Rinehart's Indians.

Introduction.

THE MIDWAY, that feature of Chicago's great Exposition, around which cluster such pleasant recollections finds its parallel in the Indian Congress of the Trans-Mississippi and International Exposition held at Omaha in 1898

The idea was conceived, and it was due largely to the efforts of Mr. Edward Rosewater, one of the Directors, that the United States Government gathered delegations from the various tribes of the United States. Thirty-four tribes were represented, and were in charge of Capt. W. A. Mercer, U. S. A.

While here the Indians lived in their primitive way—in tepees, wickiups and adobe houses—and afforded a rare opportunity for the study of their traits and characteristics; their habits, sports and pastimes; their rites and ceremonies and their dances. Their method of warfare was demonstrated in the sham battles in which an opportunity was afforded to display that cunning for which they have always been noted. There were burnings at the stake and scalplings; the mutilation of the dead and the mocking and torture of prisoners by the squaws. The Indians themselves entered into these exhibitions with spirit, and enjoyed them as much as did the spectators.

Their domestic life was represented by the curing of meat, the preparation of the meals, splitting of wood and the setting up of tepees. The squaws do all this, besides the ornamental work, such as beading making mocassins and adding to the general adornment of their lords, while these sit around, talk smoke and paint their faces and bodies for the dance or battle

Those old hereditary foes, the Sioux and Cheyennes, the Crows and Blackfeet, were here brought together on neutral ground, and, to judge by the visiting and the expressions of good will at parting, a friendly feeling was engendered by the intercourse.

The Apaches were here with the notoriously famous Geronimo at the head of their delegation. Interesting indeed, was that tatter from the remnant of that band of revolting savages, the only cannibal tribe of North American Indians, the Tonkawas. So abhorrent were they formerly that the other Indian tribes determined upon their extinction, and in the massacre of Tonkawa Creek in 1863, they were nearly exterminated.

The camera of Mr. Rinehart Official Photographer of the Exposition, was ever busy recording scenes and securing types of these interesting people who with their savage finery are rapidly passing away. In a remarkably short time education and civilization will stamp out the feathers, beads and paint—the sign language, the dancing—and the Indian of the past will live but in memory and pictures.
