THE last century has seen a great deal of labour successfully expended by classical scholars in investigating the history of manuscript texts. The MSS. of Virgil, Horace, Plautus, and other Latin authors, have been classified in 'families' and each 'family' or group traced to a parent MS., usually of the time of Charlemagne, occasionally of a still earlier age. It would seem that in this century the inquiry into the history of Latin texts will be pushed a stage further back. Scholars will have to ask, not from what Carolingian archetype this or that group of MSS. has come, but what ancient edition of the author has its text reflected in the Carolingian archetype. From the history of the text in the Mediaeval scriptoria we must pass to its history at a far earlier time, in the second, third, and fourth centuries of the Roman Empire. The following inquiry into the ancient editions of Martial is offered as a contribution to the new exploration. If the reader should complain, not unjustly, that the path of research lies in a misty region and leads to no certain issue, he will at least find nothing but solid fact in the Appendix, which contains the collations, now published for the first time, of the two most important representatives of ancient editions of Martial. The one, a MS. newly acquired by the Royal Library, Berlin, was brought down only the other day by an Italian peasant from the hills and sold to a bookseller in Lucca. The other has for many years been an ornament of the Library of the Faculty of Advocates in Edinburgh. There is something of a reproach to Scottish scholarship in the fact that a detailed account of its text should so long have remained unpublished.

ADDENDUM.

p. 8 note k.] The transposition in A (cf. F, Ambros.) of III xxii. 1—lxiii. 4 (i.e. 304 lines) after V lxvii. 4 seems due to a loose quaternion of the archetype having been inserted at a wrong place. This strongly argues for a page of 19 (not 20) lines in the archetype C^A.

THE EARLY EDITIONS OF MARTIAL, WITH COLLATIONS OF THE BERLIN & EDINBURGH MSS.

I. The edition of Torquatus Gennadius.

OF the ancient editions from which our existing MSS. of Latin authors are ultimately derived we generally know little or nothing. Neither the date of the edition nor the name of the editor has been transmitted to modern times. But there was one period of the later Empire when so pronounced self-advertisement on the part of editors was the fashion that some record of them has persisted to our own age. It was the period when Paganism was making its last stand against Christianity, when the old nobility, partly from religious, but not less from social and political considerations, upheld the faith of their forefathers. One form that their struggle took was the assertion of the claims of the old authors, Martial, Juvenal, and the rest, who were placed on the 'index expurgatorius' of the Church. The younger scions of aristocratic houses, as soon as they had completed their studies at the University, tried their 'prentice hands' on new editions of these dethroned kings of literature, and with the self-assertiveness of amateur scholars gave great prominence to the record of their editorial labours.

Instead of a single announcement at the beginning (or end) of the whole, these editions displayed at the end of each part a statement of the editorship, often with detailed account of the name, age and rank of the editor, and of the place and circumstances of his work. Thus we find 'subscriptions,' as these notices are technically called, in certain MSS., which have been derived from such an edition of Persius in the year 402 A.D., stating that the editor belonged to an aristocratic corps, the royal body-guard, then stationed in N. Spain and S. France, and edited part of the work at Barcelona and part at Toulouse. He informs us that he was 30 years of age, and had served for four years in the army, and that in his editorial venture he had to do the best he could without being able to consult his professors. Here is the second entry :

IVLIVS TRYFONIANVS SABINVS PROTECTOR DOMESTICVS LEGI ARCADIO ET HONORIO QVINTVM CONSVLIBVS. PROVTVT POTVI SINE MAGISTRO EMENDANS ADNOTAVI ANNO AETATIS TRICESIMO ET MILITIAE QVARTO IN CIVITATE TOLOSA.

Another, who edited Apuleius in 395 A.D. and again in 397, announces that he wrote his first edition at Rome in the lecture rooms or college 'in foro Martis' of a professor^a of Rhetoric, by name Endelechius, his second at Constantinople :

EGO SALVSTIVS LEGI ET EMENDAVI ROMAE FELIX OLBIBRIO ET PROBINO V. C. CONS. IN FORO MARTIS CONTROVERSIAM DECLAMANS ORATORI ENDELECHIO. RVRSVS CONSTANTINOPOLI RECOGNOVI CAESARIO ET ATTICO COSS.

To this class belongs the first of the three ancient editions of Martial that claim our notice. It was the work of Torquatus Gennadius, a scion of a distinguished house (Arch. Lat. Lexikogr. XII, 463), and was completed in the year 401 A.D., the year of the consulship of Vincentius and Fravitta, under the supervision apparently of a professor; for he dates his notice (like the editor of Apuleius) from the 'forum Martis.'

Here is the full tale of his 'subscriptions'^b as they have been transmitted to us.

^a The phrase controversiam declamans implies that he was in the final part of his rhetorical course, a 'magistrand,' to use a modern term; for the pupil began with the practice of 'suasoriae' and advanced to 'controversiae.'

The details of these 'subscriptiones' will be found in the monograph of Prof. Jahn in the Berichte der Sächsischen Gesellschaft, 1851, p. 327.

^b The term 'scriptio' properly implies an entry at the end of a book or document. But the entries of Gennadius appear to have stood at the beginning of each book, or rather both at the end and the beginning. Of course the end of one book and the beginning of the next are generally identical. But not always. Between the end of Book XII and the beginning of the Xenia (loosely termed 'Book XIII') intervened three prefatory epigrams, 'extra ordinem paginarum.' There is one Gennadian notice at the end of Book XII and another before the fourth epigram (the real beginning) of 'Book XIII.' Fuller details regarding the readings of the various MSS. in these 'subscriptions' are given in Appendix B.

At the beginning of Book II: EGO TORQVATVS GEN-

The peculiarities in the text of this edition will be considered later (in section 4) ; also the novel title-headings which characterize it (in section 5). Meanwhile we may briefly describe the latter as harmonizing with the spirit of these editions of the old pagan literature. The Gennadian title-headings seem designed to point the moral of the epigrams, to shew them in the light of lessons for the practical conduct of life, to make Martial in fact a pagan preacher. Take, for example, the heading of X xciv : NIHIL DEESSE ETIAM HIS QVI NIHIL POSSIDENT, or X xcvi : AGRVM MAGIS DEBERE COLI QVAM AMICOS, or IX lxxxvi : MORTEM OMNES GVSTARE, or XI xxxix NON DEBERE ABSTINERE IAM IVVENEM, and so on.

We must not think of Gennadius' edition of Martial as on a level with Servius' edition of Virgil or Donatus' edition of Terence. These young noblemen, in the last year of their studies or the opening years of their military or diplomatic career, would not turn out a better edition of an ancient classic than would, let us say, some Arthur Pendennis, in his last year at the University, of some English classic, like Ben Jonson or Sir Philip Sidney. Their influential position or family connexions might gain them access to good copies of the author which were beyond the reach of the ordinary literary hack. And they might receive some useful hints from the professor who supervised their work. But while their edition would probably be a great advance on the corrupt current text of the author, it would be far from reaching the standard of the better modern editions of the classics, and would probably exhibit a good deal of capricious alteration^e of the traditional readings.

The Gennadian text has been transmitted to us in four manuscripts. Three of them are quite late, belonging to the period of the Italian Renaissance, viz.:

P, in the Vatican Library, formerly in the Library of the Elector Palatine at Heidelberg,

Q, in the British Museum,

f, in the Laurentian Library, Florence.

A fourth, a most valuable addition to our manuscripts of the poet, only the other day emerged from obscurity and found its way into the hands of a bookseller at Lucca, who sold it to the Royal Library, Berlin. It is designated by the letter L (i.e. of Lucca) and dates from the 12th century. An account of it will be found at the end of section 6 and a collation of its text in the Appendix.

These four manuscripts of this family, usually known as 'family B,' have all come from one parent codex or archetype, which I will designate by the symbol B^A. This lost archetype may have been the MS. which Politian mentions as extant in his time in the Laurentian Library. At least, like Politian's codex, it was written in Lombard characters, the old national script of Italy, which persisted in the South^f long after it had gone out of fashion in the North. From the loss of (apparently) a leaf, containing I xli. 4—xlvi. 1, and the transposition of (apparently) a quaternion (i.e. 4 broadsheets, 8 leaves, 16 pages), containing IV xxiv. 2—lxix. 1, we may infer that either this archetype or the original, of which it was itself a transcript, contained 28 lines (possibly in 2 columns of 14 lines each) to the page^g.

^e Gennadius' substitution of rubens for ruber in IV lxvi. 8 and V viii. 5 may be an instance, if it be due to some pedantic differentiation of the two words, like Nonius' distinction between vegetus and vigens (V 434 M).

^f In fact, I understand, it is still practised in the scriptorium of the monastery of Monte Cassino, that venerable Benedictine cloister, perched on its high hill, of which the railway traveller gets a glimpse half-way between Rome and Naples.

^g The order of the epigrams in the first four Books is transposed in this fashion: I init.—xiv, xlviii—ciii. 2, xv—xli. 3 (xli. 4—xlvi. 1 being lost), IV

And that it was the original of the archetype, rather than the archetype itself, whose page was of this content is indicated by the displacement of three neighbouring epigrams in Book XI, n^{os}. lxxxiv—lxxxvi. Their total of lines is 26, and two of the lemmas would probably require a line each; the third lemma might be written in the margin. It would appear that these three epigrams occupied a page of the original and were at first passed over by the writer of the archetype. The double occurrence of an epigram (n^o. cii) of Book XIII at an interval of 14 (or 15) lines is probably the result of the writer of the archetype having inadvertently passed over a column, but having recognized his error immediately after transcription of the first epigram of the column.

To what century this archetype B^A belonged, the 8th or 11th or (more probably) the 9th or 10th, we cannot tell. We may suppose it to be a transcript (mediate or immediate) made by Italian monks of some ancient copy xxiv. 2—lxix. 1, I ciii. 3—IV xxiv. 1, IV lxix. 2, &c. The reckoning of the numbers of lines on the pages of an archetype seldom admits of perfect accuracy; for title-headings might on occasion take more than one line, or might be entered in the side margin; and lines might be omitted at their proper place and added in the top or bottom margin, thus increasing the number of lines on the page; or a passage might be accidentally written twice (the repeated lines being afterwards erased), thus diminishing the actual number of lines on the page. But since I xli. 4—xlvi make, if we allow one line for each title-heading, 55 lines, while IV xxiv. 2—lxix. 1 make 436 lines, these numbers tally so well with the relative numbers for a leaf and a quaternion, that the above estimate may stand. It is more difficult to account for the interposition of I xv—xli. 3 (xlvi) at the place they occupy. It looks like the blunder of a binder, who, noticing that I xiv and I xlviii both dealt with the same topic, thought they should stand together. The content of I xv—xlvi is some 230 lines, apparently 8 pages (i.e. 4 leaves), with 28 lines to the page; the content of I init.—xiv is something like 3 pages of the same size (although it is impossible to guess exactly the number of lines which the prose preface to Book I would occupy). Was the first gathering then a ternion of 6 leaves (i.e. 12 pages), the first page being blank or containing merely the title? Or is the loss of the last leaf of the first gathering (containing I xli. 4—xlvi) to be connected with the loss of the prefatory epigrams (i, ii), and (possibly) the Gennadian 'subscription' of Book I?

of Martial which had been preserved through the Dark Ages in their monastery library.

So much for the first of our three editions, which we may designate for the rest of our discussion as the 'Gennadian' edition. For another of the three, a suitable name is ready to hand, the edition 'in usum elegantiorum' or (for sake of shortness) the 'elegant' edition. The third offers us no facilities for naming it, but since a name of some kind is necessary for convenient reference, we may venture to call it the 'vulgate' edition. The grounds (not wholly satisfactory) for choosing this particular name for it will be mentioned later.

2. The 'vulgate' edition.

There is no clue to any personality, like Gennadius, with whom this edition may be connected^h, and indeed, if this text really was, as there are some grounds for supposing, the direct successor and representative of the current, popular edition of Martial's poems, we should not expect to find it associated with the name of this or that editor.

The archetype, the lost parent of our MSS. which exhibit this text, probably belonged to some French monastery libraryⁱ and was written at the Revival of Learning in the time of Charlemagne or a little later, for the confusions of certain letters by transcribers shew that the original which they were transcribing was written in the early Carolingian minuscule script. This minuscule archetype was apparently itself transcribed from a MS. written in ^h In the opening couplet of IV lxvi :

Egisti vitam semper, Line, municipalem, Qua nihil omnino vilius esse potest, the C^A archetype substitutes dulcius for vilius, although the sense of the passage clearly requires the latter word. But it would be dangerous to claim dulcius as the reading of the 'vulgate' text. It might be due to any scribe's momentary aberration, or it may have been caused by the very natural miswriting iulius or lulius for vilius.

ⁱ X, the most attractive in appearance and the second oldest of the descendants of the archetype perhaps came from the famous monastery of Corbie. (Chatelain, 'Paléographie des Classiques Latins,' II pl. 151.)

capital letters (apparently of the type known as 'Rustic Capitals') and belonging to the ancient world[‡].

The oldest and best existing representative of this text is E, a MS. in the Advocates' Library at Edinburgh. It was written in the early part of the tenth century. A description of it will be found at the end of section 6 and a full collation in the Appendix. Next in age and perhaps in importance comes X (also belonging to the tenth century), in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris; and there is no lack of others, of which A in the Leyden Library and V in the Vatican are most worthy of mention. The frequency with which this archetype of this family was transcribed in contrast to the B^A archetype is the natural result of the one being a French and the other an Italian MS.

The archetype of this family, which is known as 'family C,' I will designate by the symbol C^A. Like the archetype B^A, of our MSS. exhibiting the 'Gennadian' text, this archetype of our MSS. exhibiting the 'vulgate' text was defective. It wanted X lvi. 7—lxxii (between 150 and 160 lines) and XII xxix (properly 'xxviii')—xxvi (properly 'xxix') (some 40 lines), not to mention lesser omissions like X lxxxvii. 20—xci (some 25 lines) and XII v (properly 'iv'), ii (properly 'v') and vi. 1—6 (some 15 lines). Whether the omissions are due to a loss of leaves in C^A itself or to some parent MS., such as the ancient MS. in Rustic Capital Script, of which our archetype appears to have been a transcription (mediate or immediate) we cannot tell[‡].

3. The edition 'in usum elegantiorum.'

Of the author of this edition we know nothing, though one is tempted to ascribe to him the not unpleasing epigram

[‡] For the evidence see the instances of miscopying which I have collected in the Introduction to Friedlander's edition, p. 87.

[‡] If the two longer omissions are due to the loss of a leaf and of two broad-sheets (i.e. 4 leaves) in the same archetype, a page of 20 lines is implied. But the evidence is extremely weak and would support equally well the theory of a page of 40 lines, say with 2 columns of 20 lines each.

which is prefixed¹ to Book V in the archetype A^A, describing the life of a country gentleman and scholar (Anth. Lat. 26):

Rure morans quid agam, respondi pauca, rogatus :
 Luce deos oro ; famulos, post arva reviso
 Partitusque meis iustos indico labores.
 Inde lego Phoebumque cio Musamque lacesso.
 Hinc oleo corpus fingo mollique palaestra
 Stringo libens, animo gaudens et fenore liber.
 Prandeo, poto, cano, ludo, lavo, ceno, quiesco.
 Dum parvus lychnus modicum consumit olivi,
 Haec dat nocturnis elucubrata Camenis.

But the edition has a clearly marked feature which distinguishes it from the other two texts and which makes me characterize it as an edition 'in usum elegantiorum.' It replaces by suitable euphemisms some of the grosser words in Martial's vocabulary, words more fit for the 'grafiti' of Pompeii than for a Roman gentleman's library. Not that it is a 'bowdlerized' edition of Martial; it is not. Nor can it be proved to shew any influence of Christianity or even of Paganism tempered by Christianity^m. It merely offers the epigrams in a form that would be less offensive to refined readers, and it does this with due regard to the metre and the senseⁿ.

As we shall see later, the editor has drawn from excellent sources. Again and again the best setting of a passage is found in the MSS. which exhibit this text, so that their value cannot be over-estimated. Indeed it is to them that ¹ i.e. at the beginning of vol. II, if the edition was published in three volumes.

^m We must not lay too much stress on the A^A variant, deum, in I xii. 12 : Stantia non poterant tecta probare deos.

ⁿ Thus tracto is used in II lx. 1 and tango in II xxxi. 1 instead of the usual euphemism subigo, as more suitable to the context. Disregard of metre does indeed appear in the adulter of T in I xc. 6, but I fancy that the word is a gloss (possibly inserted by the scribe of H) on salitor, the usual term. It is metrical considerations which bring mundus (instead of the usual monstrum) into X xc. 7, and the strange plural monstros into XI xliii. 12. The iambic metre is accurately preserved in the re-setting of I lxxvii. 6.

we owe the 'Spectacula,' Martial's earliest literary venture; for this book is omitted in the MSS. of the other two families.

It is therefore extremely unfortunate that our MSS. of this important family, known as family A, are only two in number and that both of them contain excerpts. All that we have of the archetype A^a is a limited number of Martial's epigrams, more usually parts of his epigrams, injected among extracts from other Latin poets. These two Anthology MSS. are known as H and R, both of the ninth century, the first belonging to the Vienna Library, the second to the Library of Leyden. Of H all that remains is a mere fragment; but since the whole of an immediate transcript of H (the famous codex Thuanus, known as T) is preserved, we may use the same symbol H for the whole text, both the part preserved in the actual MS. and the much greater part preserved only in the copy. R and H, between them, have preserved for us (in whole or in part) about a half^o of the epigrams of A^a. - The excerpts in the two Anthologies are fortunately more often different than identical, a circumstance which increases the amount of survival. R has a preference for two-line epigrams, and, when H has happened to excerpt an epigram of this description, we may expect to find the additional evidence of R available.

The archetype A^a, which we have no reason to believe to have been anything short of a complete text of Martial, was apparently divided into two volumes^p, the first con-

^o Books XIII—XIV are transcribed in full in H (see below), and are not included in this estimate.

^p This I infer from the heading in H at the beginning of the excerpts from Book VI: INCIP. CAPITVLA EX VII ET RELIQVIS, though indeed this might merely imply that the excerpts from Books VI ('VII' of H) sqq. had been made at a different time or by a different monk; just as in R the excerpts from IV lxxi to the end of vol. II of A^a shew a difference from the excerpts of the preceding portion. They stand at an earlier part of the Anthology and they indicate the transition from one book to another by entries like EXPL. EX VIII INCIPIT EX IX (at the beginning of the extracts from Book VIII). If I may hazard the guess, it is possible that the final leaves of vol. I of taining the 'Spectacula' (regarded as 'Lib. I') and Books I—V (designated as 'II—VI'), the second containing the rest of Martial's writings. Since H was found by Sannazaro 'in finibus Aeduorum' (see Traube Berl. Phil. Woch. xvi. 1050; H. Schenkl Jahrb. Class. Phil. Suppl. xxiv. 400), and R appears to have belonged to the famous monastery of Cluny (cf. Peiper in his edition of Alcimus Avitus, p. 66), we may conclude that A^A, like C^A, belonged to some French monastery library. Of course we must not refer to it any variation in the text or the titles of epigrams which is due to the excerpt-maker. For example, H discards vv. 2—4 of IX lvii, and so has to change nec of v. 5 into non. The transposition of the lines of II xli in the same MS. is due to the nature of the excerpts. The title-heading of an epigram may be changed for like reasons. H gives the whole of III xxx under the proper title, AD GARGILIANVM; but R, which discards all except the first line :

Sportula nulla datur; gratis, conviva, recumbis, has to change the title to AD CONVIVAM INGRATVM, since the name Gargilianus does not appear until the second line.

The portion of Martial's works which is found in both the excerpt MSS. is so scanty and the number of coincidences in error so extraordinarily few^q that it is impossible to determine the script of the archetype. But since H, which professedly^r gives the whole (not extracts) of the Xenia and Apophoreta (Books XIII—XIV), suddenly passes over XIV lxxxiii—cvi, one surmises that a leaf^s of this content, 72 lines (if we the A^A archetype had become loose and had been inserted for security at the beginning of vol. II, before the R excerpts were taken. These R excerpts began with vol. II instead of vol. I.

^q Does this of itself point to an archetype in majuscule (Capital or Uncial) script, a MS. of the ancient world?

^r The heading at the beginning of the Martial portion, i.e. before the first epigram of the Spectacula, was EX LIBRIS M. VALERII MARCIALIS EPIGRAMMATON BREVIATVM, then EX LIB. II, then EX LIB. III., etc.; but at Books XIII—XIV M. VALERII MARCIALIS XENIA and INCIP. APOPHORETA FELICITER.

^s R is professedly an excerpt MS. throughout. Before the Spectacula ex-suppose each lemma to have occupied a separate line) had been lost in A^A. This surmise is supported by the disarrangement of the epigrams in the Xenia (Book XIII), a disarrangement apparently due to the misplacing of leaves of some such content, although the order of these epigrams in the excerpt MSS. offers complications which it is not easy to unravel. We may however take it as probable that each page of the archetype contained 36 lines. That the pages were written in two columns (of 18 lines each) is likely enough, and is made probable by a curious feature of H in the Spectacula. At the sixth line of the sixth extract there is a gap of half a line, and again at vii. 7 a gap of half a line. Both fragments are represented in the MS. as the beginnings of lines, vi. 6 Hoc [et]iam femineo (a pentameter) and vii. 7 Denique supplicium (a hexameter). One naturally attributes the defective state of the two verses to a hole in the parchment leaf of an archetype. Had the page in this archetype contained only one column, it would have been the end of one line and the beginning of another which were defective. Since two opening hemistichs have been preserved, there must have been two columns to the page †.

tracts stands the heading INCIPIT EXCERPTIO DE LIBRIS MARTIALIS EPIGRAMMAT., and the other headings convey the same idea, e.g. EXPLICIT EX VII LIBRO INCIPIT EX VIII and EXPL. EX VIII INCIPIT EX IX, while there is no indication of a change of procedure with the Xenia and Apophoreta. We therefore cannot make the omission of epigrams in R a proof of their absence from the archetype. Still R has taken a large number of epigrams (46 out of 127) from Book XIII, and of the first part of Book XIV (i—lviii) it offers 6, and of the last part (cxxx—cxxxiii) 24, so that the complete absence of the intervening part of this book from representation in R cannot but attract notice. The epigrams of these two books are all couplets, and for couplets, as we have seen, R shews a predilection. Can it be that before the R transcript was made, the archetype had suffered a further loss of the leaf (with lix—lxxxii) preceding and the leaf (with cvii—cxxx) following the already missing leaf?

† Was R like T, a transcript of an excerpt MS.? No definite indication that it was not can be found in the intrusive usque at XII lxxviii, 2, where R for malo satisfacere offers male satisfaceret usque. The last word appears to have come from a marginal jotting found by a scribe in his original 'usque

4. Origin and Nature of the Variations in Martial's Text.

That the text of an epigrammatist like Martial should exhibit variations is only natural. Epigrams are peculiarly liable to misquotation, and Martial himself complains of the perverted form in which some of his jewelled phrases were current. And of all classes of poetry the epigram is most subject to change at the hand of the poet himself. It is trimmed and pruned again and again to suit his fancy; in the Latin phrase, the file is again and again applied to it. At least one book of the Epigrams, the 10th, we know to have appeared in a second edition with 'corrections and additions,' for that is expressly stated in the second epigram (X ii. 1—4):

Festinata prior, decimi mihi cura libelli
Elapsum manibus nunc revocavit opus.
Nota leges quaedam, sed lima rasa recenti ;
Pars nova maior erit : lector, utrique fave ;

and since some of the epigrams of this book speak of Scorpus, the famous charioteer, as alive, others as dead, we may infer that the death of this idol of the Roman racing world took place between the first and second editions. Another cause of the variations in Martial's text may be found in 'pirated' editions, for the ancient practice of 'recitationes' or public readings of unpublished works made this kind of knavery peculiarly easy for Roman booksellers.

It will be worth our while to make at least an attempt (for success in so complicated an investigation is scarcely possible) to investigate how far these varieties in our three texts may be referred to the poet's own time, as exhibiting either his own first and second versions of a passage or, let us suppose, a 'pirate' and a genuine version, and how far they are due to mere corruptions that attached themselves to the text at a later time. We may begin with a passage of the 10th Book which admirably illustrates the possibilities and the difficulties of this investigation.

In the 48th epigram of the 10th Book the poet invites some friends to dinner and assures them that the conversation at his table will keep clear of dangerous political topics. 'I will have,' he says, 'my guests to talk only of horse-racing, the blue-jacket and the green-jacket jockeys';

Nec faciunt quemquam pocula nostra reum.*

This is the reading of what I have called the 'elegant' text, the text of the archetype A^A. But the texts of the other two archetypes point to another version of the first line, viz. :

De prasino conviva meus Scorpoque loquatur.

We can hardly be wrong in regarding this as the form in which the line appeared in Martial's first edition of Book X, while the other, with omission of the allusion to Scorpus, is the emended version, 'lima rasa recenti,' of the second edition of the book, published after Scorpus' death. The 'elegant' text here, as often elsewhere, is drawn from a better source than the other texts. Our archetype (C^A) of the 'vulgate' text offers 'de prasino conviva meus Scipioque loquatur,' where Scipioque is evidently a corruption, that may have attached itself at any time to the text. Our other archetype (B^A) has another corruption of the same word; but the arrangement of the line is different :

de prasino scutoque (i.e. Scorpoque) meus conviva loquatur.

Here we have no means of deciding whether this arrangement is (1) an earlier version by the poet himself, or (2) a 'pirate' version, or (3) the arrangement preferred by Gennadius, or (4) a mere scribal error. And if it is a mere case of transposition by a scribe, we cannot tell whether the transposition was made in the ancient or the modern period of the text's history.

It will be well to supply at once some other examples of the difficulty of diagnosis, in order that we may realize the limitations of our inquiry :

XI xxvii. 13 Nunc tu velle putas haec me donare puellae
(A^A B^A).

C^A has dare dona. Was this the actual reading of the 'vulgate' text, or is it due to some scribe who found in his original the word dare corrected to donare in this fashion, ^{dona} dare, and miscopied it as dare dona?

VII xcii. 1—2 Si quid opus fuerit, scis me non esse rogandum
Uno bis dicis, Baccara, terque die (A^A C^A).

B^A has tibi me and bis nobis. Are these the actual readings preferred by Gennadius, or is tibi a suprascript gloss which some scribe has substituted for scis, and is bis nobis due to the misapprehension of the letter u as the numerical symbol II?

II xx. 2 (a line omitted in B^A) Nam quod emas, possis iure uocare tuum (A^A).

C^A has dicere iure, to all appearance an ancient variant. But suppose that some scribe had made the very natural mistake of omitting vocare, his eye having passed from -re of iure to -re of uocare. Would not the next transcriber of the text be very likely to cast about for a supplement to the defective line 'nam quod emas, possis iure tuum,' and to hit upon this makeshift 'dicere iure tuum'?

I xiii. 2 strinxerat A^A B^A: traxerat C^A (a miswriting? a gloss?).

cviii. 9 uel serius B^A: te sepius C^A (confusion of the letters P and R?).

III l. 6—7 uenit . . librum B^A; fuit . . bruma (broma)
C^A (through ūit, a contraction of venit, and brum?).

lxxii. 3 dependent pectore A^A C^A: pendent a pectore B^A (through pendent pectore?).

- IV xlii. 6 iste color A^A C^A : esse solet B^A (through este color, esse color ?).
- lxvi. 9 Argolica missus de gente B^A C^A : iussus A^A (through Argolicā iussus ?).
- V xix. 5 maior A^A C^A : melior B^A (through maiior, malior ?).
- xxxiv. 3 parvula A^A C^A : pallida B^A (through paruida ?).
- VII lxxxvi. 8 levis C^A : tennis B^A (through teuis ?).
- VIII lxx. 3 siccare B^A : saciare C^A (through sacare ; a for ic ?).
- X i. 4 ipse B^A : esse C^A (through isse ?).

Scribes, both ancient and mediaeval, had occasionally a weakness for substituting for a word some other word of kindred meaning or similar appearance. For dolor they would write pu^dor ; meum would in their regardless hands become tuum. (For other examples see Class. Rev. xv. 413.) This possibility must be kept in view when we judge of variants like these :

- VI xxvii. 8 anus B^A : opus C^A,
- I cxvi. 2 pulchra A^A C^A : pauca B^A,
- VII xxxvii. 6 madida B^A C^A : media A^A,
- IX vi. 8 cubili C^A : cubiculis B^A ; X xxx. 17 cubili B^A : cubiculo C^A.

Since scribes were at all times liable to this and other errors, the presence of an identical corruption in two different texts may occasionally be a mere accidental coincidence. The word pullus is a rare word ; nullus, a familiar word, might suggest itself to any scribe who found pullus in his original. So in IV lxxiii. 4, where B^A exhibits nulla for pulla, we need not suppose that this was Gennadius' reading. We find the same corruption nulla in the MS. known as R, one of the two MSS. derived from the A^A archetype, although H, the other excerpt MS., has altered the unusual word in another way, and offers puella. Transposition of neighbouring words is the most besetting of all the besetting sins of a scribe. That certus fidus (so A^A) in IV v. 9 should appear in B^A and C^A as fidus certus is not certain proof that the Gennadian and 'vulgate' texts shared this error. At any period in the transmission of either text a scribe may have disarranged the order of the words. Similarly in IX vi. 4 both A^A and C^A offer Afer nonvis, an arrangement which involves the false quantity^u nonvis, while B^A retains the true order nonvis Afer. In VII xlvi. 6 the puzzling word πεζία has led to error in all three archetypes, but fortunately not the same error: pisce A^A, pexa B^A, plena C^A. In VII xcii after three couplets, each ending with quid sit opus, comes a couplet ending with si quid opus? What is more natural than that a scribe should go on mechanically with quid sit opus? This corruption is found in (apparently) two archetypes and in nearly all MSS., but we are not justified in supposing it to be a very ancient corruption which had attached itself to the text before the appearance of the editions of which our archetypes are representatives. In X xxiv. 11 the unusual word Nestora, or in the late Latin spelling Nesthora, appears as nethora in the B^A archetype. In the C^A archetype it sank a further stage to nec hora. Since the following words are nec diem this change to nec hora must have been overpoweringly tempting to a scribe, and we need not be surprised to find it in most of the MSS. derived from the B^A archetype too.

The prose prefaces to various books of the epigrams must have been a stumbling-block to scribes, who would be liable, after copying page upon page of poetry, to regard these pieces of prose as alien matter. The prefaces to Books II and IX are omitted in C^A; the preface^v to Book VIII in B^A. But I should hesitate to ascribe these omissions to the editor of the 'vulgate' text or to Gennadius. They might be due to a mere mediaeval transcriber. Another ^u Will it be believed that Schneidewin actually accepted this reading? Another blemish in his great edition is salvë (instead of solve) XI cviii. 4.

^v Notice that the B^A heading to the first epigram of this book is PRAEFATIO LIBELLI.

stumbling-block would be the presence of prefatory epigrams 'extra ordinem paginarum' (IX Epist. 2), which apparently were placed before the 'incipit' of a book. The epigrams which are now printed as i and ii of Book I are an example. They are omitted altogether in B^A, while in C^A they appear after line 17 of the preface, that is to say, at the point where the prose ends and where the poem, with which the preface concludes, begins. Neither the omission nor the transposition may be safely referred to the original form of the Gennadian and 'vulgate' texts. Indeed I am not sure whether so striking a feature of the archetypes B^A and C^A as the omission of the 'Spectacula' must necessarily be ascribed to the original form of the two texts. How readily would the omission suggest itself to a transcriber at any period! Nothing was more common than for MSS. of poetical authors to have alien poetry entered on the fly-leaves; and any scribe who was directed to copy out the epigrams of Martial would be liable to disregard the few opening leaves of his original and begin his transcription at the point where he found INCIPIIT LIBER PRIMVS EPIGRAMMATON. The occasional omission of a single epigram here and there is the inevitable consequence of the transmission of a text by transcription, and must not be too hastily referred to an ancient edition. Still less the omission of a part of an epigram or a line or a single word.

These examples of the difficulty of diagnosis might easily be multiplied; but enough has been said to shew the danger of ascribing to an ancient edition a variant which may be the work of a mediaeval scribe. At the same time it must be remembered that until the discovery of printing the mechanism of book-production was much the same in the ancient and modern world, and the same errors of transposition, omission, confusion of words and letters harassed the ancient bookseller's amanuensis and the mediaeval monkish scribe. Martial himself tells us of the mistakes that obtruded themselves into the current copies of his poems (II viii):

nocuit librarius istis,

dum properat versus annumerare tibi,

and of his friends' requests that he would read and emend the copies in their libraries. Except in the case of the confusion of minuscule letters or of mediaeval contractions or the like, we cannot be justified in declaring that this or that variant must necessarily be due to a mediaeval scribe. The recent discoveries of papyri in Egypt have opened our eyes to the fact that a large number of errors in texts of classical authors which we have been in the habit of ascribing to the mediaeval 'scriptorium' were present at a period not far removed from the life-time of the authors themselves, and that the most trifling miswritings have occasionally a curious tenacity of life and are handed down in transcriptions from one age to another. Our inclination to refer without positive proof a variant to a mediaeval scribe must be repressed equally with the inclination to refer it to an ancient edition.

Having cleared the ground by this statement of the limitations of our inquiry, I may now enumerate the passages where an ancient divergence of text is certain or at least probable. Unfortunately we have no example quite so satisfactory as that already quoted from Book X, where the 'elegant' text offers the version of Martial's second edition and the other two texts the version of Martial's first edition of the book. The same book contains an epigram (no. xix) addressed to Pliny, which Pliny quotes with evident pleasure in a letter written at the time of Martial's death. We may be sure that Pliny would quote the 'revised and emended' form of the complimentary verses. The Gennadian text exhibits the lines in the form in which Pliny quotes them, but the 'vulgate' text had a different version of the couplet, vv. 15-16. Unluckily the omission in C^A of a word in v. 16 obscures for us the precise form of this other version. B^A has (with Pliny):

Dum centum studet auribus virorum
Hoc quod saecula posterique possint
Arpinis quoque comparare chartis.

C^A omits the second word of the second line^x and shews vacat for studet in the first line.

In the preceding Book the version of a passage (IX c. 4-5) in B^A is clearly an improved version of the form in C^A. Martial is talking of the 'wear and tear' involved in escorting a stingy patron to the houses of wealthy old ladies :

Ad viduas tecum plus minus ire decem.

Trita quidem nobis togula est vilisque vetusque :

Denaris tamen hanc non emo, Basse, tribus.

The 'vulgate' version is :

Ad vetulas tecum vilisque putrisque.

Clearly the alliterative phrase vilisque vetusque recommended itself to the poet's fancy ; and, to introduce it into the couplet, he altered vetulas of the preceding line to viduas, thus avoiding the assonance of vetulas and vetus.

Of the two versions of V iv, an epigram on a person who chewed laurel leaves to conceal traces of over-indulgence in wine, the one which offers the name Myrtale is unmistakably a felicitous improvement of the other (which C^A has preserved for us) which makes the person a man, Tuccius y.

Fetere multo Tuccius solet vino, etc.

We have a good many other instances of variety in (fictitious) proper names, which must indicate ancient rival texts, although we are left at a loss for an estimate of their respective value. In II vii the agreement of A^A and B^A makes us prefer Atticus to the Attalus of the 'vulgate' text. In II xviii the 'vulgate' text seems to have

^x Was it si, a word that would readily fall out before saecula (secula), 'in the hope that future generations may be able to put this on a level with Cicero's writings?' Vacat is a fairly suitable word for the context; cf. X xvii. 5: Mensorum longis sed nunc vacat ille libellis, 'he gives his time to the documents of surveyors.'

^y Elsewhere (III xiv) Tuccius is the name of the needy parasite who came from Spain to push his fortunes at Rome, but on hearing of the reduction of the 'sportula,' exhibited Postumus as a variant of the name offered by the other texts, Maximus. In VI lxxxviii the 'elegant' and 'vulgate' texts agree in Caecilianus, while the Gennadian text had Sosibianus. Similarly in II xxxii. 5 the Gennadian stands alone with Laetoria; the others have Laronia. Whether in IX v Priscus and Crispus, in IX lxx Caccilianus and Maecilianus, in IV lxxxvii Catullus (cf. VI lxix) and Fabullus, in XI xxiv Fabullus and Labullus are cases of real divergence of ancient editions or merely of a scribe's error is not clear (cf. I lxxv; II xlv. 1; V xii. 3; X xiii. 10; xxi; XII xii; lxxxv; xciii). It is well known that the fictitious names used by ancient writers of epigrams, and of other poems too, usually exhibited the same metrical form as the real names of the persons satirised or addressed, so that we are tempted to consider the possibility that the varieties just enumerated had their origin in this practice. During the poet's own age the fictitious name would be current; at a later age the real name might be substituted. The first example however in our list, Myrtale and Tuccius, speaks strongly against this hypothesis; and I do not know that there is any example that speaks in its favour. In I x:

Petit Gemellus nuptias Maronillae
 Et cupit et instat et precatur et donat.
 Adeone pulchra est? Immo foedius nil est.
 Quid ergo in illa petitur et placet? Tussit, all three texts offer the name Gemellus, but the 'vulgate' text points to a variant Venustus. This last must be regarded as a proper name, 'Mr. Prettyman,' and not as an adjective. Certainly Venustus would be an excellent fictitious name in this context in place of a real name like Gemellus; and it might be argued that unlike most other fictitious names in Martial, e.g. Aeschylus, Gellia, etc., the name Gemellus is confined to this single passage. But so is the name Venustus; and there may quite possibly have been some reason, unknowable to us, which induced the poet to substitute Gemellus for the name which he had at first selected, Venustus.

In III xiii. 1 the version of the 'elegant' and the Gennadian texts :

Dum non vis pisces, dum non vis carpere pullos
Et plus quam patri, Naevia, parcis apro, seems, with its deliberate alliteration, an improved setting of the version indicated by C^A :

Dum non vis leporem, dum non vis carpere mullos

In III xxvii. 1 there is greater force in the Gennadian version :

Numquam me revocas, venias cum saepe vocatus,

than in the 'vulgate' :

Numquam me revocas, cum sis prior ipse vocatus.

The rhythm of the 'elegant' and Gennadian version of X xiv. 8 :

Quando brevis gelidae missa est toga tempore brumae?
Argenti venit quando selibra mihi?

shews an improvement on the 'vulgate' version, with elision in the last foot :

Argenti quando missa selibra mihi est?

Similarly in II lxi. 6 the 'vulgate' text has :

Adlatras nomen quod tibi cumque datur,

but the Gennadian text (or at least B^A) :

Adlatras nomen quod tibi cumque datum est.

In IX lxi Martial flatters the emperor by describing the marvellous growth of a plane-tree at Cordova planted by the Emperor's own hands. At vv. 8-9 we find in the Gennadian text :

Coepit et ex illa crescere virga manu.

Auctorem dominumque nemus sentire videtur,

but in the 'vulgate' text :

Auctorem dominumque suum sentire videtur.

Nemus, with its flattering attribution of majesty to the Emperor's tree, is surely a happy after-thought of the poet.

In IX li. 3 it is difficult to see in the 'vulgate' reading, modo raptus, anything else than a mere error of text, for the sense plainly requires the Gennadian version :

Quod semper superos invito fratre rogasti,
 Hoc, Lucane, tibi contigit, ante mori.
 Invidet ille tibi ; Stygias nam Tullus ad umbras Optabat, quamvis sit minor, ire prior ;

nor is it easy to account for modo raptus as a mere error of transcription.

I append a list of further examples, without comment, putting in the first place the reading which seems to deserve preference, although the choice is often extremely uncertain :

- I xviii. 6 Et dare Campano toxica saeva mero (A^A B^A) : vina cado (C^A)^z, xlix. 5 Senemque Caium nivibus (C^A) : Sterilemque
 (B^A),
 lviii. 3 Hoc dolet et queritur de me mea mentula
secum (C^A) : dolet hoc mea mentula mecum (B^A),

 (C^A) : cantusque chorosque (B^A), lxxxvii. 4 Extremo ructus cum redit a barathro (A^A B^A) : venit (C^A), xcii. II Non culum, neque enim est culus, qui non cacat olim,
Sed fodiam digito qui superest oculus
 (A^A B^A) :
 Non culum digito, neque enim est, qui non cacat olim, Culus, sed fodiam, etc. (C^A), ciii. 7-8 Calceus est sarta terque quaterque cute
 (B^A) : bisque quaterque (C^A)

^z Vina might be regarded as a gloss on toxica, especially as in X xxxvi. 4 C^A offers toxica vina for the toxica saeva of B^A. But cado for mero is an indubitable variant.

The above lists, it will be understood, include only permissible variants which by their form declare themselves certainly or probably not to have originated in the mere process of transcription. Of course the actual number of legitimate varieties of reading, varieties which may conceivably originate from the poet himself, will be considerably larger; for a portion of those whose form allows them to be referred to mediaeval (or ancient) transcribers, and which, to avoid controversy, have been omitted from these lists, can hardly fail to be really ancient.

Variants, which are patently wrong, and therefore cannot possibly be referred to the poet himself, do occasionally afford a clue by which they can be connected with one or other of the three ancient editions of the epigrams. The consideration of these is reserved for the 6th section.

^a Cf. I ci. 5 Ne tamen ad Stygias famulus descenderet umbras (B^A C^A). The evidence of A^A is wanting; I cxiv. 5.

It will be seen from the above lists that the authority of A^A stands highest, while B^A takes the second place. But it is hardly to be expected that these archetypes retain absolutely unchanged the readings preferred by the authors of the ancient editions. The nature of book-production before the invention of printing made it nearly impossible for a text to be transmitted without alteration. At any time a reading from a rival text might be jotted in the margin, and this marginal reading might find its way into the text at the next transcription. Indeed there are grounds for believing that variants were occasionally added in the margin of the actual edition before it left the bookseller's hands. Of the 'mixture' of text produced in these ways we see traces in C^A.

I x. (headed DE VENUSTO)

v. 1 Petit Gemellus Venustus nuptias Maronillae (Gemellus A^A B^A),

II xviii (headed AD MAXIMUM)

v. 1 Capto tuam, pudet heu, sed capto, Maxime, cenam,

v. 8 Qui rex est, regem, Postume, non habeat (Maxime A^A B^A), (possibly a mere scribe's aberration),

III xiii. 1 Dum non vis pisces leporem dum non vis carpere mullos (pisces (-em) . . . pullos (A^A B^A),

V iv. 1 Fetero multo Tuccius solet vino (Myrtale B^A and in v. 6 B^A C^A).

Of course, 'mixture' of texts often originates in mediæval times, but I see no reason to believe that the French archetype (C^A) and the Italian archetype (B^A) were ever brought in contact until the Renaissance, when, for example, the MS. F (fully described in Friedlaender's introduction to his Edition of Martial) combines the two texts, its original having been a C^A text in which the owner had entered readings from a B^A codex.

Similar traces (more doubtful) of 'mixture' of text in B^A are:

- II ii. 4 Et puer hoc dignus nomine, Caesar, cras (with v. l. munere?)
 IV xiv. 7 Dum blanda vagus alea December (with v. l. piger)
 V xxx. 6 Carmina, mittuntur quae tibi mense suo (with v. l. novo).

5. The Title-headings of the Epigrams.

Now that we have passed in review the variations of text which may be assigned without much question to the three ancient editions, we may turn our attention to the title-headings (lemmata, tituli) of the epigrams, and inquire how far they throw light on the inter-relation of the three. At the outset of this inquiry too it will be well to mention some points that require care.

The title-headings were normally written in ancient MSS. (and, we may say, in mediaeval also) in coloured, usually red, capital letters. Nothing is more common in MSS. of all periods than to find that the 'rubricator' has neglected to fill up here and there the spaces left blank for him by the scribe. One might almost say that a mediaeval MS. with complete tale of rubricated headings is a rare exception. When therefore we find ancient texts of Martial exhibiting a general agreement in point of these headings, but here and there a divergence, the cause may lie simply in the occasional remissness of the 'rubricator' of the original from which one of the texts was transcribed. Again the narrowness of the column of a page often forced a scribe, who wished to compress the heading into one line, to omit part of it or else to use abbreviations which would not be easily understood by transcribers and would be productive of error. For example, the heading of II xc was both in the 'elegant' and in the 'vulgate' texts: AD QVINTILIANVM DE OTIOSA VITA. It retains its full form in H, but in R is curtailed to AD QVINTILIANVM. This curtailed form is the form in which it appears in B^A, but it may quite possibly have appeared in full in the actual Gennadian edition. The heading of VIII xiv is in the 'elegant' edition AD AMICVM DE MANSIONE (with mansio in the sense of 'house,' French 'maison') and may have been the same in the 'vulgate' edition, although in C^A it appears as AD AMICVM. The headings of X ii in A^A, DE PERPETVITATE LIBRORVM, and in C^A, AD LECTOREM, appear to be totally different; but they may both be contractions of an original full heading, DE PERPETVITATE LIBRORVM AD LECTOREM. As an example of the use of an unintelligible abbreviation in a heading we may take the heading of VIII xlvii in A^A (or at least R), AD EVM QVI DE DIVERSIS BARBAM FACIEBAT, where the word diversis appears as DIV with a horizontal stroke to indicate the contraction^b. This would be likely to result in a divergence of reading in transcripts^c. To some such cause may be due the variation in the heading of III xci, where B^A has DE MISSICIO ET ACHILLA, but A^A and C^A, DE MISSICIO ET ARCHIGALLIS. The omission of a title-heading leads, when the blank line is not noticed by a transcriber, to the 'conflation' of epigrams, the running of two epigrams into one. This would be most liable to happen when the blank line stood at the head of a page^d. It is a fault that does not offend the reader so much as the opposite fault of the 'wrong division' of an epigram, of breaking up a single epigram into two; for this is generally accompanied by some absurd title-heading, a 'bogus' heading for the supposed new epigram, added either in the copy in which the wrong division was first made or by ^b The miswriting SERTVS for TVS in the heading of XIII iv in certain MSS. of the Gennadian family (not in B^A; see Class. Rev. xv. 418) appears a very natural error, when we take into account this practice of abbreviating words in headings.

^c This has given editors some trouble with the headings in Books XIII—XIV, especially the latter, e.g., lxxvii, lxxxv, clxxxiv.

^d If our estimate of 14 lines to a column in B^A (or its original) be right, we may ascribe the loss of the heading at VII vi to its position at the head of one column and at xxiii to a similar position six pages further on. We know that a leaf ended with I xli. 3. The heading of I xxxi, which has been lost, would stand at the top of the fourth column preceding.

a subsequent transcriber. The wrong division would often be the result of a passage having been accidentally omitted at its proper place and inserted, according to the usual practice, in the margin (usually the top or bottom margin) of a page. A 'marginal adscript,' i.e. a jotting in the side margin, calling attention to the contents of a passage or to any noteworthy sentiment or allusion, might also in the hands of a careless transcriber become a 'bogus' heading and produce a wrong division of an epigram. For example, in C^A the heading of VIII lxxiii, one of the foolish headings so common in the 'vulgate' text, is DE CORINNA. The mention of Corinna occurs in v. 10, the last line, so that this heading was clearly meant in the original 'vulgate' edition for the whole of the epigram. But in C^A we find before v. 5 a new heading AD CATVLLVM, which has the effect of breaking up the epigram into two and making a new poem of the last six lines :

Cynthia te vatem fecit, lascive Properti ;
 Ingenium Galli pulchra Lycoris erat ;
 Fama est arguti Nemesis formosa Tibulli ;
 Lesbia dictavit, docte Catulle, tibi :
 Non me Paeligni nec spernet Mantua vatem,
 Si qua Corinna mihi, si quis Alexis erit.

One can easily believe that Martial's allusion to Catullus, his avowed model in epigrammatic poetry, and the object of his repeatedly expressed admiration, occasioned the marginal adscript AD CATVLLVM, an adscript which was intended merely to call attention to the mention of Catullus in this line, but which became perverted in the hands of some subsequent transcriber into a 'bogus' heading^e. I would ^e I doubt, however, the reference of a variant in the text to a supposed marginal quotation of a parallel passage. The absurd C^A variant at II lxxxvii. 2 has been referred to a marginal quotation of III lxxxix. 2. Why not rather to the common substitution of c for t? In III xlii. 4 (cf. lxxii. 2) and in IV lviii. 2 (cf. VI. xv. 2) why should not malum and nefas, gutta and gemma be variants originating from the poet himself? There is more to be said for a possible reminiscence by a scribe of a neighbouring parallel passage, e.g. at V xi. 2 (cf. xii. 7), though here too portat and versat may be real variants.

explain similarly the DE FATIS of C^A at IX lxxxvi. 9 and the FINIS LIBELLI of B^A before the closing lines of Book XII (cf. V xlii). One must be careful not to refer too hastily these 'wrong divisions' and 'bogus' headings to an ancient edition. There are also occasionally instances of what now-a-days would be called 'wrong division' of an epigram, which really depends on a difference of fashion between ancient and modern books. A modern editor prints as a single piece a composition like XI xx, which contains within it (vv. 3—8) an epigram of Augustus on Fulvia. The ancient practice, which made a separate poem of these six lines, has occasioned a 'bogus' heading for the concluding couplet (vv. 9—10), AD AVGVSTVM (C^A), LAVS AVGVSTI (B^A) (cf. V. xxxiv). On the other hand the modern fashion requires the breaking up of IX xcv into two separate epigrams †.

The headings in the Xenia and Apophoreta, the earliest of Martial's works, with the exception of the Spectacula, come undoubtedly from the pen of the poet himself; for he expressly mentions the fact and does it in such a way as perhaps to imply that they were an unusual feature (XIV ii. 1):

Lemmata si quaeris cur sint ascripta, docebo
(cf. XIII iii. 7 Addita per titulos sua nomina rebus habebis).

These books consist of a collection of couplets which were intended to accompany presents at the Saturnalia (the Roman equivalent of our Christmas and New Year), and the use of title-headings was a necessity, in order that a donor might find without difficulty the couplet which would suit the present he thought of giving. In our three ancient editions title-headings appear not only in these books but throughout the whole work of Martial; but modern editors are unanimous in excluding from their texts all but the headings of the gift-couplets^g. To these excluded title-headings we must now turn our attention.

† Since our excerpt MSS., H and R, give us portions as often as complete epigrams, and since they are our sole evidence for the Spectacula, the arrangement of the epigrams in this book is often doubtful. Prof. Robinson Ellis has re-united the 'disiecta membra' of no. xxii.

The 'elegant' text, the 'vulgate' text and (for the first four books) the Gennadian text shew fairly complete agreement in these headings, which must therefore be regarded as the headings current in editions of Martial, before the appearance of these three editions. It is true that they are for the most part mere statements of the person to whom the epigram is addressed, e.g. I iv AD CAESAREM, I v AD MARCVM, and the agreement of different editions in 'inevitable' headings of this kind might be a mere accidental coincidence. But there are many cases where the agreement cannot be due to accident, e.g. I lxxxvi DE NOVIO MICROPSYCHO, IV xxxii DE APE GVTTA ARBORIS INCLUSA, II lxxv DE LEONE ET PVERIS, XI xliv AD SENEM DE AMICIS, VII lxxi DE MARITO ET VXORE ET TOTA DOMO, and the heading (already mentioned) of VIII xlvi, which is found both in A^A and C^A, AD EVM QVI DE DIVERSIS BARBAM FACIEBAT. Such headings cannot be said to be inevitably suggested by the contents of the epigrams.

Now we find from time to time (and it is this which has deterred modern editors from recognising these headings) most illiterate forms of title; for example, AD BISENAM appears in the 'vulgate' and Gennadian texts (not in the 'elegant' text) as the heading of IV lxxvi:

Milia misisti mihi sex bis sena petenti:

Ut bis sena feram, bis duodena petam.

The 'elegant' text has a more rational heading which appears in A^A in a mutilated form, DE FENERATORUM

^g And yet it might be argued that Martial's line (X lix. 1):

Consumpta est uno si lemmate pagina, transis, suggests the use of title-headings in the other books too. I may take this opportunity of pointing out that, if Martial is here following his common practice (e.g. VI lxxv) of referring to the epigram immediately preceding, we get a hint that 14 (or 15) lines were the normal content of a page (or rather column of papyrus) in the current editions of epigrams. The use of a double column seems indicated by IV lxxxii. 7-8.

(with the loss of some word like MALIGNITATE). But at IV xix, beginning :

Hanc tibi Sequanicae pinguem textricis alumnam

* * * * *

Dona, peregrinam mittimus endromida, although the 'elegant' text does not share the ridiculous error of the Gennadian text, AD DROMEDAN (as if endromida were eu, Dromeda!), its AD SEQUANICVM DE VESTE (as if Sequanicae were Sequanicę, a Vocative) is quite as bad. In C^A the title-heading is omitted; and this suggests an explanation of these illiterate titles, namely, that in the current copies of Martial's works the heading-line was occasionally left blank, and that a bookseller's amanuensis, some slave of foreign nationality, would fill the blank to the best of his limited ability.

Other examples of discrepancy are :

V xvii where A^A has rightly AD GELLIAM, but C^A, AD ATAVOGELLIAM. The first line of the epigram is :

Dum proavos atavosque refers et nomina magna.

How far this is to be attributed to the 'vulgate' edition or to some error in its later transcription is not clear.

VI xlv. The A^A heading is correct, DE LAETORIA NVBENTE ADVLTERO SVO LYGDO, but the C^A heading, AD EVNDEM, is quite unsuitable. There was possibly a blank space in the original of C^A.

I xcvi. The AD SCAZONEM of C^A is passable, though foolish; the AD SCAZONEM FELLATOREM of B^A is sheer nonsense. There may have been confusion with I xciv AD AEGLEN (C^A): AD AEGLEN FELLATRICEM (B^A).

II lxxviii. B^A has rightly AD OLVVM. The AD OLENVVM of C^A is due to an absurd misconception of vv. 8-9 :

Servom si potes, Ole, non habere,
Et regem potes, Ole, non habere.

I xcvii AD NAEVOLVM CAVSIDICVM INVILEM (B^A): AD NAEVOLVM CAVSIDICVM (C^A): AD NAEVOLVM (A^A),

IV xlix AD FLACCVM DE EPIGRAMMATE (A^A): AD FLACCVM DE SCRIPTIS SVIS (B^A): AD FLACCVM (C^A),

I lxxxviii AD ALCIMVM PVERVM SEPVLTVM (A^A): AD ALCIMUM TITVLVM EPITAPHII (B^A): AD ALCIMVM (C^A), VI lxxxvi. A^A is right with DE SANITATE SUA, C^A absurdly wrong with DE MIDA.

VII ii AD LORICAM CAESARI MISSAM (A^A): AD LIBELLVM SVVM (C^A), wrongly, IV lxxviii AD RVFVM SENEM INQVIETVM (A^A): DE ARDALIONE (B^A C^A), VII vi AD FAMAM (A^A): AD CAESAREM (C^A), both perhaps from an original AD FAMAM DE CAESARE, IV lxxvii DE VOTO (A^A): DE SE (C^A). There is no title-heading in B^A.

I xciii DE TVMVLO AQVINI ET FABRICII (B^A): DE AQVINO (C^A). The longer heading is likely to be original.

There is however substantial agreement between the three texts in the matter of these headings, which is suddenly broken by the Gennadian text at the beginning of Book V. While in Books I—IV the Gennadian headings are to all intents and purposes the 'vulgate' headings^h, for the remaining books (V—XII) they assume quite a new form. Instead of the curt AD CAESAREM, AD MARCVM, etc., we have long descriptive headings, e.g. X xliii (an epigram of only two lines), DE PHILEROTE QVI SEPTEM VXORVM MORTE DITATVS EST, VI xxiv (a couplet of seven words in all) DE CHARISIANO QVI ETIAM FERIATIS DIEBVS TOGATVS AMBVLABAT,

VIII xlii (a three-line epigram) AD MATHONEM VT SI

^h For example, B^A agrees with C^A in making I xlix. 9 sqq. :

Tepidi natabis lene Congedi vadum,

a new epigram with the absurd heading AD LINVM! The testimony of A^A is unfortunately lacking here, as also at XI lx (Sit Phlogis an Chione, etc.), where C^A has AD ANCHIONEM! V xix is wrongly broken up into three separate epigrams in B^A C^A, but not in A^A. On the other hand, both A^A and C^A wrongly make a new epigram (with the absurd heading AD GEMMAM) of XII xl. 3—6, but not B^A.

SPORTVLAM NON ACCEPERIT IPSE EI DONET; although we also find the short type, e.g., VIII xxxvii DE CAIETANO (AD POLYCHARMVM C^A); and there are often agreements with the other texts, e.g. VIII xxxix AD CAESAREM (so C^A), VI lxix AD CATVLLVM (so C^A), lxx AD MARCIANVM (so C^A), X xlviii DE CONVIVIO SVO (B^A A^A): AD FLACCVM DE IVCVNDQ CONVIVIO (C^A),

VI xxi DE CONIVNCTIONE STELLAE ET IANTHIDAE (B^A A^A): DE STELLA (C^A).

The new lemmas can be illiterate too, e.g. DE SVPERBIA CHRESTESII at VII lv, 'Nulli munera, Chreste, si remittis,' etc.; DE AVLA QVAE SERVVM PENITVM AMISSVM FLEBAT at VII xiv 'Accidit infandum nostrae scelus, Aule, puellae,' etc., where the title-writer has mistaken Aulē for Aulae.

An investigation of the Latinity of these headings peculiar to the Gennadian edition (made by Prof. Landgraf of Munich in the Archiv Lat. Lexicographie of this year, xii 455), has shewn that they must date from about Gennadius' own time. Are we then to suppose Gennadius himself to be the author of them? If so, what value can we attach to the text of an editor who is guilty of such illiterate title-headings? Or are they, along with those bungling titles so frequently exhibited by the 'vulgate,' and even occasionally by the 'elegant' edition, the work of booksellers' employés? And why should the sudden change occur at the beginning of Book V? If a mediaeval MS. were in question, we should at once assume that the headings in the original had ceased from this point onwards; but it is difficult to believe that Gennadius (or his bookseller) was not able in Rome itself to procure a copy of Martial which had the headings complete. It is more likely that a new volume of the edition began with this book; for the remaining possible explanation, viz. that a 'rubricator' at some later stage of the transmission of the Gennadian text took by inadvertence his title-headings from a copy of the 'vulgate' text in these four books is disproved by the traces in the headings of these books of the same hand as composed the 'Gennadian' headings. For example, DE SCRIPTIS SVIS is a favourite 'Gennadian' heading in the later books. At IV xlix (see above) B^A differs from A^A and C^A and shews a heading with this formula. Another 'catch-word' of the Gennadian headings is Epitaphion. This appears in the heading, peculiar to B^A, of I lxxxviii, quoted above (p. 40). Besides, the Gennadian subscriptions must stand or fall with the headings. In our two extant MSS. (P and f) in which the 'rubricator' has not completed his tale of headings, he has omitted the subscriptions too. Why should they be present in Books I—IV? Since the new headings of Books V—XII are characteristic of the Gennadian text, and since their language shews them to belong to Gennadius' period, it is difficult to dissociate him from them¹. There is indeed one case in which the guilt seems at first sight definitely to attach itself to Gennadius and to no one else, but the evidence is curiously weakened on examination, and I fancy the general verdict will be 'Not proven.'

The 96th epigram of Book XI, found only in MSS. which exhibit the Gennadian text (in other words, MSS. derived from the archetype B^A), seems to refer to a German at Rome who prevented a boy from drinking at a public fountain, which was supplied by the Aqua Marcia :

¹ The most plausible case that could be concocted to save the credit of Gennadius would run in this fashion. That since Gennadius dedicates this and that other book to different persons, his original edition must have been in single books. That the change in style of title would naturally come at a new volume of the work. That we must therefore suppose an edition in three volumes (the first of which began with the Spectacula) to have been published afterwards, either after the death of Gennadius, or at a time when he had ceased to concern himself with the book. That the publisher having learnt from the publication of vol. I (Spect.—Epigr. IV) that the public desired more information from the title-headings, directed his 'librarian' to provide fuller headings for vol. II (Epigr. V—IX) and vol. III (Epigr. X—XII, Xen., Apoph.). That in the first edition, the only edition with which Gennadius was concerned, there were no title-headings. That these, with the accompanying wrong division of certain epigrams, were introduced by the publisher into the second edition, being for vol. I copied from the 'vulgate' text. All this cannot be declared to be impossible, but it is certainly improbable.

Marcia, non Rhenus, salit hic, Germane ; quid obstas
Et puerum prohibes divitis imbre lacus ?
Barbare, non debet, submoto cive, ministro
Captivam victrix unda levare sitim.

The epigram is unfortunately omitted in Q, as well as in CA^k, and since all the headings are left blank¹ after Book V in P and were similarly treated after Book VI in the original of f, the B^A heading (i.e. the heading in the Gennadian edition) was unknown until the discovery of L the other day. It is DE MARTIA (-CIA?) CAPTIVA MERSA IN RHENVUM (RE-?)! And what do we find for the first line of the epigram in L, our best representative of the B^A archetype?

Marcia (-tia?) inrenum (i.e. in Rhenum) salit hic germane quid obstas.

Could we be certain that this was the veritable reading of the B^A archetype, Gennadius' would be convicted unanimously; for the misapprehension of the sense of the epigram cannot in this case be limited to the heading, but re-appears in the setting of the opening words of the text: Marcia in Rhenum salit, 'Marcia jumps into the Rhine'! That f offers non rhenus for inrenum does not go for much,

^k Schneidewin ingeniously suggests that the omission in CA may be due to some monk of German nationality. I doubt whether the epigram would be intelligible to a mediaeval monk, unless it bore some heading that wounded his national pride, 'AD GERMANVM IMPROBVM,' or 'DE INVERECUNDIA CAPTIVI GERMANI.' One can imagine the German monks in a 'Scriptorium' after enduring many taunts from their companions on the strength of this unlucky heading, secretly contriving that when a new copy was transcribed for the monastery library, the offending passage should be omitted. By the way there is a marginal jotting in a Berlin MS. of Martial that tells its own tale. It is on the margin opposite IV xxxvi, an epigram on dyeing the hair, 'Nota pro Seboldo qui tingit crines'!

¹ Where L and Q disagree, there is occasionally a doubt about the exact form of the B^A heading. At XII xxix L has merely DE FVRTIS HERMOGENIS, but Q adds the word INNUMERVM. This is probably a mere miswriting of some word meaning 'countless,' and can hardly have given the name of the person to whom the epigram was addressed. For the preposition would be AD, not IN. So we get no help towards restoring the lost word in v. 1.

since the original of f had notoriously been 'doctored' with the emendations of Italian scholars of the Renaissance. But the reputation of P, though not entirely flawless, stands far higher; and the agreement of P with f in the correct reading non Rhenus makes it more probable that the B^A archetype contained this correct reading, and that inrenum is a perversion by the scribe of L who was misled by the IN RENVM of the title-heading in the line above, just as in X ciii the lemma Ad Municipis Bilbilitanos has led in C^A to the change of Bilbilis in v. 1 to Bilbilitanos. Gennadius may manage to secure acquittal on this count. And yet if we consider the whole case against him and realize the unlikelihood of the suppositions that are required to save his credit, I think we shall come to the conclusion that he cannot escape the responsibility for these headings. Can we believe him to have left the title-headings, along with the mechanical production of his edition, wholly in the hands of his bookseller? Surely this young patrician would present copies of his work to his friends and teachers. Would he allow his presentation-copies to shew ridiculously wrong headings like DE MARCIA CAPTIVA MERSA IN RHE-NVM, if he knew these headings to be ridiculously wrong? No! The facts plainly point to Gennadius himself being the author of the peculiar headings in Books V-XII and the approver of the current headings in the preceding books, although some of the grosser errors may belong really to subsequent transcribers and not to Gennadius himself. The fact that the Latinity of the headings peculiar to the Gennadian text shews them to belong to Gennadius' own time is an overpowering argument against him.

All that we have of the 'elegant' edition in the books whose epigram-headings we are discussing is a certain number of extracts with text and headings occasionally adapted to suit the nature of the extracted passage. But the evidence, such as it is, goes to include the author of this edition under the same condemnation of ignorance as Gennadius. Perhaps the heaviest indictment against him is furnished by the 40th Epigram of Book XII :

Mentiris, credo : recitas mala carmina, laudo :
 Cantas, canto : bibis, Pontiliane, bibo.
 Pedis, dissimulo : gemma vis vincere, vincor :
 Res una est sine me quam facis, et taceo.
 Nil tamen omnino praestas mihi. 'Mortuus' inquis
 'Accipiam bene te.' Nil uolo : sed morere, whose four last lines are made in A^A C^A a separate epigram under the heading AD GEMMAM, as if 'gemmā vis vincere' in v. 3 were 'Gemma, vis vincere'! This undoubtedly looks as though in the corrupt, current text of Martial used by the author of the 'elegant' edition this absurd mistake had been made and was either overlooked or sanctioned by him. We are driven to ask ourselves what capacity for editing Martial we can allow to an editor who could make or tolerate such a mistake about so plainly intelligible lines. Must we not discard the word 'edition,' which implies a certain amount of editorial care and capacity, and call these three texts mere 'issues,' 'publications' of the works of Martial? Did not the superiority, often so clearly marked, of one 'issue' to another, really depend on the nature of the existing text or texts used in constructing the new text, not on the superior education or intelligence of the 'editor'?

Of these 'old, forgotten, far-off things' it is difficult to speak with certainty; so many accidents may have intervened to obscure the trail left for us. Who can say that Gennadius did not for his heading of VII lv write DE SVPERBIA CHRESTI, and that it was not some later transcriber who, mistaking Chreste si of the first line of the epigram for Chrestesi, the Genitive case of a supposed Chrestesius, altered^m the title to its present illiterate form? Above all, the bogus headings that arise from a wrong division of epigrams, like the GEMMAM of A^A and C^A at XII xl have a strong chance of being not original, but inserted by later transcribers. If by some accident the last four lines of the epigram became detached from the first couplet, we may rest assured that a heading would be provided sooner or later by a transcriber. The AD GEMMAM may have had its origin in this way. And once that this heading had secured a footing in a text ⁿ, it would readily spread to other texts; for any owner of a MS. who found that another MS. possessed a heading which his own lacked, would be inclined to supply the supposed defect. The same considerations weaken the case against Gennadius in respect of the 'bogus' heading AD LINVM at I xlix. 9 and other instances of the kind ^o?

^m Our authorities for the title-heading are L and the inferior MS. Q. It is Q that has -SII, while L has CHRESTESIN. There is therefore a possibility that the lemma stood in an abbreviated form in the archetype, some word (of which -SIN is a contraction) having followed CHRESTI e.g., cinaedi.

Since all that we possess of the A^A archetype, the representative of the 'elegant' text, is a couple of excerpt MSS., it is especially difficult to speak with confidence about the ancient edition from which these fragments originally sprung. At VIII xxi the heading of R, one of these excerpts, is AD PHOSPHORVM, and we might infer that the 'elegant' text had here a different heading from the 'vulgate,' which shews AD LVCIFERVM STELLAM, were it not that by good fortune this epigram is included in our other excerpt MS. and there presents the 'vulgate' form. In the process of excerpt-making, it is clear, these headings were liable to alteration. But the Gennadian headings of Books V—XII are complete and give us sufficient material for forming a judgment. Since they are as a rule fairly long descriptive headings, they allow us to gauge the intelligence of their author. Now although the mention of these bungled specimens, DE SVPERBIA CHRESTESII, DE MARCIA CAPTIVA MERSA IN RHENVVM, etc., may have unduly prejudiced our ⁿ In A^A (or at least H) this part of epigram xl followed no. xli. Is this a clue shewing that the 'bogus' heading originated in some MS. of the 'elegant' text?

^o Notice that, although the Gennadian text exhibits nearly constant difference from the 'vulgate' in the lemmas of Books V—XII, the 'bogus' heading at V xix, xxxiv, etc., are identical in B^A and C^A.

minds, yet, if we consider the whole collection, apart from these occasional instances of failure, we must pronounce that it shews an intelligent appreciation of Martial's meaning. Take, for example, the heading of VIII xlvi, PERFIDVM COMPARAT ADVOCATO. That is precisely the point of the epigram. It is a gibe at the legal profession. But perhaps the best way to appreciate the difference between the two editions will be to quote side by side a number of 'Genadian' and 'vulgate' headings :

VI xlix ALLOCVTIO PRIAPI (B^A) : DE SE (C^A), lxxxvi ORAT NE IVSSV MEDICI BIBAT (B^A) : DE MIDA
(C^A),

xcii IOCVS PATERAE (B^A) : DE VATICANA (C^A),

VII xxvi MONET VT ADVERSOS MALIGNOS ROGET APOLLINAREM (B^A) : AD SCAZONEM (C^A), lxxxvii DE HIS QVIBVS MONSTRA PLACENT. DE FLACCO (B^A) : AD FLACCVM (C^A),

xcı DE LARGITIONE PRIAPI. AD IUVENALEM (B^A) : AD FACVNDVM (C^A),

VIII xxxviii QVI AMICI MORTVI MEMINIT (B^A) : AD BLE-SIANVM (C^A),

li DESCRIPTIO FIALAE VEL CAPRI CAELATI (B^A) : AD POLYCLITVM (C^A),

lxxiii DE SE ET ALIIS POETIS (B^A) : DE CORINNA
(C^A),

lxxvi AD MARCVM SCHOLASTICVM DE IMPERITIA EIVS (B^A) : AD MARCVM GALLICVM (C^A), lxxvii LAVS LIBERI (B^A) : AD LIBRVM SVVM (C^A).

(The epigram begins : Liber, amicorum dulcissima cura Liber, in aeterna vivere digne rosa),
tuorum,

IX xi LAVS NOMINIS EARINI (B^A) : DE VERNO TEM-PORE (C^A),

xxvi DE SAPIENTIA NERVAE (B^A) : AD COSMVM
(C^A),

xxviii EPITAPHION LATINI MIMI (B^A) : AD ROMAM
(C^A),

- lxviii DE CLAMOSO MAGISTRO (B^A): AD GARRVLVM
(C^A),
- XI iii QVOD IAM IN TOTO ORBE SCRIPTA EIVS LE-GANTVR (B^A): DE AVGVSTO ET MAECENATE
(C^A),
- XII xlvii DE VARIETATE MORVM (B^A): AD IVCVNDVM, xlviii CENAM MEDIOCREM LAVDAT QVAM POSSIT RETRIBVERE (B^A): DE LVCRINA (C^A), lx DE NATALI SVO (B^A): DE SE (C^A), xcviii LAVS BAETIS (B^A): DE ALBVLA (C^A).

These headings of B^A are the work of an intelligent reader, those of C^A betray the illiterate bookseller's slave, who has been directed by his employer to look out for the name of the person addressed in the epigram and make the heading out of this, and who in happy-go-lucky style elicits AD FACVNDVM from the opening lines of VII xci :

De nostro, facunde, tibi, Iuvenalis, agello Saturnalicias mittimus ecce nuces, and AD POLYCLITVM from the beginning (he rarely seems to have searched farther than the beginning) of VIII li :

Quis labor in phiala? docti Myos, anne Myronos?
Mentoris haec manus est, an, Polyclite, tua?,

and AD COSMVM from the first couplet of IX xxvi, an epigram written to compliment Nerva on his literary talents :

Audet facundo qui carmina mittere Nervae, Pallida donabit glaucina, Cosme, tibi.

In fact the 'Gennadian' interpretation of the epigrams in these headings cannot safely be wholly ignored by modern editors, as an example will shew. The correct interpretation of X lxxvii is a moot point :

Nequius a Caro nihil umquam, Maxime, factum est,
Quam quod febre perit : fecit et illa nefas.
Saeva nocens febris saltem quartana fuisses (-et) !
Servari medico debuit ille suo.

Munro cleverly explained Carus to have been a doctor, a specialist on quartan fever, and called (though perhaps unnecessarily) for the change of ille to illa in the last line. His interpretation is that of Gennadius, whose heading runs DE MEDICO. There is another puzzling epigram in Book V, no. lxxvii :

Narratur belle quidam dixisse, Marulle,
Qui te ferre oleum dixit in auricula.

The explanation offered by Crusius is very attractive, that Marullus was a flatterer, whose cringing habit of holding up a deferentially listening ear suggested the attitude of a sufferer from earache who had put a drop of oil into his ear as a remedy, and was at pains to keep it from trickling out. It may be that the Gennadian heading would help us, if we could decipher it ; but unfortunately it has suffered from miscopying. It appears in our MSS. in the form AD MARVLLVM PEDARISIAM. The emendations PSEVDARESCAM (-VM) and PETAVRISTAM have been suggested, but neither are quite satisfactory. The latter would imply a complete misunderstanding of the epigram by Gennadius. Perhaps some cognate of pedarius, 'a silent member,' a senator who votes but does not speak, may be what Gennadius wrote. It might be argued that the Gennadian heading IOCVS DE NOMINE CONSVLIS suggests a new rendering of VII lxxix :

Potavi modo consulare vinum.
Quaeris quam vetus atque liberale ?
Ipso consule conditum : sed ipse
Qui ponebat erat, Severe, consul, namely that we should print Consul, a proper name, and not consul, in the last line. But the usual interpretation seems better. Consulare vinum in Martial's time meant old wine that dated from Republican times ; and Martial jocularly uses the phrase of wine which he drank at a consul's table. The word nomen in the heading does not imply 'a proper name.' Cf. VII lix IOCVS DE NOMINE, i.e. a pun on the phrase, non cenare sine apro. It is worth notice that Gennadius refers VIII ix to a doctor, not, as the other two editions, to a money-lender. The epigram runs :

Solvere dodrantem nuper tibi, Quinte, volebat Lippus Hylas, luscus vult dare dimidium.
Accipe quam primum ; brevis est occasio lucri :
Si fuerit caecus, nil tibi solvet Hylas.

The Gennadian heading is AD MEDICVM IMPERITVM. The heading in A^A and C^A (which substitutes Lucius for luscus in v. 2) is AD QVINTVM FENERATOREM.

But we must not set too high a value on these headings of Gennadius. He has failed to understand the allusion to the Homeric Glaucus in IX xciv :

Sardonica medicata dedit mihi pocula virga
—Os hominis!— ; mulsum me rogat Hippocrates.
Tam stupidus numquam nec tu, puto, Glauce, fuisti, Chalcea donanti chrysea qui dederas.
Dulce aliquis munus pro munere poscit amaro ?
Accipiat, sed si potat in elleboro.

His heading AD GLAVCVM shares the mistake of the 'vulgate' AD GLAVCEN DE HIPPOCRATE. And there are others which, to say the least, cannot be called successful, e.g.

- X lvi IOCVS DE MEDICIS,
li DE CONMV TATIONE RERV M,
lxxxiv DE EBRIOSA,
VI vi DE INANI AMORE PAVLAE, IX xc ROGAT FLACCVM NE MISCEAT INFAMI, X xxxvii DE DISPOSITIONE CENAE,
lx DE MVNNA IVRIS PERITO,
ci DE GABBA RVSTICO, XII lix DE INPORTVNO REVERSO.

It is possible that subsequent miscopying may have vitiated some, e.g.

- XI xxxiii DE NERONE INIMICO PRASINI (It should be AMICO),

- V li DE DIVITE CORDE BRVTO RVFO (for AD RVFVM), XI ii DE CONSTANTIA CATONIS with a new epigram at v. 7 headed DE LIBELLO SVO (The first heading may have arisen from a marginal adscript), V xxi DE RHETORE ANTE AMANTE,
VII xxxviii DE MAGNITVDINE CORPORIS SEVERI (Has PVERI dropped out before the last word ?), IX xlvi DE GELLIO VERBOSO (On a man with a mania for building).

It appears that he has failed, not unnaturally, to understand Degis in the first line of V iii :

Accola iam nostrae Degis, Germanice, ripae, and that this is the origin of his heading, DE PRAESENTIA CAESARIS. In fact, if we take the whole body of Gennadian headings in Books V—XII as a whole and make a fair appreciation of their worth, we must, I think, recognize that they are exactly what might be expected from a young amateur scholar of the fifth century. We have no adequate reason for doubting that they actually come from the pen of Gennadius himself, although one or two may have suffered in transmission and a few may really belong to other editions.

And so far as we can get a satisfactory view of the A^A headings, they seem to stand on much the same level as the Gennadian. The allusion to the Homeric Glaucus is misunderstood in IX xciv, where A^A offers unchanged the 'vulgate' heading AD GLAVCEN DE HIPPOCRATE. But the point of VII lxxiii is rightly caught by the A^A heading AD MAXIMUM DE HABITATIONE, where the B^A heading is so curiously wrong that one suspects a fault of transcription, IOCVS DE DOMIBVS CYBELAE. The C^A heading is merely AD MAXIMUM. The 'elegant' text does not share the errors of the C^A headings in cases like those already quoted on pp. 39, 40 :

VII ii AD LORICAM CAESARI MISSAM (A^A): AD LIBEL-
LUM SVVM (C^A)

VI xlv DE LAETORIA NVBENTE ADVLTERO SVO LYGDO (A^A): AD EVNDEM (C^A);

but it does in XII xlviii AD LVCRINAM, a choice specimen of an illiterate heading, extracted from Lucrina, sc. ostrca, in v. 4:

Vis scribi (heres) propter quinque Lucrina, vale, and in IX xxvi (already mentioned) AD COSMVM. And its heading DE POETA PRISCO at X lxiv indicates a failure to detect the allusion to the poet Lucan. In some cases the headings, like the text, of the 'elegant' edition, suggest the use of an older and better source than was available to Gennadius and the compiler of the 'vulgate' text. At IX xvii, the 'elegant' heading is AD AESCVLAPIVM, precisely the right heading for the epigram, though the absence of the name of Aesculapius from the epigram itself would be sure to offer a difficulty to transcribers. The heading is omitted in C^A, while B^A has IDEM. At XI xciv the heading AD EVNDEM seems right, for the epigram appears to be directed against the same Theodorus as is the subject of xciii. There is no heading in C^A, while B^A has DE DETRACTATORE SVO, and at xciii DE INCENDIO THEODORI VATIS. At V xxvii C^A has the absurdly wrong heading DE OCEANO:

Ingenium studiumque tibi moresque genusque

Sunt equitis, fateor. Cetera plebis habes:

Bis septena tibi non sunt (v. l. sint) subsellia tanti

Vt sedeas viso pallidus Oceano.

The A^A heading is AD AVLVM, which is properly the heading of the next epigram, no xxviii. If in the early current copies of Martial this same confusion were exhibited, we can understand how a bookseller's 'librarius' might have occasion to originate the absurd heading found in C^A. Often A^A seems to offer a heading in its full original form, which has been spoilt by curtailment in C^A. Thus in X ci the DE GABBA of C^A seems inexcusable. It may however be merely a curtailment of the A^A heading DE GABBA ET CA-

PITOLINO, a perfectly satisfactory summary of the epigram. Similarly at IX lxviii A^A offers AD LVDI GARRVLVM MAGISTRVM, of which the AD GARRVLVM of C^A looks like an unintelligent reduction. On the other hand at X xiii it is A^A (or at least H) which exhibits the curtailed form of heading, AD COTTAM, while C^A has AD COTTAM AMATOREM ET DIVITEM. That the fuller form is original is indicated by the similar language of the Gennadian heading, DE COTTA DIVITE AMATORE.

The Gennadian headings often give us the impression of having been based on the 'vulgate' headings. Coincidence of language like that in the instance just mentioned is not infrequent. It has already been mentioned that the Gennadian headings in Books V—XII are occasionally identical with the 'vulgate,' e.g. VI xv DE FORMICA SVCINO INCLVSA.

Although doubt may attach to this or that detail of the history of the several headings in the three editions, so much at least has emerged from our investigation, that there was existing at some time (we may almost say, some considerable time) before 400 A.D. a recognized body of title-headings to the epigrams of Martial. Since the 'illiterate' headings and patently wrong divisions of epigrams are seldom shared by all three texts, we have two possibilities of accounting for them. Either they were a feature of the current text and were emended by Gennadius or the editor of the 'elegant' text, or the correct forms of heading were the current forms, and the corrupt titles originated with the edition which exhibits them. The facts certainly favour the first of the two hypotheses. But the truest statement of the case may be that these corrupt headings had not always been a feature of the current text. The original current text may have possessed correct headings; but in course of time, as headings were omitted in transcription and one part of an epigram became separated from another, the blanks thus produced would be filled up by 'librarii,' and these 'illiterate' and 'bogus' headings, which are most thoroughly conserved in the 'vulgate' text, would be the result. This supposition, that the original body of headings was free from blunders, will receive more likelihood, the farther back the date to which the origin of these headings can be referred. But I do not know that we have any clue to the date of their origin. The 'vulgate' heading of IX i, DE DOMITIANO TVNC IMP. (sic), with its use of the word tunc, certainly may be said to suggest an edition not far removed from Domitian's reign. But we could hardly base on so slender foundation a theory that the headings belonged to Martial's own time or to the next generation.

The dating of these headings is of some importance, for on it depends our estimate of the traditional heading of III xlix. This epigram consists of two lines only :

Veientana mihi misces, ubi Massica potas :
Olfacere haec malo pocula quam bibere, with no mention of the person to whom it is addressed. But the 'elegant' and 'vulgate' texts agree in the heading AD RVFVM, and the same is presumably obscured in the B^A heading, AD VVAM. A number of Martial's poems are addressed to his jovial friend Canius Rufus, others to an Instantius Rufus. Does this heading embody a reliable tradition that this epigram was really addressed by Martial to Canius Rufus or Instantius Rufus or some other Rufus? Again at XI xxii the 'elegant' and 'vulgate' texts agree in the heading AD PHOEBVM, although there is no mention of Phoebus in the epigram. The appropriateness of the name (cf. I lviii, III lxxiii, etc.) certainly affords strong presumption of accuracy in this instance. And the heading of Spect. vi looks like a genuine tradition from the poet's own time; DE KAL. (? ID) APRIL. QVA DIE OMNIS VENATIO PER MVLIERES CONFECTA EST.

And yet, if there really existed in Martial's own time or near it a full collection of headings for Books I—XII with as much traditional authority as the headings in Books XIII—XIV, why should the discrepancies between the headings in the three editions be so much more prominent in the twelve books than in the two last? The gift-couplet headings are indeed simpler and so leave less room for misapprehension and divergence, but their simplicity does not quite seem a sufficient explanation^p.

6. Early Corruptions of the Text.

Another point that seems to be at least indicated by our inquiry is that the text which Torquatus Gennadius used in preparing his edition was a text like the 'vulgate' text. The title-heading of the 'vulgate' edition appears in the Gennadian edition at II vii, AD ATTALVM, although Gennadius had adopted for the text of the epigram the form of name that we find in the 'elegant' edition, Atticus, not Attalus. The A^A heading is AD ATTICUM. The result of the confusion has been that in B^A the form Attalus has found its way into the first line of the epigram, the line immediately following the heading, though the form Atticus remains in v. 6. Similarly in I x Gennadius preferred (with the 'elegant' edition) the name Gemellus. But the lemma in his edition is the 'vulgate' lemma, DE VENVSTO. If this explanation be right, our name for the C^A text is justified. It was the current, popular text of Gennadius' time, the text that Gennadius set himself to emend. We should therefore expect to find occasional errors common to the two texts, namely corruptions in the 'vulgate' text which escaped the attention or baffled the powers of Gennadius. A likely instance seems to me temperante for temperatae of X xxx. i :

O (Io B^A) temperante dulce Formiae littus,

^p On the other hand we might contrast the substantial agreement of the headings of the epigrams of Books I—XII with the total disagreement of the headings of the prefatory epigrams of XIII and XIV, in the three archetypes: XIII i AD LECTOREM (A^A), DE DELECTATIONE SCRIPTVRAE (B^A), om. (C^A); ii om. (A^A), AD LECTOREM (B^A), XENIA (C^A); iii om. (A^A), DE LIBELLO (at v. 5 IDEM, at v. 7 AD LECTOREM DE XENIIS) (B^A), om. (C^A); XIV i AD LECTOREM (A^A), om. (B^A), om. (C^A); ii om. (A^A), ? om. (B^A), APOPHORETA (C^A). Even here through all the disagreement we seem to get a glimpse of a common original which had at the beginning of the prefatory epigrams in either book the heading AD LECTOREM, and at their end in the first book, XENIA, and in the second, APOPHORETA.

which perhaps a late Latin editor might mistake for a Neuter form of the Present Participle, although it cannot be denied that the change of temperate (for -tae) into temperante might suggest itself to a scribe at any time. Similarly in X xiii. 3: •

Strataque non unas cingant triclinia Baias, where both B^A and C^A agree in a Singular Verb (pingat in the Gennadian, cingat apparently in the 'vulgate' text), the late Latin transition of the Neuter Plural into the Feminine Singular (e.g. folia, 'a leaf,' lilia, 'a lily') may have moved Gennadius to retain the Singular Number of the Verb, if pingat be really his reading and not merely a scribe's mistake. That the corruption of the proper name Instantius in XII xcvi. 5, where B^A shews intransibus and C^A instantibus, was really old, is indicated by the lemmas of the two editions, in B^A, LAVS BAETIS (with a new epigram at v. 5, possibly the result of a mere marginal adscript, headed FINIS LIBELLI), and in C^A, DE ALBYLA. Both reveal ignorance that Instantius Rufus is the person to whom the epigram refers.

Other instances of errors common to the two editions seem to be:

- V xiv. II se dedere for sedere, xxxv. I patruensibus for Patrensibus, lxxvi. I toto for poto, VI 1. 3 omission of ex quo (unless coepit coepit was the version common to both), xxxix. 7 cogis antrae for coci Santrae
 VII xxix. I uicturi for Victoris, X xxiv. II nethora for Nestora, and two lines of which the correct reading is doubtful:

- IV xxiii. 3 gratumque epigramma comparavit (Grainum quos is the accepted reading), viii. II gressum metire licenti.

Ad matutinum nostra Thalia Iovem (gressu timet ire seems required by the sense). But there is seldom clear proof of the antiquity of a corrupt reading. At VIII xx we are at once struck by the singular form of the heading in the 'vulgate' text. Instead of the usual curt formula of the type AD MARCVM or DE MARCO, we find here a long periphrasis, AD EVM QVI SVA CARMINA NON EDEBAT. The epigram is :

Cum facias versus nulla non luce ducenos,
Vare, nihil recitas. Non sapis, atque sapis.

We wonder why the compiler of the 'vulgate' headings did not at once seize on the obvious AD VARVM. That is the Gennadian heading, while the 'elegant' text offers AD VARVM POETAM. A glance at the text of C^A shews us the reason. Instead of Vare in the second line it has quare. Surely we are justified in accepting this corruption as an ancient corruption and as the cause of the peculiar form of heading in the 'vulgate' text. The hypothesis that some later transcriber, even some learned abbot of a mediaeval monastery, made the alteration seems unnecessary, when we remember the number of headings in C^A which are 'not on speaking terms' with the text of their epigrams. I think also that the Gennadian heading of XII xxxviii, DE MARITO FRIGIDIORIS NATVRAE, shews that the B^A reading suae, instead of the correct tuae of the other texts, was the actual reading in Gennadius' edition. The 'vulgate' heading of XII xlv (beginning 'Unice, cognato iunctum mihi sanguine nomen') is AD COGNATVM, and may perhaps be taken as evidence that the corruption, found in C^A, cognate for cognato, belonged to the original edition. Both the B^A and the C^A texts combine into one two neighbouring epigrams of Book IV, nos. lxxix and lxxx, the first addressed to Matho, the second to Maro. Perhaps the similarity of the original headings, AD MATHONEM and AD MARONEM, was the cause of the error, which may have been prior to the Gennadian edition. The B^A lemma of VIII xxxiv, DE MISO DEFORMI (the C^A lemma is AD MYOSEM), points, if I am not mistaken, to the antiquity of the traditional opening of the second line of the epigram, though whether a corruption is here latent is uncertain. The epigram is directed against the fashionable craze for collecting such works of art as came or purported to come from the workshop of famous artists of antiquity :

Archetypum Myos argentum te dicis habere.

Quod sine te factum est, hoc magis archetypum est (or, with the sign of interrogation, est?).

The emendation scite for sine te at once occurs to one, and commends itself when one remembers that the early minuscule abbreviation of sine was s̄z, and that scite was as recognized a by-form of site to a mediaeval scribe as 'gaol' is of 'jail' to us. But this commendation disappears when sine te is proved to be an ancient reading.

We might almost hope to find some examples of Genadius' wrong emendation of a corruption in the 'vulgate' text. Possible instances are these :

XII xciv. 9 Quid minus esse potest?—epigrammata fin- gere coepi,

where C^A shews the corruption pingere, while B^A has what looks like an attempt at emendation by a person not fully acquainted with the rules observed by the better Elegiac poets, epigrammata scribere coepi.

III lviii. 23 sq. Et larga festos lucet ad lares silva.

Non segnīs albo pallet otio copo (caupo?), where C^A has capo, B^A carbo. The last looks like a wrong-headed emendation, suggested by the mention in the previous line of the blazing fire.

IV lxii. 1 Tibur in Herculeum migravit nigra Lycoris (Tiburiae, -e C^A, Tibur B^A),

III xlvi. 9 Picroque ventri non inutiles betas (mutiles C^A, utiles B^A),

XI iii. 1 Non urbana mea tantum Pipleide gaudent Otia (Pipide C^A, Picride B^A).

Of course the emendation might in each case be ascribed to a mediaeval copyist, so that the above instances, especially the two last, are quite uncertain^q. At the same time I am convinced that mediaeval copyists have much ascribed to them to which they have no claim. In the appended collation of the two leading representative MSS. of the Genadian and 'vulgate' texts it should be noticed how often there is agreement, which can hardly be accidental, in mere caprices of spelling, e.g. : III xxiv HARVSPICE in the lemma but aruspex in vv. 3 and 13 ; VIII xxvi. 1 eis for Eois ; VI xxxix. 4 grabbattis, a most unusual form in either manuscript ; VII xxxii. 8 hictus ; X xlv. 6 ora, and 10 amiticias. In other cases a common original spelling is clearly indicated in spite of the divergence of one or other of the MSS., e.g. : V xxxvii. 13 sciurns for sciurus (ui the late Latin equivalent of y has given us our name for the letter) ; XII xcv. 1 Musseti for Musaei ; II xxx AD GALVM, but in v. 6 rightly Gai. The spelling malaudit in II lvi. 1 was however probably the normal spelling of the period (cf. Arch. Lat. Lex. xii. 456). These spellings must have been transmitted unchanged from ancient times. The mediaeval copyists cannot have introduced them into the texts. Notice the peculiar heading of III xcii in the 'vulgate' text of which E is a representative, AD GALLVM DE GALLA. One wonders how this heading can be adapted to the epigram itself, which runs thus :

Ut patiar moechum, rogat uxor, Galle, sed unum.
Huic ego non oculos eruo, Galle, duos ?

Even if uxor were understood as the wife of Gallus, that does not imply that she was called Galla. The first explanation that occurs to one is that the heading of ep. xc, DE GALLA, has somehow found a foothold at xcii as well as at its proper place. But I am not sure that the spelling ^q They are worth quoting for all that. We require to keep this possibility of the origin of a B^A variant constantly in mind ; for instance, in pronouncing on a line like VII xxxiii. 3 (delecto A^A, delecto C^A, neglecto B^A) : cf. XI xc. 3 ; XIV ccxiii. 2 ; XII xvii. 3 ; VII xxxiv. 8.

in L, the best representative of the Gennadian text, does not give the true solution :

Ut patiar moechum rogat uxor, Galle, sed unum. .
Huic ego non oculos eruo Gallae duos?

Undoubtedly the mere spelling may be of significance for us in tracing the relationship of the different texts. Book III begins with a number of epigrams suitable to the beginning of a new book, the first headed AD LECTOREM, the second (beginning 'Cuius vis fieri, libelle, munus?') AD LIBRVM SVVM, and there are others addressed, like ep. ii, to the book itself. In the two archetypes A^A and C^A the continuity is broken after ep. ii by an epigram which editors justly view with suspicion : AD EAM QVAE FACIEM FORMONSAM HABET,

Formonsam faciem nigro medicamine celas,
Sed non formonso corpore laedis aquas.
Ipsam crede deam uerbis tibi dicere nostris :
'Aut aperi faciem, aut tunicata lava,'

Not merely is its incongruity with the neighbouring epigrams suspicious, but the metre of the last line, with hiatus at the end of the first half of the pentameter, can hardly be ascribed to Martial (Schneidewin emends aut tu tunicata). The Gennadian text omits the epigram ; and that the 'vulgate' text did the same we may gather from the fact that the heading of ep. iv (beginning 'Romam vade, liber') is in C^A, as in B^A, AD EVNDEM, i.e. addressed, like ep. ii, to the book itself, a heading that is intelligible only if ep. iv immediately follows ep. ii. The C^A text thus shews traces of 'mixture.' This epigram has been introduced from an alien text. Now it is a significant fact that the older spelling formonsus is a characteristic of the A^A text, i.e. of the 'elegant' edition, while in C^A and in B^A the normal spelling is formosus. In this one epigram however the C^A text departs from its usual practice and spells formonsus throughout. I doubt whether this can justly be ascribed to the influence of FORMONSAM in the heading, or to the repeated occurrence of the word in the same passage. The spelling must, I think, be accepted as additional evidence that the epigram is an insertion in the C^A text and subsequent to the 'vulgate' edition.

In reading the appended collation of L and E the possible antiquity of a variant, even a mere variant in spelling, must always be kept in view. Of course there are certain mis-copyings which can be unhesitatingly referred to the actual scribe (or rather scribes) of each MS. The confusions of a and t, of oc and a, of ti and q, of mi and tu are due to the difficulties offered by the 'Lombard' characters of the archetype of L; the confusions of st and rt, of s and f, of a and u are a feature of E (not wholly unknown to L), produced by the early minuscule forms of its Carolingian archetype. Again one scribe differs from another in his capacity for correct transcription. The second scribe of L is one of the worst specimens of the mediaeval transcriber. He seems to have been unable to copy a single line without error, and it is to his vagaries that the unwieldy length of the appended collation is mainly due. A full account of the scribes and the composition of L will be found in the Classical Review of November, 1901 (xv. 413), and details regarding E in the introduction to Friedlaender's edition of Martial. Here it will be sufficient to mention that L is a twelfth-century MS., now in the Royal Library, Berlin (lat. fol. 612), formerly in the library of the Monastery of S. Maria in Curtis Orlandigorum at Lucca. It is of small folio size, and is written in two columns, each of 48 (occasionally 47 or 49) lines, to the page. The script is that development of Caroline minuscule which succeeded the Lombard script in Italy. Three scribes have been employed on the MS. The first wrote from the beginning to V xxxix. 7 (fol. 19 v. i); the second from V xxxix. 8 (fol. 20 r. i) to IX lxix. tit. (fol. 37 v. i); the third from IX lxix. 1 (fol. 38 r. i) to the end. The MS., as we now have it, ends at XIV clvii. 1, the last leaf (fol. 57) having been lost. The title-headings are, I think, written by the 'rubricator' during the portion of the first scribe, but by the scribe himself for the rest of the work. They are normally in black capitals coloured with red, and in the last two books usually have not a separate line allotted to them. E seems to have been written early in the tenth century. All that we know of its history^r previous to its finding a home in the Advocates' Library is the intimation on the first page of the MS.: Jacobus Marchant hunc Librum possidet ex dono francisci Desmeulieuci amici sui. Sedani 3 decembris 1632. Its script is Caroline minuscule and its form that large square. quarto, so often found in the tenth-century MSS. of France. Some time later it was rebound (cf. the entries at VI xxiv) and the opportunity was taken of revising the text. Most of the corrections 'manu recentiore' belong to this occasion, also the marginal comments, 'docte,' 'nota,' etc. There are two columns, each of 25 lines, to the page, and the whole MS. comprises 108 leaves. The title-headings are by the hand of the scribe (or rather scribes) in black uncials. A new book begins normally at the head of a column, and this practice has occasioned an exaggerated size of writing for the title of Book XI, the last line of Book X having encroached on a new page (folio 80 v.). E is the most faithful transcript of the C^A archetype which we possess. Characteristic features, which will enable us to detect a transcript of E (cf. ad XII xciii) are the omission of IV lxxi. 3-4, VII lxix. 10, VIII lxiv. 13 and the readings at VIII xvi. 3, lv. 10.

Since L comes from an Italian, E apparently from a French original, we should expect to find 'Italian' mis-spellings of classical Latin in L, 'French' in E. Unfortunately the book has yet to be written which will supply us with a satisfactory guidance through the mazes of late Latin orthography. Sooner or later the student will find himself able to elicit from this or that spelling in a manuscript text a clue to its previous history; one set of forms pointing, it may be, to transcription in one country, another set to a later transcription in a different land. Even the abbreviations found in a MS. (for they are often reproduced by a conscientious scribe who felt doubt about the correct expansion of them) may, when the necessary knowledge has been provided for us, give us a clue to the history of a text's transmission. But we have as yet no satisfactory book on Latin minuscule abbreviations nor on late Latin spelling. I may mention however that spellings in L like legittimus (cf. Ital. legittimo) are 'Italian' and not 'Gennadian.' Peculiarities of E are luxoria, ebor, mallo, termae, fraglo (both for fragro and flagro); of L y for i, e.g. sydus, hybernus, hylex; also nundum, michi, nichil, soboles, dampnum, iocundus.

APPENDIX A.

Collations of L and E.

(These collations of L and E are made with the small Teubner edition of 1896. Since it is often difficult in L, especially in the earlier part, to decide when the hair-line which converts e into ē is original or a later addition, and since the confusion of e and ae is usually unimportant, I do not profess to record this variety of spelling, nor yet the varieties nichil, michi, for which contractions are often found in the MSS. I allow the suprascript horizontal line (indicating a nasal) to represent n or m in the middle of a word, so that e.g. cōpono would pass unnoted where the Teubner text has compono or conpono. Similarly the contracted form of sed is allowed to pass for sed or set, and that of apud for apud or aput, but ōms is interpreted as omnes, not omnis. The wrong division of words is not noted. Any variant that lies outside the scope of the collation but is nevertheless recorded I enclose in brackets. The symbol 'e with cedilla' (ē) I interpret as ae, but in some cases where there is a possibility of oe being meant I print the symbol itself. The corrections and additions by later owners are ignored in these collations. e.g. nostra IX ii. 2 (E). Capital letters I use often merely for the convenience of indicating that the word referred to is the word at the beginning of the line. I have not thought it worth while to indicate in every case the use of them in the MSS.)

APPENDIX B.

A COLLATION of the MSS. of the 'Gennadian' family in respect of the Gennadian 'subscriptions' will be of service, for these entries are often curtailed by a scribe or suffer wrong expansion of their abbreviations. The scribe of L is pressed for space towards the close of his task, and has compressed the Apophoreta (Book XIV.) into small compass. He has also curtailed the Gennadian 'subscriptions' in this part. Further, the loss of the last leaf of the MS. has deprived us of his version of the last 'subscription.' In P the title-headings and with them the 'subscriptions' have not been supplied by the rubricator after the close of Book V; in f the title-headings in Book I and in Books VII—XIV have been supplied by a subsequent owner^a of the MS. from some contemporary MS. (or printed copy), which contained the worthless 'Italian' text, the text concocted by Renaissance scholars. He has added throughout the MS. worthless 'Italian' variants, often obscuring the original text. The blanks left by the scribe for the 'subscriptions' have accordingly never been filled in these parts of the MS., so that the last 'subscription' recorded by f is that which stands at the beginning of Book VII.

To the MSS. already mentioned as exhibiting, more or less completely, the Gennadian text, viz. L, P, Q, f, I add for this collation a British Museum MS. (harl.) (Harl. 12004), which has been transcribed from an original like f, that is to say a 'Gennadian' text which had been overlaid by 'Italian' readings added by a subsequent owner of the MS. The text is worthless, but it retains three of the Gennadian 'subscriptions,' viz. those at the beginning of Books IV, V, VI. The Florence MS. (F) mentioned above (p. 33) has at the end of Book XII EMENDAVI TORQVATVS GENNADIVS and at the end of Book XIV TORQVATVS GENNADIVS EMENDAVIT.

I do not know of any other MS. which contains these, but if any such MS. of Martial^b exists in any library, public or private, I should greatly like to be informed of it.

The collation is made with the version supplied on p. 3 above. In that version I did not include the heading which stands in Q at the beginning of the volume, i.e. before the Spectacula. For since the Spectacula were added by the owner of the original of which Q is a transcript and formed no part of the archetype B^A, nor even apparently of that MS. which was the common parent of P and Q, it is clear that at least the position of the heading is not genuine. The heading itself: EPIGRAMMATON M. VALERII IVLII MARTIALIS LI. I^{us} INCIPIT EGO TORQVATVS GENNADIVS EMENDAVI FELICITER QVI REFLORVI LEGE FELICITER may have stood (in more correct form) at the beginning of Book I in the archetype. But it looks suspiciously like the concoction of an Italian scholar.

^a Perhaps Anastasio Vespuccio (-ccio), whose name appears, along with that of his brother, in an entry on fol. 248 (240) r.: Liber S. Anastasii Vespuccii, then by a different hand: et Georgii Antonii eius fratris.

^b The MS. of Martial in the library at Godvich in Austria mentioned by Schneidewin (praef. p. lxx) does not exhibit these headings. I owe this information to the courtesy of the librarian.
