Took a special course in Greek, and later in life studied Arabic and Persian, besides languages taught in regular course, in the New Brunswick Theological Seminary, which he attended, 1883-86. A.B. (Rutgers, 1883). A.M. (do. 1886). Clergyman, R. C. A. Held the following pastorates: Griggstown, N. J., 1886-90; Shawangunk, N. Y., 1890-93. Died of pneumonia after a brief illness, March 2, 1893.

He was an active helper of the late Dr. W. H. Campbell during the pioneer days of the Suydam Street Church, New Brunswick. The writer has heard the beloved ex-President pass estimates upon the character and attainments of the young co-worker that might surprise some who knew him less intimately, so great was his unobtrusiveness and modesty. He was an independent investigator, minute points, eluding the notice of the more superficial, receiving due attention. He had an equally facile grasp of the wider and more abstruse problems of metaphysics and theology. Had he been blessed with a more robust constitution he might have become a scholar of eminence. Professor Jacob Cooper has written: "The world takes little heed of its grandest heroes. For they are too much absorbed in their work to count its notice, and it is too selfish to award recognition unless this is sought . . . Such a hero was Robert Vanderbilt Palmer, who went out and in among us so noiselessly, so free from self-asserting obtrusiveness, that few recognized his real worth . . . His people were astonished at the force and elegance of his pulpit efforts. They loved him with a devotion fully requited by a nature which could appreciate and be expanded by their confidence. He had trials which the world was not permitted to know fully, and with which it could not adequately sympathize. But he had a strong character, and this was made perfect through suffering. He was never vigorous in body, but was unsparing of his own strength and comfort. No pastoral duty was neglected or slighted. Though he dearly loved his study, he was instant for every call of distress among his people, where his tenderness and sympathy made his presence a healing touch."
