva and monasteries for them at Gurgī, Masaun, Chandrēhē, Bilhāri, Bhērā-Ghāt and other places. As these Āchāryas exercised a profound influence on the political and religious history of the period, it would not be out of place to give here a somewhat detailed account of this clan.

The earliest inscription of the Mattamayūra clan, which was discovered at Ranōd in the former Gwalior State, was edited by Dr. Kielhorn in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. I, pp. 351 ff. It gives the following earliest genealogy of the line. It is to be remembered that the genealogy is spiritual, i.e., not from father to son, but from guru to disciple.

Kadambaguhādhivāsin—(the Inhabitant of Kadambaguhā)

Saṅkhamāṭhikādhipati—(the Lord of Saṅkhamāṭhikā)

Tērambipāla—(the Protector of Tērambi)

Āmardakatīrthanātha—(the Lord of Āmardaka)

Purandara

Kavachaśiva

Sadaśiva

Hṛidayaśiva

Vyōmaśiva

We learn from the inscription that when the king, the illustrious Avantivarman, who desired to be initiated in the Śaiva faith, heard of the great holiness of the sage Purandara, he attempted to bring him to his own country. He himself went to Upēndrapura where the sage was practising penance, and with a great difficulty persuaded him to accede to his request. The sage founded a maṭha at Mattamayūra, the capital of the king whom he initiated in the Śaiva faith, and established another maṭha at Raṇipadra (modern Ranōd). The last Āchārya mentioned in the genealogy, viz., Vyōmaśiva, enlarged and repaired the maṭha, erected temples and excavated a magnificent tank at the same place.)

Another inscription of this line, discovered somewhere in the former Gwalior State and now deposited in the Gwalior Museum, gives the same genealogy as above, except for the substitution of Rudraśiva for Āmardakatīrthanātha.<sup>1</sup> It will be noticed that the personal names of the first four Āchāryas in the genealogical list have not been given. The name of the fourth Āchārya is thus known from the Gwalior Museum inscription. Again, this record carries the genealogy one generation further and mentions Pataṅgaśambhu as the disciple of Vyōmaśambhu.<sup>2</sup>

The Ranōd inscription is undated; but on palæographic grounds, Dr. Kielhorn referred it to the end of the tenth or the beginning of the eleventh century A.C.<sup>3</sup> The <sup>1</sup> I am indebted to Mr. M. B. Garde, late Director of Archæology, Gwalior State, who first supplied to me an account of this inscription. Dr. D. R. Patil, the present Director of Archæology in Madhya Bharat, has also obliged me by sending me an impression of it.

tenour of the description shows that the first four Āchāryas of this clan were living at different places such as Kadambaguhā, Saṅkhamathikā, Tērambi and Āmardaktīrtha, far away from the country of Avantivarman, and that Purandara was the first Āchārya who came to Mattamayūra,<sup>1</sup> the prince's town, and founded a maṭha there, from which this clan derived its name Mattamayūravamśa. Upēndrapura, where Purandara practised penance, has not been identified. Banerji has called our attention to a place of the same name which is mentioned as the head-quarters of a mandala in a grant of Naravarman, dated V. 1167 (1110 A.C.).<sup>2</sup> This grant mentions Kadambapadraka as situated in the pratijāgarāṇaka (parganā) of Mandāraka in the mandala of Upēndrapura. None of these places have yet been identified. Mandāraka may be identical with Mundair, about 15 miles north-east of Ujjain. The village Kamlikhērā, which lies only about a mile to the east, may be the ancient Kadambapadraka. Whether the latter is identical with Kadambaguhā, the traditional original home of the Āchāryas of this clan, cannot be determined at present. We may, in any case, be certain that the earlier Saiva Āchāryas of this clan were living in Western Malwa. The places Kadambaguhā, Saṅkhamathikā, Tērambi and Āmardaka, from which they derived their appellations, must therefore be sought for in Malwa.<sup>3</sup> Kielhorn identified Kadambaguhā with Kadwāhā, six miles to the south of Ranōd, and Tērambi with Tērahi, 5 miles to the south-east. At both these places some remains of Saiva maṭhas and temples are still extant, but these identifications do not seem to be plausible in view of the description given in the Ranōd inscription. Perhaps some places in the kingdom of Avantivarman were named after the older seats of the clan in Western Malwa.<sup>4</sup>

Avantivarman who brought the sage Purandara to his capital is not known from any dated record, but his age can be ascertained approximately on other evidence. The Bilhāri stone inscription of Yuvarājādēva II (circa 980-990 A.C.) gives the following genealogy of the Mattamayūravamśa :—

श्रीमदामर्दकाधीशमायातमवनीतले । तच्छिष्याणां बहुत्वेऽपि कृतमालवकस्थितिम् ॥

<sup>4</sup> This is suggested by the name Uttara-Tērambagriha mentioned as the original place of habitation of the Āchārya Gaganāśiva in the Ranipur Jhariā inscription. Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIV, pp. 240 ff. This place seems to be distinguished from the original Tērambi by prefixing uttara to its name. It may be identical with modern Tērahi in the former Gwalior State.

where these Ācharyas flourished, was probably situated on the Madhuvēṇī<sup>1</sup> (Mohwar of the maps), and may be identical with the modern village Mahuā which lies only a mile to the south of Tērahi. This Purandara alias Mādhumatēya must be distinguished from his namesake who founded the maṭha of Mattamayūra and was a contemporary of Avanti-varman; for, the latter flourished four generations before Chūḍāśiva, while the former immediately preceded him.<sup>2</sup>

Another line of Saiva Ācharyas is also mentioned in the Bilhāri inscription. While describing the grants of Nōhalā,<sup>3</sup> the queen of Yuvarājadēva I, the inscription gives the following genealogy:—

The known Ācharyas of the Mattamayūra clan may, therefore, be stated in the form of the following table:—

<sup>1</sup> The river Madhuvēṇī is mentioned in an inscription at Tērahi dated V. 960 (903 A.C.). Ind. Ant., Vol. XVII, pp. 201 ff. Mahuā has the remains of three temples, two of which are dedicated to Mahādēva. They are assigned to the seventh century A.C. on the palaeographic evidence of a Sanskrit inscription which exists on the porch of one of them. The river Madhumatī is mentioned in Bhavabhūti's Mālātīmūdhava, Act IX.

<sup>2</sup> Banerji identified the two. This has vitiated the genealogy given by him in H.T.M., p. 112. The first Purandara was called Mattamayūranātha, while the second was Mādhumatēya.

Pavanaśiva, Sabdaśiva and Īvaraśiva<sup>1</sup> were contemporaries of Purandara, Chūḍāśiva and Prabhāvaśiva, but whether Pavanaśiva was a disciple of Sadāśiva or of some other Āchārya of Madhumatī is not known. Another Saiva Āchārya, named Gaganāśiva, who originally hailed from Uttara-Tērambagriha and built a temple of Śiva at Ranipur Jhariā in the former Patna State in Orissa, is known from an inscription recently edited by Dr. Chhabra. He probably belonged to the Mattamayūra clan, but his exact relation to the other Āchāryas of the clan is not known.

Mattamayūra, the chief seat of this clan, has not yet been identified. It must have been situated not far from Tērahi, Ranōd and Mahuā, where inscriptions, temples and monasteries of this clan have been found. It may be identical with Kadwāhā, about 15 miles south of Ranōd, which possesses the remains of a Hindu monastery and of not less than 14 Brahmanical temples, all belonging to the 10th and 11th centuries A.C. "Such a large group of temples," says Mr. Garde, "is found at no other single place in the Gwalior State. Kadwāhā thus deserves to be styled the Khajurāhō or Bhuvanēśvara of Gwalior." Such buildings could not have been erected without a continuous royal patronage. Kadwāhā may, therefore, have been the capital of Avantivarman and his successors.<sup>2</sup>

Inscriptions give no definite information about the dynasty and age of Avantivarman who ruled at Mattamayūra. From the evidence of the Chēḍī inscriptions mentioning the Saiva Āchāryas of this line, we have inferred above that Purandara who was invited by Avantivarman flourished in circa 825 A.C. This is, therefore, the approximate time of Avantivarman.) As regards his dynasty, Kielhorn, while editing the Ranōd inscription, suggested that he might be related to the Chaulukya princes Sīrīhavarman, Sadhanva and Avanivarman, the ancestors of the Chēḍī queen Nōhalā. The suggestion appears quite plausible; for, it was probably owing to the influence of this queen, who was a favourite wife of Yuvarājādēva I, that the Saiva Āchāryas first obtained a footing in the Chēḍī country. She, her husband Yuvarājādēva I and their son Lakshmaṇarāja II invited Saiva Āchāryas of this line to the Chēḍī country and honoured them with munificent gifts of temples, monasteries and villages. It is, therefore, quite plausible that her ancestors were ruling over the territory round Mattamayūra.<sup>3</sup> This suggestion is further supported by the reference to a Sulkī (i.e., Chaulukya) dynasty ruling in Central India in the 9th and 10th centuries A.C. A stone inscription discovered by Mr. Garde at Maser in the Bhilsā District mentions a line of Sulkī kings.<sup>4</sup> The progenitor of this line was the sage Bhāradvāja. He was born of a drop of water which fell from the añjali of the Creator. Hence, the royal family descended from him came to be known as Sulkī. This tradition differs from that described in the Bilhāri inscription in connection with the ancestry of the Chēḍī queen Nōhalā. The ancestors of Nōhalā belonged to the Chaulukya family, which was so called because its progenitor was born from the chuluka (handful of water) of the sage Bhāradvāja himself.<sup>5</sup> Both these traditions are no doubt fanciful, being intended to give a plausible explanation of the dynastic name Sulkī or Chaulukya, but they leave no room for doubt that the two families were identical. The Maser inscription mentions some kings of this line such as Narasiṃha and Kēśarin and describes their wars with the Kalachuris, their neighbours on the east, as well as with the rulers of Lāṭa (Central and Southern Gujarat), Kachchhavāha and Hūṇa kings. Narasiṃha was a feudatory of Kṛishṇarāja who is undoubtedly the same as Kṛishṇapa, the younger brother of the Chandēlla Dhaṅga. The latter flourished from 950 A.C. to 1005 A.C. These kings, therefore, undoubtedly flourished in the 10th century A.C. They evidently belonged to the same line as Avantivarman and Siṃhavarman. The known kings of this line may, therefore, be stated as follows<sup>1</sup> :—

<sup>3</sup> An analogous instance is that of the Kalachuri queen Alhaṇadēvi, who, hailing from Mewad, placed the Pāśupata ascetic Rudrarāśi of Lāṭa in charge of a temple of Śiva and made grants of some villages for its maintenance. No. 60, ll. 24-25.

Siṃhavarman (850 A.C.)

Sadhanva (875 A.C.)

Avanivarman (900 A.C.)

Narasiṃha (950 A.C.)

Kēśarin (975 A.C.)

✓ The subsequent history of this family is not known; but as shown elsewhere,<sup>2</sup> the Chaulukyas of Gujarat who flourished from the 10th century onwards may have been related to these kings. (That the Chaulukyas of Gujarat were staunch supporters of Saivism is well known.) ✓

✓ The maṭha at Mattamayūra, being a renowned seat of Saivism, supplied Saiva pontiffs from time to time to the monasteries in the Chēdi country. As stated above, Yuvarājadēva I invited Prabhāvaśiva to his country and made munificent gifts to him. His wife Nōhalā invited another Saiva Āchārya named Iśvaraśiva and donated several villages to him. Her son Lakshmaṇarāja II called Hṛidayaśiva from the maṭha of Madhumatī and made over to him the maṭhas of Vaidyanātha and Nauhalēsvara. Hṛidayaśiva placed his disciple Aghōraśiva in charge of the latter maṭha.

Kalachuri inscriptions mention some other Saiva Āchāryas who acted as Rājagurus. They also probably belonged to the Mattamayūra clan. The Jabalpur inscription dated K. 926 (1174 A.C.) mentions the following Saiva Āchāryas :—

Vimalaśiva

Vāstuśiva

Purushaśiva (Rājaguru of Yaśaḥkaṇa)

Saktiśiva (Rājaguru of Gayakaṇa)

Kīrtiśiva (Rājaguru of Narasiṃha)

Vimalaśiva (Rājaguru of Jayasiṃha)

Two sons of the last Āchārya Vimalaśiva became saṃnyāsins. The elder was Sāntaśiva, who became the Rājaguru of the Chandēlla king Trailōkyamalla, when the latter annexed the Chēdi country. The younger son was Nādaśiva. He executed a mortgage deed recorded in the Dhurēti plates of Trailōkyamalla, dated K. 963 (1212 A.C.).<sup>3</sup> ✓

A branch of the Mattamayūra clan was founded at Bhērā-Ghāt, about 10 miles from Tripurī. A hypethral temple was erected on a hillock on the bank of the Narmadā, where sixty-four yōginīs with Gaṇapati were installed. Most of the yōginīs are of the time of Yuvarājadēva I, but some are of a much earlier age.<sup>1</sup> The place seems to have been considered holy from very early times. The hypethral temple became known as Gōlakī or the Round Temple from its shape.) The maṭha or monastery established by its side became well known as Gōlakī maṭha. The Malkāpuram pillar inscription<sup>2</sup> says that the Gōlakī maṭha was situated in the Dāhala maṇḍala between the Bhāgīrathī and the Narmadā. As stated before, Dāhala was the home province of the Kalachuris with Tripurī as its capital. This maṭha sent its Āchāryas to distant places for the propagation of its faith. Viśvēśvaraśambhu, who had risen to the position of the chief abbot of this maṭha, made an agrahāra called Viśvēśvara-Gōlakī in the Andhra country as stated in the Malkāpuram pillar inscription. This inscription gives the following spiritual genealogy of Viśvēśvaraśambhu :—

Durvāsas

Viśvēśvaraśambhu

(contemporary of the Kākatiya king Gaṇapati, 1213-1249 A.C.)

It will be noticed that the three Āchāryas from Saktiśambhu to Vimalaśiva are identical with those mentioned in the Jabalpur inscription as the Rājagurus of the Kalachuri kings Gayākarna, Narasiṃha and Jayasiṃha. Vimalaśiva hailed from the Kērala country, while his disciple's disciple Viśvēśvaraśambhu was a resident of Pūrvagrāma in Dakṣiṇa Rāḍha in Gauḍa. This shows plainly that the Gōlakī maṭha attracted learned and pious men from distant places. Viśvēśvaraśambhu, who had attained the position of the head of the Gōlakī maṭha, afterwards repaired to the Andhra country, where he received great honours at the Kākatiya court. He initiated the Kākatiya king Gaṇapati into the Saiva faith and received munificent gifts of land and villages from him as well as from his daughter Rudrāmbā. Branches of the Gōlakī maṭha were established at several other places in Cudappa, Kurnool, Guntur and North Arcot Districts in the Madras State.

<sup>3</sup> Some scholars identify this Vāmaśambhu with Vāmadēva, mentioned in the grants of Karṇa and others with full imperial titles. The identification does not appear to be correct. From the description in the Malkāpuram inscription, Vāmaśambhu does not appear to have been the immediate predecessor of Saktiśambhu, but flourished several generations earlier. Cf. तस्मिन् मठे तस्य गुरोर्बभूवुः शिष्याः प्रशिष्याश्च परसहस्राः । विनिग्रहीतुं समनुग्रहीतुं शोणीश्वरान्दक्षकटाक्षपातैः ॥ इत्थं काले याति सत्संप्रदाये सन्तानेऽस्मिन्नपि सन्तानकल्पः । शैवाम्भोषेः शक्तिशम्भोश्चाराच्छिष्यः श्रीमान् कीर्तिशम्भुर्बभूव ॥ J.A.H.R.S., Vol. IV, p. 156.

Another branch of the Mattamayūra clan was established at Karkarōṇī. This place has not been identified, but was situated somewhere in Central India. Brahmaśambhu, the author of the Pañjikā, belonged to this branch.<sup>1</sup> Some Āchāryas of this branch settled down in Konkan. A copper-plate inscription of Raṭṭarāja of the Śilāhāra dynasty, dated in Ś. 930 (1008 A. C.) and discovered at Kharepatan, records a grant of land made for the use of the Āchāryas of this branch.<sup>2</sup>

Kalachuri inscriptions afford us glimpses into the lives of these Āchāryas. The Jabalpur inscription dated K. 926 describes the lineage, learning and mode of life of the great Saiva Āchārya Vimalaśiva, the Rājaguru of the Kalachuri king Jayasimha.<sup>3</sup> He was born in a family of great Vedic scholars renowned as much for charitable and religious works as for learning. Vimalaśiva studied the Vēdas, observed religious vows and visited holy places in different parts of India such as Prabhāsa, Gōkarna and Gayā. He then received initiation from Kīrtiśiva of the Gōlakī maṭha, the Rājaguru of Narasimha. He was employed by the king Jayasimha in various affairs of the State, but never neglected his nitya and naimittika religious duties. He was renowned for his charities and erected temples, maṭhas, charitable feeding houses (sattras), dwellings for the Brāhmaṇas as well as gardens. He built a large temple of Śiva under the name of Kīrtiśvara in honour of his guru Kīrtiśiva. For the maintenance of the temple, the Kalachuri king Jayasimha donated some villages on the occasion of a solar eclipse in K. 926 (1174 A.C.).

Similar glowing accounts of the religious and charitable activities of other Saiva Āchāryas are given by several Kalachuri inscriptions. These Āchāryas received honour and patronage at the hands of the ruling kings. The Rājagurus are mentioned among royal officers to whom grants of land and villages, recorded in copper-plate charters, are communicated. The Malkāpuram pillar inscription records the tradition that Sadbhāvaśambhu of the Gōlakī maṭha received a gift of three lakhs of villages from the Kalachuri king Yuvarājadēva (I). If correct, this would indicate that the king assigned to him one third of the total revenue of his home province of Dāhala, which, according to tradition, comprised nine lakhs of villages.<sup>4</sup> Though this princely gift has not been recorded in any Chēdi inscriptions, there is no doubt that the Kalachuris liberally patronised the maṭhas. Both the Bilhāri<sup>5</sup> and Gurgi<sup>6</sup> inscriptions record the donations of several villages for the maintenance of temples and monasteries, made by successive Kalachuri kings. The former inscription mentions, besides, several taxes and rates levied on oil mills, and on elephants horses, vegetables, betel leaves and other articles sold in the local markets, which were assigned for the maintenance of these religious and charitable institutions.

Many of these Āchāryas were engaged in austerities and, therefore, preferred to stay in solitary retreats far from the crowd. For them monasteries were built on the banks of holy rivers where they could practise meditation in peaceful surroundings. A graphic description of the quiet life led by these Āchāryas is given in the Chandrēhē inscription.<sup>7</sup>

The Āchāryas utilised the wealth of the maṭhas and the income of the agrahāra villages for the welfare of the people. Kalachuri inscriptions mention vyākhyāna-śālās (lecture halls), sattras (charitable feeding houses) and gardens with which the maṭhas were provided.<sup>8</sup>

They do not, however, give us any information about the management of these mathas. For this we must turn to the Malkāpuram inscription, which gives a detailed description of the measures adopted by Viśvēśvaraśambhu for the maintenance and management of the institutions he founded in his agrabāva village, viz., a temple, a monastery, a college, a choultry for the distribution of food, a maternity home and a hospital. Elaborate rules were laid down for the appointment of an Āchārya as the head of the Maṭha; his qualifications and the fee to be paid to him for his services were set forth in detail. The whole Saiva community of the village was given the right to appoint a new Āchārya, if the existing one was found negligent in his duty or was guilty of misbehaviour.<sup>1</sup> As Viśvēśvaraśambhu was previously the head of the Gōlakī Maṭha, it would not be wrong to infer that similar rules were in force for the management of the mathas in the Chēdi country.

There were four well-known sects of Saivism, viz., Saiva, Pāśupata, Kāruka (or Kāruṇika) Siddhāntin and Kāpālika. The Āchāryas of the Mattamayūra clan belonged to the Saiva, not the Pāśupata sect. According to tradition, Śiva first initiated Brahmā, the Creator, into this faith after a sacrifice in Dāruvana.<sup>2</sup> From the latter sprang this line of Saiva Āchāryas. In some inscriptions the first Āchārya is said to be Durvāsas. His spiritual descendants called themselves Saidhbāntikas, i.e., followers of the true doctrine. Madhumatī in Central India is described as the abode of the Saidhbāntikas.<sup>3</sup> The Siddhāntas were revealed by Mahēśvara. According to this sect, there are three principles, viz., the lord (pati), the individual soul (paśu) and the fetters (pāśa). The whole system has four pādas, viz., vidyā or right knowledge of the three padārthas, kriyā or ceremonies consisting of dīkṣhā (initiation) etc., yōga or meditation and charyā or discipline consisting in doing what is prescribed and avoiding what is prohibited. Charyā and yōga are regarded as important as vidyā.<sup>4</sup> The Āchāryas of Madhumatī are described as having an excellent discipline.<sup>5</sup> Most of the inscriptions of this clan contain descriptions of the yōgic practices of the Āchāryas. These led to emancipation (siddhī). The Āchāryas who attained emancipation were called Siddhas. Kadambaguhā, the original home of the Mattamayūra school, is called the venerable abode of the line of the Siddhas.

Though the Āchāryas of the Mattamayūra clan were followers of the Saiva school, they were not bigotted. They studied various orthodox and even heterodox systems. Rudraśiva, the guru of the Kalachuri king Jājalladēva I, is described as conversant not only with the siddhāntas of his own but also with those of others' schools; he was, besides, well-read in the authoritative works of Dīnānāga and others.<sup>6</sup> In the Gurgi inscription, the Saiva Āchārya Praśāntaśiva is said to have spent his days in the company of meritorious persons who were adepts in the philosophy of the Pāñchārthikas or Pāśupatas.<sup>7</sup>

There were several Pāśupata Āchāryas living in the Kalachuri kingdom. One of them, viz., Rudrarāśi who came from Lāṭa, was placed in charge of the temple of Śiva under the name of Vaidyanātha, and of the maṭha and the hall of teaching with gardens etc. attached to them, which the Kalachuri dowager queen Alhaṇadēvī had erected at Bhērā-Ghāt.<sup>8</sup> Another Pāśupata Āchārya, known from the inscriptions, was Bhāvabrahman, who also had hailed from Lāṭa and erected a temple of Śiva at Tripurī<sup>1</sup>. His mode of life was in accordance with the teaching of the Pāśupata system. He lived on scanty food which he obtained by begging, wore only a loin cloth, slept on pure ashes and lived a life of celibacy. He practised yōga as taught in the system of Patañjali, and cultivated the four bhāvanās (sentiments) of maitrī (benevolence), karuṇā (compassion), muditā (cheerfulness) and upēkṣā (indifference). According to the Pāśupatas, salvation consists not only in the cessation of misery but also in the attainment of supernatural powers. Liberated souls live in an intimate union with Śiva.<sup>2</sup>

As stated before, almost all Kalachuri kings were devout worshippers of Śiva. Some of them went on a pilgrimage to distant holy places to offer worship to the god. We learn from the Bilhāri inscription that Lakshmaṇarāja II marched in state with his whole retinue of feudatory princes and his army of elephants, horses and foot-soldiers all the way from Tripurī to Sōmanāth Paṭṭan, and bathing in the sea there, he worshipped the god Sōmanātha with lotuses of gold. He also offered to the god in worship the effigy of the serpent Kāliya, made of gold inlaid with precious stones, which he had obtained from the king of Orissa. He then himself composed a hymn of praise and concentrated his mind on Śiva's glory.<sup>3</sup> His son Yuvarājadēva II also dedicated to Sōmēśvara the wealth he had obtained by conquering the kings of the four quarters.<sup>4</sup> He also composed an excellent hymn in praise of the god.<sup>5</sup>

There was a great building activity during the age of the Kalachuris. The temples and monasteries, built by Yuvarājadēva I, his queen Nōhalā and their son Lakshmaṇarāja II, have already been mentioned. From a huge sculpture of Hara-Gaurī, measuring 12' 8" long by 4' 7" broad on the mound at Gurgi, Cunningham conjectured that the structure in which it was enshrined must have been about 100 ft. in height.<sup>6</sup> Banerji says that the height of the top of the śikhara of this temple, when it was intact, must have been a good 150 ft. above the surrounding ground level.<sup>7</sup> From the Gurgi inscription we know that this temple was erected by the sage Praśāntaśiva.<sup>8</sup> By its side there was another temple erected by Yuvarājadēva I, which must have been still more lofty. The illustrious king Kaṇva built a twelve- or sixteen-storeyed temple called Kaṇvamēru, which was probably dedicated to Śiva. The ruins of this temple can still be seen near Rājghāṭ in Banaras. Another temple, said to have been erected by Kaṇva, is at Amarakaṇṭak. It is a magnificent triple-shrined structure with profusely sculptured lofty śikharas. Other temples of the age are those of Virāṭēśvara at Sōhāgpur and Vaidyanātha at Baijnāth, both in the former Rewa State. Most of these temples have a circular garbha-griha. Temples of this type were a speciality of the Chēdi country and were built for the first time by the Āchāryas of the Mattamayūra clan. Such temples have not been noticed outside the dominion of the Kalachuris.<sup>9</sup>

Several ministers and generals of the Kalachuri kings as well as private individuals living in the Chēdi country followed the example of their rulers and erected temples dedicated to Śiva. The descendants of the aforementioned Kāyastha Amātya of Yuvarājadēva I changed their religious creed and became Saivas. The last of them, mentioned in the Rewa stone inscription dated K. 800, whose name is unfortunately lost, constructed a temple of an imposing height probably at Gurgi, which he dedicated to Siva.<sup>1</sup> Vappulla, a brave general of Karṇa, who had distinguished himself in several battles, built a temple of the pañchāyatana type, in which the central shrine was surrounded by four small dēvakulis. The image installed in one of them was of Lakshmī-Nārāyaṇa. The names of the images in the other three are unfortunately lost.<sup>2</sup> Besides Viṣṇu and Siva, Gaṇeśa also seems to have been worshipped in this period. He is invoked in the beginning of some records of this period,<sup>3</sup> but no specific mention of a temple erected in his honour occurs in the records of the Chēdi country. The same is true of Kārttikēya.<sup>4</sup> Sculptures of both the gods have, however, been found in abundance at Tripurī and other places. Ambikā was regarded as a guardian deity and her image was installed when a new work like a ghāt was constructed.<sup>5</sup> Images of the Sun also have been found at Maṣaun and Bhērā-Ghāt, but there is no mention of any temple dedicated to him.<sup>6</sup> A beautiful bronze image of Rēvanta, son of the Sun, was found at Tripurī and is now in the possession of the former Malguzar of the village. ✓

Buddhism and Jainism also were flourishing in the Chēdi country. At Sarnath, Māmakā, the wife of Dharmēśvara, who was a follower of the Mahāyāna, caused a copy of the Aṣṭasāhasrikāprajñā to be written, which she made over to the Order of the Venerable Monks of the Mahābōdhi Mahāvihāra where the Buddha had turned the Wheel of the Law by his first sermon. At Gopālpur, about 3 miles from Bhērā-Ghāt, were discovered five Buddhist images. Four of these were of Bōdhisattva Avalōkitēśvara, while the fifth was of his consort Tārā. From the inscription on one of them, it seems that the image was the gift of a woman named Dhēnuvā, who was a gate-keeper of one Satka, son of a lay worshipper named Subhaṭa Kāyastha. She was a follower of the Mahāyāna school. These images appear to be of the Magadha school.<sup>7</sup> The inscription shows that there were some Buddhists living in peace and prosperity near the Kalachuri capital Tripurī.<sup>8</sup> At Tewar itself was found the beautiful image of a Bōdhisattva of the Mahāyāna school, seated in the Vajrāsana posture, with his two hands in the attitude of teaching.<sup>9</sup> The Buddha had come to be included among the ten incarnations of Viṣṇu and is figured on the prabhāvali of the images of that god.<sup>10</sup>

That Jainism also was flourishing in the Kalachuri dominion is shown by the Bahuri-bandh inscription of the reign of Gayākarṇa. It records the construction of a temple of the Jaina Tirthankara Sāntinātha by one Mahābhōja, son of Sarvadhara.<sup>11</sup> The colossal statue of Sāntinātha is still standing at Bahuribandh. Several other images of the Jaina Tirthaṅkaras have been found in the Jabalpur District. There were Jaina temples at Sōhāgpur also. At the palace of the Tbhākur of the place are collected a number of Jaina sculptures, among which there are some Sāsanadēvatās.<sup>1</sup> All this leaves no room for doubt that Jainism also had a considerable following in the Chēdi country.

Many of the grants made in this period were in the form of endowments to temples erected by kings, their ministers and Rājagurus. Some grants were made to Brāhmaṇas for the attainment of religious merit. There is, however, no specific mention of the object as in the earlier grants, viz., that they were made for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices. Some agrahāra villages were granted for the settlement of the Brāhmaṇas. These settlements were called the Brabma-stambas.<sup>2</sup> Karṇa invited some learned and pious Brāhmaṇas to settle at a newly founded town called Karṇāvati, which, from its description, appears to have been situated on the bank of the Gaṅgā. Karaṇbēl was another town founded by the same king near Tripurī.

Of the ten grants made to Brāhmaṇas by the Kalachuris of Chēdi and Sarayūpāra or their feudatories, two were made on the occasion of the śrāddha of the donor's father,<sup>3</sup> three on the occasion of a saṅkrānti,<sup>4</sup> one on a lunar eclipse,<sup>5</sup> and two on the tithis of Kārttika-pūrṇimā and Mārgaśīrsha-kṛishṇa-saptamī.<sup>6</sup> The occasion and purpose of one are not known. One grant was made on the occasion of a yugādi.<sup>7</sup> Curious as it may appear, no grant made by the Kalachuris to a Brāhmaṇa on the occasion of a solar eclipse in this period has yet been found in the Chēdi and Sarayūpāra countries.

Dakshiṇa Kōsala—The religious condition in Dakshiṇa Kōsala did not materially differ from that in Chēdi and Sarayūpāra. The Kalachuris who ruled there believed that they had obtained their kingdom by the grace of the god Vaṅkēśvara.<sup>8</sup> This was probably a Prakrit name of Śiva. There was an old temple of Vaṅkēśvara at Tummāṇa, the old capital of the Kalachuris. The object of worship was an image, not a linga; for, the Amōdā plates state that the king Pṛithvīdēva I washed the resplendent feet of the god before he made a grant to a Brāhmaṇa on the occasion of the construction of the chatuskākā (hall) of the temple.<sup>9</sup> After the capital was shifted to Ratnapura, several temples were built there by the kings and their ministers. Jājalladēva I founded the town of Jājallapura (modern Janjgir in the Bilaspur District), and built there a temple of Śiva and a monastery for ascetics.<sup>10</sup> He also repaired the old temple of Śiva at Pālī by constructing additional walls and pillars.<sup>11</sup> The temples of Śiva were erected by the princes, their feudatories and ministers as well as private persons at several places such as Mallāla, Sōṅṭhivapura, Varēlāpura, Nārāyaṇapura, Kumarākōṭa, Pathariā, Shēorinārāyaṇ, Vaḍada and Pōrathā.<sup>12</sup>

Saivism was thus the predominant cult in Dakshiṇa Kōsala, but Vaishṇavism also was prevalent, though it played a subordinate rôle.) At Janjgir there is a beautifully sculptured temple of Vishṇu which was unfortunately left incomplete. Above the door-way of the garbhagriha are carved the images of the Hindu Trinity, Brahmā, Vishṇu and Śiva, which testify to the religious syncretism of the age. Vishṇu, to whom the temple was dedicated, appears in the centre. On the pillars and walls of the temple appear beautifully carved images of the several incarnations of Vishṇu as well as of Sūrya, Dēvī and other gods. This is one of the most beautiful temples in Chhattisgarh.<sup>1</sup> Its builder's name is unknown. Another old temple of Vishṇu exists at Shēorinārāyaṇ, perhaps erected by a collateral branch of the royal family. It is a simple structure, possessing no architectural beauty. Jagapāla, who distinguished himself in several battles of the Kalachuris of Ratanpur, repaired an old temple of Vishṇu, originally built by a Nala king in the 8th century A.C.<sup>2</sup> He re-named the god as Rāmachandra and granted a village for his worship.<sup>3</sup> Another temple dedicated to the god was built by a Mōchi or Shoe-maker at Khalvāṭikā in the Raipur District.<sup>4</sup> Several beautifully carved images of Vishṇu have been discovered at Ratanpur and other places.

Besides Śiva and Vishṇu, other gods and goddesses like Pārvatī, Ēkavīrā, Gaṇapati and Rēvanta (son of the Sun) were adored by people, high and low, and had temples dedicated to them at several places such as Ratnapura, Vaḍada, Durga, Pahapaka and Vikarṇapura.<sup>5</sup> Of these the temple of Rēvanta at Vikarṇapura, modern Koṭgaḍh, deserves a special mention. It was built by Vallabharāja, a feudatory of the Vaiśya caste, who distinguished himself in the wars of Ratnadēva II and Pṛithvidēva II. It was a fine structure, beautifully decorated with sculptures. Its ruins still exist at Kōṭgaḍh. Some of these temples were of the pañchayatana type,<sup>6</sup> and some others had charitable feeding houses attached to them. At some places like Jānjgir and Kharōd, monasteries were constructed for the residence of ascetics.<sup>7</sup> They must have served as centres of learning and religious teaching as in the Chēdi country.

The cult of Dēvī also was prevalent in Dakshiṇa Kōsala. She and other Śaktis like Vaishṇavī, Vārāhī, Nārasimhī, Aindrī, Chāmuṇḍā and others, who were associated with her in her fight with the demons, were worshipped in several places, and their favour was invoked for success in fighting. Tantricism also had some followers.<sup>8</sup> It was believed that by the practice of the Sākambharī vidyā, one could obtain supernatural powers ensuring success in battles.<sup>9</sup>

A festival was celebrated in honour of Durgā in the bright fortnight of Āśvina. It continued for nine days. The Dīpāvali festival in Kārttika was marked by illuminations, gifts of cows and reading of the Purāṇas, as at present.<sup>10</sup> Mahāmāyā and other similar gods and goddesses were worshipped by the lower classes of the society.<sup>11</sup>

Buddhism was flourishing in Dakshiṇa Kōsala before the advent of the Kalachuris. That Buddhist vihāras existed at Āraṅg in the Raipur District<sup>12</sup> and Mallār in the Bilaspur District<sup>13</sup> is known from inscriptions. Yuan Chwang tells us that there were over 100

Buddhist monasteries and about 10000 Brethren, all Mahāyānists, in Dakṣiṇa Kōśala.<sup>1</sup> The reigning king Mahāśivagupta-Bālārjuna made grants to Buddhist vihāras, though he himself was a fervent devotee of Siva. But in later times Buddhism declined here as in other parts of the country. There is not a single reference to any Buddhist vihāra or Bhikshu in the Kalachuri inscriptions of Dakṣiṇa Kōśala. The Buddhist canonical and philosophical works were, however, studied by some people. Rudraśiva, the spiritual teacher of Jājalladēva I, is described as conversant with the works of Diñnāga and others.<sup>2</sup> Kāśala, who composed the Kōni stone inscription, tells us that he had knowledge of three ratnas (i.e., probably Buddha, Dharma and Saṅgha) and that he had mastered the ūgamas of the Buddha and others.<sup>3</sup> Some learned Brāhmaṇas also, who were required to take part in philosophical debates, must have been well acquainted with the Buddhist systems.

There are also no references to the Jainas in the Kalachuri inscriptions of Dakṣiṇa Kōśala, but there is no doubt that Jainism had some followers there. Images of the Jaina Tīrthaṅkaras have been discovered at Āraṅg, Sirpur, Mallār, Dhanpur, Ratanpur and Padampur, these at Mallār being colossal.<sup>4</sup>

It is noteworthy that many of the grants made to Brāhmaṇas by the Kalachuris of Dakṣiṇa Kōśala were on the occasion of a solar or a lunar eclipse. Of the sixteen grants included here, as many as nine were made at the time of eclipses, five being lunar and four solar.<sup>5</sup> Three grants were made on a saṅkrānti,<sup>6</sup> one on the akshaya tṛitīyā<sup>7</sup> which is regarded as a very holy day, and one on the śrāddha-tithi of the donor's father.<sup>8</sup> In the case of the remaining two, no auspicious occasion has been mentioned.<sup>9</sup>

SOCIETY

Like religion, the social life also changed considerably in course of time. In the earlier period people had a broader outlook on social matters. The caste system had not become quite rigid. Foreign tribes like the Sakas were welcomed to the Hindu fold and were assigned their rightful place in the social structure. Hence they did not try to conceal their racial origin, but proudly stated it in their records. The Śaka king Śrīdharavarman, for instance, makes a specific mention of his race in both the records of his reign.<sup>10</sup> The Gurjaras also make no attempt in their earlier grants to trace their pedigree from a mythological or legendary hero, but take pride in stating that they were born in the Gurjara-vaiṣā.<sup>11</sup> The Sakas, the Gurjaras and the Hūṇas became completely absorbed in the Hindu society in course of time and had matrimonial relations with the most notable Kshatriya families. The Hūṇas came to be reckoned among the thirty-six Kshatriya families of the best blood, their foreign origin having been completely forgotten.<sup>12</sup> We find that the Kalachuri Emperor Karṇa, who claimed to belong to the lunar race, had no objection to marrying the princess Āvalladēvī of the Hūṇa lineage.<sup>1</sup> She was probably his chief queen. Her son Yaśaḥkarna succeeded his father on the Kalachuri throne. The Ābhīras also rose in social status and, like the Hūṇas, were ranked among the best Kshatriya families.<sup>2</sup>

In the social hierarchy, the Brāhmaṇas occupied an honoured place. They were revered for their pious life and devotion to learning, and received royal patronage in the form of grants of land. In the earlier period, their sub-castes had not been formed and their surnames based on the places of origin had not come into vogue. The only distinctions recognised were those of the Vēdas, śākhās and gōtras. It would be interesting to see how the Brāhmaṇas of the different Vēdas and śākhās were geographically distributed. Unfortunately, we do not find these details mentioned in all grants. The earliest grants included here, viz., those of the Mahārājas of Valkha, Subandhu and the Traikūṭakas, mention the gōtras, but not the Vēdas and śākhās, of the Brāhmaṇa donees.<sup>3</sup> In later records they are generally mentioned, though some details are found lacking in a few grants. They are again conspicuous by their absence in the grants made after 1150 A.C. In this latter period, we find modern surnames gradually coming into vogue. We find that the Bahyrichas or Rīgvēdins are mentioned in very few records.<sup>4</sup> When their śākhā is named, it is only Āśvalāyana. The Rīgvēdins, though few, were fairly wide-spread. We find them named in the grants from Gujarat, Uttar Pradesh, Vindhya Pradesh and the Chhattisgarh Division of Madhya Pradesh. The Mādhyandina śākhā of the White Yajurvēda was predominant everywhere. Several Brāhmaṇas of this śākhā received grants of land in Gujarat, Uttar Pradesh, Maharashtra and Chhattisgarh.<sup>5</sup> The other śākhā, Kaṇva, of this Vēda is rarely mentioned. There are only four references to it in our records.<sup>6</sup> The Brāhmaṇas of the Black Yajurvēda or the Taittirīyas were rarer still. They had their home in South India and we find them mentioned only in the records of the south. One of them, residing at Kallivana, modern Kalvan in the Nasik District, received a grant of land situated in that district.<sup>7</sup> A few others were residing near Nagpur.<sup>8</sup> We no doubt find a Brāhmaṇa of the Taittirīya śākhā receiving the grant of a village in Gujarat,<sup>9</sup> but he originally hailed from Vanavāsī in the Kanara District, Bombay State. He bore a Kanarese name and had evidently gone to Gujarat at the invitation of the Chālukya prince, Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin, who also originally came from Karṇāṭaka. A few Sāmavēdins are noticed in the grants from Gujarat, Sarayūpāra, and the Nagpur and Chhattisgarh Divisions of Madhya Pradesh.<sup>10</sup> When their śākhā is mentioned, it is invariably Kauthuma.<sup>11</sup> The Atharvavēdins were extremely rare. They are mentioned only in one record, viz., in the Kairā plates of Dadda II-Prasāntarāga, dated K. 380.<sup>12</sup> They all belonged to the Pippalāda śākhā and were residents of Bhērajikā, modern Borjai in the Broach District. They received a village in common with the Brāhmaṇas of the other Vēdas, but they seem to have fallen out with them. They were, therefore, omitted in a later grant of the same village, which virtually cancelled the earlier grant. It is well known that the Atharvavēda was looked upon with disfavour in ancient times.

The original places of habitation, from which the Brāhmaṇas had migrated, are generally stated in land-grants. Some of these places were well known in ancient times as the homes of particular śākhās. Thus, Kulāñchā in the Bogra District of North Bengal was famous as the home of the Brāhmaṇas of the Sāṅḍilya gōtra,<sup>1</sup> most of whom belonged to the Sāmavēda. Similarly, Ṭakārī in Madhyadēśa, which is probably identical with the homonymous village in the Gayā District, was known as the home of the Brāhmaṇas of the Mādhyandina śākhā,<sup>2</sup> though some Brāhmaṇas of other śākhās also resided there. In some cases we find Brāhmaṇas migrating from far off places in search of royal patronage. Thus, the Kalachuri court in Ratanpur attracted Brāhmaṇas from such distant places as Sōṅabhadra<sup>3</sup> in Uttar Pradesh and Kumbhaṭī<sup>4</sup> in Madhya Bharat. Derivatives from place-names such as Māthura and Nāgara, which later became family-names of the Brāhmaṇas, are also noticed in one record.<sup>5</sup> In the earlier period the Brāhmaṇas were distinguished from other castes by the prefix Brāhmaṇa,<sup>6</sup> Bhaṭṭa or Bhaṭṭika<sup>7</sup> and the suffix svāmin.<sup>8</sup> Towards the close of the later period other prefixes such as Paṇḍita, Ṭhakkura, Rānta and Gaintā became common.<sup>9</sup> The names generally ended in śarman. The modern surnames Miśra<sup>10</sup> and Tripāṭhī<sup>11</sup> occur in very late records of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries A.C.

Many Brāhmaṇas devoted themselves to the study of the Vēdas and Sāstras. Some of them mastered more than one Vēda. This was indicated by the prefixes like Dvivēda attached to their names,<sup>12</sup> which in the earlier period had not become mere family surnames. Those who had performed a sacrifice were known as Dikshita.<sup>13</sup> In the earlier period, the Brāhmaṇas generally maintained the sacred fire and performed the grihya rites like the five great sacrifices regularly. It is interesting to read that Sōmēśvara, the Brāhmaṇa Prime Minister of Lakshmaṇarāja II, performed regularly the Darśapūrṇamāsa and other sacrifices.<sup>14</sup> Some Brāhmaṇas officiated as priests (Purōhitas). The Mahāpurōhita, who was in charge of the Department of Religion, is mentioned with ministers and high State functionaries in the later grants of the Kalachuris.<sup>15</sup> Many members of the priestly caste obtained proficiency in the Mīmāṃsā, Sāṅkhya, Nyāya, Vēdānta and other darśanas and even studied heterodox philosophical systems like the Chārvāka, Bauddha and Jaina.<sup>16</sup> Some of them took part in literary competitions and philosophical disputations at the royal courts. Some others became proficient in astronomy and mastered more than one

Siddhānta. At the royal court, there was sometimes a competition among astronomers about the prediction of the correct time of an eclipse. The successful astronomer was rewarded with a grant of land.<sup>1</sup> Some Brāhmaṇas left the worldly life and took orders in some religious sect like the Saiva and the Pāśupata.<sup>2</sup>

From very ancient times the Brāhmaṇas have been allowed to adopt the profession of a Kshatriya if they are unable to earn a living by teaching, officiating as a priest or acceptance of gifts.<sup>3</sup> In our records there are some instances of the Brāhmaṇas occupying influential positions in the State. The castes of royal officers are rarely mentioned in land-grants. So the information is very meagre. Still we find that in two cases the Brāhmaṇas acted as Dūtakas of land-grants.<sup>4</sup> The office of the Dūtaka was a very high one<sup>5</sup> and was held by State functionaries of the rank of Mahāpīlupati and Mahābalādhikṛita. Some Brāhmaṇas are known to have filled with distinction the office of the Prime Minister also. Bhākamiśra, Sōmēśvara, Purushōttama and Gaṅgādhara were some of the learned and capable Prime Ministers of the Later Kalachuris.<sup>6</sup> They are highly eulogised in our records. Some of them distinguished themselves on the battlefield also and won important victories for their masters. Others by their diplomacy saved the State in times of economic and political crises and restored peace and prosperity to the country. Some Brāhmaṇas are mentioned as the authors of royal prastāvis.<sup>7</sup> Their compositions reveal no mean poetic talent.

The Brāhmaṇas generally married within their caste, but marriages of the anulōma type, in which they took to wife a girl from a lower caste, were not unknown. Rājāśekhara, who was a Brāhmaṇa of the Yāyāvāra family, married Avantisundarī of the Chauhāṇa lineage. This was probably not a solitary instance.

The Kshatriyas, like the Brāhmaṇas, enjoyed a high social status. Many of the rulers in the earlier as well the later period belonged to this caste. The Chālukyas and the Kalachuris were known as Kshatriyas. The former claimed to have descended from Hārītī and mentioned their Mānayya gōtra in their land-grants.<sup>8</sup> The Sēndrakas, who were matrimonially connected with them, also probably belonged to the same caste. The Kalachuris called themselves Haihayas, i.e., descendants of Kārtavīrya Arjuna. The latter was born in the family of the Moon. The Kalachuris, therefore, claimed to be of the famous lunar race.<sup>9</sup> They had matrimonial relations with all the principal Kshatriya families of the age, viz., <sup>9</sup> D. R. Bhandarkar regarded the Kalachuris as of foreign extraction, because, in the Harivaṅśa and the Viṣṇupurāṇa, the Haihayas, when they seized the kingdom of the Indian king Bāhu, were assisted by the Śakas, Yavanas, Pāradas and Khaśas. The argument has no force; for, though the Haihayas may have taken the help of some foreign tribes, they do not thereby themselves become Mlecchhas. If they had invaded India from the North-west after the Kushāṇas as supposed by Bhandarkar, we would have found traces of their rule in the north-western parts of the country, where they may be supposed to have first established themselves. But we do not get any records of the Kalachuris in North India till the 8th century A.C. For further discussion of this subject, see my presidential address in Section II of P. I. H. C., seventh session, pp. 157 ff.

the Chālukyas, the Rāshtrakūṭas, the Chandēllas and the Pālas. The Saka king Śrīdhara-varman and the Gurjaras, some of whom bore names ending in bhaṭa,<sup>1</sup> were also probably regarded as Kshatriyas. The latter, in their later records, claim to have descended from Karṇa, the son of Kuntī by the Sun. They were, therefore, probably regarded as born of the race of the Sun. That they claimed to be Kshatriyas is also clear from the Jodhpur inscription of Bāuka, in which their ancestor Dadda I is spoken of as the son of a Brāhmaṇa father and a Kshatriya mother.<sup>2</sup>

Many of the important civil and military offices must have been held by the Kshatriyas. The State functionaries mentioned in early grants, whose names ended in bhaṭa, probably belonged to the warrior caste.<sup>3</sup> Some Kshatriyas followed peaceful vocations. Several records of the Kalachuris of Ratanpur mention Kumārapala of the Haihaya lineage as a scribe. He was known for calligraphy, and out of curiosity wrote several prasastis.<sup>4</sup> He had made a deep study of politics, literature and poetics, and himself composed prasastis of no mean literary merit.<sup>5</sup>

Next to the Kshatriyas came the Vaiśyas. They were doubtless engaged in trade and commerce, and exercised great influence at the royal court as well as in the Pañchakulas.<sup>6</sup> Some towns which had predominantly a merchant population were known as vaṇiṇ-nagaras (merchant-towns).<sup>7</sup> All the affairs of such towns were managed by the Pañchakulas elected by them. Some merchants were appointed Mayors of towns<sup>8</sup> and contributed liberally to the religious and charitable institutions in the State. Some Vaiśyas distinguished themselves in the military professions also. Several later records<sup>9</sup> from Chhattisgarh give a glowing description of the victories won by Vallabharāja, a Vaiśya feudatory of the Kalachuris of Ratanpur. He constructed several temples, excavated tanks and reared mango groves.<sup>10</sup> He was specially favoured by Lāchchhalladēvī, the queen of Ratnadēva II, who treated him as her own son.<sup>11</sup>

The Kāyasthas were another influential community. Their descent from a legendary sage named Kāchāra who practised penance at Kulāñchā in Gauḍa is mentioned in a fragmentary inscription of the reign of Karṇa.<sup>12</sup> Gōllāka alias Gauḍa, the Amātya of Yuvarājādēva I, probably belonged to the Kāyastha caste. He is known from several huge rock-cut images which he caused to be carved at Bāndhōgarh.<sup>13</sup> Some of his descendants like Sōmēśvara served the Kalachuris of Tripurī by diplomacy as well as personal valour. Some Kāyasthas who settled in Chhattisgarh belonged to the Vāstavya family. Their ancestor Gōvinda had emigrated from the Chēdī maṇḍala. His grandson Ratnasimha and great-grandson Dēvagaṇa were learned persons who composed prasastis of considerable merit.<sup>14</sup> The Kāyasthas were generally employed as clerks and are mentioned as scribes in some

Some lower castes like Sūtradhāra occasionally find a mention in our records.<sup>3</sup> Of the untouchables, the Mōchī or shoe-maker is mentioned in a late record.<sup>4</sup> Dēvapāla, who belonged to this caste, was a religious-minded person. He was rich enough to construct a temple of Nārāyaṇa at Khalvāṭikā, modern Khalāri in the Raipur District.

Women were honoured and treated with respect. Polygamy was in vogue. Kings generally maintained a large seraglio. From inscriptions as well as from literature<sup>5</sup> we know that Yuvarājadēva I married a large number of princesses from different countries. Gāṅgēyadēva is said to have had as many as a hundred wives.<sup>6</sup> The custom of the Satī was in vogue. If the description in the Khairhā and Jabalpur plates is correct, all the hundred wives of Gāṅgēyadēva immolated themselves on his funeral pyre near the banyan tree at Prayāga. Another instance of the Satī is recorded in the Shēorinārāyaṇ inscription of K. 919. When the prince Ulhaṇadēva died fighting with Jayasinhha of Tripurī, his three queens died as Satīs.<sup>7</sup> The inscription describes vividly the grief which the people felt on that occasion. Such self-immolation was, however, not obligatory on women. Those who did not subject themselves to it led a restrained and pious life. We know of some queens who survived their husbands and helped their sons with advice in the administration of the State. The dowager queens Alhaṇadēvī and Gōsaladēvī are notable instances of this type mentioned in our records.<sup>8</sup>

That the joint family system was in vogue appears clear from the numbers of relatives mentioned in commemorative prasastis. The Ratanpur inscription dated V. 1207, for instance, mentions, besides the Kāyastha Ratnasinhha, his wife, one son, two daughters-in-law, two grandsons, one grand-daughter and two other persons whose relation to him is not stated explicitly.<sup>9</sup> Another instance is that of Purushōttama, the Sarvādhikārin of Ratnadēva II. He lived to a good old age. His four sons, all of whom distinguished themselves in statecraft, continued to live with him.<sup>10</sup> On the other hand, we have an instance of the division of even State property. Sarvadēva, the brother of Pṛithvidēva I, we are told, obtained, as a share of patrimony, the territory round Sōṅṭhiva, where he later established himself. Such partitions were, however, rare.

ECONOMIC CONDITION

In India from very ancient times trade and commerce have been carried on through guilds (śreṇīs). The first inscription included in this Volume mentions four guilds, viz., those of potters, makers of hydraulic engines, and oil-millers, and one more whose name is lost. These guilds acted also as banks and received deposits of money, on which they stipulated to pay a certain amount of interest in perpetuity. Pious persons deposited money in these guilds to make perpetual endowments for religious purposes.<sup>1</sup> Traders and artisans also had their own corporations called gaṇas. There were, besides, other corporate organisations of persons who followed the same avocation. The Nagardhan plates of Svāmirāja mention a corporation of elephant-drivers (mahāmātras).<sup>2</sup> This corporation seems to have been an influential one. It had its own assembly called samūha. Its President was called Sthavira, and members of the Executive Committee Pramukhas, among whom were included the Pilupati (Chief of the Elephant force) and the Hastivaidya (Physician of Elephants). The grant of land made by the corporation had to be approved by the reigning king, but it affixed its characteristic seal to the charter. This circumstance indicates how much power it wielded in the State.

There were, doubtless, several other guilds and corporations functioning in both the periods, but very few of them find a mention in our records. The Vāgūlikas and Pāyaṭis, who donated fifty leaves for each bundle sold in the market in favour of a temple at Kārītalāi, were probably guilds of traders in betel-leaves.<sup>3</sup> The Kārītalāi inscription speaks of the Deśi or foreman of the guild of five kinds of spirituous liquors (kashāya-pāñchaka).<sup>4</sup> These guilds and corporations had their own militia which could be called upon to serve the State when necessary.

There was a maṇḍapikā or market pavilion in every town and village, where the various articles brought for sale were assessed and taxed.<sup>5</sup> A voucher called yugā was issued for the small fee of half a panna, paid for permission to exhibit the articles for sale in the market.<sup>6</sup> It was valid for a day. There were markets (āpaṇas)<sup>7</sup> and shops (vīthīs)<sup>8</sup> where articles were offered for sale in stalls (āvāras).<sup>9</sup> Our records incidentally mention several articles which were brought and sold in the markets of towns and villages. They include, besides food-grains, areca-nuts, betel leaves, salt, pepper, and other commodities such as liquor, oil, grass and vegetables. Elephants and horses also were sold in the markets.<sup>10</sup> Traders and merchants were required to pay excise and octroi duties as well as a sales tax on the things sold in the market.

Our records mention different kinds of weights and measures. They varied from district to district.<sup>11</sup> One grant mentions the larger measure (bṛihan-māna),<sup>12</sup> implying thereby that there was a smaller measure also in vogue there. The standard land-measure was the nivartana. Several varieties of it are mentioned in ancient works.<sup>13</sup> The nivartana, current in the dominion of the Early Kalachuris, is described in the Ābhōṇa plates as ubbaya-chatvāriṃśaka-nivartanin, i.e., measuring forty daṇḍas in length and breadth, or 1600 square daṇḍas.<sup>14</sup> It was, therefore, larger than the nivartanas mentioned in ancient works.

Sometimes land was measured in balas.<sup>15</sup> A bala signified as much land as could be ploughed by a single pair of bullocks. This is said to be equivalent to five acres. A third method of stating the intended extent of land was by mentioning the quantity of seed required for sowing it. The measures of capacity khāri,<sup>1</sup> piṭaka<sup>2</sup> and prastha<sup>3</sup> are mentioned in this connection. Other measures of the same kind were khaṇḍī or khaṇḍikā, gōṇī and ghaṇī.<sup>4</sup> Of the weights used in that age, only one, viz., bharaka<sup>5</sup> is found mentioned. It was used for weighing ginger, areca-nuts, pepper etc.

The records do not shed much light on the vexed question of the ownership of land. We can draw some inferences from the conditions and descriptions of the gifts in copper-plate charters. In most cases the gifts were of entire villages in favour of temples, monasteries and individuals. In such cases, what was transferred was evidently the royal prerogative of demanding land revenue and other dues in cash or kind. The donee plainly could not dispossess the individuals residing in the village of their homesteads and cultivated fields. The maxim of fallow land (bhūmi-chedhidra-nyāya),<sup>6</sup> usually mentioned in land-grants to describe the gifts, signified full proprietary right, i.e., a complete freedom from the payment of revenue and other dues to the reigning prince. It also transferred some other privileges usually claimed by the king, but it did not carry with it the right to oust all tenants. When fields and small plots of land were, however, donated, the case was different. The cultivators who were formerly in possession of the pieces of land are generally mentioned in such cases. The words signifying their possession used in early grants are pratyaya, bbukta and satka.<sup>7</sup> None of these signifies absolute ownership. Besides, it is clearly stated in all these grants that the donee was free to cultivate the land himself or to get it cultivated by others as he pleased. The previous cultivators of these lands were evidently temporary tenants who had no proprietary right to them. The fields were probably a part of the crown land in the particular villages. On the other hand, those fields which the cultivators owned absolutely were known as kautumba-kshētra. Two such fields are mentioned in a grant for the demarcation of the boundaries of the donated piece of land.<sup>8</sup> Such fields were evidently held by the particular families from generation to generation and could not, therefore, be taken away from them except for the non-payment of land-revenue etc.

The bulk of the population then, as now, lived in villages. The chief village of a vishaya was called vyēsbhikā-grāma. Some of the villages had banks which received endowments and paid interest on them in perpetuity. The boundaries of the villages were properly marked. There used to be a village common and a pasture-land surrounding it for the grazing of the cattle.<sup>9</sup> Sometimes, pasture-lands were donated by private individuals. Their boundaries were clearly marked by erecting pillars with the image of the goddess Durgā carved on them.<sup>10</sup> Among other things which constituted the common property of the villagers were the tank which irrigated their fields, the jungle which supplied them with fuel, and the temple where they assembled for prayers. These are mentioned in some grants in connection with the boundaries of the donated fields. The king was, no doubt, the owner of all marshy and barren land, woodland and jungles, pasture-lands, tanks and watering places. When he donated a village, he transferred his rights to the donee;<sup>1</sup> but in practice, the village folk used these in common. The king was also the owner of the mines of minerals and salt, of the mango and mahuā trees, and also of the treasure trove.<sup>2</sup> He had further the privileges of ditya and vishti.<sup>3</sup> The former probably signified the obligations of the villagers to make customary presents on the birth of a prince or the marriage of a princess, and the latter, that of rendering occasional service free of charge. There were other miscellaneous royal privileges designated as prātibhēdikā.<sup>4</sup> Besides, the villagers were required to provide for the lodging and boarding of royal officers on tour.<sup>5</sup> Sometimes a small cess was levied for the purpose. The donated villages were free from all these obligations. They could also adjudicate their own law-suits and levy fines for the commission of the ten crimes (daś-āparādhas).<sup>6</sup> They could not also be entered by soldiers and policemen except for apprehending thieves and persons accused of high treason.

The towns were in a flourishing condition. In the Bālarāmāyana Rājaśekhara ascribes the origin of Tripurī, the capital of the Kalachuris, to the fall from the sky of a portion of the three cities of Tripurāsura burnt by Siva.<sup>7</sup> The description suggests the great magnificence of the capital which justified such a fancy. It is borne out by numerous beautiful sculptures and extensive remains of buildings discovered at Tewar. Tummāna, the earlier capital of a branch of the same family in Chhattisgarh, is said to have been beautified by Ratnadēva I with magnificent buildings, lofty temples of gods and beautiful groves of mango trees. Ratnapura, the later capital founded by the same prince, is said to have resembled the city of Alakā.<sup>8</sup> The existing extensive ruins of buildings and temples and large tanks at both the places testify to the past splendour of the towns. Mallāla, Jājallanagara and Vikarṇapura were some of the other places in Dakṣiṇa Kōsala, noted for their grandeur and prosperity.

As remarked in a private record at Mallār,<sup>9</sup> the country was well governed, it was free from the infestation of troubles, and the people were happy under the rule of the Kalachuris.

LITERATURE

We have very meagre information about the literature of the earlier period. The only reference to a literary work occurring in the earlier inscriptions is that noticed in the Nasik plates of Dharāśraya-Jayasīnha.<sup>10</sup> His religious preceptor, who was an ascetic of the Śaiva sect, but whose full name has, unfortunately, not been preserved, wrote a Sanskrit play called Harapārvatīya. This work has not come down to us, but its title indicates that it treated of some incident in the life of Hara and Pārvatī, probably their marriage. This is one of the rare instances in which a member of an ascetic order is seen busying himself with the composition of a dramatic work.

We have comparatively more information about the literature of the later period. After the Kalachuris established themselves at the fort of Kālanjara, some of them took to literary activities. Māyurāja, whom Rājasēkhara calls a Kalachuri poet,<sup>1</sup> wrote a Sanskrit play named Udāttarāghava. This play also is not extant, but some references to and extracts from it occur in several Sanskrit works.<sup>2</sup> As the name indicates, its theme was the life of Rāma. There are some incidents in Rāma's career, as described in Vālmiki's Rāmāyaṇa, which are open to criticism. Māyurāja seems to have altered or omitted them in order to present the hero as absolutely free from blemish. This object of the author is indicated also by the title of the play, Udāttarāghava, 'The Noble Rāghava'. From some references and extracts in later Sanskrit works, it appears that Māyurāja omitted the incident of Vāli-vadha (the killing of Vāli). The Rāmāyaṇa tells us that while Vāli and Sugrīva were engaged in a deadly combat, Rāma concealed himself behind some trees and discharged an arrow which fatally wounded Vāli.<sup>3</sup> The monkey chief reproached Rāma severely for this unprovoked wrong and the latter was hard put to it in justifying his action. Some earlier playwrights like Bhāsa<sup>4</sup> had followed Vālmiki<sup>5</sup> in stating Rāma's defence. Others like Bhavabhūti had given a different turn to the incident. Māyurāja seems to have cut the Gordian knot by omitting the incident altogether. In one more respect, Māyurāja is known to have deviated from the original story of Vālmiki.<sup>6</sup> He sends Lakshmaṇa first to kill the māyāmṛiga (pseudo-deer). A Rākshasa, who had disguised himself as a sage, plaintively beseeches Rāma to go to the rescue of his brother who was in danger. Rāma hesitates at first to leave Sītā alone in the hermitage, but ultimately departs to save Lakshmaṇa. In his absence, Sītā is carried away by Rāvaṇa. By this manipulation of the original story, Māyurāja has cleverly avoided the occasion for Sītā's unmerited reproach of Lakshmaṇa.<sup>7</sup> Judging by the available extracts,<sup>8</sup> Māyurāja seems to have adopted the Vaidarbhī rīti for the composition of his play. His style is lucid and charming, being unloaded with long compounds. Jalhaṇa's Sūktimuktāvali cites two verses of Māyurāja without referring them to the Udāttarāghava.<sup>9</sup> They describe Rāvaṇa and are in the Gauḍī style. That Māyurāja wrote also a kāvya is known from Hēmachandra's Kāvyaṇuśāsana.<sup>10</sup> Some of the verses cited in the anthologies may have been taken from that kāvya.

Another king of Kālanjara, who also probably belonged to the Kalachuri dynasty, was Bhīmaṭa. According to Rājasēkhara's account,<sup>11</sup> he composed five plays, of which the

Svapnadaśānana was judged to be the best. Anthologies contain some verses of Bhīmaṭa, which appear to be of the subhāshita type.<sup>1</sup>

Another renowned author of the later period was Rājaśekhara. In the prologues of his plays as well as in the stray verses collected in Sanskrit anthologies, Rājaśekhara has given a considerable information about his ancestors who flourished in the Chēdi court. This Brāhmaṇa family hailed from Mahārāshṭra.<sup>2</sup> Vatsagulma, modern Bāsim (properly Vāsim) in the Akola District of Madhya Pradesh, was probably its original place of habitation.<sup>3</sup> This family bore the ancient name of Yāyāvāra,<sup>4</sup> and was noted for its learning as well as poetic ability. Rājaśekhara mentions, as his ancestors, Akālalada, Surānanda, Tarala and Kavirāja, all of whom distinguished themselves by their poetic composition.<sup>5</sup> Akālalada, the great-grandfather of Rājaśekhara, probably flourished in circa 850 A.C. He may have been a court-poet of Kōkalla I (circa 850-890 A.C.), whose glorious reign must have attracted learned men, poets and artists from far-off lands. Akālajalada was not the poet's proper name. It was a sobriquet which he earned by composing an interesting verse containing the word akāla-jalada (an unseasonable cloud).<sup>6</sup> According to Rājaśekhara, his works were eagerly studied by later poets. Some of his verses were plagiarised by one Kādambarīrāma, who earned fame by inserting them in his play.<sup>7</sup>

<sup>2</sup> M. M. Ghosh has questioned the identification of this Mahārāshṭra with the modern country of that name on the ground that Rājaśekhara has mentioned it as distinct from Vidarbha and Kuntala. See his edition of the Karpūramāñjarī, p. lxvi. It may be noted that there were three Mahārāshṭras known in ancient times, comprising modern Northern Mahārāshṭra, Vidarbha and Kuntala (Southern Mahārāshṭra). Rājaśekhara sometimes mentions Mahārāshṭra separately from Vidarbha and Kuntala (vide KM., p. 93) and sometimes as including the latter two countries (vide Bālarāmāyana, Act XI, v. 74 and 75). His other arguments that Rājaśekhara does not mention Mahārāshṭra as the country of Prakrit, that he wrote in Śaurasēnī and that he has great praise for Pāñchāla, have little force; for, in the verse referred to, Rājaśekhara is only quoting the opinion of others (vide tad-uktam in KM., p. 51); if he wrote in Śaurasēnī, that was because he was then at the court of the Pratihāras; and he has praised Mahārāshṭra and Vidarbha also in as high terms. Ghosh comes to the strange conclusion that Rājaśekhara was not a native of Mahārāshṭra, though his ancestors might have come to Madhyadēśa from some place in Mahārāshṭra! His attention is drawn to the passage in the KM., p. 10, which glorifies Vatsagulma in Vidarbha as the pleasure-resort of the god of love. See also the next note.

<sup>3</sup> Rājaśekhara shows a special love for Vatsagulma. This city was formerly the prosperous capital of a branch of the Vākātaka dynasty. It seems to have retained its importance down to the time of Rājaśekhara; for, it gave its name to a particular style. In the Karpūramāñjarī, Rājaśekhara mentions Vachchhōmī (Sanskrit, Vātsagulmī) as a rīti together with Māgadhi and Pāñchālī. The poet again mentions this place as situated in the Dakṣiṇāpatha. The heroine of the Karpūramāñjarī was a princess of Vachchhōma. In the KM. (p. 10), Rājaśekhara states that the mythical Kāvya-puruṣa married Sāhityavidyā at Vatsagulma in Vidarbha, which is the pleasure-resort of the god of love. All these references show the poet's special admiration for the place. It may, therefore, have been his ancestral home.

<sup>4</sup> The Yāyāvāras are mentioned in the MBH., Ādiparvan, adhyāya 11, v. 13, where the commentator Nīlakaṇṭha explains the term as meaning 'a householder living for only one night in a village'. Dēvala divides householders into Śālīna and Yāyāvāra. The latter did not accumulate wealth and did not earn their living by teaching, officiating as a priest or accepting gifts as the former did. H. D. L., Vol. II, pp. 641 ff.

द्वान्तगतं कच्छपैः पाठीनेः पुष्पङ्कपीठलुठान्वास्मिन्मुहुर्मुच्छितम् । तस्मिन्नुष्कसरस्यकालजलदेनागत्य तच्चेष्टितं
यत्राकुम्भनिमग्नवव्यकरिणा यूयैः पयः पीयते ॥

The verse appears to be of the anyōkti type, and suggests unexpected munificent gifts of a liberal donor which relieved a great distress.

<sup>7</sup> Cf. अकालजलदलोकेद्वित्रमालम्कृतैरिव । जातः कादम्बरिरामो नाटके प्रवटः कविः ॥ JM., p. 46.

This Kādambarīrāma may be identical with Kādambarīrāmakṛishṇa, the author of the Aditi-kuṇḍalāharana, as suggested by J. B. Chaudhari. See Padyavīṇī, p. 83.

From a subhāshita of Rājaśekhara, we learn that Surānanda was a contemporary of the Chēdi prince Raṇavighraha.<sup>1</sup> As shown before, Raṇavighraha was a biruda of Saṅkaraṅga II, son of Kōkalla I, who flourished in circa 890-910 A.C.<sup>2</sup> This prince is probably identical with the poet Saṅkaraṅga, some of whose verses are included in the anthologies Subhāshitāvali and Sūktimuktāvali.<sup>3</sup> One of them is also cited in Bhōja's Sarasvatī-kaṇṭhābharāṇa,<sup>4</sup> which lends colour to the identification. The poet Surānanda, patronised by Saṅkaraṅga, is described as an ornament of the Chēdi country. Unfortunately, none of his *kāvya*s has come down to us. The anthologies also do not contain any subhāshitas composed by him. About Tarala and Kavirāja, two other ancestors of Rājaśekhara, we have no information. From a subhāshita of Rājaśekhara we learn that Tarala's poetry was known for its excellent alliteration.<sup>5</sup>

About Rājaśekhara himself, we know much more, thanks to his garrulity. His father was Durduka (or Duhika), who held the post of Mahāmantrin probably in the Chēdi court. His mother's name was Śilavatī. His wife Avantisundarī was born in the Chauhāṇa lineage.<sup>6</sup> She was a learned lady. Her views on rhetorical matters are cited in Rājaśekhara's Kāvyaṁimāṁsā.<sup>7</sup> In his early career Rājaśekhara was attracted by the prosperous court of the Pratīhāras in Kanauj. Before he went there, he had written six prabandhas and earned the title of Bālakavi.<sup>8</sup> These juvenile compositions, not even known by their titles, have long been lost. At Kanauj he received a high honour and the title of Kavirāja from the illustrious Pratīhāra king Mahēndrapāla, who regarded him as his guru.<sup>9</sup> Rājaśekhara composed there three plays—the Bālarāmāyaṇa during the reign of Mahēndrapāla, and the Bālabhārata alias Prachandapāṇḍava<sup>10</sup> and the Karpūramāñjarī during that of his son and successor Mahīpāla. The first two of these, to which he has prefixed his title Bāla, are in Sanskrit, and the third, which was staged at the instance of his wife Avantisundarī, is in Prakrit.<sup>11</sup>

During the reign of Mahīpāla, the power of the Pratīhāras declined owing to the invasion of the Rāshtrakūṭa king Indra III, who advanced up to Kanauj and devastated the Imperial capital. Just about this time, Yuvarājadēva I of Tripurī rose to power. He made extensive conquests in all parts of India and dealt a staggering blow to the Pratīhāra Empire during the closing years of Mahīpāla's reign. Rājaśekhara then returned to Tripurī, where he composed the Viddhaśālabhañjika and other works. This Sanskrit play was staged in the Kalachuri capital to celebrate the victory of Yuvarājadēva I over a confederacy of southern kings headed by the reigning Rāshtrakūṭa Emperor Gōvinda IV.<sup>12</sup> The Kāvyaṁimāṁsā, which was planned to be a comprehensive work on poetics, has remained unfinished. This was evidently his last work, since it contains quotations from all his <sup>10</sup> This play has only two acts. The author did not probably complete it. As its maṅgala-slōka is cited in the K.M., it was plainly not the last work of the poet.

Sanskrit plays.<sup>1</sup> Two other works—the Haravijaya, a kāvya, and the Bhuvanakośha, a work on general geography—are known only from quotations.

As the author of a Rāma-play, Rājasēkhara traces his literary pedigree from the Ādikavi Vālmiki. As a matter of fact, his enormous plays are more of the epic than of the dramatic type. He is conscious of this defect and asks the critic to read them if they contain any literary qualities. In the Karpūramāñjarī also, he defines kāvya as 'a beauty of expression'.<sup>2</sup> Rājasēkhara has shown some inventive power, but he has little skill in the arrangement of incidents and still less in characterisation. Some of the devices he employs such as the introduction, on the stage, of marionettes with parrots in their mouths are very crude.<sup>3</sup> Above all, he knows no restraint, but goes on piling verse on verse, regardless of monotony and hindrance to action. It cannot, however, be denied that he has a considerable felicity of expression. The ease with which he handles long metres like the Sārdūlavikrīḍita and the Sragdharā is truly remarkable. He had an inexhaustible stock of legends about old writers and their works. It cannot be gainsaid that several Sanskrit authors would have remained unknown to us, if he had not written his commemorative verses about them. His Kāvyaṁīmānsā is a veritable mine of information on a variety of subjects.

Rājasēkhara's works continued to be studied in the Chēdi country and have considerably influenced the composition of later poets of the Chēdi court.<sup>4</sup> Some of them imitated his mannerisms.<sup>5</sup> Again, some of his verses with suitable modifications are found inserted in Kalachuri inscriptions.

The reign of the illustrious king Karṇa saw a rare outburst of poetic activity. Several great poets of the age flocked to his court. According to a well-known subhāshita,<sup>6</sup> Karṇa's court-poet was Vidyāpati. Several Sanskrit verses of this poet, in some of which he praises Karṇa in a clever manner,<sup>7</sup> are cited in Sanskrit anthologies. Another poet of Karṇa's court was Gaṅgādhara. From the Vikramāṅkadēva-charita we learn that he was challenged and defeated, evidently in a poetic contest, by the celebrated Kāshmirian poet Bilhaṇa, who visited Karṇa's court at Banaras in the course of his itineracy.<sup>8</sup> While at Banaras, Bilhaṇa delighted the great king of Dāhala with his sweet poetry.<sup>9</sup> He also composed a kāvya in glorification of Rāma on the occasion of his visit to Ayōdhyā.<sup>10</sup> That work also is unfortunately not extant.

Other poets of Karṇa's court were Vallāṇa (or Vallana), Karpūra and Nāchirāja. Vallāṇa was a great poet. Several subhāshitas composed by him are found in old anthologies like the Kavīndravachanasamucchaya and the Suduktikarṇāmrīta. In one of these, he praises Karṇa.<sup>1</sup> The other two poets are known from Mērutuṅga's Prabandabhintāmani.<sup>2</sup> Nāchirāja also was a renowned poet. In a tribute which the poet Karpūra pays to him, he is said to be the only support of Bhārati after the death of Muñja and Bhōja, the famous poet-kings of Dhārā.<sup>3</sup> Both Karpūra<sup>4</sup> and Nāchirāja<sup>5</sup> have left us beautiful verses in praise of Karṇa.

Similarly the verse यः सत्यस्य निधिः त्रिधा च सरणिः etc. in the Banaras plates of Karṇa (No. 48, ll. 19-20) is taken from the Bālabhārata, Act I, v. 62.

It seems that there were competitions in samasyāpūraṇa (completion of incomplete verses) at the court of Karṇa. Those who completed the samasyās successfully were liberally rewarded. Several years ago, Sir G. A. Grierson published, under the heading 'Curiosities of Indian Literature', a strange story about 'King Dhārīā Karṇa and the Paṇḍit's promise.'<sup>6</sup> In this story a Paṇḍit composes extempore five verses—one about the queen of Karṇa Dhārīā, who, being attracted by his melody, goes to him at dead of night, and four more which he recites next day before the king. The latter being pleased with them makes up his mind to give him his kingdom in all the four directions. He even allows the Paṇḍit to take him as a prisoner before his mother in fulfilment of a promise made to her. The story is absurd as it stands, but some of the stanzas mentioned in it may have been recited at Karṇa's court. Two of them, which end in kṛitakam manyē bhayaṇ jōshītām, are of the samasyāpūraṇa type.<sup>7</sup> They specifically refer to Karṇa and describe his fame as roaming about fearlessly. They were evidently composed by different poets. This is also shown by the remark kayūr=apī 'of some two poets', with which they are cited in the Subhashitāvalī. The first of them, which does not explicitly refer to the king's fame, but apparently describes a lady coming out of the king's seraglio in pitchy darkness, seems to have given rise to the fantastic story mentioned above.

Karṇa gave a liberal patronage to Prakrit poets also. Some Mahārāshṭrī and Apabhraṁśa verses, describing the king and his victories, occur in the Prākṛita Paṅgala.<sup>8</sup> They were first brought to notice by Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar in his Report on the Search for Sanskrit and Prakrit Manuscripts.<sup>9</sup> Unfortunately the authors of these verses are not named in the commentaries. Again, Kanakāmara, the author of the Apabhraṁśa work Karakāṇḍacharin, tells us that he delighted the mind of the king Karṇa, who was probably none other than the homonymous Kalachuri king.<sup>10</sup>

The Kalachuris of Dakṣiṇa Kōsala also patronised Sanskrit and Prakrit poets.<sup>1</sup> One of them, Nārāyaṇa who composed the Pujārīpālī stone inscription of Gōpāladēva, tells us that he composed a kāvya named Rāmābhyudaya, which greatly delighted the Goddess of speech. Several Sanskrit works of this name, *kāvya*s as well as nāṭakas, are known, and some of them have come down to us; but this work of Nārāyaṇa seems to be different from all of them.<sup>2</sup>

Some of the authors of the praśastis included here were poets of no mean order. Dhāmsaṭa, the author of the Chandrēhē inscription,<sup>3</sup> Śrīnivāsa who composed the eulogy of the first three kings in the Bilhāri inscription,<sup>4</sup> the unknown author of the fragmentary Rewa inscription of Kaṇṇa,<sup>5</sup> Dēvapāṇi, the author of the Akaltarā inscription,<sup>6</sup> and Kāśala who composed the Kōṇi inscription,<sup>7</sup> to name only a few, had a considerable poetic talent. They have composed their respective praśastis in an ornate kāvya style, embellishing them with numerous artbhāṅkāras. As the power and patronage of the Kalachuri courts declined, they ceased to attract poets of eminence. Many of the later inscriptions in this Volume are consequently written in a barbarous style.

COINS

The Nasik cave inscription of the Ābhīra king Īśvarasēna records the investment of certain amounts of Kārshāpaṇas with the guilds of Gōvardhana, but no coins of that king or his descendants have come down to us. Perhaps the Ābhīras, like some other dynasties<sup>8</sup> of ancient times, did not value highly the prerogative of minting coins for currency in their own dominion, and were content to use the issues of other contemporary or past kings. This is also indicated by the find of a hoard of Kshatrapa silver coins at Karhad in the Satara District of the Bombay State. The hoard contained several coins, but those of the following Kshatrapas only could be recovered—Vijayasēna (240-250 A.C.), Dāmajada-śrī (250-255 A.C.), Rudrasēna II (255-277 A.C.), Viśvasimha (277-279 A.C.), Bhartrīdāman (279-295 A.C.) and Viśvasēna (295-305 A.C.). It will be noticed that the last five of these Kshatrapas were contemporaries of the Ābhīras. The Karhad hoard, therefore, plainly indicates that the Kshatrapa silver coins were current in Maharashtra and probably also in Gujarat and Konkan, during the rule of the Ābhīras. The silver coins of Yajña Sātakarṇi, which were of similar fabric and weight,<sup>9</sup> may also have continued in circulation. The potin coins struck by the Sātavāhanas perhaps supplemented this silver coinage, though no finds of them have yet been reported from these parts of the country.<sup>10</sup> inscription of Īśvarasēna. According to Manu,<sup>1</sup> the kārshāpaṇa was a copper coin, but some other Sanskrit and Pāli works<sup>2</sup> leave no doubt that it was a denomination of silver coins also. Prof. Rapson has shown that the references to gifts of kārshāpaṇas in the inscriptions of the Sātavāhanas and the Kshaharāta Kshatrapas must be understood as referring to the silver coins of those dynasties which circulated in Maharashtra and Konkan. The Kārshāpaṇas referred to in the Nasik inscription of Īśvarasēna must, therefore, have been silver coins, probably of the Western Kshatrapas. These coins have the head of the Kshatrapa or Mahākshatrapa with the date in the Śaka era on the obverse, and the chaitya (or hill), the sun and the crescent with a legend along the edge inside a circle of dots on the reverse. Their average weight is about 34 grains. These silver coins, though called kārshāpaṇas, were not, therefore, struck to the standard weight of 32 ratīs mentioned in Sanskrit works.<sup>3</sup> They were evidently copied from the hemidrachmas of Apollodotus and Menander, which, according to the Periplus,<sup>4</sup> were current in Barygaza (modern Broach).

That these silver coins were called kārshāpaṇas appears clear from the Nasik cave

The Coins of the Traikūṭakas

The Traikūṭakas, who succeeded the Ābhīras in Maharashtra and Gujarat, had their own silver coinage. The first notice of this coinage can be traced back to 1862. In that year Mr. Justice Newton described, in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. VII, pp. 11 ff., a coin of Dahrasēna which had been found at Karhad. He noticed on it the title Mahārāja of both Dahrasēna and his father Indradatta, but could not read the names of these princes completely as the letters were only partially preserved. Thereafter in 1886, in an article entitled 'Two New Grants of the Chālukya Dynasty' published in the Transactions of the Vienna Oriental Congress, p. 222, Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī described a coin of this dynasty which he had obtained from Daman in Gujarat.<sup>5</sup> He deciphered the legend on it as Mahārāj-Ēndravarmma-putra-paramavaiśṇava-śrī-Mahārāja-Rudragāṇa.<sup>6</sup> He thought that Rudragāṇa was the first king after the revival of the Traikūṭaka power on the downfall of the Kshatrapas. Afterwards in 1905, Prof. Rapson showed that the correct reading of the legend on this coin and on those acquired by the British Museum was Mahārāj-Ēndradatta-putra-paramavaiśṇava-śrī-Mahārāja-Dabrasēna. He identified this Dahrasēna with the Traikūṭaka king Dahrasēna, whose Pārḍī plates dated in the (Kalachuri) year 207 had already been published.<sup>7</sup> Prof. Rapson also described another silver coin of this dynasty which had been acquired by the British Museum in 1904 from the collection of Dr. Gerson da Cunha<sup>8</sup>. He correctly read the legend on it as Mahārāja-Dabrasēna-putra-paramavaiśṇava-śrī-Mahārāja-Vyāghrasēna and thus showed that it was issued by the Traikūṭaka king Vyāghrasēna, the son of Dahrasēna.

In 1905 a hoard of Traikūṭaka coins was discovered at Kāzad in the Indāpur tālukā of the Poona district. Only 359 coins were recovered from it. They were examined by Rev. H. R. Scott, who published an account of them in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XXIII, pp. 1 ff. Of these, 353 coins were of Dahrasēna. On as many as 350 of them the name of the Traikūṭaka king appeared as Dahragaṇa, and only on three, as Dahrasēna. Rev. Scott thought that Dahrasēna started his career as a feudatory of the Western Kshatrapas whose names usually ended in sēna, and later on, when he emancipated himself from the yoke of the Kshatrapas, he altered the termination of his name from sēna to gaṇa. The Kāzad hoard contained four coins of Vyāghrasēna also, but the royal name on all of them appeared as Vyāghragaṇa.

In a note which Mr. A. M. T. Jackson appended to Rev. Scott's article, he announced that he had obtained a Traikūṭaka copper-plate grant from Surat, in which the king's name was clearly given as Vyāghrasēna.

Finally, in the Catalogue of the Coins of the Andhras, etc., (p. clxiii) published in 1908 Prof. Rapson admitted that gaṇa (perhaps intended for gaṇa) would be a more natural reading than sēna on most of the known coins of Dahrasēna and on all of those of Vyāghrasēna, but he contended that what appeared as ga might quite possibly be a conventionalised form of sa. This view seems to be the correct one in view of the undoubted readings Dabrasēna and Vyāghrasēna of the royal names in the Pārḍī and the Surat plates respectively. If Dahrasēna had purposely changed his name to Dahragaṇa, he would not have named his son Vyāghrasēna.

As stated before, these coins were found in Southern Gujarat, and the Poona and Satara Districts of the Bombay State. They were evidently imitated from the Kshatrapa coins which had been current in Maharashtra and Gujarat during the rule of the Ābhītas. We have no means of knowing their denomination, as they are nowhere referred to in the inscriptions of the Traikūṭakas. Perhaps, like Kshatrapa coins, they also were known as kārshāpāyas.

The Coins of the Kalachuris.

The Coins of Kṛishṇarāja.

The coins of this king were first discovered about 1870 in the village Dēvlānā in the Bāglāṅ tāluka of the Nasik District. The hoard comprised 82 coins, which were sent to Dr. Bhau Daji for examination. He published his account of the hoard together with facsimiles of five of the coins in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XXI (1876), pp. 213-14. All the coins were of silver and round in shape. They varied in weight from thirty to thirty-four grains.

In his article Dr. Bhau Daji drew attention to the similarity that the coins bore to the silver coins of Kumāragupta and especially to those of Skandagupta, but he read the legend on the reverse as Rājā Parama Mahēśvara Mānasa Nṛipa-Deva Dhyāna-śrī-kasa (?), and interpreted it as 'Mānasa king, the great devotee of Mahēśvara, who derives his glory from contemplating God'. He conjecturally placed this Mānasa king about the end of the fourth century A. C.

The coins were next considered by Sir Alexander Cunningham in his Archaeological Survey of India Reports, Vol. IX (1879), pp. 29 ff. He read the legend on them as Paramamāhēśvara-Mahāditya-pād-ānudhyāta-śrī-Kṛishṇa Rājā. He admitted that some of the coins in his cabinet had possibly the word Mahākshatra in place of Mahāditya, in which case, he said, the translation would be 'the reverencer of the great king.' Cunningham agreed with Bhau Daji's view that the coins belonged to about the end of the fourth century A.C., but he identified the king who struck them with the Rāshtrakūṭa king Kṛishṇa whom he placed in the period 375-400 A.C.

In 1885 Dr. Fleet published his account of two silver coins of Kṛishṇarāja from Cunningham's collection in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XIV, p. 68. He for the first time read the legend correctly as Paramamāhēśvara-mātā-pitṛi-pād-ānudhyāta-śrī-Kṛishṇarāja, which means 'the glorious Kṛishṇarāja, who is a devout worshipper of (the god) Mahēśvara (and) who meditates on the feet of (his) parents.' In the second edition of his Dynasties of the Kanarese Districts (1896), Fleet suggested that in all probability the Dēvlānā coins were coins of Kṛishṇarāja, the Kalachuri king, who was the father of Saṅkaragaṇa.

Prof. Rapson also discussed these coins in his Indian coins (1897), p. 27, Pl. IV, No. 17. He doubtfully read the legend on them as Parama-Māhēśvara-mahādēvyōḥ pād-ānudhyāta-śrī-Kṛishṇarāja. As regards the date 375-400 A.C. proposed by Cunningham for this Kṛishṇarāja, Rapson pointed out that it was certainly incorrect, as it was too early for the style of the coins which were imitated from the latest Gupta coins current in the western provinces. For the same reason he could not also assign them to Kṛishṇarāja Rāshtrakūṭa, c. 756 A.C. Rapson was, however, unable to put forward any conjecture about the identification of this Kṛishṇarāja.

During his excavations at Besnagar in 1913-14, Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar found seven coins of Kṛishṇarāja. He supported Fleet's view that this Kṛishṇarāja belonged to the Kalachuri dynasty. As stated before, this Kṛishṇarāja flourished from circa 550 A.C. to 575 A.C.

These coins of Kṛishṇarāja resemble the silver coins of the Western Kshatrapas, the Guptas and the Traikūṭakas, which were struck to the Graeco-Bactrian weight-standard of the hemidrachma. Their fabric is also similar. But while the Kshatrapa and Traikūṭaka coins have the symbols of a Chaitya (or a hill), the sun and the moon, these coins of Kṛishṇarāja have, like some western issues of Skandagupta, the figure of a couchant bull (Siva's Nandi) facing right, in the centre of the reverse side. The coins of Skandagupta were evidently in circulation in the Anūpa country, the home province of the Kalachuris before the rise of Kṛishṇarāja.

In the legend on his coins Kṛishṇarāja, like Skandagupta, refers to his religious faith. He calls himself paramamāhēśvara, 'a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara'. He dropped all reference to the patronymic and the royal title which invariably appear on the coins of the Kshatrapas and the Traikūṭakas. He substituted instead an expression denoting his devotion to his parents, the like of which is noticed nowhere else in Indian numismatics.

As stated before, the coins of Kṛishṇarāja circulated over a very wide territory from Rajputana in the north to Maharashtra in the south and from Konkan in the west to Vidarbha in the east. They continued to be current long after the time of Kṛishṇarāja; for, they are mentioned in the Anjanēri plates dated K. 461 (710-11 A.C.) of Bhōgāsakti. They were, therefore, in circulation for at least 150 years after the time of Kṛishṇarāja. As might be expected, there were several issues of them; for, the inscription on the reverse does not always commence at the same place and differences in the shapes of some letters are also noticeable.

As stated before, the silver coins of the Kshattrapas which were struck to the same weight-standard as the coins of Kṛishṇarāja were called kārshāpaṇas. Later on, however, this denomination seems to have given place to rūpaka. The Anjanēri plates show that the coins of Kṛishṇarāja, which were then in general circulation were called Kṛishṇarāja-rūpakas, evidently to distinguish them from the rūpakas of the Kshattrapas, the Sātavāhanas and the Traikūṭakas which were similar in fabric.

The Coins of Gāṅgēyadēva

The first coin of this king to be recorded was that figured in Pl. L, No. 1, facing page 668 in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. IV (1835). Prinsep, who published the coin, read the legend on the obverse as Srīmad-Jādjēyadēva, and described the figure on the other side as 'a rudely executed front view of a male or female (it is difficult to say which), seated in the native fashion, with a glory round the head and some incomprehensible objects in the hands'. The legend was correctly read as Srīmad-Gāṅgēyadēva by E. Thomas<sup>1</sup> in 1858, but he could not identify the king.

In his Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. X (1880), p. 21 and Coins of Medieval India (1894), p. 72, Cunningham described, with illustrations, gold, silver and copper coins of Gāṅgēyadēva. He identified the goddess on the reverse as Pārvatī and ascribed the coins to the Kalachuri king Gāṅgēyadēva, mentioned by Albērūnī as the contemporary ruler of Dāhala. The coins were next described by Rapson in his Indian Coins (1897), p. 33, and by Vincent Smith, first in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. LXVI (1897) pp. 305-6, and then in his Catalogue of Coins in the Indian Museum (1906), pp. 251 ff.

Gāṅgēya's coins exist in all the three metals: gold, silver and copper. Gold coins generally weigh 61 or 62 grains, but Dr. V. S. Agrawala informs me that the top weight of Gāṅgēya's gold coin in the Lucknow Museum is 65 grains. Gold coins were called ṭankas. The Rewa stone inscription of Vijayasīmha mentions ṭāṅkakaṣ stamped with the effigy of Bhagavat (or rather Bhagavatī, i.e., Lakshmi<sup>3</sup>). They were probably the gold coins of Gāṅgēya. Another term denoting gold coins which seems to have been current in that period, though it does not occur in any record edited here, was gadyāṇaka. The Chandravatī plate dated V. 1148 (1090 A.C.) of the Gāhaḍavāla king Chandradēva, who was a contemporary of Yaśaḥkarṇa, mentions kumara-gadyāṇaka<sup>1</sup> which shows that the gadyāṇakas, were current in the north as they were in the south.<sup>2</sup> According to the Lilāvati of Bhāskarāchārya (I, 3), a gadyāṇaka weighed 48 ratīs. The large gold coins of the Gāhaḍavālas weigh from 59 to 68 grains. They may be taken to be gadyāṇakas, making allowance for the variation in the weight of the ratīs and for the usual deviation from the standard type. The large gold coins of Gāṅgēya which were the proto-type of the Gāhaḍavāla coinage seem, therefore, to have been known also as gadyāṇakas.<sup>3</sup>

Smaller denominations of half, quarter and one-eighth ṭanka (or gadyāṇaka), struck by Gāṅgēya, are also known. The half-ṭanka was probably known as dbaraṇa.<sup>4</sup> Whether the lower denominations had any special names is not known.

Gāṅgēya's gold ṭankas are frequently met with in the southern and eastern districts of Uttar Pradesh and some have been found in Madhya Pradesh also.<sup>5</sup> Of the lower denominations the quarter-ṭanka is sometimes found, but the half-ṭanka and one-eighth ṭanka described by Cunningham are believed to be rare.<sup>6</sup> Silver coins were called drammas as they were struck to the weight-standard of the Attic drachma or 67.5 grains, though they rarely reach that standard. The silver coins of Gāṅgēya are very rare. Vincent Smith says that all pieces which seem at first sight to be silver were perhaps regarded officially as gold.<sup>7</sup> The Bēsāni stone inscription of K. 958 mentions certain contributions in drammas.<sup>8</sup> From the Siyaḍōṇī inscription we learn that a quarter-dramma was known as pañchīyaka-dramma, because it was equal in value to five vimśōpakas.<sup>9</sup> In the same inscription a half-dramma is called drammārdha and a three-quarter dramma dramma-tri-bhāga. Copper coins were known as paṇas. This name also is not noticed in the records edited here, but the Kāman stone inscription mentions drammas and paṇas, of which the former were of silver and the latter of copper.<sup>10</sup> The standard weight of the paṇa was a karsha or 80 raktikās (146.4 grains), but the recorded copper coins of Gāṅgēyadēva do not weigh more than 60 grains. Perhaps they were half-paṇas. The lower denominations of silver drammas and copper paṇas are wanting.

In the Numismatic Supplement, No. XVII (J.A.S.B. for 1912, p. 123, Pl. VI), Mr. Nelson Wright has described 8 gold coins of Gāṅgēyadēva which had been found in the village Isurpur in taluk Rehli of the Saugor District. These coins differed in fabric from the usual coins of Gāṅgēyadēva. They were thick and in diameter half an inch. It is, therefore, suggested that they were struck by Karṇa, the son of Gāṅgēyadēva. Except for these, no coins struck by Gāṅgēya's successors are known.

<sup>3</sup> According to an interpolated verse in the Lilāvati a ṭanka was equal to  $\frac{3}{4}$  gadyāṇaka, i.e., was 63 grains in weight.

<sup>5</sup> The legend on these coins found in Madhya Pradesh was read as Śrīmad-Udayādēva by R. D. Banerji, who ascribed the coins to the Paramāra Udayāditya. See J. A. S. B. for 1920, p. 84. But the type and the legend (which is somewhat crudely executed) are like those of the coins of Gāṅgēyadēva.

<sup>6</sup> Cunningham has described one gold coin of Gāṅgēya weighing 7 grains, and V. Smith another which weighs only 5.6 grains.

The Lakshmi type introduced by Gāṅgēyadēva became popular in North India. It was imitated by the Chandēllas of Jajjhauti, the Gāhaḍavālas of Kanauj and the Tōmars of Delhi. It was also introduced in distant Kashmir. See, for instance, No. 7 in Pl. XXXV, Numismatic Chronicle for 1937. This coin has on the reverse the figure of the four-armed seated Lakshmi as on the coins of Gāṅgēyadēva. Allan ascribes it to Śrī-Harsha of Kashmir (1089-1101 A.C.).

The Coins of the Kalachuris of South Kosala

The first coin of these kings to be published was that in Pl. XXXIX, facing p. 654 in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. V (1836). It was a copper coin of Pṛithvīdēva from the collection of Cunningham. It had the king's name on the obverse and 'the figure of a four-armed god<sup>1</sup> crushing a demon' on the reverse. Prinsep read the legend correctly, but ascribed the coin to the king whose name occurs 'in the Dihli list as having reigned at Lahore in A.D. 1176-1192'. A hoard of 56 gold coins<sup>2</sup> was next discovered in 1892 in the former State of Sāraṅgarh, and some time later, three coins<sup>3</sup> of the same type were found in the bed of the river Āṅg in the State of Patnā. All these coins were sent to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, where they were examined by Dr. Hoernle. His report on them appears in the Proceedings of the Society for 1893, pp. 92 ff. and 141 ff. The coins were of three kings, Jājalladēva, Pṛithvīdēva and Ratnadēva. All the coins were round in shape. They had the particular king's name on the obverse and the same device on the reverse. Hoernle at first took the device to be the standing figure of Hanumān, but later on changed his opinion and thought that it represented an elephant, a horse or a bull. As more than one king bore each of these names, Hoernle conjecturally ascribed the coins to Jājalladēva I, Ratnadēva II and Pṛithvīdēva II.

The coinage of this Kalachuri branch was next noticed by Cunningham in his Coins of Medieval India (1894), pp. 73 ff. In this work Cunningham described the gold coins<sup>4</sup> of the three kings mentioned above, as well as two unique copper coins which he had acquired in 1835 and 1885. He identified the figure on the copper coins as that of Hanumān, but he was not certain about the device on the gold coins which he described as a number of shapeless objects surrounded by a circle of dots. Prof. Rapson, who edited Cunningham's work published posthumously, thought that the confused type on the reverse might perhaps be intended to represent a lion, facing right, rampant.<sup>5</sup> In his Catalogue of Coins in the Indian Museum, pp. 254 ff., Vincent Smith has described only the gold coins of the aforementioned three kings. He follows Rapson in taking the device on the reverse to be the figure of a rampant lion. Since then some hoards of gold coins of these kings have been discovered from time to time in Chhattisgarh. The largest of them was of 600 gold coins discovered in 1921-22 at Sonsari in the tabsil and District of Bilaspur. It contained the coins of both the large and the small size of all the three kings together with

<sup>3</sup> All the three coins (two large and one small) were of Jājalladēva.

<sup>4</sup> In his descriptive table on p. 76 and in Pl. VIII, in C. M. I., Cunningham labels three of these coins (Nos. 9-11) as those of copper. But this is incorrect; for, as he has himself stated, the coins were from the British Museum and were found in 1893. Cunningham has also quoted Hoernle's opinion about the device on them. They were, therefore, identical with the coins discovered in 1892, which were sent to the Asiatic Society of Bengal for examination. Some of them were apparently presented to the British Museum later on. As stated above, all these coins were of gold.

two coins of the Gāhaḍavāla king Gōvīndachandra.<sup>1</sup> In nearly all the hoards of gold coins discovered so far, the coins of Pṛithvīdēva are seen to preponderate, which seems to indicate that he was the last of the three kings.

Copper coins also of the aforementioned three kings and of one more, viz., Pratāpamālla, have been discovered at several places in Chhattisgarh. The credit of preserving them and of bringing them to the notice of scholars belongs to Pandit Lochan Prasad Pandeya, Hon. Secretary of the Mahākōshal Historical Society. The gold coins described below are from the Nagpur Museum, and the copper coins from the collection of Pandit Pandeya.

Only gold and copper coins of this king have been discovered. About the identity of the figure on the reverse of the gold coins there has been a great divergence of opinion. Hoernle thought at first that like the figure on the copper coin of Pṛithvīdēva which had been published before, the figure on the gold coins also was that of Hanumān. But on none of the gold coins examined by me does the figure appear like that of Hanumān. Hoernle himself changed his opinion later on and took the figure to be that of an elephant, a bull, a horse or a lion. As stated before, Rapson thought it might be that of a rampant lion. Vincent Smith has followed Rapson's view.

The figure on these coins is indeed crudely executed, and hence it has caused such a divergence of opinion among scholars. A close examination of coin No. 5 shows that its reverse has the figure of a lion with the tail upraised, facing right and jumping on an elephant which lies prostrate below.<sup>2</sup>

On the copper coins, the figure of Hanumān is, of course, quite clear. In the coin figured in Pl. A, No. 7, the god is turned to the left. The demon on the left, on whom he must be trampling, is cut out on this coin.

<sup>1</sup> Twenty-seven coins were discovered in the former State of Sonpur, some of which have been published in J. N. S. I., Vol. XIII, pp. 199 ff.

<sup>2</sup> The device was correctly interpreted for the first time by Mr. B. N. Nath in J. N. S. I., Vol. XIII, pp. 199 ff. His view that this coinage was first introduced by Ratnadēva II does not, however, appear to be correct; for, it would relegate all coins with the legend Śrīmaj-Jājalladēva to Jājalladēva II. This is precluded by the palaeographic evidence detailed below.

The Coins of Ratnadēva II.

| No. in Plate A | Metal | Size-diameter in inches. | Weight  | Obverse  | Reverse   |
|----------------|-------|--------------------------|---------|--|---|
| 8              | AV    | .7                       | 62 grs. | Two-line Nāgarī legend: (1) Srīmad-Ra- (2) madē-va.            | Lion to right attacking an elephant.  |
| 9              | AV    | .45                      | 15½ „   | As above.  | As above.   |
| 11             | AE    | .6                       | 23½ „   | As above: (1) [ Srī ] mad-Ra- (2) [ tna* ] dēva. | A sheathed dagger below some indistinct object (debased figure of a lion?). |

Of this king also, only gold and copper coins are known. I have not seen any copper coins of this king with the Hanumān device. The seal of the Pāraḡaon plates of this king (No. 122) has a sheathed dagger as on some of his copper coins.

The Coins of Pṛithvidēva II.

| No. in Plate A | Metal | Size-diameter in inches. | Weight  | Obverse  | Reverse   |
|----------------|-------|--------------------------|---------|--|---|
| 12             | AV    | .77                      | 61 grs. | Two-line Nāgarī legend: (1) Srīmat-Pṛi- (2) thvī-dēva.     | Lion with tail upraised to right with elephant lying prostrate below.   |
| 13             | AV    | .5                       | 15 „    | As above: (1) Srīmat-[Pṛi]- (2) [ thvīdē ] [ va* ]. | As above.   |
| 14             | AR    | .35                      | 6 „     | As above: (1) Srīmat-[Pṛi]- (2) [ thvīdē ] [ va* ]. | Some shapeless objects perhaps representing a lion.   |

| No. in Plate A | Metal | Size diameter in inches. | Weight  | Obverse  | Reverse   |
|----------------|-------|--------------------------|---------|--|---|
| 16             | AE    | .75                      | 68 grs. | As above (1) Srīmat-Prī-(2) [thvī]dē[va] . | Hanumān to right, with a demon on left.                                     |
| 17             | AE    | .85                      | 99½ „   | As above (1) Srīmat-[Prī]-(2) thvīdē[va] . | Hanumān to left. He tramples a demon on left and has an attendant on right. |
| 18             | AE    | .8                       | 73 „    | As above (1) Srīmat-[Prī]-(2) thvīdē[va] . | Lion with tail raised to right.   |

Of this king, coins in all the three metals are known, but his silver coins are very rare. Pandit L. P. Pandeya has so far been able to secure only three silver coins. All these are very small in size and resemble the one-eighth dramma pieces of Gāṅgēyadēva. This king's copper coins have both the devices of the lion and Hanumān (facing right or left).

The Coins of Pratāpamalla.

| No. in Plate A | Metal | Size | Weight  | Obverse  | Reverse                                 |
|----------------|-------|------|---------|--|---|
| 19             | AE    | .8   | 38 grs. | Three-line Nāgarī legend(1) [Srī]mat-Pra- (2) tā-pama- (3) [lla]dēva.                                | Lion to left, looking backward.         |
| 20             | AE    | .75  | 29 „    | Three-line Nāgarī legend(1) Srīmat-Pra- (2) tāpa-ma- (3) [lla]dēva, with asheathed dagger below. | Some indistinct device, perhaps a lion. |

No gold and silver coins of this king have been reported till now. His copper coins were found for the first time in 1924. Pandit L. P. Pandeya's conjecture that Pratāpamalla was a Kalachuri king has been confirmed by the subsequent discovery of the Peṇḍrābandh plates.<sup>1</sup> The seal of these plates has a sheathed dagger below the legend as on some coins of this king.

As the name Ratnadēva is repeated thrice and the names Prīthvīdēva and Jājalladēva twice in the genealogical list of the Kalachuris of Ratanpur, the question of the attribution of these coins becomes very difficult. While describing the hoard from the Sāraṅgarh, Dr. Hoernle conjecturally ascribed the coins to Jājalladēva I, Ratnadēva II and of Prīthvīdēva II,<sup>2</sup> but he gave no reason to support his view. Cunningham, on the other hand, assigned the same coins to Prīthvīdēva I, Jājalladēva I and Ratnadēva II.<sup>3</sup> Vincent

Smith was not certain about the matter. He doubtfully referred them to Prithvidēva II, Jājalladēva II and Ratnadēva III, but did not deny the possibility of their being assigned to earlier homonymous kings.<sup>1</sup> No satisfactory reasons have, however, been given for any of these identifications. Mr. Allan has recently pointed out<sup>2</sup> that in view of the probability that Prithvidēva I was still a feudatory<sup>3</sup> and that the dynasty became completely independent in the reign of Jājalladēva I, it is not improbable that some at least of the coins should be attributed to Prithvidēva II. He thinks that the same is true of the distribution of coins between Jājalladēva I and II and Ratnadēva II and III.

An important clue to the identification of the kings who struck these coins is afforded by the form of the palatal ś in the legends on these coins. On the gold coins of Jājalladēva the left member of this letter is either joined to the vertical on the right, or resembles the English letter S, which shows that this prince must be identified with Jājalladēva I.<sup>4</sup> There is another piece of evidence which points in the same direction. Jājalladēva I was a powerful prince. The Ratanpur stone inscription of his reign states that the ruling chiefs of the neighbouring territories, viz., South Kōsala, Andhra, Khimiḍi, Vairāgara, Lañjikā, Bhāṇāra, Talahāri, Daṇḍakapura, Nandāvalī and Kukkuṭa, paid him annual tributes, and that as he was valiant, his alliance was sought by the lords of Chēdi, Kānyakubja and Jējābhuktika.<sup>5</sup> Jājalladēva I's alliance with the contemporary Chandēlla king, who is evidently meant here by the lord of Jējābhuktika, is reflected in his coinage. It is well known that Chandēlla coinage begins in the reign of Kīrtivarman (circa 1060-1100 A.C.). Only gold coins of this king are known. Copper coins appear for the first time during the reign of Sallakshaṇavarman, the son and successor of Kīrtivarman, who was a contemporary of Jājalladēva. Sallakshaṇavarman's copper coins are extremely rare. Cunningham had only one in his cabinet, which is figured as No. 16 in Plate VIII of his Coins of Medieval India. It has the king's name in three lines on the obverse and the figure of Hanumān facing right on the reverse. The Hanumān type was apparently evolved in the Chandēlla kingdom<sup>6</sup> where we find the earliest reference to the worship of the monkey-god in a stone inscription, dated in the Harsha year 316 (922 A.C.)<sup>7</sup> This type seems to have been copied with a slight variation<sup>8</sup> by Jājalladēva I after he formed an alliance with the Chandēlla king Sallakshaṇavarman.

The type 'Lion attacking an elephant' seen on the gold coins of this dynasty seems also to have been introduced for the first time by Jājalladēva I. It probably symbolises his victory over the contemporary Gaṅga king. The Ratanpur inscription of his reign mentions his conquest of Khimiḍi which lay in the kingdom of the Gaṅgas. The latter were known as Gajapatis or Gajādhiśas, 'lords of elephants'. Jājalladēva's victory over the Gaṅga king was, therefore, fittingly represented by a lion attacking an elephant which lies prostrate below.

Some coins of debased gold with the legend Srīmaj-Jājalladēva may have been struck by Jājalladēva II, whose reign does not appear to have been very prosperous.

<sup>7</sup> This date was read by Cunningham as Sarvat 940, and by Kielhorn as Sarvat 215. D. R. Bhandarkar read it as Sarvat 316, which he referred to the Harsha era. See P. R. A. S., W. C., for 1903-4, p. 47.

<sup>8</sup> On the coins of Jājalladēva, the god appears two-armed as on the Chandēlla coins, but is shown to be trampling on a demon. On those of his successors he appears four-armed.

On the coins of Ratnadēva and Pṛithvidēva, the left member of the palatal ś has a somewhat longer serif at the bottom<sup>1</sup> than in the Sarkhō plates of Ratnadēva II, but the letter has not yet assumed the form seen in later records.<sup>2</sup> These kings must, therefore, be identified with Ratnadēva II and Pṛithvidēva II. It is noteworthy that the Sonsari hoard mentioned above, which contained the coins of all these kings, had also two coins of Gōvindachandra-dēva. This Gāhaḍavala king of Kanauj had a long reign of nearly 45 years (circa 1110-1155 A.C.) and so was a contemporary of Jājalladēva I, Ratnadēva II and Pṛithvidēva II. The Sonsari hoard seems to have been secreted some time during the reign of Pṛithvidēva II.

Besides ṣankas and drammas, some other coins are mentioned in the Kalachuri inscriptions, to which we shall now turn. The Tahankāpār plate of Pamparāja, dated K. 965, mention 130 Sarābhagaḍām āchbu<sup>3</sup> which may mean 130 gold coins minted in Sarābhagaḍa<sup>4</sup> (modern Sāraṅgarh). It is noteworthy that a similar Marathi word āsu occurs in inscriptions<sup>5</sup> found in Maharashtra and in the Mahānubhāva literature of the 14th century A.C. From several passages in the Līlācharitra,<sup>6</sup> the Marathi biography of Chakradhara, the founder of the Mahānubhāva sect, āsu appears to have been a gold coin current in Maharashtra in the 13th century A.C. The Līlācharitra speaks in one place of a pāṇṇa āsu or three-quarter āsu, which shows that lower denominations of one-quarter, one-half and three-quarter āsus were also current.

The Bilhāri stone inscription mentions śoḍaśikā, which seems to have denoted a copper coin equal in value to one-sixteenth of a dramma just as vimśōpaka denoted one-twentieth of a dramma.<sup>7</sup> Another coin mentioned in the same inscription is paurā, which was probably a small coin of silver. A tax of four pauras was levied on every elephant, and that of two pauras on every horse, sold in the local market.<sup>8</sup> Kaparda and dyūta-kaparda were other coins current at the time. Kauṭilya also mentions kaparda as a copper coin.<sup>9</sup> It was probably identical with kākiṇī mentioned by Bhāskarāchārya as equivalent to twenty cowries. Four kākiṇīs made one paṇa.<sup>10</sup> Dyūtakaparda was probably so called because it was frequently used as a stake in gambling.<sup>11</sup> Some of these coins may be represented by the smaller Kalachuri coins which are often found in Chhattisgarh. But they are so much worn and so irregular in weight that it is often difficult to say what denominations they represent.<sup>12</sup>

<sup>7</sup> Visōvā mentioned in the aforementioned Pāṭan inscription is derived from Sanskrit vimśōpaka. The vimśōpakas were so called because they were equal in value to one-twentieth of a dramma. This appears quite clear from l. 20 of the Sīyaḍḍḍī inscription which first mentions in words a monthly tax of half a Vigrahātūṅgīya-dramma and then states the same as vi 10 (i.e., 10 vimśōpakas). One dramma was, therefore, equal to 20 vimśōpakas. Similarly, it may have been equal to 16 śoḍaśikās. It is noteworthy that Bhāskarāchārya's Līlāvati (I, 2) states that sixteen paṇas make one dramma. Perhaps śoḍaśikā was another name of the copper paṇa. According to the Śārṅgadharā-saṁhitā, it was so called because it weighed sixteen māshas.

<sup>12</sup> The smallest of them may be māshas. According to Nārada cited in the Mitākṣarā on Yājñavalkya-smṛiti (II, 159), a māsha was one-twentieth of a copper paṇa.

INSCRIPTION OF THE ABHIRAS

No. 1; PLATE I

NASIK CAVE INSCRIPTION OF ISVARASENA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 9

THIS inscription was first brought to notice by Messrs. Edward W. West and Arthur A. West in their article entitled 'Nasik Cave Inscriptions' published in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. VII (1864), pp. 37 ff. They published a fairly correct eye-copy of the record and, though they gave no transcript of it, they noticed correctly the date which occurs in lines 2-3. The record was first transcribed, with notes and an English translation, by Dr. R. G. Bhandarkar in his Notices published in the Transactions of the International Congress of Orientalists, London, 1874, pp. 341 ff. It was next copied by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī. Though the Pandit did the work with his wonted skill, his facsimile published in the Archæological Survey of Western India, Vol. IV, Plate LIII, No. 12, is considerably worked up by hand. In 1883 Pandit Bhagvanlal published a transcript of the inscription together with a Sanskrit rendering and an English translation in the Gazetteer of the Bombay Presidency, Vol. XVI (Nasik District), pp. 579 ff. In the same year Dr. Bühler also, working on Pandit Bhagvanlal's facsimile, published a transcript and an English translation of the epigraph in the aforementioned volume of the Archæological Survey of Western India. The inscription was finally edited with a purely mechanical facsimile by Prof. E. Senart in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. VIII, pp. 88 ff. and Plate VII (15). Prof. Senart's edition has remained the standard one to the present day. The record is edited here from the Plate accompanying Prof. Senart's article as well as a fresh estampage supplied by the Superintendent, Archæological Survey, Western Circle.

The epigraph is incised on the left wall of the court in Cave No. X on the so-called Pāṇḍu-lēṇa hill, 5 miles south-west from Nasik, the head-quarters of the Nasik District in the Bombay State. It seems to have originally consisted of 15 lines, but only the first thirteen of them can now be read. Even in this part, the record has suffered considerably on the right-hand side by exposure to weather, and three or four akṣaras at the end of almost every line have now become almost illegible. In several cases they can, however, be read from the traces left behind, or restored conjecturally. The average size of the letters is 1.2".

The characters belong to the Brāhmī alphabet of a slightly later age than in the inscriptions of the Sātavāhanas. In some respects, however, as in the subscript tripartite y, they show archaic forms; see Māḍbarīputrasya, l. 1; -vāstavyasya, l. 7, etc. Notice also p in gaṇapaka-, l. 4, which has a long vertical on the left. As Dr. Bühler has already noticed,<sup>1</sup> some of the letters are cursive; see, e. g., the forms of t and n, derived from looped types, in parvata-, l. 7 and Īsvarasēnasya, l. 2, as well as the form of jñā in vājñāḥ, l. 1. Some of the other peculiarities worthy of notice are as follows:—u in upāsikāyā, l. 6, has a horizontal stroke at the top; the rare ō occurs in ōdayamtrika-, l. 10; the medial u in dubitrā, l. 4, is formed by a curve open on the right, like the medial ri of later times. Kb has a loop on the right; see sukb-ārtham, l. 7; y is generally flat as in Kushāṇa records, but the round form also occurs sporadically; see upāsikāyā-, l. 6 and odayāṃtrika-, l. 10; l is bent towards the left; see tilapishaka-, l. 11. Finally, the palatal ś has two forms, the earlier one with a vertical middle stroke occurs in viśvavarmasya, l. 5, while the later one in which the stroke is placed horizontally is noticed in other places; see e.g. Sak-Agnivarmmaṇaḥ, l. 4. The numerical symbol for 1000 occurs in l. 10, that for 500 in l. 11, those for 10, 4 and 3 in l. 5 and that for 2 in l. 10. A symbol denoting 9 seems to have occurred at the end of line 2, but it is now rather indistinct.

The language is Sanskrit with some admixture of Prakrit forms. See, e.g., Gimba-pakhe and chotbe in l. 3, [eta] yā purvayā in ll. 3-4; gilāna-, l. 8, etc. As for orthography, the only point which calls for notice is the reduplication of m after r in Sak-Agnivarmmaṇaḥ, l. 4.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the Ābhīra king (Rājan) Īśvarasēna, the son of the Ābhīra Śivadatta and Māḍharī. The object of it is to record the foundation, by an upāsikā or lay devotee named Vishṇudattā, of a perpetual endowment to provide medicines for the sick among the community of Buddhist monks from the four quarters, dwelling in the monastery on the Triraśmi mountain. Vishṇudattā belonged to the Śaka race. She was the daughter of the Śaka Agnivarman, wife of the Gaṇapaka (Accountant) Rēbhīla and mother of the Gaṇapaka Viśvavarman. For the aforementioned perpetual endowment, the following amounts in kārshāpānas<sup>1</sup> were invested with the various guilds evidently of Gōvardhana, viz., a thousand kārshāpānas with the guild of kularikas (potters), two thousand with the guild of manufacturers of hydraulic machines, five hundred with another guild whose name is lost, and some more with the guild of oil-millers.

The record is dated on the thirteenth day of the fourth fortnight of the season Grīshma in the ninth (regnal) year of the Ābhīra king Īśvarasēna. As shown in the Introduction, Īśvarasēna was probably the founder of the so-called Kalachuri-Chēdi era. This date must, therefore, be referred to that era. Later dates of the era cite some lunar month, fortnight, tithi and week-day, but this first known date of the reckoning is recorded in season, fortnight and day in accordance with the prevailing custom of the time.<sup>2</sup> According to the epoch of 248-49 A. C. with the year commencing on Kārttika śu. di. 1, the thirteenth day of the fourth fortnight of Grīshma would fall in 258 A. C. if the year 9 was current, and in 259 A. C. if it was expired. The date does not admit of verification.

Of the geographical names which occur in the present record, Triraśmi-parvata (or the three-rayed hill) is plainly identical with the Pāṇḍu-lēṇa hill where the epigraph is incised. Pandit Bhagvanlal has suggested that its pyramidal or triple fire-tongue shape was the origin of its name Triraśmi<sup>3</sup>. Gōvardhana which was probably mentioned in line 8 is identical with the modern village Gōvardhan-Gaṅgāpur<sup>4</sup> on the right bank of the Gōdāvarī, about 6 miles west of Nasik. It is mentioned in four other inscriptions on the cave-hill and was, in ancient times, the head-quarters of a territorial division (ābhāra) named after it.

<sup>2</sup> Most of the Kshatrapa and Sātavāhana inscriptions in the Nasik caves contain similar season dates, but two records, viz., Nos. 12 and 14, mention the lunar months Vaiśākha, Kārttika and Chaitra. Season dates survived down to the time of the Vākātakas. See the date of the Dudia plates of the Vākātika Pravarasēna II. Ep. Ind., Vol. III, pp. 258 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Pandit Bhagvanlal was the first to read this name, but he admitted that the first two letters of it were doubtful. The facsimile shows clear traces of ḍha. Mā appears to be very much cramped for want of space and may have been added subsequently.

<sup>10</sup> Bhandarkar read bhrātrī-kani(nya)kuyā. Bhagvanlal's reading [mā]trā Sakanikayā accepted by Senart is, however, supported by both the facsimile and the context.

<sup>14</sup> Bhagvanlal read ōḍayantrika, but as Senart has already observed, the letters da and ḍa can hardly be distinguished in so defaced an inscription. The anusvāra on nyā is clear in the estampage.

<sup>18</sup> The facsimile in A.S.W.I. has traces of seven more aksharas which can be read as सर्व रक्षति विद्या, but they are omitted in the Plate in Ep. Ind. The aksharas in the next two lines are completely effaced.

In the ninth—9—year of the king, the Ābhīra Īśvarasēna, son of the Ābhīra Śivadatta (and) son of Mādharī, on the thirteenth—10 (and) 3—day in the fourth—4—fortnight of summer, on this aforementioned (day) the lay devotee Vishṇudattā of the Śaka race<sup>1</sup>, mother of the Gaṇapaka<sup>2</sup> Viśvavarman, wife of the Gaṇapaka Rēbhīla (and) daughter of the Śaka Agnivarman, has invested the (following) perpetual endowment in the present and future guilds,<sup>3</sup> dwelling at Gōvardhana, in order to provide medicines for the sick among the community of monks from the four quarters dwelling in (this) monastery on Mount Triraśmi, for the well-being and happiness of all creatures, viz., a thousand—1000—kārshāpaṇas in the hands of the guild of Kularikas<sup>4</sup>, two thousand—2000—kārshāpaṇas in the guild of the manufacturers of hydraulic machines<sup>5</sup>, five hundred—500—in the guild of . . . . (and) . . . . in the guild of oil-millers.

<sup>1</sup> Sakanikā seems to be used here in the sense of a woman of the Śaka race. Nikā was added as a suffix in the sense of a woman, like the later ambā. Cf. Vijayā and Vijayanikā in inscriptions Nos. 1, 9 and 19 at Kuṣā. I.C.T.W.I., pp. 4 ff.

<sup>2</sup> Bühler took Gaṇapaka to mean 'the protector or leader of a gaṇa'. A gaṇa, according to him, consists of three gūlmas or battalions, and may be taken as an equivalent of 'a colonel' or 'a brigadier-general.' Senart derived the word from gaṇāpayati (irregular for gaṇayati) and understood it to mean 'an accountant' or 'an astrologer'. Mr. Bakhle, on the other hand, thinks that it means the President of a gaṇa or republican state. J.B.R.B.A.S. (N.S.), Vol. IV, p. 78.

<sup>3</sup> Bühler, who read Sugatāgatāsu, translated, 'with the Buddha (?) companies dwelling in (Gōvardhana)'. The expression āgatānāgatāsu is intended to commit the specified guilds existing at the time and their successors to the payment of the perpetual interest.

<sup>4</sup> Kularika may be identical with kulāla, a potter, as conjectured by Bühler, or with kaulika, a weaver, as suggested by Bhandarkar. The guild of the kaulikas (kōlika-nikāya) is mentioned in l. 2 of the Nasik cave inscription No. 12.

<sup>6</sup> Previous editors, who read chatālāpa or ebatālepa, failed to understand it and omitted it in their translations. The correct reading appears to be chatālo-pi and signifies 'all the four'. Chatālo is plainly to be equated with chattāro meaning 'four'. Cf. SHC., VIII, 3, 122. The reference is evidently to the investment of the four amounts of kārshāpaṇas in the four guilds named in the epigraph.

<sup>7</sup> The last two lines of the record, now completely effaced, may have stated how the interest was to be utilised. Compare ll. 3 ff. of Nasik cave inscription No. 12. Ep. Ind., Vol. VIII, p. 82.

NASIK CAVE INSCRIPTION OF ISVARASENA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 9.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE MAHARAJAS OF VALKHA

No. 2; PLATE II A

INDORE PLATE OF SVAMIDASA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 67

THIS was one of the two copper-plates obtained by Dr. D.R. Bhandarkar from Pandit Vamanasastri Islampurkar of Indore<sup>1</sup>. Dr. Bhandarkar handed them over to Dr. R. C. Majumdar, who edited them together in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XV, pp. 286 f. and plates. Their contents and dates were discussed by me in an article entitled 'An Ancient Dynasty of Khandesh' published in the Annals of the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Vol. XXV, pp. 159 f. The inscription on the present plate is edited here from the facsimile accompanying Dr. Majumdar's article.

The inscription is incised on one side only of a single copper-plate measuring 7.6" broad and 4.1" high. It has no ring-hole and shows no sign of a seal having ever been attached to it. The plate has nine lines of writing, of which the last, containing the sign-manual of the reigning king, is incised in the margin on the left. The writing is in an excellent state of preservation. The size of the letters varies from .2" to .4".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets, with knobs at the top. They show considerable development over those of the Nasik cave inscription of Īśvarasēna,<sup>2</sup> which was incised only about sixty years before. The letters a, k, ñ and r, for instance, have developed curves at the lower end of their verticals, distinctive of the southern alphabet; th is shown by a curling curve open to the right; see -pathakē, l. 3; n has developed a loop, while the vertical of l curves to the left; see -pād-ānuddhyātō, l. 1 and Sāṅḍilya, l. 3; the subscript y has assumed a bipartite form; see Āryya, l. 4. As regards medial vowels, i now forms a complete curve; its long form is indicated by a curling curve turned to the left; the mātrās for ā, ē, ai and ō appear in some cases above the line; and the medial au is bipartite in -pauṭra, l. 5. The symbols for 60, 7 and 5 occur in l. 8.

The language is Sanskrit. There is now little admixture of Prakrit forms, the only cases occurring in this epigraph being santaka, l. 2 and krishāpayatū, l. 7, which however persisted for a long time. As regards orthography, the only peculiarity which calls for notice is the reduplication of the consonant before y and after r; see pād-ānuddhyātō, l. 1 and sarvān, l. 2.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Mahārāja Svāmidāsa. The object of it is to record confirmation,<sup>3</sup> by Svāmidāsa, of the gift of a field in the village Dakṣiṇa-Valmika-tallavāṭaka (South Valmika-tallavāṭaka) which was situated in the territorial subdivision Nagarikā-pathaka. The plate was issued from Valkha, which was evidently then the royal capital. The Dūtaka was Nannabhaṭṭi. The record is dated on the 5th tithi of the bright fortnight of Jyēshṭha in the year 67 (expressed by numerical symbols) of an unspecified era. It may be noted that the year in this case is introduced with the word varsha in stead of the usual samvat. The plate is signed by the Mahārāja, the illustrious Svāmidāsa.

<sup>3</sup> The use of the words samanujānyō(mō) in ll. 2-3 and krī-ānujānyā in l. 6 as well as the absence of any statement that it was a royal grant indicate that Mahārāja Svāmidāsa only confirmed the gift. Who the donor was is not known. The plate of Bhuluṇḍa (No. 3, below), which bears close resemblance to the present record, mentions a person named Āshāḍhanandin at whose request the gift was confirmed.

Svāmidāsa who issued the present plate was only a feudatory chief; for he describes himself as parama-bhaṭṭāvaka-pād-āmidhyāta 'meditating on the feet of the Great Lord', though he does not name his suzerain. The latter probably belonged to the Imperial family which started the era in which the date of the present inscription is recorded. The date does not admit of verification in the absence of such details as a week-day or a nakshatra. We must therefore identify the era to which it refers, on other evidence. Unfortunately, the provenance of the plate has not been recorded, but there is one circumstance which affords a clue. The present grant bears close resemblance to the Sirpur grant<sup>1</sup> of Rudradāsa, dated in the year 107, in several respects, viz., (i) the names of the princes in both the cases end in dāsa; (ii) both the princes bear the title Mahārāja and acknowledge their feudatory status in the same words; (iii) the characters and phraseology of the two grants are strikingly similar; (iv) the date is similarly worded and the year is introduced with the word varsha in both the grants. These similarities<sup>2</sup> leave no doubt that the two grants belong to the same royal family and came originally from the same part of the country. As the grant of Rudradāsa is known to have been found at Sirpur in the Khandesh District, that of Svāmidāsa also must, in all probability, have originally belonged to the same district of Northern Maharashtra. Pandit Islampurkar, who was engaged in collecting manuscripts and ancient historical records in different parts of the country, seems to have obtained the plate somewhere in Khandesh and taken it to Indore.

Dr. Majumdar referred the date of the present plate to the Gupta era on the ground that its characters resemble those of the Sāñchī inscription of Chandragupta II. This view cannot now be upheld; for we have no evidence of the spread of the Gupta era to Northern Maharashtra where, as we have seen, the plate was probably found.<sup>3</sup> The use of the word varsha in recording the year of the grant may perhaps be taken to point to the Śaka era<sup>4</sup>, but that era is out of the question here, as the characters of the present grant are far more developed than those current in the second century A. C. The only other era to which the date can be referred is the so-called Kalachuri era founded in 249 A. C. by the Ābhīra king Īśvarasēna. Accordingly, the date would correspond, for the expired year 67, to the 2nd May 317 A. C.<sup>5</sup> It does not admit of verification.

As for the localities mentioned in the present grant, Valkha, which was probably the

<sup>2</sup> The place of issue is not named in the extant portion of the Sirpur grant, but it must have been mentioned in the beginning of the first line where two or three letters have been lost owing to the breaking off of a piece of the plate on the left. The sign-manual of Mahārāja Rudradāsa, which must have been incised in the margin on the left, is also lost.

<sup>3</sup> In fact there is no evidence of the spread of the Gupta era south of the Narmadā except the solitary grant of Bhīmasēna II (Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, pp. 342 ff. and Vol. XXVI, pp. 227 ff.) That grant, however, belongs to Kōsalā or modern Chhattisgarh, the ruler of which had submitted to Samudragupta. Khandesh, on the other hand, was never under the direct or indirect rule of the Guptas. The old identification of Ēraṇḍapalli mentioned in the Allahabad pillar inscription of Samudragupta with Ēraṇḍōl in Khandesh, proposed by Fleet, is now held to be untenable. See Dubreuil, Ancient History of the Deccan, pp. 59 f.

<sup>4</sup> Dr. Kielhorn has shown that the word varsha is characteristic of the Śaka era. See Ind. Ant., Vol. XXVI, p. 150. The use of that word in the present grant seems to be in imitation of the older grants dated in the Śaka era which was previously current in Maharashtra.

royal capital at the time, may be identical with Vāghlī, about 6 miles north by east of Chalisgaon in the East Khandesh District, on the Bombay-Bhusawal line of the G.I.P. Railway. It is an old place as it contains some ancient temples and old Sanskrit inscriptions.<sup>1</sup> One of these inscriptions<sup>2</sup> in three parts, edited by Dr. Kielhorn, shows that Vāghlī became afterwards the capital of a feudatory royal family which originally hailed from Valabhī in Kathiawad, and later on owed allegiance to the Yādavas of Khandesh.<sup>3</sup> Nagarikā, the head-quarters of the territorial division (pathaka) named after it, may be identical with Nagar Dēvlā, about 10 miles north-east of Vāghlī, which also contains an old Hēmādṛpanti temple of Mahādēva.<sup>4</sup> Finally, Valmika-tallavāṭaka may be Talwād khurd, about 15 miles north by west of Nagar Dēvlā.<sup>5</sup>

No. 3; PLATE II B

INDORE PLATE OF BHULUNDA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 107

THIS copper-plate, like the preceding one of Svāmidāsa,<sup>2</sup> was in the possession of Pandit Vamanasastri Islampurkar of Indore, from whom it was obtained by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar. The two plates were edited together by Dr. R. C. Majumdar in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XV, pp. 286 ff. and plates. I edit the record here from the facsimile accompanying Dr. Majumdar's article.

The present record also is on a single copper-plate and is incised only on one side of it, measuring 8.25" broad and 3.75" high. The plate has no ring-hole and does not appear to have ever had a seal attached to it. It has 9 lines of writing, of which the last one containing the royal sign-manual is incised in the margin on the left as in the case of Svāmidāsa's plate. The size of the letters varies from .2" to .5".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets, generally resembling those of the preceding plate, though more cursive in form. The only peculiarities worth noting are—(i) medial ī (long) is shown by two curves turned in opposite directions as also by a curve curling to the left; see samanujānīmō, l. 2; -kālīnam, l. 5 etc.; (ii) ḍ and d are not clearly distinguished; see Bhuluṇḍaḥ, l. 1 and Skandō, l. 8; (iii) the jibvāmūliya occurs in l. 6 and numerical symbols for 100, 10, 7 and 2, in l. 8.

The language is Sanskrit. The wording of the grant closely resembles that of the grant of Svāmidāsa. The orthography also shows the same peculiarities.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Mahārāja Bhuluṇḍa. Like Svāmidāsa, he also describes himself as paramabbṭṭāraka-pād-ānudbyūta and therefore seems to have owed allegiance to some lord paramount.<sup>3</sup> The object of the inscription is to record the assent, by Mahārāja Bhuluṇḍa, to the brahmadēya gift of a field belonging to one Khuddataka together with the surrounding kachchha (bank), to a Brāhmaṇa named Kusāraka, at the request of Āshāḍhanandin. The field was situated on the boundary of a place named Ulladana. Āshāḍhanandin seems to have purchased the field from the owner, donated it to the Brāhmaṇa, and applied to the king for the confirmation of the gift. The royal order was issued from Valkha. The record is dated in the year (varsha) 107 (expressed in numerical symbols only) on the 12th tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna. The Dūtaka of the grant was the Pratihāra Skanda. The plate is signed by the Mahārāja Bhuluṇḍa in the margin on the left.

<sup>1</sup> Dūtaka, also called Ājñapti in some grants, mentioned generally at the end of early copper-plate charters, was an officer charged with the execution of the royal order. Compare kārāvaka used in the same sense in a grant of the Vākātakas. Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, p. 87.

The close similarity in the characters, phraseology, royal sign-manual and mode of dating of the plates of the Mahārājas Svāmīdāsa and Bhulūṇḍa leaves no doubt that they originally came from the same part of the country, which, as already stated, was probably the Khandesh District. The date of the present plate must therefore be referred to the same reckoning, viz., the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A. C., it corresponds, for the amānta Phālguna in the expired year 107, to the 4th March 357 A. C. The date does not admit of verification.

As for the places mentioned in the present record, Valkha, as shown before,<sup>1</sup> is probably identical with Vāghlī near Chalisgaon in the East Khandesh District. Ulladana may be the same as Udhli, about 9 miles east of Bhusawal. The description in the present plate that the field in Ulladana was granted together with the surrounding kachbha suits Udhli very well; for it is situated on the bank of the Tāpī.

No. 4; PLATE II C

SIRPUR PLATE OF RUDRADASA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 117

THIS copper-plate was discovered in 1884, in the possession of one Motiram Patil of Sirpur<sup>1</sup> in the West Khandesh District of the Bombay State. It has been edited before, with a lithograph, but without a translation, by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVI (1887), pp. 98 ff. It is edited here from the same lithograph.

It is a fragmentary plate, the extant piece measuring 7" broad and 4.5" high. It is intact at the top, the bottom and the right side; but from the left side a narrow piece, about 1" broad, has been broken off the whole way down, so that about three aksharas have been lost at the beginning of each line. There is no hole in the extant piece; and from the close resemblance which the record on this plate bears to the last two grants, it does not seem likely that there was any hole in the lost piece also. In any case no ring or seal was discovered with the plate. The present inscription is incised only on one side of it, but on the other side, Pandit Bhagvanlal found seven faintly cut shell-characters.

The inscription consists of nine lines. The writing is in a state of good preservation throughout. The average size of the letters is .3". The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the plate of Mahārāja Svāmidāsa,<sup>2</sup> though they are somewhat more angular. Like the latter, they have knobs at the top of the letters. They include, in line 9, the symbols for 100, 10 and 7. In some cases we see an admixture of different forms; v, for instance, has generally the triangular form as in the inscriptions of Svāmidāsa and Bhuluṇḍa; see sarvāṇ-ēva in line 2 and bhōgāy-aiiva in line 7; but in yāvat, l. 5, it has the same shape as in the copper-plate inscriptions of the Vākāṭaka Pravarasēna II. Pandit Bhagvanlal referred the present record to the beginning of the sixth century A. C., but in view of the earlier forms of some letters like d and m, I would date it about the middle or end of the fourth century A. C.

The language is Sanskrit, and the inscription is in prose throughout. The wording of the grant resembles, mutatis mutandis, that of the preceding grants of Svāmidāsa and Bhuluṇḍa, but it is written very carelessly. The orthography also shows the same peculiarities.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Mahārāja Rudradāsa. He describes himself as paramabhaṭṭāṛaka-pād-ānudhyāta 'meditating on the feet of the Great Lord', which clearly indicates his feudatory status. The object of the inscription is to record the assent, by Mahārāja Rudradāsa, to the gift of a field named Ghōṭakatala situated on the western boundary of the village Vikaṭṭāṇaka. This village seems to have been included in the Kaśapura sub-division(?). The boundary of the field extended as far as Kōhalaṭṭaka, which may have been the name of a field or a village. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Drōṇilaka of the Bharadvāja gōtra. The place of issue is not named in the extant portion. It must have been mentioned in the beginning of the first line, where two or three letters have now been lost owing to the breaking off of a piece on the left, and was, in all probability, Valkha. It is noteworthy that the two dots which followed the name of the place of issue are still seen in the beginning of the first line, as on the plate of Bhuluṇḍa. The signature of Mahārāja Rudradāsa, which must have occurred in the margin on the left as on the plates of Svāmidāsa and Bhuluṇḍa, is also lost.

The inscription is dated in line 9 in numerical symbols which are carelessly incised. The intended date appears to be the third tithi of the month Vaiśākha in the year 117.<sup>1</sup> The fortnight has not been specified, but it may have been the bright one, as the tithi was probably akṣaya-tritīyā (Vaiśākha śukla tritīyā). The date is introduced with the word varsha as in the preceding two grants. In view of the close resemblance which the present grant bears to those of Svāmidāsa and Bhuluṇḍa, this date must be referred to the Kalachuri era.<sup>2</sup> According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C. which suits early dates of the era, the present date would correspond, for the expired year 117, to the 18th April 367 A. C. It does not admit of verification.

As for the localities mentioned in the present record, Vikaṭṭāṇaka may be Viṭṇērā, about 20 miles south by east of Sirpur. The other places cannot be traced in the vicinity of Sirpur.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE KINGS OF MAHISHMATI

No. 5; PLATE III A

KANAKHERA STONE INSCRIPTION OF SRIDHARAVARMAN: (KALACHURI) YEAR 102

THE inscription was discovered by one of the Assistants of Sir John Marshall, Director General of Archaeology in India at Kānākhērā, a village near Sāñchī in the Bhopal State, Central India.<sup>1</sup> It is now preserved in the Sāñchī Museum. The inscribed stone was found built into a well. The record was first briefly noticed by Mr. R. D. Banerji in the Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey of India, Western Circle, for the year 1917-18, p. 37, and later edited by him in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XVI, pp. 230 ff. It was re-edited by Mr. N.G. Majumdar, first in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, New Series, Vol. XIX (1923), pp. 337 ff., and later in the Monuments of Sāñchī, Vol. I, pp. 392 ff. and Vol. III, Pl. CXXXIX. Mr. Majumdar corrected some mistakes in the transcript of Mr. Banerji and gave a different reading of the date at the end. The record is edited here from an excellent ink impression kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India.

The inscription consists of six lines of writing, and covers a space, 6.75" broad and 2.5" high. It is in an imperfect state of preservation. Several aksharas towards the end of the first line have either become illegible or have been completely lost owing to the breaking off of the upper right edge of the stone. Besides, many more have been damaged in the middle of lines 4 and 5 by the flaking off of the surface of the stone. The size of the letters varies between 1.25" and .4".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets. Their striking features are the elongated verticals of k, r and l, the beautiful superscript curves denoting medial i (short and long) and rarely medial ā, and the ornamental forms of the subscript y and r. The following peculiarities may be noted:—ṅ and n have a loop in the lower part; see tridaśa-gaṇa- and senāpatēr=, both in l. 1; dh has generally an oval shape; see dharmma-vijayinā, l. 2, but its archaic form is also noticed; see Srīdharavarmmaṇā in the same line; y, though still tripartite, has a hook for its left limb; see -nāyaka- l. 2; and ś has generally a short horizontal bar, but in ligatures it assumes a tripartite form; see śrāddhaya, l. 3 and śāśvatē, l. 4. On the evidence of palaeography, the inscription may be referred to the 4th century A. C.

The language is Sanskrit. The record begins in prose, but is rounded off with a verse in the Sārdūlavikrīḍita metre, composed in a good kāvya style. The influence of Prakrit is seen in the forms trayōdaśamē and kbānāpita. The orthography shows the usual reduplication of the consonant following r; see Srīdharavarmmaṇā, l. 2.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the Mahādaṇḍanāyaka Śaka Śrīdharavarman who was the son of the Śaka Nanda. Though Srīdharavarman belonged to the Saka race, he was a follower of the Hindu religion; for he was apparently described in the mutilated line 1 as a worshipper of Svāmi-Mahāsēna (Skanda or Kārttikēya), the commander of the celestial army. The object of the inscription is to record the excavation of a well by Srīdharavarman for the increase of welfare and prosperity, the acquisition of religious merit and fame, and the everlasting attainment of heaven.

The inscription contains in lines 2 and 3 the following date, viç., the tenth tithi of the dark fortnight of Śrāvāṇa in the victorious thirteenth year. This date is mentioned in close connection with the name of the Mahādandanāyaka Śrīdharavarman to whose reign it apparently refers, but Banerji thought that as Śrīdharavarman did not claim any royal title, it was extremely improbable that the year 13 was of his reign. He therefore referred the date to the reign of Jivadāman, the father of Rudrasīmha II and the founder of the third dynasty of the Satraps of Saurāshtra, whose name, he thought, he could read in line 1.<sup>1</sup> But, as Majumdar has shown, this view is untenable;<sup>2</sup> for (i) the existing traces of letters in line 1 show that the correct reading of the passage where Banerji read the name of the Kshatrapa ruler is vīryy-ājjita-vijaya<sup>3</sup>; (ii) no title like Svāmin is prefixed to the name of Jivadāman even according to the reading of Banerji; and (iii) the victorious thirteenth year mentioned in line 2 is described as augmenting the reign evidently of Śrīdharavarman who is named immediately before in that line. It seems therefore that Śrīdharavarman, though he held only the military title of Mahādandanāyaka, was, to all intents and purposes, an independent ruler, since he does not mention any overlord in this epigraph<sup>4</sup>.

There is another date towards the close of the record which has been differently read by Banerji and Majumdar. The former called attention to the two symbols which immediately follow the aforementioned verse in the Sārdūlavikrīḍita metre. The first of these, he thought, was 'the Western Kshatrapa symbol for 200 written at one stroke', while the second signified the unit. The date was thus 201 which Banerji referred to the Śaka era and took as equivalent to 279 A. C. Mr. Majumdar, on the other hand, thought that the first sign had no resemblance to a 200 figure and that it was unlikely to be a numerical symbol since it was not introduced by a word like varsha or samvatsara. He, therefore, took it to be a sign of interpunction indicating the end of the verse. Mr. Majumdar, however, drew attention to the letter sa which occurs at some distance from this sign followed by 'apparently three numerical symbols'. He was not certain about the reading of the first of these, but took it tentatively as signifying 200. The other two signs he read as 40 and 1. The date of the epigraph was thus, according to Majumdar, 241. He referred this year to the Śaka era and took it as equivalent to 319 A.C.<sup>5</sup>

Whatever may be the correct reading of this date, the attribution of it to the Śaka era is not plausible;<sup>6</sup> for there is no other early date of that era coming from either Eastern or Western Malwa. The Śaka era was, no doubt, used by the Kshatrapas in Kathiawad, but no records of their rule have been found in Malwa. In fact Kshatrapa supremacy in Malwa seems to have terminated about the middle of the third century A.C.<sup>7</sup> It seems therefore better to refer the date to the so-called Kalachuri-Chedi era which was undoubtedly current in the adjoining Anūpa country as evidenced by the inscriptions of Subandhu.<sup>8</sup>

The first of the two signs, which immediately follows the completion of the verse in line 6, is definitely not a sign of interpunction as supposed by Majumdar; for, so far as I know, such a sign is not used for this purpose anywhere else. Banerji seems to be right in taking it to be a numerical symbol,<sup>1</sup> notwithstanding the unusual omission of an introductory word like varsha or samvat. The symbol, however, signifies 100, not 200; for the horizontal stroke which is generally attached to the top of its vertical in order to convert it into a symbol for 200<sup>2</sup> is not noticed in this case. This symbol is followed by two horizontal strokes, one below the other,<sup>3</sup> signifying the unit figure 2. This is followed by some aksharas which are indistinct. The first appears to be sa and the last stu. They may be remnants of Siddham=astu.<sup>4</sup>

The date of the record is thus the year 102, which, being referred to the Kalachuri era, becomes equivalent to 351-52 A. C. The tenth tithi of amānta Svāvaṇa va. di. 10 in the expired year 102 fell on the 22nd July 352 A. C. The date does not admit of verification, but it is supported by the palæographical evidence stated above.

<sup>3</sup> These strokes are rather indistinct in the plate accompanying Banerji's article in Ep. Ind., Vol. XVI, but they appear clear in Pl. cxxxix of the Monuments of Sāncbi, Vol. III, and also in the fresh estampage supplied to me.

<sup>4</sup> D. C. Sircar has suggested the reading swasty=astu. S.I., Vol. I, p. 181. It has, however, to be admitted that the first akshara shows no trace of the subscript v, and the second does not look like stya. Mr. Majumdar takes the last akshara stu as a numerical symbol denoting 40. But see the forms of the symbol for 40 in Plate IX in Bühler's Indische Palæographie. The shape of that symbol is clearly different.

<sup>12</sup> Banerji read चतुःसत्य— and Majumdar चन्द्रसूर्य— But the reading चन्द्रा— is quite clear. Besides, there is no trace of the medial ū of stū. The correct reading appears to be चन्द्रादित्य—, which was later adopted by Majumdar.

<sup>13</sup> These six aksharas are illegible. I would restore आकारेऽप्रतिमः. The upper part of kā, the medial i of ti and the visarga are clearly seen.

BARWANI PLATE OF SUBANDHU : (KALACHURI) YEAR 167

THIS Copper-plate was found in the Barwani District in Madhya Bhārat. Its exact findspot has not been recorded. The inscription on it was first noticed very briefly in the Annual Report of the Rajputana Museum for 1924-25, and was later on edited, without any facsimile or translation, by Mr. R. R. Haldar in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XIX, pp. 261 f. Its contents and date were discussed by me in an article entitled 'The Age of the Bāgh Caves' in the Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. XXI, pp. 79 f. The record is edited here from an excellent facsimile which I owe to the kindness of the Government Epigraphist for India.

The record is incised on a single copper-plate and on one side of it, measuring 8" broad by 3.2" high. The plate has no ring-hole and there is no indication of a seal having ever been attached to it. The inscription consists of eight lines, of which the last, containing the sign manual of Subandhu, is incised in the margin on the left.

The characters resemble those of the so-called Indore plate of Svāmidāsa and have knobs or boxes at the top. The numerical symbols for 100, 60 and 7 occur in line 6. The language is Sanskrit. There is no admixture of Prakrit forms in the wording of the grant. The orthography shows the usual reduplication of the consonant preceding and following r, see gattā-pathakāḥ, 1.1 and -paddrakē, 1.2.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Mahārāja Subandhu. Unlike Svāmidāsa and other princes of Khandesh, he gives no indication that he acknowledged the suzerainty of any other ruler, though, as shown below, his grant is probably dated in the same reckoning as theirs. The object of the present inscription is to record the grant, by Mahārāja Subandhu, of a field owned by a person named Sāti in the village (padraka) Sōhajanā which was included in the pathaka of Udumbaragartā. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Shashṭhisvāmin of the Bhāradvāja gōtra. The order was issued from the city of Māhishmatī. As no word like vāsaka is attached to the place-name, Māhishmatī was probably the royal capital at the time. The Dūtaka was Guhadāsa. The royal sign manual Srī-Subandhōḥ occurs in the margin on the left as in the case of the Khandesh plates.<sup>1</sup> The record is dated in the year 167 (expressed by numerical symbols) of an unspecified era, on the seventh tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada. The date does not admit of verification.

Mr. Haldar, who first edited the present inscription, referred its date to the Gupta era and took it as equivalent to 486 A.C.<sup>2</sup> He thought that Mahārāja Subandhu was a subordinate of the Gupta Emperor Budhagupta whose Eran Stone inscription is dated in the Gupta year 165 (484-85 A.C.), i.e., just two years before the date of the Barwani grant.

This view, however, presents several difficulties. If Mahārāja Subandhu was a feudatory of the Guptas, it looks strange that he does not name his liege-lord or even generally refer to the suzerainty of the Guptas as in the grants of the so-called Parivrājaka Mahārājas. As a matter of fact, Gupta suzerainty seems to have received a setback in Central India in the second half of the fifth century A.C.; for we have several records from Mandasor and the adjoining places in the ancient Daśārṇa country, which are dated not in the Gupta era, but in the Mālava saivat. Further, we learn from the Bālāghāt plates of Prithivīshēṇa II (circa 470-90 A.C.) that the king of Mālava was one of the vassals of his father Narēndrasēna. If Daśārṇa and Mālava had broken away from the Gupta

Empire, it is not likely that Anūpa which lay further to the west continued to acknowledge Gupta supremacy.<sup>1</sup> The year 167 is not, therefore, likely to be of the Gupta era.

The general resemblance that the present grant bears to the three preceding grants from Khandesh in respect of characters, phraseology, royal sign manual etc., indicates that it belongs to the same period as the latter. The era in which these four grants are dated must therefore be identical. As shown above, the three grants from Khandesh are dated in the so-called Kalachuri-Chēdi era founded by the Ābhīra king Īśvarasēna in 249 A.C. The date of the present grant, if referred to the same era, would correspond to the 5th August 417 A.C. As stated above, it does not admit of verification.

Māhishmatī, from which the plate was issued, is generally identified with the holy place Oṅkāra Māndhātā on the Narmadā, in the Nēmāḍ District of the Madhya Pradesh. The description of the city given by the Sanskrit poet Kālidāsa in his Raghuvamśa (VI, 43), namely, that it was surrounded by the river Narmadā like a girdle, suits Oṅkāra Māndhātā very well. Udumbaragartā, which was the chief town of a pathaka named after it, may be Umarbār, now a small village on the western border of the Barwani District. It lies on the Jharkhal, a small tributary of the Narmadā. Sohajanā may be Sejwānik, about 4 miles south-east of Barwani.

NO. 7; PLATE III C

BAGH CAVE PLATE OF SUBANDHU

THIS copper-plate was found in the debris of Cave No. II at Bāgh in Madhya Bhārat. The inscription on it was first brought to notice in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Department of the Gwalior State for 1928-29, pp. 15 and 28. Its date was discussed by me in an article on the age of the Bāgh Caves published in the Indian Historical Quarterly, Vol. XXI, pp. 79 f. It is edited here from an ink impression kindly supplied by the Director of the Archaeological Department of Madhya Bhārat.

The record is on a single copper-plate and, like the preceding inscription of Subandhu, it is incised on only one face of it, measuring 8.3" broad by 4.5" high. It has no ring-hole and there is no indication of a seal having ever been attached to it. The inscription consists of fourteen lines, of which the last containing the royal sign manual is incised in the margin on the left. The record is in a good state of preservation except in the first three lines where a few aksharas in the upper left corner have now become illegible. Again, the plate has lost a small triangular piece with its two arms measuring 1.5" each in the lower right corner which has resulted in the unfortunate loss of an important portion of the grant mentioning its date. The size of letters varies from .15" to .3".

The characters are of the western variety of the South Indian alphabets resembling those of Svāmidāsa's plate<sup>1</sup> except that most of the letters have nail-heads instead of knob-heads. The only peculiarities that call for notice are that the length of the medial ī is shown by a double curve as in the Vākāṭaka grants, see chīvara, l. 8, and that t, which is generally unlooped, shows a loop in āchchettā l. 12. The orthography shows the usual reduplication of the consonant following r, see chandr-ārkk-ārṇava, ll. 5-6.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Mahārāja Subandhu. The object of it is to register the grant, by Subandhu, of a village situated in the pathaka of Dāsīlakapalli.<sup>2</sup> The grant was made for providing materials for the worship of the Buddha and maintaining an alms-house in the vihāra called Kalāyana,<sup>3</sup> for repairing the broken and dilapidated portions of the vihāra and for supplying clothing, food, medicine, beds and seats to the Community of Venerable Monks hailing from all the four directions. The order was issued by the king personally from Māhishmatī which was evidently his capital at the time. His sign manual Mahārāja-Subandhōp occurs in the margin on the left as on the preceding Barwani plate.

<sup>2</sup> The name of this pathaka was read at first as Dāsīlakapalli. See A.R.A.D.G.S. for 1928-29, p. 28.

The plate bore a date at the end of lines 12 and 13, but owing to the breaking off of a piece of it, only the name of the month Śrāvaṇa now remains. All other details are now lost. The date of the Barwani grant made by the same Mahārāja Subandhu shows, however, that the inscription can be referred to the early decades of the fifth century A.C. Māhishmatī, as stated before, is probably identical with Oṅkār Māndhātā in the Nēmāḍ District of the Madhya Pradesh. Dāsīlakapallī may be identical with Dēs-wālīā which lies about 14 miles almost due south of the Bāgh Caves.

(Line 4) Be it known to you that for the increase of the religious merit of my parents and myself, this village has been granted by me together with udraṅga<sup>6</sup> and uparikara,<sup>7</sup> as an agrahāra according to the maxim of waste land,<sup>8</sup> in order that it may be used for (defraying the expenses of) perfume, frankincense, flowers and offerings as well as for maintaining an alms-house, for repairing broken and rent portions (of the vihāra) and for providing the Community of Venerable Monks coming from (all) the four quarters, with clothing, food, nursing of the sick, beds, seats as well as medicine in the Monastery called Kalāyana (the Abode of Art) caused to be constructed by Dattātaka, as long as the moon, the sun, the oceans, planets, constellations and the earth would endure.

(L. 10) Having known this, our officers and rulers of other countries should not cause obstruction out of their love [for religion] and regard for us, while the monks (of this Vihāra) are enjoying (the village).

(Here occurs a benedictive and imprecatory verse.)

(L. 12) My own command . . . . . in (the month) Srāvaṇa . . . . .

(In the margin) Of the Mahārāja Subandhu.

<sup>6</sup> The meaning of Udraṅga is still uncertain. Monier Williams in his Sanskrit Dictionary gives inter alia the following meanings:—the place where anything is kept, a store-room or receptacle. S-ōdraṅga in this sense would correspond to sa-sībaram in l. 12 of No. 20, below; but it is noteworthy that it is mentioned there in addition to the latter. S-ōdraṅga and s-ōparikara are generally used together to qualify the village or the land granted. They correspond to sa-kṣipta and s-ōpakṣipta which occur in a similar context in other records. In line 17 of the Hyderabad plates of the Western Chālukya king Pulakēśin II (Ind. Ant., Vol. VI, p. 73) the expression sa-kṣiptaḥ s-ōparikaraḥ is used in place of s-ōdraṅgaḥ s-ōparikaraḥ which shows that udraṅga has the same meaning as kṣipta. Kauṭilya's Arthasāstra (second ed. by Shama Sastry, p. 60) mentions kṣipta as one of the sources of royal income. Its derivation from kṣip to fix seems to point to the meaning of 'fixed assessment'. Udraṅga which, as shown above, is a synonym of kṣipta, has therefore probably the meaning of a land-tax.

<sup>7</sup> Uparikara is the counterpart of antaḥ-kara or antar-āya, which is mentioned in some southern records. See Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, p. 27. It seems therefore to denote an external or additional tax, probably levied in kind such as is mentioned in the MSM., adbhāṣya VII, vv. 130-32. It corresponds to bhōga mentioned in some early records. Cf. Ep. Ind., Vol. XXII, p. 175, n. 8.

<sup>8</sup> Bhūmī-chebbidra is explained in the lexicon Vaijyantī as krishya-ayōgyā bhūḥ i. e., land unfit for cultivation. The person, who brought such land under cultivation by cutting down trees etc., became the owner of it. Cf. sthānu-chebbidraḥ kādāram in MSM., adb. IX, v. 44. Bhūmī-chebbidra-nyāyēna therefore means 'with full proprietary rights'.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE TRAIKUTAKAS

No. 8; PLATE IVA

PARDI PLATE OF DAHRASENA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 207

PARDI is the headquarters of a tālukā of the same name, 50 miles south of Surat, in the Surat District of the Bombay State. The present plates, which were found in 1884 in the course of digging a tank at Pārdī, were first brought to notice by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji who edited them with a translation, but without a lithograph, in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XVI, pp. 346 ff. They were subsequently published, with a translation and collotype plates, by Dr. E. Hultzsch in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. X, pp. 51 ff. I edit them here from the facsimiles accompanying Dr. Hultzsch's article.

"The plates are two in number, each measuring about  $9\frac{3}{8}$ " by 3". They are quite smooth, the edges of them being neither fashioned thicker nor raised into rims; but, as may be seen from the facsimile, the inscription is in a state of perfect preservation almost throughout. They are somewhat thin, so that the letters, though not very deep, show through on the backs of them, to such an extent that some of them can be read there. The interiors of the letters show the marks of the working of the engraver's tool.

"There is no ring of the ordinary kind, with a seal on it. But at each of the two ring-holes the plates were held together by a long copper wire,  $\frac{1}{8}$ " thick in the thickest part, which, after being passed through the ring-holes, had its ends twisted over and round and round so as to form a kind of complicated tie, without the ends being soldered together. As the ring-holes are not much larger than the wires, and as the plates appear to have been secured as soon as they were discovered, it would seem that these wires are the means by which the plates were fastened together ab initio.

"The weight of the two plates is 31 tolas, and of the two wires  $1\frac{1}{2}$  tolas; total,  $32\frac{1}{2}$  tolas = 12 $\frac{3}{4}$  oz.<sup>1</sup>"

The record consists of nine lines only, of which four are inscribed on the first and the remaining five on the second plate. The outer sides of the plates are blank. The engraver seems to have found the metal somewhat hard to work upon; his tool seems to have slipped occasionally (see e.g., kh of Vaiśākha 1.9) and his strokes and curves are not properly formed. The average size of letters is .2".

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets. Most of the letters have knobs at the top. The mātrās for the medial ā, ē and ai generally appear above the line (see e.g., skandhāvārād- and Traikkūṭakānām both in 1.1), while those for the medial ō appear as a horizontal stroke on either side, see karmmakarō, 1.2, pitrō-, 1.4, yaśō-, 1.5 etc. Medial au, which occurs only once, is bipartite as in Vākāṭaka records, see pautr-, 1.6. No distinction is made between the short and the long medial i. The signs for medial short and long u are added to the right of the vertical stroke in some cases and to its left in others. As instances of the former, see suddha, 1.9 and bhūmidah, 1.8 and for those of the latter, notice pād-ānuddhyātō, 1.1 and dūtakam-, 1.8. The curve for medial ri is curled in pitri 1.1, but in other cases (as e.g. in -bhivridhayē, 1.5, samatisriṣṭō and kriṣhatō in 1.6), it is exactly like that for r. The right hand hook of ñ is added to its subscript ch which is open on the left, see uktañ=cha, 1.7. The subscript n appears in two forms, see Naṇṇa, 1.3 and -ārṇṇava-, 1.5. The superscript n is unlooped in -antarggata, 1.4. The sign for b has a round top in brāhmaṇa-, 1.3. Sh generally appears with a notch in its left limb, see shashṭi-, 1.7, but notice its subscript form in kshiti, 1.5. The sign for the jihvāmūliya occurs in ll.6 and 7, and the numerical symbols for 200, 10, 7 and 3 in 1.9.

The language is Sanskrit, and except for an imprecatory verse towards the close, the record is in prose throughout. Attention may be drawn to the word santaka in 1.2 which is used here as in Vākāṭaka records in the sense of an official, and bhōjya, 1.6 which, contrary to Pāṇini VII, 3, 69, is employed in the sense of what is to be enjoyed.<sup>1</sup> The expression Buddhagupta-dūtakam in 1.8, which is evidently copied from an earlier record where it must have qualified some word like likhitam, is here wrongly connected with ājñā. As regards orthography we may note that a consonant following r, with the exception of sh, is doubled in several cases, see karmmakarō, 1.2, -ārṇṇava, 1.5, etc. Similarly dh is doubled before y in anuddhyāta, 1.1. Rules of sandhi have either not been observed, or violated in a few cases, see svāmīna atr-, 1.3, -bhivṛiddhayē ā-, 1.5, and krishatō praviśata-, ll.6-7.

The plates were issued from the victorious camp at Āmrakā by Mahārāja Dahrasēna (of the dynasty) of the Traikūṭakas. The object of the inscription is to record the donation, by Dahrasēna, of the village Kanīyas-Taḍākāsārikā in the Antar-Maṇḍalī vishaya to the Brāhmaṇa Naṇṇasvāmin, a resident of Kāpura. The grant was made for the increase of religious merit and glory of the king and his parents. The dūtaka was Buddhagupta.

The date of the grant is given in line 9 as the thirteenth tithi (expressed both in words and in numerical symbols) of the bright (fortnight) of Vaiśākha in the year 207 (expressed in numerical symbols only). The palaeography of the present inscription leaves no doubt that this date refers to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired year<sup>2</sup> 207, to the 23rd April 457 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

Dahrasēna calls himself Bhagavat-pāda-karmakara, 'a servant of the feet of Bhagavat'. He was, therefore, a worshipper of Vishṇu. He is identical with Dahrasēna, the son of Indradatta, 'the most devout worshipper of Vishṇu', whose silver coins were discovered at Damaṇ in the Surat District, Kāzad in the Indāpur tāluka of the Poona District, Karād near Sātārā and some other places.<sup>3</sup> He was apparently an independent king, as he is said, in the present grant, to have performed an Aśvamēdha sacrifice.

The localities mentioned here were identified by Dr. Fleet.<sup>4</sup> According to him the Antar-Maṇḍalī vishaya denotes 'the district of the territory between' the rivers Miṇḍhōlā on the north and the Pūrṇā on the south. I would rather take the expression to mean the district on both the banks of the Maṇḍalī (modern Miṇḍhōlā) river on the

<sup>2</sup> The date was first calculated by Dr. Fleet. It would correspond to the 4th April 456 A.C. if the year is taken to be current. In the case of the early records of the Kalachuri era, Nos. 1-34, the dates are calculated according to the epoch of 248-49 A.C.

analogy of Antar- Narmadā vishaya mentioned in the Sunao Kalā plates of Saṅgamasimha.<sup>1</sup> Kāpura<sup>2</sup> is a village of the same name, three miles south-south-west from Vyārā the head-quarters of the Vyārā subdivision of the Surat District. Kanīyas-Taḍākāsārikā means Smaller Taḍākāsārikā and may be represented by 'Tarsāri, fifteen miles almost due west of Kāpura and about half way between the Miṇḍhōlā and the Pūrṇā'. Āmrakā, where the king's camp was fixed, cannot be definitely identified as there are several villages of the name Ambachh or Āmbāchh in the neighbourhood, but of them the nearest to Kāpura is Ambachh, about 2 miles towards the south-west.

No. 9; PLATE IV B

SURAT PLATES OF VYAGHRASENA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 241

The plates were first brought to notice by Mr. A. M. T. Jackson, I. C. S., in a note which he added to Rev. H. R. Scott's article entitled 'Traikūṭaka coins from the Poona District' published in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XXIII, pp. 1 ff. They were subsequently edited with a translation and colotype plates, by Dr. E. Hultzsch in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XI, pp. 219 ff. I edit the inscription here from the facsimiles accompanying Dr. Hultzsch's article.

The copper-plates were found at Surat. They are two in number, each measuring between 9½ and 9¾ inches in breadth and about 3½ inches in height, and bear writing only on their inner sides. They are comparatively thin and have no raised rims, but the writing on them is in a state of fairly good preservation. A number of letters are filled with verdigris and therefore have not come out on the impressions, though their outlines are quite visible on the original plates. As in the case of the Pārḍī plates there are two ring-holes at the bottom of the inscribed side of the first plate, and two corresponding ones at the top of the second plate. A long copper wire is passed through the two holes on the right, and its ends are twisted round, but not soldered. A second copper wire may have held the plates together on the left, but is now missing. The total weight of the plates and wire is 50 tolas.<sup>2</sup> The record consists of eighteen lines, nine being inscribed on the inner side of each plate. The average size of letters is about .2".

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the Pārḍī plates<sup>3</sup>. Attention may be drawn here to the following additional peculiarities. The medial ā which is generally denoted by a horizontal stroke to the right is brought down like a vertical stroke in -ārāti-, l. 5, while in the case of m and l it is shown by a curve attached to the bottom of the letter, see pramāṇī-, l. 14, Hālāhala, l. 18. Notice also the curve denoting the mātrā for medial ē and ō in the case of m and ṅ in śarmmaṣṣē, l. 10 and mōdati, l. 16. The length of medial ī is in some cases (e.g., in śrī-Mahārāja, l. 7) indicated by a dot and in others (e.g., in palikā-, l. 14), it is indicated by two curves turned in opposite directions. The medial ṛi is generally denoted by curled curve, but in one case (viz. pramāṇīkritya, l. 14) the vowel is shown by a curve turned downwards and added to the left of the vertical. The subscript th is shown by a double curve open on the left, see sthira, l. 6 and sthiti, l. 12. The sign for the jihvāmūliya occurs in l. 1, and that for the upadhmaniya occurs in ll. 4, 5, 6 and 14. The numerical symbols for 200, 40, 10, 5 and 1 occur in l. 18.

The language is Sanskrit and except for two benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the record is in prose throughout. In copying the formal part of the grant from previous records, the official draftsman has forgotten to change the genders of some adjectival expressions to make them conform to the feminine name of the donated village. As regards orthography, it may be noted that the anusvāra is in most cases correctly replaced by a class nasal, but in vanśā, l. 5 and vanśya, l. 12 it is wrongly changed to the guttural nasal. The consonant following r is doubled in such cases as karmma-, l. 1, sarvva-, l. 3 dirggha, l. 13 and that preceding y is doubled in -anuddhyātō, l. 1 and rāj-āpatthya, l. 10.

The plates were issued by the illustrious Mahārāja Vyāghrasēna (of the dynasty) of the Traikūṭakas from the victorious Aniruddhapura. The king is described as the servant of the feet of Bhagavat (i.e., Vishṇu) and the lord of the Aparānta and other countries. Aparānta is North Konkan, the strip of land between the sea and the Western Ghats. It is, therefore, interesting to read in line 6 that the king had stationed an army of many great warriors to guard the sea as well as forts and towns.

The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Vyāghrasēna, of the village Purōhitapallikā in the Iksharakī āhāra to the Brāhmaṇa Nāgaśarman of the Bharadvāja gōtra. The grant was made for the increase of the religious merit of the donor and his parents. The writer of the grant was the Mahāsāndhivigrahika Karka and the dūtaka, Hālāhala.

The date is expressed in numerical symbols only in l. 18 as the fifteenth tithi of the bright (fortnight) of Kārttika of the year 241. Mahārāja Vyāghrasēna of the present plates who was a devotee of Vishṇu is clearly identical with the Paramavaishṇava Vyāghrasēna whose silver coins have been found at Kāzad in the Indāpur Taluka of the Poona District<sup>1</sup> and other places<sup>2</sup> in Western India. From these coins which resemble those of Dahrasēna, we learn that he was the son of Mahārāja Dahrasēna. The date of the present plates, therefore, must, like that of the Pārḍī plates, be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-249 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired<sup>3</sup> year 249, to the 14th October 490 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

As for the localities mentioned in the present plates, Aparānta, Ariake of Ptolemy and the Periplus, is, as already remarked, identical with North Konkan. As the Traikūṭakas were ruling over Aparānta, Trikūṭa, their home land, must have been situated in the west. It is noteworthy in this connection that Kālidāsa places Trikūṭa in Aparānta and the lexicographer Kēśava gives Sahyādri as a synonym for Trikūṭa.<sup>4</sup> The victorious Aniruddhapura was probably the Traikūṭaka capital as no word like vāsaka (camp) is attached to it. As Dr. Hultzsch has pointed out, it is probably identical with

<sup>3</sup> If the year 249 is applied as current, the date would correspond to the 25th October 489 A.C. As the Kalachuri year began on Kārttika śu. di. 1, the date of the present plates (Kārttika śu. di. 15) cannot in any case fall in 491 A.C., as supposed by Hultzsch.

the victorious Aniruddhapurī mentioned in the Bagumrā plates<sup>1</sup> of the Sēndraka Allaśakti. He identified it with Sūrpāraka, Sopārā in the Ṭhāṇā District, on the authority of the lexicon Vaijayanti.<sup>2</sup> But the statement in the lexicon only places Sūrpāraka in the Aparānta country. It does not state that it was the capital of Aparānta at any time, much less at the time of the Traikūṭakas. Besides, the mention of Aniruddhapurī as the place of residence of the Brāhmaṇa donee of the Bagumrā grant indicates that it should be looked for not very far from the donated village which was near Bagumrā. It was, therefore, probably situated in South Gujarāt. I have not, however, been able to trace any place-name similar to it in that part of the country. Purōhitapallikā, the donated village, is probably identical with Pāl, two miles to the west of Surat.<sup>3</sup> Iksharakī, the headquarters of the āhāra in which it was situated, is probably represented by Achchhāran, about 9 miles north of Surat.

TRANSLATION

Hail! From the victorious Aniruddhapura,—the illustrious Mahārāja Vyāghrasēna (of the family) of the Traikūṭakas—who meditates on the feet of (his) mother and father; who is a servant of the feet of Bhagavat; who is the lord of the Aparānta and other prosperous countries acquired by his arms and (of those) inherited (by him); whose lotus-like feet are bowed to by countless kings; whose bright fame, acquired by bestowing (in charity) abundant wealth obtained by the protection (of his subjects) with his arm (as well as) by his prowess, has pervaded all quarters; whose body is lovely like the autumnal moon; whose noble actions resemble those of distinguished men of bygone times; who has been created as if to show an example of good conduct; who has overcome neighbouring foes; who is more distinguished than other kings; who is an ornament of his family; who, by his armies of many great warriors, has occupied forts, cities and seas; who by nature is as grave as the sea (is deep), and as firm as (Himālaya,) the chief of mountains; who is naturally attractive to people; whose wealth is shared by learned men, refugees, elders, relatives and good persons; whose enviable fortune is allied with self-restraint worthy of his noble birth—issues this order to all residents of Purōhita-pallikā included in the Iksharakī āhāra.

(Line 9)—“Be it known to you, that for augmenting the religious merit of (Our) mother and father and Ourselves, We have given this village, (which is) not to be entered by policemen and soldiers except for (arresting) thieves and rebels, which is exempt from all taxes and forced labour, (and is) to be enjoyed as an agrahāra by his descendants as long as the moon, the sun, the oceans and the earth will endure, to the Brāhmaṇa Nāgaśarman of the Bharadvāja gōtra.

(L. 12) “Therefore, considering that wealth is liable to be lost, that life is followed by separation, and that virtues (alone) endure for a long time, and believing that gifts made to meritorious persons are noble deeds, kings born in our family and others, (who are) desirous of accumulating, for a long time, fame as bright and splendid as moon-beams, should consent to and preserve this gift of the village.”

NO. 10; PLATE V A

KANHERI PLATE OF THE TRAIKUTAKAS : (KALACHURI) YEAR 245

KANHERI is situated on the island of Salsette, about twenty miles from Bombay. It is well-known for its numerous Buddhist caves. The place was visited by the Chinese pilgrim Fa Hian who has left us a description of a five-storeyed cave temple there. The present plate was discovered in 1839 by Dr. James Bird. He gives the following account of its discovery in his article entitled 'the opening of the Topes at the caves of Kānari and the relics found in them', which was published in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. X, pp. 94 ff. 'Immediately in front of the large arched cave and on a ledge of the mountain, some thirty or forty feet below, there are several small Thopas or monumental receptacles for the bones of a Buddha or Rahat, built of cut stone at the base. They were once of a pyramidal shape, but are now much dilapidated, and appear like a heap of stones. Several years ago I thought of opening some of them, in expectation of obtaining coins or other relics; but found no favourable opportunity until lately, when several lengthened visits in company with Dr. Heddle gave me the desired means of doing so.

'The largest of the topes selected for examination appeared to have been one time between twelve and sixteen feet in height. It was much dilapidated, and was penetrated from above to the base, which was built of cut stone. After digging to the level of the ground and clearing away the materials, the workmen came to a circular stone, hollow in the centre, and covered at the top by a piece of gypsum. This contained two small copper urns, in one of which were small ashes mixed with a ruby, a pearl, small pieces of gold and a small gold box containing a piece of cloth; in the other a silver box and some ashes were found. Two copper-plates containing legible inscriptions in the Lath or cave character, accompanied the urns and these, as far as I have yet been able to decipher them, inform us that the persons buried here were of the Buddhist faith. The smaller of the copper-plates bears an inscription in two lines, the last part of which contains the Buddhist creed.'

Dr. Bird kept the plates with himself and published a small lithograph in his Historical Researches. He subsequently wrote the aforementioned article in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal which was accompanied by an eye-copy of the record with an interlinear transcription in Dēvanāgarī and an English translation. Later on Rev. J. Stevenson, D.D., attempted a transcript and a translation from the same eye-copy, as the plate could not be traced after Dr. Bird's death. His article was published in July 1853 in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. V, pp. 10 ff. The work of both Dr. Bird and Dr. Stevenson was very imperfect, though the former recognised that it was a Buddhist inscription and the latter gave a correct reading of its date. The record was first correctly read by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji with his wonted ingenuity, from the eye-copy published in the J.A.S.B. His transcript, which was accompanied by an English translation and an enlarged facsimile of Dr. Bird's lithograph, was published in the Inscriptions from the Cave-Temples of Western India, pp. 56 ff. The plate is edited here from the same facsimile. It will be seen that the transcript given here differs from Pandit Bhagvanlal's text in very few places.

The record consists of nine lines written breadthwise on one side of the plate.<sup>1</sup> The latter does not seem to have been properly cleaned before Dr. Bird's facsimile was prepared; for several curves, mātrās and anusvāras, which were probably filled with verdigris on the original plate, do not appear at all in the lithograph. In making the transcript given below I have, however, taken the lithograph to be an accurate copy of the original plate, as it is now impossible to say which of the mistakes in the lithograph are due to the fault of the copyist.

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and closely resemble those of the other Traikūṭaka plates. The only points worth noticing are that the length of the medial i is denoted by a curve curling to the right in kshirōdah, l. 7 and to the left in kshira-tōyō in the same line; the medial ū is shown in a peculiar way in ghūrṇpat, l. 7; the sign for the upadhmaniya occurs in l. 2 and that for the jihvāmūliya in l. 7. The language is Sanskrit and except for a verse at the end, the record is in prose throughout. The only orthographical peculiarities that call for notice are that the consonant following r is reduplicated in many cases; see e.g., pravarddhamāna-, l. 1, -antarggata- l. 2, etc., and that v is doubled seemingly after an anusvāra in *sa[m̐*]vvatsara*, l. 1.

The inscription refers itself to the prosperous regime of the Traikūṭakas and records that in the year two hundred and forty-five (expressed in words only) Buddharuchi, the son of Buddhaśrī and Pushyavarman and a devoted servant of the holy Sākya Sage (Buddha) and the venerable monk who heard his law, who hailed from the village Kāṇaka included in the Sindhu vishaya, erected at Kṛishṇagiri the Chaitya, in which the plate was found, and which he dedicated to the venerable Śāradvatīputra, the foremost disciple of the great sage (Buddha). After invoking the blessings of gods, Yakshas, Siddhas, Vidyādharas, Māṇibhadras, Pūrṇabhadra, Pañchika, Vajrapāṇi, etc., the record closes with the hope that the fame of Pushyamitra's son (i.e., Buddharuchi) would last as long as the milky ocean, the Mēru mountain and rivers would endure. The last line contains only two letters which seem to read dādhā and perhaps refer to the tooth relic of Śāradvatīputra on which the stūpa was erected.

Pandit Bhagvanlal, who first read correctly the dynastic name Traikūṭaka, connected it with the expression containing the date, and understood it to mean the two hundred and forty-fifth year of the sovereignty of the Traikūṭakas. He, therefore, thought that he had found in the present plate a clear statement that the era known as the Kalachuri or Chēdi era was founded by the Traikūṭakas, who, in later times, assumed the dynastic name of Haihaya or Kalachuri<sup>2</sup>. This view was at first accepted by Fleet<sup>3</sup>, but later on<sup>4</sup> he pointed out in his article on the era that the real meaning of the expression, in accordance with an early Hindu method of expressing dates, may just as well be 'during the augmenting sovereignty of the Traikūṭakas and in the year 245 (of an unspecified era).' As a matter of fact, we find no dynastic or regional name associated with the era till the eleventh century A.C. The date of the present inscription would correspond to 493-94 A.C. or 494-95 A.C., according as the year 245 was current or expired. It does not contain any details for calculation.

<sup>4</sup> See his article 'Trikuṭa and the so-called Kalachuri or Chēdi Era', J.R.A.S. (1905), pp. 566 ff.

As for the localities mentioned in this inscription, Kṛishṇagiri is evidently Kanḥēri, and Sindhu viśhaya the district of Sindh in North India. The village Kāṇaka, from which Buddharuchi hailed, I am unable to identify.

<sup>2</sup> Neither of the two mātrās on tra can be seen, but there is no uncertainty about the dynastic name which occurs in the two other records (Nos. 8 and 9). Pandit Bhagvanlal read भिकूटकानां.

<sup>3</sup> There was evidently an anusvāra on sa which is responsible for the reduplication (wrong, of course,) of v. Pandit Bhagvanlal took the upper sign for m. Read संवत्सर -.

<sup>4</sup> The vertical stroke joining what now looks like an anusvāra to the horizontal stroke of the superscript n has not come out in the lithograph.

<sup>6</sup> The superscript r has been wrongly written like the medial i. The sign for the medial i on bb has not come out in the lithograph.

<sup>8</sup> The subscript letter appears like śa, but there is no uncertainty about the name.

<sup>9</sup> The subscript curve appears like that of medial ṛi, but it is clearly a mistake of the scribe.

<sup>10</sup> Pandit Bhagvanlal read वङ्गणकाय्य, but the first akṣara has clearly the sign of medial ṛ. Vāṅkaṇaka may be a follower of Vaṅkaṇa. The latter is, perhaps, the presiding diety of the Vaṅka mountain mentioned in some Jātakas. See, for instance, the Vessantara Jātaka (Eng. Tr. by Cowell and Rouse, Vol. VI, p. 266) The Kathāsaritsāgara mentions the Vaṅkaṇaka mountain.

TRANSLATION

Obeisance to the Omniscient (Buddha)! In the augmenting kingdom of the Traikūṭakas, in the year two hundred increased by forty-five, in the Great Monastery at Kṛishṇagiri, Buddharuchi, a resident of the village Kāṇaka included in the Sindhu vishaya (district), the son of the glorious Buddhaśrī and Pushyavarman, skilful in serving the feet of the holy Śākya sage who was mighty by the possession of the ten powers and attained complete enlightenment, (and) of the venerable monk who heard his law, has erected this Chaitya with dressed stones and bricks to last as long as the moon, the sun, the oceans and the earth will endure, (which is) dedicated to the venerable Śāradvatīputra the chief disciple of the same great sage (i.e., Buddha).

(L. 6) Moreover, as long as the milky ocean, the waters of the whirl-pools of which are whirled by the alligators tossed about by thousands of (its) waves, is an ocean of milk, as long as the rugged Mēru is piled with huge rocks, as long as rivers of very clear water flow with (their) water into the ocean — even so long may this lasting and auspicious fame resort to the excellent son of him (who is) named Pushya!

(L. 9). A canine tooth (?)

INSCRIPTION OF SANGAMASIMHA

NO. 11; PLATE V B

SUNAO KALA PLATES OF SANGAMASIMHA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 292

THESE plates were discovered in November 1898. They were first published, with a translation, but without a facsimile, by Mr. A.M.T. Jackson, I.C.S., in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XX, pp. 211 ff., and subsequently with a translation and photo-lithographs by Prof. Sten Konow in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. X, pp. 72 ff. I edit the inscription here from the lithographs accompanying Prof. Sten Konow's article.

The copper-plates are two in number. 'They were found buried about two feet below the surface of a cart track in the village of Sunev Kulla in the Hansot Mahāl of the Broach District... The first plate is entire. The second has suffered damage (1) by the wrenching of the seal, which has destroyed a few aksharas in the first line and (2) by the breaking off of a piece of the left-hand edge, which has destroyed one akshara in line 4, two in line 5, two in line 6 and one in line 7... The lower edge of the first plate was formerly attached to the upper edge of the second by two copper rings, one of which remains attached to each of the plates. The seal which was probably carried by the left-hand ring has been wrenched off and is lost. The letters are deeply cut and in many places show through on the back of the plates.<sup>1</sup> Each plate measures 12½" broad and 6½" high. The record consists of twenty-five lines, of which twelve are inscribed on the first, and the remaining thirteen on the second plate. The average size of letters is ¼".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the Traikūṭaka grants. There is a triangular wedge at the top of letters except in the case of b, ṅ, ṣ and sometimes of l and r. The initial ē which occurs in l.12 shows a closed hook on the left. The medial ō and au are not clearly distinguished, compare e.g. ō in yaśō-vāptayē l.11 and au in Lankākshi l.6. L occurs in two forms: (1) with a short vertical as in kulaputraka and kuśala, l.3 and (2) with the vertical bent to the left as in Gālava, l.5 and phalaṁ, l.21. Th has the same form, whether it is independent or subscript, see e.g., yathā, l.4 and sthiti, l.9. A final consonant is indicated by a short horizontal stroke which takes the place of the wedge at the top; see vasēt, l.20. The sign of the Jihvāmūliya occurs in l.15 and the symbols for 200, 90, 10, 5 and 2 in l.25.

The language is Sanskrit and except for four benedictive and imprecatory verses in ll. 19-23, the record is in prose throughout. As regards orthography, we may note that the consonant following r is doubled in many cases, see sarvān, l.2, Antar-Narmadā, l.4, etc.; so also dh preceding y, see pād-ānuddhyāto, l.1. Samgamasīha for Samgamasimha and karishayatām for karshayatām are evidently due to the influence of the Prakrits.

The plates were issued by the Mahāsāmanta, the illustrious Mahārāja, Samgamasimha from Bharukachcha. The object of the inscription is to record the grant of the village Soṇavvā in the Antar-Narmadā vishaya to five Brāhmaṇas, who were residents of Bharukachchha, on the occasion of the Mahākārttikī, i.e., the full-moon day of Kārttika. The purpose of the grant was to provide for the performance of the five great sacrifices, viz., balī, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and havana. The grant was written by

Vishṇushēṇa according to the order conveyed by the Mahāpratīhāra Gōpādhyaka. The dūtaka, was the Sāndhivigrahika Rēvaḍhyaka.

The inscription is dated, in the last line, on the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika of the year 292 of an unspecified era. The tithi and the year are expressed in numerical symbols only. As the characters of the present record resemble those of Traikūṭaka grants, its date must likewise be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., the date would correspond, for the expired year<sup>1</sup> 292, to the 20th October 541 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

Saṅgamasimha calls himself Mahāsāmanta, which indicates his feudatory rank. Prof. Sten Konow called attention to the fact that 'the wording of our grant sometimes recalls the phraseology of the Sarsavṇī plates; compare ll. 18-19 with ll. 26-27 of the latter, and, especially, the end of the two grants, where we have, in both cases, first an instrumental (-prāpit-ājñayā and -viññāpanayā, respectively), then a bahurīhi ending in -dūtakam, and followed by likhitam and finally the date expressed in the same way in numerical figures.<sup>2</sup> From this he conjectured that Saṅgamasimha was a feudatory of the Kalachuris, who, down to the time of Buddharāja (609 or 610 A.C.), retained the command of the country round Broach. He thought that either Kṛishṇarāja, the grandfather of Buddharāja, or his predecessor, must have been the overlord of Saṅgamasimha. A comparison of the wording of the present record with the phraseology of the Surat plates of Vyāghrasēna would, however, show that the former inscription bears a closer resemblance to the latter than to any record of the Kalachuris; for, besides the peculiarities noticed by Prof. Sten Konow, all of which are also found in the Surat plates of Vyāghrasēna, our inscription has copied lines 16-19 verbatim from earlier records of the Traikūṭakas (see, e.g., lines 12-15 of the Surat plates of Vyāghrasēna), the only difference being the omission (evidently inadvertent) of apadānam after avadātam. Saṅgamasimha's present inscription was, therefore, drafted by a clerk, who had before him the earlier records of the Traikūṭakas. And this is not at all surprising, for Śōṇavvā, the village granted by the present charter, is only two miles to the north of the Kīm which probably formed the northern boundary of the Traikūṭaka kingdom. It is not, therefore, unlikely that Saṅgamasimha had under his sway some territory which was previously ruled over by the Traikūṭakas. The similarity in the wording of the grants of Saṅgamasimha and Buddharāja is, therefore, due to the draftsmen of both having drawn upon earlier Traikūṭaka records.

The successors of Saṅgamasimha do not seem to have retained their hold over the Broach District for a long time; for within fifty years from the date of the present plates we find that the neighbouring country came under the rule of another feudatory, Nirihul-laka, of the Kalachuri Emperor, Saṅkaragaṇa and soon after, we find Saṅkaragaṇa's son Buddharāja himself, donating a village in the Bharukachchha vishaya.

As for the localities named in the present grant Bharukachchha, which was probably the capital of Saṅgamasimha, is modern Broach. The donees also were residents of this place. Śōṇavvā, the village granted, is probably Sunao Kalā, 18 m. west by south of Broach, where the plates were found. The Antar-Narmadā vishaya, in which it was situated, was, as its name indicates,<sup>3</sup> a district comprising territory on both the sides of the Narmadā.

<sup>3</sup> The name Antar-Narmadā of the vishaya must be taken, as Dr. Fleet has shown (Ind. Ant., XXXII, p. 56), to be a Bahurīhi compound, though the correct form in that case should be Antar-Narmada. It may be noted that the Vājupurāṇa (adhyāya 45, śl. 130) speaks of Āntara-Narmada vishayas. Cf. Nāsiky-ādhyāś-cha yē ch-ānyē yē ch-aiv-āntara-Narmadāḥ | Bhūrukachchbāḥ (Bhūrukachchbāḥ?) samābhēyāḥ sabasā jāsvutair-āpi ||

TRANSLATION

(Line 4). “Be it known to you that for obtaining religious merit and fame for Our mother and father and for Ourselves, We, availing Ourselves of the holiest Mahākārttikī<sup>8</sup> tithi today, have granted with a libation of water, the village Śoṇavvā situated in the Antar-Narmadā vishaya together with the udraṅga<sup>9</sup> and the uparikara,<sup>10</sup> as well as excise and octroi duties, (which is) not to be entered by Chāṭas and bhaṭas, (and is) to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons’ sons, according to the maxim of uncultivated land—to the (following) residents of Bharukachchha, (viz.,) the Brāhmaṇa Arantadatta of the Chhandōgi gōtra (who is) a student of the Chhandōga (i.e., Sāmavēda) (and) Prajāpatiśarman of the Gālava gōtra, (who is) a student of the Chhandōga, and Sivadēva of the Laukākhī gōtra,

<sup>2</sup> Rājasthānīya, lit., one who occupies the position of a king, probably in the administration of justice. Bühler calls attention to the definition of the term in Kshēmendra’s Lōkaprakāśa, viz., prajā-pālan-ārtham-udvabati rakṣayati cha sa Rājasthānīyaḥ, ‘he who carries out the object of protecting subjects and shelters them is a Rājasthānīya’. In line 17 of the Mandasor stone inscription of Yaśō-varman (C.I.I., Vol. III, p. 154) Abhayadatta is said to have protected some territory after the manner of a Rājasthānīya. So the term seems to indicate also the governor of a province. Kalhaṇa also mentions the office rājasthāna or rājasthānādhipikāra. Stein, and following him, Vogel hold that the Rājasthānīya was an officer of justice. (See A.C.S. Part I, p. 122). Fleet was inclined to think that ‘Viceroy’ was too exalted a title to be a suitable equivalent, because the Rājasthānīya is, in some records, mentioned ‘rather low down in the list of officials’. (C.I.I., Vol. III, p. 157). It is noteworthy that in the present record the Rājasthānīya heads the list of officials.

<sup>3</sup> Uparika is mentioned in some Gupta records as the head of a bhukti or Commissioner. The title Mahārāja is sometimes added to the term. The Uparika Mahārājas recommended the appointment of Vishayapatis (heads of districts) who were subordinate to them. (Ep. Ind., Vol. XV, p. 133). According to the definition given by Bṛihaspati, Uparika appears to have been a Magistrate. Ibid. XXIV, p. 134.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE EARLY KALACHURIS

NO. 12; PLATE VI

ABHONA PLATES OF SANKARAGANA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 347

THESE plates were found in the possession of a Rajput family of Ābhōṇa, a village in Kalvan tālukā of the Nāsik District in the Bombay State. They were edited, with lithographs and a translation, by Prof. K. B. Pathak in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. IX, pp. 296 ff. I edit them here from the same lithographs.

The copper-plates are two in number, and are inscribed on one side only, each one measuring 9.7" broad and 7" high. Except for a mistake here and there, the writing on them has been well executed and is in a state of good preservation. Each plate has two holes, about .5" in diameter, at the top for the rings which must have originally connected it with the other plate of the set, but no ring or seal was apparently discovered. The weight of the plates is 132 tolas<sup>1</sup>. The record consists of thirty-four lines, seventeen being inscribed on the inner side of each plate. The average size of letters is .25".

and sthēyasā-, ll. 24-25; b shows a notch on the left, see vibōdhana-, l. 5, and y is tripartite, see Ujjayanī, l. 1. A final consonant is shown by a horizontal stroke on the top in ll. 19 and 30 and by its small size, in l. 28. Punctuation is indicated by double vertical strokes in ll. 29-31, 33 and 34. The sign of the jihvāmūliya occurs twice in l. 4 and that of the upadhmaniya thrice, in ll. 8, 11 and 26. The numerical symbols for 300, 40, 10, 7 and 5 occur in l. 34. Of these the symbol for 7 deserves special notice, its upper curve being here separated from the vertical by a knob as in the Sirpur plate of the Mahārāja Rudrasēna.<sup>1</sup>

The language is Sanskrit. Except for five benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the record is in prose throughout. Its eulogistic portion is composed in an ornate style which recalls that of Valabhī grants.<sup>2</sup> Again, as stated below, the present plates were issued from Ujjayanī, which was for some time, a second capital of the Gupta Empire. The draftsman who composed the present record was probably well acquainted with Gupta inscriptions, from which he has evidently borrowed certain epithets which are employed here to eulogize the donor Saṅkaragaṇa.<sup>3</sup> It may, again, be noted that both in its eulogistic and formal parts, this record has several expressions which are either imitated or copied verbatim from the earlier Traikūṭaka grants.<sup>4</sup> This shows that the Kaṭachchuri empire comprised some provinces which were previously under the rule of the Traikūṭakas. As regards orthography, the only peculiarities that call for notice are that the consonant following r is doubled in many places, see, e.g., durllāṅghē l. 2, and dharm-ārttha-, l. 12, and that a class-nasal is often used instead of anusvāra, as in kalanika, l. 4.

The plates were issued by the illustrious Saṅkaragaṇa of the Kaṭachchuri (Early Kalachuri) dynasty from his camp at Ujjayanī. He was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara and was the son of the illustrious Kṛishṇarāja 'who from his very birth was solely devoted to Paśupati'. Saṅkaragaṇa is described as the lord of the country extending from the eastern to the western ocean and of other lands.

<sup>1</sup> Line 9 of No. 4 above. Pandit Bhagvanlal read this symbol doubtfully as 8, but in view of the clear mention of the date in words in l. 34 of the present record, it will have to be taken as a sign of 7.

<sup>2</sup> Compare, for instance, the utprēkshā in yas=saṁśraya-viśēsha-lōbbhād=iva sakalair=ābhigāmikair=itarais=cha guṇair=uplāḥ in lines 5-6 with that in rūp-lōbbhād=iv=āstritāḥ sarasam=ābhigāmikair=gguṇaiḥ which occurs in connection with the description of Dharasēna I in many Valabhī grants.

The object of the present inscription is to record the grant, by Śaṅkaragaṇa, of a hundred nivartanas of land, measuring forty nivartanas on either side, in the village Vallisikā which was situated in the viśhaya (district) of Bhōgavardhana. The donee was a Brāhmaṇa<sup>1</sup> of the Taittiriya sākhā and Gautama gōtra residing at Kallivana. The purpose of the grant, which was made at the request of Gōggā,<sup>2</sup> is stated to be to provide for the maintenance of bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and other rites.

The grant is dated, both in words and in numerical symbols, on the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Śrāvaṇa of the year 347. Though no era is specified, the date must plainly be referred to the Kalachuri era. It does not admit of verification in the absence of the necessary details, but according to the epoch of 248-49 A. C. which suits other verifiable early dates of the era, the date of the present grant would correspond, for the expired year<sup>3</sup> 347, to the 3rd August 597 A. C.

As for the localities mentioned in the present grant, Ujjayanī is, of course, modern Ujjain in Central India. Kallivana, where the donee was residing is modern Kalvan, the chief town of the Kalvan tālukā of the Nāsik District. It may be noted in this connection that the present plates were found at Ābhōṇa which lies only seven miles west of Kalvan. Bhōgavardhana, the headquarters of the district in which the donated village was situated, is probably Bhōkardhan (20° 16' N. and 75° 46' 56" E.) in the Hyderabad State, where a large Brahmanical cave temple of about 8th century A.D. has been recently excavated.<sup>4</sup> Vallisikā is modern Valsā, 7 miles south of Bhōkardhan.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Prof. Pathak read the name of the Brāhmaṇa in line 21 as Āhmaṇasvāmin. The first akshara of this word is certainly not ā, the form of which may be seen in āchchbātā, l. 28. I read it as prā which, I think, is incorrectly written for brā. The scribe has confused p and b in another place also, see pratāp-ātīśaya for pratāp-ātīśaya in line 11. Strange as it may appear, the proper name of the donee, which ought to have been inserted between brāhmaṇa and svāmin, has been inadvertently omitted here. Compare the names of the donees Brāhmaṇa-Bādbasvāmin and Brāhmaṇa-Bappasvāmin in other Kalachuri grants Nos. 14 and 16, below). Similar names of donees with the prefix Brāhmaṇa occur in the records of the Traikūṭakas and Maitrakas also.

<sup>2</sup> This lady may have been the queen of Śaṅkaragaṇa. As for the absence of any title like Mahārājñī in connection with her name, it may be pointed out that neither Krishnarāja, nor Śaṅkaragaṇa is called Mahārāja in this or any other grant of the Early Kalachuris.

<sup>3</sup> The usual practice is to cite expired years. Current years are cited only exceptionally. If the year 347 is applied as current, the date would correspond to the 15th July 596 A. C. Prof. Pathak gives the 27th July 595 A. C. as the corresponding Christian date, evidently taking the year 347 as current and applying the epoch A. D. 247-48 which Dr. Kielhorn finally fixed on the evidence of later Kalachuri dates. But this epoch does not suit early dates of the Kalachuri era as admitted by Kielhorn himself. See Ep. Ind., Vol. V, Appendix, p. 57, n. 6 and 7.

<sup>4</sup> A. B. I. A., (1935), pp. 31-32. Bhōgavardhana is mentioned in several inscriptions at Sānchī. See e.g. Nos. 156, 162, 163, etc. M. S. Vol. I, pp. 315 ff.

<sup>5</sup> Mr. Gupte has suggested the identification of Vallisikā with Vārasī, about 8 miles south of Kalvan (Ind. Ant., Vol. XLII, p. 270); but as the Vaḍnēr grant of Buddharāja (No. 14 below) shows, the country round Vaḍnēr, which is only about 16 miles south of Kalvan, was included in the bhōga of Vaṭanagara. So the country round Kalvan is not likely to have been included in a different viśhaya like Bhōgavardhana. Mr. Gupte's alternative identifications of Vallisikā with Bālhēgāon near Ujjain and of Bhōgavardhana with Bōgtē near Bālhēgāon are also unlikely; for, the plates were found in the Nāsik District, and as shown above, better identifications of the localities with places not far from the eastern limit of that District can be proposed. Kallivana is also mentioned in the Mundkhēḍe plates of the Sēndraka king Jayaśakti. See Q. B. I. S. M., Vol. XVII, p. 52 ff.

Success! Hail! From the victorious camp pitched at Ujjayani—

In the family of the Kalachchuris, which, resembling the great ocean, is stainless and extensive like the firmament clear on the advent of autumn; which is made resplendent by the multitude of the manifold excellences of the men (born in it) as the ocean is by the mass of the rays of its gems; which is difficult to overcome, being the resort of men of great courage, as the ocean is difficult to cross, being the asylum of large animals; which is endowed with serenity (and) is intent on observing the rules of moral conduct as the ocean is deep and is determined to remain within its bounds;—(there was) the illustrious Krishnaraja, who brightened the world with his fame which, like moonlight, attracted the minds of all people; who, from his very birth, was devoted to Paśupati (Śiva), revived the prosperity of his family, (and therefore, though) free from (all) defects, resembled the moon, (which has spots), which rests on Śiva and revives the beauty of clusters of night-lotuses. He<sup>7</sup> was resorted to by all attractive royal qualities and other excellences as if out of a desire to find a choice resting place, <sup>8</sup>was possessed of all the constituents of royalty<sup>8</sup> (and) had properly acquired royal powers<sup>9</sup> and attained successes. (Line 10) His son, the illustrious Śaṅkaragaṇa — who meditates on the feet of (his) mother and father; who is a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara; who is the lord of the countries bounded by the eastern and western oceans and of other lands; who has, on the earth, no adversary (worthy of him); whose fame has tasted the waters of the four oceans; whose prowess equals that of Dhanada (i.e., Kubēra), Varuṇa, Indra and Antaka (i.e., Yama)<sup>1</sup>; who, by the might of his arms, has acquired the fortune of powerful kings; to whom the circle of neighbouring princes has submitted, (being subdued) by his great prowess; who is engaged in the acquisition of religious merit, wealth and pleasure, which (in his case) never come into conflict with one another; whose serene and noble heart is highly pleased by mere submission; who has performed religious rites by spending, in charity, plenty of wealth which he had obtained by properly protecting his subjects; who has reinstated royal families, which had long been dethroned; who has exterminated such as had risen too high; who bestows, on the distressed, blind and poor people, abundant gifts which exceed their desires—issues this order to kings, feudatories, Bhōgikas<sup>2</sup>, heads of vishayas<sup>3</sup>, Mahattaras<sup>4</sup> of rāshtras<sup>5</sup> and villages, officials and others:—

(L. 17)—Be it known to you! For the increase of religious merit and fame of Our mother and father and of Ourselves, We have granted, with a libation of water, at the request of Gōggā, land measuring a hundred nivartanas<sup>6</sup> by a land measure (nivartanin) of forty (daṇḍas) on either side, in the village Vallisikā, situated in the vishaya of Bhōgavardhana—together with all receipts<sup>7</sup> and exempt from all gifts, forced labour and special rights,<sup>8</sup> (which is) not to be entered by chāṭas and bhāṭas<sup>9</sup> according to the maxim of waste land<sup>10</sup>

<sup>6</sup> It seems that there were several nivartanas in vogue. The Lālāvati (I, 6) mentions nivartana as a measure of land equal to 400 square rods, i.e., 20 rods in length and in breadth. Kauṭilya (II, 20) mentions a nivartana measuring 30 daṇḍas (in length and in breadth) i.e., 900 square daṇḍas, and Bṛihaspati follows him. The measure (nivartanin) intended here seems to be 40 (daṇḍas) on either (side) (vishaya-chātvarīmśaka-nivartanin) i.e., equal to 1600 square daṇḍas.

<sup>8</sup> Kings had prerogatives in respect of these. They are waived in the case of agrabāra villages and lands. Compare sarva-vishṭi-paribāra-paribhīṭaḥ and other expressions which occur in Vākāṭaka grants.

<sup>10</sup> i.e., with full proprietary rights. He who brought waste land under cultivation became the absolute owner of it. Cf. MSM., adh. IX, v. 44.

and (is) to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and son's sons as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure—to the Brāhmaṇa —svāmin<sup>1</sup> of the Gautama gōtra (who is) a student of the Taittiriya (sākhā) and a resident of Kallivana, for the performance of bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and other religious rites.

(L. 23)—Wherefore, (future) kings and heads of bhōgas, whether born in our family or others, considering that (this) world of living beings is unsteady like the waves of the water of the ocean tossed by a strong wind, that wealth is liable to be lost (and, therefore,) worthless, and that virtues (alone) endure for a long time, and desiring to share in the reward of this donation of land which can be equally enjoyed (by them) and to accumulate for a long time fame as lovely as moon-beams, should consent to this our gift and preserve it! Whoever, with his mind shrouded by the veil of the darkness of ignorance confiscates it or allows it to be confiscated, shall incur the five great sins!

(L. 27)—And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas:—

(Here follow five benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(L. 33)—In the year three hundred increased by forty-seven, on the fifteenth (lunar, day) of the bright half of Śrāvaṇa, this (charter), the dūtaka of which is the Mahāpīlupatī Pāsupata, was written by Vāṭyali, the Chief Officer in charge of the Department of Peace and War. The year 300 (and) 40 (and) 7, (the month), Śrāvaṇa, the bright (fortnight), (the lunar day) 10 (and) 5.

NO. 13; PLATE VII

SANKHEDA PLATE OF SANKARAGANA

THIS plate was apparently discovered at Saṅkhēḍā, the chief town of the Saṅkhēḍā prānt of the Baroḍā District in the Bombay State. It was edited, with a lithograph, but without any translation, by Mr. H.H. Dhruva in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 21 ff. It is edited here from the same lithograph.

The plate measures 8.3" broad and 3.9" high, and is inscribed on one side only. It is the first plate of a set which originally consisted of two plates. They were held together by two rings passing through holes about .3" in diameter at the top of each plate; but neither the rings nor the seal, if there was any, was apparently found. The weight of the plate is not recorded. The plate has lost small pieces at the top and both the sides of the bottom. This has caused the partial or total loss of about twenty-two aksharas, which can, however, be restored conjecturally. The extant portion of the inscription, which consists of twelve lines, is in a good state of preservation. The writing was very carelessly executed. As will be seen from the subjoined transcript, the record contains numerous mistakes due to careless writing or engraving, especially in ll. 9-12. The average size of letters is .2".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets, with the usual admixture of northern peculiarities. They resemble in a general way, the characters of the Ābhōṇa plates of Saṅkaragaṇa. The only peculiarity that need be noticed here is the form of the medial ū in vadhū in l. 3. The language is Sanskrit and the extant portion of the record is in prose throughout. The orthography does not call for any notice except that the consonant following r is doubled as in kirtti, l. 4 and ri is used for the medial vowel ri in several places; see Krishṇarājāḥ l. 2, Balādhikrīta l. 5, etc.

The plate was issued from the victorious camp fixed at Nirguṇḍipadraka by Śāntilla, the Balādhikṛita (Military Officer) of Nirihullaka who bore the titles Bhōgikapālaka<sup>1</sup> and Mahāpīlupati.<sup>2</sup> Nirihullaka is described as meditating on the feet of the illustrious Śaṅkaragaṇa who had obtained victory in many battles and who was the son of the illustrious Kṛishṇarāja. The object of the inscription is to record the grant of a field, requiring one piṭaka of paddy as seed, which was made by Śāntilla on the occasion of a solar eclipse, for the increase of religious merit and fame of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, i.e., probably Śaṅkaragaṇa. The field was situated on the western boundary of Śrī-Paṇḍakā which was included in (the territorial division of) Taṇḍulapadraka. The donee was Bhaṭṭika Anantsvāmin of the Kautsa gōtra, who was a student of the Vājasaneyā or White Yajurveda and a resident of Pāshāṇihrada. The gift was intended to provide for the performance of the religious rites of the five great sacrifices.

Dr. Bühler first suggested that Śaṅkaragaṇa, whose name has been wrongly written as Saṅkaraṇa in l. 3, was identical with the Kaṭachchuri (or Kalachuri) Śaṅkaragaṇa. Śāntilla, who issued the present plate, was only a military officer. He seems to have obtained a great victory, to commemorate which he made this grant on the occasion of a solar eclipse; for he did it not for his own religious merit and fame, but for those of his great lord (Paramabhaṭṭāraka) who was probably Śaṅkaragaṇa. He was obviously acting in anticipation of the latter's sanction; so he communicates his order not only to the officers serving under him, but to those directly appointed by the king. He mentions here his immediate superior, the Bhōgikapālaka and Mahāpīlupati Nirihullaka, probably because he was governing the territory in which the donated village was situated.

The plate does not contain any date, but the mention of Śaṅkaragaṇa as the reigning sovereign shows that the inscription must be referred to the last quarter of the sixth century A. C.

As for the localities mentioned in the present inscription, Mr. Dhruva identified Pāshāṇihrada with Saṇiādārī, about 14 miles north by east of Saṅkhēḍā, for 'hrada would be masculine dharō and feminine dharī in Gujerāṭī and Pāshāṇi would drop its Pā, as Bagumrā has done with its Bā in having Gumrā, and give Saṇiā and thus we get Saṇiādārī.<sup>3</sup> His further suggestion that Taṇḍulapadraka is Tāndaljā is also acceptable, as the latter is only two miles west of Saṇiādārī. But his identifications of Nirguṇḍipadraka with Nāgarvāḍā, 6 kos from Dabhoi and Śrī-Paṇḍakā with Paniu, now desolate, 5 kos from Dabhoi, are doubtful, as the places are not in the vicinity of Saṇiādārī and Tāndaljā. I am, however, unable to suggest any other identifications.

Success! Hail! From the victorious camp fixed at Nirguṇḍīpadraka—

(There was) the illustrious Kṛishṇarāja whose lotus-like feet were worshipped by all kings. His son (is) the illustrious Śaṅkara[ga]ṇa who has obtained glory by his victories in many battles, who has made the lotuses, namely, the faces of the enemies' wives, fade. Meditating on his feet (there is) the Bhōgikapālaka and Mahāpīlupati Nirihullaka, whose fame is well known on the globe of the whole earth. SANKHEDA PLATE OF SANKARAGANA

(L. 11) Therefore [this gift should be consented to and preserved] by good kings [whether born in our family<sup>1</sup> or others]—

(The second plate of this grant is not forthcoming.)

NO. 14; PLATE VIII

VADNER PLATES OF BUDDHARAJA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 360

THESE copper-plates, two in number, were found in the possession of one Nānā valad Ahilāji Tidkē of Vaḍnēr in the Chāndvaḍ Tālukā of the Nāsik District in the Bombay State. They were brought to notice by Mr. Y.R. Gupte, who has edited them, with lithographs and a translation, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XII, pp. 30 ff. I edit them here from the same lithographs.

Mr. Gupte has given the following description of the plates<sup>2</sup>—“The plates are substantial. The first of them measures from 10½” to 10¾” long by 8” broad including the rims.....The second measures about 10¾” long by from 8½” to 8⅞” broad including the rims....The plates have two holes from ¾” to ⅝” in diameter for the insertion of the two original rings, which have been lost. Whether there was any seal or not, I cannot confidently say. There are, however, no traces of one, just as is the case with Sarsavṇī plates. When the grant came under my notice, the Vaḍnēr plates were held together by two thin rings recently made. The edges of the plates have been raised into rims so as to protect the inscription. Either of them bears writing on the inner side only. The second plate is a little broken at the right rim where line 28 ends. The weight of the plates is 129 tolas, without the rings. The letters are very deeply and well cut. They do not show through on the reverse side at all. Some are, however, damaged and some have been completely destroyed by verdigris.’ As the text of the inscription is for the most part identical with that of the Ābhōṇa and Sarsavṇī plates, the damaged letters can be easily supplied. There are thirty-four lines in all, seventeen being inscribed on either plate. The average size of letters is .2”.

The characters resemble those of the Ābhōṇa plates. The only points that call for notice are as follows:—There appear more wedges than knobs at the top of letters; the former are, again, in some cases, especially when the sign for medial ā is added, replaced by short horizontal strokes. The superscript curve in the sign for initial ī appears like that for ṛ in iva and idam in ll. 17 and 34 respectively. See also the sign for the superscript ñ in chāñchalani, l. 24. The sign for initial ē in ēsha, l. 19, slightly differs from that used in the Ābhōṇa plates. The medial ā is generally shown by a slanting vertical stroke, curved at the top, see vasēt, l. 28; but see sarvān-ēva, l. 17, where it appears as a curve encircling the letter n on the left. Ṇ everywhere appears in its northern form. L has in all places a short vertical stroke. The sign for the jihvāmūliya occurs twice in l. 4 and that for the upadmāniya in ll. 8, 9, 10, 13, 14, 17, 23, 25 and 31. Punctuation is indicated by a dot in ll. 19, 30 and 31 and by two vertical strokes in ll. 27-30. The numerical symbols for 300, 60, 10 and 3 occur in l. 34.

The language is Sanskrit and except for five benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the inscription is in prose throughout. As regards orthography, we may note that the consonant following r is generally reduplicated as in darllan̄ghē, 1.2, vibhav-ārjjanam, 1.8 etc.; so also dh preceding y in -ānuddhyāta, 1.14, -Mādhyandina-, 1.21. The anusvāra is wrongly changed to n in pradhvansa-, 1.16. In sētu sthitinām, 1.16, the visarga is dropped in accordance with the vārttika on Pāṇini VIII, 3, 36. The rules of sandhi have not been observed in some cases, especially at the end of lines, see e.g., cha anumantā, ll. 27-28 where ch=ānumantā is required by the metre. A case of wrong sandhi occurs in yān-iha, 1.30.

The plates were issued by the illustrious Buddharāja of the Kaṭachchuri (Early Kalachuri) dynasty, who was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, from his victorious camp at Vidiśā. He is described as the son of the illustrious Śaṅkaragaṇa who also was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara. The latter was himself the son of the illustrious Kṛishṇarāja who from his very birth was solely devoted to Paśupati. The epithets of Kṛishṇarāja and Śaṅkaragaṇa are here copied verbatim from earlier charters of the dynasty (e.g., the Ābhōṇa plates of Śaṅkaragaṇa). The description of all the three princes is quite conventional and yields no historical information.

The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Buddharāja, of the village Koṇiyānām (vātaka?) adjacent to Bhaṭṭaurikā in the bhōga (subdivision) of Vaṭanagara for augmenting the religious merit of himself and his parents. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Bōdhasvāmin of the Kāśyapa gōtra, who was a student of the Vājasaneyya, Mādhyandina (śākhā) and a resident of Vaṭanagara. The gift was intended, as usual, to provide for the performance of the religious rites such as bali, charu, agnihōtra and vaiśvadēva. The record was written by Ānāphita, the Great Officer in charge of the Department of Peace and War at the request of the queen Anantamahāyī of the Paśupata faith. The dūtaka was the Mahābalādhiḥkṛita Prasahyavigraha.

The inscription is dated in words in 1.32 and in numerical symbols in 1.34, on the thirteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada in the year 360. This date, like that of the Ābhōṇa plates, must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-249 A.C. it would correspond, for the expired year 360, to the 8th August 610 A.C.<sup>1</sup> It does not admit of verification for want of the necessary details.

Of the localities mentioned in the present grant, Vidiśā is modern Besnagar near Bhilsā in Central India. That the Kalachuri empire once comprised the province of Eastern Malwa is also shown by the discovery of some coins of Kṛishṇarāja, the grandfather of Buddharāja, during excavations at Besnagar.<sup>2</sup> Vaṭanagara, the headquarters of the bhōga (sub-division) in which the donated village was situated, and the place of the donee's residence, is obviously identical with Vaṭnēr where the plates were discovered. It may be noted in this connection that the Vaṇi-Diṇḍōri plates of the Rāshtrakūta king Gōvinda III<sup>3</sup> mention the Vaṭanagara vishaya (district) as situated in the Nāsika dēśa. Vaṭanagara was thus the chief town of both the bhōga and the viskaya named after it. I identify Bhaṭṭaurikā with Bhātōrā about 11 miles north-west of Vaḍnēr and about 2 miles north of Vaṇī.<sup>1</sup> Kōṇiyānām<sup>2</sup> (vāṭāka?) may be Kanhuvāḍī, about 5 miles north by east of Bhātōrā.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. Gupte identifies Bhaṭṭaurikā with Bhātgaon about nine miles from Vaḍnēr; but its name does not exactly correspond to Bhaṭṭaurikā, and we have, therefore, to suppose that urikā, the second part of the name has been omitted. Bhātōrā, on the other hand, is clearly derived from Bhaṭṭaurikā.

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Gupte says that Kōṇiyānām means a village of the Kōṇiyas who correspond to the modern Kōjis. He does not, however, state which village of the Kōṇiyas is meant here. Perhaps a word like vāṭāka has been omitted here. Kōṇiyānām vāṭāka may be identical with Kanhuvāḍī.

TRANSLATION

Success ! Hail ! From the victorious camp pitched at Vidiśā—

(For a translation of lines 1—13, see above, pp. 42 f.)

(Line 14) His son, the illustrious Buddharāja—who meditates on his feet; who is a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara; who is the sole ornament of the whole circle of the earth; who is the endowed with all the well-known excellences such as political wisdom, modesty, compassion, liberality, dexterity, courtesy, courage, bravery, firmness and others; who causes the destruction of the supreme arrogance, due to power, of mighty foes; who is a dam to safeguard all established customs, (and) a resting place of success; who, with his unimpeded army, allays the sufferings of the people even as Vishṇu does with his irresistible discus,—issues this order to all kings, feudatories, heads of bhōgas<sup>1</sup> and vishayas, the Mahattaras of rāshṭras and villages, officials and others :—

(L. 18) 'Be it known to you ! For the increase of religious merit of (Our) mother and father and Ourselves, We have granted with a libation of water the village (called the hamlet) of Kōṇiyas adjacent to Bhaṭṭaurikā (situated) in the Vaṭanagara bhōga, together with udraṅga and uparikara, inclusive of all receipts and exempt from all gifts, forced labour and special rights, which is not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas, according to the maxim of waste land, (which is) to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons' sons as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure—to the Brāhmaṇa Bōdhasvāmin of the Kāśyapa gōtra, who is a student of the Vājasaneyā Mādhyandina (śākhā) and a resident of Vaṭanagara for the maintenance of balī, charu, vaiśvadēva and other (religious) rites.

(L. 27) And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas—
(Here follow five benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(L. 32) In the year three hundred increased by sixty on the thirteenth (lunar day) of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada, this (order), the dūtaka of which is the Mahā-balādhikṛita, the illustrious Prasahyavigraha, has been written by Ānāphita, the Chief Officer in charge of the Department of Peace and War, at the request of the queen Anantamahāyī, a devotee of Paśupati.

The year 300 (and) 60, (the month) Bhādrapada, the bright (fortnight), (the lunar day) 10 (and) 3.

No. 15; PLATE IX

SARSAVNI PLATES OF BUDDHARAJA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 361

THESE plates were found in the possession of Patel Karsan Dāji of Sarsavni (Sarasavani), a village four and a half miles south of Padrā in the Padrā subdivision of the Baroda District in the Bombay State. They were edited, with photolithographs and a translation, by Prof. Kielhorn in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. VI, pp. 294 ff. I edit them here from the same lithographs.

These are two copper-plates, either of which measures 10 $\frac{3}{8}$ " broad by 7 $\frac{3}{8}$ " high and is inscribed on one side only. Their margins are raised into rims. Through two holes at the bottom of the first and the top of the second plate are passed two unsoldered plain rings, measuring 2 $\frac{1}{2}$ " and 2 $\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter. There is no seal and no indication of one having been attached to the plates. The writing is well-done and throughout in an excellent state of preservation. The size of letters is about  $\frac{3}{16}$ ".<sup>1</sup> The record consists of thirty-five lines, of which seventeen are inscribed on the first and eighteen on the second plate.

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the Ābhōṇa plates.<sup>1</sup> We may notice here the following peculiarities:—Most of the letters have wedges at the top as in the Vaḍnēr plates;<sup>2</sup> the medial ā is indicated in many cases by a curve rising above the line and coming down lower than in the Vaḍnēr plates, see e.g. pratāp-ātīśay-, l. 10 and dayā-dāna-, l. 15; th appears in two forms, the ordinary one as in yathāvad-, l. 5 and the cursive one as in prathita-, l. 6, sthiti-, l. 16 etc; y has a loop in its left member in yūtha l. 6; kh shows two slightly different forms in askhalita-, l. 6 and likhitam-, l. 34; the forms of the initial ō in Kumārivaḍaō, l. 20 and of ph in phala ll. 13, 26 and 31 are also noteworthy. The jihvāmūliya occurs twice in l. 4 and the upa-dhmāniya four times in ll. 7, 24, 27 and 32. The numerical symbols for 300, 60, 10, 5 and 1 occur in line 35. The language is Sanskrit, and except for five benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the record is in prose throughout. As regards orthography, we may note that ri is used for the vowel ri in prithivyām-, l. 9; the consonant following r is correctly reduplicated in such cases as durllāṅghē, l. 2, siddhir-yyēna, l. 6, etc., but incorrectly in varshsha-, l. 28; similarly dh is doubled before y, see ānuddhyāta twice in l. 14; the guttural nasal is wrongly used for anusvāra in vanśa, l. 6, vanśānām, l. 12, etc., and the dental one in pradhvansa, l. 16. There are a few mistakes of sandhi and some wrong forms as pointed out in the notes to the text.

The plates were issued by the king Buddharāja of the Kaṭachchuri (Early Kalachuri) dynasty, from the victorious camp at Ānandapura. He was the son of Śaṅkaragaṇa who was himself the son of Kṛishṇarāja. The description of these kings is given here exactly as in the Vaḍnēr plates. In fact, the text of the whole inscription, except for certain particulars such as the donee, the village granted, and the date, is exactly identical with that of the Vaḍnēr plates. The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Buddharāja, of the village Kumarivaḍaō situated near Bṛihannārikā in the Gōrajā bhōga which was included in the Bharukachchha vishaya. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Bappasvāmin, the son of Bhaṭṭu, who belonged to the Pārāśara gōtra. He was a student of the Vājasaneyā Kaṇva śākhā and a resident of Ḍēbhaka. The purpose of the grant was as usual to provide for the maintenance of religious rites such as bali, charu, vaiśvadēva and agnihōtra. The grant was made at the request of Gōkulasvāmin who may have been the king's family-priest. The dūtaka was the Mahābalādhiḱṛita Prasahya-*vigraha who is mentioned in the same capacity in the earlier Vaḍnēr plates.<sup>3</sup> The royal order was written by Śivarāja, the Chief Officer in charge of the Department of Peace and War.<sup>4</sup>

The inscription is dated, in words (l. 33) and numerical symbols (l. 35), on the fifteenth tithi of the dark fortnight of Kārttika in the year 361. This date must, obviously, be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C. which suits early verifiable dates of the era, the date of the present plates would fall in 609 A.C. if the year 361 was current, and in 610 A.C. if it was expired.<sup>5</sup>

<sup>5</sup> Prof. Kielhorn has stated (Ep. Ind., Vol. VI, p. 295, n. 6) that according to the epoch of 247-48 A. C. which suits later Kalachuri dates, the date (for the pūrṇimānta Kārttika) would correspond to

The present date is one of the few early Kalachuri dates falling in a dark fortnight, but in the absence of the mention of a week-day or a nakshatra, it is not possible to say if the month Kārttika to which it belonged was pūrṇimānta or amānta. If considered in connection with the date of the Vaḍṇēr plates, it affords some basis for conjecture. The Vaḍṇēr plates were granted at Vidiśā (modern Besnagar near Bhilsā) on Bhādrapada śu. di. 13 towards the end<sup>1</sup> of the Kalachuri year 360, while the present grant was made at Ānandapura (which, as shown below, is either Ānand in the Kairā District or Vaḍṇāgar in the Mēhsānā District on Kārttika va. di. 13 in the beginning of the next Kalachuri year 361. Supposing that the years of the Vaḍṇēr and Sarsavṇī plates were both current, or both expired, there would be an interval of about one month and sixteen days between the dates of the two grants, if the months were pūrṇimānta. The distance between Vidiśā and Ānanda is about 320 miles as the crow flies and that between the former place and Vaḍṇāgar is about 340 miles. This distance would be considerably increased, if the inevitable windings of the road are taken into account. Whichever identification of Ānandapura we accept, we shall have to suppose (if the dates are recorded in pūrṇimānta months) that Buddharāja had to reach Ānandapura from Vidiśā by forced marches.<sup>2</sup> There is, however, nothing in either of the grants to support such a view. On the other hand, if we take the dates of both the inscriptions as recorded in amānta months<sup>3</sup> there would be the reasonable interval of about two months and sixteen days between the two campaigns.

As for the localities mentioned in the present grant, Kielhorn identified Ānandapura with the modern Ānand, the chief town of a subdivision of the same name in the Kaira District. Dr. Altekar has, however, adduced very cogent reasons to prove that the ancient Ānandapura is identical with the modern Vaḍṇāgar in the Mēhsānā District.<sup>4</sup> The former view is supported by the fact that the village granted by the present charter is situated much nearer to Ānand than to Vaḍṇāgar, but this cannot be regarded as a decisive argument. Dēbhaka is probably Dabkā, 8 miles west of Padrā, as suggested by Kielhorn. Gōrajjā is Gōraj, 11 miles south of Halol in the Panch Mahals, and Kumārivaḍaḍ (which is probably a Prakrit form of Kumārīvāṭaka) Kawarwārā, about 11 miles towards the west-south-west from Gōraj.<sup>5</sup> I identify Brihannārikā (the larger Nārikā) with Nāriā, 7 miles south of Kawarwārā.

the 3rd October 609 A. C. In this he evidently took the year as expired. According to the epoch which suits early verifiable dates of the era, he found by calculation that (for the expired year 361) it would correspond to either the 22nd September or the 22nd October 610 A.C., as Kārttika was then intercalary.

<sup>2</sup> Taking the distance to be approximately 400 miles on account of the windings of the road we find that the army of Buddharāja must have marched on an average 9 miles per day. According to Yuan Chwang a yōjana (which was 30 or 40 li, i.e., from 6 to 8 miles) was a day's journey for a royal army. (See Watters, On Yuan Chwang, Vol. I, p. 141, and compare Kauṭilya's Arthśāstra, second ed. by Shama Sastri, p. 365). So it was not impossible for Buddharāja's army to cover the distance in one month and sixteen days, but this leaves no time for actual fighting if there was any.

<sup>5</sup> These identifications of Gōrajjā and Kumārivaḍaḍ were first suggested by Dr. Fleet, Ep. Ind., Vol. VI, p. 297. He identified Brihannārikā with Banaiyā, 4½ miles south of Kawarwārā, but this does not seem to be correct. The place-name, which means 'the larger Nārikā', would assume the form Moṭā Nāriā, or simply Nāriā, in modern Gujarātī and is, therefore, probably identical with Nāriā as suggested above.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE EARLY GURJARAS

No. 16; PLATE X

KAIRA PLATES OF DADDA II (PRASANTARAGA): (KALACHURI) YEAR 380.

THIS set of two copper-plates was found about 1827 together with three others<sup>1</sup> in the town of Khēḍā or Kairā, the headquarters of a district of the same name in Gujarat, Bombay State. "The river 'Watrua' runs close to the walls of Khēḍā on the north-west side, and was the cause of the discovery, by washing down the walls and earth."<sup>2</sup> The plates were brought to notice ten years later by Dr. A. Burn who sent transcripts and facsimiles of them to Mr. James Prinsep, then Secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. As three of them contained dates both in words and in figures, Mr. Prinsep first published facsimiles and explanations of date-portions of the grants, in J.A.S.B., Vol. VII, p. 348, and later on a mixed transcript of two of them, which were cognate grants of Dadda II, on pp. 908 ff. of the same volume. When Dr. Burn returned home, he presented the Royal Asiatic Society with three of the sets, viz., two containing this and the following grant of Dadda-Prasāntarāga and the third a grant of Vijayarāja.<sup>3</sup> The grants were subsequently published together with facsimile plates and a translation, by Prof. J. Dowson in the J. R. A. S. (New Series) (1865), Vol. I, pp. 247 ff. The original plates of the two grants of Dadda II have since been lost. When Dr. Fleet edited them finally in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XIII, pp. 81 ff., he had to depend on the facsimiles accompanying Prof. Dowson's article. I edit them here from the same facsimiles.

The facsimiles show two plates, each measuring about 11½" broad and 9¾" high. It is not possible to say whether their edges were smooth or were raised into rims for the protection of the writing. The lower proper left corner of the first plate is broken off, resulting in the loss of from one to six aksharas in ll. 21-29. Besides, a small portion of the upper proper right corner of the second plate is lost, causing a partial destruction of the first six aksharas of l. 31. The missing aksharas can, however, be supplied from the corresponding portion of the following grant. The plates seem, otherwise, to be in a state of good preservation. Prof. Dowson's facsimiles are fairly good, though it is not unlikely that some letters which were legible on the original plates, have not come out in them.<sup>4</sup> In making the subjoined transcript I have, however, taken Prof. Dowson's lithographs to be accurate copies of the original plates.

The plates have each two roundish holes about ½" in diameter for the rings which must have originally held them together. The lithograph shows, however, only one ring with a round seal about 1½" in diameter. The surface of the seal is divided into two fairly equal parts by a horizontal line. The upper part contains in relief 'some symbol of sun-worship', while the lower has the legend Sāmanta-Dadda in the same characters as those of the record on the plates.

The characters of the inscription, except the sign-manual, belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets. There are small knobs on the tops of letters. The

forms of the initial i in Īsvara, l. 40 and ī in ēsha, l. 33 are noteworthy; the medial u is formed by a loop in rūp-ānu-l. 5; its long form in the case of rū is indicated by turning the curve of the letter to the right or by adding two curves to the vertical, see rūpani ll. 6 and 24; k shows a loop on the left in prakīrṇa, l. 5 and kamala-, l. 27; j and ñ show a notch on the top, see pañka-janma-tayā, l. 11; the rare jh occurs in nirjjhara, l. 9; ḍ shows a loop in some places and a tail in others<sup>1</sup> see e.g., nibiḍa-, l. 16, and Kauṇḍinya, l. 38; ṇ appears throughout in its southern form; b is flat at the bottom, its upper part which consists of a curve generally showing a notch as in prabala-, l. 20, but contrast bōdhita-, l. 25; the subscript th in sthita-, l. 5 has neither a notch, nor a ringlet; v is triangular in form. A final consonant is indicated by a horizontal line at the top, while punctuation is shown by a dot in some places and by vertical strokes in others. The sign-manual of the donor is in northern current hand characters. In it y has an archaic form, n in some cases appears without a loop, while the forms of s and h are in advance of these used in other contemporary records.

The language is Sanskrit and except for the customary benedictive and imprecatory verses, the whole record is in prose. The eulogistic part of it is written in a style of high flourish which is well-known from the works of the contemporary Sanskrit author Bāṇa. Kielhorn has drawn attention to the close similarities in the wording of both the eulogistic and formal parts of the present plates and the earlier Sarsavṇī plates of the Kaṭachchuri prince Buddharāja<sup>2</sup>. From this he inferred that the family of the Gurjara princes rose to independence only after the time of the Kaṭachchuri Buddharāja. The orthography calls for few remarks. Instead of the anusvāra, the guttural nasal is used before ś in vaṅśa, l. 2 and nistriṅśa, l. 27; the consonant following r is doubled as in sthairyya-, l. 2, nirjjhara, l. 9, etc. and the vowel ri is used for ri, in trivargga, l. 24, and yam-asrītāḥ, l. 21.

The plates were issued from Nāndīpurī by the illustrious Dadda II of the Early Gurjara Dynasty who had won the pañchamahāśabda and who calls himself Praśāntarāga in his sign-manual. On the seal he has the title Sāmanta (feudatory prince). The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Dadda II, of the village Śirīshapadraka situated in the vishaya of Akrūrēśvara to forty Brāhmanas, of whom thirty-five belonging to the Ṛigvēda, (White) Yajurvēda and Sāmavēda had emigrated from Jambūsaras and were then residing at Śirīshapadraka itself, while the remaining five, all of whom belonged to the Atharvavēda, had emigrated from Bharukachchha and were then residing at Bhērajjikā. The purpose of the grant was, as usual, to provide for the maintenance of religious rites such as the five great sacrifices, viz., bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra,

<sup>2</sup> Cf. In his opening sentence he (i.e., the author of the present Kairā grant) compares the family of Gurjara kings with the great ocean (mahōdadhbī) and in describing that ocean, he employs the words vividha, vimala, gūparatna, udbhāsita, avilāṅghitāvadbī, gāmbhīrya and the phrase mahāsattvatay-ātiduravagābhī which to the reader of the present (i.e., Sarsavṇī) grant will surely betray their origin. Then, as in the present inscription Kṛishṇarāja is described as from his very birth (ā janmana ēva) devoted to the service of Śiva, so the eulogist of Dadda makes that chief from his very birth (utpattita ēva) worship the sun. He, moreover, just as in the case of the present grant, continues the description of his chief in a series of relative sentences (yēna... jān cha... jasya cha, etc.) and in the clause commencing with jasya cha in line 7 and ending with Vindhyānag-ōpatyakāḥ in line 10 he imitates and labours to improve on the relative sentence beginning with yēna cha in line 6 and ending with disō in line 7 of the present grant. Kielhorn then proceeds to point out the similarities in the wording of the formal parts of the grants. 'We find in them exactly the same list of officials to whom the order is addressed..., the same technical and other terms applied to the village granted....; with the exception of a single word, the same form of appeal to future rulers to preserve the grant, and with the omission of one verse the same benedictive and imprecatory verses, given in the same order.' Ep. Ind., Vol. VI, pp. 296-97.

etc. The grant was made on the full-moon day of Kārttika. The scribe was Rēva, the Officer in charge of the Department of Peace and War.

The inscription is dated, both in words and in numerical symbols in ll. 50-51, on the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika of the year 380. Though the era is not specified, the date, on the evidence of palæography, must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch 248-49, A.C. it would correspond, for the expired year<sup>1</sup> 380, to the 6th November 629 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

The present inscription mentions two ancestors of Dadda II, viz., his grandfather Dadda I and his father Jayabhāṭa I who had the biruda Vītarāga. About the former we are told that he was a Sāmanta or a feudatory prince, though his suzerain is nowhere named, and that from his very birth he was a devotee of the sun. The epithet ākṛishṭa-satru-nāga-kula-samītati (ll. 3-4) applied to him was interpreted to mean that he exterminated his enemies of the Nāga race<sup>2</sup>; but as Kielhorn has shown, the description contains no such historical allusion, the sense being simply that 'Dadda uprooted his enemies as the bird Garuda destroys the snakes.' The description in line 10, that the lands at the foot of the Vindhya mountain delighted him, seems to suggest that he extended his kingdom to or raided the country up to the Vindhya mountain.

About Jayabhāṭa I the present inscription gives no information except that he obtained victories over the forces of his powerful foes, and that he had the biruda Vītarāga. The description of his son Dadda II, the donor of the present grant, is also conventional, the only historical information that we can glean from it being that he had obtained the pañchamahāśabda, and had the biruda Praśāntarāga.

As for the localities mentioned in the present grant, Nāndīpurī was identified by Dr. Bühler<sup>3</sup> with an old fort of that name just outside the Jhaḍēśwar gate to the east of Broach. Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī, however, suggested that Nāndīpurī was identical with Nāndōd in the Broach District.<sup>4</sup> The statement in the Anjanēri plates of Jayabhāṭa III<sup>5</sup> that Nāndīpurī viśhaya included the village Tōraṇaka (modern Tōraṇ 2 miles to the north of Nāndōd) proves the correctness of Pandit Bhagvanlal's suggestion. The absence of any word like vāsakāt after Nāndīpurī indicates that it was probably the capital of the Gurjaras. Akrūrēśvara is clearly identical with Aṅklēśvar, the chief town of a tālukā of the same name, in the Broach District. Śīrīshapadraka is Sisōdra about 11 miles west by south of Aṅklēśvar. Jambūśaras still bears its ancient name and lies about 27 miles north of Broach. Bharukachchha is of course Broach, while Bhērajikā is probably Bōrjai in the Broach District, about 12 miles east of Aṅklēśvar.

TRANSLATION

Success! Hail! From Nāndīpurī—

In the family of the Gurjara kings which resembles the ocean; which has brightened the faces of all regions with the abundance of its manifold and spotless excellences as the ocean does with its varied and stainless jewels; which has protected all great kings who are its allies, as the ocean has saved all the great mountains possessed of wings (that sought refuge in it); which always refrains from transgressing the limits (of proper conduct), as the ocean abstains from overflowing its shores; which is possessed of firmness, serenity and beauty, as the ocean has stability, depth and saltness; which, on account of its great courage, is difficult to be attacked, as the ocean, on account of its having large animals, is difficult to be plunged into;—there (was) the Sāmanta Dadda [I], who, possessing the goddess of (royal) fortune since his birth and occupying a (royal) position hostile to the evil-minded (krishṇa-hridaya<sup>1</sup>), destroyed (the influence of) the Kali age by the mass of his spotless fame, as the Kaustubha jewel which was produced together with Lakshmi,<sup>2</sup> and has found a resting place on Kṛishṇa's breast, dispels a mass of darkness with the multitude of its rays; who, having good allies, has uprooted the descendants of the families of his adversaries even as Vainatēya (Garuda), possessing excellent wings, destroyed the progeny of the hostile families of serpents; who, even from his birth, had all his calamities<sup>3</sup> removed by bowing to the lotus-like feet of the sun. He,<sup>4</sup> who had a body adorned with a multitude of steady excellences and a canopy of white and spotless fame in the guise of pearls falling from the frontal globes of the elephants of (his) enemies that were slain (in battles), and who was possessed of courage suitable to his (majestic) form, stood always fearlessly at the head of kings, even as a young lion, with his body adorned with a mane, and a canopy of his bright and spotless fame spread over him in the guise of pearls from the frontal globes of hostile elephants slain by him, stands fearlessly on the top of mountains. Accomplishments such as (proficiency in) a number of fine arts, (and) troops of the elephants of his enemies, walking slowly on account of rut, that were captured by his valour, and young and beautiful women walking languidly owing to the gracefulness (of their gait) caused by intoxication, who were attracted by his prowess, day after day, as if in mutual rivalry, resorted to him who was the moon (dispelling) the darkness of the extremely sinful Kali age. Like young women obtained by good fortune<sup>5</sup> and rendered beautiful by their plump breasts, the regions at the feet of the Vindhya mountain created by Bhaga<sup>6</sup> and adorned by high clouds, delighted him, who pleased <sup>1</sup> According to Prof. Kielhom this word krishṇa in addition to denoting the god Kṛishṇa, may perhaps denote the Kaṭachchuri Kṛishṇarāja. The expression may, therefore, signify that Dadda I was a favourite (or, feudatory) of Kṛishṇarāja. He concedes, however, that it may also be taken to mean he whose actions (āpada, kṛitya) were hostile to the evil-minded.

a multitude of supplicants by the incessant flow of his charity, as an excellent elephant pleases swarms of bees by the unceasing flow of his rut; who was attended by splendid glory as the elephant is attended by his charming mate;<sup>1</sup> who always walked with an unfaltering step and whose great excellence was due to his noble descent, as the elephant's splendid form is due to his excellent back-bone; who had his body horripilated when he struck down (hostile) kings by the blow of his arm (and) whose voice was sweet like (the sound of) the falling of the water of the stream of the Rēvā (Narmadā). He was compared with the moon in respect of gentleness, purity, beauty and (proficiency in) arts,<sup>2</sup> but not in that of any stain,—with an assemblage of lotuses in respect of having overcome the troublesome members of (his) family (as lotuses get over thorns) by the mass of (his) splendour on account of his being the abode of royal fortune (Sri) (as the lotuses are the abode of Lakshmi), but not in respect of being produced from sin,<sup>3</sup>—with the lord of beasts (i.e., the lion) in point of courage, energy and valour, but not in that of having a cruel heart—with the great ocean in respect of beauty, stability, serenity and maintenance of the bounds of morality,<sup>4</sup> but not in that of giving shelter to wicked persons,<sup>5</sup>—with the mountain Himālaya, in respect of being the resort of noble men of learning in his excellent capital<sup>6</sup>, but not in that of being surrounded by degraded warriors.<sup>7</sup> His excellent wealth, which, like the excellent hood of the serpent Śēsha, had its magnificence manifested by hundreds of jewels of spotless rays, was shared by the whole world.<sup>8</sup> His noble birth was revealed by (his) character,—his power, by (the implicit obedience of his) commands,—his (skill in the use of) weapons, by the submission of (his) foes,—his wrath, by the punishment (inflicted on his enemies),—his favour, by (his) gifts,—(and) his piety, by the worship of gods, Brāhmaṇas and elderly persons.

(Line 15) His son (was) the illustrious Jayabhāṭa [I], who had the other name of the illustrious Vītarāga, who was resplendent like heated glittering gold; who, like the wish-fulfilling tree, incessantly granted the desired objects (of supplicants), who was always and invariably an ornament (to his family) as the vernal season is to the cycle of seasons, as a grove of blossoming and densely growing mango trees is to the vernal season, as an assemblage of lotuses is to a lake, as blooming is to an assemblage of lotuses, as a jewel is to a great serpent, as spotless radiance is to a jewel, as the pot of nectar was to the ocean, as the power of conferring immortality is to the pot of nectar, as rutting is to an elephant, as dalliance is to a young lovely woman, as conferment on a worthy person is to wealth, as a sacrifice is to religion, as the time of distributing the sacrificial fee is to a sacrifice, as good nature is to love, (and) as a collection of spotless digits is to the moon; whose face was lovely like the full moon; who was affable (and) liberal and who had won the goddess of victory in fighting with the armies of his powerful foes. To him all virtues together with humility resorted as if seeking his protection from fear of their foe, the Kali (age). He, who had shining and spotless fame as a dark cloud has a bright flash of lightning, and who delighted the whole living world, removed the evils of avidity and worry of supplicants as a dark cloud roaring, not in vain, removes the thirst and heat

of those who long (for rain). Though brave, he was always apprehensive of (incurring) infamy; though free from avarice, he had an unceasing thirst for the acquisition of virtues; though he was in the habit of giving everything, he was averse to giving his heart to others' wives<sup>1</sup>; though eloquent, he was dull-witted in abusing others; His handsome form was not opposed to good character; (nor) his youth, to good conduct; (nor) his wealth, to charity; (nor) his pursuit of the three (aims of life), to the absence of mutual conflict (among them)<sup>2</sup>; (nor) his power to forgiveness; (nor his living in) the Kali age, to (his possession of) virtues.

(L. 25) His son, the illustrious Dadda [II] who has attained the pañchamahā-śabda,<sup>3</sup>—who has covered the expanse of the sky all round with the shoots of his fame as white as the night-lotuses which are made to bloom by the rays of the moon as she emerges from a mass of water-laden clouds; the prowess of whose spotless sword is (always) being loudly celebrated in songs in the guise of the morning lamentations of the virtuous wives of the hostile neighbouring princes, who were slain (by him) when they opposed him in many dangerous battles; whose head is radiant with a crown shining with the bright rays of the tips<sup>4</sup> of diamonds (set in it) which are scratched in making obeisance to the lotus-like feet of gods, Brāhmaṇas and elderly persons; the store of whose religious merit—the sole companion in heaven—is being increased by the unwearied<sup>5</sup> fulfilment of the desire for wealth of the poor, the helpless and the sick, guests and supplicants; who shows himself as a cultured man of the town by winning (again) by means of sweet words preceded by obeisance, the favour of proud ladies who are made angry by (their) love (for him); who has cast the mass of the dense darkness of the Kali age into the cage of the rays of his spotless virtues—(he), being in good health, thus informs all the kings, feudatories, Bhōgikas and heads of vishayas, the Mahattaras of rāshṭras (provinces) and villages, officials and others—

(L. 33) 'Be it known to you! For the increase of the religious merit and fame of Our mother and father and of Ourselves, We have granted with a libation of water, fixing first (the immunities) in the case of the community of the Chāturvēdins,<sup>6</sup> on the full-moon day of Kārttika, this village (viz.) Śirishapadraka situated in the vishaya of Akūrēśvara—together with udraṅga and uparikara, inclusive of all dues, and exempt from all gifts, forced labour and special rights,—which is not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas, according to the maxim of waste land, (and) which is to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons' sons (of the donees) as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will en-

<sup>5</sup> Fleet translates klīṣṭa by 'people in distress', but the word is aklīṣṭa and its position after jana shows that it is used here as an adverb modifying paripūrīta.

<sup>6</sup> Parikalpanā is derived from pari-klīp, to fix or to settle. Chāturvidya-parikalpanā-purvaṇi corresponds to Chāturvidy-āgrahara-maryādā which generally occurs in Vākāṭaka records and probably refers to the fixing of immunities in the case of āgrahāra villages granted to Chāturvēdins. Fleet, however, translates it as 'preceded (as a primary object) by providing for the community of Chāturvēdis.'

—to the Brāhmaṇas of the four charaṇas<sup>1</sup>, viz., the Brāhmaṇa Bhaṭṭi, the teacher (adhyāpaka) who has emigrated from Jambūśaras, and is (now) a resident of Śirīshapadraka situated in the district of Akrūrēśvara, who is of the Vatsa gōtra and a student of the Āśvalāyana (charaṇa) of the Rīgvēda, and also Gōpāditya, and also Bhaṭṭigaṇa, (and) Viśākha, (and) Agniśarman, (and) Drōṇa,—Bhaṭṭidāman of the Kāsyapa gōtra, and also Vatra,—the Brāhmaṇa Tāpiśarman of the Daundakiya gōtra, a student of the Kaṇva (charaṇa) of the Vājasaneyā (vēda) of the Adhvaryus, (and) the second Tāpiśarman, (and) Dattasvāmin, (and) Bhāgīvsāmin, (and) Pitriśarman, (and) Bhaṭṭi, (and) Drōṇa,—Karka the adhyāpaka, of the Dhūmrāyana gōtra, (and) Ābuka,—Vāṭaśarman of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra, (and) Saila, (and) Ghōsha, (and) Mahādēva, (and) Bāva;—Dhara of the Māṭhara gōtra, (and) Viśākha, (and) Nandi, (and) Rāmila,—Dharmadhara of the Hārīta gōtra,—the Brāhmaṇa Indraśarman of the Bharadvāja gōtra, a student of the Kauthuma (charaṇa) of the Chhāndōgya (i.e., Sāmavēda) (and) Ādityaravi, (and) Tāpiśūra, (and) Indraśūra, (and) Īśvara, (and) Dhara, (and) Dāmadhara, (and) the second Īśvara,<sup>2</sup>—the Brāhmaṇa Bhadra of the Chauli gōtra, a student of the Pippalāda (charaṇa) of the Atharvavēda, who emigrated from Bharukachchha and is now a resident of Bhērajjikā, (and) Vāyuśarman, (and) Drōṇasvāmin, (and) Rudrāditya, (and) Pūrṇasvāmin,—for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices (such as) bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and other (religious) rites.

(L. 43) Wherefore, future rulers whether of Our family or others, considering that (this) world of living beings is unsteady like the waves of the water of the ocean tossed by a strong wind, that wealth is liable to be lost and worthless, and that virtues (alone) endure for a long time and desiring to share in the reward of (this) donation of land, which can be equally enjoyed (by them) and to accumulate for a long time fame as lovely a moon-beams, should consent to this Our gift and preserve it! Whoever, with his mind shrouded by the veil of the darkness of ignorance, confiscates it or allows it to be confiscated, shall incur the five great sins!

(L. 46) And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas—
(Here follow four benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(L. 50) In the year three hundred increased by eighty, on the fifteenth (lunar day) of the bright (fortnight) of Kārttika, (this charter) has been written at the command of (Our) own mouth, by Rēva, (the officer) in charge of the Department of Peace and War.

The year 300 (and) 80, (the month) Kārttika, the bright (fortnight), (the lunar day) 10 (and) 5.

This is the sign-manual of Praśāntarāga, the son of Vītarāga, who is devoted to the worship of the feet of the sun.

Seal

The Sāmanta Dadda.

KAIRA PLATES OF DADDA II (PRASANTARAGA) : (KALACHURI) YEAR 385.

THIS set of two copper-plates was discovered together with the preceding one in the town of Kairā, the headquarters of the Kairā District in Gujarat, Bombay State, under circumstances already described.<sup>1</sup> A mixed transcript of the two records was first published by Mr. J. Prinsep in the J. A. S. B., Vol. VII, pp. 908 ff. The plates were subsequently edited with facsimiles by Prof. Dowson in the J. R. A. S., Vol. I (New Series), pp. 247 ff., and finally by Dr. Fleet in the Ind. Ant., Vol. XIII, pp. 88 ff. As the original plates had been lost, Dr. Fleet's transcript was made from the facsimiles accompanying Prof. Dowson's article. I edit the inscription here from the same facsimiles.

From the facsimiles they appear to be two plates each being inscribed on one side and measuring 10½" by 7½". It is not possible to say if their ends were raised into rims for the protection of the writing. They appear to be in a state of good preservation. Prof. Dowson's lithographs are fairly good, though it is likely that some letters, which appear in them to be imperfectly formed, may not have been so on the original plates. In making the subjoined transcript I have taken the lithographs to be accurate copies of the original plates.

The plates seem to have each two roundish holes .4" in diameter for the rings which held them together. One of the rings has a circular seal, about 11<sup>3</sup>/<sub>8</sub>" in diameter, closely resembling that of the preceding grant. It has in relief, on a countersunk surface, the same symbol of solar worship and the same legend, Sāmanta-Dadda. Again this inscription was, like the preceding, written by Rēva, the head of the Department for Peace and War. The characters, therefore, closely resemble those of the preceding grant. It will suffice to call attention to the different forms of medial ū seen in rūp-ānurūpam, ll. 5-6, -abhīrūpa-, l. 20, and krūr-āśayatayā-, l. 12, the prishtha-mātrā denoting medial ē in mṛig-ā-dhirājē, ll. 11-12, the curled curve of ṣ in Jayabhaṭaḥ, ll. 20-21, the cursive s in satata, l. 16 and the tailed h in -āhita, l. 10 and saṅgrāhya, l. 34. The language is Sanskrit. Except for some changes in the names of donees and the date, and the omission of the expressions chatur-charaṇa- and chāturvīdyā-parikalpanā-pūrvam, the present grant is an exact copy of the preceding. As regards orthography, we may state, in addition to what has been noticed above, that the jihvāmūliya occurs in ll. 11 and 32, y is doubled after an anuvāra in saṁnyukta, l. 45 and k before r in yajñādi-kkriyā-, l. 41.

The plates were issued from Nāndīpurī by the illustrious Dadda II of the Early Gurjara Dynasty. He and his ancestors are described here exactly as in the preceding grant. The inscription is dated, both in words and in numerical symbols, on the fifteenth day of the bright fortnight of Kārttika in the year 385. The date must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired year 385, to the 12th October 634 A.C.<sup>2</sup> It does not admit of verification. The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Dadda II, of the same village Śirīshapadraka situated in the Akrūrēśvara vishaya, which he had donated only five years before by the preceding charter. Most of the Brāhmaṇa donees were also the same; for out of the forty Brāhmaṇas who received the former grant, as many as thirty-two<sup>3</sup>

<sup>3</sup> Cf. "The first grant was made to forty Brāhmaṇas; the names of thirty-two of them are repeated in the present grant, the persons omitted being Vāṭasarmā and Mahādēva of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra (No.

figure in the present charter. The reason for making this new grant—which in effect cancelled the previous one, though it is not said so explicitly—is not known; but it may be noted that of the forty Brāhmaṇas to whom the first grant was made, thirty-five were residents of the donated village Śīrīshapadraka, while the remaining five were dwelling at Bhērajjikā. In the present grant all the five names of the Brāhmaṇas of Bhērajjikā have been omitted. It may, therefore, be conjectured that there was some dispute between the Brāhmaṇa donees of the two villages Śīrīshapadraka and Bhērajjikā, which eventually led to the cancellation of the first grant.<sup>1</sup> It may again be noted that all the five Brāhmaṇas, whose names are omitted here, were students of the Atharvavēda which, as is well known, was looked with disfavour in ancient times. The reason for omitting three out of the other thirty-five names may be the death of the donees, without leaving any issue.

The geographical names occurring in the present grant have already been identified.

Handwritten text in Devanagari script, consisting of approximately 26 lines. The text is densely packed and appears to be a historical record or inscription. The script is in an older form of Devanagari, characteristic of the Kalachuri period. The lines are numbered 2 through 26 on both the left and right sides of the text block.

Success ! Hail ! From Nāndipurī—

(Line 33)—‘Be it known to you ! For the increase of the religious merit and fame of (Our) mother and father and of Ourselves, We have granted, with a libation of water on the full-moon day of Kārttika, this village, (viz.,) Śīrīshapadraka situated in the vishaya of Akṛūrēśvara—together with udranga and uparikara, inclusive of all dues and exempt from all gifts, forced labour and special rights, which is not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas, according to the maxim of waste land, (and) which is to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons’ sons (of the donees) as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure,—to the thirty-four Brāhmaṇas, (namely,) the Brāhmaṇa Ādityaravi, who is a resident of Jambūśaras, who is of the Bharadvāja gōtra and a student of the Kaṇva (charaṇa), and also Tāpīsūra, (and) Indraśūra, (and) Īśvara; and also Bhaṭṭi, the teacher, who is of the Vatsa gōtra, (and) Gōpāditya, (and) Vāḍa, (and) Viśākha, (and) Agniśarman, (and) Bhaṭṭigaṇa, (and) Drōṇa; Viśākha of the Māṭhara gōtra, (and) Dhara, (and) Nandi, (and) Rāma; Tāpīśarman of the Dauṇḍakīya gōtra, (and) the second Tāpīśarman, (and) Drōṇa, (and) Bhaṭṭi, (and) Pitṛīśarman, (and) Bhāgīsvāmin, (and) Dattasvāmin; Dhara of the Lākshmaṇya gōtra, (and) Dāmadhara, (and) Īśvara; Bāva of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra,

[For a translation of ll. 42-45, see above, p. 66.]

(L. 45) And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas:—

(Here follow four benedictive and imprecatory verses).

(L. 49) In the year three hundred increased by eighty-five, on the fifteenth (lunar day) of Kārttika, (this charter) has been written at the command of (Our) own mouth by Rēva, (the officer) in charge of the Department of Peace and War.

The year 300 (and) 80 (and) 5, (the month) Kārttika, (the lunar day) 10 (and) 5.

This is the sign-manual of Prasāntarāga, the son of Vītarāga, who is devoted to worship of the feet of the sun.

No. 18; PLATE XII

SANKHEDA PLATE OF RANAGRAHA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 391.

THIS copper-plate measuring 9.5" by 4.5" was apparently found at Saṅkhēḍā in the Baroda District Bombay State. It has been edited before, with a lithograph, but without a translation, by Mr. H. H. Dhruva in the Ep. Ind., Vol. II, pp. 20-21. It is edited here from the same lithograph.

It is the last plate of its set, and contains ten lines of well-executed writing. The average size of letters is .15". The plate has at the top two round holes .3" in diameter for the rings which must have connected it with other plates of the set. No ring or seal has however been found.

The characters of the inscription including the sign-manual of the donor Raṅgraha belong to the western variety of the South Indian alphabets. The sanction<sup>1</sup> of the gift by the reigning king Dadda is, however, like his sign-manual in the other Saṅkhēḍā and Kairā grants, in the northern characters. The only palæographical peculiarities that call for notice are that (1) the curve for medial i is turned to the right in āchchhindya-mānam, l. 2; (2) the notch of b is at the top; (3) the right-hand hook of ñ is added to the subscript ch in uktañ=cha, l. 3. The language is Sanskrit, and except for four customary benedictive and imprecatory verses, the extant portion of the record is in prose. The text is very incorrectly written; see, for instance, Ādityaśarmamāya for Ādityaśarmmaṇē, and uchchhrishṭam for utsrishṭam, both in l. 1; asmādāyō for asmad-dāyō, l. 2, etc. The visarga is wrongly omitted in many places, as e.g. in -bhōgapatibhi, l. 1, -numantavya, l. 2, mahā-pātakai, l. 3, and the final consonant in syā, l. 3 and vasē, l. 4. As regards orthography, we may note that the consonant following r is doubled in sarggēna and anyair-vvā, l. 1, pañchabhir=mmahāpāmatakai, l. 3, etc; ri is used for the vowel ri in krishṇ-āhayō, l. 5, -dhikrita and Mātribhaṭēna, l. 10, etc; and n occurs in place of ṇ in sarggēna, l. 1 and yaśaskarāni, l. 6.

<sup>1</sup> The expression Śrī-Dadda-pādānto( nu ) jñā [tam] conveying the sanction is in characters resembling those of the sign-manual of Dadda II, in the Kairā and Saṅkhēḍā grants (Nos. 16-17, 19-20), but the addition of the word pāda to the royal name and the use of the personal name Dadda instead of the viruda Prasāntarāga shows that it is not in the handwriting of Dadda II.

The plate contains the last part of a grant of Raṇagraha, the son of Vītarāga, who describes himself in his sign-manual as devoted to the worship of the sun. The grant was sanctioned by the illustrious Dadda. In the absence of the previous plates of the set, all details about the object, occasion and purpose of the gift are lost. Only the name of the Brāhmaṇa donee Ādityaśarman has been preserved on the present plate. It is possible, however, to conjecture that the object of the gift was a field<sup>1</sup> as in the case of the other complete Saṅkhēḍā grants of Dadda II. The dūtaka was the Bhōgikapālaka Dujjāna and the writer Māṭṛibhaṭa, the Officer in charge of the Department of Peace and War.

The inscription is dated, both in words and in numerical symbols, on the fifteenth tithi of the dark fortnight of Vaiśākha in the year 391 of an unspecified era. The palaeography of the grant makes it certain that the date must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., the fifteenth tithi of the dark fortnight of the amānta Vaiśākha in the expired<sup>2</sup> year 391 would correspond to the 15th May 641 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

We know from two complete sets of Saṅkhēḍā plates<sup>3</sup> that Dadda II-Praśāntarāga continued to reign till the Kalachuri year 392. The date of the present grant, therefore, falls in his reign. As Dadda II also was a son of Vītarāga, Raṇagraha, the donor of the present grant, must have been his brother. It seems that he was placed in charge of some part of his kingdom and had the status of a feudatory chief, but as he was not completely independent, his grant had to be sanctioned by his liege-lord, Dadda II. Dr. D.R. Bhandarkar has, however, suggested that Raṇagraha was another name of Dadda II himself<sup>4</sup>, but the duct of the latter's sign-manual is different in the Kairā and Saṅkhēḍā plates.<sup>5</sup> Secondly, the early Gurjara kings are known to have assumed only one biruda in addition to their personal name and the biruda of Dadda II, known from his Kairā and Saṅkhēḍā plates, was Praśāntarāga, not Raṇagraha. Thirdly, his minister for peace and war was Rēva during the period from K. 380 to K. 392.<sup>6</sup> The latter would, therefore, in all probability, have been mentioned in that capacity in the present grant of K. 391. But the officer mentioned here as Sandhivigrahādhipikṛita is Māṭṛibhaṭa, not Rēva. For these reasons, I prefer to follow Mr. Dhruva<sup>7</sup> and Dr. Bühler<sup>8</sup> in taking Raṇagraha to be a brother of Dadda II.

<sup>19</sup> These eight aksharas are in current-hand characters. Mr. Dhruva read them as श्रीददृपादान्तज्ञाति and proposed the emendation—पादान्तज्ञाति. Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar proposed to read. -पादान्तज्ञाति[ना*] and to construe it as an epithet of Mātṛibhāṭa. (See his Inscriptions of Northern India, p. 161, n. 3). I would suggest श्रीददृपादानुज्ञातम्. Compare श्रीपृथिवीवल्लभमहारजानुज्ञातेन in the Goā plates of Satyāśraya Dhruvarāja Indravarman in J. B. B. R. A. S., Vol. X (Old Series), p. 365.

(L. 8) In the year three hundred (increased by) ninety-one, on the fifteenth (tithi) of the dark (fortnight) of Vaiśākha, (in figures) the year 300 (and) 90, (the month) Vaiśākha, the dark (fortnight), (the lunar day) 10 (and) 5.

The dūtaka of this (grant) is the Bhōgikapālaka Dujjāna.

This is the sign-manual of Raṇagraha, the son of the illustrious Vitarāga, who is devoted to the worship of the sun.

(As) sanctioned by the feet of the illustrious Dadda (II), this (order) has been written by Matṛibhaṭa who is in charge of (the Department of) Peace and War.

No. 19; PLATE XIII A

SANKHEDA PLATES (FIRST SET) OF DADDA II (PRASANTARAGA):
(KALACHURI) YEAR 392.

THESE copper-plates were discovered in 1895 by Mr. Vithal Nagar of Baroda at Saṅkhēḍā in the Baroda District Bombay State. Dr. G. Bühler first published an article in German on them in the Sitzungsberichte der philos.-histor. Classe der Wiener Akademi, Vol. CXXXV, No. VIII, and subsequently edited them with photo-lithographs, but without a translation, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. V, pp., 37 ff. I edit them here from the same lithographs.

They are two plates inscribed on one side only, each measuring 10" by 5½", and contain at the top two holes ¼" in diameter for the rings which must have originally held them together. No ring or seal has, however, been found. The inscription is in a state of excellent preservation. The record consists of twenty-nine lines, of which fourteen are incised on the first and the remaining fifteen on the second plate. The average size of letters is .15".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets as in the two cognate sets of Kairā plates. The letters except those of the sign-manual contain small knobs at the top. The letters of the sign-manual, on the other hand, which are in the northern current-hand characters have short horizontal (often curved) strokes at the top. As the present inscription was written by the same officer Rēva who wrote the earlier Kairā grants,<sup>1</sup> its characters, as might be expected, closely resemble those of the latter. Some peculiarities may, however, be noticed here. The medial ī is generally cursive as in didhiti, l. 4 and mānini, l. 6, but its other form consisting of two circles one inside the other occurs in sīmā-, l. 11. The form of medial ū in vadhū, l. 2, paripūrta, l. 5, pūrva, l. 6, the like of which rarely occurs in the earlier Kairā grants, that of h in mahattar-, l. 9 and of the triangular b in bahala, l. 7, brahmadēya, l. 12, etc. are also noteworthy. A final consonant is indicated by a horizontal stroke at the top, see vasēt, l. 24. Punctuation is denoted by single or double dots and in some cases by single or double vertical strokes. The symbols for 300, 90, 10, 5 and 2 occur in l. 29.

The language is Sanskrit. The text of the inscription, so far as it goes, is almost<sup>2</sup> an exact copy of that of the earlier Kairā grants except, of course, in such details as the name and description of the donee, the object of the grant, its date, etc. As regards orthography, we may note in addition to what has already been noticed in connection with the Kairā grants, the doubling of th after an anusvāra in pañthāh, l. 12 and of k before r in yajñādikkery-, ll. 17-18.

The plates were issued from Nāndīpura by Dadda who had obtained the pañchamahāśabda. As in the Kairā plates, he calls himself Praśāntarāga, the son of Vitarāga, in his sign-manual. He is, therefore, identical with Dadda II of the Early Gurjara dynasty. Unlike the Kairā plates, the present inscription does not contain any eulogy of his two predecessors—his grandfather Dadda I and his father Jayabhāṭa I-Vitarāga.

The plates record the grant of a field in the village Suvarṇārapalli which was situated in the vishaya of Saṅgamakhēṭaka, requiring for its seed grains one piṭaka of paddy by the measure prevalent in that vishaya, together with the usual rights and exemptions. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Sūrya of the Bharadvāja gōtra and the Vājasaneyā Mādhyandina śākhā, who had previously emigrated from Daśapura and was then residing at the village Kshīrasara. The grant was made for the purpose of providing for the five great sacrifices and other rites. The donated field was bounded on the east by the junction with the boundary of the village Kshīrasara, on the north by the junction with the boundary of the village Kukkuṭavallikā, on the west by an agrahāra field, a banyan tree and a talāikā (tank?) and on the south by the way leading to the village Suvarṇārapalli and the junction with (the boundary of) Aṭavīpāṭaka. The plates were written by Rēva, the head of the Department of Peace and War.

The grant is dated both in words and in numerical symbols on the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Vaiśākha in the year 392. This date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-249 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired year 392, to the 20th April 642 A.C.<sup>1</sup> It does not admit of verification.

As for the localities mentioned in the present inscription, Nāndīpura which is clearly identical with Nāndīpurī of the Kairā grants, has already been identified with Nāndōd in the Broach District. Daśapura is Mandasōr in Western Malwā. Saṅgamakhēṭaka, the headquarters of the vishaya named after it, is clearly modern Saṅkhēḍā where the plates were discovered. As Dr. Bühler says, 'Saṅgamakhēṭaka means etymologically 'the village at the confluence (of two rivers), and the Unchh and the Or<sup>2</sup> join near Saṅkhēḍā. The vishaya or province of Saṅgamakhēṭaka probably included the Saṅkhēḍā Prānt of the Gaikwād's possessions, as well as the neighbouring portion of Rēvākānṭhā Agency, still called Saṅkhēḍā Mēvās'. Of the villages mentioned in the present grant, only two can be identified. Kukkuṭavallikā<sup>3</sup> is apparently identical with Kukaḍ, about 8 miles west-south-west of Saṅkhēḍā. Kshīrasara may be Khariākuā, about a mile to the east of Kukaḍ.

SANKHEDA PLATES (SECOND SET) OF DADDA II (PRASANTARAGA) :
(KALACHURI) YEAR 392

THESE plates were, like the preceding, discovered in 1895 by Mr. Vithal Nagar of Baroda at Saṅkhēḍā in the Baroḍā District of the Bombay State. Dr. Bühler first published an article in German on them in the *Sitzungsberichte der philos.-histor. They are two copper-plates, each being inscribed on one side only and measuring 10" by 6". They contain at the top two round holes, about  $\frac{1}{4}$ " in diameter, for the rings which must have held them together. But no ring or seal, if there was any, was discovered. The inscription is in a state of excellent preservation. The record consists of twenty-nine lines, of which fourteen are inscribed on the first and the remaining fifteen on the second plate. The average size of letters is .15".

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets, and resemble those of the last grant which, as we shall see, was written by the same writer and on the same day. Still, curious as it might appear, there are some minor differences in their characters. For instance the medial (long) ī is generally cursive in the preceding record, while its prevailing form in this grant consists of two circles one inside the other; see prakāśikṛita, 1.6, Kshīrasara, 1.9, etc.; in the former record th was marked by a notch in the base in all cases, while in this it generally appears with a ringlet in its loop, though the notched form also occurs sporadically; as instances of the former type, see dīn-ānāth-, 1.4, manōrath-, 1.5, etc., and of the latter, see dharm-ārthā-, 1.24; b was generally triangular in the preceding grant, but is rectangular almost everywhere in this; see e.g., kar-āvabōdhita, 1.1, bahala, 1.7, etc. The sign-manual is in the northern current-hand characters as in other inscriptions of Dadda II. The language is Sanskrit and the text is almost<sup>1</sup> an exact copy of the preceding record, differing chiefly in respect of the object of the grant. The orthography shows the same peculiarities as in the preceding grant, for both the records were written by the same scribe. One additional peculiarity may, however, be noticed here, viz. the doubling of the sibilant ś after r in samanudarśśayaty-, against Pāṇini, VIII, 4, 49.

The plates were issued from Nāndīpura by Dadda who had acquired the pañchamahāśabda and who calls himself Praśāntarāga, the son of Vitarāga in his sign-manual. He is, therefore, identical with Dadda II of the Early Gurjara dynasty. The inscription records the grant of a field requiring as seed grains ten prasthas of paddy by the larger measure. The field was situated on the south-western boundary of the village Kshīrasara in the vishaya of Saṅgamakhēṭaka. The donee was the same as in the preceding grant, viz. the Brāhmaṇa Sūrya of the Bharadvāja gōtra and the Vājasaneyā-Mādhyandina śākhā, who had emigrated from the town of Daśapura and was then residing at Kshīrasara. The present grant was made for the same purpose and on the same day as the preceding and as stated already, the scribe was also the same, viz., the Sāndhivigrahika Rēva. One additional detail which does not occur in any other grant of Dadda II is the mention of the dūtaka Karka who, like the dūtaka of Raṇagraha's grant, bore the title Bhōgika-pālaka.

The date of the record, viz., the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Vaiśākha in the year 392 is given both in words and in numerical symbols. It would correspond, for the expired Kalachuri year 392, to the 20th April 642 A.C. as stated before.<sup>2</sup> It does not admit of verification.

The geographical names Nāndīpura, Daśapura, Saṅgamakhēṭaka and Kshīrasara have already been identified.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> As minor differences may be noted samanudarśśayaty-astu of the present record in place of samanuvarṇya bōdhayaty-astu etc. in line 9 of the last grant, and sa-sībaram in line 12, nothing corresponding to which occurs in the last grant. The present inscription again mentions a dūtaka who does not figure in any other grant of Dadda II.

<sup>9</sup> The subscript m of lma is not completely incised. The mark of punctuation, which follows, is superfluous.

<sup>10</sup> I am not certain about the correct form of this technical term which so far as I know, occurs only in the Pālitānā plates of Dhruvasēna I (Ep. Ind., Vol. XVII, p. 107) in the form, sa-saiburam. There also it is an adjective of some word like keśhātram which is omitted by mistake. M. Williams gives Sibira in the senses of a royal camp, a tent, an entrenchment for the protection of an army, a kind of grain, but none of these meanings would suit here. Perhaps it means 'a farm-house'.

No. 21; PLATE XIV

NAVSARI PLATES OF JAYABHATA III : (KALACHURI) YEAR 456

THESE plates were found during excavation of some foundations at Navsāri, the chief town of the Navsāri Prānt of the Surat District, Bombay State. They were brought to notice by Mr. Shariarji Dadabhai Bharuch of Navsāri, who sent them to Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji. The latter edited them with photozincographed plates and a translation in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XIII, pp. 70 ff. They are edited here from the same facsimiles.

They are two copper-plates each measuring 12" by 9". Their edges are fashioned thicker so as to serve as rims for the protection of the writing. A small piece at the top of the proper right-hand side and a large triangular piece with its sides measuring about 4", 3" and 4½" at the bottom of the same side of the second plate have been broken away and lost. This has resulted in the loss of one akshara in l. 23 and from one to six aksharas in ll. 36-43. All the missing letters except those in l. 42 can, however, be conjecturally supplied. The plates are otherwise in a state of good preservation. They have two round holes about ½" in diameter for the rings which must have originally held them together, but the rings and the seal, which must have been on one of them are lost. The record consists of forty-four lines, twenty-two being inscribed on each plate. The average size of letters is .15".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the grants of Dadda II. As regards individual letters, attention may be drawn to the two forms of ḍ as in the Kairā plates of K. 380<sup>1</sup>—one with a loop and the other with a tail, see tadāka-, ll. 24 and 28, and to the triangular th in pathak-, l. 22. Dh appears round in -ādhirōhana, l. 10 and elongated elsewhere as in dhārā-, l. 6; b is square in bahubhir-, l. 37, round in bandhu, l. 15, bal-ādihikṛita-, l. 42 and almost triangular like v, in bali-, l. 21; ś shows, instead of the usual horizontal bar, a notch in its right limb, see ma-hā-śabda and kuśali, both in l. 17. A final consonant is indicated by a horizontal line at the top, see vasēt l. 36, or by curve as in nibaddham l. 43. Punctuation is expressed by single and double dots as well as by single and double vertical strokes. The numerical symbols for 400, 50 and 6 occur in l. 42. Others for 10 and 5, which must have occurred at the beginning of l. 43, have been lost. The sign-manual at the end is in the northern current-hand characters. Unlike the sign-manual of Dadda II, it shows the bipartite Nāgari form of y.

The language is high-flown Sanskrit, containing long compounds and puns and other alaṅkāras. The eulogistic portion is composed on the model of that of the earlier grants of Dadda II (see e.g., the Kairā plates). Except for six benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the record is in prose throughout. The Prakrit word satka occurs thrice in the formal part defining the boundaries of the donated field. As regards orthographical peculiarities, we may notice the use of the guttural nasal instead of anusvāra as in vaṅśa and nistriṅśa, both in l. 6 and the doubling of a consonant after r as in vinirggata and chāturvīdyā, both in l. 19, pūrvvōttara, l. 22 etc. The marks of punctuation appear redundant in many cases in the prose portion of the text.

The plates were issued by the illustrious Jayabhata, the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, from his camp at Kāyāvātāra. He was born in a family descended from the Mahārāja Karṇa and had attained the pañchamahāśabda. The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Jayabhata, of a field measuring sixty nivartanas on the north-east boundary of the village Śamīpadraka situated in the Kōrillā pathaka (sub-division). Two villages Golikā and Dhāhaddha are mentioned in connection with the boundaries of the field. The purpose of the gift was, as usual, to provide for the maintenance of the religious rites such as bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra, (the reception of) guests etc. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Dēvasvāmin of the Prāgāyaṇa<sup>1</sup> gōtra, a student of the Mādhyandina sākhā of the White Yajurveda, who had emigrated from Girinagara and was at the time of the grant residing at the agrahāra village Śraddhikā. The grant was made on the occasion of a lunar eclipse on the fifteenth (tithi) of the bright half of Māgha. It was written by the Mahābalādhiḥkṛita Kēśava, the son of a Bhōgika whose name is lost. The dūtaka was the Balādhiḥkṛita Bāvulla<sup>2</sup>.

The plates give the following genealogy of the donor—

The record does not furnish much historical information about these princes. The last two—the second Dadda and the second Jayabhata—were devout worshippers of Mahēśvara and had attained the pañchamahāśabda. The former is also said to have attained the biruda of Bāhusahāya (he whose arm is the sole helper) by the might of his arm, which he exhibited in the wars with the eastern and western supreme rulers. As these rulers are not mentioned by name, it is not possible to identify them definitely, but the former may be the ruler of Valabhī and the latter the king of Malwa. In connection with the first Dadda in the above list, we have the interesting information, which is supplied for the first time by the present grant, that he attained great fame by giving protection to the lord of Valabhī when he was attacked by the Emperor, the illustrious Harshadēva.

Though the present grant does not specify the dynasty to which these princes belonged, there is no doubt that they belonged to the Gurjara lineage; for as Pandit Bhagvanlal pointed out, these names do not occur in any other dynasty.<sup>3</sup> In the present record their family is, for the first time, said to have descended from the Mahārāja Karṇa. This is evidently in accordance with the tendency of the age to trace the origin of royal families to some mythical or legendary eponymous hero. This Mahārāja Karṇa is, therefore, probably identical with the epic hero of that name, the staunch supporter and friend of Duryōdhana, who distinguished himself in the Mahābhārata war.

As shown below, the present grant was made in the Kalachuri year 456. Dadda, the first prince mentioned in it who was the great-grand-father of the donor Jayabhata, was, therefore, probably ruling in the Kalachuri year 381. He is consequently identical with Dadda II—Praśāntarāga whose known dates range from K. 380 to K. 392, i.e., from 629-30 A.C. to 641-42 A.C. This is again confirmed by the statement in the present plates that he was a contemporary of the Emperor Harshadēva who is none other than Harshavardhana of Kanauj (606-647 A.C.). The Gurjara princes mentioned in the present grant are, therefore, Dadda (II)-Prasāntarāga, his son Jayabhāṭa (II), his son Dadda (III)-Bāhusahāya, and his son Jayabhāṭa (III) who made the present grant.

As stated above, the grant recorded on the present plates was made on the occasion of a lunar eclipse on the full-moon day of Māgha. The year is given in words in l.41 as 456 of an unspecified era. There is, however, no doubt that like the dates of the other grants of the Early Gurjaras, this date is to be referred to the Kalachuri era. The charter was written on the same day on which the grant was made. The date of its recording was expressed by numerical symbols in ll.42 and 43. The symbols which occur at the end of l.42 give the year 456 as the year of recording, but the name of the month, and the lunar fortnight as well as the symbols for the tithi, which were incised in the beginning of l.43, are lost owing to the breaking off of the left-hand corner of the second plate. The name of the week-day is also lost, as only the letters vāre can be read with certainty in the beginning of the preserved portion of l.43. The akshara which preceded vā of vāre is also partially broken away, but what remains of it shows that it was ma and, therefore, the day was either Sōma Monday or Bhauma Tuesday. Assuming that the charter was made nibaddha on the same day on which the grant was made as in the case of the Kāvī plates<sup>1</sup> of Jayabhāṭa IV, Bhagvanlal and Fleet conjectured that Māgha śu. di. 15, Monday (or Tuesday) of the year 456 was the date of the grant. Cunningham found by calculation that with the epoch of 249-250 A.C., the full moon day of Māgha of the Chēdi (or Kalachuri) year 456<sup>2</sup> fell on Tuesday, the 2nd February 706 A.C., on which day there was a lunar eclipse<sup>3</sup> as stated in the grant. This is, therefore, the date of the grant.

As for the geographical names occurring in the present grant, Pandit Bhagvanlal<sup>4</sup> identified Kāyāvatāra, the site of the royal camp, with Kāvī in the Jambusar tāluka of the Broach district; but, as pointed out by Bühler<sup>5</sup>, Kāvī does not phonetically correspond to Kāyāvatāra; besides, the old name of Kāvī was Kāpikā which is mentioned in the Kāvī plates of the Gujarat Rāshtrakūta prince Gōvinda<sup>6</sup>. Dr. Bühler at first took the place-name to signify the incarnation of a son or descendant of Ka or Prajāpati, and thought that Kāyāvatāra was a place of pilgrimage on the Narmadā<sup>7</sup>. Later on he identified it with Kārwan (lat. 20° 3' N. and long. 73° 10' E.) which he connected philologically with Kāyāvatāra (the village possessing the Kāya manifestation<sup>8</sup>). It seems better to derive Kārwan from Kāyāvarōhaṇa<sup>9</sup> which conveys the same sense as

<sup>2</sup> Cunningham did not state in this connection whether the year was current or expired, but from his remarks in A. S. I. R. Vol. IX, p. 111, it is clear that he took it to be an expired year. Later on, Kielhorn clearly showed in his article 'the Epoch of the Kalachuri or Chēdi Era' that the year was expired according to the epoch A. D. 248-249. (See Ind. Ant., Vol. XVII, p. 220). This is one of the few verifiable early dates of the era, which come from Western India. It shows that the epoch A. D. 247-248, which Kielhorn deduced later from Kalachuri dates found in the Madhya Pradesh and Central India, does not suit these early dates.

<sup>3</sup> 'According to Von Oppolzer's Canon der Finsternisse there was a lunar eclipse on February 2, 706, 16 h. 57 m. Greenwich time or at Lañkā, 9 h. 40 m. P. M.' Ind. Ant., Vol. XVII, p. 220.

Kāyāvatāra, viz., 'the descent in the bodily form' of Śiva and refers to his incarnation as Lakuliśa, the founder of a Pāśupata sect.<sup>1</sup> Girinagara is the well-known Girnār in Kathiawad. Śraddhikā is Sādhi, 5 miles south by west of Padrā, the head-quarters of the Padrā taluka in the Baroda District. Kōrillā, the headquarters of the pathaka (sub-division), in which the donated village was situated, is probably Kōral on the northern bank of the Narmadā 10 m. north-east of Broach. Śamīpadraka is, as shown by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar<sup>2</sup>, identical with the village of the same name which was given away by the Navsāri plates of Karka-Suvarṇavarsha, for two of the surrounding villages Gōlikā and Dhāhaddha are the same<sup>3</sup> in both the grants. In Karka's grant the village is said to be situated in the country between the Mahī and the Narmadā.<sup>4</sup> From the boundary villages mentioned in it, Śamīpadraka seems to be identical with Sōndārṇ, seven miles south-west of Kārwan and about twelve miles north of the Narmadā. Dhāhaddha is probably Dhāwaṭ two miles to the north of Sōndārṇ. Gōlikā cannot be identified.

<sup>1</sup> The place is called Kāyāvatāra in the Liṅga-purāna and Kāyārōbhaṇa in the Vāyu-purāna. (J. Bom. Br. R. A. S., Vol. XXII, p. 154). See also the Ekalingji stone inscription (loc. cit. pp. 151 ff.) which mentions it as Kāyāvarōbhaṇa and Cintra prastāni (Ep. Ind., Vol. 1, p. 281) in which it is called Kārōbhaṇa.

<sup>3</sup> Pandit Bhagvanlal read Sbrāvāyana and proposed to alter it to Brādbnāyana. The Gotra-pravara-nibandha-kadamba gives Prāgāyana as a gotra, which is perhaps the nearest substitute that can be adopted here. For the confounding of v and g, see gabana in l. 14 which appears to have been incised as vabana.

<sup>4</sup> The engraver first omitted sa of Vājasaneyā. As there was then no space between ja and nē for engraving the akshara sa, he incised another ja between vā and ja and tried to correct the original ja into sa.

Success ! Hail ! From the camp at the famous Kāyāvātāra—

In the great lineage of the Mahārāja Karṇa which, like a lake full of lotuses<sup>7</sup>, has become the perpetual abode of Lakshmi; which (by its charity) allays the suffering caused by desire for wealth (as the lake does by quenching the thirst for water); which has its greatness enhanced by the sun; which shines with prosperity which affords support to the families of Brāhmaṇas (as the lake does by giving shelter to multitudes of birds), (there was), like a swan, the illustrious Dadda (II) whose pure disposition was not affected by the freaks of the powerful Kali age; who by his inscrutable and noble deeds excited the wonder of all the guardians of the world;<sup>8</sup> who had a canopy of glory, possessing the grace of a moving large and white cloud, which had sprung from his protection of the king of Valabhī when he was attacked by the Emperor, the illustrious Harshadēva.

(Line 5) His son (was) the illustrious Jayabhāṭa (II), the joy of whose mind was heightened as his stores of wealth were enjoyed by supplicants who fearlessly approached him; whose valour was too much fondled by the destruction of the families of many foes, as fire is by the burning of a mass of thorns and bamboos; (and) who covered the lotus-like faces of the damsels that were the regions, with the shining white garment of his fame in the guise of the pearls from the frontal globes of the elephants of his enemies, cleft by the sharp edge of his sword.

(L. 7) His son (was) the illustrious Dadda (III), who was clever in performing his duty by discrimination acquired by the study of the sacred treatise composed by the great sage Manu and who, by maintaining (the institutions of) varṇas (castes) and āśramas (orders of life), completely uprooted the pride of the Kali age; who annihilated the vanity of all kings by (spending in charity) the wealth he had acquired<sup>1</sup>, in excess of the desires of (his) supplicants; whose valour in mounting mighty elephants became well known through (his) holding in check infuriated elephants, which, becoming uncontrollable through rut, had grown restive under the goad; whose habit of (performing) acts of benevolence was celebrated throughout the world through his deliverance of hundreds of kings who had fallen under the blow of adversity; whose second name Bāhusahāya (one whose arm is the sole helper) became renowned through the valour of his arm which he exhibited in routing numerous hosts of elephants that surrounded thousands of kings in the great wars fought with the supreme rulers of the east and the west; who was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara (and) attained the pañchamahāśabda.

(L. 13) His son, the illustrious Jayabhāṭa (III),—who is clever in destroying the hosts of elephants thickly arrayed in the clash of many battles; who is a wild fire in (burning) the forests of the rebellious; who is to the destitute, helpless and distressed people, friends, servants and relatives as the full-moon is to the clusters of lotuses; who is able to confound his adversaries as the current of the Bhāgirathī (i.e., the Gaṅgā) is to undermine the opposite banks; who is the commandant of a large and boisterous army even as Sāntanu was the lord of a great and noisy river (viz., the Gaṅgā); who has rescued kings by the might and valour of his arm, even as the primeval Boar rescued mountains; who is a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara and has attained the pañchamahāśabda—being in good health, addresses (the following order) to all the kings, feudatories, Bhōjikas, heads of vishayas the Mahattaras and rāshṭras and villages:—

(L. 18) “Be it known to you that for the increase of the religious merit and fame in this world and the next of (My) mother and father and of Myself, I have today, on the occasion of an eclipse of the moon on the auspicious day of the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha, granted with a libation of water, as a brahmadāya, a field measuring sixty-four nivartanas of land on the north-east boundary in the village Śamīpadraka situated in the Kōrillā pathaka—the boundaries of which are (as follows)—on the east the junction with the boundary of the village Gōlikā; on the south the tank called Yamala-khallara<sup>2</sup> and the field belonging to the Mahattara Mahēśvara and the cultivated field belonging to the barber Dēvaka; on the west, the road that goes to the village Dhāhaddha from the village Śamīpadraka itself; on the north, the tank called Baruṭakhallara and the brahmadēya field belonging to the Brāhmaṇa Narma residing at Kōrillā—this field thus defined by its four boundaries, together with the udraṅga<sup>1</sup> and the uparikara, with taxes on things manufactured or imported (into the village),<sup>2</sup> with its income in grain and gold, with (finer imposed for) the ten offences<sup>3</sup>, with the right to forced labour arising therefrom,<sup>4</sup> with houses, immovables and movables, streets, (the right to) ingress, egress (and) (free) movements, pasture-lands for four-footed animals, step-wells, (other) wells, tanks, (and other) things necessary for living in the village;<sup>5</sup> free from the interference of all officers of the state; exclusive of grants previously made to gods and Brāhmaṇas; (which is) to be enjoyed according to the maxim of waste land, successively by sons, sons' sons, and their descendants as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean, the earth, rivers and mountains will endure,—to the Brāhmaṇa Dēvasvāmin, who is known by the name Kallumbara which we have given him; (who is) the son of the Brāhmaṇa Datta, who belongs to the Prāgāyana gōtra (and) is a student of the Mādhyandina (śākhā) of the Vājasaneyya (i.e., White Yajurveda); who has emigrated from (the city of) Girinagara and is now residing at the agrahāra (village) Śraddhikā and belongs to the community of the Chāturvēdins of the place,—for the performance of the five great sacrifices (viz.) bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra, (reception of) guests and such other (religious) rites.

(L. 31) Wherefore, none should cause obstruction while he is enjoying (it), cultivating (it), or causing (it) to be cultivated or directing (others to cultivate it) in accordance with the rules applicable to brahmadāya (land). And future gracious kings, whether born in our family or others, should consent to this our gift and preserve it! Whoever with his mind shrouded by the veil of the darkness of ignorance, would confiscate it or allow it to be confiscated, shall incur the five great sins together with the minor sins.”

(L. 34) And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas—
(Here follow six imprecatory and benedictive verses).

(L. 41) This (charter) has been written by the Mahābalādhiḥkṛita Kēśava, the son of the Bhōgika... on the fifteenth (tithi) of the bright fortnight of Māgha in the year four hundred increased by fifty-six. The dūtaka of this (charter) is the Balādhiḥkṛita Bāvulla. This is recorded on [Tuesday] the month [Māgha, the bright fortnight, the lunar day 10 and 5] in the year 400 (and) 50 (and) 6.

This is the sign-manual of Me, the illustrious Jayabhata (III).

<sup>1</sup> As remarked by Bhagvanlal, some of these rights and privileges are hardly appropriate in the case of the donation of a field.

<sup>3</sup> These are probably identical with the ten sins enumerated in the Sukranītisāra (adhyāya 3, sl. 6) viz., murder, theft, adultery, slander, harsh language, lying, divulgence of secrets, evil design, atheism and perverseness. The same enumeration occurs in the Ashtāṅgabṛīdaya of Vāgbhata. Cf. also Fleet, C. I. I., Vol. III, p. 189, n. 4.

NO. 22 ; PLATE XV

ANJANERI PLATES OF JAYABHATA III : (KALACHURI) YEAR 460

THESE plates were discovered in 1936 in the possession of the Shid family of Anjanēri, a village about four miles to the east of Trimbak, the well-known place of pilgrimage in the Nasik District of the Bombay State. They were brought to my notice by Rao Bahadur K. N. Dikshit, Director General of Archæology. I edit the inscription here from the original plates which were kindly sent to me by the Superintendent of Archæology, Western Circle, Poona.<sup>1</sup>

They are two copper-plates each measuring 12.8" in breadth and 9.4" in height. At the top of each plate there are two round holes, .6" in diameter, for two rings which must have originally held them together. One of the rings has since been lost. The ends of the other are soldered into the bottom of a ladle-shaped seal. On the face of the latter, which is roundish and measures about 1.8" in diameter, there appears in relief on a countersunk surface a solar symbol similar to that on the seals of the Kairā plates<sup>2</sup> of Dadda II, and below it the legend Śrī-Jayabhāṭa. The plates, which are inscribed on the inner side only, are in a state of good preservation. Their ends are slightly raised for the protection of the writing. There are thirty-nine lines in all, of which eighteen are inscribed on the first plate, and the remaining twenty-one on the second. The average size of the letters is .15".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the Navsāri plates. The sign-manual of the donor is in the northern characters. As shown below, he is identical with Jayabhāṭa III who granted the Navsāri plates. It is noteworthy, therefore, that the formation of some aksharas in the sign-manual of the present grant is different; compare, e.g., the aksharas ma, ja, bha and ṭa in the two signatures. The grant is written in a careless and cursive hand. Notice, for instance, the cursive form of li in kali and -ākulita-, both in l. 2. Several letters are mis-shapen or incompletely formed owing to the carelessness of either the writer or the engraver. See, e.g., ś in -nistriṅśa-, l. 5 and śrī-Jayabhāṭa-, l. 6; m in -samudbhūta-, l. 13 and kachchhikāmra-, l. 25, ṇ in -pramāṇam, l. 27 etc. Many letters appear in varying forms; see, for instance, the form of ch in -charita-, l. 3 and -pravachan-, l. 6; of th in -nātha-, l. 1, -manōratha-, l. 7 and yathā, l. 15; of p in -vismāpita- and -lōkapāla-, both in l. 3; of m in -muni- and -Manu-, both in l. 6; of y in -yaśō-, l. 4, mayā, l. 15 and Vijaḍamba, l. 24; of r in -nivāraṇa- and -guru-, both in l. 8; of v in iva and -vilasit-, both in l. 2, -vāsinaḥ l. 34 etc. Owing to the similarity of bh, g and ś, as well as of v, b and dh it sometimes becomes difficult to say what exactly was intended to be expressed. The jihvāmūliya occurs in l. 14. Punctuation, which is redundant in several places, is generally indicated by a single dot, but in metrical passages by single or double vertical strokes. The numerical symbols for 400, 60, 10 and 1 occur in the last line.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for six benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the whole record is in prose. The text of the inscription is mutatis mutandis identical with that of the Navsāri plates. It shows generally the same orthographical peculiarities. One additional peculiarity noticed here is the doubling of k before t as in -samyukṭa-, l. 33, and -nirbhukṭa, ll. 36-37, which is in accordance with Pāṇini's rule, VIII, 4, 47.

The plates were issued from Bharukachchha by the illustrious Jayabhata, the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, who had attained the pañchamahāśabda. His genealogy is given here exactly as in the Navsāri plates, commencing from Dadda II. He is, therefore, Jayabhata III of the Early Gurjara Dynasty. The object of the present inscription is to record the grant, by Jayabhata III, of three pieces of land, measuring sixty nivartanas in all, in the village Tōraṇaka situated in the vishaya of Nāndīpura. In connection with their boundaries are mentioned the villages Jayapura, Viddhēra, and Bhūtishōhī as well as the river Karilliṇī. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Nārāyaṇa, the son of Chashtasvāmin, of the Sāṇḍilya gōtra and the Kauṭhuma sākhā of the Chhandōga (Śāmvēda), who was then residing at Brahmapurī. The purpose of the gift was, as usual, to provide for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices, bali, charu, vaiśvadēva and others. The grant was made on the occasion of the Tulā-saṅkrānti on the 11th tithi of the dark fortnight of Āśvayuja. It was recorded on the same tithi of the dark fortnight of Āśvayuja in the year 460 of an unspecified era. The charter was written by the Balādhikṛita Sahabhata, the son of the Balādhikṛita Durgabhata. The Dūtaka was the same as in the earlier Navsāri plates, viz. the Balādhikṛita Bāvulla.

The tithi on which the grant was made is mentioned in words in l. 30, and that on which it was recorded is expressed by numerical symbols in the last line. The year is mentioned only once, in the last line, and is expressed in numerical symbols only. This makes it doubtful if the dot following the symbol for 60 indicates the number one, or is a redundant punctuation mark. I am inclined to take the latter view, because a similar mark is used throughout in this record to mark punctuation.<sup>1</sup>

According to Kielhorn's final view, the Kalachuri-Chēdi era commenced on Āśvina śu. di. 1 (the 5th September) in 248 A.C. and its months were pūrṇimānta. Of the early dates of this era, only two<sup>2</sup> admitted of verification and both of them appeared irregular according to this epoch. It would, therefore, be interesting to see how far Kielhorn's conclusion about the epoch of the Chēdi era is proved or disproved by the date of the present grant. The statement in the present plates that the Tulā-saṅkrānti, on which the grant was made, occurred in the dark half of Āśvayuja shows that the month was amānta.<sup>3</sup> According to Kielhorn's final view, the date of the present grant would be expected to fall in 707 A.C. if the Kalachuri year 460 was current, and in 708 A.C. if it was expired. But in neither of these years, did the Tulā-saṅkrānti fall on the 11th tithi of the dark fortnight of the amānta Āśvina.<sup>4</sup> Again, even if we suppose that the Kalachuri year began on Āśvina śu. di. 1 in 249 A.C. (not in 248 A.C.) as was first held by Kielhorn, the date of the present grant would fall in 708 or 709 A.C. according as the year 460 was current or expired. We have seen above that 708 A.C. does not suit. In 709 A.C. also, the Tulā-saṅkrānti did not<sup>5</sup> fall on Āśvina va. di. 11. If, on the other hand, the Kalachuri year commenced on Kārttika śu. di. 1 as I have shown elsewhere<sup>6</sup>, the date of the <sup>1</sup> A similar redundant mark of punctuation occurs after the symbols indicative of the tithi in the same line. Again, if thus read, the year would be an expired one like those of the Navsāri and Kāvī plates of the same dynasty. If the symbols are interpreted to mean 461, the year would have to be taken as current; but current years are cited only exceptionally.

present grant, for the expired Kalachuri year 460 would regularly correspond to Tuesday, the 23rd September 710 A.C., according to the epoch 248-249 A.C. which suits other verifiable early Kalachuri dates. On that day the 11th tithi of the dark fortnight of the amānta Āśvina commenced 45 minutes after mean sunrise and the Tulā-saṅkrānti occurred 15 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise. Tuesday, the 23rd September 710 A.C. is, therefore, the date of the present grant.

As for the geographical names in the present record, Bharukachchha is, of course, modern Broach. Nāndīpura is Nāndōd in the Rājpiplā subdivision of the Broach District. Tōraṇaka is still called Tōraṇ or Tōraṇmāl and lies only two miles to the north of Nāndōd. The statement in the present grant that Tōraṇaka was situated in the Nāndīpura viśhaya proves the correctness of the identification of Nāndīpura with Nāndōd which was first proposed by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī. The river Karillīṇī is clearly Karjan, on the right bank of which both Nāndōd and Tōraṇ are situated. Jayapura cannot be definitely located, unless it is Jesalpur, 3 miles to the north of Tōraṇ. As described in the present plates, it lies on the road passing through Tōraṇ. Bhūtishōhī may be Bhuchāḍ, about 1½ miles from Tōraṇ, on the western bank of the Karjan<sup>1</sup>. Viddhēraka cannot now be traced in the neighbourhood. Brahmapurī, where the donee resided, is probably identical with Brahmapura, mentioned as the place of residence of the donee of the Jhar plates of Dharasēna II<sup>2</sup>. It may be identical with Bāmanphaliā, nine miles south-west of Nāndōd.

Handwritten text in an ancient script, likely Pahlavi, covering the main body of the page. The text is arranged in approximately 18 horizontal lines. Two circular holes are visible on the left side of the fragment, suggesting it was part of a bound volume. The script is dense and appears to be a form of Old Persian or Avestan.

<sup>3</sup> Mairā is a word unknown to Sanskrit dictionaries. But the context shows that the meaning of a field-boundary is probably correct. Even now mīrā has that sense in Marāṭhī, and mērē in Kanāḍa.

NO. 23; PLATE XVI

KAVI PLATE OF JAYABHATA IV: (KALACHURI) YEAR 486

THIS plate was discovered by Rao Saheb Gopalji G. Desai of Broach in 1875.<sup>1</sup> He found it with several other plates in the possession of the Kapila Brāhmaṇas of Kāvī, an ancient town in the Jambusar tāluka of the Broach District, situated not far from the Gulf of Cambay, a few miles to the south of the Mahī. Dr. Bühler, to whom its impressions were sent, made personal inquiries at Kāvī in the course of which he came to know the following history of the plates—‘Five or six hundred years ago a small tānik or receptacle for water, attached to the outside of a house behind a temple of Gaṅgeśvara Mahādēva at Kāvī was cleaned, and among the rubbish at the bottom, seven inscribed copper-plates were found. These were taken possession of by the caste of the Kapilas. During the times of the Musalman rule, in the reign of Mahmud Bigarhā, the Kapilas were sorely oppressed. A portion of the community fled to Gaṅgāsāgara in Bengal and took away two of the plates. The others remained at Kāvī.’<sup>2</sup> The present plate is the second and last plate of its set. It is still in the possession of the Kapila Brāhmaṇas from whom it was recently taken on loan by a medical practitioner of Bombay. The first plate, which was probably one of the two taken to Bengal, is not now forthcoming. The inscription on the second plate was edited with a translation, but without a facsimile, by Dr. Bühler in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. V, pp. 109 ff. Its photograph was subsequently published in Fleet’s Sanskrit, Pāli and Old Kanarese Inscriptions, Plate 272. Having failed to get a fresh impression of the original plate, I edit the inscription on it from a copy of the photograph in Fleet’s book, kindly supplied to me by the Director-General of Archæology in India.

‘Originally the plate measured ten inches in height by thirteen in breadth. But not inconsiderable pieces have been broken off from the right and left hand sides, so that the latter has assumed a nearly semi-circular shape<sup>1</sup>. Almost all the lost aksharas, except those at the end of l. 25 and the beginning of l. 26, can be supplied with the help of the recently discovered Prince of Wales Museum plates<sup>2</sup> of the same king. The plate seems to have undergone very rough treatment, as it is full of indentations. A few letters of the 20th and 22nd lines have been incised with such violence that the punch has penetrated to the other side of the plate. At the back, some lines of illegible letters appear, as if the engraver had first begun his work there, but had afterwards abandoned his attempt. The plate is free from verdigris and oxidization.<sup>3</sup>

As said before, this is the second plate of its set and contains, therefore, the latter half of the grant. The extant portion consists of twenty-six lines, all of which are inscribed on the same side. The average size of the letters is .2".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the Navsāri plates of Jayabhata III. The royal sign-manual is, however, in the northern characters. The only peculiarities that call for notice are the long mātrās denoting medial diphthongs 'which curl over three or even four aksharas', the curling stroke for medial ri in krī which is attached to the horizontal bar of k, instead of to its vertical, (see krishna- and -krīta-, both in l. 4 and krishṇ-āhayō, l. 20), and the unlooped n in ndh of gandha-, l. 10 and -panthā, l. 12. The sign for the jīhvāmūliya occurs in l. 22. The language is Sanskrit. Except for two verses embedded in the eulogistic portion and six benedictive and imprecatory ones at the end, the record is in prose throughout. The orthography shows the same peculiarities as in other records of the Early Gurjaras.

The extant portion of this grant begins abruptly with the eulogy of the donor, the illustrious Jayabhata who had attained the pañchamahāśabda and was the lord of great sāmantas or feudatory chiefs. As already stated, the text of the eulogistic portion, so far as it goes, is identical with that of the Prince of Wales Museum plates. This Jayabhata is, therefore, Jayabhata IV of the Early Gurjara Dynasty. Much of the praise bestowed on him is conventional, but there is one important reference in v. 2 to his victory over the Tājīkas or Arabs in the city of the lord of Valabhi. It is said that by the sharp edge of his sword he put an end to their oppression of the people even as a cloud with its showers extinguishes fire which is troublesome to the people.<sup>4</sup>

The inscription records the grant, by Jayabhata IV, of a field measuring fifty nivartanas on the south-west boundary in the village Kēmajju situated in the Bharukachchha vishaya. In connection with the boundaries of the field, the record mentions the villages Chhīrakaha, Jambhā, Gōliavali and Sīhu. The object of the grant was to provide for the supply of the materials of worship and repairs to the temple of the god Āśramadēva in the village Kēmajju.

The grant was made on the occasion of the Sun's entering the Karkata-rāśi, i.e., the sign of Cancer, on the 10th tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha<sup>5</sup>. The year was mentioned in words at the end of l. 24, but owing to the breaking away of the

<sup>4</sup> This important reference has escaped the notice of all scholars who have subsequently written about this grant; for they adopted Dr. Bühler's translation based on an incorrect reading of ll. 6 and 7, viz., 'who by the edge of his sword quieted in battle the impetuosity of the lord of Valabhi.' Jayabhata was thus supposed to be an enemy of the contemporary Maitraka king, while, as a matter of fact, he was his friend and deliverer.

lower right hand corner of the plate, the expression is partly mutilated. The symbols denoting the same year, which have been preserved in the beginning of the extant portion of l. 25, leave no doubt, however, that it was 486. Like other dates of the Early Gurjaras this must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era.<sup>1</sup> The tithi, on which the grant was recorded (nibaddha), was also mentioned along with the year in ll. 24 and 25, and like the latter, is partly mutilated. The words Ashāḍha śu. . . Adityavāre are perfectly clear in l. 25. As regards the symbol following śu, I cannot do better than quote Dr. Kielhorn's remarks: 'In l. 25 the numerical symbol following upon śu is decidedly indistinct. What is clearly seen both in the impressions and in the photograph is the symbol for 10, as it occurs, e.g., at the end of the Valabhī grant of Dharasēna II...minus the curved line on the right; but there are indications that that curved line had been engraved and that, therefore, 10 was intended.'<sup>2</sup> It is more difficult to say whether certain marks after the symbol for 10 are accidental scratches or intended to denote the unit 1 or 2.'<sup>3</sup> The grant was, therefore, recorded on a Sunday, the 10th, 11th or 12th tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha in the (Kalachuri) year 486.

With the epoch of 248-249 A.C., which Kielhorn at first fixed for the Kalachuri-Chēdi era and which he found applicable in the case of the date of the Navsāri plates of Jayabhāṭa III, the date of the present plate should fall in 735 or 736 A.C. 'according as the figure 486 denotes the current year or the number of years expired'. Kielhorn found by calculation that 'in A.D. 735 the Karkaṭa-saṁkrānti took place on Thursday, June 23, which was the 13th of the dark half of a month, while the 10th of the bright half of Āshāḍha had fallen already on Sunday, June 5, i.e., no less than eighteen days before the saṁkrānti. In A. D. 736, on the other hand, the Karkaṭa-saṁkrānti took place about 8 hours after sunrise of June 22; and the tenth tithi of the bright half of Āshāḍha began 21 minutes after mean sunrise of June 22, and ended 1 h. 21 m. before mean sunrise of June 23. The tithi, therefore, in all probability, was a kshaya-tithi, but, under any circumstances, the Karkaṭa-saṁkrānti, in A.D. 736, did take place during the tenth tithi of the bright half of Āshāḍha. June 22, however, was a Friday, not a Sunday; and the nearest Sunday, June 24, was the 12th of the bright half of Āshāḍha, because the 12th tithi of the bright half ended on it, 20 h. 37 m. after mean sunrise'<sup>4</sup>. Friday, the 22nd June 736 A.C. is, therefore, the date of the grant, and Sunday, the 24th June of the same year, the date of its recording.

The localities mentioned in the grant were fully identified by Dr. Bühler<sup>5</sup>. 'The village Kēmajju is the present Kīmōj or Kīmaj. Straight to the west from Kīmaj at a distance of five or six hundred yards, there is the temple Āsamēśvar, Āsramadēva of our grant. The present temple is a small brick building erected a few years ago; but it contains an ancient Linga, and near it to the east are an old well and a depression in the ground which looks like the remnant of a small tank. To the west of the village lies Sīgām or Sigām, the Sīhugrāma of the grant; towards the south-west there is the village of Jāmaḍi, called also Sāmaḍi, which corresponds to Jambhā; and to the north we have the ruins of Gōlāl (on the Trigonometrical map erroneously called Galāl), the <sup>1</sup> Bühler referred it to the Vikrama era and as, according to the calculations of Prof. Bahudēva Śāstrī, in 429 A. C. corresponding to V. 486, the 10th tithi of the bright half of Āshāḍha fell on Sunday when the sun entered the sign of Karkaṭa, Dr. Bühler concluded that it demolished the theory that the Vikrama era was a forgery and was invented after the battle of Kōrur.

<sup>10</sup> The aksbaras are not clear. Bühler's reading पतित- does not appear to be warranted by the photograph. The last aksbara appears like ṇṇa. I propose to read viśīrṇa which generally accompanies khaṇḍa and sphujita.

TRANSLATION

[His son is the illustrious Jayabhata (IV)],—[who appears resplendent by his destruction of troops of horses....]; the top of whose right arm becomes dark-blue [with the multitude of rays from his creeper-like sword which becomes uneven] with clusters of pearls from the frontal globes of elephants cleft in haste; who has manifested many auspicious marks as a lotus-pool exhibits cranes,<sup>4</sup> [but who, (unlike a lotus-pool which contains a store of water),<sup>5</sup> has not an insensible heart]; who has acquired the multitude of all fine arts even as the moon contains all the digits, but who, (unlike the moon that marks the night<sup>6</sup>, has no blemish; who has given refuge to a multitude of hostile princes as the ocean gave shelter to a number of wingless mountains, [but who, (unlike the ocean that is infested by alligators), is not affected by greed]; who destroys his enemies with his well-equipped army<sup>7</sup> just as Nārāyaṇa (Viṣṇu) does with his discus Sudarśana, but who, (unlike Nārāyaṇa who is dark-complexioned), is not evil-intentioned; who has acquired abundant prosperity as Siva takes a large quantity of ashes<sup>8</sup> (to smear his body with), [but who, (unlike Siva whose body is entwined by serpents), is not surrounded by dissolute men].

(Verse 1) These people are made to fold their hands and to bow to him, who resembles the disc of the crescent moon, [since he is possessed of brilliance], has an increasing splendour of the body, and levies light taxes (even as the moon looks lovely, increases in size and sheds tender rays).

(Verse 2) This is that [Jayabhata], who, with the edge of his sword, has forcibly vanquished, in the city of the lord of Valabhī, the Tājīkas<sup>9</sup> who greatly oppressed all people, even as a cloud extinguishes with its showers the fire that troubles all people.<sup>10</sup>

(Line 7) He, the illustrious Jayabhata—who is praised in songs by assemblages of the wives of gods; whose lotus-like feet are reddened by the lines of the rays of jewels (set) in the diadems of hundreds of kings; who has attained the pañcamaḥśabda, (and) is the lord of the great sāmantas (feudatory chiefs),—being in good health, addresses the following order to all king, feudatories, Bhōgikas, heads of vishayas, the Mahattaras of rāṣṭras and villages, officials (and) others:—

<sup>5</sup> A pun on the word jaḍ-ālaya (read as jal-ālaya by the rule ḍalayōr-abbīdāḥ).

<sup>6</sup> Dōshākara is taken as (1) dōshā-kara, 'the maker of the night', and (2) dōsh-ākara, 'a store of blemishes'.

<sup>8</sup> There is a play on the word bbūti meaning (1) prosperity and (2) ashes, and another on bbujāṅga meaning (1) a dissolute person and (2) a serpent.

<sup>10</sup> Bühler translated the passage as follows:—'who by the edge of his sword quieted in battle the impetuosity of the lord of Valabhī,—who quenching the fire of the desires of the great Pandits of the whole world, and (giving them the fruits of their wishes)—is praised.....'. This translation misses the important historical reference altogether.

(L. 9) "Be it known to you that for the increase of the religious merit and fame, in this world and the next, of (My) mother and father as well as of Myself, I have today, on the occasion of the sun's entering the sign of Karkāṭaka (Cancer), on the holy day of the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha, granted, with a libation of water as a dēvadāya<sup>1</sup>, a piece of land measuring fifty nivartanas and (lying) on the south-western boundary of the village, in the village Kēmajju situated in the famous vishaya of Bharukachcha, the boundaries of which are,—on the east the road leading to Chhīrakaha, on the south the junction with the boundary of the village Jambhā, on the west the road going from the village Jambhā to the village Gōliavali, on the north the road going from the village Kēmajju to Sihu and the well near the banyan tree,—the field defined by these four boundaries, together with the uparikara, with taxes on things manufactured or imported, with its income in grain and gold, with (the fines imposed for) the ten offences, with the right of forced labour arising therefrom; (which is) not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas; (which is to be) free from interference of all officers of the State; exclusive of all grants previously made to gods and Brāhmaṇas; (and the grant of which is to last) as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean, the earth, rivers and mountains will endure, according to the maxim of waste land,—to the divine (god) Āśramadēva established in the village of Kēmajju, in order to defray the expenses of perfume, frankincense, flowers, lamps (and) the morning musical service, of the maintenance of an alms-house, of cleaning the temple, and of the repairs of the broken, rent and dilapidated (portions), (and) of (building) new structures."

(L. 19) And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas—

(Here follow six benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(L. 24) This (charter), the Dātaka of which is the illustrious Kaṇḍakanaka, has been written and recorded by [me] . . . . . in the year four hundred increased by eighty-six [on the twelfth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha, the year] 400 (and) 80 (and) 6, (the month) Āshāḍha, the bright (fortnight), (the lunar day) 10 (and) 2, on Sunday.

This is the sign-manual of me, the illustrious Jayabhāṭa.

NO. 24; PLATE XVII

PRINCE OF WALES MUSEUM PLATES OF JAYABHATA IV<sup>2</sup>: (KALACHURI) YEAR 486

"THESE two plates were received by the Prince of Wales Museum from the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society in 1920, when the Society's collection was lent to that Museum. Their original find-spot is not known.' They have been edited before by Mr. G.V. Acharya, Curator of the Prince of Wales Museum, in the Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, pp. 147 ff. They are edited here from photographs kindly supplied by Mr. Acharya.

The plates, which are inscribed on the inner side only, measure 12·7" by 10." Each of them has two holes, 6" in diameter, at the top for the rings which must have originally held them together; but neither the rings nor the seal, which must have been connected with one of them, is forthcoming. Some portion of the upper left-hand corner of each plate has been broken away, which has resulted in the loss of from one to fifteen aksharas in ll. 1-14 on the first, and from one to three aksharas in ll. 29-33 on the second plate. Besides, a few aksharas have become illegible owing to the corrosion of the surface of the plates in some places. The record consists of 51 lines, of which 28 are inscribed on the first, and 23 on the second plate. The average size of the letters is about .15".

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Acharya calls him Jayabhāṭa III, identifying Dadda II-Praśāntarāga of the Kairā and Saṅkhēḍā plates (above, Nos. 16-17 and 19-20) with Dadda-Bāhusahāya. But this view is incorrect. Apart from the difference in their virūdas, the former was a devotee of the sun and the latter of Mahēśvara. So the two princes were not identical. For some more arguments, see my note on the plates in Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIV, pp. 176 ff.

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets, and resemble those of the other grants of the Early Gurjaras. It would suffice to draw attention to the following peculiarities of individual letters. The sign for medial (long) ū in -nmūlita-, l. 8, is added to the top of m and not to the bottom as is usually done; the medial ri of kri is formed as in the Kāvī plate only in one place, viz., in Mahābalādhiḥṛita-, l. 50; in other places it appears in its usual form, see, e.g., -Valadhikṛita- in the same line; ḍ shows a loop in suchaṇḍa-, l. 23, but contrast its form elsewhere, e.g., in -Kaunḍinya-, l. 35; n has no loop in kaumud-īndu-, l. 17; b is generally rectangular, but in svabhūja-bala-, l. 14, it is elongated, and in bali-, l. 36, it is roundish. It is generally distinguished from v, but in -Valadhikṛita-, l. 50, it is indicated by the same sign as that for v. Another letter, which is occasionally liable to be mistaken for v, is dh, see, e.g., the forms of the two occurring side by side in -ādhirāja-vijṛimbhi-, l. 10. The language is Sanskrit. Except for two verses which occur in the eulogy of the donor and six more expressing benediction and imprecation at the end, the record is in prose throughout. It is carelessly written, especially on the second plate. The eulogy of the first four princes given here closely agrees with that in the Navsāri and Anjanēri plates, while a considerable portion of the description of the last prince is the same as in the Kāvī plate. The text of ll. 16-24, however, which describe Ahirōla and his son Jayabhata IV is not known to occur anywhere else. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities noticed in connection with other Early Gurjara grants.

The plates were issued by the illustrious Jayabhata born in the great family of Maharāja Karṇa, who had attained the pañchamahāśabda and was the lord of Mahā-sāmantas (great feudatory chiefs).<sup>1</sup> The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Jayabhata, of the village Mannātha situated in the famous Bharukachchha district. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Āchchaḍa<sup>2</sup>, the son of the Brāhmaṇa Ādityanāga, of the Hētāvuka sub-caste,<sup>3</sup> who belonged to the Kaunḍinya gōtra and was a student of the Mādhyandina śākhā of the Vājasaneyā (or White Yajurveda). He had emigrated from the pathaka and āhāra of Lōhikaksha. The object of the gift was, as usual, to provide for the performance of the five great sacrifices and other rites. The Dūtaka was the illustrious Dēiyaka and the scribe the Mahābalādhiḥṛita Saṅgulla, the son of the Balādhiḥṛita Alla.

The grant was made and written on the fifteenth day of the dark half (called amāvāsyā in l. 40) of Āśvina in the year 486. The year and the tithi are expressed in ll. 49-50, both in words and numerical symbols. This date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era. As the Kalachuri year according to my view began on Kārttika śu. di. 1, the date of the present grant would be later than that of the Kāvī plate by more than three and a half months.<sup>1</sup> Taking the year as expired and the month as amānta, the corresponding Christian date would be the 9th October 736 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

The present inscription gives the following genealogy of the donor—

As stated above, the description of the first four princes is exactly as in the Navsāri and Anjanēri plates of Jayabhāṭa III. They must, therefore, be identified with Dadda II (alias Praśāntarāga), Jayabhāṭa II, Dadda III (alias Bāhusahāya) and Jayabhāṭa III. The next prince Ahirōla, the son of Jayabhāṭa, is mentioned in the present plates only. Like his father, he was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara (Śiva), attained the pañchamahāśabda and was the lord of great feudal chiefs. His description in other respects is merely conventional. His son Jayabhāṭa is similarly described. He must be called Jayabhāṭa IV and distinguished from Jayabhāṭa III, who issued the Navsāri and Anjanēri plates and who was his grandfather. The latter portion of his eulogy in the present inscription occurs also in the Kāvī plate. Its historical importance has already been noticed.<sup>2</sup> The rest is a mere conventional description.

Of the localities mentioned in the present grant, Bharukachchha has already been identified with Broach. Mannātha the donated village is probably Magnāth<sup>3</sup> on the right bank of the Dhādhar about 2 m. south-east of Jambusar, and 25 m. north of Broach. Lōhikaksha I am unable to locate.

<sup>3</sup> Both Mannātha and Magnātha are corrupt forms of Magnanātha (the submerged Lord) and evidently owe their origin to the presence, in the village, of a temple, probably of Śiva, which was submerged by the Dhādhar. Mr. Acharya identifies Mannātha with 'Manād, about a mile and a half north-east of Mehegam, on the north bank of the river Narmadā' Ep. Ind., Vol. XXIII, p. 148.

[For a translation of lines 1-15, see above, pp. 87 f.]

(Line 15) His son (was) the illustrious Ahirōla,—the pair of whose feet was kissed by the crest-wreaths of kings who held their heads on high by reason of (their) valour and army; who was freely chosen by the goddess of fortune, her mind being overpowered by love for all his attractive royal qualities and other excellences; who provided the peaks of the Mēru (mountain) with the crest of (his) fame, spotless like the mass of lunar rays on the full-moon day; whose staff-like arm was wont to destroy crores of excellent elephant hosts of the enemies on the battlefield; who delighted his subjects with the paths of moral conduct properly laid by his great wisdom enhanced by the acquisition of the four lores; who, noble-minded as he was by nature, was not affected by the blackness of the Kali age; who, being naturally averse to pleasures (derived) from the enjoyment of innumerable objects close at hand (which were) presented by (his) youth, controlled all his sense organs; who was adept in the use of the six measures of policy<sup>1</sup>, whose greatness was increased by the triad of powers (śaktis)<sup>2</sup>, who was the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, attained the pañchamahā-śabda and was the lord of the great feudatories.

(L. 21) The son of him, who was an ornament of the whole world, is the illustrious Jayabhata (IV),—who is adorned with the wreaths of his numerous virtues; the pair of whose lotus-like feet is saluted by many hosts of eminent kings; who has white-washed the whole orb of the earth with his fame, which in brightness resembles kuṇḍa<sup>3</sup> flowers, the moon and white sindūwāra<sup>4</sup> flowers; whose extremely terrible fire of valour has put an end to the troubles of the whole world; who with the showers of his irresistible arrows has routed the hosts of all his foes; who is clever in piercing the crowds of elephants that are openly made to charge in great wars; who appears resplendent by his destruction of troops of swift and tall horses that trot and prance about on the battlefield; the top of whose right arm becomes dark-blue with the multitude of rays from his creeper-like sword, which becomes uneven with clusters of pearls from the frontal globes of elephants cleft in haste; who has manifested many auspicious marks<sup>5</sup>, as a lotus-pool exhibits cranes, but who, (unlike the lotus-pool which contains a store of water), has not an insensible heart; who has acquired the multitude of all fine arts even as the moon contains all digits, but who, (unlike the moon that marks the night), has no blemish; who has given refuge to a multitude of hostile princes as the ocean gave shelter to a number of wingless mountains, but who, (unlike the ocean that is infested by alligators), is not affected by greed; who destroys his enemies with his well-equipped army just as Nārāyaṇa (Vishṇu) does with his discus, Sudarśana, but who, (unlike Nārāyaṇa who is dark complexioned), is not evil-intentioned; who has acquired abundant prosperity just as Siva takes a large quantity of ashes (to smear his body with), but who, (unlike Siva whose body is entwined by serpents), is not surrounded by dissolute men.

<sup>3</sup> In later times Hētāvuka came to signify 'a horse-dealer'. The Mitākṣarā on the Yājñavalkya-Smṛiti, ch. II, v. 30 mentions the Hētāvukas together with betel-sellers, weavers and shoemakers as persons who formed guilds, and the commentary Bālabhāṭṭi explains that the Hētāvukas are dealers in horses. They sell them either personally or through their agents in different places. The commentary adds that the word is well-known in the Gurjara-dēśa. Cf. Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 185 and Ind. Ant., Vol. XLII, p. 64.

Individual letters, we may notice that the writer has confounded ā and ā in some places. grāhāt, l. 6, and grāhāt, l. 27. The curvive subscript ā occurs in grāhāt and grāhāt, both in l. 22. Both the forms of ā have been used—the northern with a shortened right limb as in grāhāt, and grāhāt, both in l. 9, and the southern with the right limb bent to the left as in grāhāt and grāhāt, both in l. 18. A peculiar form of ā occurs in grāhāt, l. 32. The sign for the ā in grāhāt is used in ll. 8 and 13, and that for the ā in grāhāt in ll. 10, 17 and 27. The symbols for the numbers 400 and 4 occur in l. 41.

The language is Sanskrit. It is written in three vertical columns in the colophon.

Since this article was written, the plates have been published by Mr. G. H. Dutt in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. II, pp. 60-61.

One of the reasons for attention was perhaps the omission of some points of the script in l. 10 as originally written, for the space between grāhāt and grāhāt in l. 10 and grāhāt in the next line is not sufficient to contain the number of the ā, ā, and ā of the grāhāt lines and the name of the donor which the boundaries of which were indicated with the word grāhāt. grāhāt. grāhāt. It cannot be said that the present text is only a copy of the original grāhāt, for it differs essentially from it in many instances, no boundaries of the granted village remaining in the text.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE SENDRAKAS

No. 25; PLATE XVIII

KASARE PLATES OF ALLASAKTI: (KALACHURI) YEAR 404

THESE plates were discovered in 1937 at Kāsārē, a village thirty-four miles almost due west of Dhulia in West Khandesh, Bombay State. They are now deposited in the Bhārata Itihāsa Samśōdhaka Maṇḍala, Poona. I edit the inscription here from excellent photographs kindly supplied by the Secretary of the Maṇḍala.<sup>1</sup>

They are two copper-plates measuring 7.7" in length and 5.5" in breadth. At the top of each there is a roundish hole about .4" in diameter for two rings which hold them together. One of them carries a conical seal with a circular face measuring 1.5" in diameter, which has the legend Sri-Allasakti. The weight of the plates together with the rings and the seal is 108 tolas. The record consists of thirty-three lines, of which fourteen and fifteen are incised on the inner sides of the first and the second plate respectively, and the remaining four on the outer side of the first plate turned upside down. The writing is in a state of good preservation almost throughout. The size of the letters varies from .1" to .2".

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets, and resemble those used in the grants of the Early Gurjaras. The technical execution is very bad. The letters are of uneven size and are carelessly formed; those on the outer side of the first plate are more than double the average size of the rest. Besides, the aksharas originally engraved in ll. 20 and 21 were subsequently beaten in, and others much larger in size incised over them. The earlier aksharas have, however, been left over through inadvertence between ll. 19 and 20. Some more can be read with patience and perseverance here and there from the traces left behind. It is not possible to say definitely when the record was thus tampered with, or altered by authority; but the form of the letters subsequently engraved indicates that the alteration must have been made in the same period, to which the rest of the inscription can be referred on palaeographic grounds.<sup>2</sup> As regards individual letters, we may notice that the writer has confounded v and b in some places, see prabhavati, l. 6, and bhagabatō, l. 27. The cursive subscript m occurs in brāhmaṇa- and -brahmachāri-, both in l. 22. Both the forms of l have been used,—the northern with a shortened right limb as in lōkānām, and lōkapālāḥ, both in l. 9, and the southern with the right limb bent to the left as in prithivīvallabha and kuśalī, both in l. 18. A peculiar form of dh occurs in Ashādha, l. 32. The sign for the jihvāmūliya is used in ll. 8 and 18, and that for the upadhmāniya in ll. 10, 17 and 27. The symbols for the numbers 400 and 4 occur in l. 31.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for three verses embedded in the eulogistic portion and one more added at the end to convey benediction and imprecation, the record is in prose throughout. It is written in an ornate style,<sup>1</sup> but contains two grammatical blunders<sup>2</sup> in the second verse. As regards orthography, we may notice that the medial ri is in many places written as ri; see nighrishṭa, l. 4, drishṭvā, l. 5 etc.; v and b are generally expressed by separate signs, but in prabhabati l. 6, and bhagabatō, l. 27, v is indicated by the sign for b; the consonant following r has been correctly reduplicated in several places, but in varshsha-, l. 27 it violates Pāṇini's rule, VIII, 4, 49.

The plates were issued by Allaśakti of the family of the Sēndrakas, who had attained the pañchamahāśabda and was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara. The birudas Pṛithivīvallabha and Śrī-Nikumbha<sup>3</sup> are mentioned in connection with his name. The charter in its revised form purports to record the grant of fifty nivartanas of land to the south of the river Pa(?)ṇandha<sup>4</sup> in the village Pippalakhēṭa, in honour of the deity Alaṅghyēśvara. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Bālapravasita of the Kṛishṇātrēya gōtra, who was a student of the Mādhyandina śākhā of the Vājasanēya or White Yajurveda. The grant was written by Dēvadinna by the order of the Mahābalādhibikṛita, the illustrious Vāsava.<sup>5</sup> It was made on the occasion of the solar eclipse on the new moon day of Āshāḍha in the year 404, expressed in numerical symbols<sup>6</sup> only, of an unspecified era.

In the eulogistic portion we are told that Allaśakti was the son of Ādityarāja, who was himself the son of the illustrious Nikumbha. The description of these princes is quite conventional and mentions no historical event. Another grant of the Sēndrakas found at Mundkhēḍē near Chalisgaon in West Khandesh has been published by the late Mr. G.K. Chandorkar.<sup>7</sup> It gives the following genealogy—

Bhānuśakti (Śrī-Vallabha)
Ādityaśakti
Nikumbhallaśakti (Satyāśraya, Pṛithivīvallabha, who attained the pañchamahāśabda)
Jayaśakti (Satyāśraya, Pṛithivīvallabha, Vikramāditya, Nikumbha)

<sup>1</sup> Notice, for instance, the puns in v. 2, which make the comparison of Ādityarāja with the sun possible and the description of Allaśakti in ll. 15-17 in which the names of all the Pāṇḍavas are cleverly interwoven.

<sup>6</sup> Of the symbols, the first denoting hundreds is clearly a sign for 400 and the second, except for the curve at the top, is the usual sign for 4. It may be noted that a similar curve is attached to the top of the symbol denoting 4 in the date of the Surat plates of Śryāśraya-Śilāditya, No. 19, Pl. XXII. The symbol would have to be taken as denoting 40 if the following symbol denotes a unit number like 7, but in that case its date (K. 447 or 696 A. C.) would be later than the date Śaka 602 or 680 A. C. which we have for Allaśakti's son Jayaśakti in his Mundkhēḍē plates. I, therefore, prefer to take the last sign to denote de, corresponding to dī (dīna) which occurs before the symbol of the tithi in early Brāhmī records. It is noteworthy that the scribe of the present grant wrote also the Bagumrā plates of the same king and the Mahābalādhibikṛita was also the same in both, (see p. 121, n. 41, below). The names of both are mentioned in another grant of Allaśakti (see N. I. A., Vol. I, p. 747.) The date of the present grant must, therefore, be within a few years on either side of the date K. 406 of the Bagumrā plates.

<sup>7</sup> This grant has been published twice, but without a facsimile, first in the Marāṭhī monthly Prabhāta, Vol. I (pub. in 1908), and again in the Annual Report of the Bārata Itihāsa Saṁśbōdhaka Maṇḍala for Śaka 1834. The plates are not forthcoming now.

The use of Nikumbha as a biruda prefixed to the name of Jayaśakti suggests that the word is a biruda in the name Nikumbhallaśakti also and, therefore, the real name of the prince was probably Allaśakti. Of the four princes named in the Mundkhēḍe plates two,—Ādityaśakti and Allaśakti,—are thus common to our grant. This shows that Nikumbha was another name or title of Bhānuśakti, and he being the founder of the family, it was used as a biruda by his descendants. It is again plain that Jayaśakti was the son of the Allaśakti who issued the present plates. As stated above, Allaśakti's present grant was made in the year 404, while Jayaśakti's Mundkhēḍe plates were issued in the year 602. The only way in which we can reconcile these two dates is to refer the former to the Kalachuri era and take it to correspond to 653 or 654 A.C., and the latter to the Śaka era, corresponding to 680 A.C. As Jayaśakti was the son of Allaśakti, the interval of nearly twenty-six years between the two dates appears quite natural.

Referring the date of the present grant to the Kalachuri era, we find that according to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., the new-moon day of the pūrṇimānta Āshāḍha in the current Kalachuri year 404 fell on Saturday, the 1st of June 653 A.C. when there was a solar eclipse<sup>1</sup> as stated in the present record. There was no solar eclipse either in pūrṇimānta or amānta Āshāḍha in 652 A.C. or 654 A.C. The date of the present plates is noteworthy, because it is one of the two early verifiable dates of the Kalachuri era which cite a current year,<sup>2</sup> and secondly its month was pūrṇimānta,<sup>3</sup> while the prevailing custom in Gujarat and the Deccan was to cite amānta months. The Kalachuri year, as shown elsewhere, was Kārttikādi. From an examination of several dates of the Vikrama era, Kielhorn came to the conclusion that the southern (Kārttikādi) year of the Vikrama era was joined with the pūrṇimānta as with often as with the amānta scheme.<sup>4</sup> It should, therefore, cause no surprise if we find that the Kārttikādi year of the Kalachuri era also was occasionally and exceptionally joined with the pūrṇimānta scheme in Gujarat and the adjoining country.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the present grant, Pippalakhēṭa is probably Pimpalnēr, about 9 miles west of Kāsārē. The river Parṇandha may be the Panjhrā which flows along the northern boundary of Pimpalnēr. The land to the south of it was, therefore, within the boundary of the village as stated in the present grant.

<sup>2</sup> The aksbaras from here onwards up to ब्राह्मण in l. 22 are written in a much larger form and are engraved over other previously written aksbaras, which, though beaten in, can be read here and there. Between lines 19 and 20, the aksbaras यथा मया ब्राह्म which were previously written and were meant to be connected with अस्तु वः संविदितं in l. 20 can be read quite clearly. Similarly, between lines 20 and 21, the words यस्य चाघाटनानि are still legible. The following portion of that line lay under the aksbaras पिप्पलखेट etc. and can be read with some diffidence as उत्तरते (तः) स (?) न्यनदी पूर्वं [तः] . . . याणक-. In the next line which lies partly between ll. 21 and 22 and partly below the aksbaras in l. 21 one can read ग्राम [ः] दक्षिणतः . . . पश्चिमतः [ः] त (?) टाकीस (?) मेतो. Traces of some five aksbaras can be seen after वर्तनानि in l. 21 of the text, which may be read एवं चतुरा-.

TRANSLATION

Success! Hail! In the great lineage of the Sēndraka kings which is firmly established, excellent and elevated like the peak of the mountain Mēru, (and) the fame of which has become expanded, (there was the illustrious Bhānuśakti<sup>1</sup>), who obtained victory in the clash of fight by means of the arrays of troops of many four-tusked elephants; who conquered the multitude of all his foes; who obtained the circle of the earth by the might and prowess of his arms; whose lotus-like feet were scratched by the diadems on the heads of all the feudatories who bowed to him. And again.—

(Verse 1) Born in the family of those eminent Sēndrakas,—seeing the mass of lustre of whose swords, emitting sparks of fire and resembling flashes of lightning, even Śakra can not hold his ground, fighting on the battlefield where horses lie slain and the ground of which overflows with blood flowing from the cut-off frontal globes (of the hostile elephants)—there was the king, the illustrious Nikumbha, who resembled Indra.

(V. 2) His son (was) the illustrious Ādityarāja, the guardian of the people,—whose fame spread (all) over the earth; who was stainless like the sun; who had the splendour of the sun; who with affection always thought of the well-being of the people; who placed his foot on the heads of great kings who had large armies, even as the sun casts his rays on the summits of high mountains having extensive ridges<sup>2</sup>; (and) who, being like the eye of the people as the sun is of the worlds, has destroyed the ignorance of the people (even as the sun dispels darkness).

(Line 10) His son (is) the Prithivīvallabha, illustrious Nikumbha, Allaśakti<sup>3</sup>, who has caused the destruction of the greatness, due to might, of his powerful adversaries; whose stainless fame is like the orb of the spotless autumnal moon; who is waited upon by learned men and musicians even as the lord of gods (i.e., Indra) is served by the Vidyādhara and Gandharvas<sup>4</sup>; (who is) fit to be served; who has his mind purified by delightful knowledge and actions; who causes delight to the humble even as Garuḍa did to (his mother) Vinatā; who has put an end to disputes about (the possession of) ploughed fields<sup>5</sup> as Rāma finished fighting for (the rescue of his wife) Sītā;<sup>6</sup> who, again, is—

(V. 3) The king Allaśakti who on earth bears resemblance to Yudhisṭhira, because his fortune is governed by the Brāhmaṇas, (because) he honours the elders, (and) is always at the head and ready; because his mind is purified by righteous deeds even as

<sup>1</sup> This name does not occur in the text, but is supplied from the corresponding passage of the cognate Bagumrā plates. The repetition of the expression Sēndrakāṇām vaṇśajaḥ in v. 1 below shows that the verse is to be taken separately and not to be connected with the preceding expressions in prose.

<sup>2</sup> There are puns on the words bhūbhṛit meaning 'a king' and 'a mountain,' pāda meaning 'the foot' and 'a ray' and kaṭaka meaning 'an army' and 'the ridge of a mountain'.

<sup>4</sup> This and the following expressions in the original admit of a double interpretation on account of puns on some words occurring in them.

<sup>5</sup> The Arthasastra of Kauṭilya has a chapter entitled Sītādhyakṣa which deals with agricultural matters.

<sup>6</sup> Or, if we take vigraha in the sense of 'the body,' it may mean 'as Rāma put an end to Sītā's bodily form' the reference being to the disappearance of Sītā underground as described in Vālmiki's Rāmāyāna.

Yudhishthira's was by the (valorous) deeds of Arjuna<sup>1</sup>; because he is pious-minded and is followed by an excellent army as Yudhishthira was called Dharma<sup>2</sup> and was accompanied by (his brother), the noble Bhīmasēna; because his gifts are always shared by the Brāhmaṇas (lit., those whose person is worshipped) together with the gods, even as Yudhishthira's person was honoured by Sahadēva and his gifts were shared (by all); because his family is friendly and untarnished, even as Yudhishthira's brother Nakula exterminated his foes.<sup>3</sup>

(L. 17) He, the Prithivīvallabha, the illustrious Nikumbha Allaśakti,—who meditates on the feet of his mother and father; who is a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara (and) very pious; and who has attained the pañchamahāśabda,—being in good health, addresses the (following) order to all the kings, feudatories, heads of vishayas, Chaurōddharāṇikas, Daṇḍapāśīkas, Dūtas, Gamāgamīkas,<sup>4</sup> the Mahattaras of the village, officials and others:—

(L. 20) "Be it known to you that for the increase of the religious merit and fame of (My) parents and Myself, I have granted, with a libation of water, fifty nivartanas of land to the south of the Parṇandha river in the village of Pippalakhēṭa,—to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons' sons as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure, according to the maxim of waste land,—to the Brāhmaṇa Bālapravasita of the Kṛishṇātrēya gōtra, who is a student of the Mādhyandina śūkhā of the Vājasaneyā (or White Yajurveda), for the use of the god Alaṅghyēśvara.

(L. 26) Wherefore future kings, whether born in our family or others, should consent to and preserve (this) our gift."

It has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the redactor (of the Vēdas),— (Here follows one benedictive and imprecatory verse).

(L. 29) The banks, groves and tanks (in the donated land?) are to be enjoyed at all times according to the (proper) custom.

This (charter) is written by<sup>5</sup> Dēvadinna by the order of the Mahābalādhiṅgita, the illustrious Vāsava. In the year 400 (and) 4, on the new-moon day in the dark (fortnight) of Āshāḍha, on (the occasion of) a solar eclipse.

The illustrious Allaśakti

<sup>1</sup> This and the following expressions, in which the names of the Pāṇḍavas are cleverly interwoven, are intended to be construed with Allaśakti and Yudhishthira.

<sup>2</sup> In the case of Yudhishthira, dharm-ātmā is to be explained as dharmāḥ ātmā (svarūpam, nāma vā) yasya. He was known by the name Dharma.

<sup>3</sup> In the case of Allaśakti, the pada-cchebbēda is mitra-akṛishṇa-kulō and in that of Yudhishthira it is amitra-akṛishṇ-Nakulō (amitrān ākarshati iti tādrīḥ Nakulō yasya). The correct grammatical expression in the latter case should, however, be amitr-akṛiṣṇ-Nakulō.

<sup>4</sup> The Gamāgamika (lit. he who superintends the egress and ingress of travellers) was evidently an inspector of passports. The Arthasāstra of Kautilya mentions a similar officer called Mudrādhyakṣha.

No. 26; PLATE XIX

THE plates were found in 1881 together with several others<sup>2</sup> by a labourer of Surat, who was engaged in excavating the pro tempore kitchens for a large wedding party at Bagumrā<sup>3</sup> (Zilla Balesar) in the Gaekwad's territory.<sup>4</sup> They were edited by Dr. G. Bühler first in Sitzungsberichte der Wiener Akademie, Band CXIV, pp. 169 ff. and subsequently with some emendations and a translation accompanied by excellent lithographs in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVIII, pp. 265 ff. I edit the inscription here from the lithographs as well as from fresh ink impressions kindly supplied by the authorities of the British Museum.

"The grant is engraved on two copper-plates,—now in the British Museum,—each measuring about 7 $\frac{3}{4}$ " by 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ ". The rims are raised. Two holes on the lower broad side of the first plate and the upper one of the second, show that they were held together by two rings which have been lost. Only the inner sides of the plates have been inscribed; the first has nineteen, the second twenty lines. The technical execution is very bad. The letters are often badly formed, of unequal size and sometimes stand so close together that they run into each other. The upper part of the first plate and the lower one of the second have considerably suffered by oxidisation<sup>5</sup>.

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets, and resemble those used in the inscriptions of the Early Gurjaras. Owing to the carelessness of the writer or the engraver, the same letter appears in varying forms in different places. Contrast, e.g., the form of d in -dāna-, l. 5 with that in -dākshinya-, ll. 5-6; of t in pranāt-, l. 4 with that in -gatib-, l. 13; of bh in -vallabha-, l. 15 with that in -gabhirō-, l. 12; of m in -dama-, l. 5, -Nikumbh-, l. 15 and maya, l. 18 with the cursive one in -Lakshmi-, l. 9, Brāhmaṇ-, l. 17 etc.; of n in -kālinab-, l. 22 with that in gagana-, l. 1. It is noteworthy that t shows a vertical stroke at the top in -paṭal-, l. 30, Vindhy-āṭavī-, l. 33 etc.; y appears in a transitional form without a hook in its left limb, while l shows both the northern form as in -Lakshmi-, l. 9, -maṇḍal-, l. 7, -bala-, l. 8, and the southern one as in kalpaluma-, ll. 7-8, -pālana-, l. 10. The language is Sanskrit, and except for a verse in praise of the sun in the beginning and the usual benedictive and imprecatory stanzas at the end, the record is in prose throughout. The ignorance of the person who drafted it is disclosed by the innumerable mistakes of grammar which disfigure the record from the beginning to the end. He uses, for instance, -amala-yaśasab-, l. 7 as the nominative of amala-yaśas instead of the correct form amala-yaśāb-, seems to be ignorant of the rule that the words connected by iva must be in the same case, for he writes Kalpaldrumam-iva... jan-ōpabhujyamāna-vibhavō, ll. 7-8, *Janārddanam-iva... rājya[b*]*, ll. 8-9, and employs wrong declensional forms like Brāhmaṇ-ōttarām for Brāhmāṇ-ōttarān, l. 17, -dhikarik-ādīm for -dhikārik-adīn, l. 18 etc., and incorrect compounds like rajahśri for rājyaśri, l. 29, apahritam-

asēsha-bala-rājyaḥ for apahrit-āsēsha-bali-rājyaḥ, ll.8-9. Besides these, there are several mistakes of sandhi and omissions and transpositions of syllables and words which are pointed out in the foot-notes to the transcribed text. As regards orthography, we find that ri is used instead of the vowel ṛi in several places, see, e.g., -prithu-, l. 1, -āvrita-, l. 30, krishṇ-, l. 33; the letter preceding and following r is correctly repeated in -vikram-ākrānta-, l. 4, -kriy-ōtsarppaṇ-, l. 21, sarvv-ādāna, l. 23 etc., but wrongly in varshsha-, l. 34.

The plates were issued by the illustrious Prithivīvallabha, Nikumbha Allaśakti of the family of Sēndraka kings, who was the son of the illustrious lord of men, Ādityaśakti, and the grandson of the lord of men, the illustrious Bhānuśakti. No place of issue is mentioned in the grant. The object of the inscription is to record the grant of the village Balisa in the āhāra of Trēyaṇṇa. The donee was Bappasvāmin of the Bhāradvāja gōtra and the Mādhyandina śākhā of the Vājasaneyā or White Yajurveda. He was then a resident of Vijay-Āniruddhapurī. The purpose of the grant was to provide for the maintenance of bali, charu, vaiśvadeva, agnihōtra and other rites. The Dātaka was Śrīvallabha Bappa and the scribe the Sandhivigrahādhiḥkṛita Dēvadinna.<sup>1</sup> The grant was written by the order of a Mahābalādhiḥkṛita whose name is imperfectly written here, but who was probably identical with the illustrious Vāsava mentioned with the same title in the Kāsārē grant. We learn from lines 38-39 that the scribe, Dēvadinna, was his younger brother.

The date of the grant is expressed in words as the fifteenth (tithi) of the bright (fortnight) of Bhādrapada in the year 406 of an unspecified era. Like the date of the Kāsārē plates, this date also must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired year<sup>2</sup> 406, to the 10th August 656 A.C. In the absence of the necessary details it does not admit of verification.

Of the place-names in the present grant Trēyaṇṇa was identified by Dr. Bühler with the village Tēn near Bārḍōli in the Surat District of Gujarat. It is evidently identical with Trēnna which is mentioned as the headquarters of an āhāra in the Bagumrā plates<sup>3</sup> of Dhruva II of the Gujarat Rāshtrakūṭa branch and with Tēnna mentioned in the Bagumrā plates (second set)<sup>4</sup> of the Rāshtrakūṭa king, Indra III. In the latter grant the place is said to be situated near Kammañijja in the Lāṭa country and was bounded on the east by Vāraḍapallikā. This description completely agrees with the situation of Tēn which is only about 15 miles south-east of Kāmṛēj, the modern representative of Kammañijja, and lies only about a mile to the west of Bārḍōli, the ancient Vāraḍapallikā. Balisa, the village granted in the present plates, is plainly identical with Valiśā or Baliśā which is mentioned as defining the western boundary of the village Tēnna in the Bagumrā plates (second set) of Indra III. It can be identified with the modern Wanēsa which lies about two miles south-west<sup>5</sup> of Tēn. Vijay-Āniruddhapurī cannot be identified, but it must have been situated not very far from Tēn. It is mentioned as the place of issue in the Surat plates<sup>6</sup> of Vyāghrasēna and was probably the capital of the Traikūṭakas.

<sup>5</sup> The identification was suggested by Dr. Bühler who pointed out that 'the change of la to na is very common in Gujarāṭi, e.g., in nabān for labān.' Wanēsa is not, however, to the south-east of Tēn as stated by Bühler.

TRANSLATION

Success !

(Verse 1) May the orb of the sun, the large lotus of the lake of the first (i.e. eastern) quarter, the coral leaf of the ocean of the firmament, the fresh jasmine flower of the gods, grant you victory !

(Line 2) Hail ! In the great lineage of the Sēndraka kings, which is firmly established, excellent and elevated like the peak of the mountain Mēru, (and) whose fame has become expanded, (there was) the illustrious Bhānuśakti, the lord of men, who obtained victory in the clash of fight by means of the arrays of troops of many four-tusked elephants; who conquered the multitude of all his foes; who obtained the circle of the earth by the might and prowess of his arms; whose lotus-like feet were scratched by the diadems on the heads of all feudatories who bowed to him; who was endowed with political wisdom, modesty, truthfulness, purity, character, self-restraint, compassion, liberality, courteousness and excellent fortune.

(L. 6) His son (was) Ādityaśakti, the illustrious lord of men, who meditated on his feet; whose glory was spotless like the orb of the clear autumnal moon; who, being possessed of prosperity and having (his) kingdom devoted to him, resembled the sun which (also) rises and has a red orb; who, with his wealth desired and enjoyed by all people, was like the wish-fulfilling tree; who took away the kingdoms of all powerful (kings) as Janārdana<sup>5</sup> took away the entire kingdom of Bali; and whose fortune was fond of the enemies' kingdoms.<sup>6</sup>

<sup>4</sup> Perhaps like the scribe, this officer also was the same as in the Kāsārē plates. If so, the reading should be -वासवसमादेशात्.

<sup>5</sup> I.e., Vishṇu in his dwarf incarnation. There is a play on the word bali meaning (1) 'a powerful prince' and (2) 'Bali, the king of demons'.

<sup>6</sup> This means, as Bühler has suggested, that 'his Fortune was not contented with his empire, desired to possess those of his foes and induced him to conquer them'.

the sky from which water-laden clouds have disappeared, has stretched beyond the ocean; who is extremely deep in intellect, whose wealth is being enjoyed by gods, Brāhmaṇas, friends and relatives; who, like the son of Bhava,<sup>1</sup> has his progress unchecked; who, like Sakti,<sup>2</sup> has obtained a kingdom, whose gait is graceful like that of a choice rutting elephant; who, like Arjuna, has obtained victory in all battles; who is endowed with unfailing prowess, energy, and might; who, like Cupid, delights the eyes of love-lorn ladies<sup>3</sup>,—addresses the (following) order to all the kings, Rājasthānīyas, Chaurōddharāṇīkas, Dāṇḍapāśīkas, Dūtas, Gamāgamīkas, bhaṭas, chāṭas, servants and so forth, merchants and residents of the Janapada, the foremost of whom are Brāhmaṇas, and others, heads of vishayas, those of rāshṭras and villages, Ayuktakas, Mahattaras, officials and others, according as it might concern them<sup>4</sup>:—

(L. 18) “Be it known to you that having regard to the other world and having heard of the great reward (of gifts of land), I have granted, on the full moon day of Bhādrapada with a libation of water, for the increase of the religious merit and fame of (My) mother and father and of Myself, the village Balisa situated in the āhāra and vishaya of Trēyaṇṇa,—together with duties on commodities manufactured or imported (into the village), with udraṅga, with uparikara, being exempt from all dues, gifts, forced labour, and special rights; which is not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas, according to the maxim of waste land; which is to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons’ sons as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure,—to the dīkshita Bappasvāmin of the Bhāradvāja gōtra, who is a student of the Mādhyandina śākhā of the Vājasaneyā (or White Yajurveda) and a resident of the victorious Aniruddhapurī, for the maintenance of bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and other (religious) rites.

(L. 26) Wherefore, future kings whether born in our family or others, having realized that worldly existence possesses as (little) worth as reeds, bamboos and plantain trees (possess sap), and that life is (evanescent) like a water-bubble, and having considered that youth is liable to fade like a śirīsha flower, that prosperity slips away like water of a mountain stream, and that fortune is as unstable as the leaves of an Aśvattha tree which is struck by a very strong wind, should consent to this our gift and preserve it! But he who with his mind shrouded by the veil of ignorance, confiscates it or allows it to be confiscated, shall incur the five great sins together with minor sins!”

(L. 31) And the holy Vyāsa, the son of Parāśara, the redactor of the Vēdas, has said—

(Here follow five benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(L. 37) In the year four hundred increased by six, on the fifteenth (tithi) of the bright (fortnight) of Bhādrapada. The Dūtaka for this (charter) is Srīvallabha Bappa. By the order of the Mahābalādhikṛita [Vāsava]<sup>5</sup> this (charter) has been written by his own younger brother, the Sandhivigrahādhikṛita Dēvadinna.

<sup>3</sup> Bühler’s rendering ‘who, like Cupid, is the joy of the eyes of the courtezans’ is incorrect. It was based on the mislection samāna for sa-mudana.

<sup>4</sup> Bühler’s translation ‘however they may be connected with him’ does not appear to be correct. The royal order is addressed to all who may have anything to do with the donated village.

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE EARLY CHALUKYAS OF GUJARAT

No. 27; PLATE XX

NAVSARI PLATES OF YUVARAJA SRYASRAYA-SILADITYA:
(KALACHURI) YEAR 421

THESE plates were found at Navsāri, the headquarters of the Navsāri division of the Surat District, in the Bombay State. They were first edited, with a lithograph and a translation, by Pandit Bhagwanlal Indrajī in the Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, Vol. XVI, pp. 1 ff. They were subsequently published, with a photo-lithograph, by Dr. E. Hultzsch in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. VIII, pp. 229 ff. They are edited here from the same photo-lithograph.

Dr. Fleet has given the following description of the plates :—

"The copper-plates are two in number, each about  $8\frac{5}{8}$ " long by 5" broad at the ends, and  $4\frac{3}{8}$ " in the middle. The edges of them are here and there slightly thicker than the inscribed surfaces; but it would seem that this was accidental, and that the plates were intended to be smooth, without any fashioned rims. The plates are substantial; and the letters, though fairly deep, do not show through on the reverse side at all. The engraving is good. The interiors of many of the letters show marks of the working of the engraver's tool. The ring is about  $\frac{3}{8}$ " thick and  $1\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter. It had been cut before the time when it came into my hands. The seal, which is soldered on to the ring in the usual fashion, is circular, about  $1\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter. It has, in relief on the surface of it, only the motto Sri-āśraya. The weight of the two plates is 2 lbs.; and of the ring and seal,  $5\frac{1}{2}$  oz.; total, 2 lbs.  $5\frac{1}{2}$  oz.<sup>1</sup>"

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets. There are small knobs at the top of the letters. V and dh appear closely similar in some places, compare, e.g., v in vikrama, l. 6 with dh in yudhi- in the same line; b is rectangular in bala-, l. 5 and roundish in brahmachāri, l. 15. A final consonant is indicated by a slanting stroke or a curve at the top, see phalam, l. 20. The sign of the jihvā māliya occurs in l. 12 and the numerical symbols for 400, 20 and 1 in l. 21.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for the maṅgala ślōka in praise of the boar incarnation in the beginning and one benedictive verse at the end, the record is in prose throughout. The inscription is very carelessly written. Not only have rules of sandhi been frequently neglected, but letters and even words have in some places been omitted, as will be seen from the transcribed text. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities such as the use of ri for ṛi as in Mātristhavira, l. 15, and of the guttural nasal for the anusvāra in viṅśaty-, l. 21.

The plates were issued from Navasārikā by the Ywarāja (crown-prince) Sryāśraya-Śilāditya, the son of Dharāśraya-Jayasimhavarman of the Chālukya family.<sup>2</sup> The Chālukyas, we are told, were sons (i.e., descendants) of Hārītī and belonged to the Mānavya gōtra. They are said to have been brought up by the seven Divine Mothers, to have attained continuous prosperity through the protection of Kārttikēya and to have obtained the boar ensign. About Dharāśraya-Jayasimha we are told that his prosperity was increased by his elder brother, the illustrious Vikramāditya who bore the birudas Satyāśraya and Prithivīvallabha and the titles Mahārājādhirāja and Bhaṭṭāraka. Vikramāditya is further described as the conqueror of the Pallavas and as a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, who meditated on the feet of the illustrious Nāgavardhana and was the son of the illustrious Pulakēśivallabha. Vikramāditya and his father Pulakēśivallabha are plainly identical with Vikramāditya I and Pulakēśin II of the Early Chālukya dynasty. The former was the suzerain of Dharāśraya-Jayasimha whom he placed in charge of South Gujarat. As for Nāgavardhana, Mr. A.M.T. Jackson thought that he was a successor of Pulakēśin II, and ruled in the period between 640 A.C. and 669-70 A.C. Pandit Bhagvanlal, on the other hand, accepted Dr. Fleet's opinion that Nāgavardhana may be the name of a god or guru.<sup>1</sup> The use of paramamāhēśvara in addition to Nāgavardhana-pād-ānudhyāta as an epithet of Vikramāditya indicates that Nāgavardhana was probably the guru<sup>2</sup> of Vikramāditya I.

The object of the inscription is to record the donation of the village Āsaṭṭi in the Kaṇhavalā āhāra of the Bāhirikā vishaya. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Bhōgikkasvāmin of the Kāśyapa gōtra, a student of the Adhvarayu (vēda)<sup>3</sup> who was residing at Navasārikā. The charter was written by the Sāndhivigrahika, the illustrious Dhanañjaya.

The date of the grant is given both in words and numerical symbols as the thirteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha in the year 421 of an unspecified era. The grant was evidently made during the reign of Vikramāditya I, who is the last king mentioned in it with imperial titles and who flourished from about 654 A.C. to 680 A.C.<sup>4</sup> Its date must, therefore, be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired year<sup>5</sup> 429, to the 28th January 671 A.C. It does not admit of verification, but it clearly falls in the reign of Vikramāditya I.

As for the localities mentioned in the present grant, Navasārikā is clearly Navsāri where the plates were found. I identify Kaṇhavalā, the headquarters of the āhāra in which the donated village was situated, with Kaṇhi, 6 miles south of Bārdōli. The village Āsaṭṭigrāma was identified by Dr. Bühler with Astgām<sup>6</sup> which lies only about 10 m. south-west of Kaṇhi. The Bāhirikā vishaya of which Kaṇhavalā āhāra was a subdivision means the Outer District. It was probably so called with reference to the neighbouring one, viz., Antarmaṇḍalī vishaya mentioned in the Pārḍi plates of Vyāghrasēna, which bordered it on the east. To the north of Kaṇhavalā āhāra lay the Trēyaṇṇa āhāra, mentioned in the Bagumrā plates of Allaśakti<sup>7</sup> and the Gujarat Rāshṭrakūṭa Dhruva<sup>8</sup> which was probably another sub-division of the Bāhirikā vishaya.

<sup>5</sup> If the year is applied as current, the date would correspond to the 9th January 670 A.C.

<sup>6</sup> Ind. Ant., Vol. XVII, p. 198. Fleet objected to the identification on the ground that "in the Bombay Postal Directory the name is spelt 'Ashtgām,' which suggests Ashtagrāma, not Āsaṭṭigrāma". Ep. Ind., Vol. VIII, p. 231, n. 4. I find the name as Astgām in the Degree Map No. 46 H. Besides, the fact that Astgām is situated not far from Kaṇhi (ancient Kaṇhavalā), and no other village of a similar name can be traced in the neighbourhood, supports the identification proposed by Bühler.

<sup>18</sup> Pandit Bhagvanlal read the name as Thābarikā, but in several other records we meet the round b as here.

<sup>19</sup> The second विषये seems to be superfluous. Read कण्ठवलाहारे. Pandit Bhagvanlal read the name as कण्ठवलाहार-, but the subscript letter in the second akṣara is exactly like the fifth akṣara in this expression which is undoubtedly हा.

No. 28; PLATE XXI

NASIK PLATES OF DHARASRAYA-JAYASIMHA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 436

THESE plates were discovered at Nāsik the head-quarters of the Nāsik District of the Bombay State. They were brought to light by Rao Saheb G. S. alias Babasaheb Deshpande of Poona, who made them over to the Bhārata Itihāsa Samśōdhaka Maṇḍala, Poona. They have been published before, with lithographs, by Mr. G. H. Khare in the Sources of the Mediaval History of the Deccan, Vol. I (1930), pp. 8ff. I am grateful to the authorities of the Maṇḍala for permission to include them in this volume. I edit them here from excellent photographs kindly supplied by the Superintendent of the Archaeological Survey, Western Circle.

The copper-plates are two in number, each measuring 8" broad, 4.7" high and 1" thick. They are held together by a ring which passes through a hole .4" in diameter in the centre of the top of each plate. This ring has a circular seal with the legend Sri-Dharāśraya in relief. The plates are inscribed on the inner side only. Their ends are raised into rims for the protection of the writing. A few aksharas have, however, been damaged by verdigris in lines 10-14 and 25-29, and some more have been completely lost by the breaking away of a small piece in the upper right corner of the first plate and the perforation of a large hole in lines 2-4. Fortunately, nothing of historical interest has been lost. The record consists of twenty-nine lines, of which fifteen are inscribed on the first, and the remaining fourteen on the second plate. The average size of the letters is .2".

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets. They resemble in a general way those of the Ābhōṇa and other grants of the Early Kalachuris. The record has been carelessly written, the rules of sandhi and the distinction of long and short vowels not being properly observed in several places. Some aksharas have, again, been irregularly or imperfectly formed, see, e.g., āmīndyāy- for āchchhindyād- in l. 21, and -la (?) -tudēv- for -vaiśvadēv- in l. 17. A final consonant is shown by a horizontal stroke at the top in vasēt, l. 24. The sign of the uṇṇadhmanīya occurs in l. 21, and the numerical symbols for 400, 30, 10 and 6 in l. 28.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for a verse in praise of the boar incarnation in the beginning and three benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the record is in prose throughout. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities of the doubling of a consonant after r, the use of the dental for the lingual sibilant in varsa-, l. 23, and that of the guttural nasal for the anusvāra before h in Jayasimha-, l. 15.

The record opens with the verse in praise of the boar incarnation of Vishṇu, which generally occurs in the beginning of the grants of the Early Chālukyas.<sup>1</sup> This is followed by a description of the Chālukya family as in the preceding grant (No. 27). The first historical member of this family mentioned here is Kīrtivarman (I). He bore the biruda Pṛithivīvallabha and the Imperial titles Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, and had his body sanctified by the avabhṛitha bath in an Aśvamēdha sacrifice. His dear son was the Mahārāja, the illustrious Satyāśraya-Pulakēśivallabha (II), who obtained the title of Paramēśvara by defeating the illustrious Harshavardhana, the lord of Uttarāpatha (North India). His son Jayasimhavarman granted the present plates. He is said to have obtained victory in several battles with four-membered armies<sup>2</sup> and to have vanquished and exterminated with his bright-tipped arrows, the entire army of Vajjaḍa in the country between the Mahī and the Narmadā. He was a devotee of a saintly person whose name has been partially lost in line 11. The ending -śiva which can still be read shows that he was an ascetic probably of the Saiva, as distinguished from the Pāśupata, sect. He is described as the author of a (Sanskrit) play entitled Harapārvatīya. As its name signifies, the play treated of some incident in the life of Śiva and Pārvatī, probably their marriage. Jayasimha is further said to have been meditating on the feet of his father, mother and the illustrious Anivārīta, who was probably his guru.

The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Jayasimha, of the village Dhōṇḍhaka in the Nāsikya vishaya on the occasion of the Vishuva or vernal equinox which fell on the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Chaitra. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Trivikrama, the son of Pṛītiśarman, who belonged to the Bharadvāja gōtra and the Vājasaneyā śākhā. The record was written by Māna (?), the son of the Bhōgika Nāgabhaṭa.

The inscription contains a date in line 28, which has not been noticed before. It is expressed in numerical symbols only, as the 10th (tithi) of the bright fortnight of Chaitra in the year 436 of an unspecified era. As Dharāśraya-Jayasimha, who made the present grant, was a son of Pulakēśin II who flourished in the first half of the seventh century A.C., this date must evidently be referred to the Kalachuri era. It corresponds, for the current Kalachuri year 436, to the 21st March 685 A.C., but as no week-day or nakshatra is mentioned with it, it does not admit of verification. But the statement in line 19 that the grant was made on the occasion of the vernal equinox which fell on the same date, i.e., on the 10th tithi of the bright fortnight of the month Chaitra, is important; for it gives us some details for verification. This tithi in the current Kalachuri year 436 ended 12 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise on the 21st March 685 A.C.<sup>3</sup>; but the Vishuva or Mēsha-saṅkrānti had occurred 5 h. 15 m. after mean sunrise on the previous day, i.e., the 20th March. The saṅkrānti thus did not take place during the tithi of the date, but such slight discrepancies in regard to the moment of saṅkrāntis are not infrequently met with. Besides, the auspicious moment (puṇya-kāla) of the Mēsha saṅkrānti extends to as many as fifteen ghaṭikās before and after the saṅkrānti<sup>1</sup>. It would seem, therefore, that though the saṅkrānti took place a little before noon of the 20th March 685 A.C., the gift was made in the evening when the tenth tithi was current<sup>2</sup>. Hence the latter is coupled with the saṅkrānti in the present grant<sup>3</sup>.

<sup>3</sup> This is according to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., which suits other verifiable early dates of the era. In the expired year 436, the saṅkrānti occurred 11 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on the 20th March 686 A.C., but the tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Chaitra had ended ten days before, 16 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise on the 10th March 686 A.C.

Of the geographical names occurring here, the rivers Mahī and Narmadā are too well-known to need identification. Nāsikya is plainly identical with Nasik, the well-known holy place in the Bombay State. Dhōṇḍhaka, the donated village, is, as already pointed out by Mr. Khare, clearly identical with Dhōṇḍgāon, 12 miles north by west of Nasik.

<sup>14</sup> Mr. Khare says that there are two lines on the seal, the second of which contains the akshara śrī, but I fail to see clear traces of any aksharas in that line. On the other hand, the first akshara of the legend appears to be an imperfectly preserved śrī, its upper curve denoting medial ī being now damaged. The following akshara dha is also partly mutilated by a depression which has since been formed in its place. It may be noted that the legend on the seal of the Surat plates (No. 29, below) of Ywarāja Śryāśraya Śilāditya also is Śrī-Dharāśraya.

No. 29; PLATE XXII

SURAT PLATES OF YUVARAJA SRYASRAYA-SILADITYA:
(KALACHURI) YEAR 443.

THESE copper-plates were found in the possession of a merchant at Surat, the chief town of the Surat District in the Bombay State. They were published together with the Navsāri plates of Pulakēśirāja<sup>1</sup> by Pandit Bhagvanlal Indrajī in the Verhandlungen des VII Internationalen Orientalisten-Congresses, Arische Section, pp. 211 ff. His article on them was accompanied by a lithograph and a translation. I edit the inscription here from excellent ink impressions kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India through the good offices of the Curator of the Oriental Institute, Baroda, where the plates are now deposited.

"The plates are two in number and measure 10½" by 7½". The outer sides are left blank; on the inner sides the lines run breadth-wise as on the Valabhī plates. Two rings, a plain one and one with a seal attached, held the plates together, passing through the holes in the bottom of the first and in the top of the second. The former has been lost, while the latter remains in its proper position. The seal has the shape of an inverted cone with a round top, 1½" in diameter. . . . It bears the inscription Srī-Dharāśraya, the name of the donor's father. Below this is the representation of a flower resembling a blown lotus'.<sup>2</sup> To judge from the impressions the plates are in a state of excellent preservation throughout.

The characters are of the western variety of the southern alphabets. They closely resemble those of the Navsāri plates of the same donor.<sup>3</sup> There are small knobs at the top of letters. The initial ē which is open on the left closely resembles l which has everywhere a short vertical and is distinguished from it only by the absence of a knob at the top. The forms of the rare initial ō in Osumbhalā, l. 21, and of the looped d in Sāṅḍīya, l. 19 are noteworthy. The sign of the jihvāmūliya occurs in ll. 10 and 26, and that of the upadhmaniya in ll. 13, 14 and 29. Punctuation is marked by single or double dots, in ll. 1, 23, 36 etc., by a small circle in l. 32 and by the vertical strokes in ll. 1, 18 etc. The numerical symbols for 400, 40 and 3 occur in l. 36 and those for 10 and 5 in l. 37.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for two verses in the beginning, one in praise of the boar incarnation and the other glorifying the donor's suzerain Vinayāditya, and four benedictive and imprecatory ones at the end, the record is in prose throughout. It may be noted that the formal part of the grant contains in ll. 26-28 several expressions copied verbatim or with slight changes from the earlier Sēndraka records,<sup>4</sup> and in ll. 28-29 some more taken from the Kalachurī grants.<sup>5</sup> The record is correctly written almost throughout, solecisms being very few. As instances of the latter, we may notice that the gender of punyē in l. 25 does not agree with that of the noun tithau which it qualifies, and the affix of the comparative is prefixed (and not suffixed) to the adjective subhaga in l. 31. As regards orthography, we may note that the class-nasal is almost always used in place of the anusvāra; the visarga after vikrama in l. 2 is dropped in accordance with vārttika on Pāṇini, VIII. 3. 36; the guttural nasal is incorrectly used for anusvāra in Narasiṅha, l. 2,

-Jayasimha-, l. 14 and -chatvāriṅśad-, l. 36; and the consonant following r and that preceding y and r are doubled in some places, see Kārmaṇyō-, l. 3, -anuddhyātō-, l. 11 and -chakṛa-, l. 15.

The plates were issued by the Yuvarāja Śryāśraya-Silāditya from his victorious camp at Kusumēśvara near Kārmaṇeya. The record opens with the verse in praise of the boar incarnation of Vishṇu, which generally occurs at the beginning of the inscriptions of the Early Chālukyas. The next verse eulogizes Satyāśrayavallabha, the illustrious Vinayāditya. In the prose portion which follows, we are told that in the family of the Chālukyas<sup>1</sup> there was the Mahārāja Satyāśraya, the illustrious Pulakēśivallabha, whose head was sanctified by the avabhṛitha bath in the Bahusvarṇaka and Aśvamēdha sacrifices, and who obtained the war-standard of the illustrious Harshavardhana, the lord of the entire Uttarāpatha (North India). His son was the Mahārāja, the illustrious Vikramāditya-Satyāśrayavallabha, who exterminated the family of the Pallava ruler of Kāñchī, and conquered the three kingdoms.<sup>2</sup> His son was the illustrious Prithivīvallabha, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, Bhaṭṭāraka Vinayāditya-Satyāśraya. His paternal uncle was Dharāśraya, the illustrious Jayasimha, who attained pure fame by his victories in many battles, and who was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara. His son was the Yuvarāja Śryāśraya-Silāditya who made the present grant.

The first three princes mentioned in ll. 3-12 of the present inscription with the title Mahārāja or Mahārājādhirāja are evidently Pulakēśin II, his son and successor, Vikramāditya I, and the son and successor of the latter, Vinayāditya, of the Early Chālukya Dynasty. The last of these, who is identical with the Vinayāditya glorified in the second verse in the beginning of this record, was clearly the suzerain of Dharāśraya-Jayasimha and his son the crown prince Śryāśraya-Silāditya, when the present grant was made. The title Yuvarāja of the latter prince and the legend Śrī-Dharāśraya on the seal indicate that Jayasimha was then living and Śryāśraya was making the grant on his behalf.

The object of the present inscription is to record the grant of a field situated on the eastern boundary of the village Ōsumbhalā in the āhāra and vishaya of Kārmaṇeya to the Brāhmaṇa, the dikshita Matṛīśvara, the son of the Brāhmaṇa Nannasvāmin, who belonged to the Sāṅḍilya gōtra and the community of the Chaturvēdins of Kārmaṇeya and was a religious student of the Kāṇva sākhā of the Adhvaryu, i.e., Yajurveda. In connection with the boundaries of the field is mentioned the village Allūraka. The purpose of the grant was to provide for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices. The Dūtaka was the Balādhikṛita Ammagōpa. The charter was written by the Balādhikṛita Chēlla.

The grant is dated in ll. 36-3, both in words and numerical symbols, on the fifteenth tithi (paurṇamāsī) of the bright fortnight of Śrāvaṇa in the year 443 of an unspecified era. As the known dates of Vinayāditya range from 687 to 695 A.C., the date of the present grant must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired<sup>3</sup> year 443, to the 23rd July 693 A.C. It does not admit of verification for want of the necessary details.

Of the localities mentioned in the present grant, Kārmaṇeya was identified by Pandit Bhagvanlal<sup>4</sup> with Kamrēj, about 10 m. north-east of Surat. Further, Dr. Bühler has shown<sup>5</sup> that Ōsumbhalā is modern Umbhēl, about 7 miles south of Kamrēj, and

<sup>3</sup> If the year is applied as current, the date would correspond to the 2nd August 692 A. C.

Allūraka which bounded it on the east is still called Alurā and lies about 4 miles from Umbhēl. Kusumēśvara, which has so far remained unidentified, is probably Kōsmārā, about 6 m. south-west of Kamrēj<sup>1</sup> and 3 m. north-west of Umbhēl.

Success !

(Verse 1) Victorious is Vishṇu's manifested boar form which agitated the ocean and which had the world resting on the tip of its projecting right tusk !

(V. 2) Triumphant in the world is the illustrious Satyāśrayavallabha-Vinayāditya of firm valour, a hero of renowned (and) stainless fame, who is like Narasimha in heroism !

Adorning the family of the illustrious Chalukyas,—who are of the Mānavya gōtra; which is being praised by the whole world; who are the sons (i.e., descendants) of Hāriti; who were brought up<sup>2</sup> day by day by the Seven Mothers who are the mothers of the seven worlds; who have obtained continuous prosperity through the protection of Kārttikēya; who have all kings submitting to them the moment they see the boar-emblem which was obtained by the grace of the divine (god) Nārāyaṇa,—there was the Mahārāja the illustrious Pulakēśivallabha (II), whose head was sanctified by the avabhṛitha<sup>3</sup> bath in the Bahusvārṇaka and Aśvamēdha sacrifices; who is equal to Nṛiga, Nahusha, Yayāti, Dhundhumāra and Ambarisha; who has won the war-standard from the illustrious Harshavardhana, the lord of the entire Uttarāpatha<sup>4</sup> (North India).

(L. 9) His son (was) the Mahārāja, the illustrious Vikramāditya (I), Satyāśrayavallabha, who meditated on his feet, who, by his irresistible valour, vanquished the armies of hostile kings unconquerable by others; who exterminated the family of the Pallava (king), the lord of the city of Kāñchī, and who conquered the three kingdoms.

(L. 11) His son (is) the illustrious Prithivīvallabha, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, Bhaṭṭāraka Vinayāditya-Satyāśraya, who meditates on his feet and is adorned by humility and other uncommon royal excellences.

(L. 13) The son of his paternal uncle, the illustrious Dharāśraya-Jayasimhavarman, whose pure fame has sprung from his victories in many battles, and who is a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara,—(viz.) the crown-prince the illustrious Śryāśraya-Śilāditya,—who is intent on worshipping his lotus-like feet; who has defeated<sup>5</sup> the armies of other kings by his political wisdom and valour; who is proficient in all arts; who, like the Emperor of the Vidyādhara<sup>6</sup>, is endowed with beauty, grace and loveliness, attractive to the minds of coquettish women clever in amorous sports,—addresses the (following) order to all kings, feudatories, heads of vishayas, Bhōgikas of villages, Mahattaras and others, according as they may be concerned<sup>7</sup>:—

(L. 18) “Be it known to you (that) for the increase of the religious merit and fame of (My) mother and father and of Myself, I have granted with a libation of water on the holy day, (viz.) the full-moon day of Srāvāṇa, a field on the eastern boundary of the village Ōsumbhalā situated in the āhāra (and) vishaya of Kārmaṇēya,—to the east of which is the boundary of the village Allūraka; to the south, a śamī tree, an ant-hill (and) the dam of a small tank; to the west, two ambilakā<sup>8</sup> trees; to the north the dam of the mallāvi tank, the small tank called Madhuka, (and) the boundary of the field dedicated to the village goddess,—the field lying within these four boundaries, which is to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons’ sons, according to the maxim of waste land, as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure, exempt from all gifts, forced labour and

<sup>4</sup> Rājasekhara (K. M., p. 94) says that the country beyond Prithūdaka (modern Pēhoā in the Karnal District of the Panjab) is Uttarāpatha. Here, however, the whole of North Ind’ia is meant.

<sup>5</sup> Vijrimbhita ‘expanded, manifested’, appears to be used here in the unusual meaning of ‘defeated’. Pandit Bhagvanlal, however, translates the expression as ‘who has pleased the multitude of other kings’.

(L. 26) Wherefore, gracious kings, whether born in our family or others, having realized that wordly existence possesses as (little) worth as the interior of a plaintain tree (possesses sap), and that life is (evanescent) like a water-bubble, and (having considered) that youth is liable to fade like a śirīsha flower, that prosperity is as fleeting as the water of a mountain stream, and that royal fortune is as unstable as the leaves of an aśvattha tree which is struck by a very strong wind, and being desirous of accumulating lasting fame lovely like moonbeams, should consent to and preserve this our gift. He, who with his mind shrouded by the veil of the darkness of ignorance, confiscates it or allows it to be confiscated, will incur the five great sins together with the minor sins.”

(L. 31) And it has been said by the holy Vyāsa, the son of Satyavatī, the best of sages (and) the redactor of the Vēdas, whose body was more lovely than an assemblage of the petals of a full-blown lotus :—

(Here follow four benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(L. 36) On the full-moon day in the bright (fortnight) of Śrāvaṇa in the year four hundred increased by forty three—the year 400 (and) 40 (and) 3, (the month) Śrāvaṇa, the bright (fortnight), (the lunar day) 10 (and) 5. The Dūtaka (of this charter is) the Balādhikṛita Ammagōpa. And (this charter) has been written by the Balādhikṛita Chēlla.

NO. 30; PLATE XXIII

NAVSARI PLATES OF PULAKESIRAJA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 490.

THESE copper-plates, two in number, were sent to Pandit Bhagvanlal Indraji by a Parsi gentleman of Navsāri. They were published, with photo-types and a translation, by Pandit Bhagvanlal in the Verhandlungen des VII Internationalen Orientalisten-Congresses, Arische Section, pp. 211 ff. They are edited here from the same photo-types. The plates are now deposited in the Prince of Wales Museum, Bombay.

The plates, which are inscribed on the inner sides only, measure each 11½" by 9½". They are held together by two rings, one of which has a seal, showing two figures in relief, 2" in diameter, which, according to Pandit Bhagvanlal,<sup>1</sup> were intended to represent the donor's parents. The seal bears the legend Srī-Avanijanāśrayaḥ, on the left of the male figure. Except for some letters here and there which have become much worn, the inscription is fairly well preserved. The record consists of fifty-one lines, of which twenty-five are inscribed on the first plate, and the remaining twenty-six on the second. The average size of the letters is .12".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets and resemble those of the grants of Śryāśraya Silāditya. As regards individual letters, we may notice that the rare jh occurs in śarajha-, l. 23; the subscript th has a notch in sthātavyam-, l. 41, but not in -sthityā in the same line; the superscript r is horizontal like the mātrā for medial ē in -vimardyamāna-, l. 26; and the sign for | occurs in -Kāñchaḷē and -Gōvindaḷi-, in l. 38. A final consonant is indicated by its short form with a horizontal line at the top, see vasēt, l. 45. The sign of the jihvāmūliya occurs in ll. 7, 16, 28 and 30, and that of the upadhmaniya in ll. 7, 10, 14, 17 and 20. The sign-manual of the donor is in the northern characters with wedges at the top.

The language is good and, on the whole, correct Sanskrit. The fierce fight with the Arab invaders is graphically described in ll. 23-33. It is noteworthy that in its eulogistic part the inscription contains in ll. 18-19 one long compound expression, copied for the first time from Gurjara records. No such borrowing from Gurjara grants is noticed in the earlier inscriptions of the Sēndrakas, nor even in those of Pulakēśin's elder brother Sryāśraya-Silāditya. Except for the maṅgala ślōka in praise of the boar incarnation and four benedictive and imprecatory verses at the close, the record is in prose throughout. As regards orthography, we find the consonant following r doubled in many cases, see, e.g., Vishṇōr=vvārāham, l. 1, -Kīrttivarmma-, l. 6, etc. The guttural nasal is used for the anusvāra before ś in -nistriṅśa-, l. 19, gh for h in; Jayasīṅgha-, l. 17 and the jihvāmūliya for sh in -nilikrayīkṛita-, l. 28. The vowel ri is used for ri in -nistriṅśa-, l. 8 and vice versa in -Prtihivī-, l. 34. On the other hand, the somewhat rare sandhis in -vaksha-sthala, l. 22, and -dashṭōshṭha-, l. 28, are in accordance with the vārttikas on Pāṇini's rules VIII, 3, 36 and VI, I, 94 respectively.

The plates were granted by the illustrious Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśirāja of the Gujarat branch of the Early Chālukyas. The inscription opens with the usual verse in praise of the boar incarnation. Then comes the genealogy of the donor. In the family of the Chālukyas<sup>1</sup> who are described here as in the grants of Sryāśraya-Silāditya,<sup>2</sup> there was the Prithivīvallabha, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, the illustrious Satyāśraya-Kīrtivarmarāja, whose body was sanctified by the avabhṛitha bath in an Aśvamēdha sacrifice. His son was the illustrious Satyāśraya-Pulakēśivallabha, who was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara and obtained formidable power by his defeat of the illustrious Harshavardhana, the lord of the Uttarāpatha. His son was the Paramabhāṭṭāraka, the illustrious Satyāśraya-Vikramāditya who also was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara. He regained his kingdom with the help of his excellent horse Chitrakaṅṭha and vanquished the three kingdoms, Chēra, Chōla and Pāṇḍya. His younger brother was the Paramabhāṭṭāraka, the illustrious Dharāśraya-Jayasīmhavarmarāja, who was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara. His son was the Paramabhāṭṭāraka, the illustrious Jayāśraya-Maṅgalarasarāja, who was a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, and reconquered his own dominions by the might of his arms. His younger brother, the Paramabhāṭṭāraka, the illustrious Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśirāja, who was a most devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, made the present grant.

Of the six princes mentioned above, the first three, Kīrtivarman, Pulakēśivallabha and Vikramāditya, are plainly identical with Kīrtivarman I, Pulakēśin II and Vikramāditya I respectively, of the Early Chālukya Dynasty. The next three, viz., Dharāśraya-Jayasīmha, Jayāśraya-Maṅgalarasarāja and Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin, though here mentioned with the high-sounding title Paramabhāṭṭāraka, were of a feudatory rank and owed allegiance to the Imperial house of Bādāmi. The name of Sryāśraya-Silāditya, whose Navsāri and Surat plates bear earlier dates, is omitted here, probably because he predeceased his father Dharāśraya-Jayasīmha.

In ll. 23-33 the record describes graphically the Arab invasion of the Chālukyan kingdom and the fierce fight which was fought in the vishaya of Navasāri. We are told that the Tājika army which had conquered the Saindhava, Kachchhēlla, Saurāshtra, Chāvōṭaka, Maurya, Gurjara and other kings, invaded the district of Navasārikā during the course of its campaign to conquer all southern kings. There they were opposed by Avanijanāśraya-Pulakēśin. A fierce battle was fought, in which Pulakēśin won a decisive victory. Thereupon the illustrious Vallabha-narēndra, who was plainly the contemporary Chālukya suzerain, in token of his appreciation of Pulakēśin's heroism, conferred upon him the following four titles, viz., Dakṣiṇāpathasādhāra (the Pillar of the Deccan), Chalukkiikulāṅkāra (the Ornament of the Chalukya family), Prithivīvallabha (the Lover of the Earth), Anivartakanivartayitṛi (the Repeller of the unrepellable).

The vigorous style of the description of the battle, which is unique in inscriptional literature, suggests that the present record dated K. 490 was composed soon after it was fought. Again, as shown above, in its eulogistic portion, the record has, for the first time, incorporated a passage which is known to occur only in Gurjara grants. This makes it probable that it was composed after the Gurjara kingdom was annexed. The last date of the Gurjaras is K. 486 (736 A.C.). The Arab invasion must therefore be dated during the period K. 486-490 (736-739 A.C.)<sup>1</sup> and may have taken place in 737 A.C. The contemporary Chālukya Emperor, who appreciated Pulakēśin's heroism, was probably Vikramāditya II (circa 734-747 A.C.).

The object of the present inscription is to record the grant of the village Padraka in the āhāra and vishaya of Kārmaṇēya on the Mahākārttikī (i.e., the full-moon day of Kārttika) for the performance of balī, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and other rites. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Gōvindaḷi, the son of the Dvivēda Brāhmaṇa Kāñchaḷē, who belonged to the Vatsa gōtra and was a student of the Taittirīya śākhā. He had emigrated from Vanavāsī.

The grant was intended to be dated both in words and numerical symbols, but the former have, for the most part, been omitted through inadvertence, and the date is given in numerical symbols as the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika in the year 490. Like the dates of Śryāśraya-Silāditya's grants, this date must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-249 A.C., it would correspond, for the expired<sup>2</sup> year 490, to the 21st October 739 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

As for the geographical names occurring in the present grant, Vanavāsī, from which the donee had emigrated, is a well-known place of the same name in North Kanara. Navasārikā and Kārmaṇēya have been already shown to be identical with the modern Navsāri and Kamrēj.<sup>3</sup> The village Padraka may be represented by the modern Pārḍi, 4 miles east of Navsāri.

<sup>1</sup> The Prince of Wales Museum plates of Jayabhaṭa IV were dated towards the close of the Kārttikādi Kalachuri year 486, while the present inscription was incised in the beginning of the Kalachuri year 490. Hence there is a difference of only three years between the Christian equivalents of the two dates.

<sup>2</sup> If the year is applied as current, the date would correspond to the 1st November 738 A. C. There was a lunar eclipse on that day, but there is no mention of it in the present grant.

when the army of the Tājikas,—which poured forth arrows, javelins<sup>1</sup> and iron-headed clubs; which destroyed, with its rapidly brandished and glittering swords, the prosperous Saindhava, Kachchhēlla, Saurāshtra, Chāvōṭaka, Maurya, Gurjara and other kings; which, desiring to enter Dakṣiṇāpatha (South India) with a view to vanquish all Southern kings, came,<sup>2</sup> in the very first place, to conquer the vishaya of Navasārikā; which rendered the regions between the quarters dusky with the dust of the ground raised by the hard and noisy hoofs of its galloping horses; the bodies (of warriors) in which appeared dreadful as their armours were reddened by very large streams of blood (gushing) from the intestines which came out of the cavities of their big bellies, as they impetuously rushed forth and were completely pierced by spear-heads; which had not previously been vanquished even by numerous eminent chiefs among hosts of kings, who offered their heads in return for high honour and gifts they had received from their lord; who opposed it, biting mercilessly both their lips with the tips of their teeth; who, though they were great warriors and had their sharp swords reddened by the mass of blood that flowed when the sides of the loins and the trunks of hostile elephants were rent on several extensive battlefields, could not attain success; who cut off the necks of their enemies' heads, as though they were plucking the stalks of lotuses, hitting them with their horse-shoe-shaped sharp arrows which were quickly discharged for the destruction of their adversaries; whose bodies were covered with a coat of bristling hair on account of their martial spirit and excitement,—was defeated<sup>1</sup> in the forefront of the battle in which headless trunks began a circular dance to the accompaniment of the loud noise of drums beaten continuously in joy caused, as it were, by the thought "To-day at least we have, by laying down our heads, paid off the debt we owed to our lord in (this) one life!"

(L. 35) (He) addresses the (following) command to all his officers born in his family and others according as they may be concerned,—to the heads of vishayas, headmen of villages, residents, Vāsāvakas, Āyuktas, Viniyuktakas and others:—

"Be it known to you that for the increase of the religious merit and fame of (Our) mother and father and of Ourselves, we have given, as a religious gift with a libation of water on the Mahākārttikī, the village Padraka situated in the āhāra and vishaya of Kārmaṇēya,—together with udraṅga (and) uparikara, together with (the right to) minor and major gifts, not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas, to be enjoyed by a succession of sons and sons' sons according to the maxim of waste land, exclusive of gifts previously made to gods and Brāhmaṇas,—to the Brāhmaṇa Kāñchaḷa who has studied two Vēdas, the son of the Brāhmaṇa Gōvindaḷi, of the Vatsa gōtra, who is a student of the Taittirīya śākhā (of the Black Yajurveda) and has emigrated from Vanavāsī.

(L. 40) Wherefore, none should cause an obstruction while he is enjoying, cultivating or causing it to be cultivated in the manner of an agrahāra. Gracious kings of the future, whether born in our family or others, considering that fortune is impermanent and unsteady like a flash of lightning, and that life is as inconstant as a drop of water adhering to the tip of a blade of grass, should consent to and preserve this Our gift. And he, who, with his mind obscured by the veil of the darkness of ignorance, will confiscate it or allow it to be confiscated, shall incur the five great sins together with the minor sins".

And it has been said by the venerable Vyāsa, the redactor of the Vēdas—

(L. 48) The year—hundred,<sup>1</sup> 400 (and) 90, (the month) Kārttika, the bright (fort-night) (the lunar day) 10 (and) 5. This (charter) is written by the illustrious Bappabhaṭṭi, the Mahāsāndhivigrahika and Sāmanta, who has attained the pañchamahāśabda and is the son of the Mahābalādhiperita Haragaṇa. All (in this charter) (is) authoritative, whether (any) letters are wanting or redundant. Success! Success!

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE DYNASTY OF HARISCHANDRA

No. 31; PLATES XXIV-XXV

ANJANERI PLATES (FIRST SET) OF BHOGASAKTI : (KALACHURI) YEAR 461

THIS set of three copper-plates was discovered, together with two others<sup>1</sup> in 1936, in the possession of the Shid family of Anjanēri, a village near Trimbak in the Nasik District. The inscriptions were brought to my notice by Rao Bahadur K.N. Dikshit, Director General of Archaeology. The plates were kindly sent to me for examination by the Superintendent of the Archaeological Survey, Western Circle, who has also supplied me with their ink impressions.

The plates, except the first, are inscribed on both the sides. They measure each 12.5" broad and 8" high. Their ends are slightly raised or thickened for the protection of the writing. The inscription is in a state of excellent preservation almost throughout. On the outer side of the first plate is incised an ornamental lotus-like figure with a diameter of 3.6". On the second sides of the second and third plates there appear inscribed, in the midst of letters, the small figure of a boar running to the right and the large one of a conch<sup>2</sup> respectively. The plates are held together by two rings passing through the holes near their upper side. The ends of one of them are not soldered, while those of the other are secured into the bottom of a seal, having the shape of an inverted cone, the round surface of which, measuring 1.5" in diameter, contains in high relief, in the centre of a circle of knobs, the figure of a lion with the right front paw raised, and the tail twisted over his back. The weight of the plates together with the rings and the seal is 308 tolas. There are sixty-four lines in all, of which fourteen are inscribed on each side, except the second sides of the second and third plates which have thirteen and nine lines respectively. The size of the letters varies from .2" to .4". The letters on the second side of the third plate which were written subsequently and by another hand, are bolder and more deeply incised than those on the other sides.

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets. The letters are in most cases embellished with small circles as in the Bannahalli plates<sup>3</sup> of the Kadamba king Kṛishṇavarman II. These circles appear not only at the top of letters like the box-heads in Vākāṭaka inscriptions, but also at the corners and lower ends; in hā of -mahā-pātakais-, l. 46, for instance, as many as five circles are used to embellish the akshara. The letters in ll. 56-64, however, do not show these circles, but have instead knobs at their top as in other early inscriptions from the Nasik District. As regards individual letters we may notice that the rare lingual ḍh occurs clearly in vōḍhavyab, l. 48; the lingual ḍ shows in some places a looped curve as in the Kaira plates<sup>4</sup> (of K. 380) of Dadda II, see -maṇḍal- l. 5, -shaṇḍa-, l. 19 and khaṇḍa-, l. 32; b is round in brahmanya-, l. 12, but rectangular

with a notch on the top or the left side in other places; see -bala-, l. 9 and -bōdhitō, l. 20; similarly th is round in -yūth-, l. 18, but rectangular in -sthiti-, l. 28; the initial ē is distinguished from l by lengthening its vertical or by giving it a turn to the right, see ēva, l. 11, and ētām, l. 49. The medial ū (long) as added to r appears in as many as three different forms, see rūpaka in ll. 36, 38 and 39. A final consonant is indicated by a horizontal line at the top, see bhūbhrit, l. 21. The sign for the upadhmaniya occurs in line 44 and the numerical symbols for 400, 200, 100, 60, 50 and 1 in lines 54, 38 and 39.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for the initial verse in praise of the boar-incarnation of Vishṇu and four benedictive and imprecatory verses in ll. 50-53, the record is in prose throughout. The initial maṅgala-ślōka and the description of the Chālukya family that follows are taken from the records of the Early Chālukyas. The eulogy of the donor Bhōgaśakti alias Pṛithivīchandra is couched in an ornate kāvya style resembling that of the Gurjara and Sēndraka records. As regards orthography, we may notice that the consonant, which precedes or follows r, has been doubled, see e.g., Vishṇūr=vvārāhaṃ l. 11, and -parākkram-ākkramit-, l. 14; the guttural nasal is wrongly used in place of the anusvāra when followed by a sibilant or h, see vanśasy-, l. 6; śrī-Sinhavarmma- l. 9 etc; the visarga is superfluously retained in =ālanikārabhūtaḥ=śśarad-, ll. 6-7, and wrongly elided when followed by a sibilant in ll. 49, 58 etc.

After the usual maṅgala ślōka in praise of the boar incarnation and the description of the Chālukya<sup>1</sup> family, the record mentions the Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vikramāditya. It then proceeds to state that the illustrious Svāmichandra, who was an ornament of the family of Hariśchandra and was treated as his own son by the Chālukya Emperor Vikramāditya, ruled over the entire Purī-Kōṅkaṇa country comprising fourteen thousand villages.<sup>2</sup> His son was the illustrious Simhavarmarāja. The latter's son Bhōgaśakti, who had the second name Pṛithivīchandra, made the present grant. His eulogy, to which as many as fourteen lines (11-25) are devoted, is wholly conventional. The only important information we glean about him is that he was always devoted to the worship of Vishṇu and, like Bhīmasēna, had gained his entire dominion by valour.

The royal order is addressed to (the residents of) Gōparāshṭra, Eastern Trikūṭa, Āmrarājī, Mairikā, the Eastern and Western Mahāgiriḥāras and Pallusūḍhāmbaka district extending as far as Prētahrada (?). The object of the inscription is to record the grant, by Bhōgaśakti, of eight villages, viz., Jayagrāma, Ambē-Avaṅgaṇa, Pālittapāṭaka, Kōkilākshaka, Kalahaka, Mudgāhitaka, Kshēmāgiraka and Ānagrāma, for providing materials for the worship of the god Nārāyaṇa, for the repairs of his temple and for the maintenance of a sattra in the town of Jayapura. The god was named Bhōgēśvara, which suggests that he was installed by Bhōgaśakti and named after himself. The record next assigns, in ll. 35-39, certain rights, dues and taxes in favour of the god. The amount of taxes levied in each case is stated in Kṛishṇarāja-rūpakas which were plainly the silver coins of the Kalachuri Emperor Kṛishṇarāja. The record next enjoins that five or ten merchants (who were evidently elected as representatives of the town) should celebrate according to the prevailing custom, the annual yātrā festival of the god for a fortnight in the month of Mārgaśirsha. The temple was entrusted to

<sup>2</sup> In some later inscriptions, the number of villages in North Kōṅkaṇa are stated to be fourteen hundred only, see, e.g., chaturdaśa-grāma-sat-ōpalakshita-Kōṅkaṇa in line 56 of the Bhādāna grant of Aparājita, Ep. Ind., Vol. III, p. 274, and Purī-pramukha-chaturdaśa-grāma-sa(śa)ta-samanvitām sama-sta-Kōṅkaṇa-bhuvam samanūśāsati in ll. 64-65 of the Khārēpāṭan plates of Anantadēva, Ind. Ant., Vol. IX, p. 35.

(the representatives of) the town of merchants and they were enjoined to look after the service and property of the god. The merchants were in return exempted from the payment of octroi duties and the obligation to provide for the boarding (of royal officers). The charter was written by Bharatasvāmin who was a resident of Kallivana.

The inscription is dated in the year 461, expressed both in words and numerical symbols in l. 54. No era is specified, but the mention of the Early Chālukya king Vikramāditya (I) as the suzerain of Bhōgaśakti's grand-father plainly indicates that it must be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond to 709-10 A.C. if the year 461 was current, and to 710-11 A.C. if it was expired. It does not admit of verification for want of the necessary details.

The original royal order seems to have ended with l. 55, at the lower end of the inner side of the third plate. There is, however, a postscript added on the outer side of the same plate, which registers certain endowments of Tējavarmarāja. He was presumably a royal officer in charge of the country round Jayapura<sup>1</sup>. He donated a pasture-land in the village Pālittapāṭaka which was situated to the south of Jayapura. It was marked in four directions by boundary slabs with the figures of Durgādēvi and cows sculptured on them<sup>2</sup>. He also deposited a hundred rūpakas with the guild of merchants in the town of Jayapura, the interest of which was to be spent in providing guggula (bdellium) for (the worship of) the god Bhōgēśvara every year.

The mention of Kṛishṇarāja-rūpakas or the silver coins of Kṛishṇarāja in the present record is interesting; for it shows that these coins of the Kalachuri king remained in circulation for more than a hundred and fifty years after Kṛishṇarāja who probably flourished from circa 550 to 575 A.C.

There are several geographical names occurring in the present grant, but few of them can now be definitely identified. Purī which in the present record is coupled with Kōṅkaṇ, probably to distinguish the latter from the Southern Kōṅkaṇ, has not yet been satisfactorily located. Some identify it with Ghārāpurī, but the identification is opposed on the ground that the island is too small for a capital. Besides, it shows no traces of fortifications. Purī seems to have been situated not far from Sthānaka or Tḥāṇā, as the Silāhāra king Aparājita retired to it when pressed by the enemy<sup>3</sup>. It may have been identical with Rājpurī in the former Janjira State, which is situated at the mouth of a large creek on the western coast.<sup>4</sup> Gōparāshṭra is mentioned in the Nirpaṇ plates of Nāgavardhana<sup>5</sup> and probably comprised the country round modern Igatpurī, as the village Balēgrāma situated in it has been shown to be identical with Belgaon Tarhālā, about 12 m. north-east of Igatpurī<sup>6</sup>. The genuineness of the Nirpaṇ plates has rightly been questioned<sup>7</sup>, but that need not make the proposed identification doubtful. In fact the mention of Gōparāshṭra as a territorial division, on which a tax was levied for the maintenance of a temple near Nasik shows that the identification is most probable. The identification of Trikūṭa the home-province of the Traikūṭakas has, for a long time, been a matter of controversy. That it was in Aparānta or North Kōṅkaṇ was of course known from the Raghuvamśa of Kālidāsa<sup>1</sup>, but its exact location was uncertain. The mention of the Eastern Trikūṭa district in connection with and for the same purpose as Gōparāshṭra makes it plain that it comprised the western portion of the Nasik District. Trikūṭa was, therefore, probably the name of the range of hills that borders the Nasik District on the west. The districts of Āmrārājī, Mairikā the Eastern and Western Mahāgīrihāras, and Pallusūḍhāmbaka cannot be definitely identified. Mahāgīrihāra may be identical with Māhirihāra mentioned in lines 56-57 of the Bhādāna grant of Aparājita.<sup>2</sup> It must, in that case, have comprised the country round Bhādāna (near Bhiwaṇḍi in the Ṭhānā District). Jayapura, where the temple of Bhōgēśvara was situated, is probably represented by Jarvar Budruk, 9 m. south by west of Anjanēri. Of the villages granted by the present charter, Jayagrāma may be Jaikhērā in the Diṇḍōri tāluka. Some of the other villages can be located in the vicinity of Jaikhērā. Thus Ambē-Avaṅgaṇa may be Ambēgaon, about 3 m. west by south, Kokilākshaka, Kokar, about 3 m. to the north-east, and Kalahaka, Kaḷasgaon, 2 m. east of Jaikhērā. Mudgāhitaka is likely to be Maganpārā, 5 m. north-west of Jaikhērā. Kshēmāgiraka, Ānnagrāma and Pālittapāṭaka cannot now be traced in the neighbourhood. Kallivana, which was the place of residence of the scribe Bharatasvāmin, is undoubtedly Kalvan<sup>3</sup> in the Nasik District.

<sup>2</sup> It may be noted that a pillar found at Sitābaldi near Nagpur (now deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur) which contains an inscription recording the gift of a pasture-land for the grazing of cows (Ep. Ind., Vol. III, pp. 304 ff.), has also the figures of some cows and calves in addition to those of the gods Brahmā and Vishṇu sculptured on it. The pillars mentioned in the present inscription were probably of a similar type with the figure of Durgādēvi sculptured on them.

gifts continuously; who, like a reservoir of sweet water beautified with clusters of day-lotuses, blue-lotuses and night-lotuses, (which quenches the thirst of animals), destroys the greed of living beings; who, like a large assemblage of lotuses, made to bloom by the rays of the rising sun (which becomes an abode of beauty), is the place of resort for Fortune; who, like the ocean (that always keeps itself within bounds, is engaged in giving protection to several mountains, is very deep, and contains large aquatic animals), has maintained established customs, is intent on giving protection to many princes, and is possessed of great serenity and courage; who is always occupied with the construction of religious works, (such as) temples, tanks, charitable feeding houses and water-sheds, and is intent on meditating on Nārāyaṇa; who is an ornament of Kōṅkaṇa with Purī (as the capital), even as the Kaustubha jewel is of Viṣṇu; who is proficient in (understanding) the import and principles of the Bhārata, the Rāmāyaṇa and (the works on) the science of politics; (who is) wise, clever, learned (and) intelligent; whose strength, prowess and powers derived from personal energy, counsel and royal position, are unimpeded; (and who is) the goad (i.e., the controller) of the three worlds—addresses the (following) command to all his sons, sons' sons and sons' sons' sons and so forth, (as well as) (all people living in) the vishayas of Gōparāshtra, Eastern Trikūṭa, Āmrarājī, Mairikā, both the Mahāgīrihāras<sup>1</sup> (and), Palluḍhāmbaka,<sup>2</sup> extending as far as Prētahrada, which have been acquired by the might of his arms and valour:—

(L. 28) “Be it known to you that realizing that there is no pre-eminent god except the divine Vāsudēva, the lord of (both) gods and demons, the supreme god of gods, the cause of the creation, preservation and destruction (of the world), (I have) donated for the increase of the religious merit of (My) mother and father and of Myself, the (following) eight villages and rights to the divine (god) Nārāyaṇa, the primeval Being and Supreme Spirit (called) Bhōgēśvara installed<sup>3</sup> in Jayapura, for providing perfume, flowers, incense, light, bathing and anointing (of the god), for symphonic entertainment combined with dancing, singing and music, for (maintaining) a charitable feeding-house, and for repairing (what may be) damaged or broken. The names of them (i.e., the villages) are (as follows):—Jayagrāma, Ambē-Avaṅgaṇa, Pālittapāṭaka, Kōkilākshaka, Kalahaka, Mudgāhitaka, Kshēmagiraka (and) Ānnagrāma. And the rights are (as stated below):— stalls in market places; kōvēra<sup>4</sup> in a written document; a rūpaka to be paid for each cart<sup>5</sup> of the caravan on ingress and egress (at Jayapura) at the time of the yātrā festival of the god; a basket<sup>6</sup> (of corn?) and an offering of ghee in the principal villages<sup>7</sup> in the vishayas of Gōparāshtra, Āmrarājī (and) Mairikā; in the same manner in other villages (of the aforementioned districts); in the vishaya of Eastern Trikūṭa, a hundred rūpakas of Kṛishṇarāja, (in figures) 100; in the Western Mahāgīrihāra, two hundred rūpakas of Kṛishṇarāja, (in figures) 200; in the Eastern (Mahāgīrihāra), one hundred (rūpakas), (in figures) 100; in the vishaya of Pallūḍhamba, fifty rūpakas of Kṛishṇarāja, (in figures) 50. As for the eight villages,

<sup>5</sup> Vabitra, lit. an instrument of conveying, is clearly used here in the sense of a cart or some similar vehicle.

<sup>6</sup> M. Williams on the authority of the Kāraṇḍavyūha gives muṭa or mūṭa in the sense of a basket. The Arthūṇa inscription of Chāmuṇḍarāja (Ep. Ind., XIV, p. 302) mentions the tax of a mānaka on each mūṭaka of salt. Cf. muḍā in Marathi and muḍe in Kannaḍa.

<sup>7</sup> The reference to ‘other villages’ in the sequel shows that Jyēṣṭhikā-grāma is used here in the sense of the headquarters of a vishaya etc.

they are all to be exempt from all dues, forced labour and special rights; (they are) not to be entered by chāṭas and bhaṭas, are to be self-contained,<sup>1</sup> (and) are to continue (as donated villages) as long as the moon, the sun, the ocean and the earth will endure.

(L. 41) Wherefore, our descendants, seeing that the living world is fickle like the waves of the ocean-water agitated by strong wind, should consent to and preserve this Our gift. (And) the merchants (of the town Jayapura), five or even ten (in number), should celebrate the yātrā festival of the god Vishṇu for a whole fortnight in the month of Mārgaśīrsha. But he, who, with his mind shrouded in the darkness of ignorance, would confiscate it or allow it to be confiscated, would incur the five great sins. As for this temple, it is entrusted to the town of merchants.<sup>2</sup> They should all perform the service and take care of the property,<sup>3</sup> of the god. The (following) regulation is laid down for the town:—The merchants residing at (this) place will never have to pay the octroi duty, or to provide for the boarding<sup>4</sup> (of royal officers). He, who will violate this regulation, shall incur the five great sins.”

(L. 54) In the year four hundred increased by sixty-one, (this) charter was written by Bharatasvāmin a resident of Kallivana.

Inscription of Tējavarman

(L. 56) Success! Hail! The illustrious Tējavarmarāja has relinquished a pasture-land in Pālittapāṭaka to the south of Jayapura. And in evidence of it, stone sculptures of cows, together with (the image of) the goddess Durgā, have been put up in (all) the four directions (to mark) its boundary. That is the defining limit of the pasture-land. For purchasing land (in honour) of the god Bhōgēśvara, a hundred rūpakas have been deposited with the merchant town of Jayapura. The interest on the hundred rupees should be paid by (the guild of merchants in) the town as the price of bdellium (for the worship) of the god Bhōgēśvara, year after year, as long as the moon, the sun and the stars will endure. He, who will do otherwise, shall incur the five great sins.

No. 32 ; PLATE XXVI

ANJANERI PLATES (SECOND SET) OF BHOGASAKTI

THIS is a set of two copper-plates discovered together with two others<sup>5</sup> in the possession of the Shid family of Anjanēri near Trimbak in the Nasik District of the Bombay State. The inscription was brought to my notice by Rao Bahadur K.N. Dikshit, Director General of Archæology. The plates were kindly sent to me for examination by the Superintendent of the Archæological Survey, Western Circle, who has also supplied me with their ink impressions.

<sup>1</sup> The expression abhyantara-siddhi occurs in several grants, sometimes with a prefix like tri-bhōga or sarva, see Ind. Ant., Vol. XIX, p. 271. It is generally used in the instrumental case denoting the manner in which the grant is made. Abhyantara-siddhyā has been variously translated:—(1) by Dr. Fleet as ‘with (full) rights of enjoyment (loc. cit.); (2) by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar as ‘with heart-felt devotion’ (Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, p. 40), and (3) again by the same scholar as ‘for the purpose of internal adjudication’ (ibid., Vol. XVIII, p. 257). The context shows that the expression is used here in the sense of ‘self-contained’, i.e., the donated villages will not be dependent on others for the decision of law-suits etc., but they will have full powers of adjudication. The same idea is expressed by sa-daṇḍa-das-āparādhah which sometimes takes its place. The Hānsōṭ plates of Bhartrivādya have sab-ābhyantara-siddhi; Ep. Ind., Vol. XII, p. 203.

They are two copper-plates, the first of which measures 11.9" broad and 7.8" high, while the second, though of the same breadth, is slightly less in height. They are held together by two rings, 6" in diameter, passing through two holes at the top of each plate. The ends of the right-hand ring are not joined, but those of the left-hand one are secured into the socket of a seal having the shape of an inverted cone, 3" in length, on the round surface of which, about 1.7" in diameter, appears in high relief the figure of a lion in the midst of a circle of knobs. The lion closely resembles that on the seal of the cognate Anjanēri plates of K. 461. The weight of the plates, the rings and the seal is 178 tolas. The first plate is inscribed on one side only, and the second on both the sides. Their rims are slightly thickened with a corresponding depression running all round for the protection of the writing. The plates have suffered considerable damage by corrosion. There are a few holes in the third line on the first plate and near the lower edge of the second. Nearly twenty aksharas in l.27 and about a dozen in l.28 have been either partially or wholly damaged by the corrosion of the surface. Some of them, especially those in l.27 can, however, be supplied from the other Anjanēri plates of the same king. Further, lower down on the same side, several aksharas, especially in the middle of ll. 34-38, have been almost obliterated by wear and tear, but they can be read with patience and perseverance from their faint traces on the original plate. There are thirty-eight lines of writing in all, of which twelve appear on each inscribed side, except the first side of the second plate which has fourteen lines.

The characters closely resemble those in the cognate Anjanēri plates, except that the circles appear here only at the top of letters. The language is Sanskrit. Except for the introductory maṅgala ślōka in praise of the boar incarnation, which is borrowed from the inscriptions of the Early Chālukyas, the record is in prose throughout. Down to l.27 it is identical with the corresponding portion of the other Anjanēri plates, and shows the same palæographical peculiarities. As shown below, the object of the present inscription was not to record any religious gift but to register certain rights and privileges granted to merchants, and to lay down punishment for offences committed in certain towns and villages which were resettled by the king. The usual imprecatory and benedictive verses do not naturally find a place in this record.<sup>1</sup> Their absence does not, therefore indicate that the charter is incomplete. In fact the mention of the executive officer and the use of iti at the end of the last line shows that it was duly completed.

The inscription begins with a verse in praise of the boar incarnation. It then gives the usual description of the Chālukya<sup>2</sup> family and mentions the Mahārājādhirāja Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vikramādityavallabha. It proceeds to state that the illustrious Svāmichandra, an ornament of the family of Hariśchandra, who was treated like his own son by Vikramāditya, ruled over the whole Purī-Kōṅkaṇa, consisting of fourteen thousand villages. His son was the illustrious Sirīharāja, and the latter's son, the illustrious Bhōgaśakti who had the other name Pṛithivīchandra. The description of these kings is given exactly as in the other Anjanēri plates. Bhōgaśakti was always devoted to the worship of the god Vāsudēva, and was an ornament of the province Purī-Kōṅkaṇa.

From ll. 29-31 of the present grant we learn that the king Bhōgaśakti resettled the town Samagiripaṭṭana together with (its suburb) Chandrapurī as well as the villages—Ambayapallikā, Savāṇēyapallikā, Maurēyapallikā and Kamāsāripallikā, which had previously been devastated. The name of the enemy, who had laid them waste, is not mentioned. The object of the present charter, which was made over to Ēla śrēṣṭhin, Kara-puta śrēṣṭhin, and others of the afore-mentioned town, was to record the rights, privileges and exemptions granted to the merchants and other residents of the resettled town Samagiri, as well as to lay down fines in the case of certain offences committed by the residents and young merchants evidently of the same town. The merchants were, for instance, exempted from octroi duty in the whole kingdom; the property of those who died sonless was not to escheat to the crown;<sup>1</sup> the residents were not required to provide lodging and boarding for royal officers.<sup>2</sup> As for fines imposed for offences, we are told in ll. 34-38 that a violent offence against unmarried girls<sup>3</sup> would be punished with a fine of 108 rūpakas, and that of adultery with 32 rūpakas. For an assault consisting of the boxing of the ears, a fine of sixteen rūpakas, and for that which resulted in an injury to the head, one of four rūpakas was laid down. If a young merchant had illicit intercourse with a labour woman, he was fined 108 rūpakas or whatever was fixed by eight or sixteen Mahallakas (respectable men) of the town. The charter was executed by the illustrious Tējavarmarāja.

The inscription is not dated, but the mention of Tējavarmarāja, who is clearly identical with the homonymous person mentioned in the other Anjanēri inscription, shows that it must have been incised within a few years on either side of the Kalachuri year 461 (710-11 A. C.).

As for the localities mentioned in the present plates, Samagiripaṭṭana cannot be traced, but it was probably situated near Chandrapurī, with which it is coupled in the present grant and which is probably represented by Chandrāchī Mēt, 12 m. south-west of Anjanēri. Savāṇēyapallikā may be Sāmuṇḍi and Kamāsāripallikā Karholi, five and six miles respectively, north by east of Chandrāchī Mēt. Maurēyapallikā may be Mōrwāḍī, 3 m. south-west of Nasik, but it is somewhat distant from Chandrāchī Mēt if the latter correctly represents Chandrapurī.

<sup>3</sup> The fine levied for kumārī-sābasa is sometimes mentioned as transferred to the donee; see the expression in the Bhādāna grant cited above in note 1. The fines for the various offences are laid down here specifically to prevent the village authorities from extorting money from the offenders. For similar fines which village officers were empowered to impose, see Kōṭavumachgi inscription of Vikramāditya V, Ep. Ind., Vol. XX, pp. 66 ff.

(Line 28) The illustrious Bhōgaśaktī. . . . . addresses (the following order to) all his sons, sons' sons, sons' sons' sons and so forth, (and to) the heads of vishayas, the Bhōgikas and Mahattaras of villages :—

(L. 29) "Be it known to you that I have settled (again) the Samagiripattana, which had been previously devastated, together with Chandrapurī (and) together with the three hamlets, (vir.) Ambēyapallikā, Savāṇēyapallikā (and) Maurēyapallikā, and also Kaṁsāripallikā. (This charter is) made over to the whole town, of which Ela śrēshṭhin and Karapuṭa śrēshṭhin are the chief (representatives). The merchants residing in Samagiri are not to pay octroi duty<sup>1</sup> in the whole kingdom as long as the moon and the sun will endure. ## MISCELLANEOUS INSCRIPTIONS

No. 33; PLATE XXVII

SPURIOUS MANKANI PLATES OF TARALASVAMIN : (KALACHURI) YEAR 346

OF the two copper-plates which, as shown below, purport to record a grant of Taralāsvāmin, one was discovered as far back as 1864 somewhere in the Saṅkhēḍā Tālukā in the Baroda District and has been edited with a lithograph, by Mr. H.H. Dhruva in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 19 f. This plate contained only the concluding portion of the grant, including the benedictive and imprecatory verses, the name of the writer and the date. The other plate, which was recently found in the possession of Patel Mathurabhai of Māṅkaṇī, a village in the Saṅkhēḍā Tālukā has been edited with a facsimile by Mr. A. S. Gadre in the Important Inscriptions from the Baroda State, Vol. I, pp. 4 f. This plate contains the earlier portion of the grant, viz., the genealogy of the donor, the name of the donee and the object granted. The text of the latter plate ends exactly where that of the former begins.<sup>1</sup> Their characters also completely agree. There is, therefore, no doubt that the two plates make one complete grant. The plate edited by Mr. Dhruva, the exact provenance of which has not been recorded, may therefore have come from Māṅkaṇī itself. That this grant is probably spurious was shown by me in an article published in the Journal of the Ganganath Jha Research Institute, Vol. II, pp. 389 f. I edit the record here from excellent ink impressions of both the plates, which I owe to the kindness of Mr. A.S. Gadre.

The plates measure 8" in breadth and 3.4" in height. The first weighs 17½ and the second 16¼ tolas. The writing on both is in a state of good preservation. The plates contain two holes, .2" in diameter, at the top, for the rings which must have originally held them together, but no ring or seal has been discovered. The record consists of twenty lines, of which ten are inscribed on the inner side of each plate. The average size of the letters is .15".

The characters belong to the western variety of the southern alphabets, and resemble those of the grants of the Gurjaras and Early Kalachuris. The only peculiarities worth noticing here are that the initial i consists of two curves, one below the other, in iv=ōddhūta-1.3, while it has its usual form in iva, 1.7; the length of medial i is indicated by a dot in a circle or by a double curve, see vīchī-, 1.3; the curve of the subscript t is added to the right of its vertical in bhuktā, 1.15; the subscript form of th shows a notch in -sthiti-, 1.11; v is almost rectangular in -vaiśvadēva-, 1.10 and the subscript m is cursive in nirmālya, ll. 18-19. Punctuation is marked by a short horizontal stroke in 1.20 and by double vertical strokes in ll. 15-20.

The language is Sanskrit, and except for four benedictive and imprecatory verses, the record is in prose throughout. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities of the doubling of a consonant after r as in -kīrttiḥ, 1.4, the substitution of the guttural nasal for anusvāra in -vaṅśair-, 1.13 and -chatvāriṅś-ōttarakē, 1.20, and the use of ri for ṛi in krishataḥ, 1.12.

The plates purport to record the grant, by Taralavāmin of the Kaṭachchuri (Early Kalachuri) family, of a rice-field situated on the northern boundary of the village Mañkaṇikā. Taralavāmin is described as the son of Mahārāja Naṇṇa and Dadā and the sister's husband of the illustrious Sūrya. The grant was made for the maintenance of the five great sacrifices. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Jyēshthasēna, who belonged to the Jātūkarṇa gōtra<sup>1</sup> and the Vājasaneyā sūkhā. The record was written by the Sāndhivigrahika Āditya who was a Bhōgika. It is dated in the year 346, expressed both in words and in decimal figures. This is supposed to be the earliest epigraphic instance of the use of the decimal notation.<sup>2</sup>

The palaeography of the grant makes it probable that it belongs to about the seventh century A.C. Its date has been referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 248-49 A.C., it would correspond to 594-95 A.C. if the year 346 was current, and to 595-96 A.C. if it was expired. As no further details are given, the date does not admit of calculation.

Taralavāmin, who made the present grant, bears no royal title, though his father Naṇṇa is called Mahārāja. He may have owed allegiance to the Kalachuri king Saṅkaragaṇa whose Ābhōṇa plates were issued just a year after the date of the present grant.<sup>3</sup> That Gujarat was included in the dominion of Saṅkaragaṇa is clear from the Saṅkhēḍā plate of Sāntilla, which mentions him as the reigning king.<sup>4</sup> Like Sāntilla, Taralavāmin also seems to have been holding a subordinate position; for like the former, he addresses his order to a king's officers (rāja-pādīyas) as well as to his own. This king may have been Saṅkaragaṇa.

There are certain indications, however, which raise suspicion about the genuineness of this grant. Neither Taralavāmin nor his father Naṇṇa is known from any records of the Early Kalachuris. Even supposing that they were collaterals and need not, therefore, have been mentioned in those records, it looks strange that unlike Sāntilla, Taralavāmin does not name his suzerain who, as we have seen, was Saṅkaragaṇa. He and his father Naṇṇa are praised in extravagant terms which would have been more appropriate in the case of an independent king like Saṅkaragaṇa. Besides, we find that in this period Sāntilla also was holding this very part of Gujarat; for the village Taṇḍulapadraka granted by him is identified with Tāndaljā, about 16 miles from Saṅkhēḍā. It is, of course, possible to reconcile the two grants by supposing that Taralavāmin either preceded or followed Sāntilla in the governorship of Gujarat, but in any case Taralavāmin's silence about his suzerain remains inexplicable.

The decimal notation also, used in recording the date, causes suspicion about the genuineness of the grant; for not only in the period to which the record refers itself, viz., the end of the sixth century A.C., but for more than 150 years afterwards the prevailing custom in Gujarat as in other parts of India was to record dates in numerical symbols. The inscriptions of the Early Kalachuris, Gurjaras, Sēndrakas and Chālukyas,<sup>5</sup> who held Gujarat from the sixth to the eighth century A.C., are invariably dated in this manner. Even

<sup>3</sup> They are dated in K. 347.

the Hānsōṭ plates<sup>1</sup> of Bhartṛivaḍḍha which were issued as late as V. 813 (756 A. C.) have their date expressed in numerical symbols. These plates were issued from Bharukachchha. Similarly the Āntrōli-Chhārōli plates<sup>2</sup> of the Rāshṭrakūṭa Karka, who succeeded the Chālukyas in Southern Gujarat, use similar symbols to express their date Ś. 679 (757 A.C.). Except for the doubtful case of the present grant, the earliest record from North India which contains a date in decimal figures is the Shērgaḍh Buddhist inscription<sup>3</sup> of the Sāmanta Dēvadatta, dated V. 847 or 791-92 A.C. It would seem, therefore, that the decimal notation began to supersede the numerical symbols in North India about the last quarter of the eighth century A. C.<sup>4</sup> The present grant which purports to have been made as early as 595 A.C. and still has its date expressed in decimal figures, appears to be suspicious<sup>5</sup>.

There is another circumstance which strengthens the suspicion. The drafter of the present grant seems to have borrowed certain expressions from earlier Sēndraka grants. Compare, for instance, the expression avanata-sāmanta-āmala-mukuta-maṇi-nighṛishṭa-charaṇa-yugal-āravindaḥ in l. 1 of the present grant with *pranata-āsēsha-sāmanta-sirō-muku[ta*]-nighṛishṭa-pada-paṇikajab* in ll. 45 of the Bagumrā plates of Allaśakti. Similarly, Kalpatarur-iv-ōpabhujja(jya)mān-ākshīṇa-vibhavaḥ in ll. 5-6 of this grant bears unmistakable resemblance to Kalpaumam-(druma)-iv-ābhivānichhit-āsēsha-jan-ōpabhujyama(mā)na-vibhavō in lines 7-8 of the Sēndraka grant.<sup>6</sup> As these expressions occur in more than one genuine Sēndraka record, we cannot doubt that they originally belonged to them. The Sēndrakas were ruling in Gujarat in the second quarter of the seventh century. The present grant, which seems to have borrowed these expressions from Sēndraka records, could not therefore have been made in 595 A.C.

The evidence detailed above seems to point to the conclusion that the present plates were forged some time in the second half of the eighth century A.C. when the decimal notation came into vogue. The palæography of the grant as well as the shape of the numerical figures do not militate against this conclusion. These characters were probably current in Gujarat till the close of the eighth century A.C. The aforementioned Hānsōṭ plates of Bhartṛivaḍḍha dated V. 813 (756 A.C.) and the Āntrōli-Chhārōli plates of Karka, dated Ś. 679 (757-58 A.C.) are incised in similar characters. As for numerical figures, there are only three used in the present grant, viz., 3, 4 and 6. Of these, the symbol for 3 occurs in this very form in the Gōṇḍal plates (Set A),

<sup>3</sup> See the plate of the date in the Ind. Ant., Vol. XIV, p. 351. The dates of some earlier inscriptions recorded in the Gupta era are supposed to be in decimal figures. (See, e.g., G. 347 of Bhandarkar's I. N. I. No. 1357, G. 365 of No. 1361 and G. 387 of 1368). But they cannot be verified for want of facsimiles. Besides, later dates from the same locality such as G. 386 of No. 1367, G. 403 of No. 1370, etc., are known to be in numerical symbols, which raises a strong presumption that the earlier dates also were in similar letter-numerals.

<sup>4</sup> Dr. G. S. Gai has recently drawn attention to two earlier northern records, the dates of which are given in decimal figures, viz., the Sakrai stone inscription (V. 699) and the Dhiniki grant of Jāikadēva (V. 794), Journal of the Ganganath Jha Institute, Vol. VI, pp. 306 f. The evidence of both these records is, however, doubtful. The date of the former has also been read as V. 879 and V. 749 (I. N. I., No. 23 and An. Rep. Rajputana Museum for 1933-34, p. 2), while the latter is regarded as a forged document, see Ind. Ant., Vol. XVI, p. 198 and Vol. XIX, pp. 370-71.

<sup>5</sup> Kaye also says that 'the ninth century A. C. is about the time when these symbols ceased to be fashionable for Indian inscriptions', Ind. Ant., Vol. XL, pp. 44-45.

<sup>6</sup> Some other ideas such as fame being white like the moon and crossing the ocean are also common, but they are quite conventional and therefore afford no conclusive evidence of borrowing.

dated G. 405 (724-25 A.C.), while that for 4 occurs in a similar shape in the Kāsārē plates of Allāsakti (653 A.C.) and in a somewhat modified form in still later records such as the aforementioned Gōṇḍal plates. The symbol for 6 has a peculiar form rarely noticed elsewhere in early records as remarked by Mr. Kaye,<sup>1</sup> but a somewhat similar form of the numeral is seen in the Shērgadh inscription of Dēvadatta, dated V. 847 (790-91 A.C.) and the Ghumli plates of Jāika II, dated G. 596 (915 A.C.)<sup>2</sup>. It seems therefore, that the Mānkaṇī plates of Taralāsvāmin was forged some time in the second half of the eighth century A.C.<sup>3</sup> It affords no sure proof that the decimal notation was in vogue for Indian inscriptions as early as the sixth century A.C.

There is only one place-name mentioned in the present plates, vir., Mañkaṇikā<sup>4</sup> which Mr. Gadre has already shown to be identical with Mānkaṇī, where one of the plates was found.

SPURIOUS KAIRA PLATES OF VIJAYARAJA : (KALACHURI?) YEAR 394

THESE copper-plates were found together with three other sets<sup>1</sup> of plates about 1827 in the town Kairā, the headquarters of the Kairā District in Northern Gujarat, Bombay State. They were published, with lithographs and a translation, by Prof. J. Dowson in the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society (New Series), Vol. I (1865), pp. 247 ff. They were subsequently edited with fresh lithographs and a translation by Dr. Fleet in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. VII, pp. 241 ff. The plates are now deposited in the Library of the Royal Asiatic Society, London. They are edited here from excellent photographs kindly supplied by the authorities of the Society.

Dr. Fleet has thus described the copper-plates:—“The plates are two in number, about 13½” long by 8¾” broad. Their edges are slightly raised, so as to form a rim to protect the writing. They are pierced with holes for two rings; but the rings are not now forthcoming, and I cannot trace any mention of them, or of the seal that must have been on one of them.” The plates are in a state of good preservation. The record consists of thirty-four lines, of which twenty-one are inscribed on the first plate and the remaining thirteen on the second. The average size of the letters is .15”.

The characters belong to what Dr. Bühler has called the archaic variety of the southern alphabet<sup>2</sup>, which is found used in the charters of the Early Chālukyas of Bādāmi.

As regards individual letters, we may notice that the initial n which occurs in uktam, l. 28, is closely similar to t as in Vindhyātavī-, l. 29; the loop of the initial ē is closed on the left, see ēsha, l. 10; the length of medial ī is denoted either by a curve curling to the left as in -pīḍita-, l. 7, or by a double circle as in Hārīti-, ll. 2-3; the curve of the medial ṛi is turned in some cases to the left, see, e.g., -pīṛi-, l. 8, -vṛiddhayē, l. 11, -sadṛiṣ-, ll. 26-27, and in others to the right, see -kṛiṣaṇa-, l. 8, -paṭal-āvṛita-, l. 27; the stroke for the medial ē encircles the letter on the left, see -anvayē, l. 3; similarly the left-hand mātrās for the medial ō and the lower of the two mātrās representing medial ai also encircle their respective letters, see -dāyō-, l. 27 and Vaiśākha-, l. 11; in narēndraiḥ, l. 32, on the other hand, the two left-hand strokes of the medial ai are placed one beyond the other; the medial ō is, in some places, shown with a loop, see sva-bāhu-balō-, l. 6, and consequently medial au is bipartite; kh appears without a loop except in the last two lines of the record; t has a flat horizontal stroke at the top; neither t nor n is looped, except in their subscript forms, see, e.g., -prasanna-, l. 1, -āgni-, l. 24, -sanyukta, l. 28 and haranti, l. 30; the subscript th is roundish in sthity-, l. 2 and curled in -ndayasthō, l. 4; the subscript v is distinguished from y only by its right arm not being raised to the top-line. In some cases m appears similar to sh, which has misled the engraver into incising -nimēvi for -nishēvi in l. 7. The final form of n occurs in l. 26, and that of t in ll. 28 and 29. The sign of the upadhmaniya is seen in l. 32 and the numerical symbols for 300, 90, 10, 5 and 4 in l. 34.

The language is Sanskrit. As Dr. Kielhorn has already pointed out,<sup>1</sup> the description of the donor's family in the first two lines of the present inscription is identical with that occurring in the beginning of the grants of the Early Kaṭachchuris.<sup>2</sup> Again, the description of Vijayarāja in ll. 5-8 almost literally agrees with that of Śaṅkaragaṇa in the Kaṭachchuri grants.<sup>3</sup> In copying the latter, the draftsman of the present inscription seems to have inadvertently omitted the expression bhūri-draviṇa-viśrāṇan-āvāpta-dharma-kriyaḥ after samyak-prajā-pālan-ādhiḡgata in l. 7. In its absence the latter expression cannot be satisfactorily interpreted. In the next two expressions din-āndha-kṛi-ṣaṇa-bhē(śa)raṇ-āgata-vatsalaḥ and yath-ābhilashita-phala-pradō he has, to some extent, altered the original adjectives. Besides, in the formal part of the grant he has drawn upon some inscription, like the Bagumrā plates, of the Sēndrakas, for the expressions in ll. 25-27 of the present record agree almost literally with those in ll. 27-29 of the Bagumrā plates.<sup>4</sup> That the writer had a very imperfect knowledge of the Sanskrit language is shown by the expression -kvalaya-tara-yasasaḥ, in which, while comparing Jayasimha's fame with a blue lotus (l), he adds the comparative affix tara to a noun and uses the wrong grammatical form -yasasaḥ for -yasāḥ. As regards orthography, we find the consonant following r doubled in some cases, and ri used for the vowel ṛi in prithivyām, l. 5.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Vijayarāja, the son of Buddhavarman, who was himself the son of Jayasimha of the Chalukya dynasty. The plates purport to have been issued from the king's victorious camp at Vijayapura and to register the grant of the village Pariyaya which was situated to the east of Sandhiyara in the vishaya of Kāśākula. The land, or rather the revenue of the village, was divided into 55½ pattikās<sup>5</sup> (shares) which were distributed among 63 Brāhmaṇas, each getting from one-half

to three pattikās. The donees were all residents of Jambūsara and students of the Kāṇva śākhā of the Vājasaneyā or White Yajurveda. The purpose of the grant was to provide for the maintenance of bali, charu, vaiśvadēva, agnihōtra and other rites. The grant was made on the full-moon day of Vaiśākha in the year 394 of an unspecified era. Both the tithi and the year are expressed in words as well as numerical symbols. The Dātaka was the Vāsāpaka Nanna. The charter was written by the Mahāsandhivigrahādhiḥkṛita Khuddasvāmin and incised by the Kshatriya Mātṛisimha.

Most of the places mentioned in the present grant were identified by Dr. Bühler.<sup>1</sup> Pariyaya, the granted village, is the modern Pariyā, seven miles east of Olpād, the headquarters of the Olpād tālukā of the Surat District. Sandhiyara, which lay to its west, is identical with Sandhiyar, two miles to the west of Pariyā. The vishaya of Kāśākula, in which these places were situated, must have comprised the country on the northern bank of the Tāpti. The same vishaya is mentioned in the Antrōli-Chhārōli plates, dated Saka 679, of the Gujarat Rāshtrakūta prince Karkarāja.<sup>2</sup> I identify Kāśākula with the modern Kachchōl, 4 miles to the south-west of Olpād. All these places are situated to the south of the Kīm which formed the northern boundary of the Chālukyan dominion in South Gujarat. Jambūsara still retains its ancient name unchanged, and lies about 30 m. to the north of Broach. Vijayapura, from which the plates purport to have been issued cannot be definitely identified. It may be either Vijāpur of the Panch Mahals, or the headquarters of the Vijāpur sub-division in the Baroda District.<sup>3</sup> In either case it lies to the north of the Kīm and, therefore, outside the Chālukyan territory. We shall, therefore, have to suppose that Vijayarāja made the present grant in the course of a military campaign in the Gurjara kingdom.

The date of the present inscription does not admit of verification in the absence of the necessary details. The era to which it appertains has long been a matter of controversy. Fleet at first referred the date to the Saka era and took it as equivalent to 472-3 A. C.<sup>4</sup> He was inclined to identify Jayasimha who heads the genealogical list in the present grant with Jayasimha I of the Early Chālukya Dynasty, and as the Chālukyas in some of their later records represent themselves as having originally come from the north, he came to the conclusion that Vijayarāja and his ancestors were ruling in Gujarat until their power was subverted and their family expelled by the Gurjara kings or by the kings of Valabhī. Later on, Fleet abandoned this theory and proposed to identify<sup>5</sup> the grandfather of Vijayarāja with Dharāśraya-Jayasimhavarman, who is represented in the Nirpan plates<sup>6</sup> as a younger brother of Pulakeśin II, or with Dharāśraya-Jayasimhavarman who appears in the Navsārī<sup>7</sup> and Balsār<sup>8</sup> plates as a younger brother of Vikramāditya I. Consequently, he referred the date of the present grant to the Chēdi era and took it to correspond to 643 A. C. These identifications also are not free from difficulties. For, as regards the first, Fleet himself has doubted the genuineness of the Nirpan plates,<sup>9</sup> from which alone we know of a brother of Pulakeśin II, named Dharāśraya-Jayasimha. As regards the second, Pandit Bhagvanlal pointed out<sup>1</sup> that if the date is taken to correspond to 642-3 A. C., Vijayarāja would be ruling about twenty-five years before his grand-uncle, Vikramāditya I, who flourished between 670 and 680 A. C.<sup>2</sup> The Pandit, therefore, proposed to refer the date to the Gupta era and take it as equivalent to 713 A. C. This presents no chronological difficulties. For, Dharāśraya-Jayasīmha, a younger brother of Vikramāditya I, was ruling at Navsāri in Southern Gujarat from 671 A. C. to 693 A. C.<sup>3</sup> If Vijayarāja was his grand-son, it is not improbable that he should be ruling twenty-one years after Jayasīmha's latest known date.

But the grant is probably spurious. As pointed out by Dr. R.G. Bhandarkar,<sup>4</sup> it is not in the regular Chālukyan style. There is no invocation of the boar-incarnation in the beginning, and none of the princes mentioned in it receive any titles and virudas as in other genuine Chālukyan grants. In no other record of the Early Chālukyas, again, do we find such a wholesale borrowing from Kaṭachchuri grants. This cannot be attributed to the Gujarat draftsman's ignorance of the forms of Chālukyan records; for the earlier grants of Sryāśraya-Silāditya, which were drafted in Gujarat, are in the approved Chālukyan style. Pandit Bhagvanlal supposed<sup>5</sup> that Jayasīmha might have conquered part of North Gujarat and sent his son Buddhavarman to rule over it; but, as shown above, the donated village was situated in the Surat District in South Gujarat. We have, therefore, to suppose that Vijayarāja was ruling over South Gujarat for some time between 693 A. C., the last known date of Sryāśraya-Silāditya, and 731 A. C., the date of his brother Maṅgalarasarāja. In that case this would be the only instance of the use of the Gupta era in South Gujarat; for, so far as our knowledge goes, the Kalachuri era was exclusively used in Gujarat down to the middle of the eight century A. C. It is again noteworthy that the present grant was found with two others of Dadda II at Kairā and that many of the donees mentioned in it figure also in the latter grants.<sup>6</sup> It is therefore, not unlikely that it was forged in favour of the descendants of those Brāhmanas by someone who was ignorant of the form of Chālukyan records.<sup>7</sup> Its date 394 was intended to refer to the same era as the genuine Gurjara grants of K. 380 and K. 385, and thus to correspond to 693 or 694 A. C., when the <sup>6</sup> As many as twelve names are common to the three grants, viz., Ādityaravi, Indrasūra and Išvara of the Bharadvāja gōtra, Āvuka of the Dhūmrāyana gōtra, Bhaṭṭi and Drōṇa of the Dauṇḍakīya gōtra, Viśākha, Dhara and Nandin of the Māṭhara gōtra, Dharmadhara of the Hārīta gōtra and Gōpāditya and Viśākha of the Vatsa gōtra. Again, the following persons mentioned in the Chālukya and Gurjara grants respectively are probably identical: Tāpīsūra and Tāviśūra of the Bharadvāja gōtra, Dāma and Dāmadhara of the Bharadvāja gōtra, Tāviśarman and Tāpīśarman of the Dauṇḍakīya gōtra, Sēla and Śāila of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra, Vatraśarman and Vātaśarman of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra, Rāma and Rāmīla of the Māṭhara gōtra.

<sup>7</sup> On the back of the plates there is a cancelled inscription, for which, see Dr. Fleet's account in Ind. Ant., Vol. VII, pp. 251 ff. It contains the names of many donees figuring in the present record and has the same date as the latter, but its opening words indicate that it purported to be granted like the spurious plates of Dadda II from the Vijaya-vikshēpa (victorious capital?) Nāndipurī. It may have been realized after it was incised that the Chālukyas could not have ruled from Nāndipurī in K. 394 as the Gurjaras were in continuous occupation of the surrounding territory from at least K. 380 to K. 486. So the inscription was cancelled and another written on the back of the plates. The writers of the two inscriptions were different persons, for the characters in which they are incised differ in certain respects as shown by Dr. Fleet (ibid., p. 251). For another reason conjectured by Dr. Fleet, see loc. cit., p. 253.

Brāhmaṇa donees common to the three grants may have been living. That this date is impossible has been shown above. The borrowing of some expressions from the formal part of Sēndraka grants indicates that the present record must have been forged some time after the middle of the seventh century A. C.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>1</sup> For another similar spurious grant purporting to have been made by the Chalukya prince Buddhavarasa, the younger brother of Vikramāditya I, see Ep. Ind., Vol. XIV, pp. 144 ff. Like the present grant, it has borrowed some expressions from the earlier Bagumrā plates of the Sēndraka Allaśakti, in ll. 10-11, and seems to have been forged in the second half of the seventh century A. C., as shown by Sten Konow, Ep. Ind., Vol. XIV, p. 146.

Success! Hail! From the victorious camp fixed at Vijayapura—

In the family of the Chalukyas, the sons (i.e., descendants) of Hārīti, who are of the Mānavya gōtra and meditate on the feet of Svāmi Mahāsēna,—which (family),<sup>6</sup> like the great ocean, is stainless and extensive like the firmament clear on the advent of autumn; which is made resplendent by the multitude of manifold excellences of the men (born in it), as the ocean is by the multitude of the rays of its gems; which is difficult to overcome, being the resort of men of great courage, as the ocean is difficult to cross, being the asylum of large animals; which is endowed with serenity and is intent on observing the rules of moral conduct, as the ocean is deep and is determined to remain within its bounds,—(there was) the illustrious Jayasimharāja whose fame was more (splendid) than a blue lotus<sup>7</sup> under the rays of the moon in the expanse of the sky from which multitudes of water-laden clouds have disappeared.

(Line 4) His son (was) the Vallabha, Raṇavikrānta, the illustrious Buddhavarmarāja, who, like the sun, was ever-rising, had his brilliance undiminished both by night and by day, and destroyed his powerful foes, even as the sun dispels a mass of darkness.

(L. 5) His son, the illustrious Vijayarāja,—who has on the earth no adversary (worthy of him);<sup>8</sup> whose fame has tasted the water of the four oceans; whose prowess equals

INSCRIPTIONS OF THE KALACHURIS OF TRIPURI

NO. 35; PLATE XXIX A

SAUGOR STONE INSCRIPTION OF SANKARAGANA I

THIS inscription, though listed in the first edition of R.B. Hiralal's Inscriptions in C.P. and Berar, published in 1916, was very briefly noticed only in the second edition of that work, published in 1931. It is edited here for the first time from the original stone which I examined in situ and from inked estampages kindly supplied by the Superintendent, Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.<sup>1</sup>

At Saugor, the chief town of the Saugor District in the State of Madhya Pradesh, a number of sculptures were collected from the neighbouring places many years ago<sup>2</sup> and built up into small imitation kiosks in the four corners of the garden of a military mess-house. The inscription is incised on a slab of red sand-stone fixed on the top of a panel of the same kind of stone which is built into one of those kiosks. In the panel below, the principal figures are those of a man who has folded his hands in salutation and a woman, probably his wife, who has placed her right hand on the head of a small female figure, evidently their daughter, who also stands with folded hands. Behind the male figure appears a horse and behind the latter, another male figure, apparently a groom, holding the reins of the horse.<sup>3</sup>

The record has been very much worn away by exposure to weather. It consists of five lines, of which the last one commences in the centre. Several aksharas in the last three lines have become more or less indistinct. The average size of letters is 1". The characters are of the proto-Nāgarī alphabet resembling those of the stone inscription at Chhōṭī Deori.<sup>4</sup> The form of the initial i is, however, different, since the curve below the two dots is here open at the top; f has not yet developed a vertical at the top; in its subscript form, the letter is laid on its side, see -bhaṭṭāraka- in l. 2; j still retains its three horizontal bars, see -Mahārājādhirāja, l. 1; p is open at the top while v, which resembles its upper portion, is closed, see -pravarddhamāna-, l. 2; the lower end of the wedge of r is in some cases very much elongated, see -Paramēśvara-, l. 3. These palaeographic peculiarities indicate that the record probably belongs to the middle of the eighth century A.C.<sup>5</sup> The language is Sanskrit and the record is in prose throughout. The orthography does not call for any special notice.

The inscription opens with an obeisance to Siva. It refers itself to the reign of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara the illustrious Śaṅkaragaṇadēva, who meditated on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmarājadēva.<sup>6</sup> This is the oldest record in which the name of Vāmarājadēva is mentioned

<sup>5</sup> Hiralal also called this inscription the oldest Kalachuri record (in Madhya Pradesh), but he referred it to the fourth quarter of the ninth century A.C., as he thought that the king Śaṅkaragaṇa mentioned in it was identical with the homonymous prince who was the son of Kōkalladēva [1]. See his Inscriptions in C. P. and Berar (second ed.), p. 49.

<sup>6</sup> Hiralal doubtfully read this name as Vāgharājadēva, ibid., p. 49. My personal examination of the record in situ has convinced me that the name is undoubtedly Vāmarājadēva.

with full Imperial titles.<sup>1</sup> The object of the inscription is to record some religious work done by a lady named Kṛishṇādēvī for the religious merit of her mother and father. This appears to have been a temple which, as the opening words show, was probably dedicated to Śiva. If this conjecture is correct, the panel with the present inscription at the top may have been originally put up at it. The male and female figures in the panel are evidently intended to represent the father and the mother of the donor who is herself represented by a small female figure between them. She calls herself the wife of the illustrious Dēuka who was the son of a king, whose name I have doubtfully read as Rāvārya. He was born in the family of Kalāirēya and was the Paramēśvara (Emperor) of Kaśapura.<sup>2</sup>

The inscription is not dated, but as shown above, it may be assigned on paleographic grounds to the middle of the eighth century A.C.

CHHOTI DEORI STONE INSCRIPTION OF SANKARAGANA I

THIS inscription was first brought to notice by General Sir Alexander Cunningham in his Archaeological Survey of India Report for 1883-1884. He again referred to it in the next year's report and published a lithograph of it.<sup>2</sup> The inscription was subsequently noticed by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar in Cousens' Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey of Western India for 1903-4, p. 54 and by Rai Bahadur Hiralal in his Inscriptions in the Central Provinces and Berar.<sup>3</sup> Though noticed several times, the inscription has defied all attempts at interpretation; for, Cunningham was told that the language of the inscription was not Sanskrit. Dr. Bhandarkar also has remarked 'what the language of the inscription is cannot be made out.' The inscription is edited here from ink impressions supplied by the Director General of Archaeology.<sup>4</sup>

Chhōṭi Deori (Small Deori) is situated on the left bank of the Ken, about 16 miles to the west of Jōkāhi, in the Murwārā tohsil of the Jabalpur District in the State of Madhya Pradesh. The village is so-called probably to distinguish it from the larger village named Deori which lies about five miles to the west. It is also called Maḍhā Deori on account of a number of small temples (maḍhis) from thirty to forty in number, which lie buried in dense jungle. According to Cunningham, all these were most probably Śaiva shrines. The pillar on which the present inscription is incised must have also belonged to a Śaiva temple as is indicated by its contents. 'The pillar is 7 feet 2 inches high and 1 foot square. The inscription of 11 lines is near the top; in the middle there are two seated figures, male and female;<sup>5</sup> and below, there is a standing male figure'<sup>6</sup>.

As stated above, the inscription consists of eleven lines. It covers a space 1'  $\frac{1}{2}$ " broad by 1' 2" high. It is in a state of fair preservation. The characters belong to the proto-Nāgarī alphabet resembling those of the Saugor stone inscription.<sup>7</sup> They are very carelessly written. Several groups of aksharas are unnecessarily repeated in ll. 4 and 5 as well as in ll. 10 and 11. The marks for medial vowels and visarga are omitted in many cases. The form of kh in khaṇḍa-, l. 1, likhatam, l. 9 and likhitam, l. 10, is peculiar. It resembles somewhat the conjunct ksha, with this difference that the lower curve is turned to the left instead of to the right. The form of p in kapāli-, l. 2 and puna, l. 9, which closely resembles that of d is also noteworthy. L has three different shapes in lighatam, l. 8, likhatam, l. 9 and likhitam, l. 10. The form of ś, the left limb of which has developed a curve and that of k which has a triangle on the left show that the inscription is not earlier than the seventh century A.C. On the other hand j, though slanting, has not yet turned its middle horizontal bar into a vertical; t has not developed a vertical at the top; d and r show no tail, and the upper part of p is not closed. In these respects the characters of the present inscription show a much earlier stage than those of the Kāritalāi stone inscription<sup>1</sup> of Lakshmaṇarāja I, dated K. 593 (841-2 A.C.). It does not, therefore, appear to be later than the middle of the eighth century A.C.<sup>2</sup>

The language is very incorrect Sanskrit, being probably influenced by the local dialect. Vishayē, for instance, is written as vuśē, l. 6, and haikē used in the sense of iha. Except for a verse in praise of Siva, the whole record is in prose. The orthography does not call for any special notice.

After the opening siddhiḥ namaḥ, the inscription has a verse in praise of Siva, which indicates that the temple, to which the inscribed pillar belonged, must have been dedicated to the worship of Siva. We are next told that during the reign of the illustrious Śaṅkaragana there was the illustrious Chuṭu Nāgaka in (charge of) the vishaya of Kakandakuṭu. The next two lines are somewhat obscure, but they seem to record his donation of a granary (kadaru, Sanskrit krīdara) in Karikatin and Asēkatin which appear to be the names of two villages in the neighbourhood.

There are three place-names mentioned in the present inscription, but none of them can be satisfactorily identified. Kakandakuṭu may be identical with Khuṇḍā about 6 miles to the east of Deori, if we suppose that the original name has lost its initial part. Karikatin, which in its initial portion resembles Kāritalāi (situated about 30 miles to the east), is perhaps represented by Khurai, 4 miles to the south of Deori Maḍhā. Asēkatin cannot be identified.

KARITALAI STONE INSCRIPTION OF LAKSHMANARAJA I: (KALACHURI) YEAR 593

THIS inscription was discovered by R.B. Hiralal in 1928. A short notice of it appeared in the second edition of his Inscriptions in the Central Provinces and Berar, published in 1931. The record was, for the first time, edited, with a lithograph, by me in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXIII, pp. 255 f. It is edited here from excellent estampages kindly supplied by the Superintendent, Archaeological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

Kāritālāi is now a small village, twenty-nine miles north by east from Murwārā, the headquarters of a tahsil of the same name in the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. The place seems to be of great antiquity, for, an inscription in shell characters<sup>9</sup> and another of the Gupta period<sup>10</sup> have been discovered there. There are several old temples at Kāritālāi, from one of which, probably dedicated to the boar incarnation of Viṣṇu, another inscription<sup>11</sup> of the time of Lakshmanarāja II, was brought over to Nagpur and is at present deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur.

The present inscription is affixed to the temple of Dēvī Maḍhiā at Kāritālāi. It is fragmentary. Its preserved portion measures 10½" broad and 1' 10½" high. Originally there were fourteen lines only, of which thirteen were inscribed breadthwise. Each of these now contains on an average fourteen aksharas. The fourteenth line runs horizontal stroke at the top and has not a perfectly round back. Nor is it exactly like d, see durān-manu—, l. 3.

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet. They have been deeply and beautifully cut. The strokes of the medial vowels have, here and there, been ornamentally treated. As regards individual letters, attention may be drawn to the two forms of n, one in -Lakshmaṇarāja-, l. 14 and the other in Druhiṇaḥ, l. 2 etc. and to those of gh in -Amōghavarsha-, l. 12 and Ghaṭ-āwaya-, l. 14. The form of g is in many places closely similar to that of rā, compare g in jagat and drāg=ēva both in l. 2, Nāgabhaṭē in l. 9 etc., with rā in yair=āsantati in l. 6; ṭh has not yet developed a vertical stroke at the top, see parilūṭhantī, l. 4. Similarly th is still circular and not flattened on the right side, see, prithuni-, l. 4. The medial u has been generally denoted by a serif, (see pāyāsura-, l. 3; nag-ānukāri l. 13 etc.), but in some cases, by a curve turned to the left as in kshīṇōtu, l. 2. The mātrās for medial diphthongs generally appear above the line (see namō- and -ōpēndra- l. 1), but in two cases, viṣ-, in -Rudrēbhyaḥ, l. 1 and śrī-Lakshmaṇa-rājadēvē, l. 14, the medial ē is obtained by continuing the top stroke of the consonant to the left to end in a small curve; while in two others we see fully developed prishṭha-mātrās also, (see -vēdhō-, l. 3 and pādan l. 12). The characters thus show a transitional stage of the Nāgarī alphabet and may be referred to the ninth century A.C.<sup>1</sup>

The language is Sanskrit. Except for the introductory obeisance and the marginal line recording the date etc., the record is metrically composed throughout. It seems to have originally consisted of thirteen verses. As regards orthography, we may note that the consonant preceding and following r has in certain cases been doubled as in chāturvarṇyam, l. 1, and -mātram, l. 2; v has been used for b in vala-, l. 7 and the guttural nasal for anusvāra in kshīṇ-ānhasō, l. 6.

Owing to the unfortunate loss of a major portion of the record, it is not possible to give a complete description of its contents. After the introductory obeisance to Druhiṇa (Brahmā), Upēndra (Viṣṇu) and Rudra (Śiva) come three verses, invoking the blessings of the three deities. Lines 6 and 7 seem to eulogize some persons possessed of strength, wealth, gaiety, liberality and courtesy. The next line refers to some personage, who was to great kings what the fall of a thunderbolt is to high mountains. The ninth line mentions the rout of Nāgabhaṭa, while the eleventh refers to some saintly person whose mind was devoted to the observance of the rules of conduct laid down in the Sruti and the Smṛiti. From the twelfth line we learn that the illustrious king Amōghavarsha bowed to the feet of someone who was probably identical with the saintly person mentioned above. Finally, the marginal line states that the record was composed by Prasannāditya of the Ghaṭa family in the year 593 (expressed in numerical figures only) during the reign of the king, the illustrious Lakshmaṇarājadēva.

The late Rai Bahadur Hiralal, who first noticed the inscription, read the date as 693<sup>2</sup> and as it evidently refers to the Kalachuri era, which was current at least from the ninth to the twelfth century A.C. in Baghelkhand, he took it as equivalent to 941 A. C.,

obviously identifying the Lakshmaṇarāja mentioned in it with the homonymous king who was the son of Yuvarājadēva I alias Kēyūrarvarsha. The mention of Amōghavarsha in l. 12 seems to have corroborated this view; because a king of that name, viz., Baddigā-Amōghavarsha III, the son-in-law of Yuvarājadēva-Kēyūrarvarsha, flourished in that period.<sup>1</sup> But R.B. Hiralal's reading of the date is probably incorrect. The first figure closely resembles that of the tithi in the Chandrēhē inscription of Prabōdhaśiva<sup>2</sup> and the latter was read as five by Dr. Kielhorn. Other instances in which the figure stands for five can also be cited.<sup>3</sup> So the date of the present inscription is 593 and this, being referred to the Kalachuri era, corresponds to 841-2 A.C. The mention of Amōghavarsha in this record does not also preclude this reading; for this Amōghavarsha would be the first Rāshtrakūṭa king of that name who ruled from circa 814 to 880 A.C. We know that the royal families of the Rāshtrakūṭas and the Kalachuris were matrimonially connected in the ninth century also; for Amōghavarsha I's son Kṛishṇa II was married to Kōkalla I's daughter,<sup>4</sup> though this marriage may not have taken place before 842 A.C.<sup>5</sup> Besides, Amōghavarsha I was of a spiritual temperament. He was a fervent devotee, at least in the early part of his life, of Hindu deities. The Sanjān plates tell us that he had cut off a finger of his left hand and offered it to Mahālakshmi to ward off a public calamity.<sup>6</sup> It is not, therefore, unlikely that Amōghavarsha had gone to the Chēdī country to pay his respects to the holy person who put up the present inscription. The mention of Nāgabhaṭa's defeat in l. 9 may also be adduced in support of the above-mentioned date. This Nāgabhaṭa is evidently Nāgabhaṭa II of the Gurjara-Pratihāra dynasty who was completely routed by Amōghavarsha's father Gōvinda III.<sup>7</sup> Nāgabhaṭa was not living in 841-2 A.C., the date of the present inscription; for, according to the Jain work Prabhāvaka-charita,<sup>8</sup> he died in V. 890 (833-4 A.C.); nor is Amōghavarsha known to have raided North India like his father and grand-father. The defeat of Nāgabhaṭa II mentioned in this inscription must be that inflicted on him by Gōvinda III before 800 A.C. The personage, who in the preceding line is described as the destroyer of great kings as a thunder-bolt is of high mountains, is probably Gōvinda III. The name of the king whom he destroyed (sanjāhrē) is lost at the end of the line. It is not known in what connection the defeat of Nāgabhaṭa is mentioned in l. 9; but as the name of Amōghavarsha occurs only after two lines, it is clear that the event must have happened not long before the reign of Amōghavarsha. The latter must consequently be the first king of that name; for, otherwise, there would be a long gap of more than one hundred and thirty years between the two events, if the king is identified with Baddigā-Amōghavarsha III. Lakshmaṇarāja, during whose reign the present inscription was put up, was, therefore, the predecessor and probably the father of Kōkalla I, who heads the genealogical lists in the Bilhāri stone inscription<sup>1</sup> and the Banaras plates of Karṇa.<sup>2</sup> He may be called Lakshmaṇarāja I of the main Kalachuri dynasty of Tripurī.

<sup>1</sup> For Amōghavarsha III we have the dates 937 and 939 A.C. (See E. C., Vol. XI, pp. 29 and 30).

The date of the inscription is thus the year 593 of the Kalachuri era. It would correspond to 840-1 A.C. if the year was current, and to 841-2 A.C. if it was expired.<sup>3</sup> It does not admit of verification.

BANDHOGARH ROCK INSCRIPTION (No. I) OF YUVARAJADEVA I

THIS inscription was discovered in 1938 by Dr. N.P. Chakravarti, Government Epigraphist for India. It is still unpublished. It is edited here from an excellent estampage kindly supplied by him.

The inscription is incised on the inside of the western wall of the Fish temple in the fort of Bāndhōgarh which lies about 65 miles south by west of Rewa, the chief town of Vindhya Pradesh. The record is in a state of good preservation. It consists of only two lines of bold and deeply incised letters. The first line is 4' 5" and the second 4' 9" long. The average size of the letters is 4.5".

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet of about the tenth century A.C. As regards individual letters we may note that the lingual ḍ is round-backed in Gand-, 1.2; the right-hand up-stroke of the subscript y is not brought down, see -āmātyasya, 1.1 and the left limb of the palatal ś is not separated from the right-hand vertical, see śrī-, in. 1.1. The language is Sanskrit and the record is entirely in prose. It consists of only a single sentence. The orthography does not call for any remark except that the conjunct tya has been written as chchhya in machchhya-, 1.2.

The object of the inscription is to record that (the figures of) the fish, the tortoise, the boar and others were of (i.e., were caused to be carved by) the illustrious Gōllāka, also known as Gauḍa, the son of the illustrious Bhānu, who was a minister (amātya) of the illustrious Yuvarājadēva. The palaeography of the record indicates that this Yuvarājadēva is the first king of that name who flourished in the first half of the tenth century A.C. The figures referred to are evidently the rock-cut images of the fish, tortoise, boar and other incarnations of Vishṇu, which Gōllāka had caused to be carved. Some of them can still be seen near the present inscription.

BANDHOGARH ROCK INSCRIPTION (No. II) OF YUVARAJADEVA I

THIS inscription, like the preceding one, was discovered in 1938 by Dr. N. P. Chakravarti, then Government Epigraphist for India. It is still unpublished. It is edited here from an excellent estampage which I owe to the kindness of the Government Epigraphist.

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet of about the 10th century A. C. They closely resemble those of the preceding inscription. The language is Sanskrit and the record is wholly in prose. The orthography does not call for any remark.

The object of the inscription is to record that (the figures of) the Fish, the Tortoise, the Ādivarāha and Paraśurāma (?) were of (i.e., were caused to be carved by) the illustrious Gōllāka, the son of the illustrious Bhānu, who was a minister (amātya) of the illustrious Yuvarājadēva. This Yuvarājadēva was evidently Yuvarājadēva I-Kēyūraravsha. The figure of Ādivarāha referred to here is plainly the colossal rock-cut image of the boar incarnation of Vishṇu, near which the inscription is incised. Some of the other figures also can still be seen carved out of rocks in the same place.

BANDHOGARH ROCK INSCRIPTION (No. III) OF YUVARAJADĒVA I

This inscription, like the preceding two records, was discovered in 1938 by Dr. N. P. Chakravarti, then Government Epigraphist for India. It is still unpublished. It is edited here from a good estampage kindly sent by him.

The inscription is incised on a rock facing south-west near the rock-cut image of a Tortoise at Bāndhōgarh in the State of Vindhya Pradesh. The record consists of eight lines, of which the first seven were probably 2' 11" long while the last one measures only 9½". The epigraph has suffered very much by the peeling off of the surface of the rock. Nearly half the portion on the right-hand side of lines 3-7 has been completely lost. Besides, several aksharas here and there have become illegible. The average size of the letters is 2.3".

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet of about the 10th century A. C. The language is Sanskrit. The record is partly in verse and partly in prose. Attention may be drawn to the expression sāhitya-vidyā-lala[nā-bhujaṅga] which is adopted in some later records<sup>4</sup> for the description of Yuvarājadēva II. In the last line utkīritam has been wrongly used for utkīṛṇam. The orthography does not call for any remark.

The inscription is one of the illustrious Gōllāka, the son of Bhānu, who is known from other records to have been a minister of Yuvarājadēva I. The object of it was evidently to dedicate<sup>5</sup> the image of the Tortoise near which it is incised, but the portion of the record where this was stated has now become illegible. In lines 4-6 the inscription seems to have contained the description of a battle, for the extant words in line 5 speak of a great river of which the waves were enemies.

The record was written by Guṇanivāsa, and incised by Bhāka.

GOPALPUR ROCK INSCRIPTION OF YUVARAJADEVA I

THIS inscription was, like the preceding three records, discovered in 1938 by Dr. N.P. Chakravarti, then Government Epigraphist for India. It is still unpublished. It is edited here from an estampage kindly supplied by him.

The inscription is incised on a rock at the back of the Śēshaśāyī image to the south-west of Gopālpur, a village, one mile to the north of Bāndhōgarh in the State of Vindhya Pradesh. It consists of three lines of bold and deeply incised letters, but owing to the constant trickling down of water on them, many aksharas especially in lines 2 and 3 have now become illegible. The lines are 4' 8" long. The average size of the letters is 6".

The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet closely, resembling those of the three preceding epigraphs. The language is Sanskrit and the record is entirely in prose. The orthography does not call for any remark.

The object of the inscription was apparently similar to that of the last three epigraphs, viz., to record that an image (of Haladhara?) was caused to be carved by the illustrious Gōllāka, the son of the illustrious Bhānu, who was a minister of the illustrious Yuvarājadēva (I).

KARITALAI STONE INSCRIPTION OF LAKSHMANARAJA II

THIS inscription is engraved on a rectangular sunken panel surrounded by a plain border of a large slab of sand-stone. It was discovered at Kāritalāi (lat. 24° 3' North, long. 80° 46' East), a village in the Murwārā tahsil of the Jabalpur District in Madhya Pradesh. The stone, which was first removed to the Jabalpur Museum, is now deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur. General Cunningham first published a short account<sup>6</sup> of the contents of the inscription in his Archaeological Survey of India Reports, Vol. IX, p. 81. The record was subsequently edited, without any lithograph or translation, by Prof. Kielhorn in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 174 ff. It is edited here from the original stone and ink impressions taken under my supervision.

The inscription is much mutilated. It has lost a considerable portion at the top. Again, a large piece, measuring 1' broad by 1' 8" high, has been broken off at the lower proper right corner, and a small one, 5" broad by 3" high, has been lost at the upper proper left corner. Besides, some letters have been lost in two cracks, of which the longer one cuts the inscription transversely. The cracks seem to have widened in the process of removing the heavy stone from Jabalpur to Nagpur and some letters, which were clear in the rubbing supplied to Dr. Kielhorn, have since disappeared.<sup>7</sup> The preserved portion of the inscription covers a space 3' 8" broad by 4' 3½" high, and consists of thirty-four lines, of which the first thirty-one are inscribed on the sunken panel of the slab, and the last three on the stone border below. The average size of the letters is 1", except in l. 32, which is engraved on the inside edge of the border, and in which the letters are smaller, being only .6" in height.

The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet of about the 10th century A.C. They are well-formed and deeply engraved. In some cases the aksharas which were inadvertently omitted at first, were incised subsequently below the line, see ya of yad-antahpurē, l. 14 and ka of -kalaśa-, l. 20; while in others the wrong aksharas and strokes have been

cancelled, either by incising a vertical stroke at the top or by chiselling off the wrong portion; see achikarat=and avivyadhat=, both in l. 5, =adhakṛit-ānya- in l. 18 etc. As regards individual letters, attention may be drawn to the somewhat rare initial ri in rijur-, l. 18 and to dh, the upper part of the left limb of which, for the first time in the records edited here, appears well-developed, though it is not yet joined to the right-hand vertical see dhurmma, l. 3. The letter ś appears in two slightly different forms, see, for instance, kuśalō and hasty-asva-, both in l. 8; so also ṇ in =guṇ-ānatō and =praṇamyaḥ, both in l. 3; r, as the first member of a conjunct, generally appears as a rēpha above the line, but in =chārur= yad= l. 11, it is horizontal in form and prefixed to ya on the left below the line. The prishṭha-mātrās are fully developed, but in some cases, as for instance in =mahā-pātrāya, l. 2, =jātavēdas-, l. 4, =ēkā, l. 8, the vertical stroke on the right, representing medial ā, is only half drawn. In a few cases, both the strokes of the medial ō appear horn-shaped above the line, see prāp-ōmatini, l. 6 and yad-yōshitāni, ll. 11-12. A final consonant is indicated by its short form as well as by the addition of a small curve below it, see, e.g., kathamchit, l. 5. The form of th, which has a slightly developed vertical stroke on the right, shows that the present inscription is later than inscription No. 37, which comes from Kāritalāi itself.

The language is Sanskrit. The inscription is written in the later kāvya style, abounding in figures and hyperbolic descriptions. Except for the words yaś=cha in l. 5 and kiṃ vahunā in l. 26, the record is in verse throughout. As regards orthography, we may note that the consonant following r is doubled rightly in =anabhyartthitō, l. 2 etc., but wrongly<sup>1</sup> in sudarśśanaḥ, l. 21, and the sign for v is used to denote b throughout, see vahutarāni-, l. 2, vōddhā, l. 7 and so forth. The sign of the jihvāmūliya occurs in l. 9 and that of the upadhmāniya in l. 30.

The inscription mentions three Kalachuri princes, Yuvarājadēva, Lakshmaṇarāja and Śaṅka[raṅga]. Their names occur only incidentally in the extant portion. The earlier portion which probably contained a glorification of the first two, has been lost. Of the forty-two verses which have either wholly or partially been preserved, the first describes the great liberality of some person whose name is lost, but who was probably Lakshmaṇarāja. The next five verses eulogize Bhākamiśra, the minister of Yuvarājadēva, who is evidently the first prince of that name in the dynasty of the Kalachuris of Tripuri. Bhākamiśra was born in the family (gōtra) of the sage Bharadvāja, performed many sacrifices, erected temples and dug wells in numerous places. His son Somēśvara is eulogized in the next twelve verses. He was proficient in various arts, sciences and systems of philosophy and performed many sacrifices. Even the king Lakshmaṇarāja is said to have once shouldered his palanquin to prevent it from falling down. Then comes, in eleven verses, the description of a very high temple of Viṣṇu, erected by Sōmēśvara at Kāritalāi. The image installed therein was probably of the boar incarnation, which is referred to in vv. 27 and 35, and was called Sōmasvāmin after the founder of the temple. The next thirteen verses enumerate the various donations made to the deity. In the town (pura) near the temple, eight Brāhmaṇas were caused to settle. To them the king, evidently Lakshmaṇarāja (II), donated the village Dīrghaśākhika (v. 30). He also gave another village, the name of which is lost, to the god on the occasion of a solar eclipse. His queen Rāhaḍā gave, with his consent, the village Chakrahradī and the illustrious Śaṅka[raṅga] who is probably identical with Lakshmaṇarāja's son and successor and who was then the crown-prince, gave the god another village on the occasion of a lunar eclipse (v. 33).

He is called parama-vaishnava, a devoted worshipper of Vishṇu. Two other villages, Chhallipāṭaka in the āhāra of Dhavala and Antarapāṭa, were donated to the god at a solar eclipse ( v. 34). The next verse mentions donations of a small field and another yielding twelve khaṇḍīs (of corn) to the Boar. A potentate who was named Vallē[śvara] gave the village Vaṭagartikā in the Mālā group of twelve in his own territory, while another, who had come to the place, donated a field requiring a khārī of seed-corn.<sup>1</sup> Besides these, several taxes and tolls are mentioned in the last five verses, the income from which was assigned to the deity.

The inscription is not dated, but it was probably put up towards the end of Lakshmaṇarāja's reign (circa 940-965 A.C.).

As for the geographical names mentioned in the present inscription, Dr. Kielhorn suggested the identification of Dirghaśākhika with Dighī, about six miles south-east of Kāritalāi, and Rai Bahadur Hiralal that of Chakrahradī with Chakadahī, seven miles south of Kāritalāi. I could not, however, trace the latter village either in the list of villages in the Murwārā tahsil or on the Degree Map. I identify Dhavala, the headquarters of an āhāra, with Dhawaia, 4 miles south of Dighī. The pura, where eight Brāhmaṇas were made to settle, is still known by the name Bamhōri (Brāhmaṇapuri) and lies about two miles east of Kāritalāi. Chhallipāṭaka is probably Chilhāri, about 11 miles east of Dhavala, in the adjoining territory of Vindhya Pradesh. Vaṭagartikā may be identical with the modern Barhaṭi, 10 m. west by south of Kāritalāi, and Antarapāṭa with Amaturrā, 7 miles east of Kāritalāi. The Mālā group of twelve cannot be located.

<sup>1</sup> Kielhorn remarked:—"The mutilated state of verse 37 makes it impossible to say whether the word khārīvāpa, which occurs in it, should be explained to mean a field sown with a khārī of corn, or taken as a proper name. If it were a proper name, we should probably have here the older name of Kāritalāi". The latter supposition is unlikely; for the verse clearly means that some person, whose name is lost, donated to the god a field in his own territory when he came here (iba), i. e., to Kāritalāi. Khārīvāpa, therefore, cannot be identical with Kāritalāi.

And he—

(V. 5) Where did he not cause temples to be constructed, tanks to be excavated, wells with steps and those without them to be dug, and gardens of mango trees to be planted?

(V. 6) Having obtained him, eminent by noble descent,<sup>1</sup> as his Prime Minister, the illustrious Yuvarājadēva (I) attained prosperity free from all deficiency, just as the sun being united with the eastern mountain—which, being a principal mountain, appears beautiful,—attains high altitude, completely dispelling the night.

(V. 7) His son was that Sōmēśvara, well-known here, who felt no doubt in (interpreting) the Vēdas; who was a complete master of grammar; who was (an) inconceivable (adept) even in logic; who had a superior intellect in the interpretation of Tantra (works); who was the foremost in Vēdānta, (and) clever in remembering poetic compositions.

(V. 8) His intellect did not discard painting;<sup>2</sup> he was incomparable in conduct and quite skilful in triple symphony; he was matchless in the sciences of the care and examination of elephants and horses and in (the testing of) the three (kinds) of jewels (and) was at the head of the intelligent.

(V. 9) There is only one kalā (i.e., digit of the moon) on the head of Śiva; the kalās of the moon are well-known to be fifteen (in number); (but) who is able to enumerate the pleasing kalās (arts) of the illustrious Bhaṭṭa, the Dikshita Sōmēśvara?

(V. 10) (The mountain) Mēru is one mass of hoarded gold; the Himālaya has become extremely frigid by its increasing heaps of snow; the mountain of crystal (i.e., Kailāsa) appears dreadful.<sup>3</sup> How can he (i.e., Sōmēśvara) who has bestowed on supplicants his entire store of gold, who has reached the limit of highest knowledge (and) who is gentle (by nature), be compared to this triad of mountains?

(V. 11) In the sacrifice, he smeared his body with butter, discarding saffron;<sup>4</sup> for, what is difficult to be accomplished by the self-controlled?

(V. 12) Of his wives this was the dress on (the days of) Parvan, specially charming, being uncommon,—in which the girdle was set aside (and) a rope of muñja<sup>5</sup> was worn (instead), the silken garment dropped down (from their bodies), (and) the linen cloth was chosen (in its place)<sup>6</sup>.

(V. 13) The multitudes of the house-parrots of him, the sacrificer, said thus at (each) twilight:—‘O Agnidh<sup>7</sup>! kindle the fires according to prescribed rules. O Adhvaryu!

<sup>1</sup> There is a play on the words unnati, dūsha (or dūshā) and kula-gōtra, in consequence of which the expressions in which they occur can be understood in connection with both Yuvarājadēva I and the sun.

<sup>2</sup> Monier-Williams in his Sanskrit Dictionary gives pusta in the sense of painting. It can also be taken in the sense of a book or a record. Compare pustapāla which occurs in several Gupta records in the sense of a record-keeper, see, e.g., Ep. Ind., Vol. XXI, p. 81.

milk the cow (which is) useful for the sacrifice, and wash quickly the sruch together with the srwa.<sup>1</sup> Let the wife (of the sacrificer) attend the Gārhapatya fire with hot water.

(V. 14) In his harem, this was said by the sārikā (every) evening:—‘O Superintendent of the harem! let the floor of the residential mansion be washed with scented water. Courtezans! give (me) numerous jewelled lights with bright flames. O maid-servant! keep ready all (the) scents. O Queen! You also mind (your) dress!’

(V. 15) All the sacrifices of the illustrious minister of the lord of Chēdi, who gave away (in charity) all his wealth, reached the standard of the Viśvajit sacrifice.<sup>2</sup>

(V. 16) How insignificant are we of worthless speech in enumerating the merits of that illustrious Bhaṭṭa Sōmēśvara,—at the place of whose sacrifices and in the fore-front of whose battles, hymns and eulogies are recited by the Hōṭri priests and bards (respectively); (sāmans and panegyrics) are sung in shadja and other notes and in an extremely sweet voice by the Udgāṭi priests<sup>3</sup> and musicians (respectively); (and) there moves about (respectively) the Adhvaryu priest, foremost in sacrificial work, whose hand is wet with (the water poured in making) gifts, and the elephant whose trunk is wet with rutting juice!

(V. 17) To his palanquin the illustrious Lakshmaṇarāja (II) put his shoulder, when the bearer of it ascending to an airy place<sup>4</sup> was stumbling a little on account of the fatigue of carrying it.

(V. 18) This temple of the god (Vishṇu) the enemy of demons, which has covered the faces of (all) quarters, has been constructed by that virtuous and foremost minister of the illustrious lord of Chēdi,—(the temple) whose banner-cloth, which is incessantly fluttering, being struck by wind, is most assuredly making a sign to such as go through the sky to turn back (from the temple) which has blocked their path.

(V. 19) This high temple which appears very straight outside, but is very curved inside, which has surpassed (in height) the temples of others, (and) which has manifestly risen above the whole world, appears like an insolent calumniator who shows himself very straight-forward outwardly, (but) is crooked at heart, who has disparaged others’ fame, and openly insulted all people.<sup>5</sup>

(V. 20) This temple also, which, though possessing splendour, confers liberation, showing all forms (by its sculptures) in front would have borne resemblance to (Vishṇu) the enemy of gods (who, though he deprived Bali of his fortune, conferred liberation, showing him his all-embracing form), if (only, like the latter), it had been small (in size)<sup>6</sup>.

(V. 21) On account of the upraised flag (of this temple) made of a white (piece of) cloth attached to the (upper) end of an extremely high staff, the heavenly river, with its stream flowing along the staff which looks splendid with the golden jar (on the spire of the temple), appears always to assume the very form of a banner.

(V. 22) Association with the exalted leads to great excellence; for even the dazzling sun can be easily looked at from here.<sup>7</sup>

(V. 23) On the top of this temple which can be reached (by the sun) after a pair of watches (i.e., six hours), where there is a (cool) breeze produced by the flapping of the large hem of the banner-cloth (and) where the heavenly river meets, the sun invariably gives a currying to his horses (such as they had) not enjoyed before (at that time of the day).

<sup>4</sup> Vātaṇḍama, an airy place, is mentioned in the Kāśikā on Pāṇini, III, 2, 30.

<sup>5</sup> There are puns on several words here, on account of which they can be construed with the temple and the calumniator.

(V. 24) Morning after morning the sun, the wheels of whose (chariot) break down, colliding against the high spire of this temple during his incessant roaming (through the sky), repairs both of them innumerable times. I fancy that every evening the banner-staff (of this temple) completely counts to the people all the axles<sup>1</sup> (that had broken) owing to (the sun's chariot) jolting in the cavity of the sky (caused) by the peak (of this temple).

(V. 25) If he (i.e., the sun's charioteer) were to take the chariot by the south or the north of this (temple), there would be the (untimely) shortening and lengthening of the days;<sup>2</sup> . . . . . (So) expert as he is in crossing even the Mēru mountain, he is not a little confounded when he reaches this (temple) which is firm (and) impossible to be crossed.

(V. 26) The son of the sun (i.e., Saturn) suffered (here) the pain caused by the injury to his legs<sup>3</sup> as if because of his inordinate fondness for crossing the impassable row of the spires (of this temple).

(V. 27) 'My<sup>4</sup> back is becoming scarred, being trampled under the feet of the Boar! Let not the row of your hoods, which is (soft) almost like lotus-stalks just drawn (out of water), break (under my weight)! Turn aside. Let me place this (my body) on (the back of) the Tortoise! . . . . .'

What is the use of saying more?

(V. 28) This certainly appears to us to be the best of all temples, since the moon (when) joined to the top of its flag staff, appears like an umbrella.

(V. 29) May this . . . . . of this (temple), the top of which supports the egg of Brahman, and which is the peg that renders the earth immovable, last as long as the world! (And) may the world endure as long as this temple of (Vishṇu), the enemy of Mura, will shine . . . . . Such is (our) wish!

(V. 30) The king made eight Brāhmaṇas, resembling (as many) Vasus, settle in this city (and) gave them a village named Dirghaśākhika.

(V. 31) The illustrious Lakshmaṇarāja (II) gave the village . . . . . to this god on (the occasion of) an eclipse of the sun.

(V. 32) His great Queen Rāhaḍā, with her devotion and the king's consent, gave this (god) the village Chakrahraḍī.

(V. 33) The illustrious Śaṅka[raḡaṇa] (III) the devout worshipper of Vishṇu, skilled in charity, gave . . . . . on (the occasion of) an eclipse of the moon.

(V. 34) (He) gave the village Chhallipāṭaka, which is situated in the āhāra<sup>5</sup> of Dhavala and Antarapāṭa on (the occasion of) an eclipse of the sun.

(V. 35) (He) gave the (divine) Boar the field . . . . . and also another yielding (a crop of) twelve khaṇḍis.

(V. 36) The illustrious Vallē[śvara] gave as a grant,<sup>6</sup> the village Vaṭagartikā (situated) in the Mālā (group) of twelve (villages) in his own territory.

<sup>1</sup> The stars are probably intended to be referred to as 'axles'. The staff as it points to different stars during the night is said to count them to the people.

<sup>2</sup> For these are caused by the dakṣiṇāyana and the uttarāyana of the sun.

<sup>4</sup> This is evidently said by the Earth to the serpent Śeṣha. The temple was dedicated to the Boar-incarnation of Vishṇu. Hence the Earth says that her back bears the scars of the wounds caused by His hoofs.

(V. 37) (He) . . . . who had come here, gave a field, sown with a khāri<sup>1</sup> of grain, in his own territory, to the god, the holy Sōmasvāmin.

(V. 38) The Superintendent<sup>2</sup> of the city and the town gave (to the god) (the income?) on the eleventh day of the bright fortnight and also on the twelfth day during the fair (of the god) . . . . .

(V. 39) (He) . . . . always gave a jar (of corn<sup>3</sup>) for every gōṇī,<sup>4</sup> and also a couple of shōḍaśīs<sup>5</sup> (i.e., karsha).

(V. 40) The Dēśī<sup>6</sup> offered one and a half times the one-twentysecond portion of the five spirituous liquors and a quarter of the goods carried (into the town?) among (these) donations.

(V. 41) . . . . . And the Chief of the Vāgūlikas<sup>7</sup> gave (a bundle of) fifty leaves.<sup>8</sup>

(V. 42) The Pāyaṭis gave another (bundle of) fifty leaves. And the whole Maṇḍala gave the alms at four threshing floors.<sup>9</sup>

BARGAON STONE INSCRIPTION OF ŚABARA

THIS inscription is incised on a broken stone slab which is still lying amidst the ruins of a temple to the north of Bargaon, a village situated at a distance of twenty-seven miles north by west of Murwārā, the chief town of the Murwārā tahsil of the Jabalpur District, in Madhya Pradesh. The inscription does not seem to have been noticed by General Cunningham who visited Bargaon twice, during 1883-84 and 1884-85, and has given a fairly detailed description of the temples and mentioned three other records found there in his Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. XXI, Part I, p. 101 and Part II, pp. 163-64. The present inscription was briefly noticed for the first time by Rai Bahadur Hiralal in his Inscriptions in the Central Provinces and Berar<sup>10</sup> and was edited by me in the Ep. Ind., Vol. XXV, pp. 278 ff. It is edited here from good estampages supplied by the Superintendent of the Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

The inscription is fragmentary. Nothing has of course been lost at the top, the bottom and the proper right side. But an indefinite number of letters has disappeared on the left side owing to the breaking away of the stone. The extant portion of the record is in a state of good preservation. It consists of five lines, of which the last, which begins at a distance of 2' from the proper right end, contains only three aksharas. The average

<sup>3</sup> Ghaṭī as a measure is mentioned in the vārttika on Pāṇini, III. 2.30. If it is the same as kumbha, it would be equal to twenty drōṇas.

<sup>5</sup> Monier-Williams in his Sanskrit Dictionary gives shōḍaśikā, meaning 'sixteen māsas', that is, equal to one karsha. Or, on the analogy of vimśōpaka it may have been so called, because it was equivalent to one sixteenth of a dramma.

<sup>6</sup> Dēśī, which occurs as Dēśī in the Pehevā inscription (Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 187), means probably the foreman of a guild, or the guild itself. See the Harsha stone inscription (ibid., Vol. II, p. 124) and the Nāḍlai stone inscription, (ibid., Vol. XI, p. 43).

size of the letters is 1.5." The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet. As regards individual letters, we may note that kh consists of two triangles joined by a horizontal line at the top; th shows a vertical stroke on the right; r exhibits two forms,—one with a loop as in krīdarani, l. 3 and the other without it in -Savara-, l. 1. Rai Bahadur Hiralal conjecturally referred the characters of this inscription to the 8th or 9th century A.C., but they appear to be somewhat later and may be of the 10th century A.C.

The language is Sanskrit. The record is written in prose throughout. It is written incorrectly and contains some mistakes of sandhi (as in atō arthē for atō-rthē in l. 4) and of gender (as in śapath-ēdam for śapathō-yam in the same line.) The only orthographical peculiarity that calls for notice is that b is throughout denoted by the sign for v, see -Savara- and -Valādhikṛita, both in l. 1, and -vrahma-stamba- in l. 2.

The record opens with ōm namaḥ and refers to a Commander of the army (Balādhikṛita) of Śabara. His name, which is partly mutilated, appears to be Śiva. The object of the inscription seems to be to record the gift of a cess on the threshing floor together with a granary to some ascetic residing at the temple in the settlement of Brāhmaṇas for the benefit of (the god) Śaṅkaranārāyaṇa, to whose temple the inscribed stone was apparently affixed. The record ends with the imprecation that whoever would offend against it would incur the sin of the slaughter of a Brāhmaṇa.

The preserved portion of the inscription contains no date, but as stated above, it can, on palaeographic evidence, be referred to the 10th century A.C. The illustrious Śabara mentioned here is perhaps identical with the Śabara, named Śimha, mentioned in the fragmentary stone inscription found at Bhilsā, to which Dr. F.E. Hall has called attention in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. XXXI, p. 111, n. 2. The latter inscription states that Vāchaspati of the Kauṇḍinya gōtra, who was a minister of the king Kṛishṇa, after defeating the lord of Chēdi and slaying a Śabara named Śimha, placed the king of the Rālā maṇḍala and Rōdapādi on the throne and repaired to the temple of Bhāillasvāmin at Vidiśā near Bhilsā, where he composed a stōtra in praise of the god.<sup>1</sup> From the mention of the lord of Chēdi and the Śabara chief Śimha together in the same line, Dr. Hall conjectured that the latter was the Chēdian generalissimo. The Śabara of the present inscription too was no doubt subject to the contemporary Chēdi or Kalachuri king; for a much defaced inscription at Bargaon, to which General Cunningham<sup>2</sup> has drawn attention, refers to a Kalachuri king or kings. But as the present inscription mentions a commander of the forces of this Śabara himself, it seems that he was a feudatory chief and not a mere generalissimo of the Chēdi king. This fragmentary inscription at Bhilsā is also undated, but the date of the king Kṛishṇa, whose minister was Vāchaspati, can be approximately fixed on other evidence. At Maser, a village about twenty-five miles north of Bhilsā, Mr. M. B. Garde, Director of Archæology, Gwalior State, discovered in 1930 a fragmentary inscription in two pieces. It mentions one Narasiṃha of the Sulki (or Chālukya) family, who at the command of Kṛishṇarāja initiated the wives of Kalachuri kings into widowhood.<sup>3</sup> As Kēsari, the son of Narasiṃha was, according to the inscription, appointed Tantrādhipa (Minister of Home Affairs) by Vākpati-Muñja (circa 972-995 A.C.), Kṛishṇarāja can be placed about 950 A.C. This conclusion is corroborated by the date V. 1039 (982 A.C.) of a pilgrim record which Mr. Garde discovered on a pillar of a dilapidated medieval temple at Gyāraspur.<sup>1</sup> This record states the name of the god installed in the temple as Kṛishṇēśvara. The god was evidently so named after a king named Kṛishṇa who consequently must have flourished before 982 A. C. There is another piece of evidence which corroborates the aforementioned date for Kṛishṇa. This Kṛishṇa is probably identical with Kṛishṇapa of the Chandēlla family, a son of Yaśōvarman, mentioned in four out of six stone inscriptions<sup>2</sup> at Dudahi, in the Lalitpur District, about 75 miles north by east of Bhilsā. According to both General Cunningham and Dr. Kielhorn this Yaśōvarman is the well-known Chandēlla king of that name, the father of Dhaṅga, for whom we have dates ranging from 954 A.C. to 1002 A.C. Kṛishṇapa may, therefore, be referred to the period 960-85 A.C. From the Khajurāho inscription of Dhaṅga dated V. 1011 we learn that the Chandēlla kingdom in the beginning of his reign extended to Bhāsvat or Bhilsā in the south.<sup>3</sup> It seems, therefore, that Dhaṅga placed his brother Kṛishṇapa in charge of the south-western portion of the Chandēlla kingdom extending at least from Dudahi in the north to Bhilsā in the south.

If the identification of the illustrious Sabara of the present inscription with the Sabara chief slain by Kṛishṇarāja's minister is accepted, the Sabara chief can be referred to the third quarter of the 10th century A.C. The Kalachuri suzerain, to whom he owed allegiance, was probably Śaṅkaragaṇa. The name of the god Śaṅkaranārāyaṇa appears somewhat curious. It seems to suggest that the temple was dedicated to Nārāyaṇa installed by Śaṅkara,<sup>4</sup> who is probably identical with the Kalachuri prince of that name mentioned in the Kāritalāi stone inscription<sup>5</sup> of Lakshmaṇarāja II. It is noteworthy in this connection that he is called parama-vaishṇava or a devout worshipper of Vishṇu in that record.

CHANDREHE STONE INSCRIPTION OF PRABODHASIVA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 724

THIS inscription was discovered by Mr. Beglar<sup>3</sup>, one of the Assistants of Sir A. Cunningham at Chandrēhi or Chandrēhē<sup>4</sup> (long. 81° 32' E. and lat. 24° 18' N.), a small village about a mile from the right bank of the Sōṇa close to its confluence with the Banās, in the District of Rewa, in Vindhya Pradesh. The record was first noticed by Dr. Kielhorn in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XX, p. 85, and again in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. I, p. 354, n. 1. A transcript of its text, together with a translation, was given by Mr. R. D. Banerji in his Haihayas of Tripurī and their Monuments (Memoirs of the Archæological Survey of India, No. 23), pp. 110 ff. The same scholar subsequently edited it, with a lithograph and a translation, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXI, pp. 148 ff. It is edited here from excellent estampages kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India.

The record is incised on two slabs of stone 'which are let into the back-wall of the front verandah of the monastery, one on each side of the main door . . . . The inscribed surface is a sunken panel with a plain border, which is, on the whole, in a very good state of preservation.'<sup>5</sup> The record consists of twenty-seven lines, of which fourteen are inscribed on the first stone (marked A, below) and thirteen on the second (marked B). The average size of the letters is 1". The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet and show some development over those of the Kāṛitalāi inscription of Lakshmaṇarāja II.<sup>6</sup> Kh and g, for instance, show an acute-angled triangle in their left limb; dh, on the other hand, shows no development in its left limb, but closely resembles v, except that it has no line at the top; two forms of k are used, one generally in ligatures, see -kvaṇaḍ-, l. 5, kshaṇam, l. 13, and the other elsewhere; th has a vertical on the right; ph exhibits two forms; for the first, which is developed from the old type, see phaṇi-, l. 1, -phaṇ-īśvara-, l. 4 and -dvirēpha-, l. 20, and for the second, which survives in the later Nāgarī, see sphāri-, <sup>1</sup> Khala-bhikṣā, lit. 'alms at a threshing floor', was probably a tax in kind which was paid to the state when the corn was threshed. The right to receive the contribution seems to have been transferred to the donee. Whether the cess at one or all the threshing floors in the particular locality was conferred on the donee, the record does not make clear. The Kāṛitalāi stone inscription (above, No. 42) refers in line 34 to the donation of four khala-bhikṣās.

The language is Sanskrit. With the exception of the customary obeisance to Siva in the beginning and certain names and the date at the end, the whole record is metrically composed. There are twenty verses in all. The record is, on the whole, carefully composed and incised, such mistakes as dadān- for dadad-, 1.13 and charamñ-jagati in 1.16 being rare. As regards orthography, we note that the sign for v is used to denote b throughout, see, e.g., -vrahmāṇḍa-, 1.4; n is used for anuvāsa in hansa-, 1.2, and -dhvansa-, 1.18, and the dental ś for the palatal ś in sasvad-, 1.12.

After the introductory ōṁ namaḥ Sivāya, the record has three verses which describe Siva and his tāṇḍava dance and invoke his blessings. Then comes the spiritual genealogy of the Saiva ascetic Prabōdhasiva who put up the record. In the spiritual succession of the Mattamayūra (clan) there was Purandara, the preceptor of kings. His disciple was Śikhāśiva, who is later on referred to as the lord of Madhumatī. His disciple was Prabhāvasiva, who was invited to accept some land by Yuvarājadēva. He was followed by Praśāntasiva, who built a hermitage at the foot of the Bhramara hill at the confluence of the Śōṇa. His disciple was Prabōdhasiva who is said to have practised penance even in his boyhood and constructed roads through mountains and across rivers and streams. He constructed the monastery, where the inscription was put up, close by the temple erected by his preceptor Praśāntasiva, excavated a tank by the side of the hill and dug a well near the monastery. He also repaired and further excavated the well, dug by his preceptor, which had become dilapidated and full of wood in course of time. The prasasti was composed by the poet Dhāmsaṭa, the son of Jēika and Amarikā and grandson of the Dikshita Mēhuka. It was written by Dāmōdara, the son of Lakshmīdhara and younger brother of Vāsudēva, and incised by Nīlakaṇṭha by the command of the Sūtradhāra Sūrāka.

The date of the inscription<sup>1</sup> is given in the last line as Samvat 724, Phālguna śudī 5. Both the year and the tithi are expressed in numerical figures only. The palaeography of the inscription clearly indicates that the date must be referred to the Kalachuri era. It corresponds, for the expired Kalachuri year 724, to Monday, the 10th February, 973 A.C. It does not admit of verification.

The present inscription refers to a temple built by Praśāntasiva which was close to the monastery erected by Prabōdhasiva. The former is, therefore, as Mr. R.D. Banerji has shown,<sup>2</sup> the temple of Siva, which is still standing within a few yards of the entrance to the monastery at Chandrēhē. The āśrama at the foot of the Bhramara hill, which is now in ruins is still called Bhramarsēn.

<sup>1</sup> The date was first read by Beglar as Samvat 324, Phālguna-śudī 6. He, however, changed the year to Samvat 1324, see C. A. S. I. R., Vol. XIII, p. 8. Kielhorn gave the correct reading of the date for the first time and referred it to the Kalachuri era in the Ind. Ant., Vol. XX, p. 85 and Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 354. Banerji, however, gave the tithi as 6 in his transcript of the text published in the Flaibayas of Tripuri etc., Appendix C, p. 119, but it appears as 5 in his article on the inscription published posthumously in the Ep. Ind., Vol. XXI, p. 149. For a similar figure denoting 5, see above, p. 181.

TRANSLATION

Om! Adoration to Siva!

(Verse 1) Glorious is that Sarva (Siva), —in whose coiled matted hair, which is like a cloud, being dark with the hissing of serpents (on his body), and which resounds with the water of the heavenly river (Gaṅgā) (as a cloud resounds with thunder), there flashes the fire of (his third) eye like lightning (flashing in a cloud); and whose wreath of human skulls resembles a garland of champakā flowers,<sup>12</sup> even as the shower of the accumulated lustre of the moon on his head!

<sup>12</sup> Banerji first translated kakubham tulayati by 'brightens the different quarters' and afterwards

(V. 2) May the mass of lustre of the laugh of Śaṅkara clad in an elephant-skin,—which, white like the goose, is spread round his face and which, being slightly darkened by the effulgence of his (blue) neck, at once assumes the clear splendour of the moon emerging from a cloud,—grant you prosperity!

(V. 3) May the Tāṇḍava dance of (Śiva), the husband of Chāṇḍī, give you delight! (the dance) which makes the hoods of the lord of serpents bend under (the weight of) the bowl-like earth which revolves on account of the movements of his feet, skilled in the chārī step; which puts to flight the elephants of the quarters; which causes a sudden movement of a part of the universe by the revolutions of his staff-like arms<sup>1</sup> and which is accompanied by the deep sound of the ḍamaru!

(V. 4) May this continuous succession of (the Śaiva ascetics of) the Mattamayūra (clan) purify the three worlds, like the Gaṅgā!—in which was born Purandara, who performed austerities, and who was the spiritual preceptor of kings. His disciple (was) Śikhāśiva, (who was) like fire and who, (refulgent) with the lustre of his austerities, stood like a lamp on the path of final beatitude, having dispelled the pitchy darkness (of ignorance).

(V. 5) From him (i.e., Śikhāśiva), who was the lord of Madhumatī, was (spiritually) descended Prabhāvaśiva, who accumulated great austerities, was the crest-jewel of all Śaivas, and was revered by many kings. He, who was the foremost among ascetics, was made by Yuvarājadēva (I) to sanctify, by his feet, the wanton woman that was the earth.<sup>2</sup>

(V. 6) After him there was his disciple, the moon-like Praśāntaśiva, who was pure<sup>3</sup> (even as the moon is bright); whose real nature was manifested in his attempt to destroy ignorance (as the moon's form is seen dispelling darkness); who brightened the faces of all quarters by his bright fame (as the moon does with her lustre) and who bestowed prosperity on the meritorious Śaivas (as the moon bestows splendour on the fibrous night-lotuses).

(V. 7) He, the virtuous one, the companion of sages, who lived on fruits, lotus-stalks and roots, (and) who sanctified the surface of the earth by the rows of his foot-prints, built an incomparable and quiet hermitage, well-known to the people, at the foot of the Bhramara hill covered with the forest of priyāla<sup>4</sup> (trees) (and situated) at the confluence of the river Śōṇa.

(V. 8) His<sup>5</sup> fame is continuously sung with delight and in a high tone in every (month of) Māgha<sup>6</sup> by the Gandharvas and Vidyādharas, in the assembly of Indra held in the celestial garden,—by Nandin who, to please Śiva, pays less attention to instrumental by 'elevates the quarters.' But both these renderings are unsatisfactory; for the verb tulayati never conveys the sense of 'brightening' and the garland of skulls can scarcely be described as 'elevating the quarters'! For our rendering of kakubb by 'a garland of champaka flowers' see Kakub striyāṃ pravṛṇī-dikō-bhāsu champaka-srajī cited in Mahēśvara's com. on Amarakōśa, II, 45.

<sup>2</sup> Monier-Williams in his Sanskrit Dictionary gives lagnikā (which is a wrong form of nagnikā) in the sense of 'a wanton woman'. The poet has here evidently the story of Ahalyā in mind. As Rāma purified Ahalyā by the dust of his feet, so did Prabhāvaśiva sanctify the land that was presented to him by Yuvarājadēva (I).

music<sup>1</sup>,—(and) by the charioteer of the sun, who gracefully waving his head from side to side in joy, allows the reins (of his horses) to slip from his hands.

(V. 9) There was the foremost of his disciples named Prabōdhasīva, as Paraśurāma was of (Śiva) the enemy of Madana, —who, conquering all his enemies, adorned the faces of the quarters with his fame, and bestowing wealth on the meritorious, placed the earth under obligation.

(V. 10) He<sup>2</sup> was like Kumāra (i.e., Kārttikēya), whose one hand was skilled in making offerings at the proper time to the high flames of fire (as Kumāra's hand is in feeding his mighty peacock); who (like Kumāra) always avoided the company of women; who showed the effect of his power on mighty kings (as Kumāra exhibited that of his dart on the Krauñcha mountain), who was devoted to (Śiva) the enemy of the mind-born (as Kumāra also was dear to him); and who performed (all) his duties towards the gods (as Kumāra accomplished the work of the gods, viz., the destruction of the demon Tāraka).<sup>3</sup>

(V. 11) He, having thought over all the scriptures, realized God by the performance of religious austerities and meditation, and living on the fruits of priyāla, āmalaka,<sup>4</sup> greens and śālūka<sup>5</sup>, caused the wonder of the world by practising austerities even in his boyhood on the bank (lit., the surface of the land) washed by the river (Śōṇa), imitating his spiritual preceptor.

(V. 12) He, having attained power, has acted like the rising sun,—whose feet are rendered more resplendent by the (jewelled) crests of kings (who bowed to him, even as the sun's rays are when they fall on the peaks of mountains); who has done the work of destroying ignorance (as the sun dispels darkness); who is revered by all people at the time of making peace (as the sun is at the beginning of twilights); (and)—what more (need be said?)—who, having attained greatness has pervaded the three worlds by his power (as the sun does by its heat).

(V. 13) He, by the process of excavating, breaking and ramming<sup>6</sup> heaps of large stones, has constructed a wonderful way through mountains (and) across rivers and streams, and also through forests and thickets, as Rāghava (d'ed) across the ocean. A great deed of the mighty proclaims wonder in the world!

(V. 14) At night this hermitage,—(which is wafted) with breezes, extremely cool with the sprays of the water of the Śōṇa, which makes the sky reverberate with loud roars of lions, and which has bee-like clouds hovering round mountain peaks,—causes people to suspect lightning on account of the phosphorescence of great medicinal plants (growing near it).

(V. 15) In this place herds of monkeys kiss the cubs of lions, (and) the young one of a deer sucks at the breast of the lioness. Other hostile animals forget their (natural) antipathy (to one another); for the minds of all become tranquil in penance-groves.

(V. 16) Near the temple built by his preceptor, the tranquil Prabōdhasīva caused to be erected this lofty and spacious monastery, which is, as it were, his own fame resembling white clouds. Thereafter he caused to be excavated a sea-like lake,<sup>7</sup> by the side

<sup>3</sup> There is a play on several words in this verse, owing to which the adjectival expressions yield two meanings, one connected with the sage and the other with Kārttikēya.

of the mountain, and (also) a well having copious water.

(V. 17) On account of devotion to his preceptor he caused to be rebuilt with a wonderful masonry of large stones and then re-excavated (very) deep the well, which had been dug by the illustrious Praśāntaśiva at this place, (but) which had become dilapidated and full of wood fallen into it, in course of time.

(V. 18) There was a Dikshita named Mēhuka, whose fame was known on the earth. He, who was foremost among good men, begot a son named Jēika. To him was born, from the womb of Amarikā<sup>1</sup>, the poet Dhāmsaṭa. He composed this praśasti couched in beautiful arrangement of letters.

(V. 19) May this eulogy endure unchanged on this earth as long as the divine river (Gangā), meandering through the coiled matted hair of Paśupati (i.e., Śiva), with its waters shattering on the surface of the rocks on the Himālayas, flows to (the sea), the lord of rivers, along the path (shown) by Bhagīratha, sanctifying the earth with its bounding waves.

(V. 19) The wise and renowned Dāmōdara, the son of Lakshmidhara and the younger brother of Vāsudēva, wrote this praśasti in excellent letters!

(This praśasti) has been inscribed by Nilakaṇṭha by the order of the Sūtradhāra Sūrāka. The year 724, (the month) Phālguna, the bright (fortnight), the (lunar) day 5.

No. 45; PLATE XXXV

BILHARI STONE INSCRIPTION OF YUVARAJADEVA II

THE stone, which bears this inscription, is said to have been found at Bilhāri (lat. 23° 48' North, long. 80° 19' East), 9 miles west by south of Murwārā, the headquarters of a tahsil of the same name in the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. The stone which was at first removed to Jabalpur<sup>2</sup> has now been deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur. It seems to have broken in transit, as it shows now a large crack which cuts it vertically right across. Fortunately, it has not resulted in the loss of more than one or two letters.

The inscription was first published with an abstract of its contents by Dr. F.E. Hall in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Vol. XXX, pp. 317-334. Its contents were next discussed by Sir A. Cunningham in his Archaeological Survey of India Reports, Vol. IX, pp. 80 and 102-5. It was subsequently edited, with an excellent translation and a lithograph, by Prof. F. Kielhorn in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. I, pp. 251-270. It is edited here from the original stone and ink impressions taken under my supervision.

The record, which consists of thirty-three lines, is inscribed on the counter-sunk surface of a large panel of grey sandstone. The inscribed space measures 6' 3" broad by 3' high and is surrounded by a plain border 3.5" broad. The first thirty lines of the inscription are very well preserved, except for a few letters at the end of each line; the latter can, however, be read without much difficulty from the traces left on the stone. On the other hand several letters at the end of the last three lines have been almost completely effaced by the wearing away of the inscribed surface. The average size of the letters is .5" in the first three lines and .75" in the rest.

The characters, which are beautifully written and deeply engraved, belong to the Nāgarī alphabet. They closely resemble those of the Chandrēhē inscription.<sup>3</sup> The only points that call for notice here are that the left limb of kh is drawn below the apex of its triangle in some cases, see, e.g., sukha-viśēshād-, l. 30; ṭha of maṭha has ornamental additions below the circle in ll. 22 and 32; the loop of n is open at the top, see -atalina-, l. 4; and ph has everywhere the later form, see -phaṇa-phalaka-, l. 7.

The language is Sanskrit. Except for the customary ōm namah Sivāya in the beginning, api cha and kiñ-cha in ll. 1 and 19 respectively, and some short sentences in ll. 32 and 33, the record is in verse throughout. It falls into three parts.<sup>1</sup> Verses 1-45 were composed by Śrīnivāsa, the son of Sthirānanda, verses 46-78 by Sajjana, the son of Thīra and the rest by the Kāyastha Sīruka. The record, especially the portion composed by Śrīnivāsa, is written in an artistic kāvya style. The composition of Sajjana is inferior; it does not contain any flights of imagination and suffers also from the use of wrong forms like akṛita for akāri in verse 54 and ambiguous compounds like ahita-janita-bhītir- in verse 59. As regards orthography, we may note that the sign for v is used to denote b almost throughout, and the dental for the palatal sibilant in -saurya-, l. 14 and -Sāv-āgama-, l. 20; the consonant following or preceding r has been doubled in many cases, see e.g., -Scriva-parvata-, l. 5, ttri-bhuvana-, l. 6 etc.; the visarga before s is generally changed to the sibilant and in one case dropped in accordance with the vārttika on Pāṇini, VIII., 3., 36, see bandhō styān-ākṛiti-, l. 17; the anusvāra before ś and ṣ has been wrongly changed to the dental nasal in many places, see e.g., -vanśa-, l. 21, and -vidhvansa-, l. 4; final m has wrongly remained unchanged in such cases as -damvaram-vah-, l. 3, yam-vikshya-, l. 14; so also n in bhagavān-jyōtsnām-, l. 16, vairāgyēna-, l. 21 and guṇām-śakshyati-, l. 26, while it has been wrongly changed to ṇ in dhēnur-ṇṇanu-, l. 15. Other instances of wrong sandhi are the elision of the visarga in -Nāgabālā Khaila-, l. 18, and the addition of ch in marud-gaṇānām chchhāy-, l. 16. Ri is used for the vowel ri in -dripta-, l. 12 and -saty-ādrita-, l. 14. Finally, one of the two similar consonants forming a conjunct is dropped by syncopation in several places, see -lasadyu-, l. 1, -ujvalim-, l. 3, āsī-dvishad-, l. 4, kōpa-valyāḥ-, l. 8, datvā-, l. 24, satva-, l. 26, etc.

As stated above, the inscription falls into three parts. The first part, which was composed by Śrīnivāsa, opens with four verses invoking the blessings of Śiva and the moon. The poet then proceeds to state the genealogy of Kēyūrarvarsha, whose queen Nōhalā erected the temple, at which the inscription was originally put up. From the moon sprang the family of the Haihayas. In this family was born the king Arjuna (i.e., Kārtavīrya Sahasrārjuna) who defeated the lord of Laṅkā and was favoured by the god Dattātṛeya with the promise of a son. Among his descendants was Kōkalladēva (I) who, having conquered the whole earth, set up two pillars of victory, the well-known Kṛishṇarāja in the south and Bhōjadēva, the store of royal fortune, in the north. This statement evidently means that by his help Kōkalla established these princes firmly on their thrones. A statement to the same effect is made in the Banaras plates<sup>2</sup> of Karṇa also.

Kōkalla (I) was followed by his son Mugdhatuṅga who conquered the lines of countries along the sea-shore and took away the country of Pāli from the lord of Kōsala. This statement also is corroborated by a Prakrit gāthā about Prasiddhadhavalā (who is identical with Mugdhatuṅga) which occurs in the Banaras plates.<sup>3</sup>

<sup>1</sup> Kielhorn thought that the inscription was composed by only two poets,—verses 1-45, which originally formed an independent prastuti, by Śrīnivāsa and the remaining verses by Sajjana. Further, he took the Kāyastha Sīruka to be the scribe of the first prastuti, Ep. Ind., Vol. II, p. 251 and p. 270, n. 50. It would, however, appear that Sīruka was the author of verses 79-85. Had he been the scribe of the first prastuti, his name would have been either mentioned immediately after v. 45 or omitted altogether.

The inscription then proceeds to describe in verses 24-29 Mugdhatuṅga's son Yuvarājadēva (I) alias Kēyūrararsha. He is said to have fulfilled the ardent desires of the minds of the women of Gauḍa, to have sported on the breasts of the ladies of Karṇāta, to have applied the ornamental mark to the forehead of the women of Lāṭa, to have enjoyed the pleasures of love with the women of Kāśmīra and to have been fond of the excellent songs of the women of Kaliṅga. Curious as it might appear, a similar description of Yuvarājadēva occurs in the Viddhaśālabhaṅjikā of Rājaśekhara, who, in the later part of his career, flourished at his court. From the fourth act of this play<sup>1</sup> we learn that its hero Kēyūrararsha had married the princesses of Magadha, Mālava, Pāñchāla, Avantī, Jālandhara and Kērala. These statements are evidently intended to convey that Yuvarājadēva raided Bengal, Bihar, Uttar Pradesh, Karṇāṭaka, Gujarat, Kashmir and other parts of India and married the princesses of those States. The present inscription further states that he caused endless trouble to his enemies from the Himālaya in the north to the bridge in the south, and from the eastern to the western sea. The description of Yuvarājadēva to which the poet has devoted as many as six verses is otherwise conventional and contains no historical information.

The next eight verses (30-37) introduce a digression and describe the pedigree of Yuvarājadēva's wife Nōhalā. From a handful (chuluka) of water taken by the sage Bhāradvāja (i.e., Drōṇa) to curse Drupada there was born a warrior, the family descended from whom came to be known as Chaulukya. This legend about the origin of the Chaulukyas, it may be noted in passing, differs from that given by Bilhaṇa in his Vikramāṅkadēvacharita, Canto I, verses 46-55. According to the latter, the progenitor of the clan was born from the handful of water taken by the god Brahmā for his morning libation when he was requested by Indra to create someone for the punishment of the haters of religion. Again, a third legend occurs in a later inscription, according to which the Chālukyas were born in the interior of the water-pot (chulkā) when Hāritipāñchāśikha was pouring out a libation to the gods.<sup>2</sup> Our inscription next proceeds to state that in the family of the Chaulukyas was born Avanivarman. His father was Sadhanva and grandfather Simhavarman. Avanivarman had a daughter named Nōhalā.

This Nōhalā was a favourite wife of Yuvarājadēva. She constructed a lofty temple of Śiva. We are further told that she gave the villages Nīpānīya and Ambipāṭaka to the Śaiva ascetic Īśvaraśiva as a reward for his scholarship. This Īśvaraśiva was a disciple of Śabdaśiva who was himself a disciple of Pavanaśiva, also called Mādhumatēya (the lord of Madhumatī). Further, Nōhalā donated the villages Dhaṅgaṭapāṭaka, Pōṅḍī, Nāgabala, Khailapāṭaka, Viḍā, Sajjāhalī and Gōshṭhapālī to the god Śiva.

The second part of the present record, which commences with verse 46, opens with a description of Lakshmaṇarājā (II), the son of Yuvarājadēva I and Nōhalā. Verses 46-58 again introduce a digression and give the spiritual genealogy of the Śaiva pontiff, Hṛidayaśiva, who was invited by Lakshmaṇarājā to his country and was placed in charge of the monastery of the holy Vaidyanātha. We are told that at the venerable place called Kadambaguhā there lived a sage named Rudraśambhu. His disciple was Mattamayūranātha who initiated the king of Avantī in the Śaiva faith. His disciple was Dharmāśambhu, and the disciple of the latter Śabdaśiva. Śabdaśiva was followed by Mādhumatēya, and the latter by Chūḍāśiva who, again, was the spiritual preceptor of Hṛidayaśiva. Lakshmaṇarājā respectfully invited Hṛidayaśiva to his country and made over to him the monastery of the holy Vaidyanātha, which is called Nauhalēśvara in the next verse. Hṛidayaśiva placed it in the charge of his disciple Aghōraśiva. As Hṛidayaśiva was a contemporary of Lakshmaṇarāja, his spiritual preceptor Chūḍāśiva lived in the same period as Lakshmaṇarāja's father Yuvarājadēva I. He is, therefore, probably identical with the Sikhāśiva of the Chandrēhē inscription<sup>1</sup> and the Chūḍāśiva of the Gurgi inscription,<sup>2</sup> whose disciple Prabhāvaśiva was invited by Yuvarājadēva I to accept a monastery at Gurgi.

Lakshmaṇarāja, then, proceeded to conquer the regions in the west and reached the shores of the western ocean where he worshipped Śiva at the well-known temple of Sōmanātha in Kathiāwād, and presented the deity with the effigy of the serpent Kāliya wrought with jewels and gold, which he had obtained from the king of Ōḍra (Orissa) after defeating the lord of Kōsala. This statement indicates that the kingdoms of Dakṣiṇa Kōsala and Ōḍra were at this time probably ruled by the scions of the same family.<sup>3</sup>

Lakshmaṇarāja was succeeded by his son Śaṅkaragaṇa (III), about whom the present record furnishes no historical information. He was followed by his younger brother Yuvarājadēva II, whose adventure in killing a huge tiger is graphically described in verse 68. As many as five verses are devoted to this king's description, but they contain mere conventional praise. Verses 71-76 contain a hymn which Yuvarājadēva II is said to have composed in praise of Śiva.

The third part of the inscription opens with an enumeration of the taxes in cash or kind, which manufacturers and traders had to pay at the market-place in the town (Bilhāri) for the benefit of the monastery and the support of its occupants. Next comes a verse in praise of Aghōraśiva, the head of the Nauhalēśvara monastery. He is said to have put this praśasti together. As Dr. Kielhorn has already pointed out 'What is now its first portion from verse 1 to 45 originally was or formed part of an independent praśasti and this original praśasti was renewed and enlarged by the addition of verses 46-86 of the present inscription two or three generations after the composition of the first part'<sup>4</sup>.

The record next mentions the towns Tripurī, Saubhāgyapura, Lavaṇanagara, Durlabhapura, Vimānapura and some others, whose names are lost, in connection with the celebration of a fair in honour of the deity. Finally, there occurs a curious reference to the Sanskrit poet Rājaśekhara. The present eulogy is said to have deserved praise from the wonder-struck poet Rājaśekhara. Kielhorn who translated the expression vismita-kavi-Rājaśekhara-stutyā as 'which would deserve praise (even) from the wonder-struck poet Rājaśekhara'<sup>5</sup>, evidently took it to mean Rājaśekhara would have been struck with wonder at this composition if he had been living. The expression can be taken either as instrumental singular meaning '(May this composition live to the end of the world) as it has evoked praise from the wonder-struck poet Rājaśekhara', or as nominative singular conveying the sense, '(this composition) which deserves praise from the wonder-struck poet Rājaśekhara'. In either case we need not suppose that Rājaśekhara was dead at the time. From his Karpūramañjarī we learn that he was at first called Bālakavi probably on account of his precocious poetic talent. He was patronised by the Gurjara-Pratihāra princes Mahēndrapāla and Mahīpala and afterwards by Kēyūraravarsha-

Yuvarājadēva I, whom he has made the hero of his Sanskrit play Viddhasālabhāṅjikā. If we suppose that he was a young man of sixteen when he went to the court of Kanauj towards the end of Mahēndrapāla's reign (in circa 905 A.C.), his age at the beginning of the reign of Yuvarājadēva II (circa 975 A.C.) when the present inscription seems to have been put up, would be about eighty-five years, which is not altogether improbable.<sup>1</sup> Such a long life is also warranted by the poet's prolific literary activity.

It is not difficult to conjecture why this eulogy of Kalachuri princes pleased Rājaśekhara. The characteristics of his own poems as noted by ancient critics<sup>2</sup> are his fondness for the metre Sārdūlavikrīḍita and the poetic quality samādhi which means an alternate combination of heavy and light syllables.<sup>3</sup> A third mannerism noticed in his works is his reference to the several parts of India on some pretext or other. All these qualities can be illustrated from the present inscription. It is, therefore, no matter for surprise to read that it evoked or deserved praise from Rājaśekhara, who must have seen in it a clever imitation of his own style.

The last verse states that the eulogy was written by Nāī, the son of Dhīra who was a writer of legal documents, and incised by Nōṇna, the son of the artisan Saṅgama.

As for the geographical names occurring in the present inscription, Madhumatī, from which the name of the sage Mādhumatēya was evidently derived, is probably identical with Mahuā which is now a small hamlet one mile south of Tērahi in Madhya Bharat. It contains the ruins of three temples, two of which are dedicated to Śiva. From the characters of the inscription incised on the front lintel of the porch of one of them, it appears that the shrine dates back to the seventh century A. C.<sup>4</sup> The river which flows by Mahuā is mentioned as Madhuvēṇī in an inscription found at Tērahi.<sup>5</sup> It seems that Mahuā was an important seat of Śaivism in mediæval times. Kadambaguhā, which is mentioned in the present inscription as the original seat of the Śaiva sect, figures also in an inscription at Rāṅḍ. In his article on the latter Dr. Kielhorn identified it with Kadwāha about six miles south of Tērahi.<sup>6</sup> It may, however, be noted that Kadambaguhā is mentioned in the Rāṅḍ inscription as the place of residence of the spiritual ancestor of the sage Purandara who was brought from Upēndrapura by Avantivarman who ruled in Central India. Kadambaguhā and Upēndrapura are not, therefore, likely to have been situated in the latter's territory. Kadambaguhā may be identical with Kadambapadraka situated in the maṇḍala of Upēndrapura which is mentioned in a grant of the Paramāra king Naravarmadēva.<sup>7</sup> It will, therefore, have to be searched for in Mālwa. Of the villages granted by Nōhalā, Nipānīya is probably Nipāniā in the Sihōrā tahsil, 10 miles south-west of Bilhāri.<sup>8</sup> Ambipātaka may be Āmkuhi, 8 miles north by east, and Dhaṅgaṭapātaka Dungarhai, 7 miles south of Bilhāri. Pōṅḍī which still retains its old name lies 4 miles to the northwest.<sup>9</sup> Nāgabala and Khaila-pāṭaka are probably represented by modern Naigawān, 2 miles to the south, and Kail-wārā<sup>1</sup>, 7 miles to the north-east of Bilhāri. Sajjāhali may be Sajharā in the Murwārā tahsil, and Gōshṭhapālī Gaṭākhērā, 10 miles almost due east of Bilhāri. Tripurī, which was the capital of the Kalachuris, is now represented by the small village of Tēwar, 6 miles from Jabalpur. Soubhāgyapura is probably Sohāgpur, the chief town of the Sohāgpur tahsil in the Vindhya Pradesh. Lavaṇanagara, Durlabhapura and Vimānapura I am unable to identify.

Success! Om! Adoration to Siva.

(Verse 1) May the mass of Sambhu's matted hair, the store of all blessings, protect you!—(the mass of matted hair), on which the rolling waters of the Mandākinī (i.e., the Gaṅgā), flowing down from the bright vault of heaven, appear like a white umbrella, being upheld by the wind from the opened mouths, dreadful through the large expanding hoods, of the lord of serpents (which is) greatly afflicted, being drawn into a tight knot!

Moreover—

(V. 2) May the flame of the fire of the eye of the moon-diademmed (Siva) protect you,—(the flame) which rises up as if to burn the moon, because it is a friend of the god of love!

(V. 3) May the nectar-rayed (moon) of Sarva, the unique flower in the forest of his matted hair, protect you!—that (moon) which the six-faced (Kārttikēya), child as he is, persistently asks for,<sup>1</sup> in order to play with; which is the stake when (Śiva), the destroyer of the cities, plays at dice with the goddess (Pārvatī); (and) which Pārvatī uses as a missile when she is talking angrily (with Śiva) in amorous sports!

(V. 4) May the gigantic dance of the conqueror of Tripura (i.e., Śiva) in which he indulged to his heart's content<sup>2</sup> protect you!—(the dance) during which the quarters were pushed back by the exceedingly strong blasts of wind, caused by his massive arms, which suddenly became terrific through his graceful movements as he energetically applied himself to it (i.e., to the dancing); and during which the sky rose higher as the earth bent down under (the weight of) his mighty chārī step!

(V. 5) Using my speech to (describe) the family which has sprung from the moon, I, alas! have, through folly, begun to measure the sky with my hands.

(V. 6) Even though my speech has no brilliance, it will attain it from this great family of the moon whose rise is being described. Or, do not, mark! the streams of rut of the elephants of the quarters, though naturally black, attain the (white) colour of the milky ocean, when they come into contact with it?

(V. 7) That abode of lustre which obtained its rise from the eye of Atri, which befriends the earth by whitening it, which rises up to the Lōkālōka mountain (and) dispels great darkness, is called the moon. The crescent of that very (moon) adorns the forehead of Sambhu. From the same moon sprang, what more (need I say?), this family also of the Haihayas.

(V. 8) And in this (family) which was rendered the highest object of reverence by (those) primeval kings, Budha and others, there was a noble prince named Arjuna who covered the wide quarters with the lustre of his fame, which deserves praise because he cut down his enemies like forests.

(V. 9) What happened even to that lord of Laṅkā (i.e., Rāvaṇa) when he was engaged in hostility with him—(the lord of Laṅkā), who with ease had lifted up<sup>3</sup> (Kailāsa) the lord of mountains belonging to Śarva, (and before whom) the lord of gods went, none knew where, on his elephant which was terrified by the fire issuing from the thunderbolt as it vibrated and broke in striking (Rāvaṇa's) broad chest—that indeed is the measure of his glory!

(V. 10) Who are we, oh! to describe the merits of him whom the god Dattātrēya, that abode of unrestrained amorous endearments of the goddess of fortune, favoured with the gracious promise of sons? What is the use of vain prattle? In this case even the goddess of speech is, I fancy, clearly perplexed!

<sup>1</sup> Kielhorn, who made the pada-cchēda as krītvā grabaṇi mārgati, translated—'that (moon) which the six-faced (Kārttikēya), child as he is, lays hold of and seeks to play with'. It is better to construe the words as āgrabaṇi krītvā kbēlāya mārgati.

<sup>2</sup> Kielhorn translates avyāhat-ēccham by 'to the full extent of your desires', evidently treating it as an adverb modifying the verb avyāt. The tenor of the whole verse, however, requires that it should be taken as an adjective to tāṇḍav-āḍambaram. Śiva could indulge in the dance to his heart's content, because the quarters were pushed back, the sky rose higher and the earth bent down, thus affording more space for his dance.

<sup>3</sup> Kielhorn translated 'of that lord of Laṅkā even, who with ease had coaxed Śarva and the lord of mountains', evidently deriving ullālita from ullal to coax, to fondle. But the word is clearly used here in the same sense as ullāsita (lifted up) in bhī-ōllāsita-v(b)ābu-daṇḍa-vibita-Śrikanṭha-sail-ōddha(ri)tiḥ in line 6 of Goharwa plates of Karṇa (No. 50, below).

(V. 11) Then, from him who was a mountain<sup>1</sup> for the creepers that were the far-reaching vows of good men, how many lords of earth did not spring, the fame springing from whom was in the habit of defeating (i.e., surpassing in lustre) the young (i.e., full) moon?

(V. 12) Among those who thus appeared successively was born Kōkalladēva (I), who caused the wonder of men; who marked the highest limit of blessedness; who was like Indra on the orb of the earth that submitted to him; who was the wild fire in burning the spreading creepers that were his enemies; (and) whose valour, adorned as he was with pride, pervaded the circle of the three worlds.

(V. 13) On account of whose forces, when they met together for the conquest of the world, marching like the waves of the ocean overflowing its bounds, the multitude of the broad hoods of the lord of serpents sank under the earth which was pressed down by their excessive weight.

(V. 14) When the dust raised by his forces gradually rolled on from the earth to the sky, the pairs of Chakravāka birds, apprehending (the approach of) night, separated in grief; the peacocks, mistaking it for the approach of clouds, performed a joyful dance; and on the disappearance of all light, the eyes suddenly became blind.

(V. 15) When the lords of elephants in his vast army, which was fond of the forests on the sea-shore, plunged into (its) water like the principal mountains crowding together, the ocean after a long time was reminded of that occasion when the Mandara mountain revolved in it.

(V. 16) While he was occupying the slopes of the Vindhya mountain, the forest, with its multitudes of birds chirping harshly, cried out, as it were, in pain, as (the trees were) being broken by the rutting elephants of the army.

(V. 17) Having conquered the whole earth, he planted two unique pillars,—in the quarter of the pitcher-born (Agastya)<sup>2</sup> that (well-known) Krishṇarāja, and in the quarter of Kubēra<sup>3</sup> Bhōjadēva the treasure-house of fortune.

(V. 18) From him then was born Mugdhatuṅga, than whom (there was) none exalted in the three worlds. And when he was desirous of conquering the quarters, what country did he not obtain, having destroyed his enemies?

(V. 19) His sole object of affection, when he was preparing for fight, was his sword,—(which was) a couch for the goddess of battle, a bolt for (the destruction of) the enemy's army, a sprout of the creeper that was his anger, a dear friend of haughtiness, a channel (made) of sapphire for the water of good deeds, a branch of the tree of bravery, and an endless path for the movements of his adventurous deeds.

(V. 20) Possessed of the prowess of Rudra<sup>4</sup>, he so dealt with the hostile forces

<sup>4</sup> Kielhorn translated raudraṁ yō dhāma vi(bi)bhraṭ by 'possessed of terrific splendour'. The whole verse is, however, intended to compare the battlefield, where the king slaughtered his enemies, with the cemetery where Rudra revels in the company of his hosts of spirits and goblins. Besides raudra is used before in the sense of 'terrific' and it is not likely to have been used in the same sense again in the last quarter. I, therefore, prefer to take raudraṁ dhāma as 'the prowess of Rudra'.

in every fight that crowds of goblins stalked about, headless trunks (of warriors) were running (here and there), carrying their own heads (which had been) cut off, small imps were howling, confronting goblins had fire blazing forth from the hollows of their mouths and (the battlefield) appeared dreadful with the terrific cries of ill-omened jackals howling in their desire for devouring flesh.

(V. 21) The forests near the sea-shore where his forces were encamped during his expeditions, had their coral sprouts doubled on account of the foreparts of the hands of women moving (among them) to gather them.<sup>1</sup>

(V. 22) 'Here the waves of the ocean are playing, here the wind is blowing which makes the women of Kērala sport, here the serpent is taking away the fragrance of the trees'.—Thus wandered his thoughts in the vicinity of the Malaya mountain!

(V. 23) Having conquered the rows of countries along the shore of the eastern ocean, and having taken the country of Pāli from the lord of Kōsala, he, who continually destroyed the abodes of (his) enemies, was the ablest master of the sword.

(V. 24) From him was born that Kēyūravarsha<sup>2</sup>, who was guided by polity<sup>3</sup>; who fulfilled the ardent desires of the minds of the women of Gauḍa; who sported on the breasts of the ladies of Karṇāṭa even as a deer does on a pleasure-hill; who applied the ornamental mark to the forehead of the women of Lāṭa; who enjoyed the pleasures of love with the women of Kāśmīra, (and) was fond of the excellent songs of the women of Kaliṅga.

(V. 25) Even when his forces marched for vanquishing the guardians of the quarters, sporting as at the time of world-destruction, so as to rouse the apprehension of the three worlds, no mass of dust could rise from the ground, inundated as it was with the streams of tears flowing from the eyes of the wives of (his) enemies who were again and again taken captive.

(V. 26) In battle that king wielded his large sword, which, being covered with a multitude of pearls from the pitcher-like frontal globes of elephants which were clearly broken open, appeared, as it were, to be strewn with the particles of the enemy's fame, which it had often drunk but subsequently emitted, under the pressure of the king's firm grasp.

(V. 27) Up to the Kailāsa mountain, the friend<sup>4</sup> of Pārvati's continuously charming sport, up to the excellent eastern mountain from where rises the lustre of the sun, near the bridge (of the south) and then up to the western lord of waters (i.e., the western ocean) the valour of his armies caused unending oppression to his enemies.

(V. 28) He strew the battlefields all over with the heads of his proud enemies who, exasperated with rage attacked him—(the heads), the skull-bones of which were falling off, being pressed by the machine-like hands of the exulting female goblins, eager for the blood dripping from (the parts) struck by his vibrating swift arrows, (and) which were honoured with side-glances of (heavenly) damsels moving in the sky.

(V. 29) "(Our) king is Rudra incarnate; (our) king is the support of the mansion of the three worlds; (our) king is an iron fetter for curbing the wayward princes;"—When multitudes of excellent bards continuously uttered such brilliant words of flattery, the minds of his enemies who were present in his hall of audience were incomparably afflicted.

(V. 30) There was (a sage) named Bharadvāja, (who was) free from the blemishes of sin, (and) who was the sole lord of those whose wealth is tranquillity. What sprang from his male energy deposited in a jar—that verily was Bhāradvāja, i.e., Drōṇa whose deeds excited the wonder of the three worlds.

(V. 31) His fame gracefully roamed throughout the three worlds; his fortune was limited (only) by his desires; his rage, (manifested both) by his curse and his bow, was terrible, such as would be suitable for the destruction of the world. What can we describe of that sole ocean of policy and valour, whose disciple was that husband of Subhadrā (i.e., Arjuna) who with ease humbled the great pride of Śarva.<sup>1</sup>

(V. 32) Seeing him whose strong arm was skilful in wielding the bow, and who with his many powerful arrows exterminated the Pāṇḍava army, even that son of Dharmā, who was honoured for veracity, swerved (from the truth)<sup>2</sup> when he lost (all) hope of defeating the enemy.

(V. 33) Now, in the water, of which he in the act of cursing had taken up a handful (chuluka) with his trembling hand, in rage to bring calamity on Drupada when insulted (by him), there sprang a man like victory incarnate; from him is descended the family of the Chaulukyas of great merit.

(V. 34) In that powerful family, in which was produced a series of kings eminent in spreading valour and beauty, was born Avanivarman whose deeds were well-known in the (whole) universe, (and) who drew to himself the enemy's fortune when he bent his beautiful bow.

(V. 35) That his grandfather was Siṃhavarman and his father was Sadhanva the best of heroes,—this by itself rendered him exceedingly great in the world. To add to this was his great dignity.

(V. 36) Of him, whose liberality has broken the seal of poverty of all people, (and) whose valour has made the enemies take shelter in the mountain-caves by the seashore, he (alone) apparently might possibly<sup>3</sup> count the merits, to whom is indeed submissive the divine Bhāratī, the milch-cow of speech.

(V. 37) As the lord of mountains (Himālaya) begot Rudrāṇī (i.e., Pārvatī), the ocean Lakshmī, the divine sun the (river) Kālindī (Yamunā), the son of Atri the moon-light, Janaka's sacrificial rite Vaidēhī (i.e., Sītā), even so (he), the jewel that fulfilled the wishes of the feudatory princes, begot that wonderful ornament in the form of a maiden, named the illustrious Nōhalā.

(V. 38) As the daughter of Pulōman<sup>4</sup> (was the beloved wife) of the lord of the hosts of Maruts<sup>5</sup>, as Chhāyā (was) of that lord of the light (i.e., the sun) that dispels darkness, as Rati (was) of the god whose bow is (made of) sugar-cane,<sup>6</sup>—even so did she become the beloved (wife) of Kēyūrarvarsha.

(V. 39) That moon-like king attained indescribable splendour through her, even as the elephant (does) by the stream of rutting juice, the seashore by a creeper of tender coral, a tree by the beauty of flowers, and a cloud by lightning.

<sup>2</sup> Kielhorn's translation 'Even that son of Dharmā minding his promise retired etc.' gives a wholly incorrect sense. The allusion here is to an incident in the Bhārata war when Yudhiṣṭhira was tempted to tell a lie to bring about the death of Drōṇa. See Mabābhārata, Drōṇaparvan, Adhyāya 193, vv. 54-59. Compare also Vepīśambhāra, Act III, v. 111.

(V. 40) For the attainment of religious merit she has constructed this temple of the god (Śiva) who is the sole object of Umā's love, (this temple), on the pinnacles of which with their cloud-scraping tops trips the sun, (and which is) as it were the mass of her extensive fame (in a tangible form).

(V. 41) The flags on it do not flutter, because, I fancy, they are constantly sprinkled with the foam-water of the horses of the sun, that are fatigued by continuous marching through the sky.

(V. 42) On the broad pinnacles of this temple, which has a lofty fluted disc,<sup>1</sup> the rows of fresh clouds clinging to them in the rainy season bear resemblance to flocks of pigeons.

(V. 43) There was (a sage), Pavanaśiva, the lord of Madhumatī; after him flourished Śabdaśiva; the pious Īvaraśiva again sanctified his discipleship.

(V. 44) To him, who was a store of austerities, the cultured (queen) donated the villages Nipānīya and Ambipāṭaka as a reward for scholarship.

(V. 45) And she gave to (Śiva) the enemy of Smara, Dhaṅgaṭapāṭaka, Pōṇḍī, Nāgabala, Khailapāṭaka, Viḍā, Sajjāhalī and Gōshṭhapālī.

(V. 46) From her was born to the illustrious king Yuvarājadēva (I), the illustrious Lakshṃṇarāja (II), elevated and possessed of great splendour like the sun; the lustre of whose feet, resorted to by fortune, was honoured by the exalted heads of kings (even as the lustrous rays of the sun, possessed of beauty, are revered by the high peaks of mountains), and who, by his unique, attractive and beautiful excellences, surpassed the god of love.

(V. 47) For the goddess of whose heroism the lady Fame verily spread out on the ground a four-stringed necklace, with the multitude of pearls from the frontal globes of the enemy's elephants, rent, in battle, by the edge of his firmly grasped sword.

Moreover—

(V. 48) Venerable is that Kadambaguhā where there was a succession of sages. To them again was Rudraśambhu, the chief of sages, an object of adoration.

(V. 49) He, who was most venerable in this world by his power (derived from the knowledge) of the reality, had in this world a disciple (named) the Lord of Mattamayūra, who, having completely removed the stain of impurity from the king Avanti, communicated to him the supreme lustre<sup>2</sup> (by initiating him in the Śaiva faith).

(V. 50) After him came the illustrious Dharmasambhu, who became an ornament of the world, (and) whose feet were revered by the lustre of the crest-jewels of princes; who, having crossed the ocean of the Śaiva faith by his austerities, attained fitting, spotless and pleasing fame.

(V. 51) After him came his disciple Sadāśiva, who had a store of austerities, (and) whose venerable feet were worshipped by princes with the rays of their crowns.

(V. 52) After him came his disciple named Mādhumatēya, who, living on fruits and roots, was possessed of excellent lustre, (and) in whom austerities and radiance always dwelt together.

(V. 53) After him there was (his) most venerable disciple Chūḍāśiva, who, being desirous of final liberation, removed completely the taint consequent on actions (performed in previous births).

<sup>1</sup> In Indian Śilpasastra, amalasāraka means 'a circular fluted disc which surmounts the spire of temples', so called from its resemblance to the emblem myrobalan. Cf. Skandbād=urdbvam bhavēd ghaṅṭā yadi v-amalasārakam, in Samarāṅgaṅasūtradhāra (Gaikwad's Oriental Series), Vol. II, p. 175.

<sup>2</sup> Kielhorn at first read puram-abō in this verse and translated it as 'who became possessed, oh I of the town (?) of the prince Avanti,' but himself corrected his mistake later on in Ep. Ind., Vol. I, p. 353.

(V. 54) Then (came) his disciple named Hṛidayaśiva, a mine of all virtues, whose fame deserves to be sung even now; the soles of whose uniquely venerable feet were rendered beautiful by the multitude of rubies set in the crowns of princes.

(V. 55) To whom is not the holy man an object of praise—(the holy man) who, an abode of (all) lores, wise and true to his vows, increased still further and for a long time the fame of the illustrious Mādhumatēya lineage; who, moreover, surpassed the earth by his forbearance, the cloud by his impartiality, and the ocean by decorum of conduct, and (who) vanquished the god of love by his freedom from passion?

(V. 56) Or, why need that foremost of sages be praised at all—(he), whom the king, the illustrious moon of the Chēdi (country), showing his devotion by presents sent by well-conducted messengers, brought him hither respectfully (and) in due form?

(V. 57) The illustrious Lakshmaṇarāja also, being full of devotion himself, offered that great ascetic the monastery of the holy Vaidyanātha.

(V. 58) The sage, having accepted it, again made over the holy Nauhlēśvara monastery to his well-conducted disciple Aghōraśiva.

(V. 59) Then, having accomplished his object, the powerful lord of Chēdi, with all his elephants and horses (as well as) powerful feudatories and foot-soldiers, proceeded to the extremely charming western quarter, causing terror to all his enemies, his progress being difficult to check.

(V. 60) Having struck with valour those who showed vehemence for fighting,<sup>1</sup> having his commands honoured by presents offered by princes who submitted to him, having fulfilled the desires of suppliants with wealth on which they had set their hearts, he allowed the host of his army to sport in the water of the ocean.

(V. 61) Having bathed in the ocean, the illustrious (Lakshmaṇarāja) quietly worshipped (the god) Sōmēśvara with golden lotuses and also offered something else.

(V. 62) He worshipped Sōmēśvara with that (effigy of) Kāliya wrought of jewels and gold, which he had obtained from the prince of Ōḍra, after defeating the lord of Kōsala. The prince, having besides presented elephants, horses, white garments, garlands, sandal and other (gifts), (and) being filled with joy, very humbly praised (the god) to get rid of the troubles of worldly existence.

(V. 63) “Whenever a prince, who is freed from ignorance by bowing to your feet (and) is devoted to the truth, considers this life worthless, his royal fortune will not produce again (any) passion in him,<sup>2</sup> for he gets rid of re-birth”—Absorbed in such meditation, he fixed his mind on Śiva’s greatness.

(V. 64) From him was born the great lord of the earth, the illustrious Śaṅkara-gaṇa (III), whose matchless pair of feet was worshipped even by (his) enemies.

(V. 65) Firm in daring as he was, he devoted his sword to the destruction of the innumerable hosts of his enemies; his charity always delighted the people; being of

<sup>1</sup> Kielhorn translated samara-kṛita-vikārān=vikramēṇa prahṛitya as ‘having valorously struck down (adversaries) who were humbled in battle.’ The verse is intended to contrast two types of the king’s adversaries—(i) those who prepared themselves for fight and (ii) those who submitted to him. The poet has used vikāra and vikṛiti several times in this inscription in the sense of ‘passion,’ ‘rage’ etc.

matchless beauty, he humbled the haughty pride of the mind-born (i.e., the god of love); and as the lord of the earth, he was praised at all places and times by the wise.

(V. 66) The pair of his lotus-like feet, which afforded a broad resting place for fortune, was adorned by the rays of jewels set on the broad sides of the diadems of princes as they bowed (to him). Fortune, which resorted to his ocean-like breast, had come to him as a heritage;<sup>1</sup> not so, however, the glory of heroism which depended on the edge of that prince's sword.

(V. 67) His younger brother was the illustrious king Yuvarajādēva (II), on whose feet princes bent down as bees hover on lotuses. Of him, who was an abode of devotion to truth, courage and pleasing speech, and the sole resort of fortune and valour, even a good man<sup>2</sup> will not probably be able to describe all excellences.

(V. 68) This prince overpowered with his arm and killed, with his hand which wielded a dagger, the radiant, fiercely roaring demon in the form of a tiger, whose mouth appeared terrible as it tore (animals) with its sharp teeth, the corners of whose eyes were blood-shot with rage, which used its paws as weapons of attack, and which sprang forward with its uplifted tail.

(V. 69) Though he delighted the eyes of women as a new god of love, he was otherwise the god of death who broke open the frontal globes of huge elephants with the edge of his sword and, strange to say, (though) he was fond of Sarasvatī, he devoted himself to the worship of Śiva, and clever as he was in discriminating between the four castes, he was a wish-fulfilling jewel to (all) suppliants.

(V. 70) When young women for their usual bath plunged into the water of the Rēvā, which was clear, but bitter, being mixed with the rutting juice which flowed into it at the bathing of his huge and excellent elephants, they innocently became perfumed with the strong fragrance of copulation<sup>3</sup> as the multitudes of waves, dashing against their thighs and hips, surged up and down.

(V. 71) I fancy that his radiant fame, after wandering everywhere,—on the round breasts of women surely in the form of pearl-necklaces, on the spotless full disc of the moon in the guise of the moon-light, on the extensive waters of the Mānasa lake as a beautiful row of swans,—has found rest in the abode of Umā's husband (i.e., in Kailāsa).

(V. 72) Having worshipped the god Īśāna (Śiva) with suitable (gifts of) his wealth, the king composed the (following) hymn of praise, according to traditional works (āgamas) (and) scriptures :—

(V. 73) "Happy are those kings, O Lord, who with steady minds worship thee, spending their wealth on (charitable) works. For those who (on the other hand) are swayed by passion, and whose minds are solely engrossed in love, fortune becomes a cause of intoxication, O granter of boons!

(V. 74) "Of what use are these troops of rutting elephants (and) these women who display amorous dalliance? Gold, horses, garments and all kinds of jewels are of no avail, if thereby (Siva) the lord of Bhavānī is not worshipped.

<sup>1</sup> Kielhorn translates kramēṇ-āgatā by 'come to him gradually', but here the sense clearly is that of 'obtained by succession'. Compare krama-prāpta in Vākāṭaka seals. There is a contrast intended here between Lakshmi and Virāṣṭī. Both of them resorted to Śaṅkaragaṇa; but while he received the former as a heritage, the latter was attracted by his deft swordsmanship.

<sup>2</sup> The use of sajjana 'a good man' seems at first sight to be inappropriate here, as there is hardly any connection between the good nature of a man and his ability to describe the merits of a king. The poet has, however, used it here as his own name was Sajjana; see v. 78 below. So he means to say 'Even I may not be able to describe all the merits of this king!'

<sup>3</sup> Kielhorn's rendering 'they truly become perfumed with the strong fragrance of the god of love' does not bring out the intended sense clearly. The idea expressed in this verse occurs, though in a somewhat different form, in the Raghvanīsa also, see Canto IV, v. 45.

(V. 75) "Birth in a royal family, enjoyment of the earth, learning, proper discrimination, beautiful form (and) excellent victory in battle,—(these) accrue to him, who takes refuge with the holy feet of Saṅkara.

(V. 76) Why need I say more? May my single-minded devotion, the cause of everything, be always directed to thee O Lord!—in which there will be, by thy grace, a shower of nectar,—such as can be experienced by one's own self,<sup>1</sup>—owing to the presence therein of all kinds of highest pleasures."

(V. 77) The great fame of the (first) three princes was first described by the illustrious Śrīnivāsa, the son of the illustrious Sthirānanda.

(V. 78) Then the brilliant eulogy of the three (other) princes was composed by Sajjana, the wise son of Thīra.

In the Maṇḍapikā<sup>2</sup> of the town—

(V. 79) There shall be paid a śōḍaśikā<sup>3</sup> (coin) on (every) khaṇḍikā<sup>4</sup> of salt and (also) one śōḍaśikā for (every) oil-mill per month, and a paura<sup>5</sup> for a couple of yugā<sup>6</sup> per day.

(V. 80) In the case of betel-nuts, black pepper, dried ginger and other merchandise, a paura (shall be paid) by every measurer<sup>7</sup>; a kapardī shall be paid for every vithī (shop) and dyūtakaḥpardas<sup>8</sup> for vegetables and egg-plants.

(V. 81) In the case of dealers in liquids, the tax should be (in the form of) bundles of grass,<sup>9</sup> dhīrmarā<sup>10</sup> and whatever (else may be possible). An elephant (offered for sale)

<sup>1</sup> Kielhorn translates svayam-anubhava-gamyō by 'which will manifest itself of its own accord'. The expression, however, clearly means that the shower of nectar cannot be described in words, but can be appreciated only by self-experience.

<sup>2</sup> Maṇḍapikā (from which the Marāṭhī word Maṇḍā, a 'market-place', is derived) seems to have been a pavillion in the market-place where things brought to the market for sale were taxed. It was also called Sulka-maṇḍapikā, see Bhāvnagar Sanskrit and Prakrit Inscriptions, p. 159.

<sup>3</sup> Śōḍaśikā was probably a coin equal in value to one-sixteenth part of a dramma. Cf. Vimśōpaka mentioned in lines 10, 20, 26 etc. of the Siyaḍōṇī inscription, Ep. Ind., Vol. I, pp. 174 ff.

<sup>4</sup> Khaṇḍikā seems to have been a measure of capacity corresponding to the modern khaṇḍī which is equal to 20 maunds. The Harsha stone inscription of Vīgraharāja (Ind., Ant., Vol. XLII, pp. 57 ff.) mentions the tax of one vimśōpaka on every kūṭaka of salt at Śākambharī.

<sup>5</sup> Paura seems to have been a small coin like kaparda. The Siyaḍōṇī inscription states in line 20 the tax of two kapardas per yugā, which was assigned to the local deity.

<sup>6</sup> The meaning of yugā is not certain, but it may be noted that the Siyaḍōṇī inscription states in line 6 that a yugā was stamped at the local maṇḍapikā when a quarter pañcīyaka-dramma was paid and that it was valid for a day. It was probably a voucher authorizing the owner to exhibit his articles in the market-place for one day.

<sup>7</sup> Bharaka is probably a kind of measure. It is also mentioned in connection with cocoanuts in, v. 71 of the Arthūṇā inscription of Chāmuṇḍarāja of V. 1136 (Ep. Ind., Vol. XIV, p. 302). See also Mitāksarā on Yajñavalkya Smṛiti, II, 221. The Siyaḍōṇī inscription mentions in line 30 the tax of three-quarter Vīgrahapālīya-dramma on every bharaṇa (measure).

<sup>8</sup> Dyūtakaḥpardas seems to have been a smaller coin than a kaparda. It was so called probably because it was frequently used as a stake in gambling. It may be noted that the Māngrōl (Kāṭhiāwāḍ) inscription of V. 1202 mentions a daily tax of one kākiṇī on gambling. Bhāvnagar Inscriptions, pp. 158 ff.

<sup>9</sup> Pālaka may be connected with pālīkā. The Siyaḍōṇī inscription mentions in line 26 a tax on every pālīkā of leaves. Pūtaka is also mentioned in v. 72 of the above-named Arthūṇā inscription.

should be taxed four pauras, and a horse two pauras<sup>1</sup>.

(V. 82) Similarly whatever other gift and whatever reward for scholarship may be made . . . (by them) the religious merit, wealth and fame are obtained.

At the monastery of the holy Nōhalēśvara there was the illustrious preceptor Aghōraśiva—

(V. 83) Sometimes living on alms and sometimes on vegetables, sometimes eating roots and sometimes subsisting on bulbous roots, seeking the supreme light of Siva free from the intense darkness of passion, he had never to suffer from the virulent poison of sensual enjoyment.

By him was the eulogy put together.

The (inhabitants of) famous Tripurī, Saubhāgyapura, Lavaṇanagara, Durlabhapura, Vimānapura . . . shall bring guarded (to the monastery?) the bull made of beautiful wood every day (at the fair?) of the god for the performance of the religious rite.

(V. 85) May this composition, which deserves praise from the wonder-struck poet Rājaśēkhara, and the afore-mentioned glorious work,<sup>2</sup> (both of) which have well-joined parts, endure till the destruction of the world!

Of the Kāyastha, the illustrious Sīruka.<sup>3</sup>

(V. 86) (This) eulogy was written by Nāī, the son of Dhīra, the writer of legal documents and was engraved by Nōnna, the son of the excellent Sūtradhāra (artisan) Saṅgama.

NO. 46; PLATE XXXVI

GURGI STONE INSCRIPTION OF KOKALLADEVA II

THIS inscription was noticed for the first time by Mr. R. D. Banerji in the Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey of India, Western Circle, for 1920-21, pp. 51 ff. The same scholar subsequently published a transcript and a translation of it in his Haihayas of Tripurī and their Monuments, pp. 122 ff., and finally edited it with a lithograph and a translation in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXII, pp. 127 ff. It is edited here from excellent estampages kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India.

The slab on which the inscription is engraved was discovered about half a century ago among the ruins of the great temple called Gurgaj at Gurgi, a village about twelve miles due east of Rewa town in the State of Vindhya Pradesh. It is now placed in the front wall of the palace at Rewa.

The inscribed slab measures about 4' 1" by 3' 4". There are forty-nine lines in all. The average size of the letters is .8". The record has suffered a good deal in its lower part

<sup>2</sup> For kīrti, a glorious work, see C. I. I., Vol. III, p. 212, n. 6. It probably refers here to the temple of Nōhalēśvara.

<sup>3</sup> Sīruka was evidently the author of the portion of the present inscription which follows verse 77. Kielhorn however, thought that he was the writer who originally wrote the eulogy of the first three princes.

<sup>4</sup> For a similar restriction, see verse 35 of the Sīrpur stone inscription of the time of Mahāśivagupta, Ep. Ind., Vol. XI, p. 193.

comprised in ll.23-46 owing to the flaking off of a large portion of the surface of the stone. In ll.28-39 especially, only a few aksharas at the right end can be read with confidence. The loss of this portion is very much to be regretted as, judging from the few preserved aksharas, it contained a description of the military exploits of the Kalachuris of Tripuri. As it is, we are left in doubt not only about the Kalachuri king during whose reign it was incised,<sup>1</sup> but also about the Śaiva ascetic who caused it to be put up.<sup>2</sup>

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet and closely resemble those of the Chandrēhē inscription of Prabōdhaśiva. The only points that call for notice are that dh in some cases shows the left limb developed as in the Kārītalāi inscription of Lakshmaṇarāja II,<sup>3</sup> but it is here joined to the right vertical, see -dhvast-āntarāy-ādhyayā in l.17. In other cases the letter does not differ from v except in the absence of the wedge at the top, and it is noteworthy that the two verticals of dhā are not joined here as is generally done in other records of the period. In one other respect<sup>4</sup> the present inscription shows a later stage, viṣṭ, in the use of the avagraha which appears for the first time in the records edited here; see -samadhayō=chchha-matayō, l.17, tasy-āspadē=gra-, l.30 and Mahēndrē=rvvudē, l.31.

The language is Sanskrit, and except for the opening obeisance to the deity, the whole record is metrically composed. There are forty-six verses in all. The inscription is composed in an artistic kāvya style. As regards orthography, the consonants preceding and following r are doubled in a few places, see -tribhuvana-, l.8, -kīrttanīyāḥ, l.9 etc; b is everywhere denoted by the sign for v, see e.g., -pravandha-, l.4; the dental s is used for the palatal ś in yasō-, l.13, and n for the anusvāra followed by the dental sibilant in -pradhvansa-, l.23 and -vansa-, l.24. In other respects the record is carefully written and incised.

The inscription falls into three parts. The first part, which comprises vv. 1-26, contains the spiritual pedigree of the Śaiva ascetic who put up the present record. After two *maṅgala śloka*s invoking the blessings of Śiva, the inscription mentions Madhumatī, the abode of the Śaiva Saiddhāntikas. In their lineage there was an ascetic named Chūḍāśiva. His disciple Prabhāvaśiva was invited by Yuvarājadēva (I), the son of Mugdharaṅga, and was placed in charge of a monastery which the latter had built at the cost of a large sum of money. His disciple was Praśāntaśiva who erected a temple of Śiva near another built by Yuvarājadēva, and installed in the shrines attached to it the images of Umā, Hara-Gaurī, Kārttikēya, Gaṇapati and Sarasvatī. He also built a monastery on the bank of the Śōṇa for the practice of Yōga, and another on the bank of the Gaṅgā in Vātāṇasī for the performance of austerities. His disciples are said to have toured in the country, imparting right knowledge to the people and receiving homage from their rulers. Praśāntaśiva's disciple, Īśānaśambhu, is next praised. He appointed his younger brother-disciple Prabōdhaśiva the head of the monastery. Verse 21 which is partly mutilated seems to refer to the construction of a temple by Prabōdhaśiva near<sup>5</sup> the

<sup>4</sup> Banerji's remark that the record contains the later form of th in which the upper loop has become open does not seem to be correct; for everywhere in this record the earlier form only is used.

<sup>5</sup> The monastery of Praśāntaśiva seems to have been mentioned here as in the Chandrēhē inscription only to define the position of the temple built by Prabōdhaśiva. It does not seem to have been repaired by him as supposed by Banerji, Ep. Ind., Vol. XXII, p. 129.

monastery built by his preceptor on the bank of the Sōṇa. These two buildings are referred to in the Chandrēhē inscription also. The next five verses are almost wholly damaged, but the few words preserved at the end of l. 30 indicate that verse 24 probably contained the name of another Śaiva ascetic who succeeded Prabōdhaśiva. The next two or three verses were devoted to his description, but they have unfortunately been too much mutilated, so that even the name of the ascetic has not been preserved. The aksharas at the end of l. 31 suggest that his fame had spread from the Mahēndra to the Arbuda mountain. Verse 26 mentions the village Sāmantapāṭaka, but in what connection it cannot be determined.

The second part of the inscription, which comprises vv. 27-34, contained a description of Kalachuri kings and their military exploits. Their family is introduced in v. 27 as ēṇānkāwāya 'the lineage of the deer-marked (moon)'. Verse 28, which mentions the defeat of a Gurjara king, probably describes Yuvarājadēva I; for, the latter is said to have conquered the north in the Viddhasālabhañjikā of his court-poet Rājaśekhara, which means that he had inflicted a defeat on the contemporary Gurjara-Pratihāra Emperor of Kanauj. The names of his successors who were eulogized in the next four verses have been lost; but verse 33 mentions the king Kōkalladēva who is doubtless the second king of that name, the great-grandson of Yuvarājadēva I. The following verse refers to his victories over a Gurjara king and the rulers of Gauḍa (Western Bengal) and Kuntala which comprised the Southern Maratha country and the adjoining Kanarese districts.<sup>1</sup>

The third part of the inscription, which commences with verse 35, records the grants which the king Kēyūrarsha made for the benefit of the god Śiva installed in the temple where the present inscription was put up, and for the support of the Śaiva ascetics who were in charge of it. The name of the god was Sōmanātha as appears from v. 42. It was also mentioned in the opening obeisance, but only the last two aksharas of it are now legible. Among the villages granted by the king, the names of the following can be made out with certainty—Sārasaḍōllaka, Vakkaḍōllaka, Rajyauddha, Nāsapuṇḍikā, Khaṭōllikā, Ābhīrapallī, Sarasvatī (which may be a river), Sāmantapāṭaka, Bhaddhachiurā, Kusumbā,<sup>2</sup> Kukkuḍiyā, Rajōgrāma, Karōḍhaka, Brahmapurī, Susiddhārthaka and Pōṇḍik. Besides these, two fields called Kavachakshētra and Nannēśvarakshētra are also mentioned in the same connection. Verse 43 expresses the hope that the provision for the maintenance (vr̥tti) of the Śaiva ascetics which was originally made by the illustrious Yuvarājadēva and was preserved by his successors may last for ever. This clearly indicates that this Yuvarājadēva, who is evidently identical with Kēyūrarsha mentioned before in v. 35, is the first king of that name. The use of the plural in connection with his successors (anantarair-nripaiḥ) in v. 43 shows that at least three kings had followed him before the time of the present record.<sup>3</sup> This is also corroborated by the fact that Kōkalladēva II is the last king mentioned in it; for we know from other records<sup>4</sup> that he was the fourth successor of Yuvarājadēva I. The present inscription, which apparently mentioned in verse 24, a successor of Prabōdhaśiva is later

<sup>1</sup> These victories were ascribed to Gāṅgēyadēva by Mr. Banerji on the ground that Gāṅgēyadēva is known to have raided Kuntala, but the record does not carry the genealogy of the Kalachuris further than Kōkalla II. Vanavāsa means 'dwelling in a forest' and has no reference to Banavāsī in North Kanara, as Banerji supposed.

<sup>3</sup> So he cannot be Yuvarājadēva II as supposed by N. P. Chakravartī. Besides, there is no evidence to show that Yuvarājadēva II also bore the biruda Kēyūrarsha.

than the Chandrēhē inscription of Prabōdhaśiva, dated K. 724 (972-3 A.C.) and may, therefore, be referred to the last quarter of the tenth century A.C.

Of the geographical names mentioned in this record, Mahēndra is evidently the well-known mountain of that name on the eastern coast. Arbuda is, of course, Mount Abu. Himālaya and Vārāṇasī are too well-known to need identification. Madhumatī has been shown to be identical with Mahuā which is now a small hamlet, one mile south of Tērahi in Madhya Bharat.<sup>1</sup> Gauḍa and Kuntala have already been identified. Of the villages granted by Yuvarājadēva, only Sārasaḍōllaka was identified by Mr. Banerji with modern Sahdol, a station on the Bilāspur-Kaṭnī section of the Bengal-Nagpur Railway, but it is far away from Gurgi. It may be Sarsi, 2 miles south of the Sōṇa and 34 miles south by west of Chandrēhē. Brahmapurī may be Bāhmangaon about seven miles south by west of Gurgi. As for Karōḍhaka there are several villages of the name Karaṇḍi or Karaṇḍia in the Rewa District, but the nearest to Gurgi is the Karaṇḍi which lies only four miles to the south-east. The other villages I am unable to identify.

Success ! Adoration to [the holy Sōma]nātha !

(Verse 1) May the self-willed moon-crested (god Śiva) living on the mountain (Kailāsa),—who made the world,—which had its multitudes of quarters covered by the best of aerial beings<sup>10</sup> terrified by the clash of the rows of peaks of the excellent crystal mountain (Kailāsa) (when it was) shaken by the movements of the mighty arms of the lord of Lañkā, —dreadful with the echoes of their cries at the thought that it was the end of the world, —increase your joy !

(V. 2) 'Nandin, who is this (lady) that has entered the abode of Paśupati?<sup>11</sup> 'I think that she is none but your ladyship'. 'This is false. I am not she. She is some-

<sup>10</sup> The reference here is to the denizens of Kailāsa, who were terrified by the shaking of the mountain, and not to mere birds as thought by Banerji.

<sup>11</sup> The verse refers to Pārvatī's jealousy of the river Gaṅgā which Śiva sheltered for a while in his matted hair. The verse is in the form of a dialogue first between Pārvatī and Nandin (Śiva's door-keeper) and next between her and Śiva who tries to conceal the Gaṅgā from his consort. For a similar dialogue between Śiva and Pārvatī, see Mudrārākṣhasa, I, 1.

one else. O Īśa! Who is seated in your matted hair?' 'You simple-minded, he is the enemy of gods who has assumed your form. See I have thrown him down before me!'<sup>1</sup> 'By what missile?'—May Śiva who was thus silenced, being vanquished by the goddess (Pārvatī) with harsh words, protect you!

(V. 3) There is in this world Madhumatī, the abode of those who are versed in the Śaiva Siddhāntas,—which contains excellent Āchāryas of noble conduct; in which the peacocks dance and shriek with joy at the untimely appearance of clouds caused by the uninterrupted mass of dark smoke of the ever-kindled (sacrificial) fires; (and) which laughs at the heavenly world with the mass of lustre of the large and resplendent jewels set on the rows of its high mansions;—

(V. 4) Where appeared the first best ascetics, whose minds were restrained by vows, (and) who taught the great and flawless doctrine of Śiva to their disciples;—whose well-known fame, having the bright lustre of nectar, even now whitens the universe, delighting the prosperous and learned men even as moonlight does the assemblage of night-lotuses.

(V. 5) In this very great succession of Śaivas there was the illustrious Chūḍāśiva, who was venerable to sages; who, with his shining lustre, was to sins what the forest fire is to dry fuel; (and) whose extremely white fame, which had arisen from the attainment of the perfection of knowledge through meditation on the feet of Śiva, roamed about inside the mansion of the three worlds.

(V. 6) His disciple was the wise sage called the illustrious Prabhāvaśiva, whose foot-stool was honoured by the mass of lustre of the crest-jewels on the heads of all kings bending (in salutation), and who deserved glorification in the three worlds.

(V. 7) Having brought him out of a natural desire, Yuvarājadēva (I), the son of the illustrious Mugdhatuṅga, who was versed in policy, made him accept a monastery, which was constructed at an enormous expense, with the object of gaining excellent fame arising out of the benefit to creatures.

(V. 8) His disciple was the sage, the illustrious Praśāntaśiva, the sole abode of the exceedingly attractive qualities, who became famous in the whole world by his faultless austerities and increasing learning.

(V. 9) Attracted by his long-accumulated austerities, the goddess of fortune, (though) eager for the bodily contact of him who was always averse to enjoyment on account of his desire to attain final emancipation, remained steadfast like an exceedingly virtuous wife, in the houses of good persons who were dear to him, when she received his order to benefit others.

(V. 10) Having obtained the support of the post of (his) charity, having received the sprinkling of the water of (his) shining learning, and being protected all round by the force of (his) extending austerities, the wish-fulfilling tree of his fame grew up in course of time, which has completely filled the cavity of the vase-like universe.

(V. 11) To the north of the temple,<sup>2</sup> resembling the shining peak of the Kailāsa mountain, which was caused to be built by the illustrious Yuvarājadēva (I), he erected a temple of Īśvara, well-known on the earth, which vies with the summit of the Sumēru (mountain) (in altitude), which causes wonder to all the three worlds, (and) which serves as a flight of steps to his fame rising to heaven.

(V. 12) The learned one, whose great fame was well-known, installed Umā, Siva united with Umā, and the six-faced (Kārttikēya) in the shrines attached to the temple and also Gaṇapati and Sarasvatī at the gate.

(V. 13) He, who had satisfied the desire for wealth of hosts of suppliants with gifts of gold which had emerged (purified) by burning, caused to be built another abode for the siddhas on the bank of the Sōṇa; having entered which, the tranquil Yōgins, who have destroyed the impediments of mental anxieties by (the performance of) vows and who have clear minds, having attained success in meditation, reach the goal of final emancipation.

(V. 14) For the absolute rest of those who are intent on living in a holy place, he, the sage, caused to be built the (well-known) abode for performing austerities on the bank of the heavenly river (Gaṅgā); having resorted to which, those who live in Vārāṇasī (Banaras), devoted to the worship of Mahēśvara, consider the ocean of worldly existence, though extensive, to be as small in size as a puddle made by a cow's foot.

(V. 15) Seated in a solitary place he,—who had mastered (all) the āsanas, who felt the inner joy with his steady mind absorbed in the meditation of Śiva seated in the midst of the lotus of the heart, and who was fond of making gifts,—passed his days in the company of meritorious persons who were adept in the philosophy of the Pāñchārthika<sup>1</sup> system and were capable of examining (other systems).

(V. 16) Extremely resplendent by their own majesty like the multitudes of the rays of the sun, his disciples,—who day by day arouse those who are steeped in ignorance (as the rays awaken those enveloped by darkness); whose fame is due to the benefit they confer on the people by their gift of knowledge (as that of the rays is due to the light they give); whose commands are borne by kings on their heads (as the splendour of the rays is borne by mountains on their peaks),—move about (among people) being honoured by the best of sages.

(V. 17) His disciple was the illustrious Īśānaśambhu, even as Paraśurāma was of Śiva,—(he) whose fame was sung by all great poets, (and) whose lotus-like feet were reddened by the rays of jewels on the rows of heads of all kings.

(V. 18) Having conquered . . . . . he, who removed the misery of poverty, made the goddess of fortune become an object of enjoyment to all suppliants, and [devoted himself to] right knowledge, because it is capable of destroying the multitude of the bonds of worldly existence.

(V. 19) Of him, who was a lion in the act of destroying the rutting elephant that is the Kali age; who is the fore-head mark of the illustrious Mattamayūra lineage, and the store of all learning . . . . .; (who is) the source of all excellences in this world . . . . . the assembly of learned persons . . . . .-[what has not been observed?].

(V. 20) Having made over his office (as the head of the monastery) to his younger brother, the illustrious Prabōdhaśiva, he . . . . . [attained the world of Śiva] which he had won by his devotion.

(V. 21) By him who was the store-house of charity, austerities, and meditation . . . . . [was built a maṭha near the temple] erected by his teacher . . . . . which [the celestial beings] do not cross for fear of obstruction in the attainment of the desired siddhis.

<sup>1</sup> The Pīśupata system is called pāñchārthika, because it treats of the five subjects, kārya effect, kāraṇa cause, yōga union of the soul with Īśvara, vidhi rites, and duḥkhānta the cessation of misery. See Sarvadarśanaśaṅgraha, Ch. VI.

(V. 22) And a well [was dug by him] . . . . . The host of suppliants also having obtained abundant wealth which they had not (even) longed for before . . . . .

(V. 23) . . . . . caused to be built by his good work . . . . .

(V. 24) Thereafter, the high-souled one . . . . . in his place . . . . .

(V. 25) . . . . . His (fame) . . . . . on high on the Mahendra (and) Arbuda (mountains) . . . . . was able . . . . .

(V. 26) Sāmantapāṭaka . . . . .

(V. 27) In the lineage of the moon . . . . . having snatched the well-known sword by force . . . . .

(V. 28) Having vanquished the lord of Gūrjaras . . . . .

(V. 29) . . . . . the protection of the family . . . . .

(V. 30) . . . . . he, the dust of whose feet was reddened by the jewels on the heads of feudatories . . . . . the herds of elephants.

(V. 31) . . . . . was born the valiant one . . . . . seeing whose beauty even as drawn in a picture . . . . . the vow of heroes.

(V. 32) . . . . . [From him was born] . . . . . the king who was the store-house of valour, the terrible fighter . . . . . who was to the poets what a cloud is to the kadamba trees . . . . .

(V. 33) From him was born the king Kōkalladēva (II) of matchless prowess, whose (beautiful) form was praised by the god of love, (who was) the lord of the best . . . . .

(V. 34) The Gūrjara lord enters the Himālaya, being deprived of power, the king of Gauḍa lies in the watery fort of the sea, the lord of Kuntala lives in the forest . . . . . this I consider to be the ornament (of his prowess).

(V. 35) The king Keyūraravsha himself offered by an inscribed [charter] the famous abode . . . . . to the ascetic possessed of religious merit whom he himself worshipped . . . . .

(V. 36-7) The villages Pakka- . . . . . and also Sārasaḍōllaka Vakkaḍōllaka and Rajyauddha . . . . . Nāsapuṇḍikā . . . . . -pura, Khaṭōllikā, -nakalā, Ābhīrapallī, . . . . . (and) Sarasvatī.

(V. 38-40) The twelfth part of these and the Kavachakshētra, and also Sāmantapāṭaka (and) Vaṭa- . . . . . Tallapaṭī, Bhaddhachiurā, [Kusumbā] and Kukkuḍiyā, together with Rajōgrāma, [the king] gave as a grant to the great [ascetic] who had completely mastered the (Saiva) Siddhantas.

(V. 41) The king gave through devotion the whole city crowded with citizens . . . . . as a grant.

(V. 42) (He) gave to the Śiva (called) Sōmanātha (the villages) Karōḍhaka, Brahmapurī, Susiddhārthaka, Pōṇḍikā (and) the Nannēśvarakshētra.

(V. 43) May this provision for the maintenance of Śaiva ascetics, made by the illustrious Yuvarājadēva (I) and preserved by the succeeding rulers, endure till the end of the kalpa!

(V. 44) The praiseworthy Madu, the son of the illustrious Trayivardhana of the Bhāradvāja family, composed this praśasti in sweet words.

(V. 45) The intelligent scribe Śivanāga, the son of Avvōka, wrote it on the stone in clear letters.

(V. 46) It has been inscribed by the Sutradhāra, the skilled artist Mādhava, the son of Mahēśvara . . . . .

Success!

MAKUNDPUR STONE INSCRIPTION OF GANGEYADEVA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 772

THIS inscription was brought to public notice by General Cunningham's Assistant Mr. J. D. Beglar who found a rubbing of it in the Asiatic Society's collection. He called attention to its date<sup>1</sup> in connection with the description of the ruins at Makundpur, a village about nine miles south by west of Rewa, in the State of Vindhya Pradesh. He could not, however, find the inscription when he visited the place in 1874-75. The record was next twice referred to by Dr. Kielhorn<sup>2</sup> who, drawing attention to its date, pointed out the desirability of examining it. Its impressions were not, however, accessible to him, when he wrote his exhaustive articles on the epoch of the Kalachuri-Chēdi era<sup>3</sup>, and none has noticed the inscription since then. At my request Dr. N. P. Chakravarti, the Government Epigraphist, kindly visited Makundpur in 1931. He was fortunately successful in tracing the inscribed slab, and supplied me with excellent estampages from which the inscription is edited here.

The record is incised on a slab lying on the ruins of a small temple<sup>4</sup> situated to the north-west of Rūpasāgar, a large tank, at Makundpur. The inscribed surface measures 3' 2" in length and nearly 5" in height. The record has suffered considerably at the top, about half a dozen aksharas and the mātrās on the top of some more on the right-hand side of the first line being wholly or partially damaged.

The inscription consists of three lines of which the last two are shorter than the first. The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet of the eleventh century A.C. Most of the letters have a wedge or an inverted acute-angled triangle at the top. It is noteworthy that the left limb of ś is not joined to the right-hand vertical; ṭh, though still without a vertical, has, for the first time in the records edited here, a horizontal line at the top, and h has a fully drawn tail. The language is Sanskrit. Attention may be drawn to the incorrect causal participle ghatāpita, l. 3, formed on the model of kārāpita which figures in earlier records, and the wrong gender in dharmam=idani, l. 2. As regards orthography, the sign for v is used to denote b in Vudha-, l. 1, and the dental s substituted for ś in Jalaśayana-, l. 2. The consonant preceding and following r is reduplicated in Sūtradhāra-, l. 3 and dharmma-, l. 2 respectively.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Gāṅgēyadēva of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty. He is mentioned here with the title Mahārha-mahā-mahattaka which is rarely, if ever, seen to be assumed by rulers of the eminence and power of Gāṅgēyadēva. Owing to the mutilation of the Piawan rock inscription this is now the only known extant record of the reign of Gāṅgēyadēva. The object of the inscription is to record that the Srāshṭhin Dāmōdara, the ornament of the family of Gṛihapati, caused a temple of Jalaśayana<sup>5</sup> (Vishṇu reposing on water) to be constructed. The work was executed by the Sūtradhāra Sāmbhūka.

The chief interest of the inscription lies in its date, which is given with full details in line 1 as Saṁvat 772, the 12th tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika, a Wednesday. Beglar called attention to the fact that from the form of the characters, the date cannot be referred to the Vikrama Saṁvat. He also suggested that it probably referred to the Chēdi

<sup>4</sup> This may be 'the Vaishṇavic temple' which, according to Beglar, supplied materials for a large Śaiva temple nearby. See C. A. S. I. R., Vol. XIII, p. 4.

<sup>5</sup> This form of the deity is probably identical with what is commonly called Śeṣhaśūyin 'Vishṇu sleeping on his couch of the serpent Śēsha'. As the temple was situated near the large tank of Rūpasāgar, it was appropriately dedicated to this form.

era,—an opinion to which Dr. Kielhorn lent his support. This is no doubt the correct view, for the Banaras grant of Gāṅgēyadēva's son Karṇa which was made on the first anniversary of Gāṅgēya's death is dated in the Kalachuri or Chēdi year 793 i.e., only twenty-one years after the date of the present record. According to the epoch of 247-48 A.C., the month of Kārttika should fall in 1019 A.C. if the Kalachuri year 772 was current and in 1020 A.C. if it was expired. But in 1019 A.C. the twelfth tithi of the bright fortnight of that month ended 11 h. after mean sunrise on Tuesday (the 13th October), while in 1020 A.C. the same tithi ended 5 h. after mean sunrise on Monday (the 31st October). In neither case was the tithi connected with Wednesday in any way. Even the epoch of 248-49 A.C. which suits earlier dates of the era will not do; for in 1021 A.C. which, according to it, should correspond to the expired Kalachuri year 772, the tithi fell on Friday (the 20th October). The date is, therefore, irregular. But of the three equivalents mentioned above, the first, viz., Tuesday, the 13th October 1019 A.C. comes nearest to it. Overlooking the discrepancy of one day, the date of the present inscription may, therefore, be taken to correspond, for the current Kalachuri year 772, to the 13th October, 1019 A.C. This is one of the few dates in current years. It shows, again, that the Kalachuri year must have commenced on some day before the twelfth tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika.

Success! (In) the year 772 on Wednesday, the 12th (lunar) day of the bright (fortnight) of Kārttika, during the reign of the Mahārha-mahā-mahattaka<sup>10</sup> the illustrious [Mahārāja] Gāṅgēyadēva, the Srēshṭhin (merchant) Dāmōdara, an ornament of the family of Grahapati,<sup>11</sup> has caused (this) temple of (Vishṇu) who reposes on water, to be constructed. This is a pious work. (May there be) bliss and good fortune! Success!

<sup>5</sup> Only the first akshara of this word is partly seen. I am not certain about the following three aksharas.

<sup>6</sup> Of the five aksharas in this royal name, traces of the first are clearly seen, the third akshara ya is completely damaged, and only the mātrās over ng and d have been broken off, while the last akshara is quite clear. There is, on the whole, little doubt about the correctness of the reading given above.

<sup>11</sup> Grahapati, lit. the lord of planets, signifies the moon. The expression would then mean an ornament of the lunar race which would scarcely be appropriate in the case of a merchant. Perhaps Grahapati is a mistake for Grihapati, but even then it seems to be used here as a personal name rather than in the usual sense of 'a house-holder', or 'the head of a village.'

BANARAS PLATES OF KARNA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 793

THE inscription on these plates was first brought to notice by Captain Wilford who described it as follows in the Asiatic Researches, Vol. IX, page 108:—

“A few years ago (in 1801) this grant was found at the bottom of an old well filled with rubbish in the old fort of Banaras. It is engraven upon two brass plates, joined by a ring, to which is affixed the Imperial seal. It is of the same size nearly and in the same shape with that found at Mongir. The writing is also the same or at least without any material deviation. The Imperial seal is about 3 inches broad: on it, in bas-relievo, is Pārvatī with four arms, sitting with her legs crossed; two elephants are represented, one on each side of her, with their trunks uplifted. Below is the bull, Nandi, in a reclining posture, and before him is a basket. Between Pārvatī and the bull is written Srī-Karṇadēva. The grant is dated in the second year of his new year and also of his reign answering to the Christian year 192 . . . The ancestors of Srī-Karṇadēva mentioned in the grant were, first his father Gāṅgēyadēva, with the title Vijaya-kaṇṭaka; he died in a loathsome dungeon. He was the son of Kōkalladēva, whose father was Lakshmaṇarājadēva.”<sup>1</sup> The plates were subsequently edited in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 297 ff., with lithographs, but without a translation, by Dr. Kielhorn, who gives the following account of their subsequent history:<sup>2</sup>—

“The plates, thus described by Captain Wilford were lost for a long time; but they were rediscovered about 1862, when through the kindness of Mr. Griffith, then Principal of the Banaras College, Sir A. Cunningham received an impression, together with a transcript which had been prepared by one of the students of the College. Both were made over to Dr. F.E. Hall, who now at my request has placed them at my disposal and has thus enabled me to publish the text of the inscription, the original of which has again been lost sight of. Fortunately, the impression, which has thus come into my hands, has been prepared with great care, so that the loss of the original plates will be less felt than would have been the case otherwise.” As the plates appear to have been lost forever, they are edited here from the facsimiles accompanying Dr. Kielhorn’s article in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 297 ff.

The plates, which are two in number, appear to be 1' 4" broad by 11½" high each and are inscribed on one side only. They have each a hole about .6" in diameter for the ring which held them together. The letters appear to have been deeply incised. The inscription consists of forty-eight lines, of which twenty-eight are inscribed on the first and the remaining twenty on the second. The writer began with closely packed lines until he came to the middle of the second plate when he found that he had more than sufficient space at his disposal. He, therefore, left more space between his lines and wrote letters of a larger size especially in lines 38-40. The writing is in a state of good preservation.

<sup>1</sup> There are several mis-statements in this account. The figure on the seal must be taken to be that of Lakshmi. What is described as a basket before the Nandi is probably an incense pot. There must have been another like it behind the bull; see the seals of the Goharwa and British Museum plates (Nos. 50 and 54). The seal of Jayasimhadēva (Pl. LII) shows a handle to these pots, which makes it plain that they are not drums as conjectured by Hultsch (Ep. Ind., Vol. XI, p. 140). The legend had probably a visarga at the end as in the legend of other cognate plates. The mistake about the second regnal year was probably caused by the word dvitīyāni referring to the tithi in L.40. As regards Wilford’s reading of the date, Cunningham has remarked, ‘I suspect that the date was read by Wilford as 193 and that he afterwards forgot that he had obtained it from the plates,’ (C. A. S. I. R., Vol. IX, p. 82). Vijaya-kaṇṭaka is shown by Kielhorn to be a mistake for vijaya-kaṭaka ‘a victorious camp’. Finally, the misconception about Gāṅgēyadēva’s dying in a loathsome dungeon was probably caused by a wrong interpretation of v. 25. See, however, Kielhorn’s remarks in Ep. Ind., Vol. II, p. 302, n. 38.

The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet. Some letters show considerable development, approximating to their forms in the modern Nāgarī alphabet, though they are still in the stage of transition. The initial ē, for instance, shows, for the first time in the records edited here, its left curve separated from the right vertical in ēkasmin-, l. 28; elsewhere it is joined to the latter, see ēk-aika-, l. 11; kh has its left member fully developed, see khyāta-, l. 13, but notice Nat-ākhyā-, l. 10 in which it shows the older form; ñ appears with a dot for the first time in bhujāgam-a-, l. 11 and bhrū-bhānīga-, l. 15, but without it in -jaṅgamā-, l. 31 and -Gāṅgēyadēvasya-, l. 40. Similarly th has its upper loop open in Dāsarathir-, l. 15 and -nāthā-, l. 23, but in other cases it shows its older form, see yasy-ārtha- and -tathā, both in l. 8; ph has now a tail added to the loop on the right, see phalam, l. 45; s in -sārthi-, l. 31 has the same form as in the modern Nāgarī, but in other cases it has the older form. The subscript ṛ has the same form as when it is independent, see Karṇa and iv-āvatirṇṇā-, both in l. 29. Besides, owing to the carelessness of the writer or the engraver several letters appear in varying forms, see, for instance, bh in bhāva-, l. 1, and -prabhā-, l. 2; y in dharmāya, l. 7 and Gāṅgēya-, l. 28; g in yōgāya, l. 7 and -gamanām-, l. 18 and r in kārunya-, l. 20 and param-, l. 32. In some cases it is difficult to distinguish between bh and h as well as between v and dh.

The language is Sanskrit throughout, except in verse 12 which is in Prakrit. The first thirty-two lines which contain the eulogistic portion of the record are in verse, with the exception of the introductory ōm namaḥ Sivāya, l. 1 and the words kim-v-āparēṇa, l. 13. This part of the record is written in the usual kāvya style. The description in vv. 16 and 20, which is based on slesha or double entendre, is cleverly done. It is noteworthy that v. 18 is taken from the play Bālabhārata (called also Prachandapāṇḍava) of Rājeshēkhara.<sup>1</sup> The formal part of the grant begins in l. 32 and is followed by six benedictive and imprecatory verses. The last line contains the date expressed in numerical figures. The record is very carelessly written. See, for instance, the mistake of concord in yasy-ārtha-saktō matib-, l. 8, the wrong form Trikalīṅg y-ādhipati- for Trikalīṅg-ādhipati-, l. 34, the use of the short for the long vowel in -bhupālē in l. 9 and vice versa in -dhanānū-samdhita-, l. 7, the use of ē for ī in prathēta-, l. 29 and the reverse of it in -sārthishv-, l. 31, the wrong elision of the final consonant in sthir-āsi for sthir-āsīt and of visarga in Lakshmi for Lakshmī-, both in l. 22. These and other mistakes, too many to be enumerated, make it very difficult to restore the original correct readings. The following orthographical peculiarities may also be noticed:—s is used for ś almost throughout except in the case of śrī, see Sivāya for Sivāya, l. 1, -āslēsha for -āślēsha, l. 3 etc.; v is employed for b in sad-vrahmaṇē, l. 1, vavamāha, l. 4 and so forth; y takes the place of j in tasy-ānyō for tasy-ānyō, l. 22, -yāyata for -jāyata, l. 23 and vice versa in dur-jjasā- for dur-yyasā-, l. 27; n stands for ṇ in ānṛīya, l. 8 and parjjanaishīt for paryyanaishīt, l. 10; the anusvāra is wrongly changed to m in kim-v-āparēṇa l. 13 and to n in -vansa, l. 6 and -vansē, l. 45; ksh is written for khy in saukshakṛit, l. 7 and kshātani, l. 27 and ky for ksh in kaukyēyakō-, l. 26; the vowel ri is used for ri in nistrimsatā, l. 21 and Trikalīṅg y-, l. 34; finally, the consonant following r is repeated in many cases, see Kārttavīryā-, l. 3, Karṇā-, l. 29 etc.

The plates were issued by Karṇa of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty, from his victorious camp at Prayāga. After the customary verse in praise of Brahman, commences the genealogy of the donor. From the famous king Kārtavīrya who subdued Rāvāna, were descended the Haihayas. An ornament of their family was Kōkkala who gave protection to Bhōja, Vallabharāja, Śrī-Harsha, the king of Chitrakūṭa, and the king Śaṅkaragaṇa. This Kōkkala is evidently identical with Kōkalla I mentioned in the Bilhāri stone inscription.<sup>1</sup> The first two kings mentioned here as having received help from him are also named in the Bilhāri inscription and are plainly identical with Bhōja I of the Imperial Gurjara-Pratihāra dynasty of Kanauj and Kṛishṇa II of the Rāshtrakūṭa family who, from Rāshtrakūṭa records, is known to have married Kōkalla's daughter. Śrī-Harsha, the king of Chitrakūṭa, is the well-known king of that name in the Chandēlla dynasty, whose kingdom included that hill fort. Finally, Śaṅkaragaṇa is not Kōkalla's own son as was supposed by Dr. Kielhorn, but the first prince of that name, the father of Guṇāmbhōdhidēva, mentioned in the Kahla plates of Sōḍhadēva.<sup>2</sup> As Guṇāmbhōdhidēva was a contemporary of Bhōja I, it is not unlikely that his father may have received some help from Kōkalla I in the early part of the latter's reign.

Verse 8 states that Kōkalla married the princess Naṭṭā of the Chandēlla family. By her he had a son named Prasiddhadhavalā who is evidently identical with the Mugdhatuṅga of the Bilhāri inscription.<sup>3</sup> A Prakrit verse introduced here states that he conquered the Pāli country to provide for the great princes who would be born thereafter in his family. As already shown, this statement is corroborated by the Bilhāri inscription which mentions that Mugdhatuṅga took the country of Pāli from the lord of Kōsala.

The record next mentions Prasiddhadhavalā's son Bālaharsha who is described in general terms. His name is omitted in the Bilhāri inscription, either because his reign was short or because he was a collateral. He was succeeded by his younger brother Yuvarājādēva I who is said to have attained the position of Paramēśvara (Emperor), through his devotion to Śiva. He was followed by his son Lakshmaṇarāja (II). As already observed, verse 18, which occurs in his description, is borrowed from the Bālabhārata, a Sanskrit play of Rājaśekhara. Lakshmaṇarāja's son and successor was Śaṅkaragaṇa (III) who was followed by his younger brother Yuvarājādēva II. The latter's son was Kōkalladēva II who was succeeded by his own son Gāṅgēyadēva. The record finally mentions Gāṅgēyadēva's son and successor Karṇa who granted the present plates. The eulogy of these princes is merely conventional and contains no reference to historical events.

The present record gives Karṇa the Imperial titles Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara. He is also called here the lord of Trikaliṅga and a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, who meditated on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmadēva. Vāmadēva is clearly identical with Vāmarājādēva whose name is mentioned with the same Imperial titles in the Saugor stone inscription of the time of Śaṅkaragaṇa I.<sup>4</sup> Karṇa made the present grant at Prayāga after bathing in the Vēṇī and worshipping Śiva on the occasion of the sanivatsara-śrāddha of his father, Gāṅgēyadēva, which he performed at Prayāga.<sup>5</sup> The object of the grant was the village Srusī situated in the bhūmi (sub-division) of Kāśī.<sup>6</sup> The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Viśvarūpa, son of Nārāyaṇa, grandson of Vāmana and great-grand son of Āmaha<sup>1</sup> who belonged to the Kauśika gōtra with the pravaras Auddā-laka,<sup>2</sup> Dēvarāta and Viśvāmitra, who had emigrated from Vēsāla. The date of the śrāddha is given, in line 40, as Saturday, the second tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna and that of the charter, in the last line, as Monday, the 9th tithi of the dark fortnight of Phālguna in the year 793. The latter tithi and the year are expressed in numerical figures only.

As Dr. Fleet has shown from his calculation of the date of Karṇa's Goharwa plates, this śrāddha was performed on the first anniversary of Gāṅgēyadēva's death and this view is also confirmed by the wording of the grant.<sup>3</sup> From other Kalachuri records<sup>4</sup> we know that Gāṅgēya died at the foot of the holy banyan tree at Prayāga. Karṇa seems, therefore, to have especially gone to Prayāga to perform the first annual śrāddha of his father at the holy place where he had died. The dates mentioned in this inscription, like those in other Kalachuri records, must of course be referred to the Kalachuri era. Though no year is mentioned in connection with the first date, it is probably identical with that of the second; for, it is not likely that the issuing of the plates was delayed by more than a few days or months at most. Of these two dates, the second is quite regular; for according to the epoch of 247-48 A.C., the ninth tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Phālguna in the expired year 793 ended 18 hours after mean sunrise on Monday, the corresponding Christian date being the 18th January 1042 A.C. The date of the śrāddha, however, if it refers to the same Kalachuri year as it evidently does, is irregular; for the second tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Phālguna in that year commenced 5 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on Sunday (the 10th January 1042 A.C.) and ended 7 h. 10 m. after mean sunrise next day.<sup>5</sup> It was not, thus, connected with Saturday in any way. This date, therefore, appears to be irregular. Dr. Kielhorn, however, found by calculation that the same tithi of the previous month (viz., the pūrṇimānta Māgha) was current at sunrise on Saturday, the 12th December 1041 A.C. He, therefore, supposed that the śrāddha was really performed on the second tithi of the dark half of Māgha, but 'the writer of the grant, who cannot be absolved of carelessness in other respects, wrongly put down in l. 40 the month in which he was writing the grant'. Such an explanation is not impossible and other cases of a similar type can easily be cited.<sup>6</sup> But this involves the supposition that there was an interval of more than a month between the making of the grant and the recording of it. Some scholars have, therefore, attempted to explain away the irregularity of the present date in other ways.

Dr. Fleet thought that the mistake lay in the week-day (or else in the tithi) rather than in the month,<sup>7</sup> but he offered no explanation of it. Rai Bahadur Hiralal, on the other hand, suggested that though Gāṅgēya died on the second tithi of the dark half of Phālguna, and hence the śrāddha must be performed on that date, in the year 793 it fell on a Sunday, which is not an auspicious day for such ceremonies. It was, therefore, per-

formed on the day before and while dviṭīyā, the anniversary day, could not be changed, it had to be associated with the week-day on which the ceremonies actually took place.<sup>1</sup> This explanation also does not appear to be convincing; because, there is no authority in the Dharmasāstras for changing the tithi for the performance of a śrāddha, even if it falls on an inauspicious day. We must, therefore, seek some other explanation of this irregularity.

It seems to me that the date of the śrāddha was really the second tithi of the dark half of Phālguna. As shown by Dr. Kielhorn, in the Kalachuri year 793 it was connected with the sunrise of Monday, but as the afternoon is preferred to the forenoon for the performance of a śrāddha<sup>2</sup>, Karṇa must have performed the śrāddha of his father in the afternoon of the preceding day, i.e., Sunday, the 10th January 1042 A.C. when the second tithi was current. As we have seen before, this was the first anniversary of Gāṅgēyadēva's death. The Smṛitis lay down two or three śrāddhas which are to be performed before the śrāddha on the first anniversary of a relative's death.<sup>3</sup> The ceremonies are, therefore, usually commenced one or two days before the day of the first anniversary. Karṇa also seems to have done the same. At the time of the ūnābdika śrāddha on the day preceding the annual śrāddha, i.e., on Saturday, the 9th January 1042 A.C. he seems to have made a saṅkalpa about the grant. On the next day he performed the first annual or saṁvatsara-śrāddha. The grant was thus made by Karṇa on Saturday in connection with the saṁvatsara-śrāddha, which fell on the second tithi of the dark half of Phālguna. The writer of the grant has, by mistake, coupled Saturday, when the grant was actually made, with the tithi of the first annual śrāddha which was really performed the next day. The foregoing discussion will show that Gāṅgēyadēva died on Phālguna va. di. 2 of the Kalachuri year 792, corresponding to the 22nd January 1041 A.C.

As for the geographical names mentioned in the present grant, Dr. Kielhorn at first identified the river Vēṇī in which Karṇa had bathed before making the grant with the Waingāṅgā of Madhya Pradesh.<sup>4</sup> Later on, however, he corrected himself and identified it with the confluence of the Gaṅgā and the Yamunā with the subterranean Sarasvatī at Allahabad.<sup>5</sup> The village Vēsāla, from which the donee hailed, is plainly Vaiśālī which figures prominently in Buddhist literature. Archæological excavation has identified it with Basarh in the Muzaffarpur District, Bihar.<sup>6</sup> Prayāga, where the śrāddha was performed, is of course Allahabad. As for Srusī, it is probably identical with Sursi (long. 82° 52', East and lat. 25° 12', North) in the Mirzapur District, 9 miles north of Chunār.<sup>7</sup> It is stated that the village was situated in the sub-division of Kāśī, modern Banaras, and it is noteworthy that Sursi is just outside the southern boundary of the Banaras District. It may also be noted that the plates were found at the bottom of a well in Banaras which shows that the donee was a resident of the place. Karṇa seems to have specially invited him to Prayāga for the performance of the śrāddha.

<sup>3</sup> These are the ūnābdika, which according to some is performed one day before, and the sapīṇḍīkaraṇa and the ābdika (also called saṁvatsara-vimōkṣa), which are performed on the anniversary day. Some authorities identify the sapīṇḍīkaraṇa and ābdika śrāddhas. See Hemādri's Chaturvargachintāmaṇi, Parisēsha khaṇḍa, pp. 294 ff; Nirṇayasindhu (Nirṇayasāgar ed.), p. 427.

TRANSLATION

Success! Ōm! Adoration to Siva!

(Verse 1) Adoration to that reality Brahman, which is attributeless, all-pervasive, eternal and auspicious, the ultimate cause (of the universe) (and) supreme light conceivable by the mind!

(V. 2) That which, though highest and changeless, appears in two forms,<sup>13</sup>—the light which has the refulgence of intelligence; from which in the form of the sun there shine forth waves such as the days<sup>14</sup>,—from it there sprang forth the venerable mind-born unnecessary. But this was the śrāddha on the first anniversary of the death of Gāṅgēyadēva, which is called संवत्सरश्राद्ध. Subsequent annual śrāddhas are called प्रतिशंवत्सरिकश्राद्धा.

<sup>11</sup> Read राजसुयज्ञतेन च.

<sup>13</sup> These may be the male and the female. Compare द्विधा कृत्वात्मनो देहमर्घेन पुरुषोऽभवत् । अर्घेन नारी

॥ Manuṣṛiti, ch. I, v. 32.

<sup>14</sup> The Śabdakalpadruma gives bhāvara in the sense of 'a day' and cites the work Rājagirghaṇṭa as its authority.

Manu, the repository of all knowledge, from whom proceeded this entire creation possessed of guṇas<sup>1</sup> through male and female (creatures).

(V. 3) There was the king, the divine and illustrious Kārtavīrya, the ornament of the earth,—who threw into bondage Rāvaṇa who had propitiated Īśa (Śiva) by making the terrified daughter (Pārvatī) of the snow-mountain embrace him when he (Rāvaṇa) lifted up the mountain Kailāsa with ease, (and) who was greatly enraged when his offerings to the three-eyed (Śiva) were washed away by the stream of the greatly flooded Rēvā which was turned back by the suddenly placed dam of his (i.e., Kārtavīrya's) mighty arms.<sup>2</sup>

(V. 4) Being frightened by his frown, kings (of the countries) extending as far as Kailāsa, the slopes on the tops of whose summits are dug up by Śiva's bull, and as far as the eastern ocean which has a string of matchless and large pearls in the form of the celestial river (i.e., the Gaṅgā), (and) again as far as the southern ocean which has a shining peerless jewel<sup>3</sup> and a parting line of hair, viz. the bridge (of Rāma), adhere steadfastly to affliction.

(V. 5) The lords of kings, who were born in his race, became famous on the earth as the Haihayas. An ornament of their family was the illustrious Kōkalla (I)<sup>4</sup> who kindled the fire of anguish in the minds of his enemies; whose pleasures were linked with the wealth of religious contemplation; who always made good people happy; (and) who was dear (to all) as his majesty was marked by all good qualities.

(V. 6) Day by day he duly reflected on the śāstras for (the knowledge of) religion and union (with God),—(he) whose mind was fond of wealth (only) for religious and charitable works (and) for the benefit of others; who was devoted to charity to pay off the debt he owed for being brought up in a noble family; and who ultimately reached the path of beatitude through application to knowledge.

(V. 7) His hand afforded protection to Bhōja, the king Vallabha, the illustrious Harsha who was the lord of Chittrakūṭa, and the king Śaṅkaragaṇa.

(V. 8) As Indra married Śachī, Upēndra (Vishṇu) Kamalā (Lakshmi), the moon-crested god (Śiva) the daughter of the mountain (i.e., Pārvatī), even so did he espouse the good-natured queen Natṭā, born in the Chandēlla family.

(V. 9) For the establishment of good order among the people, he begat on her a prince endowed with great prowess, who vanquished (his) enemies, possessed of haughty arrogance, and who was the god of love to ladies of fully-developed and compact breasts.

(V. 10) The king was well-known in all the three worlds by (his) name Dhavala with Prasiddha prefixed (to it),<sup>5</sup>—who, in order to bear the very heavy yoke (of governing the earth), made other kings lend their (helping) hands<sup>6</sup> (i.e., exactd tribute from them).

(V. 11) By making over constantly serpents one by one to the Eagle, (Śesha), the lord of serpents, caused (his own) humiliation. The lord of gods (i.e., Indra) lost his

<sup>6</sup> There is a play on the verb karadī-chakāra. Prasiddhadhavalā made kings pay taxes for carrying on the government of the earth, as he would have taken their help to bear a heavy yoke.

character by having intercourse with Ahalyā in season. This king (on the other hand) became the resort of proper conduct, adorable in all the three worlds.

(V. 12) Why say (anything) else?

'In this family there will be men highly precious on account of their greatness in this world'—Thinking so, he took possession of (the country of) Pālī.<sup>1</sup>

(V. 13) His high-souled son, Bālaharsha of noble birth, whose deeds are well-known, and whose arms resembling the trunks of the quarter-elephants stretched to (his) knees, became the lord of the earth, having destroyed all hostile kings. By resorting to him, who followed the practices of the Kṛita age out of his love for good conduct, the three (purushārthas),<sup>2</sup> giving up their mutual hostility and doing away with the host of their enemies (i.e., passions), found a stable resting place.

(V. 14) 'Blessed was here the son of Daśaratha (i.e., Rāma) alone, who had—what else?—an enemy in the ten-faced (Rāvaṇa) for (enjoying) the festivity of fighting. Fie on us, who have routed all (our) enemies by a (mere) frown!—Thus did he blame himself out of love for fighting.

(V. 15) Of him, who was Yudhishthira, being solely devoted to truth, there was a younger brother (named) Yuvarājadēva (I), endowed with well-known might of arms, a second Arjuna in the Kali age, the pre-eminent bow-man in exterminating warriors in the army of his invincible foes as Arjuna was in slaughtering those in the army of Duryōdhana.<sup>3</sup>

(V. 16) Having (acquired) knowledge suitable for bearing the burden of the earth, having a mind (lit., body) fond of the Vēdas, sending his advancing foes along the path of heaven, and leading his powerful army, famous in the world, which marched by several routes, he, through his devotion to Śiva, became actually an Emperor (or Śiva<sup>4</sup> incarnate, who is possessed of a body which is fond of serpents capable of bearing the burden of the earth, who sends his foes along the path of heaven and bears on high the river Gaṅgā that flows in several streams<sup>5</sup>).

(V. 17) From him was (born) Lakshmaṇarājadēva (II) through the religious merit of the people,—(he) who established order (in this world), and in whom the people, having obtained a (righteous) king like Dharma,<sup>6</sup> became happy for a long time.

(V. 18) He was a treasure of truth, the path for fortune (won) by conciliation and prowess,—who, liberal and kind as he was, obtained fame and political wisdom. Meritorious as he was by compassion, he had this slight blemish that he did not discriminate between the worthy and the unworthy even when he was giving away all his property.

(V. 19) From him was born the illustrious Śaṅkaragaṇadēva (III), the ornament of the expanse of the whole world. While he was ruling over the earth, even Kali fled away, one does not know where.

(V. 20) (Under his rule) (only) the sword was nistrinśa (measuring more than thirty fingers) (none else being nistrinśa or devoid of compassion), (only) grey hair was curly (none else

<sup>4</sup> The other meaning of Paramēśvara, viz., 'Śiva' is also intended; for, as shown below the adjectival expressions are so worded as to describe both an Emperor and Śiva. In the former alternative bbū-bbāra-kshama-drik is to be separated from śruti-praṇayinīm and construed with Paramēśvaraḥ; in the latter drik-śruti means a serpent. There is also a play on the word vābinī which means here (1) an army and (2) a river.

<sup>5</sup> The Gaṅgā is called tri-pathagā because it flows in heaven, on the earth and in the nether regions.

being crooked), and (only) the wheels of the chariot had aritva (i.e., had spokes) (there being aritva or hostility nowhere else), (and) (only) wind blew where it liked (but none else acted in a self-willed manner<sup>1</sup>).

(V. 21) His younger brother was Yuvarājadēva (II) the lord of the earth, born of a warlike race; being bathed with the water of the sharp edge<sup>2</sup> of whose sword, even the fickle goddess of fortune became steady.

(V. 22) His charity was limited (only) by the multitude of his suppliants, and his prowess (only) by the victory over (his) brave (adversary); but to that king's fame and accumulation of religious merit there was no limit.

(V. 23) From that famous (king) was born the illustrious Kōkalladēva (II) the sole lord of the earth. His maṇḍalāgra<sup>3</sup> (sword) was rightly called so since it kept (in check) the maṇḍalas (multitudes of enemies) in front of it.

(V. 24) That foremost of kings made the entire host of his adversaries submissive even as he bent his bow, held it in check in the rear as he tied his quiver on (his) back, routed it in all directions the moment he cast an (angry) glance at it even as he whirled his arms whose revolutions in the different directions were noticed (only) for a moment, and depriving it completely of its possessions, made it pay tribute even as he completely unsheathed his sword and grasped it with the hand.<sup>4</sup>

(V. 25) Then there was the (illustrious) Gāṅgēyadēva who obtained the kingdom of the whole earth from the illustrious king Kōkalladēva (II), who was the abode of virtue as stainless as a pearl-necklace washed with milk; who was preceded in the forefront of the battlefield only by his sword,<sup>5</sup> and whose beautiful face became crooked (only) when it was reflected in that very (sword).

(V. 26) By resorting to his divine person, the goddess of fortune has now got rid of the scandal that she does not appreciate merit (and) is fickle.

(V. 27) That (well-known) son of Dharma (i.e., Yudhishtira) was known for his truthfulness, the son of Virōchana (i.e., Bali) for his liberality, (and) the son of Indra (i.e., Arjuna) for his valour—this was not believed by the minds of the good. Seeing (however) that all the three (virtues) were present in (even) a greater measure in the king Gāṅgēyadēva, they concluded that the aforesaid kings were truly as described.

(V. 28) His son is Karṇa of well-known valour, who is as it were Karṇa<sup>6</sup> descended on the earth. Hearing of his coronation, his enemies disappeared, (while) hosts of Brāhmaṇas and friends rejoiced.

(V. 29) Extending far and wide, the creeper of his fame, day by day, reduces the empty space inside the pavillion of Brahmā's egg.<sup>7</sup>

(V. 30) Granting personally inconceivable objects to multitudes of supplicants, he is some strange moving wish-fulfilling tree, decorating the earth.

<sup>1</sup> There are puns on several words here nistrimśa (1) 'a sword' (lit., 'measuring more than thirty fingers') and (2) 'devoid of compassion'; aritva is to be understood as derived from (1) arin, 'a wheel' (containing spokes) and (2) ari 'an enemy'.

<sup>3</sup> Maṇḍalāgra means (1) 'a sword' and (2) 'that which has a host (maṇḍala) (of enemies) in front of it.'

<sup>4</sup> The description is so worded as to be applicable to the host of enemies on the one hand and to the king's bow, arms and sword on the other. As before, kara means (1) 'a tax' and (2) 'the hand'.

(V. 31) Is there any (adequate) word of praise for him, the righteous-minded one, who is the sole abode of the three royal powers,<sup>1</sup> (and) a mine of virtues? This is, however, prayed for by wise persons—'May the earth have always a good king only because of you!'

(Line 32) From his glorious and victorious camp fixed at Prayāga,—the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja, and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Karṇadēva, the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, the lord of Trikaliṅga, whose person is adorned by the multitude of such qualities,<sup>2</sup> who meditates on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka Mahārājādhirāja, and Paramēśvara, the illustrious, Vāmadēva, being in good health, duly honours, informs and commands the following and other (officers) whether named or not, (viz.,) the Mahādēvi,<sup>3</sup> the Mahārājaputra,<sup>4</sup> the Mahāmantrins<sup>5</sup> the Mahāmātya,<sup>6</sup> the Mahāsāndhivigrahika,<sup>7</sup> the Mahādharmaadhikaraṇika,<sup>8</sup> the Mahākshapaṭalika,<sup>9</sup> the Mahākaraṇika,<sup>10</sup> the Mahāpratihāra,<sup>11</sup> the Mahāsāmanta,<sup>12</sup> the Mahāpramātri,<sup>13</sup> the Mahāśvasādhanika,<sup>14</sup> the Mahābhāṅdāgārika,<sup>15</sup> (and) the Mahādhyaksha—<sup>16</sup>

(L. 36) "Be it known to you that on Saturday, the second (tithi) of the dark fortnight of Phālguna, on the occasion of the first annual śrāddha<sup>17</sup> of our father, the illustrious Gāṅgēyadēva at this very place. No. 49; PLATE XXXIX

PAIKORE STONE PILLAR INSCRIPTION OF KARNA

THIS inscription was discovered by Mr. Nagendranath Basu, and a transcript of it made by him and M. M. Haraprasād Sāstrī was first published without any facsimile in the Bīrbhūmabibaraṇa, Vol. II, p. 10. Its transcript was subsequently given together with a description and a photograph of the pillar on which it is engraved by Rao Bahadur K. N. Dikshit in the Annual Report of the Archaeological Survey of India for 1921-22, pp. 78 ff. and pl. XXVIII (a). The inscription is edited here from a set of impressions kindly supplied by the Superintendent of the Archaeological Section, Indian Museum, Calcutta.

'Paikore'<sup>3</sup> is about three miles to the east of the Murarai Station on the Loop Line of the E. I. Railway. The name is supposed to be a corrupted form of Prācīkōṣa or the 'Eastern Citadel' . . . . The most important antiquities of Paikore are the two inscribed pillars at Nārāyaṇa-chatvara, lying on a masonry platform by the side of a tank, along with an image of Narasimha and several others. The inscriptions refer to the Chēdi King Karṇa and King Vijayasēna. Both the pillars seem to have been crowned with images and the inscriptions engraved on them must have referred to the dedication of the images. The Vijayasēna pillar clearly exhibits the headless figure of the goddess Mānasā, while the Karṇadēva pillar being broken off just at the commencement of the inscription shows no trace of the image. The pillars must have been sunk into the floor, as we see from the rough-hewn surface of the lowermost portion of the Karṇadēva pillar, the square and octagonal sections of the shaft above being highly polished and decorated with beautiful tracery. The design on each side of the square is that of a vase (maṅgala-kalāśa), the top and bottom of which are covered with full-blown lotuses and foliage, while at the centre appears a kīrtimukha, the necklaces of pearls issuing from which are held by bearded attendants.

'The inscription begins on the tapering circular portion of the shaft and is continued over the octagonal section.'<sup>4</sup> It consists of six lines of unequal length, the first measuring only 1.5" and the last 9". It has suffered by exposure to weather especially in the first four lines. The characters belong to the proto-Bengali variety of the North Indian alphabets. The average size of the letters is .2". The forms of j, t, p and s are specially noteworthy. The letters were written in a hurried cursive hand and were incised very shallow. The reading is, therefore, doubtful in many cases. At the top of some letters such as d, p and y there appears a hook such as is noticeable in some places in the Bēlāva copper-plates of Bhōjavarman<sup>5</sup> and the Deopārā stone inscription of Vijayasēna.<sup>6</sup> R, which has the same form as ch, seems to be distinguished from it in some places by a dot in its triangle. As the first member of a conjunct, the letter appears generally above the line, but in Karṇadēvasya in line 5 it is written on the line as in the Deopārā stone inscription.<sup>1</sup> The ligature ṅṅ has two different forms in Karṇa and dān-a(ā)ṅṅava, both in line 5. The language is Sanskrit and the inscription is in prose throughout. The only orthographical peculiarity it presents is the doubling of a consonant after r.

The inscription is one of the Kalachuri king Karṇa<sup>2</sup> who is styled here Mahārāja and the King of Chēdi. It is not dated. The object of it is evidently to record the dedication, by the king Karṇa, of the image of a goddess whose name has not been specified.

<sup>2</sup> The name of the king occurs in two places at the end of line 4 and in the middle of line 5.

<sup>8</sup> Read भक्त्यात्र. There is space for two more akṣaras at the end of this line if it was of the same length as the following one. But there are no clear traces of letters. Perhaps किञ्चित् is intended.

<sup>9</sup> Haraprasād Śāstrī read निवेदयन्, but the impression shows only four, not five akṣaras. I follow Dikshit's reading here.

<sup>10</sup> Both Haraprasād Śāstrī and Dikshit read श्रद्धयास्मिन् कर्मणि, but I fail to see any trace of the superscript i of smi and ni. I therefore propose the reading given above, though with diffidence.

<sup>15</sup> Haraprasād Śāstrī reads ह्वनन्ति वा and Dikshit ज्य नन्तरा, neither of which is satisfactory.

<sup>20</sup> This akṣara was read as का, but in view of the visarga which follows त्ति I think it is probably की, the superscript ī being imperfectly formed. See श्री in lines 1 and 5.

No. 50; PLATE XL

GOHARWA PLATES OF KARṆA

THESE plates were turned up by the plough of a Kewat in an old fort at Goharwa, a village in the Manjhanpur tahsil of the Allahabad District. They were edited, with collotype plates, but without a translation, by Dr. E. Hultzsch in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XI, pp. 139 ff. They are edited here from the same plates.

'These are two copper-plates, resembling ordinary trays, which fit one into the other and form a compact box, with corresponding ring holes at the bottom of the first and the top of the second plate. They were originally held together by a ring, in such a way that the inscription was inside. The box measures nearly 15½ inches in length and about 11½ inches in breadth. The second plate, which fits into the box, is a little smaller than the first. The depth of the margin of each plate is about ½ inch.' The plough in turning up the plates broke the ring. The seal was thus detached from the plates. 'It is bell-shaped and has an almost circular surface which measures 3 inches in diameter. The upper portion of the seal bears in relief a seated figure of the goddess Lakshmi, facing the front and attended by two elephants pouring water over her. At the bottom is a bull couchant, facing the proper right between two indistinct symbols (drums?). Across the centre is engraved the name of the king who issued the plates—Srīmat-Karṇadēvaḥ.'<sup>2</sup> The inscription is throughout in a state of excellent preservation.

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet and resemble those of the Banaras plates of the same king. There are, however, some minor differences. The letter ṛi, for instance, is everywhere without a dot; similarly the upper loop of ṭh is closed in all cases. But in the case of the initial i, ṭh, ph, bh and ś, the present record invariably shows an advanced stage. The older form of the initial i, consisting of a comma below two dots, which is seen to continue even in the Banaras plates, is here replaced by a sign approximating to the modern form of the vowel, see iti, l. 3; ṭh appears here for the first time with a vertical stroke over the loop, see -pāda-piṭhas-, l. 8; the tailed curve to the right of the vertical of ph has now sunk lower down, see phalam, l. 46; the wedge on the left of bh has given place to a vertical which is joined to the right limb by means of a horizontal stroke, see alabhata and -bhūshaṇam-, both in l. 4; ś has everywhere the modern Nāgarī form, see, e.g., krāma-vaśāt= l. 14; the peculiar form of the ligature śr is also approximated in this record, see śrīkaṇṭha-, l. 6. Besides these, we may note that n is in many cases written without a loop,

PAIKORE STONE PILLAR INSCRIPTION OF KARNA

see -ratnam 1.3, -vandha, ll. 5-6 etc.; the forms of v and ch have in some cases been confused, see, e.g., -abhūvan, 1.7, van-āśraya-, 1.30 and -charitam, 1.28; similarly those of p and y, see nityam, 1.1, -madhya-, 1.5 and ripu-, 1.20. The vertical dash is introduced here for the first time at the end of the lines 33, 36, 39, 43 and 47. The akshara chh with two upright strokes on either side is used to mark the end of a section in ll. 33, 35 and 44.

The language is Sanskrit. The first thirty-three lines which contain the eulogistic portion are in verse with the exception of the opening Svasti, om̐ Vra(Bra)hmaṇē namah. There are thirty verses in this portion of which three (viṣ., 1, 12 and 18) are common to the earlier Banaras inscription. It is noteworthy that one of them (viṣ., v. 12) occurs there in a different context. It praises there not Yuvarājadēva II as in the present record, but his grandfather of the same name, i.e., Yuvarājadēva I. The formal part of the grant which is in prose begins in line 33. Then come six benedictive and imprecatory verses, and finally the mention of the writer's and engraver's names and the customary maṅgalam mahā-śrīḥ. The record is carelessly written. Final consonants are not so indicated in many cases, which has resulted in the neglect of sandhi in -pranṛityata vētālō, ll. 26-27, -vaśāta bhaikshāch-cha, 1.30 etc. Cases of wrong sandhi are seen in -vandyō Chēd-īndra-, 1.11, -āśram-ēka-, 1.30 etc. The visarga is incorrectly omitted in some places (see -grāmaṇi, 1.6, ākramata, 1.25) and added in others (see -vihitahśrikaṅṭha, 1.6). In a few cases, consonants are seen wrongly omitted, added or substituted by others, see, e.g., -samārambhē for -saṅgam-ārambhē, 1.14, svam=īndrajāl-ōpamam for svapn-ēndrajāl-ōpamam, 1.6. As regards orthography, we may notice that the sign for v is employed to denote b, see vrāhmī 1.2, Vudhab, 1.3 etc; ś is used for s in -śruta, 1.26 and vice versa in bhrisam and āsā-, both in 1.15; the vowel ri is used for ri in tri-bhuvana-, 1.4, p for ph in pūtaka-, ll. 15 and 24, j for y in iyāja, 1.33, and sh for kh in -mayūsha-, 1.3; the anusvāra before s is incorrectly changed to n in yaśānsi, 1.32, while in -tāmvra- 1.32, and ś-āmvra- 1.39, a superfluous v is inserted after m.

After two verses in praise of Brahman, begins the eulogy of Karṇa of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty and his ancestors. Karṇa's pedigree is here traced back to the moon. The first historical personage, mentioned after such mythical and legendary heroes as Budha, Purūravas, Bharata and Haihaya, is Lakshmaṇarāja (II), who is said to have won victories over the kings of Baṅgāla Pāṇḍya, Lāṭa, Gurjara and Kāśmīra. His son was Yuvarājadēva (II). The name of Yuvarājadēva's elder brother Śaṅkaragaṇa (III) is here omitted, probably because he was a collateral. Verse 12 states that he attained an Imperial position, but, as already pointed out, the verse was originally composed for his grandfather Yuvarājadēva I. Yuvarājadēva II was succeeded by his son Kōkalla (II), whose description given here is purely conventional. About his son and successor Gāṅgēyadēva, however, the record gives more information. He is said to have thrown the king of Kīra into prison, exacted a heavy tribute from the lord of Aṅga, vanquished the ruler of Kuntala, and raised his arm like a pillar of victory after defeating the prince of Utkala. He was followed by his son Karṇa who granted the present plates. Though the poet has devoted as many as eleven stanzas to his glorification, the description is entirely conventional and altogether devoid of historical interest.

The prose portion, which follows v. 30, gives the same description and mentions the same Imperial titles of Karṇa as the corresponding part of his Banaras plates. Besides these, there is one more title of Karṇa mentioned here, which is not noticed in the earlier record. He is said to have, by his arm, attained overlordship over the three kings, the lords of horses, elephants and men.

The present plates were granted by Karṇa at his victorious camp fixed at the Karṇatīrtha which was probably a ghāṭ built by him at Allahabad.<sup>1</sup> The object of the inscription is to record the grant of the village Chandapahā, situated in the Kausāmbapattalā, which was made by Karṇa after bathing in the Gaṅgā at the Arghatīrtha and worshipping the god Śiva. The donee was the learned Śāntīśarman, the son of the Āvasathika Mālhū and grandson of the Upādhyāya Silū of the Vājasaneyā sākhā and the Vidarbhi-Kauṇḍinya gōtra,<sup>2</sup> with the three pravaras Āṅgīrasa, Ambarīsha and Yauvanāśva. The grant was made on Thursday, the full-moon day of Kārttika, in the seventh year of the administration renowned by the illustrious Karṇa.

Unlike the Banaras plates, the present inscription does not mention any year of the Kalachuri era. It gives however 'full titles of paramountcy' to Karṇa, which makes it plain that the seventh year mentioned here is of his own reign. We have seen above<sup>3</sup> that the samvatsara-śrāddha mentioned in the Banaras plates was performed on the first anniversary of Gāṅgēyadēva's death. Gāṅgēyadēva must have, therefore, died on Phālguna va. di. 2 in the expired Kalachuri year 792 corresponding to 22nd January 1041 A.C. As the Kalachuri year was Kārttikādi, the month Kārttika in the first year of Karṇa's reign fell in the expired Kalachuri year 793. The same month in his seventh year must, therefore, have fallen in the expired Kalachuri year 799 (1047-48 A.C.) The full-moon tithi of Kārttika in this year ended 13 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise<sup>4</sup> on Thursday, and was, therefore, civilly connected with that day. Thursday, the 5th November 1047 A.C. is thus the date of the present grant.

If, on the other hand, we suppose that the śrāddha mentioned in the Banaras plates dated K. 793 was performed not on the first, but on some subsequent anniversary of Gāṅgēya's death, Karṇa's accession will have to be dated before 1041 A.C. and his seventh regnal year will fall in some year before 1047 A.C. We know that Gāṅgēyadēva was reigning in 1030 A.C.<sup>5</sup> We have, therefore, to see in which of the years between 1036 A.C. and 1047 A.C. the full-moon tithi of Kārttika was connected with Thursday. The only year which satisfies these requirements is 1044 A.C. In that year, the full moon tithi of Kārttika ended 20 h. after mean sunrise on Thursday, the 8th November 1044 A.C. This would place Karṇa's accession in 1038 A.C. The date of Gāṅgēya's death which occurred on Phālguna va. di. 2 will, on this supposition, be the 25th January 1038 A.C. This would suit somewhat better the Tibetan tradition, according to which Atiśa intervened during an invasion of Nayapāla's territory by king Karṇa of the west before he started for Tibet in circa 1040 A.C. as shown by Prof. Levi.<sup>6</sup> But it would make the coupling of Saturday with Phālguna va. di. 2 in the Kalachuri year 793 quite inexplicable.<sup>7</sup> The selection of Prayāga for the performance of the śrāddha would, again, appear specially appropriate only on the supposition

that it was performed on the first anniversary of his death which, as already stated, is known to have occurred at that holy place. The only way to reconcile the dates of the Banaras and Goharwa plates is, therefore, to place Gāṅgēya's death and Karṇa's accession in 1041 A.C.<sup>1</sup> As stated before, this makes the date of the present grant regularly correspond to Thursday, the 5th November 1047 A.C.

As for the geographical names occurring in the present grant, Baṅgāla, Kāśmīra and Gurjara are too well-known to need identification. Lāṭa has already been identified. Aṅga comprised the country round modern Bhāgalpur and Kīra that near Baijnath in the Kangra valley.<sup>2</sup> Kuntala was the country under the rule of the Later Chālukyas and comprised parts of the Southern Maratha Country and the adjoining Kanarese districts.<sup>3</sup> Utkala included much of the territory now comprised in the State of Orissa. Prof. Hultsch has correctly identified Kōśamba with the modern Kōsam, 36 miles west of Allahabad. The donated village Chandapahā, which has remained unidentified, is Chanpahā, about three miles N. N. W. of Kōsam. The close similarity of its name to Chandapahā and its proximity to Kōsam (ancient Kauśāmbī), leave little doubt about the correctness of the proposed identification.

<sup>1</sup> Tibetan tradition does not give a certain date for Atiṣa's departure to Nepal. If the event occurred before 1040 A. C., Karṇa may have invaded Magadha during his father's lifetime.

Success! Hail! Ōm! Adoration to Brahman!

(Verse 1) Adoration to that reality, Brahman, which is attributeless, all-pervasive, eternal and auspicious, the ultimate cause (of the universe), (and) supreme light conceivable by the mind!

(V. 2) Glorious is that Brāhmī,<sup>10</sup> which sages plant like a creeper in the pure field of their heart, and which, though subtle, bears the great fruit of final emancipation.

(V. 3) From the milk-ocean there came out this moon, the store of immeasurable nectar, (who is) an ornament of Siva. From him was born Budha. He, they say, obtained a jewel-like son, (namely) the primeval king Purūravas.

(V. 4) In that great family of the nectar-rayed (moon), there was born a king who appeared (bright) like a pearl. He, the universal sovereign Bharata, obtained (the distinction of) being<sup>1</sup> the sole ornament of the three worlds.

(V. 5) In this very illustrious family of kings there was born, in course of time, the lord Haihaya, the universal sovereign; being caught in the midst of whose cage-like mighty arms, the ten-faced (Rāvaṇa) was, as it were, confined in a prison.

(V. 6) Finding himself (quite) helpless in the bondage of the marvellous arms of (that) crest-jewel of kings (i.e., Haihaya), who being thousand-armed routed his enemies even as the thousand-rayed (sun) dispels darkness, the leader of demons (i.e., Rāvaṇa), who had lifted up the mountain of Śrikaṇṭha (Kailasa) with his sportfully waved arms, himself thought that his previous valiant deed was like a dream and an illusion.

(V. 7) From him were descended many kings who pleased Indra with the smoke of their sacrificial fires; in whose kingdom there never ceased showers from the clouds which were the eyes of their enemies' wives.

(V. 8) Among them was born in course of time Lakshmaṇarājadēva (II) who was clever in routing the king of Baṅgāla; who defeated the Pāṇḍya (king); who was adept in plundering the king of Lāṭa; who vanquished the Gurjara king; and whose footstool was honoured by the crowns of the heroes of Kāśmīra.

(V. 9) The ocean, which became red, being flooded with (the streams of) vermillion from the heads of the huge scent-elephants in (his) army through exertion caused by his victorious marches, and which dashed against huge mountains with its dancing high waves, appeared to be filled as it were with the flooding streams of blood from the cut-off stiff necks of his enemies.

(V. 10) From him was born that Yuvarājadēva (II), the moon-like lord of Chēdi, the sole object of veneration to the (whole) world, who was fond of literature as a lover is of his beloved, and who, like the serpent Sēsha, supported the whole world.

(V. 11) Three things found a footing simultaneously, (viz.) youth in his body, (his) valour on the heads of (his) enemies, and (his) enemies in the thickets on the principal mountains.<sup>2</sup>

(V. 12) Through his devotion to Siva he became actually an Emperor (or, Siva incarnate), having acquired knowledge suitable for bearing the burden of (i.e., governing) the earth, being fond of the Vēdas (as Siva is possessed of a body which is fond of serpents capable of bearing the burden of the earth), sending (like Siva) his adversaries along the path of heaven, and leading his powerful army, famous in the world, which marched by several routes (as Siva bears on high the river Gaṅgā flowing in several streams).

(V. 13) From that crest-jewel of kings, there was (born) in course of time, (a king) named Kōkalla (II), possessed of marvellous prowess, who planted a number of sacrificial posts in the farthest regions, and the drum, (beaten) at whose victorious march, served exceedingly well as an auspicious musical instrument at the commencement of the union of hostile kings with celestial damsels.

(V. 14) On the occasion of his conquest of the quarters, the lordly elephants (stationed) in the quarters, which raised their long trunks in rage on (smelling) the fragrance of his rutting elephants, despaired (of defeating them), (and) gave out, as it were, a distressing cry to the lord of celestial beings (i.e., of Indra) through the hum of bees (hovering) over their temples.

<sup>2</sup> I.e., when he attained youth, his power was felt by his enemies, who leaving their kingdoms sought shelter in the thickets on mountains.

(V. 15) While he, who was a store of valour and the sole source of (their) happiness, dwelt in the mind of (his) subjects, their inward distress completely disappeared even as the ignorance of the yōgins does when the highest principle (Brahman), which is the repository of lustre and the unique source of bliss, shines in their minds.

(V. 16) His glory, rising high and breaking (to pieces) owing to its collision with (the upper shell of) Brahmā's egg, has, I fancy, taken the forms of the moon, constellations, stars and so forth.

(V. 17) From him was (born) Gāṅgēyadēva, who threw into the cage of a prison the king of Kīra,<sup>1</sup> who looked radiant with the mass of wealth of (the king of) Aṅga who was fond of defeating (the king of) Kuntala in a (clever) manner, and who, strong as he was in the action of splitting open the temples of lordly elephants, made his (own) arm a pillar of victory on the shore of the (eastern) ocean, after vanquishing (the king of) Utkala.

(V. 18) By resorting to his divine person the goddess of fortune has now got rid of the infamy that she does not appreciate merit and is fickle.

(V. 19) Where he bestowed more wealth on suppliants than they desired, the wish-fulfilling tree was (no better than) an ordinary tree.<sup>2</sup> He, who was to the enemies' fame what the sun is to an assemblage of night-lotuses,<sup>3</sup> begat the king Karṇa.

(V. 20) The feet of him (i.e., Karṇa) who was skilled in war, appeared lovely, being warm as if because they had trampled over the spreading valour<sup>4</sup> of the neighbouring haughty princes.

(V. 21) Under the sole guise of (the symbols of) the thunderbolt and the discus on his hands, he bore (with himself) the goddess of fortune herself, who (usually) shines with Indra and Upēndra.

(V. 22) His arms, which were long like the trunks of the elephants of the quarters, which have lifted up the earth with their heads, were delighted to rescue the earth with ease.

(V. 23) The two large (symbols of) conches on (his) hands were, I imagine, the treasure (of Kubēra) which the Creator offered after doubling<sup>5</sup> to him who was intently attached to charity.

(V. 24) At his march, the spray of water, which issued from the tips of the formidable trunks of the elephants in (his army) and which was turned to particles by their puffing, appeared like an umbrella in the sky.

(V. 25) 'I do not harbour, O Lord! the families of (your) enemies; nor have I transgressed the past limits.<sup>6</sup>—In order as it were, to say this to the King of Chēdi, who was over-running the circuit of regions, the ocean roared in a deep sound, throwing about his arms of waves to scoff at the movements of the trunks of elephants in the army which, being fatigued, (had encamped) in its vicinity.

(V. 26) In his war, when the farthest confines of the circuit of regions were filled with the noise of the loud clapping of the goblins who were dancing in intoxication caused by drinking the liquor-like blood flowing from (the bodies of his) enemies wounded by his

<sup>4</sup> There is a play on the word pratāpa which means (i) valour and (ii) heat.

<sup>5</sup> San̄kha is one of the treasures of Kubēra. As Karṇa had the symbol of san̄kha (conch) on both the hands, the poet imagines that he had double the treasure of Kubēra.

arrows, the ceremony of choosing (their) husbands in an assembly was, for a short time, performed with difficulty by the immortal (i.e., celestial) damsels, who could not hear one another's words, by means of the hasty signs such as those of their hands.

(V. 27) On the stage of battle-field which was strewn with flowers scattered by the gods who were stupefied with joy, the heroic deeds of the valiant (Karṇa), whose arms were merciless in forcibly dragging the (enemy's) fortune, were represented in dancing by headless trunks in the presence of kings.

(V. 28) He thus showed himself to be a unique teacher of the four āśramas to his enemies,—who were, first, taught the vow of the Brahmachārin<sup>1</sup> by being separated from (their) wives, (then) the order of the house-holder by being imprisoned together with their kinsmen, (then) that of the forest-dwelling hermit by (being forced to seek) shelter in the woods, and that of the religious mendicant by (being made to live on) alms.

(V. 29) Having heard the loud proclamations, resounding in the land extending from the eastern to the western mountain, that the hosts of suppliants (coming) to him would obtain gifts exceeding their desires, the self-existent (Brahmā) was long perplexed with the thought, 'Alas! this brahmāṇḍa has already been created so limited in expanse! How will the glory of the King of Chēdi be contained in it?'

(V. 30) What can we describe of that king Karṇa by whose copper-charters, (given) to Brāhmaṇas,—which made a loud noise as multitudes of closely packed letters were being incised on them,—the (whole) universe is deafened.

(Line 33) This Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Karṇadēva, the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, the lord of Trikaliṅga,—who has by his arm acquired sovereignty over the three kings, (viz.) the lord of horses, the lord of elephants (and) the lord of men, (and) who meditates on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmadēva,—being in good health duly honours, informs and issues the (following) command at his victorious camp fixed at the famous Karṇatīrtha, to the following, (viz.) the Mahādēvī, the Mahārājaputra, the Mahāmantrin, the Mahāsāndhivigrahika, the Mahāmātya, the Mahādharmaḍhikaraṇika, the Mahāpratihāra, the Mahākshapaṭalika, the Mahābhāṅḍāgārika, the Mahāsāmanta, the Mahāpramattavāro,<sup>2</sup> the Mahāśvasādhānika and other unnamed officers appointed to their respective posts as well as all people residing in their respective places the village Chandapahā in the pattalā<sup>3</sup> of Kauśāmbī:—

(L. 49) This has been written by the Karaṇika, the illustrious Sarvānanda and engraved by Vidyānanda. (May there be) bliss and good fortune!

NO. 51; PLATE XLI

REWA STONE INSCRIPTION OF KARNA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 800

THIS inscription was discovered by Dr. N. P. Chakravarti, Government Epigraphist for India, at Rewa, the chief town of Vindhya Pradesh in 1936. The slab, on which it is inscribed, is now lying in the guard hall of the old palace at Rewa. It is said to have been previously built into a wall of the Zenānā Mahāl of the same palace, from where it was removed a few years back and preserved in its present place. The inscription was edited by me for the first time in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXIV, pp. 101 ff. It is edited here from two excellent estampages kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist.

The record is incised on a large slab. The inscribed surface measures 7' 2" broad and 3' 1½" high. As shown below, the inscription was originally put up at a temple of Śiva and seems to have been brought over to Rewa from somewhere else.<sup>1</sup> The record has suffered considerably on the right and left hand sides and especially in the lower portion comprising lines 23-31, in which, in some places, only a word here and there can be read with confidence. Even in other parts, where it is better preserved, the mātrās, the anusvāra, the sign for the superscript r on the top of letters and the horizontal stroke in the body of sh have, in many cases, disappeared. The inscription consists of thirty-one lines and falls into two parts which are separated by an ornamental figure in line 19. Except for the obeisance to Śiva with which it seems to have opened, and a few words recording the date at the end, the whole inscription is in verse. The first part of it, which eulogizes the reigning Kalachuri king Karṇa and his ancestors, comprises thirty-three verses. As many as twenty-two<sup>2</sup> of these occur in the Goharwa plates of that king.<sup>3</sup> In many cases, therefore, the damaged letters of the present inscription can be easily supplied from the latter record. The second part, comprising verses 34-59, contained a legendary account of the origin of the Kāyastha caste as well as the genealogy of the minister of Karṇa, who founded the temple of Śiva at which the present inscription was set up. The mutilation of a considerable portion of the record in this part is very much to be regretted, as none of the damaged verses are known to occur anywhere else. We have, consequently, lost not only an account of the achievements of the minister and his ancestors, but, except in one case, even the names of all of them. Besides, the present record, had it not been so badly mutilated, would have thrown much welcome light on the notions current in the eleventh century A.C. about the caste of the Kāyasthas. As shown below, the mutilated condition of the present record makes its evidence doubtful.

<sup>1</sup> In his report for 1935-36 the Government Epigraphist has conjectured that 'the slab might have been brought from Gurgi like so many other inscriptions and statues which are now lying in the State Treasury or in the compound of the Prince's Palace.' A. R. A. S. I. for 1935-36, p. 89.

The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet. The size of the letters varies from .8" to 1". Medial diphthongs have generally been indicated by prishṭhamātrās. kh has attained its fully developed Nāgarī form, see -nikhāta-, 1.8, but ñ is still without its dot, see Vaṅgāla-bhaṅga-, 1.6; ṭh has developed a vertical at the top, see luṭhantu 1.3 and -pīṭha-, 1.6; the upper loop of th is closed, see -pāthō-mashī-, 1.16; its subscript form, however, is not now laid on its side, see -sthalē-, 1.15; the left portion of dh is still undeveloped; the letter is, therefore, distinguished from v which it closely resembles by the absence of the horizontal line at the top, and in the case of dhā by a horizontal stroke joining the two verticals, see -avaidhavya-vidhāna-, 1.15; the right-hand curve of ph is open and is added at the top of its vertical as in -phala-, 1.3, or a little lower down as in -āsphāl-, 1.13; the curve of ś is joined to its vertical on the right, see -śāsana-, 1.18; the letter can in many cases be distinguished from s only by its round top. Finally, h shows no tail, see mahati, 1.4.

The language is Sanskrit. As stated above, except for a few words in the beginning and at the end, the whole record is metrically composed. There are fifty-nine verses in all, none of which is numbered. Of these, thirty-three fall in the first, and the remaining twenty-six in the second part of the record. In its first part the present inscription has as many as twenty-two verses in common with the Goharwa plates of Karṇa, there being only slight variations in their readings here and here as pointed out in the foot-notes to the transcribed text. In two cases (verses 20 and 26), the order of verses in this inscription differs from that in the Goharwa plates. The verses consequently refer to different kings in these two records;<sup>1</sup> but as they contain mere conventional praise, the change does not affect the historical information. As regards orthography, we may note that the consonant following r is doubled in many cases; see, e.g., Sambhōr-jjaṭā-, 1.2; b is throughout denoted by the sign for v, see -vaddh-ō-, 1.1; mvra is used for mra in -tāmvrā-paṭṭaiḥ, 1.18; similarly n is wrongly substituted for anusvāra in -pānsu-, 1.21. In surā-pāṇa, 1.11, we have the change of n to ṇ in accordance with Pāṇini's rule VIII, 4, 10.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Karṇa of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty. The object of it appears to have been to record the construction of a temple of Śiva by a minister of Karṇa, who belonged to the Kāyastha caste.<sup>2</sup> The record is dated, at the end, in the year 800 (expressed in numerical figures only) of an unspecified era, the cyclic year being Khara.<sup>3</sup> The date must obviously be referred to the Kalachuri era. As an expired year, it corresponds to 1048-49 A.C. The corresponding cyclic year was Khara according to the northern luni-solar system. This is the only date in the records of the Kalachuris, in which a cyclic year has been mentioned.<sup>4</sup> In the absence of the necessary details the date does not admit of further verification.

The record seems to have opened with an obeisance to Śiva. This is followed by three *maṅgala-sloka*s in praise of Śiva, the last of which describes his Ardha-nārīśvara form.

<sup>2</sup> His name is lost in the lower mutilated portion. He was mentioned in verse 32 of the Ratanpur stone inscription of Jājallādēva I (No. 77, below, 1.30), but there too, his name is lost.

<sup>3</sup> This name of the cyclic year had escaped my notice when I edited this inscription in the Ep. Ind. After Kācharaṣya in 1.31 there is room for only two aksharas, of which one is clearly ra. There is, therefore, no doubt that the intended name of the year is Khara. This corroborates my reading of the figures of the date, one of which was somewhat doubtful.

<sup>4</sup> Another instance in which a cyclic year is coupled with a Kalachuri date occurs in the Tahankāpār plate of Pamparāja (K. 966), No. 117, below.

After two more verses,—one in praise of Brahman and the other in that of poets' speech,—begins a description of the ancestors of the reigning king Karṇa. As in the Goharwa plates, his pedigree is traced to the moon, but the first historical personage mentioned after such mythical and legendary heroes as Budha, Purūravas, Bharata and Haihaya is Lakshmaṇarāja who is evidently identical with the homonymous prince mentioned as the son and successor of Yuvarājadēva I in the Bilhāri stone inscription and the Banaras plates of Karṇa. The description of this king and of his successors down to Gāṅgēyadēva is, in the main, given as in the Goharwa plates. In connection with Gāṅgēyadēva, however, the draft used here slightly differs from that of the Goharwa plates. Of the four verses devoted to his description, three (viz., vv. 18, 20 and 21) occur in the latter record, but one of them (v. 20) is employed there to describe his son Karṇa. Verse 19, which is not known to occur anywhere else, describes in a conventional manner Gāṅgēyadēva's victory near the sea-coast. This may refer to his campaign in Orissa which is specifically mentioned in the preceding verse (18).

Gāṅgēyadēva's son and successor Karṇa is next eulogized in as many as twelve verses. Of these, six (viz., 22, 24, 26, 30, 31 and 32) occur in the Goharwa plates. Of the remaining six, three contain a description of his achievements. Verse 23 states that 'the ship of the king of the Eastern Country, being driven by the storm of unparalleled arrogance, was submerged in the ocean of his (i.e., Karṇa's) forces, its joints being rent by (dashing against) the promontories of the mountains of his elephants.' Stripped of its metaphor, the verse means that Karṇa achieved a victory over the king of the Eastern Country, who lost his life in the encounter. This probably refers to the overthrow of the contemporary Chandra king,<sup>1</sup> after which Karṇa seems to have placed Vajravatman in charge of the newly acquired territory.

Verse 25 refers to Karṇa's conquests in the south. It states that 'overrunning the district of Kāñchī, he thoroughly enjoyed the southern region, in which the fortune of the Kuntala was shaken by forcible seizure and the low Pallavas were destroyed, as though covering the hips of a woman, he was ravishing her, the beauty of whose hair was marred by forcible seizure and whose tender lower lip was wounded in kissing.' The description here is evidently dictated by the poet's penchant for double entendre. The earliest verse of this type is traditionally ascribed to Mayūra and is taken by some scholars to contain references to Harsha's expedition in the south. In later times, poets composed such verses containing puns on names of countries to flatter their patrons in utter disregard of historical facts. For instance, three such verses, besides the aforementioned one ascribed to Mayūra, have been collected in the Saduktikarṇāṃṛita of Śrīdharadāsa. It is, therefore, difficult to say how far the description in verse 25 of the present inscription can be taken to be historically true. But Karṇa's conflicts with the contemporary Chōla king, who is probably meant here as the ruler of Kāñchī, and the Chālukya king of Kuntala at least are substantiated by other evidence.<sup>2</sup>

Verse 27 states that 'when Karṇa approached (the Gurjara country), tears mixed with collyrium flowed on the cheeks of Gurjara women living in the neighbourhood and colour-marks indicative of their non-widowhood slipped as it were from their foreheads.<sup>1</sup> This is, of course, too vague a description to indicate an actual conflict with the Gurjara king, but unless it is altogether meaningless, it suggests that Karṇa's relations with the contemporary Gurjara king were already strained as early as 1048-49 A.C.

<sup>1</sup> It may be noted in this connection that verse 12 of the Bhērāghāṭ inscription mentions that when Karṇa gave full play to his heroism the Vaṅga trembled with the Kaliṅga. The contemporary Chandra king is evidently referred to as the Vaṅga here; for the Chandras were ruling over Vaṅga, or Eastern Bengal.

The second part of the record commences with verse 34, which states that the twice-born caste undertook the work of a minister to augment the mantra-śakti (power of good counsel) of kings who were possessed of the other two powers, viz., the utsāha-śakti (personal energy) and prabhu-śakti (power derived from their royal position). We next get an account of the Kāyastha caste. There was a great sage (mun-īndra) named Kāchāra who derived his holy birth from the three-eyed god Śiva. He made the town Kulāñchā an ornament of the three worlds. A person of the fourth caste (turīya-janman) respectfully propitiated him on the bank of the heavenly river (i.e., Gaṅgā). The next verse, which is partly mutilated, seems to describe the boon granted by the sage, apparently to the Śūdra who had been serving him, that he would have a son of well-known and righteous deeds, who, having his head sanctified by the dust of earthly gods (i.e., Brāhmaṇas), would become almost like the councillor of the lord of heaven (i.e., Bṛihaspati). The sage next declared that his caste would thereafter be known by the name of Kāyastha, since he had innumerable merits in his kāya (body). Verse 39, which is only partially preserved, refers to the birth of a son (apparently to the Śūdra), from whom sprang the caste of the Kāyasthas. We are next told that in his race were born wise, grateful, virtuous and meritorious diplomats who gave security from fear to all beings. Verse 41 describes a personage of matchless prowess, who was distinguished among the rest as the Kaustubha is among all the gems produced from the milky ocean, but unfortunately his name is lost in the damaged portion.<sup>1</sup> Verse 43 also mentions a person whose name, again, is illegible, but who was apparently an object of veneration to the illustrious king Lakshmaṇarāja as Viṣṇu is to the three worlds. This personage seems to have been eulogized in the next two verses (44 and 45). The preserved portion of verse 46 states that Sōmēśvara who dedicated himself to the welfare of the people was born from the aforementioned personage. The next verse seems to have described some achievements of his through intelligence and personal prowess. From line 26 the record has unfortunately been too much mutilated to yield any useful information. We have, consequently, lost even the names of the descendants of Sōmēśvara, of whom the last one mentioned in the present inscription seems to have been a minister of Karṇa. From the description of the white splendour of a temple in verse 54, that it was, as it were, due to the laughter of Śiva, who rejoiced to have such an excellent abode, it seems that it was a temple of Śiva, at which the present inscription was put up. This surmise receives confirmation from the opening verses which eulogize Śiva, as well as from the statement in v. 58 that the person who caused the temple of the enemy of Smara (i.e., Śiva) to be constructed himself composed the present prāśasti.

As already observed, the present inscription, if it had been in a state of good preservation, would have proved valuable for the history of the Kāyastha caste. Even as it is, it clearly shows that the Kāyasthas had crystallized into a caste in the beginning of the eleventh century A.C.; but we have still earlier records which unmistakably prove the existence of the caste two centuries earlier.<sup>2</sup> The fanciful derivation of the caste-name Kāyastha given here occurs also in the Naishadhīyacharita (Canto XIV, v. 66). The present inscription seems to connect the caste with a sage named Kāchāra.

The tendency to trace the origin of royal families to well-known legendary heroes or sages was widely prevalent in the middle ages; but the name of Kāchāra as an eponymous hero occurs nowhere in ancient mythological or legendary literature.<sup>1</sup> It would seem, therefore, that an attempt has been made here to give a legendary explanation of the name of the caste which had become current in the eleventh century A.C.<sup>2</sup> From the introductory verse of the second part of the present record, viḥ., v. 34, the poet's intention seems to have been to show that the Kāyasthas belonged to the Brāhmaṇa caste. It looks strange, therefore, that he should refer in verse 36 to a Śūdra (turīya-janman) as a Kāyastha and the progenitor of that caste, and describe his son as having his head purified by the dust from the feet of earthly gods (i.e., Brāhmaṇas). Owing to the unfortunate mutilation of the lower part of the inscription, it is now impossible to say how the Śūdra origin of the caste referred to in vv. 36-38 was reconciled with the claim to Brāhmaṇhood which seems to have been made in verse 34.<sup>3</sup>

The names of the distinguished members of this Kāyastha family, who seem to have served Kalachuri kings as their ministers, have been lost with the single exception of Sōmēśvara. This latter is eulogized in vv. 46 and 47, as one who had dedicated himself to the welfare of the people and distinguished himself by his prowess as well as by intelligence. The mention of Lakshmaṇarāja's name in one of the preceding verses suggests the identification of this Sōmēśvara with the homonymous son of Bhākamiśra, who was a minister of Lakshmaṇarāja as stated in the Kārītalāi stone inscription.<sup>4</sup> A careful comparison of the descriptions in the two records would show, however, that the identification cannot be upheld. For, Sōmēśvara of the Kārītalāi inscription was undoubtedly a Brāhmaṇa, as he is called Bhaṭṭa therein<sup>5</sup> and is said to have belonged to the Bharadvāja gōtra.<sup>6</sup> From the lengthy description of his accomplishments in that record we learn that he was proficient in various arts, but we do not find therein a single reference to his skill in the use of arms.<sup>7</sup> Sōmēśvara of the present inscription, however, was a Kāyastha, distinguished as much for personal valour as for intelligence. Besides, he does not seem to have been a contemporary of Lakshmaṇarāja himself, but of his successor; for, from verses 43-46 we learn that he was the son of a person who was honoured by Lakshmaṇarāja. He is not, therefore, likely to have been identical with Sōmēśvara of the Kārītalāi inscription.

Most of the geographical names occurring in the present record find mention

<sup>3</sup> It is, of course, possible to take turīya-janmā in the sense of a Brāhmaṇa by dissolving the compound as turīyārthan (yajñārthan) janma yasya sah, i.e., one who is born for (the performance of) a sacrifice, a Brāhmaṇa. Both the St. Petersburg Lexicon and the Vāchaspathyam give this sense of turīya, citing the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa, IX, 2, 3, 11 etc., in support of it. But such an explanation would appear forced, since the word does not bear that sense in classical Sanskrit. Halāyudha gives turīya-varṇa in the sense of a Śūdra. Note also agrajanman (first-born) which means a Brāhmaṇa. Besides, the expression yō bhūmi-dēva-pada-pāntu-pavitramauliḥ in l. 21 suggests that the son did not belong to the caste of the earthly gods or Brāhmaṇas.

<sup>7</sup> It must, however, be stated that verse 16 of the inscription mentions that Sōmēśvara's deeds were praised by bards in the fore-front of the battlefield.

[Ōm! Adoration to Siva.]

(Verse 1) May the beauty of the digit of the moon, which, rising straight as it were on the orient mount, namely the high coil of the twisted hair of Siva, overspread with the dark colour of his throat, is reddened by the mass of the rays of jewels (in the hoods) of serpents which coil (themselves) like a turban (round his head). . . . remove your ignorance for long!

(V. 2) Glorious is the coil of Sambhu's matted hair, which,—being overspread with the flames of the wild fire (issuing) from his (third) eye (fanned) by that fierce wind, (and) surrounded by serpents. . . . hissing and moving inside the Mandara (mountain), (namely), the mass of hair. . . .,—appears akin to (Mēru) the golden mountain!

(V. 3) [May] the body (of Siva), one half of which is covered over with serpents, (while) the other half has a gracefully shining eye . . . . .!

(For a translation of v. 4, see that of v. 2, above, p. 259.)

(V. 5) May the sweet words of poets, full of the nectar of sentiments, which are the resort of virtues, roll in the throats of learned men and their far-spread fame in (their) cars!

(For a translation of vv. 6-18, see that of vv. 3-11, 15, 13, 16 and 17 on pp. 259-61.)

(V. 19) When the regions round the ocean became full of mud through the blood of the arrays of elephants of (hostile) kings killed by hosts of his soldiers, the lions, proud as they had become by the destruction of infuriated elephants, crouched, as if through shame, in the clefts of caves in the interior of the defiles of the snow-mountain.

(For a translation of vv. 20-22, see that of vv. 26, 19 and 27 on pp. 261-2.)

(V. 23) In the ocean of his forces there was submerged the ship, (namely) the king of the Eastern Country, being driven by the storm of unparalleled arrogance, its joints being rent by (dashing against) the promontories of the mountains which were his elephants.

(For a translation of v. 24, see that of v. 25 on p. 261.)

(V. 25) Over-running the district of Kāñchī, he thoroughly enjoyed the southern region, in which the fortune of the Kuntala was shaken by forcible seizure and the low Pallavas were destroyed (as though covering the hips of a woman he was ravishing her, the beauty of whose hair was marred by forcible seizure, and whose tender lower lip was wounded in kissing).<sup>1</sup>

(For a translation of v. 26, see that of v. 14 on p. 260.)

(V. 27) When he approached, tears mixed with collyrium flowed on the cheeks of Gurjara women living in the neighbourhood, and colour-marks indicative of their non-widowhood slipped, as it were, from (their) foreheads.<sup>2</sup>

(V. 28) His unique valour consumed [the hostile army]<sup>3</sup> which was inaccessible on account of horses with twisted manes, which contained an unlimited number of swords (and) appeared dreadful through elephants, even as wild fire consumes a forest which is impenetrable on account of lions with twisted manes, which contains an unlimited number of rhinoceroses and is dreadful through elephants.

<sup>3</sup> The word denoting this is lost in the original, but there can be no doubt about the intended meaning.

The record consists of fourteen lines. The average size of the letters is .7". The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet. They resemble, in a general way, those of the other inscriptions of the Kalachuri king Karṇa. As regards individual letters we may notice that ṛ is written without a dot see -saṅghasya, l. 7, -gaṇ-ālaṅkṛit-, l. 11; ṭh has no vertical or even a horizontal line at the top, see pāṭha-, l. 12; the upper loop of th is closed in -Manōratha-, l. 8; the left limb of dh is seen fully developed in two cases, see *Dhamēsva[raḥ]**, l. 9 and vādhakam l. 13, but in others the old form is met with; the letters r and g are not clearly distinguished, see -pār-aika-gantāḥ, l. 2; so also m and a or ā; see -mahā-, l. 7; and Asvina, l. 6; finally, the medial diphthongs are indicated by fully drawn prishthamātrās.

The language is corrupt Sanskrit. Notice, for instance, the wrong forms guṇa-rāsi for guṇa-rāsiḥ and pār-aika-gantāḥ for pār-aika-gantā, both in l. 2, Mahājānānujāina for Mahājā(yā)nānujā(yā)yini, l. 10 and the incorrect sandhi in -bhūto pitṛibhiḥ, l. 14. Except for the opening verse in praise of the Buddha and the usual imprecation at the end, the whole record is in prose. As regards orthography, attention may be drawn to the use of ṛi for ri in Triga(ka) [*liṅgā-**], l. 4, the repetition of a consonant after r as in -sarvv-āndhakā-rah, l. 1, the substitution of j for y in Mahājānānujāina and, bhārjā, both in l. 10 and the use of the sign for v to denote b, see -Vuddha-, l. 11, -nivandhanā-, l. 12 etc.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Karṇa, of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty. He is mentioned here with the same titles as in the Goharwa plates, and is said to have meditated on the feet of the illustrious Vāmadēva who is also named with Imperial titles. The object of the inscription is to record that a female devout worshipper named Māmakā who was a follower of the Mahāyāna and the wife of Dhamēsvara<sup>1</sup> (Dharmēsvara) who also was a devout worshipper and follower of the Mahāyāna, caused a copy of the Aṣṭasāhasrikāprajñā to be written and made some donation to the Order of Venerable Monks dwelling in the monastery called Srī-sad-dharma-chakra-pravartana-Mahābōdhi-Mahāvihāra, for the recitation of the book. Two monks who were evidently heads of the institution are named in the present record. One of them was Manōrathagupta. The name of the other, which is partially lost, ended in pāṭṛika.

The inscription is dated on Sunday, the fifteenth tithi of the bright half of Āśvina in the year [8]10.<sup>2</sup> No era is specified, but there can be little doubt that the date is in the Kalachuri era. It is quite regular; for, the fifteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Āśvina in the current<sup>3</sup> Kalachuri year 810 ended 15 h. 50 m. after mean sunrise on Sunday, the corresponding Christian date being the 4th October, 1058 A.C. This is one of the few Kalachuri dates in current years.

As pointed out by Sir John Marshall and Dr. Konow, the Saddharmachakrapravartana-Mahābōdhi-Mahāvihāra was the Great Monastery at Sārnāth which was erected at the place where the Buddha preached his first sermon.

<sup>2</sup> The first figure of the year is lost, but that it could not have been anything but 8 is shown by the known dates of Karṇa, which range from K. 793 to K. 812.

<sup>3</sup> The date would be in the expired year according to Kielhorn's view that the Kalachuri year was Āśvinādi. The dates of Nos. 63 and 94 however clearly show that the year began in some month later than Āśvina. I have given elsewhere reasons which make it probable that it began on the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Kārttika.

NO. 53; PLATE XLIII A

REWA STONE INSCRIPTION OF KARNA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 812

THIS inscription was first brought to notice by Mr. R.D. Banerji, Superintendent, Archaeological Survey, Western Circle, who found it in the Secretary's office in Rewa town.<sup>2</sup> It is not known where it was first discovered. Mr. Banerji first gave an account of its contents in the Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey, Western Circle, for 1920-21, p. 53, and subsequently published its text with a translation, but without a facsimile, in his Haihayas of Tripurī and their Monuments,<sup>3</sup> pp. 130 ff. The inscription is edited here from excellent estampages kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India.

The record is incised on a smooth plain slab of sand-stone, the left half of which is missing.<sup>4</sup> There are in all twenty-three lines. The lost portion must have contained twenty-three or twenty-four aksharas in each of the lines 1-21. Even in the extant portion, some letters here and there, especially on the left side, have been damaged by the peeling off of the surface of the stone.

The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet. Some of the letters contain a wedge or an inverted triangle at the top as in the Makundpur stone inscription of Gāṅgēyādēva.<sup>5</sup> The mātrās on the letters in the first line have ornamental additions. The letters are not well-formed, the record being, on the whole, carelessly written. As regards individual letters, attention may be drawn to the two forms of initial i used in iti, 1.16 and isānē, 1.14; ñ without dot in liṅgañ, 1.13; the tailless left member of kh in vikhyātā, 1.19; and n without a loop which is met with in several places. The letters n, bh and r occur each in two forms; compare n in -varāṇām-, 1.4 and karmmaṇi, 1.17; bh in bhavēt-, 1.17 and bhaktiā, 1.18 and r in Vapulēśvara, 1.16 and -vyavaharaṇyā, 1.20.

SARNATH STONE INSCRIPTION OF KARNA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 810

The language is Sanskrit. The first nineteen lines are in verse and the remaining four in prose. The praśasti, as the composition is called in verse 18, has been carelessly composed. Notice, for instance, the curious mixture of Indravajrā and Vasantatilakā metres in verse 24. The name Vappulla, required by the metres of verses 5 and 8, is written as Vapulla. Verse 4 contains a clumsy metaphor describing Karṇa as a lion. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities of the reduplication of the consonant after r, the substitution of v for b and of s for ś as well as the use of m for an anusvāra before v (see -samvatsara, 1.20).

As nearly half the portion of the praśasti is lost, it is not possible to give a complete account of its contents. As usual, the record opens with a verse invoking the blessings of some deity, probably Śiva.<sup>1</sup> It then refers to a king whose name is lost, but who, we are told, was born from Kōkalla. From him was the illustrious Karṇadēva who is described as an impending universal destruction and as one who had planted his foot on the extremely haughty heads of eminent kings. This Karṇa is evidently the well-known Kalachuri Emperor of that name who was a terror to contemporary rulers. The first two princes mentioned in verse 2 were plainly his father Gāṅgēyadēva and grandfather Kōkalla II. Verse 5 introduces Vappulla<sup>2</sup> who is described as devoted to Karṇa's lotus-like feet. The following verses give his pedigree. From some distinguished person whose name is lost, was born Vijjalarāṇaka.<sup>3</sup> His younger brother was Vigraharāja who, it seems, was the father of Vappulla (v. 8). The next two verses (9 and 10) are devoted to the description of the battles fought by Vappulla. Two of these are named in the extant portion viḥ., the ghōṭaka-vigraha or the Battle of Horses (v.9) and the Battle of the Yellow Mountain in which Vappulla, having defeated the forces of Trilōchana, equalled in glory Arjuna, who had overcome the prowess of the three-eyed god Śiva (v.10). We are next told that Vappulla erected a temple of Śiva in the village Kādambarī in which he caused a liṅga under the name of Vappulēśvara to be installed by sages. Another temple dedicated to Śrīvatsa (Vishṇu) was surrounded by four small shrines of other deities, the name of one of whom, Lakshmī-Nārāyaṇa, occurs in the preserved portion. The temple had in front of it a large orchard of mango and other trees. The praśasti was composed by Vijhūka<sup>4</sup>, the son of Hṛishikēśa (v. 18).

The scribe seems to have discovered after writing v. 13 that he had omitted two verses. These he added below. The first of them is almost completely broken away; the <sup>1</sup> No deity is named in the extant portion, but v. 11, which speaks of a temple of Śaṅkara erected by Vappulla, suggests that the inscription was originally put up at it. It, therefore, probably opened with a verse in praise of Śiva.

<sup>2</sup> Banerji read this name as Vapullaka, but in two places (vv. 5 and 8) where it occurs in the extant portion, the metre requires the readings Vappulla and Vappullaka respectively. The deity named after him was called Vappulēśvara. I have, therefore, taken the name to be Vappulla.

<sup>3</sup> Banerji at first mentioned this person's name as Lakshmaṇa, but that was plainly due to a mislection in 1.7 (viḥ., Lakshmaṇa for lakṣmaṇa). He has given the correct reading in H. T. M., p. 130.

<sup>4</sup> Banerji read the name as Virūka. For the form of jb used here, see nirjjhara in line 9 of the Kairā plates (K. 380) of Dadda II (above, No. 16). See also the form of the letter in the Chandēlla grants of the age, I. P., Table V, 18, XIV.

second mentions that the wife of some person (perhaps of Vappulla himself) named Nayanāvalī<sup>1</sup> caused an image of Umā-Mahēśvara to be made.

The inscription is dated on Thursday, the 10th tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha in the year 812 which was the ninth year of administration rendered glorious by the illustrious Karṇa.<sup>2</sup> The tithi and the year of the date are expressed in numerical figures only. This date must evidently be referred to the Kalachuri era and regularly corresponds, for the expired year 812, to Thursday, the 4th January 1061 A.C. The tenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Māgha ended 3 h. 10 m. after mean sunrise on that day. As the expired year 812 is here said to be the ninth regnal year, Karṇa seems to have been crowned in the expired Kalachuri year 804 (1052-53 A.C.).

This was evidently his second coronation. For, we have already seen from the Banaras plates that his father Gāṅgēyadēva died in the month of Phālguna in the expired Kalachuri year 792. The month of Māgha in Karṇa's first regnal year, therefore, fell in the expired Kalachuri year 793.<sup>3</sup> The same month in this ninth regnal year should fall in the expired Kalachuri year 801 and not in 812 as stated in the present record.<sup>4</sup> Even supposing that the mistake lies in the numerical figures denoting the year, we find that the tithi in the expired Kalachuri year 801 fell on Friday, the 5th January 1050 A.C., and not on Thursday as required. The date would, therefore, appear to be irregular. On the other hand, if we suppose that Karṇa was crowned a second time in the expired Kalachuri year 804, the date would be quite regular as shown above. This second coronation in 1052-53 A.C. must have been celebrated when he was at the height of his power after annexing the Chandēlla and Pratihāra kingdoms.

The present inscription mentions two battles fought by Vappulla. The first of these, called the Battle of Horses, cannot be definitely located. The second was fought with a prince named Trilōchana at the foot of the Yellow Mountain. Mr. Banerji<sup>5</sup> identified this prince with Trilōchanapāla, a descendant of Bārappa of the Chālukya dynasty who was ruling over Lāṭa (Central and Southern Gujarat) in 1051 A.C.<sup>6</sup> I do not know, however, of any Yellow Mountain in Gujoeat. Two other references to this mountain are known to occur in inscriptions found at Ajayagaḍh. One of them which is incised on a rock near the Tirhawan gate of the fort describes the Chandēlla Kīrtivarman as the crest-jewel of kings in the districts of the Yellow Mountain.<sup>7</sup> The other inscription which is also engraved on a rock near a gate of the same fort mentions the Yellow Mountain as the place of residence of Kīrtivarman.<sup>8</sup> As the mountain was thus situated in Bundelkhand, Trilōchana whose forces Vappulla is said to have defeated may be identified with the prince Trilōchanapāla who belonged to the Gurjara-Pratihāra dynasty.<sup>9</sup> We know

that the Kalachuris wrested the Doab from the Pratihāras, but we do not know how long Trilōchanapāla continued to rule after 1027 A.C., the date of his Jhūsī plates.<sup>1</sup> If the Mahārājādhirāja Yaśahpāla who made the grant of a village in the Kauśāmba-mandala in 1037, A.C.<sup>2</sup> belonged to the Gurjara-Pratihāra dynasty, Trilōchanapāla could not have been a contemporary of Karṇa. It is not, however, unlikely that Yaśahpāla was a prince of the Pāla dynasty who, taking advantage of the chaotic conditions in the Pratihāra kingdom due to Muhammadan invasions, established himself for a short while in the country round Allahabad. In that case Trilōchanapāla may have continued to rule at Bāri for a few years after 1027, and may have therefore suffered a defeat at the hands of Karṇa's general Vappulla.

The village Kādambarī, where the temple of Siva was erected, I am unable to identify.<sup>3</sup>

TRANSLATION

[Ōm! Adoration to Siva.]

(Verse 1) May that [form of Siva], which, an object of their knowledge, even the sages who know what happens in the three times (i.e., in the past, present and future) are unable to describe, though they have seen it, to (persons of) good minds . . . . of all virtuous persons, lead to your well-being.

(V. 2) There was (born) from Kōkalladēva (II) of incomprehensible actions, [Gāṅgēyadēva] who, having with his might rendered powerless the lords of the earth extending from the snow-mountain to the ocean, [threw them] into prison. . . . . From him was (born) the illustrious Karṇadēva, the lord of the earth surrounded by the ocean.

(V. 3) Who [made over] to his friends. . . . ; (who was) the impending universal destruction; (and) who planted his foot on the extremely haughty heads of the foremost among kings.<sup>12</sup>

(V. 4) May the king, [a lion in the form of] the illustrious Karṇa, be triumphant!— (he) whose nails are the knowledge of the sacred law; whose legs are the Purāṇas; who appears dreadful with his mane of. . . . ; whose open mouth is the Vēdas; whose eyes are good policy; whose shining hair is the sacrifice; (and) who causes fever to the elephant that is the Kali age.

(V. 5) While (Karṇa), the foremost (lit., crest-jewel) of the kings of Chēdi, is ruling the earth, the wise (man) named Vappulla, who is firmly attached to the worship of his lotus-like feet, having subdued those who had previously attained fame in three worlds, . . . .

<sup>12</sup> There may be a play on the word ksitibhrīt. The description in that case would equally apply to the sun at the time of world-destruction.

(V. 6) . . . . . was born—(he) whose good qualities were marked by the goddess of fortune, (and) whose name alone was noteworthy on the surface of the earth. From him (was born) Vijjalarāṇaka, the raging wild fire to the forests which were his enemies.

(V. 7) His younger brother Vigraharāja, a warrior, who earned praise by his excellences, was (born) on the earth; the wives of the enemies killed by whom, having remembered. . . . .

(V. 8) In battle he became the resting place of the goddess of heroism,—(he) who made his name Vappullaka, given to him by his father equal (in fame) to (those of) the heroes of old. . . . .

(V. 9) Having mounted the two mighty. . . . and exhibiting deeds worthy of a god. . . . . [fought the battle known] as the Battle of Horses. . . . .

(V. 10) He, sword in hand, having defeated at the foot of the Yellow Mountain, the army of Trilōchana equalled the glory of Arjuna<sup>1</sup> (who overpowered the might of the three-eyed god Śiva). . . . .

(V. 11) Gracing the earth like the moon, he, being stainless with his excellences, as the moon is with her rays, caused a temple of Śaṅkara to be constructed in the village called Kādambarī.

(V. 12) [Where] (this) linga was installed by sages according to the rite laid down (in the sacred texts); since the day of whose installation the goddess of fortune has day after day attended the sons and grandsons. . . . .

(V. 13) [In the temple]. . . . . was installed (the image?) named Śrīvatsa, being surrounded by four small shrines; in them (were installed) the (following) deities in order—on the north-eastern (side). . . . . (and) Lakṣmī together with Nārāyaṇa.

(V. 14) In front of it (i. e., the temple) [he planted] a garden containing hundreds of mango trees and various (other) kinds of trees. . . . . [with a well full of] water.

(V. 15) May Śiva who is known as the holy Vappulēśvara receive (here) abundant worship to the end of the world and be gracious to [Vappulla] together with (the inmates of) his inner apartment, his sons and servants.

(V. 16) . . . . . together with . . . . .

(V. 17) By the religious merit [which I may have acquired] by what gold of mine has been spent on this work which is dedicated to Śiva. . . . .

(V. 18) [He built] a five-shrined temple of Śiva. In it the son of Hṛṣhikēśa named Vijhūka has, with devotion, composed this prāśasti.

(V. 19) . . . . . of the Brāhmaṇas . . . . .

(V. 20) His distinguished wife is known by the name of Nayanāvalī. She caused a beautiful image of Mahēśvara together with Umā to be made.

(Line 20) (This) Prāśasti [was caused to be written] . . . . . on Thursday, the 10th (lunar day) of the bright (fortnight) of Māgha in the year 812 in the ninth year of administration rendered glorious by the illustrations Karṇa who meditates on the feet of [the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja, Paramēśvara, the illustrious] Vāmadēva. May it last to the end of the world! May there be bliss and great prosperity! Om! Obeisance to the divine Vāsudēva! Om! Obeisance to Gaṇapati. Om! Obeisance!

<sup>1</sup> There is a play on the word Trilōchana meaning (1) a king of that name and (2) the god Śiva. For Arjuna's fight with Śiva see the Mahābhārata, Vanaparvan, adhyāya 167, vv. 9 ff.

No. 54; PLATE XLIII B

BRITISH MUSEUM PLATE OF KARNA

THIS IS a single copper-plate which, together with its ring and seal, was presented by Sir A. W. Franks to the British Museum, London, and is now preserved in that Museum. It seems to have been discovered somewhere in the Uttar Pradesh, but its exact find-spot is not known. It is edited here for the first time from excellent photostat copies kindly supplied by the Director of the Museum.

This is the first of the two copper-plates forming a set, which recorded the grant of some Kalachuri king of Tripurī, probably Karṇa, the son of Gāṅgēyadēva. It measures 1' 5½" broad and 12¼" high. It has a ring and a large seal 3½" in diameter. The weight of the plate is 10 lbs. and that of the ring and seal 6 lbs. and 1 oz. The writing on it is in a state of excellent preservation.

The plate is inscribed on one side only. It has a hole 1" in diameter at the bottom of the inscribed side for the ring which must have originally held together the two plates of the set. The plate contains twenty-one lines of writing. The average size of the letters is .4". The seal, though it resembles that of the Goharwa plates in the disposition of the figures, symbols and legend on it, was evidently cast from a different mould. The figures of Lakshmi and the elephants are much better executed here than on the seal of the Goharwa plates.<sup>1</sup>

The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet, and generally resemble those of the Goharwa plates. Some of the individual letters like ś and bh are, however, shaped as in the Banaras plates; the upper loop of th is slightly open in -pathagān-, l.12 and the sign of avagraha occurs once only in l.13. The record is very carelessly written. The writer has confused y, ś and bh, as well as t and bh. In one case he has not even incised an akshara completely. See tū in -tūya-, l.14. In a few places the record is so corrupt, that it would have been well-nigh impossible to restore the correct text without the help of the Goharwa plates. But strange as it might appear, the present record has helped in the restoration of verse 9 which though it occurs in both the Goharwa plates and the Rewa stone inscription<sup>2</sup> is incorrectly written in the former and is partly mutilated in the latter.

The language is Sanskrit and except for the word siddhiḥ in the beginning, the extant portion is wholly in verse. There are, in all, twenty-one verses, of which the first twenty are completely written. The record breaks off after the first two aksharas of the second half of the twenty-first verse. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities of the substitution of v for b and ś for ś, the reduplication of a consonant after r and so forth.

The record, so far as it goes, is identical with the Goharwa plates. The genealogy of the donor is traced from the moon down to Karṇa, the son of Gāṅgēyadēva. On the present plate the inscription ends abruptly in the middle of the description of Karṇa and before the commencement of the formal part of the grant. It is not, therefore, possible to say definitely who actually made the grant. But, as the draft of the eulogistic portion of the Goharwa plates, which is used here, is not known to have been adopted by any successors of Karṇa, the present grant was probably made by Karṇa himself. As the second plate is not forthcoming, all details such as the object, occasion and date of the grant are lost.

SIMRA STONE INSCRIPTION OF KARNA

THE stone bearing this inscription is fixed upside down into the plinth of a pavilion at Simrā, a village about 10 miles north-west of Murwārā, the chief town of the Murwārā tahsil of the Jabalpur District, Madhya Pradesh. It was first referred to by Rai Bahadur Hiralal in the Jubbulpore District Gazetteer, p. 185, and subsequently in his Inscriptions in the Central Provinces and Berar.<sup>6</sup> It is edited here for the first time from inked estampages kindly supplied by the Superintendent of Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

The inscription which is in a state of good preservation, contains four lines. The writing covers a space measuring 3' 5" broad by 11" high. The average size of the letters is 1.8". The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet of about the 11th century A.C. The language is Sanskrit. The inscription is very carelessly written. As regards orthography the vowel i is used for yī in vijai, l.1, naya is written several times for the conjunct nya, rī for the vowel ri in krītam, l.4, and l for r in Lāutī in l.3.

The inscription refers itself to the victorious reign<sup>7</sup> of the Bhaṭṭārakaprabha, the illustrious Karṇa, who, judging by the characters and provenance of the present inscription, seems to be identical with the well-known Kalachuri king of that name. The object of the inscription appears to be to record the death of some persons who are said to have gone to the holy world. It is not stated on what occasion they lost their lives.<sup>8</sup> The record ends with the statement that the commemorative stone was put up by Janāda (Janārdana?).

As stated above, the stone is built upside down into the plinth of a pavilion, which shows that it is not in its original position.

<sup>3</sup> Perhaps -लिङ्गव्याजेन is intended. The Goharwa plates have एकाव्याजेन which is not quite satisfactory.

<sup>6</sup> First ed., p. 40; second ed. p., 43. Cunningham, who visited Simrā in 1883-84, does not appear to have noticed this inscription.

<sup>8</sup> Since the name of Karṇa is mentioned in the beginning, it may be conjectured that they met with death in some battle of that king.

No. 56; PLATE XLV

KHAIRHA PLATES OF YASAKARNA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 823

THESE plates were found enclosed in a large stone chest at Khairhā,<sup>8</sup> a village in Vindhya Pradesh, about eight miles south-west of the Burhar railway station on the Katni-Bilaspur Branch of the Bengal Nagpur Railway. They were published, with a lithograph and a translation, by Rai Bahadur Hiralal in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XII, pp. 205 ff. They are edited here from excellent ink-impressions kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India.

They are two copper-plates, each measuring 1' 6.8" in breadth and 1' 1.5" in height. They were held together by a stout ring, passing through a hole about .8" in diameter at the top of each plate. Its ends were not originally soldered. To the ring is attached a bell-shaped seal, on the counter-sunk circular surface of which appears in relief a rudely executed figure of Lakshmi attended by an elephant on either side, pouring water on her head. Below this is the legend Srīmad-Yasakarnadevāḥ in a single line across the diameter. At the bottom of all is the figure of the couchant Nandī facing proper right, with an incense-pot on either side. The total weight of the plates and the seal is 14 seers and 25 tolas.

The inscription is in a state of excellent preservation. There are forty-four lines in all, of which twenty-one are written on the inner side of the first plate, and the remaining twenty-three on that of the second. The average size of the letters is .5". The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet. Attention may be drawn to the two forms of the initial i—the older one in Chhītapāḥ, l. 30 and the later one in iva, l. 6, the sign of the rare ḥi which appears as a subscript letter in -kḥipta-, l. 16, and the medial n which is added to the left limb of j in jugupsatī, l. 8 and to the right side of the vertical of y in -nāmany-udgamāḥ, l. 16. The sign of avagraha occurs in ll. 11, 15 and 39, and a vertical dash at the end of l. 27. In other respects the characters resemble those of the Goharwa plates of Karṇa.

The language is Sanskrit. The first twenty-two lines contain twenty-four verses composed in the kāvya style, eulogising the donor and his ancestors. They are followed by a prose portion (ll. 22-31), containing the formal part of the grant and the usual benedictive and imprecatory verses (ll. 31-44). The record ends with the mention of the writer's name and the customary blessing, maṅgalaṁ mahā-śrīḥ. The following orthographical peculiarities may also be noticed:—the palatal ś is generally written as the dental s (see, e.g., -śāsi- and -sat-ōpabhōgyā-, both in l. 3), while the reverse also occurs in two places, -bhāśi, l. 19 and śalila-, l. 38; the sign for v is everywhere employed to denote b, see Vrahmaṇē, l. 1 and -avdhi-, l. 2; the consonant following r is often reduplicated, see chandr-ārka-, l. 14, svarggē, l. 36; finally, the anusvāra before the dental s is wrongly changed to n in -vansa-, l. 6.

The plates were issued by Yaśaḥkarṇa of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty. His pedigree is traced to Viṣṇu. After the mythological and legendary ancestors Brahmā, Attri, the moon, Purūravas, Bharata and Kārtavīrya, the first historical personage mentioned here is Yuvarājadēva, who is identical with the second prince of that name mentioned in the Bilhāri stone inscription and the Banaras plates of Karṇa. His son Kōkalla (II) is said to have been placed on the throne by the chief ministers of the realm. Kōkalla's son was Gāṅgēyadēva who became famous as Vikramāditya. In the course of his description we are told that wishing to run away from him the king of Kuntala ceased to wield his spear.<sup>1</sup> Gāṅgēya died with his hundred wives at the foot of the banyan tree at Prayāga. His son and successor was Karṇadēva who constructed at Banaras a high temple which he named Karṇamēru<sup>2</sup> after himself. He also established a settlement of the Brāhmaṇas called Karṇāvati. He married a Hūṇa princess named Āvalladēvi. From her he had a son named Yaśaḥkarṇa whom he himself crowned king. Yaśaḥkarṇa routed the Andhra king and worshipped the god Bhīmēśvara near the Gōdāvarī.

The present plates were granted at Banaras<sup>3</sup> by Yaśaḥkarṇa who is described in the formal portion exactly like his father Karṇa in the Goharwa plates. They record the royal donation of the village Deulā-Pañchēla situated in the pattalā of Dēvagrāma in the uddēśa (district?) of Vāsudēva. The donee was a Brāhmaṇa named Gāṅgādhara, the son of Chhītapai and grandson of Siā, who belonged to the Kāṇva gōtra with three pravaras,<sup>4</sup> and was a student of the Rīgvēda. The grant was made on the occasion of a saṅkrānti on Sunday, the fourteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Phālguna in the year 823 (expressed in numerical figures only) of an unspecified era. The record was written by Vāchchhūka, the writer of religious documents.

The date of the present grant must evidently be referred to the Kalachuri era, but the details do not work out correctly. The fourteenth tithi of the bright fortnight of Phālguna in the Kalachuri year 823, if we take it to be expired as usual, fell on the 6th March 1072 A.C., when the week-day was Tuesday, not Sunday as required. Besides, the Mīna-saṅkrānti did not fall on that day but had taken place on the 22nd of February of that year, which was a Wednesday. Taking the year as current, we find that the aforementioned tithi fell on Wednesday (the 16th February 1071 A.C.), and not on Sunday,

while the Mīna-saṅkrānti took place five days later on Monday, the 21st February. In 1073 A.C., though it would not suit the epoch of the era (viz., 247-48 A.C.) as finally determined by Dr. Kielhorn, the tithi according to Mr. Sewell's calculations<sup>1</sup> fell on Sunday (the 24th February 1073 A.C.), but the Mīna-saṅkrānti had taken place three days earlier, on the 21st February. None of these dates would, therefore, suit; but Rai Bahadur Hiralal, who first edited the present plates, preferred the last of them on the ground that in that case, the tithi at least is found to agree with the week-day. As for the discrepancy of the saṅkrānti he conjectured that 'the record was possibly dated on the day on which it was actually handed over to the donee, though the grant was made on the auspicious saṅkrānti day<sup>2</sup>.' The statement in the original plates is, however, quite clear. It couples the saṅkrānti with the tithi and the week-day. Besides, the date in 1073 A.C. would not, as already remarked, suit Kielhorn's epoch of the Kalachuri era, the reliability of which in regard to the later dates of the era is now beyond question. The mistake, therefore, must lie somewhere else.

The only year in the period from 1060 A.C. to 1100 A.C., in which the Mīna-saṅkrānti, the tithi and the week-day came close together is 1076 A.C. In that year the fourteenth tithi of the bright half of Phālguna ended 17 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on Sunday, the 21st February and, therefore, gave its number to that day. The Mīna-saṅkrānti also took place 1 h. 15 m. after sunrise on the following day<sup>3</sup>. The year 1076 A.C. would not, however, correspond to the Kalachuri year 823. There appears to be some mistake in the last numeral of the date. The Kalachuri year, if expired, must have been 827. The date of the Christian era, corresponding to the saṅkrānti, is, therefore, Monday, the 22nd February 1076 A.C.

The present grant refers to Yaśaḥkaraṇa's victory over an Andhra king. The latter was probably Vijayāditya VII who ruled from circa 1061 to 1076 A.C.<sup>4</sup> After vanquishing him, Yaśaḥkaraṇa is said to have worshipped Bhīmēśvara with jewellery. From the description given here, this temple of Bhīmēśvara seems to have been situated near the Gōdāvarī. There are several temples of Bhīmēśvara in the Gōdāvarī District, but from the description given here, the temple at Drākshārām in the Rāmchandrapuram tālukā seems to be intended. 'The real centre of religious interest at Drākshārām is the temple of Bhīmēśvarasvāmī. It contains a particularly big lingam, some fourteen or fifteen feet high. This is supposed to be a part of a lingam, which broke into five pieces and fell at five holy places, namely at Bhīmavaram or Bhīmarāma in Cocanada, Pālakollu or Kshīrarāma in Krishna, Amaravati or Amaraṛāma in the Guntur District, and Kumārarāma which is not identified. It is supposed to have been erected by the sun and worshipped by the seven sages who made the seven mouths of the Gōdāvarī. The seven sages are supposed to have each brought water from their respective rivers under-ground to the tank at Drākshārāmam which is called the Sapta-Gōdāvarī, seven Gōdāvarīs. There is a sacred bathing ghat, which confers in a condensed form all the sanctity which is to be obtained by separate baths in each of the seven rivers.... The temple is a rather handsome two-storeyed building. Its erection is ascribed by popular tradition to an unknown Chōla

<sup>3</sup> There is thus a discrepancy of one day. For a somewhat analogous case, see the date of the Basāhi plates of Gōvindachandradēva, Ind. Ant., Vol. XIX, p. 363. The saṅkrānti, the tithi and the week-day occurred together on the 22nd February 1103 A. C., but it is very doubtful if Yaśaḥkaraṇa had retained his hold over Banaras at that time, as implied in verse 13 of the present inscription.

king.<sup>1</sup> The earliest inscription at Drākshārām is that of the time of Rājarāja, dated 1055 A.C. The foregoing account will show that the temple is not on the bank of the Gōdāvarī as intimated in the present inscription; for the river flows about fourteen miles away from it, but the description given here can be understood, as has already been suggested by Rai Bahadur Hiralal, to refer to the tank at Drākshārām, which is popularly believed to contain the seven streams of the Gōdāvarī.

As for the localities mentioned in the present inscription, Tripurī has already been shown to be Tewar, a village about 6 miles from Jabalpur. Karṇāvati has been identified by Rai Bahadur Hiralal with the deserted village Karaṇbēl which lies about a mile from Tripurī.<sup>2</sup> The name has 'a double signification, retaining the memory of the founder in the first half and giving the distinguishing mark of the site in the second, there being a jungle of bēl trees to supply leaves to the numerous Śiva lingas once enshrined there'.<sup>3</sup> Kuntala has been already shown to be the country under the rule of the Later Chālukyas of Kalyāṇi. As regards Deulā-Pañchēla it appears to be a joint place-name. The first part of it is probably represented by Deori, now a deserted village 10 miles north by west of Khairhā, and the second by Pāchri which lies only two miles to the north of Deori. Dēvagrāma, the headquarters of the sub-division (pattalā) in which the donated village was situated, was identified by R.B. Hiralal with Deogavān close to Khairhā 'where there are a number of very old wells and water-reservoirs together with the remains of old buildings'.<sup>4</sup> The word Vāsudēv-ōddēśē, which precedes Dēvagrāma-pattalāyām in lines 27-28 of the present grant was taken by R.B. Hiralal to mean 'in honour of Vāsudēva'. From the context, however, it seems to denote a territorial division. Besides Yaśaḥkarna was a devotee of Mahēśvara (Śiva), not of Vāsudēva. If the grant was made in honour of any deity it must have been Śiva. I am, therefore, inclined to take Vāsudēv-ōddēśē of the text to mean 'in the district of Vāsudēva'. An analogous expression Vāsudēva-khaṇḍa-vishayē, which undoubtedly denotes a territorial division, occurs in the Ganjām plates of Raṇabhañjadēva,<sup>5</sup> edited by R.B. Hiralal himself. There are several places<sup>6</sup> named after Viṣṇu in the surrounding territory of Vindhya Pradesh.

TRANSLATION

Om! Adoration to Brahman!

(Verse 1) Glorious is the lotus-navelled (god), glorious is the lotus which sprang from his navel and glorious is the (god) Brahmā born from (that) lotus! Glorious again is his offspring Atri, and glorious is the friend of the ocean<sup>10</sup> who had his birth from his (i.e., Atri's) eye.

(V. 2) Now the king,<sup>11</sup> who is the swan in the expanse of heaven, begat Bōdhana (i.e., Budha), the son of (that) primeval king, (who became) a son-in-law in the house of the friend of lotuses.<sup>12</sup>

(V. 3) The son of the god (moon), who is the elixir of the seven oceans, obtained as a legitimate son Purūravas, who had here as his faithful wife Urvaśī to be enjoyed (only) by hundreds of matchless blessings, and also the earth.

(V. 4) In this family verily was born Bharata, whose pure fame is proclaimed by the Yamunā, hemmed in by the posts of more than a hundred horse-sacrifices (performed by him); who was devoted to securing the well-being of the earth made beautiful by the jewelled girdle by the seven oceans.

(V. 5) Exceedingly glorious in his family is that Kārtavīrya who wielded with ease all weapons, superfluous (though they were in his case), and who allowed the title of king only to the Moon,<sup>13</sup> the progenitor of the family of these Haihaya princes.

(V. 6) As the Himālaya, the lord of mountains, produces a bamboo, which is

rendered bright by stainless and round pearls,<sup>1</sup> so did that lord of princes beget the Kalachuri family, which is purified by kings of spotless conduct.

(V. 7) In that family was a king, the foremost among those (who are) eminent for political wisdom, who purified Tripurī as Indra does his city,—Yuvarājadēva (II), who destroyed the lords of princes blinded by arrogance as a young lion kills the leading scent-elephants infuriated by rut.

(V. 8) The chief ministers of the lord of the earth placed on the throne his son Kōkalla (II), a lion-like prince, the advance of whose four-membered army was checked (only) by (its) encountering the multitude of waves of the four oceans.

(V. 9) That lord having gone far away,<sup>2</sup> his fame appears like a woman separated from her husband; (for) throwing away the white sandal paste, she derides moon-light and detests pearl necklaces.<sup>3</sup>

(V. 10) His offspring was Gāṅgēyadēva, a thunderbolt falling on the heads of (his) enemies, the lord of the fortune of heroes, whose chest was broad like an emerald tablet, and who, having smiling eyes, surpassed with both his arms the length of a city-bolt.

(V. 11) He (was) the crest-jewel of heroic princes; he (became) famous by the title of Vikramāditya; wishing suddenly to run away from whom (the lord of) Kuntala ceased to wield his spear.<sup>4</sup>

(V. 12) When, fond of residing at the foot of the (holy) banyan tree at Prayāga, he attained salvation there together with his hundred wives, his son Karṇadēva worshipped the quarters with (the offerings of) the pearls from the frontal globes of the best of enemies' elephants cleft by his sword.

(V. 13) What more (need we say about him) than that here at Kāśī the (temple) Karṇamēru<sup>5</sup> proclaims his great fame, which is like the circle of waves of the milk-ocean—

<sup>3</sup>The intended sense is that the fame of the king was brighter than all these. A woman separated from her husband abstains from all decoration and suffers pangs of love in moon-light.

<sup>4</sup>Hiralal translated the second half of this verse as follows: 'Wishing to run away from whom with dishevelled hair (the king of Kuntala) who was deprived of his country came to possess it again.' In a note added to this, he remarked, 'The meaning of the second line of the verse is very obscure. The writer evidently plays on the word kuntala and has brought about what is called virōdbābhāsa when he says akuntalaḥ kuntalatām bābhāra, i. e., a hairless person bore hairiness (an apparent contradiction). The eulogist evidently seems to convey that Gāṅgēyadēva was so noble that he restored the Kuntala country to the king who was defeated and was running away with dishevelled hair (a second pun on the word akuntala), Ep. Ind., Vol. XII, p. 215, n. 2. This interpretation was followed by R. D. Banerji in his Haibayas of Tripurī etc., p. 16, but it is incorrect. The mistake lies in the pada-cchhēda of the last quarter of the verse. We have to take the words as na Kuntalaḥ (not a-kuntalaḥ) kuntalatām va(bā)bhāra. There is evidently a pun on the word kuntala here. The first word kuntalaḥ means the king of the Kuntala country. kuntalatā has to be explained in two ways (1) Kuntalasya bhāvah kuntalatā 'the position of the king of the Kuntala country' and (2) kuntam lāti iti kuntalaḥ; tasya bhāvah kuntalatā, 'the state of one who wields a spear'. As regards the second explanation, see the derivation of kuntala given by Mammaṭa in his Kāvya-prakāśa (ed. by Zalkikar, 1921), p. 42.

The second half of the verse apparently means 'Wishing to run away suddenly from whom, Kuntala ceased to be Kuntala. This involves contradiction, but it is only apparent, the figure being Virōdbābhāsa; for the words really mean 'Wishing to run away suddenly from whom, the king of Kuntala ceased to wield his spear', i. e., he gave up fighting with Gāṅgēyadēva and fled away. The verse is, therefore, intended to record a defeat of the king of Kuntala by Gāṅgēyadēva.

<sup>5</sup>Mēru denotes a particular kind of temple, viz., hexagonal, with twelve stories, variegated windows and four entrances; Bṛhat-saṁhitā, lvi, 20. According to the Samarāṅgaṇasūtradhāra, it has sixteen stories and four spires. For other details, see Samarāṅgaṇasūtradhāra, ch. 55, vv. 5-15 and ch. 63, vv. 4 and 5.

(the temple which is so high that) it lessens the fatigue of multitudes of celestial damsels playing in the sky, with the breezes of the flags waving from its golden spires.

(V. 14) He established a settlement of Brāhmaṇas<sup>1</sup> called Karṇāvātī, the foremost abode of bliss, the root of the creeper of Vedic scholarship, the crown of the heavenly river<sup>2</sup> (and) the world of Brahmā on the surface of the earth.

(V. 15) That lord of Kalachuris begot on the illustrious Āvalladēvī, the goddess of fortune produced from the ocean of the Hūṇa family, the illustrious Yaśaḥkarṇadēva, the splendour of whose fame is the companion of the waves of the milk-ocean, that surge up mistaking it for the rise of the moon.<sup>3</sup>

(V. 16) Of this pious prince the father, whose actions were pure, being guided by his family priest, performed himself the great coronation ceremony in the quadrangle (surrounded) by the great oceans, which had the sun and the moon as lamps and which was rendered resplendent by the lord of mountains<sup>4</sup> as by a full jar.

(V. 17) Glorious is he, who, like a jewel-lamp of the Jambūdvīpa<sup>5</sup> shines in the Kali age, as (the jewel-lamp shines) in the darkness of the night; who is not influenced by partiality for the assemblies of wicked men, as a jewel-lamp is not filled by the wings of night-moths,<sup>6</sup> and who does not display evil conduct as a jewel-lamp does not give out lamp-black.

(V. 18) If the milk of the cow of plenty were put in two shells made of the wish-fulfilling gem, then there would be seen a likeness with the white and red eyes of this liberal king.

(V. 19) He set up high pillars of victory near the confines of the earth, as companions of the posts to which the elephants of the quarters are tied.

(V. 20) (This) liberal (king) pours five or six drops of water on the hands of Brāhmaṇas. Even with these, they satisfy their desire for wealth, and afterwards show their contempt for (the ocean which is) the mine of jewels.<sup>7</sup>

(V. 21) Occupying a high position like Mēru, (this) ruler of the earth exceedingly gratifies the suppliants by his great gifts such as the tulā-puruṣa.<sup>8</sup>

(V. 22) Bright as the tusks of the elephants of the lord of heaven, white like the conches of the milky ocean, and (resplendent) like the slough of the serpent which forms the couch of Viṣṇu, his fame has attained abundance.

(V. 23) Extirpating with ease the lord of Andhra, the graceful movements of whose arms were flawless, he worshipped with (the offerings of) many ornaments the holy Bhimēśvara, near whom the Gōdāvarī, with her dancing eye-brows of waves, sings his glory with the seven notes of her streams<sup>9</sup> sweet with the cries of the intoxicated swans.

<sup>6</sup> There is a play on the word pakṣa-pāta meaning (1) partiality and (2) the fall of wings.

<sup>7</sup> The intended sense is that the king's gifts are more precious than the treasure inside the ocean.

No. 57; PLATE XLVI

JABALPUR PLATE OF YASAHKARNA

THIS copper-plate belongs to a set of two plates, the exact provenance of which is not known.<sup>1</sup> Both the plates were, after discovery, deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur, together with an incorrect transcript made by a Pandit of Sihōrā<sup>2</sup> in the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. The second plate of the set was subsequently lost. The first plate and the old transcript of the second are still preserved in the Museum. The the Bhāradvājā, the Viśvāmitrā or Kauśikā, the Jamadagni and the Vasishṭhā. The Bhāradvājā, Viśvāmitrā and Jamadagni no longer exist, but pilgrims bathe in the sea at the spots where they are supposed to have been. See the Godavari District Gazetteer, p. 6.

<sup>1</sup> Like Kielhorn I have called it the Jabalpur plate, following Sir A. Cunningham (A. S. I. R., Vol. IX, p. 87). As it records the grant of a village in the Jāuli pattalā it must have been found somewhere in the Jabalpur District. Hiralal states that it was originally discovered by a Tahsildar of Sihōrā, the headquarters of the Sihōrā tabsil of the Jabalpur District. See his Inscriptions in C. P. and Berar, second ed., p. 25.

contents of the plates were first noticed by Sir A. Cunningham in his Archaeological Survey of India Reports, Vol. IX, pp. 87 ff., but his account, based as it was on the aforementioned transcript, was very incorrect.<sup>1</sup> The first plate was then edited, with a translation but without a lithograph, by Dr. Kielhorn from rubbings and impressions supplied to him. It seems that the plate was not properly cleaned before its impressions and rubbings were taken for Dr. Kielhorn, who could not, in consequence, read with certainty several aksharas of it. At my request Mr. M.A. Suboor of the Nagpur Museum has kindly cleaned the plate which now yields fairly good impressions. The inscription is edited here from the original plate and its ink impressions kindly taken for me by Mr. Natarajan, Superintendent of the Government Press, Nagpur.

The plate is substantial, weighing 4 seers and 31½ tolas. It is the first plate of its set and is inscribed on one side only. It measures 1' 6½" in breadth and 1' ½" in height and is about .2" in thickness. Its rims are raised for the protection of the writing. At the bottom of the inscribed side, there is a hole, .7" in diameter; for the ring which must have held the plates together, but both the ring and the seal which must have been soldered to it are lost. The plate is in a state of good preservation, only two or three letters being slightly damaged by rust.

The characters are Nāgarī and closely resemble those of the Khairhā plates, the writer being probably the same as shown below. The only peculiarities that call for notice are that the initial i is represented by the later sign throughout, see e.g., iva, l. 5, Indu, l. 7 etc.; the left limb of kh is devoid of a tail in some plates see e.g., -khēlat-, l. 11 and khalu, l. 15, but contrast that in khadga-, l. 10; gh also appears in two forms, see -sanigha-samighaṭṭa in l. 7 and -parigha- in l. 8. The sign of avagraha is used in ll. 10 and 14.

The language is Sanskrit and with the exception of ōm namō Vrahmaṇē in the beginning and a few initial words of the formal part at the end, the whole of the extant portion is metrically composed. All the verses, which number twenty-four, occur in the Khairhā plates. The orthography shows the same peculiarities as in those plates. Besides, j is used for y once only in -trijāmā-, l. 15.

As stated before, the inscription is fragmentary. It contains the entire eulogistic portion which is identical with that of the Khairhā grant, but it breaks off just after the formal portion begins. As the genealogy in the eulogistic portion stops with Yaśaḥkarṇa, it is plain that the grant was made by him. From the Nagpur Museum transcript of the second plate, which, though inaccurate in some places, may be used with caution in the absence of the original plate, it seems that the object of the inscription was to record the grant, by Yaśaḥkarṇa, of the village Karañjā situated on the bank of the Narmadā in the Jāulī pattalā<sup>2</sup> on the occasion of the Uttarāyaṇa-saṅkrānti on Monday, the tenth tithi of the dark fortnight of Māgha in the year 529. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Hariśarman, the son of Bhaṭṭa Śrī-Nāgō and grandson of Bhaṭṭa Śrī-Bhavanāma(ga?) of the Vājasaneyā śākhā with the three pravaras Kāśyapa, Avatsāra and Naidhruva. The scribe was probably the illustrious Vāchchhūka, who wrote<sup>3</sup> the Khairhā plates.

The numerals of the year, which must be referred to the Kalachuri era, are quite unreliable; because Yaśaḥkarṇa for whom we have the date 823<sup>1</sup> (or rather 827 as shown before), could not have flourished in the year 529 of the same era. But the specification of the saṅkrānti, month, fortnight and week-day may be correct. Taking it to be so, Dr. Kielhorn found by calculation that during the sixty years preceding 1151 A.C.,<sup>2</sup> the only year in which the Makara-saṅkrānti fell on Monday, the 10th of the dark fortnight of Māgha was 1122 A.C. For, in that year, the 10th of the dark half of Māgha fell by the pūrṇimānta scheme on Monday, the 25th December, when the 10th tithi of the dark half of Māgha ended 8 h. 39 m. after mean sunrise; and in the same year, the Makara-saṅkrānti took place 15 m. before mean sunrise of, or for religious purposes on, the same Monday.<sup>3</sup> Dr. Kielhorn, therefore, took Monday, the 25th December 1122 A.C., corresponding, with his epoch of the Kalachuri era, to Māgha va. di. 10 of the Kalachuri year 874 as the true date of the grant.

In his article on the Khairhā plates, R. B. Hiralal objected to the aforementioned date on the ground that it gives an unusually long reign to Yaśaḥkarṇa; for, the Khairhā plates show that 'Yaśaḥkarṇa had defeated the king of Andhra, and crushed the power of several of his enemies before it was written. It is, therefore, likely that he had been in occupation of the throne for at least 4 or 5 years prior to this, and if we suppose that he lived for about the same period after he made the Jabalpur grant his reign would extend to about 60 years and his age to about 80 years, supposing his installation to have taken place at the age of 20.'<sup>4</sup> Rai Bahadur Hiralal, therefore, relied on the numerical date of the Nagpur Museum transcript which he read as 829 and remarked that the details worked out for Monday, the 31st December 1078 A.C., for the expired Kalachuri year 829. The Makara-saṅkrānti had, however, taken place a week earlier. R.B. Hiralal seems to have supposed that as in the case of the Khairhā grant, the saṅkrānti, on which the grant was made, is wrongly coupled with the day on which the record was actually handed over to the donee.

My personal examination of the Nagpur Museum transcript of the lost plate shows that the numerals of the year as written there are 529 and not 829 as stated by R.B. Hiralal. Even if we suppose that 529 is a mistake for 829, the expired year would be expected to correspond, according to the epoch of 247-48 A.C., to 1077-78 A.C. and not 1078-1079 A.C. Now, in 1077-78 A.C., Māgha va. di. 10 fell on Thursday (the 10th January 1078 A.C.) and not on Monday as required. The Makara-saṅkrānti had taken place 17 days earlier. So the date would not be regular even if we read the numerals as 829. As for R.B. Hiralal's argument that if Dr. Kielhorn's date is accepted, it would give an unusually long reign to Yaśaḥkarṇa, it may be noted, as has already been pointed out by Mr. R.D. Banerji<sup>5</sup>, that Yaśaḥkarṇa must have reigned for a long time; because, even if we accept the date of the Nagpur Museum transcript of the Jabalpur plates of this prince as read by R.B. Hiralal as correct, there is a gap of 73 years between this date 829 and the only known date of his son and successor Gayākarṇa, K. 902. It comes to 75 years if we calculate from the date of the Khairhā plates (viz., 827 as determined before). As conjectured by R.B. Hiralal, Yaśaḥkarṇa may have come to the throne about 5 years earlier, i.e., about 822,

and Gayākarna may have continued to rule till K. 905.<sup>1</sup> So the reigns of the two cover a long period of 83 years. It is not unlikely that Yaśaḥkarna had a longer reign than his son, say, of 50 or 55 years. In that case, the date of the Jabalpur plates as fixed by Dr. Kielhorn would not appear altogether impossible.

But Dr. Kielhorn's date (1122 A.C.) appears to be doubtful on other grounds. From verse 13 of the Jabalpur plate the inscription seems to have been drafted at Banaras. We find that only five months before, the Gāhaḍavāla king Gōvindachandradēva issued his Kamauli plate<sup>2</sup> from Banaras on the 21st July 1122 A.C. Two years later we find him again at Banaras, issuing his Banaras plates<sup>3</sup> on the 14th August 1124 A.C. Is it likely that Yaśaḥkarna ousted Gōvindachandradēva from Banaras some time after July 1122 A.C. and still refrained from mentioning the glorious achievement in the plates issued only a few days after, as he has mentioned his defeat of the Andhra king? The eulogistic portion of the Jabalpur plate is almost an exact copy of that of the Khairhā plates. It would be strange, indeed, if Yaśaḥkarna had nothing to record to his credit during the interval of nearly 50 years,—not even his successful invasion of Banaras!

In the absence of a thoroughly reliable transcript of the second plate, it is not, of course, possible to date the Jabalpur inscription definitely. As in the case of numerals, there may be a mistake, due to mislection, in the specification of the month, day or fortnight in the Nagpur Museum transcript. Of these, a mistake in the specification of the week-day is more possible than any other. Owing to the close resemblance between the letters s and bh of that period it is not unlikely that the writer of the transcript, who was none too accurate in his decipherment, read Sōmē (on Monday) for Bhaumē (on Tuesday).<sup>4</sup> Now, we find that in 1084 A.C., Māgha va. dī. 10 commenced 10 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise on Tuesday (the 24th December). The Makara-saṅkrānti had taken place earlier on the same day, 2 h. 40 m. after mean sunrise. But as the auspicious time (parva-kāla) of the Makara-saṅkrānti extends to as many as 40 ghaṭikās<sup>5</sup> it is not unlikely that Yaśaḥkarna made the grant on account of the saṅkrānti in the evening of that day, when the 10th tithi was current. Tuesday, the 24th December 1084 A. C., corresponding to the expired Kalachuri year 836, may, therefore, be the date of the Jabalpur inscription. It may be noted, in this connection, that the eulogistic part of the present grant closely agrees with that of the Khairhā plates and the writer of both was probably the same.<sup>6</sup> This shows that the Jabalpur plates must have been issued within a few years of the Khairhā plates and before Yaśaḥkarna had lost Banaras to the Gāhaḍavālas some time before A.C. 1090.<sup>6</sup>

No. 58; PLATE XLVII

TEWAR STONE INSCRIPTION OF GAYAKARNA ; CHEDI YEAR 902

THE slab of black stone which bears the subjoined inscription, was found at Tewar, a village about 6 miles to the west of Jabalpur, the headquarters of the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. The inscription was edited, without any translation or lithograph, by Dr. Kielhorn in the Indian Antiquary, Volume XVIII, pp. 209 ff. It is edited here from the original stone which is deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur.

The record, consisting of twenty-two lines, is inscribed on the countersunk surface of the stone surrounded by a plain border. The writing covers a space measuring 12.7" in breadth and 14.7" in height, and is in a state of good preservation except in the middle of lines 9-13 where a few aksharas have become somewhat indistinct owing to the wearing away of the inscribed surface.<sup>3</sup> The size of the letters varies between .4" and .5". The characters are Nāgarī. T and bh are, in some places, not clearly distinguishable from n, see, e.g., sūmunā l. 5 and Bhāvabrahma-, l. 8; ś has three different forms see, e.g., śrīyē-, l. 1, = sanīyaminaś-cha, l. 16 and śrī-Dharaṇīdharō-, l. 18; the left limb of dh is seen fully developed in some cases, see, e.g., bhikshā-dhanēna, l. 17, Mahīdharah, l. 20 etc. The language is Sanskrit. With the exception of the opening ōm namaḥ Śivāya, the record is metrically composed throughout. There are eighteen verses in all, none of which is numbered. As regards orthography, we may notice the doubling of the consonant following r and preceding v, see Karṇa-, l. 3, and Prithvīdharas-, l. 18; the use of the sign for v to denote b except in three cases, viz. -muktir-bbhavēt, l. 16, = abdhiḥ, l. 19 and -yugal-ābda-, ll. 20-1; and the substitution of the dental s for the palatal ś in -narēśvarō-, ll. 3-4, navasata-, l. 20.

After two customary verses in praise of Śiva and the moon, the mythical ancestor of the Kalachuris, the inscription mentions the king Karṇa, his son Yaśaḥkarṇa and grandson Gayākarṇa<sup>4</sup>, and expresses the wish that Gayākarṇa, together with his son, the crown-prince Narasimha, would rule the earth to the end of the world. The name of Gayākarṇa as the reigning king occurs again in connection with the date in l. 21. The object of the inscription is to record that Bhāvabrahman, who was a disciple of

the Pāśupata ascetic Bhāvatējas of the Ananta gōtra, constructed a temple of Siva near which the inscribed stone was originally put up. The prāśasti, as the inscription is called in v. 15, was composed by Pṛithvīdhara, the son of the Brāhmaṇa Dharaṇīdhara. It was incised by the architect Mahīdhara.

The date of the record is rather clumsily expressed in words as Sunday, the first tithi of the bright fortnight of the month Śuchi (or Āshāḍha) while the Chēdi era was increasing to nine hundred and a couple of years during the reign of the illustrious Gayākarna. This is one of the few dates in which the era is specifically named. The date is quite regular; for the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Āshāḍha in the expired Chēdi or Kalachuri year 902 ended 2 h. after mean sunrise on the 17th June 1151 A.C. which was a Sunday as stated in the present inscription.

Om! Adoration to Siva!

(Verse 1) May that eight-formed (Siva) grant you fortune!—(he) who is the architect of the mansion of the three worlds (and) the noble poet of the composition of the three Vēdas, and whose effort, knowledge and will are eternal.

(V. 2) Glorious is the digit of the moon which is, as it were, the silver-shell held on the head of (Siva), the destroyer of Smara, by (Pārvatī), the daughter of the mountain, who felt very thirsty on account of the fire of the (third) eye on (his) forehead.<sup>13</sup>

(V. 3) In the race of Atri's son (i.e., the moon) was born Karṇa, the king who strove to subdue the whole multitude of princes. From him was (born) the king Yaśaḥ-karṇa. His son is this king Gayākarna.

<sup>13</sup> According to Kielhorn the second half of this verse does not admit of a proper construction (Ind. Ant., Vol. XVIII, p. 210, n.7). I fail to notice any such difficulty.

(V. 4) May the illustrious king Gayākarna together with his son, the crown-prince Narasiṃha, rule the earth as long as the world will endure!

✓(V. 5) In the gōtra called Ananta was born the religious preceptor, the illustrious Bhāvatējas, resembling the sun by the lustre of his penance, and devoutly performing extremely pure actions whether noticed or not (by others)—who, a wise man and a follower of the Pañchārtha,<sup>1</sup> expounded the marvellous teaching about the absolute and was a wild fire in burning the impenetrable forest of the multitude of evils arising from lust and anger.

(V. 6) Having listened to the entire systems of the Āgama and the Yōga, having expounded the systems of Nyāya and Kaṇāda<sup>2</sup> and having practised the Yōga system of Paśupati, he attained union with Siva by his knowledge.

(V. 7) This ascetic Bhāvabrahman is his foremost disciple, who, though he has given up all actions, is ever engaged in the performance of penance.<sup>3</sup>

(V. 8) He is clad only in a loin-cloth, lies on pure ashes, is proficient in the knowledge of the Pañchārtha (system), lives on a limited quantity of food, is another Sanatkumāra<sup>4</sup> on account of his celibacy, and is devoted to (the practice of) Yōga as taught in the system of Patañjali.

(V. 9) (He) pleases supplicants with (gifts of) gold, food and raiment, makes intelligent men meritorious by his love, delighting them with pleasant speech, performs devoutly religious actions for the eradication of trouble, and has realized the three-eyed (god Siva). In (this) Kali age there is seen no follower of the Pañchārtha system like Bhāvabrahman.

(V. 10) Though devoid of all possessions he harbours Siva in his heart; though forgiving, he curbs lust and rage through good vows.

(V. 11) By means of control of breath, observances essential for meditation, contemplation and postures, he day by day practises intellectually (meditation on) Siva whom he places in the lotus of his heart; (being) a yōgin he would cultivate benevolence towards the wise, the joy of self-realization by the study of the śāstras, compassion towards his disciples and indifference to worldly objects by (his) knowledge of Siva.<sup>5</sup>

(V. 12) He adorned this world of Gāhuṇḍa<sup>6</sup> with processions of the chariot (of Siva), festivity and the worship (of Siva) and also with encircling walls, temples and monasteries.

(V. 13) A self-controlled person secures final emancipation by a work of pious liberality which makes one desist (from worldly affairs) and by knowledge. To secure both these<sup>7</sup> he installed this image of Siva.

(V. 14) By means of wealth obtained by begging he caused this temple of (Siva), the enemy of the god of love, to be constructed with devotion for the liberation and glory of the self-controlled. ✓

<sup>4</sup> Sanatkumāra figures in the Upanishads and the Purānas as a great teacher (see, e.g., Chhāndōgya Up. VII, 1, 1; 26; Bhāgavata Purāna III, 8, 7; Mahābhārata, Śāntiparvan, 227). According to the Līngapurāna he himself received the Śaiva doctrine from Nandin.

<sup>5</sup> This verse describes the cultivation of the four sentiments (bhāvanās) of matrī (benevolence), karuṇā (compassion), muditā (cheerfulness) and upēksā (indifference) mentioned in the Yōgasūtra of Patañjali I, 33. They are also recognized in Buddhist philosophy. See Kern's Manual of Indian Buddhism, p. 54.

<sup>6</sup> Kielhorn has suggested that Gāhuṇḍa is probably a local designation of Śiva. It may be noted in this connection that Monier-Williams gives, on the authority of the Kāśīkhaṇḍa, huṇḍana in the sense of an attendant of Śiva.

(V. 15) There was the illustrious Dharaṇīdhara, a wise Brāhmaṇa, who had studied the Vēdas, Smṛitis, Itihāsas and Purāṇas. His son Pṛithvīdhara, whose intellect has become keen by (the study of) dialectics, has composed this eulogy.

(V. 16) As long as Mēru (which is) the jar of gold, the Gaṅgā and the ocean endure on the earth, so long may this temple of Śiva last!

(V. 17) That Mahīdhara, who understands the teaching and the practical work of the science invented by Viśvakarman<sup>1</sup>, has incised this commendable praśasti.

(V. 18) While the Chēdi era was increasing to nine hundred and a couple of years and the illustrious Gayākarna was ruling this country, this eulogy was put up near the temple of Śiva on Sunday, the first (lunar day) in the bright fortnight of the month Āshāḍha.

BAHURIBAND STATUE INSCRIPTION OF GAYAKARNA

BAHURIBAND is now a small village situated on a plateau at a distance of about 20 miles from Sihōrā, the headquarters of the Sihōrā tahsil in the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. Not far from Bahuriband lie the villages of Tigōwā and Rūpnāth, the former of which is known for its Gupta temple, still in a state of perfect preservation, and the latter, for its Aśokan rock-edict. Bahuriband contains some old ruins, the most conspicuous of which is a colossal standing nude statue of the Jain Tirthaṅkara Śāntinātha. 'It is near the village and stands upon its original site, portions of the foundations of the walls of the shrine, in which it stood, being still around it. It stands 12 feet and 2½ inches high from the soles of the feet to the crown of the head.'<sup>2</sup> There is an attendant holding a chavri on either side of it. The chhatra over it is now broken away and lies behind the image. It measures 4' 4" in height and has the figure of an elephant on either side of it.

The present inscription is incised on the pedestal of the statue of Śāntinātha. It falls into three parts. Parts A and B, each consisting of three lines, are engraved on the top of the pedestal to the left and right respectively of the feet of the image<sup>3</sup>. Part C, which has seven lines, is incised on the front face of the pedestal. Before it is a small kunḍa intended to receive the water of the Tirthaṅkara's bath. The inscription was first brought to notice by General Cunningham, who gave his reading of the first two lines and a portion of the third of part C<sup>4</sup>. It was next noticed by Dr. D. R. Bhandarkar who published a short abstract of its contents<sup>5</sup>. It is being edited here for the first time from the original stone as well as its inked estampages which were kindly supplied by the Superintendent of Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

The inscription is very much weather-worn, especially in parts A and B. Besides, a few aksharas in the first line of part C have been broken away. The characters belong to the Nāgarī alphabet. It may be noted that dh appears here to be fully developed as in the modern Nāgarī; see, e.g., dharmma-, l.4 and Sūtradhāra, l.5; th, on the other hand, has not yet opened its upper loop, see Sāntināthasya, l.5. The language is Sanskrit. The orthography does not call for any special notice.

The object of the inscription is to record that during the victorious reign of the illustrious Gayākarnādēva, while the Mahāsāmantādhipati Gōlhanādēva of the Rāshtrakūṭa family was flourishing, one Mahābhōja (?), the son of Sādhu Sarvadhara, who had been favoured by the illustrious Māghavanandi, the foremost of logicians, erected the temple of Sāntinātha. We are further told that the white canopy over it was built by a Sātradhāra.<sup>1</sup> The image of Sāntinātha was consecrated by the Āchārya Subhadra, who belonged to the line of the Dēśī gaṇa<sup>2</sup> in the Annāya of the Chandrakara Āchārya.<sup>3</sup>

Cunningham read the date in the first line, as samvat 10. . Phālguna badi 9 sōmē. Dr. Bhandarkar has, on the other hand, remarked that 'the date of the inscription is too indistinct to be read.' Many of the signs in the first line, where Cunningham read the date are now broken away. It is not, therefore, possible to verify his reading completely. But the extant aksharas seem to read [va] di 9 Bhaumē (not Sōmē). Even in Cunningham's time all the figures of the year were not preserved. What he took to be the figure 1 appears to be the remnant of some akshara like pa or sa. Again, Cunningham's reading of the first two figures, if correct, would relegate the present record to the end of the tenth or the first half of the eleventh century A.C.; for samvat 10. . would have to be referred to the Vikrama era. But from the Tewar inscription<sup>4</sup> dated K. 902 we know that Gayākarna flourished in the first half of the twelfth century A.C. The first two figures of the date, if it was recorded in the Vikrama era, must, therefore, have been either 11 or 12.

Hail! On Tuesday the 9th tithi of the dark fortnight<sup>5</sup> . . . . . during the victorious reign of the illustrious Gayākarnadēva, while the Mahāsāmantādhipati, the illustrious Gōlhaṇadēva, born in the Rāshṭrakūṭa family, is flourishing—

(There was) the pious layman, the illustrious Sarvadhara, (born) in the Gōllāpūrva<sup>6</sup> Āmnāya, the sacred traditions (Āmnāya) of which were amplified at Vēllaprabhāṭikā, who was blessed by the illustrious Māghavanandi, the crest-jewel of logicians. His son is Mahā[bhō]ja (who is) devoted to (the performance of) religious duty, charity and study (of the sacred texts). By him has been caused to be erected this beautiful temple of Sāntinātha.

The Sajjaka Sūtradhāra is named Srēshṭhi.<sup>7</sup> By him has been constructed (here) a very white and extremely beautiful canopy.

(Line 6) May the holy Achārya Subhadra, who has consecrated (this image of Sāntinātha), be long glorious!—(he) who belongs to the line (amvaya) of the Dēśī gaṇa<sup>8</sup> in the Āmnāya of the holy Chandrakara<sup>9</sup> Achārya, and who has delighted learned men by his perfect learning and humility!

<sup>2</sup> Bhandarkar read the last three aksharas as sajjana which he took to be the name of the Sūtradhāra (P. R. A. S. W. I. for 1903-04, p. 55); but the last akshara is certainly not na. It is more like ka than any other akshara. I therefore read the word as सज्जक. Cf. सजाक prefixed to सूत्रधार in No. 105, l. 20.

<sup>4</sup> Parts A and B, which contain only a few aksharas have not been translated. Part A contains the name Sarvadhara.

<sup>5</sup> The name of the month and the figures of the year have been broken away.

<sup>6</sup> There are still several Jain families belonging to the Gōllāpūrva Āmnāya in Madhya Pradesh. Vēllaprabhāṭikā may be a place-name.

BHERA-GHAT STONE INSCRIPTION OF NARASIMHA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 907

THE stone which bears this inscription was procured by Dr. F. E. Hall in 1857 at Bhērā-Ghāt on the Narmadā in the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh, and subsequently presented by him to the American Oriental Society, in whose Cabinet at New Haven, it is now deposited. It is a plain block of green stone, of a soft texture and easily cut, 2' 9½" broad by 1' 10½" high. The inscription was first edited, with an English translation and notes, by Dr. Hall in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. VI, pp. 499 f.<sup>1</sup>; and Dr. Hall's text was afterwards reprinted in Roman characters, with a photozincograph of the inscription in Dr. Burgess' Memoranda, Archaeological Survey of Western India, No. 10, pp. 107-9; and his translation in Sir A. Cunningham's Archaeological Survey of India Reports, Vol. IX, pp. 91-94.<sup>2</sup> The inscription was finally edited by Dr. Kielhorn, with an English translation but without a lithograph, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 7 f. It is edited here from excellent large-size photographs which were, at the Government Epigraphist's request, kindly supplied by the authorities of the American Oriental Society.

The inscription, consisting of 29 lines of writing, covers a space of about 2' 7½" broad by 1' 9" high. The letters are beautifully and carefully cut, the anusvāras, curves and mātrās in the first line being ornamentally treated. Except for two aksharas each at the end of lines 11 and 12, which are almost completely broken away, and one or two others here and there which are partially damaged, the inscription is in a state of good preservation. The size of the letters varies from .4" to .7". The characters are Nāgarī and resemble those of the Tewar inscription of Bhāvabrahman. The sign of the initial i in ll. 7, 17 etc. has its two dots at the top joined by a curve, instead of a straight line;<sup>3</sup> th and dh exhibit transitional forms, the former having its upper loop open in some cases (see, e.g., tathā, l. 25 and -Prithu-, l. 29) and the latter appearing with a fully developed left member in dhar-āśraya-, l. 3 -vyadhattām, l. 25, etc.; in other cases, these letters retain their earlier forms; ṅ is still without its dot, see, e.g., -dīnmaṇḍalī, ll. 27-28; the sign of the jihvāmūlya occurs in l. 9 and that of the upadhmanya in l. 10. The language is Sanskrit and except for ōṃ namah Śivāya in the beginning and the date at the end, the inscription is metrically composed throughout. There are thirty-seven verses in all. Though written in a good style, the inscription is not altogether free from mistakes. Thus chakapē in l. 10 is used for the correct form chakampē to suit the metre; vyadhattām, which is intended as a form of the Imperative, is incorrect for vidhattām, and in chaṇḍimatām l. 9, there is a superfluous addition of a second taddhita affix to form an abstract noun. Finally, rules of sandhi have been violated in kim-vā l. 2, yushmān-śarīraiḥ, l. 3, and sarvv-ādāyaiḥ-ssārḍham, ll. 24-25. As regards orthography, b is in some cases denoted by its proper sign, see, e.g., babhūva and vibudhā-, both in l. 8, bibhraty-, l. 10, and in others by that of v, see vuddhim = l. 1, vibhrat, l. 6 etc.; the palatal ś is used for the dental ś in saśāla, l. 14, and the dental nasal for anusvāra in the component sinha of the proper names Vairisinha, l. 16, Vijayasinha, l. 17, Narasinha, l. 21, Jayasinha, l. 22 and Vālasinha, l. 29, and also in -suhānsuh, l. 18, = sansatsu, <sup>1</sup> The committee of publications corrected some of the mistakes in Hall's transcript while the paper was going through the press. It is noteworthy that the mention of the Paramāra king Udayāditya in the present inscription enabled Hall to conjecture for the first time that the dates of the present and other inscriptions of the Kalachuris refer to an era which commenced about 250 A. C.

1.5 etc.; finally, the consonant following r is occasionally doubled, see e.g., nirjjity-, l. 7, = ūrdhva-, l. 8 etc.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the king Narasimha of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty. The object of it is to record that his mother Alhaṇadēvi, the widow of Gayakarṇa<sup>1</sup> constructed a temple of Siva under the name of Vaidyanātha together with a maṭha or monastery and a hall of study which she endowed with the income from two villages, viz., Nāmaūṇḍī in the Jāuli pattalā and Makarapātaka on the right bank of the Narmadā in the land near the foot of the hills, for the worship of the deity. The management of the whole establishment was entrusted to the Pāsupata ascetic Rudrarāśi of the Lāṭa lineage. The inscription, which is called praśasti in l. 28, was composed by Śaśidhara, the son of Dharaṇidhara who was himself the son of Mahēśvara of the Maunya family (gōtra), with the pravaras Bhārgava, Vaitahavya and Sāvēta. It was written on the stone by Saśidhara's elder brother Prithvīdhara, and engraved by Mahīdhara, a son of the artisan Bālasimha.<sup>2</sup> Finally, we are told that the buildings were designed by the architect Pīthē.

After the introductory verses invoking the blessings of the moon, the Gaṅgā, Siva, Gaṇēśa and Sarasvatī, the inscription mentions Arjuna (i.e., Sahasrārjuna), from whom was descended Kōkalla (II). From him was born Gāṅgēyadēva whose son was Karṇa. The latter held in check the Pāṇḍya, Murala, Kuṅga, Vaṅga, Kaliṅga, Kīra and Hūṇa princes. Karṇa's son was Yaśaḥkarṇa who made himself famous by devastating Champāranya. His son was Gayakarṇa who married Alhaṇadēvi. The queen's pedigree is given in verses 17-22. In the family descended from Gōbhilaputra was born the prince Haṁsapāla. His son was Vairisimha who, again, had a son named Vijayasimha. The latter prince married Śyāmaladēvi, the beautiful daughter of Udayāditya, the ruler of the Mālava-maṇḍala. Their daughter was Alhaṇadēvi who was married to Gayakarṇa. By him Alhaṇadēvi had two sons Narasimhadēva, who succeeded Gayakarṇa, and his younger brother Jayasimha.

The names of Alhaṇadēvi's ancestors are known from some other inscriptions also<sup>3</sup>. Thus the Mount Abu inscription of Samarasimha<sup>4</sup> mentions Vairisimha and his successor Vijayasimha in the list of Guhila princes of Mēdapāṭa. The record does not, however, name any prince of the name Haṁsapāla, but makes Vairisimha the successor of the king Vairāṭa. Dr. Hall<sup>5</sup> and following him, Dr. Kielhorn<sup>6</sup> supposed that Haṁsapāla was another name of Vairāṭa 'unless Vairāṭa was his brother or some other near relative.' Haṁsapāla is, however, mentioned separately from Vairāṭa whom he is said to have succeeded in the Sādaḍi<sup>7</sup> and Kumbhalgaḍ<sup>8</sup> inscriptions.

The present inscription is dated at the end in the year 907 (expressed in numerical

<sup>7</sup> A. R. A. S. I. (1907-08), pp. 214 ff. This inscription mentions Vaṁsapāla as a successor of Vairāṭa and predecessor of Vairisimha. Vaṁsapāla is probably a mistake for Haṁsapāla. The successor of Vairisimha is, however, named Virasimha, not Vijayasimha, in that inscription.

figures only), on Sunday, the 11th tithi of the bright fortnight of Mārgasīrsha. This date must of course be referred to the Kalachuri era. According to the epoch of 247-248 A. C., it would correspond, for the expired year 907, to Sunday, the 6th November 1155 A. C., when the aforementioned tithi commenced 2 h. 10 m. after mean sunrise. Though not current at sunrise, the tithi must have been joined with that week-day 'on which it commenced and which was almost entirely filled by it.'<sup>1</sup>

As for the geographical names occurring in the present inscription Murala is generally identified with Kērala.<sup>2</sup> It is, however, doubtful if Karṇa led any expedition so far to the south-west. In the Uttararāmacharita (Act III) the river Muralā figures as a tributary of the Godavari. The country of Murala is also mentioned in the Viddhaśālabhañjika<sup>3</sup> of Rājaśekhara and seems to correspond to the northern part of the Hyderabad State. Dr. Kielhorn identified Kuṅga with the districts of Salem and Coimbatore,<sup>4</sup> but it is more likely to be identical with Koṅgōda, (Kong-yu-to of Yuan Chwang), corresponding to the Rāmagiri Agency of the Godavari District. Kaliṅga comprised the modern districts of Ganjām and Vizagapatam and some portion of the Godavari District. Vaṅga is Eastern Bengal. Kīra has already been shown to be the name of the territory round Baijnāth in the Kāngrā District. The country under the Hūṅas was probably situated to the north of Malwa.<sup>5</sup> Mālava-maṇḍala is, of course, the country of Malwa. Of the villages granted by Alhaṇadēvi, Nāmauṇḍī is now untraceable, but the Jāulī-pattalā in which it was situated and which is also mentioned in the Jabalpur plates of Yaśaḥkarṇa, must have comprised the country round Jabalpur. Makara-pāṭaka may be Magarmuha, about 4 m. to the west of Bhērā-Ghāt. It is at the foot of a hill and almost near the right bank of the Narmadā. Its situation, therefore, answers to the description of it given in the present inscription.

<sup>1</sup> A more satisfactory equivalent of the date would have been Sunday, the 25th November 1156 A. C., on which day the tithi ended 1 h. 46 m. after mean sunrise. But Kielhorn was not inclined to accept it as it would have necessitated the shifting of the epoch of the era to 248-249 A. C. This would have made most of the Kalachuri dates cite current, not expired, years, which was contrary to the usage observed in the case of other eras. Kielhorn's view has been supported by some dates discovered subsequently, to which the epoch of 248-249 A. C. would be altogether unsuitable. See Ep. Ind., Vol. IX, pp. 123 ff. and the date of No. 90, below.

<sup>8</sup> The akshara in the brackets is mutilated. Kielhorn with diffidence proposed to read [स]मापादिता, but this requires the previous word to be taken as विदुषाघारे which admits of no satisfactory construction. In our reading it would be विदुषारा and would qualify पृथ्वी.

<sup>11</sup> I follow Kielhorn in the reading of this verse. The last akshara is quite clear in the photographs. Hall read -स्यहं which is grammatically indefensible. The intended reading may have been गव्वैग्रहं as suggested by Kielhorn.

<sup>12</sup> The first akshara is partly mutilated, but it can be restored with the help of l. 10 of the Karanbel stone inscription of Jayasimhadēva (Appendix, No. 3.). Kielhorn read the following word as सद्गति. It would be better to read सङ्गति in view of the alliteration prevailing in this verse.

<sup>13</sup> Read चकपे. The word was altered to suit the metre.

<sup>15</sup> The akshara in the brackets which is somewhat damaged was read as सं by Hall and सं by Kielhorn. I adopt Hall's reading in view of the angular look of its left limb.

Success ! Ōm ! Adoration to Siva !

(Verse 1) May the moon's digit on the forehead of the Moon-crested (god) (Siva) grant you perfect bliss,—(the digit), which, though only one (i.e., the first), makes the host of Siva's attendants always think, even in the absence of the evening, that it is the second (digit)<sup>11</sup>

<sup>19</sup> The figure is Vīrōdbābbāsa. There is a play on the word dvitīyā which means (1) 'the second (digit)' and (2) 'the second lunar day'. The crescent shape of the moon makes Siva's attendants think every day to be the second lunar day of the bright fortnight in the evening of which that shape of the moon is seen on the western horizon.

(V. 2) May those founts of religious merit, the lines of the creeping, lovely,<sup>1</sup> tortuous waves of the heavenly river meandering on Śiva's head protect you!—(the waves) about which heavenly beings have such doubts,—Are these wreaths of white lotuses, or digits of the moon, or sprouts of religious deeds, or sloughs of snakes, or ashes emerging (from Śiva's body)?<sup>2</sup>

(V. 3) May Śiva with these (eight) bodies<sup>3</sup> (of his) protect you—(viz.) (that body) which, being an element, is all-pervading; (that) by whose revolution the world becomes manifest; (that) which gives delight to the eyes (of creatures) in the (whole) world; (that) which is the cause of the diversity of flavour and other (qualities) abiding in the earth; (that) which is a vast repository of odour; (that) which sacrifices; (that) which is exclusively cold; and (that) which, (though) devoid of colour, is felt by the touch!

(V. 4) May the blue-necked (Śiva), who gives delight to such as are fond of wielding spear and missile, who is adorned with the young moon and exults in his tāṇḍava (dance), grant whatever is pleasing to you!<sup>4</sup>

(V. 5) May the Elephant-faced (Gaṇapati) graciously confer on you highest bliss,—who, under the guise of a tusk whiter than jasmine, holds a piece of the moon free from the slightest dark-spot and capable of dispelling the intense darkness of multitudes of obstacles!

(V. 6) May Sarasvatī protect you,—who by varied forms of speech conducts the intercourse (of men), and by obtaining the slightest portion of whose elegance even for a short time, men may attain very great honour in assemblies!

(V. 7) There was in the moon's race, a king with a thousand hands, who was, day and night, wakeful to educate individually the minds of (the dwellers in) the worlds, (and) who surpassed the rulers of the world by his lustre—(a king) named Arjuna, by the mere remembrance of whom even now is regained wealth which had been lost or taken away by thieves long since.<sup>5</sup>

(V. 8) In his lineage was born a well-known lord of the earth, of whom even the most marvellous tale is not untrue, bearing the illustrious name Kōkalladēva (II), the sole source of the happiness of the three worlds.

(V. 9) From him was born Gāṅgēyadēva who, by over-coming the hostile rulers of the earth, possessed of huge mountains of pride, attained endless glory, who, a wish-fulfilling tree to suppliants, made this earth, an abode of learned men, though situated below, soar higher than heaven (which is an abode of gods), by (constructing here) a matchless Mēru.

(V. 10) The creeper of his fame, sprinkled with the water of his religious merit and made to grow by his stainless character, has overspread the whole bower of the universe.

<sup>3</sup> The eight forms are ether (ākāśa), the sun, the moon, fire, earth, the sacrificer, water and air respectively. The same eight forms of Śiva are referred to in the first verse of the Sākuntala.

<sup>4</sup> The verse would be equally descriptive of Kārttikēya's peacock. 'May the peacock indulging in dancing, which gives great delight to him whose weapon is a spear (i.e., to Kārttikēya) and (the tail of) which is covered with (bright) moon-like spots grant whatever is dear to you!'

<sup>5</sup> Hall cites the following verse from the Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa :—कार्तवीर्यार्जुनो नाम राजा बाहुसहस्रवान् । तस्य स्मरणमात्रेण गतं नष्टं च लभ्यते ॥

(V. 11) He, who, seeking glory, filled with gold the oceans of the desires of supplicants, begot the prince Karṇa.

(V. 12) While that king of unprecedented lustre gave full play to his heroism, the Pāṇḍya renounced violence, the king of Murala gave up arrogance, the ruler of Kuṅga sought his alliance, the prince of Vaṅga trembled with that of Kaliṅga, the lord of Kira stayed at home like a parrot in the cage, and the Hūṇa lost all merriment.

(V. 13) 'Let us reduce the size of the earth, the whole of which he enjoys by defeating our husbands'—With this motive as it were, the wives of hostile kings enlarged the seas with tears flowing from their eyes. These (seas), on the other hand, presented<sup>1</sup> him with large waves of precious stones!

(V. 14) From him the illustrious Yaśaḥkarṇa took his spotless birth—(he who was) a crest-jewel of the rulers of the earth, who had a guiltless heart, who illuminated the circle of quarters with the bright rays of his fame which sprang from his devastation of Champāraṇya, (and) who transformed into gods of wealth whatever learned men<sup>2</sup> met his eyes.

(V. 15) From him, an unfathomable ocean of all merits, was born Gayakarṇa-dēva, the favourite of the earth, in whose case, even the sun<sup>3</sup>,—the sun of his prowess,—caused the rise of the ocean—the ocean of grief—of his enemies' beautiful wives.

(V. 16) That king surpassed yellow orpiment by his lustre, was the wish-fulfilling tree supporting the creeper of fortune, wore a large garland of noble qualities, was the sole god of death to the host of his enemies, adorned the fore-front of the battle-field, was surrounded by a (halo of) charming glory, and wielded a very sharp sword.—

(V. 17) Famous in this world is the family of the son of Gōbhila. Therein was born, forsooth, the king Haṁsapāla, who, with his valiant and irresistible armies, humbled all the combined hosts of (his) enemies.

(V. 18) He had a son, the lord of the earth, the illustrious Vairisimha, whose feet were reddened by the crest-jewels in the diadems of all feudatory princes paying homage to him, (and who was) a treasure, not merely of pure thoughts, but also eminently (one) for suppliants.

(V. 19) That Vairisimha too, drove the families of his enemies to deep cave-dwellings, while he himself occupying their cities made them far surpass (in splendour) the city of Alakā.<sup>4</sup>

(V. 20) From him was born the lord of the earth named Vijayasimha, whose beauty was praised by all men, who, by his great valour, made his enemies' fortune unstable, (and) the moon of whose fame was always waxing in the world.

(V. 21) His loving wife was Śyāmaladēvī, the beautiful daughter of Udayāditya, the lord of the country of Malwa, a jewel which fulfilled the desires (of suppliants) of noble conduct, and a devotee of fortune.

(V. 22) As the beloved of Saṅkara (i.e., Umā) was born to Mēnā from the lord of mountains (i.e. Himālaya), as the wife of the Moon was born to Viriṇī<sup>5</sup> from Daksha, the creator of beings, even so was Alhaṇadēvī born to her from that king capable of protecting the (whole) world,—(she) who appeared like an unsullied banner fluttering from the staff of his long pedigree.

<sup>3</sup> Ordinarily it is the moon which causes the tides of the ocean.

(V. 23) Having performed the nuptial ceremony, the king Gayakarṇa bore intense love for her as Śaṅkara did for Śivā (i.e., Umā).

(V. 24) She, a home of amour, a pitcher (brimful) of accomplishments, a garland of beauty, a store-house of noble qualities, had, by the king Gayakarṇa, a son, the prince Narasimha.

(V. 25) May the rising moon of the glory of this king, the illustrious Narasimhadēva, saturate, as it were, the walls of the quarters with a beautiful white-wash; and may the earth, having secured in him a worthy lord, experience such delight that she would not, even slightly, think of its past great rulers!

(V. 26) May his younger brother Jayasimhadēva, who does marvellous service to his elder brother as (Lakshmaṇa,) the son of Sumitrā, did to Rāma, attain victory! —(he) who, behold! being long-armed, vanquishes the gigantic forces of his enemies roaring like clouds, and practising many tricks (even as Lakshmaṇa defeated the hosts of Mēghanāda and the wily and stalwart Atikāya)!<sup>1</sup>

(V. 27) The generous Alhaṇadēvī, the mother of the illustrious Narasimhadēva, caused this temple of the moon-crested (god) to be built together with that monastery of wonderful storeys.

(V. 28) She also caused her people to construct a lecture-hall, that continuous line of gardens, as well as two rows (of rooms attached) to the temple of Śambhu.

(V. 29) To the god named Vaidyanātha the queen donated, for his beautiful decoration,<sup>2</sup> the village named Nāmaūṇḍī (situated) in the Jāulipattalā, together with all income.

(V. 30) And she gave another village named Makarapātaka (situated) on the right bank of the Narmadā and in the land near the foot of the hills.

(V. 31) May the Pāsupata ascetic, the holy Rudrarāśī of Lāṭa lineage, duly arrange for the management of this place so long as Śambhu pervades the worlds!

(V. 32) In the Maunya lineage which has the three pravaras Bhārgava, Vaitahavya and Sāvētaśa, there was born, from one named Mahēśvara, (a son) Dharaṇīdhara by name, possessed of greatness, glory and fortune.

(V. 33) Who, encircled by a delightful lustre, being full of exceedingly great affection and occupying, for long, an agreeable position, acted like a lamp of the three worlds (which is surrounded by a halo of light, is filled to over-flowing with oil, and has a long and beautiful wick).

(V. 34) His son Prithvīdhara, who has seen the further shore of the deep ocean of all the Sāstras, and by the crowds of whose pupils the circle of regions has been conquered, wrote this eulogy.

(V. 35) His younger brother, a learned man named Śaśīdhara, proficient in dialectics and wonderfully clever, composed this eulogy.

(V. 36) The architect Pīthē, who is conversant with the science (taught) by Viśvakarman,<sup>3</sup> planned all this as Prithu did the earth.

(V. 37) Mahīdhara, the son of Bālasimha, the foremost of artisans, incised the stone with letters so as to resemble the starry sky.

<sup>1</sup> Mēghanāda and Atikāya were Rāvaṇa's sons who were defeated by Lakshmaṇa; see the Vālmiki-Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddhakāṇḍa, adhyāyas 90 and 71 respectively. Prabasta was also the name of Rāvaṇa's general.

<sup>3</sup> As pointed out by Kielhorn the adjective would also mean 'who knows how to execute every kind of work.'

The village Vadyavā which was probably situated in the vicinity of Lāl-Pahād cannot now be traced.

ALHA-GHAT STONE INSCRIPTION OF NARASIMHA : (VIKRAMA) YEAR 1216

'THIS inscription together with two others is on a block of stone, which is about a hundred yards from a large cave, somewhere near the foot of the Alha-Ghāt, "one of the natural passes of the Vindhya hills by which the Tons river finds its way from the table-land of Rewa to the plain of the Ganges." . . . It was discovered in 1883-84 by Sir A. Cunningham by whom a transcript of the text, accompanied by a photo-lithograph was published in the Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. XXI, p. 115 and Plate xxviii'<sup>8</sup> Its date was next referred to by Dr. Kielhorn in connection with the epoch of the Kalachuri era in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVII, p. 218. The record was finally edited, without any translation or facsimile, by the same scholar in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVIII, pp. 213 f. It is edited here from inked estampages kindly supplied by the Superintendent of Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

LAL-PAHAD ROCK INSCRIPTION OF NARASIMHA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 909

The inscription contains seven lines and covers a space about 2' broad by 1' high. It is in a state of good preservation. The letters are deeply engraved, but not well-formed. Their size varies from .8" to 1.4". The characters are Nāgarī. The only form which calls for notice is that of r which has a triangle instead of a loop on the left of its vertical; see, e.g., Mahārājā-, l. 1. The language is incorrect Sanskrit. We may notice, for instance, the wrong elision of the case-affix in -sādhana, l. 5, jāti, l. 6, etc., and of the feminine affix in -Āmikādēva (for -Āmbikādēvī) in l. 4 as well as the incorrect participial forms udharitah for uddhāritā in l. 6 and karāpitā for kāritā, ll. 4-5. In respect of orthography we find that the sign for v is used to denote b in -vamdhana-, l. 4, Kausāmvi-, l. 5; j is used for y in Kali-juga, l. 3, the dental s for the palatal ś in Kausāmvi and the lingual sh for kh in lishitam l. 6.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the illustrious Narasimhadēva, the Mahārājādhirāja of Dāhāla, who is evidently identical with the homonymous Kalachuri king who ruled at Tripurī. Its object is to record that the Rāṇaka, the illustrious Chhīhula, the son of the illustrious Jālhaṇa, the Mahārāṇaka of the Pipalāma fort caused the Shaṭashaḍikā-ghāṭ to be constructed and (a temple of) the goddess Ambikā to be built near the road leading to it. He is thereby said to have freed (from the bondage of worldly existence) the whole tribe of the Rautiās (Rāuts) dwelling in Kausāmbī.<sup>1</sup> This seems to suggest that he had himself originally hailed from that place. The record finally mentions the names of the writer and of the artisans who executed the work.

The inscription opens with the date, Saṁvat 1216, the first (tithi) of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada, Sunday. As we know that Narasimhadēva was ruling in the Kalachuri year 909, the date of the present inscription must be referred to some other era. The only era which would suit the present case is the Vikrama era. As Dr. Kielhorn has shown, the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada in the northern expired (or southern current) Vikrama year 1216 ended 1 h. 25 m. after mean sunrise and was, therefore, current at sunrise on Sunday as required, the corresponding Christian date being the 16th August 1159 A. C.

Of the geographical names mentioned in the present inscription Dāhāla or Dāhāla, which the lexicographers give as a synonym of Chēdi, denoted generally the country between the Gaṅgā and the Narmadā,<sup>2</sup> corresponding to the modern Baghelkhand. Kausāmbī has already been identified with the village Kōsam, 28 miles west by south from Allahabad. Shaṭashaḍikā-ghāṭ may have been the ancient name of the Alha-Ghāt. Pipalāmadurga cannot be identified.

Success! (In) the year 1216, on Sunday, the first (lunar) day of the bright (fortnight) of Bhādra (i.e., Bhādrapada), during the victorious reign of the illustrious Narasimhadeva, the Mahārājādhirāja of Dāhāla, the Rāṇaka, the illustrious Chhīhula, the son of the illustrious Jālhaṇa, the Mahārāṇaka of Pipalāma fort, constructed the Shaṭṣhaḍīkā ghāt and (the temple of) the goddess Ambikā near the road (leading to it) for (the acquisition of) religious merit in the Kali age. This is a means of (acquiring) religious merit, wealth, pleasure and liberation. The tribe of Rautiā (Rauts) living in Kauśāmbī<sup>8</sup> has been liberated (by this religious deed).

JABALPUR PLATES OF JAYASIMHA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 918

THESE plates were found in a stone-box while digging for the foundation of a Kōt-wāli building at Jabalpur, the headquarters of a district of the same name in Madhya Pradesh. When first discovered, the plates were thickly covered with verdigris. Several aksharas especially in ll. 10-17 of the first plate have consequently been damaged a good deal, but as the present inscription has this portion in common with some other records<sup>9</sup> of the Kalachuri dynasty, the damaged letters can be easily supplied. The writing on the second plate is fortunately in a state of fair preservation. Nothing of historical importance has, therefore, been lost. The plates are now deposited in the Central Museum, Nagpur. The inscription was published, with lithographs but without any translation, by Rai Bahadur Hiralal in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXI, pp. 91 ff. It is edited here from the original plates and from ink impressions kindly taken for me by Mr. K. Natarajan, Superintendent of the Government Press, Nagpur.

akshara appears to be ma, though the horizontal stroke at the top is wanting. The last akshara again is doubtful. If the reading given above is correct, it may be explained as formed on the analogy of atratya, ihatya etc., though it is against Pāṇini, IV, 2, 104.

They are two copper-plates, each measuring 1' 2" broad and 9½" high. The first plate weighs 226½ tolas and the second 215½ tolas. Their ends are raised into rims for the protection of the writing. The first plate is inscribed on the inner side only, and the second on both the sides. In the middle of the top of each plate there is a hole, .8" in diameter, for the ring which must have originally held the plates together; but neither the ring nor the seal, which must have been attached to it, was apparently discovered.<sup>1</sup>

The record consists of 43 lines, of which twenty are inscribed on the inner side of each plate and the remaining three on the outer side of the second. The inscription seems to have been completed at first in the last line on the inner side of the second plate; for the words maṅgalam mahāśrīḥ, which usually indicate the completion of a record, occur at the end of that line. It seems, therefore, plausible, as conjectured by R. B. Hiralal, that the engraver whose name was at first inadvertently omitted, induced the Head of the Department of Religion to compose one more verse about himself to serve as an excuse for engraving the second side of the second plate, before he could insert his own name.

The characters are Nāgarī. They are beautifully formed and carefully incised. The size of the letters varies from .3" to .4". The akshara da which was omitted in l. 2 has been written at the top of the first plate with the figure 2 following it, and the place of omission is shown with an inverted kākapada above the line.<sup>2</sup> As regards individual letters we may note that the initial i appears in its old form, see, e.g., iva, l. 6; ī is still without its dot, see -Trikalingā-, l. 21; while th, dh and jñ approximate to their modern Nāgarī forms; see, e.g., yathā, l. 31, -madhūkāḥ, l. 28, samājñāpayanti, l. 25; b is indicated by its proper sign in a few cases where it appears as the superscript letter of a ligature, see, e.g., -abja-, l. 1. The language is Sanskrit. The eulogistic part of the grant which extends to l. 19 is in verse; it is followed by the formal part in prose in ll. 19-21. Then come the benedictive and imprecatory verses, of which as many as eleven are included here in ll. 31-39. Two more verses, one recording the name of the writer and the other in praise of the Head of the Religious Department, are next added. The record finally ends with the name of the engraver in prose. Verses 1-12 of the present grant which carry the genealogy of the donor from Brahman to Yaśaḥkarṇa occur in the same order in the Khairhā and Jabalpur plates of Yaśaḥkarṇa. The draft of the present grant is, however, shorter than the corresponding portion of the aforementioned grants of Yaśaḥkarṇa by three verses.<sup>3</sup> Again, all the verses of the eulogistic part of the present inscription are repeated in the Kumbhī copper-plate inscription of Vijayasimhadēva, which contains seven more verses<sup>4</sup> in its corresponding portion. As regards orthography, we find that the sign of v is used to denote b except in ligatures see, e.g., abja-, ll. 1 and 2; -abdhi-, ll. 2 and 5 etc.; the palatal and dental sibilants are generally used each in its proper place, but occasional deviations from this are also noticed, see, e.g., -rasanā for -raśanā in l. 5 and śravantyaḥ for śravantyaḥ, l. 12; finally, y is used for j in griha-yāmātaram-, l. 2.

The plates were issued by the king Jayasimha of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty of Tripurī. He is described here exactly like his elder brother Narasimha in the Lāl-Pahāḍ rock inscription. The object of the present inscription is to record the grant of the village Agarā near Akharauda, which the king made at Tripurī after bathing in the <sup>1</sup> The Rai brothers of Kaṭni kindly showed me a seal of Jayasimhadēva which was previously in the collection of Hiralal (Plate LII). But there was no indication of its having been soldered to or otherwise connected with any ring.

Rēvā on the occasion of a lunar eclipse which occurred on Saturday, the full-moon tithi of Āśvina in the year 918 (expressed in numerical figures only). The date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era. The donee was the Brāhmaṇa Dēlhaṇa, the son of Dāmōdara of the Agastya gōtra with three pravaras.<sup>1</sup> Among the officials to whom the order is addressed occur the names of the Mahārājñī Kēlhaṇadēvī,<sup>2</sup> the Rājaguru Vimalaśiva, the Dharmapradhāna Paṇḍita Rāghava, the Sāndhivīgrahika Purushōttama, the Pratihāra Kamalasiṃha and the Dushṭasādhyā Padmasiṃha. Some of these figure in other records also. Thus the Rājaguru Vimalaśiva is mentioned in the Jabalpur stone inscription (No. 64) and in the Dhurēti plates (No. 72) and the Sāndhivīgrahika Purushōttama in the Kumbhī plates (Appendix No. 4). In the enumeration of the rights, privileges and exemptions of the donee there occur some technical terms, the exact signification of which is not yet known. This portion is repeated verbatim in the later Kumbhī plates of Vijayasīṃha.

As all the verses descriptive of Jayasīṃha's ancestors down to Yaśaḥkarṇa are repeated here from older records like the Khairhā plates, they furnish no additional historical information. We are next told that Yaśaḥkarṇa was succeeded by Gayākarṇa. The latter had, from his queen Alhaṇadēvī, a son named Narasīṃhadēva. His younger brother Jayasīṃhadēva, who succeeded him, is the donor of the present plates. The verses descriptive of these princes also contain mere conventional praise and are altogether devoid of historical interest.

The importance of the present inscription lies mainly in the data it furnishes for testing Dr. Kielhorn's conclusion regarding the beginning of the Kalachuri year. According to Kielhorn's final view,<sup>3</sup> the Kalachuri era commenced on the first tithi of the bright fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Āśvina in 248 A.C. As the bright fortnight of Āśvina thus fell in the beginning of the Kalachuri year, we should get the Christian equivalent of a date in that fortnight by adding 247 or 248 to the particular Kalachuri year according as the latter is current or expired. Thus the date of the present grant,—Saturday, the full-moon day of Āśvina with a lunar eclipse in the (Kalachuri) year 918,—should fall in 1165 A.C. if the Kalachuri year 918 was current, and in 1166 A.C. if it was expired. But neither of these would suit; for, in the former year, the tithi fell on Tuesday (the 21st September) and in the latter on Monday (the 10th October). Nor was there a lunar eclipse on that tithi in either of these years. On the other hand, if we suppose that the Kalachuri year began in some month later than Āśvina, say in Kārttika, the date of the present grant would regularly correspond, for the expired year 918, to Saturday, the 30th September 1167 A.C., on which day the pūrṇimā ended 13 h. after mean sunrise and there was a lunar eclipse as stated in the present grant. This date, therefore, is clearly adverse to Dr. Kielhorn's conclusion regarding the beginning of the Kalachuri year. It shows that the year must have commenced on some date later than the full-moon tithi of Āśvina.<sup>4</sup>

As for the geographical names occurring in the present grant, Tripurī, Rēvā, Karṇāvātī and Kuntala have already been identified. Agarā, the donated village, is <sup>1</sup> The pravaras are not mentioned in the present inscription. They are variously enumerated by the authorities on pravaras. Some give them as Āgastya, Dārḍhachyuta and Aidhmavāha, while some others substitute Sāmbhavāha in place of Aidhmavāha. For other enumerations, see Gōtrapravaranibandhakadamba, pp. 86 ff.

probably identical with Agariā in the Sihōrā tahsil, about 20 miles north by east of Jabalpur. Akharaud cannot, however, be traced in its vicinity.

TRANSLATION

Success! Om! Adoration to Brahman!

[For a translation of verses 1-12, see that of vv. 1-8, 10, 12, 14 and 15, above, pp. 296 ff.]

(Verse 13) His (i.e., Yaśahkarna's) son of unrivalled prowess became famous as the illustrious Gayākarna; in whose wars the earth, replete with blood from the cut-off necks of arrogant foes, was, as it were, in love (with him).

(V. 14) He begat on Alhaṇadēvī the illustrious prince Narasimhadēva, as sensation produces in will a righteous effort.

(V. 15) Though he caused great joy among multitudes of learned people by his precious gifts of gold and food<sup>1</sup> (unlike the man-lion god who pleased hosts of gods only by killing Hiranyakaśipu) and did away with cupid's pride by his superb beauty (unlike the ugly man-lion god), he was, oh wonder! still (called) Narasimhadēva!

(V. 16) May his younger brother Jayasimhadēva be victorious—(he) who is waited upon even by princes resplendent with valour! Being deprived of their glory by his liberality, the celestial tree hastily left (the world) and Bali disappeared underground!

(V. 17) On hearing of the coronation of the illustrious Jayasimhadēva the Gurjara king disappeared, the Turushka lost the strength of (his) arms, the lord of Kuntala suddenly renounced all love-sports and other kings also, leaving the earth through apprehension, crossed the ocean.

(Line 19) This victorious (king), the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Jayasimhadēva, a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, the lord of Trikaḷiṅga, who has by (the might of) his arm, attained suzerainty over the three kings, (vir), the lord of horses, the lord of elephants and the lord of men, (and) who meditates on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmadēva,—having called together the Mahārājānī, the illustrious Kēlhaṇadēvī, the Mahārājaputra, the Mahāmātya, the illustrious Rājaguru Vimalaśiva, the Mahāpurōhita, the Dharmapradhāna Paṇḍita, the illustrious Rāghava, the Mahāpradhāna, Arthalēkhin<sup>2</sup> Ṭhakkura the illustrious Daśamūlika,<sup>3</sup> the Sāndhivigrahika Ṭhakkura, the illustrious Purushōttama, the Pratihāra, the illustrious Kamalasiṃha, the Duṣṭasādhyā,<sup>4</sup> the illustrious Padmasiṃha, the Mahāsāmanta, the Akshapaṭalika, the Pramattavāra, the Aśvasādhānika, the Bhāṇḍāgārika—these and other (officers) and the inhabitants of the village which is to be granted,—duly honours, informs and commands them (as follows):—

(L. 25) "Be it known to you that on (the occasion of) the lunar eclipse on Saturday, the full-moon (tithi) of the bright fortnight of Āśvina in the year 918, we, having bathed in the Rēvā and having worshipped the holy Mahādēva, have given as a grant with a libation of water for the increase of the religious merit and fame of (Our) mother and father and Ourselves, the village Agarā near Akharauda to the extent of its limits, with its four boundaries well-determined,—together with pasture-land for cows, with land and water, with mango and mahnā trees, with salt mines, with its pits and barren lands, with (the right

<sup>3</sup> This officer is called Daśamūlin in verse 29 below. The post was then held by Vatsarāja. He is named in the Kumbhī plates (Appendix No. 4, below) also.

<sup>4</sup> This corresponds to the Dauṣṭasādhanika usually mentioned in the records of the Pālas. It was a technical title probably denoting 'an officer in charge of criminals.'

of) egress and ingress, with fertile<sup>1</sup> and marshy lands, with tree-groves, plant-gardens, grass and so forth, with rivers and hills, with the (royal) share (of produce), taxes, (the cess on) pravaṇis,<sup>2</sup> vāḍa, grazing tax, liquor tax, kāmata, the cess on visēṇimā,<sup>3</sup> the tax levied for Paṭṭakīlas<sup>4</sup> and Dussādhyas,<sup>5</sup> the district rates and such other taxes levied or to be levied,—to the Brāhmaṇa, the illustrious Paṇḍita Dēlhaṇaśarman, the son of the illustrious Paṇḍita Dāmōdara, of the Agastya gōtra and three pravaras.”

And in this matter this is the prayer of the donor—

(Here follow eleven benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(V. 29) (This charter) has been written by Vatsarāja, the son of the illustrious Dharma and son's son of Abhyuddhara, (who is) the Daśamulin of the lord of Chēdi. May there be bliss and great prosperity!

Success!

(V. 30) May Rāghava, the lord of sacrificers, the full moon that delights the ocean of well-being of this illustrious king Jayasimha, who is honoured on account of his virtues, cause great prosperity and happiness to the learned, making the lores sprout forth, and annihilating ignorance!

(This charter) has been engraved by the sculptor Tālhaṇa, the son of Pālhaṇa of the illustrious Kōkāsa family.

No. 64; PLATE LIII

JABALPUR STONE INSCRIPTION OF JAYASIMHA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 926.

THE stone bearing this inscription was found at Jabalpur, the headquarters of a district of the same name in Madhya Pradesh. The record has been referred to several times, e.g., by Dr. F. E. Hall in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. VI, p. 533, by Dr. F. Kielhorn in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVIII, p. 210 and, again, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. V, Appendix I, p. 10, n. 4 and by Rai Bahadur Hiralal in his Inscriptions in the Central Provinces and Berar, (second ed.), p. 42; but owing presumably to its very bad preservation<sup>6</sup> none attempted a transcript or even an abstract of its contents. The record was for the first time edited by me in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXV, pp. 309

<sup>3</sup> Vāḍa, kāmata and visēṇima, which occur also in the Kumbhī plates of Vijayasimha (below, Appendix, No. 4), I am unable to explain.

<sup>4</sup> Paṭṭakīlas are mentioned in some records together with jānapadas (residents of the country) as persons living in the village to whom the royal order is addressed. See, e.g., line 18 of the Māndhātā plates of Jayasimha, Ep. Ind., Vol. III, p. 49. Paṭṭakīla probably represents the modern Pāṭil or headman of a village.

<sup>5</sup> These were probably criminals and other suspects living within the limits of the village.

<sup>6</sup> Hiralal remarks that 'this is a pretty big record, but is too much defaced to yield any useful information.' I. C. P. B., p. 42.

ff. It is edited here from the original stone and its inked estampages kindly supplied by the Government Epigraphist for India.

The writing covers a space 2' 7" broad and 1' 8½" high. The average size of the letters is .5". The surface of the stone which was originally made none too smooth, has been further damaged by exposure to weather and several letters in the middle as well as the right-hand side of the first fourteen lines and some more in the middle of lines 19-24 have become illegible.

The characters are Nāgarī. The letters were beautifully written and carefully executed. It will suffice to draw attention to the proper sign of b as an independent letter in bibhrat-, l. 25 and in its superscript form in -bvabhūv-, l. 9, to the form of the initial i in iti, l. 12, of the initial ri in richām, l. 15 and of ś, the left member of which resembles the English figure 8 in Sivāya, l. 11. The language is Sanskrit, and except for the obeisance to Siva in the beginning of the first line and the date in the last, the inscription is in verse throughout. The verses are not numbered, but they appear to be fifty in all. The orthography does not present anything calling for special notice except that v and b as well as ś and s are confounded in some places.

The object of the inscription is to record the construction of a temple of the moon-crested god (Siva) by Vimalaśiva, the religious preceptor of the king Jayasimha of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty of Tripurī. The god was named Kīrtiśvara after Vimalaśiva's guru Kīrtiśiva. The inscription also records that the king Jayasimha endowed the temple with three villages on the occasion of a solar eclipse.<sup>1</sup>

The record is dated in words as well as numerical figures in the year 926 without any specification of the month, fortnight, tithi or week-day. This date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era. It corresponds, for the expired Kalachuri year 926, to 1174-75 A. C. In this year there was only one solar eclipse, viz., that which occurred on the amāvāsyā of the pūrṇimānta Pausha, on Tuesday, the 26th November, 1174 A. C. This is, therefore, probably the date of Jayasimha's grant if it was made in the same Kalachuri year in which the record was put up.<sup>2</sup> It does not admit of verification, but it falls in the reign of Jayasimha, who, we know, was ruling at least from K. 918<sup>3</sup> to K. 928.<sup>4</sup>

After three manigala-slōkas in praise of Siva, we are told that the god revealed the Śaiva doctrine for the realization of the self by the worlds. Some Śaiva teachers were named in lines 4-7, but the names of Vimalaśiva<sup>5</sup> and Vāstuśiva<sup>6</sup> only are now completely legible. In line 8 we read the name of Puruṣaśiva who is described as the cause of Yaśaḥkarṇa's prosperity. Next is mentioned Śaktiśiva in connection with Gayākarṇa.

<sup>1</sup> I take ravīḥ parvaṇi in line 26 to mean 'on the occasion of a solar eclipse'. Parvaṇ also means a saṅkrānti, but in that case the name of the saṅkrānti would have been specified.

<sup>2</sup> There was a solar eclipse on the amāvāsyā of pūrṇimānta Āshāḍha (the 1st June 1174 A. C.) also. So the year can be taken as current. But current years are cited very rarely.

<sup>6</sup> I examined the name of this ascetic carefully to see if he could be identified with Vāmaśiva in view of the suggestion recently made that the latter was the spiritual teacher of Karṇa and represents Vāmadēva on whose feet several Kalachuri kings from Karṇa downwards are described as meditating. (See Ind. Hist. Quart., Vol. XIV, pp. 96 ff.). A Śaiva Āchārya named Vāmarāśi is also mentioned as living in Banaras in the Sārnāth inscription of Mahīpāla, dated V. 1083, Ind. Ant., Vol. XIV, p. 140. The Śaiva ascetic mentioned in the beginning of line 6 in the present record may have been a contemporary of Karṇa; for the next legible name is that of Puruṣaśiva who was the guru of Karṇa's son Yaśaḥkarṇa. But the second akṣara of the aforementioned name does not at all appear like ma. I have shown elsewhere that Vāmadēva was a Kalachuri king and not a Śaiva ascetic; see A Volume of Eastern and Indian Studies, pp. 152 ff.

His disciple was Kīrtiśiva who is said to have contributed to the prosperity of the king Narasimha. Five verses (22-26) are devoted to his description. The next eighteen verses refer to Vimalaśiva. He belonged to the gōtra of Viśvāmītra and was the son of Madhusūdāna and Umā. Having paid off his debt to gods and others by performing religious rites at Prabhāsa, Gōkarṇa, Gayā, and other tīrthas, he was initiated in the Saiva doctrine by Kīrtiśiva. He was very handsome, learned and liberal, and exercised great vigilance in looking after all affairs of the king. The earth being adorned with gardens, tanks, charitable houses, temples and dwellings for Brāhmaṇas constructed by him is said to have vied with heaven in splendour. The king Jayasimha devoutly bowed to him. We are next told that Vimalaśiva built a temple of Śiva under the name Kīrtiśvara for the glory and religious merit of his spiritual preceptor Kīrtiśiva. The king Jayasimha endowed it with three villages on the occasion of a solar eclipse. One of these villages, which was named Ṭēkabhara, was situated in the vishaya (district) of Navapattalā and the other two named Kaṇḍaravāḍa and Vaḍōha or Avāḍōha in Samudrapāṭa which was apparently another district.

The importance of the present inscription lies in the information it furnishes about the spiritual preceptors of the Kalachuri kings of Tripurī from Yaśaḥkarṇa downwards. It may, however, be noted in this connection that the Asiatic Society of Bengal plates of Gōvindachandra<sup>1</sup> mention the Saiva Āchārya Rudraśiva, not Purushaśiva, as the Rājaguru of Yaśaḥkarṇa. Perhaps Yaśaḥkarṇa had two Rājagurus in succession. The name of Vimalaśiva, the guru of Jayasimha occurs in his Jabalpur plates<sup>2</sup> also.

The present prafasti was composed by the poet Śaśidhara, who was a Brāhmaṇa of the Maunya<sup>3</sup> gōtra. He composed also the Bhērā-Ghāt inscription of Alhaṇadēvi, while his elder brother Prithvīdhara was the author of the Tēwar inscription of the reign of Gayākarṇa. The present record was incised on the stone by Nannadēva, the son of Mahīdhara. His father was the sculptor of the aforementioned stone inscription of the reign of Gayākarṇa and that of Alhaṇadēvi.

As for the localities mentioned in the present record, Ṭēkabhara may be identical with Ṭikhāri, 5 miles south by west of Jabalpur. The vishaya (district) of Navapattalā in which it was situated may have comprised the territory round the modern Nayākhērā which lies about 8 miles west of Ṭikhāri. Samudrapāṭa is probably Samand Pipāriā, 4 miles south of Jabalpur. There are several villages named Kuṇḍa or Kuṇḍan near Jabalpur, one of which may represent the ancient Kaṇḍaravāḍa. No place exactly corresponding to Vaḍōha or Avāḍōha can, however, be traced in the Jabalpur District. Prabhāsa, Gōkarṇa and Gayā are too well-known to need identification.

The inscription is a single line of text in an ancient Indian script, likely Sharada or similar, written in black ink on a light-colored stone surface. The text is densely packed and runs horizontally across the width of the stone. The characters are small and closely spaced, typical of ancient Indian inscriptions. The stone shows signs of weathering and some surface irregularities.

(evil) actions of the enemies of those who take refuge with him, and annihilates the arrogance of demons.

(V. 2) Śiva, who is mounted on the bull, who has the beauty of lotuses . . . . .

(V. 3) We praise the praiseworthy (Śiva), whom they see . . . . .

(V. 4) For the realization of their self by the worlds, Śiva revealed his doctrine . . . . .

(V. 5) Those whose direct knowledge failed . . . . .

(V. 6) In his lineage in the succession of disciples in course of time . . . . .

(V. 7) . . . . .

(V. 8) Having installed his disciple, Vimalaśiva, in his own place, he . . . . .

(V. 9) Whose dear fame . . . . .

(V. 10) (He) who was named Vāstuśiva, who caused great bliss, who . . . . .
in the country of the lords of Chēdi . . . . .

(V. 11) . . . . .

(V. 12) His disciple named —śiva, who acquired a great excellence of merits and wealth in order to oblige others (and) to attain the aims of human life.

(V. 13) . . . . .

(V. 14) . . . . . like multitudes of merits . . . . .

(V. 15) He, though possessed of equanimity, bore love towards worthy persons, was attached to holy places, followed the path approved by good people (and) was devoted to Śiva . . . . .

(V. 16) Purushaśiva, the best of men, who was conversant with . . . . .
was his disciple . . . . .

(V. 17) On account of whom there arose as much abundance—great with prosperity—in religious merit, wealth and enjoyment of Yaśaḥkarma as that of (Indra) the lord of immortals through Bṛihaspati.

(V. 18) His disciple, Śaktiśiva, . . . . (who augmented) the (two) royal powers of the illustrious king Gayakarna, made the circle of regions very bright with the mass of his fame as he did the ocean of learning with the excellence of his intellect.

(V. 19) . . . . . the prowess of the king Gayakarna . . . . .

(V. 20) The deeds of him, who is pre-eminently counted among good people, and whose wealth is an ornament of his good heart, are sung by wise men like those of the celestial wish-fulfilling tree.

(V. 21) The disciple of him,—a marvellous tree supporting the wish-fulfilling creeping plant of noble fame—(was) Kirtiśiva . . . . .

(V. 22) He caused the prosperity of the king Narasimha . . . . .

(V. 23) (Unlike Śiva) he had not the earth for his chariot, nor the sun and the moon for its wheels, nor Brahmā for his charioteer, nor Vishṇu for his arrow.<sup>1</sup> Still he reduced to ashes the cities of the enemies (as Śiva did those of demons). Hence he (was) [clearly] Kirtiśiva (Śiva in glory).

(V. 24) He . . . . . filled all regions with his glory which he wrested from the enemy and which was as bright as the moon, as with the flowers of discrimination.

(V. 25) Though he had burned the feeling of love in his glances, though his face resembled the bright moon, though he was firmly attached to religion<sup>2</sup> and was devoted to Śiva (even as Śiva burned the god of love by his glance, has the bright disc of the moon on his forehead, is mounted on the bull, and is attached to Pārvatī<sup>1</sup>) he was, (unlike Śiva who is called Ugra<sup>2</sup> and wears serpents), neither dreadful in appearance, nor attended by informers<sup>3</sup>.

(V. 26) The great lights . . . the Kalachuri family . . . . As he, so all his sense-organs were the celestial tree of rest to the goddess of fortune.

(V. 27) In the gōtra of Viśvāmitra which is a friend of the world how many Brāhmaṇas adorned with benevolence<sup>4</sup> and other (virtues) have not attained the pre-eminence of Paramēśhṭhin (God)?

(V. 28) Their . . . with great regard for the understanding of the contents of the Vēdas which they had studied in the right manner . . . . Though they were vagrant mendicants, their sacrificial rites and charitable works were performed with abundance of wealth and in a praiseworthy manner like those of kings.

(V. 29) In course of time there was born in that gōtra Madhusūdana who bore benevolence towards all, had studied the pada and krama recensions of the Ṛigvēda and understood its meaning.

(V. 30) The rising greatness of him, who was an ornament of the southern regions, led greatly to the awakening of learned men even as the rise of the star Agastya,<sup>5</sup> the ornament of the southern direction, causes the awakening of the gods (from slumber).

(V. 31) Through him who was an ornament of the foremost among Brāhmaṇas, (his) wife named Umā, who resembled Pārvatī, was adorned by a son even as the three worlds were by Skanda.

(V. 32) Having studied the Vēdas and understood their contents he, observing vows, . . . pleased all people like the southern breeze.

(V. 33) Having paid off his debt to the best of gods and others at Prabhāsa, Gōkarṇa, Gayā, and other holy places, he received (initiation in) the Śaiva vow from Kīrtiśiva even as Upamanyu did from Ugra (i.e. Śiva).

(V. 34) (May) this Vimalaśiva, who has consequently become the wish-fulfilling tree of the Kali age, live to the end of the world!—(the tree), having come under the shade of which, a multitude of Brāhmaṇas do not indeed feel distressed on the approach of great festivities!

(V. 35) In the case of only this (Vimalaśiva) who is solely devoted to exertion, are seen (the following), viṣ, birth of a caste (viṣ, Brāhmaṇa) which is honoured by good people, a (handsome) form which can turn back the god of love (in discomfiture), a personality attended by lustre, a large increase of merits accompanied by great tranquillity and excellent austerity, a mode of behaviour which is exceedingly pleasing to good people, political wisdom which is always pleasing to politicians (and) blessed silence.

(V. 36) "The goddess of speech who is fond of proficiency in merits dwells in the lotus which is Brahmā's face, and the goddess of fortune loves to live on the breast of (Vishṇu) who is adorned with Śrīvatsa." This is what people say. But, what a wonder! this pair shines forth so joyfully in him that it has caused . . . in the minds of magnanimous people.

(V. 37) What thing concerning him is not marvellous?—(him) who is the moon to the ocean of learning, a lotus to the goddess of austerities, a pleasure-mountain to the truth and a friend of virtuous conduct?

(V. 38) At the sight of the best of Brāhmaṇas who approach him as supplicants, his piety increases day and night with the libations of water (poured at the time of) making gifts like the creeping plant of religion, in an excellent manner. Vigilant as he is, he confers respectfully on the best of Brāhmaṇas whose splendour has not decreased, hundreds of red cows shining with gold even on new-moon days.<sup>1</sup>

(V. 39) Showing exceedingly great vigilance in looking after all royal affairs, the indefatigable leader . . . . The foremost among Brāhmaṇas (viz., Vimalaśiva), though proficient in fine arts, shows the play of his power against the enemies<sup>2</sup> . . . .

(V. 40) Though he is ever looked at with great curiosity by the goddess of fortune with sportful glances, he, (though) of a forgiving nature, does not at all suffer the sense-organs to have the power of making him vain. Though he is always employed (by the king) in many suitable affairs, he nowhere shows slackness in (the performance of) obligatory and occasional religious rites.

(V. 41) . . . . . (There is) no discriminating action which he has not performed; (there is) no gift which he has not conferred; (there is) no deserving person whom he has not honoured many times, (and) (there is) generally no holy place on the earth which he has not sanctified with marvellous gifts, bathing and austerities.

(V. 42) Of him who is like Siva, the exceedingly good, great and lasting blessings increase like his great lustre.

(V. 43) With what ornaments (supplied) by him does not the earth surpass heaven? —(the earth, which has) gardens, tanks, charitable feeding houses, temples and houses of Brāhmaṇas?

(V. 44) May that illustrious Vimalaśiva,—who, by his counsel, has made (even) the most distant people pay taxes,<sup>3</sup> [to whom] the king Jayasimha [bows] becoming very humble through devotion,—spread in the three worlds his delightful fame which, like the celestial river is capable of washing away the taint of the Kali age!

(V. 45) He caused a temple of the moon-crested god (Siva) to be constructed for the fame and religious merit of his teacher Kīrtiśiva out of reverence for him.

(V. 46) To this god named Kīrtiśvara, Jayasimhadēva, through devotion to Siva and his teacher, has made new grants of villages on (the occasion of) the sun's eclipse.

(V. 47) Of these the village called Tēkabhara is situated in the vishaya (district) of Navapattalā and two others, (viz.), Kaṇḍaravāḍa and Vaḍōha<sup>4</sup> in (the district of) Samudrapāṭa.

(V. 48) The poet Śaśidhara, the son of the illustrious Dharaṇīdhara who is the foremost among Brāhmaṇas born in the family of Maunya, has composed this prāṣasti with pleasure.

(V. 49) Nāmadēva, the son of Mahīdhara, the crest-jewel of artisans, has adorned this slab with excellent letters.

(In) the year nine hundred increased by twenty-six, in figures also 926.

(V. 50) May this temple endure firmly for the fame of the builder as long as the sun and the moon, going and coming, shine in the firmament!

<sup>1</sup> There is a play on the words dakṣa, dvija-pati and rōhiṇī. Dakṣa gave only one Rōhini (i. e., the star Aldebaran) to the Moon and that too on the full-moon day, while Vimalaśiva gives hundreds of rōhiṇīs (red cows) to Brāhmaṇas even on the new-moon day. The star Rōhiṇī is personified as the daughter of Dakṣa and the favourite wife of the Moon.

<sup>2</sup> In this verse also, there is a pun on some words like dvija-pati, kalā, etc.

No. 65: PLATE LIV

REWA PLATE OF JAYASIMHA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 926

THIS plate was brought to notice by Sir A. Cunningham who found it in the possession of the Rewa Durbar. A brief and, in some respects, incorrect account of it was given by him in his Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. XXI, pp. 145 ff. The inscription was subsequently edited, with a lithograph, but without any translation, by Dr. F. Kielhorn in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVII, pp. 224 ff. The plate has since been deposited in the British Museum. It is edited here from excellent ink impressions kindly supplied by the authorities of the Museum.

The inscription is on a single plate measuring about 13" by 9  $\frac{7}{8}$ " and inscribed on one side only. The surface of the plate itself is smooth; but for the protection of the writing, strips of copper about  $\frac{3}{8}$ " broad are fastened by rivets along the edge of the top and the two sides; and the bottom edge was originally protected in the same way, but the strips have been torn off and lost. The preservation of the inscription is perfect; and there is hardly any letter which is not clear and distinct in the impression.—In the upper part of the plate and secured by a strong rivet passing through the plates, there is a thicker and broader strip of copper, which towards the end projecting above the plate is turned over so as to catch and hold a plain copper ring about  $\frac{3}{8}$ " thick and 2  $\frac{1}{2}$ " in diameter. There is no indication of any seal having been attached to the ring.<sup>1</sup>—The weight of the plate with the ring is 164  $\frac{1}{2}$  tolas.<sup>2</sup> The letters in lines 1-2 and 11-12 are much bigger than those in others. Their size consequently varies from .25" to .15".

The characters are Nāgarī. They are somewhat irregularly formed and carelessly incised. Several letters have more than one form; see, e.g., the initial i in iva, ll. 7 and 8; j in -rājādhirāja, l. 2 and upārjakō, l. 5; dh in -Gayādhara, l. 10 and -madhūkaḥ, l. 12, and g in gaṇa-nāyakaḥ, ll. 1-2 and -gajapati, l. 3. In some places it is difficult to distinguish between v and ch, and ś and s. The language is Sanskrit. Except for the opening verse in praise of Hēramba and the usual benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end, the whole record is in verse. It is somewhat carelessly written. Rules of sandhi have, in some cases, not been observed. In ll. 8-15 there is a confusion of the active and passive constructions. Besides, there are some mistakes of case-inflections, e.g., in ll. 9-10, the plural is wrongly used in referring to two donees. The wrong number of the compound chandr-ārkkamēdinī and the superfluous addition of a second affix in utkīrṇitam may also be noted. As regards orthography, we find that the sign for v is throughout used to denote b; s is, in some cases, used for ś as in Kausika, l. 9 and vice versa in Vatsarājasya, l. 14; and kh is employed for sh in sa-gartt-ōkharah, l. 12.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the king Jayasimha, evidently of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty of Tripurī. He is mentioned here with the same imperial titles as in his Jabalpur plates. He is called a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara and the lord of Trikaliṅga and is said to have meditated on the feet of Vāmadēva who is also given the same imperial titles. The object of the inscription is to record the grant of the village Ahaḍāpāḍa situated in the Khaṇḍagahā pattalā. It was made at Karakēḍi by the Mahārāṇaka Kīrtivarman on the occasion of offering oblations to his deceased father, the Rāṇaka<sup>3</sup> Vatsarāja. The donees were two Brāhmaṇas, Ṭhakuras Mahāditya and Silaṇa, who belonged to the Kauśika gōtra and had the three pravaras Audala, Viśvāmitra and Dēvarāta. They were sons of Ṭhakura Chaturbhujā, son's sons of Ṭhakura Gayādhara and son's sons' sons of Ṭhakura Trilōchana. The inscription was written with the consent of Ṭhakura Ratnapāla by Vidyādhara the son of Ṭhakura Mālhē, son's son of Ṭhakura Dhārēśvara and son's son's son of Ṭhakura Rājēśvara. It was engraved by the blacksmiths Kūkē and Kikaka.

Kirtivarman, who made the present gift, was evidently a feudatory of the Kalachuri king Jayasimha. He was the son of Vatsarāja who was himself the son of Jayavarman. All the three princes bore the feudatory title Mahārāṇaka. They claimed descent from the Kauravas, the legendary heroes described in the Mahābhārata.

The inscription is dated, in line 14, on Thursday, the fourth tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada in the year 926. The year is again repeated at the end of the record. In both the places it is expressed in decimal figures only. This date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era and falls in the reign of Jayasimha. Dr. Kielhorn, who at first supposed that the Kalachuri era began on the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada in 249 A.C., found by calculation that in 1175 A.C. (corresponding to the expired Kalachuri year 926) the fourth tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada commenced 8 h. 9 m. after mean sunrise on Thursday, the 21st August.<sup>1</sup> The tithi was not, of course, civilly connected with that day, but as it was the Gaṇēśa-chaturthī, Dr. Kielhorn thought that the religious ceremonies and the gifts to Brāhmaṇas connected with them must have been performed after the tithi commenced on that day.<sup>2</sup> Later on, even though he shifted the beginning of the Kalachuri era to 248 A.C., he had no difficulty in showing the date of the present grant to be regular; for he had come to the conclusion that the Kalachuri year commenced on the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Āśvina. I have shown elsewhere that the Kalachuri era probably commenced on the first tithi of the bright fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Kārttika, but that also does not affect the present date. The date, therefore, corresponds, for the expired Kalachuri year 926, to Thursday, the 21st August 1175 A.C., but the reason why the tithi is mentioned here as chaturthī though it was not current at sunrise on that day is not that the ceremonies of the Gaṇēśa-chaturthī were performed in the afternoon on that day as supposed by Kielhorn and Fleet, but that the śrāddha of the donor's father, in connection with which the donation was made, was performed in the afternoon when the fourth tithi was current. It is well known that for the performance of a śrāddha, the afternoon is preferred to the forenoon.<sup>3</sup>

Of the place-names mentioned in the present record, Kakkarēdikā is clearly Kakreri (long. 81° 12' E, lat. 24° 55' N.). Khaṇḍagahā, the headquarters of the pattalā in which the donated village was situated, is perhaps identical with Kandaihlī, about 6 miles west by south of Kakreri. The village Ahaḍāpāḍa cannot, however, be traced in its vicinity.

<sup>9</sup> The intended reading may have been विदारण as suggested by Kielhorn.

<sup>10</sup> Some words like शस्त्रैरुपेतः seem to be omitted here. Kielhorn proposed to read -गवंहृत्.

<sup>11</sup> Kielhorn read [सुव]र्त्तः, but there is no trace of an anusvāra on स, the second letter is probably म and the third an imperfectly incised वः.

<sup>13</sup> A superfluous स which was at first incised between स and म is cancelled.

<sup>14</sup> There is a kākapada below मर्मा, indicating that the aksbara णा incised in the top margin (with the figure 9 to indicate the proper line) is to be inserted here. The resulting form कीर्तिवर्मणा (with the shortening of मर्मा into मर्मा) is intended to be construed with संप्रदत्तः in ll. 14-15. But the cases of other adjectives and words in apposition are not similarly changed.

<sup>16</sup> There is no clear indication in the impression of त्र being changed to त.

<sup>17</sup> Read -त्रिप्रवराभ्यां. In some following expressions also the plural is used for the dual.

(Verse 1) Joyless and joyful, handsome and deformed, unimpeded and obstructing is Hēramba, the lord of Gaṇas.

(Line 2) During the victorious reign of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Jayasimha, the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara, the lord of Trikaliṅga, who by his own arm has acquired suzerainty over the three kings, (viz.) the lord of horses, the lord of elephants (and) the lord of men, who meditates on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmadēva,—

No. 66: PLATE LV

TEWAR STONE INSCRIPTION OF JAYASIMHA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 928

THE stone which bears this short inscription was procured by Dr. F.E. Hall at Tēwar, a village about 6 miles to the west of Jabalpur in Madhya Pradesh, and presented by him to the American Oriental Society, in whose cabinet, at New Haven, it is now deposited. It is said to be of like character with that of Alhaṇadēvi's inscription. Dr. Hall also first edited the inscription, with a translation, in the Journal of the American Oriental Society, Vol. VI, pp. 512 f; and his text was subsequently reprinted in Roman characters, with a photozincograph of the inscription in Dr. Burgess' Inscriptions from the Cave-Temples of Western India, p. 110 and his translation in Sir A. Cunningham's Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. IX, pp. 95 f.<sup>1</sup> The inscription was next edited by Dr. Kielhorn, with a translation, but without a facsimile, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. II, pp. 17-19. It is edited here from two excellent photographs kindly supplied by the authorities of the American Oriental Society.

The inscription contains nine lines of writing of which the first eight are written breadthwise, while the last is written along the proper left margin. The writing covers a space 11" in breadth and 7" in height, and is in a state of good preservation. The letters are irregularly formed and carelessly cut. In two places in l. 5 they seem to have been changed subsequently. Their size varies from .5" to .8".

The characters are Nāgarī. The language is Sanskrit and except for the last three lines, the inscription is in verse throughout. As regards orthography, v is used for b in Vrahma and Vrahm-ādi- in l. 1, the dental for the palatal sibilant in narēsvaraḥ l. 3, aisvaram, l. 6 and Kēśava ll. 6 and 8 and n in place of anusvāra in Jayasinha, l. 4. The rule of euphony is unnecessarily applied in Narasimhadēvō, which occurs at the end of a hemistich in l. 4, while it is neglected in Samrāt jīyā- in l. 4.

The inscription is of the reign of the Samrāt Jayasimhadēva, the younger brother of the king Narasimhadēva who was a son of the king Gayākarna, evidently of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty of Tripurī. The object of it is to record the building of a temple of Īśvara (Śiva) by the nāyaka Kēśava of the Kātyāyana gōtra, who was the son of Āladēva. The latter was probably the son of the Brāhmaṇa Āstaka. Kēśava was a resident of the village Sikhā in Mā[la]vaka.

The inscription is dated in the year 928, on Sunday, the 6th tithi of the bright fortnight of Śrāvaṇa when the moon was in conjunction with the asterism Hasta. The year and the tithi are expressed in numerical figures only. This date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era. As Dr. Kielhorn has shown, there were two Śrāvaṇas in the expired Kalachuri year 928, corresponding to 1176-77 A.C. The month Śrāvaṇa of the present date, though not further particularised, was the first or adhika (intercalary) Śrāvaṇa<sup>1</sup>; for the 6th tithi of the bright half of that month ended 7 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise on Sunday (the 3rd July 1177 A.C.) and the nakshatra Hasta also ended 16 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise on that day. The 6th tithi of the nija Śrāvaṇa on the other hand fell on Monday, the 1st August, on which day the nakshatra was Chitrā. Sunday, the 3rd July 1177 A.C., is thus the date of the present inscription.

The village Sikhā may be identical with Sikhā which lies about 4 miles north-west of Jabalpur. The territorial division Mālavaka in which it was situated I am unable to identify.<sup>2</sup>

REWA STONE INSCRIPTION OF VIJAYASIMHA: (KALACHURI) YEAR 944

THE stone bearing this inscription was discovered 'in one of the small guard-rooms to the left of the main entrance to the citadel or palace enclosure' at Rewa<sup>3</sup> in Vindhya Pradesh. It is said to have been brought over to Rewa from the Kastarā tank in the Rewa tahsīl<sup>4</sup>. The record was first noticed by Mr. R. D. Banerji in the Progress Report of the Archaeological Survey, Western Circle for 1920-21. Subsequently he gave a transcript and a translation of it in his Haihayas of Tripurī and their Monuments<sup>5</sup> and finally edited it, with a lithograph, but without a translation, in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XIX, pp. 295 f. It is edited here from inked estampages kindly supplied by the Superintendent of Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

The record is incised on an oblong plain slab of sandstone measuring 4' 3½" by 1' 8½". The writing covers a space 4' 2" broad by 1' 7" high. It contains 27 lines, of which the last measures only 2' 7" in length. The inscription is in a state of good preservation. The characters are Nāgarī. They are irregularly and carelessly cut and incised. The letters th, bh, ś as well as the medial i in some places present earlier forms; see, e.g., Ṭhakekurō, l. 22, -bhūt and Yasahpāla, both in l. 4, =yasmims-tishthē-, l. 16. Attention may also be drawn to the peculiar form of the initial i, e.g., in iti, l. 4, and iv-, l. 5, the subscript li in prakṣiptah, l. 5, and -pratikṣipta-, l. 17, and th, of which the upper loop is open, in yath=ēśa-, l. 21. In the ligature ṇṇ, the superscript letter has in most cases the same form as the dental n, see, e.g., -pūrṇṇa-, l. 1, -Karṇṇa-, l. 4; but notice =Gayākarnṇa, l. 4, where it appears in its usual form; t is looped in some places, see, e.g., krīta-giram, l. 16; b, as distinguished from v, is denoted by it proper sign only in the form babhūva in ll. 7, 22, 23 etc. The sign of the upadh-mānīya occurs, though wrongly, in nihpamka-, l. 7 and vā(bā)h-paiḥ-, l. 12. The language is Sanskrit. Except for the customary svasti in the beginning, and the date and maṅgalaṁ mahā-trīḥ towards the close, the inscription is metrically composed throughout. The verses, which are 34 in all, are not numbered. The composer of the praśasti (as the record is called in l. 25), though he claims proficiency in the science of word and sense, had but an imperfect command over the Sanskrit language. His style is obscure, his compounds uncouth, and his meaning uncertain<sup>1</sup> in several places. Notice, for instance, the compounds nitānta-vāhuḥ-, l. 6 and Vāstavya-vṛitti-pratham-aika-liṅgaṁ, l. 21, the meaning of which is obscure. He has used verbal forms of the potential mood in the sense of the present tense in several places see, e.g., rakshēt, l. 6, āndōlayēt, l. 9. His unsuccessful attempt to embellish his style with figures of sense will be pointed out in the notes to the text and the translation. As regards orthography, the sign for v is everywhere used to denote b except in the form babhūva, the dental s for the palatal ś in several places, e.g., in darsanānt, l. 2, śasinaḥ, l. 7 and vice versa in vāṅ-āmbhaśi, l. 12; y is employed for j in yushṭaḥ, l. 22; one of the two similarly sounding consonants is wrongly elided in ujvālayē, l. 13 and prādā-trīpada, l. 10; similarly the visarga is omitted in some places to suit the metre;<sup>2</sup> finally, the sign of the anumārika is used in place of the anusvāra, generally when followed by v or s, see śrōṇīm vidhi- and -girām vasaṁ, both in l. 16, śit-āṁśu, l. 8; but see also laṁkāṁ l. 10.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of Vijayasimhadēva (called Vijayadēva in line 3), evidently of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty, who ruled at Tripurī on the Narmadā. The object of it is to record the construction of a tank by Malayasimha who was probably a feudatory chief of Vijayasimha.

The inscription opens with a verse in praise of Mañjughōsha, the Buddhist god of learning. There is, however, nothing peculiarly Buddhistic about the present inscription. The composer was not a Buddhist, as he describes himself as always engaged in the study of the Vēdas. It is again doubtful if his patron Malayasimha, who caused the tank to be excavated, was a follower of Buddhism; for verse 27 speaks of a temple of Rāma built by him. Verses 5 and 6 refer to the illustrious Vijayadēva (evidently identical with Vijayasimha, the lord of Chēdi, mentioned in v. 12) who was ruling at Tripurī on the Narmadā. He was born in the family of Karṇa. The poet then turns to the pedigree of Malayasimha. The first ancestor named here is Jāta, who was appointed the head of a vishaya (district), and by the might of whose arms the illustrious (Kalachuri) king Karṇadēva is said to have vanquished his foes. His son was Yaśaḥpāla who was a devoted councillor of Gayākarna. He had two sons Padmasimha and Chandrasimha. One of them, probably Chandrasimha<sup>3</sup> who was the younger of the two, became the pre-eminent Home Minister of the Chēdi king Vijayasimha. Padmasimha had a son named Kirtisimha who was the father of Malayasimha. The only historical information that can be gleaned from the lengthy eulogy of Malayasimha is that he defeated Salakshana and Vikrama (Vikramāditya?).<sup>4</sup> The battle in which the former is said to have lost his

<sup>3</sup> As it stands, the text makes Padmasimha the minister of Vijayasimha, but this seems improbable because his grandson Malayasimha was a contemporary and feudatory of the same Kalachuri king. Perhaps Chandrasimha-avarajō in verse 11 is a mistake for Chandrasimhō-avarajō, and it was Chandrasimha, the younger brother of Padmasimha, who was the Home Minister. There is not much improbability in his being a contemporary of his elder brother's grandson. Verse 12 would thus contain a description of Chandrasimha. This would also satisfactorily explain why Padmasimha's name is repeated in the next verse.

arm was fought at Karkarēḍī. He is, therefore, identical with the homonymous prince of Karkarēḍī (modern Karkrēri, 28 m. north of Rewa) whose Rewa plate is dated V. 1253 (1195 A.C.). His elder brother Kīrtivarman was a feudatory of the Kalachuri king Jayasimha and he himself in the aforementioned Rewa plate acknowledges the suzerainty of Vijayasimha. He seems, therefore, to have revolted against his liege-lord sometime during the period 1175 A.C. to 1193 A.C., but was defeated by Malayasimha and forced to acknowledge the supremacy of the Kalachuri king. Vikrama, the other adversary of Malayasimha, cannot be identified.

Verse 28 mentions the queen Talhaṇadēvī who was probably a wife<sup>1</sup> of Malayasimha and had two sons, the elder of them being named Pṛithvidhara. The inscription then mentions several officers of Malayasimha. Garga, the son of Raṇasimha; was his chief Record Officer, while Harisimha, the son of Jagatsimha, was his excellent Councillor. The latter is said to have got the tank excavated, to the description of which eight verses (34-41) are devoted. Malayasimha is said to have spent fifteen hundred tanḱakas stamped with the effigy of Bhagavat (Buddha?) on this work. No such coins have yet been discovered.<sup>2</sup>

The pedigree of Vidyādhara, the Superintendent of the excavation of the tank, is next given in vv. 43-46. In the Vāstavya family there was a person named Uddharaṇa. His son was perhaps named Śrīdhara<sup>3</sup>. The son of the latter was the Thakkura Lakshmidhara, who was the father of Vidyādhara. Next is mentioned Purushōttama, the son of Valhaṇa, who designed the tank. The genealogy of the poet Purushōttama begins in verse 48. There was a learned Brāhṃṇa named Rāmachandra, who performed all the five sacrifices. His son was Divākara. The latter's son was Purushōttama who composed the present praśasti. He belonged to the Kṛishṇātrēya gōtra and was a resident of Banaras. He describes himself as proficient in logic, the science of word and sense, Mīmāṃsā, Vedānta and Yōga and as devoted to the study of the Vēdas. The mason who incised the present record was Ananta, the son of Galhaṇa. After the inscription was closed with maṅgalāni mahā-śrīḥ, one more verse was added to describe the door-keeper Ralhaṇa, the valiant son of Dalhana.

From the contents summarized above, it will be seen that Malayasimha and his ancestors were hereditary ministers and feudatory chiefs of the Kalachuri kings of Tripurī. Of the latter only Karṇa, Gayākarṇa and Vijayasimha are mentioned in the present record, the names of Yaśaḱkarṇa, Narasimha and Jayasimha being passed over. As Mr. Banerji has already observed, Jāṭa may have flourished towards the close of Karṇa's reign, so that he was a contemporary of both Karṇa and Yaśaḱkarṇa. Jāṭa's son Yaśaḱpāla was a councillor of Gayākarṇa. Padmasimha and Kīrtisimha may have served Narasimha and Jayasimha. During the reign of Vijayasimha the office of the Home Minister seems to have been held by Chandrasimha, while Malayasimha was ruling over the territory round Rewa. It may, however, be noted that the name of Chandrasimha is not mentioned in the Rewa stone inscriptions of Vijayasimha, the Chief Minister (Mahāmantrin) mentioned therein being Haripāla.

<sup>1</sup> Banerji took Talhaṇadēvī to be the mother of Malayasimha and altogether passed over Pṛithvidhara and his brother mentioned in v. 28. Had Talhaṇadēvī been the mother of Malayasimha, she would have been introduced much earlier along with the latter's father Kīrtisimha (vv. 13-14).

<sup>2</sup> As the present inscription has been composed in a slipshod manner, Bhagavan-mudrayā in l. 20 may be a mistake for Bhagavati-mudrayā. In that case the well-known coins of Gāṅgēyadēva, stamped with the effigy of Lakshmi, would be meant.

The inscription is dated, both in words and numerical symbols, on Friday, the first tithi of the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada in the Sāhasamallānka year 944. Though the era is not specified, the date must plainly be referred to the Kalachuri reckoning. It regularly corresponds, for the expired Kalachuri year 944, to Friday, the 30th July 1193 A.C. On that day the tithi ended 22 h. 20 m. after mean sunrise. The importance of the date lies in the data it furnishes for determining the commencement of the Kalachuri year. If the Kalachuri era began in 248-49 A.C. as was finally concluded by Dr. Kielhorn, the present date shows that the years of the era could not have commenced with the bright fortnight of Bhādrapada as was once supposed by him.

The significance of Sāhasamallānke is not clear. Mr. Banerji<sup>1</sup> took it to mean 'the anika named Sāhasamalla' and Dr. Hirananda Sastri<sup>2</sup> suggested that anika means abda or year; but neither of them has explained how the year was called Sāhasamalla. The cyclic year corresponding to the above date was Pinḡala according to the northern system and Pramādin according to the southern system. Neither of these names can be said to be a synonym of Sāhasamalla. According to Dr. D.R. Bhandarkar<sup>3</sup> anika means ākhyā. He has suggested that the Kalachuri era was called Sāhasamallābda and called attention to two other dates<sup>4</sup> which are called Sāhasa and which, though referred to the Vikarma era, work out all right for the Kalachuri era also. But Sāhasamalla does not mean the same as Sāhasānka. The latter, which is a synonym of Vikramānka, occurs in many places<sup>5</sup> as the name of Vikramāditya, the well known patron of Kālidāsa and the reputed founder of the Vikrama Samvat. As Kielhorn has shown, both the dates qualified by Sāhasānka, which Prof. Bhandarkar proposes to refer to the Kalachuri era, appear quite regular as dates of the Vikrama era also. There is, therefore, no necessity to take them as dates of the Kalachuri era. Besides, if they are referred to that era, the first would fall towards the close of the fifteenth and the second in the first half of the sixteenth century A.C.<sup>6</sup> The palæography of the inscriptions is certainly against ascribing such late dates to them. Besides, there is no evidence that the Kalachuri era was current in North India down to the sixteenth century A.C. Even in Madhya Pradesh where petty Haihaya princes continued to rule until their principalities were annexed by the Marathas, the latest date of the Chēdi era known from inscriptions is 969.<sup>7</sup> Thereafter the Haihaya princes used the Vikrama and Saka eras in dating their records.<sup>8</sup> There is thus not the least evidence in favour of Dr. Bhandarkar's view that Sāhasamalla was a name of the Kalachuri or Chēdi era.

A king named Sāhasamalla is indeed known from several coins with the legend

Srīmat-Sāhasamalla. But as V. Smith has shown, he was a king of Ceylon<sup>1</sup> and therefore could not have had anything to do with the Kalachuri era.

What then does Sāhasamallāṅkē mean? Since no other explanation is satisfactory, the conjecture may be hazarded that the expression is intended to signify the year by the system of word-numerals. Sāhasa stands for four; for a verse from the Nārada-smṛiti<sup>2</sup> (XII, 2) cited in the Mitāksharā states that sāhasas or violent crimes were four in number. Malla means 'a wrestler', 'a match for', and therefore conveys the sense of equality. Here it probably signifies an equal number, i.e., four in the present case. Āṅka, as is well-known, signifies nine.<sup>3</sup> These numerals are to be placed from right to left, i.e., as 944 by the rule āṅkānām vāmatō gatib. Thus sāhasamallāṅkē means 'in (the year) 944' and this we find is actually the year in which the record was put up.

The geographical names Narmadā, Tripurī and Karkarēḍi, occurring in the present record, have already been identified.

TRANSLATION

Success! Hail!

(Verses 1-2) Having bowed to Mañjughōsha, who is as white as the snow-mountain, who is (seated) on a lotus-seat, who is the full moon resembling a wheel of eight spokes, (and) who has a sword and a book in his right and left hand (respectively), I shall describe Malayasimha's family and (his) excellences duly (and) with suitable vigour; for words occur (to my mind) of their own accord. Who, indeed! would not describe the great?

(V. 3) These words of mine in thousands are engaged in glorifying the family of Malayasimha even as the rays of the sun are in opening the lotuses.

(V. 4) The Narmadā which flows with sacred and extremely limpid water from the world which is the abode of the best of sages (like) a maiden born in a noble family, and which is praised by the words of the Siddhas, removes by (mere) sight the weight of the sins due to the Kali age.

(V. 5) On its bank is a city named Tripurī where is a king named the illustrious Vijayadēva, the lord of princes, who is born in the family of Karṇa (and) is the ruler (of regions) in all directions.<sup>4</sup>

(V. 6) In whose assembly the supplicant kings, whose throats are parched by the fire of his prowess, discuss, through apprehension, the doubtful reward of their service<sup>5</sup> by signalling with their fingers.

(V. 7) The illustrious Jāta, a minister whose counsel<sup>6</sup> increased the fame of those who preceded him on this earth, (and who was) like Bṛihaspati in all his merits, was appointed to (this) vishaya;

(V. 8) Who bore here the heavy yoke of pious people by making gifts to the Brāhmaṇas, (and) by the prowess of whose arms alone, the illustrious Karṇadēva conquered his foes.

(V. 9) From him was born (a son) known as Yaśaḥpāla as Budha, the son of Tārā, was born from the moon god,—who, a venerable person on the earth, was a devotee of the king Gayākarṇa and the keeper of (his) counsel.

(V. 10) His son also, who had large arms, was created as a light incarnate of auspicious rays, by the creator who found the world enveloped in the darkness (of ignorance) in order that he might illuminate it.

(V. 11) Padmasimha, the abode of the goddess of fortune, had a spotless and pure family as a lotus has excellent petals and white sprouts. In (that) Kshatriya family was born (his) younger brother the illustrious Chandrasimha,<sup>7</sup> the progenitor (of a family).

(V. 12) (He),<sup>1</sup> the sole home-minister of the king Vijayasimha, the lord of Chēdi, who is most powerful with his fame spreading to all cardinal points—(he) who by the force of the prowess, conferred by the boons of the Brāhmaṇas, protects<sup>2</sup> the bodies of the twice-born besieged by a host of elephants of poverty.

(V. 13) In this family, from the learned and illustrious Padmasimha was born the illustrious Kirtisimha of long<sup>3</sup> arms, who had the strength of a lion, even as Rāma, the lord of Kōsala, was, in times of yore, born from Daśaratha. Himself fearless, he was a dart in the hearts of a host of (his) enemies.

(V. 14) In his court there shone various learned men who were his well-wishers, versed in policy, as gods do in the assembly of Indra. (Their) words flashed forth like the rays of the moon sent forth for dispelling the darkness (ignorance) of the world.

(V. 15) Malayasimha,<sup>4</sup> the son of the illustrious Kirtisimha, the hero who was a peerless wrestler in rescuing those born in Kshatriya families, had the dust of his lotus-like feet swept off by the locks of (his) feudatory chiefs.

(V. 16) He is the moon that makes the night-lotuses, that are the learned men, bloom. He is the ocean (the mine of jewels), as he confers jewels on needy men. All excellences have become established in the personage of Malayasimha. On account of (these) excellences he has not even the deer-spot (which is seen in the moon).

(V. 17) Causing the destruction and blooming of the lotuses which are (his) enemies and friends (respectively), he, like the moon (and) the sun, has made the skies of the ten quarters bright. With a sharp pike (śakti) in his hand, there has appeared the skilful Malayasimha on the earth.

(V. 18) He is a flawless Bowman whose sword causes the forces of the enemy (which appeared) weak (before him) to tremble even as wind tosses the reflection of the sun amidst waves of water.

(V. 19) The hostile soldiers being plunged into the ocean of his horses, and seeing the whirls and oysters (in the form of) foam (from the horses' mouths) on their faces, heads and feet, did not soon come out of it!—Such was the lion of Malaya (i.e., Malayasimha)!

(V. 20) 'Did the valiant Bali give the three worlds measuring the three steps (to Vishṇu)? I shall confer on men the rank of the moon (or) that among Śiva, Vishṇu, Indra and others, by winning it openly (and) at once with my sword or with (the help of other) princes.'—May he (i.e., Malayasimha), who had such confidence, in his prowess be victorious!

(V. 21) The fire, whose flame in the form of (Malayasimha's) sword burned brightly with ghee which was the blood gushing forth from the heads of his feudatories, obtained that satisfaction in battle here, which it had not obtained from Hanumān (even) after burning (the city of) Laṅkā.<sup>5</sup>

(V. 22) 'Having vanquished Indra, gods (and) also the moon, this moon (in the form of Malayasimha) roams about together with Śachī who is the Mahādēvī. Oh! this

<sup>5</sup> Banerji's translation 'he (i.e., Malayasimha) . . . obtained (such) satisfaction as the Son of Wind (Hanumān) himself did not obtain by burning Laṅkā' is unacceptable as the text has clearly Mārūtīr=, not Mārūtīr=.

(our) king is Sēsha, the lord of serpents, (created) to enjoy their pleasures !' So is he described by the people in the country.<sup>1</sup>

(V. 23) The fire of his anger being fed by the wife of his enemy with the fuel of tears which she shed for a long time on account of her grief of widowhood, destroyed the forces of the enemy, even as that produced from Śiva's eye (burned) the god of love.

(V. 24) Salakshana became deformed<sup>2</sup> when in the battle of the glorious Karkarēḍī he had the misfortune of having his arm cut off by the arrows discharged by the lion of Malaya (i.e. Malayasimha).

(V. 25) May he (i.e. Malayasimha) be victorious !—who, addressing (Vikrama) in battle with the words 'O valiant Vikrama, thou art vainly running away ! Thou canst not escape being drowned in the flood of the arrows (discharged) from (my) bow ! Why need I kindle here the fire of (my) sword for thy sake ?', struck him in the heart in nine or ten places with his arrows and brought him down, overcoming his prowess and strength.

(V. 26) He erected a marvellous row of mansions touching the sky for gods and Brāhmaṇas, through fear of obstruction from which, as it were, the sun's chariot goes obliquely with speed.

(V. 27) Having performed fierce and painful penance, the Siddhas go to high heaven, (while) those, who worship (?) at the temple of Rāma (built) by him, generally go to the abode of Viṣṇu.<sup>3</sup>

(V. 28) May that Prithvīdhara<sup>4</sup> together with his younger brother be victorious, living for many years like Bhīṣma—(he) who, being the son of the queen Talhanadēvi, protects friends and destroys enemies !

(V. 29) The illustrious Garga, the son of the illustrious Rāmasimha, the repository of beautiful lustre, who (was invested) with all powers, was, like Chitrāgupta, his (i.e. Malayasimha's) writer of religious documents and of education, horses and treasury.

(V. 30) His excellent minister was the illustrious Harisimha by name, the son of the illustrious Jagatsimha, who was appointed as the distributor of betel, and fulfilled the wishes of all supplicants with (gifts of) wealth.

(V. 31) He killed huge and fierce elephants of the enemy, fought with arrows, a noose, a goad and a sword, dealt a very firm blow with the might of his arm, and marched in the fore-front of the army like Kārttikēya.

(Vv. 32-3) This city of men is an ornament of the region here,—in which even students have refuted heterodox doctrines with discussions about the knowledge of Brahman together with the real import of the Vēdas; (in which) the multitude of Brāhmaṇas bring the fires of the Sōma and Śyēna sacrifices to the altars, filling the surface of the earth with the golden rings of sacrificial posts (touched) by the rays of the sun<sup>5</sup>; and in which they dwell making the sides of the altar resound with the mantras as laid down by (rules) (vidhi).

<sup>2</sup> Lit. devoid of auspicious marks. As the word bābu occurs in a compound, the sense may be that Salakshana lost both his arms.

<sup>3</sup> See above p. 352, n. 6. Banerji, who took viśva-padam as the correct reading, translated, 'They mostly obtain the feet of God (without endeavour)'.

<sup>4</sup> Banerji takes Prithvīdhara as a common noun in the sense of 'a king' and refers it to Malayasimha. The context shows that Prithvīdhara was the name of Malayasimha's son.

<sup>5</sup> The significance of this expression is not quite clear to me.

<sup>6</sup> This and the following two verses describe the tank which is mentioned in v. 37.

their gaze on water and doing no harm to the multitudes of (aquatic) creatures;

(V. 35) (Where) women (had) their bodies sprinkled with sprays of water, discharged from the syringes held in the hands of their husbands, which (sprays) were efficacious in removing the fatigue caused by the rays of the sun;

(V. 36) (Where) beautiful Nāga maidens repeat (the songs of) his fame sung by multitudes of humming bees which, with their mouths licking clusters of lotuses, have become intoxicated with the honey they have drunk (from them);

(V. 37) He constructed such a tank for the needy (provided) with dams, which contains edible and unedible seeds (growing) in water such as the śevāla (moss?), the white water-lily, water-plants (vāriparṇī) and lotus-roots.

(V. 38) How did the rosaries fall from the hands of the sages who were sitting (on the bank of the tank) curbing their vital airs,<sup>1</sup> when they saw the eyebrows and limbs (such as) breasts, legs and thighs of (the women) who were engaged in sporting with their husbands in the ocean which is this tank!

(V. 39) On whose bank the gods, the manes, the seven sages and men, being propitiated by the Brāhmaṇas seated on excellent slabs of emerald, whose thighs are touched<sup>2</sup> by silvery fishes darting through the waves (of water), praise him (i. e., Malayasimha) of well-known fame. May he live (long) on the earth!

(V. 40) He constructed (this) large tank, a matchless reservoir of water, in which flamingos sport in joy, their feathers being coloured with the spray of water yellow with the fresh saffron-paste on the bodies of heavenly damsels.

(V. 41) He spent fifteen hundred *ṭaṅkaka*s stamped with (the effigy of) the Bhagavat for (constructing) this reservoir of water.

(V. 42) May the three gods<sup>3</sup> confer their blessings on that Malayasimha,<sup>4</sup> the successful yōgin, who has been eulogised by all hosts of suppliants and panegyrists with words of praise.

(V. 43) Then there was the wise man, the foremost<sup>5</sup> of the Vāstavya (family?), (who was) Uddharaṇa in name also (as he was the saviour in reality), (and who) having raised up nectar to the earth, had, as it were, the form of the god (Vishṇu), the sole lord of the world.

(V. 44) Then was (born) his son,<sup>6</sup> attractive to young women, who, being served by the goddess of fortune resembled in form Śrīdhara (i. e., Vishṇu), (and) who, by the numerous collections of his virtues and abundant religious merit, made the earth pure and possessed of all qualities.

(V. 45) His son on the earth was the Thakkura Lakshmīdhara who was conversant with marks<sup>7</sup> and poetry. His son was Vidyādhara who was proficient in the qualities required for all offices.

(V. 46) Vidyādhara, who is (fully) conversant with the principles of the three aims<sup>8</sup> (of human life), but slightly with the essence of love, was the Superintendent and the cause of this tank as Sagara was of the ocean.

(V. 47) Purushōttama (of) the Vāstavya (family), who knows how to measure a tank, was the son of the illustrious Valhaṇa and resembled (his) teacher Śrīdhara.

(V. 48) There was, again, the illustrious Rāmachandra, a learned man, who performed all the five sacrifices. His son also, named Divākara, being almost omniscient, was the foremost among the Brāhmaṇas.

(V. 49) His son, who belongs to the Kṛishṇātrēya gōtra,<sup>1</sup> dwelt in Kāśī, obliged others and had his mind devoted to his preceptor, was, by fate, deprived of fortune.

(V. 50) (He), the illustrious Purushōttama, a great Brāhmaṇa, whose knowledge of logic is profound, who is adept in the science of lexicography, and is equally versed in Mīmāṃsā, whose mind is engaged in (studying) the Vedānta, Yōga and other (systems), who is devoted to the study of the Vēdas and folds his hands on his head before those who are very learned, is in intelligence a Bṛihaspati on (this) earth.

(V. 51) By him has been made this excellent praśasti (eulogy) which, containing the desired meaning, is composed in good metres, resembling the string of a pearl-necklace (which contains round pearls) which has a good theme as the necklace has a cluster (of pearls), and which describes the glory of a noble family even as the necklace has the thread passing through the pearls produced from a good bamboo.<sup>2</sup>

(V. 52) This eulogy of the family, faultless like the moon-beams (?), has been incised by the Sūtradhāra named Ananta, the son of the illustrious Galhaṇa,—

(V. 53) On Friday, the first day of Bhādrapada in the year nine hundred increased by forty and four (denoted by the expression) Śāhasa-mall-āṅka.<sup>3</sup>

(In) the year 944, (the month) Bhādrapada (and) the bright (fortnight), on the (lunar) day 1, Friday, during the reign of the illustrious Vijayasimhadēva.

(May there be) bliss and great fortune !

(V. 54) Śrī. His (i.e., Malayasimha's) door-keeper was named Ralhaṇa, the valiant son of Dalhaṇa, who is capable of executing a responsible (?) work, is brave in fighting, and destroys the pride of his foes, as Nandi is (the door-keeper) of Siva.

No. 68 ; PLATE LVII

REWA PLATE OF VIJAYASIMHA : (VIKRAMA) YEAR 1253

THIS plate was brought to notice by Sir A. Cunningham who found it in the possession of the Rewa Durbar. Its contents were briefly and somewhat incorrectly given by him in his Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. XXI, p. 146. It was subsequently edited with a lithograph, but without any translation, by Dr. Kielhorn in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVII, pp. 227 ff. The plate has since been deposited in the British Museum. It is edited here from excellent ink impressions kindly supplied by the authorities of the Museum.

<sup>1</sup> Kṛishṇa-pūrvah Ātrēya-gōtraḥ evidently means 'belonging to the Kṛishṇātrēya gōtra' and not 'born in the race of Atri, before whom Kṛishṇa was born' as translated by Banerji. The sense is clumsily expressed here as in so many other places in this inscription.

<sup>2</sup> There is a play on the word śad-vanīta which means (1) a good family and (2) a good bamboo. The metaphor in this verse is not properly expressed.

<sup>3</sup> See above, p. 350. Śāhasa, malla and āṅka denote the numbers 4, 4 and 9, and according to the rule āṅkānām vāmatō gatih, the expression stands for 944.

The plate measures 15½" by 9" and is inscribed on one side only. It is quite smooth, the edges of it being not fashioned thicker, nor turned up, nor protected in any way. As the result, the preservation of the inscription is only fairly good; for the surface of the plate is a good deal worn, especially in the proper left half down to about line 14 and in the right half from about line 8 to 14, so that some aksharas here are only faintly visible, and a few others are altogether illegible. . . .—In the upper part of the plate there is a ring-hole; but the ring with any seal that may have been attached to it is not now forthcoming. The weight of the plates is 192½ tolas.<sup>1</sup> The average size of the letters is about .25". The characters are Nāgarī. The technical execution is fair. Except for two opening verses in honour of Brahman and Bhārati (the goddess of speech), the benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end and a stray quarter of the Indravajrā or the Anuṣṭubh metre here and there, the whole record is in prose. Both the metre and the grammar are faulty in several places. Mistakes of the former are pointed out in the foot-notes to the text. As regards those of grammar, attention may be drawn to the wrong gender in sāmanta-sirā-ratnō in l. 6, the faulty compounds in śuta-dvan and mātri-pitrō- in ll. 6 and 14 respectively and the syntactical blunder in sō-hamī. . . samājñāpayati vōdhayati cha in ll. 7-8. Final consonants, are not properly marked. The writer's carelessness is betrayed by the omission and transposition of words in many verses and the orthographical mistakes such as the use of the dental s for the palatal ś (e.g., in sarmanē for śarmanē in several places in ll. 10-12) and vice versa (e.g., in śūkshmā for sūkshmā in l. 2, śuta-dvan l. 6 etc.), that of n in for ṇ in puṇya-yaśō, l. 14 and puṇya-karmṇāṇaṇ, l. 18. The sign of v is used to denote b in all places except babhūva in l. 5.

As stated before, the inscription opens with two verses, one in praise of Brahman and the other in that of Bhārati, the goddess of speech. The first of these occurs in several copper-plate charters of the Later Kalachuris, while the second with some alterations is met with in three records of the Kalachuri king, Karṇa.<sup>2</sup> The inscription then refers itself to the auspicious and victorious reign of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vijayadēva, a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara and the lord of Trikaliṅga, who by his own arm had acquired suzerainty over the three kings (viṣ.) the lord of horses, the lord of elephants and the lord of men, and who meditated on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmadēva, a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara. Worthy of note is the epithet Parama-māhēśvara here applied to Vāmadēva, for it clearly shows that the latter cannot be identified with the god Śiva. As the description of Vijayadēva is closely similar to that of the Kalachuri king Jayasimha in the Rewa plate of Kirtivarman, he is evidently identical with Vijayasimha, the son and successor of Jayasimha. This identification is again corroborated by the agreement of dates. For, as shown below, the date of the present inscription corresponds to 1195 A.C. It is twenty years later than the date of the Rewa inscription of Kirtivarman (viṣ., K. 926 or 1175 A.C.), and this squares with the relation of Vijayasimha to Jayasimha. Again, the date of the present inscription is only two years later than that of the preceding Rewa stone inscription of Malayasimha which belongs to the reign of Vijayasimha.<sup>3</sup>

The inscription next gives the pedigree of the donor Salakṣhaṇavarman, who was then plainly a feudatory of Vijayadēva. In the capital Kakarēḍī there lived a personage named Dhāhilla who was honoured by all princes. After him flourished in course of time Vājūka, Dandūka, Khōjūka and Jayavarman, whose relation to Dhāhilla and to one another is not specified. Jayavarman's son was Vatsarāja who, again, had two sons Kīrtivarman and Salakshaṇavarman (or Salakhaṇavarman). The former, being the elder of the two, succeeded his father and was himself succeeded by his younger brother Salakshaṇavarman.<sup>1</sup>

<sup>2</sup> Nos. 50, 51 and 54. In these it is in praise of Brāhmī, while in the present record it glorifies Bhārati. Bhārati which is here substituted for Brāhmī does not, however, suit the metre.

<sup>3</sup> As a matter of fact, Salakṣhaṇa is mentioned in verse 24 of that inscription, as one who suffered a defeat in Karkarēḍi at the hands of Malayasimha, a feudatory of Vijayasimha.

The object of the present inscription is to record the donation of the village Chhiḍauḍā, situated in the Kūyīsambapālisa<sup>2</sup> pattalā, which Salakshaṇavarman made after bathing and worshipping Śiva at Kakarēḍī. The donees were all grandsons of one Mādhava and belonged to the Kauśilla gōtra with the three paravaras Kauśilla, Viśvāmītra and Dēvarāta. It seems that Mādhava had four sons Mahasōṇa, Chīthu(?), Pīthana and Śrīdhara. The village or its revenue was divided into five padas or shares of which two were allotted to Rāmaśarman, Gāṭhēśarman and Dāmaraśarman, the three sons of Mahasōṇa and one each to Pāṇḍu(?)śarman, Paitēśarman and Haridattaśarman, the three sons of Mahasōṇa's three brothers.

The date the donation is given in line 13 as Friday, the seventh tithi of the dark fortnight<sup>3</sup> of Mārgaśiras in the year 1253 (expressed in decimal figures only). No era is specified; but there is little doubt that the date is to be referred to the Vikrama era. It is found to be regular for the current Vikrama year 1253. The seventh tithi of the dark fortnight of the pūrṇimānta Mārgaśiras of that year ended 6 h. 45 m. after mean sunrise on Friday,<sup>4</sup> the corresponding Christian date being the 27th October 1195 A.C.

Of the place-names occurring in the present grant, Kakarēḍī has already been identified with Kakrēri in Vindhya Pradesh. I have not been able to trace any place exactly corresponding to Kūyīsambapālisa. There are, however, some villages named Kooiah in the adjoining territory; the nearest to Kakrēri that I have been able to trace is 12 miles to the east by south. Chhiḍauḍā I am unable to identify.

<sup>3</sup> Cunningham inadvertently stated the date to be the 7th of waxing moon.

<sup>4</sup> According to Kielhorn's calculations the tithi ended 7 h. 35 m. after mean sunrise on that day. Cunningham, who presumably took the Vikrama year as expired, stated that the tithi fell on Thursday, as indeed it did in 1196 A. C.

<sup>7</sup> Read सामन्तानां शिरोरत्नं यस्माज्जातं सुतद्रवम् । to suit the metre.

<sup>9</sup> If this is intended as part of an Anuṣṭubh verse, we should have श्रीसलक्षणवर्म्मपि. The sandhi in the text is due to the royal name being taken as शलक्षण-

<sup>10</sup> The letters are quite clear here. Read -प्रकृत्युपेतः. Kielhorn's reading प्रकृष्टोपेत- does not give a good sense.

TRANSLATION

Success ! Hail !

(Verse 1) Adoration to that reality, Brahman, which is attributeless, all-pervasive, eternal and auspicious, the ultimate cause (of the universe) and supreme light conceivable by the mind !

(V. 2) Glorious is that speech<sup>15</sup> on which the sages contemplate<sup>16</sup> as on a creeper planted in the pure field of their heart, and which, (though) subtle, yields the great fruit of final emancipation.

(Line 2) During the beneficial and victorious reign of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vijayadēva, the lord of Trikaliṅga, who, by his own arm has acquired suzerainty over the three kings, (viz.,) the lord of horses, the lord of elephants and the lord of men, (and) who meditates on the feet of the Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Mahārājādhirāja and Paramēśvara, the illustrious Vāmādēva, the devout worshipper of Mahēśvara,—

<sup>3</sup> This akṣara is quite clear.

<sup>4</sup> Originally यत्प्रदत्ता.

<sup>5</sup> Read पालनीयं रक्षणीयं चेति ।

<sup>9</sup> Metre of this and the following verses: Anuṣṭubh.

<sup>15</sup> In the Goharwa and other inscriptions where this verse occurs, it is Brāhmī, not Bhāratī which is eulogized.

<sup>16</sup> The use of the metaphor 'the field of the heart' shows that rōpāyanti (plant), not dhyāyanti (contemplate) is the appropriate verb in this relative clause.

(L. 4) There was (a personage) named Dhāhilla in the capital of Kakarēḍī. He became venerable to all princes. From him were born in course of time Vājūka and Dandūka, and after them, Khōjūka and Jayavarman. Afterwards was born Vatsarāja, a son of Jayavarmadēva, the crest-jewel of feudatory princes, from whom two sons were born. (Of them) the elder son Kīrtivarman himself obtained his father's throne, and the illustrious Salakshhaṇavarmadēva also obtained the kingdom in course of time.

(L. 7) I, who am that Salakshhaṇavarmadēva,<sup>1</sup> being possessed of all the powers of the state,<sup>2</sup> shining with the distinction of having obtained the pañcha-mahaśabda (and) being victorious, command and inform all the subjects, residing in the village Chhiḍauḍā (situated) in the pattalā Kūyīsambapālisa, and others established in their respective posts—

(L. 8) “Be it known to you that having bathed at the town of Kakarēḍī and worshipped Śiva, We have given as a grant, on Friday, the seventh tithi of the dark fortnight of the month Mārgaśiras in the year 1253, for the increase of the religious merit and fame of (Our) mother and father and Ourselves, this village (divided into) the following five padas<sup>3</sup>, with its four boundaries well-determined,—together with land and water, together with mango and madhūka trees, together with pits and barren lands, treasures and deposits, open space and products, extending as far as its limits (and) together with woods, grass, birds and mineral products,—to the following Brāhmaṇas, (viz.,) two padas to the Brāhmaṇa [Rāma]śarman, the son of Mahasōṇa and the grandson of the Ṭhakkura Mādhava, of the Kauśila gōtra with the three pravaras Kauśila, Viśvāmitra and Dēvarāta, the Brāhmaṇa Gāṭhēśarman and the Brāhmaṇa Dāmara<sup>4</sup>; one pada to the Brāhmaṇa [Pāṇḍu]śarman, the son of Chithu (and) grandson of the Ṭhakkura Mādhava; one pada to the Brāhmaṇa Paitēśarman, the son of Pithana (and) grandson of the Ṭhakkura Mādhava; (and) one pada to the Brāhmaṇa Haridattaśarman, the son of Sridhara (and) grandson of the Ṭhakkura Mādhava.

(L. 14) Knowing this, (you)<sup>5</sup> should pay all (dues) to them, obeying their orders. What has been granted by me should be preserved and protected by feudatory princes and others who submit to my commands.”

And there are the (following) holy verses in this connection:—

(Here follow six benedictive and imprecatory verses.)

(The engravers<sup>6</sup> were) the illustrious Vi Nāṇi Kūkē and his son. The field requires two khārīs<sup>7</sup> (of grain) for seed.

BHERA-GHAT GAURI-SANKARA TEMPLE INSCRIPTION OF VIJAYASIMHA

THIS inscription was first brought to notice by Dr. T. Bloch,<sup>8</sup> Superintendent of the Archæological Survey, Eastern Circle, in his Annual Report for 1907-08, p. 15.

<sup>8</sup> Cunningham has not noticed this inscription in his account of Bherā-Ghāt. See his A. S. I. R., Vol. IX, pp. 60 ff.

A transcript of its text accompanied by a lithograph was published by Mr. R.D. Banerji in his Haihayas of Tripurī and their Monuments, p. 142. The record is edited here from excellent estampages supplied by the Superintendent of Archæology, Central Circle, Patna.

The inscription is incised on a stone slab let into the front wall, on the right-hand side of the door leading into the sanctuary of the temple of Gaurī-Śaṅkara at Bhērā-Ghāt, 13 miles from Jabalpur, the chief town of the Jabalpur District of Madhya Pradesh. The writing, which measures 1' 9" broad by 9" high, contains four lines. It has suffered considerably on the right-hand side owing to the peeling off of the surface of the stone. About six aksharas at the end of the first three lines and one akshara in the beginning of the last two have been either wholly or partly damaged.

The characters are Nāgarī and the language Sanskrit. The orthography does not call for any remark.

The record is of the time of the king Vijayasimhadēva of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty of Tripurī. Its object is to record the obeisance of the Mahārājñī Gōsaladēvī, (her son)<sup>1</sup> the Mahārāja Vijayasimhadēva and (the heir-apparent) Ajayasimhadēva to the enshrined god who appears to be named here Bhagnakhidra (the Destroyer of diseases).<sup>2</sup>

The Mahārājñī the illustrious Gōsaladēvī, the glorious Mahārāja, the illustrious Vijayasimhadēva, the Mahākumāra Ajayasimhadēva,—these constantly bow to the Destroyer<sup>9</sup> of diseases for (their) welfare.

<sup>1</sup> Hiralal makes Gōsaladēvī the queen of Vijayasimha. See I. C. P. B. (second ed.), p. 37. The Kumbhī copper-plate inscription, however, makes it plain that she was his mother. See Appendix, No. 4, below.

<sup>6</sup> Banerji reads the last two aksharas of this line as श्रीम and the first akshara of the next as द, but the latter, not being open on the right, cannot be read as द. The title Mahākumāra of Ajayasimha occurs in the Kumbhī plates.

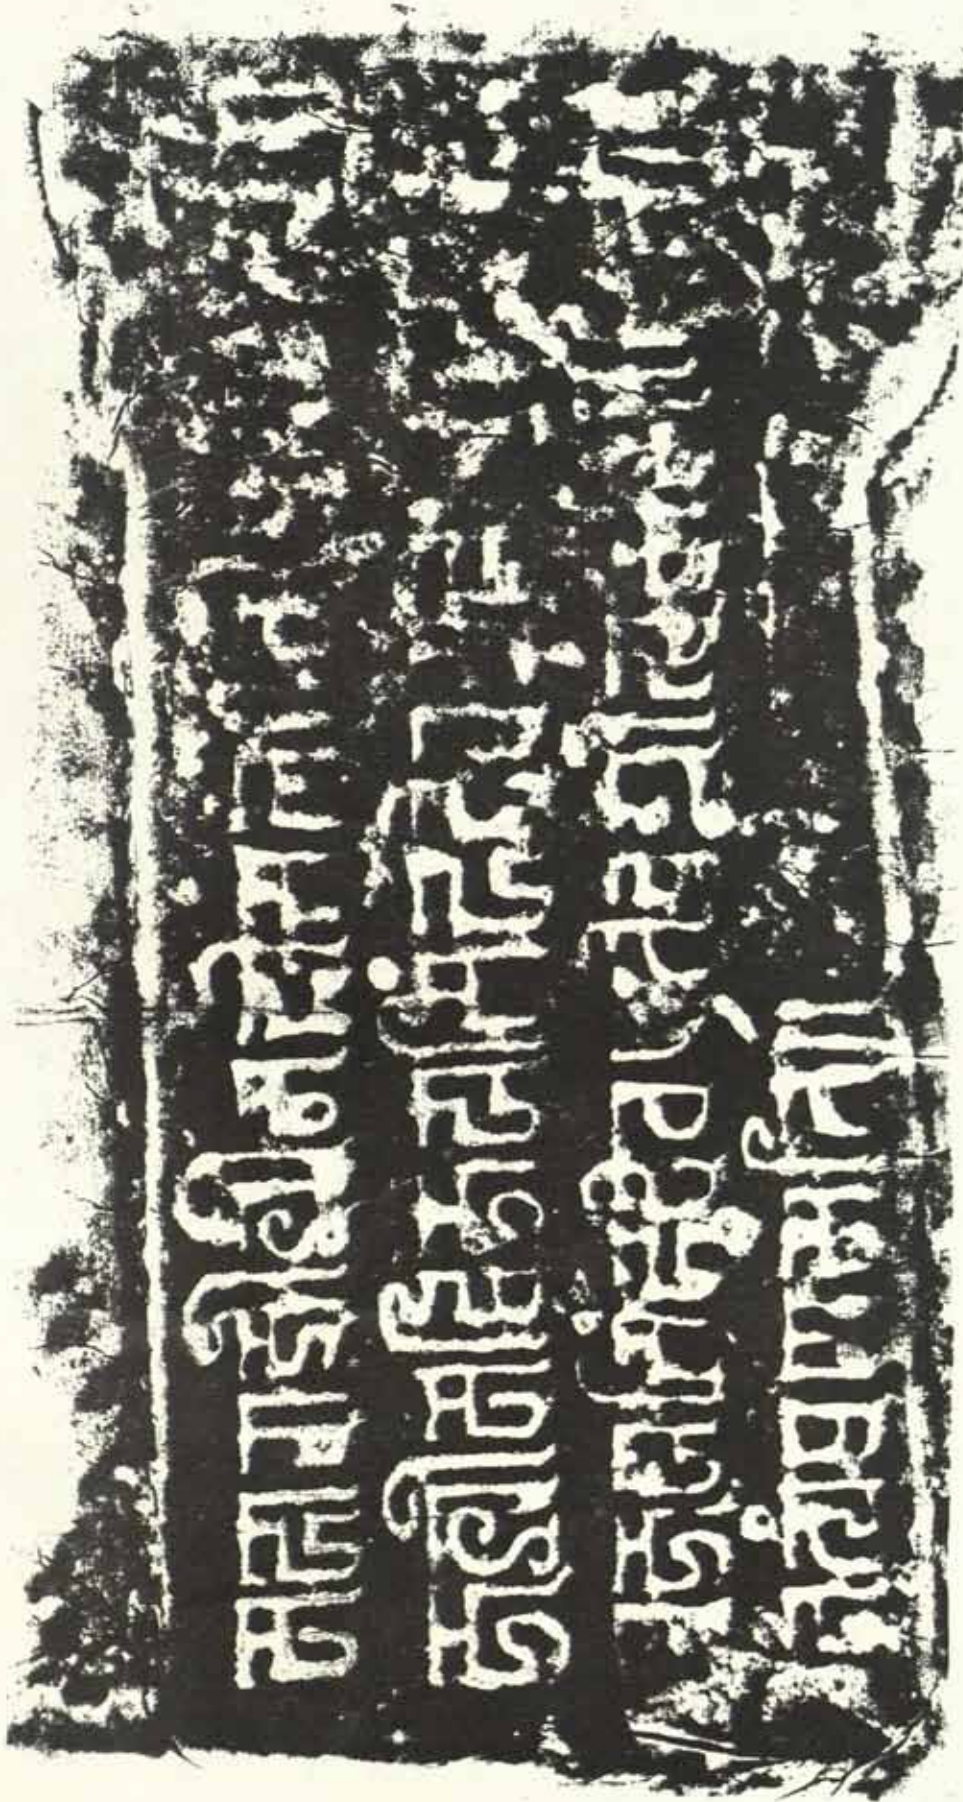

<sup>7</sup> Banerji reads the text from here to the end as -दजयसिंहदेवेनेद(?) श्री[वचनाचरण] नित्यं प्रणमन्ति. Apart from the ungrammatical construction, there is no sign of the medial ī on v in -dēvīn-. The aksharas following जजयसिंहदेव are certainly एते. As regards the reading भग्निद्राय the aksharas न्न and न्नि are almost certain. Lexicons give khidra in the sense of 'a disease'. Bhagna-khidra may be a name of Śiva who is so called because he drives away diseases.

<sup>9</sup> It is not unlikely that the temple was erected and the image of the god installed by way of thanksgiving after the recovery from illness of the dowager queen or one of her sons.

BHERA-GHAT GAURI-SANKARA TEMPLE INSCRIPTION OF VIJAYASIMHA

No. 70; (NO PLATE)

REWA STONE INSCRIPTION OF VIJAYASIMHA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 96x

THIS inscription was brought to notice in 1936 by Dr. N.P. Chakravarti, Government Epigraphist for India, who found it deposited in the guard-hall of the old palace at Rewa in Vindhya Pradesh. The original provenance of it is not known. A short account of its contents was published by the Government Epigraphist in his report for the year 1935-36.<sup>1</sup> The record is edited here for the first time from inked estampages kindly supplied by him.<sup>2</sup>

The inscription is incised on a slab of stone which is broken irregularly on the proper left. The extant writing covers a space measuring 2' 1½" in height and from 1' to 1' 1" in breadth. No lines are broken off from the top and the bottom, but on the proper left from three to twelve aksharas are lost at the end of each line. The writing has again suffered very much by exposure to weather, several aksharas being completely effaced in almost every line. As shown below, the inscription appears to be a public copy of a copper-plate charter. It has a large portion in common with other Kalachuri grants, especially the Jabalpur plates of Jayasimha<sup>3</sup> and the Kumbhi plates of Vijayasimha.<sup>4</sup> Many of the lost or illegible aksharas can, therefore, be restored with the help of these latter records; but some names of officials mentioned in lines 9-12 and a few fiscal terms which occurred in lines 13-16 are now irrecoverably lost. The record consists of 19 lines. The size of the letters varies from .8" to 1". The characters are Nāgarī. They resemble in a general way those of the Lāl-Pahād stone inscription. The language is Sanskrit and the whole record is in prose. In style the inscription is in the customary form of a copper-plate charter.<sup>5</sup> The orthography does not call for any remarks.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the king Vijayasimha of the Later Kalachuri Dynasty of Tripurī. The object of it is to record the king's grant of the village Dhōṭṭavāḍa in the Rēvā pattalā. The name of the donee, which seems to have occurred at the end of line 13, is lost.

The present record appears to be a public copy of a charter which must have been originally engraved on copper-plates. As in the Kumbhi plates, the royal order is issued here from the capital Tripurī. Again, in lines 6-16 the present record names dignitaries and mentions several rights and privileges after the manner of copper-plate grants.<sup>6</sup> It seems, therefore, that Vijayasimha caused the charter to be copied and incised on the stone in order to give it full publicity.

Like his predecessors; Vijayasimha is described here as one who meditated on the feet of Vāmadēva and assumed the titles Trikalīṅgādhipati and others. Among the officers to whom the royal order is addressed there are the Mahāpradhāna Ṭhakkura Kīki, the Arthalēkhin Ṭhakkura Kēśava, the Sāndhivīgrahika Lakhaṇa the Mahāmantrin Haripāla<sup>7</sup>, the Mahāmāṇḍalika Malayasimha and the Rājaguru Vimāla-

<sup>5</sup> An analogous instance is furnished by the Deo-Baraṇār inscription of Jīvitagupta; see Fleet, C. I. I., Vol. III, pp. 213 ff.

siva.<sup>1</sup> Malayasimha is probably identical with the homonymous feudatory of Vijayasimha. His inscription<sup>2</sup> dated K. 944 shows that he was in charge of the territory round Rewa during the reign of Vijayasimha.

The inscription bears in line 17 a date in three digits, the first two of which are probably 9 and 6. The third digit is completely effaced. But as the Dhurēti inscription of Trailōkyamalla shows that the Chandēllas occupied the territory round Rewa in K. 963 the third digit of the date must have been 0, 1, or 2. This date must evidently be referred to the Kalachuri era. The corresponding Christian date will, therefore, range from 1208-9 to 1210-11 A.C.

As for the localities mentioned in the present inscription, the Rēvā pattalā must have comprised the territory round the modern town of Rewa. The village Dhōṭṭa-vāḍa I am unable to identify.

MISCELLANEOUS INSCRIPTIONS

No. 71 ; PLATE LIX

BESANI STONE INSCRIPTION: (KALACHURI) YEAR 958

THIS inscription was brought to notice by Sir A. Cunningham, who published a transcript and a lithograph of it and drew attention to its date in his Archæological Survey of India Reports, Vol. XXI, pp. 101-3, and plate xxvii. The date was subsequently discussed by Dr. Kielhorn in his article entitled 'The Epoch of the Kalachuri or Chedi Era' in the Indian Antiquary, Vol. XVII, pp. 218-19. The record is edited here from excellent ink-impressions kindly supplied by the Superintendent of Archæological Survey, Central Circle, Patna.

The inscription is incised on a loose broken stone slab near the ruins of a temple at Bēsāni (long. 80° 17' E. and lat. 24° 12' N.) in Vindhya Pradesh, about 14 miles north-west of Jukēhi, a station on the Katni-Manikpur branch of the G.I.P. Railway. The record is fragmentary. The extant portion contains six lines. Nothing is lost at the top and the proper right side. The first four lines seem to be complete on the left side also. But as the lower corner on that side is broken off, the fifth line has lost about six aksharas, while the last one shows only the upper fragments of three aksharas in the left corner. Besides, an indefinite number of lines has been lost at the bottom. The extant portion has suffered here and there by exposure to weather. The letters were carelessly written or incised. The characters are Nāgarī and the language Sanskrit. The orthography does call for any remarks.

The inscription opens with the date, viz., the year 958 (expressed in numerical figures only), the third tithi of the bright fortnight of the first Āshāḍha. The object of it seems to be to record gifts in drammas received from different persons for some purpose not specified in the extant portion of the inscription. The gifts may have been made, as conjectured by Cunningham<sup>1</sup> for some work connected with the temple near the ruins of which the stone was found. It may be noted that the preserved portion of the record does not mention any reigning prince.

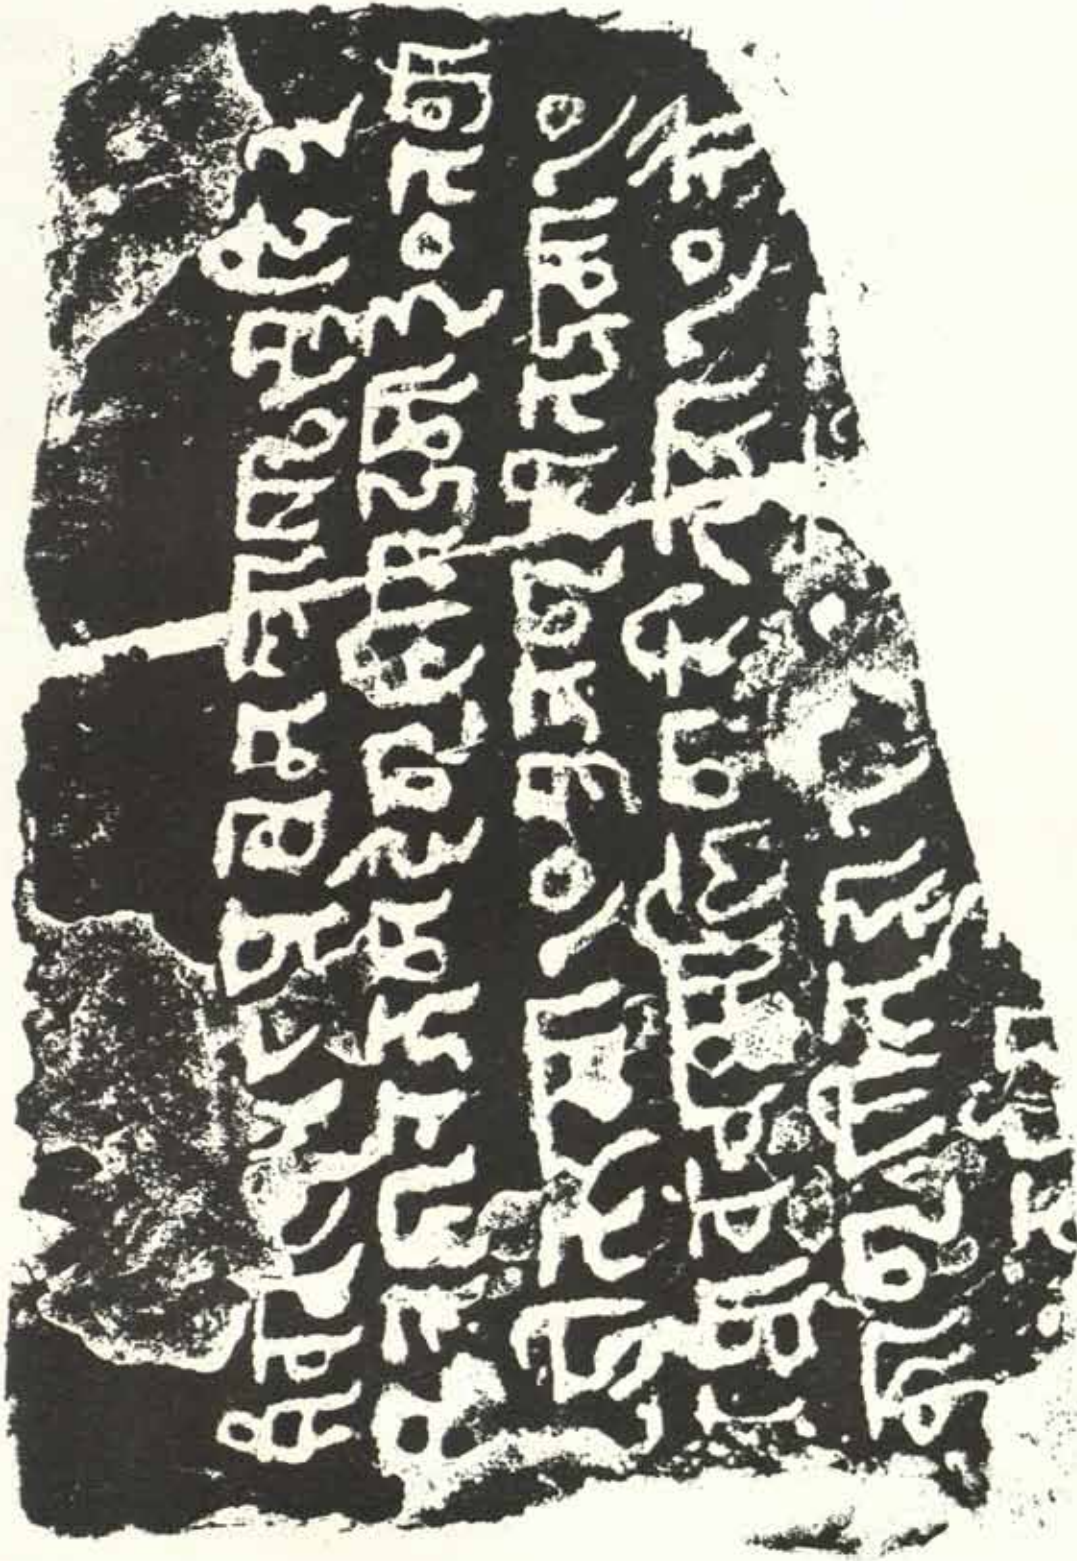

The interest of the inscription lies in its date which, on the evidence of its characters, must plainly be referred to the Kalachuri era. Its wording shows that there were two months named Āshāḍha in the year 958 and the month in which the inscription was put up was the first or intercalary Āshāḍha. We find that in 1207 A.C., which corresponds to the expired Kalachuri year 958, there were two Āshāḍhas,<sup>2</sup> of which the first or intercalary Āshāḍha lasted from the 14th May to the 11th June. The third tithi of the bright fortnight of it fell on Thursday, the 31st May 1207 A.C.

<sup>2</sup> Kielhorn has shown that Āshāḍha was intercalary in 1207 A. C. 'For in that year the solar month Āshāḍha lasted from May 26, about 1 h. 40 m. after sunset, to June 27, about 4 h. after sunrise, and during that time there were two new-moons, one on May 28, 9 h. 30 m. after mean sunrise, and the other on June 26, 23 h. 41 m. after mean sunrise'. Ind. Ant., Vol. XVII, p. 219.

NO. 72; PLATE LX

DHURETI PLATES OF TRAILOKYAMALLA : (KALACHURI) YEAR 963

THESE plates were brought to notice in 1936 by Dr. N. P. Chakravarti, Government Epigraphist for India. He first published a brief notice of their contents in his report for the year 1935-36<sup>9</sup> and subsequently edited them with a lithograph in the Epigraphia Indica, Vol. XXV, pp. 1 ff. They are edited here from an excellent ink-impression kindly supplied by him.

They are two copper-plates measuring 1' 3.2" broad and 10½" high. They were discovered in 1926 in the village of Dhurēti,<sup>10</sup> about 6 miles south-east of Rewa by a cultivator while ploughing his field. They have raised rims. When discovered they were apparently held together by a ring, but it had already been cut when Dr. Chakravarti examined the charter. This ring has a seal measuring 6¾" × 4½" attached to it, bearing in relief the figure of Lakshmi with an elephant on either side pouring water over her head, and the legend Srīmat-Trailōkyamalla in one line below it. The weight of the plates together with the seal is 419 tolas. The record consists of 22 lines, of which eleven are inscribed on the inner side of each plate. The writing is in a state of perfect preservation throughout. The average size of the letters is .5".

The characters are of the Nāgarī alphabet. Attention may be drawn to the closely similar forms of the initial ē and pa, t and bh, and ch and v. The prishṭha-mātrās are used

<sup>4</sup> Cunningham read here ta Sri which gives no sense. It seems that the name of some person is omitted through inadvertence in the beginning of l. 3.

here and there to denote medial diphthongs. The language is Sanskrit. Except for three verses in the beginning, the inscription is in prose throughout. The record is very carelessly written especially in lines 18-22. The writer had evidently a very imperfect knowledge of Sanskrit. As shown below, this is a private document. Still the writer states that it was issued from a camp and that the camp was situated at some auspicious place! It is clear that he has blindly copied the introductory part of the record from some royal charter. The orthography shows the usual peculiarities such as the use of v for b, of the dental for the palatal sibilant and vice versa.

The inscription refers itself to the reign of the king Trailōkyamalla who, as shown below, is identical with the Chandēlla king Trailōkyavarman. The object of it is to record the mortgage (vitta-bandha) of a certain village by the Śaiva ascetic Śāntaśiva in favour of one Rāṇaka Dharēka.

The inscription opens with an obeisance to Śiva and Gaṇapati. It has then three verses in praise of Kṛishṇa, Sūlapāṇi (Śiva) and Sarasvatī.<sup>1</sup> It next proceeds to state that during the reign of the illustrious Trailōkyamalladēva, the lord of Kānyakubja, who meditated on the feet of Vāmadēva, had assumed titles commencing with Paramabhaṭṭāraka (i.e., Paramabhaṭṭāraka, Maharājādhirāja and Paramēśvara), and had attained supremacy over the lord of horses, the lord of elephants and the lord of men,<sup>2</sup> the Śaiva ascetic Śāntaśiva, the son of the Rājaguru Vimalaśiva, conveyed by way of mortgage (vitta-bandha) at Dhōvahattapattana in the Dhanavāhi pattalā, the village of Alaura, to the Rāṇaka Dharēka, the son of Sēvarāja, who was himself the son of the Thakura Rāsala. The deed of mortgage was actually executed by Nādaśiva, a younger son of Vimalaśiva, with the authority of his elder brother Śāntaśiva. Some persons are cited as witnesses at the end of the record. The record was written by the Paṇḍitas Viśvēśvara and Gaṅgādhara. It was engraved by Śiruka. There are no benedictive and imprecatory verses at the end of the record, as it is not a land-grant.<sup>3</sup>

Trailōkyamalla, during whose reign the deed was executed, is evidently identical with Trailōkyavarman (or Trailōkyamalla), mentioned in the Rewa plates of V. 1297 and 1298 of his feudatories Kumārapāla and Harirāja.<sup>4</sup> He, therefore, belonged to the Chandēlla dynasty. Still the same epithets are here applied to him as were applied to his predecessor Vijayasimha of the Kalachuri dynasty, evidently through the ignorance of the writer, who seems to have drawn upon some Kalachuri record for the description of the Chandēlla king.<sup>5</sup>

Among the officers of Trailōkyamalla mentioned in the present inscription, there is one who deserves special notice<sup>6</sup>. This is the Mahāmahattaka, Mantrin and Māṇḍalika Malayasimha. He is evidently identical with the Mahāmāṇḍalika Malayasimha mentioned in the Rewa stone inscription of Vijayasimha. As shown below, the present inscription was incised in K. 963, i.e., within two or three years of the aforementioned inscription of Vijayasimha. During this short interval the rule of the Kalachuris in the Rewa

<sup>6</sup> Another officer, the Kōṣṭhapāla Vāhaḍa may be identical with Vāhaḍavarman, the son of Śalakshaṇavarman, the feudatory chief of Karkarēḍī, Ind. Ant., Vol. XVII, p. 236. The Sāṅdhivigrahika Haripāla may be identical with the Mahāmantrin of the same name mentioned in No. 70, l. 9.

territory was supplanted by that of the Chandēllas, and Malayasimha seems to have transferred his allegiance to the rising power. Perhaps he was himself instrumental in causing this revolution!

The inscription is dated on Monday, the 7th tithi of the bright fortnight of Jyēshṭha in the year 963 of an unspecified era. This date must, of course, be referred to the Kalachuri era, but the details do not work out regularly; for in the current Kalachuri year 963 (1210-11 A.C.) the tithi fell on a Friday and in the expired year 963 (1211-12 A.C.) on a Wednesday. It is not, however, unlikely, in view of the careless writing of the present record, that Sōmē of the text is a mistake for Saumyē (on Wednesday) as suggested by Dr. Chakravarti. The date would in that case regularly correspond, for the expired Kalachuri year 963, to Wednesday, the 9th May 1212 A.C.

Of the places mentioned here, Dhōvahaṭṭa has been identified by Dr. Chakravarti with Dhurēti, but there is not much similarity in their names. It is more likely to be Dhōbhaṭ near Makundapur, about 10 miles south by west of Rewa. Dhanavāhi, the headquarters of the pattalā in which it was situated, may be identical with Dhanavāhi which lies 22 miles to the south-west of Dhōbhaṭ. Alaurā I am unable to identify.

<sup>2</sup> Read -व्यवहियमाणे पंचकुलधर्माधिकरणे. चितायां seems to be superfluous.

<sup>3</sup> This expression seems to be out of place in a deed of mortgage.

<sup>5</sup> Read पादाचर्चनरतो; but as the compound stands it means that the Śaiva ascetic was devoted to the feet of Trailōkyamalla.

<sup>7</sup> This expression in the plural number does not fit in with the preceding epithets which are all in the singular. Read शांतशिवः.

<sup>9</sup> Chakravarti read अलीरा, remarking that लौ which was first engraved was subsequently corrected into स्त्री. See, however, similar mātrās of medial au in Kalan, lines 11-12.

<sup>10</sup> The correct construction would be अलीराग्रामं . . . सर्वादायसहितं यावद्वरण्यं दत्तवानिति ।

<sup>13</sup> Read भट्टारकस्त्रीम-

<sup>14</sup> The writer perhaps intended to write नादशिवेन, but it would not suit the several adjectival expressions in the nominative prefixed to it. Read नादशिवस्तेन.

<sup>17</sup> The text is very corrupt here. Probably the intended sense is किञ्चित्कार्यकरणे वारणे वा श्रीमद्वरेकस्य येच्छा सा प्रतिपद्यते ।

TRANSLATION

Om! Adoration to Śiva! Adoration to Gaṇapati!

(Verse 1) May this god, the son of Dēvakī, be victorious! May this Kṛishṇa, the great luminary of the Vṛishṇi family, be triumphant! May (this Kṛishṇa), who has a delicate person dark like a cloud, be glorious! May Mukunda, who removes the burden of the earth, attain victory!

(V. 2) May the blue-throated (Śiva), the enemy of Smara and the dear husband of (Pārvatī) the daughter of the snow-mountain, who has a spear in (his) hand, protect all people,—(he) who was able to burn the three cities<sup>5</sup>; who has the bright moon on his head; who affords protection to all people and is the sole lord of all worlds!

(V. 3) May the all-white Sarasvatī, the female swan (sporting) in the assemblage of lotuses which are the mouths of Brahmā, always enjoy herself in my mind!

(Line 5) During the reign of the illustrious Trailōkyamalladēva, who looks resplendent with the complete series of royal titles commencing with Paramabhaṭṭāraka, who is a devout worshipper of Mahēśvara (and) the supreme lord of three kings, viz., the lord of horses, the lord of elephants and the lord of men, who is the lord of speech through his study of various lores, who meditates on the feet of the illustrious Vāmadēva, who is the lord of Kānyakubja and whose beneficial and victorious rule is augmenting on the earth,—on Monday, the 7th (lunar) day of the bright (fortnight) of Jyēshṭha in the year 963, while the Mahāmahattaka, Mantrin and Māṇḍalika, the illustrious Malayasimha is present on duty, while the Sāndhivigrahika Ṭhakkura Haripāla, the Kōṭṭapāla Vāhaḍa and the Arthalēkhin the illustrious Srēshṭhin Chanda (are also present on duty), (and) while the affairs in the court of justice of the Pañchakula<sup>6</sup> are being managed by all merchants according to custom,—at the camp fixed at some auspicious place in the Dhōvahaṭṭa pattana (situated) in the Dhanavāhi pattalā, the holy Śāntaśiva of the Vatsa gōtra, a son of the Bhaṭṭāraka, the holy Rājaguru Vimalaśiva,—who has become the sovereign of ascetics through the practice of self-restraint, observances, study of sacred texts, and meditation; (who is) the crest-jewel of an assembly of learned people, the lord of Saiva Āchāryas, proficient in all lores, (and) an incarnation of Durvāsas in the Kali (age); to whose feet is devoted the illustrious Trailōkyamalla,<sup>7</sup> the lord of three hundred kingdoms, (and) who is (always) engaged in meditation with a concentrated mind,—has given, by way of mortgage, the village Alaurā, together with all dues (such as) bhāga, bhōga,

<sup>6</sup> The Pañchakula (assembly of five persons) corresponds to the Pañcha-maṇḍali or Pañchaka mentioned in earlier records and the Panchāyat (Village Jury) of modern times.

taxes on pravāṇis and inclusive of (payment in) gold, to the Rāṇaka, the illustrious Dharēka, the son of Sēvarāja (who is) the son of the Ṭhakkura Rāsala.

(L. 15) Having obtained the permission of (his) elder (brother), Nādaśiva, a son of the Bhaṭṭāraka, the holy Rājaguru Vimalaśiva, and a younger brother of Śāntaśiva,—who is endowed with self-restraint and other virtues, and possessed of all marks of high rank; who is engaged in bathing three times a day, adoring gods and worshipping fire; who is intent upon (showing) kindness to all creatures; who is the support of all suppliants<sup>1</sup> (and) the source of consolation to (all) creatures; who is skilled in all arts and proficient in all arms and sciences,—has conveyed by way of mortgage the whole annual income of the paṭṭa.<sup>2</sup> In the matter of doing or desisting from doing anything, the wish of the illustrious Dharēka is (to be) followed.

(L. 19) The witnesses to this deed are—Paṭṭakila<sup>3</sup> Madanē; also Sīlē; also Ṭhakkura Sūpaṭa; Ṭhakkura Gāṅgē; Vi<sup>4</sup> Raṇadhōla<sup>5</sup>, Vi Gāṅgādēva; Paṭṭakila Vi Kavita (and) Ṭhakkura Gōlūṇa.

Knowing this, (the mortgagee) should enter into and take possession (of the village).

May there be well-being of the writer and the reader!

(L. 21) Whatever I, dull-witted as I am, uttered through childishness and weak-mindedness, was written by Paṇḍita Viśvēśvara and Paṇḍita Gaṅgādharma. (This deed) has been engraved by Sīruka.

The illustrious Trailōkyamalla.
